Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I am in agreement with the statements of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) regarding the Government going ahead today with the time allocation. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to you very clearly that it is almost without precedent that the Government has introduced a closure motion after only three hours of debate on second reading of any Bill in the House of Commons.

Mr. Gagnon: That is wrong.

Mr. Nystrom: An Hon. Member says that I may not be right on that point, but I would like the Hon. Member to pull out the facts and point out where I am wrong. I have been in the House since 1968, and I cannot recall a time when the Government has brought in time allocation after only three hours of debate on second reading. That is all we have had on second reading of the Bill dealing with pharmaceutical changes in this country. So it was without precedent. It is not fair, and it is not just. I am sure that even the government Members themselves are not too happy with this. It is a question of the Government trying to cut off fair and proper debate. The Parliamentary Secretary himself, when he was in opposition, was very concerned about closure and time allocation. Here the Government brings in time allocation after three hours of debate on second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is without precedent in our parliamentary system that time allocation should be introduced after just three hours of debate of a bill on second reading—three hours only. It is most important that we have debate on that issue which is so essential to senior citizens here in Canada, to the sick, the families, the single-parent families, etc. It is most important that we have an in-depth debate. However, the Government has decided to cut the debate after only three hours at second reading stage.

[English]

This Bill is very important. It is very important for the pensioners. Pensioners are now organizing against this particular legislation. It is also an important Bill to many poor people, because with the increase in the price of pharmaceuticals it is the poor people who will suffer. It will not be the wealthier Canadians who suffer. It is very unfair that the Government is bringing in closure at this particular time.

In many ways, it is also a turnaround for the Conservative Party. They sat in opposition year after year and complained about time allocation being brought in, sometimes after a Bill was in second reading for several days. Yet now when they are in Government they are even worse than the Liberal Party was when they were in Government, in terms of the allocation of time in the House. Once again, this shows the Canadian people why the Conservative Party is falling faster in the polls than any Government in the history of Canada has fallen. We have never seen a Government fall so quickly in the public opinion polls all across the country. One reason is that they often mislead the Canadian people, and this is just another example when it comes to freedom of speech and freedom of expression in the House of Commons.

The reason that we were delaying getting to the time allocation motion is that the Government has done an impact study which shows that by 1995 the annual cost increase of drugs will be some $650 million per year. Canadian people should know that the Government's own study shows that the annual cost increase of $650 million per year will cause difficulty for ordinary Canadians. That is why we have been stalling in getting to this time allocation motion. That is why we have been saying that we need time for a full and free debate in the House, and a full and free debate across the country in terms of a parliamentary committee.

During the negotiations that broke down yesterday, I thought we had offered a pretty reasonable package to the Government of a little more debate on second reading, a committee which would travel to major centres to hear from ordinary Canadians about the pharmaceutical Bill, and then a reasonable time on third reading. The Government has rejected that, because it wants to impose a limit on all stages of debate on the pharmaceutical Bill.

You have been here as long as I have, Mr. Speaker, and I cannot recall a prior occasion when a Government has tried to impose a limit on all stages of debate, maybe with the exception of the energy Bill a few years ago when the bells rang for some two weeks. That was a real crisis. We have never had that happen before. At that time there was an agreement to end the debate in that way. If there was a guillotine, this is really it.

We in our party want the Government to do two things. First, we want them to release the studies that have been conducted on the impact of changing the patent laws on the price of drugs in Canada so ordinary Canadians will know what they will be hit with in terms of drug prices. The Party across the way preached year in and year out about freedom of information for Canadians. Now that it is the Government, why will it not provide that information to Canadians? Why this secrecy? Why does the Minister not release the impact studies? Why does he not tell Canadian people what he knows about what will happen to drug prices? What is the Minister afraid of? The Parliamentary Secretary says he is afraid of Harvie.

The second thing we want is a parliamentary committee that will travel to the cities of the country to study the impact of this Bill. What does the Government have against a travelling committee which would allow ordinary Canadians to have a say? Ordinary Canadians cannot come to Ottawa to have their say. Most people cannot afford to come here.

Mr. Andre: That is what we were elected for.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister says that that is what we were elected as Members of Parliament to do. On many occasions in the history of this Parliament public hearings have been held throughout the country on important issues. Last spring a committee held hearings in five or six cities on two-price wheat. I believe this Bill is important enough that public hearings should be held on it in the regions of Canada in order that Canadians can have a say on how this legislation should be developed. I see nothing wrong with that. I do not know why the Conservative Party wants to block the freedom of expression and freedom of speech of Canadians. That is exactly what the Government is doing by bringing in time allocation and denying us the right to travel.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I know many people, and there were many who signed petitions throughout Canada. In my own Province of Saskatchewan, thousands of people have signed petitions expressing their fear of an increase in the price of drugs in Canada. They would like to have public hearings held in Saskatchewan. The same thing goes for Quebec. Quebecers of both sexes want to have public hearings in Montreal and Quebec City, in order to make their views known to the Government.

We have here 58 Conservative Members from Quebec, and I wonder why Quebec Members do not want public hearings in their ridings so they could hear the views of their constituents.

[English]

It is only normal that ordinary Canadians should be given an opportunity to express their points of view on such an important Bill.

The Government is going to cut off debate. We will have a few more hours for debate on second reading. A committee will study this Bill, probably right here in Ottawa. The groups in western Canada which represent ordinary people and the poor cannot come to Ottawa to make presentations. Ordinary Canadians have a right to express their points of view in parliamentary committees.

An Hon. Member: They will.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member says that they will. However, we have no guarantee that this committee will travel across the country and hear from ordinary Canadians. We were elected by ordinary Canadians and they have a right to have this parliamentary committee travel to their areas so that they can make their points of view known.

For those reasons I cannot support time allocation and I am very surprised that the Conservative Party is supporting it. We have had only three hours of debate at second reading. I would like the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary to cite all the precedents they can find of a Government serving notice that it will impose closure after only three hours of debate. I do not think there are many examples of that. I wonder why this Party, which advocated freedom of information and more democracy, would want to cut off debate at this time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I guarantee that the New Democratic Party will hold its own hearings across Canada. We will do whatever we can to mobilize public opinion against this Bill which will increase the price of medicine and pharmaceutical commodities for ordinary Canadians. If ordinary Canadians fight against this Bill we will be able to do with this Bill what we did with the proposal to deindex old age pensions in June of 1985. The people of Canada will not forget this in the next election campaign.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will not reiterate the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) about time wasted, which comments destroyed the arguments of the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) before he even made them. One wonders where the Member for Yorkton—Melville was when the Deputy Prime Minister spoke of the hours and days which have been wasted by the Opposition.

Another delaying tactic was used by members of the Opposition Party which is deserving of remembrance by all who recognize the fundamental importance of our democratic system. I extended the courtesy to the opposition Parties of informing them that I intended to move first reading of this Bill on November 6. I did not have to extend that courtesy. We could have introduced the Bill for first reading with no warning. However, I did extend that courtesy. The NDP used that knowledge to try to prevent the Government from introducing the Bill for first reading.

Mr. Orlikow: That's right.

Mr. Andre: That has never happened in our democracy before.

Mr. Orlikow: We never had such a bad Bill.

Mr. Andre: The most fundamental of principles governing this institution is that no matter how reprehensible or unacceptable are Bills or motions which Members of the House of Commons wish to propose, they have a right to introduce them in the House. That fundamental democratic principle is as old as democracy itself and the New Democratic Party violated that principle. That is deserving of mention. That has never happened before.

As a result of their abuse of my courtesy there are now all kinds of reasons for us not to be courteous to the Opposition. We are aware that our Standing Orders dictate the practices of the House. However, we also have a tradition of courtesy, of reasonable behaviour toward each other. Through its actions the New Democratic Party has said that it is not bound by the common practices of decency and fair play. Unfortunately, that will set a precedent for the future behaviour of Governments toward the New Democratic Party. Unfortunately, this institution is the loser as a result. Our parliamentary system has been severely damaged by the New Democratic Party and its contempt for centuries of tradition and practice.

The New Democratic Party was reluctant to have this Bill introduced for first reading, to carry on with second reading debate, and to have the Bill referred to committee. I suspect the reason for that is that down in the solar plexus they know that this is good for Canada. They do not want to be asked why they are opposed to something which will result in more research in cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, Alzheimer's disease, and cancer.

Mr. McCurdy: Why don't you tell the truth?

• (1300)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I would appreciate if the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) would make his questions or comments through the Speaker rather than in this manner. If the Hon. Member wants to speak I will recognize him next. The Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, during the November break I was in Vancouver and met with people from the Terry Fox Foundation.

Mr. McCurdy: Oh, come on.

Mr. Andre: The Terry Fox Foundation has gathered several millions of dollars to promote cancer research. They have, in co-operation with the Welcome Foundation, established Pacific Pharmaceuticals at the University of British Columbia. They have already acquired and are acquiring more scientists to investigate and attempt to discover cures for cancer.

Mr. Orlikow: Good.

Mr. Andre: They believe that it is absolutely essential to their activity and success that patent protection be provided in this country. Why does the New Democratic Party not believe that is essential? If the whole world did as the New Democrats wished, and abolished patent protection, there would not be the present levels of research into cancer, cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy and Alzheimer's disease. That research is going on because the rest of the western industrialized world recognizes patent protection. They recognize that the discoverer of a drug has created something of value and owns it. Apparently the New Democratic Party does not recognize that.

I heard the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) talking about our obligations to the rest of the world. Why does her Party believe that Canada has no obligation to the rest of the world in terms of medical research? Why do they believe that Canada has a right to sponge off the rest of the world when it comes to medical research? Where is this sense of internationalism that they talk about? How do they justify excluding Canada from that medical research?

Let us consider the question of intellectual property. The New Democratic Party says that it is concerned about the consumers. If we were to allow generic book publishing and generic record publishing, we could probably save Canadians a few hundred million dollars. We would also have no Canadian authors, but the New Democrats may say that is all right because they read foreign authors anyway. We may not have Canadian songwriters and composers and other artists to the same extent, but they will say it is okay because they listen to foreigners anyway. Why does the New Democratic Party not be consistent and suggest that we abolish all intellectual property, including books, records, songs and everything? We certainly could save the consumers a lot of money, but in the process we would destroy Canadian creativity.

By not having patent protection for drugs we are in essence saying that Canadian scientists and Canadian researchers who search for the cures through these drugs are not really appreciated by this country and that what they do does not have much value because we will not recognize patent rights, but will sponge off the rest of the world.

Let us consider the health care of Canadians. For instance, the latest discovery is AZT, which looks like a promising treatment for Alzheimer's disease. Americans are now participating in these treatments, albeit at the research stage, and receiving significant benefits. Why is this not happening in Canada? We do not have patent protection laws. What will those Members say to the families of Alzheimer victims who are in that position? I see that you want to call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am not calling it one o'clock because we are going until 1.34. However, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have paid very close attention to the remarks the Hon. Minister has just made. He was saying on the one hand that he was under no obligation to notify us before introducing his bill for first reading and that it was simply out of his great generosity and kindness that he had given members of the Opposition advance notice of his intention to introduce this bill.

Preaching virtue today, the Minister also told us how we should respect our parliamentary traditions and Standing Orders.

[English]

It is very interesting to hear the Minister, the Conservatives and the Government preaching to us about the virtues of respecting the Standing Orders. That is a little hard to take, coming from a political party that stormed the Speaker's chair not many years ago. As I was listening to the Minister's remarks, I wondered where he was on the day some Tories stormed the Speaker's chair. He told us that we should respect the Standing Orders, and accused the Opposition of being obstructionist.

Mr. Belsher: What would you call it?

Mr. Boudria: I suggest to Conservative Members opposite that we have only had two hours of debate on this Bill. The Member opposite who is heckling has not even had the opportunity to participate in the debate yet. Therefore, I am standing here today to protect the rights of that Tory Member, because I want to hear his speech. That is why I believe it is extremely unfair that all Members have not had an opportunity to make their contributions to this very important debate.

Let me digress for one moment—

Mr. Lewis: How will we be able to tell?

Mr. Boudria: —and talk about the issue of generic drugs itself. I know this upsets the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) who has just been groaning and making other selective noises which I do not care to describe in any further detail.

Mr. Lewis: It is just as a result of your speech.

Mr. Boudria: I remind him that our Party is not against increasing research. Of course the Liberals want to increase research, as do all Members. As a matter of fact, the previous Liberal Government, in its wisdom, appointed the Eastman Commission. However, the Tories took the constructive remarks made by Dr. Eastman, altered them and included more in order to please the multinational, primarily American-owned, foreign companies. The President of the United States came to the Shamrock Summit in Quebec City a number of years ago and probably made a cozy deal with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). That is why the Bill with which we are concerned is not in the interest of Canadians.

The issue is not one of opposing the protection of intellectual property rights. Doctor Eastman suggested a specific period, approximately four years, to protect those property rights. However, we must also protect the consumers because they are the ones who send us here. They are the voters. Not many multinationals voted for me, for you or anyone else in the room. The people of Canada sent us here to protect their interests and that is why it is important for us to speak to this motion and indicate to the Government that two hours of debate on such an important issue is insufficient.

[Translation]

That is why the Government should withdraw its motion, Mr. Speaker. We should allow the debate to continue, so that all Hon. Members may take part in this debate, for instance the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) who wants absolutely to make his contribution, but who, unfortunately, is not likely to have the opportunity to do so. Tory members opposite are so silent. We have heard the expression "silent majority", Mr. Speaker, but we have now a new definition for it and it is sitting right in front of me.

• (1310)

[English]

These Tories give a new meaning to the expression "silent majority". They are very silent indeed. I hear the Hon. Member opposite heckling. He, of course, is a member of that very vast silent majority, those people who never speak in the House. I challenge the Hon. Member to make his contribution to this debate, if the Government House Leader permits him to do so, because we are going to have all the debate stifled, not just the debate of the opposition. Government Members will not be able to contribute to the debate on one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this Parliament. That is the respect the Tories have for the rules.

The Minister told us a little earlier today that we have to respect the Standing Orders. He said that only a few minutes after I brought to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that a Standing Order, whereby the Government had to answer opposition questions within 45 days, had been broken on three separate occasions. It involved questions I posed earlier today.

This Government, the Conservative Party, is in no position to preach virtue to anyone. It should act as an example and obey the rules itself. The Government should not try to stifle debate and do all the other things it does to get itself out of potentially embarrassing situations, like trying to stop members of the Opposition from speaking. The Government should know better by now. It has received a raking in the public opinion polls lately and one would think the Conservatives would realize their mistake and respect our parliamentary institution. But obviously they have not, and that is unfortunate. Perhaps they never will. The people of Canada gave the Tories a chance and now Canadians are sorry. The people of Canada said to the Tories, you made a lot of promises, 338 of them, so give it a try, but they are sorry now.

An Hon. Member: Have you counted them? Count them up?

Mr. Boudria: I will gladly respond to the noise coming from the Hon. Member opposite. I have right here the book of 338 Tory promises to which I referred a few moments ago. At the rate the Government is going now it would take it until the year 2026 to deliver on all of those promises.

Mr. Lewis: We'll be here, don't worry. With your support, we will be here.

Mr. Boudria: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in 1988 the Tories will not be here so there is a small chance they will ever have to deliver on the rest of their promises.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to enter into this debate for a short time and put into the record the nonsense we have been putting up with over the past few days. This House has been delayed and delayed and delayed as a result of the dilatory tactics of the opposition. We have spent 22 hours and 42 minutes, not in debate but in dilatory motions. We have spent 10 hours and 8 minutes on divisions because the opposition refuses to allow a full and complete debate on this Bill.

Mr. Orlikow: No, you want to limit the debate.

Mr. Lewis: I could read all of these times into the record but I see no reason for embarrassing the opposition any more than it already is.

I want to deal specifically, riding by riding, with some of my colleagues in the opposition. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what does the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) say to the employees of the Abbott Drug Company which produces drugs and does research? How does she explain to them that by filibustering this Bill she is delaying the research and development which would be done by the Abbott Company?

Mr. Orlikow: It never did it before.

Mr. Lewis: I will now make direct reference to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who will have to go out and tell the employees of Continental Pharma why he is filibustering the Bill which would put more research and development into his riding.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is very disturbing when an Hon. Member rises in the House and misleads the House on matters proven not to be the case by Canadian history. The American multinational drug companies have withdrawn their investment in this country. They have never made—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I do not believe that is debate and I do not consider it to be a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: When I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the employees of Continental Pharma who will be asking the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East why he and his Party are blocking this important Bill. We move over one or two ridings to that of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) who has the Jouveinal Company in his riding, another drug company which is involved in research, trying to make better drugs for Canadians. He is part of the filibuster of this Bill. There is another company in the riding of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, the A.H. Robins Company, which would invest more in research and development.

Mr. McCurdy: Sure they will.

Mr. Skelly: I have a bridge for sale out in my car.

Mr. Lewis: Let me move to the great Province of Ontario, if I may, and consider Park Davis in the riding of the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille). Where is he? When is he going to stand up for the employees of Park Davis? We then move to the riding of York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) where the Rorer Chemical Company does research and development, but the Hon. Member for York South—Weston does not want this research and development done in his riding. I move now to the Ayeth Company which is represented in the ridings of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). Where are these Hon. Members? Why are they blocking debate on this important Bill?

We are talking about research, Mr. Speaker, and development. We are talking about $1.4 billion injected into the economy of Canada.

Mr. Crombie: How many jobs?

Mr. Lewis: We are talking about 3,000 new jobs. I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question. With the multiplier effect this figure would take us up to 9,000 jobs in Canada. Why is the NDP and the Liberal Party against jobs? Why are they against jobs in research and development? Having failed to answer that question, let me ask a more important question. Why is the NDP Party and the Liberal Party against research and development which will produce cures? Why is the NDP Party against a cure for cancer, for Alzheimer's disease, for Aids, for all of these things which put Canadian lives at risk? What does the NDP Party and the Liberal Party have against finding cures for disease?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that within the House of Commons there are certain expectations with respect to courtesy and the dignity of debate. I have heard no one rise and talk about the CPP or the LPP. The name of the Party I represent proudly is the New Democratic Party. Those who cannot say all of those words together sometimes refer to our Party as the NDP, but it is never referred to by anyone with an ounce of common sense as the NDP Party unless that individual completely misapprehends the English language.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: I will try to regain my train of thought. However, I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the sight of a socialist in a vest looking like a banker just throws me right off. That is probably why I referred to my hon. colleague as being a Member of the NDP Party.

Mr. McCurdy: It does challenge your stereotypes, doesn't it?

Mr. Lewis: A vest, Mr. Speaker, with—what is it—seven or eight buttons; I cannot believe it.

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, and none of them are in my head.

• (1320)

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member is in traditional banker's costume.

Having dealt with that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the editorial in today's issue of The Gazette of Montreal which states:

—the opposition campaign not only ignores the moral and economic justification for the drug bill . . . it also overlooks the inadequate health care resulting from the law as it now stands.

It is our job as legislators to try to find the best drugs and best cures for Canadians. We believe that the research and development which will result from this Bill will provide those cures. It is beyond me and the members of my Party why the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party are standing in the way of that research which could ultimately benefit all Canadians and which could then be sold throughout the world. For that reason we are proceeding to tidy up this debate nicely. After one more full day of debate we will be able to put the matter into committee so that everyone can be heard.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, to some it comes as a shock that the Government has chosen to impose time allocation. However, it does not come as a shock or as a surprise to me. Were I standing in the shoes of the Government and were I not an adherent of higher principles with respect to the House of Commons I would have been tempted myself as a member of Government to recommend that closure be imposed. We have heard from an hysterical Government represented in defence of this Bill by an hysterical Minister who has produced the most awful, hysterical arguments that I have ever heard in defence of anything.

It is difficult to know where to begin in an attack on the nonsense that we have heard this morning. One thing that is evident in all that we have heard is that this is a Government that wants to cut its losses. This is a Government that now knows that it has out there among the people of Canada—not just within the ranks of the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party—a terrible fight on its hands, because this is a Bill that Canadians recognize is not in their interests. This is a piece of legislation which is payment for extortion. This is a Bill that is not motivated in the interests of health care. It is a Bill whose vaunted contribution to research cannot be found in the Bill and therefore cannot be defended. This is a Bill that was demanded by the President of the United States. It was demanded by the Vice-President of the United States who just happens to be a former Vice-President of Eli Lily. It is demanded by the Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Trade, Mr. Pratt, who happens to be the Chairman of the Board and the Chief Executive Officer of Pfizer of the United States. This is a Bill demanded by Mr. Yeutter who says that his patience is wearing thin. This is a product of concessions by a Government that lusts after a free trade deal, the virtues of which have not been demonstrated with respect to Canadian welfare.

It is no wonder that we have had such hysterical arguments from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). In terms of his arguments and his advocacy of this Bill I understand why the Government wants to limit his utterances, his involvement and his public exposure. A Minister who does not know the difference between copyrighting rock and roll music and jelly beans and patented products and medicines is a Minister whom I would also want to have hidden somewhere. Closure is but one way of ensuring that not too much more will be heard from him.

One must listen to the arguments of the Government with respect to this Bill. We are expected to believe—and this would be amusing if it were not so tragic in its implications for Canadians—that a bunch of multinationals before 1969 had complete patent protection and did not have those nasty little scavenging generic drug companies to foul things up. It was a virtual joy for them in Canada because Canada had among the highest drug prices in the world. My God, what a horrible tragic situation. Some three commissions and committees looked at the situation and stated that something ought to be done. Two of the committees and commissions recommended that there be no patent protection at all. That was awful, unconscious of the concerns of the Canadian people and devoid of any responsibility with respect to the needs of the people who required those patented drugs. One would have thought that those drug companies that had very nearly the highest profits in the world would have carried out fantastic amounts of research under the circumstances. The fact is that they did not do a thing.

We are now being told in 1986, after 17 years of generic competition—17 years in which Canadian drug companies have faced vigorous competition which has created among the lowest drug prices in the world—that if we go back to the pre-1969 era these drug companies will all of a sudden rush in and start doing research. If you believe that, Mr. Speaker, you believe that this Government will be re-elected next time around, and everybody knows better than that.

The Minister says with vigour, between periods of panic in the House, that this Bill will produce thousands of jobs for Canadians in research. He says that it will cure the difficulties for university researchers to which the Government has contributed significantly. But if we look at the Bill what do we find? Do we find anywhere at all the word "research"? Do we find anything at all in the Bill which requires that research be done? Are there incentives anywhere in the Bill for research? Not at all. What do we have? We have promises.

So we have this Bill which has nothing at all to do with research. We also have a bunch of letters offering a prayer, a hope and a promise that there will be research. What kind of research will it be? The Government says that we will be doing a lot more of the same if this legislation is passed. That means that not a tiddly-wink of basic research will be done as a result of this Bill.

We know the motivations of the drug companies. The drug companies want to stop in its tracks any possibility that other countries around the world will copy our legislation. In the United States, a Congressional committee suggested that if the American drug companies did not clean up their act they would face legislation similar to Canada's. Other nations around the world are engaged in similar considerations.

The Government is not only trying to mislead Canadians, one can suspect that it has been extorted to take this action and it has foolishly, perhaps in panic, come to believe the awful untruths which are evident.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has been represented by several speakers in this debate on time allocation. The Hon. Member who just spoke is known to me for his interest in science and technology, research and development and things that are pretty important to the essential components of this Bill. The reason we have to limit endless discussion on the Bill is that it represents three things. It represents health care, it represents jobs and employment, particularly in research and development, and it represents freedom. Let us talk about health care.

Back in 1965 when I had the privilege of going to the University of Western Ontario Medical School and graduating from that school, I used to walk on campus and look at a small building called the Collip Building. That was the building in which Banting and Best used to work in connection with the University of Toronto. They were responsible for discovering insulin.

Just last week at the University Hospital of the University of Western Ontario a very exciting discovery was made indicating that perhaps Alzheimer's Disease is linked to herpes. Discovering that and being able to trace back the origins of Alzheimer's disease to a herpes virus would be a pretty important discovery for Canadians in general and something of which the Canadian scientific and medical community would be very proud.

I will limit my remarks now and carry on—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have eight minutes left in debate when Orders of the Day are called.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POSTAL SERVICE CHANGES—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT AND PUBLIC

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express the outrage of Canadians at the way the Government is allowing Canada Post to reduce its services. All Canadians pay the full price for full service. All Canadians have the right to benefit from full service.

The Government may try to deny that there has been any reduction in services, but the facts speak for themselves. Thousands of rural post offices in small communities throughout Canada will be turned over to the private sector. More than 1,700 will be amalgamated into larger ones. More than 9,000 post office jobs will be lost in rural Canada as a result of the changes. People living on rural sideroads will lose the direct delivery of mail. Instead they will have to travel upwards of 50 miles to get their mail from the not so superduper mailboxes introduced by the Government.

Canadians have come to expect secure, daily door-to-door delivery of mail to their principal residences. Therefore I call upon the Government immediately to instruct Canada Post to improve and expand its services and to stop at once any attempts to reduce further post office services to Canadians in any way. In particular, I urge the Government to stop abandoning the people of rural Canada. It is a cold, unfair, and callous act by a Government which is not concerned about rural Canada.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

RESOLUTION OPPOSING AMENDMENT OF PATENT LAW

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to put on record the views of an organization in Manitoba which represents most farmers belonging to commodity groups in that province. Keystone Agricultural Producers wrote a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in which it was indicated that it had "unanimously adopted a resolution calling for our organization to vigorously oppose proposed amendments of the drug patents act, which would allow chemical manufacturing companies patent protection of 10 to 17 years on new pharmaceutical drugs".

They sent the letter not only because farmers as consumers would have to pay higher prices, but also because of the following:

—it is our belief that any measures which may be taken with respect to pharmaceutical drugs may have significant implications with respect to the production and pricing of pesticides.

Of course pesticides are important to farmers in food production. The Minister should withdraw the Bill, as was proposed by Keystone Agricultural Producers.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government recognizes the regional difficulties of northern Ontario. I am pleased to say that since 1984 northern Ontarians have received attention they failed to attract under the previous administration.

The initiatives the northern Ontario caucus and Cabinet are presently considering are indicative of the importance we place upon the region. They are not the reactive, short-term solutions of the past Liberal Government, or policies which only react to the boom and bust cycle of the northern economy. They are a responsible approach by the Government in its attempt to build upon the strengths of northern Ontario resource-based industries.

Our Government has given northern Ontario and its unique problems the recognition the region deserves. We will continue to work with the people to create a more stable future for northern Ontario.

FORESTRY

TRIBUTE TO MR. JEAN PERRON FOR HELP IN MAKING LA SARRE FORESTRY CAPITAL OF QUEBEC

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, next Saturday, December 6, the Université du Québec en Abitibi-Témiscamingue will grant for the first time in its short history an honorary Ph.D. to Mr. Jean Perron, President of Normick Perron, in La Sarre. This happy initiative will express the gratitude of our community to a man and a family who have written an important page in the history of North Western Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, in my region of Abitibi—Témiscamingue, the name Perron evokes such things as building, entrepreneurship and success. The marvelous success of Normick Perron these last few years is the result of the determination, the work and the ingenuity of its administrators.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the people of my community in thanking Mr. Jean Perron for his involvement in our affairs and for his contribution in making La Sarre the forestry capital of Quebec.

WOMEN

NEED FOR EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY POLICY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, a study carried out this fall by the federal Department of National Health and Welfare shows that, in the field of education, where women used to have the advantage over men, men have tended to close the gap and even to reverse the trend, while in the areas where men held the advantage, progress has been very slow.

On the other hand, the study shows that the gap between the percentages of men and women attending university has been substantially narrowed, but the study also shows that this is not really significant. Indeed, in the more economically profitable fields of education, the gap between men and women has widened. In other words, women are gaining in the fields of education deserted by men, but few women are making gains in non-traditional areas.

Mr. Speaker, a true policy of equal opportunities must promote the emancipation of women in all sectors and not confirm their confinement to structural ghettos.

HEALTH

ASA AND ASPIRIN PRODUCTS—CALL FOR BAN AS CHILDREN'S MEDICATION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to see that Britain has seen fit to halt the sale of all children's ASA and aspirin products because of their link to Reye's Syndrome, a rare but often fatal childhood disease which develops in children and teenagers after a viral infection, such as influenza or chicken pox. Reye's Syndrome is fatal in about 20 per cent to 30 per cent of cases, and many survivors suffer serious brain damage.

It has been pointed out that children who are given ASA for influenza and chicken pox run a 25 times greater risk of contracting Reye's Syndrome than do children who do not take these drugs.

Health and Welfare Canada only requires a warning on ASA products cautioning parents against using them to treat flu or chicken pox in their children without first consulting a doctor. I fervently believe that this policy should now be changed and that Canada should follow the leadership of Britain in banning all ASA and aspirin products in their use against viral infections in children and teenagers, such as chicken pox and influenza. I call upon the Government to look into this matter and to bring forth positive action to get this done.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION'S STRIKE AGAINST GREAT LAKES TANKER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, on November 24, 1986, the Seafarers' International Union went on strike against Coastal Canada, a tanker vessel on the Great Lakes, in order to obtain a first contract for their 17 members. Unfortunately, the Government of Canada is directly involved in one case and in the other has taken sides on the issue. The tanker is currently chartered to Petro-Canada.

On November 27 the Coast Guard was used to ferry scabs to operate the striking vessel. First, I call upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) to instruct Petro-Canada to suspend the charter with this ship until such time as the dispute has been resolved. Second, I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to instruct the Coast Guard that under no circumstances will Canadian Government vessels be used to assist in the deployment of scabs to this vessel. Finally, I call upon the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to use Section 171, Part V of the Canada Labour Code, and impose a first contract on the parties.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

OPPOSITION TO ENTRANCE INTO INSURANCE BUSINESS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, there must be a bureaucrat in the Department of Finance who is determined to permit the banks to market insurance. I say this because every Minister of State for Finance since 1981 in one way or another has advanced a proposal to permit the banks and other financial institutions to sell various types of insurance policies. If it happens, when making a loan or by checking the expiry dates on collateral loan items, banks could corner the market by tying the insurance in with the granting of the loan. What are we trying to do? Create another monopoly?

If we make this change, we will throw thousands of people in this country out of work, and lose the excellent expertise that the insurance industry has developed.

The banks should do their own thing like making loans, accepting deposits, and expanding credit. I say scrap this proposal and stop worrying the daylights out of the thousands of splendid Canadians who are efficiently handling insurance, and tell the bureaucrats to jump in the lake.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR RELATIONS

SITUATION OF SHOE INDUSTRY WORKERS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, unless there has been a recent follow-up to the letter of the Grand'Mère shoe workers union president, an unlikely occurrence if I judge by the information I have, I would urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to honour the commitment made to these workers during a meeting at La Rocaille Motel last September 26 in the presence of the Member for Trois-Rivières and the then Conservative candidate.

You promised these workers that they no longer had to worry because they would be eligible for benefits under the Labour Adjustment Program, even if you had to overrule some of the board decisions.

Mr. Speaker, at least seven or eight workers between the ages of 47 and 53 experienced much difficulty to become eligible and, for a technical reason which was raised by the board but which can be quickly settled, they were even refused under LAP.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister of Labour to take action in this case, and I should like to be advised of what he intends to do about the letter of the union president.

TRADE

LIBERALS' POSITION ON FREE TRADE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, according to this morning's Toronto Star and La Presse, Liberal delegates were fiercely divided after a lively two-day debate on free trade.

In a bizarre sequence of events, delegates adopted a resolution in favour of free trade and then supported a policy opposed to free trade. This turnabout elicited some bitter criticism from former Liberal Minister Donald Macdonald, who called his party's position inconsistent. "To outsiders we must look pretty stupid", said Mr. Macdonald, adding that the Liberal Leader, who avoided committing himself, "will now have to get to work with his caucus, where most of this nonsense comes from".

The Liberal Leader's speech on liberalisation of trade with the United States showed his tacit approval of my Government's initiative. However, that was not the position taken by the critic for international trade or the critic for external affairs.

Canadians must realize the tremendous confusion among Ottawa Liberals on a number of important issues.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—POSSIBLE IMPACT OF DRILLING FOR OIL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Texaco Canada plans to drill on the Georges Bank in Atlantic Canada beginning next year. This area is one of the richest sources of fishing in the world. The scallop intake provides half the total value of all fishing for Nova Scotia. Georges Bank is extremely sensitive environmentally. In an effort to protect both jobs and this fragile resource, the Newfoundland United Food and Commercial Workers Local 1252, and the fishermen's union, are calling for the Bank to be named a marine sanctuary.

The only research that has been done to date to study the impact of offshore drilling in this area has been done by the Canadian Oil and Gaslines Association. I join my Atlantic New Democratic colleagues in their concern that this is less than reassuring. The Government should provide Atlantic Canadians with an independent report to study the impact of offshore drilling on the Georges Bank.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, a number of small businessmen in my constituency who sell general insurance, and many of their customers, are worried about a federal proposal which would allow banks and other financial institutions to sell general insurance.

Allowing banks and trust companies to sell insurance could introduce unfair competition into the insurance market, in that many people could feel pressured into buying their insurance from the bank with which they deal. The major banks are already very powerful. I share the concern of many of my constituents that the banks could eventually dominate certain areas of the insurance business, and some small businesses would be wiped out completely.

Small businesses are a vital part of our economy. Insurance is a complicated commodity. Independent agents have worked hard and successfully to give their customers the best possible service. I hope that the Government will not pass any legislation which would threaten such small businesses.

IMPACT OF FORGET REPORT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is discouraging to see that the Government has already accepted the Forget report's recommendations on annualization of unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, not so long ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that he wanted the rich to be richer, and now he has found a way for the poor to be poorer. It would be totally unacceptable for the Conservative Government to accept this recommendation. It would have the following consequences, for instance in Quebec, where a father of two would have to go on welfare to get $435.

I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister to stop the consultations and stop the spending. This is what Canadians think: they say no to the Forget report and annualization, and yes to sound, positive recommendations.

REQUEST THAT MEMBER FOR MOUNT ROYAL PARTICIPATE IN DEBATE ON BILL C-22

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): In 1968, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government introduced a bill dealing with the pharmaceutical industry which made it possible for generic companies to copy various new drugs.

It was the current Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) who, as the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, introduced this Bill which proved so detrimental to Canadians.

Since that legislation, the pharmaceutical industry has declined in Quebec and Canada; Liberals have exported our jobs abroad instead of our goods and services. What is even worse, we, as Canadians, are no longer able to find here the most advanced medicines. Foreign companies refuse to sell them here for fear of their being copied.

However, because I still trust a number of Liberal Members, today I ask the Leader of the Liberal Opposition to allow the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, a physician, to deal with the legislation we have introduced keeping in mind her former clients as well as the three prosperous drug manufacturers in her riding of Mount Royal.

In a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, we will see whether the Liberal Leader is gagging his troups.

PLEA FOR ASSISTANCE TO REOPEN NEW BRUNSWICK FISH PLANT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention and the attention of this House to the still unresolved problems surrounding the Star-Kist plant in Bayside, New Brunswick. The plant is still closed, the people are still out of work, and the unemployment insurance benefits of many of them have run out.

Next Sunday at 6.30 p.m. an outdoor church service will be held at the Star-Kist plant to focus attention on and show concern for the plight of the workers and the community. The Government has a responsibility to help the workers. The Government must find a way to reopen this plant as soon as possible.

FORGET COMMISSION REPORT—MINISTER'S POSITION ON PRESENT SYSTEM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Emmployment and Immigration with regard to the Forget Report. The Government tried to deindex old age pensions, it cut family allowances, and it is now going to raise drug prices as a result of the legislation currently before the House.

I believe the country has the right to know what the Minister meant when he said yesterday, "Admittedly, the present unemployment insurance system does call for changes". What does the Minister have in mind, or does he know what he has in mind?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, obviously, the Government would not have bothered to create a commission, the Forget Commission which worked for over a year and a half in order to submit a certain number of recommendations to the Government, if it had not realized there were a number of things in the system that ought to be improved and should be given careful consideration in order to increase the efficiency of a system that costs us $12 billion a year.

The report has been submitted, and the Government, as I said yesterday, is going to take a very careful look at all relevant studies so that on May 15, it will be able to give Canadians an outline of what it intends to do with the unemployment insurance system.

[English]

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this has been a great commission. We have had six commissioners, three minority reports, and four supplementary statements. That reflects the same confusion as appears in the ministerial ranks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yesterday the Minister refused to commit himself one way or another on the report. The Minister of Transport, in his usual forthright fashion, said that he rejected those recommendations categorically.

In view of the division within ministerial ranks, would the Prime Minister tell us what his Government's intention is with respect to this report? Is the Government, as the Minister of Transport suggested quite clearly on television, going to reject the recommendations of that report?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend is accurate. There is a majority report, a minority report, and two supplementary statements. It is like the Liberal position on trade.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I suppose that indicates the complexity of the unemployment insurance issue as seen by a distinguished commissioner, Mr. Forget, who was a member of the Cabinet of the Liberal Government of Quebec, and a very distinguished member of that Government. Yesterday the Minister produced a statement in which he indicated that the Government will reflect upon some of the recommendations and will provide a global response to them at or about May 15. I think it is reasonable in the circumstances that we hear from opposition Parties and others in the country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Perhaps the Prime Minister could tell us how coherent his Party is on the issue of capital punishment and what he will do about that.

Mr. Forrestall: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our position is quite clear.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is it?

An Hon. Member: Let's hear it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When will the Prime Minister respond to the efforts of some his ministerial ranks to fulfil a commitment he made to the Canadian people? But that is another matter.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REIMBURSE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have another question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Apparently that report cost $6 million, and the bill has been charged to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. Is the Goverment going to reimburse the Unemployment Insurance Commission to compensate the people who, after all, contributed to the Fund?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I thought the Leader of the Official Opposition would be better informed. I am sorry, but the Commission cost $5.2 million. I hope that figure is now official. It was yesterday, and I hope that all Opposition Members on the New Democratic side will stop referring to $8 million. The figure is $5.2 million.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, there comes a time when an agency or a company decides it might be useful to reassess its internal operations in order to improve its efficiency. Generally, such companies fund these studies and assessments from their own resources. That is why, and we had the authorization of Treasury Board, we felt that unemployment insurance funds should be used to pay for a study that would improve the service given by the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

ANNUALIZED CALCULATION OF BENEFITS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REJECT RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister stated in the House, as reported at page 1753 of Hansard:

—our purpose is not to reduce federal contributions to the unemployed.

The Minister of Transport said something similar outside the House. If that is the case, why does the Minister not immediately reject recommendation 23, the annualization method of calculating benefits, which will in fact reduce payments to the unemployed, especially those unemployed who do not have skills and who have great difficulty in finding work? Why does he not reject that recommendation immediately and be consistent with what he said in the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House, I also told the Hon. Member that the Government intended to make a serious study of the unemployment insurance system. Of course, the Liberal Party has a knack of examining reports within a day and a half and drawing their own conclusions from a report that took a year and a half to complete. We shall see what those conclusions are.

As far as we are concerned, we are keeping an open mind and neither rejecting nor accepting any recommendations for the time being. We are going to consider them within the general context of the assessment of the system and we shall retain what is good and drop what is not. And after doing so, on May 15 we intend to present conclusions that will reflect the Government's position.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we therefore cannot believe what the Minister said in the House yesterday. Since the Forget proposals have very serious implications for the provinces because they would transfer thousands of unemployed to provincial welfare rolls, what plans does the Minister have for meeting with the provinces? Does he intend to have a federal-provincial conference on this matter before May 15 so that the provinces can have real input on something that will hurt them very seriously?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that we have an excellent relationship with the provinces. I will be meeting with my provincial counterparts in January 1987, when the discussion will of course centre on unemployment insurance. At this meeting we expect to hear the views of the provinces, to make better progress on this issue, and to meet the expectations of the provinces as well as we can.

REGIONAL EXTENDED BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. As the Minister well knows, the Forget Commission in its complete heartlessness recommends cutting out some $3 billion of revenue going to those parts of Canada which are already most adversely affected by high unemployment, resource communities right across the country, in the main. Will the Minister now guarantee that the Government will not accept the recommendation of abolishing regional extended benefits provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission? Will he show a little compassion if Forget did not?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already told the Leader of the New Democratic Party, or that I have repeated what the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance said. They said: There is no question of reducing federal Government contributions to the unemployment fund. So there is absolutely no justification for resorting to scare tactics. Let me make this quite clear from the outset: The Government has no intention to overhaul the unemployment insurance system to the detriment of workers.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said in the House, and outside, that the Government is going to wait until next May to make a decision. Since the Commission cost $5 million, has been working for 18 months, had 475 briefs submitted to it plus an additional 1,500 written briefs, could the Minister tell us why we need more time to study this? Was the Government not elected to make a decision? Has it not heard? Why will it not make a decision now?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if a commission asked hundreds of Canadians to appear— I will use your argument. If a commission spent $5 million and travelled throughout the country to listen to Canadians, will the Government respond in half a day?

FUTURE OF POOR REGIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): That is the point of the original debate. There is no need to study the matter for another few months. The Government is fully aware of the situation in the Atlantic Provinces and in Quebec, and one thing is clear: benefits must not be reduced in these regions. That is clear. Now my question to the Minister is this: Will he now guarantee that regional benefits will be maintained in these poor regions?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I represent a region where unemployment benefits are very important. One thing I can guarantee my colleague is that there is no way this Government . . . Unlike our friends opposite we had the courage to set up a commission of inquiry on a controversial issue, and all commentators say it took political courage to do it. And so we did. Yesterday I even set the date, the first time a Government does this. I will unveil the Government's proposals on May 15, and I am sure that Canadians are not afraid. We have the courage to say we will state our position, and we are not afraid that our recommendations might not be in their best interests.

SITUATION OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Mr. Prime Minister, I know that you do not want to reply to the question dealing with senior citizens. It is quite obvious. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and now the Minister of Employment and Immigration have said that the purpose of improving the Unemployment Insurance Plan is not to reduce federal contributions to unemployed Canadians. If what the Prime Minister says is true, will he tell us now, in view of this statement, that the Government has no choice but to reimburse the 50,000 workers who took early retirement and who lost their unemployment benefits?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Hon. Member was a reasonable man. I told him yesterday that I would reply to this question tomorrow at noon. There is no need to try and give the impression that you are going to force us to give you some answers. It has nothing to do with you. I am the one who shall give the answer, and it will come from this Government.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have just discovered a new Charlie Brown. The Minister and Prime Minister have had the gall to say that the purpose of the review is not to reduce contributions. They cut off the benefits of these poor retirees one year ago, and they now want these people to believe them.

Can the Minister tell us why, after misleading the senior citizens and the sick, his government should have the confidence of the unemployed today since they were misled about consultation on the Blue Paper? We want frank and clear answers.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I said in my statement yesterday . . . Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to speak at the same time as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. It would be impossible.

Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday in my statement that I would answer that question tomorrow at noon and that I would make a statement. Not a single Canadian, not a single reporter asked that question this morning. Everyone has understood that the reply will be made tomorrow at noon, and I think that, if you make a small effort, you will understand it yourself.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF RECOMMENDATIONS ON ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It has to do with the Forget Commission Report. None of the briefs from the provincial Governments recommended either the elimination of the regional extended benefits or the implementation of the annualization of benefits. The impact of such measures on the economy of Atlantic Canada would be $660 million. For example, an unemployed person in St. John's, Newfoundland, who worked 20 weeks and who is receiving $240 under the present system, would receive $102 if the Forget Commission Report recommendations were implemented. Because this has created some uncertainty in Atlantic Canada will the Minister take the opportunity to give an unequivocal commitment now that the elimination of regional extended benefits and annualization will not be implemented by the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have read the same report as my colleague. Sure enough, I noticed that the figures were high. However, instead of doing some sort of haphazard analysis, I think that the issue should be considered as a whole. We should try to consider that as a whole, and not take one item one after another but make a comprehensive assessment as any responsible organization would do and when taking stock of the situation, provide policies which will respect, as stated, the unemployed.

[English]

REGIONAL EXTENDED BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I know that trying to get a commitment from this Government is like trying to walk across an ocean full of whipped cream on snowshoes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Author?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No originality.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member might consider that with the onset of winter it will become easier.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister says that by May 15 he will give a response, which means that all of the people in the Atlantic region will have to live with another sword of Damocles over their heads waiting to know where the Government stands on something that is so important to them. I wish to give the Minister the opportunity to stand here in his place now and commit himself not to eliminate the regional extended benefits and not to put annualization into place. He will not be out of line with the provinces in Atlantic Canada if he does so.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government is taking the required time, which is relatively short, to assess the proposals and has been considering during the past year and a half both a majority report and a minority report which you know about and has clearly undertaken not to lower the benefits paid to the unemployed. Once again, we are as much aware as you are of the needs in the Atlantic Provinces. The Prime Minister has undertaken, as I said, to take into account in the proposals which will be made in May the regional and economic facts of this country in which we live.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REJECT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Minister of Transport has rejected categorically the Forget Commission Report. The Minister of Employment and Immigration does not support him. Will the Prime Minister demonstrate some real leadership with regard to the recommendations of the Forget Commission, stand in his place today and tell the working poor, working Canadians and the unemployed, that he will not accept the recommendations of the Forget Commission, thus terminating extended regional benefits, thereby costing Atlantic Canadians $660 million in terms of their economy? Will the Prime Minister provide some real leadership with regard to a very important issue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would look at the statement issued yesterday by the Minister he would see that it states:

> The Government does not endorse the Forget report nor any other, and it will not respond directly and specifically to the Forget report recommendations.

Except, as mentioned by my hon. colleague, on May 15. That is a pretty straightforward and not unreasonable position to adopt in view of the complexity of the situation. I would think that my hon. friend would want to support the Government in this type of mature approach.

SITUATION OF SELF-EMPLOYED FISHERMEN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the test of leadership is to take difficult decisions during difficult times.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: You may laugh across there—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will address the Minister through the Chair.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Self-employed fishermen are troubled and worried about their future. Will the Prime Minister stand in his place today and give an undertaking to the House that there will not be a termination of UI benefits for self-employed fishermen? Or will he allow his Minister of Transport to stand out on the wharf alone with regard to helping the people of Atlantic Canada? Make up your mind, Mr. Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, fishermen and forest workers in Atlantic Canada are concerned because the only approach you find to a basic problem like unemployment insurance is to scare people. That is what you are doing, and you cannot do anything else. You cannot do a thing!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind all Hon. Members, both those who are asking questions with vigour and enthusiasm and those Ministers who are answering with equal vigour and enthusiasm, to conduct their exchanges through the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, what I want to suggest to the Hon. Members opposite is this: it is not good enough to play on people's fear by saying: You will do this, you will do that. Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday we would receive—

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Have some guts and make a decision.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members to let the Minister reply.

• (1440)

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that an intelligent and serious examination of a matter like unemployment insurance requires that every option be assessed, and then only those that suit Canadians best be chosen. Instead of scaring people, try to co-operate with that serious examination we want to undertake.

ELIMINATION OF REGIONAL EXTENDED BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Minister knows the Forget Commission recommended eliminating regionally extended benefits. If that recommendation were to be accepted by the Government, the people of Quebec would lose $1 billion.

Is the Minister now ready to tell Quebecers he will reject that recommendation by the Forget Commission?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I told my fellow Quebecers the Government was working on a study of unemployment insurance, and that it would again take into account the monies that have been invested in that system. I repeat what the Prime Minister has said, and what has been repeated on a number of occasions: there is no question of reducing the monies, the funds we are investing in the unemployment insurance plan.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REJECT RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, a great deal of anxiety has been caused by the Forget Commission, and not by Opposition Members. Yes, a great deal of anxiety has been caused by that former Liberal Minister, Mr. Forget.

Can the Minister now tell Quebecers that he will reject that recommendation? That recommendation is very important for Quebec's future and for the constituency of Manicouagan, which has a high unemployment rate.

An Hon. Member: They will be getting a prison!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member on the unavoidable insecurity problem caused by such a Royal Commission of Enquiry. I think everybody agree with that. This is why I said earlier it was regrettable that the Hon. Member should exploit that insecurity to try and suggest all sorts of things.

Clearly, in our assessment of the situation we will spare no effort to try and consider that there are people—and there are many of them in Canada, unfortunately, because not everybody is working—who have to live with the unemployment insurance problem, and we will endeavour to provide them with the best possible benefits. This Government's only intention is, not only to give them the best quality, but to improve as much as possible on what we are already giving them.

ENTRY TO INSURANCE BUSINESS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of State for Finance. Insurance people and consumers in general across the nation are worried and disturbed over the continual and continuous suggestion that banks be permitted to sell insurance. Is the Government planning to proceed with this ridiculous plan?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his inquiry. The insurance companies have been making strenuous representations to me, representations just as strenuous as the one made by the Hon. Member. I have heard their concerns and, as the Hon. Member knows, our policy will be announced in a very few weeks.

REDUCTION OF MANDATORY WEEKLY NUMBER OF HOURS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Both the Wallace Commission report on part time employment and the Forget report which was tabled yesterday recommended that the number be reduced of weekly hours required for men and women working part-time to obtain unemployment insurance entitlement.

Considering that 72 per cent of part time employees are women and that equality in the labour force is one of the priorities of this Conservative Government, could the Minister tell us whether he accepts these recommendations and whether he is going to implement them now?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend knows just how much I have been aware, both as Secretary of State and Minister of Employment, of the need to enhance the role of women on the labour market.

I think, therefore, that the gist of the recommendation is interesting. But you ask whether I am going to implement it right away? Obviously, the answer is no.

Within the discussion framework which we have established from the start, how do we approach a recommendation such as this? I suggest that the issue of both the status of women and women on the labour force will have to be one of the priorities, if not the top priority, within the recommendations we are going to make about the unemployment insurance issue.

WOMEN IN EMPLOYMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear the Minister say women and employment will be one of the priority recommendations. Indeed, I should like to remind the Minister that women contribute to the unemployment insurance account $39 million more than they collect from it.

I should like to hear the Minister reiterate that, indeed, one of the main recommendations in his report next May will deal with women and employment.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker and my hon. friend will kindly admit something. That over the past two years, the Conservative Government has managed to increase the rate of participation for women, for instance in the Jobs Strategy Program, from 35 per cent to 49 per cent. The results are there.

I certainly agree to do just that. Given that women in the labour force is a priority in the matter of unemployment insurance, the Hon. Member will certainly admit that the situation is much easier for a Government which has such a good record regarding women's issues.

SUPERMAILBOX KEYS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. The Government has given us superboxes which are supposed to be safe, secure, and sure. Now we have superkey which opens all doors and any door. There is no stopping superkey. When will our mail be secure? When will we get superlock? Is there a "Keeper of the Keys" on the government side?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, there are some people who ask questions and do not want to hear the answers. That demonstrates their seriousness.

What is happening right now at Canada Post is a serious matter and the Minister responsible for Canada Post and myself are equally concerned about the lack of quality control in the installation of these mail boxes. Therefore, the Minister responsible has spoken to the corporation and has ordered it to get on with the quality control system which will ensure safe delivery.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Valcourt: If I may add, the Minister has asked Canada Post that no new boxes be installed until this mechanism is in place.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WANTS TO PLACE MAILBOXES IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Why does the Minister want to have those same boxes in rural areas? They will be located at some 100,000 houses in rural areas. Why put them up in rural areas when they are inadequate in urban areas?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party . . . First, there are things that should be made clear. Those famous mailboxes were first introduced by the previous Liberal Government, and now they are not good enough. They did it.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why those mailboxes have to be put up is that the previous Liberal Government left thousands of Canadians without any service in some communities. They had to run to the Post Office at five in the afternoon, closing time. But this is now over.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN VOTE ON MIDDLE EAST RESOLUTION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the United Nations this week, the Canadian Government made a major shift in a vote on a very important Middle East resolution dealing with the peace process in that region. The chief of the political section of the Canada Commission at the UN said that the reason for the change in the vote was to "bring Canada into greater balance between Arab and Israeli views". What imbalance was there previously which this official said had to be corrected? Does this presage a major shift in Middle East policy by the Canadian Government and is this the reason why the Government of Canada changed its vote?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is one of the questions on which the Liberal Party is not yet divided. Naturally we will wait to see what happens.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, it is.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Are they divided on this too? Oh, I am sorry. I do not keep track as closely as the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

The reality with regard to the resolution introduced in the United Nations is that the proponents of the resolution have moderated their language to the point where Canada no longer opposes the resolution. Canada continues to encourage direct negotiation between the parties to the dispute and believes that there are circumstances in which an international conference could facilitate such direct talks.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that this would be one of the questions the Minister might treat seriously, which is not his customary practice.

CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Canadian officials have described the vote as a significant shift in Canadian policy. What shift is going on? Are we clearly supporting a continuation of a policy of bilateral talks between the Arab and Israeli nations to seek a peace settlement? If that is the case, will the Minister instruct his officials to correct their statements so that there will be no misconceptions about where Canada stands on this important issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my statement on the question was unequivocal and clear. The Hon. Member can count on that statement. I should tell him that I was congratulated last night by one of his colleagues in the Liberal Party for the position taken by the Government. It was the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. It indicates that he at least believes the position Canada has taken in this circumstance is an appropriate position. I hope there is some unity on this question in the Liberal Party.

AMENDING LEGISLATION—POSITION OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last year the Government said that senior citizens across the country supported it in its attempts to reduce the deficit by reducing old age pensions. Yesterday the Minister indicated to the House that senior citizens were being confused by opposition politicians over the drug patent legislation. Is the Minister seriously suggesting to the House and to Canadians that the senior citizens with whom I met in the Atlantic provinces in the last three days, and the organizations of senior citizen groups from across the country with which I met this morning, are confused when they say that they totally understand the Government is pushing them to the wall and that, if it goes through with the legislation, drug prices will increase?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this gives me an opportunity to read again from the comments of a responsible individual who has looked at our proposed legislation, Dr. Philip Seeman, head of the Pharmacology Department of the University of Toronto. He said: "Senior citizens are being seriously misled by politicians who tell them prices will sky-rocket or their provincial drug plans may be cut, but they are being denied goods which could improve their life". I am seriously suggesting that senior citizens are interested in more research on Alzheimer disease, cancer, arthritis, cystic fibrosis, and all other diseases which so affect quality of life. We have a package which will do it in a way that provides enormous net benefits to Canada. This is why I think seniors and all Canadians should be in favour of it.

Mr. Young: That from a Government which just slashed millions of dollars from research.

COST IMPACT RESEARCH

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is the Minister trying to tell Canadians that senior citizens and their organizations have not conducted detailed research into the cost impact of the Bill on seniors, disabled Canadians, Canadians with young families, and particularly provincial Governments? Is he really trying to tell us that these senior citizens are confused? That is insulting.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, over 85 per cent of Canadians are covered by drug plans and 95 per cent of senior citizens. A professor from the University of Ottawa wrote:

> As a Pediatric Clinical Pharmacologist, I have been acutely aware that many pharmaceutical substances are not available in Canada as licensed products for children as a result of previous patent and licensing policies.
> I applaud your efforts in this regard and feel that your new policy is both appropriate and a step forward for the Canadian pediatric population.

In other words, for children. Is the Hon. Member seriously suggesting that Canadians are opposed to better drugs sooner for Canada's children?

Mr. Young: What about the seniors?

RURAL POST OFFICES—EFFECT OF BUSINESS PLAN ON WOMEN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. He knows that the Government's plan to close thousands of rural post offices and to fire 9,500 postal workers will devastate much of rural Canada. Is he aware that 80 per cent of these postal jobs are now held by women? Would he consider withdrawing a plan which discriminates against women in rural Canada?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. There is no question about closing rural post offices. The business plan contemplates passing over to the private sector small post offices in communities, over a 10-year period. It will mean better service and more locations for Canadians. This is what it will mean. As for the business plan, I am informed that the committee just completed its hearings this morning. I shall await its report to the House before I comment any further.

Mr. Foster: The committee did not complete its work; it was cut off with closure by government Members.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER POSTPONE CLOSURES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared, on behalf of the Government, to postpone the closure of rural post offices and the firing of 9,500 postal workers, many of whom have worked from 20 years to 30 years, until after the next election so that rural Canadians can vote on the whole matter?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the people of rural Canada have voted. They voted on September 4 for better service, a formidable cause. This is what we want to give Canadians. When the committee reports to the House, the House will be seized with its recommendations, and we will take it from there.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSSIBLE EFFECT ON TEXTILE FIRM IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have just received reports that the President of Standfield's, a Truro Nova Scotian textile firm, for the sake of the Minister, employing 800 people, thinks his company will have to move its manufacturing operations out of Canada if a freer trade agreement with the United States were signed. In view of this loss which has certain broader connotations for her Party, is the Minister for International Trade now prepared to rethink the free trade thrust on which she is engaged?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): No, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in view of the mounting opposition to free trade in this company employing 800 people, in breweries employing thousands of people, and in manufacturing firms in all sorts of resource areas, why is the Minister not prepared to rethink her position?

• (1500)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the mounting evidence before us shows overwhelmingly that Canadians have a lot to gain from a bilateral trade treaty with the U.S.

Mr. Ouellet: Did you get that privately from Mr. Stanfield?

Miss Carney: I would point out to the Hon. Member that reports of the Economic Council of Canada have said that if we are successful in a bilateral agreement with the U.S. we could create 375,000 new jobs in this country and that, if we stay on a protectionist course, the way the world is going we will lose half a million jobs in the same time period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POLICY TOWARD UKRAINE—BUENOS AIRES CONCERT INCIDENT

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In a letter addressed to Michael Wawryshyn, dated October 23, the Minister explained that Canadian embassy personnel in Buenos Aires failed to attend a concert staged by the Ukrainian Canadian Choir Vesnivka because the flag and anthem of Ukraine were prominent in the program. He referred to the possible misinterpretation of Canadian policy toward Ukraine which might result from an official presence at the concert. Ukrainian Canadians were shocked and offended by this explanation.

Will the Minister issue a public apology to the Ukrainian Canadian community, and will he clarify Canada's official policy towards the independence of Ukraine and other captive nations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House will be astonished to learn that I signed a letter that had an error in it. It may not be so astonished to learn that I have written Mr. Wawryshyn and circulated widely a letter of apology, a letter clarifying the situation, and I would trust that now the matter has been aired publicly in the House any concerns that might have been alive in the Ukrainian community will be set to rest.

NON-ATTENDANCE BY EMBASSY OFFICIALS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs continues to insult the Ukrainian Canadians in Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You insult this Ukrainian.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Wawryshyn is a constituent of mine. In reply to a letter that I sent to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he indicated that Canadian embassy officials did not attend the concert because the choir was singing the Ukrainian national anthem and because the Ukrainian flag was flown. In a subsequent letter to Mr. Wawryshyn the Minister changed his tune. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs admit in the House today the real reasons his embassy officials did not attend the concert?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is asking me to say what I have just said in the House of Commons. I did make an error as he has alleged. This is the only thing on which he and I have agreed or probably will agree, in that case I am unlike the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in so far as the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is concerned.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just deal with the government response, Joe.

Mr. Riis: Do your job.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If you want to make an apology, make an apology and do it graciously.

Privilege—Mr. Gagliano

INQUIRY CONCERNING LETTER TO MEMBER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the letter written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to Mr. Wawryshyn dated November 14, he indicates that the letter was also sent to me. Could the Minister explain to the House why he would say to Mr. Wawryshyn through the letter that a copy of his letter came to me when in fact no such letter was ever sent to me?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First, Mr. Speaker, I will look into that. Perhaps the most effective way to send correspondence to the Hon. Member would be in a plain brown envelope.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MULTICULTURALISM

FEDERATION OF SIKH SOCIETIES—APPLICATION FOR GRANTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism. The Minister is aware that the Federation of Sikh Societies of Canada applied many months ago for grants in support of several community projects and that there has been support from all quarters of this House for that application. Will the Minister assure the House this afternoon that he expects to advance social harmony in Canada by taking positive action forthwith on the application of the Federation of Sikh Societies of Canada?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will advance that cause. The matter is under review by the officials of my Department right now and I can assure the Hon. Member that we will give it proper consideration as soon as we can.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, a short question.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF CHAIR IN SIKH STUDIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure the Sikhs across the country who have been raising money for the establishment of a Chair in Sikh Studies that his Department will give positive consideration to the application to the Department to establish this chair at the University of British Columbia?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will do so. It is a particular concern of mine and, of course, to the Sikh community.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

AVAILABILITY OF CERTAIN DRUGS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am directing my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I do so in the context where both the Liberals and the Socialists are opposing the establishment of a drug industry in Quebec and the rest of Canada. Could the Minister tell Canadians who, for instance, are suffering from Alzheimer's disease or AIDS where they can get the most appropriate drugs at the present time?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lévis has raised a very good issue. I wish to reassure all Canadians that under the new legislation, they will be able to get any innovative drug. Thanks to our proposals, the health of Canadians will certainly improve.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members that I can respond to a question of privilege raised by the——member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). I examined his speech and the response of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) very carefully. I also examined the Minister's response to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). In a case like this, two people may often provide differing but nevertheless truthful reports of the same event. Differences of opinion with respect to fact and details are not infrequent in the House and do not necessarily constitute a breach of privilege.

[English]

The Hon. Member in his question was addressing an important matter which was acknowledged to be important by the Minister. However, whatever the differences might be, a dispute as to fact does not constitute a breach of privilege and the Chair cannot adjudicate on that dispute.

Again I want to impress upon the Hon. Member that the Chair understood the seriousness with which the Hon. Member brought the representation forward but it is not, under the circumstances, a question of privilege. I thank the Hon. Member for his representation.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST THAT LETTER BE TABLED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, for two days we have been trying to get the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to table a letter to which he referred in the House, as reported at page 1700 of Hansard for December 2. The Minister quoted from a letter he said he had received from the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association. On the same day at page 1704 of Hansard my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), requested that the Minister table the letter as provided for in our rules since he had quoted from it. The request was repeated this morning. To date, we have not had compliance with our requests. As we have been talking, Mr. Speaker, the Minister left the House, despite the fact that we advised him the question would be raised again after Question Period.

I would like to call upon Your Honour to enforce the rule which calls for a Minister of the Crown to table a letter from which he has quoted in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter and report back.

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that the response of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) would be satisfactory, at least for the moment.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I wish to ask the Government House Leader if he will give us a statement of the business he intends to call for the coming week. In fact, can he give us a statement of the business he intends to call until the adjournment for Christmas which will take place on December 19th?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Today we will complete the motion under Standing Order 117. Then we will continue debate on Bill C-25, the Canadair privatization Bill. That will be followed by debate on Bill C-23, the Income Tax Act. Friday we will continue on second reading debate of Bill C-22, the Patent Act. Perhaps tomorrow I will be able to enlighten the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party more fully on the extent of the business. We have not had an opportunity to have a House Leaders' meeting this week.

The remaining business for next week will depend in some part on the decision that you will be making with respect to whether yesterday was deemed to have been an allotted day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That, further to the notice given on Monday, November 24, 1986, by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117, in relation to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading and reference to a legislative committee stage of the said Bill; and

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on that day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1.34 p.m., the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey (Mr. Gurbin) had the floor.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): I should like to continue the debate on the motion brought forward by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to bring to a close the long discussion that we have had in consideration of the Bill regarding the proposed patent changes. We are bringing this in at a time when we have considered this Bill for a total of 22 hours, 42 minutes, including 13 dilatory motions, a number of petitions, and a number of other devices that have been brought forward by the Opposition to delay the introduction and full consideration of this Bill by committee.

My proposition had been that the Bill itself represents three major things. It represents the health of Canadians, it represents jobs for Canadians, and it represents freedom for Canadians. On all of these counts we need to move forward, not with the 22 hours and more of delay that we have had so far, but in an efficient and expeditious manner, so that we can fully consider this in committee and then bring this law back to the House, in revised form if necessary, for consideration, so that it can be put into effect in Canada.

Before lunch, I was starting to talk about the lack of history that we have had in Canada in the introduction of new drugs for the benefit of the health of Canadians. I had occasion last evening to look through the November issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal. I was struck by several things. One of them was an article which the House may find interesting, and from which I would like to draw a few quotes. This article is entitled "Dementia in the House". In this article the author states:

"Dementia in the house", arguably one of the greatest threats to the health and social welfare of this country, is characterized by a constellation of cognitive, behavioural and emotional symptoms—Characteristic emotional liability is associated with indecisiveness and consistent evidence of poor judgment. There is often right-left disorientation, identity confusion and a serious language problem.

People so afflicted are known to suffer from dramatic emotional outbursts in the House, temper tantrums, hypersensitivity and often frank paranoia.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you describing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mr. Gurbin: What we have seen is a classic example of this syndrome expressed by the opposition Parties as they are trying to delay the introduction of this Bill into committee, so that all Canadians may have a chance to examine the details of this Bill and see the benefits that may come to Canada from it.

Mr. Cassidy: You are as wrong about the indexing of pensions as you are about this.

Mr. Gurbin: In addition, I might say that the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who spoke prior to me, is probably the best example we have in this House. While he is supposed to be the critic for science and technology in the NDP Party, he is at the same time trying to block the introduction of this Bill which would see the dramatic evolution of research and development in new drugs in Canada. So he cannot have it both ways. He is either supportive of this research and development activity, or he is trying to block it. It is very clear that in this case he has been trying to block it.

The other important thing that came from just a very cursory perusal of the November issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal was the number of drugs that are now being brought forward to treat and to manage diseases that are effecting many Canadians, and people around the world.

One that is very important is for herpes. For a long time, members of the House have been aware of people who have had a variety of repetitive conditions, whether it is the herpes simplex lesions that will touch their face, or the genital lesions which may touch them somewhere else, or whether it is some of the other important variants of herpes which we need not go into, for example, the congential herpes that can affect babies. Very interesting is the information that may associate herpes with Alzheimer's disease. This is information which has come out of medical research in London, Ontario. Zovirax is a drug which is developed and produced by Burroughs Wellcome; a new drug for the treatment of a condition for which we presently do not have treatment.

The reason for this Bill, why we are trying to get it forward, and why we think that we cannot debate it indefinitely in the House, is so that Canadians can become involved in that type of research and help develop that type of drug. It is the NDP Party, and the Liberal Party that are trying to block that and do not want Canadians to be directly involved, but only want them to be the purchasers of this technology, not the developers of it. They should be embarrassed.

Mr. Cassidy: People shouldn't pay a ransom for new drugs.

Mr. Gurbin: They should go back to their constituents and tell them why they think Canadians should not be participating in this research, and why Canadians should not derive benefits from this type of research. Mr. Speaker, I do not think they can justify that.

Another drug mentioned in here, Mr. Speaker, is one that has been developed by Upjohn.

Mr. Cassidy: You are pleading special interests, that is what you are doing. You are pleading for the drug companies. You are pleading for the physicians' lobbies. How about pleading for the people for a change?

Mr. Gurbin: Yes, you are right. As a physician, I would argue very strongly through you, Mr. Speaker, with the Member who is again expressing the syndrome of dementia in the House with his emotional outbursts and blockage of legislation that would benefit Canadians.

As well as the Upjohn drug, there are many more in here that are important. Some of them are for respiratory diseases in babies. One of them introduced by Upjohn would possibly interest the Member who is sitting in front of the Hon. Member; it treats baldness. All these drugs are drugs that cost tens of millions of dollars to develop. Since insulin was developed in Canada decades ago Canadians have not been able to directly become involved in this research. Let us deal with a few facts instead of the hyperbole and rhetoric that continually comes out of the NDP Party, just like frothing at the mouth.

Mr. Cassidy: You are sensitive, aren't you?

Mr. Riis: What have you, 31 per cent or 32 per cent?

Mr. Cassidy: Are you suffering from some congenital condition?

Mr. Gurbin: The facts are that in the last 16 weeks we now have almost $700 million in new research and capital projects.

Mr. Riis: Why are you guys afraid to take this to the country?

Mr. Gurbin: Those are solid dollars in research investments by companies in Canada because of the introduction of this Bill.

Mr. Riis: Jackboot democracy is what this is; tyranny, dictatorship.

Mr. Gurbin: We have a guarantee of $1.4 billion that will go into research in this country, and medical research and development of drugs. That will translate into at least 3,000 research and development jobs, jobs that young Canadians presently have to go out of the country in order to access. I have a son attending a science course at the University of British Columbia. If he wished to get into medical research in any meaningful way he would have to go out of the country. The NDP would have our young people, who are well trained in many of our universities, go out of the country to find jobs in this field.

Since 1984, when the Progressive Conservative Party took over Government, we have reduced unemployment across the country by 3 per cent. That is our record of performance.

Mr. Riis: Tell that to Atlantic Canada and British Columbia. They will laugh at you.

Mr. Gurbin: The NDP are talking about the jobs that are necessary in Canada. Mr. Speaker, they cannot deal with facts and that is unfortunate.

• (1520)

Mr. Riis: The fact is you are dictatorial and antidemocratic.

Mr. Gurbin: There is much more to say on this topic, and I will be happy to do it at another time. I have only a couple minutes left.

Mr. Riis: We can shut Parliament down for three weeks if it will make you feel any better.

Mr. Gurbin: I was a medical practitioner for about 20 years and always found it discouraging not to have medication to treat a particular illness. I had to write prescriptions and my patients had to buy the drugs.

Mr. Benjamin: I'll bet you wrote "no substitutes, please".

Mr. Gurbin: The drug companies gave us samples and we gave them to our patients. This Party has supported changes in health care which have resulted in 85 per cent of Canadians getting help to defray the cost of drugs.

Mr. Riis: I see; you cut back on health care funding to support health care.

Mr. Gurbin: That is important.

Mr. Riis: You cut back scientific research.

Mr. Gurbin: The Government wants to ensure that Canadians are protected from bearing the burden of the overwhelming cost of health care. Therefore, we inserted protective clauses. Those are the kinds of things which will be examined when this important Bill goes to committee and we are able to proceed with it, as we must, after approximately 22 hours and 40 minutes of obstructive tactics by Members opposite who are—

Mr. Riis: Didn't you close Parliament down for three weeks?

Mr. Gauthier: How can you stand there and say that? For two solid weeks you closed it down.

Mr. Riis: You're a hypocrite.

Mr. Gauthier: You've got a lot of gall to use that argument. Two solid weeks you closed it down.

Mr. Rossi: Remember the bells.

Mr. Gauthier: You're a bunch of hypocrites.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if I could have some peace and quiet, I would also like to speak to—

Time Allocation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to give my views on the gag being imposed again by this Government, after only seven hours of debate on Bill C-22. This is a very important piece of legislation which, once it is implemented, is likely to have an impact on all Canadians. Seven hours of debate up to now is not much of an excuse for the Government to suddenly decide to apply steamroller tactics and gag the Opposition. This is a strange attitude to democracy for a Government that already has an overwhelming majority of 210 Members in the House of Commons, and so already has the assurance that when the question is put on Bill C-22, it will win the vote. So why bother to gag the Opposition which is trying to put questions to the Government regarding this Bill, questions that are not being answered? Mr. Speaker, if the Government is so anxious to get this Bill through the House, perhaps I may recall that, as you know, Mr. Speaker, last June the Government introduced a Bill similar to Bill C-22, in fact it was even a bit better than Bill C-22, but the Government neglected to follow up on it. Why did it not decide to consider the Bill back in September? Why did it wait such a long time before bringing this legislation before Parliament and having it debated here in the House?

Today, they are trying to rush us and get this Bill through the House quickly, although the Government knows perfectly well that the Opposition Parties are opposed to the Bill. Up to now, the Government has been stonewalling in response to our questions in the House. It has systematically refused to table impact studies on the cost of drugs. If the Government is so sure drug prices will not increase once Bill C-22 is adopted, why has it refused to table studies on the potential impact on drug costs? What does the Government have to hide? If it is so sure its Bill is a good one and will not cause the price of drugs to rise, I want to see those studies tabled here in the House.

Mr. Speaker, for two weeks we have been getting the same stupid answer during Question Period: Send the bill to committee and you will get answers to all your questions. Unfortunately, that is not how things are done in this House. First, we have to agree on the principle of a bill before it is referred to a committee, and that is the problem. We have difficulty with the underlying principle of Bill C-22 and we do not have all the information we need to believe that this Bill is a good thing. The Government is always accusing the Opposition Parties of being against research. Quite the opposite, the Liberal Party of Canada favours research, not only for pharmaceutical products, but in all scientific areas in Canada. Who cut back research funds, who took away hundreds of millions of dollars from the budget of the National Research Council if not the Government on the other side? And who objected to those cutbacks in research expenditures if not the Opposition?

Thousands of Canadian scientists have objected to the cutbacks in our scientific research budgets. Even the chemist Polanyi, winner of the Nobel Prize, recommended to a science graduate not to look for a job in Canada since the budgets for scientific research were being cut. The Government should not try to suggest that it is the Opposition which is against scientific research in Canada. We are in favour of research. What we have difficulty in accepting is that Bill C-22, which the Government wants to ram down our throats, will promote research. We do not believe that it will, or at least we have no certainty that it will.

If pharmaceutical multinationals need additional funds to promote research, we do not think that the Government should try to get this money on the backs of the sick, the senior citizens and the poor in Canada so that the multinationals can finance so-called research activities about which we have no guarantees. There are no guarantees in this Bill that research activities will increase in Canada. There are no guarantees, even though the Government talks about additional jobs, that those jobs will be there. We have to rely on the word of the Minister, the very same Minister who is refusing to table in the House the material which would allow us to judge whether or not this Bill is useful or not.

Let us look at some historical background, Mr. Speaker. Before 1969, which is when the Liberal Party of Canada amended the Patent Act for drugs, there had been three in-depth studies dealing with the pharmaceutical industry. First, a study by a Committee of the House of Commons, second, a study by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and finally, a Royal Commission which had examined the issue and presented a report. All three studies showed that drug prices were then too high in Canada and that the profits of the multinationals were already too high.

This is why the Act was amended in 1969 and the 17-year protection on new drugs was removed. This was done to provide more competition among drug manufacturers, to lower drug prices and to prevent them from increasing too quickly. It is indeed what happened, and in my humble opinion, this is what Bill C-22 could destroy. That would bring us back to the situation which existed before 1969.

In a few words I should like to defeat the argument whereby patent drug protection would boost research. It is quite clear that before 1969, when multinational drug companies were covered by 17-year patents, 3.5 per cent of total sales were earmarked for research. So what happened after 1969 when this patent protection was removed and generic drug manufacturers were then allowed to begin to copy drugs? Well, 3.9 per cent of total sales went for research. In other words, when the patent protection was dropped there was more research than before. The main argument of the Government in support of Bill C-22 does not hold water, it simply does not have currency.

I am wondering indeed why the Government would so readily swallow the pill offered by the multinationals, right along with the argument of companies which are making a handsome profit as it is and yet want even more.

I am asking myself this question and seeking the answer. Why would the Government try to shield the major drug manufacturers instead of defending the interests of Canadians who buy drugs, instead of protecting the elderly who are the prime drug users, instead of standing up for the sick who need them?

Would it be that the Government is buckling under pressure from the lobbyists of the multinationals? Would it be that Frank Moores and Mr. Doucet of Government Consultants International Inc. are making representations to the Government? Is it by way of subservience to the United States, perhaps because they have asked the Canadian Government for a concession in connection with the free trade negotiations?

We would like the Government to table the impact studies on the cost of pharmaceuticals that we have requested. By refusing to do so, the Government must be trying to hide something, because those studies show the cost of drugs will increase. Once those studies are made public, the Government will have to stop repeating that the cost of drugs will not increase. This is something we do not believe.

This is why we are opposing the legislation, and this is why we also oppose this dictatorial move to limit the length of debate in this House. We on this side strongly oppose that.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I already rose once in this House to discuss this legislation, and I had no intention of doing so today, because I was in my office looking after the affairs of my constituency.

But while doing so I listened to the speeches for a few hours, and I was shocked and frustrated to see and hear what was being suggested today, not only to the House but to all those who are watching this debate on television.

The Opposition parties, both Liberal and NDP, have systematically been using delaying tactics, because as we know the debate on the Bill started on November 6 in this House, and even before that they wilfully delayed first reading, which is something absolutely unheard of.

This has been going on for a month. But it is my view that this Government is here to govern, to legislate, and that is exactly what we have decided to do. We are often told by our constituents: You have a majority, do something, what are you waiting for? Well, here we are now doing something, putting an end to wasting the time of the House, this wasting of hundreds of thousands of tax dollars every day, for what purpose? For getting people to panick, for scaring seniors, the sick and the needy.

We know that 85 per cent of the Canadian people are covered by pharmacare plans, whether public or private, and that 95 per cent of senior citizens don't have to pay for their drugs, so what are they worried about? Why are they trying to scare the population?

The New Democratic Party launched a campaign even before the Bill was tabled in the House, in the beginning of November. They sent cards to fill out all over Canada, some sort of petition. Why everywhere in Canada but in Quebec? They are afraid of Quebec, but why? Because senior citizens in Quebec, and especially the Quebec Fédération de l'âge d'or, know that this Bill will improve the quality of health care. Because the New Democratic Party knew that the National Assembly, on two occasions and unanimously, passed a motion asking the Federal Government to change this Act as it applies to pharmaceutical patents.

I have here remarks made by Hon. Members of the Opposition during a debate which started in 1982, at a time when the Liberal Party had decided to amend the Patent Act as far as drugs where concerned. The Hon. André Ouellet said then and I quote:

• (1530)

[English]

"Mr. Ouellet says the goal of that law would be a balanced system which encourages the industry to invest, do research and create jobs, but on the other hand provides drugs for consumers at reasonable prices".

The Liberal health critic, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), said in 1985:

[English]

"Higher prices might be justified if they led to more drug research in Canada. The proposed price increase should have a minor impact on consumers".

We are not worried about that price increase because, for the first time in Canada, we are going to have a price review and control board. But at that time, the Liberals who had not even considered setting up that board, were not worried about a slight price increase because they said it might be worth paying a little more for drugs to allow for research and job creation in Canada.

Here is another statement, Mr. Speaker, by the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), a doctor, who says:

[English]

"Our researchers could not work in their own country and Canada could not create the jobs normally related to research work".

If we did not go ahead with that bill or follow-up on the Eastman Report.

I have got more, even from the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker. Here is what the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said, I believe, after the closing or a transfer of the employees of a multinational in his constituency:

[English]

"The transfer will mean the lay-off of some 300 employees, many of them full-time researchers at the lab.

—he was asking a question—

[English]

"I would like to know from the Ministry what action the Government is going to take to make sure we can do this pharmaceutical research in our own country."

Then all those Hon. Members from both parties, especially since 1982, urged that the Government proceed with that legislation because they had seen the results of the erosion of the protection for large drug companies which may have been necessary in 1969. What happened? Drug companies left the country, the multinationals did not come in, we lost hundreds of thousands of jobs, our health quality suffered and that is the situation we have today.

We should therefore provide that protection for the drug industry as soon as we can, as we read in the editorials . . . I believe that not one day goes by without someone writing, speaking or telling the Government: Hurry, hurry! Here is what Le Droit said on November 19: "It was high time. The Mulroney Government has taken a courageous step in introducing a bill to give back to drug industries investing in research the ownership right which was taken away from them by the former Liberal administration". The same columnist writes elsewhere: " Our research scientists are calling for help. Canada has lost close to 2,800 highly-skilled jobs. With respect to the drug research sector, we now amount to nothing more than a banana republic, an Eastern country. Our scientists are perfectly justified to call for help, for the situation is appaling".

It is therefore urgent, Mr. Speaker, that we proceed with this legislation. Opposition Members have been criticizing us and asking us to provide documents and more information. That is what we shall be doing in committee. Let us go ahead with it as soon as possible.

That is where this should be done. We have already had quite a long debate on second reading, and another debate today on this motion, so let's go to committee. I believe we will also be having hearings or meetings across the country so that Canadians, including researchers, young scientists and consumers will all have a chance to ask questions.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to quote something I read earlier in this morning's Gazette, a Quebec newspaper, where it says at the end of the article:

• (1540)

"The proposed changes are sound. Ottawa should stick to its guns".

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary understands what this debate is all about. It is not a debate on a Bill to change the Patent Act. It is a debate on closure introduced by the Government. I want to remind Hon. Members opposite that after only seven Members have spoken in the debate —and they have 212 seats in the House—the Government indicated its intention to introduce closure. This has never happened before in the history of Canada.

If you listen carefully today, Mr. Speaker, you will hear from the Conservative side of the House the stomp of jackboots. Jackboot democracy is what we are seeing imposed on Parliament today. This is not surprising because it was the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who stormed your chair and closed down Parliament for two weeks. Quite frankly, we are now seeing that same sentiment emerge. The Government has no interest in Parliament. In fact, its absolute contempt for Parliament was demonstrated a few years ago when the Conservatives closed down this place. For the first time in Canadian history they shut down Parliament. They said they would no longer permit it to exist. In my estimation, that showed the true intent of the Conservative Party and indicated its contempt for Parliament, for parliamentary democracy and representative democracy.

The New Democrats offered a very reasoned suggestion that we would be prepared to co-operate at all stages of the Bill if the Government would take this issue across the country. The Parliamentary Secretary told us that this group and that group is in favour of the legislation, but if she was being honest—and I am sure she is—she would also have said that there is a list of other groups which have indicated concern about this legislation, including the Yukon Territorial Government, the Ontario provincial Opposition, the Nova Scotia provincial Opposition, the Progressive Conservative lobbyists centred here in Ottawa, senior citizens' groups across Canada, the Consumers' Association of Canada and many academics who are opposed to this legislation. We could go on and on, page after page of newspaper columnists, editorial writers and various groups and individuals who oppose this legislation. If the Parliamentary Secretary is fair she would say that there are at least two groups of people in Canada, those who think this is good legislation and those who think it is bad.

What we propose is to go across the country and hold half a dozen hearings in the regions of Canada in order to allow various groups to present their views. But, oh, no, that is not going to take place. The Government is going to introduce closure. It is going to impose the tyranny of the majority on the House. It was that arrogance that the people of Canada feared once they saw this majority Government take office. They feared that once the Conservatives got the bit in their teeth they would say: "We can impose anything we want. We can jam any legislation down the throats of Canadians. We can ignore the opposition Parties and groups and individuals who speak against us because we now have the power to do anything we want". That is what we are seeing today.

I want to say again, particularly to Hon. Members sitting opposite, that after only seven speakers, out of 212 seats in this House, rose in their place to speak on this legislation, from both sides, the Government said: "That's it. We have had enough. We are going to shut the place down. We do not want any further input at second reading stage". This is a Bill which is going to increase the price of prescription drugs to the tune of $650 million a year. That is not our figure. It is the figure which comes from the firm of Currie, Coopers & Lybrand, one of the most prestigious firms in the country. It may be out by a few million dollars or a few tens of millions of dollars, but the point is that hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars in additional drug costs will be imposed upon the people of Canada.

Do you think, Mr. Speaker, as a reasonable individual, that to go out and hold hearings in half a dozen cities across Canada would be an unreasonable thing to do? The Government thinks it is. It does not want input. I predict that in one form or another, the Government will impose closure on the committee, at report stage and at third reading in order to keep this debate to an absolute minimum. It will jam the legislation through. It will jam this legislation down the throats of sick and disabled Canadians and senior citizens. This is the kind of legislation that that Party would like to see introduced. We say it is wrong. That is not the approach of a parliamentary democracy. The Opposition has a right to present its opposing views but we are having that right denied us. Jackboot democracy is being imposed on this House of Commons. That is unCanadian and unparliamentary. It is, quite frankly, a demonstration of the Government's ultimate contempt for the parliamentary system. When the people of Canada find out after today what the Government has done and remember that that is the same Party that closed down Parliament, and once they have an opportunity to respond, as they will have in a few months, we will see what they think of this. From a majority Government, it is now down to 30 per cent in the polls. Those Hon. Members opposite should feel embarrassed that they have allowed themselves to be dragged down so quickly, more quickly than any other Government in Canadian history, because of the unthinking jackboot type of approach the Conservative Party has adopted to Government and to this House.

As a result of some of the things I have said, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), that:

The motion be amended by deleting the following words in paragraph 1, "one additional sitting day" and substituting the following:

"seven additional sitting days".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow debate to proceed and will reserve a decision on this motion.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a tirade from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) about the Government not being able to get on with the job. Nonetheless, we were elected to do the job and to govern this country. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when I go back home, people complain to me about why we are not using our majority to get legislation through this House. They ask why we are letting members of the opposition Parties roll all over us and thwart the will of the House.

Back on November 6, the Opposition was not even courteous enough to allow the introduction of the Bill. Those Hon. Members rant and rave here today about what we are doing to Parliament and about the legislation, but they would not even permit first reading of the Bill. Who is being ridiculous in what is being said?

I think it is time the Canadian people woke up and realized what is really happening here in Ottawa. I am sure they are very confused. It is interesting to note that in the Gazette a headline reads: "Don't back down from the drug law change". Yesterday in the Toronto Sun a headline read: "The feds are right to stop the legalization of drug piracy". These are the things in which the Canadian people are becoming interested.

We have heard the rhetoric of members of the Opposition that we are down on the poor and the sick so on. But they have not stopped to explain the total story. Why should those companies which spend the money on research to develop new drugs and bring them on the market have them cherry-picked by other companies for the payment of a 4 per cent royalty to produce them? Is that fair? Is that the way in which the Patent Act should be used? Why should our country be out of step with the rest of the industrialized world? We are not putting in place the 17-year measure which other countries have in place. Instead, we are putting in a 10-year measure. We are taking a balanced approach.

We are also putting in place in the legislation provisions for how these measures can be watched and looked after. We have appointed a committee which will be the watch-dog of these issues to see that abuses of the system are not made. I believe we have also put in provisions which allow for a parliamentary review after a period of up to 10 years. These are the measures we have placed in the legislation to ensure that there will be an orderly review process. In this way the companies that want to do business in Canada will know the rules under which they must operate. It is for these reasons that I endorse the motion put forward by our House Leader that we get on with the business of the House and permit only two more days of debate to take place on this issue. It will then go to committee and we will get on to the point—

Mr. Riis: It is one day of debate.

Mr. Belsher: I am sorry. I did not have my hearing aid on when the Minister read his motion.

When the matter goes to committee it will receive a thorough airing and a proper venting. The opposition Parties will be part of that process. I am sure they will be inviting various groups which they think will put forward their thoughts and their ideas on this issue. By the same token other responsible groups will be invited and I hope will apply to make representations to the committee so that we can get on with dealing with the Patent Act as it affects the people of Canada and, more particularly, the drugs required by so many people in their health care.

I endorse the motion. I am glad that the House Leader has brought it forward. It is time that it was brought forward. It does not mean that drug prices will rise tomorrow. Members of the Opposition do not tell that story. There is no evidence to prove that that is possible at all. I am glad that we are getting on with the job—the sooner, the better.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I repeat the opening line I made in a speech I made earlier in the short time we had available to us to debate the second reading of this Bill. It is that those who would make a profit from the misfortunes of others are basically immoral. I want to say to my friends in the PCP Party and my friends in the LFCP Party—

Mr. Allmand: What does that mean?

Mr. Benjamin: The Liberal Federation of Canada Party is what it means. Then there is the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

I wish to start by reminding the House that the mover of the motion, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the Government House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister, said:

> Mr. Speaker, I participate in this debate with a degree of sadness and regret having regard to the fact that we have just had thrust upon this House one of the most repugnant and most destructive devices ever perpetrated on the democratic process.

He went on to state:

> It is with a great deal of regret that I see it cut off prematurely having regard to its importance and the fact that some Members who wanted to speak will not have that opportunity.

He stated further:

> —the government's actions have turned the debate into one of bitterness and division; the atmosphere has become poisoned.

At another point he stated:

> At the very outset I must say that I abhor this tactic. I find it offensive. I find it repugnant because it strikes at the basic fabric of our parliamentary democracy. Instead of having a parliamentary democracy, we have what resembles a parliamentary dictatorship.

My colleague just mentioned jackboots. The Government House Leader went on to say:

It concerns me very much that Government members tend to gloss over this so lightly and that hon. members opposite are questioning the institution of Parliament and the institution of our parliamentary democracy as we know it.

The hon. gentleman who uttered those remarks was the Hon. Member for Vegreville, the present Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader. They are remarks he made on July 17, 1981, when the Liberal Government brought in closure on the Constitution debate.

It is a good thing that this type of legislation was not being proposed when Pasteur made his developments or when Drs. Banting and Best developed insulin, or when Jonas Salk developed the vaccine for polio. It is too bad that the Tories in their haste to privatize got rid of an organization that was one of the world's leaders in research and development, manufacturing and processing of drugs, namely, Connaught Laboratories. When one looks at the record of the Tories one sees that all the things they complained about when the Liberals were in power they are duplicating in spades. I do not know what members of that Party are complaining about. In fact, I learned some of the lessons of being in opposition from my Conservative friends, included among them the Hon. Member for Vegreville and other Hon. Members who arrived in this place even after I did. I thought I was fairly expert at opposing Government; but I learned a great deal from the Tories. When something happens to them, all of a sudden there is something wrong with the system. The Government could have allowed the process to proceed. The Government has the prerogative to bring in closure at any time it wishes. The consequences rest on its head, or on the heads of members of the Opposition. In this case the Government might have had a case had the Opposition used up 12, 14 or 20 sitting days on second reading. Then it might well have had a case to bring in closure. It could have said that that is enough of that, every opposition Member has spoken once or twice and we have run out of opposition Members. In that case the Government would have had a good argument to present to the Canadian people about bringing in closure.

The Government brought in closure after those few hours of debate at second reading stage. That was a perfectly good reason for my colleagues and me to do everything we could under the rules to prevent the Government from bringing in a closure motion. The Government gave us notice of the motion to bring in closure to allow two more days of debate. Then it reduced that to one more day of debate. When we knew that that was coming ahead of time, what the heck did the Government expect from the Opposition? Of course, under the rules, we would use every device and measure we could that the Speaker ruled in order to prevent or delay the Government from proceeding with this legislation. That is normal parliamentary procedure.

What is the PC Party of Canada complaining about? This has been done countless times since I was elected in 1968. Conservative Members did this quite legitimately, under the rules of Parliament and according to their own viewpoints and policies. To think that this motion was proposed by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), a Member who made speeches on a number of occasions when closure was brought in!

I would like to close with a final quote from the Hon. Member for Vegreville who moved today's closure motion. He said:

If we believe in parliamentary democracy and the right to freedom of speech, then we must ensure that the rights and privileges of Parliament are always secure. I think those rights and privileges are very sacred.

After all, Parliament is the foundation of and very fundamental to our basic freedoms, and to suggest that we might be better off without it frightens me very much. I have been here for 13 years and I have seen an erosion of the rights and privileges of individual members of Parliament. We as individual members of Parliament obtain our rights, privileges and powers, whatever they may be, from this institution, and I would hate to see them eroded further.

By virtue of a closure motion today we have a further contempt for and erosion of the spirit and privileges of this institution. I believe tyranny begins when parliamentary debate ends.

The Hon. Member who moved today's motion said those words on July 17, 1981. I will not get so close to being unparliamentary as to call that hypocritical. I recall that opposition Members of the day, people all across Canada and the media supported and agreed with those statements made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville.

May I say to the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey (Mr. Gurbin) regarding his remarks about drugs and drug prescriptions that I hope he will count the tens of thousands of prescriptions written by physicians for which there will be no substitutes. This means that provincial drug plans will have to pay the higher costs for brand name drugs, and that is another reason for debating this Bill for several more days yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I find the motion put by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) to be acceptable.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That, further to the notice given on Monday, November 24, 1986, by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117, in relation to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading and reference to a legislative committee stage of the said Bill: and

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of govement business on that day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary necessary to dispose of the said stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without futher debate or amendment.

And the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 1798).

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short time in which to respond to my friends, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). They both indicated that there has been a short time for debate. One can only take that as NDP double-speak when looking at the history of the Bill.

The Bill was introduced on November 6. There was delay after delay and one need only read Hansard beginning on November 6 right through to today to see the delaying tactics put in place by members of the NDP at every opportunity. They did this along with their coalition partners, members of the Liberal Party.

The Opposition did not want to debate this Bill. The problem is that they did not want to see the Bill go forward into committee where it would stand to scrutiny and the test of clause by clause study. They did not want to do that because they knew they would not be able to sustain their case along with the scare tactics they have used right across Canada. They have been trying to scare old and sick people, and I personally feel that that is an immoral approach to this whole situation. They did not have the courage to allow the Bill to go to committee where it would be studied and scrutinized by learned people from all across Canada. That is the problem and has always been the problem with the NDP Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to this important matter, and I think the Government's attitude has made it abundantly clear the Opposition is quite right in objecting to closure. After a scant seven hours of debate on a Bill that will have an impact on every Canadian in this country—who has not at some time in his life been prescribed drugs?—a Bill that will have a dramatic impact on the cost of drugs, the Party opposite would have us believe that, for the sake of creating jobs, we should agree to a proposal as objectionable and shocking as this one happens to be.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the interest of consumers and Canadians generally, this House should have had a lot more time to consider and examine this important piece of legislation that will have an impact, as I said earlier, on all consumers of prescription drugs.

The cost of the jobs that may be created and to which the Party opposite is constantly referring will be astronomical, Mr. Speaker. The multinationals will get phenomenal amounts of money out of the consumer and invest only a marginal portion of that money which, in the final instance, may create a few jobs. I believe that the interests of the consumer and of all Canadians are being blatantly sabotaged by the Government's attitude, and more particularly by the motion this afternoon to put a gag on our right to speak in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 4.08 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 117 have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order. In the interests of continuing debate on Bill C-25 and allowing the committees to work, I wonder if there might be a disposition in the House to apply the vote on the amendment in reverse to the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall we proceed in that way with the main motion?

CANADAIR LIMITED DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 2, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Those who would like to listen to a really good debate, please stay. Those who do not, please leave in a hurry.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill and I appreciate your efforts to create an atmosphere in which one can speak. The sale of Canadair to Bombardier is a fire sale. It is a giveaway which raises many questions. I want to deal with several aspects of this issue which concern me. One concern is that the company is now making a profit. Another is the fact that we seem to be paying Bombardier to take Canadair. Finally, I would like to deal with the fact that Canadair and Bombardier have won the contract for the CF-18 under very questionable circumstances. According to the bidding process, that contract should have gone to Bristol Aerospace of Winnipeg.

Canadair is now making a profit. That was not always the case. A few years ago Canadair was a private company owned by General Dynamics. The company was in financial difficulty and was going to close. The federal Government decided to buy Canadair in order to preserve the jobs in Montreal and the aerospace industry in Canada. The people of Canada invested a lot of money in Canadair and Canadair spent a lot of time developing the Challenger jet, an executive plane. The Challenger jet was quite successful, but that did not happen by accident. The Government invested a lot of the people's money to develop it. Much investment was required to carry out the research and development.

At that time the world economy was in great difficulty. Canadair, an export company, was attempting to sell aircraft in a depressed global economy. Canadair was faced with losses and lack of revenue and did not have the wherewithal to develop a new product. Investment of $2.2 billion of taxpayers' money resulted in the creation of the Challenger.

When the present Government was in opposition, its members criticized this investment. They called it a waste. Now that they are in office, they are giving the results of that investment to the private sector. The Government is giving the company away at the exact moment that the company has begun to turn a profit, the exact moment that positive results of the investment are beginning to show.

Why is the Government giving away a profitable company? Why is it giving away the results of $2.2 billion of investment by ordinary Canadians? I suspect the Government is doing this to show that its policy of privatization is successful. The Government wants to create the appearance that it can take a failing public company and make it succcessful in the private sector. However, the reality is that the company became successful because of the investment by the people of Canada in Canadair. We should retain Canadair in public hands in order that the public Treasury can benefit from the profits which are beginning to be made. I conclude that the Government is giving this firm away to bolster its arguments in favour of privatization.

There is another aspect of this deal which raises many questions. Just how sweet is this deal for Bombardier? How sweet is the deal? Let me point out a few facts. Canadians invested $2.2 billion in Canadair in order to develop this company which is now turning a profit. Bombardier is paying $120 million for the company, which is a fraction of the investment. That $120 million purchase figure is less than the $300 million liquidation value and less than the $224 million book value of the company.

In return for that $120 million, Bombardier is getting $300 million to $400 million in technology, $50 million in federal grants in January plus another $30 million later. It will be receiving export financing, the amount of which has not yet been specified. Furthermore, Bombardier will get the $1.7 billion defence contract.

Bombardier has no financial obligations related to Canadair's debt or outstanding liabilities. In other words, it is ready to reap the benefits of the profit-making capacity of Canadair without any responsibility for its liabilities. It is also getting $20 million in profits from 1985 and $2.8 million in profits for the first quarter of 1986. It is not a bad deal when one considers that purchase price of $120 million and the equivalent of $120 million in royalty payments. Bombardier is receiving many benefits for taking Canadair off the Government's hands and serving as an example that privatization works. This sale amounts to a giveaway.

I want to deal with the aspect of the Canadair and Bombardier deal that is of most interest to the people of Winnipeg. It concerns the awarding of the CF-18 contract, which raised a lot of questions in Winnipeg. People wonder why the contract went to Canadair in Montreal when Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg won the bidding process. The 75 departmental experts rated the Winnipeg bid higher and, in all fairness, the contract should have gone to Winnipeg.

Why did it go to Montreal? The explanation given by the Government in the House on the day of the announcement was that of technology transfer. Was the decision based on reasons such as regional development and national interest, or was it part of the original deal to sweeten the pot for Bombardier to obtain Canadair?

The Government said that the contract went to Canadair in Montreal because Canadair had the capacity for technology transfer. Unfortunately, that reason was given as a last minute explanation rather than being an original consideration when the contract bidding process began. That raised doubts about the credibility of the explanation as to why the contract went to Montreal.

The bids, as presented to us by the Government, were very close. However, the Government used this as a reason for giving the contract to whomever it wanted. I suggest that in any race, whether it is a bidding race or a foot race, when there are excellent competitors the gap between the winner and the loser is often very narrow. Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg should have rightly been awarded the contract because they won the bidding process. However, it was taken away with the last minute rationalization of technology transfer.

Let us consider other explanations for awarding the contract to Canadair. Was it on the basis of regional development? Let us examine the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) comments to Premier Pawley of Manitoba about regional development, in which he compared Manitoba and Winnipeg to prosperous Ontario. He said that the economy in Manitoba was throwing off benefits like the economy in prosperous Ontario. If that is his conception of what it is like to live in a have-not province like Manitoba, perhaps we can understand his lack of appreciation that Manitoba also needs consideration in terms of regional development.

Was the decision to award the contract to Canadair in Montreal based on national unity? I suggest that national unity has two sides. People in western Canada are distrustful of the federal Government and unfortunately are losing faith in the political process. This decision has contributed to that cynicism that exists in western Canada. If this was not an original consideration in selling Canadair to Bombardier, the Government should have examined this in more detail and perhaps considered sharing the work between Montreal and Winnipeg by repairing some aircraft in Montreal and some in Winnipeg. Some aircraft are already being repaired in Europe, so it is possible to divide the work among Canadians rather than create a situation in which there are winners and losers, with resentment by people who feel left out of the political process.

We must remember that the Government was elected by western Canadians who felt that they would be part of the political process.

In conclusion, this sale of Canadair to Bombardier raises many questions. Was the CF-18 contract part of the original deal, although obviously not made public? How sweet is the deal that was given to Bombardier to take over Canadair? Why is the Government giving away a company when it is making a profit? It is a questionable fire sale deal and it is time for the Government to lay all the documents on the table and let us see the original documents that made it possible for the Government to give away Canadair in a deal with Bombardier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Waddell: I have a question Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are questions and comments. The Hon. Member has one minute. If the Hon. Member does not conclude his remarks, there will be nine minutes left for questions and comments the next time the Bill is called. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has 30 seconds in which to ask a question.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member can answer with a yes or no. Did he read into the record the part of the job statement in which Bombardier says that it is committed to maintaining existing levels of employment at Canadair, subject to cyclical shifts and sound business practices, and will pursue new programs and opportunities so that the level of employment at Canadair and its suppliers will increase. Does he agree that there are more escape holes in that clause than meet the eye and that it is not really a good job guarantee for the workers?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, not only did the so-called job guarantees have an economic loophole, they have legal loopholes. The guarantees have no legal impact.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it five o'clock I would like to say that I have received a written notice from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) that due to prior commitments he is unable to be present in the House on Friday, December 5, 1986, to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business.

Accordingly, I am directing the Table Officers to drop the item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended and, pursuant to Standing Order 39(2), the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very short point of order. I think the House should take exception to people having a position on the Order Paper and not being able to take the time which is allocated for debating their measures, be it a Bill or a motion. I do think Private Members' Hour has been regularly eaten away by government time, which robs us back-benchers of our right to express our views on motions. If an Hon. Member cannot be here, I am sure there are other Members on the book. I know I have a couple of Bills and I would love to have that hour. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider my request that, in the eventuality that someone cannot make it, for God's sake, you should come and see us. We are willing and able to be here to debate our Bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is saying because I consider Private Members' Business to be very important. However, I think there was a ruling made by the Speaker in this regard, that we would not lose the place for the Hon. Member. Sometimes when there is an opportunity to either wait for an Opposition Day, or whatever is going to happen the following day, there is not enough time to get hold of some Hon. Members. However, I will take the Hon. Member's submission as notice and the Chair will review it and come back with another statement for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, while the Chair is considering the constant attempts to correct this problem we are having with Private Members' Business, I wonder if it would consider the possibility of Hon. Members within their own Parties switching times. I am sure the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and I could have switched dates if we had been aware that this was something that was permitted by the rules as they exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The provisions of the new Standing Orders were brought in by the great McGrath Report. The House is its own master. If Hon. Members want to bring in something like that, they will have to discuss it with the Speaker and with their own House Leaders. Perhaps in 1988 or 1989, after the next election, Hon. Members might be able to bring new Standing Orders into the House.

I agree perfectly with the Hon. Member that Private Members' Business is very important and should not be lost. Nevertheless, this is what we have to live with today.

It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

RAILWAY ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE INCREASED COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS OF FIRES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisabiilty of introducing legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the almost seven years I have been a Member of Parliament, this is the first time I have had the opportunity, by good luck, to have my motion drawn for Private Members' Business. This particular motion also happens to have been chosen by the special committee which looks into such matters to be a votable motion. Therefore, because it is a votable motion, I think my fellow colleagues in the House would wish to follow the debate with some attention. What we are trying to do with this motion is to correct an anomaly in the Railway Act which has existed for some years. It is, therefore, an important item for the Government to consider when it next opens up the Railway Act for amendment.

What drew my attention to this particular problem of fires being set by railway operations is an incident which happened to three of my constituents. A fire escaped from railway property and moved on to three different farms burning crops and some outbuildings. The estimate of damage ranged somewhere between $17,000 and $20,000. The three farmers went to the railway and to a lawyer. Upon checking the Railway Act, the lawyer advised them that the railway was liable for $5,000 worth of damage under Section 238 of the Railway Act. The farmers submitted their claims to the railway and had their claims adjudicated. They had to prorate the $5,000 according to damage done to each of them. That amount was very much short of the damage actually done. These constituents and their lawyer got in touch with me about this situation. I suggested that the only option was to have the Railway Act amended and brought up to date. Therefore, I began to look into the matter.

I found that this particular section came into effect back in 1902. It has been in existence ever since. It provides a maximum amount of money for which the railways are liable due to fire initiated by railway activity. In 1902, the source of most fires, I think most of us would agree, would have been from the steam locomotive which belched sparks through its smokestack and set off fires in the dry tinder along the track which would spread to the surrounding farms and grassland and, indeed, into the forests. I am sure some of my colleagues have some examples where extensive forest fires are oftentimes set off by these kinds of railway operations.

I am sure we are aware that under Section 239 of the Railway Act the railway companies are required at all times to maintain and keep their right of way free from dead or dried grass, weeds or other unnecessary combustible matter. In the course of doing that, the section crews will often use fire to keep that dry matter under control. However, using fire as they do, it will occasionally flare up again in a few days and set off a fire.

I should point out that the railways can be sued in addition to the $5,000 if the complainants can prove negligence. They can take the railways to court and attempt to prove negligence on the part of the railways. However, that is a very costly process which goes on and on and can take many, many years. The damage would have to be in the hundreds of thousands of dollars before any complainant would resort to the legal system in an attempt to recover such losses. The railways have some of the best legal talent available and it is extremely difficult to find a lawyer or law firm competent to challenge that legal talent or willing perhaps in the future to give up some business with the railways.

This is a question which can be best addressed by updating the $5,000 limit. I am not certain what amount to recommend to the Government when this motion is presented. However, for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, I will give a couple of amounts which I have been considering. First, using the $5,000, which at that time was considered a fair recompense, and taking the cost of living and other indexes, that amount would now be some seven or eight times greater. If one uses precise price indices based on 1903, the year that this measure came into effect, the $5,000 would be worth about $68,331. However, if we go back and use some other indices, we arrive at different figures. Because the people who will be making the decision on this initially at least are Members of Parliament, I thought it might be of some interest to Members if we placed the $5,000 in the context of the fee that Members of Parliament took in 1903.

In 1903, Members of Parliament received a sessional indemnity of $1,500, and the sessions tended occasionally to go beyond a year, plus an allowance of $6 per day for sessions that went beyond 30 days. If we use that as the base price, we find that $5,000 works out to something in the order of $180,000 or $185,000. I point out these two sets of figures to show what bringing a $5,000 indemnity on the basis of 1903 into the present day would mean. What we would be talking about is an increase from the $5,000 mark to somewhere between $70,000 and $180,000.

It is as simple as that. The motion, as Hon. Members who know procedure around here will realize, is posted as a motion because it deals with money which effectively must be handled by Government. What I am calling on the House to do with this motion is to support it and to instruct the Government to consider changes to the Railway Act in order to bring it up to date. In this way, when people suffer the damage of a fire caused by railway operations they or their community will not be limited to receiving only the pittance of $5,000 as opposed to the real damages that have been done to them.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). The question he raises is whether or not this matter should be more properly dealt with by the courts or under the Railway Act. I will confine my comments to whether or not it should be left in the Railway Act, as is being suggested by the Hon. Member, or whether or not it should more appropriately be left in the hands of the courts.

In recent years the Canadian railways have developed a safety record second to none. CP Rail has been the safest railway in North America for each of the last four years, while CN has been in the top six in the same period of time. We have a railway system of which we can be proud. It was the railways that built this nation, and they continue to perform a vital role in the Canadian economy.

Our railways are safe indeed, and we have an excellent base from which to work. However, one can never be satisfied that one is doing enough where safety is concerned. There are always avenues that should be explored when searching for improvements. There are a number of areas in which legislative changes can help to improve the safety of the system. In fact, the Government's record speaks to that. I think it was in June of last year that we adopted the aeronautics legislation which improved safety measures which ultimately influenced the safety records of our airline industry and its workers.

At present, railway safety is regulated through the provisions of the Railway Act. This legislation has evolved from the early days of the Canadian railway system and encompasses a wide range of issues including economic regulation and corporate powers. In certain aspects the safety provisions are outdated and combined with many other non-safety items.

As evidence of the antiquated aspects of the Railway Act, there are such anachronisms as specific provisions regarding the weight and composition of steam locomotive bells and requirements regarding the oiling of locomotives which became redundant about a century ago. Other non-essential items include sections of the Act which specify that telegraph poles should be set vertically wherever possible and should be painted in urban areas.

Section 338.1 of the Railway Act establishes the liability of railway companies for fires started by railway locomotives. Where the railway company has used "modern and efficient appliances" and has not otherwise been guilty of any negligence, the compensation for property damage by fires started by locomotives is limited to $5,000.

This section of the Railway Act was first written before 1910 and was subsequently revised in 1919. At the time it was considered appropriate to establish liability for fires in the Act because the early steam engines were prone to setting fires even when operated with all due regard to safety and in accordance with proper operating procedures and because insurance was not widely held by property owners. While fires still originate on railway property, these are more likely to be caused by sparks generated by train brakes or by wayside maintenance activities than by locomotives, although diesel locomotives have been known to emit sparks which start fires. However, Section 338 has been used in a more general sense in relation to fires started by trains, without determining whether they originated from the locomotive. Insofar as regulatory control over railway company activities is concerned, Section 221 of the Railway Act gives the Canadian Transport Commission the power to make orders and regulations governing prevention and control by railway companies of fires along railway rights of way.

Section 338 of the Railway Act does not prevent or prejudice any action or claim against a railway company for failure to use "modern and efficient appliances" or for other negligence relating to fires. Therefore, with the exception of this section, there is no legislated limitation on railway company liability.

It is difficult to see any reason why claims for damage caused by fires originating on railway property should not be handled through the courts as civil cases. A person whose property is damaged by a fire started by a railway company should have normal access to compensation through the courts. There does not appear to be any useful purpose served by any exception to this right, as preserved in Section 338.

While the Hon. Member proposes that the maximum level of compensation to victims of fires started by any railway operation, as set out in the Railway Act, be increased to reflect current replacement costs for damaged property, the exception introduced by the Act, regardless of limits on liability, is an anachronism. The Hon. Member's proposal is pertinent in that this section of the Railway Act appears to have outlived its usefulness. However, any change should take into consideration the possibility of deleting it in its entirety rather than modifying it as proposed. In any event, it would be preferable to deal with the modernization of the Railway Act in a co-ordinated manner rather than in a piecemeal fashion as entailed by the Hon. Member's motion.

The change proposed by the Hon. Member should be considered in conjunction with a general review of railway legislation, something which is presently under way at Transport Canada. In due course, such a review could be laid before the House and Hon. Members could then have ample opportunities to examine this amendment and any others that may be considered appropriate in the context of a comprehensive legislative proposal.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to speak on this particular motion. I think it is a very timely motion and I would like to thank the Hon. Member for moving it. This type of debate is useful, particularly since changes to the legislation have taken so long that everything in the Act is now out of proportion.

The resolution is quite confined. It talks about amending the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs. Actually, the motion deals with fires started in some way or other by trains and does not involve anything else.

If I were to have one criticism of the motion, I think it would be that it is too limited. It should be expanded. I would like to give one or two examples of why I think it should be expanded. In spite of that criticism, I am sure this debate will be very valuable to the Government and the Minister responsible when preparing the new legislation. In that light, I think we should give the House examples and illustrations of things pertaining to this motion so that we will not leave any one particular item out when the new legislation comes in.

The first fire I recall that was started by a train occurred when I was about nine or 10 years old. It was a very, very dry summer that year. The wheels of a train apparently hit something on the track and set a spark. That spark got into the grass and spread like prairie fire. You know how fast a prairie fire spreads when the tinder is dry, Mr. Speaker.

This particular fire destroyed the home of a man, though it was not very much of a home. Everyone called it his shack and it was located in a mining area. However, it was his home. I do not think he ever received anything for it. There was simply no way that he could go to court. There was no one to represent him and he did not receive anything. He lost his home. While his neighbours assisted him to find a place to live, I believe the man was very badly treated.

Sometimes the reasons for fires starting are questioned. I remember an accident in southern Alberta, an area now represented by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter). Again, it was a very dry summer. At that time, I was connected with the Alberta Highways Department. The grass was so dry that it was almost impossible to realize how fast a fire like that could spread.

I recall one time when several new boys came into my Boy Scout troop. We were going camping and one of the things the boys had to do was to start a fire without a match. I was showing them two or three ways to do this. I took two sticks and rubbed them together. The boys told me that I would never start a fire that way. I said: "Well, let's see". I had a piece of tinder which was really an old piece of underwear and I put that down. I started to rub the two sticks together and soon there was a spark. Soon after that there was a fire. Those young lads were amazed at how I could start a fire so quickly. If the tinder is in the right condition, one can start a fire very, very rapidly. Once the fire is going, it is hard to control. It goes like, well, prairie fire.

The fire in the Medicine Hat area destroyed a tremendous amount of grassland and several buildings. The farmers affected got practically nothing. They could not go to court because the fire was not set deliberately. No one knows who put the little rock on the track that started the spark that started the fire so it was useless to try to prove liability in a court. Consequently, they did some manoeuvring with the railway company. Whether they ever got a cent out of it, I do not know, but I doubt it very much. Railways are noted for being pretty tight when it comes to paying out anything like that. They are always afraid that their liability will mount and mount.

In this case, things could have been far worse. It was only due to the help of some of the farmers that that fire was stopped. If it had not been stopped, it might have wiped out the entire southeast section of the province.

When dealing with fires started by trains, we must look after the victims. Victims should not always have to get the blunt end of the stick. They should not have to go to court to prove liability because, as the Hon. Member who moved the motion said, it is almost impossible to prove negligence. Who is negligent if a rock hits a train and starts a fire? That is not negligence. How can that be stopped? Yet the victims, the people who lose their grassland and their homes, receive nothing. I do not think that that is right.

I would like to see new legislation drafted so that there is provision made for the cost of replacement of the loss to the greatest possible degree as set by an independent appraiser. If those two or three farmers from southern Alberta had had the opportunity of hiring an appraiser to set the amount of damage, they could have negotiated with the railway and there could have been an appeal to the court. We always want a final appeal to the court. If that had happened, I am sure there would have been a lot more happiness come out of that catastrophe than actually came out of it.

One time when I was connected with the Highways Department in Alberta, a train hit an asphalt truck. The asphalt spread and of course sparks flew and there was quite a fire. The fire destroyed a good part of Highway No. 2 by burning off all the asphalt. It also did some damage to the adjoining grass, but not too much damage because there was not much grass there. The ditches saved that. However, one man was injured very badly. Again, he was the victim of the accident.

In our modern age, it seems to me that we look after criminals and the like but we forget about the victims. Almost always the victims get the blunt end of the stick. I think our legislation should be so designed that it would give some resources to victims of accidents which occur inadvertently. This has been remedied to some degree through legislation. If a victim is hurt by someone trying to rob his home, he can receive compensation. We have made provision for that. I wonder whether we should make provision for the victims of fires, whether they be started by trains or trucks or by some other means. Victims of fires should not have to go without. Some group should be established and a fund should be made available to them.

I understand a piece of legislation is being prepared. It should address the entire matter of victims. Victims of crime are already looked after, but the legislation should take into consideration victims of fires which start inadvertently. If it can be proven that the fire was started deliberately, the victim can go to court. If the person who started the fire has anything, I suppose one should be able to get some redress. However, people who start fires deliberately very often have nothing, and the victims are helpless.

I do not know whether negligence can be proven in the case of a railway fire. A railway president in his right mind or any of his people would not start a fire with a torch. However, fires start and victims are left with no redress.

The legislation should be as broad as possible. We cannot cover everything. For instance, we cannot put a dollar figure on human life. I remember an accident which occurred in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) where there was no protection at all. There was a fire because the car ran into a moving train. There was an almost instantaneous explosion and three young lives were lost. However, as I said, we cannot cover everything. Surely to goodness a victim who has played no part at all in causing the fire should not be left helpless and without compensation. I think it is very important to bring that out in this debate.

I believe the objective of the federal program is to ensure that a uniform set of standards is set in place across the country. They should not only be applicable to railways. They should be applicable to all modes of transportation. I think the debate is well worth-while. I hope it helps the draftsmen of the new legislation.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, over the years the Canadian railway system has established and maintained a high level of safety. During the past four years, Canadian Pacific has achieved the best safety record of all class one railways in North America. This includes all major railway companies of the United States and Canada. Canadian National has consistently ranked in the top six during the same period of time. It should not be forgotten that railways are responsible for only 3 per cent of the total transportation-related deaths in Canada.

While the record has been and continues to be good, there is room for improvement. With this in mind, early in 1986 the former Minister of Transport identified specific steps to improve the safety of railway operations.

These steps included a safety blitz of operating personnel to ensure that safety practices were understood, stepped up supervision and monitoring of operations, increased Canadian Transport Commission inspection and verification, medical check-ups for operating personnel, performance audits of supervisors, a maintenance review, and accelerated government and railway initiatives to develop the advanced train control system.

The Minister also initiated inquiries into accidents and accelerated work on a new railway safety Act to modernize and improve regulation of railway safety. At the Minister's direction, the Canadian Transport Commission carried out an examination of Canadian railway derailments and collisions in recent years. The review indicated that the number of accidents had declined during the last five years in relation to the traffic handled.

Derailments have been declining in spite of an increase in the volume of traffic moved. Approximately a third of all derailments occur in yard operations, and these are generally of a minor nature. More than 80 per cent of the collisions reported to the CTC also take place in yards. The majority of these collisions are minor side-swipes which occur during switching operations and result in superficial damage to freight cars. Fortunately head-on train collisions are rare.

Perhaps I should say at this time that no matter what safety precautions are taken, there are always the elements of human error and mechanical failure. I doubt very much that we will ever eliminate accidents.

On the basis of the CTC report and the latest information available for 1986, there do not appear to be any identifiable trends signifying deterioration in railway safety performance in Canada.

A special task force was formed to examine the flow of dangerous commodities through the rail network in the Toronto area and to report to the Minister on options to improve safety. One must agree that the Minister is certainly monitoring and taking precautions to eliminate the possibility of accidents wherever possible.

An early result of this initiative was an offer by CP Rail to reduce the speed of operation of trains carrying dangerous goods across the Metropolitan Toronto area. This voluntary offer was accepted by the Minister and now is in effect.

Canada's railway industry, through the Railway Association of Canada, has been instrumental in sponsoring a program to develop a major technological advance in train control systems. Working in co-operation with the Association of American Railroads, the railways have initiated a program known as the advanced control system, which would use advanced computer and satellite communications technology to achieve substantial improvements in productivity and safety. At the direction of the Minister, Transport Canada is working with industry on means to accelerate prototype development. The advanced train control system will help to make Canadian railways even safer and thus help them to build upon their already enviable safety record.

As I said at the outset, we as Canadians should be proud of the fact that one of our major Canadian railways has achieved the best safety record of all class one railways in North America and that our other major Canadian railway ranked sixth among them.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to say a few words about the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to summarize the events that led up to what is now happening in the transportation sector, and by this I mean the railways or any other form of transportation.

[English]

As you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, it is important that the present Government, with our new Transport Act, with our Railway Act and with all of the implications, take into account what has been done and what has to be done. I beg your indulgence, Sir, to make several points.

Railway safety has become a major concern not only as a result of increased highway trafic but especially since the advent of the petrochemical industry and synthetic products. The companies have been marketing a slew of new products which are often very dangerous and harmful and which are transported mostly by railways.

Sixty-two per cent of all railway accidents occur at level crossings. As I said earlier, our Government has taken steps to improve safety at level crossings and on rails as well. Mr. Speaker, this is a long-term project which calls for the active participation of other governments, the railway industry, and the chemical industry.

From 1978 to 1985 the number of accidents at the 27,200-odd level crossings declined from 871 to 602. This is not good enough, and I am sure you will agree that the number of accidents is still too high. Here are a few of the initiatives which have been taken, and other immediate projects related to railway crossings. Here are some of the recommendations we are making and which will be implemented in the near future.

1. Light-reflecting grade crossing St. Andrew's crosses;

2. Larger flashing light lenses whose red shade is more easily spotted:

Mr. Speaker, when I say "a red shade more easily spotted" I refer exclusively to railways.

3. More rapidly flashing lights;

4. New light-reflecting gates;

5. New constant-time signals which provide enough time before the arrival of the train and which give more confidence to the public;

6. Federal underpass and overpass construction projects;

7. Again, a federal contribution to the train-watch program.

Here are more details about this program, Mr. Speaker.

Efforts have always been made to improve grade crossings and install the necessary automatic protective devices, yet they have not been sufficient to reduce significantly the number of deaths and injuries.

The purpose of this Canadian program is to get all federal, provincial and municipal authorities to work together on a nation-wide basis to reduce property damage and injuries resulting from grade crossing accidents.

And to do that, Mr. Speaker, the program called Train Alert Operation covers four points: education for the public of all ages on the dangers at level crossings; statutes and regulations to define the rights and responsabilities of car drivers and pedestrians at level crossings; engineering, including the planning, building and maintenance of level crossings; and finally, program evaluation based on results.

Mr. Speaker, we therefore need to inform and educate the public, in the light of statistics that are still too depressing, as shown by media reports of accidents which, for the most part, could have been avoided, at level crossings across the country. This therefore is the reason for the Train Alert Operation.

In order also to improve on safety conditions at points other than level crossings, almost all the recommendations following investigations have already been, or are being implemented. Among those recommendations, we note the following:

1. (a) Ball bearings rather than oil pads on freight car axles;

(b) Tank cars equipped with front shields, thermal protection and protectors for base couplers.

Mr. Speaker, in using those words I realize this is a complicated, a very technical matter for Canadians, but in the final analysis it boils down to greater safety for us.

2. Installing rail car hot box detectors, upon entering and within densely populated areas.

3. The hiring by Transport Canada of qualified personnel who could be quickly dispatched to the scene of an accident in order to supervise clean-up operations.

4. (a) A manual for locomotive and caboose employees, showing among others things the curve features and stations for each division;

(b) Paid courses for employees working on rail cars used for the transportation of dangerous goods;

(c) Instructions for mechanical inspections and file maintenance;

(d) Filing with the CCT, for approval, the list of railway train mechanical inspection sites;

(e) Filing with Transport Canada and all private or public agencies of emergency plans and round-the-clock telephone numbers for information on dangerous goods;

(f) Listing of trains, indicating the position of cars containing dangerous goods and the nature of their contents;

(g) Installing tachometers, windshield wipers, and defrosters on engines and cabooses.

5. Also, Mr. Speaker, as always, installing rearview mirrors and communication equipment between locomotive and caboose with monitoring by a central station. By the way, Mr. Speaker, in view of the accidents which have occurred over the past two, three, four or five years, I think that the idea of a main station is very important, so that the person who is at the head of the train is always in contact with the one at the other end, but especially with the main station which is always in contact with our railway network.

6. The installation of black boxes. Black boxes is translated in French by "bavards". I know, Mr. Speaker, this is the same word we use to designate some Hon. Members who are a little too talkative. But this is a different story all together.

These black boxes record everything that goes on in the train.

In 1986, Mr. Speaker, we must live with the new technology. And so on and so forth, Mr. Speaker. You are signaling me that I still have one more minute. But what I want to say, dealing with the motion moved by my friend the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), is that it is important to see the issue in its global context.

• (1750)

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that we see new motions introduced in the House. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). We cannot isolate one particular problem, we have several cases. May the heavenly Father forbid but at times I think that we have too many lawyers. But that is another subject.

As to the motion, I hope that the Hon. Member will realize that in the House we are working with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bissonnette). We hope that the intent of the proposed Bills will be satisfactory to Hon. Members and to all the people concerned.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to join today in the debate on the motion moved by my colleague from the New Democratic Party opposite, and I wish to congratulate him for his motion, especially since, as he is aware, I am one of the members of the Committee on Private Members' Business. I want to congratulate him on the quality of his presentation when he came before the committee to explain his Bill and, without revealing what went on in committee, I can tell him that he made a good impression and that we soon came to a consensus in recognizing the validity of his views.

I also believe that it is quite right to say that such an archaic piece of legislation should indeed be reviewed, and I can assure my colleague that it will be within a few months and that our Government will be proposing important reforms. The Hon. Member will have had the merit of contributing to these reforms, and he will be able to say that his intervention today was not in vain and was indeed extremely important.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I come from a region, Abitibi-Témiscamingue, where the railroad has played an extremely important role for economic development and where it still plays a major role in our economy. Naturally, the railroad played and continues to play a very important role in passenger transport, but also in the movement of goods from my region, in which the main industries are forestry and mining.

The train therefore plays a very important role in the export of our products. If there was a fire in our region caused by a train carrying wood, and we do export a lot of wood, it would be a terrible tragedy in view of the immensity of our territory and the forest which surrounds us. The very idea that my entire region or villages and parishes in it could be destroyed by a fire caused by a train accident is terrible and I am glad to know that there have been very few such accidents in the past. The figures show that there have been very few such fires, but we still have to take precautions and to tell ourselves that this is always a possibility, and in this regard, today's motion is quite justified. To my knowledge, no one in my region has been the victim of a train-related fire, and I hope that such a thing will never happen. If it did, we would find out that the existing legislation is quite inadequate, but as I said earlier, I am certain that the intervention of the Hon. Member will receive a favourable response in coming months when this legislation is reviewed.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a more detailed reply to the Hon. Member. If we look at the record of our Government as concerns air and sea safety, I think that it shows how much we can accomplish in the case of rail safety.

If I may, I would like to say a few words about air security, where we have made a lot of improvements in the last few years. Some weeks ago, something happened to me which I would like to relate here as it shows that we are very concerned about security in this country. The terrorist attacks of which we are all aware have brought to Canada better security measures and better protection of people in our airports.

Surely that will cause a certain amount of unpleasantness and it happened to me a few weeks ago. I was at the Ottawa Airport ready to board a plane to my riding of Rouyn-Noranda and I was intercepted at the X-ray screening. I had handed over my suitcase and an officer took it back because the X-rays had picked up something unusual and that was a paper knife which I was unfortunately carrying in my bag. Because I had letters to open, I had put the paper knife in my bag and it was discovered. I can tell you that I was slightly embarrassed at the Ottawa Airport as the security officer was looking at the weapon or tool. I was next to him and people were going by and I was saying to myself: I hope no colleague of mine or people I know are around here, because I will look like a terrorist. I then congratulated the officers for their serious and strict enforcement of the rules.

I wanted to give that example to show that security in Canada is a matter which has always been treated seriously. I could have dealt at length with other steps taken to ensure air and marine security, but I think that if the past is a guarantee for the future I can assure my colleague that his representation today will not have been useless and that the Government will soon table a bill taking into account his present demands.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), but I expect the Speaker to return shortly to deliver his ruling. When the Speaker comes in, I would hope that the Hon. Member will yield him the floor.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): I certainly will yield the floor when the Speaker comes in to deliver his ruling.

Along with my colleagues, I wish to congratulate the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) for bringing this important point to the attention of the House. It certainly is inequitable and unfair that a piece of legislation that has been on the books since 1903 pays only $5,000 in compensation to people who suffer loss from fires caused by the railroads. According to his figures, it now should be upgraded to about $68,000. This is something that is very important, and it should be looked into.

I realize that we cannot do very much here today, but I will make a commitment to the Hon. Member that I will speak to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and to the chairman of the standing committee, and draw this to their attention. I know that in my riding it would be very important. I did not realize this was on the books. With three railroads running through my constituency, it is a very important thing, and we will look into this.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: This morning the Chair heard a point of order regarding the status of the allotted days for the current Supply period, and the effect of yesterday's proceedings on the Supply motion that was to be debated and voted on yesterday.

The House will remember that at 3 p.m. yesterday the Chair heard comments at length on an alleged question of privilege before taking the matter under advisement. Accordingly, Routine Proceedings were delayed and the House was still considering Routine Proceedings when it adjourned at six p.m. I will go through the details of that in a moment.

I have reviewed the precedent referred to by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis). The events in that precedent were as follows. First, on Wednesday, June 6, 1972 the sixth and seventh allotted days for that period were designated to occur on Thursday, June 8, 1972, and Friday, June 9, 1972. Second, the Notice Paper shows a notice of motion of Supply for Thursday, June 8, 1972. Third, on June 8, 1972, the House began Routine Proceedings and debate ensued on a motion under the then Standing Order 43. Fourth, at 10 o'clock p.m., when the House adjourned it was still considering the motion under Routine Proceedings. The order for Supply was not reached or called on June 8, 1972. Fifth, the Order Paper for June 9, 1972, shows under the continuing order of Supply: "the sixth allotted day" with the same motion on the Notice Paper and an additional motion.

At this point it is important to note that since the order for Supply was not reached on June 8, it reappeared still as the sixth allotted day on Friday, June 9, 1972. It was not a lost allotted day because the order had not been called.

The sequence of events yesterday was as follows: When Question Period ended, there was an alleged question of privilege. Debate on this lasted from three o'clock to 4.30 p.m. This was followed by a statement by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) which, including replies, lasted 10 minutes. The House then moved under Routine Proceedings to petitions. There were petitions presented. During the presentation of petitions, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) moved: "That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day". That occurred at about 5 p.m.

As Hon. Members know, if this motion had passed the House would have gone to Orders of the Day and the opposition motion would have been called at about 20 minutes to 6, which is the time the vote on the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap was completed. At that point the allotted day would have commenced. However, the motion to proceed to Orders of the Day was defeated and the House continued with Routine Proceedings which were then at the petition stage.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) rose, presented a petition, and moved: "That the House do now proceed to Introduction of Bills". That motion is non-debatable. A division was called for. Before the vote could take place, the ordinary time of daily adjournment was reached and the Deputy Speaker lapsed the motion. I am not ruling on that aspect at this time. It was raised and I will return to the Chamber to discuss that.

However, I repeat that before the vote could take place the ordinary time of daily adjournment was reached and the Deputy Speaker lapsed the motion. The day was then done. In the words of the old hymn: "The day thou gavest Lord, had ended". Consequently, I must rule that the allotted day was never in fact commenced and, therefore, two allotted days remain in the current period.

The Chair wants Hon. Members to understand that it is not for the Chair to comment on how or on whose motions the day ended as it did, only that it did end without the allotted day having commenced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the order is dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING. (B) PLEA BY PHYSICIAN'S ORGANIZATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 I raised an extremely important question with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I have raised this question with regard to the Government's failure to introduce a policy against cigarette advertising on a number of occasions. In reply to my question, the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated, as reported at page 908 of Hansard:

• (1805)

It is not simply a matter of banning advertising so that people will no longer smoke, thereby ending lung cancer. Obviously that which the Hon. Member continually puts forward is not the complete answer.

I never said that a ban on cigarette advertising is the complete answer, and neither has anyone else. The point is that it is part of the answer.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said that he is in favour of a smoke-free country. He is certainly not working toward that end but he has given that as an objective of his Department.

It is an extremely important part of a comprehensive strategy. Of course, I am not able in a question to give the entire strategy. I have had an opportunity to discuss it in the House and my Party has taken a comprehensive position. The comprehensive strategy we recommend includes research and assistance for tobacco crop substitution. The advertising ban is obviously a part of it, along with quitting programs, research into assisting people in the treatment of the addiction to tobacco, counter-advertising programs, health promotion programs and, of course, provisions for a smoke-free work environment and smoke-free facilities for the use of the public when dealing with the Government.

The reason why an advertising ban is so important is that tobacco companies are losing smokers as they quit or die of smoking related diseases. They need new recruits and they are getting them from young people. Consumption of tobacco has been increasing. The tobacco companies are spending $200 million a year to advertise tobacco and the Department of National Health and Welfare has some $1 million or $1.5 million for counter-advertising. It cannot possibly compete with the advertising that the cigarette companies are using to bring young people into this addictive habit.

A Private Member's Bill cannot deal with money and cannot force the Government to spend money, so I could not bring those other aspects that would require expenditure of funds, such as positive programs of crop substitution research or counter-advertising programs, into my Private Member's Bill. However, my Bill C-204 is as comprehensive as possible for a Private Member's Bill. It would ban advertising of tobacco products as hazardous substances according to the Act, and of course would provide a smoke-free workplace for areas under federal jurisdiction. That is as comprehensive as I can be. Does the Minister support that? No, he has not come into the House to support the Bill. It is a Private Member's Bill and, although he is a Minister, he can certainly come to the House and support my Bill, as I hope he will.

I note that the Government itself is still advertising tobacco. One of the very sad ironies we see today is that federal Government agencies are promoting the use of tobacco. For example, there is tobacco advertising, without a health warning, on one of the major signs in Toronto, at Harbourfront. It is a federal Crown corporation. CN Rail, a federal Government agency, advertises tobacco products. There is advertising and promotion of cigarette products at airports, train stations and many other places under federal jurisdiction.

The Government is promoting a product which is known to kill 35,000 Canadians a year. Since the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been in office, 70,000 Canadians have died of tobacco related diseases and another 35,000 are dying in his third year of office. Assuming that he is not fired before the end of his term, he can have the honour to be the Minister of National Health and Welfare while 100,000 Canadians die of an absolutely preventable set of diseases.

Of course, it is not possible to make changes overnight and no one expects the advertising to stop overnight. However, it is extremely important that we work toward that end. I do not believe I have to defend once again the argument that there has been no government activity in the last two years. I ask the Government to name one act that it has undertaken to provide a smoke-free workplace or to ban advertising. The Minister asked one tobacco company to withdraw one advertisement directed to our young people.

The federal Government fights its own employees who seek in collective agreements protection against smoke pollution. It fights individuals who have taken actual cases to court. Vancouver introduced a by-law for a smoke-free workplace. The federal Government has said that it will not support it. I call upon the Government to change its ways on this subject and for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to come out in support of my Bill, which is the most comprehensive strategy we have before the House to deal with this extremely sad problem which is killing such a large number of Canadians.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, everybody will agree that the effects of cigarette smoking are devastating. Every year, cigarette smoking results in over 30,000 premature deaths in Canada. So it is one of the major public health problems in this country.

The federal government is concerned about this problem and has already put into place policies and programs which aim to reduce tobacco consumption. However, this government does not plan to take a piecemeal approach to this problem. Accordingly, it has been actively developing a comprehensive, health-oriented tobacco policy, one which addresses the full range of tobacco issues.

I would like to outline to the House some of the activities which the government has already undertaken in this regard.

In January 1985, in response to concerns about the RJR-Macdonald Company sponsorship of the Canadian Ski Association, the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport announced a new policy requiring amateur sport bodies funded by the government to desist from associating with tobacco companies.

In October 1985, the Department of National Health and Welfare, its provincial counterparts and several national non-government organizations announced the launching of the "National Program to Reduce Smoking", building on the collaborative efforts of the "Generation of Non-Smokers" program.

The federal government also provides funding to non-government organizations, such as the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health and the Canadian Lung Association. These organizations are an essential complement to the government's anti-smoking activities, and we aim to continue supporting their work.

The government is also concerned about encouraging farmers to withdraw from the tobacco industry, in the face of a declining tobacco market. Accordingly, the Minister of Agriculture is currently studying several options for a new program to assist those farmers who wish to undertake alternative enterprises.

Due to concern that involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke conflicts with the objective of having a healthy work environment, six federal departments and agencies have recently restricted smoking in the workplace. It is hoped that this will provide an example for those private and public companies which have not yet put into place smoking policies.

Canadians are letting us know that they are also concerned with current tobacco advertising practices. They became more aware of this issue with the Macdonald sponsorhip of amateur skiing and the "Tempo" cigarette advertising campaign. The new 15-cigarette "Export A" pack has also been a worrisome tobacco marketing practice since it makes the product more accessible to young people.

If you take a look at what is being done, Mr. Speaker, you will realize that there is less advertising. Above all, I would like to say that several options to take stronger action on tobacco advertising are currently being considered by the government, and legislative measures remain a possibility.

Of course, any action on tobacco advertising will be taken within the context of a comprehensive approach to the tobacco problem, which has as its goal a smokeless society by the year 2000.

RAILWAYS—FUTURE OF 551 CN EMPLOYEES AT MONCTON. (B) NUMBER OF JOBS RETAINED IN MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to reply to answers given to me in this House on November 6 by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) regarding employment at the Moncton shops. The Minister said CN has found accommodation for 551 workers. However, the point I want to make is that 234 of these jobs will be lost to Moncton. If the CN-CGE deal is approved, another 303 positions might be saved. Unfortunately, that scenario is looking more and more unlikely.

The CN-CGE deal is in jeopardy because CN and its unions cannot agree on the waiving of a no-contracting-out clause. I must say that the Government has unwisely put all its eggs in the CGE basket and it is now left with a very serious problem.

The Minister is having real trouble answering questions in the House. He has responded by blaming others for what I say is his own incompetence and inaction. First, the Minister blamed the unions for not agreeing to the sale and for not agreeing to impossible conditions. Second, he has blamed the previous administration for past policies. However, I remind the Minister that he is now head of the Department of Transport and he has the power to intervene and make changes. The fact of the matter is that up until now the Minister has done absolutely nothing to assist in trying to find a solution to this problem, and he has a clear responsibility in this matter.

The Minister will recall that his predecessor clearly indicated to the people of Moncton and to the workers that the Government would not tolerate any massive lay-offs at the Moncton shops. The Minister must now uphold that commitment. Unfortunately for the Moncton and the New Brunswick area he is not doing so.

Let us have a look at the figures. In Septemmber, 1985, 225 employees were informed that they would be laid off temporarily. Those workers have never been recalled. In September, 1986, a further 101 employees received their pink slips. Last month, another 62 were let go. I hear that there might be further lay-offs tomorrow. However, I do not know the numbers but some people have been called in.

The figure at the moment is close to 400, not including those in tomorrow's announcement. The Government and the Minister have completely forgotten their commitment to the people of Moncton. How many lay-offs will it take to constitute a massive lay-off in the eyes of the Government?

Coming back to the CN-CGE deal, Hon. Members will recall that last week I asked the Minister to intervene. I asked him to speak personally to the union leaders because at this stage I believe that only the Minister can break the impasse. If he wanted, he could reassure the unions that the Government will not allow CN to contract out railway work outside the Moncton Shops complex. I believe that would go a long way in terms of reassuring the unions. However, the Minister will not do that. I suppose he would feel quite uncomfortable because he has chosen to criticize publicly the unions for not accepting the deal.

I also say that CN has put its unions in an impossible position. On the one hand it has said it will not extend contracting out beyond Moncton, while on the other hand it has placed contracting out on the bargaining table in its present contract negotiations with its unions. There is also a credibility factor involved here. The unions and the workers in Moncton have been assured many times that there would be no massive lay-offs, that their shops would not close and that they would not be put up for sale. Then, the same workers are being hit with massive lay-offs. How can we blame them for not accepting the deal? They have no faith in what is happening. That is why the workers are refusing to agree and why we are at an impasse.

While this has been happening, it seems that the Minister of Transport has left the whole affair to Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick. Where was the Premier when it was first announced that the shops were to close? I would suggest that if the Premier wants to take the train, he should arrive at the station on time. In this case, he was not on time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude briefly, if I may, by asking what the Prime minister has done and what he is doing about this? He wanders about the country saying that remote areas such as ours do not get their fair share of economic development. And then what does he do about it? Strictly nothing. Meanwhile, in Atlantic Canada, we are faced with a constant erosion of our regional transport system.

[English]

The Council of Maritime Premiers have expressed their concern that the new transportation act emphasizes profitability rather than transportation as a regional development tool. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has turned a deaf ear to those comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude with the following question: How far will the Minister allow the situation in Moncton to deteriorate? How many jobs will we lose before the Minister takes any action?

[English]

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). As all Hon. Members know, the transportation system across Canada is under a great deal of pressure. Whether in New Brunswick or in other parts of Canada, we all have to face head-on some of the changes that are occurring at this time. Some of these changes, such as the ones occurring in Moncton, are not easy changes.

The Government is actively encouraging co-operation and the negotiation of a settlement between CGE and the unions involved. This is something the Minister is certainly encouraging as much as possible. It is not simply a question of blaming someone, it is a question of encouraging all parties to participate in constructive discussions and to reach a successful conclusion to the CGE deal.

The Hon. Member has suggested that the Government is not doing anything in Atlantic Canada or the Moncton region. I will not deal with the whole myriad of programs under Employment and Immigration or the regional economic development agreements. In this particular case, a $4 million special development initiative is in place to help fund the search for new industries and to minimize the impact on affected CN employees. That is a special $4 million initiative that has been taken in recognition of the serious problem faced by the people of Moncton and the CN employees.

In direct response and follow-up to the question the Minister answered in the House, our most recent figures indicate that accommodation has been found for 551 employees so far. Of these, 54 are eligible for early retirement and 487 positions have been offered to the unions for acceptance in Moncton, Toronto, Montreal and Windsor. Ten positions come under the general category of "various other", and 317 of these jobs are in Moncton.

Obviously the Government wants to see as many of the CN workers as possible accommodated. It is trying with whatever devices it has to ensure a successful conclusion to the CGE deal and to take any special initiatives possible to satisfy the needs of CN workers.

REFUGEES—DEPORTATION OF IRANIAN STUDENT FROM UNITED STATES. (B) REQUEST FOR CANADIAN ACTION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to review an earlier question which I asked of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) on November 26. It concerns a 25 year old Iranian student, Akbar Moatamedi, who has sought refugee status in Canada. Mr. Moatamedi speaks English and several other languages. He is facing deportation by the Americans at any moment.

Earlier in the year he was deported by the Americans. He stopped in France and tried to commit suicide rather than face certain persecution and probable death as soon as he touched the tarmac in Iran. Because of that act, France sent him back to the United States where he is currently in a Washington hospital pending a second attempt to deport him back to Iran.

The fact of the matter is that Mr. Moatamedi is facing probable and certain death. He has submitted a list of 10 individuals, including family members and friends who have faced execution in Iran, to the United Nations High Commission on Refugees.

The only reason he was not deported last week was because interest was shown by Canadians and some publicity was generated in Canada. The Americans have allowed additional time to lapse in order to see whether Canada would be willing to take this individual.

There are Canadians in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia who have tried to communicate a message to the Canadian Government indicating that they are perfectly willing and able to sponsor Mr. Moatamedi, to house, to feed and clothe him, and even to employ him. They have rallied, as they rallied in the past for four Iranian refugees in the last year, not only to provide Mr. Moatamedi with a brand new life in Canada, but to save his life. They have committed themselves to the task, and to date the Government has turned its back on their pleas.

They, together with the gentleman's lawyers in Washington and in Toronto, are frantically trying to convince the Government otherwise. It is an eleventh hour plea. To date the Government has only said that it is an American issue and that it cannot do anything according to the regulations.

We know better. It is a complete fabrication of the authority vested in the Minister of State for Immigration. The facts are very clear. The Minister can issue the individual refugee status which would allow him to go through the Canadian process and prove that he would be persecuted and would be faced with death in Iran, whereupon he could be accorded refugee status. The Minister could offer a ministerial permit. By the very fact of such a permit, all security and medical clearances could be avoided and held after his arrival in Canada. A ministerial permit signed by bureaucrats, as well as by the Minister, would allow the immediate transportation of the individual to Canada because of health, safety or compassionate reasons, and then all the processing could take place from Canada.

The Minister cannot say that the regulations do not allow him to bring Mr. Moatamedi into Canada or that it is an American issue. There is power and authority in the Immigration Act to allow the person into Canada. After all, the five Soviet army defectors did not apply for such a transfer at the embassy. They did not fill in any application forms; obviously, they were in the middle of a war. What happened was that because of a ministerial permit, the five individuals were allowed to be air-lifted from Afghanistan into Canada, and now the processing is taking place.

A third option would be to allow the community of Yarmouth to sponsor the individual under the auspices of a refugee program. Again the Minister is avoiding reality. In 1986, 12,000 refugees from around the world were sponsored by the Government. An additional 6,000 refugees were sponsored. A community has to come forward with a number of guarantees in place to convince the Government that it is prepared to shelter and house those individuals properly and adequately. The Government can allow the community initiative that has already taken place. Mr. Miller from Yarmouth has already put up X amount of dollars showing his intent, but the Government has refused.

Rather than the Government hiding behind a facade of regulations, rather than the Government saying that it cannot do that, rather than the Government not allowing the community to sponsor this individual, it should state the reasons why the Government cannot, clearly and forthwith. The Government should not hide behind a pretence that it cannot do what it has already done hundreds and hundreds of times for other individuals, some of whom have been most questionable.

I look forward to the Parliamentary Secretary providing some real answers and solutions which are within the grasp of the Government. The Government should not say it is unable and it should not call it an American issue. It is a Canadian issue sponsored by Canadian citizens.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to give the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) some accurate information. Unfortunately, the Member's premises are inaccurate. I would challenge him to try to be accurate when he makes representation on behalf of someone and ask him not to put forward information which might be misleading to Canadians who are listening.

Mr. Marchi: I challenge that statement.

Mr. Gurbin: I ask the Hon. Member to prove that any of the 10 people about whom he is talking have been treated in the way he indicates.

Mr. Marchi: Ask the United Nations.

Mr. Gurbin: We have investigated the issue. We found that none of the 10 people which the Hon. Member mentioned have faced any of the difficulties that he suggests. My time is very short, but let me tell him quickly that what we are doing is precisely what the Hon. Member said, namely, following the United Nations.

Canada received the Nansen Medal this year because of the actions of our Government and what we have done for refugees. We are following the suggestion of the United Nations High Commissioner that the Canadian Government should allow the case to be followed through the American courts. On December 1, application was made to the American courts on behalf of this particular candidate. We have been advised by the United Nations to let that process continue. If the Hon. Member has any other accurate information or if there is any other information that comes from any further investigation, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) have said that they are more than prepared to consider any other additional information that could affect our position.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) tried to make Canadians believe that the Official Opposition was trying to scare the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition and the people of Canada are mindful of the fact that not long ago, in 1985, this same Government released a paper and invited Canadians to discuss the reform of Old Age Security pensions and family allowances. The same Government and the same Prime Minister promised the elderly that Old Age Security pensions would not be affected. They promised that the money cut from family allowances would not be used to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians will recall that this Government did the exact opposite. Six months later, it cut the indexation of Old Age Security pensions and family allowance payments to help reduce the deficit, leading to the results we saw in the polls in July, namely that 52 per cent of Canadians do not trust the Prime Minister.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, this morning I had the honour on behalf of the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to announce a $400,000 increase in feed freight assistance to British Columbia. This is in addition to the $5.6 million spent in 1986 under the Feed Freight Assistance Program to ship 525,000 tonnes of grain into B.C. The changes announced today are in line with the Government's goal of equalizing feed grain prices in those areas of Canada that are not self-sufficient in feed grain production.

Today's announcement is yet another indication of the commitment of this Government to maintain and enhance the role of the agricultural producer in our Canadian economy.

I pay special tribute to the B.C. Cattleman's Association and the B.C. Federation of Agriculture for bringing to our attention inequities in feed grain freight costs in the province. I am happy and proud that the Government has addressed these inequities.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, on October 6, as reported at page 97 of Hansard, in response to questions from my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), about deficiency payments for western grain producers, whether or not it would be new money, and when they would get it, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said:

> I will tell him this. He is asking whether it is new money or old money. It will be new money and good money in the pockets of the farmers.

On October 7, in response to questions from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Prime Minister said as reported at page 147 of Hansard:

> The program about which we have been talking will put a billion dollars of increased cash flow into the hands of Canadian farmers beyond that which they are now receiving.

He went on to say:

> This is new money in the hands of farmers, and I know my right hon. friend will not oppose that.

We and the western grain producers would like to know where that new money in the pockets of the farmers is. When are they going to get it and in what manner?

ENERGY

SYNCRUDE TAR SANDS PROJECT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, security of supply should be the policy of the Government on oil. We cannot rely on imports from the Middle East or elsewhere as the political situation in those countries is volatile and our own conventional oil resources are depleting at an accelerated rate. The only logical solution to this problem is to develop the tar sands.

At this time Syncrude has an expansion scheme, a capacity addition program, which would add around 20,000 barrels a day to its current production of 129,000 barrels a day, and provide 25,000 man-years of construction work and 275 new permanent jobs. I am advised that if the world price is $16 U.S. per barrel or more, Syncrude would be able to finance the expansion on its own. If the world price should fall below that, it would require loan guarantees from the federal and provincial Governments. Our Government should extend all its co-operation to this industry so the program is completed on schedule.

INDUSTRY

CHAMPION FOREST PRODUCTS MILL IN HINTON, ALTA.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Edmonton a group of concerned citizens from the town of Hinton, Alberta, held a press conference to make one final appeal to the federal Government to save the projected expansion of the Champion Forest Products mill. This project, if completed, would create some 450 jobs in the town of Hinton, as well as stimulate the economy of the entire region. It is no secret that with the downturn in the oil patch and the state of agriculture in the province, Alberta cannot afford to lose a major expansion of its forest industry, and certainly neither can Canada. Yet that Conservative Government refuses to act.

The people of Hinton tried to lobby their Member of Parliament quietly and the Conservative Government hoping that the Conservatives, who had promised so much to western Canada, would listen. They did not. Those people have now organized and taken their case directly to the people of Canada. We urge the Government to listen and act now in order to save an expansion project important for Hinton and for Canada.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

HIGH QUALITY WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENT REVIEW URGED

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, growers of high quality hard wheat on the Prairies are justifiably upset over the recent statement by Canadian Wheat Board Commissioner Jarvis that they will receive little or no final payment for number 1 and number 2 grades of wheat sold for the 1985-86 crop year.

High quality wheat attracted large premiums in 1985-86 because of world-wide shortages. Farmers who grew it had good reason to expect a fair-sized final payment over and above the initial price paid at the time of delivery. Unfortunately, it appears that funds which ought to be available for this have been used by the Wheat Board to cover losses incurred on the lower grades of wheat which sold for less than the initial price. Consequently, many farmers on the southern prairies who grow smaller quantities of high quality wheat are seeing their anticipated final payment diluted to cover losses on lower quality wheats which are grown in much greater volume by farmers in the north. I urge the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to review this serious matter both for fairness today and policy direction tomorrow.

AIRPORTS

MERGER OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government on its innovative solution to the problem which was plaguing Montreal of having two airports 50 kilometres apart. The innovative solution, of course, is to designate them as one airport, calling Mirabel the north terminal and Dorval the west terminal. I expect that airport planners from across the world will flock to Montreal to see this innovative solution.

In order that those planners can see this solution applied elsewhere, we should resolve the problem of no direct flights to Edmonton by opening a new Alberta International Airport so that people can fly to the south terminus in Calgary and take a free bus up to Edmonton. I suggest that the British Columbia International Airport should incorporate the Vancouver terminal and the Victoria terminal, west and east. In Ontario we should have the southern Ontario International Airport, Lester B. Pearson branch, with a west terminal at Malton, an east terminal at Hamilton, and additional terminals at London and Windsor.

This is a very fine concept which will resolve all our problems. We expect that at the new Atlantic International Airport, transportation between the east terminus in St. John's and the west terminus in Halifax will be free, by ferry.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

PRESENTATION OF BRAVERY AWARD TO FIREFIGHTER KEITH CLIFFORD

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, at this very moment at Rideau Hall the Governor General is presenting a bravery award to one of my constituents, firefighter Keith Clifford, and to 33 other Canadians for acts of heroism.

On November 12, 1984, firefighter Keith Clifford arrived at the scene of a fire in the city of Toronto. Informed that two children were trapped inside the building, he and two other firefighters battled blinding smoke and flames and, despite the extreme heat, rushed to the upper floor. Disregarding the danger, he crawled into the blazing front room in search of the children. Despite the hot gases that erupted, sending a ball of flame throughout the second floor, firefighter Clifford and his two companions succeeded in rescuing the young children from the blazing inferno.

Keith Clifford and the other 33 bravery award recipients are role models for all Canadians. They deserve our congratulations, our thanks, and our everlasting admiration.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—NEED FOR LONG-TERM CANADIAN NATIONAL RAIL CONTRACT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has stated that it will not direct Canadian National to provide a long-term contract for rails to Sydney Steel Corporation. In so doing it is playing directly into the hands of the Government of Nova Scotia which is using the requirement of this agreement as an excuse to close the Sydney Steel Corporation if the agreement is not forthcoming. It will be a tragedy if the federal Government allows this to take place because Sydney Steel has always been the prime supplier of rails to Canadian National.

The situation in industrial Cape Breton is very serious indeed. The unemployment rate is presently approximately 40 per cent. In the city of Sydney, where two-thirds of the tax base is paid by individual homeowners and only one-third by commercial establishments, the loss of Sydney Steel would be devastating.

The federal Government has already done tremendous damage to the economy of Cape Breton by closing the heavy water plants after saying they would not be closed until alternate employment was available, by cancelling the decentralization, and by cancelling the construction of the federal building and other projects. I ask the federal Government to accept this as a request to consider this very carefully.

MINES AND MINING

KIRKLAND LAKE GOLD MINE ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, Christmas came early to the riding of Timiskaming yesterday when American Barrick announced that its property in the Harker-Holloway area will be put into production with a mine named Holt McDermit. This will entail a cost of $50 million, 1,500 tonnes per day, 100,000 ounces of gold per year, over 200 jobs, and an influx of $20 million into the Kirkland Lake area.

The hard work done by the company, the mayor and council, and the economic development office of Kirkland Lake must be recognized. We must also recognize that the spin-off of this project for the Larder Lake and Black River-Matheson area will be tremendous. The work being done by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and the federal Government must be recognized. Through such work and co-operation among the various levels of government such projects are carried out.

REFUGEES

REQUEST FOR ADMISSION OF LAOTIAN TO CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my statement is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Mrs. Mataplan Souksavath and her eight children reside in my riding. Her husband and father of the eight children, Khamphouy Souksavath, has been in prison in Laos since 1975. He is 47 years old, sick with dysentery, malaria and heart problems. In spite of this condition he must go to the jungle every day to cut down trees.

I ask the Government of Laos and the Government of Canada to help. I believe December 12 is National Day in Laos and I ask that Government to show some humanity and release Mr. Souksavath so he can join his wife and eight children in Vancouver.

REQUEST FOR TERMINATION OF SUPERMAILBOX SCHEME

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When we became a country at Confederation the first two duties of the Government were, first, to protect the realm and defend the country, and second, to deliver the mail. The Government cannot even deliver the mail. There have been discussions in the House about a long series of problems about the security of supermailboxes. Now there is a single key that will open every box in the supermailbox. Will the Prime Minister order his Minister responsible for Canada Post to get on with the business, get rid of this farce of supermailboxes, and deliver the mail to Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, what the Leader of the Opposition is referring to is, of course, a serious matter. The Government received the corporate plan from Canada Post. It accepted the plan and a decision was made to refer it to committee. The committee will make its recommendations to Parliament, which will then decide what will be done about the plan.

As for the allegations that the mail is not being delivered in this country, I may remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the situation today is not any worse than it was in 1984. If anything, there has been a substantial improvement in the quality of delivery and the cost to Canadians.

HOME DELIVERY OF MAIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have to sympathize with the Minister, because Canada Post's corporate plan was approved by the Prime Minister on October 17 and announced in the House of Commons on November 5. I don't know why the Prime Minister approved the plan, but he did. Again I want to ask the Prime Minister: Will he order the Minister responsible for Canada Post to stop the superbox farce and start delivering the mail to Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just explained to the Leader of the Opposition that this complex and important question, which has been a matter of concern to Canadians for twenty years under the Liberal Government, is being dealt with through a corporate plan that has been duly submitted. Hon. Members, in accordance with parliamentary reform, were advised of the plan, and I am sure there will be suggestions for some major changes. The Government will be advised of specific recommendations by Hon. Members for improving postal services, and we intend to listen to what committee members have to say. Unlike the former Government, we believe that backbenchers have a very real role to play in the House. They are not a bunch of nobodies, as former Government seemed to think.

RIGHT TO MAIL DELIVERY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are all for this new spirit of democracy and parliamentary participation that the Prime Minister expresses. That is all very well. However, the Government announced a plan. Now we have locks that do not stay locked, and keys that will open every box in the supermailbox. Rates are going up and service is deteriorating. Will the Prime Minister take his responsibility and ensure Canadians that one of their fundamental rights, mail delivery service, will be upheld by his Government? He can go through all the charades he wants, but let us get the mail delivered in this country.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to my right hon. friend, the plan which was submitted was a corporate plan submitted by the Postal Corporation. It is charged with trying to conduct this service at reasonable cost in the most efficient way considering the expenditure of taxpayers' money. This plan was submitted, as it ought to be, to a parliamentary committee for consideration. Members of Parliament in their new roles under parliamentary reform are sending strong signals—and I suppose there will be a report—to the House of Commons that this plan is unacceptable in some important areas.

First and foremost must be the interest and welfare of Canadian citizens, particularly, for example, in rural areas. There shall be no second-class citizens in this country as long as this Government remains in office, postal services or otherwise.

CORPORATION'S BUSINESS PLAN—COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. On November 5, as reported at page 1110 of Hansard, the Minister responsible for Canada Post, speaking for the Government, said:

> Canadians at large as well as Members of this Parliament of all Parties have expressed considerable interest in the development of this plan. I have accordingly felt that Parliament should have a full opportunity to review the rate increase components which the Corporation has assumed in the forecast included in the plan. I am, therefore, proposing to refer this aspect of the plan to an appropriate committee of this House.

Why is the Government agreeing with its members on the parliamentary committee to choke off hearings on this matter without hearing any real testimony on postal rates or any evidence from the public? Why is the Government not carrying out the commitment of the Minister responsible for Canada Post and allowing the public to be heard on this matter? Why is the Government not keeping its promise in this regard?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party would suggest that I should interfere with the parliamentary committee process.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Because that in effect is what he is asking me to do. The committee has destiny of its own House. Whatever the committee decides, the committee does. My understanding is that it is now seized with the task of writing a report which I hope will be presented to the House, and which I hope will have some very positive and beneficial suggestions which perhaps even the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party might find acceptable.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister has given a very unconvincing explanation as to why what the Minister responsible for Canada Post said on behalf of the Government is not turning out to be the case.

LEVEL OF SERVICE—PROPOSED POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I want to ask the Minister acting for the Minister responsible for Canada Post this question. His Minister said there would be no increase in postal rates until there was an improvement in service. We now have clear evidence that instead of an improvement there has been a clear deterioration in service, including a deterioration in the security of mail because of these supermailboxes.

Why has the Government again broken its promise with its intention to increase rates for delivering the mail by increasing the rates for postage? It is not keeping its promise not to do this unless service is first improved. Why will the Government not keep its promise?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my only suggestion to the House Leader of the Liberal Party is that he be a little patient and wait for the report. Perhaps then he can comment on what suggestions or recommendations might be contained in the report. If he is a little patient I think this whole matter will work out very well.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who talked about the trade talks which are going on with the United States in his press conference this morning. Yesterday the U.S. lumber coalition made it clear to the U.S. Department of Commerce that it would accept nothing less than a 25 per cent tariff on Canadian lumber exports, thus laughing at the whole stance taken by the Canadian Government in these negotiations. Does the Government today seriously expect that after the same group of people announce their decision about the Canadian Government's proposal, having said they wanted 25 per cent yesterday, they are going to go for 15 per cent today?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, that is a matter which is a speculative issue at this point in time. We are dealing with the U.S. Commerce Department and with the U.S. Secretary of Commerce. As I have not heard back from him, there is nothing to be gained by commenting at this time.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON ALLEGED FURTHER FINAL OFFER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. The Canadian Government has already made two final offers. During his press conference this morning the Prime Minister made it clear that he intends to continue this fight. My question is directed to the Prime Minister or the Minister. Can the Government assure the House that it will not make a third lousy final offer?

• (1125)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I cannot really add further to my earlier answer, that this matter is under discussion in Washington today, except to say that the Province of Quebec was one of the provinces that supported the position of the Government of Canada.

PRIVATE SECTOR STUDY—IMPACT ON JOBS—CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister that it will not be the first time that the Premier of the Province of Quebec has been wrong.

In this context I wish to ask the Prime Minister this. Since a private sector study, which I know the Prime Minister would respect, has indicated each percentage point we give away in these tariffs costs us 1,000 jobs on the Canadian side of the border, will the Government now learn its lesson and not make another offer in these negotiations? Will it stick to our legal position which is in the best interests of the Canadian industry and which protects Canadian sovereignty?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already said in the House, as have my colleagues, that the position that we have taken with the support of nine provinces is the position that protects Canada's sovereignty. It is the Opposition's position which is the threat to Canadian sovereignty.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY—LACK OF GUIDELINES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we seem to be getting somewhere with the postal plan. My question is for the Acting Minister responsible for the Post Office. Some 68 post offices have closed down in western Canada. Even two have closed in Newfoundland. Why did the Government approve, and will the Standing Committee now have the authorization to change, the fact that guidelines were set for mail delivery in urban centres within a province and between urban centres between provinces but no guidelines were set for rural mail delivery in Canada? There was only the closure of 5,000 post offices and the laying off of 8,700 people?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, anyone who is prepared to face facts and has followed committee proceedings when Canada Post officials gave evidence would realize that the premise of the Hon. Member's question rests on fiction. Committee members scrutinized the Canada Post business plan and questioned postal officials for over two weeks. The committee will report to the House of Commons in due time, and then the Government will be in a position to consider the committee recommendations and decide whether or not the plan ought to be changed.

PROPOSED PRIVATIZATION OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that rural Canadians face a situation of having their mail handled by either a superbox or the local business merchant. Enough said about superbox.

Let me ask the Acting Minister this question. Does he really believe that a local business merchant can handle the mail, receiving that paltry, tiny sum of profits from the sale of postage stamps, as efficiently as today's postmaster and postmistress in rural Canada? We are being robbed and rooked in rural Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were aware of what is going on he would know that the private sector already handles 25 per cent of Canada Post business. That is a fact. Under the proposed plan, over the next ten years . . . They are talking about lay-offs, throwing figures around to scare Canadians. The people who might be affected as a result of such transfers to the private sector should know that, whenever possible, Canada Post will follow a program of attrition. Committee members were made aware of this as well, so perhaps the Hon. Member should have attended the proceedings.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During his press conference this morning the Prime Minister said something along the lines that he never made a commitment to western Canadian grain farmers to make a $1 billion payment during this fiscal year. During the Saskatchewan election campaign western Canadian farmers certainly felt that they had a commitment that there would be $1 billion either before Christmas or shortly thereafter, but certainly during this fiscal year. Why is the Prime Minister cutting western Canadian grain farmers adrift? Why are they not receiving their money before Christmas or in this fiscal year? Farmers want to know. The campaign is over and they want their money.

• (1130)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what a silly attitude to adopt. The Government of Canada, pursuant to undertakings made in this House, has put together a package designed to assist Canadian farmers which, I believe, and according to the Minister, is the largest assistance package to aid Canadian farmers in history. That is an extremely important measure for western Canada in particular but for all Canadian agricultural communities in general.

The commitment that I made in the House of Commons on behalf of the Government will be honoured in its entirety. That money will find its way, as we indicated—

Mr. Benjamin: When?

Mr. Mulroney: As I indicated at this morning's press conference, the Minister will be indicating no later than next week the timing of this measure. It will be pursuant to my undertakings and it will benefit Canadian farmers to the tune of $1 billion.

TIMING OF PAYMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in response to a question put by the Leader of the Opposition on October 7, the Prime Minister said that this is new money in the hands of farmers. The impression western farmers had was that they would be getting the money this fiscal year. Why is that money not coming in this fiscal year? If it is not coming in this year, can the Prime Minister tell the farmers when they will be getting that money? They have to plant crops next spring. They need the money now.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is distorting what I said. What I said is on the record and is very clear-cut. I can go a little further. The Hon. Member went into his riding during the provincial election campaign to which he refers and he gave the electorate a choice: take the NDP position or the government position. As I believe it, every single provincial riding in the Hon. Member's federal riding went Progressive Conservative.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

PASSAGE THROUGH CANADIAN WATERS BY UNITED STATES SUBMARINES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On May 6 last three nuclear-powered U.S. submarines surfaced at the North Pole. The only way we would have known if these submarines had travelled through Canadian waters was if the United States Government had asked permission for them to do so. Would the Secretary of State please tell us if these submarines passed through Canadian waters, and if they did so, did the Canadian Government give them permission to do so?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have a variety of ways of knowing of the presence in our waters of submarines from the United States or other countries. I do not think the Hon. Member would suggest that it would be in the interest of anyone, and certainly not in the Canadian national interest, to reveal publicly the nature of the means by which we come to that information.

The other thing I should point out is that with regard to our capacity to deal with and assert our sovereignty in northern Canada generally, as a result of 16 years of indifference and neglect by the former Government, when we came into office we were not as well prepared as we intend to become, but we are nonetheless in a position to have that kind of information to which the Hon. Member refers.

PROTECTION OF SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Minister to disclose any secrets. This occurred last May 6. I am not asking about something that will happen tomorrow. Did the federal Government give permission to the United States Government for these U.S. submarines to pass through Arctic waters and, in doing so, do something to protect Canadian sovereignty in Arctic waters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, once again, I do not propose to be drawn into the trap the Hon. Member is setting that would have the consequence of Canada identifying travel patterns of submarines of friendly countries in our waters. That is not in the interest of this country nor in the interest of our obligations. I will say that there are provisions in place that allow us to know the information and to assert and protect our sovereignty, and those provisions are respected.

AIRPORTS

DEVELOPMENT OF MONTREAL REGION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether we should call the new Montreal International Airport "Dorbel" or "Miraval", but I have a question for the Minister of State for Transport about the non-solution he announced yesterday. My question is as follows: Can we expect the Greater Montreal area to continue to suffer economically, compared with the Toronto area, as a result of having two weak airports instead of one strong one?

My question is as follows: is the Greater Montreal area not going to remain economically depressed, compared with the Toronto area, for having two weak airports instead of one strong one?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, this particular solution was announced yesterday to remove, once and for all, the uncertainty about the future of Dorval and Mirabel, which was keeping back investors and preventing job creation.

If you look at the kind of investment we expect now that the mission of these airports has been clarified, you will see that 1,000 jobs can be created in the short term.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CONCERNED PARTIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House how many jobs have been lost in the Montreal area, if we consider that the percentage of Canadian air traffic going through Montreal has dropped from 27 per cent to 14 per cent since Mirabel was opened? Why did the Government choose to ignore the advice of the City of Montreal, local municipalities and all economic sectors that it was necessary to have an airport at Dorval?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): The real reason why air traffic has dropped on certain routes to Montreal is the inconsistency of the policies of the previous Liberal Government. When the Liberal Government opened Mirabel, after spending half a billion dollars on its construction, it opened six gateways in Canada to intercontinental flights. That is where where the problem started. There, and nowhere else.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Yesterday the Chairman of the United States Coalition on Fair Lumber Prices said that he wanted a 25 per cent to 30 per cent duty on Canadian softwood lumber. The Minister also knows that this afternoon at three o'clock the same Coalition will issue a press release indicating that the Canadian offer is not acceptable. Will the Government of Canada capitulate again and raise the Government's final offer from 15 per cent to 25 per cent as has been demanded by the United States Coalition?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered similar questions in the House today by saying that we are not negotiating with the lumber producers in the U.S. The Government of Canada is dealing with the U.S. Department of Commerce on this issue and I have not had any information back from the Secretary of Commerce at this time.

MINISTER'S POSITION—CANADIAN PROPOSAL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Government is continuing to negotiate this cowardly agreement to establish an export tax on softwood lumber when already hundreds and hundreds of workers in the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario are being laid off. Does the Government not simply weaken its case by continuing to negotiate a side deal with the American Coalition, knuckling under with a final offer at 10 per cent, then going to 15 per cent? Will it be 20 per cent or 25 per cent next while the industry is already being shut down?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I said previously in the House, our proposal contains a combination of measures which are designed to ensure that any revenues remain in Canada, that the provinces retain flexibility in determining stumpage pricing, that a dangerous precedent in U.S. countervail policy will be avoided, that the ability of the provinces to determine their own natural resource management policies will be unimpaired, and that Canadian sovereignty will not be infringed. Those are the reasons for adopting this approach.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It follows up an earlier question, and what he had to say about his commitment to western grain producers. On the first day after the Government announced its intention to do this outside the House, I asked the Prime Minister about the timing and urgency of it. The Prime Minister said that the Government intended to act "in the shortest possible time—"

That was clearly sending a message to western grain producers that the action would come, if not before Christmas, certainly in this fiscal year. Will the Prime Minister live up to that commitment, or was it all a big scam simply to win an election in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Mazankowski: What have you got against farmers, Ed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): What is it with the NDP always opposed to the interests of farmers? You do something, it's not enough. You do something, it's not fast enough. In point of fact, you are fundamentally opposed to a Government assisting farmers in this measure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to address his response through the Chair.

Mr. Mulroney: My apologies, Mr. Speaker.

The Government will act precisely along the lines of the undertaking that was given to the House of Commons.

Mr. Broadbent: When?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member who is shaking his head went into Saskatchewan. He said that the issue in the campaign, at least in his area, was going to be between his integrity and that of the Prime Minister, and look what happened to you.

Mr. Broadbent: And the people of Canada will be saying, look what happened to you, after the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Neither Member will be saying anything if they do not check the language that they are using. I do ask that all Members direct their remarks through the Chair.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): During the course of the election campaign when the Prime Minister said that the Government planned to act in the shortest possible time, would he not agree that a producer on the Prairies thought that would mean soon, that it would mean before Christmas, that it would certainly mean in this fiscal year? If that is the message that he wanted to send out, will he live up to that commitment and make sure that those hard-pressed producers on the Prairies get that money in this fiscal year? Will he give us that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have done it before, and I have done it earlier today. As we indicated we would, we have worked with the farmers, the producers, and the provinces to make sure that this was done, as I had indicated, in the shortest possible time. That was the undertaking. The modalities of it will be announced very shortly, before Christmas, by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Broadbent: Will they get the money in this fiscal year?

Mr. Mulroney: If Canada Post delivers it.

Mr. Broadbent: Is that a commitment?

Mr. Mulroney: Look at the Perry Masons over here. Of course they are going to get their money. We undertook that they would be getting money, and of course they will get it.

Mr. Broadbent: In this fiscal year?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend refers to the next election. The NDP are always great when they are staggering from one moral victory to another. You are great until they count the votes. We will wait for you in the next election, particularly in western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie.

MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday and the day before the Minister promised he would have good news for the 50,000 early retirees. Today, after Question Period, will the Minister tell us whether he will honour his promise and commitment to announce the good news?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did promise I would make an announcement today and I intend to do just that. I did not specify it would be ... well, I would not want to make a mistake, but the announcement will come later today.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE STUDIES AND POLL RESULTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. There were a number of inquiries during the Forget Commission study, so would the Minister be prepared to table the annualization concept studies directed by Mr. Paul Dickinson of his Department, as well as the various unemployment insurance public opinion polls taken by Decima and other firms since November 1984 which show that most Canadians would rather pay higher premiums than endorse unemployment insurance benefit cut-backs?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure which documents the Hon. Members has in mind. The Forget Commission of Inquiry did extensive research and received lots of documents. Generally speaking, documents provided by the Government are official. We will consider the Hon. Member's representations and make these documents public, unless federal legislation should prevent us from doing so.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SALE OF LA CITÉ UNITS—LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The housing units LA CITÉ, which were supported by the CMHC, were recently sold to a private contractor who dismissed the employees and refused to recognize the union. Why did the Government not ensure that the employees would be protected in this privatization operation?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, a management company employed the employees in question. They have contractual provisions with respect to lay-offs. The Government was not involved in that contract, and has no control over that situation.

ESTABLISHMENT OF POLICY TO PROTECT RIGHTS OF UNIONIZED WORKERS WHEN PRIVATIZATION OCCURS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Will the Government develop a policy to protect union rights in privatization operations to avoid a repetition of what happened at LA CITÉ, HABITAT 67 and Pointe-au-Pic, where the same problems occurred?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Government will always give the undertaking that it will be sensitive to the rights of employees in every situation. Having said that, all it can do is urge companies to be sensitive to the welfare of the individuals they employ. In this particular situation, this was done.

Oral Questions

SOLICITATION OF FARMERS OFFERING GRANT GUARANTEE

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Most of the farmers in my constituency, and I understand in other parts of Canada, have received a letter and an application form from an individual in Ontario who guarantees that Canadian farmers will receive an annual grant of between $8,000 and $11,000 from the federal Government, if they fill in the application form and forward $20. How does the Minister advise farmers to respond to this proposition? I have brought it to the attention of the Department.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question, and his co-operation in bringing this matter to my attention. I wish to inform the House, and indeed the country, that, thanks to the interest of the Hon. Member and other Members in the House, the officials in my Department are investigating this matter. I would suggest that farmers refrain from filling out the application form and submitting their $20 until this investigation is completed. Information is available on all government programs from any government Department for no charge, and I invite everybody to apply for such information.

MANPOWER

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the Forget Report, we find the following under recommendation 50:

A significant reduction should be made in the number of staff at national and regional headquarters.

During the first two years in office of the Conservative Government, 1,000 positions have been abolished. Last October 17, the Minister wrote and said that 1,200 jobs would be abolished this coming year. Yesterday, the Department informed the union representatives that, in 1988-89, 800 jobs will be abolished and that, in 1989-90, another 700 jobs will disappear. This makes nearly 4,000 jobs less. Why did the Government anticipate the Forget Report and eliminate these jobs and how will it be possible to maintain the quality of services provided in manpower offices?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if we began two years ago, we certainly did not anticipate the Forget Report since the Commission was established a year and a half ago. Therefore, we began before the Commission was created.

Second, what the Hon. Member should say, as he is well aware, is that while positions have been abolished, very few people have lost their jobs. There are only a few dozens. I believe that the Government was very clear two years ago when it announced its employment policy. The President of the Treasury Board was very specific. Such policies are applied in the normal way. I repeat that the procedure used by the Department allows us virtually to eliminate the loss of jobs for the designated positions and to respect generally the classification level of the people now occupying those positions.

QUALITY OF SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, Forget Recommendation No. 39 reads:

The Unemployment Insurance Commission should do more to inform the public, employers and employees about the program in general; about the requirements of the law, regulations and appeal process; and about the rights and responsibilities of claimants and appellants.

Line-ups are already long at the unemployment insurance offices. We have 1.2 million unemployed in Canada today. Employment counsellors are already working overtime. I talked to a few this morning. How can the Minister argue that the quality of service will remain the same, better, or improve in the years to come when he is cutting 4,000 jobs, which is one-fifth of all employees working in unemployment insurance?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the Hon. Member is using a recommendation which applies to a much more general context in the report than the Hon. Member has suggested to state that the quality of services at employment centres is directly related to staff reductions.

I repeat that we are going to assess the recommendations contained in the Forget Report. We are not saying that those recommendations are good or bad, but simply that we want to take the time to evaluate them. It is much too early to establish a relationship between service efficiency and staffing reductions. In my opinion, there is absolutely no direct relation between the fact that a position is abolished and the quality of services provided to Canadians.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The tenor of his answers in this House on October 6 and 7, plus his answers today to my colleagues, have led western grain producers, and all of us in this House, to understand and believe that at least a billion dollars "of good money" in the farmers' pockets, to quote the Prime Minister, would be provided for them in this fiscal year. Can we take from the Prime Minister's answer to my Leader a few minutes ago that that new money will be in the farmers' pockets in this fiscal year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, now my hon. friend, as I understand what he said, is not referring to my answers. He is referring to what he describes as the tenor of my answers. The answers were that there would be action on behalf of farmers. There shall be, and the Minister of Agriculture will announce this very beneficial initiative no later than next week.

Mr. Broadbent: He has not said they are going to get the money.

An Hon. Member: Quit prompting.

Mr. Broadbent: Go and explain that in the west.

An Hon. Member: Devine said "this year".

Mr. Broadbent: Remember Pembina and what happened in Edmonton.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Send Shirley Carr to Edmonton.

Mr. Broadbent: Go west on the weekend and explain this one.

Mr. Gauthier: Go outside and settle your differences.

An Hon. Member: He does not like money going to the farmers.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Where do you want it to go to if not the farmers?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West.

TIMING OF PAYMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, just so that our understanding is the understanding we have had since October 6, and we have had lots of announcements in this fiscal year, what I would like to know from the Prime Minister is whether the farmers will actually get the money in this fiscal year.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes or no.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have responded to that a number of times. For some reason my hon. friend from Oshawa, with his Quebec lieutenant from Aylmer, gets upset—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —when we take important initiatives designed to assist western farmers. I am sad and I know that western farmers will be dismayed at the spectacle of the NDP trying to throw red herrings on the floor. We announced an important initiative for western Canada. It will be implemented pursuant to the exact statement that I made in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the way the Conservatives and the New Democrats are fighting today, it is not only for third place in Quebec, it seems that it is third place across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Go outside and settle it. Let's get on.

COMBINES

AIRLINES—MERGERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the Minister aware that in less than two years seven major airline mergers have already taken place, the last of which—the CP Air takeover by Pacific Western Airlines—no doubt being the most important airline merger in Canadian history? Does the Minister intend to step in or ask the director of investigation to appear before the Canadian Transport Commission to defend consumer interests and hopefully prevent that merger?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, under the new Competition Act passed in June the Director of Investigation and Research has the mandate to look at all mergers to see their impact on competition in the country. I am informed that he and his officials are looking into the questions which the Hon. Member has raised.

CONTROL OF 90 PER CENT OF MARKET BY TWO MAJOR AIRLINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's answer, and I would like to know if he is personally satisfied, as the Minister of Transport seemed to be earlier in this House in answering my question, that only two major airlines in Canada should control something like 90 per cent of our market. Is that situation acceptable to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member would know, under the new Competition Act it really is not up to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Director of Investigation and Research has a mandate from Parliament to conduct those investigations and make those conclusions. If he feels that the matter is detrimental to the interests of consumers, then he can refer it to the Competition Tribunal. It is totally within his hands and it would be most inappropriate, indeed, illegal under the law for me to intervene personally.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN VISA SERVICES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The withdrawal of Canadian visa services in South Africa is causing unintended confusion and possible hardship to people of all races, some of them coloured, who want to visit their relatives in Canada. Without injury to our campaign against apartheid, what action can the Minister take to assist people of all races who want to have a chance to visit their families here?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that action taken by Canada was a direct and considered consequence of discussions within the Commonwealth. We know that it creates some hardships for South Africans, but we believe that that is one way in which the absolute disapproval of the people of Canada for the regime of apartheid can be made manifest in South Africa. Obviously what we are trying to do is to demonstrate to anyone with influence upon the policies of the Pretoria Government how repugnant those policies are to other countries of the world. This is a measure which makes a small contribution to that end.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

LOGGING OPERATIONS ON DEER ISLAND

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. There is a situation on Deer Island in which native people are trying to prevent logging of a very sacred area. Would the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs to intervene immediately in the dispute to see if the Government of Canada will apply what resources are necessary to see that that island is returned to the native people?

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Kwakiutl Band presently has a comprehensive claim before the Government. The Minister will shortly be making a decision on that claim. The matter is presently before the courts which will be making a decision, hopefully in the near future.

RISK OF IMPRISONMENT FOR INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know there is presently a confrontation taking place in that area. The land the natives are attempting to defend is clearly theirs. It contains aboriginal burial grounds and is very sacred to those people. Will the Prime Minister have the Minister intervene immediately so they do not wind up in jail defending land which properly belongs to them?

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is very concerned about that situation. Injunctions are being sought by both the logging interests and the native people themselves to see whether a decision can be reached through the courts. We would rather that it be reached through a proper land claims study. That proposal is being actively considered by the Minister.

REFUGEES

SITUATION OF IRANIAN IN UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR ADMISSION TO CANADA

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. It concerns the ongoing struggle of the 25-year old Iranian student who probably faces death when he is deported to Iran. I spoke with that person's lawyer in Washington. He has introduced a new and important element into the case by way of a letter dated December 3 from the UN High Commission on Refugees. It says: "Because of Mr. Moatamedi's long stay in the United States he will be regarded with suspicion by Iranian officials. Moreover and more importantly, he may well be exposed to both harassment and persecution".

How much more evidence do the Minister and his Government require before they act compassionately and allows Canadians in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, to sponsor this man as a refugee? Why is the Government so against saving one human being's life?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague has been told on several occasions that before a person can be sponsored as a refugee, that person must be acceptable as a refugee. He has been told on several occasions that the person he is referring to cannot be considered as a refugee under the terms of the Convention. That is something which must be respected. Apparently, the Hon. Member is trying to cast some doubts in the mind of Canadians while knowing very well that this Iranian cannot be accepted in Canada, not being recognized as a refugee.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Canada played an integral role in saving American hostages in Iran, yet it cannot save the life of one Iranian in the U.S. Time is running out. The U.S. has booked this man's return flight to Tehran for January 7. Therefore, will the Minister either grant refugee status to this man, issue a ministerial permit, or allow Canadians to sponsor him? Or is he prepared to condone a pathetically weak and inhumane Reagan-style refugee policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all the information we have received from the United States both from our own officials and those of the American Government, have convinced and persuaded us that the person he is referring to is not at all in danger presently and therefore cannot be issued a refugee permit, for it is granted only to people who are in danger. I just do not know how I can explain that to him, but that individual cannot enjoy a special status because he will not be in danger if deported by the United States.

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be now read a second time and referred to a Legislative committee; and of the amendment of Mrs. Killens (p. 1378).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is very pleasant to be so wholesomely welcomed by my colleagues for my participation in this debate. Of course, we are now debating Bill C-22 under the constraints of time allocation. As I indicated yesterday, I understand that the Government would want to limit the exposure through debate of the actions contemplated as a result of the passage of this Bill. If I headed a Government under such severe attack from consumer groups, senior citizens, retirees, provincial Governments and women's organizations I, too, would be led to conclude that a preferable course of action to follow would be to limit debate as this Government has done.

If I were in the Government I would be reading headlines on editorials with respect to Bill C-22 such as the following: "Patently Wrong", "Patent Weakness", "Selling Patent Law Changes", "Drug Price Deceit Backfires on Feds", "Truth and Consequences", "Don't Swallow the Tory Drug Bill Line", "Tories' Medical Drug Bill a Big Mistake", "Case Not Been Made for Altering Drug Laws". If I were to read such headlines I would consider that what we have here is a poor prescription.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about a drug crisis. The only drug crisis in Canada right now is the drug crisis being experienced by the Government. In looking at the circumstance and reflecting upon the severe pressures under which the Government now works, one wonders what could have impelled it to suggest this legislation in the first place.

We have in place in Canada, through compulsory licensing, an arrangement that has benefited Canadians to a huge extent. It is an inherent part of our general policy with respect to health care in which the emphasis is not on profits, pardon me, but on the welfare of the Canadian people.

One should reflect upon the circumstances which in the first place led to legislation introduced in 1969 which provided amendments to Section 41(4) of the Patent Act. Circumstances previous to 1969 are well documented. The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and the Hall Royal Commission on Health both looked at the fact that in Canada at that time we had among the highest drug prices in the world. If they were second to any country they were second only to the United States. So severe were the circumstances that no solution could be seen except to find some means of increasing competition in the prescription drug market. What we want to emphasize here is that not only were the multinationals making huge profits but they were doing so in absolute exploitation of the purchasers of prescription drugs.

Given the arguments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), one would expect that there must have been at that stage of the game tremendous investment in research and development in Canada. But the fact is, and the record shows, and shows clearly, that the multinational drug companies, consistent with the pattern of multinationals in Canada, made no investments in research and development, made no contribution to university basic research.

This legislation will eliminate for all intents and purposes the 10 to 17-year compulsory lisencing provisions as compared to the situation which we have now. This is a subject to which I would like to return later.

I would like to review the results of compulsory licensing insofar as they have benefited the consumer and drug plans, be they private or provincial, and how they have made a significant contribution to the health care system. The Eastman Report, which was by far the most thorough examination of the drug industry in Canada, reached the conclusion anticipated by the Harley committee, a special parliamentary committee, that compulsory licensing would benefit the drug consumer, and it did. It resulted in having, instead of the highest, among the lowest drug prices in the world. So effective was this system that it became the model that was looked to by a number of countries in their search for policies which would restrict the huge profits and the high prices experienced elsewhere.

I wish to point out that most of the industrialized countries in the world have some type of restrictions on prices and profiteering. But in most cases they have proved unsatisfactory. It is notable that among those which have looked to Canada as a prospective model was a chairman of a congressional committee, Congressman Henry Waxman, who said that if the industry cannot contain its greed, then perhaps Congress should look to programs in countries such as Canada and Europe that have succeeded in holding down prices.

Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the result of the Congressional study was the enhancement of the competitive position of generic manufacturers in the United States, a matter that has caused multinational members of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of the United States considerable chagrin. They have seen the handwriting on the wall and have reached the conclusion that the Canadian model is one likely to be copied elsewhere. So the attack is not on the Canadian system as much as it is a defensive action designed to ensure that Canadian legislation will not be brought to other countries in the world and adopted at their cost.

I should also point out that the present arrangement in Canada has not led to a decrease in profits. It has not led to a decrease in job creation. In fact, jobs have been created both in the patent pharmaceutical companies as well as in the generic companies. Profits in the drug industry in Canada, for both the generic and major patent drug manufacturers, have remained high. Not only have they remained high but they are higher than the profits of most industries in Canada and comparable to the profits of industry in the United States.

I have reviewed the fact that Eastman indicated in his commission report that there was no real need for change and that the generic drug industry which has grown up under compulsory licensing has benefited Canada. If this is so, why in the world has the Government seen fit to tinker with a piece of legislation in a way that is not supported by anyone but the Government and the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. Let us not hide the fact that the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada is a mere arm of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of the United States. It has been backed and backed forcefully by the United States Government.

There can be no doubt that when Ronnie and Brian got together back in 1983, Ronnie said, Brian, we're going to have to do something about this situation if you want to have the fast track for the free trade talks. Brian said, in a typical smooth—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McCurdy: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, with typical smooth talking obsequiousness, Yes, sir, we have to change this because I do not want you to be unhappy. I want to talk. Hey, how about an energy program? How about softwood lumber? How about hogs? How about a few other things? We will give you anything you want. Take the Auto Pact. Oh, but I want this drug Bill changed first, said Ronnie. Well, Mr. President, we will get on to it pretty quick.

The Government was not quite fast enough. Mr. Bush, the Vice-President of the United States, who just happens to be a former Vice-President of Eli Lilly, said, look, you are going to have to hurry up and do something about this because my folks down in the United States are awfully unhappy about the fact that Canadians have policies that benefit Canadian citizens and not Americans.

As a matter of fact, the Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Trade, Mr. Pratt, who is also the Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Pfizer, had the ear of our ambassador in the United States. He had the ear of the President, and by God, he said, look, we have to have something done about this because we are not making enough money up here. Those folks expect us to modify our hunger for profit in a way that would contribute to the availability of drugs for Canadians. Those generic manufacturers up there are making medicine available to sick people cheap. That is an awful situation.

Then along came Mr. Yeutter in the spring who said, look now, Brian—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McCurdy: I mean Mr. Prime Minister. He probably said, Mr. Speaker, through you to Brian, my patience is wearing thin.

An Hon. Member: So is ours.

Mr. McCurdy: And, by God, the Government jumped. Now we have before us a Bill that is more appropriate to American interests than to Canadian interests.

The third group of people the Government claims supports this Bill is that of scientists. I talked to some of those scientists who said that this Bill would be good for research. I asked one of them, can you tell me something? Yes, Howie, he said. What is in this Bill that provides for research? Well, I don't know. I said, could you not find anything? He said, no, I looked. I couldn't find anything but the Minister says it is there. I said well, you had better look at the Bill a little more carefully, my dear colleague, because if you look at the Bill very thoroughly and carefully you will find not a word in that Bill that provides for research, or for any investment in research.

It is true that some drug companies have said that they will expend more money on research, but what kind of research will they be doing? Let us look at Parke-Davis. Parke-Davis will study the safety of new drugs and the development of dosage and will do clinical research that will allow Canadian doctors access to drugs at the earliest possible stages. That would happen under the requirements for licensing in Canada in any event.

Similarly, Upjohn Canada expects to renew a multibillion dollar contract with Victoria Hospital in London for clinical research and for quality control and it will also invest in expanded offices. Offices are not where scientists work.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that Parke-Davis happens to be spending $45 billion and creating 15 jobs in my riding, and I am damned proud of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order, it is a point of debate.

Mr. McCurdy: I am not surprised that that poor little Member believes what she has been told.

An Hon. Member: Chauvinist!

Mr. McCurdy: The fact is that she is expected to believe, and my God she does believe, that these manufacturers that did not spend a penny before 1969 will suddenly start throwing money in. If they do, it is possible that there is a reason for it.

Patent Act

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Before I call it one o'clock, I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would like to ask a business question. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) will have two minutes left for debate plus 10 minutes for questions and comments when we return at two o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) what business he intends to call for Monday, Tuesday, and perhaps Wednesday.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, indeed I can. On Monday we will continue with Bill C-25, the privatization of Canadair Bill. That will be followed by Bill C-23, the Income Tax Act and Bill C-18, the national transportation Act. Tuesday will be an allotted day and Wednesday will also be an allotted day.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have agreement from all three Parties to introduce our Standing Committee's report to the House at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mrs. Killens (p. 1378).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) had the floor. Since he is no longer in the Chamber, I recognize the Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The procedure has got a little accelerated, and we understand and appreciate that. As a matter of fact, I am glad Stanley Knowles is here to listen to my speech.

I rise to speak on this legislation because we believe it is bad legislation. It does not do what the Government says it will do in terms of increased research and development. It does not create more jobs, it does not give Canada a new and larger variety of drugs, and it will not give us better drugs. It definitely will give the country higher drug prices. Despite what the Minister has stated, prices will go up. They will not go down.

The Minister is fond of saying in one breath that prices will not go up, "not one cent", he said. Then in the next breath he announces additional support of some $100 million for the provinces over a period of four years to accommodate higher drug prices. The Scottish have a great phrase for that, and only you, Mr. Speaker, would understand it, "You can't blow hot and cold". This is what this Minister has attempted to do.

Some estimates put the cost to Canadians of removing generic competition, as this Bill will do, at upwards of $4.73 billion over the next 10 years. Dr. Eastman states in his report that in the year 1983 alone Canadians saved $211 million as a result of generic competition. Dr. Eastman has said repeatedly that there is no doubt that prices will rise as a result of this Bill. It is simple logic. If the presence of generic drugs is what has kept drug prices down over the last 15 years, then if you remove the bite of that generic competition, it is inevitable that drug prices will rise. They will rise as a result of the withdrawal of that immediate competition. Everybody in the House understands that. I believe that most people in the country understand it. The only person who does not understand it is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who keeps on insisting that it will not be the case.

When we challenged him with Dr. Eastman's statements that indeed prices would rise, the Minister referred us to that famous interview that he and Dr. Eastman had conceded to CBC's As it Happens on November 19, in which he and Dr. Eastman agreed, according to the Minister, that prices would not rise. To a certain extent, I sympathize with the Minister's position. He got flustered here in the House and he stated that the CBC had fabricated the interview. He was worried that perhaps the tapes had been interfered with. We tried to put the conversation together, the direct question from the journalist and the direct response from Dr. Eastman. Perhaps when the issue gets into committee we can call a few witnesses and find out exactly what happened to that great conversation.

I would like to quote what Dr. Eastman said in the interview:

The entry of generics which pushed down prices would be somewhat delayed, and therefore the average prices would be higher than they would be under the present legislation.

That is found at page 5 of the transcript of that delicious interview involving the Minister and Dr. Eastman.

Who was the Minister trying to kid? Does he think that Canadians cannot add. Does he think that the country does not understand the forces of competition, and the forces that are being diluted under this particular Bill? Does he think that he can fool people into believing that the legislation will not have the effect of raising the cost of medication for the sick, the elderly, the handicapped, those confined to nursing homes, and those in need of chronic care? Who really does he think still believes him?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in 1969 I had the privilege of introducing amendments to the Patent Act. I was Minister of Justice at the time, and I had the privilege of being Canada's first Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Mr. Pearson, Prime Minister of our country at the time, had been persuaded to establish a department to protect the Canadian consumer. One of the first pieces of legislation introduced by the new department was the Bill aimed at putting certain restrictions on patent protection in order to stimulate competition in our country. We introduced this legislation because at the time, the price of drugs in Canada was exorbitant. In fact, Canadians were paying the highest prices in the world for their drugs.

Mr. Andre: You were wrong then and you're wrong now!

[English]

You were wrong then, and you are wrong now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says I was wrong then and that I am wrong now, but I had the advantage of being far better briefed and better prepared than the present Minister, that is obvious. Mr. Speaker, I mean no offence to the officials in his department, but I have the impression that although his officials are on top of their subject, they are incapable of briefing the Minister on the facts and national policy. That is the problem. I am sure his officials are experts, but the Minister's answers are patently amateurish. Our present system is the envy of countries throughout the world. The U.S. Department of Health is making enquiries here in Canada, to find out why our drug prices are among the lowest and the most reasonable in the world. The U.S. Department is looking at our Canadian legislation, at the same time this Minister is changing that legislation and about to risk the consequences. It is incredible. Why is he doing this?

Mr. Speaker, the percentage of funds spent on research and development in relation to sales figures since 1969 did not drop as a result of the 1969 changes in the legislation. In fact, it increased 3.6 per cent. In fifteen years it had risen to 3.9 per cent, by 1983. In fact, before 1969, before those amendments, no one was in a hurry to increase research and development in Canada.

What makes the Canadian Government believe there will be more research from here on in? The Government seems to think that somehow people who speak up against this Bill are opposed to medical research. That statement is nonsense because, in the 40 years before 1969 when the present law was passed and foreign companies were covered by the kind of protection advocated in this Bill, no new drugs were produced in this country. The pure and simple fact is that those companies will go on doing research in their own countries, as they have always done, and this Bill will only help them make more profits by restricting competition.

• (1410)

I notice that the Minister has left the Chamber—

Mr. Andre: I am here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am glad he is listening, Mr. Speaker. He is taking some valium back there, I think. The Minister's own private medical needs will be accelerated as a result of this situation. I do not know whether he is going out for a smoke or whether he has had a long day, but I am delighted that he is listening. He is behind the curtain, which is the kind of government we have.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Government of the silent curtains. The Minister is back there and I am glad he can hear us.

Dr. Eastman pointed out that research and development in Canada is not likely ever to be at high levels because we have a relatively small domestic market. I might say, and I want to be quite clear, that members of our caucus—and this was endorsed by a Party resolution last weekend—support the recommendations of Dr. Eastman. We believe there should be a balance between protection of intellectual property and cost to consumers, and we believe that Dr. Eastman achieved that in his report. He analyzed the effect on research and jobs on the one hand and on the price and cost to Canadian consumers on the other. We thought at one time that the Government was going to accept the report, but it has abandoned the report's recommendations. During the course of this debate in the House and in committee we will be proposing and advancing amendments that will reflect Dr. Eastman's recommendations.

The Minister argues that higher drug prices for the multinationals will create 3,000 new research jobs in Canada. But there is no commitment in the legislation. Indeed, it is not mentioned anywhere. It is a secret deal the Minister says that he has with the multinationals.

Mr. Foster: Gullible.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, I think the Minister may be gullible. He has it in his pocket. He has those secret deals. We are going to have that research. It is another behind the curtain deal or wherever those deals are made.

Mr. McCain: You know, you have been there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We suspect that most of the deals for this legislation were made in Washington. They were certainly not made here in Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal. He says that the multinationals will put $1.4 billion into research in Canada over the next 10 years. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, it will cost Canadians an additional $4.7 billion in higher costs over the same period. We have estimates that indicate that that will cost the country 9,000 jobs. In other words if we put the Minister's 3,000 jobs against the 9,000, we will have a net loss of 6,000 jobs. In any event, I have enjoyed watching the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the House. He has been handling hot coals, trying to bounce them around hoping he will not get burned. But from where did the pressure come, particularly the change in the legislation from June until—

Mr. Redway: Did you check it out with George Shultz?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As I said to my friend, I am a good friend of George Shultz, but he is not my boss as he is to the Members over there. Not only have we checked it, we have had the American multinationals on television saying that they knew the law before Canadian companies and Canadian consumers did.

Mr. Redway: What about Keith Davey?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Keith Davey is an amateur compared to Dalton Camp.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Member ought to concentrate on his own particular purview and ambitions. See what you can do in that great caucus of yours on capital punishment. Stick to that and we will talk about some of the wider issues.

The Minister and the Government have capitulated completely to an American lobby. The American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association had an indication of what was in this Bill before Parliament, before Canadian industry and before the Canadian Consumers Association did. They knew because it was a priority. The chairman of that Association in the United States also sits on the U.S. advisory committee on free trade.

Mr. Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, listed among his five priorities in these free trade negotiations a better deal for American pharmaceutical companies in Canada. We now know the reason the law was changed between June and today and why this legislation has the priority it does for the current Government. The elderly, the sick, the handicapped, those who are not protected by plans and are vulnerable to any rise in prices have been sacrificed and made hostages to the free trade negotiations with the United States.

The story continues. It began on softwood lumber. There was a final offer of 10 per cent, then another final offer of 15 per cent. The American lumber coalition is now wanting 25 per cent. But our Government, weak-kneed, with no guts and no sense of principle yielded before it ever sat down with the United States on the National Energy Program. It diluted the Foreign Investment Review Act, it gave way on lumber, on publishing and it has now given away on drug prices.

As I say, the hostages to that negotiation with the United States are those who are least able to protect themselves, the aged, the sick, the handicapped, those in nursing homes and those needing medical care. When Uncle Sam says "jump", the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his colleagues ask "how high and how far". There is no doubt in anybody's mind that the only reason the Government is prepared to sell out with this Bill is to keep the Americans happy and the Prime Minister's personal free trade agenda on track.

I do not know whether that close relationship between the President and the Prime Minister still obtains. I do not know whether the President's current travails in Washington will cause our Prime Minister to look for ways to put some distance between himself and that special relationship. Only time will tell. However, I suggest it is time for our Government to show some backbone in its negotiations with the U.S. on trade.

We on this side of the House feel one of the sacrifices made to keep those negotiations going was this legislation. When the Bill gets into committee we look forward to putting the kind of questions to the Minister that we have been putting to him in the House. We hope he is able to buttress the contentions he has been making in this House with some solid evidence.

As well, and the Minister may consider this irrelevant and a distraction, but I think it might be useful to get some of the tapes of the famous interviews he has had and have them played for the committee. We could have CBC representatives describe how those tapes were fabricated. We would like to get some solid evidence of the very close personal relationship which must now exist between Dr. Eastman and the Minister. We could ask Dr. Eastman how he intends to be the head of the Drug Prices Review Board when he is so solidly backed and reinforced by the Minister.

We do not have the numbers in this Chamber to back up our very strong views on this legislation. However, we do enjoy a free Parliament and unfettered public opinion. We can hardly wait for the Minister to have his opportunity to defend this legislation before the committee and before the forum of public opinion.

Mr. Andre: Point of order.

Mr. Redway: Point of order. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Right Hon. Member, his party, and the House, will unanimously agree to allowing me to put a question to him.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andre: I wonder if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would consent to one short question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andre: I was just asking if the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Minister asking a question or standing on a point of order?

Mr. Andre: Yes, just one short question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before the Hon. Minister asks the question I must have unanimous consent.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If you want some advice I will be glad to give it to you privately, Andre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andre: Then debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney).

Mr. Andre: On debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate?

Mr. Andre: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on debate.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to ask—

Mr. Ouellet: Point of order. He has already spoken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Andre: This is on the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before anyone else rises on a point of order, the Hon. Minister spoke on the main motion but not on the amendment. He is entitled to speak on the amendment. I recognize the Hon. Minister on debate.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, in 1968, when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was proud to bring in changes to the Patent Act, he said that drug prices in Canada were the highest in the world.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Among the highest, I said.

Mr. Marchi: Next to the States.

Mr. Andre: Next to the States. Actual expenditures in 1968 in Canada on drugs were 84 per cent of the estimated cost of those drugs in the U.S. That comes from the Eastman report.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I said they were among the highest.

Mr. Andre: In fact I have a paper prepared by Dr. George Platt, an employee of the Government at the time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. That paper points out that the investigation carried on by the Department and the various commissions and committees that looked into drug prices was based on false data. That data was supplied by the then Restrictive Trade Practices Commission which claimed that prices in Canada were higher than they were in the U.S. Based on that false data people worked themselves up into a lather, including the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, now Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and he removed patent protection.

Canada was the second country to do that, the first being Mussolini's Italy which changed back in 1955. The fact is that prices in Canada at that time were 84 per cent of what they were in the U.S., or about the same ratio that exists today. Very little happened, except we removed patent rights.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition talked about the savings Eastman identified. He said in 1983 there were savings of $211 million. That is in Table 7.7 at page 315 of the Eastman Report. There were 32 generic drugs in Canada at that time which generated this $211 million. I asked my Department what would happen if Bill C-22 were in place in 1983, what would be the savings? The savings would be between $230 million and $366 million. The savings would have been greater because of Bill C-22 in 1983 than under the existing system.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Andre: I will explain why. If the gentlemen who have so much to say and who have not read the Eastman report, upon which they are apparently basing their position, would look at Table 9.3 which lists those 32 drugs, they will find that every one of those drugs except one would be past the ten-year market exclusivity period. There would be generic competition under Bill C-22 for 31 of those 32 drugs. Only one drug would not have a generic competitor in 1983. However, there would have been in lace a Drug Prices Review Board to hold down the price of the 80 per cent of drugs where there was no generic competitor, single source drugs, to the cost of living.

The savings there would far more than compensate for any loss of savings because of that one single drug.

Let us talk about that one single drug because it is an important drug. Cimetidine, its brand name being Tagamet, was discovered by Smith Kline & French. It has been very useful in treating peptic ulcers. Introductin of that drug saved $130 million a year in hospitalization costs because people with peptic ulcers are not required to go to hospital as frequently, not to mention lost time and comfort and so on. SKF made a lot of money on that drug, no question, but it saved Canadians a lot of money. The generic competitor came along and drove SKF out of business, basically. They were the third or fourth largest drug manufacturer in Canada and now they are way down the list. They shut down their facilities and laid off I do not know how many people. They shut down their research activities. That cost has not been factored in here anywhere.

Before the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition rants on about his billions in costs he ought to look at the facts. He ought to pick up the Eastman Report and read it. He would find that those 32 drugs would be generic competitors under our scheme as well. He ought to ask the people of Montreal if they said "bye, bye, and good riddance" to Smith Kline and French when they shut down their plant and laid off those people.

Let us talk about what Dr. Eastman said or did not say. Dr. Eastman wrote a letter to The Globe and Mail which reads as follows:

> Mr. Andre says that the changes will not cause the prices of the new branded drugs to rise above the levels at which they are introduced in the market. I agree.

Those are Dr. Eastman's words. He agreed. He goes on to point out a fact that no one has mentioned here. He says:

> I would emphasize the importance of the Drug Prices Review Board. I would not have agreed to the chairman of the Board if I had thought that it would be ineffective.

Why has no one mentioned that? What about that research?

The Leader of the Opposition seems to think that it does not matter that generic competition will cause a few jobs in research to be lost because it will save so much money which will create other opportunities. Let us suppose we allowed generic book publishing in Canada, that anyone could publish any author they wanted to, provided they paid a 4 per cent royalty. Undoubtedly we would save hundreds of millions of dollars. Using the arithmetic of the Leader of the Opposition, those hundreds of millions of dollars would be generating jobs and there would be a tremendous boom. There would be no Canadian authors, but I suppose some would say that most of our authors are foreign anyway. We would be saving hundreds of millions of dollars, but we would be stealing the creations of our authors and that would be wrong.

It is just as wrong to tell people who have discovered cures for peptic ulcers, treatments for arthritis, or heart drugs which will save thousands of lives, that we are going to encourage people to copy their discoveries and prevent them from earning substantial amounts of money because, although we are grateful to have the drugs, we think it is horrible that they want to make a profit on their discovery and we will not allow them to do that. I defy anyone in the House to say that that is a stand of strong moral principle. That is a corrupt stand.

I do not know how many people involved in the medical field I have talked or written to. However, I know that they wonder about a country which is grateful for research done on cancer, Alzheimer's disease, or heart disease, but will not give them the same legal protection given someone who develops a new camera or a better mouse trap, who writes a book, or puts a trademark on a product. They wonder about a country which will not do the same for someone who has discovered a life-saving drug as it does for those who make other discoveries. How can we in all honesty deny scientists patent protection?

I visited UBC where the Terry Fox Foundation and the Welcome Foundation have jointly set up Pacific Pharmaceuticals. That is in the constituency of the Leader of the Opposition. That business has been established at UBC to do research into cancer. They believe it is essential to have patent protection to justify that expenditure. They have hired some staff and are getting letters from Canadian scientists living in California, Massachusetts, France and Britain who are delighted to hear that this research will be undertaken in Canada. They want to return to Canada to do research in this facility because they want to do research in these important areas and would like to do it in Canada.

That is an example of the exciting things which are happening as a result of the Patent Act changes we are proposing. On his next trip to Vancouver the Leader of the Opposition should go to UBC and talk to the scientists at Pacific Pharmaceutical who are actually looking for the cure for cancer. He should tell them what he just told the House and watch their reaction. He should tell them that he does not value their work and that their work does not deserve the patent protection which is given to the inventor of a mechanical device. I challenge the Leader of the Opposition to do that.

Someone just handed me a letter from H.B. Knuchel, Ciba-Geigy Canada Ltd., Mississauga, Ontario, which says in part:

> I wish you continued courage in your fight against a "two-faced" opposition; considering that the leader of the opposition, Mr. John Turner, not so long ago was Chairman of another Swiss pharmaceutical company (when he was a partner at McMillan, Binch) and declared on many occasions his opposition to the present compulsory licence legislation.

That company wouldn't be Sandoz, would it? However, I guess we are entitled to change our minds given the exigencies. I do not know whether resolutions were passed to this effect at the last convention. I am not sure whether this is one of the issues on which the Liberal caucus is united. I do not want to betray confidential information, but I suspect that some people, not too many seats away laterally from the Leader of the Opposition, would privately admit we are doing the right thing.

Mr. Nystrom: Never.

Mr. Andre: I think the Leader of the Opposition knows of whom I speak.

Mr. Nystrom: Not Nelson and not me.

Mr. Andre: Deep down I am not even sure about Nelson. He never struck me as the kind of guy who would want to legalize piracy. I would hate to have my mind changed. I understand that he has certain responsibilities to the hoard behind him.

Mr. Young: I'm a hoard? Some hoard.

Mr. Andre: I am sure that deep in his soul he understands the fundamental immorality of piracy and would not defend that position.

There are four reasons for what we are doing. We must respect the principle of intellectual property. It does not matter whether we are dealing with a book, a poem, a song or a drug. We must respect that and any country which does not must be ashamed. Second, we cannot deal ourselves out of research and development in this important area and particularly in biotechnology. That is just too important an area to deal ourselves out as we are doing without this Bill. Third, there is no question that we have international obligations which must be honoured. If we want to be treated as a first-class nation, as a member of G-7, we must respect the rules of that group, one of which is that you do not pirate each other's inventions. Fourth, and this is important for the health care of Canadians, we cannot tell Canadians that we will not do research into cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, Alzheimer's, AIDS and cancer because we are concerned that the generic companies will not be able to come on as quickly. We cannot responsibly tell Canadians that that research is unimportant. We need to have those 3,000 scientists working for the health and well-being of Canadians. We are doing this in a way that protects the consumers.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that this will be on the backs of the elderly, the sick, the lame and those in nursing homes. He described everyone who is covered by a drug plan. So how will it affect them? If he is worried about the funding of the drug plan, I have pointed out and am willing to show him in committee that his cost projections are nonsense. If he had done in 1969 what we are doing now, Canadians would be saving more money today than they are under this scheme.

I am pleased that we are finally getting past this stage so that we can study the legislation clause by clause in committee as opposed to Question Period, which is not really an appropriate or intelligent forum, with everyone gesticulating for the benefit of the television cameras, to communicate information.

Let us get the Bill to committee and, while it may be too late, I ask the Opposition to try to keep an open mind and realize that this is a good Bill that is good for Canada. If they do they will support it.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has outlined his points of view on this important piece of legislation. As well, he commented on the views expressed by others, most recently, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner).

This is obviously a controversial piece of legislation, about which there are conflicting views and conflicting evidence. Yet the Minister says that it is good for Canada and good for Canadians and that everyone will enthusiastically agree with the Bill once the facts are on the table.

This whole matter will soon be referred to the appropriate committee that will hear witnesses in its clause-by-clause examination of the Bill. Given his confidence in this Bill, will the Minister consider giving the appropriate committee permission to hold hearings in some places other than Ottawa so that it will be easier for Canadian individuals or groups to have access as witnesses to present their views to the committee? Will he be open-minded to that proposal?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I did not participate in the negotiations but my understanding is that offers were made to travel to four cities; one in the east, one in the west, and two in the centre. Offers were made to provide ample time for all of those committee hearings in exchange for some commitment that the New Democratic Party would not use dilatory tactics at report stage and third reading stage. Those very reasonable offers were turned down by the New Democratic Party. Now they are coming back and trying to negotiate in another forum. They had their chance and should have been reasonable at that point in time.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question. I do not imagine that the Minister wishes to inadvertently mislead the House and the people of Canada. According to my recollection, I believe that the proposal was indeed to travel to some communities on the understanding that there would be an agreement that members of the Opposition would have a limited opportunity to speak and that the Government would be in a position to predict the exact hour that the Bill would be terminated. That was the arrangement. To suggest that the New Democrats were not prepared to co-operate enthusiastically at all stages of this Bill is inappropriate and incorrect. I just wanted to clarify that for the Minister's sake.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that he did so. In case the Hon. Member has forgotten, I want to clarify that on November 6 when I extended the courtesy to the opposition Parties of saying that I would be introducing the Bill at first reading that day, they used the opportunity to filibuster and for the first time in Canadian history tried to deny first reading of the Bill. They did that for two days, setting a dreadful parliamentary precedent of trying to prevent the introduction of a Bill. For the House Leader of the New Democratic Party to turn around and say that they were being reasonable flies in the face of the facts.

Patent Act

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I hoped to have the opportunity to pose a question to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) following his speech, but that was not allowed. I thought that perhaps during debate we were all equal in the House.

However, I am pleased to have an opportunity to address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). I will be a member of the Legislative Committee dealing with this Bill and I am looking forward to studying it in more depth.

I was particularly pleased that the Minister raised the issue of the Terry Fox Foundation and the Welcome Foundation which are based in the riding of the Leader of the Opposition. Ironically, the first opportunity I had to talk to those people was on Cancer Day last spring. I was selling daffodils on behalf of the Canadian Cancer Society and the leader of the Terry Fox Foundation recognized me. The issue he wanted to address to me was the importance of this legislation which was pending at that time, and the kinds of activities that would be generated as a result of the legislation. This includes not only the kinds of scientific research jobs that will be created in British Columbia, which I thought the Leader of the Opposition would be concerned about, but more importantly for Canadians, the possibility of finding cures for cancer and other diseases that will help senior citizens and all people.

I am continually amazed by the comments we hear from the Opposition. I believe the opposition Parties have frequently made what I believe are terribly misleading comments that try to imply that drug prices in Canada today are low because of generic competition. It is my understanding that only 7 per cent of drugs now on the market in Canada have generic competition and that in fact since 1979 only one of the 145 new drugs that have entered the market has a generic competitor. I believe that the reason we enjoy the relatively reasonable drug prices is more likely because of the health care system which enables the provinces to bulk buy and negotiate prices for these drugs with the drug companies. Perhaps the Minister could enlighten me on this issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before the Hon. Minister answers the question, I want to advise the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) that we are all equal in the House. According to the provisional rules, Standing Order 55(2), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) have unlimited time for debate. However, they do not have a period for questions or comments. I do not want the Hon. Member to feel that she is not equal in the House.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member or Capilano (Mrs. Collins) was absolutely right. The fact is that 7 per cent of the drugs in Canada have generic competition. Of course, these are the major drugs, so that on a dollar value it represents approximately 20 per cent. However, the prices of the 80 per cent of drugs in Canada that have no generic competition are still about 80 per cent of the price they are in the United States. The main reason for this is that provincial Governments purchase 60 per cent of the drugs and, from a sales point of view, it is cheaper for the drug companies to sell to ten buyers than to 10,000 physicians. Of course, the buyer can make bulk purchases, receive volume discounts and so on. The market in Canada is different from that in the United States, and that is why the prices of drugs where there is no generic competition is 80 per cent of the price in the United States.

I should also point out that the drug prices review board will also review that 80 per cent of drugs and keep their prices to the cost of living. That will provide additional consumer savings, such that the head of the pharmacare program in Saskatchewan said that he believes Bill C-22 will make it cheaper for Saskatchewan in the future than under the current regime. I would ask the Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) to talk to the head of the pharmacare program before he gets caught up in some of these wild numbers his colleagues are talking about.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister bring me up to date on how many announcements have been made in regard to the proposed legislation?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I forget the exact number of announcements, but so far it comes to $550 million of new incremental additional research and development in Canada.

If the Opposition, using dilatory tactics, are somehow able to prevent this, then of course the $550 million will probably not be there. That is the real price tag members of the New Democratic Party should bear in mind if they carry on the way they are.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have known the Minister for many years. I know he considers himself to be a very open and generous man. In the tradition of the Conservative Party when it was in opposition with respect to more freedom of information and being open and so on, I wonder if he now would agree to make public the cost impact studies of this legislation? I understand there have been some studies done. Will he make these studies public so that the Canadian people, not just Members of Parliament, will have a chance to see what the assessment has been of some of these officials?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated many, many, many times in the House, if we get this thing to committee, which I suppose we are now going to do, we will indeed look at the cost studies and examine all the alternatives. I am looking forward to that with great anticipation. That is what I have been trying to encourage the NDP to do for some days now.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Minister indicated in his remarks that one of the purposes of this legislation is to enhance the health of Canadians. I must say I was surprised to learn that Dr. Gagné, the Dean of Pharmacy at the University of Montreal, had indicated that Canadians, as a result of the present legislation, were being denied the use of certain drugs because the companies which develop those drugs were not prepared to bring them into Canada and allow them to be copied by the generic drug companies. Dr. Gagné gave an example of a new powerful heart drug called "Milrinone" as one drug which was not available in Canada because the company which developed it did not want it to be copied. Dr. Philip Seeman of the University of Toronto as well indicated that another drug in—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would appreciate it if the Hon. Minister would reply to this particular question because the time is more than—

Mr. Redway: May I just ask the Minister if there are any other drugs which Canadians are being denied at the present time as a result of the existing legislation which will become available with the amendments the Minister is putting forward?

Mr. Andre: Yes, indeed, there are. I cannot give the Hon. Member a list. I do not know if a list exists. However, I am in receipt of representations, not just from Dr. Gagné but from a lot of physicians. I read into the record the other day a representation from a physician at the University of Ottawa who pointed out that as a clinical paediatrician he could not get access to certain drugs which would be helpful to, in his words, the paediatric world, in other words, children, as a result of our Patent Act. Hopefully, when we make these changes, that paediatrician who is treating the sick children of eastern Ontario will now have access to the full range of drugs in which to treat those children.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate. I would say that this is the last 20-minute speech. The rest of the speeches will be 10 minutes.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate which, in my opinion, not only is important and educational but also shows just how different are the positions taken by the three political Parties in this House on this matter.

On one hand we see that the New Democratic Party does not want to change existing regulations, on the other hand the Government or the Progressive Conservative Party advocates too many changes, in our opinion. As usual, the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, favours striking a proper balance by taking a moderate approach which, I think, is surely more acceptable.

The only way Canadians can really appreciate this debate is to view the matter in its historical context and perspective. The history of drugs in Canada reveals that 20 years ago ours was the country where drugs cost the most. Today, Canada is one of the countries where drugs are the least expensive. And why did we make major decisions many years ago, in the late sixties, to change the legislation and reduce the price of drugs? It is because, as pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition who himself introduced a Bill in this regard in the late sixties, three studies had shown that our health services and drug prices were among the most expensive in the world. The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Royal Commission on Health Services and, finally, the Special Committee of the House of Commons had all come to the conclusion that consumer prices for drugs were much higher in Canada than in all Western countries except the United States.

Why had the Government introduced Bill C-90 at that time? Obviously, it was not the ideal solution to amend the Patent Act and to use a method virtually without any equivalent in the rest of the world to regulate drug prices. The ideal solution would have been to come to an agreement throughout the country to control prices. In fact, this is the method used in France and many other European countries where the central Government has the authority to control prices.

When Government Members tell us that, in those countries, patents are protected for many years, much longer than in Canada, they forget to say that while pharmaceutical companies have patents which guarantee exclusivity for over ten, twelve, fifteen or eighteen years in certain cases, these companies agree with the Governments not to charge abusive prices to the sick and the consumers. There is therefore a negotiated agreement between the pharmaceutical companies and the state for an appropriate price control.

At the time, in Canada, the provinces did not want to abandon their authority over internal trade and retail sales. Consequently, the Government felt the need to amend the Patent Act to make it possible to copy the patents for certain pharmaceutical products and allow generic companies to market similar drugs at a lower price. And no doubt that action by the then Liberal Government bore fruit. Why did the drug companies not react at first? Quite simply because during the first years they suffered no impact, no damage from generic competition, since initially it took a number of years for generic companies to market comparable drugs. But with the passage of time, generic companies became more efficient—they could introduce drugs faster and compete with the major pharmaceutical companies.

It is certain that in the late 1970s and the early 1980s generic drug companies became more and more efficient, and whereas initially they needed seven or eight years, later they only needed three and a half, or four years to get to compete with products of the major multinational companies with drugs of equal quality and lower prices.

Then the large multinationals came to the Government and asked for amendments to the Patents Act. I can tell you that, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I accepted at that time the arguments that were submitted by the drug companies, and no one here in this House is denying that people who invest vast sums of money into research and are the leaders in innovative pharmaceuticals certainly deserve some sort of protection to recoup their costs and make decent profits. This is the reason why, when we announced a first round of discussions with drug companies to agree on how to amend the Patents Act, I personally hired the Hon. Martin O'Connell, who was quite familiar with the pharmaceutical field and had had contacts with those companies, in order to negotiate with them a compromise that would both satisfy the industry and provide guarantees as to job creation, investments and above all the maintenance of an acceptable price level for drugs in Canada.

But now, a few years later, we have a new government, a Tory Government that has completely waived its responsibilities. I do not hesitate to say, Mr. Speaker, that the agreement which could have been reached with the drug companies by a Liberal government would have been more balanced, more accommodating and more secure for Canadian drug consumers than the one now proposed by this Government. There is no doubt that the big companies felt it was easier to deal with a Conservative Government than with a Liberal Government and this surely explains why they were given concessions first by the Government and then by the Minister who has just been appointed and who really sold off to the drug companies. The 10-year guarantee which the government is ready to allow the drug companies is exactly twice what the Liberals would have allowed the drug companies and would have agreed to if a Liberal Government had been in power.

Secondly, in the investment area, I can say that the drug companies have already within a few months reduced the investments they were to have made because, if we refer to statements made in the newspapers in July 1986, mention was made in Le Devoir of some $3 billion investments and I quote:

From now until 1995, states Mr. Beauchemin—

—from the Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association—

—investments made each year in research and development will substantially increase. The funds intended for research are now representing 4.5 per cent of sales made by the industry. They will soon be up to 10 per cent of that amount.

Then, a few months later, when the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs suddenly introduced his Bill, we could read in a December issue of the Montreal La Presse daily the following comment, and I quote:

"The Montreal region will get half of the $1.4 billion which the pharmaceutical industry has agreed to add to its investment projects in research and development in Canada by 1995", Mr. Harvie Andre, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Member for Alberta-Centre in the House of Commons, said to La Presse yesterday.

However, in a few months, the drug companies have reduced by more than half the amounts they had agreed to invest in Canada if the Government amended its Patent Act. Moreover, this alleged commitment by the Canadian Drug Manufacturing Association to invest in research and development, say, 10 per cent of their turnover does not even appear anymore in Bill C-22 which the Minister has introduced. The question is: Why does this Tory Government not table in the House the formal commitments which the pharmaceutical industry has made to convince them to amend this legislation? And why do we not find in Bill C-22 this 10 per cent ratio which to us, as the previous Government, seemed absolutely essential?

I do not hesitate to say that this Bill is a total abdication of the Government's responsibilities toward the sick and the medicine users. The most shocking part in this whole affair, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government had obtained a report from consultants who had met all the parties involved, not only the provincial authorities who buy most of the drugs sold in this country, but also the other users, the various groups of senior citizens which probably represent the category of people in our society who are the greatest users of medicine in this country, the manufacturing companies themselves, and also the makers of generic drugs and all other interested parties.

And when these consultants had tabled their report, commonly known as the Eastman Report, we discovered a number of things. We discovered for instance that imported drugs represented 30.3 per cent of total deliveries in 1982, that is, approximately 13 per cent more than in 1967.

Those, therefore, who claim, as the Government would like Canadians to believe, that the legislation which greatly changed the Patent Act and made it possible for generic companies to copy the best and most popular drugs in Canada is detrimental to the sick in this country and may deprive them of good medicine, are absolutely wrong, because as Carole Thibaudeau wrote in the September 20 issue of La Presse:

In any good drugstore, one can find a table listing the main patented drugs and their generic counterparts: the average price differential is twofold. But the regulating effect on prices is well illustrated by an extreme case, that of Valium, an anti-depressant of which the patent held in the United States by Hoffmann-Laroche expired in 1985.

According to This Magazine, from Toronto, the same quality of Valium sells for $345 in the United States as against $80 in Canada, because in this country we have the equivalent Diazepam generic.

Now, it is clear that the previous Act, as mentioned in the Eastman Report, did not have the adverse effects this Government would like us to believe.

The Eastman Commission made a number of important comments. According to its report, an overall summary of the compared growth and development of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada and the United States had led to the direct conclusion that growth has been greater in Canada than in the United States since 1967.

As far as employment was concerned, the Canadian generic drug industry has experienced rapid growth. While virtually no Canadian was working in that industry in 1968, there were 1,200 employees in 1982. Jobs in the pharmaceutical industry increased 24 per cent between 1969 and 1984, while growth in all other manufacturing sectors was 11 per cent.

Profitability did not decrease after introducing the 1969 amendements to the Patents Act. Profitability in the pharmaceutical industry clearly outperformed that in all other manufacturing industries. Also, profits in the pharmaceutical sector do not fluctuate as they do in other sectors.

Concerning prices in Canada in 1983, the weighted average selling price of generic drugs was 51.4 per cent lower than the weighted average selling price of products manufactured by patentees. During the year 1983 only, Canadian consumers saved $211 million by buying generic drugs equivalent to patent medicines.

As far as research is concerned, a high proportion of pharmaceuticals or drugs resulting from research and development work had no greater therapeutic value than products already on the market.

More than 70 per cent of new drugs are produced by firms which already manufacture pharmaceuticals in the same therapeutic category.

No matter what the Government says, the fact is that the major drug companies of the world, which have an opportunity to set up shop in Porto Rico and gain access to the American open market or in Ireland where they are on the doorstep of the European Economic Community, will always choose Porto Rico or Ireland over Canada as the site of their drug manufacturing facilities.

Government incentives for research and development have been among the best and most generous in the world for quite a number of years, yet drug companies have shown no interest.

The most absurd aspect of it all is that the Government is bent on pushing through this Bill which totally ignores the absolutely essential guarantee which the previous administration wanted to secure from the companies, namely that they would manufacture their products in this country. We Liberals are prepared to agree that the major drug companies doing research should indeed be adequately protected. We were quite willing to give them the kind of protection recommended in the Eastman report. We were prepared to raise the royalty limit because the 4 per cent they are getting now has probably become too low with the passage of time.

But we are not prepared to endorse the amendment they want unless they agree to make specific and much higher investments than those the Government has been able to obtain from them.

And second, the guarantee that they will make drugs in Canada, is absolutely not in the present legislation, and invest in research in Canada at least 10 per cent of their gross income in Canada is not mentioned in the legislation either; therefore, I must regretfully say that our party is duty bound to fight this legislation which, as the Leader of the Opposition said, has become not an issue to be ruled on its merit, but an item of free trade negotiation with the United States, which, in our view, confuses the issue and forces the Government to cave in before both the American Government and the major pharmaceutical multinationals.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member and to the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party who spoke in connection with the position of their Party on these amendments to the Patent Act. I took from the comments of both the Hon. Member and his Leader the fact that while the Liberal Party might not be supportive of the Bill in its entirety, it would perhaps be supportive of some sort of change to the Patent Act. In fact, if I understood them correctly, they support the recommedations made by Dr. Eastman in his report that there should be some further protection in the Patent Act than there is now. As I recollect, Dr. Eastman said that there should be patent protection of some four years in the Patent Act.

I would be interested to know if in fact it is the position of the Liberal Party that there should be an amendment to the Patent Act providing for at least four years of protection. I would be interested to know if that is the official policy of the Hon. Member, of his Leader and of his Party or if there is some confusion in the ranks. Perhaps there is confusion such as there is with the Liberal Party's policy on trade negotiations with the United States. Is there some confusion such as there is with the Liberal Party's position on NATO and NORAD? In fact, is it possible that the Liberal Party may have a "mug-wump" policy with respect to the Patent Act, a policy which has its mug on one side of the fence and its wump on the other?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member. The position of the Liberal Party has always been quite clear on this matter. We recognize that Section 41 of the Patent Act should be amended. I indicated this in May, 1983 when, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I stated the following:

The Liberal Government is seeking ways to stimulate the growth of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada while reaffirming its objective of maintaining prices at a reasonable level. Some amendments to the Patent Act might help achieve this double goal. In this context, three proposals have been put forward which are to be discussed with the provinces, the pharmaceutical companies, as well as those who are involved in the administration of health care and all other interested parties.

These discussions did take place, but the Government changed and what we regret is that the three solutions which we were recommending, namely a variable rate for royalties . . . As I said at the time, we could continue to grant licenses, but the rate of the royalties could be based on the research and development carried out by the patent holder in Canada.

Second, after a drug is introduced on the market, there could be an exclusive market for a specific number of years before a manufacturer could use the compulsory import licensing system.

Patent holders would have an assured marketing period, which would allow them to plan for the future. The Government was thinking of a period of about five years, and I have every reason to believe that, at the time, the pharmaceutical companies themselves would have agreed. After his study, Dr. Eastman recommended a four-year period, and now, the Conservative Government has come up with a ten-year period, which we find quite excessive.

Finally, we had talked about a more or less selective protection against compulsory licensing. For instance, we were saying that the companies which promised to achieve a specific performance and to respect certain principles in setting their prices could be protected against import licenses, but if they did not respect their commitments, they would lose this protection for one or more drug for which they hold the patent. I find that the three solutions which we had proposed were examined very lightly by this Government, and rather than negotiating a proposal which would be acceptable to the pharmaceutical companies, the provinces, which are the major purchasers of drugs, and the consumers, the Government is now proposing a solution which is exclusively to the advantage of the large multinationals, and I find this quite regrettable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

I believe that there have been discussions among House Leaders, and agreement to revert to Statements by Ministers.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I seek unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of allowing the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to make a statement, which I understand the opposition Parties are expecting at this particular time, further to an undertaking that the Minister made in the House yesterday?

Mr. Riis: It is our intention to co-operate with the Government to facilitate the Minister delivering his statement. I wish to indicate that there was an appropriate time for statements earlier in the day. If my memory serves me correctly, it was a government decision to jump that period into Government Orders of the Day. In an effort to co-operate and facilitate the business of the House, we would be pleased to hear the Minister now.

Mr. MacLellan: We are agreed and look forward very much to the Minister's statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it also agreed that the time will not be added to this evening's sitting?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CHANGES RESPECTING PENSION INCOMES—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as promised on Wednesday, December 3, I am pleased to announce today that the unemployment insurance rules dealing with pension earnings will be changed. These changes will allow workers who take other employment after their retirement and then work long enough to requalify for unemployment insurance benefits to receive those benefits without any deduction of previous pension income.

[English]

This change will put more than $230 million of unemployment insurance funds back in the pockets of the people affected.

On November 8, 1984, in the agenda for economic renewal the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced the Government's intention to treat pension income as earnings for the purpose of determination of unemployment insurance benefits. We were guided by the principle that persons who have retired should not look to the unemployment insurance fund as a supplementary source of income. It is designed to provide wage replacement to those who are temporarily out of work.

The important change in policy announced in November, 1984, did not adequately distinguish between those who had retired and left the labour market, and those who had retired to begin subsequent careers. Military and RCMP personnel who are required to retire earlier in life best illustrate the point.

The changes announced today will ensure that this group is treated fairly and equitably as active members of the labour force.

Workers who have started subsequent careers and contribute to unemployment insurance and subsequently become unemployed will be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits based on their post retirement employment income, regardless of their previous pension income.

Mr. Speaker, there is one additional issue which I would like to deal with today. Some retirees who were receiving benefits on January 5, 1986 when the former policy came into effect were disqualified and because they had left the labour market will not be able to requalify.

Notwithstanding the fact that Ministers made repeated announcements of the policy change in the November 1984 Economic Statement and subsequently, some of these people allege that they made their retirement decisions on the basis of inaccurate information from federal government sources.

[English]

To deal with this situation, I am today directing the commission to re-examine any such case and restore benefits, if the allegation is proven. The commission's normal adjudication process will apply. This is entirely consistent with the Government's action in similar cases in other benefit programs.

To bring these measures into force, I will be introducing legislation in the House and I will be seeking the co-operation of the Opposition parties to facilitate passage of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to thank all members of this House for their advice on this matter. I wish to stress in particular the role played by the previous Minister of Employment and Immigration who is now Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). In a period that was particularly difficult, she devoted a lot of attention to this issue and thus contributed much to bring it to its conclusion today.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today is another great day for our senior citizens. Another victory, although to get this far, they had to sign petitions and come to Parliament Hill to make this Government admit that it was wrong, that it had made a mistake and that it was being unfair. Unfortunately, today's decision comes too late for the people who lost their homes. It comes too late for the person who committed suicide and asked for the ashes to be put on the desk of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald).

Mr. Speaker, I think the Government should learn a lesson from decisions that were taken lightly and taken only to defend the interests of the rich. When the banks collapsed, depositors with up to $60,000 in their accounts did not have to sign petitions and come to Parliament Hill to make themselves heard and be reimbursed. However, I do want to congratulate the present Minister for reacting quickly to requests, following the Forget report's recommendations, and for having dealt with this problem. I must say, however, that unless he has additional information, some of the news is disappointing. First of all, I agree with him where he talks about our people in the military and in the RCMP, but the fact remains that in many cases, the situation arises as a result of factory shutdowns, when the employee is entitled to draw his pension benefits. Although this person would be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits if he were to find a job, I wonder what someone who is 57, 58 or 60 years old is supposed to do between the time he loses his job as a result of a factory shutdown and the day he finds another job.

And I am thinking of the region where the Minister has his riding and the remote areas of this country. You know, when a factory closes down, as in Trois-Rivières for instance, the 50 or 60 people affected cannot find other employment right away. I think we will have to find a way to deal with this.

There is another point on which I would like more information. I am proud of the Government's decision, but I am disappointed about how it applies to people who retired in 1985. These people appealed the original decision, they had to make representations and spend money, and either positive or negative rulings were handed down. Do they have to go through that again to make sure they get what they are entitled to retroactively?

The Minister says he is going to provide criteria, and I would like to say to the Minister that I congratulate the people who are listening, the people of the Quebec coalition, the people from Quebec City and Montreal, the people of the AQDR who co-ordinated the coalition. I want to congratulate Mrs. Lalande from Quebec City and the Comité d'action-chômeurs, Mr. Marcoux, Mr. Cloutier, Mr. Plamondon, Mr. Fortin, all from Montreal, all these people who worked together to make the Government aware of the problem and force its hand. I think the people listening to us today may have reason to celebrate, but their work is not finished. They cannot stop their campaign because they have to be out there helping their colleagues and filling out forms, to make sure these people get what they are entitled to.

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that time is limited. I conclude by saying to the Minister that we will co-operate so that this Bill will pass quickly. Perhaps he might be able to go a step further to correct a few things and see to it that the 1985 retirees do not face more delays caused by administrative red tape or communications problems and get their money before Chrtistmas. I would point out to the Minister that this is the third time the Government has had to backtrack, so in the future he ought to be more careful when making decisions, particularly in the case of unemployment insurance. Make sure to consult people from now on, and you will avoid this kind of situation.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Minister that his initiative is welcomed by myself and on behalf of my New Democratic Party caucus members. I can assure the Minister that we will do nothing to delay the implementation of this change in policy. However, that policy created a tremendous amount of frustration and anger among a large segment of the Canadian population, but I am sure the Minister is well aware of that. Nevertheless, it also raises a number of questions. The Minister's statement appears to be in response to the commission of inquiry into unemployment insurance, namely, the Forget Commission. Recommendation No. 26, as the Minister now knows, says:

> The current treatment of pension income should be rescinded with an effective date of January 5, 1986.

It goes on to say:

> The new policy should be announced and an implementation date of January 1, 1989 set.

The report then goes on to enumerate what that new policy should be.

I would like to give the Minister an opportunity this afternoon to assure the House and Canadian seniors that the policy he just announced will be the Government's policy from here on in, and that come 1989 we will not be faced with the same restatement of policy. I would like to have that assurance from the Minister and I am quite sure others would.

At the end of the Minister's remarks he said that he would be introducing legislation in the House. It is my recollection that there was no legislation introduced in the House when the Government changed the policy; it was done by an Order in Council. Perhaps the Minister could respond to my remarks after I have concluded, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that that was a large part of the grievance that we in the Opposition had about that policy change and the fact that the representatives of this country were not allowed an opportunity to debate the policy. In fact, people directly affected by it, superannuates and those retiring from the Armed Forces, had absolutely no input. If the Government feels that legislation must be introduced in the House to effect the change the Minister has just announced, then I can assure him that our Party will give him all the assistance it can to make sure the legislation is adopted as speedily as possible so that the people who were denied benefits who were properly entitled to them can receive them.

The Minister in his remarks said that some retirees receiving benefits on January 5, 1986 when the policy came into effect were disqualified. The Minister seems to be suggesting that he is asking the Unemployment Insurance Commission to review those cases with a view to restoring the benefits if the allegations are proven. It has been my experience with the Unemployment Insurance Commission that when an individual is disqualified from receiving benefits, for whatever reason, that information is recorded. I would not like to see a large number of people whom the Minister seems to be attempting to assist in this matter being forced to file appeals before boards of referees in order to get benefits that they should have continued to receive following January 5 when this new policy came into effect.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in the last months those individuals have led a rather frustrating life and should not be subjected to any more anxiety. Perhaps the Minister could ensure that the Unemployment Insurance Commission will take a look at the disentitlement served on individuals and if an individual was disqualified because of the new policy, then it seems to me the commission should be instructed immediately to reinstate benefits from that time without necessitating people having to go through the whole appeal process which, as we all know, can take a very long period of time.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mrs. Killens (p. 1378).

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, I am pleased to take part in this important debate this afternoon on a Bill which can do a great deal to redress the current high technology imbalance in our balance of payments which our country has faced in the high technology area for some years. We all agree that there is much less pharmaceutical research and development being done in Canada than our Government and the Canadian research and development community would like. This is because Canada has been regarded, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) pointed out so well this afternoon and for the last several weeks, as a country with a hostile climate toward investment in this area. The innovative drug companies doing basic research do not want to invest here because Canada has refused to reward them for their efforts.

Drug research in Canada is now almost totally oriented toward the clinical research and trials necessary to obtain permission from Health and Welfare Canada to market a drug in this country. The basic research that should provide employment for our university science graduates is being done in other countries at a loss to Canada. Bill C-22 will provide the means to correct this inequity for Canadian pharmaceutical research, and will lay the groundwork for employment in Canada for Canadian university science graduates. I believe that the steps being taken in this Bill and the new investment in research and development that will result are a major step forward in support of a truly significant pharmaceutical industry.

It is expected that as much as 30 per cent or $420 million of the estimated $1.4 billion of new research and development expenditures will go directly to Canadian universities, hospitals and other private research groups. Medical schools and research institutes will all benefit from the increase in basic and clinical research and development that will occur as a result of this Bill.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House a report by the Medical Research Council of Canada. It is a draft report on this legislation provided to me by the council. It points out that until the late 1960s the international pharmaceutical manufacturing community regarded Canada as a desirable country in which to expand research facilities. Good universities and technology and good incentives contributed to this situation. As a result, in addition to several Canadian research installations, some 14 foreign companies had established R and D facilities in Canada by the mid-1960s. Between 1963 and 1969 the pharmaceutical industry in Canada increased its R and D expenditures at an average rate of 18 per cent per year.

However, after the Patent Act was amended in 1969 to provide for compulsory licensing, the growth rate of innovative pharmaceutical companies in R and D declined drastically. This decline in growth rate was more than twice as severe as that of the industry world-wide, and twice as severe as that of other industries in Canada. The draft report goes on to say that the proposed new legislation should have a profound effect on the research investment of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada, both indigenous and foreign. It concludes by saying that the direction which the patent legislation will take if and when the new Act is passed cannot but be favourable to the expansion of medical research funding in Canada.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology I have for some months been questioning witnesses appearing before us on a number of matters, including this issue. I would like to bring to the attention of the House some of the responses I have received from various important witnesses in that committee. On April 18 we had before us officers of the National Research Council of Canada. I asked Dr. Larkin Kerwin, Chairman of the NRC, to comment on the current controversy related to R and D and the generic drug industry. I asked if he viewed any changes in the present regime as it relates to that industry, were they to be introduced, as beneficial to R and D in that sector. Dr. Kerwin said we have been fussing around for quite a few years now in this area in general. It is quite clear that one of the results has been the complete drying up of most industrial R and D in this field in Canada so we are simply not in the game anymore. We are not carrying out the R and D, so we are not going to get the patents and we will not therefore capture the market. It is a field we have effectively almost abandoned and the only way to get back into it is to provide the incentive to the industries in question. He went on to say that this is going to become even more important in the field of agriculture where biotechnology is going to be producing new grains and new plants and new cereals. If these cannot be protected, then we cannot expect the Canadian industry to put very many resources into it. He said that the whole future of the Canadian biotechnology industry is largely tied up with whether or not they can get a satisfactory patent law. That came from the Liberal-appointed Chairman of the NRC.

We also had before us Dr. Stuart Smith, another Liberal appointee to the Science Council of Canada. I asked him the same question on April 24. His response in part was that his own feeling about it, just from talking to people in the industry, was that it is possible that some of the big firms will locate research here in exchange for a change in Section 41 of the Patent Act. He said, "Sure, a $1 billion shot in the arm for pharmaceutical research would be wonderful. The Science Council, I am sure, would welcome such a thing". We know we have a commitment of much more than that, some $1.4 billion so far. As the Minister pointed out this afternoon, almost $700 million in new R and D investment in this area has already been announced.

On May 28 I asked the Chairman of the National Consortium of Scientific and Educational Societies, Dr. Gauthier, the same question. He responded, also on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies—

Indeed the Canadian Federation of Biological Studies fully supports this kind of measure. Therefore I would urge the Government to take appropriate action and encourage the drug industry to do more research in Canada.

[English]

My time is running out, but there have been many other indications of support referred to in this House in Question Period and in the debate so far. We can refer to the many telegrams and letters of support from a great number of leading scientists. In my view the Bill is important. It is a reasonable compromise of important principles, protections and objectives. I think all fair-minded Canadians will view it in that light.

I have been discouraged by what I consider to be a low level, base, and non-intellectual attack, particularly by the NDP, in using scare-mongering tactics among the old and sick. We know all Canadians are covered by good health care and drug plans. Almost all senior citizens, certainly those on social assistance and in need of help, are protected.

I think it is unfortunate that the NDP in particular—and it is very hypocritical of the Liberals as well—is attacking at this low level some legislation which will once again bring Canada into the civilized community of nations as it concerns the protection of intellectual property. It will give us a strong biotechnology industry and will at the same time provide important consumer protection for all Canadians.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in this very important debate because not only are we debating the question of whether we should extend patent rights to the pharmaceutical companies for up to 10 years, we are debating some important philosophical questions as well. The questions concern public good versus private interest.

It is always appalling to me to find a situation or situations where people make large profits because of other people's illnesses, weaknesses and misfortunes. I have listened to the debate and the justification by government Members for following the instructions of the multinationals. They have said Canada has and will be punished. We have not had research done here because those companies deem Canada not to be a good place because we have enacted some legislation in the past. I find that objectionable. Indeed, it is out and out blackmail. Yet government Members do not blush at all when they say that this is the case and we should succumb to this blackmail.

The previous speaker pointed out that many Canadians are covered by drug plans. Indeed they are. That is the result of legislation which was often pioneered by the CCF and the NDP over the opposition of Conservative Governments and the Conservative Party. They have always maintained that this is creeping socialism. People should be able to stand on their own feet and pay their own drug bills. Things like medicare and drug plans are creeping socialism. Traditionally, on the one hand, members of the Conservative Party have always opposed those progressive measures. They now stand in the House and say that most Canadians are covered by drug plans. We see Conservative Governments, both provincial and federal, attacking those very social programs. The Government attempted to deindex old age security. Just this afternoon the Government attacked the UIC benefits of those who retire.

The philosophy of the Conservative Party has been to attack government spending. However, the Government proposes cutbacks in social programs such as the drug plan. The Government proposes to force Canadians against the wall. It will force up the cost of drugs while removing the protection which Canadians have by cutting and attacking social programs across the country. Every Conservative provincial Government has attacked social programs. In attempting to cut government spending they attack the social programs.

The Government is putting the old and the sick into a vice. It is proposing legislation which will increase the cost of drugs while reducing the protection which Canadians have. That is the catch-22 situation into which the Tories inviariably put the Canadian public. This is all done in the name of protecting private property, meaning patents for certain discoveries, intellectual property.

The Minister has often made comparisons to artists, writers, or inventors working in basements. He says that it is wrong for those inventions to be pirated. Philosophically I would agree with him. It is too bad that the Minister has ignored writers, authors and artists. We do not see any patent protection for them. However, he rushes to the aid of the multinationals. I have never considered companies and multinationals to be like individuals. They are not individuals working in basements and, at their own initiative, with imagination and diligence making discoveries.

Multinationals are very sophisticated and large international corporations have tremendous resources created through public policy and public expenditure. Many of the multinational corporations which will benefit from this legislation have become large through public programs. Our educational facilities, which trained the scientists, are publicly funded. To say that a pharmaceutical company has totally paid for its discoveries is false. It has been subsidized by a public education system which trained the scientists and researchers. Therefore, there is some public interest to be taken into account. The multinational pharmaceutical corporations have not made these discoveries all on their own. The public has already subsidized them through the university system.

One wonders as well about the tax deductions which the corporations receive.

Mr. Benjamin: Did they ever get their money back!

Mr. de Jong: The Government proudly proclaims that these companies will invest more in the country. I am sure they will invest more, particularly with the tax regime which we have. They will have most of their research expenditures refunded through the tax system. Through lost tax revenues the public will be paying again.

Mr. Benjamin: It didn't cost them a nickel.

Mr. de Jong: The Minister has unabashedly said that we will have all this increased research and development. We may very well have it, but that depends on whether it is in the economic interest of multinationals to do the research here or elsewhere. I suspect that that will depend mainly upon the tax regime in place. If the tax regime will refund to multinationals the money spent on research and development, of course they will do the R and D here. Why would they do it in a country where they may not have their investment refunded through tax exemptions?

Since the cost of these discoveries is often borne by the public through the education and tax system, I maintain that the public has an interest in how the discoveries are used. I do not begrudge any organization or individiual benefiting from a discovery. However, when is enough enough? If I discover a cure for cancer, should I be able to hold everyone in the world for ransom? I maintain that I should not and that no organization should be. I would expect a fair return for my effort, but it is morally wrong for an individual or a corporation to hold everyone for ransom for ten years.

The Government is introducing legislation which is not in the public interest but in the interest of a few large multinational corporations. We are being asked to swallow a bitter pill. It has been sweetened somewhat on the outside by the promise of increased research and more jobs in the country which, I hasten to add, will most probably be subsidized through our tax system. There are no written guarantees in this package. We are only offered some promise for sometime in the future.

This is a bad Bill. It is no wonder the Government wants to force it through Parliament as quickly as possible. I predict the Canadian people will not like this and that they will send the Government a very strong message that they will not accept it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I support this Bill as I opposed the legislation of 1969 which created the situation in which Canada now finds itself. My family has had the misfortune of experiencing medical difficulties including burns, blood clots, cancer, heart attacks and surgery requirements as a result of broken bones. I am quite prepared to recommend to my family and all Canadians that if medicine can be improved, let us do it. If this is the kind of legislation that is required, let us support it.

I am dead set against the presentations which have been made by both opposition Parties. I find particularly contemptible the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) today. If Canada heard that speech, he made no gain in the polls. If there was ever an explanation for his status in the polls, he gave it for 25 minutes in this House today. I object to it because its single thrust was against the United States. This Government is not subservient to anyone in the United States. However, we do not want to generate a situation in which we cannot deal with the United States as friends or in which they are depicted as the worst enemy of this nation. It is depicted in that fashion by both opposition Parties, both of which have members from British Columbia and Ontario which are provinces that require a lumber market in the United States. It is unjustifiable for Members of this Legislature or members of any other Legislature to focus a total attack on the United States of America, because there are drug manufacturers of note and quality in Switzerland, France, Germany, the United Kingdom and a multitude of other countries. All of them have multinational research capabilities whose inventions and improvements in the medical structure have contributed to the better health of the world.

This is a scurrilous, unjustified and improper basis for an attack. If there is a matter of principle involved, it should be used to the best possible advantage, but I have not had one letter of complaint about this legislation from a senior citizen of this land in spite of all the threats by the Opposition that medicine might cost them more. I believe that senior citizens in this country are looking for the maximum opportunity—

Mr. Benjamin: You are afraid to see them.

Mr. McCain: Incited no doubt by yourself and others of comparable nature. My senior citizens are looking for the best possible medicine for all the difficulties of geriatric life in this country. That is what they want.

I believe that any senior citizen who is given a true and proper picture of what this may mean for medications that he or she requires—

Mr. Benjamin: Your truth is not their truth.

Mr. McCain: —and the improvements that this legislation offers, will see that they have had very poor leadership from both opposition Parties. They have conducted a scare program and used a political opportunity without concern for the health of the nation.

Canada has generated programs which have probably given this nation the best level of social medicine anywhere in the world.

Mr. Benjamin: Which the Tories opposed.

Mr. McCain: Both those programs were put into effect in the Province of New Brunswick by Tories.

Mr. Benjamin: You opposed it. You opposed medicare. Don't give us the gears.

Mr. McCain: I protest that statement. That is not an accurate statement but a false statement. I submit that the Member should retract it now. If he wants to document—

Mr. Benjamin: I have the evidence.

Mr. McCain: If he can in any way document that statement, I will be the first in the House to humbly retract and apologize.

Mr. Benjamin: I will be glad to give it to you.

Mr. McCain: I challenge you. Excuse me for not addressing the Chair, Mr. Speaker. The world of medicine can be peculiar. Occasionally, innovations are rejected by the medical world and subsequently may be rejected by citizens or religious groups. However, I want to give an example of two friends who were given a prognosis of a very short life span. They went to Tijuana, Mexico to receive cancer treatment that was available there. In spite of that medical prognosis, those two gentlemen received that treatment and returned to perform their normal daily activities. The point is that we cannot afford to put all medicine in the same category and restrict the opportunity for treatment in Canada because certain medicines which may be beneficial will not be made available here.

The Government has subsidized some public and academic research in the sphere of biochemistry and medicine.

Mr. Benjamin: We have to do more of it.

Mr. McCain: If my good friend from Saskatchewan were to remember how much international research had contributed to agriculture, the stubble jumper, as he sometimes calls himself, would realize that he would be quite hungry without that research. Now we are talking about the kind of research that preserves health and increases the life span. I admit that it may cost some money, but I also submit that generic drugs are not the answer.

Let me give two illustrations. Last week, a gentleman who is required to take medicine for the rest of his life visited me at my house. This medicine is a foreign drug which costs him more than if it were made in Canada. He decided to try a generic substitute, but in one week had to return to bed. As soon as he returned to the original drug he recovered. It may be possible to manufacture another drug with the same elements and molecular arrangements, but if there is a degree of differential in temperature in the manufacturing process of that drug, it can make it absolutely ineffective. I suggest that those Members in the Opposition should study chemistry.

Mr. Benjamin: Balderdash.

Mr. McCain: It is not balderdash. It is scientifically correct and accurate.

Mr. Benjamin: National Health and Welfare approves generic drugs.

Mr. McCain: My wife was advised not to use generic drugs in her medication program. Her physician said that he had tried it with his patients and was dissatisfied because it caused them discomfort. While this does not condemn all generic drugs, I suggest unequivocally that the exactitude required for making drugs is not always duplicated by another manufacturer, generic or otherwise.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt my hon. friend, but would he permit one short question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act, which the Government is trying to ram through the House of Commons without adequate debate or opportunity for Canadians to see what is really happening in this regard.

Until 1969 we had the second highest drug prices in the world. Since 1969 we have had the lowest drug prices in the world and, in fact, the pricing regime in this country has been so good that the United States Congress and American authorities have examined the Canadian system to see if it could be implemented in the United States.

This legislation is designed to increase the cost of drugs in this country and see the profits siphoned off to the United States.

Let us consider the level of investment in research before the present legislation came into effect in 1967-68. We see that 3.5 per cent of funds from the drug industry were reinvested in research. We see that 3.9 per cent of the funds were reinvested in research in 1982.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) argues that we will have increased research and development in this country. Clearly, research and development is greater under the existing legislation by which there is no rip-off than it was before it was put in place.

It is quite obvious that this legislation is part of the "Irish eyes are smiling" syndrome that was conceived in Quebec City in March, 1985. The President of the United States, looking at his financial backers in the multinational drug companies, told the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that he had to make a deal and increase the price of drugs for Canadians so that billions of dollars could be siphoned off to the American multinationals. No one in their right mind believes we are going to have massive research and development in the drug industry in this country compared to the United States. The song which was sung in Quebec City in March, 1985 was When Irish Eyes are Smiling. If the Tories have their way they will be putting this legislation through by March 1987. At that time most of the multinational drug companies in the United States will be laughing all the way to the bank. The poor, the sick and those families who have to live with the high drug prices will be crying every year that this legislation is in effect.

There is no guarantee in the legislation that there will be further investment in research and development. The Minister knows that. There is nothing in the legislation to indicate it. He portrays himself as having some great agreement, but he clearly does not.

Our Party supports the Eastman Report which suggested that there be an exclusive four-year period for the designer-developer of patents and that there be an adequate royalty after that. There would be a royalty fund which would provide assistance and appreciation for further research and development. However, this legislation just gives a carte blanche to the drug companies for a 10-year period. If there is anything which really upsets me about this legislation it is the fact that our biotechnology industry which is just developing will be wiped out. It is going to be wiped out because the Minister in this legislation provides that not only the process be patented but that the product be patented also.

I would like to read a letter from Eric James, who is the President and Chief Executive Officer of Cangene Corporation, which is a genetic engineering company in Mississauga. I had an opportunity to meet with Mr. James and with some of the other officials in his company. It is a small company with $5 million or $6 million of Canadian investment, employing some 30 people. He states in his letter of October 30, which he sent to all Hon. Members:

> As a result of intense pressure from U.S. and foreign based multinational drug companies, changes to the Patent Act that will kill the infant Canadian biotechnology industry are being contemplated. As one of a very few Canadian companies that is on the forefront of this exciting new science, we must warn you that the immediate introduction of these proposed changes will only serve to impede the growth of this industry in our country.

He goes on at length, and on page 2 he states:

> The question you must ask yourself is this: do you want a viable Canadian owned non-government biotechnological industry within three years? If the answer is yes, you must reconsider the currently proposed changes to the Patent Act, and a policy that is in the national interest must be devised and implemented.

These companies will be wiped out by the legislation because not only is the patent to be on the process but on the drug itself, and as well there is going to be a 10-year period of exclusivity for the patent. It is estimated that in the next five years alone, $10 billion worth of protein-based pharmaceutical products will be introduced into the world market-place, $250 million in Canada alone. I have a whole list of protein-based pharmaceutical products produced organically, including herpes vaccine, malaria vaccine, AIDS vaccine, hepatitis B vaccine and insulin. This Canadian company will be destroyed by the Government and this legislation.

If the Government had taken Dr. Eastman's recommendations and provided a four-year exclusive law, this kind of Canadian company would have been able to survive. Not only is this legislation extremely harmful to Canadians in that we are going to have to pay tens of millions of dollars over the next 10 years in higher drug prices, but we are going to see small Canadian companies wiped out. One of the estimates of the number of jobs which will be lost is of the order of 6,000 net. There will be 3,000 jobs created and 9,000 lost, which is 90,000 man-years.

I certainly hope the Government in committee, after hearing the wishes of citizens, especially those of the million of Canadians who are not covered by drug plans, will back down and amend this legislation and not give it all away to the American multinationals, because Canadians should come first and I hope they will with this Government.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to enter into this debate today. During my business life, which I share with my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), I have had the pleasure of using dozens of drugs in treating animals and I have experienced more recently than my hon. friend the great changes and advantages which have occurred in the drug field. I have great respect for the manufacturing companies which bring in the drugs. I am delighted that we are now taking a step toward protecting the work these companies do.

We have heard good debate today and it is a pleasure to be at this stage of the legislation. It is unfortunate that Hon. Members opposite have used all sorts of tactics to try to delay debate. Out of the 16 hours we have been involved with this legislation we have only debated for about nine hours.

Mr. Waddell: You should have been here before when the Tories were in opposition.

Mr. Brightwell: The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) came in here with 60 petitions in his hand, abusing that privilege and talking far too much for the worth of those petitions. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) misconstrued my motives. I brought in a petition from some of my constituents who had been receiving information which was not totally right and so they do not understand the situation. I did my duty and turned it in to the House. Not so Hon. Members opposite. They collect stacks of petitions and bring them in at an opportune time just to delay the business of the House. What a shame that is.

Mr. Benjamin: I have some more.

Mr. Brightwell: We heard the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) reading into the record selected headlines. What a fine memory the man has, except that he forgets the other headline. A headline in the Toronto Sun on December 3 reads: "Feds Right To Stop Legalized Drug Piracy". In the Gazette on December 3, the headline read: "Drug Bill Foes Mislead Seniors, Specialists Say". I have other headlines: "Don't Back Down From Drug Change Law" and "Researchers Say New Patent Drug Laws Will Help Canada Get Better Medicines".

The reason I rise today is that I have great concern for the health of Canadians and I wish to see this Bill pushed ahead so that Canadians can have those drugs. I wonder whom I am helping.

Mr. Waddell: You are helping your American friends.

Mr. Brightwell: In all probability I am helping the people sitting opposite. I am helping everyone in the House. I am helping all Canadians who are going to get sick in the future and will otherwise be deprived of drugs which will not come on to our market because of our present law.

What do our changes do to the law? We say there will be 10 years' protection, but drugs must go through a long stage of proof before release into the Canadian market. They are presented to the Canadian Government and they receive an order of compliance. Thereafter they have to be proven in a period of up to three years. So, virtually from the stage that the drug is protected, it may take three years to reach the market. Then, there is a period of four years in which that drug would have the market to itself. But at the end of the three years of preparation for introduction to market and the four years on the market, if a Canadian company chooses to make the chemical here in Canada, it can copy the material.

I believe there has been a program of misinformation going on across the country. I wish to speak a bit about the type of misinformation which is occurring. My constituents are reading that generic companies will go out of business. We know that this is not true because every generic drug that is on the market right now will persist, and persist at the same price. Members of the Opposition say that the prices will increase. We know that 50 per cent of the drugs produced by generic companies are drugs that have lost their total protection, that they have gone beyond the 17 years. Tetracycline, a drug I have used for some 25 years, is one of these, contained in over 50 per cent of the generic companies' drugs. We know that the generic companies copy only those drugs that are special, those drugs which sell a great deal, those drugs which are perhaps easier to make, I am not sure. Since 1979, out of all the drugs introduced to this market only one drug has been copied.

Who could say that through the laws that we have now we are withholding from the market many copies that would come in the future? What about the number of drugs that are copied? We know that in the Canadian market only 7 per cent of the drugs have copies. We know that that figure comprises 20 per cent of the total sales volume; but the other 93 per cent are on the market with nothing more than natural competition and nothing more than the ability of the provinces to buy those drugs to maintain their lower prices. So who would say that any of the new drugs that are coming in the future would in fact be copied and would in fact have the generic price competition?

Is it not great to think that now we have a reason for generic companies in Canada to manufacture fine chemicals here? It is not necessary for those companies to go to Hong Kong, Taiwan or Italy to buy the chemicals. They have a reason now to jump in and set up a chemical manufacturing industry in Canada. Think of the research and technical jobs that will result. Think of the regular jobs that will occur from this type of fine chemical production.

Our friends opposite say there will not be more research workers. They say there will be a net loss of jobs. A professor from the Department of Pharmacology at the University of Toronto has said that many of his trainees, many of the people whom he has put through the PhD program, are now working in the United States in major drug companies and the products are coming back to Canada. What a shame that they cannot work here in this environment. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who spoke earlier this afternoon, said that drug companies tend to locate in countries such as Ireland, and he named another country. He said that drug companies do not want to come to Canada because the market is so small. Instead of debating Bill C-22 I thought the Hon. Member was talking about the trade talks. He was demonstrating the need for Canadian business and manufacturers to have a much bigger market that they can penetrate, a market that will make them efficient so that they can go out and make a long run at a lower price.

There has been talk about the effect on seniors. We know that they are protected, mostly under drug plans. However, they are not totally protected by the drug plans. No one commented on the fact that drug plans protect only drugs selected for them. There are many drugs out there right now that are not covered under drug plans and which do not have any purchasing power. Under our plan, with the price control scheme being put in place, it will apply not only to the new drugs, not only to those 93 per cent that are purchased by the drug plans and are not copied, but to those other drugs that are not on the selected list.

When Members opposite talk about the cost of drugs in the future they do not build in the fact that 40 new generic drugs will come on the market in the next five years. That will reduce the plan. They do not build in the fact that the cost of hospitalization and medical costs of other kinds will be reduced. So the number of dollars we are talking about ten years from now appear to be based simply on false calculations.

I am pleased to give to this Bill my strong personal support from my background in my business. I am very pleased that the Government is moving to protect intellectual property. I am especially pleased that the Government is moving to protect the health of Canadians in the future.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to a number of my colleagues throughout the day. A question which comes to my mind is the following. If the Government is so certain that this legislation will result in all of these jobs and all of this research being done in Canada, then why is it so hesitant to build in some type of guarantee or even to obtain some type of guarantee from the various companies involved? We notice that it is accepting on blind faith that the international drug companies are saying: "Yes, we are prepared to invest heavily in Canada".

I ask any serious-minded person to give this proposition some thought. Let us consider a large multinational drug company, say with its head office in New York, which now plans to open a branch in Canada. If it plans to conduct serious long-term pure scientific research into new drugs would it do it in its small branch plant in Canada or at its parent head office in New York? What if we were to ask ourselves that question seriously, do we honestly think people would believe that major research and development will take place in branch plants? There are many examples across Canada of our branch plant economy. When we consider where the research is being done along with the development right through to production, we see that it is seldom done in branch plants. That is not the purpose of the branch plant. The branch plant is simply in place to provide a distribution and sales outlet for the multinational network.

An Hon. Member: Is that your vision of Canada?

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member opposite asks me if that is my vision of Canada. No. It is obviously his vision of Canada, since that is the reality of Canada. It is his type of Government, both provincially and federally, which has allowed this to take place. We have more foreign ownership and control than any country in the world.

If anyone thinks that having important financial, research and economic decisions made in foreign countries is good for Canada, then that is where we part company I am afraid. That is not my image of what Canada should be. That is not my image of an independent sovereign nation. The best example we have seen in this regard in the last few days is with regard to the Bank of British Columbia which was bought out by the Hongkong Bank. Again, critical decisions about western Canadian enterprise will not be made in Vancouver, or not even in Toronto where they are usually made, but they will be made in the Far East. Quite frankly, I do not think that this is good for Canada. I do not think it is good for British Columbia, good for Canadians or for British Columbians. But that is getting somewhat off the topic.

There has been a great deal of contradictory evidence presented here in the last little while. Rather than simply reflect the views of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap I will simply use other sources. Again, they will not be my views, they will be the views of others. They are legitimate views held by people who I think are all respected in this Chamber. This morning I got up and simply went through a pile of newspapers that I had and I would like to refer to some of the points that have been made.

First, I refer to an editorial in the Vancouver Sun entitled "Patently wrong" which states:

The stubbornness with which the Mulroney government seems determined to bull ahead with its ill-advised prescription drug bill and foist it on to Canadian consumers against almost universal opposition is something to behold.

Even though Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Harvie Andre now admits the obvious—that giving the multinationals a 10-year monopoly on the sale of new drugs is bound to increase the cost to consumers—the Government is clinging doggedly to its plan.

The Tories have been mesmerized by a promise from the brand-name drug companies, unsupported by any guarantees, that if they get the extended patent protection they will invest $1.4 billion in the development of new pharmaceuticals in Canada over the next 10 years and create 3,000 jobs.

The government continues to ignore the other side of the equation, which is the loss of countless jobs in the industry that produces generic copies of brand-name drugs—at considerable savings to Canadians in lower prescription bills and medicare costs.

A study last year by Toronto economist Harry Eastman, who enjoys sufficient government confidence to be nominated as head of a prices review board that the Tories plan to establish, concluded that the production of generic copies saved Canadian consumers $211 million in 1983 alone. Multiply that by 10 and the total, in 1983 dollars,—

That total comes to $2.1 billion. That is $2.1 billion that could be in the pockets, wallets and purses of Canadians so that they could spend it in local communities right across Canada.

I think we have to make it very clear that if any research and development jobs come out of this change to the Patent Act, those jobs will be almost exclusively in central Canada. Those jobs will be in Toronto and Montreal. While that is wonderful for Toronto and Montreal, the point is that there will be very little benefit flowing out of this legislation for the regions of Canada.

The article in the Vancouver Sun goes on to say:

The opposition parties and organizations concerned about the drug bill must keep applying pressure until the Tories can see the light.

According to an article in The Toronto Sun:

Ontario taxpayers will have to fork out an extra $35 million a year for drugs under a proposed federal amendment to the patent act, Health Minister Murray Elston said yesterday.

The article goes on:

"The amendment will have severe implications on drug prices," Elston said.

He said it would add at least $35 million to the $1 billion Ontarians now pay for drugs.

Some $400 million of that figure is paid by the government through its Ontario Drug Benefit program for seniors and people on special assistance.

I might add that even though government programs will pay for much of these increased drug costs, the money still comes from taxpayers of the province or of Canada. Again, the people of Canada are the ones who are providing those additional funds. The article goes on to say:

The remaining $600 million comes from cash-paying customers and private insurance plans—

A health ministry spokesman said the $35-million figure "is a conservative one"—

The Territorial Government of the Yukon passed a resolution which reads as follows:

Whereas it is fundamental to the health and welfare of all Yukon people that safe and affordable therapeutic pharmaceuticals be available, and

Whereas Section 41(4) of the Canada Patent Act (1969) has created a situation where Canadian licensees can produce low-priced generic substitutions of brand-name pharmaceuticals to be marketed in Canada, and

Whereas generic substitutions have saved Canadians approx. $200 million a year, and

Whereas these generic substitutes have resulted in lower Yukon hospital, pharmacare and prescription costs, and

Whereas the proposed changes to the Act will result in higher costs for publicly-funded health and hospital programs and higher prescription costs for individual Yukoners while providing no benefits to Yukoners, and

Whereas the federal Government in the face of constant pressure from the multi-national drug companies and the U.S. Administration has tabled a bill to amend the Patent Act,

Therefore be it resolved that this House urges the federal Government to abandon amendments to the Patent Act which would result in higher costs for all Yukoners.

Interestingly enough, all the Conservative Members of the Legislature voted against that motion. The New Democrats and one Liberal voted in favour of it.

Turning to the Province of Nova Scotia, the Consumer Affairs Minister, Laird Stirling, said:

The federal Government should drop proposed changes to drug patent laws because the costs outweigh the benefits—

"Even with that promise of $30 million in new money for research (in Atlantic Canada), it would be crumbs,"—

"Why is it we're supposed to be the guinea pigs in this program?

If my memory serves me correctly, the Nova Scotia Government is still a Conservative Government.

I turn now to an article in The Toronto Star. That article quotes Joyce King of The United Senior Citizens of Ontario as saying:

"I have seniors coming to me and saying they don't want to be part of the 51st state," she said. "They're scared and they think they're going to be sold out."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. I will give him another minute to close off his debate.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that went awfully quickly. Let me summarize.

I have another dozen comments that I just picked out of the news this morning from different individuals, scientists, consumers' associations, newspaper editorials and people like Don McGillivray of Southam News all commenting on the fact that the Government is on a suicidal path to try to introduce legislation that will jam hundreds of millions of dollars of increased drug prices down the throats of Canadians, and primarily seniors, the ill and the disabled. We feel that this is an immoral piece of legislation that must be opposed at all costs.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, again it is Friday. It is always a pleasure to speak in the House of Commons on a Friday. I think it is a particular pleasure to speak on a piece of legislation which is so clearly related to the commitment this Government made in the last election campaign.

We won the last general election because it finally became clear to Canadians that the NDP-Liberal alliance was producing public policy that was penalizing millions of Canadians with unemployment and little hope for the future. It became clear that we needed a massive change in public policy if we were to be able to employ Canadians and allow them to participate fully in society.

One of the areas in which Canada is not well served is its commitment to research and development. If we want to be real world traders, we must be in the forefront of research, of the development of that research and of the manufacturing of the products that are developed.

It is indeed interesting to remember that in 1969, the Liberal Government brought in changes to the Patent Act that enabled non-inventors to steal the inventions of inventors. Here we are 17 years later with a million and a half or a million and quarter unemployed Canadians because the world community and Canadians generally began to lose faith in this country. Canadians began to lose faith that they had the means, the wherewithal, the talent and the drive to invent and to create.

Canadians have been inventing and creating, but they have been doing so in the United States, in Europe and in Australia. Why have they been doing it there? One of the root causes for that is the badly designed and inappropriate Patent Act.

It is particularly embarrassing for me to stand in a Chamber, which is supposedly full of wise people selected by the voters of Canada, and have to listen to the drivel and the inane childishness of the Opposition in reaction to a fundamental piece of legislation designed to restore Canada to economic health. Members of the Opposition seek re-election on false premises and on the backs of a million and a half unemployed Canadians. Every time we bring in a piece of legislation designed to create jobs and a future for the young people of Canada, we are exposed to childish tactics, opposition and inane arguments. It has happened again. In 1979, the NDP and the Liberals threw a Government out of office for bringing in the fairest Budget to the poor people in a decade. They threw the Government out of the House for being fair to poor people.

An Hon. Member: We didn't throw them out. The people threw them out.

Mr. Hawkes: They threw a Government out of office that was creating jobs at the rate of 33,000 a month. Why did they do this? Because they want public policy that keeps people in bondage. They want to hand out the cheque to the unemployed at their local meeting. We do not seek to hand out unemployment cheques at local meetings. We seek an opportunity to meet eyeball to eyeball with those people who are fully employed, fully participating, and can look you in the eye and shake your hand, not hold out their hand for a hand-out. We need public policy that creates growth in this country. The heart of those types of policies relates to getting rid of obstacles like FIRA, and getting out in the community and trying to seek trade arrangements that enhance growth and jobs.

We have not even seen in this Chamber any proposal for arrangements that the Americans and the Canadians have agreed to. Yet the funding mechanism for the NDP Party is putting ads in local newspapers that state we should be afraid of it. Nobody has seen it, but we should be afraid of it. "Do not look at it as an opportunity system to create jobs and opportunities. Just be afraid because we tell you to."

There was a report in the House on Wednesday which was a thick, 500-page report. One or two hours after it was received, and nobody could have read it, it was being condemned by the Opposition as having no value and no opportunity system within it for the really poor of this country, the people who really need the help to get back on their feet and become productive and employed. Condemn it without reading it. Condemn the trade arrangements without reading them. Condemn patent protection, which lies at the heart of the development of this nation. It is a tragedy when somebody living in this country invents a drug or a new product and in the dark of the night they have to sneak across the border to patent it to avoid having it stolen. The jobs which flow from that invention flow into the American economy, the French economy, and the British economy.

It is absolutely insane and opposition Members have some gall to stand up and say that it is going to cost you more money. Generic competition, and competition of any type, tends to produce lower prices. That happens in Canada. For seven drugs out of one hundred it happens, the price goes down. But for 93 drugs out of 100 there is no generic equivalent.

Mr. Benjamin: The four years haven't run out yet.

Mr. Hawkes: Can anybody in good conscience on that side of the House stand up in the House and tell us on which of those 93 out of 100 drugs we are being ripped off? They do not know, because we do not have a price review mechanism today. They do not trust the drug companies, yet they defend a system which allows 93 out of 100 drugs to be put in the market-place without competition and without price review.

Mr. Benjamin: Hogwash!

Mr. Hawkes: They want those drug companies. They talk about profits. They want them to be able to charge what they like.

This Government wants a price review board not to look at 7 drugs out of 100, but to look at 100 out of 100 to make sure that there is not a single drug on the market on which Canadians are being ripped off. We want drugs that work, save lives, and save pain and anguish. We need this patent protection so we can get first quality medical service and jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4.45 o'clock p.m. pursuant to Order made Thursday, December 4, 1986, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

Before I put the question, however, I have a statement to make.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) that he is unable to be present in the House on Monday, December 8, 1986, to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business. Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended, and pursuant to Standing Order 39(2) the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF THE CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the eleventh report of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association respecting the participation of parliamentarians from the House of Commons and the other place in the 32nd session of the North Atlantic Assembly in Istanbul, Turkey, from November 14 to November 18, 1986.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions. Whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, and having little negative effect on the publishing industry in the U.S., yet seriously damaging Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and culture, and rising book prices having placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect to free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people in my riding. They point out that government proposals on changing the Patent Act, as they affect prescription drugs, will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. These changes are unfair to those who depend upon prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. The proposals will result in higher cost for provincial government drug programs. The changes are another example of the Conservative Government serving the interests of multinational corporations instead of those of Canadian consumers. The petitioners ask Parliament to reject these proposals.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions, two of which are from my riding. They concern the Government's plan to introduce higher drug costs by bringing in the Bill we are voting on today. The petitioners say that the changes in the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the U.S. in an effort to get free trade negotiations; in other words, to cave in to pressure from American drug companies and the American Government. I am pleased to present this petition on behalf of these petitioners in my riding.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition sent to me by a number of residents from Wadena, Saskatchewan. They note the changes proposed in the Patent Act and they wish to oppose them because they will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. The changes will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs, result in higher cost to the provincial drug plans, and is just another example of Canadian Government concessions to the U.S. at the expense of Canadians in the free trade negotiations. They call on this House to oppose any changes to the laws and reject these proposals.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour, under Standing Order 106, to present a petition certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitioners, from New Brunswick, express their concern over the federal Government's intention to change the Patent Act related to prescription drugs. They believe this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary drugs. They believe this is another example of the Canadian Government's concession to the U.S. at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations.

Questions on the Order Paper

Mr. Greenaway: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have delivered petitions in this House before and I was always under the impression that you had to give the very basic facts, not a lot of detail. These petitions are very detailed. Indeed, they are arguments. I ask you to consider that.

Mr. Speaker: There has been some discussion in the Chamber with respect to the extent to which remarks are made at the time of presenting petitions. I think Hon. Members who have petitions to present will take into account the sensibility of other Members and keep their remarks short.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, on behalf of residents of a variety of communities in Newfoundland, to present a petition to the House of Commons. These petitioners are asking the Government to reconsider its plans to change the Patent Act which they say will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs and suggest that this will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. For a variety of other reasons, which I will not take the time to read, they ask the Government to consider not proceeding further with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present three petitions from an organization called Senior Power, members of which reside in the cities of Regina and Saskatoon and such villages as Milestone, Blaine Lake, Esterhazy and Unity in the Province of Saskatchewan. The petitioners humbly pray and petition Parliament to reject proposals to amend the Patent Act which they believe will increase the price of prescription drugs for all Canadians.

[Text]

NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA MANUFACTURING STANDARDS ACT

Question No. 27—Mr. McKinnon:

Is progress being made to bring into effect the provisions of the National Flag of Canada Manufacturing Standards Act, Chapter 28, Statutes of Canada, 1984 and, if so, when will this occur?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. Progress is being made to revise the existing standard CAN/CGSB-98.1-M79 as required under the Act and the following is the progress to date.

The Canadian General Standards Board (CGSB), lacking any regulatory authority, is not in a position to bring into effect all the provisions of the cited Act. At the present time it can only proceed with the development of a new National Standard of Canada to reflect current manufacturing techniques and materials.

Since the passage of the National Flag of Canada Manufacturing Standards Act, the representative CGSB Standards Committee has been reactivated to develop a new edition of the existing national standard on the national flag using the consensus process.

Outdoor life tests were conducted in the National Capital Region during the whole of a winter, but the results were not accepted by the committee. At the committee's request, arrangements were made with a commercial laboratory to supervise a more conclusive test program.

The text program has been delayed, first by physical difficulties at the test site, and second by suppliers' repeated postponements in providing specimen flags for testing. The first difficulty has now been overcome, and the second will be avoided by purchasing specimen flags in the market-place. The actual life tests, of course, cannot satisfactorily be shortened.

It is expected that a final standard for outdoor long-term flags will be available by the end of 1987, and that standards for other uses (e.g. indoor) will be available sooner.

STANDARDS COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 34—Mr. Caccia:

1. Is the International Standardization Branch of the Standards Council of Canada being moved from Mississauga to Ottawa and, if so, for what reason?

2. (a) How many persons will be asked to relocate to Ottawa (b) what will be the estimated cost, in severance pay or other forms, to reimburse those persons who refuse to relocate?

3. What will be the estimated cost of operation in the first year, and how does this compare with the annual costs of operation for the last three fiscal years in Mississauga?

4. What criteria were used to determine if the International Standardization Branch could operate as effectively in Ottawa as in Mississauga, and how will the failure or success of this move be monitored in the future?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am advised by the Standards Council of Canada as follows:

1. Yes. Reviews have determined that significant efficiencies can be realized as a result of consolidation of operations.

2. (a) Nineteen. (b) $50,000.

3. Cost of operations—International Strandards Branch

1987-88	$ 2,764,000	estimated

4. The criteria used was the effect the move would have on the efficiency and the effectiveness of the operations of the International Standards Branch. The success of the move will be monitored by the continuous observation of the efficiency and effectiveness of the operations of the Branch.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

Question No. 38—Mr. Gauthier:

1. What has been the employer contribution and other payments, expressed as a percentage of payroll, that the Government has made to cover the financing of the Public Service Superannuation Act (PSSA) benefits and their indexing for each of the past 15 years?

2. Does the Government consider that the 8.0 to 11.0 per cent of payroll employer contribution required to finance PSSA benefits and their indexing that was projected to the year 2025 in the Treasury Board's 1976 paper "Basic Facts about Pensions in the Public Service of Canada" is still a valid projection and, if not (a) for what reasons (b) what are the projected rates that the Government now considers to be a more accurate reflection of future requirements?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Employer pension plan contributions and other payments, as a percentage of payroll, made to finance pension plan benefits and indexing for public servants.

Year	Percent

2. The question relates to long-term forecasts based on the present accounting system for public service pension plans. Given the intention to reform that system to conform with private sector practices, as announced by the President of the Treasury Board, it would not be appropriate to provide such forecasts.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADAIR LIMITED DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 4, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: I should have advised Hon. Members that when debate ended on the last day the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—North Centre (Mr. Keeper) had the floor. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) would defer to him.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention. Sometimes our front-benchers are carried away with enthusiasm, and I think with good reason. My colleague is well motivated to speak on this legislation.

I welcome this opportunity to resume my speech on this legislation, and I have some additional comments to make. What really strikes me in this legislation is that the sale of Canadair to Bombardier is a fire sale. Canadair is being given away to Bombardier, and this is a tragedy for Canada and Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, when Canadair belonged to General Dynamics, that company was in difficulty. In order to preserve jobs in Montreal, the Canadian Government bought Canadair and started to invest in the company. When Canadair started to have problems, the Government used public funds to invest in the company and did so with good results. The most important example is the Challenger aircraft. This executive aircraft was developed by Canadair, and it is a success. For several years, Canadair lost money, and at the time, the Conservative Opposition attacked Canadair as a waste of public funds, without recognizing the investment aspect. But now, this investment is starting to show results and Canadair is starting to show a profit as a result of this investment: yet, the Conservative Government wants to sell the company. Why now, Mr. Speaker? I would think that when the company starts making a profit, it would be a good time to keep it in the public sector so that Canadians can benefit from their own investment. Nevertheless, the Conservative Government has decided that it wants to pursue its privatization policy, and it wants an example where that policy is a success. And so it has decided to sell a company that is making a profit, a company that cost Canadians money in the past and that was attacked as a waste of public funding. This is their way of telling the public: When this company was in the public sector, it was a drain on the public purse, but once it is privatized, it will be a profitable concern.

That is how they are trying to sell the concept of privatization. Mr. Speaker, I know this approach is going to cost Canadians a great deal. Although the Canadian Government spent a lot on Canadair, Bombardier paid a very low price, less than the $2.2 billion Canadians have invested in this company.

Bombardier bought Canadair for only $120 million while Canadians had already invested $2.2 billion in the corporation. It is unfair, Mr. Speaker, nothing less than an outright gift from the Conservative Government to Bombardier, a private sector company.

I might point out as well that employment guarantees in this deal are worth little more than the paper which they were printed on. The agreement does include an employment guarantee, but it is not legally binding besides being full of major shortcomings. Here is a quotation to illustrate my point, Mr. Speaker:

• (1120)

[English]

"Bombardier is committed to maintaining existing levels of employment at Canadair subject to cyclical shifts and sound business practices". It goes on from there.

A Conservative asked me what was wrong with that. What is wrong is that it is not a real guarantee, it is only an acknowledgement that there will be jobs if the economy is buoyant and company operations are quite profitable. This is not a real employment guarantee.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government took an ideological approach in the case of Canadair. Canadair should have remained public property because it was beginning to turn a profit and Canadians should have been able to reap the benefits of their own investments.

I can tell you that the Bombardier deal to acquire Canadair raises other questions. The people of Manitoba would like to know whether the original agreement included the CF-18 contract. Is the Government prepared to table all documents concerning the Bombardier sales agreement just so we can know whether the Government made a commitment with respect to the CF-18 contract when it made the decision to sell Canadair to Bombardier? This is a very relevant question, Mr. Speaker, because we in Winnipeg have the feeling that we have been shortchanged through the CF-18 contract decision-making process. It does appear that the Government may have promised the contract to Bombardier in exchange for the company's commitment to buy Canadair. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the best way to get answers to these questions would be to have the Government release all data and documents with respect to this contract. If indeed the Government did strike such a deal with Bombardier concerning Canadair and the F-18 contract, then there was no way the government could have acted fairly with Winnipeg and the other companies which filed tenders for the contract. And I think that if the Government did not make such a commitment, it should have no trouble releasing this information.

I want to stress the employment issue, and I think it is important for the Government to have a better guarantee than the one it received from Bombardier about the jobs concerned, because there is no reason for selling the company at a time when it is making a profit, and especially if we consider that by selling the company, we will be jeopardizing people's jobs.

Canadians have invested a lot of money in this company for the purpose of preserving these jobs. After investing over $2 billion in a company to save these jobs, I think we need a better guarantee than the one the Government received.

Our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a promise about Canadair. He promised a super Crown corporation that would maintain Canadair in the public sector and help it develop a Canadian aerospace strategy. The sale of Canadair to Bombardier is a clear indication that the Conservative Government has broken a promise it made during the last federal election campaign.

I make this point because the Government has a reputation for breaking promises. People have lost confidence in this Government. People look at all the promises it has broken and think: When will we be able to believe what this Government tells us? With this sale, the Government is once again breaking promises it made during the last election campaign.

I think this Government will fall. Not just because of its poor decisions and errors of judgment, but also because it is projecting the image of a party that does not keep its promises.

An Hon. Member: That's not true.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member opposite said: That's not true. In that case, I hope the Hon. Member will take part in the debate and clarify the issue for us all. How could the Government promise during the last election campaign that we would have a super Crown corporation that would keep Canadair in the public sector, a promise, if you please—

Mr. Speaker, I want the Hon. Member to take part in this debate to clarify the issue. I want him to explain how the Government could promise it would take action to keep Canadair in the public sector as part of a super Crown corporation, and, when it came to power, break that promise, change its mind and sell Canadair to Bombardier?

I hope the Hon. Member can explain why this is not breaking a promise, because I think that one of the big problems facing this Government is that people have little confidence in its commitments and promises. I imagine the Hon. Member will rise as soon as I finish my speech.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that the sale of Canadair to Bombardier is a giveaway and a waste of public funds.

• (1130)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could straighten out the record. The Hon. Member will know that Canadair was bought by the Government of Canada at the insistence of the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the former Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, who wanted to expand and build jet aircraft as a result of conversations with the Lear people. He decided he was going to be a builder of planes and needed a plant so he paid $46 million for part of Canadair. The rest of Canadair was, of course, left with General Dynamics which even today continues to operate part of the plant. It has an arrangement whereby Canadair pays the salaries but the people are still part of the General Dynamics empire. The Hon. Member might want to know that it is building nuclear submarine parts.

The Government of Canada blew $2.2 billion on the famous Challenger experiment. Having said that, I wonder if the Hon. Member has looked at the evaluation done by Burns Fry who valued the company at $70 million? And could he tell us why he thought the sale of $120 million for cash, plus another $176 million in notes, shares and so on, which guarantees the continuous operation of Canadair for another 15 years at least, is a bad deal considering the evaluation of Burns Fry.

Mr. Hees: What does your legal counsel say?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I heard the intervention that I was consulting my legal counsel. I hope that means it is understood that when we respond we have considered what we have to say. I want to remind the Hon. Member that while Bombardier will pay the Government $120 million for Canadair, experts have valued the company at $300 million to $400 million. That is quite a contrast.

Mr. Blenkarn: Which experts?

Mr. McDermid: Name the experts?

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us the names of the experts?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member asked a question and the Hon. Member who has the floor is giving a reply. There seems to be some unsolicited questions coming from other Hon. Members. Since this is a time for comments and questions, perhaps other Hon. Members could wait their turn.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to briefly point out to the Hon. Member—and I hope he would acknowledge this—just why this is a such a sweet deal for Bombardier and why I have described the sale as a fire sale. Bombardier is paying $120 million for this company. That is less than the $300 million liquidation value of the company and less than the $224 million book value. At the same time Bombardier will receive $50 million in federal grants in January and another $30 million to come. There will be export financing of a non-specified amount. It has now the $1.7 billion defence contract. It has no financial obligation related to the debt of Canadair or its outstanding liabilities and it is going to receive the $20 million profits from 1985 and the $2.8 million profits from the first quarter of 1986. What I am pointing out to the Hon. Member is that it is receiving an awful lot for having paid $120 million and the equivalent of $20 million in royalty payments.

The Hon. Member described the Challenger in very negative terms. He should realize that Canadair will continue to sell the Challenger, that it is a success, and that it expects to be paying the Government royalties with regard to that aircraft.

Mr. McDermid: He did not speak negatively about it.

Mr. Riis: Yes, he did.

Mr. Keeper: It was hard to see his comment as positive.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by the NDP Member that there are very few Quebecers in this House this morning to oppose the sale of Canadair to Bombardier. That, to my mind, is a shameful comment to hear this morning, and I hope they will have the guts to tell Quebecers face to face that they opposed Canadair's sale to Bombarbier. To my amazement, but fortunately, he did not make that speech when our fellow-Quebecers were here in this House, because of course he would probably have been, if not lynched, at least booed down.

Second, this is a typical example of the NDP's peculiar sense of business. Since when do you sell a company when it is in the red? The time to sell a company is when it is hale and hearty. You cannot get good prices for a company when it is going under, when it is ready to bust. Of course, Bombardier was showing good signs. I would say our Minister showed a good sense of business when he sold the business to Bombardier, a Canadian corporation, while it was fit for sale. As you know, the time to buy is not when everyone else is buying. The time to buy is when everybody is selling. And I think that this French-Canadian company from Quebec did a risky thing when it bought that industry with all that was involved.

As I said, I have two comments to make. I would like the New Democratic Party to come to Quebec and tell people whether they oppose Canadair's sale to Bombardier. Second, I would like to know what business principle would require a business to be sold when it is on the verge of bankruptcy rather than when it is hale and hearty.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to mention to my hon. colleague that I have said that this sale is a gift to Bombardier. Why sell a public corporation to a private company at a price which is really lower? Why sell a public corporation when it has started to show a profit? Why sell such a corporation without strong jobs security clauses? Because the jobs security clauses in this agreement have no legal power. In this party, we are aware that the industry will be able to ensure employment.

I suggest it is as possible in the public sector as in the private sector. Is it necessary to give such a Christmas present to a private firm for this corporation to continue its operation in Montreal? No, Mr. Speaker. Canadair has already started to show a profit.

The second point raised by the Hon. Member had to do with the price. He said that when a company is not a profitable going concern it is not possible to sell it at a good price. Mr. Speaker, the right time would be now that the company is beginning to make a profit. That is the right time if you want to sell this kind of company and ask for a good price. The company may have lost money in the past, I agree, but then it was designing new projects and Canadian taxpayers invested their own money in the company. To simply give it away to some private sector friends is definitely not a good idea and the Government should have asked for a fair price.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if members of the New Democratic Party have had an opportunity to read the opinion of value put forward by Messrs. Peat Marwick dated April 16, 1985. I would like to read into the record the opinion which states in part:

—subject to the scope of our review and the major assumptions noted below, the net realizable value of Canadair Limited as at September 30, 1985 would be in the range of $(246,500,000) to $(376,200,000). Bracketed figures indicate a negative value or a net cost to wind down the operations.

The report goes on to state that the average would be somewhere in the range of minus $330 million, and that would be winding it up or liquidating the company.

Let us put the record straight. Let us understand that this company had a value as a going concern of $70 million. It was sold for $120 million cash, plus royalties of up to $176,000, perhaps netted out at $20 million on cash now for future considerations. It was a very good sale. Let us understand that and let us not give the House any more false figures.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have but one thing to say to my colleague. It is that, yes, we are aware of the background to this deal, and yes, it does have all the appearances of being a fire sale, a Christmas gift to the corporate friends of the Conservative Party in Montreal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: I would like to back that up by pointing out that Canadair became profitable a couple of—

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the allegations we have just heard are harmful to a business-oriented Montreal company which has always been thriving and whose management have never been identified with Conservative grass roots. So this is absolutely false.

Mr. Keeper: If it was not a gift, Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would explain why the Government sold a company like Canadair at a basement-bargain price.

[English]

I would like to respond to my friend, and I will do so briefly and to the point. The points are these. First, Canadair has become a profitable company, so why sell it for a low price? Second, Canadair is benefiting from numerous forms of assistance from the federal Government which I have outlined earlier. I ask to Hon. Members, why pay Bombardier to take Canadair off the hands of the public when it is now making a profit?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to a very interesting speech, and some always interesting interventions following the speech. I think all Members would agree that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) who gave his entire speech in French without the use of notes is to be congratulated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lanthier: It's your turn now.

Mr. Riis: It is always a pleasure to see Hon. Members who have studied hard demonstrate their proficiency in one of Canada's official languages. Others of us still have some work to do in that respect.

It is a pleasure to have this opportunity to say a few words about the Bill which is before us at second reading, Bill C-25, an Act that will result in the transfer of ownership of Canadair to the private corporation of Bombardier in the fine City of Montreal.

I wish to begin my comments by indicating, first, a fact about which I am not sure Members of the House are aware. There is a great deal of myth and fantasy, fact and fiction, which takes place in the House at times. But since the Progressive Conservatives came to power in September of 1984 there has been a move to change over by selling off a number of Crown corporations to the private sector, a move called privatization. The Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) was appointed. So presumably the assumption in the country is that since the Progressive Conservative Government has come into effect there must be less public ownership in the Canadian economy today than there was, particularly in the federal sector.

Statistically, it is interesting to note that today, in spite of a number of moves by the Government, including this latest one to privatize Canadair, there is now more federal public ownership than ever before in Canadian history as a result of Petro-Canada expanding into the service station industry. On the one hand there is a Government which as a result of its own initiatives has expanded the federal role in the economic sector of the country, particularly through the expansion of Petro-Canada, and on the other hand it is giving the impression or the illusion that it is reducing the amount of public ownership. I just want to put that fact on the table, so to speak, before we continue so that while we might be giving impressions in the House of Commons today the facts will speak for themselves.

I wish to indicate that we New Democrats oppose this legislation for a number of reasons. I will comment on only three of them this morning. The first is that when one looks carefully at what is going on it seems that what we are discussing today is a role toward privatization in the absence of any clear program, plan or strategy for privatization. When we have 233 provincial Crown corporations in existence and 464 federal Crown corporations I do not think there is anyone who would say that we must automatically expand those numbers. In fact, no one would say that an evaluative process over time probably makes a great deal of sense in terms of ensuring that these corporations under public ownership make sense, that they continue to fulfil the roles for which they were intended. Just to make it perfectly clear, we have no opposition to the consideration of the role of various public Crown corporations. To blindly flail ahead and privatize for the sake of privatization, or for the sake of appeasing some radical right wing fanatical back-benchers in the Conservative Party, does not make any sense.

A few years ago Canadians were given an impression. When Ministers of the Crown or when political leaders in the Progressive Conservative ranks make certain comments people assume that they are telling the truth. I recall a statement made on August 27, 1984 by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who is the present Minister of Finance. He said the following regarding the Canadian aerospace industry:

> As taxpayers we have a large investment in Canadair and de Havilland. Our objective is to get our money's worth for this investment, in terms of employment, sales and development.
> We will set up a separate Crown corporation for Canadair and de Havilland with a mandate for the development of the aerospace industry and not merely financial control. This organization will be responsible for developing in conjunction with the aerospace strategy so that Canadair and de Havilland will become commercially viable and will continue to be so into the next century.
> We will increase aerospace expertise in this new corporation so that the management are not merely bureaucratic financial wizards but people with hands-on experience and a thorough knowledge of the aerospace market.

I recall hearing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) making that statement. It seemed to me at the time that he was making a commitment to Parliament and the people of Canada that the Government planned to continue on with the public ownership of both Canadair and de Havilland. However, such is not the case. Now in 1986, a completely different approach is being taken.

Looking closely at the situation, I believe it was after the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion took over the responsibility of the concept of privatization that he, motivated by his extreme political, financial and economic right-wing views, decided to proceed in the manner in which the Government is proceeding today. I do not think it was the original intent of the Government to move in this direction but, as on a number of other occasions, it appears to have changed its mind. The Government simply decided to expand its privatization initiatives simply for the sake of privatization.

Government Members are doing this so they can say to their more radical, extremist supporters, look what we have done, we have now privatized X, Y and Z public corporations. Look at the wonderful job we have done. This is being said, keeping in mind that we have more public ownership in the federal sector today than there has ever been. Again, I see this Bill as being a political, extremist tool.

A second reason that we will oppose Bill C-25 is that as far as we can make out this is not a sound financial decision. If all Members of the House were to identify sectors of the Canadian economy in which there will inevitably be growth, development, progress, job creation and the development of expertise in the future, there is no question that the aerospace industry would be one of them.

Because you are a student of Canadian politics and history, I know you, Mr. Speaker, would recall the Avro Arrow fiasco. This occurred at another time in history when Canada was just on the edge of developing into a world-scale player in the aerospace industry. The Progressive Conservative Government of the day said that it had a better idea. It wanted to scrap the Avro-Arrow plan. In a sense, it wanted to torpedo any effort on the part of Canada to develop in the aerospace industry. Perhaps "torpedo" is the wrong word to use in that sentence. Nevertheless, the reality is that the Government of the day made an interventionist decision that set back the development of Canada's aerospace industry for decades.

Just in the last number of months we were beginning once again to build up this leading technology. Canadians are being recognized around the world as being significant and major players in this very critical field of the future. What is the Government doing now? It is backing out of the commitment it made to the people of Canada through the present Minister of Finance back on August 27, 1984, to continue playing some role in the development of this technology.

For a Government to play some role in the development of the aerospace industry is nothing new. As a matter of fact, every single country around the world that is developing an aerospace industry, with the exception of one, is doing so in co-operation with the Government of that particular country. The one exception is the United States of America. West Germany, France and Great Britain all have major public-sector involvement in the development of the aerospace industry. However, the United States does not. Of course, the reason for that is obvious. The tremendous power of the military budget and the role of the Pentagon essentially drives the aerospace industry through incredibly vast, financially viable defence contracts. There is no need for the Government to play a participatory role. It simply buys such a significant number of aircraft of all sorts and descriptions as well as parts and technology that the need is not there.

The point I want to make is that the role of a Government as a partner and co-operative player in the development of aerospace technologies is something that is found everywhere. Canada does not have to feel that it is out of step. As a matter of fact, it is now moving out of step by removing itself through the selling off of Canadair.

Back in May of 1985, I read the Budget Papers with interest. Under the heading of Rationalization and Privatization of Crown Corporations and Other Federal Investments, a number of points are listed. Point No. 4 at page 26 says the following:

> Crown corporations will not be sold at distress prices merely to transfer them quickly to the private sector.
> A large deficit and normal fiscal prudence dictate that the privatization program should proceed at a measured pace with careful consideration of all the issues, not the least of which is the receipt of a fair and reasonable price for each asset.

That was contained in the Budget Papers of May 1985 which my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), has now committed to memory.

Let us take a look at Canadair itself and just what it is we are talking about at this stage of the progress of this Bill. The history of Canadair takes us back to 1944 and the development of our aircraft industry. It is useful to note that since then we have constructed in excess of 4,000 aircraft including 600 jets. By all accounts, world over, Canadian participation in the aerospace industry is recognized as positive participation. We have been a world leader in a number of technologies and continue to be one.

In 1976 one of General Dynamics' components ran into some very serious financial difficulty and planned to abandon its plant. The Government of the day thought that rather than abandoning the plant and the technology and, perhaps more importantly, all of the people who worked in that sector of General Dynamics, they would purchase it for the best interests of the development of the Canadian aerospace industry. Indeed, the Government did purchase it to the tune of something like $48 million back in 1976.

Canadair is now recognized as being the number one player in the aerospace industry and its most recent success has been the development of the Challenger executive jet. Personally, I have some concerns about our initiative in that area but, nevertheless, it is a high quality piece of machinery and one of which we should at least feel proud in terms of technological development.

It is important that this occurred at a time when the aerospace industry was experiencing difficulty around the world. Let us face it, there was a good deal of mismanagement going on. I do not suppose it would be easy to prove that, but I think all of us in this room have been briefed by a number of players who have recognized that there was a great deal of mismanagement and some very serious problems with the handling of the affairs of Canadair. This caused a great deal of financial difficulty so the Government and taxpayers of Canada were asked to assist through a variety of measures. A great deal of money, in excess of $2 billion, was spent over a number of years to develop front-end technology, the expensive part of investing in research and development through to production. We are now at the production stage, having spent all of that time, expertise and research. Quite frankly, now seems like an odd time to be selling after making that tremendous public investment.

Today we are talking about the four plants in Montreal, three at Ville St-Laurent and one at Dorval, employing in excess of 4,500 employees. It is very important that Canadair remain a viable industry, not only for the City of Montreal or the Province of Quebec but indeed for the future of Canada and Canadian industry.

Why privatization? Why are we selling this off? Over the years the Government has invested a tremendous amount of money preparing the stage and laying the foundation for what is becoming a world leader in the aerospace industry. Various sources place its book value from $75 million to $400 million in terms of the actual value of the company. These are difficult times to place a value, because we are trying to evaluate how the company will perform in the future.

Bombardier has received an early Christmas gift considering that all it has to pay is $120 million. Bombardier is receiving a lot for that money. On December 2, 1986 my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was referring in the House to a condition incorporated into the letter of intent which involved the maintenance contract for the CF-18 going to Canadair as opposed to Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg, and he stated:

> —the transfer of the CF-18 systems technology would cause Canada to pay Crown royalties equal to 1 per cent of Canada's share of the program revenue.

He went on to say:

> —that quite clearly in the bargaining and negotiations the Conservative Government had decided to provide the CF-18 work as one condition of the sale in order to get cash flow into Canadair sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Bombardier.

In other words, there was at least the suggestion that there was all sorts of wheeling and dealing prior to the finalization of that decision to provide the CF-18 maintenance contract to Canadair. We see now that this was all done thinking ahead as a way to sweeten the deal, so it could be made more attractive to Bombardier, so that they would purchase it.

An Hon. Member: No proof.

Mr. Riis: As my hon. friend opposite has said, there is no proof. Certainly, all of the allegations certainly point in that direction.

Mr. Lewis: All of the allegations point in that direction; what a statement that is.

Mr. Riis: Again, we have always wondered what it was that caused the Government to change the rules of the game half way through. Now, I guess, we have found out. We find that it was all part of the deal to privatize Canadair and it required the maintenance contract, which I might add was worth nearly $1.5 billion over a number of years. This is a pretty attractive piece of icing on the cake that was delivered to Bombardier.

In closing, I wish to say when we talk about privatization, let us all recall that Liberal governments, Progressive Conservative governments, P.Q. governments, Social Credit governments and New Democratic Party governments have all found it appropriate to create Crown corporations at one time or another. The Conservatives created the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian National Railway, Ontario Hydro, Alberta Telephone, Pacific Western Airlines, Manitoba Telephone, B.C. Hydro and B.C. Rail. I could go on and on, Madam Speaker. Nearly 250 of them could be listed where various provincial governments decided that it was appropriate and in the best interest of their region, or of that industry, or of that public utility.

Mr. Cassidy: I thought they were opposed to public ownership.

Mr. Riis: Most of these were done under the rule of Conservative governments. In closing, let us remember that, while there seems to be a commitment to privatize for the sake of privatization, we have to ask, is this good for Canada? No, it is not. Is it a good deal for Bombardier? Yes, it is. Is it an appropriate step that the Government should be taking? No, it is not.

Also, in conclusion, Madam Speaker, we must recognize that today as a result of Progressive Conservative policies under the Mulroney Government we now have more federal public ownership than ever before in Canadian history.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I was wondering if the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, and their former finance critic who spoke eloquently in the past about the horrors of this particular Canadair corporation when we were spending well over $2 billion financing an expensive and ill-conceived aircraft program, could tell me where he gets his valuation of $400 million. The valuation we have as a going concern to wind up the company was negative $330 million. We would like to know where the valuation of $400 million comes from.

Mr. Riis: I will respond to that in a moment. I wish to respond, however, by asking the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) whether he is aware of the facts that I laid on the table earlier, that under his Government there is now more of our economy in Canada under federal public ownership than ever before, and if this does not fly in the face of many of the comments that he has made over the years?

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Riis: It is the time for questions and comments. I am asking a question as well as making a comment. I do not think that there is any rule that says one cannot ask a question of my hon. friend.

To be fair, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. Therefore, he is eligible for questioning. Therefore, under the Standing Orders, he is not a person who is not eligible to receive questions. I will begin with that I also wish to remind the Hon. Member that in my speech I went on at some length about the fact that there was a great deal of mismanagement at the senior levels in Canadair. We are all aware that that was very costly to the taxpayers of Canada. I was a critic at the time, and I continue to be, of what that poor management had cost.

I wish to remind my hon. friend that while at times this Crown corporation has had disastrous management in terms of its decisions, think of Dome Petroleum, think of Maislin, think of Massey-Ferguson, think of hundreds and hundreds of private sector corporations like Northland Bank, Canadian Commercial Bank, and so on, that made decisions that were unbelievably stupid. They made silly, unbusinesslike, unprofessional decisions. When we talk about mismanagement or making imprudent decisions, this is not restricted to the public sector. We can certainly list many more private sector corporations that are equally guilty of having misread the climate of the time, for example, assuming that oil prices would reach certain levels when, in fact, they did not, and made all sorts of misjudgments. If we are going to be spreading some of the blame around in terms of management leadership, let us recognize that it is to be spread around through both private and public sectors.

An Hon. Member: You did not answer the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is exactly what I was going to do, Madam Speaker, is ask the Hon. Member about the $400 million valuation that the New Democratic Party has in mind. While we are looking at valuations, may I point out that Burns Fry did a current value of the company for us. They came up with a value of possibly $70 million. But we were able to negotiate a transaction where the buyer pays $120 million cash on closing; $173 million in royalties on further sales of Challenger aircraft; $150 million if the company does not stay in business for up to 15 years by virtue of certain shares in Bombardier Aerospace; an additional $3 million in dividends as a result of the proceeds of a lawsuit with Avco Lycoming; and 1 per cent of the royalties under the CF-18 systems engineering contract, which, if the contract is worth $1.5 billion, that amounts to another $15 million.

Now I am wondering where they came up with this $400 million valuation. It seems to me that the Government's deal is far better than any other appraisal, and far better than any other offer. The offers were analysed. How could he possibly indicate a price of $400 million? If the Hon. Member has that price, will he table it with the House? Will he tell us who arrived at that figure? Who gave us the evaluation of $400 million?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to indicate formally to the House the source of that $300 million to $400 million evaluation. It was provided to us by our esteemed critic of the industrial sector, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: To be fair—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): What is his source?

Mr. Riis: —when the actual source is identified, we will table it in the House of Commons.

However, I remind the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that he forgot to answer my questions. Because of the involvement and interventions of the Progressive Conservative Party in the market-place, the result has been more public ownership than ever before in Canadian history. I am referring to the takeover of Gulf by Petro-Canada, of some 800 service stations. Consequently, what we are talking about here are really nickels and dimes; we are talking about a little nickel and dime privatization here and a little nickel and dime privatization there. In the meantime they are quietly expanding their activities in the private sector.

Mr. Waddell: $866 million.

Mr. Riis: I hear my hon. friend. Let us keep this in perspective. The Government may be commenting upon its wonderful plans and upon privatizing players which are minor in many respects, relative to the giant, Petro-Canada. However, I wonder whether the Hon. Member would have some comments about the facts which were laid upon the table today.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I am quite prepared to answer questions in the question period of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs if my friend wants to ask me some; I would be delighted to do that. I am pleased he is so interested in seeing Petro-Canada privatized. If this is only a nickel and dime Bill—

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let me continue; you will have your opportunity.

Mr. Riis: I just want to make it absolutely and perfectly clear, so that my hon. friend does not get carried away with the enthusiasm of his bombast, that at no point did I suggest that the leading oil producer in Canada, Petro-Canada, should be privatized. That was certainly never my intention.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member knows very well that that is not a point of order but a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, it is interesting that the New Democratic Party thinks this is only a nickel and dime Bill. If that is so, the NDP ought to let it go through.

If it were really the privatization Bill about which the NDP is concerned, that is the privatization of a totally integrated oil company, it would perhaps see more privatization by the Hon. Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall).

In view of the fact that it is only a nickel and dime Bill, will the Hon. Member tell the House why he is opposing the sale of a company in an amount which is far more than the appraisals and on terms considered by everyone to be excellent? The sale will be to a solid, Quebec-based manufacturing corporation, so that the corporation can widen its abilities and put Canada squarely on the aerospace map where it should be. Why is he opposed to it? Why is his Party opposed to a solid Quebec company, Bombardier, buying this company, even though it is paying far more than the estimated value as determined by Toronto estimators?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, this provides me with an opportunity to clarify our use of the figures. On April 16, 1985 the firm of Peat Marwick advised the Minister responsible for privatization that the value would be in the range of $330 million.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is negative, my boy, and I have the letter right here.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): That is a negative figure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I cannot even hear the Hon. Member. How can I rule on whether or not he has a point of order?

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, when we quote in the House from documents prepared by others it is essential as a matter of order that the documents be quoted accurately. That being a point of order, I indicate to the House that I referred earlier to the letter of Peat Marwick and now my friend is referring to it. It shows the figures in brackets. That being so, and as was pointed out in the letter, it is a negative $330 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for that information. I think it is time to resume debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I want to speak on the Bill because it raises fundamental issues, partly concerning philosophy and ideology, but also concerning the commitments of political Parties in Canada in the course of trying to be elected to Government.

In his statement of August 27, 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that as taxpayers we had a large investment in Canadair and de Havilland. He also indicated that the objective was to get our money's worth for this investment in terms of employment, sales, and development. That statement is true, and we agree with its objective.

Canadians have massive investments, through their Government and through the tax system, in a host of enterprises. That has been the case for decades. However, it is very difficult for Governments to run something in which they do not believe or to keep something in their possession which they do not want. That has been true of Liberal and Conservative Governments since the 1860s. They did not become involved in Crown corporations because they believed in them. They did not take over industries or put taxpayers' money into public enterprises because they thought it was the proper thing to do. In almost every instance investments of taxpayers' money since the 1860s were made because the private sector failed or refused to carry out essential public services and fulfil national goals.

The Conservative mythology, a mythology peddled by both the Liberal and Conservative Parties, is that it can be left to the private sector, to free and open market forces, to do this. They believe that Government should get out of the private sector, that it should play a minimal or no role at all. However, experience over the decades has shown that the first to run to the Government of Canada with its hands out is the private sector which failed. We have a 120-year history of bailing out the private sector. A former honoured and respected Member of the House was perfectly right when he spoke in 1972 and 1974 about corporate welfare bums. We paid for the CPR and do not own it. We created CN out of five bankrupt railroads. The taxpayers made an initial investment of over $1 billion in the early 1920s. That was quite a bit of money then. Over the next several decades the bond holders and shareholders got their money back. They were safe. The taxpayers paid and paid and paid.

When CN finally turns things around and starts making money, and while I am only guessing I think I am close when I say that over the last few years CN has paid around $40 million or $50 million in dividends to the shareholder, namely the taxpayer of Canada, that shareholder is just as much entitled to a return on that investment as you or I or any other person who invested in the stock or bond markets. However, for some reason or other, when the taxpayer invests through his Government he is not supposed to get a reasonable return on that investment. He is only supposed to get stuck. If it is a private investor in a bank, for instance, we have to look after them when the bank goes belly up. If it is the aircraft industry that fails, it is the taxpayer who bails the private investor out; some $48 million initially to take over Canadair. I forget what it cost to take over de Havilland. Why did we do this? There were two laudable objectives to preserve jobs and retain research and development already in place. However, I submit that those objectives took second and third place to the objective of bailing out private corporations at the taxpayers' expense.

Every time public funds are put into these kinds of enterprises the taxpayer must retain equity ownership. I make the same argument now as I did when we were dealing with the Western Grain Transportation Act. When the Government of Canada puts up $650 million a year, divided roughly evenly between Canadian Pacific and Canadian National, we maintain, then and now, that what CN gets increases the equity of the people of Canada in CN by that amount. For the amount of money given to CP the people of Canada should receive common voting shares in CP. Do not just hand them the money and let them do what they darn well please with it.

However, even where we have billions invested there is little or no concern about the right of the taxpayers collectively to have the opportunity to get a return on that investment. Instead, those investments are looked upon as Government interfering with the private sector—whether it be was the private sector that failed and came to Ottawa on its hands and knees begging to be bailed out, whether it is the aircraft industry or the financial institutions, or a host of other kinds of operations in which the private sector had been bailed out time after time after time. In this instance the taxpayer gets to keep the $1.2 billion of long-term debt owed by Canadair. I thought normal business practice was that when you took over a company you took over the assets, the goodwill and the accounts receivable, but you also take over the accounts payable. Not in this case. That is strange. If that is not a double standard I have never seen one.

The same thing has applied in other instances. We relieved CN of billions in debt and it was only in the last refinancing that we took increased equity ownership. In the decades prior to that the debt was removed from CN and placed on the books of Canada.

About the same time as the CDIC started the bidding process for Canadair the Government of Canada all of a sudden fattens up Canadair. The company was fattened up with $31 million in immediate financial assistance, plus $20 million for a joint venture with West Germany, plus an unspecified amount of export financing which is still to come. As I read it, we have already put up $51 million, and you can knock that off the $120 million Canadair is supposed to pay the people of Canada.

I want to say something about my one experience with Bombardier. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the former Government, Mr. Lumley, made it a practice that when he made a trip he would take one or more Members of Parliament with him, from opposition Parties as well as the government Party. He took me with him on a trip to six countries in 11 days in East Africa. He closed some $80 million or $90 million worth of contracts with different Governments. When we were in Nairobi he asked me if I would have a look at their railway operations. The government people there were very good. They escorted me and two or three others through the fully-modernized railway shops. They had the latest technology and equipment supplied by West Germany and Sweden. There were 15 locomotives there which had been built in Canada. Immediately one feels good about that. However, at that point in time, February of 1982, 12 of those locomotives were on the ground. They had been bought from Bombardier 10 years earlier. The main generator of each locomotive, made by Canadian General Electric, did not work. All the welding around the fuel tank, which is also the walkway around the locomotive, had cracked. For the information of my colleagues who are not acquainted too well with locomotives, the Bogie is the cast iron framework which holds the wheels of a locomotive on. The Bogies were made by Algoma Steel. They cracked. At that point none of those three companies, not a damn one of them, had paid a nickel under warranty or fixed the problems. That country cannibalized three of the 15 locomotives and used the parts to get the other 12 running. It was the most embarrassing experience.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Whose fault was that? CIDA? Who was responsible for maintenance?

Mr. Benjamin: Bombardier was the manufacturer of the locomotives. To this day I do not know whether that country has been properly recompensed for our default of a normal contractual obligation.

• (1230)

West Germany bought three Challenger jets which I understand have been grounded in West Germany since February because Canadair was unable to supply maintenance manuals properly translated into German. As a result, West Germany has withheld $60 million of payment for those Challenger jets. If that is true, why is it not shown as an account receivable on the books? If it is an account receivable, who will receive the money? If West Germany is finally satisfied with the translation of the highly technical maintenance manuals and pays the $60 million, who will receive the money? I hope the Government will answer that question if and when this Bill goes to committee.

I submit that those funds should go to the people of Canada as some compensation for the $1.2 billion of long-term debt imposed upon them. For your information, Madam Speaker, the people who wrote the maintenance manual for the Challenger jet are writing the maintenance manual for the CF-18. That should be checked out very carefully.

I would like to say a word about the general thrust of the Government's action in this instance, which is all part of its policy of privatization, deregulation and free trade. It will cost us dearly. One need only ask the folks in Sault Ste Marie and London, Ontario, who have lost their Air Canada services, what they think of deregulation. I predict that places such as Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, Sudbury, North Bay and Thunder Bay will not long receive the services of Air Canada or those of the other national airline. I suggest that Windsor, Ontario, is probably not very safe either. I suggest you ask the folks in Edmonton what they think of deregulation now that they no longer have any direct flights from Edmonton to Ottawa. Edmonton is only a little village of about 650,000 people. In addition to having to change aircraft, one may now also change airlines. So much for the privatization-deregulation thrust.

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be not now read a second a time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before beginning debate on this motion, what becomes of the period for questions and comments with respect to the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)? I would like to ask him a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will allow Hon. Members to ask questions or make comments on the speech of the Hon. Member. We will then begin debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, would the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) advise the House whether it is his opinion and that of the New Democratic Party that Bombardier is such an incompetent company that Canadair should not be sold to it? His remarks with respect to his tours of East Africa indicated that. Having made that connotation, could the Member tell us whether the New Democratic Party is opposed to the sale of Canadair to Bombardier because Bombardier is incompetent? Is that the view of the New Democratic Party or only of the Member who castigated Bombardier because of certain locomotives he saw on his travels around the world?

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member will recall, I told the House that I wished to relate my one experience with the products of Bombardier. I did not say it was a bad company or that it was badly managed. I believe it was bad in that particular case but, to be completely fair, it inherited some of its badness from M. L. Worthington Locomotive Works, CGE and Algoma Steel. However, that has nothing to do with the lack of viability of Bombardier. I think it is a viable company and it has manufactured many good products. I remember riding in the first snow vehicles made by Bombardier. They had a cab and were much bigger than the snowmobiles they presently make. I believe that Bombardier was one of the originators of that vehicle.

I am not for one minute saying that Bombardier is not a viable company and cannot be even more viable. Perhaps I was not clear enough in explaining that one reason for retaining some equity ownership when selling off a Crown corporation is to ensure that there is continuous good management and continued protection of the investment for which you are responsible on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada. The Government should retain some equity ownership in Canadair in order to ensure that Bombardier operates efficiently and competently. The Government is supposed to protect the interests of the investors for whom it is responsible, namely, the taxpayers.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend is correct, that the New Democratic Party would approve the Bill if we retained equity ownership, did he not know that we are in fact retaining equity ownership? Let me quote what it says with respect to shares:

> Series A-$100 million special shares to be issued by a company, to be incorporated under the name of Bombardier Aerospace, reflecting Bombardier's commitment to use the available working capital of Canadair for the future growth and development of Canadair; Canadair must pay full face value for these shares if the capital is used for other purposes

> Series B-$50 million special shares to be issued under the name Bombardier Aerospace to be offset by future incremental benefits to Canada of Canadair's operation under Bombardier ownership; if not earned out the face value will be paid to the Crown after 15 years.

Does the Member not realize that this is particularly the nature of this deal? That being the case, will he stand up and withdraw his motion that clearly is improper and suggest to his colleagues that they vote for the transaction?

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, of course that does not provide any significant control. How many people will the Government of Canada put on the board of directors? What say will the Government have in the management of the company? I would like to be here in 15 years to see what, if anything, is recovered on those shares. We will leave that for another day. That is one of many features that should be in the Bill. The deal is simply too easy and the amount is too low for what I believe to be its reasonable book value, its technology value or reasonable liquidation value. I believe that $120 million is far too low.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): What should it be?

Mr. Benjamin: I would put it somewhere between $300 million and $400 million if you took into account—

Mr. McDermid: That is a $100 million variance.

Mr. Benjamin: If one takes the net book value, estimated technology value or liquidation value, I believe the value is in that range. I believe that is what should be obtained for the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, when I rise again to speak in the debate I will deal with these figures which I believe have been bandied about inadvertently. There is a difference between the liquidation value and the technological book value of a company. I will invite Hon. Members to read the Canadair annual report. I suggest we should be careful in our reference to these figures.

However, I want to ask the Hon. Member about the principle that is involved because he is an old hand in the House and a veteran Member who has long been the transport critic for our Party. He is well respected by all sides of the House and by people throughout the country. The Hon. Member is especially knowledgeable in this area of deregulation. All Canadians are interested in this because the Government seems to have embarked on a path of deregulation. I ask the Hon. Member to compare deregulation with privatization, because this is the first time we have debated the new Conservative thrust of privatization in the House. We have seen deregulation in the United States and privatization in Britain. Are these approaches tied together and, if so, will he explain how? I look forward to his reply because the Hon. Member speaks in down-to-earth language which ordinary Canadians can understand.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I must disagree with my hon. colleague about one of his points. He used the word "old". I prefer to say "older".

I suppose this policy is part of an ideological package that has been put forward ever since the days of the proposition 13 syndrome that came out of California some 15 years ago and spread up to Canada like a swarm of grasshoppers. It is all part of the same package. If you are going to privatize a public corporation that is quite heavily regulated—and I am thinking of airlines in particular—it is necessary to give the private sector all the benefits possible to entice it to take over a public enterprise and put it in the private sector. The deal must be made as attractive as possible.

The airlines made it plain to the Transport Committee that if fares and revenues would be deregulated it would be necessary to deregulate the companies and relieve them of public regulations so that they could operate more freely in the so-called open market.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe you intend to recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He has already spoken in this debate and is not permitted to speak again, despite the motion which has been put. The motion dealt with Bill C-25. We are debating Bill C-22. The motion is void and cannot now be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We are debating Bill C-25. The Hon. Member has spoken on the main motion but we are now on an amendment. The Hon. Member can participate in debate on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I wondered why the Hon. Member was giving us all that trouble. He was on another Bill. I hate to think what the Hon. Member was attempting to dismantle or privatize. I am being unfair to the Hon. Member. He may have been talking about Canagrex and wheat, I do not know. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has a lot to contribute to this debate and is handy with the figures, although I am still not clear from which end of the Conservative dinosaur he is speaking, the mouth or the tail.

I would like to speak on the motion to hoist the Bill for six months. As critic for our Party, I have had a little pressure from requests that we get this Bill passed before Christmas. I hope we can get this matter addressed by some hon. members of the Conservative Party in the debate because, unless the Government changes its mind on this and other matters, it is not going to get the Bill passed by Christmas.

Hon. members of the New Democratic Party have a lot to say about this Bill. This is the first Bill which deals with privatization, an incredibly important topic that will heat up as a topic next year. It may be the topic for 1987. It is worth debating. I would also say to hon. members of the Liberal Party, come on, Liberals, get with it. Start participating in the House. You cannot just continually do your leadership things outside the House. Come and take part in the great issues facing Canada.

An Hon. Member: That is a commercial.

Mr. Waddell: No, it is not a commercial. If the Liberal Party is going to be a viable Party again it had better start participating in some of the issues and take a position. The Liberals are on both sides of the trade issue, the Cruise missile issue, NATO and all these other issues. They cannot just sit there like mugwumps, their mug on one side of the fence and their wump on the other and not take any position. At least the Conservative and the New Democratic Party take positions. In modern politics, the people want political Parties to take positions. The Liberal Party, to the extent it does not take any unified position, becomes an irrelevant Party. It is temporarily ahead in the Gallup polls but it will quickly disappear to third place. Look at what happened to the Liberal Party in Great Britain.

There is another reason the NDP wants to debate this Bill further, that is, we are concerned that there is not sufficient protection in the Bill for the ordinary working people in Quebec. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), gave a speech entirely in French without notes. He came to the House unilingual a few years ago. He talked from a national standpoint of trying to protect jobs in Quebec. The jobs statement reads:

Bombardier is committed to maintaining existing levels of employment at Canadair subject—

All working people worry when they read lawyers' clauses which start with the word "subject".

—to cyclical shifts and sound business practices,—

If it has some money problems it can fire the workers. With respect to sound business practices, it can say, we have to be more productive. We need less workers. Then, bang, the workers are out on their ears. It decides it has to contract out and get away from the union. Then, bang, the workers are out.

This is the kind of thing from which Canadian workers are suffering all over the country. A good example was the International Woodworkers of America strike in British Columbia, my home province, which, thank goodness, has just been settled. The reason for the strike, with the loss of $2 billion to the economy of British Columbia, was the fear that the contracting-out clause would in fact reduce union rights, and when union rights are reduced wages are dramatically lowered. Of course, that is what the employers want to do. That is why we are concerned about the phrase "sound business practices".

We have nothing against sound business practices and nothing against Canadair. We think Canadair is a very good Canadian Quebecois company. That is important. But we want to make sure the workers are protected. The workers also want to have sound business practices. They also want to be part of the enterprise. However, all too often the workers are left out of the compact, if you like, between employer and employee who are doing things for the good of each other and for both rather than for the good of one group, which is the trend in these Conservative times.

The statement continues that Bombardier:

—will pursue new programs and opportunities so that the level of employment at Canadair and its suppliers will increase.

We are in favour of that, but we worry about job security. We said in the debate, and I reiterate, that the reason we want the matter looked at in greater detail is that we think Canadair was fattened up prior to the final sale. At the very moment CDIC began the bidding process the Government approved $30.9 million in defence assistance for the production of CL-227 systems and another $20 million for Canadair's participation in a joint venture with West Germany on the CL-289. That is a total of $50 million. Canadair will be eligible for more defence money; $14 million to improve the CL-215 water bomber, $10 million for modifications to the Challenger and $5 million for new equipment, or approximately $30 million in grants which have not yet been announced but which we think will come. This is apart from an unspecified amount of export financing to come.

Canadair was given the $1.7 billion CF-18 jet fighter defence contract which is a guaranteed $50 million per year for 20 years. The Canadian taxpayers will have to assume Canadair's long-term $1.2 billion debt. They paid $120 million for the company.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) told us to look at the Peat Marwick figures, and it is minus $330 million, but that is based on the liquidation value of the company, if we are forced to liquidate it, with all of the future costs we have to assume. So the Hon. Member is right and he is wrong. He is right in the sense that those are the Peat Marwick figures, but he is wrong in the sense of the real value of the company. We need only to look at its annual reports. In fact, the technological value of the company alone is worth something in the order of $300 million.

We are throwing these figures back and forth across the House and we should not mislead each other. It is common sense that if one puts as much money as the Canadian Government has into technology, it is worth something. The company does have defence and aircraft technology. It has the Challenger jet technology. If I were the executive of Canadair years ago I would not have developed the Challenger jet. It was expensive and who needed to get into the market for wide-bodied executive jets. However, there was a lot of investment made and we should not just throw it away.

To review then, Bombardier is paying $120 million, less than what we say is the $300 million technological value of the company. It is receiving $50 million in federal grants in January with $30 million to come, unspecified export financing, a $1.7 billion defence contract, no financial obligation related to Canadair's debt or outstanding liabilities, plus profits of $20 million in 1985 and $2.8 million in the first quarter of 1986. That is not bad for what it is paying for the company.

We stick by the argument we made this morning, that this in fact is a distress sale or un cadeau as it was called by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Keeper), or a fire sale as another Hon. Member said.

I will continue my speech after lunch by talking about the philosophical problems with the Government's policy of privatization.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

FOOD BANKS—YORK WEST YOUNG LIBERALS' CHRISTMAS FOOD DRIVE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the arrival of the Christmas season traditionally enhances the warm feeling of giving and sharing within our respective communities across the country. In keeping with this holiday spirit the York West Young Liberals Club has launched its Christmas Food Drive 1986, a worthy project aimed at helping those less fortunate.

The increased number of food banks across our country is a disturbing reality of our times. All too many are forced to line up for their daily meals and rely on the generosity of their fellow Canadians. The gravity of this situation is further aggravated by the shortage of available foods. However, the people behind the food banks and welcome missions in Metropolitan Toronto are a reminder that our city is not an exception to caring for the plight of others.

Toward this end I ask and encourage fellow citizens of York West to contribute to the Christmas Food Drive 1986 and to donate what they can. In helping the needy, non-perishable goods can be given to the York West Young Liberals Club through my constituency office located at 2397 Finch Avenue West, or by calling my Toronto office at 743-3153.

The less fortunate members of our community do need help. I encourage and thank those who are willing to support and come to the assistance of those Canadians less fortunate than they are during this Christmas season.

SOVEREIGNTY

POLAR VOYAGE OF UNITED STATES SUBMARINES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the reluctance of the Government of Canada to give straight answers regarding the May voyage of three United States nuclear submarines to the North Pole is leading to a suspicion on the part of Canadians that their Government was unaware of these manoeuvres and is now trying to save face.

There is no security reason why the following questions cannot be answered. Did the submarines travel through Canadian waters? Did the United States advise Canada in advance of the manoeuvres and did it seek our permission? Is there an agreement with the United States concerning navigation by its warships in our territorial waters? Is Canada capable of detecting the presence of foreign submarines under our ice-covered waters?

The quicker these questions are answered the better we will know if our Government is serious about its commitment regarding Arctic sovereignty.

THE SABBATH

EMERGENCE OF SUNDAY SHOPPING PRACTICES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the current controversy over Sunday shopping raises several questions. For Christians, and for those who value our Christian traditions, the widespread acceptance of Sunday shopping signals the fact that we do indeed live, ironically, in both a thoroughly secular and a religiously plural society. This means that Sunday shopping cannot and should not be opposed on a narrow sabbatarian basis.

But most traditional religious practices are grounded in some profound insight about the nature and needs of human life, and this is certainly true of sabbath keeping. The whole notion of rest and of rhythm, and of the community's right and need to institute socially chosen rest times and, indeed, the very existence of public time, are at stake in this debate.

From a class perspective many shift workers who want to shop on Sunday are being played off against the shift workers in stores who want to rest on Sunday, while the only thing for sure is that owners, with the exception of some small business-people, will be able to stay at home on Sunday and worship their market share. To my mind Sunday shopping is one of the final victories of capitalism, of Mammon, and the idolatry of commodity fetishism.

Our Constitution states that we recognize the supremacy of God. If the Supreme Court rules in favour of Sunday shopping why don't we drop the pretense, and rewrite it to read "supremacy of the market-place"? And if it does so on the basis of the Charter, in the name of freedom of religion, God forgive those of us who voted for the Charter.

NEED FOR BETTER RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Walter Van de Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, rural mail delivery service in Canada cannot be curtailed. While many Canadians enjoy five-day-a-week door-to-door mail service, Canada Post gives rural residents two-day-a-week delivery. That is for the fortunate few. The rest have to pick up their mail. They are also saddled with an additional cost to rent boxes. When I am told that our postal service is fair and equitable, I say "Hogwash".

Last week in an Edmonton newspaper, John Bail, President of the Edmonton Local of the Canadian Union of Postal Employees, was quoted as saying: "By manipulating the Post Office, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is cutting hundreds of jobs, probably thousands". Instead of making irresponsible statements, my advice to Mr. Bail would be to give leadership to his membership. Motivate them to be productive, and instil pride in their work. I am firmly convinced that with a high degree of efficiency in the postal service, we can avoid postal service cuts and—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

STATUS OF WOMEN

DR. ROSALIE BERTELL—RECOGNITION OF WORK FOR HUMANITY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members of the House of Commons will be pleased to know that Dr. Rosalie Bertell is being honoured today in the Swedish Houses of Parliament with the Right Livelihood Award which is also known as the alternative Nobel Prize.

A scholar, a scientist, a member of the Order of Grey Nuns, an author, an activist, and currently Director of Research at the International Institute of Concern for Public Health, Sister Rosalie has devoted her energies and considerable abilities to working for humanity and against the escalation and development of nuclear weapons and nuclear power. In 1986, the International Year of Peace, it is especially fitting that the international community has chosen to honour Dr. Rosalie Bertell who has spent decades of her life in a dauntless and uncompromising crusade for truth and peace.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUPPORT FOR SALE OF CANADAIR

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, much has been said in recent weeks regarding the privatization of Canadair, Canada's leading airframe manufacturer. For purely political reasons members of the Opposition have been delaying the passage of Bill C-25 which would authorize the transfer of ownership of Canadair from CDIC to Bombardier Ltd., one of Quebec's most successful entrepreneurial societies.

Privatization with new managerial inputs and controls is good for the Government and the buyer. It is good for the Canadian aviation industry, and is particularly good for Montreal. It is good for the workers who are calling for support of the government Bill.

Union leaders, representing as they do the best interests of the workers, are saying the following. Norm Cherry, President of Local 712, has said: "The deal looks promising".

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Luc Bélanger who works for Canadair says: "This indicates that we are going to stay here." I too have confidence in Bombardier. The sale of Toronto's de Havilland has created 700 jobs so far. The best employment security is a prosperous company. Let us put a stop to such nonsense and get down to work!

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—CALL FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, today more than 100,000 Canadians live in co-operative housing. Co-operatives have been particularly important in integrating low-income families, disabled people, ethnic and racial minorities and others into communities where they feel comfortable and safe.

Co-operative housing has proven to be reasonably priced and of good quality. That is why I am so upset and my Party is so concerned about the fact that the Conservative Government has abandoned the promise it made in the 1984 election campaign and in this session's Throne Speech with respect to co-operative housing.

After a lengthy period of discussions and bargaining between the federal Government and the co-operative housing movement, the expectations that were raised have been shattered. While between 1981 and 1985 an average of 5,500 units of co-operative housing were financed, that figure will be only 3,200 this year.

The co-ops have done their job. They have negotiated innovative new means of financing with the federal Government. The problems have been delays and over-regulation by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and a lack of political will on the part of the Government. I call on the Government to honour its commitment to co-operative housing. The funding for this unique and important form of housing must be continued at a level that will ensure that Canadians of average incomes can truly have an alternative in housing, and live co-operatively in good communities.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

OFFICE SKILLS TRAINING—OFFERS OF PERMANENT JOBS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I attended graduation ceremonies for some 26 young women who have received computer and office skills training at the Overland Learning Centre in my riding as part of the Government's Canadian Jobs Strategy program. This is the first graduating class. Another class with 32 students is now under way.

You will be as delighted as I was, Mr. Speaker, to learn that 80 per cent of the graduates have permanent jobs, or job offers. The success of this program is a refreshing change from the failure of the former Liberal Government's national institutional training program, a program which cost taxpayers almost $1 billion, and trained the unemployed for jobs which already had a surplus of workers. Fortunately, the Progressive Conservative Government which was elected to make changes scrapped the old program and instituted the Canadian Jobs Strategy program, a program which does work.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

MAIL INCORRECTLY ADDRESSED TO MR. HOPKINS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, recently I received a very pleasant message from the office of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling). It was indeed a revelation because it was addressed to the Hon. L. Hopkins, M.P., Minister of State for Youth. While I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka for the confidence that he has displayed in me, I do wish to assure him and my many other friends on the government side of the House that I have not crossed the floor to join them.

I have never been the type of person who was willing to join a sinking ship with a captain who has no compass, no maps, no navigator, and hence no direction. I prefer to be on a ship with a smaller crew sailing through well charted waters, a Liberal ship whose captain is well qualified for the job. Our captain has a new compass called a mandate, which is only one week old, and a crew that is willing to take on any assignment. He is sailing through these turbulent waters under this Tory Government to a safe harbour called Victory '88, if you dare, or Victory '89, as you must

NATURAL RESOURCES

LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL—RECOMMENDED USAGE BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, western Canada's coal industry is in difficulty following attempts to sell larger quantities of coal in a depressed and increasingly competitive international market. The recent federal-provincial task force may have indicated a way for our coal producers to broaden their marketing opportunities. Using low sulphur western coal in place of high sulphur American coal would allow Ontario Hydro to meet future limits on acid gas emissions, without resorting to flue scrubbers. The drawback is that Ontario consumers will pay somewhat more for their electricity, a cost differential which could, however, be reduced by initiatives noted in the report.

I urge both levels of Government to investigate the potential for marketing more western Canadian coal in Ontario, as this can provide economic benefits to all Canadians at little or no extra cost to the electricity consumers.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

PAYMENT MADE TO FORMER BOND HOLDER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I may have discovered one of the many reasons that the Government of Canada has been unable to deal effectively with Canada's large deficit. It appears that the Government may be sending out volumes of Canada Savings Bonds interest cheques to people who are not eligible, or expecting them.

In October, 1985, Mr. William Fader of Chase, British Columbia, cashed in his Canada Savings Bonds, yet he received a cheque for $450 on November 1, 1986. How many other cheques of this nature have been sent to Canadians more than a year after they cashed in their Canada Savings Bonds? Is the Government sending out cheques for hundreds of dollars to surprise Canadians, such as Mr. Fader, as special Christmas presents, or has the Government blown it and once again demonstrated its fiscal incompetence and its inability to deal with important financial issues facing Canada?

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

LOCATION OF AIR TRAINING BASE—CLAIM ADVANCED ON BEHALF OF LABRADOR

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, NATO will be making a decision within the next few weeks as to whom to award a new $500 million air training base. There are only two nations, Canada and Turkey, that are competing for this facility. Canada must continue to lobby hard for the base to be awarded to Labrador, since it will provide this area with badly needed economic stimulation. This base will provide for more than 500 permanent jobs, and it will inject enormous amounts of capital into the local economy.

Since all aircraft will be requiring service, and today's aircraft require highly skilled technical personnel, the potential technological spinoff to Canada and the local community will be of benefit in enticing high technology industry around the proposed base. Goose Bay could also provide NATO with a more secure location.

The Government of Canada, Members of Parliament, and our ambassadors should continue to use every means at their disposal to secure the base, for it will help an area of the nation which needs economic stimulation, and will provide security for our NATO allies.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

REFURBISHING MINISTERS' OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, once again Ministers of the Tory Government are abusing taxpayers with their excessive spending in refurbishing their offices following the last ministerial shuffle.

Most of us did not know that a cabinet shuffle meant a boondoggle for movers. I wonder whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could justify to the House the expenditure of $33,000 so that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) could satisfy her fetish of having an office away from a junior Minister. Is that what the Prime Minister meant when he said: "Watch Pat Carney go"? Did he mean from Tower B to Tower A?

SOVEREIGNTY

BEAUFORT SEA—OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION LICENCES—REPORTED ACTION BY UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Apparently the American Government is proposing to issue licences for the exploration of oil and gas in the Canadian segment of the Beaufort Sea. What is our Government doing to object to the procedure? What steps is Canada taking to protect its sovereignty in those waters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for raising that question. Of course any questions relating to Canada's sovereignty are of great importance to every Member of the House. The CBC report was slightly misleading this morning in that it suggested that licences were in the process of being issued. In fact hearings are being held. This has happened before. When it happened before we protested, and we are protesting again. In the interim of course there has been, after some 16 long years of delay and neglect, the assertion by Canada of our sovereignty over our North.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will not accept the latter part of that answer. My predecessor, Pierre Trudeau, was very insistent on protection of that sovereignty.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT AUTHORIZED PRESENCE OF TWO NUCLEAR POWERED UNITED STATES SUBMARINES IN ARCTIC WATERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs admitted that nuclear powered United States submarines navigate through the Canadian waters of the Arctic Ocean, but both refused to say whether the Government had authorized their presence there. So again I am asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs: Had the Canadian Government authorized in advance the presence of these American submarines in our Arctic waters? Yes or no?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two matters to be dealt with here. One is the question of the record of the former Government. It was so insistent on Canada's claims to sovereignty in the Arctic that it refused to let those be judged by the International Court of Justice. That indicates an absolute lack of courage and lack of conviction in our claims, and that has been reversed by this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): With regard to the allegations respecting submarines in Canadian waters, that question was raised and responded to the other day in the House of Commons. As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, it would not be in anyone's interest, except for perhaps some of our adversaries, for us to be identifying with any precision the presence in our waters of United States ships of any kind. I have given guarantees in the House on Friday by which I stand.

CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he should quit using the national security argument as a way of ducking questions on national sovereignty. We do not want to know whether or not American submarines were in our waters. The issue is whether the Canadian Government is giving permission to those American submarines to be under our waters; that is the issue. What does the Minister know, and what permission has the Canadian Government given for those patrols under Canadian waters by American submarines?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is assuming there were patrols by U.S. submarines in the North.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is what you said.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There have been reports of submarines having come to the surface at the North Pole. He would know there are at least four routes by which they could have reached the North Pole, one Canadian and three American. I do not propose—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I do not propose to be drawn into a question which might lead us to indicate the presence of submarines of Canadian allies anywhere in the world where that indication might be to the benefit of countries hostile to Canada. I know full well—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Under our waters.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —the position taken by the Liberal Party at their convention. They decided they would adopt a nuclear weapons-free policy. The Leader shakes his head. That is what his Party did. It would take this country out of NATO. We do not propose to turn our backs on the obligation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

JOINT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION ON DEMILITARIZATION OF NORTHERN WATERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. He referred to the stand taken at the Liberal convention. I would like to ask him about a stand taken by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons with a majority of Conservative Members of Parliament on it. That committee clearly recommended demilitarization of Canada's northern waters. The Government rejected it. Why did the Government do so? The recommendation would provide Canada with the opportunity of securing its sovereignty in those waters so we would not have warships travelling through Canadian waters.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, demilitarization, like disarmament, in order to be effective requires at least two to play. You cannot have unilateral demilitarization just as you cannot have unilateral disarmament. I know the Liberal Party, under the guidance of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, has moved much closer to a position of advocating that Canada stand away from its obligation to defend freedom. That is not a position which this Party or this Government defends. I think if the Hon. Member would like to have a debate on that in this country he will find most Canadians believe we have an obligation to stand up and defend freedom and not simply talk about it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, any time the Minister wants to have a debate I will hire the hall and we will see what Canadians believe is the right way of defending freedom.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

USE OF CANADIAN WATERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary to the Secretary of State who said he is defending Canadian interests. Why will he not answer the question as to whether Canada has an agreement with the U.S. on the use of our waters by its warships? Do we have such an agreement? Does Canada permit or go along with those initiatives? Has this country the capacity to detect when its waters are being used, or do we simply rely on information from other countries? We expect answers from the Government, not the cheap rhetoric of the Minister.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does raise important questions. It is too bad he waited until he was in opposition to do so. He and his colleagues did nothing about them when they were the Government of Canada.

The situation with which we are faced is that there are arrangements in place which allow the Government of Canada to know about the presence in our waters of any submarine or other craft of friendly or, indeed, other powers. Those arrangements are being respected. I do not propose to divulge them in detail in the House of Commons.

It is also clear that we do not now have the capacity to assert our sovereignty in the North that we should have. That is because the former Government backed away from the need to build a Polar Class 8 ice-breaker, which this Government is now going to build.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The Prime Minister is quoted as saying this weekend: "The American lumber industry does not make decisions." Does the Government not understand the nature of the U.S. countervail system? Does it not realize that the U.S. lumber producers have to withdraw their petition and are using this leverage to increase the 15 per cent offer which we put on the table? They are the people in the no-lose situation as a result.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what selected quote the Hon. Member is using, so I cannot comment on that quote from the Prime Minister. However, we clearly understand how the U.S. trade laws on countervail affect us because the U.S. preliminary decision on lumber came down on October 16. The Hon. Member should know that there are only three solutions when faced with a countervail. The first is to pay it, the second is to seek to suspend it, and the third is to try to negotiate a solution. We are trying to negotiate a solution.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has in fact tried all three at different times.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS MANDATE TO INCREASE OFFER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Considering the American position, does the Government have a mandate from Messrs. Bourassa and Vander Zalm to offer more than 15 per cent?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been consistent and persistent in seeking every possible resolution to the American countervail action which we face against one of our biggest industries. We have sought every possible solution which would avoid a final determination that would affect our sovereignty and the right of the provinces to manage their own resources. We have been consistent and persistent in that.

The Hon. Member has repeatedly alleged that the Government is changing its position. I refer the Hon. Member again and again to the statement made in Vancouver as follows:

> The Canadian Government has proposed an agreement that would lead to a complete withdrawal of the countervail action by U.S. lumber producers. In return, Canadian governments would agree to take measures to offset the effect of a 15 per cent countervailing duty.
> Details of the Canadian measures will be disclosed following further consultations—

That is my answer, Mr. Speaker. I cannot and will not deviate from it.

CANADIAN OFFER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that there has been persistence, but there has not been consistency. Anything but!

Senator Bentsen, who supports the U.S. lumber producers, is coming tomorrow. Therefore, will the Government clearly confirm out front and up front that 15 per cent is the final offer, or is it going to leave Canada in a no-win position while American lumber producers are in a no-lose position?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only people who are putting Canada in a no-win position are members of the NDP who are consistently pressing for measures which would undermine our sovereignty and our ability to price and manage our natural resources under our own terms rather than those imposed by another country. I have already given my answer to this persistent question from the NDP and I do not intend to change my answer.

GOVERNMENT'S LEGAL ADVICE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Canadian Lumbermen's Association has said that the 15 per cent U.S. countervail on softwood lumber is excessive and beyond the economic capacity of the industry to pay. Why has the Government proclaimed its own 15 per cent solution when legal advisers to the Canadian industry were confident, one month before the U.S. Government decision was to come down, that we could have won that decision if the Government had not sabotaged our position by caving in?

• (1430)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an interesting point. The same legal advisers who were so confident of winning this decision were also confident of winning the preliminary decision which they lost. The same legal advisers who are so confident now sat in my office and asked the Government to negotiate on their behalf.

POSITION OF COUNCIL OF FOREST INDUSTRIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I turn to the Deputy Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: —because I want an answer. The Government says that it has a good working relationship with the private sector. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that Adam Zimmerman, President of the Council of Forest Industries, has said that the Government's willingness to negotiate this tariff is a wimpish position? Mike Apsey of the council has said that the Government's offer and its negotiation should be killed. Will the Government go back to its original position and stand with the industry to fight this matter right through the courts, because we can win? That is the position the Government ought to be taking.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Zimmerman speaks for his corporate interest. The Government speaks for the interest of all Canadians and a very important industry which employs Canadians from coast to coast, and which we are trying to protect.

Let me remind the Member once more that it was Adam Zimmerman and his Washington lawyers who sat in my office and asked us to negotiate. It was Adam Zimmerman and his Washington lawyers who sat in my office and accepted the 10 per cent proposal which we put forward. It was Adam Zimmerman and his industry which are currently faced with a 15 per cent countervailing duty at the border. We did not create this problem. We are trying to put forward a solution to deal with it.

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN CONTROL OF CANADIAN UTILITY COMPANY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does he believe that it is appropriate for a foreign company to own and control a Canadian utility involving both hydro-electric power and water rights, which would then effectively give foreigners control over a crucial western Canadian resource?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if a company wants to invest in Canada, there is a law on the books, Investment Canada is there. The criteria are well-known and I believe that in due time these institutions will respond directly to the question of the Hon. Member.

WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there is certainly nothing hypothetical about the question. The Minister will likely be aware that the West Kootenay Power and Light Co. is presently being purchased by the Kansas City based Utili Corp. United for $80 million and must now appear before Investment Canada. Does he believe it would be appropriate for him to say that the Government of Canada finds it totally inappropriate to approve a foreign company purchasing a water and electrical utility in Canada, which will be 100 per cent foreign controlled for the first time in Canadian history?

IRAN—ARREST OF CANADIAN ENGINEER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that last Wednesday a Canadian engineer by the name of Philip Engs was arrested by the Iranian Revolutionary Court. Nothing has been heard of him since. Will he advise the House whether or not the Government knows what the charges are against Mr. Engs and what steps it is taking to protect his interest?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Hon. Member for bringing that question to my attention and that of my officials over the weekend. We are seeking answers to precisely the questions that the Hon. Member raised. We do not have them yet. We are using every means available to us, both through the Danish Embassy which works on our behalf in Iran, and through other avenues. As soon as we have that information we will make it available to the Hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF ENERGY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns statements made by the United States Secretary of Energy, Mr. Herrington, with respect to the American commitment to the program that resulted from the envoy process on acid rain. Has the Government investigated Mr. Herrington's reference to a meeting of Canadian officials that led him to believe Canada would accept a smaller program? Has the Government made it absolutely clear to the United States that no scaled down version of the already inadequate program that came out of the envoy process will be acceptable?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment, who was at this meeting, replied publicly to this question by saying that the Government of Canada expected that the United States would keep to their commitments.

Second, the next day, Mr. Herrington himself told the American press that the quote which had been attributed to him did not correspond to what he had said at the press conference.

[English]

FUNDING OF CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources met with Mr. Herrington. Did he get commitments from the U.S. administration, through Mr. Herrington, that new money would be spent on clean coal technology, not money that was already spent and authorized by Congress prior to the envoy report? Has a commitment of new money been made, and when will we see it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have met with the Secretary of Energy. I have told him about the views of the Canadian Government in these matters, and I can assure the Hon. Member that, as far as the Canadian Minister is concerned, money is always money. There is no such thing as new money and old money.

EARLY RETIREES—CALCULATION OF PENSION AS INCOME

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We have re-examined the Minister's Friday statement with respect to the unemployment insurance cuts for pre-retirement pensioners. We find that it does absolutely nothing for those Canadians who were obliged or were pushed to take pre-retirement pensions but have not been able to find jobs. Since approximately 75,000 Canadians have paid into the unemployment insurance fund for many years and are still looking for work, why should they wait for a second job and a second lay-off to collect their legitimate unemployment insurance benefits? Even Forget recommended that that policy be withdrawn.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I trust that I did not understand the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce asking for implementation of the Forget Report. That is a first point.

Second—

An Hon. Member: Ha! Ha!

Mr. Bouchard: Ha! Ha! Mr. Speaker, we announced last Friday an allocation of $230 million for people who re-establish their eligibility for unemployment insurance with a second job.

We also clarified certain points regarding those who were apparently misinformed about the consequences of applying the rules retroactively to January 1, 1986.

I think that we have acted honestly to correct actual situations, and as for the principles, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie said that we have rejected the principles involved. We certainly did not; what we have done was to consider certain variables in the practical application of these principles.

Now I think that the situation has gone back to normal and that the Government will continue to examine specific cases—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as Canadians examine this policy they will find that the Minister has not solved the problem for thousands and thousands of Canadians who are bilked out of their unemployment insurance payments. How can the Minister justify income testing unemployment insurance with pensions when he does not do it with profits, rents, interest, and dividends? If it is not done for those things, why do it for pensions? How does he explain that?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is getting into the details of how the Unemployment Insurance regulations are applied.

What the Government has said, what the Minister of Finance said in 1984 and what I am still saying today is that we consider that anyone who applies for Unemployment Insurance must do so because he is temporarily without employment and not to gain a second source of income. This is the principle which applies now and it will continue to apply.

• (1440)

TREATMENT OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In light of the fact that last Friday the Prime Minister said: "There shall be no second-class citizens in this country as long as this Government remains in office, postal services or otherwise", and in light of the Minister's announcement last Friday with respect to his half-backtracking on pension as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, making a clear distinction between pensioners who live in Toronto who can get a second job, and pensioners who live in eastern Canada who cannot, will the Minister tell the House why he is creating this second-class citizenry?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Friday's announcement did not create second-class citizens, because those people who retired in Toronto and those who retired in St. John's will both have access to a second job, thereby taking up a second career, and will then become eligible to unemployment insurance.

The same principle applies across the land. There is no question in our view of this applying differently depending on where one lives in Canada.

REQUEST THAT BENEFITS BE PAID TO ALL RETIREES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well it is much easier to get that second job if one lives in southern Ontario than if one live in the other regions of Canada. Therefore, the person in Toronto will be able to requalify, according to the Minister's statement. Will the Minister now give a commitment? Don't go half way, go all the way and give all the retirees their U.I. benefits to which they are entitled.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the commitment I am willing to make is the same one that I and the Government have always made: it is to make sure that people in Canada who are temporarily unemployed and are on the labour market have access to unemployment insurance. That commitment the Government is ready to make at any time, anywhere.

LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL—PROMOTION OF USE IN ONTARIO

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In Ottawa today we have a delegation of United Mine workers and elected officials from British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan promoting the increased use of low sulpher western coal in Ontario. What is the federal Government doing to promote low sulpher western coal in Ontario as a solution to the acid rain problem in central and eastern Canada, as well as promoting Canadian jobs and economic development?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the report on the use of western coal in Ontario was made public on August 20, I believe. Clearly the Government supports the initiatives contained within that report. To that end, officials have been meeting with representatives and discussions have taken place with representatives of Ontario Hydro. I will be meeting with the mine workers, and I hope to meet later on this month with Premier Peterson.

We think this is an excellent initiative. It is good for the environment, for the economy, for western Canada, good for Ontario, and good for Canada.

HIGH QUALITY WHEAT—REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that Canadian wheat producers are facing the lowest prices since the 1930s. Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to make a commitment today to take the necessary steps to ensure that producers of No. 1 and No. 2 Red Spring wheat will receive the full final payment to which they are entitled for the 1985-86 crop year, as has been recommended to the Government by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, and other responsible farm groups in western Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government acknowledges the fact that grain producers are going through a difficult period, that their income is down, and is taking concrete steps to redress this situation. The fact is that while prices are down, support from the federal Government has increased by some 62 per cent over the last two years of the Liberal administration. I think that is a very good record.

As the Prime Minister has indicated, the details of the billion dollar farm aid package to the grain and oil seeds producers of Canada will be announced later on this week. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board are currently meeting with representatives of the total agricultural industry. I can assure the Hon Member that this Government will not leave the farmers in a difficult situation without our full support. In fact, I think the record will clearly show that no Government in the history of Canada has given more support to agriculture and the grain and oil seeds producers than this Government.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we are still facing the lowest grain prices since the Bennett Government of the 1930s. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that not making that full final payment on No. 1 and No. 2 Red Spring wheat will cost the western wheat growers some $200 million. In 1970 there was a special payment made for Durum. Why is the Minister reluctant to give a full commitment to make that final payment to western grain producers for the past crop year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the $1 billion package, the details of which will be announced later on this week, I think I can also indicate to the Hon. Member that there will be a deficit within the Canadian Wheat Pool account which will have to be met by the federal Treasury. That is an additional amount of money which will go directly to support the farmers.

Let me say that we are not only supporting the farmers in terms of improving their income, we are out selling and marketing. That is quite different from the Hon. Member's Leader who said to the farmers: "Go and sell your own wheat".

BLUEFIN TUNA—LICENSING OF JAPANESE VESSELS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In response to Premier Buchanan and some prominent Nova Scotia Tories, the Minister issued a licence which would grant two Japanese fishing vessels the right to catch 401 bluefin tuna off the coast of Nova Scotia, in return for which the Japanese would pay to Bayshore Tuna Limited, a company run by prominent Nova Scotia Tories, the sum of over $400,000. Can the Minister explain why he ignored the advice of his own Department, his own Atlantic regional council, and his own tuna advisory committee in authorizing this blatant giveaway?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): In fact, Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite simple.

Some Hon. Members: They are Tories.

Mr. Siddon: These tuna are international in nature.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: The Canadian share of these tuna has only been fished to the extent of 10 per cent of the quota. A group of fishermen and a company were near bankruptcy because the tuna did not come inshore so that company is being allowed to fish those tuna and to learn how the Japanese catch tuna on the high seas—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: —with a view to creating a new industry for Canadian fishermen and to keeping the dollars in Canadian hands and in the pockets of Canadian fishermen. That is why this initiative was approved.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I knew tuna went to schools but I did not know they carried visas.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: There is no question of learning from the Japanese. We do not have an offshore bluefin tuna fleet. It would cost $1.5 million to fund one of those vessels. The Minister has broken every principle of fisheries management.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is making a point with some vigour, but I would ask that he direct his question to the Minister.

CANADIAN RESOURCES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister to justify how he can give away the resources of the people of Canada just to bail out this Tory-owned company?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we do not have an offshore tuna industry in Canada because the previous Government never went to the trouble to encourage it and to provide those opportunities to Canadian fishermen by exploring alternative fisheries, which we are doing in this case. I take pride in doing that.

PATENT AMENDING LEGISLATION—UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who says that it is mischievous to suggest that there is any relationship between the new patent Bill and the free trade negotiations. Can the Minister deny that it has been the consistent position of the Americans, expressed by both the Senate Committee on Finance and the President of the United States, that a comprehensive free trade agreement will not be approved unless Canadian intellectual and patent laws conform to those of the United States? In fact, is Bill C-22 not a product of negotiations to that end?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with all the double negatives in the Hon. Member's question I do not know if I can give a single-word answer. The fact is that this matter has nothing to do with the free trade talks. What this has to do with is more medical research in Canada so that we have Canadian scientists looking for cures for cancer, Alzheimer's, cystic fibrosis and other diseases. I hope that we have done it in a way that will look after the interests of the Canadian consumer. Incidentally, it puts us in phase with the rest of the western industrialized world which respects patent rights.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is too much to demand that a question that is asked be answered, and not be given this falderal that there is some kind of guarantee that Canada will be the originator of a whole host of drugs for which there is no agreement in which these corporations will engage.

My question to the Minister is, again, quite simple. Would the Minister deny that, repeatedly, various American representatives up to and including the President of the United States have said that there will be no engagement in discussions over a comprehensive free trade treaty unless, among other things, the questions of lumber, oil, foreign investment, and patent law are addressed?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the preamble to the question, I have already announced $770 million worth of new research and development.

Mr. McCurdy: How about the question?

Mr. Andre: The answer is no—I believe it is no. I am not sure with all the double negatives that the Hon. Member has put in his question. The fact is that this has nothing to do with the trade talks. What this has to do with is the interests of Canada.

The Hon. Member has a vivid imagination—

Mr. Waddell: That's nonsense!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants.

FORGET COMMISSION REPORT—SITUATION OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is reality and supplementary to the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. It is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to whom I gave general notice of the question. I will not repeat the earlier questions.

Does the Hon. Minister not appreciate that the reason the Government is taking time to assess the Forget Commission Report is because there are so many opinions, and conflicting ones, whereas the one unanimous recommendation in the Forget Commission Report was with respect to the rescinding of the pension income regulation? It took the Government three years to come up with a realistic policy. With all the good intentions he expressed on Friday, he has created second-class veterans by giving moderate help to those who can obtain a second job and by not giving any help to those who need it most, those who cannot get a job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has incessantly answered over the last two weeks—or since the report was tabled—that implementation of a Forget Report recommendation in any form would have to be studied by the Government. In this specific matter of early retirees and pensions, we have considered independently . . . Mr. Forget made his recommendation. It was my intention that we provide a response very rapidly in a way that would take the whole issue into consideration.

The principle put forward by the Government in November 1984, that workers should apply for unemployment insurance benefits when they are unemployed has not changed. We did not create second-class citizens. We have simply been applying that principle, making adjustments wherever groups of people, including those who took up a second career, could be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

FISHERIES

OFFSHORE TUNA FISHERY POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns Tunagate, Take 2. Is it just a coincidence that the lawyer for Bayshore Tuna Ltd., Mr. John Grant, just happens to be the former President of the Nova Scotia Tories? Is this just not another case of patronage exploding in the face of the Government? If it is a new policy which the Minister was announcing a while ago in this House regarding offshore fishing, why is it that it is a Tory again who is the beneficiary of a new policy rather than the general public of Canada?

Mr. Ricard: Why not?

Mr. Boudria: Some Tories here ask why not.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadian fishermen are pleased that we have a Government which is pursuing new options to create an income and employment opportunity for them by harvesting fish that have been previously left in the water.

Mr. Riis: Name one.

Mr. Siddon: I would accept the same request from the Premier or the Government of any province to undertake to develop a new offshore fishery rather than let those fish swim out of Canadian waters uncaught. That is money in the pockets of fishermen.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it sounds as if we were given a blue option in this case. I have a feeling of déja vu with respect to this issue.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House why the Government once again has listened to a provincial Premier and a Conservative lobbyist, against the advice of its own officials? Lastly, will the Government tell us whether it is a national Conservative trait to put both feet in it whenever possible?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the Hon. Member that these are indeed bluefin tuna.

Mr. McDermid: Even the fish are Conservatives.

Mr. Siddon: That's right; and there are more of them, too.

The fact of the matter is that under the rules of the International Commission for the Conservation of Atlantic Tuna, Canada is given a quota. This year, by the end of the year, we will have fished only one-tenth of that quota because we do not have the offshore capacity to catch these fish. I make no apologies for having Canadian fishermen and our officials onboard Japanese vessels to find out how they are catching fish we cannot catch.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

GOVERNMENT'S PURCHASE OF MEAT FROM GAINERS INC.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Would the Minister not agree that by purchasing a large order of meat from Gainers Inc., Peter Pocklington's firm in Alberta, the federal Government is in fact taking the side of Gainers in a strike about which even the Premier of Alberta has said that Gainers is being unfair to its workers?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services is not in the House today. However, I think my hon. friend is asking me to reply, so I will do that. I do not know the particular answer. I do know that the Government has had a long experience—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If you don't know the answer, then sit down.

Mr. McInnes: I can only assume—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West.

AIRPORTS

FIRE-FIGHTING SERVICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have questions for the Minister of Transport. Last night, W5 reported fire-fighting services at airports as being dangerously inadequate. A year ago in June I asked the former Minister about the purchase of 75 new fire trucks. He told me that the funding had been reprofiled. We have 150 fewer fire-fighters at work today than we had then. What action is the Minister of Transport taking to put those fire-fighters back to work? Where are the 75 new trucks?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the trucks referred to are on order and under construction.

Mr. Benjamin: For the last three years?

Mr. Crosbie: Not for the last three years. There are 34, as I recall, under construction under one contract, and 34 under construction under another contract. They are rapid intervention vehicles. Six other all-terrain vehicles are under construction as well. That makes up the total.

• (1500)

There has been no change in the number of personnel employed in the crash-fire rescue service. I think there are something like 650 people employed in that service at 60 sites across the country. The service is costing the people of Canada around $40 million a year. There was a change made this summer with respect to overtime rules, and that aggravated or irritated some of the personnel concerned who were not getting as much overtime as they had been getting previously.

I would like to assure the hon. gentleman that I have looked into this carefully with personnel in the Department. I am satisfied that our service is adequate, and I would say even more than adequate when compared to the U.S., Australian or other crash-fire services.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICES PROVIDED FOR AIRCRAFT FLYING OVER ARCTIC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to ask the Minister what action the Ministry of Transport is taking to replace services being cancelled by the Department of National Defence for commercial aircraft transiting the Arctic. These services include course, speed, altitude and ground speed checks, and aviation weather information en route. What alternative organization will provide those services for commercial aircraft in northern Canada and across the Arctic?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice because this is the first time it has been brought to my attention. I can assure the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Benjamin: DND didn't tell you?

Mr. Crosbie: They have not told me personally. I would imagine, though, that if that has happened, our Department would be fully informed and there would be other services in its place. Just to reassure the hon. gentleman, I will have that looked into and get back to him.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

SECURITIES INDUSTRY OWNERSHIP—INQUIRY CONCERNING INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and concerns last week's announcement by the Ontario Government of its plans to open up ownership of the provincially regulated securities industry to other financial institutions. The Government, after two years of study, still has no policy on ownership and no new legislation on financial institutions.

Does the Minister not think that Canadians deserve better? Will he at least tell us the calendar year in which the Government will assume some leadership?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that that province made its intentions and aspirations known with regard to one element of financial institutions, that being the securities industry. We are now preparing a comprehensive approach to financial institutions. We will be bringing in that policy very, very shortly.

Right Hon. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-23 which concerns amendments to the Income Tax Act. Mr. Speaker, as you know, this Bill follows consultations that started before the Budget was brought down in February 1986 and continued subsequently, until tabling of the Notice of Ways and Means on October 31 of this year. Wide-ranging consultations were held with Canadian taxpayers, experts in the field and representatives from all sectors in this country. The proposed legislation which, as I said before, follows the February Budget, is in line with the philosophy outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his agenda for economic renewal.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, recall the four major challenges identified by the Minister of Finance at that time. First, we must control our budgetary deficit. Second, we must stimulate business by adopting policies that foster higher investment, greater innovations, increase international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise. Third, Madam Speaker, we must provide for greater efficiency in Government operations so that they become less of an obstacle to achievement in the private sector. Fourth, we must bring about these changes in a way that is fair, open, and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is characteristic of Canadian society.

Madam Speaker, I think Bill C-23 reflects these four challenges in a body of legislation that is of primary importance to all Canadians. This is a major Bill, although its concepts are not new. The House will recall that on May 23, 1985, the Minister of Finance tabled in the House a paper entitled: "The Corporate Income Tax System, A Direction for Change." After consultations were held, these changes were included in the February 1986 Budget. The result was that the corporate tax system was improved by abolishing the tax incentives enjoyed by certain companies and, at the same time, reducing the overall corporate tax rate. I believe that although we reduced the number of tax shelters, this was more than compensated for by the fact that we managed to reduce the corporate tax rate for all companies and corporations in Canada.

Indeed, Bill C-23 contains some important changes. Investment tax credits from 10 to 7 per cent will be gradually phased out by the end of 1988. The 3 per cent deduction with respect to inventory has been eliminated as of February 26, 1986. Corporate income tax rates will decline appreciably over the next three years. The small business tax rate will decrease from 15 to 13 per cent. The small manufacturing company tax rate will go down to 8 per cent. The tax rate of major corporations will be reduced from 36 to 33 per cent. Finally the major manufacturing company tax rate will be cut down to 26 per cent. All these changes reflect our desire to make the income tax legislation simpler as well as fairer to all Canadian taxpayers.

Another aspect of the same Budget which can be noted in Bill C-23 is that we want to give a better treatment to Canadian taxpayers. As you may recall, Madam Speaker, we introduced the minimum individual tax rate effective January 1 this year, a measure which was praised even by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Unfortunately, as usual the Liberals had nothing but criticism for this initiative. But it is an important step towards a fairer tax system for all Canadians.

Through Bill C-23 we will implement the new at-risk rules in the case of limited partnerships, as well as the rules governing the use of tax credit by trust companies so that Canadian investors will no longer be able to take undue advantage of the tax system and make much bigger profits than their investments would warrant in the first place.

Once again, the aim of this measure is to ensure fairness or tax justice.

I am sure all your constituents were glad to learn that the maximum RRSP deduction for 1986-87 would be going up from $5,500 to $7,500. You know as well that the annual ceiling will rise to $9,500 in 1988, and then by $2,000 each year up to $15,000. This faithfully reflects the approach of the Conservative Government which was elected in September 1984: Canadian men and women must have an opportunity to invest in their own retirement savings plans and look forward to financially worry-free retirement years, partly at the Government's expense, but also as a result of their own contributions.

Madam Speaker, again those are the major provisions of Bill C-23 and precisely because of them this measure must be adopted immediately. If Bill C-23 were to be put off for two or three months because of the Opposition, provisions due to be implemented in 1986 could not benefit Canadian taxpayers. I would find it difficult to understand why the Opposition would be critical of the fact that starting with 1986, Canadian men and women would be able to deduct higher contributions to their retirement savings plans.

And concerning senior citizens again, Bill C-23 does something more. It introduces a number of significant changes to Registered Retirement Income Funds, the RRIFs, which as you know were instituted but were not in tune with the needs of Canadian men and women.

We have also introduced significant changes in order that those funds may actually become a more useful instrument for withdrawing funds accumulated in an RRSP. The major changes, madam Speaker, are first, that the ceiling on annual payments from a RRIF will be eliminated. This will give an opportunity to people aged 65 and over who can benefit from their RRSPs and RRIFs to have higher annual amounts than as originally limited. The RRIF ceiling per person will be eliminated. This means that even after their retirement income has been registered, there could be more than one person participating.

Madam Speaker, those rules are designed to make the system more flexible and allow Canadian men and women greater discretion in their benefits.

Contributions to an RRIF could start at any time after it has been registered instead of only after the start of the following calendar year.

This would mean that where someone has not planned his or her retirement way ahead of time and wakes up a few years down the road saying: "I would like to draw funds from my RRSP and transfer them to my RRIF, and I need them for that year", he or she could do so with the new amendments. We are therefore trying to make the system more flexible, trying to make it fairer to everybody.

There is something else in Bill C-23, something new, something innovative, something for which Canadians elected a Conservative Government, namely a legislation that is new, innovative, good and fair. As you have guessed, it is the federal sales tax income credit under which every family with an income of $15,000 or less will be entitled to $50 per adult and $25 per child. And this, Madam Speaker, is a refundable income tax credit, which means a family could file its income tax return, and automatically, whether a federal income tax is due or not, it would receive a refundable income tax credit. If they have no taxes to pay, they will get a cheque. For instance, a family of two adults and two children will get a cheque for $150 to take into account the fact that the federal tax rate has gone up and that we do not want to penalize low-income families.

This is new in our tax laws, Madam Speaker. There has never been in Canada a tax credit for the federal sales tax. This is what Canadians want. They want something fair which fires the imagination, something new which meets the needs of Canadians.

I think that this is an excellent initiative, which is another reason why this Bill should be adopted by the House as soon as possible.

Speaking about the tax credit reminds me of Bill C-11 which provided for a reimbursable child tax credit of $300 to be paid in November. I am convinced that, in your constituency, all the families who received a $300 cheque for each child at the end of November were happy. They know that Christmas is coming. In my riding of Trois-Rivières, I have had many telephone calls from people thanking us for this good move. Madam Speaker, even though the Opposition criticized that Bill, we were able to adopt it and it has made low-income Canadians happy. Because of this initiative, this year, low-income families will have a bit more money to purchase winter clothing and for the coming holidays. Because of this, they will not be as likely to go to the tax discounters who keep 15, 20 or 25 per cent of the child tax credit to which these people are entitled and which they would otherwise have received in April. In the past, because they needed money sooner, they brought their tax returns and so on to the discounters in February.

We have solved this problem and made some people happy. This is what Canadians will remember.

Another proposal included in Bill C-23, Madam Speaker, concerns the $250 increase in the deduction for the handicapped. As Hon. Members will recall, representations were made by the vision and hearing impaired, and so on, and the Government listened to these representations. We listened to their associations when they asked for a small increase in the deduction for the handicapped. The deduction will increase by $250 for 1986 and will reach $2,860. This is another measure which meets the concerns and the needs of Canadian men and women.

There is another point which is somewhat more complex, Madam Speaker, but which I think should be mentioned. My friend, the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien), has a great many problems in this regard in his riding; I am referring to the new flow-through share provision concerning the mining industry which makes it possible for investors to buy flow-shares without being concerned about their responsibilities toward third parties in case of events occurring during the exploration or development stage. This is another major step showing a widening of exemptions in the case of the tax deduction which must be made in the mining industry, so that the people in the Abitibi riding and elsewhere may get what they need to encourage the economic development in their area.

There is also a widening of exemption in the case of tax deduction for non-residents, in order to make it possible for Canadian corporations to go to foreign financial markets and reduce their borrowing cost on international markets.

Finally, Madam Speaker, that is part of what we have been preaching for the past two years and is slowly becoming reality. Yesterday, in Montreal, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated in an excellent speech that Montreal was doing just fine. Montreal has been progressing rapidly over the past two years. This is thanks to the provincial Government, the municipal Government, but certainly not thanks to the opposition, Madam Speaker. Last week, he said the same thing in Toronto, and that is true, Madam Speaker; buildings have been going up like mushrooms both in Montreal and Toronto over the past two years. When people go to the Maritimes, they hear exactly the same thing. They hear out West that the economy is recovering and that the federal Government has made tremendous efforts to this day to achieve this. Things are progressing on all levels. Why? Because both on the domestic and international levels, Canada is taking the place it deserves. We have done away with the famous legislation which you know and we have replaced it with Investment Canada. This has done a lot of good. It has been important for Canada. A number of Hon. Members opposite, I see, are laughing, but they have to admit that it has been useful and that is what is needed in Canada.

As far as small- and medium-size businesses are concerned, Madam Speaker—I know how deeply you feel about that issue in your own riding just as I do in mine—we have abolished as of January 1, 1987, the 12.5 per cent tax on dividends paid by corporations. This means for shareholders the possibility to invest more, to receive dividends and do something else with them. This means that we are helping our small businesses progress and recover, giving them more incentive and helping them create more jobs both in Quebec and the rest of Canada. I think it is important to emphasize the contribution of small businesses in Canada. As you know, Madam Speaker, they are responsible for 70 per cent of all jobs created in this country. That is why in Bill C-23, introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we have taken this into account and shown our support for small businesses.

Madam Speaker, there are many other things which I could mention concerning Bill C-23, but what we should remember is that there are many important things which are provided for and implemented in 1986. I have named several. There also others. And Bill C-23 should be passed by this House as soon as possible so that it may be implemented in 1986 for the benefit of all Canadians before the holiday season. There are no bad provisions in Bill C-23, it is unfortunate but there are none.

An Hon. Member: You should read it before saying that.

Mr. Vincent: I read it. Read it over yourself. I will be pleased to answer your questions. These are fine measures. These measures will mean progress for the Canadian economy; they will deal with the different groups in our society whether they are large or small corporations, high income people who are now liable to a minimum tax, the handicapped, the superannuated. There are good things for every Canadian corporation and individual. In such a context, Madam Speaker, I ask the Members opposite to support and pass Bill C-23 as soon as possible.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, while I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-23, which contains hundreds of pages and will result in a major increase in the tax burden on Canadians, I am most unpleasantly surprised by the fact that the Government team did not see fit to explain, and assume political responsibility for, this government policy. This task was delegated to a parliamentary assistant who is no longer— who is not a Minister, although he might have been after the last cabinet shuffle, and he has been entrusted with the task to come before the House and explain this very significant piece of legislation. I am saying all this, Madam Speaker, because it seems to me that the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), who made the introductory speech, certainly did not give the proposed legislation complete and careful scrutiny, if we are to judge by what he has said today.

Madam Speaker, upon hearing the Hon. Member, especially towards the end of his speech, one had the impression that the purpose of this Bill was to hand out money to all and sundry, while the exact opposite is true. This legislation will take money away from everyone except, and I will get back to this later, for some clauses which we may be prepared to support. On the whole, however, this Bill taxes everyone, and what is worse, it taxes people on low incomes more than the rich.

First of all, I would like to put this into the proper context and ask public opinion as well to be the judge of the Government's tax changes. Madam Speaker, to put this into perspective, we must go back to what members of the present Government were telling us, before the 1984 election campaign and later on, regarding two or three issues that are extremely important in terms of political choice.

An Hon. Member: Where are the Ministers?

Mr. Gauthier: There isn't a single Minister in the House. Shame!

Mr. Rossi: What else is new?

[English]

Mr. Garneau: I could refer to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) were saying during the last election campaign and immediately following the September 1984 election. For example, as reported in the November 29, 1984 edition of The Toronto Sun, the Prime Minister said that he did not favour higher personal income taxes to reduce the swelling federal deficit because Canadians were already overtaxed. That is what the Prime Minister said on November 29, 1984 after the election.

What did he say before the election? He said that Canadians were already overtaxed and that they were paying a pretty hefty bundle for their government services. He said that Canadians felt they were paying enough and that that view was not without support in Government, in private industry and in labour circles.

I will refer to what the Minister of Finance said in August 1984 before the election. As a member of the Opposition he said: "We have no intention of raising income taxes to Canadians. What we have to do is get down Government". After the election, on March 1, 1985 the Minister of Finance said: "I do not want to increase taxes. I think we have a good deal of scope on the expenditure side to deal with the deficit problem. A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy, and I don't want to see us do that". That is what he said in March, 1985, many months after the Government had been sworn in.

What do we have today? We have Bill C-23 which will place a burden upon the shoulders of many Canadians. Almost all Canadians will be required to pay, particularly those in the middle and low-income classes. Without taking into account the automatic deindexation, this year they will have to pay $1.7 billion in additional taxes. That is what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) should have told Canadians. It is the truth. Bill C-23 will add billions in taxes on to the shoulders of Canadian taxpayers.

Let us look at the net result of the last two Tory Budgets. The cumulative effect of those two Budgets has been $6.5 billion in additional taxes for individuals and corporations in Canada. How do you square that with the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) not only before but after the election when he said Canadians are already overtaxed? They were overtaxed then and now they will have to pay $6.5 billion in additional taxes. We have been told time and again that those taxes were being raised to fight the deficit. You will certainly recall that in the early part of his mandate the most important thing for the Government was to fight the deficit.

Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Conservative Party, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), was constantly repeating that this Government's objective was to fight the deficit. In an interview with one of the papers, and this goes back to before the election, in March 1984, he said that—

[English]

I would like to quote it in English because it was said in English in March, 1984. The Prime Minister was asked this question:

> On your list of priorities where would you put an attack on the deficit?

The answer from the Prime Minister was:

> Right on top of the heap.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, that was where the Prime Minister ranked the deficit: right on top of the heap. When we look at the current situation, however, it is clear that the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not tell Canadians the truth, which is as far as I can go without using unparliamentary language, and this applies to the tax increases they were not going to introduce as well as to the deficit. It is clear this Government did not deliver the goods, especially since during the last year the Liberal Government was in power, it was criticized right and left. Mistakes were certainly made, since Canadians decided to change Governments in 1984, I am ready to admit that. But when one considers that on March 31, 1984, our national debt was $160.8 billion as per the figures published by the Minister of Finance himself, and that according to the forecasts of the present Minister of Finance which were updated in September, it will have gone to $265 billion, well, for a Government that wanted to tackle the deficit as a first priority—surely, I am ready to concede, Madam Speaker, that for the period from March 21, 1984 to September 4, 1984, this Government cannot be held responsible. Let us adjust that and say that when they were elected on September 4, our national debt was $176.8 billion, and that by March 31, 1987, if the forecasts made by the Minister of Finance are any indication, it will have risen to $265 billion, with a $88 billion increase over two and a half years. No Minister of Finance of any Government of any political stripe has ever achieved the unheard-of performance of adding $88 billion to the national debt over a period of two years and some months, in spite of the fact that taxes were increased to an unprecedented high.

They have increased taxes by $6.5 billion over the span of two budgets, imagine that. This Government was committed to it as a priority, as stated not by us but by this Tory Government, this Prime Minister, this Minister of Finance who led the fanfare, with the Tory chorus endlessly repeating the same tune.

Despite their having increased taxes by $6.5 billion over the span of two Budgets and one financial statement, without mentioning the tax increases that are delivered through press releases. I am only looking at those that are in the Bill and that were announced in the Budget, at nothing else, and they amount to $6.5 billion, and after two and a half years of that kind of Government, you can see that we will be back to the status quo. In other words, we will have just about the same budget deficit as we had for the last full year of Liberal Government.

I submit that this Government has failed, not only with regard to revenues but also with regard to expenditures. It has not only failed with regard to the deficit, it has also failed with regard to the national debt increase.

Yes, that was the Government, the political party that stated during and after the elections that increasing taxes was counterproductive, since those tax increases would slow down the economy.

I recall having said here in this House in the first speeches I made in reply to the Minister's statement of November 1984 and to the Minister's Budget of May 1985, especially in reply to the latter, that such a tax increase would have a definite impact on the economy. One has only to look through the financial pages of last week's newspapers to see that our Canadian economy has grown at a rate of only 1.2 per cent, and observers mention the massive tax increases as one of the reasons.

Madam Speaker, what are those massive increases? When I say $6.5 billions, the figure is so huge that one almost has to break it down to appreciate and really understand what it represents.

The economic statement of November 1984 was the first opportunity for the Minister of Finance to renege on the commitment he had made before the elections to the Canadian people not to increase taxes. However, two months and a half later, they were going ahead, and running full steam ahead.

For the individual taxpayer, the cumulative effect of the November 1984 statement and the May 1985 Budget was adding up to $4.5 billions in additional taxes. I can come back to that later on and give you the complete list of those taxes.

Let me see the impact of the February budget measures which we are now discussing, as they apply to the individual and corporate taxpayers. For individuals, the impact of the February Budget is compounded by a very slight detail announced a little earlier, that is in November 1984 and May 1985, about deindexing the tax rates.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the tax table de-indexation for fiscal year 1986-87 when Canadians will file their tax returns means close to $600 million in new taxes, yet no legislation was passed and no ministerial statement was required.

But if we take into consideration the impact of the 1986 Budget, we are talking about $925 million plus another $600 million, and it all adds up to $1.5 billion in new taxes to be paid by individual Canadians, men and women alike.

Madam Speaker, this is something the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières did not even mention in his remarks. I can understand why Ministers—particularly the Minister of Finance— go into hiding and would rather have parliamentary secretaries take over the responsibility of doing the explaining before the TV cameras.

The Minister of Finance has a new management system through press releases. He gets his Minister of State to answer controversial questions about financial institutions, and when the time comes to present his own Budget, to elaborate on his own Budget speech, we find ourselves listening to his Parliamentary Secretary who somehow tries to hide the real impact of the Budget on all Canadian taxpayers. Therefore if we take into consideration the combined effect of the Budget, Bill C-23 and de-indexation a natural process nobody mentions, we are talking about one billion and a half. Madam Speaker, the cumulative effect of the budgets in 1986, without the addition of the fiscal impact in 1985 or even in 1984; I am only talking about the 1986 fiscal year and the taxes people will end up paying at the beginning of 1987, when it is time to file their income tax return. For individual Canadians, we are talking about $5 billion, or $4.52 billion to be exact plus $600 million, for a total of $5 billion, that is $5.42 billion, plus de-indexation.

In other words, $5 billion. Do you know how much corporations will pay in additional taxes? $580 million. In other words, ninety-two per cent of the new taxes will fall on middle-class Canadians because the Government created the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption to benefit the rich. This was a tax gift. In addition pension plans exemptions were increased, which means that people earning $75,000 or $100,000 were not treated in the same way as those earning $30,000, because their marginal rate of taxation is much higher and they derive a greater benefit for each thousand dollars they invest in a Registered Retirement Savings Plan. Madam Speaker, individual Canadians will pay $5 billion in new taxes whereas corporations will only pay $580 million.

That same Finance Minister, when he panicked in July because of the tax reform undertaken by the Americans, came and told us: "We will follow their example, we will reduce personal income tax and increase corporate taxes." Big deal! After squeezing money out of taxpayers over and over, especially low- and middle-income earners, the Government is now telling us it will alleviate slightly the burden for those taxpayers and that an additional 3 per cent tax will apply over and above last year's 5 and 10 per cent surtaxes. It means that for the period between July 1, 1986 and December 31, 1986, an additional surtax of 3 per cent will apply on top of the 5 and 10 per cent surtaxes.

So much so, Madam Speaker, that corporations have to be explained—and truly that is the only positive aspect they get from this whole exercise—how to figure out surtaxes, whether the new one should be calculated before the first and second, or after. Nothing is said to individual Canadians. I do not know, Madam Speaker, how the 3 per cent additional surtax that is being introduced will mesh with the other two of 5 and 10 per cent.

To my mind, it is outrageous, especially after the commitments that were made. Those commitments were not made by Liberals, because during our election campaign we said we would make no promises for fear of not being able to live up to them, given that not only Canada but the whole Western world was just working its way out of an economic crisis. Meanwhile the Conservatives were going around the country with their cheque-books. By the way, I met with these farmers and they told me that it was a "rubber" cheque, the kind that bounces. In that case, it was a small matter, a matter of a few million dollars. Still, it was a promise which was not kept.

As for taxation—

As for Quebec, the president of the Quebec Conservative caucus would be well advised to check opinion polls to find out what Quebecers think of his Government's initiatives. If my Party were third in the polls, Madam Speaker, I would not speak about the Government's popularity. However, the Hon. Member, the caucus president, should keep his cool. He is generally a good fellow and he knows that I have a lot of respect for him for all sorts of reasons, but in this case he is embarking upon extremely slippery ground.

[English]

More important than the fact that the Government will impose a surtax on Canadian workers, the middle class and the poor is that the Government promised all Canadian electors to do differently. I cannot understand why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said on November 29, 1984, that he did not favour higher personal income taxes to reduce the deficit. This is exactly what the Government has done. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said it was almost impossible to increase taxes because they were already too high. After having said that, the Government has imposed an additional $6.5 billion of new taxes, of which 92 per cent will come from individuals.

I am very disturbed by the fact that this Bill was introduced by a Parliamentary Secretary rather than the Minister. When the Government decides to put additional taxes on the shoulders of citizens, the least that can be done is for the Minister who made the decision to come into the House and explain this move to members of the Opposition, his own backbenchers and the entire Canadian public. He should explain why he has decided to increase taxes after having said on November 29, 1984, that it was not the intent of the Government to put additional taxes on the shoulders of Canadians.

Madam Speaker, when one looks at the implications of Bill C-23 and the decisions taken by this Government which go against formal commitments made by the Prime minister and the Minister of Finance, it comes as no surprise that Canadian men and women no longer believe their Prime minister. They do not believe what the Minister of Finance is saying, but even less what the Prime Minister is saying. That is all there is to it. They have a very good memory and because they have been deceived, they will not believe even apparently well intented statements. They had decided to support a political party which had promised never to increase taxes but, after two budgets, they realized that an average family of a husband, wife and two children earning $30,000—nothing to write home about—will have to pay $630 in additional income tax. Let us take the case of another family—a man, a woman and two children—earning $15,000 a year. They certainly cannot be considered as millionaires. They will have to pay almost $300 more in income tax. Fifteen thousand dollars income with two children.

Madam Speaker, people often say that there are single-parent families, and it is true. A single-parent family, two children, an income of $20,000. We know just how difficult it is to balance a budget: they will have to pay almost $425 per year more in new taxes. Can you imagine $420 more in income tax, when the Government had clearly promised them not to increase taxes while reducing the deficit?

What are the other significant features of this Bill and who benefits from them? The rich do benefit, to the tune of a $500,000 capital gains exemption.

Mr. Vincent: Even on television you were told that you were wrong—

Mr. Garneau: Well, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières has just returned. If he wanted to assume the responsibility of a Minister, he should have been sworn in. If he was not appointed, it is not my fault. Anyway, he should let— Madam Speaker, I think that this is too important to overlook. A $500,000 capital gains tax exemption may mean up to $250,000 in benefits, or even more depending on the marginal rate. I have personally met a great many people in the Laval-des-Rapides riding and elsewhere, but I have rarely met anybody earning $25,000 or $30,000 per year who could claim a $50,000 capital gains tax exemption to reduce his or her income tax. But a number of Members in this House, for instance, have a larger income, own companies, or have additional revenues—and that is understandable, they have not stolen it—and can take advantage of that $500,000 capital gains tax exemption and lower their income tax.

Higher income people again can make the most of Registered Retirement Savings Plans. It is a fact that someone in the 60 per cent income tax bracket who invests $1,000 in a Registered Retirement Savings Plan gets a $600 tax break. But someone who earns $15,000 and pays maybe 10 or 12 per cent income tax, pays little or no income tax, even if he were paying 15 per cent, would only be getting $150. This Government therefore has once again attempted to help the rich and the wealthy and reach into the lower income people or the middle classes for its revenues.

The income tax was raised by 3 per cent (1 per cent in 1984, 1 per cent in 1985 and another percentage point in 1986) and the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières, the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Finance, is now talking about all those initiatives by the Government. Can you imagine that! They have introduced a sales tax exemption which may bring in maybe $150 at the most. Can you imagine that the federal sales tax was increased by 3 per cent over three successive Budgets, 1 per cent every year, and we have not had the 1987 Estimates, Madam Speaker, we are still waiting for it. I can see what the Hon. Minister of Finance is up to, you can tell beforehand exactly what he is going to do. He is going to rationalize the federal sales tax. Is that not a fantastic deal, Madam Speaker? We all know that this rationalization is just a smooth way of saying that the federal sales tax on manufactured goods is going to go down, but it is going to be extended to all goods and services.

Mr. Vincent: You are using scare tactics again.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, I sometimes wonder if we should be more afraid of the Government when it tells us frankly what it is thinking or when it does not, because we were clearly told that there would be no tax increase, and taxes have increased by $6 million in two years. This time, we are told that there will be a business transfer tax or taxe de transaction as we call it in French. We are told that this will replace the federal sales tax. The Minister of Finance has said this three times already outside the House. Yet, the Parliamentary Secretary says that we are trying to scare people. We are simple repeating what he has told us, but he says that we are using scare tactics.

Mr. Rossi: That is why he was not appointed to Cabinet.

Mr. Garneau: We have good reason to be worried because, after increasing the federal sales tax by 3 per cent to bring it up to 12 per cent, the Government now says that the tax will be extended to all goods and services, but that the rate will be somewhat lower. I understand that some 80 per cent of the federal sales tax is paid by about 10 per cent of all businesses, or at least this is what we were told in previous studies, and the tax will now be extended to everyone. If the comments of the Minister of Finance are accurate, this means that we shall have to pay this tax indirectly, if not directly, when we have a haircut or get a sales agreement notarized. Even Senators may have to pay the tax when they get their hair cut.

Mr. Gauthier: Listen to that, Roch!

Mr. Garneau: The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) should be very interested. He may have to pay the tax when he goes for a haircut.

Mr. La Salle: There is just one way to avoid it—

Mr. Garneau: There is just one way and that is not to be appointed Senator. But he will still pay. Everyone will pay. What is discouraging is to see that, after making so many promises, the Government is underhandedly imposing new taxes.

I said earlier that Bill C-23 provided for a 3 per cent permanent surtax to be added to the 5 and 10 per cent surtax which were announced previously. We are getting a minimum tax, but there also, the Government has let us down. The Government is boasting about its new minimum tax.

Madam Speaker, to be sure that this minimum tax will have as little effect as possible, the Government has added two provisions of which it had never talked before. When this tax was first announced, it was supposed to apply to the bad rich people who were using tax exemptions to avoid paying any taxes. We were told that this would generate something over $300 million. However, between the time when this was announced and the time when this Bill was introduced, there have been two major changes. The first concerns dividends. When you have $100 in dividends, you add 150, and you then have a credit. This provision has been changed to bring it down to 33 1/3. The second change concerns the seven-year averaging provision. This means that, if you are caught having to pay the minimum tax for one tax year, you have seven years to recover the cost. Imagine, seven years!

First of all, it is going to be a nightmare to follow for seven years your income tax returns, because you will have to file a regular income tax return and another complicated form with lots of operations to determine whether or not you will be required to pay the minimum tax. You will have to keep records for seven years. Only the most stupid taxpayers will have to pay the minimum tax. During a meeting of one of the committees of this House I read a quote from a chartered accountant in a large Canadian company who was saying that the only good news about this minimum tax is that, given the number of loopholes added to it, nobody will have to pay it. However, the Government is going to boast about the minimum tax.

When you look at what are called the Budget Papers, on page 51, you can see that the changes to the tax treatment of dividends mean that in 1986 there will be a decrease in tax revenues amounting to $150 million. It took me a long time to realize why, in 1986, taxpayers would be paying $150 million less in taxes, and then $250 million in 1987, $300 million in 1988 and $365 million in 1990. Do you know what it means? It means that the changes to the tax treatment of dividends, as far as the minimum tax is concerned, will reduce the Government revenues forecasted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) by $300 million. So, what is left in this minimum tax? This is just a lot of window dressing that is supposed to fool people into believing that now everyone will have to pay taxes, while that is not necessarily the case.

Madam Speaker, there is some good news in this Bill, however. The advantages granted by Orders in Council to people living and working in the North have been given more permanent status. I may recall that, previously, the Liberal Government had been granting these tax rebates by tabling the Orders in Council necessary to implement such decisions.

Today, these advantages are included in the legislation, and that is good news. There are a few technical changes that may be necessary when we look at the Bill clause by clause, but this is probably the best news so far. It is good news because a measure that previously existed on a discretionary basis will now be made permanent.

Madam Speaker, as far as the sales tax refund is concerned, I think everyone will agree this is a drop in the ocean, and that it would have been far better not to increase federal sales tax by 3 per cent. Now, the Government is taking $300 or $400 away with one hand and giving back $50, $75 or $100 with the other. One thing is certain, and that is that taxpayers and their families will find themselves in a more complex and difficult situation as a result of these amendments and tax increases.

That is a beginning, but I fail to understand why they have provided that only families earning $15,000 will be entitled to that sales tax refund. Madam Speaker, we lowered the sales tax from 11 per cent to 9 per cent, so I do not see why this would have been needed when it was felt that this was the right course, that is lowering the federal sales tax. But this Government increased it by 3 per cent. Now, after taking $300 or $400 from one pocket, they will be putting $50 back into the other pocket. But still, that is better than nothing.

But it is unbelievable, at a time when the poverty level is recognized by all the major agencies involved as being somewhere around $20,000 for families with three or four children, that only families at the $15,000 level should benefit.

This small item is another clear example of the fact that this Government is more concerned with helping the affluent than the middle-income people.

Madam Speaker, they are now taxing marriage. It used to be that people could at least marry during the month that suited them best, and they were entitled to the married status exemptions for the full year. Can you imagine that now they will have to prorate that, accounting for the number of days they have been married and the number of days they were not married in order to decide whether the taxpayer filing his income tax return, either the husband or the wife, whoever benefits from the deduction . . . now they will have to prorate on a daily basis.

I see that my time has expired and I shall simply repeat in closing that this Government has failed more than once to keep its electoral promises not to increase taxes and that, in fact, taxes have increased dramatically. The Government has not delivered the goods as far as controlling the public debt is concerned. In addition, Madam Speaker, this Government has not respected the integrity of the Canadian family and, in one Budget after the other, it has decided to give tax benefits to the wealthy and to take money away from the poorest members of our society.

I said at the beginning of my speech that I found it unacceptable that this Government could proceed with Bill C-23 without the Minister of Finance, or at the very least, the Minister of State for Finance being here, and this is why I move that the debate be adjourned to give the Minister of Finance time to join us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, as I recall, we are not supposed to refer to the absence of another Member from the House.

Mr. Rossi: You have no business giving orders.

Mr. Vincent: No, I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: You have no right to do that. Go and learn the Standing Orders.

Mr. Vincent: No, I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: This is not Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Vincent: This is not Montreal.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) rose on a point of order while the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) was moving a motion.

Quite simply this motion underscores the fact that a Member or Minister is not in the House, and to that extent it is out of order.

The Chair cannot present the motion to the House because no prior notice was given.

• (1600)

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, although I would not want to appeal or comment on your ruling, I would remind the Chair that Standing Order 71 does provide for putting a motion to adjourn the debate when a question is under debate. This is what the Hon. Member did, he moved that the debate be adjourned. If you were to read Standing Order 71, Madam Speaker, I think you would agree with me that this motion is quite in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would be prepared to accept the motion if it were quite simply to adjourn the debate, but since it is to enable the Minister to come to the House it is out of order.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Standing Order 28 states—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member have a point of order on the same situation we have now discussed?

Mr. Cassidy: I am seeking some guidance from you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The ruling has been made that this motion is not receivable. We are resuming debate.

Mr. Cassidy: Perhaps on a point of order I may simply cite—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will give the floor for a moment to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), but the ruling has been made.

Mr. Cassidy: Standing Order 28 states:

A motion to adjourn, unless otherwise prohibited in these Standing Orders, shall always be in order,—

That is my understanding of parliamentary procedure. There is a qualification that one cannot do this repeatedly, but there is no prohibition in the Standing Orders on certain forms of adjournments and I cannot see how the ruling arrived at by the Chair—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Member does not seem to realize that the purpose of the adjournment motion is only to enable a Minister to come to the House. In that case the motion is out of order, I have so ruled and that is the end of it.

[English]

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am plesased to rise this afternoon in debate on Bill C-23. As all Hon. Members are aware this comes as a result of the Budget which was introduced in the spring of this year. We finally see the legislation stemming out of the budget presentation and debate.

In beginning my comments, I wish to point out the flaws in our process. Here we have a Budget which was introduced and debated in the early part of this year, some nine or 10 months ago. However, we are only now finally dealing with the actual Act and the legislation. Many of these tax measures are already in effect, yet Parliament has not properly debated or passed the enabling legislation. It is a process which leaves a lot to be desired, particularly in terms of the work which the finance committee has to do in this case.

If parliamentary reform is to be valid and real, if committees are to have some responsibilities and some flexibility so that incongruities in legislation can be cleared up, then we cannot have the present situation continued in which a budget speech is delivered in February or the beginning of March and tax measures come into effect immediately . That means that all the committee and Parliament can do from there on is rubber-stamp the process because the tax measures are already in effect. To change the legislation means to change the rules again.

The process we are involved in is really a farce. The decisions have already been made. It really does not matter what the House will say and what individual Members will say and what work the finance committee or the legislative committee will do; the legislation is already written in stone and the Government will not allow any major amendments to it.

What we are debating here is a tax measure that, simply put, will sock it to the poor and middle-income earners and benefit the rich. The two Budgets presented by the Government have increased the tax burdens of ordinary Canadians by some $1,300. They have increased the tax burden by some $1.7 billion this year on a total basis for the poor and middle-income earners. Of course, there is some window-dressing. There is legislation which will allow for what is called a minimum tax. As we all know, particularly members of the finance committee who will snicker when they hear it being said, the minimum tax legislation is like a sieve. It will not collect one cent of new taxes, if taxpayers are at all smart. There are so many loopholes in the legislation that a knowledgeable and sophisticated taxpayer who might have to pay the minimum tax will very quickly find new ways of getting around paying it. So it is window-dressing.

The Government claims that it is plugging some of the business loopholes, loopholes which have allowed some 79,000 corporations in this country with book profits of over $12 billion not to pay one cent of tax on that $12 billion. The Government has taken some pride in plugging some of the loopholes. For example, it takes great pride in having plugged the scientific research tax credit loophole, a crazy scheme devised by the Liberal Government in its last dying months in office. It was a scheme that cost Canadian taxpayers some $3 billion in lost revenues. When the Conservatives took office everyone knew what a scam it was. Everyone knew what a tremendous drain it was on the public Treasury and that the new Government had to act. So in October of 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that he was placing a moratorium on the scientific research tax credit scheme. However, he incorporated a grandfathering clause. In other words, if you and I, Madam Speaker, had reached some arrangement which we scribbled on the back of an envelope, we would still be eligible under this scheme. Apparently, a great many people had agreements scribbled on the backs of envelopes. Some $3 billion of public revenue was lost and some $1.2 billion of that was lost since the Minister announced his moratorium in October of 1984. Finally, even the Government and the Minister of Finance recognized that the grandfathering clause still left the door wide open, and in 1985 he killed the whole thing, thus putting an end to the nonsense.

I wish to point out that had the Government acted decisively in October of 1984, it would have saved the Treasury some $1.2 billion. To lay the scam of SRTC entirely on the doorstep of the Liberal Party and the former Liberal Government is not quite accurate. The present Government must also accept that, of the $3 billion in lost revenues, it was responsible for $1.2

billion of that. One can well imagine what $1.2 billion could really have done to research establishments in this country. Had we had some genuine research coming out of that $3 billion, the country would have been much further ahead. Instead, we heard the universities, the National Research Council and all the scientific bodies in this country, including the granting agencies, crying out for money. They had to cut back programs and cut back on research and development.

I am certain that some legitimate research took place as a result of this scheme. After all, if one is going to throw $3 billion to the wind, some of it is bound to stick and some legitimate research is bound to come out of it. But I think every Member of the House will agree that a very small percentage of that $3 billion actually went into legitimate new research.

The history of the scientific research tax credit is an important example for all Members of the House. It is an example of the Government attempting to direct economic and social programs and policies through the tax system. In this particular case it illustrated a desire to put money into the hands of small research establishments which could not benefit from tax credits and tax losses because they were already operating on a business loss. There was a very worth-while purpose behind the SRTC. One thing we have to learn from it is that it became an invitation for one of the most major tax scams in the history of this country. And the story is not entirely finished yet. I think research will show that some of the most prestigious accounting and law firms were involved in offering advice to clients who saw the loss of some $3 billion of public revenue.

My Party will continue to press for tax reform. We will continue to press to ensure the plugging up of these tax loopholes and those opportunities which allow large corporations and wealthy individuals not to pay any tax at all.

While the Government and the Minister of Finance talk about tax reform, about removing the number of loopholes and deductions and about broadening the base and therefore being able to reduce the tax rate, the real action on the part of this Government in the form of its two Budgets has in fact done the very opposite. While the Government has plugged up a few loopholes, it has opened up that many more. Certainly the capital gains tax exemption is an example of this. One can receive $500,000 in one's lifetime and not pay one cent of tax on it.

Mr. Cassidy: Good times for the rich.

Mr. de Jong: It is certainly not something that will benefit the average Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why don't you talk about the Bill?

Mr. de Jong: It will only benefit those who have capital gains of $500,000 in a lifetime. How many individuals have that? Very few of them do.

Mr. McDermid: Ask the farmers.

Mr. de Jong: I heard the Hon. Member mention the farmers. With the price of farmland going down and with billions of dollars in lost capital in the prairie regions, the capital gains tax exemption will not be of much benefit to them either.

In this legislation there is the proposal to make certain that rich folks simply do not continue not paying any tax at all. It introduces the minimum income tax. I have here a document entitled "The Tax Letter". It is put out by one of the more prestigious accounting firms in Toronto.

Mr. Riis: What does it say?

Mr. de Jong: "The Tax Letter" of January 23, 1986, has as its general heading: "Yes, you can beat the minimum tax".

Mr. Riis: You can?

Mr. de Jong: Indeed you can, Madam Speaker. In fact, six different ways of escaping paying any amount of minimum tax are listed. I see that our dear Chairman of the Finance Committee has a grin that goes from ear to ear. I am sure he himself has figured out many of these six different steps. Perhaps he has even discovered seven or eight different ways to avoid paying a minimum income tax.

Mr. Cassidy: His grin is even wider now.

Mr. de Jong: The chairman of the committee knows, as does every member of the finance committee that the Government will not collect significant revenues from the minimum income tax. They recognize that only the unsophisticated taxpayer will be caught paying a minimum income tax and that the sophisticated taxpayer will not pay one cent of a minimum income tax.

I could go on to outline some of the ways in which individuals can avoid paying the minimum income tax. However, I will not do so on this occasion. I am certain that the finance committee will deal with many of them in a more specific way.

A small progressive step in the legislation before us is the child tax credit. This amount will be sent out to those who are eligible—

Mr. Blenkarn: We've already passed that Bill.

Mr. de Jong: Now that the Government has implemented this policy, the strange aspect of it is that there has been a total foul-up in the implementation of it. A great many low-income families and single-parent families eligible for the child tax credit move around. The Government is sending out the cheques to the addresses used to file income tax returns the year before. Lo and behold, tax credit cheques are floating around the country into mailboxes and homes from which families have already moved. I am afraid this is another indication of the Government not properly thinking through the administration of its own programs. It is another indication of the mismanagement of the Government. It simply could not operate a lemon stand.

This Bill also contains changes to the northern allowance. Again, while there are some positive aspects to these changes, we have some difficulties with them. Steelworkers who work in mines in northern and remote regions will, in the end, receive fewer tax deductions under these proposed changes than they had received before.

As well, the Government is attempting to encourage research and development by allowing for scientific tax credits. These tax credits are mentioned in this Bill. However, the point that we in this Party have raised on several occasions is that the Government discriminates between engineering, natural and medical sciences and the humanities and social sciences.

The Government has told the granting agencies to go out and raise more money in the private sector since they will be receiving fewer government grants. The Government will give tax credits for donations to these funding agencies. However, donations made to the medical, engineering and natural sciences granting agencies will receive a different tax treatment from those donations made to the humanities and social sciences granting councils. We say that this is not fair. It is not fair to the humanities and the social sciences. As well, it indicates the misguided sense of priorities of the Government.

The Government hopes that inventions and discoveries in the natural sciences will get us out of the problems we face.

Mr. Blenkarn: It'll create jobs.

Mr. de Jong: As the Hon. Member says, it will create jobs. However, the Government believes that research in the humanities and social sciences is not as important.

Mr. Blenkarn: Won't create jobs.

Mr. de Jong: I assume that the Hon. Member firmly believes that that will not create jobs. I beg to differ with him. Canada's situation in this century of very rapid social, economic and technological changes is one which requires research in social sciences and humanities. We need research in those areas if we are to survive as a country in a holistic sense. Unfortunately, the Government does not see it that way. Therefore, it is quite prepared to discriminate against the humanities and social sciences.

Another aspect of this legislation that will help the rich is the change in payments to retirement funds contained in this legislation and in other amendments the Minister had introduced earlier this year. It will be done at a cost of some $300 million to the taxpayers, two-thirds of which will come from the federal Treasury, and the rest from the provinces. The benefits will go almost entirely to the 10 per cent of the population with the highest income. That works in the following way. The Government will now allow total contributions to increase to some $15,000 a year. First of all, very few people can afford to put away $15,000 a year, other than the well-to-do.

Mr. Cassidy: Tories.

Mr. de Jong: Let us say that the average person can afford to put away only $7,000 a year. That $7,000 becomes tax deductible.

Mr. McDermid: I know a lot of rich socialists also.

Mr. de Jong: If you are earning $50,000, $60,000, $80,000 or $100,000, then that $7,000 tax exemption becomes more meaningful to you than if you are only earning $20,000 a year. So what we have are tax measures that will again benefit those who are well-to-do, while the average Canadian will be paying the bill. The average Canadian will be helping to subsidize pensions that could be up to $60,000 a year, which are half paid for by the taxpayers.

Now we come to the question of the surtax. This legislation puts in place a surtax. There was no question about why the surtax was introduced. It was stated over and over again that it was to help fight the deficit. The Tories love talking about the deficit. The strange thing is that the deficit seems to increase when Tories and Tory Governments are in power. In the United States the deficit has increased under the conservative President, Ronald Reagan. In Great Britain the deficit has increased under the Conservative Government of Margaret Thatcher. In this country the deficit has increased under a Conservative Government. In my home Province of Saskatchewan, before the Tories were in power there in 1982, there were surpluses year in, year out. The Tories came into power, and now it is close to a $3 billion deficit that they racked up in the Province of Saskatchewan.

The Tories create the deficit. How do Tories create deficits? First of all, they have the rhetoric against the deficit. They stand up as a Party to fight against the deficit. They tell us all that we are living beyond our means, we have to cut back. So they cut back in social programs. Oh, indeed they do. They love cutting back on social programs. That is where we will fight the deficit. When the Tories claim that we are living beyond our means and you look at the figures of the OECD countries, you find that we are one of the lowest in our expenditure on social programs compared to the other industrialized countries of the world. We are below Italy, Ireland, France, Germany, Holland, Denmark, and Sweden. We spend just a little bit more of our Gross Domestic Product on social programs than the United States. We spend less on hospitals, family allowances, income support programs, health care, pensions, and unemployment insurance benefits. As part of our Gross Domestic Product we spend less than almost every other industrialized country in the world. Yet the Tories tell us that we are living beyond our means. First of all, I cannot believe that we are living beyond our means when you compare us to other western industrialized countries. How can a country as rich in natural resources, as young in its population, and with such a small population be living beyond its means and spending so little on social programs? Perhaps the reason there is a deficit, and perhaps the reason there is a greater deficit under a Conservative Government, can be seen when you look at tax expenditures and see the amount of dollars and cents the Government collects or does not collect. Then you realize that the reason there is a deficit is that the woman who is a teller at the Royal Bank of Canada paid more in actual dollars and cents in taxes than the Royal Bank of Canada paid. Even though the Royal Bank of Canada had over $300 million in profits, it did not pay one cent in tax. In fact, the Government gave it a tax credit of some $6 million in 1982.

So you realize why we have the deficit when you see that there are over 79,000 corporations with a total profit of some $12 billion that did not pay one cent in tax. No wonder there is a deficit, because the Government has not been collecting the revenues from those who can and should be paying their fair share.

So when we talk about fighting the deficit, we realize that this Government, as did the former Liberal Government, is going to fight the deficit on the backs of the working people and the middle-income people. They are the ones who have seen taxes increase under a Conservative Government. They are not the ones who will benefit from half a million dollars capital gains tax exemption. They are not the ones who will benefit from an enriched program in the retirement savings plan. It will not be your average working person and salaried income person who will benefit, or the retired, or the young person who is out looking for a job. They will be paying more income taxes, and they will be paying more sales taxes as a result of the Tory Government and its policies, whereas the well-to-do will continue to reap even more and more benefits.

So there is this injustice in our tax system. The Government talks about tax reform. It is proposing that we will change this and finally set to right the injustices that most Canadians are beginning to realize are there and no longer accept. That means the Government will have to reverse in its next Budget everything it has set down in its Budget in the two previous years. It will have to be willing to reverse itself on capital gains. It will have to be able and willing to reverse itself on the other tax measures and giveaways that it introduced in the two previous Budgets. We will see, indeed, how serious it is when it talks about tax reform.

The Bill before us is complex, and in many ways it is unfortunate. I join with the spokesperson for the Liberal Party in saying that it is unfortunate that neither the Minister of Finance nor the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) deemed fit to lead in the debate on this Bill, even though last week we received the draft copy of the remarks of the Minister of State for Finance that he was going to give today in introducing the second reading stage on Bill C-23. Instead, the Parliamentary Secretary opened the debate on this Bill. I can understand why this might be the case. The reason is that because the legislation we are asked to approve is such a contradiction to everything that the Minister has been saying since this summer about tax reform, that it must be an embarrassment to the Government.

Because of these and other reasons, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. de Jong), which was negatived on the following division:

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Young) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

[English]

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate on a very important piece of legislation. It is part of a program that the Government began over two years ago. During the election campaign we talked about economic renewal and a stronger economy for Canada and for all Canadians.

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I would think Hon. Members would allow the Chair to hear the remarks of the colleague who has the floor.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is a very important debate and I am very glad you have brought that point to the attention of some Hon. Members who were not listening. The economic renewal of Canada is something our Government has been working on since we first came into office over two years ago. This Bill is one more step towards providing that economic renewal.

On November 8, 1984, our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave a statement which was called "A New Direction for Canada, an Agenda for Economic Renewal". In that statement he outlined many of the proposals we had discussed throughout our election campaign. He gave us a direction which we continue to follow. The Government must get the deficit under control. We must promote policies which will encourage a higher level of investment in business in order to create new jobs. We must have increased international competitiveness and make Government more efficient in its own operations and less obstructive to the work of the private sector. We must bring about changes in a way that is fair and open, and the changes which are proposed in this Bill are changes which have come about after a process which involved consultation with business leaders, labour and individuals. This is truly reflective of what our Government wants to set out as part of its agenda for economic growth.

Bill C-23 contains amendments to the Income Tax Act which were announced in the Budget of February 26, 1986. The Bill also incorporates some important technical changes which were added to the Ways and Means Motion before it was tabled on October 31. Our Government is committed to the consultation process which is indicated by this Bill. Some Hon. Members opposite were concerned about the delay in implementation of many of the measures which were first suggested in our Budget. Consultation is a worth-while process and it does take time.

Today we are debating the principles of Bill C-23 at second reading. This Bill reinforces our Government's priorities as outlined in previous economic statements. We are looking forward to restoring fiscal balance by rigorous and effective control of government expenditures, greater efficiency and effectiveness in Government, improved management procedures and elimination of programs which have outlived their usefulness. Improvement to our tax system is a priority. Tax reform is on the minds of all Canadians because our present tax system is far too complicated. It has now reached a stage where even our best and most renowned experts have trouble understanding the Income Tax Act. It is so voluminous and difficult that the average person whose affairs are the least bit complex must resort to a tax expert and, in many cases, a lot of expense. That is not what we want.

Bill C-23 provides for reforms and improvements which will be welcomed by many people. It follows our objective to simplify our tax system and to be more fair to all people. It fosters economic activity. It supports social justice. It ensures a stable source of revenue to support viable government programs.

All of these objectives are admirable and I am sure every Hon. Member in the House would agree they are very important and desirable. Hon. Members will also know that the implementation of these objectives is difficult. In introducing these objectives through this legislation, we must also keep in mind that we want to streamline the tax system and, while doing so, we want to continue to be fair and equitable, and so it is very important that we eliminate any distortions created by previous legislators and their legislation.

Bill C-23 removes some tax initiatives of which only certain businesses could take advantage. These types of initiatives only complicate the decision-making of small businesses. Small business should be making decisions based on sound business and economic principles in the same way as do other larger corporations.

Bill C-23 broadens the base of tax by the elimination of the 3 per cent inventory allowance and through the phasing out of the general investment tax credits of 7 per cent and 10 per cent and the 7 per cent transportation and construction credit. These changes will be accompanied by a phase-in reduction of the tax rates. The basic federal rate will be reduced from 36 per cent to 33 per cent. The manufacturing rate will be reduced from 30 per cent to 26 per cent. The rate for small manufacturers will fall from 10 per cent to 8 per cent and the rate for other small businesses will be reduced by 2 per cent from 15 per cent to 13 per cent. Our commitment for greater equity in our tax system is reflected in our record and in the improvements we have made to economic growth.

Mr. Cassidy: Like the capital gains exemption.

Mr. Warner: Like our capital gains exemption.

Mr. Cassidy: That doesn't increase equity at all and the Hon. Member knows it.

Mr. Warner: The minimum tax will reduce tax avoidance. Bill C-23 terminates the use of partnerships and corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions through so-called partnership step-up or bump-up rules. The so called carve-out transactions whereby profitable oil and gas companies temporarily transfer property to companies with losses in order to reduce taxes will no longer be permissible. Trusts will be prevented from marketing securities in such a way that income and capital returns to investors are distributed tax-free.

I do not believe any person in the House can argue that this is not a progressive piece of legislation, one which is fair and will serve the needs of Canadians and assist in the economic renewal which has already taken place on a grand scale. Most of us will also agree that it will continue very successfully over the next few years. How can anyone argue otherwise when the unemployment rate has dropped from 11.7 per cent in September of 1984 to 9.4 per cent in October of 1986? This is a progressive Government and it is carrying on with a very successful renewal program. Total unemployment has fallen by 255,000 since September of 1984. Since September of 1984 the number of unemployed youth has fallen by 119,000. The number of unemployed women has fallen by 98,000 since that time. Jobs are being created at a monthly rate of over 24,000 compared with a little over 7,000 by the old Government. We have created over 600,000 jobs in 25 months compared to 400,000 in 55 months.

The record of the Government on economic renewal is absolutely outstanding. No one in the House can say that we are not on the right track or that we are not taking the right direction with respect to economic renewal. Interest rates have fallen by almost 4 per cent. Interest rates on mortgages have fallen by over 3 per cent. This translates into making house purchases much easier for the average Canadian. The cost of a $50,000 mortgage has been reduced by over $100 a month in the last two years. This means that more people have entered into the housing market. The housing boom in Ontario and other parts of the country is tremendous. How can anyone argue against that? The people of Stormont—Dundas and Glengarry certainly know what has happened with economic renewal in their area. It has meant more jobs for all Canadians, all men, women and youth. Economic renewal will continue with positive legislation such as this.

The interest rate on five-year farm credit mortgage loans has fallen by over three percentage points to the lowest rate since 1979. Although this does not solve all farmers' problems, it is of great assistance in reducing by 3 per cent one's debt burden. The reduction in interest rate has been facilitated by responsible Government. It has been facilitated by a Minister of Finance who has set a course for our Government which we are following and supporting. The results are obvious. They are appreciated by all Canadians, whether they are represented by members of the Opposition or by government Members. Economic renewal is alive and well in Canada.

Perhaps one of our only criticisms can be that it is not as widespread as we would like it to be, but we are working on that as well. I only wish that the economic prosperity of Mississauga or greater Toronto were shared by people in Alberta and in the east. Our Government is committed to looking at these regional disparities. This legislation has approached some of those problems. It will facilitate the funding of more investment in some of the areas that have not grown or do not have the wealth and prosperity that we would like them to have.

Interest rates can only be maintained at a low level, or a comparatively low level, if our Government is perceived by the international community to be a sound Government with sound direction. Interest rates are not inherited; they are something that one deserves and one earns. It is through international respect that the capital flow will continue to come to Canada. This year we are looking at increased foreign investment, something about which our Government campaigned and something which is now happening. Investors are coming here from Germany and from Hong Kong. In terms of Hong Kong, the numbers are higher than any previous year. These are very wealthy investors coming to Canada which is a haven for investment. Canada is safe and has a responsible and democratic Government. Not only is it safe in terms of investment, but investments will grow. They will create jobs for Canadians as they grow and give a return to investors.

Our economic agenda has attracted more visitors to Canada, not only people who are looking at investing in Canada but people who are coming as visitors. The number of foreign travellers in the first nine months of 1986 was up by 19 per cent compared with the same period the previous year. This is something in which Ontario has participated and, in particular, the riding of Stormont—Dundas. It is something in which all of Canada has participated. Ours is an attractive country, not only for investors but for visitors and tourists who love to visit us.

There are many other positive economic indicators. Consumer spending has risen, which is good news for small business, retailers and for all the people on Main Street, Canada. Retail sales have increased by 10 per cent in the last year from September, 1985 to September, 1986, and by 23 per cent since the election in 1984.

Price stability is certainly something about which we can be proud. After a period of high inflation coupled with staggering interest costs, the inflation rate in the last two years has been in the 4 per cent range. Price stability is something which has grown out of the direction and the soundness of the Government.

The Progressive Conservative Government inherited a deficit of $38.3 billion. Last year the deficit fell to $34.4 billion. This year it will probably be in the $32 billion range. This will be the first time in 16 years that the deficit has declined for two consecutive years. I think we can probably project that it will continue this downward trend. Excluding debt service costs, spending declined by $1 billion last year. This was the first significant decline in program expenditures since the Second World War. Bill C-23 facilitates further reductions and more responsible Government.

A couple of Members who spoke before me referred to the capital gains tax exemption. Although that is not part of this Bill, it is certainly part of the responsible tax reform that our Government is endeavouring to present. It is not only a fair and equitable tax but it is a simplification for a great many people doing business in Canada. I hope that further Bills of this nature will be introduced. I hope that we will be able to introduce in this session further legislation which will simplify the tax system. I believe that we are one of the first Governments to take such a bold initiative to attempt to simplify our tax system. I know that in this respect we will have the co-operation of all Members of the House as we develop these ideas in committee and also in the consultation process which is so much a part of our Government. All Canadians will continue to have an input into our Government and into the legislation which we are presenting. This Bill is a great example of the consultation process. I know that future Bills involving tax reform will have the opinions and ideas of all Canadians. It is a difficult procedure to have equity and fairness and at the same time simplification.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a) I move:

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of the continued consideration of Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act.

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), if 25 Members rise in their places to object, the motion is defeated. Shall the motion carry?

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There not being 25 Members rising in objection to the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion (Mr. Warner) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I would first like to make a comment and then ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner). First, of course, I wish to express shock and dismay at the attitude of the Government. Obviously, being the non-partisan person that you are, Madam Speaker, you will understand that I am simply outraged by the tactics used by the Conservative Government in trying to ram through this legislation.

Having made that remark, I would like to ask my colleague a question. The Hon. Member for Stomont—Dundas, of course, represents a constituency which neighbours on mine. In fact, he represents the riding right next to the one I have the honour and privilege of representing in this House. He will know that both our areas have not benefited from much of the new growth that we have seen in the Province of Ontario, particularly in the last couple of years.

If I can get the attention of other Hon. Members, and I am not convinced yet that they are all listening, I would ask the Hon. Member a question. The Hon. Member will know that in three successive Budgets, beginning with the expenditure and program review of November, 1984 as well as the two budgetary documents, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. Order, please. The Chair would very much like to hear the questions and comments. It is very difficult to do so when comments going across the floor are louder than the voice of the people who are speaking into the microphone.

Mr. Boudria: I never thought I would be accused of not speaking loud enough, Madam Speaker. However, I will try to speak louder than some of the other Hon. Members in the House in order to make sure that the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas hears me.

The Hon. Member will know that the regional incentive programs of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion have been cut, particularly the programs that benefited Cornwall which is in his riding and Hawkesbury which is in mine. He will know particularly that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board had benefited our areas. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas lately announced a grant relating back to the good old Liberal days when that program existed.

How does the Hon. Member feel about the fact that in his budgetary measures, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has cancelled those regional programs which were good for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and Stormont—Dundas? Could he at the same time tell us what he thinks of the new tier structure under the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion which seriously affected our areas, making it not as attractive to invest there as it was before?

Mr. Warner: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) mentioned in his preamble that he represents a neighbouring constituency and he mentioned that our areas had not benefited as much from the econmic renewal as had other areas. I would have to point out to him that the riding of Stormont—Dundas along with Charlottenburg, which is part of my riding, and Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, have benefited substantially from the economic renewal.

A considerable number of new jobs have been created in the last couple of years. It is not only new industry that has come into our area but there has also been the expansion of many small businesses. Our unemployment rate has dropped significantly. The official unemployment rate is probably some 3 per cent lower than it was before. However, I do realize that the Hon. Member's riding has not benefited as much as my riding has, and there may be some specific problems or complications which have caused that.

I will tell the Hon. Member that my riding will continue to grow at an above average rate. Next year will be an even better year than this year or last year. This will not be because of government hand-outs or programs but because we have a sound basic economy which is growing and will continue to grow. There are over 1,500 small business people in the area who are progressive, positive-thinking people. They are expanding their businesses and will contribute to the creation of more jobs again next year.

The Hon. Member mentioned the CIRB Program which was an excellent program. He made reference to the good old days. The good old days carried on into the last couple of years. The CIRB Program was continued by this Government and money continued to be allocated until the program was wound down and died a natural death. Some people did not qualify for these grants. There were some industries that looked, sat around and waited and waited for perhaps a year or a year and a half until the bureaucratic process would approve or disapprove their applications. Some stayed, some went on. Some did not do anything. Some got fed up because someone else got money and they did not.

I hope that the Government discontinues many of these programs. This is not the way business decisions should be made. There are certain areas that do need assistance and these areas are quite obvious. However, to be fair, I believe that our areas will prosper and grow without the CIRB program.

There are other programs now in place and there is more money for training in our areas than there had been before. Sometimes it makes more sense to train the unemployed and put them into jobs required and demanded by industry than to throw money into a community on a holus-bolus basis. True, that was not always the case, but capital expansion and expenditures do not necessarily have the greatest impact on unemployment in an area. It is better to look at the jobless rate and then say: "Stormont, Dundas and Charlottenburg have really great people who are unemployed and want some job opportunities". So what we do is to look at an industry where there is a shortage of labour, and we train people, so that suddenly they are not unemployed, they are employed. It makes a big difference. I am quite proud of what has happened in our area recently.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired. On debate, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, Bill C-23 which is before us contains proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act, both personal and corporate income taxes, that were announced in the February 26, 1986 Budget, together with some other measures previously announced like the introduction of a minimum tax.

The Bill was first introduced in the House in June, 1986 as a Notice of Ways and Means motion, and reintroduced in October, 1986. However, the Government has detached two measures from the June motion: the prepayment of the child tax credit, Bill C-11 which has already been adopted by the House; and the increased limits for Registered Retirement Savings Plan contributions, which is still a Notice of Ways and Means motion.

So we are addressing in this Bill some of the issues on which we have already spoken since February 26, 1986. In the case of the personal income tax, we have here the Bill to give authorization to the introduction of a 3 per cent surtax on all individuals, which in fact became effective on July 1 last. We have the introduction of a minimum tax on certain taxpayers, the introduction of a refundable sales tax credit for low-income families, a special deduction for travel and housing for northern employees, an increase of $250 in the disability deduction to $2,860, a revision of the married exemption for the year of marriage, and modification to the tax treatment of dividends. In the case of a corporate income tax, over the next three years we have the elimination of the investment tax credit of 7 per cent and 10 per cent. However, the investment tax credit for the Maritimes will stay at 30 per cent, and the investment tax credit for Cape Breton will be increased to 60 per cent.

This Bill also gives effect to the elimination of the 3 per cent inventory allowance. This measure will take effect for the fiscal year 1986. There is a substantial reduction over the next three years of corporate income tax rates, with the general business rate being reduced from 36 per cent to 33 per cent, the rate for the manufacturing sector reduced from 30 per cent to 26 per cent, the rate for small businesses reduced from 15 per cent to 13 per cent, and the rate for small manufacturing businesses reduced from 10 per cent to 8 per cent. We also see some tightening up of the eligibility criteria for tax shelters in this Bill, in the case of limited partnerships, flow-through shares.

That is a summary of this Bill. Many of the issues are issues that we have spoken to before, therefore, my comments tonight will be brief.

When we go back to the Prime Minister's speeches, and the speeches of those who are now members of his Government prior to the 1984 election, we find a very great difference between what was in the election platform, and what we have actually seen since as policy. Both before and after the 1984 election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made many statements to the effect that they did not intend to fight the deficit by raising personal taxes. The Toronto Sun on November 29, 1984, wrote:

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney says he does not favour higher personal income taxes to reduce the swelling federal deficit because Canadians are already overtaxed.

The Toronto Star on June 1, 1985, quoted the Prime Minister as saying:

> Canadians are already overtaxed—Canadians are already paying a pretty hefty bundle for their government services. They feel they are paying enough and that view is not without its support in government and private industry and labour circles.

The Toronto Sun on November 29, 1984, stated:

> Finance Minister Michael Wilson said . . . he also does not want to raise personal income taxes.

CITY-TV, Toronto, August 28, 1984, quoted Finance Minister Michael Wilson as saying:

> We have no intention of raising income taxes to Canadians. What we have to do is get down government.

CTV Question Period, March 1, 1985, the Finance Minister stated:

> I don't want to increase taxes—I think we have a good deal of scope on the expenditure side to deal with the deficit problem. A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy and I don't want to see us do that.

Well, on this side of the House we have repeatedly pointed out that the massive increases in sales tax that we have seen since this Government came into power will certainly have a dampening effect on the economy. But since coming into power the Government seems to have changed its slogan from "jobs, jobs, jobs", to "tax, tax, tax". The Government has imposed tax increases, or new taxes in every Budget. There are taxes on top of taxes whose cumulative effect would bite a little deeper each year.

In the fiscal year 1986-87 alone, the Government's tax increases, including those in the Bill before us today, will bring into the Treasury an extra $5 billion. The effect on the individual family is significant. For example, a family with two children with a single salary of $30,000 a year will be paying $630 more this year because of the tax increases and the new taxes imposed by the Government. A single parent caring for two children and earning $20,000 a year will have to find ways to cope with increased taxes of $420 this year. An elderly couple on an income of $27,000, most likely a fixed income, will be paying about $500 more this year. None of these families is eligible for the sales tax rebate. According to the Government's standard for qualification, their incomes are too high. So there is nothing to offset this tax grab. Those who can least afford it will be hurt most by these tax increases. This is because people at the middle and lower ranges of the income scale have to spend what money they have on necessities. They cannot affort to put thousands of dollars a year into tax sheltered RRSPs, or to make investments and make tax exempt capital gains. So the impact of these tax increases is not spread evenly or fairly among taxpayers of low, middle, and high income.

Apart from the harshness of this, and the difficulty especially for low and middle-income families, there is the effect of that, effect that, as we predicted, the economy is showing some signs of slowing down. Perhaps I may continue after the vote.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, this is the most important tax reform Bill to come before the House of Commons this year and I am indeed surprised that the Opposition would not recognize that, particularly members of the Opposition who are on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. They have had an opportunity to review this Bill as it appeared in the Ways and Means motions of June, 1986 and October, 1986.

The Bill deals with some very serious issues that substantially change our tax laws in order to make those tax laws more equitable and to collect revenue from those who should pay taxes.

I would have thought that the New Democratic Party, having made an alleged study of taxes across the country, would have hailed this Bill as something they would have introduced if they were in power.

I want to take this time to talk about the issues involved. First, the former Government introduced a program of investment tax credits which were a form of double-dipping. Not only was there a generous system of capital cost allowances, there was a form of investment tax credit throughout the country, starting at 7 per cent.

This Bill phases out those investment tax credits. They ought to be phased out because their effect was to allow those who bought machinery and equipment to have not only generous capital cost allowances, but to have credits against their taxes for their investment. In order to provide the kind of fairness there should be in a tax system, it is only proper that those credits be phased out.

This Bill goes further because it deals with the horrendous rip-offs that seem to have taken place in our society with the misuse of limited partnerships. People could take tax reductions because they invested their money in a limited partnership that had leverage advantages. The effect of a limited partnership was that they could take a reduction and reduce their taxes payable, but not be at risk. According to this Bill, those who are in a partnership transaction or any business transaction and want a tax reduction or to take a capital cost allowance, can only do so if they are in fact at risk.

This is a very important Bill because it ensures that those people who should pay taxes do so. I am surprised that the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the finance critic for the Official Opposition, says that this is a Bill that raises taxes. I agree that it raises taxes, but it raises taxes for those who were getting away without paying taxes. That is what we intend to stop, but it apparently is something the Liberal Party would like to continue.

One of the most important issues raised by our side was the fact that people who were collecting money as a result of T bills were not paying tax on the profits from those transactions. According to this legislation, one must supply a social insurance number in order to cash one's T bill. When this legislation goes to the Finance Committee I will recommend that it be broadened to include all forms of government financing. There is no reason why people should escape taxation because they happen to lend money to the Government of Canada or the provinces or happen to take their income in the form of coupons. It is important that we view this legislation as the tax reform Bill that it is.

Bill C-23 is designed to ensure that those people pay their fair share in taxes. That is the nature of the tax reform we will be introducing in the next Budget. It is tax reform designed to make sure that we can reduce the rate of taxation and lower the individual's requirement to pay. This Bill is fair as it attempts to make sure that those who pay sales tax receive a sales tax rebate.

I suggest that this Bill should be passed immediately, and, on that basis, I move:

That the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moved that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act, be now read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: I advise Hon. Members that I have several rulings to bring before the House today. The first that I intend to deal with are questions of privilege raised a few days ago by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), one on November 6 and the other on November 21.

RELEASE OF INFORMATION BY MINISTER PRIOR TO INTRODUCTION IN HOUSE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Members will recall that following Question Period of November 6, 1986, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rose on a question of privilege regarding remarks made outside the House by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in relation to a Bill not yet then introduced. While the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap had not provided the Chair with the required notice pursuant to Standing Order 20(2), I undertook, nevertheless, to study the matter carefully, review our precedents and return to the House with a ruling.

I have now had an opportunity to review our precedents in such cases and have found no previous Speakers' rulings which would support the case made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. The role of the Chair when dealing with a matter of privilege or contempt of the House is only to establish that a prima facie case exists. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap will know that Beauchesne's Fourth Edition at page 57 states that: "The Speaker's jurisdiction does not extend to words outside the House".

Since no precedents could be found on this point, I referred to the general definition of acts or conduct which consist of breaches of privilege as described at page 143 of Erskine May's 20th Edition:

> It would be vain to attempt an enumeration of every act which might be construed into a contempt, the power to punish for contempt being in its nature discretionary.
> Certain principles may, however, be collected from the Journals which will serve as general declarations of the law of Parliament. It may be stated generally that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

In light of this reference in May, the Chair is unable to conclude that the conduct of the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as reported by the Hon. Member, has in any way impeded or obstructed any Members of the House in the discharge of their duty.

Furthermore, the House heard the Hon. Minister's explanation as it is reported at page 1147 of Hansard of November 6 as follows:

> —that except for members of the Opposition who were briefed this morning, no one else has been given a copy of the Bill and there was no intention that anyone else get a copy.

I must, therefore, rule that, although the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap may have a complaint or a grievance about statements made outside the House by a Minister of the Crown, a prima facie case of breach of parliamentary privilege has not been established.

ALLEGED PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF LEGISLATIVE CONTENT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I shall now deal with the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on November 21. I would first like to express my appreciation of the great care with which the Hon. Member presented his complaint and the conscientious research which he undertook in the preparation of his case. This was very helpful to the Chair.

I think it would be useful to reiterate the tests which the Chair must apply to a complaint before declaring that a prima facie case of privilege has been established. There are a number of questions which may be applicable depending on the nature of the complaint. Has the freedom of speech of an Hon. Member been menaced or called into question? Has an Hon. Member been obstructed in any way in the fulfilment of his or her parliamentary duty? Has any attempt been made through bribery or other corrupt means to influence an Hon. Member in an improper way? Has an Hon. Member been subjected to harassment, threats, abuse, physical violence or any other form of molestation in relation to his or her parliamentary conduct? Has the House as a whole been brought into disrepute through the action complained of? Finally, what evidence exists which might suggest the possibility of an affirmative answer to any of these questions? Obviously the Chair can only find that a prima facie case has been established if there is evidence to base it on.

The basis of the complaint of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is an allegation that an American citizen, by some means which do not appear to have been established, obtained prior knowledge of the contents of Bill C-22 before its introduction in the House. In the course of his presentation he referred to two United Kingdom precedents and a complaint raised in 1983 by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) relating to an incident which took place here in Canada. The cases referred to all concerned budget leaks. The U.K. cases were based on established facts. In one case, the Chancellor of the Exchequer acknowledged that he had committed an indiscretion and resigned. In the other, an investigation established that an impropriety had occurred and a Minister resigned in consequence. Incidentally, neither of these cases was dealt with by way of a question of privilege. In the Canadian case, Madam Speaker Sauve found that there was no basis for a question of privilege. Budget secrecy was a matter of convention and not a matter for the determination of the Chair.

To return to the case before us, the Chair must first determine what the facts are and, second, whether those facts constitute evidence of a prima facie case of privilege. The Hon. Member's case is based on certain comments made by a former President of the United States Parmaceutical Manufacturers Association in the course of a television interview. The Hon. Member made it clear that he was not implying that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) had revealed the contents of the Bill to the gentleman in question; and the Minister himself stated emphatically that while various consultations had taken place he had at no time been in contact with anyone in the United States. It therefore seems to the Chair that incontrovertible facts are lacking.

I must also make reference to the contribution of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who suggested that under our new Standing Order 1, the Chair is no longer bound by established precedents relating to matters of privilege and that, to quote his own words, it is open to the Chair: "to extend the definition of privilege to new areas". It is important, though, that we do not confuse privilege with procedure. In matters of procedure, the new Standing Order 1 possibly enlarges the scope of the House in determining procedure in unprovided cases. The limits of privilege, though, are laid down by statute. It is not open to the Chair to extend the definition of privilege. This could only be done by legislation and would involve an amendment to the Constitution. I must therefore rule that no facts have been presented on which a prima facie case of privilege could be based.

I think it is appropriate for the Chair to remind all Hon. Members that these kinds of incidents do cause grave concern among Hon. Members and I believe it is a good reason why extra special care should be taken, especially by Ministers, to ensure that matters that ought properly to be brought to the House do not in any way get out in the public domain and cause concern to Hon. Members and often to Ministers as well.

I want to thank all Hon. Members who participated in the debate on both motions of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap and I hope the comments that I made will be helpful to all Hon. Members. I thank them.

DEBATES "BLUES"—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I said yesterday that I also had prepared a ruling in response to the motion of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

[English]

On November 6, during a discussion on a point of order relating to petitions, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) drew to the attention of the Chair that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) was apparently quoting from the "blues". The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis reminded the House of the long established practice that the "blues" are not to be quoted in debate and that the only official report, the House of Commons Debates or Hansard, can be quoted.

The Parliamentary Secretary pointed out that thanks to television and modern technology, we can now play back a speech or comment, have it transcribed and use it in debate later on the same day.

The Chair is pleased to inform the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis that our customary parctice was observed by Hansard; the blues of the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) or the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) were not provided by Hansard to the Parliamentary Secretary or to any other Member. In fact, as we can read at page 1149 of Hansard of November 6, during the discussion in the House, the Parliamentary Secretary did not say that he was quoting from the blues.

[English]

In reviewing this matter, the most recent statement by the Speaker on the use of the "blues" in debate that can be found dates back to December 2, 1976, and that is just before the advent of television in the House of Commons. Speaker Jerome reaffirmed the practice that "blues" should not be quoted in debate. The logic for not using the "blues" in debate is obvious. The "blues" are the reporters' notes and often are edited to become the official report. It would not be reasonable to admit into debate galley proofs that tomorrow may indeed be different in their final form. As your Speaker, I feel bound by this practice and will continue to remind Hon. Members to refrain from quoting from anything but the official report of the House.

This ruling, however, leaves the House in a difficult position: it is possible for Members to obtain electronically what was said the same day and to use quotes from the electronic medium in debate without identifying them as part of the official report. The dilemma for the House is the following: is the Chair enforcing a practice that has become technologically outdated? By enforcing an outdated practice is the Chair encouraging Members to do indirectly what they are not supposed to do directly? Furthermore, the average Canadian citizen with a video recorder, receiving the House of Commons television signal, can obtain for himself or herself an instant play-back of what was said and by whom. While Hansard remains the official record of what was said, the 24-hour delay in its publication no longer satisfies the demand for information by a growingly impatient and technologically literate population.

Consequently, the Chair firmly believes that while maintaining the rule against the use of the "blues", it is however time for the Standing Committee on Procedures and Elections to review the question of the "blues", their distribution and the relationship between the official Hansard and what has come to be known as the electronic Hansard. My predecessors have often requested such a review and, while tempted to do so, I have decided that I ought not to dictate to the House on this question for it is a very important one and I look forward with anticipation to some early direction from the Standing Committee and the House on this matter.

I want to thank Hon. Members for their comments, and especially the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), because this is a very important question. I also hope that the Chair's invitation to have this very important question considered in committee will meet with the approval of the Members of this House.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order No. 106, I have the honour to present a petition which has been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions. In the petition the people of Snow Lake, Flin Flon, The Pas, Thompson, and Leaf Rapids, all communities within my riding, express their opposition to the federal Government's decision to change the Patent Act which they believe will increase prescription drug costs to many Canadian consumers and restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy prescription drugs.

In their petition the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of constituents from the riding of Ottawa—Vanier, which says that the changes the federal Government wishes to make in the Patent Act as it applies to pharmaceutical products will increase the price of drugs for Canadian consumers. These changes will also prevent many people from buying the drugs they need and will have a particular impact on people whose condition requires the continuing use of drugs. These changes will lead to higher costs for provincial health insurance plans and are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States as part of the free trade talks, to the detriment of the consumer.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have also several petitions dealing with the fact that the Government has imposed the tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. The tariff has little negative affect on the publishing industry of the United States yet it penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and culture. Rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. The undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries with respect to free trade negotations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CLOSURE OF CADET CAMP SASKADET

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It is signed by about 750 of my constituents who want to communicate their dissatisfaction and disappointment regarding the impeding closure of Saskatchewan's only cadet camp, Saskadet, situated at Round Lake, Saskatchewan. These constituents rely on this camp for their cadet training. They humbly call upon Parliament to request the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) to consider the possibility of keeping this camp operable.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition from a number of Canadians in which they express their concern about the changes proposed by the Government with respect to the Patent Act. These people indicate they are worried that the price of drugs will increase as a result of the proposed changes. They are therefore calling on Parliament to reject these proposals.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege today, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to table a petition signed by residents of Luceville, Saint-Anaclet, Saint-Gabriel, Mont-Joli, Rimouski and a number of other communities in the riding of Matane in Quebec, who support the efforts of the Opposition to prevent the passage of amendments proposed by the Government that will lead to an increase in the price of drugs.

GASOLINE PRICES—LIMITED COMPETITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): I have another petition signed by residents of Red Lake and surrounding communities in my riding. The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to discourage limitations on competition in the oil and gas industry and ensure that Petro-Canada passes on lower oil prices to its consumers.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my third petition this morning is signed by residents of Truro, Shubenacadie, Great Village and several other communities in Nova Scotia. The petition calls upon the federal Government to reject changes to the Patent Act which will lead inevitably to higher drug prices for Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my fourth petition is signed by residents of Calgary, Lethbridge, Edmonton and other communities in the Province of Alberta. The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that all low level training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base cease and that negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base cease. They are very concerned, of course, about the hunting and way of life of native people in that particular area.

USE OF SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed mainly by residents of Toronto. I am glad to be presenting this petition on a day when we are debating the situation with the Post Office because the petition calls upon Parliament to prevent the spread of the so-called super mailboxes as a substitute for door-to-door delivery.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of eastern Canadians from Atlantic Canada who protest the Government's intention to proceed with the amendments to the Patent Act which will result in increased prescription drug prices to Canadians.

USE OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to draw to your attention that on December 5, at the close of the day, the Acting Speaker said the following at page 1853 of Hansard:

> I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) that he is unable to be present in the House on Monday, December 8, 1986, to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business. Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence.
> Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended, and pursuant to Standing Order 39(2) the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

I raise this matter because I noticed, in recalling the vote yesterday, that the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) was in fact in the House at the designated time for Private Members' Business. I also recall that immediately following, the Government moved to extend the hours of the sitting. Immediately, once that had taken place at second reading, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was the only person to rise to speak from the Government benches. He moved that the question be now put which brought the extended hours to an end.

It seems to me there may be a case to be made whereby the Government might have misused its powers and the time of Private Members' Hour to manipulate the business of the House to allow just that to take place, to allow the Government to extend the hours to complete second reading of the Bill which had simply been introduced for the first time at second reading that day.

It seems to me a potentially very serious question has been raised.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it from what the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said that he is raising an important matter but he is not making any sort of charge against the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). I only want that clarified because the Hon. Member for Peterborough is not here at the moment. I would not want the Hon. Member who is speaking now to continue without the Hon. Member being able to hear what might be said. I take it there is no charge against the Hon. Member for Peterborough.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention on that very important point. Indeed, I was simply raising an observation as to the way business had been conducted in the House. We were informed at the latest moment yesterday that the Hon. Member for Peterborough was unable to be here to introduce and debate his Private Members' Bill. I noticed during the vote that in fact the Hon. Member was in his place at the designated time. There seems to be some inconsistency here, particularly when one considers the proceedings of the House that took place immediately thereafter.

On a point of order, I ask that Your Honour give some consideration to this matter. As the Standing Orders now require, when notice is given the day before, Private Members' Hour is simply eliminated and the business of the day continues. This allowed the Government to bring in its members to call for extended hours and then used that time to eliminate any further debate at the second reading stage of Bill C-23.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has the point of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I see there are other Members rising to speak to this point and I think I should probably call upon the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because we do not want to delay the debate on the opposition motion any longer than members of the Opposition have already delayed it with their petitions.

First, I wish to point out that the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) had the courtesy to advise the Chair and the House that he would be unavailable at 5 p.m. yesterday to move his motion. I know that my colleague was not reflecting upon the Hon. Member's absence from the House at that time. However, it seems to me that he has every right to say that he cannot be here at 5 p.m. and then come in at 6 p.m. or 6.15 p.m. and vote. The point is that he gave notice that he would not be here at 5 p.m. I do not think that he in any way abused that right by being here at 6.15 p.m. to vote.

The second point I wish to make is that the Hon. Member himself was the one who initiated the action which dropped him to the bottom of the list. As the Chair stated: "Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence". So the Hon. Member made the decision himself to have his order of business dropped to the bottom of the list.

Having said those things, I want to specifically reject any suggestion that the Government in any way was trying to manipulate the business of the House or in any way manipulate Private Members' Business. We have made it a very firm practice not to become involved in Private Members' Business. That is an hour in which Private Members bring forward their own pieces of legislation and motions. I reject that argument categorically.

I point out that the complaint seems to be revolving around the extension of hours. I also point out that no member of the Opposition saw fit to participate in the debate after the motion with respect to the extension of hours was agreed to. Obviously, there was no Government participation in the dropping of the motion; the Member decided to do it himself. There was no manipulation. When the motion with respect to the extension of hours was agreed to, members of the Opposition saw the wisdom of our legislation and allowed it to go to committee on division.

I do not think there is really any point of order. We feel that when Private Members' Hour is not proceeded with that the business of the country should go forward. That is simply all we did.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the last sentence spoken by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is subject to some controversy. I do not think and I do not believe that when Private Members' Hour is vacated it should automatically become an hour in which to discuss Government business. I have said that before in the House and I will say it again. Private Members' Hour should and would in my opinion be much better off if kept at that, Private Members' Hour, and not be given back to Government Orders. In fact, I have a motion on the Order Paper today calling for exactly that. I am calling for a change to Standing Order 43 which would give private Members of the House that one-hour period which is set aside four times a week and in which they are allowed to debate their issues.

The question the Parliamentary Secretary raises with a straight face—and God knows I am not accusing him of anything—is somewhat doubtful. The Hon. Member is a gentleman and I believe him when he tells us that the Government has not been manipulative. The Government profits from the fact that it is given the time when a private Member cannot be here to move his motion. In my opinion that is regrettable. It is something which has to be changed. Our present Standing Orders are provisional and will expire at the end of this month. If the Government wishes to extend them into January then it had better come to grips with this important issue.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have but a short intervention to make. The Parliamentary Secretary seemed to indicate in his reply that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had said that the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) was here to vote at six o'clock or some time thereafter. If Your Honour would take a look at the Hansard of yesterday at page 1894 you would see that it indicates that the Hon. Member for Peterborough was here to vote shortly after five o'clock and that he obviously could have been available to introduce his Bill at that time.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard the interventions of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap and other Hon. Members. The Chair takes note of the strong recommendation put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) concerning the question of the loss of Private Members' Hour. I am not entirely sure that the Chair can assist Hon. Members in any ruling, but I will give the matter some consideration. I am, of course, as I think any Speaker would be, extremely concerned about consideration that Hon. Members must give to the rules and to the fact that some of them are provisional. I think it would be advisable if all Hon. Members took careful note of what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has said.

With respect to the specific complaint of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, the Chair will consider his comments and return to the Chamber in due course. As I have said, I am not sure there is very much that the Speaker can do about the situation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I add one item to that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary because the Chair is basically benevolent. I would not want to leave this as a precedent for inviting Members to reargue a case. As I understand it, the Hon. Member has an additional point.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is correct. I only bring it up in the interests of being helpful. It seems to me that when we discuss a matter such as this the question of dropping a particular person's motion is one thing, but how to substitute another person's motion is something else. If Your Honour looks at the Projected Order of Business for today it is noted that on Thursday the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has a motion or a Bill. The thinking at the time was that we could not move Thursday's matter forward to Monday because there might be Hon. Members who would want to speak to that matter on Thursday who would have scheduled their time accordingly. Similarly, Friday's motion has the same consideration. We did not want to bring it forward because it would disrupt the way in which people might be organizing their time to make comments on a motion. That is the reason we did not have a solution. I suggest it is something we will want to look at.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the additional information. I will consider the matter.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 32? I have a reply.

*EXPENSES OF FORMER MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Question No. 32—Ms. McDonald:

1. Were the Expenses of the visit of the former Minister of National Defence to "Tiffany's" in Lahr in November, 1984 paid for out of public funds, either by the Minister's office or the Canadian Armed Forces, or paid for personally by the Minister?

2. Is it the policy of the Government to pay for expenses incurred in such establishments for travelling politicians and public servants?

3. Are the services of prostitutes and escort services allowable deductions as business expenses for taxation purposes?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in response to the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), we would advise as to Question No. 1 that neither the Minister's office nor the Department of National Defence has any record that the former Minister of Defence paid out public moneys during his visit to Tiffany's in Lahr in November 1984.

The reply to Questions 2 and 3 is as follows: in light of the above reply by the Department of National Defence, it should not be necessary to answer these parts.

I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—CANADA POST—PROPOSED INCREASE—POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That this House urge the Government to require Canada Post to forego the 2 cent postal rate increase planned for the new year, to reject the planned closure of hundreds of rural post offices, to reconsider the decision to replace door to door postal delivery in new suburban areas with super post offices boxes, to reconsider the ongoing reductions in urban postal services, and furthermore, that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by making note of the fact that the motion before the House shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government. This is something that has come about as a result of efforts at parliamentary reform and to make this institution more relevant and more able to have an impact on the policy and decision-making processes of the Government without getting locked into partisan positions.

This motion offers an opportunity for all Hon. Members from all Parties to have their say about the postal service. It offers an opportunity to send a message to the post office and to the Minister responsible for the post office about how Canadians feel about the postal service in a way that is explicit and clear without calling into question confidence in the Government.

I invite all Hon. Members, not only members of the opposition Parties but also members of the Conservative Party, to give very serious consideration to this motion. Not only will the motion not call into question confidence in the Government but it is a votable motion so it offers an opportunity for Hon. Members to stand up and be counted.

I turn now to my comments with regard to the postal service itself. The policy that is being followed now with regard to postal service, Mr. Speaker, is a disaster. It is a disaster because it is asking Canadians to accept less service at the same time as they are being asked to pay more for it. In my view, we must go back to square one and find a new direction for the Post Office to take. We must establish a policy that will result in measurable improvements in service rather than the present policy which will result in a deterioration of service and a plan that promises a continuation of that trend.

I would like to touch on three aspects of the Post Office, Mr. Speaker: first, postal rates; second, postal service; and third—

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has referred to you as Mr. Speaker. I would like him to take a good, hard look at you to see that you are not a Mr. Speaker but rather a Madam Speaker.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I hope my hon. friend takes as much concern for exactitude with regard to postal policy as he does with regard to decorum in the House. We will find out later on in the day where he stands, Madam Speaker.

To reiterate briefly, I would like to touch on three aspects of the postal service which clearly indicate that we are dealing with deterioration in postal service and that the policy that has been proposed is a disaster. I want to touch on postal rates, on service and on consultation.

With regard to postal rates, the Post Office has asked us to approve of an increase of two cents in the first-class rate. There are a number of alternative ways to respond to this request. First, we could simply say yes; we could tell the Post Office that the sky is the limit and whatever the Post Office wants in the way of increases in rates, it can have because it has earned it. On the other hand, we could say no, never; there is never any justification for an increase in postal rates because we are already paying too much. I know that many people feel that way. However, there is a third alternative and that is to have a rational basis on which to judge requests for postal rate increases. That is what I wish to suggest.

The Post Office and the Minister responsible for the post office have asked for an increase in first-class rates of two cents for this year and they have also asked for increases in other rates about which they have not yet told us. They will only tell us about that when it is too late to put a stop to the process.

The Post Office has said that it wants to tie postal rate increases now and in the future to inflation and to something called uncontrollable costs. I would suggest that postal rates be tied to quality of service and measurable improvements in service. Over the last few years, people have seen a drastic deterioration in the postal service. They are fed up with continued requests to accept a deterioration in service at the same time they are asked to pay more for the service. This has been the trend for some time and needs to be reversed.

One justification for a rate increase is the Post Office deficit. We used to call the deficit a public subsidy for postal service. In the last couple of years it has been relabelled as a deficit, a negative term. The plan is put forward as a way to eliminate the deficit, but it will not. It will again relabel it as a subsidy for specific services and add that in when determining whether the Post Office has balanced its books or not. Even though the Post Office is claiming it will eliminate the deficit, if you closely examine the plan it will not.

Commercial rates are not adequately examined in this plan. They will go up by a greater percentage than the first-class rate, but the plan does not acknowledge that they start from a lower base and will therefore remain drastically lower than first-class rates. We have to ask whether or not commercial rates can make a greater contribution to Post Office revenues. Then there is the question of the rate for periodicals and weekly newspapers. That rate is subsidized and this plan throws a cloud over those subsidies. It raises concerns about whether or not the publishers of those periodicals will remain viable.

I now want to move directly to the question of service. How long does it take to get a letter? What is happening to rural service? Whether it goes across the country or from Winnipeg to Vancouver, people are fed up with having to wait a couple of weeks for a letter to be delivered. We constantly hear complaints about aggravating delays. The plan promises on-time delivery. For example, mail will be delivered in urban centres within a couple of days. There are standards for inter-city and interprovincial mail. However, these standards simply water down existing standards. They allow more time for mail to be delivered and the Post Office can then claim a higher percentage of on-time delivery. Performance reports put out by the Post Office itself indicate that these standards held out as a new level of performance have in fact been met in the past. This is simply an attempt to put a new face on an old and inadequate service.

As to rural mail delivery, the people in rural communities are up in arms over this issue. They are worried silly about reductions in service. Last weekend I was in Thunder Bay and visited some of the smaller communities in that area. The people there are dependent upon mail for their sense of community. Small businesses depend on the mail for delivery of parts or other equipment. The Post Office plan projects a continuation of the reduction in rural service and closure of rural post offices. The people affected want this stopped. They want a recognition of their right to equal and adequate service. They are shocked that the Post Office, backed up by the Minister, is planning to introduce these so-called super-mailboxes into rural areas. Instead of having mail delivered to the lot line or the home, people will have to put up with these supermailboxes which have been found to be inadequate in urban areas.

Then we have the question of the red mailboxes disappearing from city streets. People now have to travel greater distances to deposit their mail. People in suburban areas are angry at the discrimination involved when their neighbour gets door-to-door delivery and they have to put up with these superboxes.

We have a continued reduction in service, a deterioration in the quality of that service, and at the same time an increase in rates requested in the plan presented by the Post Office to the Government. The Post Office should be retreating from this plan but it has already been approved.

How did this plan come about? What was the process? It was developed behind closed doors and that is one of its major failings. Every time we point this out to the Government, the Government in turn points to the Marchment Commission Report. It says the Commission went across the country and asked people what they thought. However, the inadequacy of that response lies in the fact that when Marchment went across the country he did not have the Post Office's projected plan so he was unable to consult specifically. He could not ask the people how they felt about this specific plan or that specific plan and whether they had any comments on it. There has simply been no public involvement in the development of this plan. It would have gone ahead but for the fact that when the Minister presented it to the Government caucus they revolted, and quite legitimately. They said there was no way they would stand for this kind of reduction in postal service.

The Minister sent it to committee. Unfortunately the committee has limited its activities to questioning the President of the Post Office. It has failed to have other witnesses appear before it or to travel across the country so that ordinary Canadians could tell the Government what they think of the plan of the Post Office. The plan was developed behind closed doors, and we see the result.

I should like to round out the picture. Postal services have been inadequate up to this point in time. Its plan is a disastrous one because it intends more of the same. Its intention is to ask us for increased postal rates, not only the two cents highlighted in the newspapers but annual increases and increases tied to inflation and to uncontrollable costs. The President of the Post Office admitted before the committee that he was looking toward a 40 cent stamp. That was only his estimation. What will it be in reality by the time the five year plan is up? The Post Office has a series of other increases in rates which has not been shared with us. We do not know the full implication of the cost increases to pay for the Post Office which Canadians will have to bear. The tragedy is that the Government is asking us for increased postal rates at the same time as it is asking us to put up with continued reductions in service.

The reductions in service are so drastic that people in rural areas are up in arms. They are saying that they will not allow them to sabotage the service upon which they depend, a service which is part of community life. Urban people are saying: "Stop discriminating against us; stop imposing supermail-boxes upon us". Canadians in general are saying that they want reliable mail service. They want their mail to arrive on time. They want to use the Post Office rather than use couriers.

In conclusion, the plan which Canada Post has presented and which the Government has supported until now calls for increased postal rates and continued reductions in services. This spells disaster for ordinary Canadians. It is time Parliament sent a message to the Government that we will not put up with such an approach to postal services. They must go back to square one and completely rethink their plan.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to make a few comments at this point. I should first like to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) for presenting his motion. It is a very timely debate in that many Canadians are concerned about the level of service of the Post Office and the direction in which the Government appears to be taking it. I also thank him for raising the matter in this particular manner. It allows government Members to vote on how they feel about the Post Office and the role it plays without being forced into a situation of casting a vote of non-confidence in the Government. That is a very important distinction. It is a distinction which the people in charge of parliamentary reform deliberately set out as a new direction which could be taken by Members of Parliament. We are no longer forced to vote strictly along party lines. On days such as this, we will be able to vote according to what we believe should be happening without reflecting upon government actions.

I have a question for the Hon. Member. After his extensive travels to all parts of Canada on behalf of the NDP caucus, what does he believe to be the essential concern of Canadians; is it rapidly increasing costs of the postal service, or is it that service is deteriorating and people no longer have faith in Canada Post to deliver their mail in an appropriate length of time?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the primary concern of Canadians is in the area of deterioration in service. People want the Government to take a serious look at the Post Office and redesign it so that they receive their mail on time and receive equitable service. They want the Government to work out a plan to fund the service. However, they want the Government to acknowledge first that the Post Office provides a service and that it is the Government's job to design it in a way that the Post Office can deliver the service. They also expect the Government to develop ways to finance the service. They are not satisfied with the Government's attitude that all we need to do with the Post Office is balance its books; that it does not matter what happens to the service in the process, as long as the books are balanced. The Government has a greater responsibility. It must ensure service at the same time as it ensures adequate revenue in order to support it.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise today as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Government Operations to address the motion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). At the outset I can do nothing but condemn the action of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: I will deal with the reasons for condemning the motion today. It is quite obvious that the Hon. Member has no respect for the House. A week ago a similar motion was introduced and they filibustered it. It was a total waste of an opposition day. They came to the House with a similar motion, presented petitions, and talked about every other thing so that they did not have to bring forward the motion. That is what they did last week. What kind of action is that from an Hon. Member from Winnipeg? What purpose was there in such action? On the basis of that alone, we must condemn the action of today.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I enjoy the vigour of my hon. friend's comments. However, I wonder if we could have a little guidance on whether or not it is entirely parliamentary for the Hon. Member to indicate that I have no respect for the House. Perhaps that is carrying the rhetoric a little too far.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) would agree with the Chair if it were to remind him to talk on the motion before the House today, not on events which happened last week.

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I will try to refrain from further comments on that particular issue.

I should like to deal with the Canada Post Corporation and how it became such. Let us think about that for a minute. In the past there were tremendous disruptions in the postal service. Before I was a Member of the House there were strikes or disruptions, sometimes every eight months. There were many problems. I suppose members of the New Democratic Party take one side, that is, the side of the striker. They never think what cost that might put upon Canada Post or who should pay for it.

Mr. Parry: There has not been a strike in the corporation.

Mr. Holtmann: That is right. They have supported Crown corporations, and now the Hon. Member is almost condemning a Crown corporation. One must wonder, even with regard to the Canada Post Corporation, on what side of the fence Members of the NDP sit. In this case they condemn a Crown corporation. They also condemn us for doing away with some of them. However, with regard to Crown corporations in Manitoba, they are thinking of closing some of them down themselves. Did you know that, Madam Speaker? The New Democratic Party Government in Manitoba is thinking of closing some post offices because they are losing money, not making money.

It is difficult to understand from where the Member is coming. He says that we should condemn the proposed 2 cent increase. If the Canada Post workers went on strike tomorrow I would like to know where the Member thinks Canada Post could get the money to pay a 5 per cent increase, if that is what they went for. Where would the money come from, other than going to the people of Canada telling them to pay a little more for stamps? From where does the Hon. Member think the money will come? He, though, would be standing on the workers side. He would be saying: "We don't care where it comes from, just give them the money."

In the last five to 10 years the federal Government under the Liberal regime deficited everything. Everything was deficited, deficited and deficited until we ended up with a deficit of about $180 billion. I would like the Hon. Member to know that when people voted for a change in 1984, they voted for us to get the deficit reduced. That is why both opposition Parties were left in shambles with only 70 seats. Let me remind the Hon. Member that we are acting as prudently as we can in trying to help Canadians achieve something for our future generations. We do not want to leave them with a tremendous burden.

We know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre went on a one-man crusade from coast to coast on behalf of his Party. Sometimes there were only five people at his meetings. I do not recall once reading about this great crusade. Further, the Member who has proposed the motion sits on the Standing Committee on Government Operations, and rather than bringing forward the positive suggestions he has gained from this one-man crusade he condemns. We have heard him say: "I hate those supermailboxes." But he does not suggest how they could be fixed, he just condemns them. I think I once heard his leader say "What the Government ought to do—", but I have yet to hear the Member say what Canada Post ought to do. All we hear is condemnation and that is opposition mentality. The New Democrats will be in that position for a long time because they do not know how to think offensively and positively.

Mr. Nystrom: We know how to think offensively.

Mr. Holtmann: Where is the New Democratic Party's plan for Canada in every area, Madam Speaker? Where is the New Democrats plan for the Canada Post Corporation and where are their plans for Canada? Where are they? Do you know when they will come out? They will come out about two months before the next election. The New Democrats will have a think tank and will have a moral victory on their plan which will be the most exciting thing that Canadians have ever heard of. We will be waiting, waiting and waiting for this wonderful plan.

Today we are debating a motion. We have powers to do something because the Minister referred Canada Post's problem to the committee and the Member from Winnipeg North Centre sits on that committee. He has the option of giving direction along with his other colleagues. Since the committee has sat, we have had 57 Members who have brought forth points of view. That is democracy in action.

We have been asked to report to the House and to bring forward some substantial ideas. But the Member from Winnipeg North Centre could not wait. Today he had to bring forward something of his own thinking, part of which is to condemn the proposed 2 cent increase in postage. He does not know from where Canada Post will get more revenue tomorrow. Then, "we will improve service". In nearly every area in which there will be some change in Canada Post, he suggests that we stop it. He has never provided an alternative plan, which is typical of the Member's Party. His Party has no alternatives. All the New Democrats want to do is condemn. They condemn the Government today just because that is opposition thinking.

Mr. Nystrom: The people of Canada do too.

Mr. Holtmann: I do not know whether the Member knows what is going to happen tomorrow. He is hoping that he can find something else that he and his colleagues can condemn our Government for. When you get right down to it, Madam Speaker, he has not fooled a lot of Canadians. His one-man team from coast to coast on behalf of his Party did not bring forth one substantial recommendation, not in this House. The Member for Winnipeg North Centre is the official postal critic for his Party. The critic from the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) set forth a tone and a problem. The Member from Winnipeg North Centre followed right behind him. He is not sure who he should follow anymore. This kind of action does not bring forth good thought for the committee, the committee of which I am in charge. The Member is charged to act responsibly. Our committee intends to bring forward some recommendations to this House. I cannot divulge what they are because we have yet not completed our work, but we do intend to do something, Madam Speaker.

We are looking at the Canada Post Corporation, and in committee Members of this House have expressed concerns and problems about the Corporation. But why not deal with them in an intellectual way and make recommendations? I have told Members and even mentioned to the press that we intend to be a sort of watchdog over this Crown corporation through this committee. Our mandate is to look at the workings of Canada Post Corporation. The mandate does does not say that just because we are going to report to the House that we will stop doing that. For the Member for Winnipeg North Centre to suggest everything is all over is wrong. Goodness gracious, Madam Speaker, this is not the intention at all.

Here we are operating under new rules with a new mandate, yet the Member decides that this is an ideal time, the second time, to bring forward a motion to this House on an opposition day concerning Canada Post. I thought when we started today that the New Democrats were going to filibuster again. They brought forth petitions. I know that we should not get too close to those kinds of concerns, Madam Speaker, so let me continue.

There have been problems. Things started with pigeons hauling mail around at one time, if we go back to Galileo days or earlier. No two people from coast to coast in Canada have always received the same service. I have never had mail delivered to my door. I am sure that most of the people in this House have not had door-to-door delivery if they come from rural Canada. As changes occur from time to time we cannot expect the same service. Canada Post becomes more modern with new devices, new technology and electronic mail, which in some ways is like the railways. We are abandoning some railway lines because it makes sense to do so. Some post offices will have to close. It is the reality of life. At one time in my riding we had a thriving community of 250 people. This community now has six houses and I believe 19 residents, but it still has a post office. The costs are tremendous. That service could be changed. We perhaps need to look at where new trading exists.

These things have been discussed in committee by the Member from Winnipeg North Centre and the Member for Gander—Twillingate. They know the realities about changes coming forward. They realize that, but I think they also want to demonstrate in certain areas that there are concerns. Nothing else was asked than to allow the committee to do its work. But that could not happen today. That could not happen last week. We had to start with this proposal today. There is no sense to it. When the Member talks about stopping the proposed 2 cents increase, I guarantee that the Member and his entire Party would stand behind the unions if they asked for a 5 per cent increase. I do not know the exact number of the employees in the Corporation. He would stand behind them and say, "go for it, we are brothers". However, they would not determine who should pay for it. He is suggesing that the Minister should deficit it again. What is $150 million to the Canadian public? I think they were up to a $300 million deficit for the Canada Post Corporation because no common sense prevailed. That must stop. The Canadian public is demanding that we stop that type of action.

We will continue to hear Members of Parliament before our committee. I have denied no Member the right to come before the committee and express his or her views. Some may say I am not doing my job right, but I believe that Members of Parliament should have the right to express their views before committees. That is the way I like to run the committee and that is the way I will continue to run it on all subjects.

In conclusion, we cannot support this motion at this time as it is ludicrous. We want to allow the committee to do its work rather than allowing a one-man opposition day to do the work.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a few questions for my hon. colleague. I will not attack his rhetoric. He compared the closure of post offices to the closure of railway lines. He said that some post offices would have to close. He gave as an example of a community of 6,019 residents which still has a post office at a tremendous cost. Can the Member tell us the name of that community? Can he tell us how much that post office costs? In addition, how many post offices across Canada would he like to have closed? The president of Canada Post was forced to admit before the committee that several hundred post offices would close with no alternative put in place.

The Member spoke about fixing up the supermailboxes. Is he endorsing the use of the supermailbox in suburban communities? Is he endorsing the use of it in rural areas to substitute for lot line service, which is what Canada Post is planning? Does the Member endorse that for his own riding?

The Member spoke about the committee being a watch dog. If he wants the committee to be a watch dog, why has the committee closed the door after the horse is out of the barn with regard to postal rate increases? The majority of the committee is pushing this resolution and has decided to report to the House. This gives Canada Post a green light on its postal rate increase. If the Member is serious about the committee being a watch dog, why not continue the hearings until we get to the bottom of postal rate increases rather than allowing the Post Office to go ahead with them?

Mr. Holtmann: The community I used as an example was Sandridge, Manitoba, which had nine boxes at a cost of $6,800 and had revenues of $280. That post office was closed after consultations with the postal people in Winnipeg and myself as the Member of Parliament. We found the result of that closure to be very satisfactory for the people of that area. I have not received one letter of dissention on that. The next post office was only five miles down the road and the people were going there every day to buy their groceries anyway. That is one example of many.

The Member asked how many post offices I would like to have closed. I suppose the former Government would have closed none and had the taxpayers of Canada pay for them all. The attitude of that regime was "who cares?". However, I believe that we must find areas in which we can efficiently and fairly bring the service into reality. It made sense to abandon the railway when no one used it anymore. However, in the meantime it did not cost the Government millions of dollars to keep it open, so-called when it was not very efficient. There are alternate methods of transportation. The roadbed was used and that is working in some areas.

With regard to the supermailboxes, a great deal of concern was expessed by members of the committee. The Member for Gander—Twillingate has had a green box at the end of his road for 30 years and he never complained to us about it. I do not know whether he has ever written a letter. He may want to comment on that. I bet that a superbox would be better than the old ones in certain areas if the repairs which we have asked for are done.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, my question with regard to the superbox had to do with the substitution of superboxes for lot line service, for the delivery of mail to homes in rural areas. That is in the plan which the committee is now considering. The Hon. Member has said that he wants to have those boxes fixed up. Is he endorsing the use of those boxes as a substitute for home delivery in rural areas?

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, there is not a lot of home delivery in rural areas. I do not know where the Member toured. However, there are green postal boxes falling over on a lot of little corners in rural Canada. They have been there for 30 years. I suggest that the supermailbox is at least superior to that. That was a question asked by many members of the committee. We discussed at length the fact that the supermailbox should be repaired in order that it could replace and function better than the green mailboxes. Otherwise, there would be no point in installing them. We have been assured that the repairs will be carried out to make them secure. Time will tell whether that will be done satisfactorily. That concern was certainly raised. I have no doubt that the committee will address that issue in its report to the House, but I cannot state that that will be the case.

Mr. Fretz: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) for his wonderful address. He drew on his vast experience as a committee chairman and shared his information with us. He did an excellent job. I appreciate his tremendous insight into the problems which Canada Post is experiencing. I had the privilege of sitting in the committee for a couple of hours this morning and observing the fine job he did of chairing the committee.

I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. As he knows, the NDP voted with the Liberals and Conservatives to create a Crown corporation called Canada Post. At that time the Government was seeking self-sufficiency for Canada Post in five years. Given the Hon. Member's vast experience in this area, will the Hon. Member tell us why the NDP has changed its mind?

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I cannot answer that question directly in terms of what the Party does with its posturing to become more popular in Canada. They try many things, and I suppose that they hoodwink the Canadian public from time to time. I urge the committee member from the New Democratic Party to use the committee to effect change for the Crown corporation. I believe that this is a very viable solution under the new rules and mandate we have been given. There are problems with Crown corporations but we have a mechanism to deal with them. I believe the way in which we have been proceeding has been most effective and will continue to be so, even as we go on to other realms with our witnesses.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). There is one minute left.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I simply want to say to the Hon. Member who just spoke that he indeed has been fired up and eloquent today. He has given a very rousing, effective defence of an almost impossible Government posture. I do not agree with what he said, but I at least admire his spleen in trying to defend the Government.

The Member is chairman of the committee that is considering this whole matter and making recommendations to the Government. Notwithstanding all that he said today, can he give me as a Member of Parliament representing rural Newfoundland in this country an assurance that people in rural Newfoundland will continue to have rural postal service? When he asks rhetorically, "who cares", I tell him that I care. I tell him that rural Canadians who have minimal Government service care, and we want his assurance as chairman that indeed rural service as we now have it will be continued, as recommended by him and his committee. Will he give us that assurance?

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I welcome the question by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). I wish he had attended our committee hearings.

Mr. Tobin: I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. Holtmann: I indicated before that it did not matter if you were a member of the committee. The Member raises a very valid point that is not only expressed by him, but by other Members from all Parties. He asks if rural Canadians will still get postal service. I can assure him that I do not think any of us in the House would not want them to have postal service.

Mr. Tobin: Will we?

Mr. Holtmann: I am sure you will have postal service.

Mr. Tobin: Rural postal service?

Mr. Holtmann: I am sure you will have rural postal service.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Madam Speaker, it is rather interesting to listen to the chairman of the committee. This morning, beginning at nine o'clock, he chaired a committee that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said on Friday really holds in its hands the future of postal service in Canada. Urban and rural Canadians are concerned about the Post Office and are wondering if they will be able to get mail any longer.

Canada Post has gone with total mechanization, automatic postal machines and automatic post office boxes. I suppose that Canadians actually believe that there will no longer be human beings handling the mail. We have seen the "super-duper mailbox" or the "super-blooper" mailbox, or "super-flop" mailbox, as we call it.

The Conservative Government has awarded more money this year and next year for new capital expenditures to that great Crown corporation of Canada Post than ever before in its history. The Government is providing for new capital expenditure for machines, but there is no expenditure for people. I suppose that is the source of funds to purchase the 30 new Chryslers at headquarters the other day. I suppose that is the source of money to purchase the 43 cars for the executives at the headquarters of Canada Post. The money is certainly not to hire the letter carriers and make sure that the mail is delivered door to door. It certainly is not to pay the salary of the postmasters or postmistresses in rural Canada, some of whom work half time, quarter time or even less.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interfere with the flying rhetoric, but the Hon. Member's point with respect to the purchase of cars is a very serious charge. I have taken it upon myself to check into it. I know the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House, so I would remind him that it is in fact an erroneous piece of information.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair believes that is debate rather than a point of order. Now that the Parliamentary Secretary has put this on the record, he may want to discuss it further later today.

Mr. Baker: You are absolutely right, Madam Speaker. There is a longstanding rule in the Chamber that one does not question a Member's accuracy on a particular point, whether it is true or false.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: In order to correct the record, let me say that I assume that General Motors made quite a gift to Canada Post recently.

Mr. Forrestall: I thought it was Chrysler Corporation. You better get it straight.

Mr. McKenzie: This afternoon it will be Ford.

Mr. Baker: The fact of the matter is that when the Conservative Government was elected two years ago it said that Canada Post would break even and become self-sufficient. Under this glorious Government, Canada Post is shutting down rural Post Offices. In the last six months, 48 Post Offices bit the dust, mostly in western Canada and, of course, in Conservative ridings. There were seven Post Offices in Atlantic Canada, two of which closed in Newfoundland recently.

Let me give an example of what Canada Post does. Its officials went door to door and told residents of a place called Country Road in Newfoundland, about four miles from Bay Roberts, that their post office will be closed but they will have a free post office box for a year, four miles away in Bay Roberts. Of course, the people assumed that they had to accept this decision. This is gradually happening across the country.

I might say that neither post office was closed in my riding, nor was one closed or slated to be closed in the riding of the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). However, post offices are being closed on the east coast, south coast and north coast of Newfoundland.

There are 5,221 post offices in rural Canada, 3,521 of which are up for privatization in the future. According to the postal plan, 1,700 will disappear either through amalgamation or replacement with a combination of franchising and super-mailboxes. You can see, Madam Speaker, what a drastic change has been made in Canada Post recently with this postal plan which was approved by the Conservative Cabinet in October and announced in the House in November.

The Minister responsible for Canada Post and the Prime Mininster keep saying, well, you know, the House of Commons Committee will have a look at the postal plan. But, Madam Speaker, they approved the postal plan in Cabinet in October of this past year. They were the ones who said that for all time in Canada there will be no more door-to-door mail delivery. Suppose a person decides to build a house in a subdivision in Ottawa or Toronto or some urban area. I do not know very much about that because I am from rural Newfoundland. But imagine, Madam Speaker, spending $100,000 or $150,000 on a home only to discover that for all time there will never be door-to-door mail delivery to your home, although around the corner is another street which has door-to-door mail delivery? What would that do to the value of the House if one wanted to sell it? Obviously, to be able to say you have door-to-door mail delivery is better than saying one has to go down to the corner a block away to a box to pick up one's mail. It is obvious that the property would be of greater value if there was door to door mail delivery.

What a change of policy from the Act which Parliament passed in 1981. At that time it was clearly stated that Canada Post will maintain an equity of service in given areas, that there will be a quality of service in similar circumstances. That is in the Act. But a postal plan was approved which omits that in its objectives. It takes that equity away. We are told, you can have door to door mail delivery here and superboxes—or super-blooper boxes—over here. A plan has been approved where all of our rural areas could be changed.

The Standing Committee met this morning at nine o'clock. The chairman stood in the House a few moments ago and was angry with the New Democratic Party. He was very vocal about what the New Democratic Party said. I must admit to the House now that I was the person who nominated the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) as chairman of the Standing Committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Government Members are applauding. Perhaps they would let me finish. He was not the choice of the Government. They are not applauding now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: Now we are applauding.

Mr. Baker: If there is one thing the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake must keep in mind, it is that he is the chairman of the committee and he should not become too angry with the New Democratic Party. I do not think he will get too angry with me if I repeat what he said a few moments ago. He said: it is just like the railways, and sometimes you have to close down the rail lines. I wonder if the chairman is giving us a message for the next meeting. He adjourned the meeting this morning at eleven o'clock and told all the members of the committee: "If you talk about what went on in the committee meeting this morning, I will hold you up for contempt in the House of Commons". That is exactly what he said. We were told: "You have to be quiet now. You are not allowed to talk about what went on at the meeting". But if I read him correctly, I would say the chairman is somewhat in favour of the closure of some post offices.

Our position as the Official Opposition is that it should be as it always was in rural Canada. If Canada Post wanted to close a post office in that community, it told the people it was going to close the post office and asked if there were any objections. If the majority of people thought the post office should be closed and an alternate service provided, so be it. That is the official position we take on rural postal delivery. The Conservative philosophy is, of course, yes, for privatization, hand it over to franchises, have the local businessman deliver the mail.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: I hear in the distance a "hear, hear" from western Canada. That might be all right in some communities but it is not all right in all the communities. How would the local businessman, for example, find the time to handle everything the local postmaster handles? Is it not a conflict of interest for small businessmen in small communities to deliver mail at the same time they deal with these people on a financial basis? Is it not an infringement of peoples privacy if their social security cheques, or unemployment insurance cheques or Canada pension disability cheques come in the mail and have to be delivered to them over the counter by the very businessman to whom they owe money? Is that not in a great many cases a great conflict of interest? All of those things must be thought out.

The bottom line is that under this postal plan, which was approved by Cabinet, there is to be a discontinuation of door-to-door mail delivery. That is the bottom line. The Conservative Government has approved a postal plan which will see no more door-to-door mail delivery in Canada, other than what we presently have. It has also said to rural Canada, we are going to close down your post offices. It has said they will still have postal services in most of those places but it will be a combination of franchising, local businessmen, and perhaps a mailbox outside, some sort of superbox or super-dooper box out in the backyard of the local businessman. That is not good enough.

That is why we support the motion put to this House today. We support it wholeheartedly. I notice the mover of the motion has said it is not a motion of confidence or non-confidence in the Government. I do not know how much that will count as far as the vote is concerned.

I want to make one final point to members of the Standing Committee and that is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stood in this House on Thursday and Friday and said: whatever the committee suggests to him and to the House of Commons, if it makes sense. Those were his exact words. I do not know if he is trying to tell us that everything the committee says does not necessarily make sense, or what he is trying to say, but I assume that when he said "if it makes sense", he has reason to believe that a great deal of what the committee says will make sense, and that will take precedence over the postal plan and the postal plan will be changed accordingly.

Mr. Lewis: That is democracy.

Mr. Baker: That is the bottom line. I can assure the House and the people of Canada that the position of the Official Opposition in this matter will be to reinstate door-to-door mail delivery as it was before the postal plan was approved. The postal plan is that there will be no more door-to-door delivery for all time. No Conservative can stand in this House and say there was no change with respect to the postal plan. If he does that then he cannot read. There is no more door-to-door mail delivery in Canada, no more extensions. In other words there is no more delivery to the end of the lane in the rural areas. Throw that out the window, say some Conservative Members.

• (1250)

Members of the Government have said that they will close 1,700 rural post offices and amalgamate or privatize another 3,521. That is what the postal plan states. We expressed our opposition to that plan in committee. Knowing the chairman, I feel confident that the committee will make the proper decision. Knowing the members of the committee, I know that they will make the right decision. I firmly believe that after the committee reports, it will be up to the Prime Minister. I do not know what he will say. Will he stand in the House and say that what the committee has said does not make any sense? I think he will be in quite a spot, if I read the committee properly. Canada Post will have to go back over the postal plan and change a great deal of what it has already started to do in Canada. I firmly believe that that will be the result as it flows from the committee under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann). I am sure that I made the proper decision in nominating him for the position that he is presently in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Domm: I have some short questions to ask the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker. I hope he will answer them as quickly as I ask them. Can the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) tell the House how many days were lost through labour disruptions in the five years prior to the incorporation of the Post Office? Can the Liberal Party tell us if it hired the president of the letter carriers as an adviser? We noticed that the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate was sitting behind that gentleman and passing him notes during committee hearings. Can the Hon. Member tell us if the unions will accept new working conditions and reduced wage rates to allow the country to afford more door-to-door delivery? Can the Hon. Member tell us what the average wage rate is in his home town and how it compares to the $14-an-hour rate that postal workers make? It is true that the union president at Canada Post Corporation has said: "Management pays us but we run the company". Does he agree with that statement?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks if I agree with the average rate of $14 an hour. Of course I do. Some of these people deserve a lot more than $14 an hour, since Mr. Lander, the President, is making close to $200,000. He was appointed by the Tories and is looking for a wage increase.

Do I approve lower wages for postal workers? No, absolutely not. Does the Hon. Member mean to tell me that everyone will now have to take a wage-cut under the Conservative Government? It appears that way when one looks at a great many of the positions taken by Treasury Board in terms of employees of the federal Government.

The Hon. Member asks me if we have employed the head of the Letter Carriers' Union as an adviser. I love to have the advice of the Letter Carriers' Union since members of that union are the ones who should know what is going on in the field. They are the ones who should be asked where corners can be cut. I can get a great many more answers from the union than I can from the President of Canada Post. He is no relation to Ann Landers, I can assure Hon. Members of that. One can get no answers from him.

The Hon. Member asks how many days were lost through labour disruptions prior to incorporation. I do not have a clue how many days were lost. I can assure the Hon. Member that when Canada Post was incorporated everyone was happy. Do you remember that day in the House of Commons, Madam Speaker? You do not remember it. It was back in 1981, but it seems like it was years ago. Everyone from all political parties was happy. The unions were happy, everybody was happy. The Post Office would break even, but everyone realized about two years ago that that was a false expectation on the part of the Crown corporation. It could not do that because it had gone too far one way, that is, in terms of cutting service. It had gone much too far and it is going to have to back-track now to recover the loss in service it had incurred. As well, it lost a lot of business.

I would like to tell Hon. Members from western Canada about something that takes place at Bonavista Bay, which is in my riding. Every time someone from the eastern section of Calgary mails a letter to the western section of the city that letter ends up in Bonavista Bay in Newfoundland because the postal codes are similar. I checked with the postmasters and I discovered that there are several communities around the Newfoundland coast to which western Canadian mail is being directed because the postal codes are similar. That is what happens when we deal only with machines. That should be a lesson to anyone examining Canada Post. People are more important than machines.

Mr. McCrossan: Madam Speaker, my question is a fairly short one. In his speech the Hon. Member indicated that this was a major departure from past practices. He was referring to the curtailment of delivery. I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware that the Conservative Government in 1979 announced major expansions in delivery in metropolitan Toronto in terms of door-to-door delivery which the Government of the Hon. Member cancelled in 1980, the day it came to power. His Government left those houses without door-to-door delivery for the entire four years it was in power. Is the Hon. Member aware of that?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, I will tell you what I am aware of in terms of door-to-door delivery. When it is said that door-to-door mail delivery will be reinstituted it does not mean that everyone will receive door-to-door delivery.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: What we have done over the years is scratched and crawled for door-to-door delivery to this subdivision and that subdivision. Half-time letter carriers for here and there had to be hired. It was a hard struggle to try to obtain door-to-door mail delivery. Sometimes people would accept the boxes in the hope that they would get door-to-door delivery the next month. Canada Post would say to these people, look, maybe they will have it in six months' time. Eventually, these people would receive door-to-door mail delivery. The problem under the new postal plan, which is quite a departure from the old one, is that it says that for all time there will be no new letter carrier services in Canada. That is not acceptable.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague this question. He made a distinction between the Conservative position and the Liberal position with regard to door-to-door delivery in suburbs. He said that the Conservatives are saying that they will never give door-to-door delivery. What he said about Liberal policy is that they had to scrape, crawl and beg for door-to-door delivery in order to get it some time down the road. How far down the road does the Hon. Member mean? What is the difference between never and begging, scraping and crawling for door-to-door delivery?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, the Liberal position is door-to-door delivery tomorrow morning, nine o'clock. I will tell Hon. Members that there is quite a difference between when we had door-to-door delivery under the Liberals and what is being said today. We would not dare say that there would be no more door-to-door delivery. We would be too ashamed to go back to our constituents and try to get elected if we were to say that. I will tell Hon. Members that the Conservative Government just ain't going to get re-elected.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired.

Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHA'I COMMUNITY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Baha'i community in Iran has been suffering from a campaign of persecution since the Khomeini Government came to power in 1979. Thousands have been imprisoned without charge, dismissed from schools and jobs, and have had their homes and life savings confiscated. Baha'i holy places have been desecrated, and in many cases, all Baha'i community assets have been destroyed.

Baha'is are non-persons under Iranian law. They can be attacked and persecuted with impunity. Unfortunately, the sufferings of the Baha'i religious minority continue to occur even at this time of international human rights.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to instruct our United Nations Ambassador to encourage the international community to take action to stop the persecution and torture of innocent Baha'is in Iran because of faith. The world must speak out against these persecutions. We dare not remain silent. We must be heard.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

MAJOR REFIT OF WELLAND CANAL WELCOMED

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, the people of the Niagara Peninsula were delighted at the announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) of a seven-year $175 million project to rehabilitate the Welland Canal. This will be a major refit of the canal to ensure continued safe and reliable inland waterway transportation into the next century. This project is expected to create approximately 500 jobs this winter and this figure will double in each of the following six years.

This announcement is important because, among other things, it puts people to work during the time of traditionally high unemployment. It should be clear that this is all new money over and above that which is already spent on ordinary maintenance of the canal.

I am pleased that the Minister of Transport has listened to the urgings of the members of the Niagara regional caucus. His support and that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are welcomed by the people of the Niagara Peninsula and by all those who depend on the St. Lawrence Seaway. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told us that he would listen to the concerns of those of us in Niagara. He has, and he has done it in a way designed to benefit all Canadians.

TARIFFS

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF BOOK TARIFF

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that taxing reading must come from minds that find reading taxing. I agree. Christmas is usually a good season for book sellers and publishers, but not this year. Scrooge-like, the Conservative Government has made this the most anxious year yet for writers, readers, sellers, and makers of books and magazines. In fact the Government is assaulting literacy with a quintuple whammy of duty, threats of sales taxes and business transfer taxes, postal increases, and trade games.

A coalition representing the 25,000 Canadians whose jobs are threatened met in Ottawa today to raise their concerns. The Canadian book industry wants culture completely removed from free trade negotiations. Postal rate subsidies should be continued to ensure access to Canadian periodicals by all Canadians. The exemption of federal sales tax now in place should be continued.

Not having books under the Christmas tree this year will not do anything to help put shakes and shingles on American roofs. Stop the tariff on books.

NEPOTISM ALLEGED IN HIRING PRACTICES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, there are recurring reports of nepotism in Canada Post. Previously in the House I have referred to allegations about nepotism in Metropolitan Toronto. Now, a statement under the letterhead of the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada, Local 7, indicates that nepotism may be prominent in the City of Winnipeg. Out of 150 appointments made there since 1981, apparently 21 appointees had relatives in management. This has occurred in spite of a Canada Post management policy statement of 1985 entitled Employment of Relatives.

This raises a question. Is there really equitable access to job opportunities in Canada Post? We all want Canada Post run as a business, but must it be run as a family business? This form of corporate incest requires serious attention from the top management of Canada Post Corporation.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—NEED FOR CN GUARANTEED RAIL ORDER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the senior management of Canadian National are railroading the people of Atlantic Canada, whether it be through the CN shops in Moncton or Sysco in Cape Breton. The federal Government does not have the political will to direct that Crown corporation to act in the best interest of the Canadians living in that region. Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan says:

—the Conservative Government in Ottawa hasn't done something the previous Liberal administration always managed to do—get a guaranteed order for the Sydney Steel Corp. from CN Rail.

For the first time in the more than eight years that we've been here, there's no guaranteed order. We have always had assurances of a base order from Canadian National.

The provincial Tory Minister of Labour, Brian Young, said:

—things were pretty bad when a Tory admits the federal Liberals would probably take care of Sysco better than the Mulroney Government—

What about the Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Coates)? He said:

Anything less than a long-term contract, not for the stockpiling of steel rails, but for the supply of the required steel rails on an annual basis, will be a betrayal of the commitment both the CNR and the federal Government has—

It is high time that the Conservative Government of Brian Mulroney lived up to its obligations to the people of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member will want to be careful in his statements not to use personal names.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

STATUS OF FRENCH LANGUAGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Over the past few hours, Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister advisedly got involved in the defence of the French language in Canada and particularly in Quebec. Our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) also took a firm position on this issue which is vital to six million Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, it is normal for French-speaking Quebec Members of the House of Commons to assert their unequivocal views on the status of the French language and related statutes.

What is deplorable, Mr. Speaker, is that we have yet to see the French-speaking Liberal Members of Parliament take a position in this respect. What does the Leader of the Liberal Party think about the French language in Quebec? The position of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is rather strange as well. The silence of Liberal Members naturally flows from the ignorance they displayed about Quebec culture when the latest constitutional agreements were signed.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—NEED FOR MORE FUNDING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, co-operative housing has proven itself a reliable method of providing affordable, good quality housing. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized that in the 1984 election campaign when he said co-operative housing would continue to have a high priority in Progressive Conservative policy on housing. The recent Throne Speech promised to strengthen co-operatives and recognize their role in community development. Yet the Government has now abandoned that commitment.

Members of housing co-operatives will be meeting this evening in 12 cities across Canada to protest the Government's desertion of co-op housing. The Co-operative Housing Foundation spent 18 months creating a new co-op housing program and negotiating it with CMHC. That program reduces the Government's cost per unit and increases the occupant's cost. Yet now the Government has slashed its promised number of units to little more than half. The co-op housing program is in great danger. The Minister must act quickly to ensure that the necessary funds are restored to keep the co-operative sector alive and healthy and fulfil the Prime Minister's promises.

ANNOUNCED FUNDING OF TRAINING PROGRAM IN SARNIA—LAMBTON

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in my constituency I was proud and delighted to announce federal Government financing of a $346,885 project for a re-entry program by and through the Sarnia Collegiate Institute and Technical School.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy, developed and implemented by this Government, represents an innovative and realistic approach to the high unemployment levels Canadians endured in the past. We have succeeded in shaking the make-work attitude of job creation. We are moving toward giving people the greatest gift of all, a permanent, stable, and secure job. The people of my constituency, indeed all Canadians, thank the federal Government for giving them the opportunity to become skilled and experienced in their chosen field.

On behalf of the 40 women in my area who will soon be well on their way to permanent jobs I say thank you to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), and thank you to the Government.of Canada. The Canadian Jobs Strategy is a resounding success and I applaud our Government for its endeavours on behalf of unemployed Canadians.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, one year ago this week, the regressive Conservative Government launched a housing policy which can best be described as a national tragedy—social housing passed off to the provinces and co-op housing slashed from 5,500 units to 3,200. The situation is so bad that tonight in Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Regina, London, Welland, Waterloo, Toronto, Ottawa, Halifax, St. John's, and demain à Montreal, concerned citizens will rally to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to keep his promise.

[Translation]

Even worse, the Minister of State (Immigration) (Mr. Weiner) threatened not long ago he would not help Quebecers establish co-operatives if they were also looking for support form the Opposition parties. We in the Liberal Party condemn this kink of intimidation.

[English]

We urge the Prime Minister to live up to his promise and to put an end to threats of blacklisting by members of his Cabinet.

REVENUE CANADA

PENALTY INTEREST CHARGES—CALL FOR TAX REFORM

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have criticized bureaucrats in the past and will probably do so in the future. However, today I want to pinpoint some unfair laws passed by parliamentarians which bureaucrats are forced to administer.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that when Revenue Canada finds it levied a penalty in error and then removes the penalty the taxpayer is still required to pay the interest which was charged on the penalty? Talk about fairness! As well, when a taxpayer is unable to pay the tax levied, interest is charged, another penalty is added, and more interest is charged until the interest and penalties far exceed the amount of the taxes. This hurts the poor. The rich can pay on time.

Revenue Canada can levy a capital gains tax even when no money at all changed hands, and then add penalties and interest until a business goes bankrupt.

Let us start tax reform by cleaning up the present inequities so that Canadians can really say: "Our tax laws are fair and appear to be fair", and bureaucrats will not have to be harassed for our mistakes.

REFUSAL OF FUNDING FOR SENIOR CITIZENS HOUSING PROJECT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on November 21, 1986, the Valhalla Housing Co-operative in The Pas, Manitoba, was informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that funding for its senior citizens housing complex was being refused. The reason cited by CMHC was as follows:

> The recent announcement of a 15 per cent tariff on lumber imports to the U.S. has had a major impact on the Canadian softwood lumber industry... This impact, in the opinion of CMHC, could translate into higher vacancy rates and a downturn in the residential market in The Pas.

Either the federal Government is using the tariff to disguise yet another drop in the level of support it provides to co-operative housing, or the Government is allowing American lumber barons to dictate how we meet the needs of senior citizens in The Pas for affordable, comfortable housing.

I call upon the Government to renew its commitment both to co-operative housing and the people of The Pas by restoring funding to the Valhalla Co-operative immediately.

YOUTH

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF YOUTH OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the Forget Commission asked the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) to implement a youth opportunities program which, unlike Katimavik, would be directed toward youth who are the least motivated and suited to conventional schooling. Forget suggested that the program should combine basic education, counselling, life skills, and work experience. He offered the Swedish model, Youth Guarantee, as an example.

I previously suggested another model to the Minister, one which would include high school education upgrading, job training directed to skills in demand, workplace orientation, and a voluntary military training program to teach self-discipline and co-operation.

Almost a year has passed since Katimavik was scrapped. Although youth unemployment has fallen dramatically in the past two years, it is still substantially above the national average. It is time for the Government to unveil a new program to meet the needs of the hard core of unemployed youth.

SHIPBUILDING

CLASS 8 POLAR ICE-BREAKER CONTRACT—QUALIFICATIONS OF WEST COAST SHIPYARDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Government on the construction of the Class 8 Polar ice-breaker is due in the near future. I urge the Government to consider seriously the qualifications of the west coast shipbuilding industry for the contract.

Since the last election, thousands of British Columbia shipyard employees have been thrown out of work. The Polar 8 would provide several years of work for more than 1,000 of these workers. Spinoffs would create employment for many more.

I want to ensure that the Government take into account the particular expertise of the British Columbia yards in producing vessels for northern use, and the low bid submitted from British Columbia.

IMMIGRATION

RESTRICTIONS PLACED ON IMMIGRANT MEDICAL DOCTORS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Canada's well deserved reputation as a haven for immigrants and refugees is at risk. Our treatment of immigrant physicians is being branded discriminatory and must be stopped at once. The policy of providing Canadian medical school graduates with first bid for controlled and limited internships leaves qualified immigrant doctors with little hope of ever practising medicine in Canada, even though they have passed stringent Canadian equivalency exams.

Ontario has created an additional barrier for immigrant doctors by requiring that a pre-internship be completed before being eligible for non-existent internship positions. No such requirement exists for graduates of Canadian medical schools.

• (1415)

In the past Canada and Ontario have welcomed immigrant doctors to the medical profession by adding internships as the need arose. The federal Government must step in and provide sorely needed leadership in bringing a return of our traditional policy and eliminating Ontario's discriminatory practices.

NEED FOR IMMEDIATE REIMBURSEMENT OF ELIGIBLE PERSONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): The people of Canada are very disappointed. Last Friday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deceived Canadian pensioners and early retirees, and I think that today the Minister should make a frank and forthright statement about the changes that have been made. These people had received permission to draw unemployment insurance benefits. They were entitled to those benefits. They were hold as much by the riding offices of Conservative Members and by their Manpower Centres. Today, the Government, as recommended in the Forget report, should give these people full compensation without asking them for proof.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is treating the elderly and pre-retirees like criminals. This will not do. Second, the Government's proposal that these people would become eligible for unemployment insurance benefits after they embark on a second career is equally unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Minister reverse his decision and immediately reimburse these people so that they will get their due.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOVEREIGNTY

USE OF NORTHERN WATERS BY UNITED STATES SUBMARINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs relating to our northern sovereignty. I want to assure the Minister that we do not want a route map of where American submarines are plying their business in northern waters, but we do want to know why it is a classified bit of information to find out from the Minister whether or not such American submarines in Canadian waters receive our permission.

Does the Minister know where they go? Do the Americans recognize Canadian waters and, if so, do they ask permission from Canada to ply those waters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are really two questions at issue here with which I will try to deal. The first has to do with the arrangements that we have in place that let us know about the presence of vessels of other countries in our waters. Those arrangements are in place. They are respected. We believe them to be effective.

The second question has to do with whether or not we want to start along the path of indicating either the passing or the presence anywhere in Canadian waters or in other waters of ships of the United States, submarines of the United States. I have tried to make it clear in the House of Commons before that to embark along the path of identifying the location or the patterns of voyage of those vessels could aid the enemies of this country and could undermine some of the obligations that Canada honours under NATO.

ALLEGED NEGOTIATIONS ON GRANTING AMERICAN MILITARY GREATER ACCESS TO ARCTIC WATERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister failed to answer my question. In any case, he admitted to the press yesterday that the Government is now negotiating to give the U.S. military broader access to our Arctic waters while in exchange, the Americans would recognize our soveignty over those waters. I think that the very fact this Government is conducting these negotiations puts our sovereignty in jeopardy. Could the Minister explain to the House why he is conducting these negotiations with the Americans?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no negotiations. A dialogue is taking place between Canada and the United States. We are having a dialogue, because last year, the Canadian Government clearly affirmed our sovereignty over the Arctic waters and the Arctic region. This had not been done before. This had never been accepted by the United States. We have indicated that if necessary, we are prepared to defend our position before the International Court of Justice. The former Government was not prepared to defend Canada's position. It is always preferable to have an arrangement between two parties or two friends, but if necessary, we are prepared to defend our position before the International Court of Justice.

WORLD COURT REFERRAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has once again congratulated himself on placing the matter before the World Court. Why is he in the course of negotiating our sovereignty over the waters before the case is heard? This reminds us very much of the lumber situation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for 16 years the Liberal Government of Canada claimed that it was going to assert Canadian sovereignty over the North. The Liberal Government claimed that, but was afraid to be tested in the courts. It did not build an ice-breaker. It did not establish the presence which Canada requires if we are to defend and guarantee our sovereignty. We have taken a position in favour of Canadian sovereignty. We are building the ice-breaker. We have asserted our jurisdiction and we are prepared to defend it in the courts. We are prepared to defend Canada rather than simply sitting back and talking about sovereignty as the Liberals did.

MESSAGE FROM YUKON GOVERNMENT—BEAUFORT SEA DRILLING RIGHTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who has just made a rhetorical flourish of defending Canadian sovereignty. Will he confirm that he has received a telex from the territorial Government of the Yukon which says: "You appear to be ignoring a serious threat to jurisdiction over our Arctic". The telex goes on to state: "I fail to understand your reluctance to come to grips with this important issue".

Those are very serious charges from a respected and responsible Government in our country. What does the Government intend to do about them? How does it intend to respond to the very serious allegations by the Government of Yukon that it is failing to defend Canadian sovereignty with regard to drilling rights in the Beaufort?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm whether there has been received in my office a communication from the Government of the Yukon. Naturally, if there has, I will consider it and treat it with respect as I do communications from that and other Governments.

The question at issue is the hearings which are being held with regard to the environmental impact of possible oil and gas activity in the Beaufort Sea. I have today sent a letter of protest to the Government of the United States with regard to that action because it has to do with hearings dealing with an area east of the 141st meridian.

I should advise the Member, as I think I did yesterday, that a similar protest was issued on an earlier occasion when an action of hearings was commenced in the United States. The consequence of Canada's protest at that time was that bids with respect to the disputed area were neither accepted nor rejected. Leases were not issued. I hope that our protest this time will have the same effect.

UNITED STATES LEASE APPLICATION HEARINGS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs about that very issue, the representations we are making to the U.S. administration. There have already been two hearings held and two more are scheduled. In his note of protest did the Minister specifically ask that the hearings now being conducted be stopped until this particular issue is resolved and the Canadian rights to those territories are clearly identified? Have we asked the U.S. to stop holding hearings over our territory?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the dispute is over the jurisdiction between Canada and the United States of the waters in question. We are asking the United States not to take any actions which would assume that those territories were not in dispute. When we last took that action, the United States agreed to the request of Canada and did not take any actions which could be considered to be actions of occupation of a sovereignty.

SOVEREIGNTY

BEAUFORT SEA—YUKON GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate that our guests from the United States have been introduced in the gallery at a time when we are raising questions about Canadian sovereignty. My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why has the Government not yet replied to a cable that it received from the Government of Yukon some six months ago, which sought clarification and support for confirmation that the territory east of the 141st meridian was Canadian territory? Why has the Government taken so long to reply to such a straightforward request for confirmation of our sovereignty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question. It sounds to me as though our usual standards of speed in response are not being honoured in this case.

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate the Minister's indication that there perhaps has been an error somewhere in his Department. We will set that aside.

UNITED STATES HEARINGS ON LEASE APPLICATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since hearings about drilling in Canadian territory are taking place now in Alaska, does the Minister believe it is a responsible action of a good neighbour to undertake such drillings in territory that it says is in dispute but we say is our land?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just to show that error can occur on both sides of the House, the Hon. Member is in error when he says that drilling is occurring. That is not the stage of the process now. Indeed, when we last intervened in a case of this kind the United States Government agreed that no drilling would proceed. I very much hope that would be their response in this case.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, let me return to something that has been raised very specifically. Since the Canadian Government has said in the past that this territory is ours and we do not think it is disputed, did the Minister in his cable that was sent to Washington today request them to stop those hearings forthwith?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I apologize that I do not have in front of me the text of the precise message. I consequently cannot answer that particular question. I will inform myself of the contents and will advise the Hon. Member.

FISHERIES

EAST COAST BLUEFIN TUNA FISHERY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I want to ask him about his secret deal with Premier John Buchanan to bail out Bayshore Tuna Limited. What did Premier Buchanan say or offer to the Minister to cause him to change his mind and go against the advice of his own Department, his own Atlantic Regional Council and his own tuna advisory committee, and approve this blatant give-away of the resources of the people of Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as usual, back-bench members of the Liberal Party want to make the sleaziest kind of story as they possibly can—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask all Hon. Members and Ministers to constrain their language and sometimes their enthusiasm.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where an industry at St. Margaret's Bay in Nova Scotia has an allocation of 401 tuna to be caught. Those are fish which are not caught by any other sector of the industry in Atlantic Canada and, for the last two years, those fish have not come ashore—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: They never do.

Mr. Axworthy: Give them shore leave.

Mr. McDermid: They do not understand fishing terms. They do not even know that fish can swim.

Mr. Siddon: This situation may seem funny to opposition Members.

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members to give the Minister a chance to reply.

Mr. Siddon: This issue is not funny to the fishermen and the industry to which this initiative will give a chance of survival. It is in total accordance with the advice offered by my Atlantic Regional Council to investigate as an option the development of a longline fishery for the fishermen and the company known as Bayshore Tuna Company, and that is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. MacLellan: What the back-benchers in the Liberal Party want is justice in the fisheries industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: That is something new and different.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister accept the advice of Mr. Bob McFadden, who is on the Minister's own Tuna Advisory Committee. He says the fishermen no longer trust this Minister and he should resign. Will the Prime Minister remove this Minister from his post pending an investigation of this blatant give-away to one company in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, what seems to irritate Hon. Members opposite is that this Government is taking initiatives to expand the employment potential in the Atlantic fishery—

Mr. Axworthy: For Tories, yes.

Mr. Siddon: —and in fact this decision is not inconsistent with royalty charter arrangements which have been extended to the Labrador Fishermen's Union Shrimp Company for several years—

Mr. Rompkey: That's not the Japanese, though, it's the fishermen.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Richard Cashin is the head of that company—and the Torngat Fish Producers' Co-operative in Labrador. This is not an unusual initiative. This is an attempt to develop additional employment and to keep money in the pockets of Canadians which would otherwise go into the pockets of someone else.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland on a supplementary to an earlier question.

SOVEREIGNTY

ARCTIC WATERS—ROUTES TAKEN BY SOVIET AND AMERICAN SUBMARINES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham—Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, getting back to the subject of alleged transgressions of Canadian sovereignty by undersea vessels in the Arctic, I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell us, first, if the Government actually knows the routes taken by both Soviet and American submarines in the Arctic? Second, if the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, could he tell the House if there have actually been transgressions of Canadian sovereignty by Soviet and American submarines?

Mr. Prud'homme: That is top secret.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say with confidence that we know all of the routes which might be taken, particularly by Soviet submarines, if they are in the Arctic. We have arrangements in place by which we can be informed of activities in our waters. I take it the Hon. Member's question was whether or not those are 100 per cent perfect and guaranteed. They are not as strong as they need to be. We are on the way to resolving that problem with regard to the ice-breaker, and we are naturally considering other measures which will allow us to ensure and protect Canada's sovereignty more absolutely than was the case under a more careless earlier regime.

BEAUFORT SEA—LEASE APPLICATION HEARINGS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I want to seek clarification on the properties in the Beaufort Sea east of the 141st meridian. The Minister has explained that the last time this area was open to some dispute the Minister sent a comment to the United States authorities asking them to back off. He has indicated to the House that they did. They are now back again. Is that not a clear indication that they have ignored the plea from Canada? Are they not simply going ahead with their own plans and ignoring the Government's request?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. What happened before was that a note of protest was sent. As a consequence of that note being sent, the second step in the action, in other words, the issuing of leases, was not proceeded with. In that case, what we requested was acted upon. I trust the request we have made this time will be acted upon.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is anything but clear. The Minister says we made our position clear last time but now the United States is back again carrying out impact studies in that same area. Is it not time that the Minister stood up once and for all and said to the people of Canada, and particularly to the United States, that we have had it?

First of all, it was the Polar Sea. We did not know about that. We did not say anything. Then it was the submarines under the ice. Then it was the softwood issue, and then the generic drug issue. Is it not time to stand up and say we have had it with the United States, that we are going to exert our sovereignty over these lands and it should get out of there?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the luxuries of being the Opposition is that you can stand up and say: "We've had it with this and we've had it with that".

Mr. Broadbent: You were in opposition, remember?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What this Government did when we recognized the problems which had been left for us by the failure to prepare our ability to assert our sovereignty in the North—

Mr. Riis: You know how effective that is.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —was to announce a multiphase program; first, the building of an ice-breaker which will give us capacity Canada did not have before—

Mr. Riis: Where is it?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —second, the assertion of our sovereignty in that area and, third, the willingness to have our case heard before the International Court, and other actions. This Government, more than any other Government in our history, is acting to preserve and advance—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —Canada's sovereignty in our North.

BLUEFIN TUNA FISHERY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As he knows, the total quota for the bluefin tuna in Atlantic Canada is 1,521. The Minister has allowed foreigners to reap the benefits of this common resource through a secret deal with a Halifax lawyer to get 401 of those species. In view of the serious stock depletion of this species, would the Minister explain to the House why he was so quick to come to the aid of this particular Halifax company when other licencees in Atlantic Canada are experiencing such difficult financial hardship at the present time? Why has he done that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would check the figures he would find that the quota to which he is referring is by tonnage not by number of fish. In fact, this year Canadian fishermen will only harvest—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: You see, Mr. Speaker, they don't want to believe the truth and the facts. This year Canadian fishermen will only harvest one tenth of our total tuna quota. In fact my Atlantic Regional Council recommended, and I quote:

> Over the long term other options should be explored to help the St. Margaret's Bay industry, such as diversifying the trap net fishery to include longline vessels that are equipped to harvest bluefin tuna.

I accepted that advice and that is exactly what we are doing.

ATLANTIC REGIONAL COUNCIL'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The chairman of the Minister's own Atlantic Regional Council wrote to him on October 30, 1986, and said: "Our Council unanimously agreed as a matter of policy and principle the proposal which he now refers should not be approved". I ask the Minister why he objected to the recommendations of this particular council? Is it because you have to be a Tory bagman, a friend of a Tory Premier, or you have to pay money to a Tory consulting firm? Why is it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, is it not strange how the Opposition takes quotes out of context without reading the whole communication. That particular communication from the Atlantic Regional Council included a recommendation that we do exactly what we are doing, not to embark on a royalty charter but to embark on an experiment to develop a new Canadian fishery. I, for one, cannot understand why the Opposition is so cynical when the Government takes initiatives to preserve jobs and expand employment opportunities in Atlantic Canada, as we were mandated to do.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. U. S. Senator Bentsen, who is visiting Ottawa today, is quoted by Canadian Press as saying he feels the Auto Pact should be on the table in Canadian-American trade talks. Will the Minister tell us clearly whether this is acceptable to Canada? Second, will she tell us if she believes the 60 per cent safeguards which protect Canadian workers must stay in place?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's question with respect to the visit by the chairman and members of the U.S. Finance Committee. In terms of the specific quote about which the Hon. Member has informed the House, I think it should be quite clear, and I have said this in the House before, that our Government's position is very consistent. We say that the Auto Pact is working well, and we intend to keep it that way. If, in the course of negotiations, any proposals that could be made that would improve the operation of the Auto Pact were made, we would welcome them.

DUTY REMISSION ASSISTANCE FOR CAR PARTS MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister also give her commitment that Canada will defend our duty remission schemes that help car part producers here in Canada despite the attacks by Governor Blanchard of Michigan and by trade representative Yeutter who was recently quoted in the Detroit Free Press?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the NDP consistently takes the view that somehow we are at war with the U.S. That is not the case in these issues. Even the Leader of the NDP, whose constituents rely on the Auto Pact, has said that there is nothing wrong with our negotiating team getting changes to the pact that would increase employment and production in Canada.

EARLY RETIREES—FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Every time during the past year when we asked the Government to rescind its cruel unemployment insurance cuts for pre-retirement pensioners Ministers said: "Wait for the Forget Report". The Prime Minister said that on May 23. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Associate Minister of National Defence said that. We now have the Forget recommendation on this matter and the Government has rejected it. Why will the Government not honour its many commitments made in this House, and completely rescind those unemployment insurance cuts as of January 5 as recommended by Forget?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Again, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East would recommend that we implement the Forget report after a week's study. We will hear the recommendation of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East in mind!

What I said yesterday and what I specifically stated on Friday is that the unemployment insurance program—and this principle was established by the Minister of Finance—is not a savings or retirement plan, it is designed to provide financial assistance to people who are temporarily unemployed. Such is our objective.

We sought Mr. Forget's advice and he produced a 500-page report. As I said before, we will consider the report as a whole and study each recommendation. The Government's position on pensions was explained on Friday and I think it is crystal-clear.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about only one recommendation of the Forget Report which you yourself—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Allmand: I ask my question of the Prime Minister because five or six Ministers whose portfolios changed were involved in this issue, including the Minister of Employment and Immigration. If the Government has a credibility problem it is due to escapades such as this.

Why did the Government lead so many Canadians down the garden path on this issue and then reject the Forget Commission recommendation once it was made? Why did it do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said yesterday and what I am saying again to the Hon. Member today, namely that the Government is being consistent with its own position. The Government had said it would wait for the Forget report, it has now been released, and we made a decision, as I was personnaly committed to do before Christmas. It has been done. You may not agree with it, but our decisions have precious little to do with the fact that you may or may not like them.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LEASING OF RAILWAY CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Minister of Transport. As the Prime Minister is also aware, Hawker Siddeley used to have 2,000 employees in Trenton, a riding which the Prime Minister used to represent. The company is now down to a handful of people and is in danger of closing down. It is requesting the Government to require Canadian National to cease leasing cars built in the United States, which is one of the free trade benefits we are receiving these days in terms of railway equipment. In view of the fact that CN has some 7,000 leased railway cars presently in operation will the Minister instruct CN to lease cars only built in Canada at plants such as the one at Trenton?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman has to understand that CN operates with its own Chairman and its own Board of Directors and must operate with funds it generates itself. It receives no financial assistance from the Government of Canada. It therefore has to be allowed to operate in ways that will generate funds and make a profit for itself. This year it will have a loss.

The CN has a severe battle under way to ensure that it continues competitively, and that it continues. So we have to give CN leeway to buy cars and to lease cars if that seems the best economic thing to do. We can certainly suggest to it and press the case, as we have in the past, that it do all it can to purchase cars from the place the hon. gentleman named. We will continue to do that. But we have to leave the discretion to it.

REPAIR AND MAINTENANCE OF CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, CN has to operate within the terms and confines of government policy. I take it, then, that it is government policy to let people be laid off while CN does sound business practice with United States companies.

Will the Minister of Transport meet with CN and require it to lease cars made in Canada? Will the Minister also arrange that the repair and maintenance of these leased cars are undertaken in Canadian plants such as Moncton, Point St. Charles, and Winnipeg?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will do everything I can to encourage CN to make all of the purchases it can in Canada, to provide all the business it can to Canadian suppliers, and to do all it can to continue to employ as many Canadians as it can. But actions that would direct it to do things that are against its best interests and that would cause the company to lose money, and therefore to have to lay off people, would be definitely counter-productive to the whole objective of CN existing in the first place. So it has to be a reasonable compromise. That is what I will urge it to do.

CONDITIONS FOR REIMBURSEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I should like him to know that all early retirement groups in Canada generally and in Quebec in particular are truly disappointed and angry with the Government's decision and the mess in his own office which is sending out such contradictory information. Could the Minister—I am sure that, unlike the Prime Minister, he can be sincere—

Some Hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Malépart: —tell us clearly and officially what early retirees who used to collect benefits and who were cut as of January 1st, 1986, must do to obtain what is owing to them and what are the criteria to become eligible? Would an oral statement be deemed acceptable for these people to be reimbursed the money you took away from them?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie cannot be serious. If, last Friday, instead of accusing the Government of backing off and saying just about anything to try and make political gains all across the country, you had simply read the statement, you would know what I had said, namely, that we would respect the principles. I said that Canadians who could prove normally that they had been ill-informed would be reimbursed. But you did not have to insult the Prime Minister as you did a while ago to indicate where the truth is. People need only listen to you.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as Mrs. Denis said, the Prime Minister is a "Charlie Brown"—

Mr. Speaker: Order please! I must ask the Hon. Member to watch his language a little more.

REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration is not so much for the Hon. Members in this House, but for the thousands of early retirees who would like to know. Will these people be entitled to recover their money, and when? Could the Minister explain where this figure of $230 million which these people will recover is coming from and who will get the money?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are going to use special procedures to advise people of the way they could contact the Government about an eventual reimbursement. But I ask right away the Hon. Member not to create again expectations among Canadians by saying: All those who will claim . . . There are conditions. People who will be able to show . . . It was in the statement and I will repeat it for the benefit of the Hon. Member. "I am today directing the commission to re-examine any such case and restore benefits, if the allegation is proven." That is quite clear. We are going to inform these people, but I will not take any chance: I am going to contact them directly myself.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Friday the Prime Minister said in a press conference that there would be no second-class citizens in Canada, whether it be regarding mail service or otherwise. We agree with him about that. Later on the same day, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a change with respect to those who are collecting pensions and applying for UI benefits. The Minister announced in effect that if they get a second job and are laid off, they can receive the benefits. In places like Manicouagan in Atlantic Canada, that system will indeed create two classes of citizens. I would ask the Prime Minister to give the assurance to all those across the country who do qualify that in fact he will not proceed with the Minister's announced provisions.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing at all inconsistent between what I said at the press conference on Friday and the Minister's statement in regard to resolving a complex, difficult issue. The Minister's statement was straightforward and will be extremely beneficial for thousands of Canadians. I would think that my hon. friend would want to applaud the Minister for a tremendous initiative.

REQUEST THAT ALL ELIGIBLE PENSIONERS RECEIVE BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Minister to withdraw the initiative, I want him to change it. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that it is very easy to get a second job in southern Ontario but it is not so easy to get a second job in parts of Quebec, Atlantic Canada and the West. Therefore, it will create a second-class citizenry.

Would the Prime Minister admit to the House that the only fair thing to do is to give all those pensioners who qualify for UI benefits their UI benefits as the Forget Commission has recommended?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thought my colleague from Nickel Belt understood the unemployment insurance principle. He is confused about two different things. With respect to people who are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, some in Manicouagan or the Atlantic region need only 10 weeks to become eligible, whereas others in Toronto need 14 weeks. That is one way of redistributing wealth on the basis of needs. But the unemployment insurance program is not a retirement nor an income plan, it is designed for people who are unemployed.

NATURAL RESOURCES

WESTERN COAL—TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDIES—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The Minister is aware that clean coal from western Canada could reduce Ontario's acid rain problem and at the same time give western Canada's depressed economy a major shot in the arm. Will the Minister assure the House today that the necessary transportation subsidies which will have to be negotiated, to replace dirty coal from the U.S. mid-West now being used in Ontario with clean coal from western Canada, will not be bargained away at the free trade negotiating table?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that his concern is unjustified. It will certainly not be bargained away at the negotiating table.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On past occasions the Minister of the Environment, and indeed yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that the Government was favourable to a joint federal-provincial task force report that would put forward the proposal of moving clean coal from western Canada to Ontario to be used here. When may the mining communities of western Canada expect some action on the part of the Government designed to ensure that clean western Canadian coal can be moved to Ontario at a cost that will allow it to be competitive with imported coal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's question. First, may I repeat that the Government supports the initiative contained in the report on the use of western coal in Ontario. If we could get the support of the Hon. Member's Party and the support of the New Democratic Party to pass the new national transportation act, Bills C-18 and C-19, that would do a lot to bring the unit cost of transportation down and then we would be competitive.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

MATANE PAPERMILL PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and has to do with an article published December 6 in the newspaper Le Soleil and concerning the Matane regional paper mill. Here is my question: Would the Minister explain to us whether the number of major and complex projects is such that Matane's proposed paper mill is hard to sell and may be compromised?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): As I see it, Mr. Speaker, nobody should conclude that the Government of Canada does not give priority to the Matane project, quite the contrary. The whole issue must be considered in the context of regional development. The Government is ever prepared to help the various regions because it happens to be part of our assistance policy. The Matane project remains a priority, it is under active consideration, and we will announce our position at the earliest opportunity.

DEPLETION OF OZONE LAYER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and deals with reports about the significant risk of increased rates of skin cancer particularly in northern areas as a result of the continuing depletion of the ozone layer. Given that a recent international meeting with respect to ozone depletion broke down without an agreement, what steps are being taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare or other Ministers concerned, like the Minister of the Environment, for a Canadian strategy designed to offset the problem of ozone depletion?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate on behalf of the Minister of the Environment that the concern about the measurable depletion of the ozone layer is one which should be taken very seriously by all Canadians and the Government does take it seriously. That is why Canada was the first nation to ratify the Vienna Global Convention on the Protection of the Ozone Layer and why, at meetings in Geneva and Vienna, Canada has been a constant proponent of the reduction of emission levels of chlorofluorocarbons which are discharged largely by air conditioning systems and various types of sprays. We will continue to seek to reduce the levels of these emissions.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask either the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister who is answering for the Minister of the Environment a supplementary question, although my initial question was asked of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Why is it that the Canadian position at that conference is reported to have been in favour of only a freezing of the production of ozone depleting substances, as opposed to the position which I understand was taken by the United States which is to be in favour of a reduction in the production of ozone depleting substances?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, Canada's position has been that there must be a protocol or an international agreement on the means of reducing the levels of CFC and that all nations of the world have to be a part of an undertaking designed to reduce those levels in accordance with this protocol. Therefore, we should work very quickly toward an immediate freeze on the production and use of chlorofluorocarbons.

AIR CANADA

SERVING OF CANADIAN WINES

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He will know it is the policy of Air Canada to serve Canadian wines exclusively on its Rapidair flights. That policy was violated last Thursday when someone decided to start serving foreign wine on the Ottawa to Toronto flights.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): In addition, the bottles contravene the Government's language policy because they are labelled in English.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member put his question, please?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Will the Minister look into this situation, tell Air Canada to get its act together and give its 100 per cent support to the Canadian wine industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has given strong support to the use of Canadian wines. I am sorry to see the Opposition laugh at that because I do not think there is anything funny about it. I will pass on his adjuration to Air Canada. I understand that on trans-border and international flights 50 per cent of the wine offered is Canadian. On domestic flights both domestic and foreign wines are offered and it is up to the consumer. I myself cannot understand any consumer choosing any wine other than the Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That confirms my view about your taste.

RURAL MAIL SERVICE—WEEKLY NEWSPAPER POSTAL RATES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Have the section of the Corporate Plan dealing with the disruption of rural mail service and the section dealing with an increase in the rate for delivering weekly newspapers been killed? Or have they just been given a sleeping pill so that they will later on be able to raise their ugly and cruel heads again?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter has indeed been a concern of the Government. Canada Post submitted a plan. Once again it was referred to a committee for study. This committee studied the matter very extensively. We are waiting for its recommendations, and will respond once we apprised of them.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members that I have received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and I will hear him now.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEES—ORDER OF RECOGNITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege involving something that happened in the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration this morning. A meeting was scheduled for 9.30. I arrived at 9.46 or 9.47. The chairman had arrived at 9.45. Six other Conservative Members arrived at about 9.45 or 9.46. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) had arrived at 9.30. The chairman apologized for being late because of traffic conditions. I arrived just as the chairman was announcing the way in which questioning would proceed. Witnesses had not yet been heard. The chairman said he was going to hear the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, then the six Tory members, and then the unemployment insurance critic for the NDP. I objected at that point and he informed me that he has always followed a policy of going to questioners in the order in which they arrive at the meeting.

We have all been around here for some time and there is a system in place whereby the first questioner is always the Official Opposition critic for the area concerned. Then we go to the Government side. We then come back to the other opposition Party. That procedure was not followed this morning.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising a grievance and feels very strongly about it. However, unless he can give the Chair some facts which have not yet come out I must advise that I do not see this as a question of privilege, keeping in mind the fact that it is not the chairman's responsibility to direct a committee how to behave itself. I will hear the Hon. Member very briefly.

Mr. Rodriguez: The point I am making is that there is a tradition in committees whereby the official critics of the two opposition Parties have the chance to question first. In this case that tradition was trampled on by the chairman of that committee. He went to a system which I do not think any other committee around here uses.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point. I wonder if it would be acceptable to him if the Chair will undertake to take notice of his remarks and write to the chairman and members of that committee and point out that when there is a grievance in a committee, it inevitably comes to the floor of the House. In many cases the best the Chair can do is draw the attention of the committee chairman and members to what seems to be a grievance. I am sure the Hon. Member knows the rules as well as all other Hon. Members and this is not a question of privilege. However, I will undertake to write an appropriate letter drawing to the attention of that committee the Hon. Member's representation.

Some Hon. Members: All committee chairmen.

Mr. Speaker: I hear calls from Members that the appropriate letter be sent to all committee chairmen and I will certainly do that.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) made statements about my performance this morning and I would like the opportunity to correct the record. It is a moot point as to whether or not the chairman was late. If he was it was no more than 60 seconds. Some three years ago I raised in this House a procedural problem about which clock counts. I would simply like to assert that I was either on time or very close.

I would also like to indicate that the record will show that in addition to the chairman there were indeed four Conservative members of the committee who arrived second, third, fourth and fifth. I would also like the record to show that we have had close to 140 formal public meetings in that committee and in all those meetings, other than those concerned with the Main Estimates when Ministers are there to defend government policy, it has been my practice to recognize members in order of arrival. It has been my practice, as part of parliamentary reform, to recognize all members as equal. I would also like it known that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt moved a motion to put a different system in place this morning. Members considered that motion and voted to uphold the chairman in the way he was conducting the meeting.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was in that committee this morning. As you know, there has been a long-standing tradition in this House that on the first round in debates or in questioning we start with the Official Opposition and go to the other opposition Party and so on. That practice was followed for a long time in all committees. When I was chairman of the committee now presided over by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), we did that. We recognized first the Official Opposition critic and then the NDP, and when the Socreds were here, we then recognized them.

The meeting this morning was a very important one dealing with members of the Forget Commission. It was a very critical meeting with different and divergent views. It was wrong to hold the Hon. Member from the NDP to number eight on the list after six or seven Conservatives. On the first round we should have at least followed the traditions followed in all committees where you go to all Parties in turn.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to your attention an attitude of this Government which I feel is absolutely improper. This is not the first time that committee chairmen, who are all Government Members, follow a procedure that flies in the face of a rule that has prevailed in this House for years, namely that the Chairman should alternate from one Government Member to one Opposition Member. Now we see that in a number of committees of this House, the chairman does not follow that rule and assigns the floor to Government Members in succession without recognizing Opposition Members. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this Parliament is rather exceptional in the sense that the number of Opposition Members is very limited, and I would appeal to your sense of fairness in defending the interests of Opposition Members. There are very few of us in this Parliament but still we have a right to be heard. So in the committee process we should be recognized as often as Government Members.

What has happened, what went on this morning is not one single occurence. It is a situation that has been arisen on a number of occasions, wherein a Conservative chairman has failed to recognize an Opposition Member right after a Government Member. This means an Opposition Member often has to wait for an hour, and hour and a half before he is allowed to carry on with the questionning and do his duty, which is to ask questions from the Government as an Opposition Member.

I feel that this situation has been going on for too long, and I would appreciate it if the Chair could look at this practice that is prevailing in committees of the House, and have instructions issued to committee chairman who, as it happens, are all Government Members and, who perhaps without realizing it, are taking advantage of the Conservative Party's overwelming majority in this Parliament.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, if I may add to what has already been said by my colleague for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), we are talking about something which has always been a tradition. I recognize that we now have a new Parliament and a great many new committee chairmen, but I believe that the tradition should still be followed and that it would be appropriate to remind Hon. Members and all committee chairmen how we have been doing things for a great number of years. For my part, I had the honour to chair the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for nine years.

Whatever the circumstances, and I can see the former Minister of National Defence in the House, the first questioner was always a member of the Official Opposition and we always had a first round of questions from both the opposition parties and the Government. After that, I recognize that, with the incredible majority held by the Government, a greater proportion of Government Members should be able to speak. This is a principle of fairness which I would be the first to defend. If Your Honour feels the need to comment the matter today, you could perhaps ask the Committee on Management and Members' Services, which is made up of all the committee chairmen, to examine this issue. I believe that this could be done. We shall be meeting this afternoon at 5 o'clock, I think. This is the committee which is composed of committee chairmen. I undertake to raise this question because it is a matter of equity, and I am sure that the Government will realize that our traditions must be followed.

On the other hand, I am fully aware that, with its enormous majority, the Government should not have to feel disadvantaged because of the need to have complete rounds all the time in view of the small number of opposition members. However, for the first round of questions, our traditions should be maintained and one representative from each opposition party should be able to ask questions. I would even say that the first to ask a question could perhaps be the representative of the Official Opposition, and if there is no agreement, one representative of the Government majority, and immediately after, a representative of the New Democratic Party. Then, we could proceed in such a way as to restore the balance among the various parties. I think that Your Honour should remind the House about the basic principles of equity. As long as there are no abuses from the two Opposition Parties, I also believe that, on principle, the very first to be recognized should be the representative of the Official Opposition. Personally, I would have no objection if the second questioner were a Government member, but the third definitely should be. I would prefer it to be, in order, the Official Opposition, the New Democratic Party and the Government. However, if this does not meet the wishes of the majority, we could perhaps proceed equitably in the following manner: First, the Official Opposition, since this is the established tradition for Parliamentary Committees, second, either an opposition member from the New Democratic Party or a Government member on condition that the Chairman immediately afterwards recognize a member of the New Democratic Party. I believe that this is the only way to be fair to the Government majority while preserving our traditions.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for you to appreciate that each commttee must set its own rules in this area and that there is no appeal to the House as a whole unless there is disorder.

The Standing Committee on Public Accounts, which is chaired by a member of the Official Opposition, operates on exactly the same principle as my colleague who is Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. However, it is important for Your Honour to realize that each committee deals with a different topic in a vast government array and has to work out these matters for itself. The process within a committee might be different, depending upon whether the committee is studying the Estimates or annual reports, which may tend to be more Government versus opposition with us wanting to stick to the traditional mix, or whether it is studying new policies under the new Standing Orders.

The idea behind the new Standing Orders was to get Members of Parliament, all of whom are equal, addressing themselves to a problem. When Members start to look at a problem as a problem Party differences are evident. The objective was that the committee would then come up with unanimous recommendations. It may be that in new policy areas the committee itself would decide to be much less partisan and the rotation of speakers would be quite different.

My point is that each of these matters has to be worked out by each member of the committee, and it will depend upon the chemistry of the committee. If opposition Members play tricks or the Government plays tricks on opposition Members, the committee will be poisoned and it may not work as well. However, it is not for Your Honour to become involved at this point. It should be left to each committee to work out, and it should only come before Your Honour if there is grave disorder.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat some of the very important comments which have been made on this point. However, I should like to add another element. I urge Your Honour to recall that we are at a rather important point. When the provisional Standing Orders were before us, we experienced a number of new ways to make Parliament and its operations more effective and more efficient. We tried different approaches as part of the changes to the Standing Orders to improve the work of the committees. By and large there is recognition that the committees are working more effectively and more efficiently than perhaps they ever have.

I can recall many occasions when a government Member, a chairperson, and a member of the opposition Parties were the only participants in a committee. I remember them staying for long periods of time to keep the quorum so that important witnesses could be heard. That occurred time after time. Committees work like the House of Commons, if there is a sense of co-operation and willingness to work and if a sense of fairness overrides the business being conducted.

When the committee of chairpersons meets later today, I urge it to consider the important leadership roles exercised by chairpersons. It is the chairperson who creates a certain tone in the committee and sets the atmosphere in which the committee operates. Because the Government always has a majority of members, it can exercise its power and might at its discretion. However, it does so at its peril.

I urge Hon. Members to recognize that if we are to make Parliament work and to make it a productive, positive place in which to conduct the business of the Government, it is important, particularly for those who are in a position to do so, to ensure a sense of fairness. Not only must there be fairness, but there must be a perception that fairness exists in committee. When one considers the actions taken by government Members and the chairperson who were present this morning, one could question whether or not there was a perceived sense of fairness for the work the committee was attempting to complete earlier today.

In the best spirit of co-operation, fairness and productivity, Mr. Speaker, I urge you to consider communicating in an appropriate way to the committee chairpersons not to dictate how they proceed or conduct the affairs, but simply to remind them of the very responsible role they have in making Parliament and its committees function well.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, however challenging the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I should like to seek the guidance of the Chair on a specific point, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has raised this point under a question of privilege, and then in the following minutes several Members referred to points of order. We then learned from other Members that this matter was raised in a standing committee and led to a vote. As I understand it—and this is where I seek guidance—our Standing Orders do not allow a Member to rise in the House and comment on committee proceedings which led to a vote.

I would suggest that we are now debating a wide-ranging topic, but that the matter has been settled and that, technically, we are not allowed to refer to it.

Since I have few opportunities to do so, I listened to you very closely a moment ago and I always do my best to become familiar with our proceedings here in the House. Anxious to learn as I am, I simply wanted to focus on what appears to me to be a slippery point, namely that Hon. Members rise just about any time on questions of privilege and points or orders on a wide variety of issues, then we spend one or two hours debating practically every incident likely to happen inside and outside the House as well as in committees.

I am trying to learn our Standing Orders. We operate under provisional Standing Orders and I think the Chair should indeed apply them with some flexibility, but not to such an extent that Hon. Members might even rise in the House on points which are out of order. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has more experience than I and he ought to know better.

Hon. Members should not always seek the floor on doubtful questions of privilege precisely because in view of their significance our privileges are to be strictly observed and we much rise only when it is indeed a matter of privilege.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, at first glance this may seem to be something that involves a rather small point to be decided within a committee itself, but I submit that what we are talking about here really involves something that is important to the operation of the House of Commons as a whole. If this House of Commons is to operate increasingly through committees and not to be limited in its work primarily to that which is done within this Chamber, then what happens in committees has to be fair and has to be seen to be fair with respect to all Members of the House.

Committees do not belong to the Party which, for the time being, forms the majority in this House, anymore than the House of Commons itself belongs to members of the Party which, for the time being, has the majority of Members of the House. The results of an election, even an election that gives a Party a substantial majority, does not mean the creation of a one-party state. There is a role in the House of Commons and, therefore, in its committees for all Members of the House, and our parliamentary system gives a special role to those Members forming the Opposition Parties, particularly the members of the second-largest party, that forming the Official Opposition. Any attempt to destroy, weaken or distort that traditional concept is something that could weaken, distort and ultimately destroy the concept of parliamentary government itself.

I can recall over the years in the many committees in which I participated that it was always traditional, and accepted when the Conservatives were on the Opposition side of the House, that their spokesperson always led off, and very soon thereafter, as soon as such a spokesperson was available, a representative of the New Democratic Party was heard. It was never suggested when there was a Liberal majority on the committee that representatives of the Conservative Party or the New Democratic Party would not be heard until all Liberals who wanted to speak would be heard. This was never done. It was not even suggested. I have not heard one word why that practice suddenly becomes wrong now that the Conservatives form the Government. If that practice was right when the Conservatives were in Opposition, then it continues to be right today.

I conclude with this point, Mr. Speaker: We are operating now under new rules, but these rules are in place only on a trial basis. They do not extend beyond the end of this year without the consent of this House. I give warning to people on the Government side that if they want those rules to continue they had better give evidence right now that they do not intend to operate this place like the organ of a one-Party state. They better give evidence that they are ready to have this place operate fairly in a way which recognizes the traditional role of Opposition Members or, and I say right now, they will have a very difficult time getting those rules extended. I have put this warning on the record, and I hope the Conservatives pay attention to it.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you know I have only been a Member of this House for some two years. However, during that time I have served as a full-time and regular Member and as a part-time Member on a number of committees of this House standing, legisative and otherwise. If there has been one thing that has struck me as significant in comparison with committees on which I have served in other places in the past dealing with Government affairs and the governing of this country, it is the fact that there seems to be a great tradition in standing committees and other committees of this Parliament not to start on time. For some reason or other people take it as their given right and tradition not to start and not to be there on time or to start on time. As a result, I and other Members of Parliament have had to wait, often for half an hour or three-quarters of an hour, sometimes an hour, before starting a committee meeting because people have not been there to get the meeting under way.

It seems to me that the criticisms we are hearing this afternoon about the breach of a tradition of this House about who speaks or who has the opportunity to ask questions first and last always can be corrected in one very simple way. If all of the members of that particular committee took their responsibilities very seriously and decided to get to the meeting on time, there would be no question about that long-standing tradition being followed.

I would like to concur with the statement of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the House Leader for the Opposition, who says that what has to happen in committee meetings is that things have to be done in a fair way and in a way that seems to be fair. I would suggest that if all Members of Parliament, including Members of both Opposition Parties, got to committee meetings on time there would be no question, either in the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration or any other, about the fairness of the allotment of questions. I urge all Members to get to committee meetings on time.

I know that the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who chaired the committee about which we are talking this afternoon would be happy to let the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) ask questions after the Hon. Member for the Liberal Party, as long as they were both there to start their questioning at the appointed time.

Mr. Rodriguez: I was there.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is concerned that discussion of this point, which is important, as Hon. Members have heard, not go on for too long. I will recognize one more Member. The Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) has been trying to get the floor.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I will not repeat any of the arguments which have already been made. I wholeheartedly support the contention of my hon. friend from Nickel Belt that the Parties must be recognized in committees. Comments made by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) caused me to rise. Although he did not say it specifically, he came rather close to expressing a wish that we had a congressional committee system within a parliamentary system. I understand that yearning because I have been so tempted myself on occasion. However, I say very simply that it will not work. As long as we have a parliamentary system, our committees must respect that parliamentary system and recognize that it cannot be congressional in nature. That leads me to my point.

Because our committees are parliamentary in nature, we cannot impose upon them a system which allows for the precedence of seniority in the recognition of members or for members to be recognized in order of regions. We must always begin with the recognition of the three political Parties, the Official Opposition, the Government, and then the New Democratic Party, in that order, or a slight variation thereof as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) suggested.

As much as some Members may wish to have a different system for committees, it will not work. We are all part and parcel of the same system. We must learn to live with it. This is the parliamentary system and in the parliamentary system the political Parties must be recognized as they are in the House under your leadership, Sir. That is much more than a tradition. It is the heart of the parliamentary system itself.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated that I would hear only one more Member. However, I did not realize that the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) had been seeking the floor. I think all Hon. Members would agree that he should be heard.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to agree with you that we have had quite a conversation on this subject. I do not think for a minute that it is a question of privilege, but it is an issue which is deeply felt by several people.

I rise mainly to confirm what the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said. He chaired the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for nine years and unfailingly recognized me first. I had not thought it was because I was a Conservative. I thought it was because of the high quality of my questions which started the committee hearings on a high intellectual level.

However, we must be fair. I agree with the protests that have been made that we should alternate from side to side. However, with such a majority in one Party it would mean that the fifth Conservative has to wait while three Liberals speak and three New Democrats speak before he gets his first chance. I think many chairmen have worked out a very satisfactory system. The Official Opposition is recognized first, the Government second and the New Democratic Party third. Three or four government Members are then recognized. That is a reasonable compromise. I think this has been a worthwhile discussions.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions. While the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was making his remarks I indicated that I did not think this was a question of privilege. However, I do take this as a grievance and a serious matter. I have listened carefully to what has been said.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Victoria for his comments because those Members who have had a lot of experience in this Chamber have something very important to contribute on these matters. That applies to some other Hon. Members who have spoken, especially the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I believe it is appropriate that I make it clear that there is no question of privilege. However, I return to the commitment I made some minutes ago. I will draft an appropriate letter setting out the basic things that have been said in this debate. I will send that letter to committees and ask them if they would please address the matter.

The Chair has had occasion, and probably will again for some time into the future, to remark that the spirit of reform which has made changes in the committees is of great interest and importance to all Hon. Members. There is naturally a tendency, when matters cannot be settled in committee, to bring them to the floor. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) said that he wished some guidance from the Chair on these matters. I can guide the Hon. Members and others by saying that in a strictly legalistic sense perhaps the rule has been abridged a little this afternoon through a lengthy discussion. However, as Hon. Members know, we do not rule this place completely and strictly in a legalistic sense. The Chair is guided by the sentiments and expressions of intention of Members in the Chamber.

I hope Hon. Members will feel that I have paid attention to the sense in the Chamber that this is an important matter and that Hon. Members wished to be heard. The Chair will do its best to bring the concerns expressed to the attention of the appropriate committee chairmen and others. I hope those actions will help all Members to do the work which must be done.

I hope that there will be no need for anyone in this Chamber to give warnings about the possible extension of many of the rules. With direct reference to what the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) said, it is very important that Hon. Members come to agreement on these rules. I think all Hon. Members would agree with the Chair that it would be a step backward if we were to enter the last period of provisional rules feeling that the success which might have been made of the reforms has not met all expectations.

The Chair is cognizant of what has been said. Again in reference to what was said by the Hon. Member for Bellechasse, there is a time when the Chair allows some latitude and I believe that this afternoon was an appropriate occasion for it. I thank all Hon. Members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Keeper:

That this House urge the Government to require Canada Post to forego the 2 cent postal rate increase planned for the new year, to reject the planned closure of hundreds of rural post offices, to reconsider the decision to replace door to door postal delivery in new suburban areas with super-post office boxes, to reconsider the ongoing reductions in urban postal services, and furthermore, that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to this morning's speech by the Hon. Member opposite and I have also listened to recent comments by Opposition Members. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, they seem to have only two objectives: to instil fear, the fear of change in Canadians and to use a Crown corporation for partisan purposes. If there are problems at Canada Post, Madam Speaker, they must be laid at the door of Hon. Members opposite who were responsible for this service from 1963 to 1984. Madam Speaker, those two decades were marked by the steady deterioration of our postal services as a result of work stopages, disruptions and all kinds of strikes, followed by hastily signed collective agreements, all of which resulted in the introduction of massive and brutal increases in postal rates.

I would like to know where the hon. colleagues of the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) stood when our Canadian postal service was being savaged by the previous administration.

The outlook for Canada Post was not very bright when we took over responsibility for the Corporation in September 1984. Canadians were still coping with unprecedented rate increases, but the Corporation's deficit was still as much as $306 million, which, of course, did not overly concern our friends in the New Democratic Party.

Madam Speaker, the year 1956 was a memorable, and I would even say a great year. In that year, Madam Speaker, we saw the first green mail boxes which are now a standard feature of our great Canadian landscape, on street corners and rural routes. It was a year that our hon. friends know well, although one would not think so to hear their indignant comments today. Another memorable and great year was 1974, when the previous administration decided to stop home delivery in towns with less than 2,000 postal addresses. Today, Madam Speaker, about 600,000 households in 195 towns in Canada are in that situation. Again, I wonder where our virtuous friends stood when these decisions were made.

When the previous administration took these decisions to introduce to Canadians these infamous and rusty green boxes, all one could hear was the sound of silence from our friends across the aisle. Faced with a problem of such magnitude—declining service and rising deficits—we have taken the high, tough and hard road and decided to restore service to Canadians while attempting to tackle the deficit.

To assist in this process and in the spirit of true consultation, we have asked Alan Marchment, Louis Comeau, Fred McNeil, Julien Major and Alix Granger, who as we all know formed the Marchment Committee, to ascertain the views of Canadians as to the nature of changes they want brought to the Canadian postal service. I am sure that even my hon. friends opposite will join me in congratulating the review committee on its mandate as well as on the productivity of the Canada Post Corporation. I think it has done an outstanding job.

In its report, the committee clearly indicates that priority must be given to the restoration of service to Canadians, that the measure of delivery performance must be effected by outsiders as opposed to the corporation auditing its own performance as it is right now, and that Canadians who do not enjoy door-to-door delivery should receive either alternate day delivery or community mail service or postal boxes.

The committee further proposed that there be third party regulation of the rates proposed by the corporation and that it use contracting out as much as possible.

Of foremost immportance, the committee recommended that:

The corporation continue to be required to be financially self-sufficient in order to relieve taxpayers of the need to subsidize users of the postal system beyond those subsidies specifically provided for by Parliament.

This side of the House has endorsed fully those recommendations, like most of the 43 recommendations the Marchment Committee has made, and the corporation has moved to embody the underlying principles together with most of these recommendations into its plan.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, this plan is part and parcel of our decision to continue home delivery to Canadians who already enjoy the service and to provide new residential areas with an effective delivery service that is comparable or even superior to that provided by other postal administrations. Madam Speaker, 54 per cent of Canadians, and this may seem surprising, get their mail either at the post office or in one of those wonderful green boxes set up by our friends opposite.

So quite a few Canadians are serviced differently. The previous administration also thought it would be a good idea to introduce the community boxes early in 1983-84.

On this point, Madam Speaker, allow me to explain the various stages followed by Canada Post to set up this program.

We carried out various tests in more than ten Canadian cities and communities over a period of 40-odd months. These surveys revealed that 93 per cent of users were satisfied, and this fact was clearly corroborated by the Decima poll. In addition the plan submitted to us by Canada Post management did take into account the fact that one of the objectives was to make more efficient counter service readily accessible to the public at large. This is why over the next ten years Canada Post will gradually expand the present role of the private sector and offer postal services during much more practical hours and at locations which are more easily accessible. To respond to the argument of Members opposite, I might point out that 25 per cent of postal counters are already under private sector management, something which most Canadians fully appreciate.

I wish our colleagues on the other side would explain clearly why they are against a policy which can only improve the quality of services available to Canadians. The Opposition does not miss an opportunity to raise the spectre of deteriorating services resulting from the closure of some post offices and the re-organization of certain rural delivery routes. I am sure they all agree that postal delivery has to be revamped, particularly in rural regions. The facts are simple. Every year more than 150,000 families leave rural regions and move to densely populated urban neighbourhoods. Failure on our part to re-organize postal delivery services would have been tantamount to ignoring reality.

In short, contrary to the allegations of Members opposite, this plan is aimed at improving postal services to all Canadians from coast to coast.

[English]

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), and supported by the Liberals, has been designed to appear on the surface to reflect a concern for increased postal service to Canadians. However, in reality, his proposal is a blueprint for mediocrity for Canada's postal service.

In contrast, the Progressive Conservative Government has proposed a plan that responds to our concern for improved and more reliable postal service in Canada, and to the need as expressed in the Canada Post Corporation Act and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget Speech earlier this year to achieve the financial break-even point on operating costs and expenses by 1988-89.

The fact is that we are proposing to lay the groundwork for better service at a relatively lower cost to the taxpayer, as opposed to the users of the system, and eventually at no cost at all. Indeed, we have already begun to achieve significant progress. Since the election of the Government in September, 1984, we have seen significant improvement in a wide range of areas. In fact, more has been accomplished in the past two years than under the many years of the Liberal regime.

For instance, service has been expanded to more than 200,000 homes and businesses. That is a number equivalent to a city the size of Ottawa. During this time we were using fewer people. This increased efficiency is certainly a new trend within the postal service. Reliability of first-class mail has already demonstrated a 4 per cent improvement, as mentioned before, since the introduction of a colour coding age of mail system which was put in place in August of 1986.

Mail volumes have increased by 6.8 per cent since 1984, representing an over-all efficiency improvement of 7.5 per cent, while during the same period the over-all efficiency of the service sector in Canada increased by only 2 per cent. Revenues have increased by $357 million or 15 per cent since 1984, most of which is attributable to sales growth and other operating factors. Since February, 1983, the basic letter rate has increased by only 6.3 per cent compared to the 11.1 per cent inflation during the same period. Another improvement has been that absenteeism has been reduced by 14.7 per cent. Strict management control has contained non-salary expenses to $5 million or .8 per cent during a time when inflation alone would have added $50 million to costs.

I should point out that the operating deficit of $306 million, which was a significant burden on taxpayers in 1983-84, has been brought down to $184 million in 1985-86. This represents an improvement of $122 million or 40 per cent in just two years and is the direct result of improved management control in response to this Government's orientation.

This Government is determined to lay the foundations for the Canada Post of the 21st century, a healthy, efficient corporation, able to provide better service at a reasonable cost to Canadians. Hon. Members opposite are resisting change and nurturing the fear of change among Canadians. However, most Canadians will see through their transparent charade. What members of the Opposition are proposing in effect is a return to the old Post Office plagued with deteriorating service and escalating deficits. They claim to care for the average person, yet their attitude points to a different reality. They are saying in effect: "Let the public pay rather than the user" or, to put it more bluntly in a true Hallmark statement made by a former postal union executive no doubt well known to my hon. friends: "To hell with the public".

The current plan for Canada Post will meet our concern that all Canadians currently receiving door-to-door letter carrier service will continue to do so and that new growth areas will be provided with satisfactory and improved delivery service comparable with, or better than, the modern efficient methods now being used by other business oriented postal administrations.

The Opposition may prefer to try its wit, poor as it is, on "supermailboxes", but these are in fact a far superior approach to that of the previous Liberal Government, the pitiful parents of the rusty green boxes. The supermailboxes are a practical, cost-efficient solution which has proven to be accepted by 93 per cent of customers where they are in use, since they serve 24 hours a day a small group of 38 people within 200 feet of their homes. We think that is improved service. For these customers, I am sure the super mailbox is a welcome change from the Liberals' green boxes. The Liberals' answer during their years in office was to restrict the expansion of door-to-door delivery with no other alternative but to have peple line up in post offices or letter carrier depots or travel great distances to receive their mail.

Canada Post is also taking into account in its corporate plan the need to improve the public's access to postal services in the most cost effective manner and will, therefore, expand on the current role of the private sector in providing these services at convenient times and in convenient locations.

Like broken records, my colleagues opposite will claim, once again, that expanding the role of the private sector in the postal delivery system will lead to a great loss of jobs. In the first place, they choose to overlook the corporation's intention to move in this direction over a 10-year period. Attrition alone within Canada Post will far exceed the number of positions affected by this move. Furthermore, Canada Post will be encouraging its own employees in these positions to accept the entrepreneurial challenge and use their experience at working within such a franchise.

I believe the plan we have developed in response to clearly expressed opinions of Canadians, represents the best balance between the need to provide improved, reliable postal service and the responsibility to ensure that postal services no longer operate at a deficit.

The balance between improved, reliable service and operational break-even is a delicate one. The corporate plan requires that all parties concerned, the shareholder, management, labour, and the general public, make concerted efforts in order for it to succeed. In startling contrast, as demonstrated today, the Opposition wants to jeopardize Canada Post and its plan for the future by playing self interested, shortsighted politics.

Madam Speaker, during the first half of this century, the Post Office Department regularly lead surpluses, and it would seem that other postal administrations even to-day manage to show profits. Apparently, and indeed certainly Canada Post can cover its costs, providing of course that we support its efforts.

In order to achieve this, Madam Speaker, courage will be needed to take on new attitudes and new approaches. Concern and striving for objectivity will be needed from all those who want a first class postal service. If Opposition Members would stop their antics on this issue, they could also realize if not recognize that the postal plan finally benefits all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would invite the Minister to come to Winnipeg and visit some of the suburban areas in my constituency. I would also invite Conservative Members, for example, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), to visit some of the suburban areas in their own constituencies and talk to the people to see which they prefer, the super mailbox or the door-to-door mail delivery which is received by their neighbours in older areas. They would really find out what Canadians think.

One of the ways the Post Office is going to get rid of its deficit is by increasing the mailing rates for magazines and newspapers by 30 per cent, as was announced by Grant Carter, the corporation's Publications Director, in a speech he made to the Canadian Business Press a few days ago. That elicited a response from the President of the Canadian Business Press who said that any move to raise rates could put a lot of marginal publications out of business.

• (1600)

Dinah Hoyle, who is the Executive Director of the Canadian Periodical Publishers, said this:

> Even a 30 per cent increase could put many of the smaller literary and art magazines out of business—

Ron Rempel, President of Canadian Church Press, said that his organization would be in the same boat. We have not even heard from the weekly newspapers. Is that the way in which Canada Post will try to get rid of its deficit? If it is, then the Minister and the Government should know that a very large percentage of weekly newspapers, magazines, business and church publications will fold up. They cannot absorb that cost. Their readers will not accept the much higher costs of receiving those publications. Is that the step the Government is proposing?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Madam Speaker, I simply want to say that this Government has made comments to Canada Post, only because it was concerned about making sure the Corporation, in the drafting of its corporate plan, would consider two factors that were essential in our view. First, the concern of Canadians who want this Government to solve or attempt to solve the national deficit situation, and we know to what extent a number of Crown Corporations are having a hard time reaching that self-sufficiency level.

So, as a first step, we asked Canada Post, and this has been clearly stated I think in the budget tabled by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in February 1986—and it was clearly suggested to the Corporation—to take into consideration, in the drafting of its plan, the national deficit situation while at the same time being sensitive to the concern of Canadians for improvements in the postal service.

And while I am at it, Madam Speaker, let me stress the fact that when the first postal rate increase became effective after having been approved as you will remember in June 1985, and which at that point prompted the establishment of the Marchment Committee, we gave a clear mandate to the Marchment Committee to hear and consider the concerns of all Canadians in all regions, urging of postal users, people who use the postal service regularly, on a daily basis, to file their grievances and make their concerns and interests known to the committee.

The committee, Madam Speaker, responded to that, providing us with 43 recommendations. Out of those 43 recommendations, 29 were mainly related to improvements in the service and were definitely heeded by the corporation.

When dealing with 1986, my colleague has of course mentioned certain increases which seemed to him more significant than others. The average increase suggested is about 9 per cent. When I mentioned in my statement a while ago that since 1984 , while the inflation rate has increased by 11 per cent, the increases Canada Post was allowed have only been 6 per cent. There should be further increases if we want the corporation to become self-sufficient.

Let me mention, Madam Speaker, some figures to allow a comparison between 1950 and 1986. A cup of coffee which then cost 5 cents now cost 60 cents, or 12 times more. The basic letter rate which was then 4 cents is now 34 cents, this is eight times more.

Now we can understand that the Government is concerned and wants nevertheless postal rates to remain acceptable to the Canadian people.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for having recognized earlier that the Opposition is firmly opposed to his business plan. I have before me an article published in La Tribune, a very popular newspaper in the Eastern Townships. This article, which quotes the comments of Jacques Blais of the UPA, is entitled:

Regional MP's asked by UPA to take a stand

I am asking this question on behalf of Mr. Proulx, who states:

According to the UPA, the proposed business plan of the Canada Post Corporation would represent a real step backwards.

The author mentions that this would cause a dramatic erosion of services in rural areas in the near future. What is you answer to that?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): First, Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that, as concerns the business plan, I have tabled it before the Committee, which includes representatives of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party and which has already met several times, and these concerns have already been expressed. I also mention that, after the Committee has concluded its examination, it will probably be making recommendations or at least comments, and from there, I intend— From what I have been told about the proceedings of the Committee, those who have appeared have mentioned their concerns about rural services and I have for my part said that the Government is determined to take into account the comments made by the members or the Chairman of the Committee. I shall respond at that time and take these comments and recommendations under consideration. I shall analyse them with my Cabinet colleagues and we shall take appropriate action.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) for a short supplementary.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, am I to understand that the Minister's Department would be prepared to consider a possible status quo for the rural service, to maintain the present level of service in rural areas? Am I to understand that your Department would be prepared to consider, in the light of representations which would be made eventually, to maintain the current status quo?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Madam Speaker, I think it might be going a little far to accept my hon. friend's suggestion. However, I can assure my hon. friend of the Government's desire to respond to the ideas and comments that will be made by that committee. If that committee submitted to us recommendations concerning the rural service, we would analyze them thoroughly and make our position known at a later date.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allocated for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity today to rise to speak on the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), our very able critic in matters of the Post Office. I would like to start with an examination of what this motion entails and also an examination of what it does not entail. I feel that some of the speakers to this point in time have missed the point. I do not take this motion as being an attack on Canada Post, and I would make the case that it is not necessarily even an attack on the Government. The motion reads, after all, that it shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government. I would therefore suppose that in rationally and sensibly discussing the propositions of this motion, we should look at the wording of it to see what is comprehended by the motion we are debating today.

• (1610)

It seems to me that we are looking not at an examination of the recommendations of the Marchment Report nor at an analysis of the entire corporate plan as it has been presented before the committee, but rather at the questions of postal rates and at the four services which are of particular interest, I believe, to the majority of Canadian postal customers. I believe that this debate is not assisted by what I might characterize without being unparliamentary as the disjointed ramblings we heard from the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) this morning. I will go so far as to say as well that the debate is not particularly advanced either by the Minister's examination of the record of the previous Government.

Admittedly therefore, under the previous Government, serious operational problems existed in the Post Office Department as it was before 1982. Green mailboxes are obviously inadequate for consumers. Patronage actions as they took place in the Post Office Department before it became Canada Post are obviously not acceptable. What this debate is about is not whether the previous Government managed Canada Post correctly or not, it is the line of action of the present Government which must be responsible for the operation—responsible in a Parliamentary sense of course—of Canada Post, and also what the Government is aiming at through its financial policies and its budget cut policies, and indeed the future of Canada Post.

In the context of those limitations, I wish to discuss the matter and submit a few points for consideration by Members all over the House before a division is taken tonight.

[English]

In order to do so, I would like for a few moments to examine the history of postal service and to try to bring out for all of us what postal service means in a country like Canada.

This is not the first time I have quoted the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), but possibly it is the first and the last time that I shall do so with any degree of approbation. He stated, and I believe correctly, that the country was founded for two reasons: first, for reasons of national security, and second, to get the mail delivered. I think we should examine the question of Canada Post's planned service reductions in light of that sort of consideration.

I would cast the minds of Hon. Members back to the time of Roland Hill, the first Postmaster General in Great Britain. In 1840, he brought in the penny post. This was something that was introduced as a national utility which united the country at a fraction of the cost of the pre-existent and presumably alternative methods. At a time when it cost six pence to put an ordinary letter on the stagecoach going from London to York, a universal system which was spread throughout the United Kingdom costing one penny per letter was instituted. Mail was being delivered for approximately the sixth of the previous cost. I may be so bold as to remind my colleagues that after all, there is no control over the private couriers some might wish to see take over some of the business of Canada Post.

Let us also look at the role of Canada Post Corporation, as it now is, as an agent even today of national unity.

[Translation]

As I said last week in one of my questions, in many of our small communities, the post office is the only place where the Canadian flag, the maple leaf, floats in the air, the only concrete reminder of our federal Government. If it is removed, if the service is entrusted to some nearby store, the present reminder of the federal Government will have disappeared from those communities.

[English]

Canada Post is under attack for a number of reasons, and I think we should be frank in saying that it is under attack. It is under attack from some Hon. Members who delight in union bashing and who feel that Canada would be better off if there were no unions involved in Canada Post. These Hon. Members wish to use Canada Post as a way of beating on the union movement generally and as a way of sending a message to organized labour that it had better not get out of line. That is very much the view of a number of Hon. Members. I think we heard a good example of that this morning. I am sure anyone who listened to the debate will know of whom I speak.

There are those of us who wish to criticize poor service. Let us be frank. There are members of all three Parties who wish to criticize poor service, but surely not in the spirit simply of beating up on the Post Office or making management, the workers and the union members feel bad. We criticize poor service simply because it causes frustrations to consumers and our constituents and because we would like to see poor service eliminated as much as possible. Naturally, when any Hon. Member receives a complaint of poor postal service, he or she would like to see the complaint resolved.

There are also those who want to attack Canada Post because of the state of labour relations in that organization. Without going into a detailed historical analysis, I would say that it is obviously not easy either for management or for members of unions when there are as many unions as there are involved with Canada Post. Let us also remember that those unions were not in some way planted in Canada Post as part of a plot to undermine postal service. They grew up for very good and legitimate reasons and it should not be the role of Government to try to beat down the unions within Canada Post, whether because of a general anti-union feeling as exists with some Hon. Members or simply to put things within a more manageable framework.

I believe we should compare deficits and subsidies. We should compare the service Canada Post gives to the people and businesses of Canada and to the Governments at the federal, local, municipal and Indian band levels with the amount of subsidies or the size of its deficit. We should compare it as well with other deficits or subsidies. We should compare it with the billion dollar bail-out to the banks given by the Government, with the money that has gone to Canadair under the administration of the previous Government and, for example, with one of my favourite causes, VIA Rail passenger service. That service is subsidized more heavily than Canada Post and, as we know, it serves perhaps one one-hundredth of the number of people who are served by Canada Post.

No, the fact is that for approximately $10 per Canadian per year, we have a postal system that in a very real way binds together this enormous country, a country with an area larger than that of Europe and a population smaller than that of the State of California. If we feel that the plan of Canada Post is unrealistic and unworkable, something which I and my Party certainly feel, we should also consider the fact that the demography and geography of Canada pose some almost insuperable difficulties when trying to make Canada Post a profitable service.

Comparisons with other countries have been made. I think it is worth repeating the difference between what it costs to deliver mail in Canada compared to the average wage and what it costs in other countries. The fact is that we do rather well, even counting the subsidy which we give to Canada Post and should continue to give to it.

I would like to examine some of the specifics. I see that you have given me one more minute, Madam Speaker. I would ask you to check your timepiece.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the corporate plan for Canada Post seeks to privatize 3,500 rural post offices and shut down 1,700 rural post offices.

• (1620)

That can only mean a reduction in service. A counter in a drugstore is not a post office. Everyone knows that some post offices have outlived their usefulness, but a wholesale closing down is a massive reduction in service. The loss of rural routes, the abandonment of lot-line delivery, a point we could not get through to the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake this morning, will be a significant reduction in service. Along with that reduction will go the jobs of approximately 8,700 people, most of them concentrated in Canada Post's rural network, and among communities which can ill-afford to lose them.

What is the alternative? Will Canada Post train its franchises in such things as Priority Post, special delivery, Certified Mail, insured parcel service, COD service? I very much doubt it. I am very glad to see in the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself some level of realization of the effect these cuts will have on rural Canada. On December 5, as shown at page 1820 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said:

> First and foremost must be the interest and welfare of Canadian citizens, particularly, for example, in rural areas. There shall no second-class citizens in this country as long as this Government remains in office, postal services or otherwise.

The Minister said that this debate is in some way premature. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake thinks it is upstaging the work of the committee. I think it is essential in order to get some firm commitment along the lines of the statement made by the Prime Minister. If he were to look at the operationalization of that commitment he would realize that the changes would not be made in the way the Post Office proposes.

I have had complaints in my riding very recently about rural route service. When Canada Post changes the rural route contractor it does not take the necessary steps to ensure that the new contractor does the job properly. It does not provide training. It seems to think that it is the sort of job anyone can learn. That is very frustrating because although Canada Post is taking measures to correct that situation in my riding, steps should be taken beforehand to make sure the new contractor can service the route properly.

Another matter not in this motion but which I have to bring up is that concerning remote and isolated Indian villages in my riding. Many people in those villages get groceries through the mail as a way of reducing their cost of living. Many have been denied that service. Yet Canada Post has to provide service right across the country in a standard way. It has to be available to each of these communities.

It seems to me that instead of complaining about the nature of this motion, Members on the government side should seize the opportunity to bring to the attention of their Government the opportunities that exist in this motion for a reasonable and sensible discussion of the service alternatives open to Canada Post. We know that in some cases those service alternatives have been suggested in the corporate plan, but if we are to meet the need to provide a fair and equal service right across this country the changes cannot be implemented in the way they are described in the plan because it will mean a ravaging of the rural postal network and an inevitable deterioration in the standards which Canada Post, sensibly adopting the Marchment Commission recommendation, says it will now have audited by an outside agency. I think that is an excellent idea.

I would now like to deal for a moment with the so-called supermailboxes. I must say that I am not offended by the colour of the boxes. I believe they are of a superior design in some ways to those presently out there rusting, as the Minister says. However, Canadians, unanimously and without exception, perceive that a substitution of this type of delivery for door-to-door delivery is a downgrading of service. I happen to come from a community where there was no door-to-door service. I think, as many Canadians do, that door-to-door service is a privilege, one that Canadians who have it should be pleased to have. However, I do not believe that Canadian unity is going to be in any way served by the sort of situation I have had communicated to me from Fort Francis recently where three corners of a street benefit from door to door service and the fourth has to put up with the supermailbox. We know that having one of these boxes in front of your house will mean a reduction in property values. They will be difficult to service in the Canadian winter. Such a mailbox may have looked pretty good sitting on the dry carpeted floor of a House of Commons hearing room, but what will it look like in the real world when it is being—well, we will not discuss what dogs do, but being snowed on? What about the situation of people who are handicapped or have to take their children along because they cannot leave them in the house when they go out to collect the mail? What about the elderly person who has a box at the top, some five and a half feet off the ground? Local municipalities will of course argue with Canada Post about snow clearing. Let us face it, there are some parts of the country where even supermailboxes can be buried by a good snowfall. I know that was the case just recently in Winnipeg. By inflicting these boxes on people, and I use that word advisedly, in the place of door-to-door delivery, Canadians will be losing quite a range of services. Those services are perhaps not specified under the Canada Post Corporation Act, but nevertheless Canadians benefit very much from them.

I wonder if the figures put before us are realistic. Canada Post says the supermailbox will cost $83 per year for delivery per point of call. Are we counting depreciation, unscheduled repairs running to six figures, the cost of vandalism, periodic repairs and overhauls? Certainly we know that no account is being taken of reduced property values when these boxes are put in front of someone's house. Canada Post says customers prefer community boxes to the old style green boxes because they are better maintained and located within 180 metres. They can handle incoming parcels and outgoing letters. We know that outgoing letters can be handled in the green mailboxes because that has been done in most rural routes for years or even decades. I forget the exact position, but there was one box left empty so that the rural route carrier could pick up the outgoing mail. However, snow-ploughs would block them in. Litter would collect around them. Keys will be lost and fall into the wrong hands. The elderly will hate them and so will the handicapped. I could not agree more.

Over-all the corporate plan and service reductions I have talked about indicate a lack of imagination on the part of Canada Post. Responsibility for that lack of imagination is in many ways borne by the Government. After all, the Government was focusing on a single objective of deficit reduction for Canada Post when it gave the corporation a prescription for the business plan. Let us not deceive ourselves, a prescription was certainly given. Canada Post has been cut off from possible new revenue-generating services. Post offices in other countries have made a success of the sale of packaging materials, for example. Financial services are offered in many other countries through the post office. Then we have expansion into package distribution and parcels, one of Canada Post's original mandates, as well as electronic mail, which is a profitable enterprise in many countries where it is available through the post office.

I was about to carry on at some length by dealing with the fate of the publishing industry under the new corporate plan and under government imposed restraints. However, as you have signalled, Madam Speaker, I should simply like to say that the changes which we have specifically described in the motion will deteriorate service to the majority of Canadians and, therefore, every Member of the House should oppose them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before proceeding with questions and comments, I assure the House that the Chair is provided with an accurate timepiece. I am sure the Hon. Member will forgive the Chair for making an error in adding up the time. I hope it will not happen again.

Mr. Gormley: Madam Speaker, I should like to make a comment at this point. It was interesting to hear the NDP Member speak about his Party's motion on postal service. I am a Member of Parliament from rural Canada. I have a number of concerns about rural route services, about rural post offices, and about the increasing perception, in my area of Canada, felt by rural people that they are second-class citizens.

It is because of these concerns and in my capacity as Deputy Chairman of the standing committee studying the Post Office that I felt it was of vital importance for the committee to sit down quickly, to examine the issue thoroughly, and to prepare a report for the House of Commons. The committee report will reflect the importance which many of us as rural western Canadian Members of the Government attach to rural postal services.

I should now like to comment generally upon the need for this day and the conduct of the New Democratic Party in particular. One week ago the NDP put forward a similar motion on an Opposition Day. It was not considered important or serious in the minds of its Members to dignify the House by staying around and debating it. It was an action which many of us concerned about rural services were appalled to see.

Now I should like to refer to the action of the committee itself. Literally dozens of Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament representing rural areas appeared before the committee to voice their concerns. How many NDP Members appeared before the committee? I am pleased to tell you, Madam Speaker, that New Democrats and Liberals combined made such a poor showing on behalf of their constituents that the issue, if it had not been for the Government, would not have had an airing before the committee. The House of Commons should know that in this case the Liberals have walked away from their constituents on the issue of postal services, and that the only people who walked quicker were members of the New Democratic Party.

I should like to conclude my very brief comment by addressing this particular Opposition Day. It has been the intention of the Government, as indicated in the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that standing committees have some relevance. In the study of the postal corporate plan and in the work we have spent a lot of hours doing, we are ensuring that all private Members of the House of Commons have an opportunity to appear before the committee, to have input into the examination of the available facts, and to help write the report. Here we are, one day into writing the report, and a Canadian press story on what the committee is proposing to do was leaked this morning by a member of the Opposition. That is terrible. By using this Opposition Day, the NDP is trying to undermine or violate even further the spirit of reform.

With those brief comments I will resume my seat and allow other Hon. Members to comment upon this New Democratic behaviour and how obviously unacceptable it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) wish time for rebuttal? I should like to remind him that other Hon. Members are seeking the floor.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I only wish your reminder had been given to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). He misinterpreted the actions of my Party in a flagrant, highly partisan, and extremely imaginative way when we were opposing his Government's attempts to jack up the price of pharmaceuticals. That is what was responsible for the simple deferment of the Opposition Day. We are not letting him down. It is only one week later that we are debating the Post Office matter.

He knows as well that I was at the committee. Although he claimed a lack of NDP representation, he cannot stand in the House and say that I did not faithfully and truthfully represent the concerns of my constituents before the committee.

Mr. Gormley: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the benefit of the Hon. Member, I should like to clarify that I did not say or even impute that he was not there. It was just the rest of the NDP who were not there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has the floor. Other Hon. Members have risen to ask questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, may I add that our spokesman on matters dealing with Canada Post also attended that committee, every session of that committee, I believe.

It is therefore unfair for Hon. Members to criticize Opposition parties in such a way.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to comment briefly upon the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) and to commend him for his outstanding job on behalf of his constituents in fighting for their concerns.

I have had the honour of representing the people of Burnaby for almost eight years. No issue has aroused greater passion and concern among my constituents than the recent proposals of the Post Office to increase the cost of postage while service is clearly deteriorating. Recently I conducted a survey of my constituents through a householder which I circulated to them. I received an overwhelming response. I followed it up with a special forum on the Post Office which I held in my constituency office. That forum was well attended. Certainly serious concerns were raised, and they are reflected in the motion my Party has brought before the House today.

The major concerns expressed at that post office forum, as well as in letters and telephone calls from my constituents since then, were about lengthy delays in delivery, lost mail, the increased price of a change of address card to $9.50, and the particular situation in Burnaby—intolerably long line-ups at the South Burnaby Post Office. Just yesterday I was at the South Burnaby Post Office and there were 39 people lined up waiting for service at the wicket. Obviously that kind of service is completely unacceptable.

My constituents ask quite properly how the Post Office can possibly be seeking an increase in postage rates when the quality of service is in fact going down. As well I note that the sub post office located in Sears in the south area of Burnaby was shut down. Following my representations, a new sub post office was opened.

I wanted to take this brief opportunity to indicate that the concerns addressed in the motion are strongly shared by my constituents. In closing, I hope Conservative Members of Parliament will rise and support the motion. It is not a motion of confidence in the Government. It is not in any way a threat to the life of the Government, although some of us wish it might be. It is a chance for members of all Parties to rise to speak on behalf of their constituents, to call for improvements in the postal service, and to ask that there be no increase in the cost of postage until we obtain those improvements in service.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I remind the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River that there are 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The concerns of Canadians are similar. The problems faced by Canadians, whether they be in line-ups or on rural routes, are caused by nickel and dime cutbacks as a result of the Government's unwillingness to subsidize Canada Post for the services the Government demands and its unwillingness to reimburse Canada Post fully for the many services it carries out, not only on the part of the federal Government but on the part of all Governments and indeed of the entire country.

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde).

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du—Loup): Madam Speaker, as the Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today. On April 14, 1981, thanks to the support of the three major political factions in this House and with the approval of the unions, business and consumer associations, the Canada Post Corporation Act was adopted. On October 16 of that year, the Post Ofice Department became the Canada Post Corporation, and Canada joined other countries such as the United States and Australia, who had previously and successfully opted for a postal service that would serve people in urban and rural areas in an efficient and responsible manner.

The mandate of Canada Post included three major objectives: improving service, improving labour relations and achieving financial self-sufficiency.

I would like to point out to Hon. Members, Madam Speaker, that all three objectives were equally important, because they each reflected the problems besetting Canada's postal services. Invariably, any proposal for dealing with one would be a step in the right direction towards solving the two remaining problems. In 1981, the Post Office was heading towards a deficit of $1 billion, and the Liberals' decision in 1981 to increase postal rates from 17 cents to 30 cents, a difference of 13 cents, did not help matters because, as we see now, the Liberal philosophy consisted in putting the entire burden on the user, without getting at the root of the problem. There had been no increase in postal rates for three years, although operating costs had continued to increase and as a result, Post Office revenue was down.

We are criticized for wanting Canada Post to be in the black in two years' time. Some people have short memories, Madam Speaker. It was the Liberals who, when Canada Post was set up, wanted financial self-sufficiency in two years. However, it was the usual "all talk and no action". And as if economic problems were not enough, not even 80 per cent of the mail was delivered on time. The private sector was giving Canada Post a hard time and appropriating an ever-increasing share of the market for express services, parcel post and even regular mail. The mechanized sorting centres had become obsolete. In fact, their introduction under a Liberal administration was so poorly managed that it is one of the best examples of wasting public funds.

An Hon. Member: Look who's talking.

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, I think everyone will agree, including the Members of the Liberal Party, that the organizations and institutions of this country consist of men and women and that the human factor is the soul of these institutions. That is where, in 1981, the third problem lay of the new Canada Post Corporation. Labour relations were so poor that absenteeism, accident rates and sick leave reached record highs which one would be hard-pressed to find in other job environments with similar constraints. The situation was extremely complex when we consider that 29 separate bargaining units were sharing the task of finding out how far they could go in squeezing money out of the Government. It is easy to understand why this particularly embittered climate lead to a series of national strikes during the seventies and up to 1981. What happened during that long series of strikes is beyond description. Business people were put out of work, employers had to close because they depended on the Post Office to pay their suppliers and be paid by their clients.

We will never stress enough the fact that it is the small businesses which create jobs and, together, provide work for the majority of the men and women of this country. As I said, this series of strikes not only shattered the dreams of many small business people, but also forced out of work those who rely on the private sector for employment and food for their families. I hope we never again experience such a series of events.

As you can see, this was not a situation to be envied by any organization, and it is true that in 1981 that situation was disastrous. We realize today, five years later, that the challenge was enormous and that it takes a long time to get a dinosaur to move, provided of course that everybody push in the same direction.

I would like to remind the Liberal Members in particular that financial self-sufficiency for Canada Post Corporation was not proposed by the Conservative Party and this Government, but by themselves. This is why I would like to ask them to show some intellectual and political integrity and to continue on the course they had set for Canada Post in order to eliminate the deficit and improve the service. I sympathize with the Liberal Members and I understand their role in opposition. They have to be opposed to what we do, and I accept that, but to oppose something they created and we want to continue, is opposition for it's own sake. And this is a serious matter which deserves to be treated as such.

The Canadian society as a whole, Madam Speaker, has undergone major changes in the last few years. We must understand that organizations are subsystems of a more global system. When a global system governed by economic and social laws and trends is subjected to change, its subsystems, of which organizations are a part, must adjust or else run the risk of becoming obsolescent and useless. We must understand that Canada Post will always strike to reach the goal set in 1981. An surely, all will agree that our society is evolving in a dynamic environment, that time brings about certain changes and that we must adjust.

The management of Canada Post has submitted to us a corporate plan that takes into account the changes which have occurred in our country. It is a realistic plan which recognizes that other changes will occur and that Canada Post must obtain from the Government the means to develop its own capacity to adapt to change and to meet the challenge of tomorrow. We have seen more bickering than debate since Canada Post has tabled its corporate plan, and this has given rise to misunderstandings as to the basic role of the postal system. The Canada Post Corporation Act itself has taken a beating. What I mean, Madam Speaker, is that we are asking, five years after passage of this legislation by Parliament, if people have a right to door-to-door delivery, if every community across Canada, regardless of population density, has a right to two or three post offices.

Madam Speaker, all Canadians are entitled to a postal service and for more than a hundred years, Canadians have been getting their mail from a post office, by the rural contractor who delivers it at the edge of their land, by the mailman in the city or through many other ways.

It is on that point that the Opposition is misleading us in this debate. To ask Canada Post to operate as a business without giving it the means to act in a responsible way would bring us back to square one. Remember 1981!

I might tell the postal union that the more efficient Canada Post will be the more jobs will be protected. The closer the corporation will adhere to market laws by being more competitive, the more secure the jobs will be.

Madam Speaker, in that area, the Government has taken responsible action.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I am pleased with the statement our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made last week, and a report written by a Canadian Press journalist, Mr. Pierre April, under the headline "Mulroney Wants to Make Postal Recovery Plan More Acceptable" should answer many of the questions that were asked in the House today. Here it is:

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney indicated clearly in the House of Commons yesterday that the recovery plan for Canada Post, which was made public on November 5, could be changed to make it more acceptable to the Canadian people.

As a result of the spring 1986 parliamentary reform Members, he said, were presented with the plan and suggestions for major amendements will no doubt be made. We intend to listen to what members of the parliamentary committee to study the Canada Post plan have to say.

In reply to a question by Liberal leader John Turner, the government leader pointed out that this much criticized Canada Post plan was an attempt by the Corporation to find ways of providing service at a reasonable cost.

This plan, he added, was submitted as it should be to a parliamentary committee for consideration. Members are sending strong signals—

—and I am one of them—

—and I imagine that there will be a report indicating that some aspects of the plan were unacceptable.

One of those aspects severely criticized by Conservative as well as Opposition members in this House concerns the phasing out of door to door postal delivery and the reduction of postal services in rural areas while maintaining these services in urban areas. First and foremost, added the Prime Minister, we must take into consideration the interests and the well-being of Canadian citizens, especially in rural areas.

There shall be no second-class citizens in this country, whether it be regarding mail service or otherwise, he concluded, as long as this Conservative government will remain in power.

For his part, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), speaking on behalf of his boss, the Minister responsible for Canada Post, stated that the Government had received the plan on November the 5th, had accepted it and then referred it to the parliamentary committee. This committee, he added, was to make recommendations to Parliament which in turn would decide what would become of the corporation's plan.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for getting some straight facts on the record. We should put on the record more facts of what has transpired over the last few years.

The NDP voted with the Liberals and the Conservatives to create a Crown corporation. At that time the Government was seeking self-sufficiency in five years. I wonder what has changed the mind of the NDP now. Also, the NDP agreed with the goal of a self-sufficient Crown corporation, yet it advocates positions which would create stamp prices six to ten cents greater than the corporation has planned.

Does the NDP really care about consumers, or is it simply in the pocket of big labour? We know the NDP gets its marching orders from the labour unions, but I do not think the country wants to be governed by Jean- Claude Parrot or Shirley Carr.

It should also be on the record that in 1974 a Liberal Government imposed a moratorium on new towns receiving letter carrier service. The practice prior to 1974 was to implement letter carrier delivery when a community reached 2,000 points of call.

In addition, green boxes were first used by the Department of the Post Office over 30 years ago. Corporations under previous Governments used green boxes in rural settings and to service some urban growth, although many residents of new developments had no option other than general delivery.

For the two opposition Parties to take the position that all of a sudden they are against mail boxes and community boxes, as has been intimated today, is very hypocritical. The super-mailboxes were first introduced in 1982 and Canada Post has been installing them since 1983. I do not understand the concern about super mailboxes being installed now, three years later.

We all agreed Canada Post should be self-sufficient. We cannot provide door-to-door mail delivery right across Canada and make Canada Post self-sufficient. I tell people in my riding, although not everyone likes it, that we simply do not have the money to pay for door to door delivery right across Canada. It would be very nice if we had the money, but we do not. No one has written me saying that they are prepared to pay 50 cents for a stamp, and that is what we would have to pay in order to afford door to door delivery.

I have also heard Members complaining within the last few weeks about boxes in their ridings. These outdoor boxes have been in their ridings for the last 30 years. There are a lot of games being played, Madam Speaker. I agree that Canada Post provides a lot of poor service. We all know that. However, we are not through with Canada Post. It will be appearing before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee as well as the Transport Committee. I hope Liberal and NDP Members will attend those committee meetings. I hope the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will take action on his questionnaire. I think that is a good idea. A lot of Members have done that. However, they must be sure to pass the results on to Canada Post or to present them at committee meetings. Let us apply pressure to Canada Post until we get improved service.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, does the last speaker realize that Canada Post is spending approximately $800,000 to advertise the so-called super boxes? That money could be used to provide door-to-door service for those who are not now receiving it. Canada Post is also wasting money on automobiles for its 14 vice-presidents and various other things. If we cut out that waste, we would be in a position to provide the service to which people have a right.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, in answer to my colleague, I would like to tell him that since the Conservative Party's election in September 1984, Canada Post still has made great progress and at a sustained rate. Concerning the squandering and the $800,000 spent on advertizing he is talking about, I agree with him that if there is squandering within Canada Post we have a committee in this House and it is his duty as the representative of the people who sent him here to express his concerns before this committee and from there the committee will undertake to inform the Minister in order that such a situation be redressed.

Madam Speaker, as the representative for the riding of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup for the past two years, I have experienced a good many problems with Canada Post, and I can say in this House that there was very close co-operation with the people at Canada Post, that most of my problems have been resolved, and that we have worked in co-operation with the corporation in cutting back the squandering he mentioned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this very important debate in the House today.

• (1700)

[English]

This very important motion before us today urges the Government to require Canada Post to forgo the two-cent postal rate increase planned for the new year, to reject the planned closure of hundreds of rural post offices, to reconsider the decision to replace door-to-door postal delivery in new suburban areas with Post Office super mailboxes and to reconsider the ongoing reductions in urban postal services. All of the issues raised in the motion are very important to constituents whom I represent in the House.

[Translation]

The electoral district of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell covers a vast territory. In fact, the distance from one end of the riding to the other is about 110 or 120 kilometers. There are forty-two post offices in the riding. The western part of the riding is urban, and contains the community of Orléans which is very close to Ottawa. This community now has 75,000 inhabitants, and although problems with postal services may be different from those in the country, they exist just the same. There is only one other region in the riding were mail is delivered door to door, and I am of course referring to the town of Hawkesbury. Elsewhere we have rural services.

[English]

Let us talk about the problems of urban mail delivery in my constituency. When I was called upon by the people of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to represent them in the House in 1984, one of the first issues that came to my attention in the urban area of Orleans was that literally thousands of people had to drive to the post office in order to pick up their mail. Some of them had to drive as far as eight kilometres one way to get their mail in this urban area and then had to stand in line for hours before getting the mail. Of course, that situation was unacceptable.

As their Member of Parliament, I contacted Canada Post and asked why my constituents could not get urban mail delivery when residents on the next street had urban mail delivery. I assumed that if one street could have that service, the next street in the same subdivision could have the same service. However, Canada Post said no and denied that service because it no longer provides urban mail delivery. Naturally, my constituents and I wondered what we could do in the meantime and asked at least to have the green community mailboxes on the corner. Canada Post refused because those community mailboxes are for the rural area. I argued and said: "Let me get this straight: you mean that you cannot get urban delivery because you do not have it and you cannot get rural delivery because you are in an urban area?" That is Post Office logic and does not make sense to most people in Canada. It obviously did not make sense to the people whom I represent.

Finally, Canada Post decided to provide those community mailboxes while it studied the situation. People in the Orleans area tolerated that because it meant they did not have to drive up to 10 kilometres to get their mail while Canada Post decided how to improve the service.

[Translation]

However, most people did not know at the time that Canada Post was planning to introduce a kind of mail box, so that these community boxes would become a permanent fixture. I am of course referring to the so-called superbox. What did they do? They took one of these community boxes and decided to make it a permanent box. They call it the superbox. I keep wondering about the world "super", Madam Speaker, because it is pretty clear many of us would prefer to call it something else.

[English]

Super mailboxes were plagued with breakdowns and would not lock properly. We then discovered that not only did the super mailbox have a super-open door, as the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) said, there was a super key that in fact could open a number of boxes. As a result of the cold and stormy weather today and yesterday, my constituents were phoning me to say that the super mailboxes in Orleans were frozen solid and could not be opened at all. It is quite evident that this system is simply not working properly. This situation also causes me concern for the blind and the handicapped.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): You should read the plan.

Mr. Boudria: The Minister says that I should read the plan. I have read whatever little of the plan the Government has allowed us mortals to see.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): They are the same boxes that you installed in 1983.

Mr. Boudria: It is quite evident that the boxes that are in the area that I represent are inaccessible to people in wheelchairs. It is also quite evident in that area, notwithstanding what the plan indicates may happen in the future, according to which part the Government decides to adopt, that people who purchased homes in an urban area in order to receive normal services for an urban area are not receiving those services. That is the point I am making.

I am asked why people should have that service. It strikes me as normal, elementary justice that if there are four streets in a row, and street number three and street number one have mail service, then street number two and street number four should have exactly the same service. I suggest that anything less is an injustice to the people whom I represent.

But the Post Canada plan has created a new problem, and I am referring to rural mail delivery. The Minister responsible for Canada Post and his assistant—incidentally, he has been observed recently hanging around post offices in my riding—should know that what Canada Post is doing at this very moment is totally unfair.

Here are some facts. First I should like to talk about the people who deliver mail in rural areas of this country, specifically about one individual. For openers, now we know that a person who delivers mail along rural routes will have to submit tenders to renew his or her own contract. Imagine, Madam Speaker, an individual has to make a bid to keep his or her job. Such is the new policy of the Government, the policy of Canada Post. I would draw the attention of Hon. Members to the case of one of my constituents from the Hawkesbury area, Mr. Ronald Laliberté. For 35 years now he has been delivering mail for Canada Post. He is 53 years old. That is about all he has done during his life, but now he has to submit a tender and he cannot be sure whether he will be able to hang on to the job he had had for 35 years. Where can he look for a job after working so many years for the same employer? We can only wonder what working conditions were like 35 years ago.

Madam Speaker, I know from a reliable source that 30 years ago he was badly injured while delivering mail. Delivering mail in rural areas is not exactly the cushiest job. Some years ago, the same people who delivered the mail in winter sometimes used skis, snowshoes or any other device they could get their hands on to do their work. And now the appreciation they are getting are this: "Mr. Smith or Mr. So-and-so, as of April 1st, if you want to keep your job you will now have to apply for it and bid lower than others". This is what they get in the way of appreciation after so many years of service.

That is unfair, Madam Speaker.

• (1710)

I would like to speak now about the rural post offices. The Canadian Postmasters and Assistants Association, its President, Mr. Starkey, and others, met with members of the Liberal caucus this afternoon. They made us aware of the fact that, for instance, 72 per cent of parcel post business belonged to the Post Office in the past. A decade later Canada Post has only 12 per cent left of that business. That business is dwindling because Canada Post cannot provide adequate service. Therefore, that service will gradually be lost.

What about the issue of weekly newspapers? What is going to happen to that business as a result of this centralization of rural mail? Right now, if weekly newspapers in my riding and elsewhere are published on Tuesday, the owner of the newspaper, or one of its employees, will take it to every small post office in the area and the postmaster will hand it out to the local people on Wednesday. Do you think, Madam Speaker, that a larger post office will have that same day service for weekly newspapers? I say it will not. That will doom the weekly newspaper industry. No one wants to read a weekly newspaper if it is three, four or five days old. The whole business of providing a consolidation of rural routes is not going to work.

[Translation]

Can you imagine, Madam Speaker, in a rural area such as Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, what it means to tell people: "You will have to walk or drive 4 kilometers to get your mail, in rural areas?" I have in my constituency many senior citizens living in rural areas. Some do not even own a car. How are they going to get their mail?

The Government's suggestion concerning that rural consolidation is unreal, so much so that people living in the suburbs or the outskirts of villages—

The corporate plan of the Canada Post Corporation informs us that people in rural areas living less than two kilometers away from a post office will get the same service as those living within the limits of a village.

Do you know what that means, Madam Speaker? That means that if you live at a distance of two kilometers or less from a post office, from now on you will have to walk to fetch your mail. They no longer deliver the mail to the mailbox in front of your house. That is what it means for people living in rural areas in my riding. Do you think it is reasonable to require from a person who is 60, 70 or 80 years old to walk a distance of two kilometers in a snowstorm, on a day like today, to get his or her mail?

The Canada Post Corporation wants these superboxes in rural areas. First, we thought we were going to get them in urban areas. Now, they would like to give them to us in rural areas. Can you imagine such a superbox on the corner of the third concession, at a distance of four kilometers from nowhere? People will have to walk to get there, and what will they find? A snowbank one meter high—not to say three feet high—in front of the superbox. And the superbox will be frozen in January when the temperature is 15 below. This is a potential situation which my constituents will be faced with if the Government does not put an end to this policy of the Canada Post Corporation.

People in my constituency have a saying, Madam Speaker. They say—

Mr. Prud'homme: Tory times are hard times!

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) says: "Tory times are hard times." This is true. We also say that, but there is another saying in my region. People say that a Government which cannot deliver the mail does not deserve to be in power. If the Conservatives opposite are unable to deliver the mail to the constituents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, how can they claim the right to govern? How can they claim the ability to do anything else when they are not even able to take a letter from one place to another in this country?

These are all questions which have been asked to me. These are all questions to which the constituents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell want some answers, Madam Speaker. It is very well for the Conservative Members to ridicule the Opposition for moving this motion today. They claim that this motion is not necessary. For my part, I can say that the residents of my constituency and of all other constituencies in Canada want to know whether or not this Government has the ability to deliver the mail.

[English]

The people of Canada want to know how they can trust this Government with anything else if it cannot even deliver the mail properly? How can it claim to be competent enough to run the country if it cannot run the Post Office? We still do not have the answer to that. We are certainly not getting answers from the typewritten, eight and a half by eleven triple-spaced speeches we heard from some Hon. Members on the government side. We will get the answers by having a debate and hearing what our constituents in every single riding across the country want. In closing, I invite Hon. Members of the Government to hold the Government to account. That is not just the duty of the Opposition. It is the responsibility of the Parliament of our country. It is time the 200 or so silent Tory back-benchers spoke up for the people who sent them here and told the Government: "We have had enough of this. Deliver the mail. That is what you were elected to do".

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I have never heard so much unadulterated crap in all my life. I want to ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) how in the world he can stand in his place and talk about Conservative Members not bringing accountability to Government when he is a member of a political Party that, when in government just two-and-a-half short years ago, had a Post Office debt nearing $1 billion. His Party cared not a toot about whether or not the debt grew larger. It had no respect for the debt of the nation. It provided poorer service then than we have now. Yet the Hon. Member can stand in his place and somehow pretend that nothing has changed, that there has been no change in direction, when the truth of the matter is that service will not change until we get the debt under control in a complete way. Service is certainly better now than it was when his Party was in place. How can the Hon. Member pretend to be giving a speech that in any way reflects historical fact when he displays a turning aside of the facts to suit his own purposes?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not like it, he can take it or leave it or lump it. I do not care. The people of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell sent me here to speak on their behalf, which is what I will do so long as I am here, whether the Hon. Member opposite likes it or not.

In so far as the quality of service is concerned, I do not think that there is anyone in my riding, nor in yours, Madam Speaker, or in any other riding, who thinks that the service of Canada Post has improved since the Tories took office. If there is such a person I would sure like to meet him.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to say a few words about the points raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) regarding rural postal service in particular. On Friday I had the pleasure of travelling to several rural parts of my riding with my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), to talk to constituents about rural mail service. In one community of about 340 households, which is served presently by a small rural post office and by a rural route service, I discovered at a meeting of people gathered together with about three or four days' notice at 2.30 p.m. on a Friday afternoon that there were 42 people in the room ready to express their concerns about rural postal service. At a meeting that evening in Kakabeka Falls called with even less notice we found 75 people gathered together to ask questions and express their concerns about rural mail service.

The reality that faces these communities now is that the corporate plan which the Cabinet of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) approved last month will have Canada Post closing these post offices at the first opportunity and taking rural mail delivery away from people to replace it with one kind or another of group box. People who are used to good mail service, although they have seen various declines in it over the last few years, now see postal service being removed from their driveways and from their homes. They see a Government which is prepared to make the Canada Post reduction of deficit argument which will increase their own costs of mail service. The total cost of communicating through Canada Post is at the very basis of the situation that people face. I find it outrageous that the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and other rural representatives on the government side who were at committee on Thursday and who cut off discussion of a postal rate increase, which should have been part and parcel of a larger consideration of rural mail service, should be here today asking questions about the kind of service that people have received over the past couple of years. It will only get worse.

What we have to consider is the fact that the deficit in Canada Post will not be dealt with by cutting back on services. If the last Government as well as the present Government had allowed Canada Post to enter such areas of service as parcels and electronic mail—and it allowed the experiment with consumer post to go ahead—the deficit would have been covered. Then the rural inhabitants of Canada would not find themselves in a situation in which their costs of receiving mail will be rising massively. They would not find themselves facing costs of hundreds of dollars in many cases to receive mail, all because Canada Post is trying to reduce its deficit somewhat.

It is just that type of large consideration of the needs of Canada, in allowing Canada Post to expand its activities rather than cut them back, that should be at the basis of a logical corporate plan. The failure to recognize the needs of rural Canada, and instead to be preoccupied with reducing Canada Post services while profit-making enterprises in the country make money, is an attack on rural Canada which back-benchers of the governing Party seem quite prepared to support. It is simply outrageous. My constituents are not going to stand for it, regardless of what the constituents of Members opposite may think.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, first, rural mail service cannot pay its way. If we are looking to make money with rural mail service, then I tell rural Members of the House to try to sell it to their constituents if they think it will work. It cannot be a paying proposition to deliver mail in a rural area. That is why it is called a postal service as opposed to a postal business. That is what it is.

Second, in terms of rural mail service and the type of service that it provides and the necessity of it for rural residents, I refer to my meeting this afternoon with the association of postmasters and their assistants. I was told at this meeting that in rural areas a large number of senior citizens still receive such things as prescriptions, food items and clothing items in the mail. They receive COD articles of mail. Those features of Canada Post are used by our rural residents. They are people who live far from urban communities and who need these services. Receiving medicine through the mail is not just a convenience for these people. In many cases it is the only way to receive the items they need. It is time we started to think about that. Some Members opposite talk about the fact that many things have changed, as if having a postal service were mere nostalgia. It is not that. It is something that we need and it is something that the people want. They have every right to expect that they should receive it from the Government.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I have some comments to make. I do not know where the Hon. Member was, or other members of the Liberal Party, when they let the Post Office run down to such a degree. We inherited this mess from the Liberal Government. The corporation under the Liberal Government did not invest in capital assets, therefore creating the situation that this Government is addressing. The age of the transportation fleet is almost twice the optimum for transportation companies. No significant investment was made in sorting equipment. Some of it is 30 years old. So we have to find the money to buy new sorting equipment. Why did the Liberal Party when in government not buy new sorting equipment? This Government is making a major equity investment in this and the next fiscal year to improve capital base and consequently improve the level of postal service.

It was the Liberal Government while Canada Post was still a Department which negotiated agreements with unions that have reduced management operational efficiency and set a wage rate for union members which is out of line with wages paid in the private sector. The settlements to which they agreed are the major reason Canada Post is in financial difficulty.

I want to point out to you, Madam Speaker, that we are dealing with this. The Canada Labour Relations Board is working with the unions and Canada Post to reduce the number of unions, which has caused serious operational problems for Canada Post. There are about 29 collective agreements. I hear some mumbling from members of the NDP. The unions agree that they do not need as many collective agreements and they agree that we do not need umpteen different unions in Canada Post. We are working on that problem and we are taking decisive action. We are not ignoring the problems like the Liberals did for all the years they were in power.

Why was this mess created? If Liberals are so smart, know everything and have all the answers, why did they not implement all their brainwaves when they were in power? It is ludicrous for them to be criticizing Canada Post now and for them to be criticizing us for taking positive action, something they should have done but have neglected to do in the 20 years they were in power.

Mr. Boudria: I cannot respond? I would have loved to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time is over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have followed today's debate very closely. I have heard a litany of complaints about the postal service for a number of years. I do not intend to spend much time talking about details. However, I would mention, after hearing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) complain about what the Liberals did, that over the last few years, I have been collecting envelopes. I have here a handful of envelopes, the last group I received.

If one wanted to complain about Canada Post, one could talk about these envelopes. This one took 10 days to go from Vancouver to Ottawa, this one six days from Toronto to Ottawa, this one nine days from Winnipeg to Ottawa, this one nine days from Moose Jaw to Ottawa, and this one seven days from the main Alta Vista Post Office in Ottawa to the House of Commons. These letters were all sent since the Conservatives came into power.

I have a collection of envelopes which were sent while the Liberals were in power. I have given members of my staff standing instructions to note the date a letter was mailed and the date it was received at this post office and to keep those envelopes. I urge that practice upon all Hon. Members.

This is nothing more than a symptom of the disease. The disease is the false premise that there must be self-sufficiency in the Post Office as recommended by the commission. As the Minister said today, and I am sorry he had to step out for a moment, this objective is endorsed by the Government. This objective is in fundamental conflict with the provision of equitable postal service all across Canada. We cannot have both at the same time.

Postal service is a national requirement. It is a required public service. As a result of that fundamental principle, self-sufficiency must take second place. I do not know of more than three or four postal systems anywhere in the world that break even, let alone make money. Perhaps the postal services of Monaco and Lichtenstein make money, and I hear the British and the Swedes are doing well, but in those countries the postal system sells a great many other services as well in order to provide fast urban door-to-door and rural delivery.

It is said by those who demand self-sufficiency that we cannot have a public service, a Crown corporation, occupying territory that rightfully belongs to the private sector, territory like the delivery of mail or the provision of savings accounts and drivers' licences. I can remember registering for the national mobilization in 1942 at a post office, but in those years everything was done at the post office. I am not suggesting that the same things be done at a post office now. However, there is a national need for door-to-door delivery in urban Canada and for delivery to rural routes and rural post offices. If we are to meet the national need, we cannot have self-sufficiency. The postal service might become self-sufficient once in a while, perhaps three years out of five, but there is no imperative in the minds of taxpayers for full cost recovery at the expense of service.

I recognize that my hon. friends opposite, including the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine, are perfectly right. What is happening now was started by the Liberals. I am not arguing about that, I simply put a plague on both their houses. The point is we cannot have both things at the same time.

In a nation like ours with our geography, climate and distances, the Post Office will be lucky to break even and will likely lose money. That is not to suggest that it be given free rein and lose whatever amount of money it likes. Of course it must operate efficiently and in the course of providing service to Canadians in all parts of Canada, it must be efficient. There is no argument about that. However, efficiency should not be achieved at the expense of rural residents, rural post offices or urban residents.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that there are no second-class citizens. In northwest and southwest Regina, there are people who are being treated as second-class citizens. They live one street away from door-to-door delivery. The situation is the same in every city in Canada.

Of course mail service must be efficient. It should be governed by a consumer-oriented regulatory agency that does not take into account current government fiscal requirements. However, there is no question that if we are to provide an equitable postal service, the odds are that it will lose money in eight or nine out of 10 years.

I have yet to hear from a taxpayer, a Liberal, a Conservative, an NDP, a big businessman, a small businessman, a home owner, a farmer or an old age pensioner in my constituency or anywhere else in Canada who objects to the Post Office having a deficit as long as it provides the service. If we do take into account our geography, our climate and the wide scattering of our population, then obviously the nation as a whole must share in the cost of delivering the mail as it has shared in so many other areas.

I spoke to a farmer from Aylesbury, which is in the riding of my hon. friend from Moose Jaw. I am sure he is as welcome in Aylesbury as a skunk at a garden party.

Mr. Gottselig: I used to live there.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sure he is welcome there. A farmer from Aylesbury said to me: "You know, on the one hand they are going to increase my rates and on the other hand they won't deliver my mail. What are they raising my rates for, whether it be for a letter or a parcel? They are going to close the post office in Aylesbury". The same thing applies to something in the order of 1,800 hamlets, villages and small towns all across Canada. The Government has to offer service first and self-sufficiency second. At the moment, according to the Minister, it has opted for self-sufficiency first and service second.

• (1740)

I am sure my friends in the government back-benches have gotten the message from their constituents: You cannot have it both ways. You cannot have equitable service and self-sufficiency at the same time in a country like this. It is not realistic. That is why I invite my friends on all sides of the House to support a motion which does not indicate want of confidence. The motion specifically says it does not. It does not condemn the Government. It calls on the Post Office to do certain things and that is all. Every Member of this House can feel completely free to express the feelings of their constituents. It will not serve as condemnation of the Government. It will not be a condemnation of Members who might not vote with their Party. It serves only as an expression of opinion by their constituents. If Members feel they have to vote against that opinion, they are fully entitled to do so. I have done it and gotten in a lot of trouble with my constituents on more than one occasion. However, they must make up their own minds. They cannot have it both ways, as I said.

I suggest to Members that they opt for service first and allow Canada Post to be innovative, even if it infringes on territory which the private sector thinks it is entitled to. Tough cookie. There are services the Post Office can provide at the same or less cost than that at which the private sector is presently ripping off consumers. There is a wide variety of things the Post Office can be doing in conjunction with mail delivery.

There is nothing more meaningful than the mail to individual Canadians. Whether they open their mailbox on a daily basis or three times a week, whether it is flown in or comes in on horseback, it is personal. Every person in Canada is affected by the quality and frequency of mail service. People in rural Canada do not expect daily door-to-door delivery in every village and every farm. They never have and they have not asked for it. They do expect some equity of service and surely that has to take priority over self-sufficiency.

Whether the Post Office deficit is $100 million or $500 million in a given year, give the people of Canada the service and they will agree to share the deficit. It is called a co-operative commonwealth. It is called a new democracy. It is called co-operative federalism.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9). The question is the following one. Mr. Keeper, seconded by Mr. Riis, moved:

That this House urge the Government to require Canada Post to forgo the 2 cent postal rate increase planned for the new year, to reject the planned closure of hundreds of rural post offices, to reconsider the decision to replace door to door postal delivery in new suburban areas with reductions in urban postal services, and furthermore, that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the government.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Keeper), which was negatived on the following division:

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—APPLICATIONS' CUT-OFF DATE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, relations between the Government of Canada and this country's Indian people continue to be sour. To illustrate why this is so I use as an example the post-secondary assistance program. This program has enjoyed enormous success as more and more young Indian people seek advanced education. Now, almost without warning, the Government has decided to curtail its expenditures on this program.

There is always money, it seems, for failed banks or rich friends of the Government, but no new funds to help Indian youth develop careers and become self-reliant. The Department of Indian Affairs arbitrarily decided on a cut-off date of November 1 for applications under this program. Where, I ask, is the legal authority for such a decision?

Hundreds of Indian students will therefore be disqualified for assistance. Many hundreds of others who did meet the deadline have also been advised not to expect any help. Broken promises, shattered dreams, bitterness, resentment and anger—will the pattern never end?

HUMAN RIGHTS

ANNIVERSARY OF UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on December 10, 1948, the General Assembly of the United Nations approved the first Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Each year on this date the member states of the U.N. have observed Human Rights Day. It is not an easy day to celebrate. In spite of the noble language of the Universal Declaration, the past 38 years have seen more brutal torture, political imprisonment, and ruthless repression of rights than any previous 38 years in history. Yet this remains as a day to celebrate, with the message of Mykola Rudesko, the Ukrainian poet, who spoke for all who are helpless and yet not hopeless:

They can lock up only our body.

But the spirit will fly throughout the ages.

One year ago Canada made Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen for his heroism to humanity during the Holocaust. The world needs his heroic spirit still, and on Human Rights day Canada and all the world honours all who share it.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS' VOTE ON POST OFFICE MOTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as one who has been involved continuously with the parliamentary reform process which began in 1982, serving on both the Lefebvre and McGrath committees, I have had many opportunities to be pleased with the progress of reform. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), known for not keeping his promises in many other areas, lived up to his rhetoric on parliamentary reform in several important respects and we have seen much that is good as a result, not the least of which is the process by which you, Mr. Speaker, were elected servant of this House.

However, I observe with regret that yesterday was a setback for parliamentary reform. If it could be said that the Prime Minister has made his contribution to parliamentary reform, it may also be said that Conservative backbenchers missed a big opportunity yesterday when not one of them supported a motion concerning the post office which contained nothing with which many Tory backbenchers are known to disagree. They voted as a block against their own views on a motion which was not a non-confidence motion.

Mr. Speaker: I think I must remind the Hon. Member that he is coming very close to reflecting on a vote and that may offend against the sensibilities of the House.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, finally the marriage between the Conservative Party and the Parti Quebecois, consummated in 1984, is producing offspring. On Monday our double-talking Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a statement in Quebec designed to undermine Quebec Bills 140 and 142. These Bills were presented by the majority Bourassa Government to provide greater language equity in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the Hon. Member to continue but I think the Hon. Member, who is an experienced parliamentarian, would want to think carefully about some of the words he has used. I am sure he will take that into account for the rest of his statement. I think language like that does create some difficulties for the Chair.

Mr. Allmand: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result, the Prime Minister was naturally applauded by Pierre Marc Johnson, Leader of the Parti Quebecois, and criticized by Liberal Minister Lise Bacon. In this respect the Prime Minister has now aligned himself with the Association of St. John Baptiste Societies and other extremist groups. This is the same Prime Minister who, in the 1984 election and in the Speech from the Throne, promised to protect minority language rights. We now know that promise is as worthless as hundreds of others. When will the Prime Minister live up to his commitments and start telling Canadians the truth?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FRENCH LANGUAGE USAGE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Recently, Mr. Speaker, our Conservative colleague from Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) took the initiative of releasing figures on the use of French in the House of Commons.

Under the Liberals French was used 9 per cent of the time in this House. In October 1986, under the Conservatives, the use of French had gone up to 20 per cent.

Which political Party belittles the use of French in the House of Commons?

In October 1984 the socialist Party used French only 3.9 per cent of the time, even less in November 1986, 3.3 per cent. However these figures are misleading because most socialist Members read texts which have been translated into French especially for the Oral Question Period.

Once again the socialist Party does not show its true colours, which is why it will not gain ground in Quebec at the next election. Mr. Speaker, Quebecers will never forget the socialist Party's hypocritical approach in its advertising.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, given the Liberals' penchant for book writing, I have a suggestion for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) which might help him make the best-sellers' list and at the same time clear up some of the confusion on the trade issue.

In a letter to The Globe and Mail today the Liberal Party's trade critic sees no contradictions in his Party's numerous stands on trade. He says his Party's contradictory policy resolutions endorsing free trade and condemning free trade are "confirmation of a truly Liberal approach to trade". The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has come down firmly on both sides of the issue, thus giving us the Liberals' idea of policy leadership.

Can the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry reconcile his stand with that of the Liberal external affairs critic? Stay tuned. The Liberal trade critic's letter to the editor is an attempt at clarifying a very muddy pond. Perhaps he should talk to his Leader and the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) to make sure that they do not drown each other. All this brings one to the inevitable question: will the real Leader of the New Democratic Party please stand up?

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ELECTION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY CANDIDATE IN NEWFOUNDLAND PROVINCIAL BY-ELECTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: There he is!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an historic day for the people of Newfoundland. The voters of St. John's East rejected the policies of provincial and federal Tories and elected a New Democrat in a riding which has been held by Conservatives since Confederation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: In a nearby riding the Conservatives were only able to hold on by their fingernails—a very narrow win. These Newfoundland voters were rejecting the Conservative policies. They were rejecting policies which have cut services and raised prices to the fishing industry. They were rejecting policies which forced confrontations between working people and their government employers. And they were rejecting policies enunciated in both the Nielsen and Forget Reports aimed at gutting the Unemployment Insurance Program.

The people of Newfoundland, particularly those of St. John's East, will continue to reject these policies. We look forward to the day when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will take courage in both his hands and permit them to send another New Democrat to Ottawa in the awaited federal St. John's East by-election.

Finally, we congratulate Gene Long—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL HELP

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in Canadian history a Prime Minister attended a conference on Canada's agricultural outlook and announced a $1 billion program for this country's grains producers. Needless to say, as a Government Member who sits on the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I am extremely proud of this program under which more than $37 million will be paid out to Quebec producers of wheat, barley, oats and other agricultural commodities.

Under this financial assistance program the average producer will receive about $5,000, and even up to $25,000 in some cases.

Mr. Speaker, world-wide the agricultural sector is experiencing difficulties and this Government has decided to step in and help our producers after listening to their representations and solutions. This is one more instance where our Government did listen and respond positively, another commitment honoured by the Progressive Conservative Government—the Canadianization of agricultural programs.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

APPOINTMENTS TO FITNESS COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on December 9 the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) issued a news release announcing a Minister's committee on fitness. This committee is to be responsible for the preparation of a report recommending a structural framework for the management and administration of fitness at the national level.

This is an absolute outrage to the people of Atlantic Canada and western Canada. Eight people were appointed to this committee and, notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) campaigned on the theme of national reconciliation, the Government did not see fit to appoint one individual from western Canada or from Atlantic Canada.

We have been alienated by the national Government, both through its economic policies and its cultural policies. Now the process of consultation is forgetting about the regions of western and Atlantic Canada. I call upon the Prime Minister to intervene and order the Minister to review the appointments to this committee to make sure that people from Atlantic Canada and western Canada are included.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, although I am occasionally disappointed by the quality of reporting on agricultural issues in the urban dailies, I am pleased that today's Globe and Mail quotes Wayne Easter, the President of NFU, as saying that the federal Government should be commended for the manner in which the $1 billion has been distributed among grain producers. As Don Knoerr, President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, has indicated, it was the farm organizations themselves that devised the formula and the results are satisfying.

Grain farmers know that the $1 billion payment is the largest such payment in Canadian history, and they are particularly appreciative of the fact that this is a cash payment rather than the loan which the critics had forecast. While the $1 billion payment will not in itself resolve the grain industry's financial crisis, I am delighted that over $150 million will go to Manitoba farmers, particularly in light of the fact that that is virtually the figure for which such spokesmen as the Hon. Bill Uruski have been calling. Now if only provincial Governments would match this $1 billion payment, the Canadian grain picture would be vastly improved.

LABOUR RELATIONS

KINGSTON COMPANY'S THREAT TO CLOSE PLANTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have just found out that Cancoil Thermal Corp., a Kingston company, has decided to lay off its workers and close down its plant simply because the workers decided they wanted to unionize.

This is a very objectionable practice, but what makes it even more objectionable is the fact that the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Member of Parliament who represents that area, just recently gave that same company $100,000 to expand its plant and to create 35 new jobs.

This is a very serious issue. I call upon the Government to investigate this matter and to ensure that federal government money is not being used to help this strikebreaker and unionbuster create jobs for himself and his family and no one else.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the fact that the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) was the first Prime Minister ever to attend the Agricultural Outlook Conference which just concluded here in Ottawa yesterday. It was there that the details of the Special Canadian Grains Program were announced. This was very good news for agricultural producers from sea to sea who will receive the $1 billion prior to seeding their 1987 crops.

The program delivers on a commitment made by the Prime Minister in this House on October 3. It is an equitable national program that puts straight cash, new money, into the pockets of farmers, with no strings attached. The formulation of the delivery of this program marked an historic change in the attitude of Government. How different it is when a Prime Minister says: "When the farmers hurt, the Parliament of Canada should respond". It is much different from a previous Prime Minister whose response was the finger and the question: "Why should I sell your wheat?"

REFUGEES

REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM—DELAY IN INTRODUCING LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, as we approach the year's end, the Government has still to introduce legislation concerning a new refugee determination system. Canadians have been promised such reform for the last two years by four different Immigration Ministers. Moreover, the Speech from the Throne committed the Government to action, and the current Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) publicly stated that the package would be before Parliament this past fall. Parliament is still waiting, as are thousands of refugees and hundreds of organizations working on their behalf. Not only has the Conservative Government failed to honour its own promise, but it also refuses to meet with major church leaders and refugee organizations before the policy is introduced.

• (1420)

The Government is turning its back on the human needs of refugees. It is not consulting with interested Canadians. It is refusing to address the new refugee phenomenon in Canadian society, which requires urgent and significant reform. Shamefully, the Government is offering neither leadership nor compassion. Come to think of it, it is ending the year in the same manner in which it started the year.

TRADE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the visit yesterday of Senator Lloyd Bentsen and his other colleagues from the United States Senate.

In his press conference, and indeed in our own conversations with him, the Senator indicated that the United States expected that the Auto Pact would be an item on the table during the current negotiations with Canada. Since the Prime Minister had the opportunity of meeting with the Senators prior to our meeting with them, was the Prime Minister not able to indicate to them quite clearly that the Auto Pact is not an item for negotiation, and is not a subject of the free trade proposals?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did briefly touch upon it. I indicated, and I believe the Minister of International Trade indicated, that the Auto Pact had worked extremely well for some extended period of time, and we saw no reason why it ought to form the basis of any negotiation.

Reference was made to the fact that inasmuch as the automotive trade generally represents some one-third of the total traffic back and forth, if it could be improved upon then it could be looked at. But I was not aware of any statement with regard to a determination to sit down with a view to revising what has been a beneficial instrument.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is what Senator Bentsen said at his press conference and when he met with Liberal Members.

CANADIAN CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—NEED TO MAINTAIN CANADIANISM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is again addressed to the Prime Minister. The United States senators visiting Ottawa yesterday also indicated that Canada's cultural industries were still on the table. Did the Prime Minister have a chance to make it clear to our American friends that our cultural industries will remain Canadian and that they are not on the table in the free trade talks?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, there were a number of meetings but these were not negotiating sessions. The United States senators did not have a mandate to negotiate. These were meetings to provide a general overview, considering the increasing importance the committee will have starting in January. There was no question of negotiating sessions, but the Minister for International Trade, the Secretary of State, the Minister of Finance and myself again emphasized Canada's cultural issues and their vital importance to our future. To my knowledge, nothing was said that might cost doubts on this position.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER—COUNTERVAILING RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the subject arose in our conversations with the United States senators. We also indicated that countervailing duties of the kind used in the recent exercise involving our lumber exports were not acceptable to Canada. However, the United States senators insisted, both publicly, in speaking to the press, and to us, that these duties will remain law in the U.S. Is the Prime Minister of Canada prepared to continue these talks if the Americans reject any restrictions on these duties?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will have to start negotiations to find out what kind of settlement will be useful and feasible. We have not reached that stage yet. I stressed the problems this duty creates for Canada in the present circumstances, and I expressed the hope that we could find a formula or formulas that would be more favourable to Canada. I also said that if the final decision was not to our advantage, there would be no transaction. The Government would reject the decision, and I said I saw a valid transaction as one that was in the interests of both sides. I was speaking above all as the Prime Minister of Canada. I stressed the primary importance of a very good settlement for Canadians.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. We have just received the memo from the Minister saying that the proposed negotiations with the United States on softwood lumber have now failed. The Government has now put the country back to square one in trying to resolve the major problems with the U.S. lumber industry, which will affect 400,000 jobs. Now that the flawed and failed approach has once again been demonstrated, will the Minister do what she should have been doing right along, that is, pursue Canadian interests through the international tribunal and through the American tribunal where we have and have had a good case, and could win that case if you had not been fooling around so long?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that the last part of the question directed to the Minister used the personal "you". I ask Hon. Members to remember that that leads to difficulties in the Chamber. I do not like to interrupt lead questions, but I would ask the Hon. Member to be very careful.

Mr. Axworthy: I will rephrase the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Could the Minister tell us when the Government will stop fooling around and pursue the proper course of action with international tribunals? When will the Government stop fooling around?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who has asked his first question on international trade since they failed to resolve the issue in the Liberal convention, is wrong on both counts. First, we are pursuing the matter in the GATT vigorously. We took it before the GATT, and we are fighting it vigorously before the GATT. He is wrong when he says that we are not doing that. There was a hearing on November 3, and there will be another hearing on the issue before the GATT panel on Friday.

He is also wrong when he says that negotiations have failed. I am making a statement saying that Canadians have taken to Washington a proposal, as agreed to between the Prime Minister and the Premiers. That is under intense discussion. The American administration has put forward a proposal, some elements of which are unacceptable to us. I will be informing them, after I have had a chance to review it, of those elements which are unacceptable to us.

Officials are meeting right now with the Ministers of the provinces to review developments, and further meetings are scheduled in Washington next week.

Mr. Axworthy: I say to the Minister that the statement she just made sounds very much to me like a grand, big failure on the part of the Government.

CONTINUATION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister reconcile the continuation of so-called negotiations which are clearly unacceptable at the same time as she says that the Government wants to go in front of tribunals in the United States and GATT, even though it is undermining its case by continuing the negotiations? You cannot do both things. When will the Government get its act together and start defending the lumber industry in Canada before we lose everything—the import duty, jobs, and the whole industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Some force in questioning is certainly acceptable, but I think endless argument is going too far.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only failure here is the failure of the Liberal Opposition to have a coherent position on free trade; they now have at least three.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I again stress to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House, the fact that the GATT rules provide for actively pursuing an issue and trying to settle it between the parties. If he knew more about the GATT, he would understand that. However, he and his Party understand nothing about international trade.

• (1430)

UNITED STATES PROPOSAL—REASONS FOR NON-ACCEPTANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we too have just received the statement by the Minister that an American proposal has been put forward and that it is unacceptable and cannot form a basis for discussion. I want the Minister for once to take the House and the country into her confidence and tell us why the American proposal is unacceptable and why she feels that it must be rejected at this stage.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can best answer that by again referring, as I have many times in this House, to the statement made at the First Ministers' Conference which said that the Canadian proposal met certain objectives, which included:

> The provinces will retain their flexibility in determining stumpage pricing. A dangerous development in U.S. countervail policy will be avoided . . . Further conflict between the provinces will be avoided.

And most important, Mr. Speaker:

> The ability of the provinces to determine their own natural resource management policies will remain unimpaired—U.S. regulatory authorities will not infringe Canadian sovereignty by policing provincial management practices.

Mr. Benjamin: Now, answer the question.

Miss Carney: That is what I have said repeatedly were our objectives, and I am now telling the Hon. Member that the American proposal does not meet them.

POSITION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a supplementary question. Since she has followed in her recent shifts and flip-flops the lead of Mr. Vander Zalm of British Columbia, will she stand up here today and say that his efforts in this regard and his suggestions that we have now reached a tentative settlement, which could be announced almost immediately, have to be condemned as interference in the role of the federal Government in international trade?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You always wanted the provinces involved.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I never heard a question in that statement made by the Hon. Member, as I think you are aware, and I am at a loss to answer. I think the Hon. Member is referring to some press reports quoting the Premier of British Columbia. The Premier has been in Cabinet all morning. I have been unable to speak to him to find out what, in fact, he did say.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

EXPENSES INCURRED HOSTING QUEBEC SUMMIT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the most expensive rendition of When Irish Eyes Are Smiling in the history of mankind. Can the Prime Minister tell this House why he chose to spend $2.6 million of taxpayers' money on a day and a half meeting while asking ordinary Canadians to make do with less and to pay more taxes? Is it not time that the Prime Minister stood up in this House and apologized to the people of Canada for this kind of spending orgy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Riis: Nobody wants to answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: There is the butler.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Prime Minister. He may be able to find a question in that address.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no question in that, but if my hon. friend thinks that I am going to apologize for conducting Canadian foreign policy in such a way as to build positive and constructive bridges to our friends and allies, you are mistaken. I do not owe you an apology for anything.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I must, of course, be absolutely even-handed here today and remind the Right Hon. Prime Minister that his enthusiasm also must be held in check. He should not refer to other Hon. Members with the word "you" or in the other language "vous".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

REQUEST THAT PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY PAY EXPENSES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may not owe me an apology but he owes the people of Canada an apology.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: This behaviour would make Marie Antoinette envious. Can the Prime Minister tell this House here and now whether the Conservative Party is going to reimburse the taxpayers of Canada for what was nothing less than a giant photo opportunity for him and his friend Ronald Reagan?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the honourable—

An Hon. Member: I see the Irish are smiling.

Mr. Mulroney: If you are going to speak ill of the Irish, I am telling you—

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Right Hon. Prime Minister that I do not think anybody wishes to speak ill of anybody in this Chamber. Perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister will have another go at answering the Hon. Member.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is suggesting that, indeed, we have friendly relationships with the President of the United States, he is quite right. That is the way it ought to be. As he will see, we hope in January to have the—

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—AMOUNT OF ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is about yesterday's announcement of the farm aid program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you for your question last week.

Mr. Nystrom: I did not realize I was that popular with the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Canadians should realize that even with the billion dollars that we appreciate—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: —Canadians should be aware that our farmers will still be receiving some $2.50 a bushel less than farmers in the United States. In light of that, does the Minister of Agriculture consider that the billion dollars are sufficient for Canadian farmers when they will still receive $2.50 a bushel less than American farmers? Is it sufficient in view of the fact that this is a long-term problem?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments and representations. We certainly recognize that there is a very significant short-fall between the income of the U.S. farmer and the income of the Canadian farmer. I think what is important is that this Government recognizes there is a problem. Our Government made a commitment to do everything possible to make up that short-fall. We made that commitment, and yesterday we delivered on that commitment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture why this payment is being spread over two fiscal years? There is some concern in the west that this procedure may preclude a payment next year if the problem remains the same. Can we have, in other words, a commitment from the Minister of continuing support as long as the farmers are being ravaged by the international grain war situation in which we are now?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member would not want to be irresponsible and mislead Canadian farmers into thinking that we have the financial resources in Canada to take on Washington, because the reality is that we do not.

We have calendar years and we have fiscal years. I want to remind the Hon. Member that the most important year is the cropping year. Perhaps the Member will bear that in mind. The policy of our Government and the commitment we delivered yesterday are that if farmers respond with their applications with accuracy and on time, that will place us in a position to deliver the full billion dollar cash payment into their hands prior to the seeding of the 1987 crop.

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN AGREEMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister realizes the real problem is the trade war with the ECM and the U.S. Farm Bill which amount to massive subsidies to farmers in those two areas. In light of that is the Government planning any new initiatives to renegotiate once again a meaningful international grain agreement whereby the price of grain is based on the cost of production?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that has a very high priority. That is why the Prime Minister took the leadership role that he did in the world community. That is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs continues to play a lead role there, along with the Minister of Finance and my colleague, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. We will keep right on pushing because the Hon. Member is absolutely right, that is important.

The Hon. Member should realize as well that we will be reconvening meetings with leaders of the farm commodity groups across the country to work together to chart a course and develop—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ADMINISTRATION

EXPENSES INCURRED RECEIVING IMPORTANT VISITORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and this is just to remind him that in 1985, he organized a superbash to improve his image in the eyes of the U.S. president. This cost $2.6 million in taxpayers' money. Could the Prime Minister explain to Canadians why he wasted their money in this way, while, at the same time, his Government was getting ready to cut unemployment insurance benefits for thousands of pre-retirees who were still looking for a job?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that the Prime Minister has already stated that the Government of Canada will follow the policies he has directed. I do not think any Canadian should take a back seat in terms of the very best that Canada can put forward for its allies and friends. I think that is important.

Secondly, the relationship the Member assumes in his question simply does not stand up to any scrutiny whatsoever.

SITUATION OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Prime Minister would care to defend his policy on pre-retirees.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Malépart: Is the Prime Minister, who is quite willing to talk to foreign visitors from the United States and France, willing to be as cordial with his pre-retirees whose benefits were cut off, and do so by immediately reimbursing the 34,000 people whose unemployment insurance benefits were cut by his Government? Can he treat Canadians with respect as well?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has changed his mind since last Friday, when he was congratulating the Government and the Minister—

Mr. Malépart: The Minister cheated us!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, anyone who read the information properly does not feel cheated. But people who are in a hurry to accuse the Government of backtracking were disappointed when they noticed the Government did not backtrack. In fact, it has simply applied the principles it upheld in the first place, but since applying these principes meant that a remedy was necessary in the case of people who were looking for employment, we provided that remedy.

Mr. Malépart: Tell the truth!

Mr. Bouchard: We listened to the Hon. Member earlier, and now I wish he would let me answer.

Mr. Malépart: Just tell the truth!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre.

LONG-TERM PROGRAMS TO HELP FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that under the U.S. Farm Bill U.S. farmers will get even more subsidies next crop year while the Europeans show no sign of backing off in their subsidies. Given the likelihood of the international grain subsidy wars continuing, what long-term programs is the Government contemplating to get grain producers in Canada through the next three to five years?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I answered part of that question a few moments ago. We will continue doing exactly what we have been doing in the last six or eight months. We will be convening meetings in February, in co-operation with farmers, to chart a course that will get us through these very difficult times.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in light of the pay-out yesterday would the Minister assure the House that it continues to be government policy to view this $1 billion pay-out as new money separate from any future grain income so it will not reduce pay-outs under the stabilization programs now in effect?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the program was announced we said it would be $1 billion of new money in the pockets of Canadian farmers, and that no existing funding of any agricultural program would be reduced. The announcement was, as usual, consistent with the policy enunciated by this Government.

TARIFFS

CRITICISMS MADE BY BOOKSELLERS AND PUBLISHERS

Hon. John W. Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, there are in this House a number of present and future authors who will always be concerned about publishers' questions. My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I would like to know whether she accepts as legitimate the deeply serious and deeply concerned criticisms which have been made of federal policy by Canada's booksellers and publishers and, if she does, what is she going to do about them?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the Hon. Member for Don Valley West for the very succinct and proper way in which he presents his question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Answer it!

Miss MacDonald: Obviously he had a certain length of time to learn how to present questions and he has learned well. May I say to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was succinct and I would ask the Hon. Minister to be equally succinct.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, we all learn in this place. May I say to him that I had the opportunity to meet yesterday with representatives of the industry and listened to their concerns. Some of them were legitimate and some were unfounded. I think I had the opportunity to allay some of the fears and point out that we had already taken steps to show our good faith and interest in the book publishing industry by adding substantially to the funding of the book publishing development fund and setting up of a fund for the public use of literary works.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT—UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the short-sighted initiative taken by the Minister who just spoke is going to have terrible repercussions on this House. The entire book industry in Canada is appealing to the Government to remove the tariff on imported books. The Minister of Finance stubbornly clings to the absurd notion that we are retaliating against the American shakes and shingles—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member put her question?

Mrs. Finestone: My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. How can he explain the contradictions in the statement made yesterday to the Coalition of Canadian Book Publishers that the book tariff would be removed in exchange for concessions on the shakes and shingles duty with his Government's previous statement that cultural industries would be not a bargaining chip on the free trade table?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is anything inconsistent in those two statements. The question of shakes and shingles arose last May. The response this Government made to that action had nothing at all to do with free trade talks. We said it was in the national interest for the Government to respond, and respond firmly, to the action taken by the U.S. Government. We did that. As I said at that time, we were not happy with the action but it was important to demonstrate the firmness with which we would respond to what we felt were unfair and unnecessary actions by the U.S. Government.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it stretches the imagination to find a link between that tariff and the tariff on books.

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT TARIFF BE RESCINDED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, with the evidence mounting that it is not the Americans who are being punished but Canadian book readers, with book prices escalating and book sales falling, and with Canadian book publishers losing millions of dollars, will the Government come to its senses and act now to rescind that unintelligent, regressive tax on reading?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated on this and many other occasions in the House that we are sensitive to the impact that this has had on the book publishing industry.

Mr. Riis: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have met with representatives of the industry, as has my colleague, the Minister of Communications. It is very important. I am sure that the Hon. Member or her colleagues would be hammering us for not taking action against the United States Government on the shakes and shingles issue if we had not done this. We know that it has had an impact in Washington and that the U.S. Government is very concerned about further actions. That is why we took the action we did.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER DECISION ON DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS IS FINAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): For the Minister of State (Transport), Mr. Speaker, another question concerning Dorval and Mirabel as well as the meetings and briefings I had in Montreal yesterday. Is the Minister aware that a consensus has developed in the Greater Montreal region in favour of concentrating air passenger services in Dorval and seeking alternative vocations for Mirabel airport, a position which is in total contradiction with the federal Government decision? Can he tell us whether the decision to maintain both Dorval and Mirabel airports is final? Or is the Government still prepared to entertain the views of municipalities and associations representing Greater Montreal residents?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): To begin with, Mr. Speaker, the Mirabel-Dorval issue was the subject of two-year consultations, and the one thing I am aware of is that 1,000 jobs will be saved, not to mention 1,000 more which will probably be created. As a result of this sound Government decision, both airports will be improved and Greater Montreal residents can only be better off.

OPINIONS EXPRESSED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister aware of the fact that, and I quote the President of the Chamber of Commerce:

> Montreal business leaders totally disagree with the federal Government decision—

They would know something about jobs.

Does the Minister ignore the consultations with and reject the opinions expressed by the City of Montreal, the Montreal Urban Community, the Montreal Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce, Air Canada, the Association of Machinists, and 17 other organizations? Does he reject all these opinions? Is this the kind of consultations he had with the people of Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister has the floor.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the socialist Member forgot something about the briefing he was given: to my mind, Mirabel and the residents of the Laurentians are part of the Greater Montreal region. This significant correction should be kept in mind, and I think that the Chamber of Commerce will become ever more aware of the economic impact of the Laurentians on the Greater Montreal region.

HIGH QUALITY SPRING WHEAT—REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT FOR GROWERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It concerns the final payment for No. 1 and No. 2 wheat in the past crop year. Is the Minister prepared to take the necessary action today to ensure that the producers of No. 1 and No. 2 Red Spring wheat will get their full final payment to which they are entitled for this past crop year, and for which the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other responsible farm organizations have been asking?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the formal closing of the Wheat Pools are just taking place now and that the final calculations are not complete. We also know that the Canadian Wheat Board has said that if there is to be a payment it does not expect it to be a very large payment for

No. 1 and No. 2 Pools. Basically, the Hon. Member is asking a very hypothetical question.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that unless the Government makes a commitment to do this, it will cost these producers some $200 million. A decision was made in 1970 to do the same thing for Durum wheat to ensure that they got the full final payment. Why is the Minister so reluctant to make that commitment today, in view of the difficult times experienced by agricultural producers on the Prairies?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about commitments. The Prime Minister made a commitment on October 3 to deliver a billion dollars. First the Opposition said that we would not fulfil the commitment, then it said it would not be in cash, and then said it would be a loan guarantee. We fulfilled the commitment and the Prime Minister, in doing so yesterday, set a precedent. For the first time ever we saw a Prime Minister address an Agriculture Outlook conference in this country. Our commitment to agriculture is well known.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATOR

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He will know that talks have broken off between Canadian National and its employees as CN was unwilling to negotiate a moratorium on lay-offs at the Moncton shops. The employees will be in a legal position to strike in approximately three weeks and the unions have requested the assistance of the Minister. Will he immediately appoint a conciliator in order to avoid a CN national railway strike and speed up the negotiation process by which the issue at the Moncton shops can be resolved?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this morning we received the request to which the Hon. Member is referring. We are considering it.

LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since CN has been carrying on systematic economic terrorism through lay-offs at Moncton in October, November, and December, all of which are under grievance, will the Minister request or direct Canadian National not to delay arbitration hearings on the legality of these lay-offs so that there will be no delaying tactics by CN?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that a large part of the solution to the difficult situation at Moncton was refused by two of the unions, including the machinists union, which had signed a memorandum on October 3, I believe, by which a generous offer made by CN was accepted but later repudiated by those unions.

Mr. Benjamin: By the membership.

Mr. Crosbie: I hope the Hon. Member could use his influence with those unions to get them to change their position.

FERRIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—NOVA SCOTIA SERVICE—PROPOSED CHANGE IN SCHEDULE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest insults ever issued to Newfoundland since Confederation was the announcement the day before yesterday by CN Marine, alias Marine Atlantic, that it was changing its schedule for ferry boats to and from Newfoundland. Is the Minister of Transport aware that now it will take three days from the time someone gets off the CN bus at Port-aux-Basques until they get on the CN train, VIA Rail, in Sydney, Nova Scotia? It will take three days now when previously it normally took nine hours. Is this the new freedom to move policy of the federal Government? We know that we are half an hour behind, but surely three days is a bit much.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy receiving an intelligent question. Of course, I am still waiting to receive one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I might say to the hon. gentleman that his performance was the greatest since King Kong climbed the Empire State Building.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Marine Atlantic has published a new suggested schedule, one that it wishes to put into operation on January 3, that will be in effect from early September to late June. Unfortunately, this will badly affect 3 per cent of the passengers, those who go by bus or take VIA Rail. It will be very much favoured by the 97 per cent who travel in their motor vehicles. There is an average of 12 passengers a day who use the other mode of transportation.

It is eliminating the overnight crossing because, although not everyone likes to see clearly like the Hon. Member, most passengers like to travel in the daylight. Finally, I have asked Marine Atlantic to meet with the Newfoundland Department of Transportation and Tourism to review the situation and see if other connecting services can change their schedules as well to alleviate the time period the Hon. Member is complaining about.

• (1500)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's response to Newfoundlanders this morning is that he keeps Crown corporations at arm's length. He is going to need to be farther away from Newfoundlanders than arm's length when they find out what has been done by this Crown corporation.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE TIMES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): The Minister talks about motorists. All right. Motorists going to Newfoundland will arrive in Newfoundland in the middle of the night in darkness when everything is closed. When they leave they will have to drive all night in order to catch the one ferry boat at dawn. What is the Government trying to do, keep the travelling public in Newfoundland in perpetual darkness?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is why we are eliminating the overnight crossings.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It would be simpler if we could have 24 hours of daylight, of course.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I might add there is a greater gulf in the Hon. Member's head than there is in the Cabot Strait.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OIL FIELD DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. He will be aware that the New Democratic Party in St. John's can trounce the Tories even with one hand tied behind our back and with our Leader in jail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Where is Broadbent?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): There is a message here.

Mr. Axworthy: Where is he?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway will put his question.

Mr. Waddell: I am getting carried away with the Newfoundlanders. I am talking about our provincial leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister a serious question. He announced the Atlantic Accord on February 11, 1985, promising development in Hibernia. There has not been one barrel of oil taken out of Hibernia. When is the Government going to get the lead out and start developing the Hibernia oil field?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has announced a new secret weapon of the NDP— they are going to jail Broadbent—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —and give themselves a great chance for another moral victory.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Negotiations are still under way between the Government, Mobil Oil and their partners, and the Government of Newfoundland on that subject and we hope the new year will bring the news that some agreement has been reached. We can assure the Hon. Member we are doing everything we can to facilitate that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway on a short supplementary question.

GRAND BANKS—HUSKY OIL PROPOSAL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister looked at the proposal of Husky Oil to develop a 100 million barrel floating production field in the Grand Banks? And when will the Government be in a position to respond to this proposal and get the development going?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): This is not my portfolio, Mr. Speaker, and I have no right to answer that question. However, I am delighted to have the opportunity to say we have received that proposal from Husky and the Department of my hon. friend—I cannot mention his name; it shall be unmentionable—has looked at it as well. The main hope and concentration are on the discussions with Mobil Oil.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER—RESIGNATION OF FORESTRY INDUSTRY COUNCIL VICE-CHAIRMAN

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. John Kerr has resigned as the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Forestry Industry Council. Has the Minister been able to determine if this clarifies a shift of consensus in the forest industry policy? And what effect will this have on the negotiations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to Mr. Kerr who has told me he has resigned as the Vice-Chairman of that industry group because he does not support the views or the strategy of Adam Zimmerman, the President. He does not feel, in his words to me, that "Fed bashing" is a useful strategy to solve this dispute.

Mr. Axworthy: Did they hurt your feelings, Pat?

Miss Carney: He has also assured me that he feels industry has a role to play in any negotiations to resolve the lumber dispute and that he and other members of the industry are willing to work with us—

Mr. Axworthy: Why don't you join them?

Miss Carney: —to try to seek a solution to this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should advise Hon. Members that we got started later than I would have preferred today. I will take one more question. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

NATURAL RESOURCES

UTILIZATION OF NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK COAL IN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR STUDY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the issue of the utilization of western coal. As he is well aware, three federal Departments have participated along with provincial governments in the task force. Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why a similar study has not been initiated by his Government with regard to the utilization of coal from eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for shipment to the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. As the Hon. Member knows, there is some coal from western Canada being used in Ontario at the present time. This study was initiated to determine whether in fact that capacity could be increased. I will certainly take the representations of the Hon. Member and consider the action he suggested.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on the issue of fairness, I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister to give us an undertaking that he will ensure that coal from eastern Nova Scotia and the Province of New Brunswick will be given the same serious consideration presently being given to western coal utilization in the Province of Ontario. Would he give us that undertaking today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows there are a lot of factors which have to be considered in such an initiative. I am not fully aware of all of those factors. However, as I indicated, I would certainly be prepared to take the Hon. Member's representations seriously and look into the matter.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED PREMATURE DISCLOSURE OF COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): I rise on what I believe to be a serious matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I invite your ruling. I refer to a front page news story by the Canadian Press which is carried in today's "Canada Section" of The Montreal Gazette. Similar stories, of course, were carried by other Canadian daily newspapers, including The Ottawa Citizen. The story headline reads: "MP says panel wants rewrite of Post Office plan". The lead paragraph reads:

> A Commons committee studying the future of the post office will urge a major rewrite of the agency's new business plan, but Tory MPs want to retain a controversial proposal to turn most rural post offices over to private operators, a committee member told Canadian Press yesterday.

Here we have a member of the committee who is clearly breaching a basic privilege of the House and the committee, which is to make its report to the House and no one else until the House receives the report. This ensures what Beauchesne calls "the orderly conduct of parliamentary business".

Beauchesne is absolutely clear on this point. He speaks of the "power", to use his words, of the House to enforce its rules. The House Leader of the New Democratic Party reminded us of this very power here in the House on November 21 when he raised a point of privilege alleging prior knowledge of the content of legislation. He quoted Citation 22 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> The power of the House to enforce its rules extends not only to Members and others admitted within the precincts of Parliament, but also to members of the general public who may interfere with the orderly conduct of parliamentary business.

The House Leader of the New Democratic Party reminded us of how leaked information, albeit on a Bill rather than a committee report, led swiftly to the resignation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in Britain in 1974 after he made an off-hand comment to a journalist about a detail in his budget.

The Liberal House Leader (Mr. Gray) on the same point of privilege, said:

> —the final word has not been said on what constitutes parliamentary privilege for the Canadian House of Commons, that it would be open for it to be held that this tradition should be extended to leaks of information involving legislation other than budget statements or budgetary legislation.

• (1510)

I do not think I have to ask the Chair to extend the privilege to speak against leaks from committees. That privilege, as we know, is established. It has been breached in the present incident and it is for the House to take the appropriate action, with which the Speaker is familiar, pursuant to our rules and practices.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure you and the House that I did not breach the confidentiality of that meeting. I say that to all Members assembled here. I also indicate to the Chair that I chaired that meeting and prior to commencing our duties I informed committee members that what was taking place at the meeting was confidential and of the highest regard.

I have asked my committee colleagues on this side of the House if they have knowledge of this leak. I expect they may wish to indicate to the House directly their positions on this alleged breach. I would ask you, Sir, to allow all committee members who wish to speak to this point of privilege to speak to it.

I do not say committee members cannot remark on committee business arising from open, public meetings. But in camera meetings, such as were involved in this case, exist to protect Members' privileges, especially when a report is under preparation. I submit that this privilege has been breached rather spectacularly in the present case.

The reason Beauchesne's speaks of the concept of interference is exactly to prevent the situation we have in the fourth paragraph of the Canadian Press story. Here some members are pointed to by other members before the House can know the reality through obtaining the report from the in camera work of the committee.

The story reads:

> But Tory MPs on the committee like the idea of letting local businessmen run rural post offices, and seem determined to push for its adoption, the MP said. The committee meets behind closed doors again today.

The privileges of these Members are violated by such a statement from a member of the committee disclosing alleged in camera proceedings. On the face of them, such comments simply impede the committee in doing its work; and they simply impede the House in its right to enjoy an orderly presentation and conduct of proposals from its committees.

Over the years the House has not been without comments or rulings from the Chair on alleged breaches of privilege arising from premature disclosure of committee reports. All Members here are taught very early that contents of such reports are confidential until they are tabled.

I would refer you, Sir, to a few rulings or observations from the Chair on earlier instances of alleged premature disclosure of committee reports. I refer to the Journals for September 6 in which there was a similar situation. There were some rulings by the Chair on that day and I would like to relate them very briefly to Your Honour.

First, the Chair refers to a citation found in the May 17 edition at page 119. The author states that by the ancient custom of Parliament, no act done at any committee should be divulged before the same is reported to the House. Further, it is stated that this principle clearly deals with in camera sessions. I suggest to Members here that when we have proceeded in camera it should be just that.

I hear some gaggling and waggling from members of the Opposition, but they would not want it any other way, I am sure.

Before I conclude, I would like to add that more recently on November 21, 1986 a discussion of privilege was carried on by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He quoted Citation 22 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states as follows:

> The power of the House to enforce its rules extends not only to Members and others admitted within the precincts of Parliament, but also to members of the general public who may interfere with the orderly conduct of parliamentary business.

I rest my case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise and associate myself with the remarks just put forward for your consideration. I was present at that particular meeting, not in my capacity as a member of that committee but in my capacity as Parliamentary Secretary. I enjoy the privilege of sitting in and listening to the deliberations of the committee. At no time did I communicate with any member of the press with respect to the content of that particular meeting. I want to reassure Your Honour and my colleagues that in fact is the case.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I would like the record to show that I was a member of the Government Operations Committee which sat on Tuesday, December 9, 1986, to help draft a report on Canada Post. In my opinion committee reports are confidential until presented in the House. In my opinion it is an absolute breach of privilege for a member of a committee to breach that confidence. I want to assure the House and you, Mr. Speaker, that I did not speak to any member of the Canadian Press on Tuesday, December 9, 1986.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the Government Operations Committee which sat last Tuesday to draft a report on Canada Post. I want to assure the House that I gave no interviews to anyone in the media whatsoever. It was fully understood at this committee meeting that our report was to be confidential. So there was a definite breach of privilege by a member of that committee.

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the Government Operations Committee which sat on Tuesday, December 9, 1986 to draft a report on Canada Post. Committee reports are confidential until presented in the House. It is an absolute breach of privilege for a member of a committee to breach that confidence. I want to assure the House that I personally did not speak to any member of the Canadian Press on Tuesday, December 9, 1986.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) has attempted to put before you what he calls a breach of privilege. I only want to observe, with the utmost of respect, that the Hon. Member has presented a grievance since he has not indicated any intention to move a motion if a prima facie case of privilege is found. If that is the case then, I repeat, he has at most expressed a grievance.

Furthermore, while I attempted to listen carefully to what the Hon. Member was saying, he did not clearly state that the committee had prepared a report. He seemed to be saying that there was some kind of discussion at an in camera meeting of the committee. To the extent that there are precedents on this matter, they deal with the premature disclosure of a report formally voted upon and decided upon by a committee. Unless I did not hear the Hon. Member clearly, he did not say that a report had been finally decided and voted upon.

Also, with respect to the precedents in this regard I note that at page 203 of Beauchesne's one will see Citation 647 which deals with this type of matter which came up in 1977. The Speaker ruled that the matter could not be resolved. He did not appear to make any final ruling in as much as the British practice, which I think was cited by my hon. friend, was not found to apply to what is going on in Canada.

Finally, I suggest and, in fact, I strongly submit that the attempt of the Hon. Member and his colleagues to introduce into this House something quite contrary to the British concept of justice should be firmly rejected. We have a situation in which people stand condemned of any alleged wrong-doing unless they stand up and plead their innocence. This is totally contrary to the traditions of Canadian and British justice. I think the House and you, Sir, should reject any attempt to bring into this House any discredited concept of star chamber proceedings. This concept was firmly rejected by the British people over 300 years ago. There is no way Canadians will want to see the process of this House distorted so that those who did not rise to profess a particular view which had been urged upon them would stand convicted of some alleged wrongdoing. I think the Hon. Member should be ashamed of himself, as should his colleagues, for trying to introduce into the House a concept so un-British and, even more, so un-Canadian. They should stand condemned for this reason—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I listened with great care to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) because he pleads a case well. I would not want the Hon. Member to stray too far into imputing motives to Hon. Members in the House. I think the Hon. Member for Windsor West has made his point. The Chair does not for one minute take it that Hon. Members who have not risen are, as a consequence, condemned or even under suspicion.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise to say that I did not speak to the press with regard to what went on in the committee. I must make it clear that I did not talk to the press about what went on in the committee, but the reason I hesitate to say so is that I do not want to feed suspicious minds and I do not wish to feed the notion that there is a rule that whatever happens in Steering Committee meetings is confidential and privileged.

I would contend that the confidentiality of what goes on in a Steering Committee depends upon the trust and agreement of members and is a matter of honour and choice. If a member of a committee speaks to the press, it does not stop us from functioning as Members of Parliament.

I would like to make another point. Just because Canadian Press says that an MP said something, does that mean that an MP said that? I would like to make my main point without revealing what went on in the discussions. To my knowledge, no report has been drafted and I would therefore ask what it is that has been revealed to the public.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the committee and I need not plead the fifth. However, I would like to add my point of view to the discussion. What seems to be at stake is a suggestion by a Member of Parliament that our conversations should be censored, whether we are talking to someone from Canadian Press or to our constituents. Whether we do so or not is our business. For other committee members to start censoring our conversations is unparliamentary and I wish the Speaker would so rule.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of this committee but I am Chairman of a Standing Committee and I understand the problems involved when Standing Committees prepare confidential reports to be tabled in the House. It has always been my understanding as a Chairman of a Standing Committee that committees often deal with very sensitive matters that reflect on discussions between members as to recommendations to the Government. Often the discussions and consensus of members can affect the market, the way public servants react and the way government departments operate. As a consequence, it is essential that the private discussions of a parliamentary committee and its members remain in camera and remain with the members. It is essential that the reports of parliamentary committees remain the property of the committee until they are released to the public. They should not be the property of the press or the public in general, nor should there be speculation about what a member of the committee or a group of members of the committee said.

Later today I will be tabling a report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. That report was prepared in camera and has not been leaked to the press or distributed to anyone. That report will become public when it is released.

It is important that the House Committee on Privileges and Elections hold public hearings on this issue so that the House can determine where it stands with respect to in camera meetings, how members should conduct themselves and, indeed, how the press should conduct itself when dealing with matters of this sensitivity.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) would suggest to the House and the public at large that an in camera meeting should be anything but in camera. The purpose of such a meeting is to allow Members of the House, regardless of political faith, to try to arrive at a consensus, if possible, or at least make plans for the committee. It is not necessarily in the best interests of the committee or of the nation for these plans to become the property of the press immediately.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West has participated in in camera meeitngs unless he is an exception. As a Minister, items with which he had dealt had been before in camera committee meetings. If Members of the House cannot meet in good faith in camera, then the system will not work. The matter which has been placed before us by the Chairman of the Committee is one to which we must give very, very serious consideration in the interests of all Parties and all Canadians.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a question of a lack of respect for the confidentiality of Steering Committees or meetings held in camera. Since I have been here, there have been numerous breaches of that confidence by members of the Opposition and it is disgusting—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) has made a statement but has not named an Hon. Member. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to walk carefully around danger and not to make charges in the Chamber. I would ask him to continue his remarks, which I always find helpful.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I can cite an example. Regarding de Havilland, members of the Opposition actually had to apologize for breaches of confidentiality in regard to meetings that were held in camera and this is why I bring the subject forward.

Mr. Speaker: I think in the interest of getting to the point, I would ask the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody to address the particular item that is before the Chair. As the Chair understands it, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) has raised a question of privilege which is that something that went on in an in camera committee has turned up in the press. I understand that is the allegation. What goes with that allegation is the question of whether this is a breach of privilege because it is an in camera meeting.

• (1530)

Other Members have been concerned that because some Members have risen and said that they did not talk to the press, that was an invitation for the Speaker to perhaps look with disfavour on other Members who do not rise. I have made it quite clear that I have no intention of doing that. I do not take that as the intention. It is important to keep to the point. I treat the issue as a serious one. I would ask the Hon. Member to continue.

Mr. St. Germain: I will be guided by the wisdom of the Chair.

The question is this. Will Steering Committee meetings or meetings held in camera be kept in total confidentiality? If they are not, I think it is important that we have a ruling. It comes down to basic respect for this very institution; not the Hon. Members, not myself, the Member for Mission—Port Moody, but the institution. This is what we are concerned about. There have been breaches.

I urge you, Sir, to come forward with a decision on this issue. As standing committees meet daily, it is very important that there is a resolution to this issue so we can operate with a feeling of self-confidence.

Ms. Copps: You are afraid of the truth.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising to plead mea culpa, mea culpa. I was not a member of the committee, or present at that particular meeting. I would like to make a few comments.

I take exception to the method by which this particular point of privilege has been raised. The Hon. Member rose as the Chairman of the Committee and indicated that there was a breach of privilege. He also indicated that he was not responsible for speaking to the media. Following that particular Member, a number of other Members of the Conservative Party, and Members of the committee, indicated that they were not responsible for the leak. That is unfortunate, because by process of elimination, the Conservative Party is pointing fingers in the direction of the Opposition. The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), has suggested that the leak came from this side of the House.

The issue is whether there was a breach of privilege. The Hon. Member who raised the point did not accuse any particular Member of Parliament as being the source of the leak. Leaks are a way of political life in this institution, and in institutions across Canada at the provincial level. As members of the opposition, we are often in receipt of so-called leaks, or brown envelopes from civil servants, Conservative Members of Parliament, and elsewhere, regarding the confidential activities of either the Government or Ministers of the Crown. When the Conservative Party was in opposition it too was a recipient of leaks, or brown envelopes.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has said something that all Hon. Members are very well aware of, that there is constant communication between Members of Parliament, those in the public service, the media and others. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston put his finger on the point when he stated that the issue is whether, under these circumstances, there has been a breach of privilege. This afternoon a lot of time could be spent casting around, going back in history, some of which would be factual, and some of which might be fanciful.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member to come back to the point he so excellently made, that is, that under these circumstances, as the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake put them to the Chair, and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is absolutely right, the Hon. Member who brought the point of privilege did not accuse anyone, has there been a breach of privilege. The point is a narrow one, but it is important. That is, if there was an in camera meeting, and if all Hon. Members entered into that in camera meeting understanding that that was the situation, what is the obligation then on Hon. Members? That is the point. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston has perceived that point perfectly well, and I ask him to continue.

Mr. Nunziata: By raising the point of privilege the Chairman of the committee has confirmed the contents of the particular media report, and he has not denied that the media report was inaccurate. By so raising the point, he has confirmed the accuracy of the report.

Mr. McCain: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is speaking on a point of privilege. Unless the point of order you are raising is of very great importance, I would prefer that the Hon. Member be allowed to finish his comments.

Mr. Nunziata: As I indicated, by raising the point, there is a confirmation of the accuracy of the Canadian Press report. Be that as it may, the question is whether there has been a breach of privilege. There is no question that if there was a leak there has been a breach of trust; the trust that exists between Members of Parliament, whether they are Conservative, New Democratic, or Liberal.

In certain cases there is a need to have in camera meetings of committees. In my view, only in very extreme circumstances should there be in camera meetings of committees. There must be compelling reasons why there should be an in camera meeting. In this particular case, there was obviously a need for an in camera meeting because members of the committee were trying to develop and articulate a committee position on the issue in question.

There is precious little that the Chair can do, if you conclude, as I have concluded, that there was a leak. Was there a breach of privilege? If there was, what does the Chair do? The matter is referred to committee. Do the Hon. Members opposite, and the Member who raised the particular point of privilege, suggest that we should have a type of Senate subcommittee investigation, call in a special investigator, call people before the bar, under oath, and go through a process of cross-examination and investigate each and every Member of Parliament and determine where the leak came from? We cannot do that. In the House we are all considered to be honourable members. An investigation would serve no useful purpose. If a member of the committee stood up and pleaded mea culpa, mea culpa, then we could wrap that person's knuckles, and that would be the end of the matter.

If the Member who raised the particular point of privilege wishes to accuse a Member of Parliament of breaching the privilege, then it should be done up front, and the person should be named. There are consequences that follow if he is wrong in terms of his allegations. But I regret the method by which the Hon. Member, and Conservative Members, by a process of elimination have chosen to point fingers towards the opposition benches.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, should you find that there has been a breach of privilege, I would move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann):

That the matter of the breach of confidence or trust by a Member of the Government Operations Committee in communicating the contents of the committee report to a member of the media prior to its presentation in the House be considered by the committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to assist Hon. Members when I feel that it is appropriate to do so. In these circumstances it is appropriate that the Hon. Member who raised the point of privilege be the Member to actually move the motion. I am sure that all Hon. Members do not mind if the Chair makes sure that what is being done is procedurally sound. If it is the disposition of the House, we can take it that we agree that that is the case.

• (1540)

Ms. Copps: Everyone agrees.

Mr. Keeper: On what are we agreeing?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should explain. The Hon. Member is asking on what we are agreeing. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rose and made the usual motion in these cases. It actually should have been done by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake. The Hon. Member is in his seat. I see him nodding. I will take it that he has proposed the motion. I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy.

The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain) was seeking the floor a moment ago. I asked him—and he very kindly agreed—to keep his remarks until later because I did not want to interrupt the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, if we as Members of the House cannot trust one another to meet in camera, how can we expect the nation to trust us? If we do not find this to be a subject matter worthy of further consideration in some form which would give us the security of confidentiality, in the eyes of the public we are remiss in our duties.

I find it incredible that we are referring in some instances to brown envelopes which may be received from other sources. That is not at all relevant; it is not to be excused either. I do not admire it, but it is not relevant to the trust which Hon. Members should be able to place in their fellow colleagues, regardless of the Party to which colleagues may belong.

It has been my privilege to be in this sphere of life for quite some time. I must say with pride that at no time have I ever breached the confidentiality of an in camera meeting.

Mr. Nunziata: What about caucus?

Mr. McCain: At no time have I breached the confidentiality of caucus. You mentioned something about press and its accuracy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McCain: I say through you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: That is much better.

Mr. McCain: —that I can make exactly the same claim, regardless of how it may have been printed.

Mr. Marchi: That is not what we heard.

Mr. McCain: The gentleman who is interjecting made some comments in respect of the press. I would be inclined to confirm that comment. Therefore, I think he is being rather irrelevant and irascible in his approach to this subject matter.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members are sometimes irascible and irrelevant. However, I am sure all Hon. Members are conscientiously putting forward points of interest to the Chair.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I will try to be brief. The fact that so many Hon. Members have risen underlines the sense of importance which they attach to agreements freely entered into by Members of the House. An agreement to enter into an in camera meeting and to keep the report confidential until it is presented to the House is an important commitment. It enables us to conduct public business in a very efficient and effective fashion.

The grounds raised in this question of privilege are well founded, but perhaps narrower than they might have been. In examining the precedents of this and similar chambers, I think Your Honour will find that historically there is some sense of responsibility on the public press to report accurately the doings of a public body such as the House of Commons.

For instance, an article was presented to the House which alleges that an unnamed Member of Parliament provided the particular reporter with information about what went on in an in camera meeting. Indeed, it may be true that that is what happened. However, it is possible that someone who is not a Member of Parliament passed himself off as a Member of Parliament in dealing with the particular reporter. It is also possible, but unlikely, that a reporter uses the words "Member of Parliament" without indeed having attempted to talk to a Member of Parliament. These things are possibilities. Unless we have a motion which would go forward to the appropriate committee to examine the responsibilities of Hon. Members when they freely enter into an agreement to participate in an in camera session of this kind, we have no mechanism which would enable us to sort it out.

It may be that the press has violated the privileges of the House. It may be that a member of the staff, a translator or someone in the room violated the privileges of the House. It may be that indeed a Member of Parliament violated the privileges of the House. If we do not have an affirmative motion and we do not have an inquiry, we are left with those three possibilities, none of which is particularly pleasant to anyone who belongs to any one of the three groups. It cannot be a pleasant situation for the reporter. It cannot be a pleasant situation for members of the committee. It cannot be pleasant for members of the staff who serve so well that and other committees.

In order to clarify the matter and to take off the heads of those three groups the thought of suspicion, Your Honour might be well advised to permit a motion, along the lines indicated by the Hon. Member, to come forward.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to enter into the debate again. However, I should like to make one point. To raise the matter of a leak from the Steering Committee as a matter of privilege assumes that in order to draft the report we had to go in camera. In fact I was surprised that the meeting that morning was an in camera one. I am confident that we can and could have drafted the report without going in camera. I just ask Your Honour to consider that point when you are considering the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank all Hon. Members. Of course I will reserve on the matter because the Chair certainly views it as an important point. Hon. Members on all sides are obviously treating it as an important point.

I remind Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, whom I earlier complimented on getting to the point, also said that it may or may not be a question of privilege but that it most certainly was a breach of trust. The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte who has spent many years in the House and many previous years in a provincial legislature is a very experienced parliamentarian. He made exactly the same point.

It seems Hon. Members are asking me to decide—and I think we can agree it is a breach of trust—whether or not the breach of trust under these circumstances is a breach of privilege. I assure all Hon. Members that I will give the matter very careful consideration.

I also want to assure all Hon. Members that I do not take what has been said here as the beginnings of any kind of witch-hunt. I think some concern was expressed by some Hon. Members that that is what might come out of this discussion. I want to assure all Hon. Members that I do not take that view at all. I certainly would not encourage that kind of reaction from a debate like this one.

I think all Members are in agreement that when Hon. Members enter into a good faith arrangement to hold the information they have in an in camera meeting, they place themselves in a situation of trust, one with the other. Of course that ought not to be breached. This is why we are called "Honourable Members". We must be able to depend upon the word of an Hon. Member without, as they say, having it signed, sealed and delivered. The Hon. Member's word should be enough.

The Chair will look carefully at the situation and report back to the House as soon as is convenient.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention a piece of information which might make your deliberations somewhat easier. I refer to a decision of Speaker Jerome on October 22, 1975. A draft report of a parliamentary committee on immigration was leaked or made public presumably by one of the participants. It was sent to the appropriate committee for evaluation and came back to Speaker Jerome. He in fact ruled that, because the original motion did not contain the name of an individual person or set of persons, he could not rule that there had been a breach of privilege.

• (1550)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for the additional information. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I think this is on another matter?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period I gave you notice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, for a moment, please. Could I ask the indulgence of the Parliamentary Secretary to advise the House that it was my intention to give certain rulings this afternoon. In view of the hour, I will adjourn that and advise the Hon. Members who were involved. The Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, for the same reason I will make my remarks brief on this question of privilege. I do not want to impede the opposition day either.

I gave you notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege as a result of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) during a question that he addressed to the Prime Minister during Question Period today. The Hon. Member made the comment "if he has the courage". I submit that his remarks provoked an uproar and disruption in this House which was undignified and disruptive of the proceedings of the House.

Yesterday the same Member made the comment:

I am sure that, unlike the Prime Minister, he could be sincere.

Which also raised the outcry: "Order! order!"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to confine his remarks to events that happened today. The Chair is aware of the exchange with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) yesterday. The Chair examined the blues. The Chair was aware that some Hon. Members were not happy with the exchange, but I must advise that the Chair did not feel, strong as the language and the suggestion might have been, that there was any need to interfere.

We are dealing with another matter today and I will hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and other Hon. Members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, to continue. Today, the Hon. Member used the words: "if he has the courage." I draw your attention to Beauchesne in two instances. First, Citation 319(3):

In the House of Commons a Member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case;—

I also draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne, Citation 324(1). It reads:

It is impossible to lay down any specific rules in regard to injurious reflections uttered in debate against particular Members, or to declare beforehand what expressions are or are not contrary to order;—

I wanted to read the entire quote, but this point I want to draw to your attention:

—much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking; sometimes upon the person to whom the words are addressed, as, whether he is a public officer, or a private Member not in office, or whether the words are meant to be applied to his public conduct, or to his private character; and sometimes upon the degree of provocation, which the Member speaking had received from the person he alludes to; and all these considerations must be attended to at the moment, as they are infinitely various and cannot possibly be foreseen in such a manner that precise rules can be adopted with respect to them.

Decorum in this House, Mr. Speaker, is the responsibility of all of us. The first check on decorum is the Member himself or herself and how he or she regards this institution and what respect he or she has for it. That is the first check on decorum.

Mr. Marchi: Respect the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary is making an argument. I am sure that all Hon. Members would want to give him the courtesy of completing the argument without interruption. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, second, failing the responsibility of the Member himself or herself, decorum is the responsibility of the officers of that particular caucus. Each of us has a responsibility to check the decorum of the House. I can tell you without imputing any motives to the Hon. Member that we find no opposition Members' remarks as offensive as the remarks and the conduct of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. I say that to Members of the opposition sitting here and I say it to those colleagues who are not here. We find no conduct of any Member of the opposition as offensive as the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Lastly, decorum in the House, if it breaks down at the Member's level, if it breaks down at the caucus officers level, is the responsibility of yourself, Sir.

I suggest that today there was a good-natured exchange between the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). It was a good-natured exchange. Each Member went at one another and I think there was a lessening of tension, tension precipitated by the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

An Hon. Member: You are ragging the puck.

Mr. Lewis: I am closing now. These remarks were drafted. I am not ragging the puck on anybody.

Mr. Rossi: On opposition day, are you obliged to listen to the opposition?

Mr. Lewis: I say that the atmosphere in this House is poisoned when that kind of conduct is allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker. I say the relationships between the Parties are poisoned when that kind of conduct is allowed to continue; I say to you that Parliament is poisoned when that kind of conduct is allowed to continue.

This is a place for healthy debate. We are trying to build a country. We do not do it by slandering the reputations of other Members, our Prime Ministers, Cabinet Ministers, leaders of the opposition Parties or anybody. We do it by healthy debate. It is time that the conduct of this particular Member was examined in detail, that we get back to healthy debate in this place and get rid of slander and slandering reputations.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to be very brief. Unlike the Hon. Member I, and I think the country, want to hear the debate on the motion set down by the Liberal Party today with respect to conditions in Alberta. I want to say to the Hon. Member that it is a strange new proposition to suggest to the Speaker that the tone of voice used in debate can be found so offensive by an Hon. Member, can frighten or upset an Hon. Member, that the tone of voice is contrary to the privileges of the House. I am surprised that Members of the Conservative Party are so thin skinned. I do not know what it is that has so disturbed them that if an Hon. Member says: "if you have the courage" in a particular tone of voice it should send the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary into such paroxisms of outrage and concern.

As you yourself said, Mr. Speaker, I think in your first words as Speaker in this House, this is a place for strong and vigorous debate and for strong feelings. I am paraphrasing my recollection of your words, Sir. It would certainly be a very great and serious change in the customs and traditions of this House if it were proper grounds for an acceptable question of privilege to be found on the suggestion that there is something wrong with the tone of voice in which an Hon. Member expressed a point of view. I realize that the Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues have a lot at the present time to be sensitive and concerned about. I submit, with the utmost respect, that to try to say that the tone of voice in which remarks are made is a fit subject for a ruling, that the words thereby become unparliamentary, is to extend the concept of unparliamentary language far beyond what has been the case in this House or other parliamentary institutions. I cannot understand how the Parliamentary Secretary could in any way be upset about another Hon. Member, in this case the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) putting into his question the interjection "if you have the courage". All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to look at Beauchesne and see the words that have been ruled parliamentary: dishonest, false, coward, pig, obscene, untrue.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: I hope that in the reading of all those words there will be no encouragement to use any of them.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Thank you for your admonition, Mr. Speaker. I have used them in the abstract, quoting from Beauchesne, whatever temptation I may have to apply them in discussions in this House from time to time.

The point I am trying to make is that surely the word "courage" used in the way the Hon. Member did could not possibly be considered unparliamentary if one compares it with the words actually found to be parliamentary.

I conclude by saying it is very strange for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to get up and make his point today and end it with what can only be a personal attack upon a very distinguished Member of this House, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie, a former Member of the Quebec Assembly, in light of the words he read from Beauchesne's, Section 319(3), where he said a Member of the House will not be permitted:

—to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case;

Surely he is doing the very thing he has incorrectly complained about with respect to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie in his unworthy and unwarranted personal attack.

Therefore I respectfully ask you to reject his point of order as being totally unfounded, and perhaps equally, if not more importantly, to call upon the Parliamentary Secretary to apologize for his unworthy, undeserving and totally wrong personal attack on the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to simply add what I think is a very important point. The Parliamentary Secretary stood in his place and went on at some length about the need for decorum and respect from Members. Then he looked across at the opposition and said the Hon. Member in question was the most offensive Member of all of them. When I look in Beauchesne I find that the use of the word "offensive" is unparliamentary. In other words, in his effort to make the House of Commons a more parliamentary place the Parliamentary Secretary was himself using unparliamentary language as defined in Beauchesne. I simply make that point to put the quality of the argument in perspective.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has raised a point of order concerning the use of a word today by the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart). The point the Chair has to decide is whether or not that word is unparliamentary. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said that the Chair should consider the context in which the word was used. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has pointed out that there is a long list of words which perhaps none of us would want thrown at us and which have been ruled as unparliamentary.

I am not going to rule at the moment. I will look very carefully at the "blues". I want Hon. Members to know that the point I am taking is the single and narrow point of whether or not the use of the word "courage" in the context in which it was used is parliamentary or unparliamentary. However, I will say this. Sometimes the difficulty in the Chamber comes not from the use of unparliamentary words at all, but from the use of words in the heat of debate which hurt another person's feelings. When those words are used it invites some kind of retaliation. Sometimes the retaliation is wit, sometimes it is sarcasm, sometimes it is the use of the same kind of word or worse.

I think all Hon. Members will know that decorum in the House depends, not just on staying on the fine line of what is parliamentary, but also on Hon. Members using their best efforts at all times to not use language which they in their common sense ought to know will hurt or wound the feelings of another Hon. Member.

The Chair will carefully consider the matter and come back to the Chamber at an appropriate time. I have not called upon the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie because the House Leader for the Official Opposition spoke eloquently on his behalf. Unless the Hon. Member has some great feeling that he needs to get into the debate, perhaps that will now conclude the debate. I see the Hon. Member signifying his acceptance of the Chair's suggestion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in the true spirit of the House of Commons, the Parliamentary Secretary did refer to the Hon. Member as being offensive. I think it would only be appropriate that he now be asked to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I believe I said the tactics of the Hon. Member were the most offensive of any Member in the House. That is what I meant to say. If my friend, who has come to his rescue, wishes me to withdraw my remarks that he is the most offensive member of the opposition, I will withdraw my remarks that he is the most offensive member of the Opposition. I will instead suggest that the tactics used by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie are the most offensive of any tactics used by members of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be helpful if the Chair takes the representations made and considers them carefully and we close off the debate. Unless some Member has a specific charge to make, I do not think this will advance the cause of good conduct in this Chamber and it probably is not going to help the Chair very much either.

HUMAN RIGHTS

THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF UNIVERSAL DECLARATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise to draw to the attention of all Hon. Members that today is the day we commemorate the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Thirty-eight years ago, on December 10, 1948 the UN General Assembly set out a comprehensive framework for the rights and freedoms of all people around the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the celebration of Human Rights Day has a special meaning this year since 1986 is the International Year of Peace.

[English]

The inevitable link which exists between human rights and peace is highlighted in the first paragraph of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It states that recognition of the inherent dignity, and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family, is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.

I am glad that 40 years after the creation of the UN, the International Year of Peace has offered us an opportunity to reflect on the conditions for the survival of our rights, and our survival as human beings. On behalf of all Canadians I want to say that we remain as committed to the Universal Declaration now as we were 38 years ago.

Last month Governor General Jeanne Sauvé accepted the Nansen Medal from the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, Jean-Pierre Hocké. The award was not made to any one citizen of Canada but to the people of Canada in, "recognition of their major and sustained contribution to the cause of refugees."

• (1610)

The Nansen Medal was created in 1954 and this was the first time it has ever been awarded to a country. I think that says a lot for the freedom loving spirit for which we are recognized and respected throughout the world. When we talk of human rights in Canada, we mean equality for all Canadians irrespective of gender, language, race, religion, economic status or disability. We in Canada realize the value of a multicultural and multiracial community and the strength it gives to our citizenship and Canadian identity.

[Translation]

For example, Canada's respect for its two main language groups is reflected in the Official Languages Act, which is under intensive review at the moment by the Department of Justice. As well, the Government is considering several very significant improvements to the use of both official languages in our dealings with the provinces, volunteer associations, and the private sector. The President of the Treasury Board is also developing a full range of initiatives to further enhance the profile of our official languages within federal institutions.

In addition to English and French, dozens of other heritage languages are spoken across the nation. In recognition of the cultural wealth that lies in a multilingual identity, the Government supports studies in languages and cultural retention.

[English]

We have made commendable strides during the last four decades, but we must go on achieving if we are to expand our concepts of equality and freedom. Although we entrenched our Charter of Rights and Freedoms four years ago in the Constitution of Canada, this was just one major stepping stone of others to come.

As you know, the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) is funding the Charter Challenge Program through the Canada Council on Social Development. The resolution of specific Charter cases in the courts will further change and improve our notions of equality and what we have to do to get there.

This is a significant move forward for Canadians. The Government has made a firm commitment to full implementation of the Charter. Clearly, our readiness to confront challenges in matters of fundamental human rights, and to provide the means of ensuring full access to the courts, demonstrates our commitment to one of the key elements of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the right to an effective remedy for violations of rights.

Defending an increasing respect for human rights also extends beyond Canada's institutions. This respect must continue to form the solid basis of individual and community life. No greater protection can be granted to human rights than an aware and enlightened public.

The role of the voluntary sector, our hundreds of dedicated non-profit organizations, is especially important in this regard. These groups touch the heart of local communities and directly involve millions of Canadians in their efforts.

[Translation]

On this day, we celebrate the proclamation of the universal declaration of Human Rights. I think it is fitting that we celebrate the many forward steps that we have taken over the last four decades.

I think it is also important that we acknowledge and support the tremendous contributions made by Canadian individuals and organizations in making that progress possible.

Finally, we must use this opportunity to acknowledge that we have a long way to go before we can be completely satisfied with our progress. Our record is good—actually very good—but there is yet some room to grow.

We must therefore maintain our vigilance at home, and continue to exert our influence abroad. We have to think of more creative ways to encourage the human rights cause in countries where they are now merely empty expressions.

[English]

Canada's devotion to equality was given even greater credence last March when our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signed a proclamation committing Canada to a program of action over the next decade to unite in a stand against racial discrimination. Although this took place quite appropriately during the current International Year of Peace, we are also in the second United Nations Decade to Combat Racism.

Let us hope, therefore, that the fair-minded hearts and souls of Canadians will grow stronger throughout the land, and then influence the global community so that no third such decade need ever be declared.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, if December 7, 1971 was to go down in history as a day of infamy, then December 10, 1948 was a day of hope. On that day, the Untied Nations proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Written by René Cassin, a Frenchman who, with his family, personally suffered from Nazi tyranny and understood poignantly the importance of human rights, the Declaration became an ideal and an objective for all nations to seek to attain.

Since that time, Canada has in countless ways shown its desire to conform to those ideals. We have signed the International Human Rights Covenants. We have signed many United Nations special covenants. In fact, we have passed laws and set up human rights commissions across the country. We have proclaimed our opposition to racism and discrimination.

After a prolonged legislative battle in the House, we enshrined these rights in the Charter which now all political parties support and uphold. We are a nation of minorities and, for that reason, we know that human rights are important now to everyone because everyone belongs to a minority. We have not one, but two official languages, both of them equal.

By comparison with most other nations on earth, we have had a superb record of liberty and equality. For this reason we have not been inhibited from speaking out on behalf of oppressed individuals or groups in other countries. That is why it was fitting that we honoured, as the first person ever to become an honorary Canadian citizen, not a person who was great because of his brains, money, power or fame. Last year on this day we honoured Raoul Wallenburg because of his heroism in upholding human rights. That tells us where we have our hearts as Canadians. That is why we have begun to examine our past and try to atone for wrongs imposed on such minority communities in Canada as our native people, Japanese Canadians, those innocent people who have been executed by error, and those who have been persecuted because of their faith or origins.

We know that we have much for which to atone but we must also admit that there is still a long way to go. We must remind the Government that words do not heal the hurt of discrimination and poverty and lack of opportunity. Words will not do. We must remind the Government of its stalling and its lack of political will to root out systemic discrimination, of which the Government's so-called equality Bill is the most obvious cynical example.

Let this human rights day ring in the ears of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, the Ministers responsible for the status of women and youth, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). In fact, let it ring in the ears of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all members of his cabinet. This day should ring loudly in their ears as they are reminded of the inequality of access to jobs, to training, to post-secondary education for women, handicapped, native peoples, those who are minority groups.

We have a built-in systemic barrier because of the structural barriers to equality which this Government has skirted and evaded. The Government talks of reform by education rather than by law. It is counting on the goodwill of Canadians to do the right thing. That is the Government's alibi for inaction; it is going to count on Canadians to do the right thing. That is just the trouble. The Government has a hands-off approach to human rights rather than a hands-on approach. The reason injustice still exists is because the Government has relied on other people to do the right thing instead of doing the right thing itself.

As the Official Opposition, we pledge to support the Government in whatever measures it brings forward to give everyone in every region a sense of dignity. We will not support its failure to do this. We will also support Canada's efforts throughout the world when our country champions human rights in the face of oppression and tyranny. Canada has a responsibility to the world community of nations. We are proud of Canada's record, yet we realize we have a long way to go.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join with my colleagues today as we recognize the thirty-eighth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the General Assembly of the United Nations. In 1948 each and every delegate representing the nations of the world committed themselves to guaranteeing for their citizens all the basic rights and freedoms that centuries have taught us are fundamental to civilization, peace and progress for humankind.

Although progress has been made in achieving the goals set in 1948, most notably in the struggle for decolonization, it must nevertheless be recognized that the grandchildren of those who were the authors of that noble declaration have inherited a world which for many falls far short of the dream. I am talking about that mighty dream of Martin Luther King. It is a costly dream, dreamed until death in the Soviet Union by Anatoly Marchenko. It is a dream dearer than freedom itself for Nelson Mandela, and it is a dream that, to Mahatma Ghandi, represented the culmination of a love shared for all mankind, achievable only by the power of love.

It is not a part of that dream that 128 countries can still be characterized by Amnesty International as being involved in the systematic violation of human rights. It is not part of that dream that children would be imprisoned in South Africa for merely sharing it. It was not part of that dream that the people of Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania and the people of the Ukraine could dream that dream freely only on foreign shores, or that Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Lebanon, Angola and other third world nations should have their right to self-determination compromised by the national interests of others.

However proud we may be as Canadians in accepting the Nansen medal, the refugees arriving on our shores in such numbers are evidence of that unfulfilled dream. When Martin Luther King said: "I have a dream. Oh, I have a dream", that dream did not mean that people would starve to provide the weapons of war which can destroy the earth.

When I reflect upon human rights in the context of my country, I recognize that here too we fall short of that dream. I find no source of pride in our treatment of the aboriginal peoples, rooted as it is all too often in racism.

However, even though Canada does not represent perfection, I am very proud to be a Canadian. We are a nation only beginning to measure our potential greatness. As a boy I grew up in a different Canada, as someone who was different, but I learned that change is possible in our country when one is determined to be a part of it. That I am now a member of this place is the measure of the extent of the change which has occurred.

[Translation]

As a nation, we are unique in our focus not only on property rights but also, and more fundamentally, on social justice as reflected in the range and humanistic approach of our social programs, and, more obviously, in our Official Languages Act, our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and our provincial laws that prohibit discrimination on the grounds of race, religion, sex, language and physical or other handicaps.

[English]

This is a nation which has changed since my childhood into a multiracial and multiethnic nation. We have the potential to be the greatest nation in the world, not because of our might but because we have accepted our diversity and because we will release, through our commitment to social justice, the yet untapped but magnificent potential of our many peoples. We shall be as devoted to the right to freedom, equality and self-determination for other nations as we are for ourselves. This is the kind of greatness to be shared with other nations and the kind of leadership this world so desperately needs if that common dream of 1948 is ever to be fulfilled.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Chairman, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the second report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

RESEARCH, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Research Science and Technology to present the first report of the Standing Committee, in both official languages.

The committee has considered the Order in Council appointment of Bruce Howe to the post of Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) which was referred on October 16, 1986. Your committee has examined the qualifications of the appointee and finds him competent to perform the duties of the post.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I just want to state at this point that I dissent in the report of the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that it is our of order for him to do this at this stage.

Mr. Berger: If I may, on a point of order, I would like to share with the Chair my concern about this procedure and with the hearing which was held into the appointment of Mr. Howe to Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret I cannot allow the Hon. Member to continue. The rules do not allow the Hon. Member to comment on a committee report at this stage. However, if the Hon. Member wants to consult with the Table there may be other means by which to do so.

Mr. Berger: Again on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I could explain to the Chair the nature of my concern, I think the Chair might agree that this is a point of order.

The committees of the House, as I understand it, have the opportunity to review an Order in Council appointment within 30 days of the date of the Order in Council appointment. However, it so happens that in this particular case the nominee has not yet taken up his duties as Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Therefore, when he appeared before our committee, he was unable to answer any of the questions which were put to him regarding—

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret I cannot allow the Hon. Member to continue. I do not think he has raised a point of order. However, if the Hon. Member has a grievance, the Chair would be willing to consider it if the Hon. Member would be willing to put it in writing. I cannot allow the Hon. Member to comment about the committee. I rule that he has not raised a point of order at this time.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—STATE OF WESTERN ECONOMY

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before putting the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), since today is the final allotted day the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the supply Bill. In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the supply Bill be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

That this House notes with deep concern the drastic decline in the oil and gas sector of western Canada, leading to over 25,000 unemployed workers and over 100,000 social welfare cases in Alberta alone; and the serious reduction in farm income and the lack of federal support for manufacturing industries in the western provices; and

Therefore calls upon the Government to institute an immediate meeting of western provincial Governments, farmers, industries and labour to formulate an economic action plan designed to revive western resource, agricultural and manufacturing industries and to put western Canadians back to work.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at the outset that due to the vagaries of the parliamentary process I deeply regret that this very important and essential debate will be shortened to less than an hour-and-a-half which, unfortunately, does not allow the full range of debate that is required to give proper expression to these concerns.

We bring this resolution forward to draw to the attention of the House and to the country the tragic and desperate circumstances being faced by western Canadians in a wide range of energy, agricultural and manufacturing sectors. From time to time newspaper reports may appear in the eastern press in this regard, but I do not think anyone fully understands the dimension of the personal tragedy being experienced by so many people, nor the terrible undermining of very fundmental and important industries to Canada.

I would like to begin by recounting to the House by way of example some indications of the depth of despair and the depth of economic tragedy that is beginning to occur. The Government of Alberta recently published a report put out by its Employment Department which indicates that by the end of 1986 over 25,000 workers in the oil and gas sector will be out of jobs. The oil association reports that by 1987 some 70 per cent of the oil-drilling rigs will be idle. The report goes on to indicate that a meagre 28 per cent of employment is forecast on the rigs, the lowest rate in 10 years. It is the worst slump in the development of exploration in the oil and gas industry experienced in the last decade.

The way in which these serious downfalls in the industry translate is perhaps best expressed in personal terms. We know that in Alberta there are over 100,000 people who are unemployed, and the numbers grow by the thousands every month. The exhaustees, those people who will be running out of unemployment insurance benefits, are increasing at the rate of 5,000 per month, and the crunch has not yet occurred. It will not occur until spring, at which time these people will no longer have any form of support. This is, of course, at a time at which the Government has before it the report of the Forget Commission which presents Draconian measures to reduce unemployment benefits even further.

There are over 147,000 people on social assistance in the Province of Alberta. That figure increased at a rate of over 12,000 families in the last year and grows by 600 families a month. By any of these indicators it is very clear that in this one province alone we are facing a kind of drastic and terrible erosion of a once vibrant economy. The question is: What is being done? The answer is: Virtually nothing at all.

That same type of tragedy is being reflected in other sectors of the western economy. At the recent Outlook Conference which took place last week in Ottawa the Government's own economists indicated that the fall in farm income in the Province of Alberta will be 60 per cent. In the Province of Manitoba it will be over 50 per cent, and over 40 per cent in the Province of Saskatchewan. While the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was making his $1 billion statement the fact of the matter is that that money will only begin to make up a small percentage of the drastic loss in family income that the Government's own economists were projecting back into 1987.

In the area of industrial development and diversification we again know what the facts are. The decision by the Government to go against the clear recommendation based upon the criteria of supply and service on the CF-18 contract took away from western Canada a major opportunity for development of high technology. That incident has caused much anger and indignation right across the West. The results of recent polls show that the people of British Columbia and Alberta share just as deeply the anger and frustration against the federal Government as do the people of Manitoba. A recent report released by DRIE shows that when it comes to providing industrial assistance the Province of Saskatchewan receives $18 million. Assistance to Alberta last year was $16 million. The Province of Manitoba received $30 million. The Province of Quebec received $430 million and the Province of Ontario received $267 million.

The fact of the matter is that westerners are beginning to feel bereft of support by the Government. They feel betrayed by the Government. It is interesting that even members of the Government's own Party are saying this. The Government of Alberta, never known to shy away from supporting its brethren, is now making a variety of statements in the press which indicate that it feels betrayed.

The Prime Minister went to Calgary and said: "Yes, we will help you with the Syncrude plant". A week later, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) said: "I don't think we will help you at all, I have to reconsider it". This led to an angry chorus heard throughout the Province of Alberta and the other oil and gas-producing provinces about a Government that says one thing one day and something very different the next.

What has been the response of the Government? The response can only be described in one word: deception. Rather than responding to those cries for help, the Government is engaging in public relations puffery and, with audacity beyond belief, is trying to incorporate in its accomplishments in western Canada a whole series of initiatives undertaken by the previous Government.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the Calgary Herald issues of December 5 and December 6. The newspaper indicates that a statement was made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) defending the Conservative record in the West. It makes interesting reading because a great many of the accomplishments listed were initiatives undertaken by the previous Government. Regarding my own province, the Deputy Prime Minister said that his Government is participating in the Winnipeg Core Area agreement. That was initiated in 1981. We got that whole thing started. The newspaper talks about the transportation agreement. We initiated and continued that agreement. Then the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) showed up in Winnipeg on Friday and called a big press conference with coffee, tea, danish, bran muffins and the whole works to announce a transportation agreement that we had signed back in 1983. He said that he would do wonderful things and that he would set up a transport institute. That was announced in 1983. He said that he would help with Churchill. That was announced and carried out in 1983. Every single statement of the Minister of Transport was based upon legal, binding agreements signed and sealed by the previous federal Government.

Anyone who has read the Calgary Herald over the years knows that its sympathy lies generally with the Conservative Party. What does the Calgary Herald say in its editorial comment of December 6? It says:

> Nevertheless, Mazankowski misleads in many ways with his rosy version of the Tory western record—
> Mazankowski misleads by claiming credit for Liberal programs such as the decision to put up $200 million for the 1988 Winter Olympics—
> He misleads by suggesting, without proof, that jobs created in western Canada stemmed directly from federal policies. Would he admit unemployment in western Canada is solely the fault of the federal Government?

The editorial concludes by saying:

> Despite Mazankowski's lengthy written submission—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Even though I understand the Hon. Member is reading a document, could I ask him to refer to the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) by his title of Deputy Prime Minister?

Mr. Axworthy: I am simply quoting directly from the editorial. If you wish me to translate that, I will say that despite the Deputy Prime Minister's lengthy written submission:

—the actions of the federal Government—in the crunch— suggest that the West has been, if not written off, at least, as the accountants would say, written down.

That is the position taken by those who write for the Calgary Herald. It is informative to note that a newspaper that was once a strong supporter of the Conservative Party is now accusing the senior Minister from Alberta of deception and of misleading the public through the statements he made.

The problem is that westerners do not want that kind of public relations puffery. They do not want the Prime Minister making promises he will not keep. They want some kind of action. They realize very clearly that unless some direct action is taken immediately, the oil and gas industry will be in serious trouble.

I ask you to consider, Mr. Speaker, today's National Energy Board report which indicates that the present reserves in Canada's conventional oil fields may have a life of only seven to 10 years. Yet all the programs under the Western Accord were cancelled. All the incentives provided for frontier exploration and heavy oil upgrading were cancelled.

Where is Lloydminster? Where is Syncrude? What is happening in the frontier? Everything is closed down in the Beaufort and nothing is happening in Hibernia. There is no assistance being given. Yet at the same time, I read in today's Globe and Mail that the cabinet document that was leaked indicates that the Government is prepared to give a loan guarantee of $200 million to General Motors of Canada, the wealthiest corporation in the world. However, the Government cannot provide loans for western Canadians so that they may go ahead with Syncrude.

What is the difference? Why is it that loan guarantees can be given to General Motors but somehow the oil and gas industry cannot get the same kind of consideration? This is occurring at a time when we have a report indicating that we do not have the proper reserves in our conventional oil and gas fields. We must recognize that within a few years, the countries on the Arabian coast, knowing that countries like Canada have short-changed themselves, will then be able to start raising prices and we will be helpless to respond.

How is it that we can tolerate a downturn in capital investment in this year alone of $4.5 billion? This is particularly surprising because under the Western Accord signed by the Government and the oil-producing provinces, there is a very clear statement in Part I, Clause 9, indicating that if a sharp change in oil prices occurs, a mechanism will be triggered to provide for additional consultation and action. It seems that the Government was prepared to recognize that eventuality since it wrote it into the Accord but it is not prepared to recognize it when it comes to taking action on it.

We are faced with an incredible vacuum in government initiative causing an incredible growth in welfare and unemployment rates and a lack of investment in the commodities of western Canada. The Minister of Energy has said that he is now taking a hands-off approach.

There is a model that should be followed, one that I applaud in part. The Government recognized that there was a serious economic problem in the City of Montreal, so it put together a blue-ribbon committee involving lots of Ministers. They came up with an economic blueprint to concentrate aerospace, high technology and petrochemicals in Montreal. There is nothing at all wrong with that. There is nothing wrong with the Government of Canada sitting down with the private sector to work out an economic blueprint and to concentrate and focus resources. However, why is this happening only in one region? Why is the Government singling out one area when there are the same kinds of problems being faced in western Canada? There has been not nearly the same effort or commitment there.

What is the difference? In western Canada, there is a recession of incredible depth. Industries are being brought to their knees. Yet we cannot get the same kind of action as Montreal got. That is a question westerners are beginning to ask themselves time and time again.

We know that there are opportunities for development. We know that action could be taken. In the last two or three days, Crow's Nest Pass coal producers have been in Ottawa putting forward a proposal for shipping clean western coal to Ontario. That is a good idea. On both sides of the House, we would support a national economic project. Because of the fact that the Government is negotiating a free trade deal with the United States which incorporates the principle of national treatment that states that there can be no formal program, particularly on freight rates that give a preference to Canadian industry that is not given to industry on the other side of the border, the prospect of bringing that type of coal project to fruition is virtually nil. On the one hand the Government is negotiating with the Americans for economic development, but it is putting a barrier in the way of a $4 billion capital investment which would create 13,000 jobs and give hope to an important energy sector of Alberta because the Prime Minister and his technical advisers have said that we have this principle of national treatment that we must honour. I am sure that the Americans will hold their feet to the fire, because they will not let the Government of Canada introduce a program that will displace their exports.

We know that there is the need for a development framework in the oil and gas industry, and a new set of revenue-sharing developments. There must be price stability in that industry. An industry cannot be knocked around like a ball on a squash court and have any hope of development in the future. The Government has refused to act in that area. It is taking no initiative to sit down with the oil producing provinces and come up with some answers. It says that the Western Accord is enough. The Western Accord is out of date. It is obsolescent. It no longer has any meaning. In fact, it is part of the problem. Is it any wonder that westerners ask, what will we do about it? Is it any wonder that the 25,000 people who are unemployed in the oil and gas sector should not ask, where are the special government programs that will put us back to work until there is a revival in the oil and gas industry?

I remind the House of the period of 1980-81 when the automobile industry was in the same type of crunch, and the previous Government introduced ILAP which provided for job creation and industrial investment in those communities that were badly affected by the downturn in the oil industry. The skilled workers and the industry employees were kept in place, and those communities were kept alive until there was an upturn in that industry. Now the automobile industry is leading the economic growth of this country.

I would say that this is the type of response that could be applied to help those unemployed people, and those people who are going on welfare. This would be direct commitment in the short term, combined with a longer term development that would give stability and prospects of growth back to the oil and gas industry. Again, we have absolutely nothing.

In this resolution we are putting forward a call for coming together under the leadership of the federal Government, provincial Governments, business, labour, and farm groups to work out an action plan for that economy that shows that we are prepared to come to grips with the issues, that we are prepared to recognize that it is an emergency that requires serious and effective application by all levels of Government and by the private sector to work out solutions. That is what westerners expect and demand. That is what we are representing in this resolution.

I hope it is the type of positive suggestion that can be supported by all Members of the House. We are not saying, do not do anything; we are saying that here is a perfectly constructive initiative that is proposed in this House that will give some hope and meaning to the people of the western sector. It will say to them that the Parliament of Canada is responding to their needs; it recognizes the depth of their problems, and the type of energy and focus that is required. This Parliament is making a serious recommendation for the Government to follow. Surely that is the type of recommendation and proposal that all Members of this House can support. It will show westerners that indeed all Parties in Parliament will aid and assist a vital region and put those economies back on their feet, so that once again they can provide leadership and dynamics for economic develpment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) on a question or comment.

Mr. Schellenberger: The Member who just spoke made the charge that on the CF-18 contract there was no opportunity for a technology update to western Canada. Would the Hon. Member advise me how he can state that when $300 million of that contract is going to Edmonton, to a firm in my riding, namely, Northwest Industries, which will be dealing with all the work on the CF-18s out of western Canada in the large plant that it has in Edmonton? This will create up to 100 jobs in that area over the lifetime of the contract. It will allow the professional people of Edmonton and the area to have that technology update. It will allow them to continue to participate in the modern repairing of aircraft. Western Canada is participating in this contract in a significant way, except that it is in Edmonton rather than Winnipeg.

Mr. Axworthy: If that remark is symptomatic of the approach taken by Conservative Members of Parliament from Alberta, then God help Alberta and western Canada. If they are prepared to accept some crumbs because the pot of porridge that was on the table was missed, then it is no wonder that we have this type of tragedy taking place in that province. It is no wonder that the Province of Alberta is not being well served by its Members of Parliament, if that is symptomatic of the attitude. Here we have a western Canadian consortium that won a contract based upon the criteria of competence, cost, and technology, and with political interference it was taken away from them. That process was distorted. Then a small, piddling portion, 5 per cent of that project, is given to another company in another province. It is that type of disunity and fractionalism that hurts and injures western Canada. It is that unwillingness to come together in unison to defend the rights of western Canada and defend its prerogative that is our downfall. The Hon. Member should be ashamed for even standing up in the House and suggesting that that was somehow a fair trade-off. It is an embarrassment to hear that from a Member of Parliament from western Canada.

An Hon. Member: Tell that to his constituents.

Mr. Schellenberger: I asked the Hon. Member whether he would justify his statement that there was no transfer of technology to Edmonton. In reply I received a large, protracted statement defending his position.

I would like to ask another question. The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) made a long statement about the weakness of the oil industry. I agree with him that due to international prices, the oil industry in western Canada is suffering dramatically. The oil industry would have been better prepared to handle this downturn in oil prices if approximately $50 billion had not been sucked out of it by the National Energy Program, which that Member and his Cabinet put in place. Now that it is in a weakened state and recovering after the National Energy Program was removed, world prices have intervened. In the meantime, this Government has put in place a number of programs to alleviate those discriminatory taxes. Would the Hon. Member comment on whether he agrees with me that the oil industry would be in far better shape if it had been able to retain that money and not lost it from the western Canadian business sector to general revenue in Ottawa?

Mr. Axworthy: The Member's facts are wrong. He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Mazankowski: He sure does.

Mr. Axworthy: Under the National Energy Program there was a three-way split. Alberta received the biggest cut. Let us talk about who was taking royalties off at a time when oil prices were over $35 a barrel.

Mr. Mazankowski: Now we hear the real Liberal line.

Mr. Axworthy: Also the provinces were attempting to share the rents that were being demanded.

• (1700)

Mr. Mazankowski: You are looking pretty silly now.

Mr. Axworthy: Are they arguing that they will not recapture any of the incredible rent increases for the people of Alberta? Will it all be given to the corporations? Is that what they are arguing? Is the former Minister of Transport saying that he would turn down the money which is now being invested in western grain transportation?

Mr. Mazankowski: You are waffling.

Mr. Axworthy: When he was Minister of Transport, as mouthy as he is, he did not cancel the program. He did not give the money back at that time. He was the Minister of Transport. He could have said: "Hey, this is no good, folks; I will cancel the program and give it back". He had two and a half years in which to give it back. What did he do? He kept the program in place.

Mr. Mazankowski: Answer the question.

Mr. Axworthy: They should not tell us what we were up to; they should tell us what they are up to. We turned that money around for the economic development of western Canada. He had a chance to do something about it if he did not like it. He did not do it, so he should quit copping out.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, my comment relates to the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It is also relevant to what the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) had to say. It concerns the attitude of the Government, not so much toward western Canada as a whole. Obviously from our point of view that is in question as well. However, I am referring to its attitude particularly in respect of Winnipeg. Within the Progressive Conservative caucus there is a tendency to equate the interests of Alberta with the interests of western Canada. Since the 1984 election, the result for Winnipeg has been that we have suffered unfairly in our relationship with central Canada, the latest example being the awarding of the CF-18 contract to Canadair when it should have been awarded to Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg. Also the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry will remember only too well when we had to stand side by side in the summer of 1985 with other Manitoba politicians, who were mostly New Democrats, to prevent the disappearance of the CN prairie regional headquarters in Winnipeg, to prevent everything in the Prairies from being amalgamated and situated in Edmonton.

Winnipeg is being hit in two different directions. The first is in a national sense in that it is suffering from the politics of Manitoba not having enough clout, or whatever the case may be, and thus losing contracts which should have gone to that city. Also, within the mind-set of the Progressive Conservative Party, Winnipeg is losing out to Edmonton, often for the sake of the kinds of crumbs for which the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin seems ready to settle, in the bowing and scraping attitude of Alberta and Manitoba Tory Members of Parliament toward whoever is calling the shots in the Tory caucus. I invite the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry to comment on these points.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I could not have said it better myself. The Conservatives have failed to realize that at the end of 1983-84 we put in place the IRDA program which allowed development of economic blueprints in each province. It was negotiated with business, labour and the provincial Government of each province. It was to provide for a co-operative form of economic development across the country and to ensure specialization for regions so that they could do things better and provide certain advantages. That was to be complemented by development in other provinces. It was negotiated carefully with every provincial Government. All things for which the Deputy Prime Minister took credit were initiated under the IRDA program.

That has been abandoned. There is no regional development program. The Conservative Government is going on the question, as the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) said, of who can muscle whom or who can out-hustle whom in these areas. That is what it is doing rather than trying to provide for a concept of regional development, worked out in co-operation with the private sector and provincial Government of each region, and using federal funds to do it. What do the Conservatives do? They cut back in research and development. They cut back investments in research centres. They cut back the transfer of technology. They have a new research and development program which discriminates against those areas with large corporations that could contribute large amounts of private capital. They do not have a regional development program. They cut back DRIE itself. As a result, the capacity of the federal Government to act as an investor and to work co-operatively has been dismantled, and it comes down to the political shenanigans which the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin is advocating.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. It certainly provides us with an opportunity to explore some of the serious difficulties affecting western Canada. However, I must say that it takes a lot of gall for the Liberal Party to introduce such a motion. It particularly takes a lot of gall for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) to introduce such a motion, given the kind of attention which he and his Liberal colleagues paid to western Canada, in particular the attack in which they engaged upon the West in terms of the imposition of the National Energy Program. I will get to that a little later.

For the record and to be a little objective, I should like to quote some sources other than the expert from Fort Garry, who probably knows as much about the oil patch as I do about flying to the moon.

On September 8, 1986 the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada indicated that it was very encouraged by the announcement of the federal Minister of Energy that the petroleum and gas revenue tax would be eliminated on October 1, 1986. "The removal of the PGRT is a very positive step in a sequence of events that will restore viability and investor confidence in the oil and gas industry", said John Howard, Chairman of IPAC. Those people know what they are talking about.

Also, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, which represents the heart and soul of the Canadian energy sector, indicated that on October 30, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and the Alberta Energy Minister, Neil Webber, confirmed a major milestone in the deregulation of the natural gas industry in Canada. It indicated that natural gas price decontrol would proceed on November 1, 1986, and went on to outline the importance of that particular initiative.

The Petroleum Resources Communications Foundation also indicated that the announcement of the Minister of Energy that the PGRT would be gone, effective October 1, was most positive, and that the decision would add about $45 million per month to the industry's reinvestment.

I could talk about federal government procurement. The Hon. Member talked about the Liberal record in that regard. Federal government procurement between the fall of 1984 when we assumed office until October of this year increased by almost 20 per cent. The fact of the matter is that improvements are taking place. Much more needs to be done. We recognize that there are difficulties in the energy sector. We recognize that there are difficulties in the agricultural sector.

However, I repeat that the gall of the Liberals in bringing forth this motion as experts on the subject is appalling. Their vindictive policies, hodgepodge of contradictions, and dead-end solutions, supported by the NDP, left the country a legacy of failure and broken dreams. They left the country in a state of anxiety and despair. They left the country divided, a country where the regions felt they were attacked, not supported by the central Government, and a country which was floundering and reeling from crippling interest rates, weak growth, massive unemployment, a burdensome debt, a weak dollar, and a lack of business and investor confidence. That is the kind of legacy the Liberals left for western Canada, and that is what we are trying to correct.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It was the Liberal Government and that western Member who imposed the National Energy Program, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, the PGRT, the oil export tax, the Canadian ownership service charge, the petroleum compensation charge, and there may have been others which I may not remember. However, that myriad of taxes stole or extracted $60 billion from western Canada, from Alberta in particular, and he had the gall to say that we were not looking after the West. We have cut that off. In the last two years they were in office, they extracted $9.25 billion from the Province of Alberta under these taxes. Do you know what, Mr. Speaker? They are all gone now; they are not there any more.

• (1710)

With the phase-out of the PGRT in 1986 the federal Government will get some $500 million from the energy industry. With the complete phase-out, it will be next to nothing. That is what we have been doing. That is what we have to do. The Liberal Government imposed the 25 per cent retroactive back-in. What did this do to the oil industry?

The Hon. Member is talking about a loss of 25,000 jobs. Yes, indeed, we are very concerned about that. But do you know what this man-made Liberal political crisis did to western Canada, Mr. Speaker? There was a loss of 50,000 jobs and half of the oil rigs left the country and went south of the border. Yes, the Liberals ripped $60 billion off the Province of Alberta. It was they who drove investment from Canada, and in 150 days after the National Energy Program it was they who caused the loss of 35,000 jobs. As a result of the National Energy Program, $10.2 billion of direct capital investment left Canada. In 1981, that was made up of $5.3 billion in foreign capital and $4.9 billion in domestic capital. If that $10.2 billion had stayed in Canada and had been invested here, it would have created 409,000 jobs. That is the situation we inherited.

It was the Liberal Government that imposed upon Canada the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which also contributed to de-investment in Canada. It was that group of gangsters over there who managed to allow interest rates to creep up to 22.75 per cent. That is what the prime rate was in August, 1981. That hurt farmers, small businessmen, the oil sector, everyone.

This Member now poses as the great saviour of western Canada. I have in my hand a copy of the Winnipeg paper, The Tribune, for Wednesday, March 19, 1980. It reads:

Axworthy aims to make Government a force in West.

He said that he was going to spell out a clear industrial strategy for the West in the next four years. Some strategy, Mr. Speaker. The strategy was to transfer billions of dollars from western Canada to the federal coffers. He used western Canada as a cash cow. That is what we have been used for in Alberta. The Liberals talk about their new-found awareness of western Canada. The Liberal Party has just had a convention. They talked about addressing the regional needs of Canada. But there is no Member on the Liberal national executive from Manitoba, no Member from Alberta, and no Member from Atlantic Canada. That is a real national party. I say it takes a lot of gall for Liberals to pose as the experts on western Canada.

Mr. Mulroney: No wonder there is only one Liberal in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: No wonder there is only one Liberal in the House. The Liberals ran this country for 20 years and ran it into the ground.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am listening to my delightful colleague's presentation and enjoying most of it. I just want to bring to his attention that he referred to the lack of presence of Members in the House of Commons which he knows, as we all know, is inappropriate during a speech. Regardless of all the ohs and ahs, we look to leadership from the Government House Leader. I ask him to continue as we always do.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the point is well taken. I was not referring to any specific Member. I will repeat once again: There is one Liberal Member and one New Democratic Party Member in the House, and that should be on the record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I presume that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is coming back to the same point of order to the effect that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is referring to the presence of absence of Members.

Mr. Riis: I am also going to serve notice—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the Deputy Prime Minister did not refer to the specific absence of a specific Member.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe by your observation, and we will examine Hansard tomorrow, that the Deputy Prime Minister did not refer to any specific Member but did, in fact, indicate there was only a specific Member in the House of Commons. By implication that means there are no others, that there were no other New Democrats and no other Liberals. I want to serve notice that I will be raising this matter as a question of privilege.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this point because I want to hear the Hon. Member's speech. By and large it was a good speech. He is the Government House Leader. It is he to whom we look for leadership and guidance, and I ask him to give it.

Mr. Mazankowski: You will certainly get that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I want to take strong objection to the point made because I am here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: The point that I think we all want to make is that there has to be a certain amount of give and take and a certain amount of sincerity. There are now two Liberals and two New Democrats in the Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: We double every 10 minutes. Watch yourself.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am not the one to lecture the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), but if the Deputy Prime Minister is to start that ball game, he knows me well enough to know that, being here as I am five days a week at any time, I can start counting. It is a game that is very bad for the spirit of the House. May I kindly ask the Deputy Prime Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, to stop referring to how many Members are here at a particular time. There are plenty of Members having coffee in the lobby.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: It is not the Minister's style of debating. We will be lowering the style of debating in the House by counting Members. He knows that we will be here for at least two more years and there will be plenty of occasions when this could backfire. I wish that the Minister would proceed with debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate with the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate the interventions of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Prud'homme), particularly his lecture. This is an important debate and I think it should command the presence of a lot of Hon. Members.

Mr. Riis: Maybe it is a reflection of what we think of your speech.

Mr. Mazankowski: I suspect that if it were not for Members on the Conservative side we would probably have difficulty maintaining a quorum.

Mr. Riis: Maybe it is what you are saying, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think it should be put in that context because the Hon. Member who introduced the motion had a perfectly legitimate reason for doing it. We are happy to debate the issue and are happy to set the record straight.

During the course of the Liberal Government which was in power for 20 years, it did nothing to help diversify the western economy. Hon. colleagues will remember one time back in November, 1980 when there was something known as the western economic development fund which was worth $4 billion. It was supposed to be worth that. It was a vanishing $4 billion. The Hon. Member who introduced this motion said this, as appears at page 4417 of Hansard for November 4, 1980:

> Further, we would like to point to the introduction in the Budget of the western development fund. It is designed to take the proper profits and revenues deriving from resources and recycle them back into western Canada to provide a much more diversified economic base.

The Liberals took the revenue and they recycled it back here, but it never got back to western Canada. The $4 billion western economic development fund just vanished into thin air. So much for the commitment of the hon. gentleman.

We had a further reminder of that. At page 5128 of Hansard for November 27, 1980 the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry said:

> We are talking an economic and industrial strategy for western Canada—

The Liberals had 20 years, not four years or two years, but 20 years, to diversify the economic base of western Canada.

We are taking steps to do that. There was a commitment in the Speech from the Throne and we are going to do that. Liberal policies created high inflation and high interest rates. Let us talk about farm prices. In 1984 when we were fighting the election campaign, farm prices were at the lowest level since 1938. That is the Liberal record. They failed to respond.

• (1720)

What the Hon. Member is suggesting in his motion is that we should have some meetings and a conference. The Liberals had a Western Economic Conference with a lot of fanfare and hoopla. There were a lot of recommendations but nothing was done. Under the LIFT program they were paying western farmers not to grow wheat. Can you imagine anything so absurd? The National Energy Program crippled western Canada. The Liberals dismantled the Crow. As a matter of fact, if they were in office today rates would probably be around $11 per tonne. We rolled them back and froze them at $6 a tonne. Neither can we forget what else they did with the NEP. They defeated our Government in 1980 over 18 cent gas. Rather than getting 18 cents from the Conservatives we get $1.13, mainly in taxes from the Liberals. They destroyed co-operative federalism in this country. Remember the statement back in 1980? "Co-operative federalism is dead". Who made that statement? Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. The Hon. Member who moved this motion was a member of that Government.

He talked about the coal deal. They had 20 years to put together a deal to move coal from western Canada to Ontario. We now have a Liberal Government in Ontario, and I would hope the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would use his good offices to encourage Mr. Peterson to co-operate with us in order to facilitate the movement of coal from western Canada to Ontario. It is a good deal for Canada. It is a good deal for western Canada, Ontario, and the environment. Yet we are not getting any co-operation from the NDP or the Liberals in moving ahead with the National Transportation Act. That is vital. If we are going to bring down the unit cost of transportation, that is a must. I hope the House Leader for the NDP will consider that.

The motion before us is interesting for what it says, but more interesting for what it does not say. There is absolutely nothing constructive. It proposes nothing but asks for an immediate meeting. I just went through some of the resolutions bandied about at the Liberal convention. There certainly is nothing there which might be helpful either. They want deficiency payments for agriculture. We have delivered. They want policies developed to reduce the cost of fertilizer, chemicals and other farm inputs. One of the first things we did was to remove the farm fuel tax. We have probably the cheapest farm fuel of any producing nation in the world, thanks to the initiative of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The reason we are doing things in the agricultural industry is that this Prime Minister, unlike the two previous Prime Ministers, cares about agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: That was evidenced by his visit to the Outlook Conference. He was the first Prime Minister in the history of this country to attend an agriculture outlook conference. I see sadness among the NDP because they said, "Oh, no, Mulroney won't deliver. Wise won't deliver." Then they said, "Yes, he will deliver but only in the form of a loan. It would have to be tied to some diversion of acreage or another LIFT program". Then it was going to be an interest-free loan. They tried to mislead, perhaps not intentionally, the farmers of Canada. They tried to create anxiety and fear. Then they tried to attack the credibility of the Prime Minister. I will tell you that this Prime Minister has delivered on agriculture just as he has delivered on energy. He has delivered for the West. He will continue to deliver because he cares about the West and he cares about Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Let us talk about unemployment in western Canada. Let us look at the record. The Hon. Member promotes his Leader as "Honest John", a great guy, builds on the Liberal record. Here is the Liberal record on unemployment in western Canada. In Manitoba in 1980 when they last took office, the unemployment rate was 6 per cent. When they were kicked out in September, 1984, it was 9 per cent. In Saskatchewan it rose from 3.9 per cent to 8.5 per cent. In Alberta it rose from 3.9 per cent to 12 per cent. Four years of Liberal rule gave Alberta an increase in unemployment from 3.9 per cent to 12 per cent. In B.C. it doubled from 7.5 per cent to 15.2 per cent.

Let us now look at the Conservative government record. In Manitoba the rate fell from 9 per cent to 8.4 per cent. In Saskatchewan it fell from 8.5 per cent to 7.5 per cent. In Alberta it fell from 12 per cent to 10 per cent. In B.C. it fell from 15.2 per cent to 13.3 per cent. Some 135,000 new jobs were created, not by the Government, but because we created a climate conducive to the private sector creating new jobs and new opportunities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I will tell you what else the Liberals did in those last four years. This is the root cause of all the problems we face in this country: they chalked up $126.7 billion worth of deficits. It was $13.5 billion in 1980, $14.8 billion in 1981, $27.7 billion in 1982, $32.4 billion in 1983, and $38.3 billion in 1984. How is that for a record? You know what we are doing? We are turning it around.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It has been brought down from $38 billion to $32 billion, and it will be down to $30 billion next year. As a result, interest rates dropped by 4 percentage points.

I will conclude with this comment from the C. D. Howe Institute. They said that "In the first two years of its electoral mandate, the federal Government has made progress on many economic issues and has begun to face some of the fundamental and long-standing problems of the Canadian economy. Staying on course offers the best opportunities for long-term growth of the Canadian economy". It will work in Canada, Mr. Speaker. It will work in the West. We will create jobs and opportunities and a satisfying future for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, we just heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) for approximately 20 minutes but we did not hear one recommendation, one idea or one intention of the Government with regard to the energy sector in western Canada. All we heard was a 20-minute attack on Liberals, past and present. If the Government has any intention of doing anything for the energy sector, it has had plenty of time today to say what it was going to do.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) agrees that further help is necessary for the energy sector. He said on November 24 that the federal Government is "going back to the drawing board to help Canada's oil industry". The drawing board must be in the Himalayas because we have not seen any action or initiative. The Government backed away from the Husky upgrader. In its Supplementary Estimates the Government had allocated $20,400,000 for the upgrader in Regina. Some $9,400,000 was for development engineering, preliminary studies and other work. Some $11 million of that $20,400,000 was a contingency fund in case the project did not go ahead.

What about Syncrude? It has been talked about so intensely in western Canada in the last few months. The Government said it is going to get involved. The Premier of Alberta said that he expected an answer by Tuesday. Now he says he is going to get an answer by Christmas. This is a good time. Why not tell the people in western Canada, particularly in Alberta, what he will do to help the Syncrude project?

• (1730)

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sorry that the Hon. Member missed the point. We have been trying to undo the damage the Liberals did while they were in office, particularly in the last four years. It has been a very serious matter.

The fact is that by putting together the Western Accord and dismantling the National Energy Program, in 1985 we established record energy activity in western Canada with some 11,273 wells drilled. There was $10.5 billion worth of new investment put into that sector.

The rapid decline in oil prices was not created as a result of this Government's policies, but as a result of the economic and pricing discipline half-way around the world. Of course, we must respond and, as a result, the PGRT removal was accelerated. It is estimated that this alone will activate some 540 wells. In total, some $3 billion in tax relief has been provided to the energy sector.

I indicated that the Liberals extracted $9.25 billion in the last two years of their regime. We have cut that to almost nothing. The 25 per cent retroactive claim that the Liberals put in place was very offensive to the oil industry. It is gone.

One need only look to IPAC or the Canadian Petroleum Association to see that we are fulfilling the kinds of policies that they suggest will reactivate and re-energize the energy sector. We are providing support for the Husky upgrader. The engineering studies and the determination of the final estimates process is proceeding and we have contributed $36 million in direct aid.

We have not backed away from Syncrude. The negotiations are continuing and we are studying the proposal that we received only a week ago today, or tomorrow.

We have deregulated the gas industry, which not only helps consumers but gives the gas producers in western Canada an opportunity to explore markets which they did not have. This is good for farmers because it will eventually reduce the price of fertilizer. It is good for Canada, the industry and consumers.

Most important, we have created a positive investment climate. We have brought down the interest rate, which was the major killer in the energy and agricultural sectors. Not only is there business confidence, but investor confidence is at an all-time high. This global influence is very important and does not apply only to the energy sector but affects also the economic well-being of Canada as a whole.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in his speech, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated a real concern about resolving the problems of unemployment in western Canada and doing whatever is possible to encourage economic development and expansion. He referred specifically to the Liberal proposal, which had existed for probably their entire mandate of 20 years, to move western Canadian low sulphur coal to central Canada to be used both by Ontario Hydro and the steel companies. Has the Government decided whether it will take some initiative in this regard and discuss it with the Ontario Government, by implication Ontario Hydro, and specifically with the steel companies throughout Ontario?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. Yes, we have met with officials of Ontario Hydro. I was to meet with senior officials last week but as a result of a storm, they were unable to attend. The meeting has been rescheduled for December 17.

Premier Peterson has agreed to meet and we are looking for an appropriate date. I have not discussed the matter with the steel industry. We sense that there is at least a willingness on the part of Ontario Hydro to explore the matter, which we are certainly doing.

I have personally taken an interest in this and we hope to cover all of its aspects, not only from a surface transportation point of view. I see the Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). He would also be very interested because this would clearly be a way to encourage and increase traffic on the Great Lakes water system. That is another spin-off aspect that would be beneficial to the whole country.

There is no question that there are some obstacles, but it is certainly the kind of project that I think deserves the support and co-operation of all. I appreciate the Hon. Member's support in that regard.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will comment on the context of a portion of the motion which calls upon the Government to institute an immediate meeting of western provincial Governments, farmers, industries and labour. As recently as the end of last month there was a First Ministers conference which certainly provided the opportunity for western Ministers to express their concerns. We should not forget that the Prime Minister has annualized the First Ministers conferences so that there is little value in proposing something that has already taken place, except to point out that the Liberals have failed to recognize it.

Furthermore, the Deputy Prime Minister pointed out that for the first time in history a Prime Minister of Canada appeared before and addressed the three major agricultural groups of Canada. He gave a very positive message that was positively received by the agricultural community, with the only negative response coming from the CBC.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister comment on the introduction to a book entitled The Sorcerer's Apprentices written by Peter Foster. Let me quote the following passage from the introduction:

> When the Liberals defeated the short-lived Government of Joe Clark in February, 1980, they promised lower petroleum prices than the Conservatives, Canadianization of the oil industry, and energy security through self-sufficiency in oil. Two and a half years later, they had delivered the highest petroleum price increases in Canadian history, a financially crippled Canadian sector of the oil business, and a more uncertain supply future than at any time since the first OPEC crisis of 1973-74.

He went on to say that in the shape of energy megaprojects they held to ransom and injured the Canadian-U.S. relations more than any other policy in living memory. He went on:

> Why did the public provide such overwhelming support for such a disastrous policy?—beause they did not understand—and were misled—about its true nature; second, because they supported the principle, but had no idea of the implications of the Canadianization of the oil business as proposed by the NEP—

Would the Deputy Prime Minister care to comment?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member raising those questions. The first one concerned the substance of the motion and the recommendation that a meeting should be convened. I believe that all Hon. Members and all Canadians are aware that the style and substance of the Government has been to consult and work together with provincial Governments and industry. I do not believe that there are any other areas that illustrate this more than in the two areas of agriculture and energy that we are discussing here.

When the Prime Minister announced that the billion-dollar assistance package would be worked out with the provinces and the producers of Canada, he meant it. This was carried out. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) met on numerous occasions with their counterparts from provincial Governments and met on numerous occasions with the farmers. That is why we see the program that was announced yesterday so widely accepted by the producers. I care what the producers say about it, not the CBC. It is widely accepted by the producers because they have played a role in developing the package. I believe that is very important.

Members opposite, particularly the Liberals, have criticized the Government for consulting too much. We recognize that this process may take somewhat longer, but at least the right solutions are found. When we addressed the problems of energy in Alberta we did not do it unilaterally. We did not unilaterally impose a national energy program, we worked out the Western Accord with the Provinces of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, and the industry.

Mr. Orlikow: What is happening now?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member is asking me what is happening now. If he had been in the House he would know because I gave a complete exposé of what is happening.

• (1740)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to rise to speak in this debate concerning western Canada. This is the time of year when the people of western Canada are buoyed up. They are feeling good about the world and themselves. It is the time of year when one thinks about the holiday season. However, I must say that in western Canada today people are feeling rather grim. There is a feeling of pessimism and in some quarters, I would say, it touches on resentment. There is a feeling of despair as a result of the economic tragedy which has struck western Canada. They look forward to the next two or three years and wonder about their children and their friends. There is a sense of uncertainty, of frustration and a certain fear of the future. Over the last little while, despite a number of actions taken by the Government, there has been nothing done to really set those fears and frustrations aside.

I must say that I could apply my speech to the former Liberal Government as well considering what it did to western Canada. My constituency, unfortunately, was the part of Canada which received the index finger from the then Prime Minister. We have never forgotten that. It was symbolic throughout all of western Canada of a betrayal. It showed how the Liberal Government actually felt about western Canadians. We recall with horror the 22 per cent interest rates which existed for western Canadian businesses, homeowners, farmers and ranchers. We remember the western development fund which was heralded as the $4 billion initiative fund to encourage business in western Canada. It evaporated into thin air. We never saw the western development fund. We never heard about it after it was first introduced in this House as a concept. That again showed just to what extent the Liberal Government of the day was committed to the people of western Canada and their concerns.

I find it incredible when I consider the plight of western Canadians and the fact that the Liberals had virtually 20 years in public office to meet many of their concerns and to respond to them. Quite frankly, that Government did very little. I think it would be too simplistic to say that it did nothing; it must have done something, but the treatment western Canadians received at the hands of the former Liberal Government was rather pathetic. Things have not changed very much.

Mr. Hopkins: Can you not write a new speech?

An Hon. Member: We've heard that one before.

Mr. Riis: My Liberal friends say it sounds as if I had said this before. Indeed I have, and I will say it again. For the next two years, up until the next federal election, I plan to say it at every opportunity I get just to remind people that a swing back to the Liberals means going back in time to the old days, which were not the good old days. Those times were very tough for western Canadians, and I want to make that perfectly clear.

Mr. Hawkes: The dark ages.

Mr. Riis: But let us talk about the present Government. Has it provided leadership in terms of changing things for the better in western Canada? No.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Riis: Has it shown a new sense of commitment? No.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Hopkins: Wrong questions, wrong answers.

Mr. Riis: It is getting late in the day and obviously there are opposing views to those questions. Let us consider what the Government has done. There was an aid package for farmers. There was an aid package for the ranchers in western Canada who experienced drought conditions. There was a rescue package for the banks which collapsed. In other words, the actions taken by the Government for western Canadians have been bail-outs, rescue packages or programs in terms of disaster funds. It has tried to cut the losses of western Canadian producers in one commodity or another. These are rescue packages; bail-outs. They are reactive programs, not proactive programs.

Western Canadians do not want hand-outs. They do not want to receive welfare from the federal Government. They do not want giveaways. They want a strong economy on which they can build for the future of their children and their children's children. They want to see some leadership from the Government. They want to see some action instead of reaction, which is all they have seen so far. The Government reacted to a troubled banking industry, to a troubled farming industry, to a troubled forest sector and fisheries sector.

Where is the leadership? Where are the programs which will help western Canadians carry on and contribute to the development of Canada? We have seen that action in other parts of our country. I want to be very specific because I realize that often we can describe situations and people will ask: "What is your factual information to substantiate that allegation?" I simply have to look at one of the most important arms of Government in assisting economic industrial development, and that is DRIE.

When one looks at the amount of funds which have been distributed since the Conservative Government took office, a very interesting picture is revealed. For example, the amount of industrial assistance between September, 1984, and March, 1986, for British Columbia was $47 million. Saskatchewan received $18 million; Alberta received $16 million; Manitoba received $30 million; the Yukon received $3 million. Those amounts total $114 million. Interestingly enough, an area of similar population, Quebec, received not $114 million but $430 million. Ontario received $260 million. When we consider areas of relatively equal population, that is setting apart any discussion about the difficult economic times these various regions face, western Canada has received significantly less of the DRIE funds than either Ontario or Quebec. I want to use that very specific example as a criterion upon which we can decide for ourselves whether the Government is committed to the western region of Canada.

There have been rumours lately. In fact, a document was leaked from Cabinet just a few hours ago which indicated that the Cabinet is considering giving special help to another industry, namely, General Motors. I wonder to what extent General Motors needs financial help from the Government of Canada? The leaked document indicates that the Government is planning to give perhaps $200 million to General Motors. I would like to remind Hon. Members that all of western Canada combined, including the territory of Yukon, received $114 million over the last two years. The Government is now considering giving General Motors $200 million. That puts the whole issue of western Canada into perspective in terms of how the Government is treating western Canada.

Let us look at some of the actions the Government has taken in western Canada. It has come up with $1 billion to bail out the two western banks which failed. I suggest that had proper and appropriate consideration been given to that region, those two banks would not have collapsed and that bail-out would not have been necessary. Rather than giving $1 billion to the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, if the same financial commitment had been given to the farmers, the small oil and gas companies, the forest sector, the mining sector and the small business sector in western Canada, those banks would not have collapsed and that bail-out would not have been necessary.

When we consider the CF-18 maintenance contract we see that 75 out of 75 experts who advised the Government on the company and, by implication, the area to which it should be awarded, agreed that it should go to Bristol Aerospace in western Canada. Did that $1.5 billion contract go to western Canada? No, it went to Montreal. It went to Canadair. The other day we learned that one of the reasons it did go to Canadair was to sweeten the pot so that when the Government sold off Canadair to Bombardier, Bombardier would be more interested in making the deal.

Mr. Bissonnette: Montrealers will remember that.

Mr. Riis: There we go again. That indicates relatively clearly the bias in terms of where the Government's focus really is.

Let us consider the forest industry. We are now up against the wall in the industry. The Americans want to impose a countervailing tariff on our lumber industry. What did the Government do in cahoots with the Premier of British Columbia? It said: "Listen. We have subsidized our industry. We do not have adequate stumpage rates". Therefore, by implication, we are involved in unfair trading practices as interpreted by the American administration and by the American lumber interests. So the Americans slapped on a countervail, and what did we do? Did we fight that before the ITC? Did we fight it before the Department of Commerce? Did we fight it before GATT? No. We fell to our knees and said: "Listen. We are guilty as accused. Can we buy off, can we negotiate some compromise?" Consequently, tens of thousands of jobs in the forest sector right across Canada, but primarily in British Columbia, were put at risk. That is the reality. That is what the Government actually did.

Let us consider for example the Polar 8 ice-breaker contract. As all my friends from British Columbia are well aware, we have been trying to grab the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to shake them and tell them that we have the lowest bid. We have said: "Western Canada needs the business. Our western shipyards need the business. We need the help in terms of our high levels of unemployment. This is what the federal Government can do". Yet we have now waited month after month after month, and received no answer. We are still waiting to hear whether that contract will be let. If the Government cared about the plight of the far-western Canadians it would say: "Let's get on and award right now that ice-breaker contract so that we can put hundreds and hundreds of people in our shipyards in western Canada to work". But no, we do not hear anything.

To be somewhat more upbeat for the moment I would like to say that I am encouraged by what the Deputy Prime Minister said about the willingness to entertain the Government's support of the notion of using western low-sulphur coal in both the industries of central Canada that use coal as well as the largest coal-user, that is, Ontario Hydro. I am very encouraged by the support that the Deputy Prime Minister gives to that idea. I only hope that we will see some action. After years and years of Liberal Government, we did not see even any interest in the topic. At least we now have a commitment that the Government is interested. We will be looking to see that it take steps because, here again, it would be an ideal opportunity to demonstrate conclusively to Canadians, particularly western Canadians, that indeed the Government is prepared to act. Again, we wait with bated breath for such an initiative.

Now let us consider the situation in the oil and gas industry. It is perfectly clear that things have deteriorated recently. One can say that it has done so as a result of a complex set of factors, not the least of which is the collapse of the oil-producing cartel and the disastrous situation that we now see in Alberta. As of today, 127,000 people are unemployed in Alberta. This number will grow by 50,000 by the end of the year. That is a statistic released by the Alberta Government on December 5. Alberta has 147,000 people on welfare, which number is increasing by 600 families per month. The Edmonton food bank was used 180,000 times this year, up by 15 per cent over the same period last year. When we look at the disastrous situation in that province, particularly as it impacts on the oil and gas sector, we wonder why the Government is not playing a more pro-active role. We have called time and time again for a return to a made-in-Canada oil pricing situation. Yet the decision was to deregulate the industry, which left it virtually at the mercy of the free market forces. That is where we are now. We now have provincial Governments, large oil companies, small oil companies and exploration companies crying out saying: "Let us do away with this notion of the free market. We want help, intervention and support".

We as New Democrats have been consistent. We have said that we support the establishment of a floor price to be paid to producers for their first 500 barrels of production, a policy which would primarily benefit, not the large multinational integrated oil companies, but the independent Canadian-owned sector and result in only very modest price increases. This particular pro-active move would give a strong support base and send a very clear signal that the Government of Canada is interested in supporting the small producer and the small exploration companies in this critical sector.

We have seen an interesting government initiative in the Province of Manitoba. I refer to the CF-18 maintenance contract not being delivered to that province, with a small token going to the Edmonton area. I emphasize that it is but a token. We do not want to get too caught up in enthusiasm simply because we in western Canada were tossed out a bone.

Last week we heard about the close-down of a packing plant in Winnipeg with a resulting loss of 475 jobs. This company was given a federal government grant recently to assist in the opening of a hog-slaughtering plant which will employ 110 workers in total. So we see a net loss then in that industry of 365 jobs. On the one hand the Government is creating competition here and on the other it is closing down plants there. We saw the same thing in western Canada with the federal Government providing all types of assistance and tens of millions of dollars to develop the northeast coal fields in British Columbia. It did so only to find out later that the mine had been developed in the wrong place. Nevertheless, after a great deal of infrastructure was put in place and tens of millions of dollars were allocated, what the Government did was to put the northest coal fields of British Columbia in direct competition with the southeast coal fields of British Columbia and the southwestern coal fields of Alberta. I believe the Government now has virtually a moral obligation because of its actions in terms of northeastern British Columbia to do whatever it can to help the industry in southeastern British Columbia and southwestern Alberta get back on its feet. The movement of coal to central Canada on an expanded basis would be one way to show its good intentions in that respect.

I wish to close my comments by saying that when we look at the economy in western Canada today we see a very serious economic tragedy occurring in the Province of Alberta. Just the other day the Alberta Government announced its solution to the whole problem. Its solution as announced on November 17 is to bring about drastic cuts in provincial government expenditures. It is asking various Departments to cut back by 25 per cent in terms of expenditures. Again, that is the typical Conservative response to difficult times. I have never seen a business or a farmer yet who was able to expand into new productive areas by cutting back on investment. What the Government must do in western Canada is to start investing in western Canada. It must consider the introduction of agri-bonds and parity pricing to help the hard-pressed agricultural sector. It must provide more assistance to the forest sector in terms of silviculture and reforestation projects. It must provide more support to the municipalities to allow the large and small ones in western Canada to get on with the development of urban infrastructures by putting large numbers of Canadians back to work. It must get on in terms of the Polar 8 ice-breaker contract. It must consider ways and means of putting money into the hands of small businesses, primarily through improvements in federal government procurement programs.

When we look at federal government procurement programs we see that in terms of goods and services the federal Government's needs are filled almost exclusively by central Canada. While there have been marginal improvements in the last two years, a great deal more is needed. Premier Vander Zalm of British Columbia has been crying out, as have British Columbians for many, many years, that now is the time for the federal Government to show its support by sourcing more goods and supplies from western Canadian producers and suppliers.

There are many things the federal Government can do. There are many programs that could be implemented and steps that could be taken. Considering the very difficult times that are being experienced by the four western provinces and the northern Territories, the Government ought to turn its full attention to that part of Canada. It simply ought to treat western Canada with the same kind of commitment and enthusiasm with which it has treated other regions. All we ask is for fair treatment, nothing more but certainly nothing less.

Premier Getty of Alberta, Premier Vander Zalm of British Columbia, the whole list of Socred candidates who were running for leadership and Premier Pawley of Manitoba all have the same theme. It is time the Government listened to them. They are saying that they feel betrayed and let down. They are saying that the federal Government has turned its back on them.

Mr. Gérin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Hon. Member's speaking time expired a while ago, and he is now trying to take up extra time so we won't have a chance to comment and correct a number of erroneous statements he made since he started his speech.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly want to provide the House with ample time. I noticed that I began my speech just after 21 minutes to six. It seems now that in a matter of seconds, my 20 minutes will be up. Perhaps I will take my seat and provide the Hon. Member an opportunity to ask me a question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, since it is well known that the NDP Party was a willing accomplice in the rape of the West by the Liberal Party—

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have made reference on previous occasions to the offensive use of references to the NDP Party. We are not having a party here, we are engaged in the business of Parliament. If the Hon. Member wants to refer to my caucus, I suggest that he be directed to refer to the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Order. It being 6:03 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(10).

[English]

Accordingly, the question is on the motion of Mr. Axworthy, seconded by Mr. Rossi:

That this House notes with deep concern the drastic decline in the oil and gas sector of western Canada, leading to over 25,000 unemployed workers and over 100,000 social welfare cases in Alberta alone; and the serious reduction in farm income and the lack of federal support for manufacturing industries in the western provinces; and Therefore calls upon the Government to institute an immediate meeting of western provincial governments, farmers, industries and labour to formulate an economic action plan designed to revive western resource, agricultural and manufacturing industries and to put western Canadians back to work.

• (1810)

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Axworthy) which was negatived on the following division:

PETITIONS

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions today. These petitions are signed by people all across the country. Most of them are signed by residents of my riding and from the Ottawa East area. Whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, and whereas the tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries with respect to the free trade negotiations. I have about eight of those petitions this morning, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I bring to your attention petitions to yourself and to the Honourable House of Commons. These petitions are signed by hundreds of Canadian citizens who wish to humbly show that the Government has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which is discriminatory and which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. The tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry in the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture. Rising book prices have placed a strain on book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. In fact, the 10 per cent increase has decreased sales by 25 per cent. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this negative and ill-conceived tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on our cultural industries with respect to free trade negotiations.

There is a very serious feeling that reading must be terribly taxing on the part of our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The petitioners humbly ask Parliament to push that Minister to start reading a little more constructively. These petitions come from Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, Quebec and the maritime provinces, including Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. There is not one part of Canada which is not reflected in the hundreds of names on this large number of petitions which I will be depositing with the Chair today. We have now deposited hundreds and hundreds of petitions which include thousands of names. I hope, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance will pay some attention to them.

PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAGE RATES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by 32 members of the Oxford Philatelic Society who humbly pray and call upon Parliament not to allow the proposed increase in postage rates to be implemented. In so doing they draw to our attention the fact that since 1979, when the first class letter rate was 17 cents, there have been multiple increases accompanied by promises of improved service and in their opinion that service has not improved.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition to the House to the effect that the Government's Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will cause an increase in drug prices for Canadian consumers and will very severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. In particular, the petitioners point out that it will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. The petitioners who come from many parts of Ontario such as Campbellford, Trenton, Brighton, and Warkworth call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the honour to present a petition, which has been certified correct as to form and content. It is a petition in which many Canadians join with constituents of mine whose petitions I have already presented from Transcona, East Elmwood, East Kildonan, North Kildonan, East St. Paul and the Town of Birds Hill in protesting the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the honour to present a petition, which has been certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. In the petition the petitioners indicate that they are opposed to the Government's attempt to change the Patent Act. They believe that the changes to the Patent Act will result in prescription drugs increasing in price, which will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary drugs. They humbly call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will, of course, increase the cost of drugs to many Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106, which has been certified as being correct. It comes from a group of citizens in Winnipeg who say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

POINTS OF ORDER

PETITIONS—ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION BY MEMBERS—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: This is my ruling as a consequence of an intervention by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on November 6, 1986, who rose on a point of order to object to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) on presenting a petition. The Hon. Member for Victoria alleged that the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville had gone far beyond the content of the petition, thereby misleading the House and misrepresenting the petitioners. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) made the same allegations about the petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), as well as the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

The Chair heard arguments from several Members on both sides of the House, including the Hon. Members for Windsor—Walkerville and Winnipeg North Centre, who counter-argued that their remarks were merely an attempt to paraphrase the contents of the petitions.

First, let me remind the House that since February 24, 1986, the rules regarding the presentation of petitions have changed considerably. The major change is that Members are now required to obtain certification from the Clerk of Petitions that their petitions meet the requirements of our Standing Orders and of our practices.

On presenting their petitions Members are permitted to give a brief summary of the content of the petition and, when Members have not been brief, my predecessors and myself have not hesitated to call Members to order and insist that they shorten their remarks. Members have been consistently reminded to keep their remarks short and pertinent. I refer Hon. Members to such interventions by Speaker Francis on January 24, 1984, as reported at page 702 of Hansard, and by Speaker Bosley on November 5, 1985, as reported at page 8376 of Hansard. I will spare the House all such references for they are too numerous to list here. There has been some indication that there has been, and perhaps continues to be, a problem.

May I also remind the House that, as reported in Hansard at page 1131 on November 6, the Chair intervened while the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville was presenting his petition, particularly when he used the words "American blackmail". In my opinion he was going beyond the thrust of the petition and entering into a debate about a matter for which he obviously had strong feelings.

The issue of whether some Members have "unwittingly misled the House and misrepresented petitioners" is a more difficult one. The Hon. Member for Victoria has not charged that any Member has intentionally misled the House. His complaint is that the language used exceeds the language of the petitioners. As I have pointed out, the Chair interrupted the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville on exactly this point.

• (1120)

I can assure the House that I will continue to be diligent and will remind Hon. Members that they are to describe only the substance of the petitions when presenting them to this House. I would like to thank especially the Hon. Member for Victoria for bringing this matter to the attention of the Chair and the Chamber.

PETITIONS—APPROPRIATENESS OF QUESTIONS—MATTERS BEFORE COMMITTEE—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On November 6, 1986, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) rose on a point of order relating to the appropriateness of questions asked during Question Period relating to Order in Council appointments which are currently before standing committees pursuant to Standing Order 103. The specific point the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister made was that such questions might be out of order when the matter is before, or has the opportunity of being before, a committee.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) expressed some concerns about the contention that Beauchesne's Citation 357 might be made to apply in this case and more particularly about the view that if such matters have the opportunity to be before a committee, they ought not to be raised in the House during Question Period.

[Translation]

Although the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) acknowledged the possibility of duplication, he pointed out that certain questions regarding the behaviour and conduct of delegates were in the public domain and could thus appropriately be raised during Question Period.

[English]

In the report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of June, 1985 at page 34 is the following somewhat prophetic and relevant sentence:

> In making recommendations regarding scrutiny and confirmation of certain appointments we are heading into uncharted waters.

The Chair fully agrees with that statement and believes it would be useful at the outset of this ruling to review the content of Standing Orders 103 and 104.

[Translation]

Standing Order 103 provides that a Minister of the Crown shall lay upon the Table a copy of appointments made by Order in Council not later than five sitting days after the Order in Council is published in the Canada Gazette. At the time of tabling, they are referred to a specified committee for a period not exceeding thirty sitting days.

[English]

Standing Order 104 provides that a specified committee shall, if it deems it appropriate, call appointees or nominees for a period not exceeding 10 sitting days. That same Standing Order clearly states that the committee shall examine the qualifications and the competence of the appointees. It is the opinion of the Chair that the committee's powers of examination are narrowly limited to the qualifications and competence to perform the duties of the post, and questions in committee and reports thereon ought to be strictly relevant to such qualifications, competence and performance of duties.

[Translation]

The Chair should add that it is not imperative for a committee to review Order in Council appointments that have been referred to it, since Standing Order 104 specifies it is up to the committee to decide which Order in Council appointments will be reviewed, if any.

[English]

In attempting to address the issue of questions relating to Order in Council appointees or nominees being allowed in Question Period, I believe it is useful to make an analogy with the specific mandates of two other committees. Standing Order 96(3)(f) provides for the referral of all reports of the Auditor General to be deemed permanently referred to the Public Accounts Committee immediately they are laid upon the Table. Standing Order 96(4)(a) provides that the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages shall be deemed permanently referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages immediately it is laid upon the Table.

Is it, therefore, a breach of our rules for Members of the House to ask questions in Question Period relating either to the Auditor General's or the Commissioner of Official Languages' reports simply because they have been referred to their respective committees upon tabling and certainly have the opportunity to be considered by these committees? While there are no specific rulings on this point, a review of our records did not produce any objections by Hon. Members to questions during Question Period on reports of the Auditor General or the Commissioner of Official Languages. Indeed, Hansard abounds with many questions posed to the front benches on the above-mentioned reports after they were referred to the committees concerned.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) remarked quite correctly that the authority of the new standing committees in the House is now so broad that practically all questions raised during Question Period would be out of order if it depended on whether or not they were being reviewed by a standing committee.

[English]

In his statement to the House on April 14, 1975, relating to Question Period, Speaker Jerome stated:

> Much has been said in the precedents about restrictions and disqualifications or interferences with the right of Members to put questions. This is not the approach I prefer to take in attempting to establish a rational approach and understanding concerning how the question period should operate. I much prefer to take the positive approach of attempting to arrive at a statement of principle within which questions can be put and to reduce to an absolute minimum the negative disqualifications that may limit or restrict a Member's right so to do.

Guided by that principle, the Chair has chosen to rule that in general, questions to the Ministry relating to Order in Council appointments are in order, particularly if they are within the administrative competence of the Government. Conversely, I must tell the House, as I did on November 6, that out of concern for good manners, out of fairness and without impinging on the duty of all Hon. Members to be diligent on matters of public interest, I will not hesitate to rule questions out of order if I feel that the bounds have been exceeded.

The Chair wishes to thank the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister for having raised the matter, and is also grateful for the contributions of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I must add that the Chair feels reassured that in this new process of review of Order in Council appointments, jurisprudence that will reinforce Standing Orders 103 and 104 will eventually emerge.

I think the Chair can also add on the basis of fairness that the citizens who appear before these committees have probably never gone through a procedure such as this before. It behooves all Hon. Members to recognize that these citizens are serving our country and that questions concerning them that are appropriate before the committee ought to be put in an manner of good will and care for the sensibilities of ordinary citizens who, as I say, would probably never in their lives, if they are lucky, have to appear before a group of people who are asking them a lot of questions that they had never, in some circumstances, anticipated.

I know that Hon. Members who have had some experience with the law, whether as litigants or as members of the bar, will know that one of the most awesome things a citizen is called upon to do is to be a witness in a proceeding. I would ask all Hon. Members to take special care, when citizens have responded to the request of the Government of Canada to serve, that they are treated with appropriate courtesy and fairness at all times when appearing before committees.

Again, I wish to thank the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister for bringing this matter to the attention of the Chair and I hope the remarks of the Chair will assist all Hon. Members and the committees in providing fair and proper treatment for the citizens who come before them.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just for clarification, can I take it from your ruling that notwithstanding the fact that a person may be before the respective committee under the provisions of Standing Orders 103 and 104, during the course of his examination, you would allow questions in the House of Commons while he is currently before a committee under the framework of the ruling that you just brought down?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has raised a question which indicates that there may be some ambiguity in the ruling I have given. In order to be absolutely sure that there is no ambiguity, I would ask the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister if he would consider allowing me to take the question he has raised under advisement.

While I think I made it clear that, certainly in general terms, Hon. Members ought not to be forbidden from raising a question in this Chamber, I also said that I would take each one of those questions and consider them carefully at that time in the context of what is happening. I would ask the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister if he would let me carefully consider the point he has raised because I do not want to leave Hon. Members in doubt. I might advise Hon. Members that there was a further ruling that I was hoping to give today. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who raised the matter is unable to be here at this moment. I will return to the Chamber when it is appropriate to do so, and when the Hon. Member can hear the ruling.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Mr. Speaker: I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) that due to a prior commitment she is unable to be present in the House on Friday, December 12, 1986, to move her motion during the hour for Private Members' Business.

Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended, and pursuant to Standing Order 39(2), the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for rising on a point of order following your announcement.

May I say as the Whip of my Party—and I know if the Whip for the government side could speak he would do so—that we are very much preoccupied by the rights of private Members to introduce and present to the House motions and Bills which they feel are important. The present procedure prevents private Members having the one, two, three, or four hours a week in which they are allowed to discuss these items. Therefore, I would like to recommend and ask the Government that it pay attention to yesterday's Order Paper, where I moved a motion which addressed that problem. It would allow private Members who are outside that preferred group of 20 who were chosen by draw, those of us who did not make it, at the request of the Table to be present to present our Bills or motions for discussion in this House. That would meet the requirements of the rights of private Members to be heard in the House at the hour allowed for them to do so, and also meet with the requirements of Members who, for reason of circumstances beyond their control, cannot be here. I would recommend that the motion be looked at tentatively by the Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair was anticipating the intervention of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I wish to remind him and other Hon. Members that the Chair is presently preparing a ruling which touches on the concern of the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members. Until I am prepared to give judgment, I am following the usual procedure. I want to assure the Member for Ottawa—Vanier that I am conscious of his concerns.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, not to prolong this issue, but perhaps I could indicate to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier that there are ongoing discussions with House Leaders on this matter. This issue has been raised. A solution has not been arrived at, but I assure the Hon. Member that it is being considered.

The Alliance Nationale Consolidated Act, 1945

DISPOSITION OF BILL S-3

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. There was unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of Bill S-3, a Bill sent from the other place, and to go through all stages of this Bill at this sitting of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on the same point of order. In the Order Paper, Bill S-3 can be found under Private Bills. The title of the item on page 15 is Private Members' Business. It is a coincidence, but it is worth using this chance to illustrate a possible error in our rules which at this time do not allow the House to deal with Private Bills that come from the Senate to this place, Bills that have been studied and approved by the Senate and which are put to us for study.

I wish to ask again that the Government look at the possibility of incorporating in our rules and in our Standing Orders appropriate provisions for such Bills.

I make the point strongly, because we all know that within the next six months or so there will be reports from the Electoral Boundaries Commissions in regard to electoral boundaries and names of ridings. Unless I am wrong, I am sure that there will be Members in this House who will not be satisfied with the change of name of their riding and they will want to present a Private Members' Bill. This House has always accommodated a Member who wished to change or modify the name of his riding. Under the present rules, this would be very difficult, because the Bill would not be within those 20 measures that were chosen for discussion by the House. I would like the House Leader of the Government to give some attention to the appropriate provisions for that purpose, and for Private Bills coming from the Senate.

Of course, we give our consent to move on Bill S-3 today.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Hon. Member makes a very good and valid point. I will certainly take that under consideration. Hopefully, that can be resolved with the co-operation of the other House Leaders.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. When the Government is considering what might be done to provide a procedural opportunity for the consideration of Private Members' Bills from the Senate, which we are now going to consider by unanimous consent, I hope that it is considered as a separate item and not in a way that would involve Private Members' Bills from the Senate impinging upon the time and the process now allocated for Private Members' Business from Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Mazankowski: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that in this case that is precisely why we have transferred it to Government Orders.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLIANCE NATIONALE CONSOLIDATED ACT, 1945

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly) moved that Bill S-3, an Act to amend and repeal the Alliance Nationale Consolidated Act, 1945, be now read a second time and, with unanimous consent, be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today, as a former insurance agent for Industrial, one of the two companies involved, to introduce and take part in the debate on Bill S-3, so that Alliance Mutual Life Insurance Company will be able to merge with Industrial Life Insurance Company.

The changes forecast for the life insurance sector in the years to come indicate that companies will have to continue to invest very substantial amounts in expanding operations to remain competitive and maintain operating costs at acceptable levels. Deregulation and the opening up of financial institutions will merely accelerate this process of change in the insurance industry.

That is why the directors of Alliance Mutual Life Insurance Company and Industrial Life Insurance Company, at special meetings of their respective boards of directors on June 30 of this year, voted unanimously in favour of merging Alliance with Industrial.

To complete this stage, it is necessary to pass special legislation to authorize the change of jurisdiction, as approved by the members at a special meeting, because the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act does not cover this kind of situation.

As for the merger itself, Alliance and Industrial Life members endorsed the principle during special general meetings held last September 30, provided of course the Alliance charter could be transferred so that the merger could indeed take place, in accordance with Quebec insurance legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the insurance company resulting from the merger will be called the Industrial-Alliance Life Insurance Company.

The Bill submitted for approval stems from the unanimous agreement of both boards of directors to merge. It is also the duly expressed will of the members of Alliance and Industrial Life.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to thank all Members of this House, and especially opposition Members, for their unanimous support for this Bill.

• (1140)

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-3 is a Bill to facilitate the amalgamation of two long established insurance companies—the Alliance Mutual Life Insurance Company and the Industrial Life Insurance Company. Approval for the merger has been given by the boards of directors of both companies and by their shareholders.

The reason this somewhat cumbersome procedure of a Bill is necessary is that in the federal legislation there is no provision for a federal company to be exported to the provincial jurisdiction. One of these companies is federally incorporated. At the present time a provincial company can be reincorporated federally but, as I said, there is no provision for a federal company to be exported to a provincial jurisdiction, hence the need for this special legislation. Indeed this is an anomaly which might be addressed if and when the Government produces new legislation on financial institutions.

In this case all the parties concerned seem to have consulted. As I said, both boards of directors and the shareholders of both companies have agreed. There has been extensive consultation with the federal Department of Insurance as well as with the provincial insurance Departments. The entire process has been monitored and co-ordinated by the regulatory authorities.

With the passage of the Bill before us, the charter of Alliance will be modified so that it can be governed by the Quebec Insurance Act instead of by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. Then the amalgamation of both companies can be done in accordance with the provisions of the Quebec Insurance Act, by which the amalgamated company will be governed.

In view of the fact that there has been agreement by all parties concerned and that the regulatory authorities, both federal and provincial, have been fully informed and agree, my Party is also pleased to give its agreement to the passage of the Bill, with the rider that we hope in future some less cumbersome method will be found to deal with matters of this kind.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I should like to recognize that this is a rather unique moment in that we are examining a Bill and we find that literally all the players involved are in mutual agreement—the federal and provincial Governments, the various companies involved, the shareholders, and the boards of directors. Literally everyone, including the two Houses of Parliament, are coming together and saying, "Let us all co-operate". It is an appropriate gesture at this time of the year.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I should like to say that we will facilitate the movement of the Bill through all stages as quickly as possible.

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. David Crombie (for the Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act, as reported (with amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Crombie (for the Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Today, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to move third reading of Bill C-4 to amend the Railway Act. Before commenting briefly I should like to recall that we are moving the third reading motion at the earliest opportunity because time is of the essence, a fact which my Opposition colleagues can fully appreciate. We did work at one in committee, and I hope they will not be inconvenienced by the fact that the House is now proceeding swiftly to third reading. I am sure they recall the hope we expressed to have this legislation in place by March 1987 so as to be in a position to draft the regulations required to implement this legislative measure.

[English]

The purpose of the Bill is to recover the costs incurred by the CRTC in carrying out its responsibility for the regulation of the telecommunications carrier industry. Under the proposed Act, these regulatory and administrative costs will be recovered directly from the regulated industry and will no longer constitute a burden on the ordinary taxpayer.

The proposed Bill reflects the fundamental commitment of the Government to reduce the federal deficit and to manage public expenditures in a sound, responsible fashion. We believe that this will create a climate which is favourable to economic growth and lead to greater investment and job creation in Canada.

[Translation]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, job creation is indeed one of the top priorities of this Government.

[English]

Let me now cite some of the more specific conditions and objectives which the proposed Bill is intended to serve in the telecommunications industry.

The industry has been regulated throughout most of its history. The predominance of regulation reflects the presence of natural monopolies in the telephone business which result from the considerable economies of scale that prevail in the construction and operation of telecommunications networks. Regulation also reflects the essential nature of telephone service and its perceived importance to the social and economic wellbeing of all Canadians.

• (1150)

The proposed legislation before us today is intended to amend the Railway Act to permit the CRTC to set and to collect fees from the carriers it regulates. Following the passage of this legislation, the CRTC in consultation with Treasury Board will be authorized to devise a fee structure for recovering the administrative costs associated with regulating the telecommunications companies under federal jurisdiction.

The CRTC currently regulates six telecommunications carriers pursuant to the Railway Act and to various so-called "special Acts" pertaining to these companies. The companies are Bell Canada, the British Columbia Telephone Company, CNCP Telecommunications, Telesat Canada, Northwest Tel and Terra Nova Tel. Together they account for more than 70 per cent of Canadian telecommunications assets, revenues and subscribers. The $6 million to be recovered in 1986-87 represent less than 0.1 per cent of the annual operating revenues of the six carriers.

Since the Bill was tabled for first reading in October, Hon. Members have had the opportunity to review the draft legislation and to comment on its various provisions. Several of the firms affected by the proposed law have also made representations before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Some Members, and several of the carriers, suggested that the Bill contain a specific reference to the objective of cost recovery.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is why the Government moved an amendment which was unanimously endorsed by the committee.

[English]

An amendment to this effect appears in the Bill now before you for third reading, Mr. Speaker. We believe that this should alleviate any remaining concerns about the magnitude of the fees to be paid by the industry.

As we have informed the House previously, the amounts recovered from the carriers in 1986-87 and in subsequent years will correspond to the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry. At this time I would also like to reiterate our support for full consultation with the carriers prior to the assessment and implementation of the fees. For this purpose, and specifically to ensure a fair and equitable distribution of fees within the industry, we expect that the CRTC will conduct a public inquiry to develop a formula for determining the fees to be paid by individual carriers. Following its normal practices, the CRTC will no doubt wish to solicit the views of the public and the industry on the best manner of distributing and collecting these fees. I am certain that Hon. Members and the federally regulated telecommunications carriers can confidently rely on this process to produce results which are fair to the industry and its subscribers.

The cost recovery measures, as set out in the proposed Bill, are similar to arrangements which are already in place in several provinces. From all reports, these measures are regarded as an effective and fair means of shifting the financial burden of regulation from taxpayers in general to those companies responsible for incurring the expenses.

[Translation]

That, Mr. Speaker, is the main purpose of this Bill, besides the fact that we want to reduce the deficit to boost the economy and create jobs. We want to make sure that, contrary to the present situation, expenditures incurred by the CRTC to manage and regulate the industry will be charged directly to the industries involved, not to the taxpayers.

[English]

Up to now, the CRTC has not had the authority to collect fees for the regulation of telecommunications carriers subject to federal jurisdiction. Nevertheless, at present, the CRTC does collect over $30 million annually in licence fees from Canadian broadcasters and cable operators under its jurisdiction.

One result of Bill C-4 will be to place federally regulated telecommunications carriers on the same footing as the broadcasting industry. Thus the cost of regulation, under the proposed Bill, will be distributed more evenly between the telecommunications and broadcasting sectors.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this Bill will help the Government reduce the deficit.

[English]

The approval of this Bill will permit the CRTC to recover those costs associated with the regulation of the telecommunications carriers subject to federal jurisdiction. It will also place the regulated telecommunications industry on a more equitable basis with the broadcasting industry which already contributes to the recovery of the costs of its regulation through licensing fees.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I wish to present C-4 to the House for third reading.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act on third reading. This Bill had its second reading, as the Parliamentary Secretary just pointed out, on October 20, and I think it has seen quick and swift passage through the House. For the most part it has been a most pleasant experience in the legislative committee. In fact, it is one of the few legislative committees which was easy to work with and pleasant to participate in.

I would like to take a few minutes to examine the rationale for this Bill. First, what was the purpose of introducing this Bill? It appeared to be a cost recovery mechanism which seemed a logical and good business practice. However, the news release issued by the former Minister of Communications on June 26, 1986 when the first Bill was introduced in this House states that the amendment to the Railway Act would:

—allow recovery of costs associated with the Government of Canada's regulation of the telecommunications carrier industry.

The news release went on to demonstrate how the telecommunications regulatory authority, namely the CRTC, will recoup with the aid of this Bill sufficient revenue to cover the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry.

The memorandum was quite clear but what the Minister at that time forgot to do was to put the mechanism into the Bill. The words were fine but the methodology was lacking in its concept and process. The new Bill tabled in October continued the same errors and unfortunately did not cover any of the capping wishes expressed by the past Minister of Communications and the present Minister. At that time I pointed out to the Government that Mr. Andre Bureau, chairman of the CRTC, who would be charged with this responsibility, had already said that the CRTC operated at a large surplus. In fact, it was a very good provider to the general revenues of our country and in a sense was enabling a decrease in the deficit by its efficient operation. CRTC in that sense was a role model, shall we say, in administrative practices because it had proved to be so highly profitable. It was lean and trim in its operation and was certainly not a drain on the federal Treasury as it returned excess profits. It was not short of money to do the administrative tasks which this Bill was drafted to carry out.

However, as cost recovery was the principal goal, it did not seem to be an inopportune method to proceed as long as the capping was put into place.

The Parliamentary Secretary pointed out that in her summation the Minister made it quite clear there would be a very effective and fair mechanism put in place to determine how this $6 million cost would be divided among those covered. In doing so she pointed out there would be consultations with the industry and public hearings so that it would be a fair and just répartition de la procédure. However, I point out that to go through this course of action, which is democratic, fair and the way it should be done, will take time. That was of concern to me because of the retroactivity clause in the Bill. I would like to draw that retroactivity clause to your attention. Clause 321.1(4) says:

The first regulation made under this section after this section comes into force shall, if it so provides, have retroactive effect and be applicable to a company carrying on business during any period specified therein after March 31, 1986 and may be enforced accordingly in respect of that period.

There is no possible way that the procedure will be in place before we are well into 1987. That clause enables the CRTC to assess new fees to the telecommunications companies on a retroactive basis. As I said, I expressed my concerns to the committee about changing the rules in the middle of the game. The Government has not demonstrated why that clause is necessary. The only reason is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said so and he wants to see it done. However, if he wants his ego massaged, I strongly suggest that this is not the way to do it. It is not just or fair. Why should the Bill allow retroactive fees to be charged by the CRTC when the CRTC is already operating on a profitable basis? Why this sudden need to assess fees retroactively? If the Government was of the view that the telecommunications industry has not been paying its fair share to the CRTC, why did it not ensure that this Bill was passed last year? Had that been done there would be no need for this Bill and its retroactivity clause. Clearly the Government does not have its legislative agenda in order.

I would add one further point on the subject of retroactivity. The addition of this clause does not absolutely require that fees be assessed against the industry on a retroactive basis. Rather, it provides that the fee will only be retroactive if, and I underline the word "if", the regulations eventually established by the CRTC so provide. In other words, the Government has left it to the CRTC to decide whether or not the fees should be assessed retroactively. Its decision, according to this Bill, is then subject to approval of Treasury Board. Why does the Government not simply say it wants to meet the commitments outlined by the Minister of Finance over a year ago, it is sorry it did not get the Bill passed, and it wants the industry to pay retroactively? Why try to dump this responsibility on the CRTC? Why not come out and say clearly that it wants to reduce the deficit by another $6 million, it is an important amount, and this is how it plans to do it? Instead of putting the onus on the CRTC, let it face the public and say where it is at, instead of trying to hide behind someone else's skirts.

Finally, in making the decision subject to approval of Treasury Board, the Government is not playing fair. The Government has failed to make clear why it felt it was necessary to leave the question of retroactivity up to the CRTC. What guidelines does the Government expect the CRTC to employ in making its decisions on this point? Will Treasury Board be setting the guidelines pursuant to the power granted to it under this clause? Or will the consultation process result in the determination? It seems highly unfair to allow fees to be assessed right back to March of 1986 when it may be well into 1987 before the CRTC completes its hearings on the content of the regulations and actually passes them. Furthermore, it is odd that the CRTC can go through the democratic exercise of holding public hearings but Treasury Board has the right to veto its decisions as a result. Why not just tell Treasury Board to write the rules and regulations and proceed full steam ahead? What is the point of this procedure?

A number of witnesses appeared before the committee to propose that this clause be deleted in its entirety. This whole exercise is a farce. Bell Canada, CNCP, Northwest Telephone and Terra Nova Telecommunications and B.C. Tel said we should delete it. Telesat Canada said it did not make sense. What is this democratic procedure outlined by the Minister going to accomplish except to hear once again that the industry does not want this clause? I think they are prepared to accept the Bill and its reasoning as well as the mechanism for cost recovery, not to mention the capping which should be there, but they have said once, as I have said twice, no to retroactivity. Yet we will go through this futile exercise, which will cost the Government more money, and then recover $6 million. It does not make sense.

Bell Canada observed that since it has already had its rates approved by the CRTC for the past year it is unable to make further application to cover the new fees imposed by Bill C-4. CNCP stated in its brief that the retroactivity clause violates basic notions of regulatory fairness. B.C. Tel calls the retroactivity clause unconscionable. They said that under the system of rate of return regulation which applies to B.C. Tel the company's revenue requirement was presented to and approved by the CRTC as part of the company's 1984 general rate application. Our committee was advised that the fees imposed under Bill C-4 were not included in that revenue requirement. Consequently, B.C. Tel said that the burden of such retroactive fees would be borne by the shareholders. The same holds true for Bell Canada. The burden will be borne by the shareholder.

There is a lot of difference between rhetoric and action. We heard in committee one of my colleagues say that he was aware that certain of the companies concerned had already made provision for this fee. When asked directly which companies had told him, in what forum and what were the provisions, he was not in a position to respond. Companies came before us and said no. There seems to be a dilemma here. On the one hand the answer is that retroactivity is unfair and a cost to shareholders. The Government does not want it passed on to the consumer. We are going through a costly democratic procedure to make an undemocratic decision and allow the Treasury Board veto responsibility. It is time to get our act together and recognize the difference between rhetoric and action.

I would like to refer to that famous press release from the previous Minister of Communications dated June 26, 1986. The same version of this Bill was originally introduced in June, 1986. The press release said in summary: "The amount collected from carriers regulated by the Government of Canada will (under this Bill) correspond directly to the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry."

When I spoke to Bill C-4 at second reading, I pointed out to the Government that there was nothing in it which in any way stated that the amount of money collected from carriers would correspond directly to the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry. In other words, no cap provisions were provided to meet the enunciated goal of cost recovery.

Rather, Bill C-4, as it stood at first and second reading, provided the CRTC with the power to make regulations imposing the fees to be charged to the telecommunication carriers. Nowhere in the Bill was the cap which we wanted which would correspond to the costs incurred in regulating the telecommunications industry. We had more than sufficient funds to cover this cost. As Mr. Bureau said at that time:

[Translation]

I must point out that the CRTC is a revenue-producing agency of the federal Government and that forecast revenues for this fiscal year will be $54 million, more than twice our authorized appropriations.

[English]

So the Minister established another way to add cost recovery to the deficit, and that is not so terrible.

I am pleased that a limit of what can be imposed by the CRTC has been provided for. I am pleased to lend my support to the government amendment because it meets the concerns I originally expressed. I was concerned about this matter for a number of reasons. First, if there was no limit placed on what the CRTC could do, the commission would be in a legal position to impose greater and greater fees depending upon how much money the Government wished to collect for its coffers. I did not think that would have been fair to the telecommunications carriers. They would have been at the mercy of the CRTC from year to year.

Second, if the CRTC sought to impose such heavy fees on carriers such as Bell Canada or BC Tel, it is expected that they would attempt to pass those charges on to telephone subscribers by way of higher rates. I have attempted to protect telephone subscribers from such rate increases by urging the Government to limit the fees to be charged by the CRTC. I am pleased that the Government has acted upon that suggestion and upon the suggestions of the many witnesses who appeared before us at committee.

In conclusion, I do not oppose passage of Bill C-4 in its current form. I do regret that it does not incorporate all of the changes which I would have liked to have seen, in particular the retroactivity clause. The Government has gone some distance in adopting my proposal. I think the cost recovery concept is a good one.

I thank the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Mailly) for her co-operation with this Bill. I would also like to thank the Member for Prince Edward Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for the efficient and courteous manner in which he chaired the meetings of our legislative committee. I also express the deep appreciation of the House and the general population to the witnesses who took the time to appear before our committee and present us with their views on the Bill. It is regrettable only that some of them were not heeded.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act, will be very brief. The principle is one of cost recovery, that the CRTC should be able to collect from telecommunications companies in the same manner as it collects from broadcasters. I think the cost recovery principle is a very appropriate one to apply. It is already used in broadcasting and it is, of course, the principle used by marketing boards.

I was pleased that the Government accepted the amendment to specify in the legislation that the collection of fees would be for cost recovery purposes and, therefore, could not exceed the amount that the CRTC actually spent for the regulation of the telecommunications companies. There was a fear that the CRTC, with Treasury Board approval, might use this as a means of making a profit at the expense of companies. The CRTC already collects more than it actually needs for the specific costs of regulation in broadcasting. This is not a very good principle and it should not be applied to telecommunications.

We are speaking of approximately $6 million per year, not a very large amount of money. In collecting money from corporations, these regulatory fees are not really important. In order to have a decent taxation system, we must look for fair and effective corporate tax system. I worry a little bit about the Government being penny-wise and pound-foolish in pursuing $6 million when billions of dollars escape collection through extremely liberal loopholes which are still available to corporations.

I do not think that the point made by the Liberal spokesperson about the control which the Treasury Board has over the determination of fees is at all well taken. The CRTC is not completely at arm's length from Government. Appeals are permitted to Cabinet on major decisions which it makes. In my opinion that is not a good principle, but it is one which the Liberal Party has supported throughout. It seems to me a little hypocritical to criticize a Conservative Government for permitting this non-arm's length relationship which has been standard in the industry for some time and was introduced by the Liberal Party.

I want to quarrel a little with the presentation of the cost recovery principle and the amount of money which will be collected. The Parliamentary Secretary referred to its purpose in deficit reduction saying that it would be needed for economic growth and job creation. These are all laudable goals, but it is not clear how they will be achieved. The Government is cutting back on job creation. We have also had cut-backs in scientific research, which is absolutely key to having a vital, dynamic economy. There have been cut-backs in secondary education, which affects the people who will be entering the economy. In order to improve economic growth and job creation the Government must consider those who will enter the labour force and their skills and training.

We have no confidence at all that there will be good economic growth and job creation when bad decisions are taken apropos post-secondary education and scientific research. One cannot use as justification the collection of $6 million which will not be spent on economic growth or job creation. The money is also not being used to reduce the deficit which is still increasing. The $6 million which will be collected through this Bill is only equivalent to the cost of three Shamrock Summits. That is not even remotely the cost of the cost over-runs of the Prime Minister's own personal penitentiary at Port Cartier. With all the money which is being wasted by the Government, why should it receive extra money? How will the money be used? I am sorry to say the Government is not putting it into post-secondary education, scientific research or cultural expenditures where there can be a lot of job creation. It seems this very wasteful kind of expenditure is still being permitted.

To conclude, I would say I certainly support the principle of the Bill but I would have greater enthusiasm for it if I thought the money collected would be better spent.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will also be very brief. I want to talk about a specific concern of my constitutents who are served by Northwest Tel, one of the corporations which will be obliged to pay these fees. Northwest Tel is a small Crown corporation which provides telephone service to the western part of the Northwest Terrritories, the Yukon and a small part of northern British Columbia. It is quite true, as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) pointed out, that the fees will eventually be passed on to telephone subscribers. In general, if we take a global view, the estimated amount for fees is not onerous. It is only a fraction of 1 per cent. It can undoubtedly be easily handled. However, in the case of a very small company operating in remote areas, the chance exists that if, for example, a series of public meetings are to be held as part of the regulatory process in a number of remote communities, the costs might very well escalate. I have seen some of the paperwork the small company is obliged to go through in this regulatory procedure. It is nearly as onerous as the paperwork with respect to Bell Canada, CN and CP. Therefore, in proportion, the smaller company has to pay a larger amount of the costs, or the cost of regulating a small company in remote areas is disproportionately larger than in the case of large telephone companies.

This brings us to the question of how these fees are to be levied. This was brought up by the Parliamentary Secretary as well as by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. If the method of asssessing fees is to be that each telephone company has to pay in each year the cost of regulation for that specific company, then there is a good possibility that on one or two occasions as years go by, the telephone subscribers of Northwest Tel might very well be faced with quite onerous increases to their telephone bill to pay for this regulation. If, on the other hand, we take the over-all cost of regulation for all the companies which have been included in this Bill, then divide that in proportion to the over-all revenue of each corporation, then tell each telephone company its proportion of the total revenues is such and such a per cent and it is charged that same percentage in regulatory fees, we will overcome the problem.

That is the point I wanted to make this morning. When we come to a system which is to be made by way of regulation for the imposition of these fees, we should do it in a manner which will be fair to the subscribers of small companies operating in remote areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADAIR LIMITED DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, December 8, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment (Mr. Benjamin) (p. 1866).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when the House last considered this Bill I was speaking as my Party's new privatization critic. I believe I have about eight minutes in which to complete my speech which was on a motion to hoist the Bill for six months. The area of privatization and, to some extent, deregulation, from which it comes, has never really been debated in this Parliament. That is one reason we in the New Democratic Party insist that the Government debate the Bill properly and not just shove it through as quickly as possible without proper consideration.

I draw to the attention of the House the debate found in Hansard on December 1. Various Members of the New Democratic Party spoke in English and in French concerning this particular Bill and the principle of privatization. I would hope there will be some debate around the country because this is a very important area. It will be an interesting debate over the next one, two or three years.

I want to say to the Government that we are not unduly delaying the Bill. However, we put the Government on notice not to expect that privatization will be easy to get through the House of Commons. If the Government tries a wholesale privatization, that is, selling off Crown corporations which we think help build Canada and make it what it is, a civilized, strong and independent country, we will dig in and oppose it. There are lots of Crown corporations like Petro-Canada, CBC and Air Canada which can be used as instruments to bring this country together. There are other Crown corporations in the fisheries area or communciations which can be used as instruments of state to create jobs and independence. Therefore, the Government is put on notice not to expect an easy path. This country is not Thatcher's England, nor is it Reagan's America. We are going to put up a fight.

That does not mean we are going to be completely blinded by ideological blinkers. As we have said in this debate, it is the Government which is blinded by ideological blinkers. The Government wants to privatize at all costs and we say in some cases it wants to give away. In fact, Bill C-25 is an example of almost giving away a company in which the taxpayers have invested some $2 billion. We acknowledge that Bombardier is a good Canadian company. It does not have a lot of experience in aerospace but it is a good Canadian company based in Quebec. At least that is better than what the Government did with de Havilland. It gave the company to Boeing and gave away the chance for a co-ordinated, independent Canadian aerospace industry.

We are not blinded by ideological blinkers, as I indicated, and we are going to see that the Government is not, either. We want to ensure that the Government does not privatize just for the sake of privatization. We will not necessarily oppose the Government privatizing a Crown corporation for good economic, financial and national reasons. There may be instances where that would apply. However, I point out to the Government that in order to change a Crown corporation, it does not necessarily have to give it away or sell it to the private sector. It can, in fact, reform the Crown corporation and make it more accountable, open and managed in a better way. It makes me laugh sometimes when I hear the criticism, as I have heard in this debate, that the New Democratic Party is responsible when Crown corporations are not doing their job. I point out that we have not been the national Government yet—just wait for two years. So we have not been managing these Crown corporations. Where we have managed Crown corporations we must look to the provinces. The Province of Saskatchewan is a good example in this regard. In that province Crown corporations were properly used to help bring that province from have-not to have status. It pulled itself up by its own bootstraps in many ways, and used Crown corporations to do so.

I tell the Government that it should also have a look at the Province of British Columbia. In the Bennett years after the 1983 election the province did go ideological and started to privatize a great many Crown corporations. The province set up something called BRIC, the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation, and sold shares in the corporation. Some shares were sold for $6 and other shares were given away. I think the shares are now worth $1 on the market. It is an example of an abysmal failure of privatization. I hope the Government will avoid that in this case.

One of the concerns we have with Bill C-25 is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) proposed in 1984 that the Conservative policy would be the formation of a super Crown corporation which would be responsible for de Havilland and Canadair. We now see a complete about turn and we want to know why. We want to examine that in committee. We want to look at how much is being paid for the company. Some $120 million will be paid for the company when the Government put $200 million into it. We want to have a look at the books of the company. We want to have some statements by the Minister and some of the company officials with respect to what is going on.

I trust that this Bill will be voted upon today in the House. There is that possibility. I can safely say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we would be prepared to do that today. We will not hold the Bill up. What we would like to see is some consideration given to the formation of a legislative committee early next week. We are prepared to get the ball rolling as soon as possible in order to examine some of the details of this Bill. That is the only proper way to do things in Parliament. If we were not to do that, then we would not be performing our duties.

I draw to the attention of the House the speech I gave on December 1 in which I discussed the principles and some of the arguments for and against privatization. I hope other members of my Party will be speaking on those very points today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question. After the passage of this Bill the Government will have sold to the private sector the two major aerospace companies in the country, de Havilland of Toronto and Canadair of Montreal. Both companies were originally privately owned. In a period of recession, or depression, in the aerospace industry, and after showing years of loss, both of these privately-owned companies decided that they could not continue to operate, that they could not continue to absorb the losses. One cannot criticize them for that since, quite properly, private companies are in business to make a profit. When they cannot make a profit they want to cut their losses and sometimes get out of business. That is what these companies were prepared to do. If I remember correctly, the Government at the time, with the approval of the opposition Parties, made a decision in a modern, industrialized country such as Canada that we could not afford not to be in the aerospace industry. Thus the Government bought these companies. The Government has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in keeping these companies in operation and in providing thousands of jobs. The Government has provided these two companies with financial resources so that they continue to perform research and development which puts them at the forefront of the technological area in this industry.

Having invested hundreds of millions of dollars in keeping these companies going, in the case of de Havilland the Government has already sold the company to Boeing. Incidentally, Boeing, according to records we have obtained, made over $2 billion of profit in the years 1980 to 1985 in the United States and did not pay one penny of tax.

Mr. Lewis: That's the private sector for you.

Mr. Orlikow: I am glad the Parliamentary Secretary is listening to me. That great American corporation in the five years from 1980 to 1985 made $2 billion in profits. Not only did it not pay any money in tax to the Government of the United States but it earned a tax credit in the neighbourhood of something close to $100 million. I would be happy to have the Parliamentary Secretary get to his feet to defend Boeing for that type of action. I hope that the Canadian Government is wiser than the American Government and does not permit Boeing to do that in Canada.

At any rate, we have sold de Havilland to Boeing for very little. We are now proposing to sell Canadair to Bombardier which is, at least, a Canadian company. My question to the Hon. Member is the following. What does the Hon. Member think of the possibility or likelihood that five or ten years down the road the aircraft industry will be in another slump, sales will be down and we will have either Boeing or Bombardier wanting to sell back the companies at a good price to the Government of Canada?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has been around the House much longer than I and who has seen many deals come and go has, of course, hit the nail on the head. We bail out companies in bad times. When things get better we sell the companies back to the private sector. Then when things get bad again, just wait and see, the companies will be back asking for government help.

As the Hon. Member alluded to in his remarks, the Canadian taxpayers under this deal will continue to assume Canadair's long-term debt of $1.2 billion. The annual interest payments will exceed the cash price that Bombardier is paying for the company. It is paying just $120 million for the company. Because of all the money that was pumped into the development of the Challenger jet and other technologies, it is a company whose technological value is about $300 million. In January the purchasing company will receive a $50 million federal grant and another $30 million in federal defence grants thereafter. It just received a $1.7 defence contract. I refer to the CF-18 repair contract. The company made profits of $20 million in 1985. There was a profit of $2.8 million in the first quarter of 1986. The purchasing company will receive all that, which is not bad for a $120 million purchase price, plus the equivalent of $20 million in royalty payments. This is nothing but a distress sale. In the good times we give it away and in the bad times we buy it back. That seems to be the pattern.

While I am on my feet I wish to refer to a matter that was alluded to by the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

I spoke to Canadair employees in Montreal, to Mr. Cherry and the other workers, and we told them we are concerned over this Bill as it relates to the future employment of the work force. For example, there is a clause here, surely I have it in English—

[English]

It is in one of the clauses of the Bill. It is in English and says that Bombardier is committed to maintaining existing levels of employment at Canadair subject to cyclical shifts and sound business practices. Does that mean that if Bombardier determines that business practices are not sound, it can fire half of the workers or have massive lay-offs?

• (1240)

Mr. Orlikow: Or close the plant.

Mr. Waddell: Or close the plant? It goes on to say that Bombardier will pursue new programs and opportunities so that the level of employment in Canadair and its suppliers will increase. We like the last part of the clause but we want to ask questions about the first part of it.

To sum up, we hope that this Bill will pass today in the sense that we can vote on it in principle at second reading stage. I hope we can go into committee early next week to examine some of these clauses and nail them down for the workers and the other people who will hopefully benefit from this Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I know the Hon. Member wants the Bill to pass. The Hon. Member made a big point about the Government assuming the company's debt. Since the company ran up substantial losses when it was owned by the Government of Canada and since the Government of Canada owns the company and therefore owes the money, how can the Government of Canada be said to be assuming the company's debts? Is it not a fact that the taxpayers already owe the debts and losses built up over the past years?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I suppose it depends on how the accounting terms are framed. I am not an accountant. I am prepared to acknowledge that the Government is continuing the debt. The fact is that the debt is there and Bombardier is not buying the debt of the company. Sometimes debts are taken over when companies are bought.

Mr. Parry: Assuming the burden of the debt.

Mr. Waddell: Let me put it that way, it is assuming the burden of the debt.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-25 on the privatization of Canadair, more specifically the amendment moved by a Member of the New Democratic Party, the very same Party which, through the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who spoke a moment ago, claims that it has no intention of blocking the passage of this measure. The NDP is prepared to adopt it quickly. Well now, perhaps I might refer to the motion under consideration, the amendment which reads as follows:

> Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be not now read a second time but . . . six months hence.

If this is not holding up a Bill I wonder what it is, Mr. Speaker. We know that a good many Members of the House are in favour of some of the provisions of the Bill and are prepared to send it to Committee of the Whole this afternoon, but the New Democratic Party is against that. I want to make it quite clear so that all Quebecers will understand that it is the New Democratic Party—it professes to be supportive of Bombardier and employment in Quebec—which instead of taking a positive approach is resorting to dilatory tactics to thwart the adoption of the Bill and thus compromise jobs.

I am talking about jobs being on the line, Mr. Speaker, but there is more to it than that. I happen to know that Canadair management and a foreign country are negotiating a major contract for new products. It is important that the deal be finalized by mid-January so that the new line of products will become a reality. Should the representatives of this foreign Government who will be here in mid-January find themselves negotiating with Canadair while the company's ownership is still up in the air because this Bill has not been passed by then, we will be in a situation where the Government has already signed a letter of intent with Bombardier, which means that the Government wants to sell, except that the deal has yet to be approved by Parliament.

A situation like this where uncertainty reigns may jeopardize the success of this important contract. New products being developed at Canadair will be in jeopardy. Jobs will be in jeopardy. The Hon. Member of Vancouver—Kingsway tells me he was talking to Canadair employees. I was talking to them this morning, twice, and they begged me to do everything I could to expedite the passage of this Bill. From the very beginning I have said, both personally and speaking for the Liberal Party of Canada, that we wanted to see this legislation go through all stages as soon as possible.

If the NDP wants to obstruct the passage of this Bill for ideological reasons, because it objects to privatization, I have no problem with that. It is their right, but what I want to say is: Don't do it at the expense of Canadair employees. There will be more opportunities, since the Government has further plans for privatization. If they want to talk about privatization in general, they could raise the issue in committee, but now is not the right time to get ideological and indulge in theoretical discussions about a very practical piece of legislation, when it is obvious that delaying passage of the Bill will jeopardize jobs at Canadair in Montreal.

I am not surprised the NDP is taking this attitude, because I am reminded of some comments made here in the House not long ago. In fact, it was on December 8, three days ago. If we look at page 1866 of Hansard, we see that a Member of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had the floor. He was talking about the Canadair Bill. I will tell you what the NDP and the Hon. Member for Regina West think of Bombardier. In his speech he described a trip he made to Kenya, in Africa, where he was invited to visit the railways, and I will quote what it says on page 1866. The Hon. Member was referring to the locomotives he was inspecting, which belonged to Kenya, and he said:

There were 15 locomotives there which had been built in Canada. Immediately one feels good about that. However, at that point in time, February of 1982, 12 of those locomotives were on the ground. They had been bought from Bombardier 10 years earlier.

Here we have a Canadian Member of Parliament saying before the House that Canadian products are no good. And after that, we have the same party telling us it is all for Canadair and Bombardier. I will quote the Hon. Member again. I'm not making this up. I'm just reading from Hansard:

The main generator—

This is on page 1886 in Hansard. Your friend said this.

The main generator of each locomotive, made by Canadian General Electric, did not work.

Another slap in the face of another Canadian company: Canadian General Electric.

All the welding around the fuel tank, which is also the walkway around the locomotive, had cracked . . . The Bogies were made by Algoma Steel.

So we have another company being plagued by negative publicity; the bogies were cracked. Finally, the Hon. Member for Regina West was interrupted by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) who asked from his seat:

Whose fault was that?

The Hon. Member for Regina West answered:

Bombardier was the manufacturer of the locomotives.

This is the kind of friendship extended by the New Democratic Party to the workers of Quebec. Such is the support given Bombardier by the New Decmocratic Party because according to the speeches they make they are supposed to be in favour of the deal. Bombardier is a good Quebec company which should be encouraged. We are pleased to see that it has bought Canadair. Well, I say they are wet— whited sepulchres. You see, Mr. Speaker, the slip of the tongue I make when I realize the hypocrisy of the Members of that political party to whom I am saying: If you keep operating like that—

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: What's wrong, are you worried about the 32 per cent support we have? That's your problem.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No, I am not worried about that because this morning's Gallup poll shows that you have regressed by four points, my friend. That is today's information. Fighting Bombardier, delaying this Bill, jeopardizing jobs in Montreal, and my friends in the New Democratic Party will not reap many votes in Quebec in the next election.

• (1250)

Mr. Orlikow: That is the only reason you are spending your time.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The reason I am talking about the locomotive speech of my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), is that Bombardier at this time is bidding on a large, 300 locomotive contract in India. Does anybody think that a speech like this will help Bombardier sell its locomotives to India? The NDP, by delaying this Bill and also by speaking in very bad terms about the competence of Bombardier in the area of locomotive building will put a large contract in jeopardy. The NDP should be ashamed of doing this.

If the New Democratic Party has reasons to oppose privatization in general, I can live with that. It should have its say. But this no time to drag out the debate. It could jeopardize an important deal concerning aircraft that Canadair is negotiating with a foreign country which is supposed to come to a conclusion by mid-January. At that time, if the ownership of the company is in a state of flux, the deal will not occur. This deal is very important and involves a new line of product. It will not get off the ground unless it has the starter contract.

I am pleading with all Members of this House to pass this Bill quickly. On this side of the House, we would agree to go into Committee of the Whole and pass it today. This morning I spoke to the union people who work at Canadair. They have sent a brief here to make their point. They do not consider it important to come in person. They feel that what is more important is to pass this Bill now. That is what I am asking all Members of the House to do. I am going back to my friends in the New Democratic Party and pleading with them to pass this Bill today in Committee of the Whole. If we do that, I would ask the Government to bring the Minister here so that all questions could be asked of the Minister. With this condition, I would be agreeable to pass the Bill quickly and not make an ideological fight out of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of this House to pass Bill C-23 concerning Canadair as expeditiously as possible. I would be ready to refer it to the Committee of the Whole if the Government was kind enough to bring in the Minister of State (Privatization) so that we could ask her some questions concerning on the one hand, the management of Bombardier and, on the other hand, questions raised by the union employees at Canadair.

Mr. Speaker, I plead with my NDP friend not to jeopardize the major deals which are about to be concluded, as well as the jobs which could be lost if the House took much too much time adopting this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James).

Mr. James: My question is to the Hon. Member who just spoke. Do the statements in response to what has been said about the sale fit into the brief that he has received? One statement is that "It looks very promising". This was said by Normand Cherry, President, Local 712, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. "I think that (it) means jobs will stay here. I have confidence in Bombardier". This was said by Jean-Luc Bélanger, a Canadair employee. "We need to develop new markets and this might help to do that". This was said by Patrice Bleau, a Canadair employee.

Does the Hon. Member feel that these statements fit into the brief that he received from the union today?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The hon. gentleman is being more precise than I was. This is exactly the position of the union. It wants this Bill passed. The Hon. Member has given more details of documents that I have left in my office.

Mr. Andre: The NDP is anti-union.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): These statements exemplify the opinion of these workers that this Bill be passed. Without mentioning names, the Canadair workers in Montreal have been in contact with members of the New Democratic Party attempting to change their mind and speed up the passage of this legislation. Usually one is led to believe that the NDP has close contacts with unionized labour. Some even quip that it takes its advice from there. Certainly not in this case, I suggest.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I beg once again of all Hon. Members and especially my colleagues from the New Democratic Party not to delay unduly the adoption of this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: They have changed our mind. We are prepared to have the vote on the Bill today. Would the Hon. Member hand me the union brief? Does he have a copy of the brief?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I do not have a copy of the brief with me, but I will certainly make sure that the brief reaches the New Democratic Party today. Maybe if one of our friends here has the brief, he would do us the courtesy of handing it to the Hon. Member.

In any event, the brief has been sent to the Clerk of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Timothy Wilson. He has a copy of it on the Hill.

Mr. Waddell: Obviously, the union brief is on its way. We will be pleased to consider that brief in front of the committee first thing on Monday morning, and we will get the Bill into committee then.

I cannot remember what the Hon. Member's first quote was from the Member from Regina, but at page 1866 of Hansard the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), states:

> I believe it was bad in that particular case—

He was talking about one particular locomotive. He went on:

> —but, to be completely fair, it inherited some of its badness from M. L. Worthington Locomotive Works . . . However, that has nothing to do with the lack of viability of Bombardier. I think it is a viable company and it has manufactured many good products. I remember riding in the first snow vehicles made by Bombardier. They had a cab and were much bigger than the snowmobiles they presently make. I believe that Bombardier was one of the originators of that vehicle.

Then the Hon. Member went on to say why he thinks the Crown should have some equity share in the company. Did the Hon. Member quote that in his speech? If he did not, why?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I did not quote that. I am glad that now it has been quoted.

Mr. Waddell: Why won't you be fair?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am going to tell you why. I think I have hit you hard enough in my speech that I do not have to go to another aspect of your speech which is fence-sitting of the worst kind, on the one hand chastising a company for being bad, then in the next paragraph saying that it is a good company. This is a wishy-washy type of thing which is trying to be on both sides of the issue. We think that Bombardier is a good company. So I can add that one more blow to my speech.

Mr. Waddell: We can too.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Well, you tell your friend that he has to determine where he stands. Either Bombardier is a good company or a bad company.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for a short question.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, quickly before the lunch break, since I will be speaking again this afternoon.

I should like to ask my friend the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) whether he called the attention of Mr. Cherry, the Union President, as well as the authorities, owners, Canadair workers, Montreal and Ville Saint-Laurent city councils, on the unbelievable remarks made by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) concerning—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Prud'homme: —but what I want to know, and I understand that the Hon. Member is getting nervous, because as residents of Montreal and Ville Saint-Laurent, we know as a fact that Canadair is the cream of our organizations. Canadair is Montreal and Montreal is Canadair. Canadair is Ville Saint-Laurent and Ville Saint-Laurent is Montreal.

I must admit that I was shocked by the statements made by several NDP Members, and I will personally raise the matter with authorities but I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether he has considered sending Canadair workers generally and Mr. Cherry in particular the statement made by the Hon. Member for Regina—

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. These two Members have quoted the Member from Regina out of context and are misleading the House. Maybe it is not intentional, but the Hon. Member should be quoted in context.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW ITS NEW PROPOSAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Both in Quebec and the rest of Canada, Mr. Speaker, older workers in increasing numbers are reacting negatively to the Conservative Government's proposal to create two classes of citizens.

This means that overnight, an older worker who had a job with a Canadian company which is closing its doors will be told by the Government when visiting the unemployment insurance office: You are not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits; find another job and you will get some. A middle-age worker from the same plant visiting an unemployment insurance office will be told: Yes, you are entitled to immediate payment of unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, this unfair policy discriminates against older workers, and I am sure that most Hon. Members, either from the Liberal Party, the Conservative Party or the NDP, will oppose this measure and will ask the Government to withdraw this legislation which is unfair to older workers.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NORTHERN MINERAL POLICY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Northern Mineral Policy released last Friday in Whitehorse by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has been received with favour by the northern mining community. The policy brings about a degree of certainty so lacking under the previous administration.

Miners can now plan their affairs in the knowledge that their tenure is secure, that royalties will remain at competitive rates, and that the Government takes a positive attitude toward their endeavours.

The predictable results of such a policy will be increased investment in exploration and development, leading to more jobs and production especially for export markets.

It is a pleasure to see a level of co-operation between industry and government as has seldom been the case in times past.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF AIRLINE LICENCE—CONSEQUENTIAL LOSSES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, a Yellowknife family waits anxiously for the House or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to right a serious wrong which it has suffered. The Fred Turner family has been reduced to financial ruin by Transport Canada and now faces repossession of its home by the Royal Bank just prior to Christmas.

Mr. Turner owned a small licensed airline until two years ago when Transport Canada cancelled his licence for not filing statistical documents on time. That is right, Mr. Speaker, the Government bankrupted him for being late in providing details about how much gas he bought and how many passengers he carried.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and I brought the matter to the attention of the previous Minister of Transport a year ago. The Government admitted liability to Mr. Turner. His licence was reinstated, but it was too late; his aircraft had been seized by the banks. Now he cannot afford to restart his business.

Last May 15 the Minister sent a letter in which he assured me that the Government admitted its error and offered $15,000 compensation to Mr. Turner. It should be several hundred thousand dollars. The letter indicated that a cheque would be in the mail. That was last May, and no cheque has been received. Mr. Turner has never been consulted. There have been no negotiations. He is being victimized.

On behalf of the four Turner children, who are two-and-a-half to fifteen years of age, I ask the House and the Government to make their Christmas a little brighter by at least honouring the commitment to them.

RIGHT TO LIFE

CALL FOR APPLICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS TO THE UNBORN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, human rights cannot be over-emphasized. We weep over the way the Jewish people were treated in Nazi concentration camps. We send letters to the Soviets pleading for fair treatment for political prisoners. Our hearts bleed when we read about the artificial famine engineered by the communists in Ukraine which killed thousands of innocent people. We provide a home for refugees who escaped murder and rape in their homeland. Yes, we do many things to show that we are a compassionate people.

At the same time, in our own country last year 60,000 human babies were murdered, and the newspapers barely mentioned it. Even worse, our media make a hero out of a doctor who defies the laws of our country and promotes abortion.

Should not human rights apply to unborn humans? Every Member of the House escaped abortion, and we are here today trying to help our people and build a better nation. Unborn babies should have an equal opportunity to live, to work, to love, and to contribute to the betterment of the world.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION REPORT—CALL FOR JOB CREATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Forget Commission Report has pinpointed many problem areas within the unemployment insurance system. It has clearly shown how the Government has failed to provide the promised jobs of the 1984 election campaign. Also the report is confirming that people in rural regions of Canada are faced with continuing high unemployment, and that our youth are seriously in danger of becoming a lost generation. It also says that the UI system is not being used as it was intended to be as an interim insurance plan by workers in between jobs. Instead, many Canadians are forced to use UIC as a way of life.

I doubt people want to live on unemployment insurance and would much prefer the opportunity to work to provide a decent income for their families. Rather than seeking solutions in economic policies to reduce unemployment, the Government would like to forget the report. I am in full agreement with my colleagues that the UI system is a much needed resource for many Canadian homes. It is time for the Government to produce the jobs that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in 1984, or else resign for having let the Canadian people down.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—PAYMENTS TO SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government's Special Canadian Grains Program is a timely answer to the serious problems plaguing farmers. In committing $1 billion, our Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have responded compassionately and sensibly to the plight of prairie agriculture. Eighty-five per cent of the payment will be going to western Canada and it will help many farmers in Saskatchewan.

The formula being used to calculate this payment was chosen by producers for producers. By paying $300 million now and a further $700 million at spring seeding time, the typical northwest Saskatchewan farmer will receive about $9,000.

This program is a good response to the damage caused by the European-American subsidy battle. The Prime Minister personally promised that we would not let farmers down. The program is proof that the Prime Minister and our Government know, care, and act. The federal Government has delivered for Saskatchewan farmers.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROVISIONS IN AMENDING LEGISLATION—CONTROL OF DEVELOPMENT IN PARKS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, amendments to the National Parks Act introduced by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) include many positive improvements but there are flaws in his proposal that should be noted. For example, the Minister's announcement about controlling development in national parks and park townsites is somewhat deceptive. He recently approved a significant expansion of luxury resort facilities in Banff National Park. To make a big deal now out of limiting leases for ski development when within existing leases there is still the possibility for expansion is surely deceptive.

Development inside our national parks flies in the face of Parks Canada policy which stresses ecological and historical integrity as prerequisites to use, and one has to wonder whether the Minister is serious about controlling development in our national parks given his approach this morning.

The Minister is avoiding the hard decisions that need to be taken about expanding our national parks system. The system is only half complete, and the Minister said little today that would indicate the Government plans to commit the resources necessary to complete the system in the foreseeable future. This apparently is to be left to donations from individual Canadians. With human activity encroaching on many of Canada's unique natural regions, we need a commitment from the Minister that the completion of our national parks system will be a priority of the Government.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. GUYLAINE SAUCIER

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I want today to pay tribute to Mrs. Guylaine Saucier, an exceptional businesswoman who has just been elected President of the Quebec Chamber of Commerce. I wish to emphasize that it is the first time in the whole history of that organization that a woman is appointed to that position. For the past eleven years, Mrs. Saucier has been Chief Executive Officer of Les produits forestiers Saucier Ltée, a major sawmill firm in Abitibi. She is a very active and dynamic woman who can serve as a model for people in Abitibi-Témiscamingue and the rest of Canada. Her corporation is at the forefront of modern technology, with a constantly increasing turnover which amounts to $75 million today.

Mr. Speaker, the Lebel-sur-Quévillon Chamber of Commerce, through Lucien Vallée, its President, the mayor, Denis Lévesque, the Lebel-sur-Quévillon and Comtois residents and I have organized a party last Saturday to fête Mrs. Saucier and express to her our admiration and that of all Abitibi men an women.

TREASURY BOARD

LAPRADE FUND

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) that, according to the information I have, the announcement last Monday of the criteria for the Laprade Fund has failed to quell the dissatisfaction prevailing in the Conservative Party's regional caucus on that issue. Indeed, many questions remain unanswered, and this was recognized even by some Conservative Members. I share that view, inasmuch as we are entitled to ask why such a long delay in coming up with those general requirements, that could have been announced a long time ago.

Could it be that the dice are loaded in favour of some of the projects, so that monies already would be earmarked for the opening of an aluminum wheel plant in the Louiseville area? As it happens, Mr. Speaker, Louiseville is in the constituency of the President of the Treasury Board.

I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and I know the Conservative Members also are concerned with the distribution of the Laprade Fund. How will the President of the Treasury Board proceed in order to honour his previous commitment to ensure a fair and just distribution in the areas concerned? The criteria for eligibility to the Fund are one thing, but criteria for a just and fair distribution of funds are quite another.

I have nothing against the Laprade Fund being used to build a plant in Louiseville, but it is my view that all projects should be processed, examined and announced simultaneously.

I serve notice to the Speaker and the President of the Treasury Board that I will be acting as a watch-dog on that issue.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET REPORT—RECOMMENDATION NO. 36

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the Forget Report was tabled only a few days ago and I would like to bring to the attention of the House one of the recommendations in the report, that is Recommendation No. 36.

Mr. Speaker, the Forget Commission recommends that the Governement establish the new Unemployment Insurance Commission as a parent Crown corporation, set up under Part II of Schedule C of the Financial Administration Act.

Do you know what that means, Mr. Speaker? The Forget Commission is recommending that we turn the Unemployment Insurance Commission into yet another Crown Corporation. Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation situation is reason enough not to make the same mistake twice.

A Crown Corporation is a parallel power, a sort of second power within the state—over which the Government loses control and to which it no longer can give instructions for its good performance.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to strongly oppose that recommendation. We have no need for another inefficient monster like the Canada Post Corporation—let us not create another one with the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISING OF FILM TOMMY DOUGLAS—KEEPER OF THE FLAME

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, tonight is a special night for most Canadians, particularly New Democrats. At eight p.m. CBC television will air the NFB film Tommy Douglas—Keeper of the Flame. Directed by Elise Swerhone, the film is about Tommy and his work on behalf of all Canadians, particularly the little guy. Thousands of Canadians will be gathered around their TVs tonight to watch the story about their hero, the little fellow who brought them medicare. Unfortunately, not all CBC stations are carrying the show this evening. According to the agreements between CBC and its affiliates, this is not one of the shows which must be carried by the affiliates.

Local TV stations in at least two communities have decided not to air the show tonight. In Thunder Bay and London viewers will be able to watch an American TV program, Sidekicks, instead of a real Canadian show with a real Canadian hero, Tommy Douglas. I urge viewers in London, Thunder Bay, and any other city where the show will not be aired to call their local CBC station and cast a vote in favour of Canadian history, and get them to air Tommy Douglas—Keeper of the Flame.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY'S NEED FOR ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKET

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House will be pleased to learn of the full endorsement by Canada's shipbuilding industry of our Government's intention to negotiate a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. I recognize and sympathize with the difficulties facing shipyards and shipyard workers across the country, difficulties which would be greatly eased on the West Coast by the early award for the construction of the Polar Class 8 ice-breaker to British Columbia. However, the increasingly assiduous implementation of U.S. restrictions such as the Jones Act and the Burns-Tollefson amendment which prohibit or obstruct Canada's access to the U.S. marine market for construction and repair work are having a negative impact on all Canadian shipyards.

Changes are needed, such as the extension of the Canada-U.S.A. Defence Production Sharing Understanding to include naval vessels. I share the opinion of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association that such changes under a new Canada-U.S. trade agreement would be of significant economic benefit to the shipbuilding and allied industries of both countries, and would strengthen the North American defence industrial strategic base.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD—RELEASE OF CONVICTED MURDERER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, a federal inquiry is necessary into the hideous first-degree rape and murder of 21-year old Celia Ruygrok by an individual who was on parole for a previous gruesome murder. It has raised disturbing questions about our parole system and the operations of the halfway house where the murder occurred. Supreme Court Justice David Watt said: "Logic and reason were obviously not applied" in releasing the murderer on parole.

• (1415)

The parole system has failed in a very fundamental way. The system must assume some responsibility for the Ruygrok murder. How and why was the murderer released after serving only nine years of a life sentence for the original murder? The bottom line is that he should not have been released. The National Parole Board must account. If Canadians are to have confidence in our criminal justice system, a full and complete inquiry is necessary into this miscarriage of justice. Mr. Speaker, I call on the Government to order an inquiry at the earliest opportunity.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OPINIONS EXPRESSED BY MEMBERS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday in the House, Mr. Speaker, the former Solicitor General of Canada and present Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) stated that the Quebec Association of St. John Baptiste Societies is an extremist group.

This is the kind of arrogance which, so prevalent in the Liberal Government of the 1970s of which he was a member, had then given rise to serious social upheavals in Quebec and even led to loss of lives.

The Liberal Member, speaking from his seat in the House as a prestigious former Minister, made a vile attack against the St. John Baptiste Society.

Mr. Speaker, my grandfather owes to the St. John Baptiste Society the fact that his grandson can now speak French in the House. It ranks among the leading defenders and outstanding proponents of the development of French culture in North America. As a Member from Quebec I cannot accept attacks against this group of francophones.

Mr. Speaker, the statement of the former Liberal Minister is insulting and, made as it was in the absence of the accused, comes from a petty coward.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

COMPANION OF THE ORDER OF CANADA—THE HONOURABLE JOSEPH ROBERTS SMALLWOOD

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to rise and pay tribute today to a great Canadian, the little fellow from Gambo, Joseph Roberts Smallwood, otherwise known across the country as Joey, who is today receiving our country's highest honour, Companion of the Order of Canada. Due to his ill health, he is receiving it in St. John's from the Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. James McGrath.

Journalist, broadcaster, labour organizer, farmer, politician, statesman, and the only living Father of Confederation—without him we would not be a province of this country today. His legacy of bringing Newfoundland into Confederation and bringing the advancements to our province which we have seen over 23 years with him as Premier are adequate testimonial to him.

However, I want to pay tribute to him today. I am sure the House would want to join me in expressing that. We in Newfoundland are proud to be Canadians. There is no one prouder today than Joey Smallwood. I am sure Members on both sides would want to join me in offering our congratulations and best wishes to him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his statement. I think all Hon. Members would want to know that, on behalf of the House, I have arranged to send best wishes to Joey Smallwood today. I know that will meet with the approval of all Hon. Members on this occasion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF UNITED STATES ARMS TO IRAN—REPORTED INVOLVEMENT OF CANADIANS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It was reported that yesterday William J. Casey, Director of the CIA, told the Foreign Affairs Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives that Canadians were involved in the secret deal to provide arms to Iran. Therefore, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House what he, any other Minister, or any official of the Government knows about any such Canadian connection to this matter and when he or they first learned of it?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this information was reported in the press based on closed testimony before a congressional committee. Therefore, there are no published facts on which to proceed. We are actively seeking to determine from U.S. officials any facts concerning the involvement of Canadians in any arms transaction. We will pursue this further as information becomes available.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that my question was answered by the Minister for International Trade. Surely this is something about which the Government should know since any Canadian involvement in the matter of sending arms to Iran could involve breaches of Canadian law or policy.

I want the Government to confirm that it is carrying out an immediate and full investigation involving the RCMP and the Security Service to ensure that the Canadian people and Government know all the facts about this strange Canadian connection to the Irangate affair. Can we have this assurance?

• (1420)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that this issue is being thoroughly investigated. Should it appear that Canadian laws have been broken by Canadian citizens, appropriate legal action will, of course, be taken.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE COMMITTEE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, is the Government prepared to give immediate approval to referring the question of the Canadian connection in arms shipments to Iran to our Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, so that public hearings can be held forthwith and the Canadian public informed of all the facts of this question?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister for International Trade pointed out, this is testimony which was taken in camera. There are allegations of certain things. The Government of Canada is trying to determine all the facts. As soon as those facts are determined we will certainly indicate to the House in the fullest fashion possible. However, at this point in time the details are clearly not available and a thorough investigation is being undertaken, as the Minister for International Trade indicated.

WASHINGTON POST REPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): My question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to the article in the Washington Post, the person who exposed the Canadian connection in Irangate was one Roy M. Furmark. The Government will no doubt be aware that the same Roy Furmark was directly involved in the Come-By-Chance oil refinery negotiations in Newfoundland with a committee which included a present Minister of this Government, who was a former Minister of the Newfoundland provincial Government. Can the Government tell us whether Roy Furmark, as well as contacting CIA Director, William Casey, was in touch with any Canadian Minister or official regarding the Canadian connection?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated, and so has the Deputy Prime Minister, that these allegations are based on media reports of a closed session. These allegations are being made on the basis of unsupported evidence in any public matter. I ask the Hon. Member to be careful about making allegations in the House about individuals until she can be certain of her facts.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, given that one Roy M. Furmark is cited in fact as one of the negotiators involved with the Government of Newfoundland of the time, including a current Minister of this Government, does the Canadian Government not feel there are enough questions being raised about the Canadian connection in Irangate that this whole matter should be referred to the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, either shipping arms to Iran or assisting the Contras in any way would be against established government policy. I would ask the Hon. Member to refrain from making unsubstantiated charges until she has further evidence of a real nature—

Mr. Ouellet: Why don't you deny it, then?

Miss Carney: —on which to make allegations about individuals.

ALLEGED INVOLVEMENT OF CANADIANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it is on the same subject. Since it has been alleged before a Congressional Committee in Washington that two or three Canadians have been involved in some kind of middle-man way in the export of weapons to Iran, which is clearly in contravention not only of Canadian policy but of American law, and since some checking on the part of my staff this morning with other sources seems to indicate these allegations are in fact true, my question is this. Were Government agencies in Canada informed by the CIA or any other American agency of the use of Canadians in an action which is in direct contravention of Canadian policy?

• (1425)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's concern is shared by many Canadians. But, again, I can tell him that at this early stage in the investigations it is not possible to respond to the questions he asks. There is not sufficient evidence at this point in time to justify consideration of an RCMP investigation or anything of that nature.

I assure the Hon. Member that under our export control regulations a shipment of arms of the nature suggested would be prohibited. Until we have further information on the matter I think the Hon. Member should rely on our endeavours to obtain the type of information which he seeks.

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE INFORMATION PROVIDED BY UNITED STATES AGENCIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister might not have heard the question. I say that without wanting to be argumentative in any way on this important matter.

Since Canadian government policy states that we do not favour the export of arms to Iran, and since there have been allegations about Canadian involvement—and we should know this now—has the Canadian Government been told by American agencies in the past of this possible involvement of Canadians? If we have not—and that should have been checked by the Canadian Government by now—are we asking the Americans to confirm that Canadians are being used by an American agency that not only violates American law but, more important, is in flat contradiction of Canadian government policy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that we are actively seeking this type of information from the CIA and other U.S. agencies. When we have further information we will so report.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is addressed either to the Minister for International Trade or the Deputy Prime Minister. It goes beyond the particular in this case to the general policy. Do we have an understanding with the Government of the United States that it will not be using Canadian nationals through any of its agencies in ways that would flatly contradict Canadian government policy without informing the Government of Canada? Is there such an understanding between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, allegations there have been. There has not been confirmation of those allegations which is precisely what the Government of Canada is trying to determine. Very clearly, the issue will be thoroughly investigated. Should it appear that any Canadian laws have been broken by Canadian citizens, appropriate legal action will be taken.

INQUIRY WHETHER AMERICAN GOVERNMENT INFORMED CANADIAN GOVERNMENT OF POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF CANADIANS IN SALE OF ARMS TO IRAN

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Minister and concerns the Canadian connection in the sale of arms to Iran. Mr. Speaker, in the United States, the head of the CIA testified, I imagine under oath, and indicated to members of the committee that on October 7 of this year he had been advised by a Mr. Furmark that Canadians were involved in the sale of arms to Iran.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Did the American Government inform the Canadian Government of the possible involvement of Canadians in the sale of arms to Iran?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have already adequately answered that question. I have pointed out that this line of questioning is based on published reports of a closed committee meeting. Therefore there are very few firm facts upon which to make the kind of Canadian connection which the Hon. Member is taking for granted. We have asked the U.S. to provide us with all the available information. That investigation is going on. When we have more information, and when we know whether Canadian citizens were in fact involved and if in fact Canadian laws were broken, then we will take the appropriate action.

GOVERNMENT'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it is not an allegation. It has been stated by Mr. Casey that he was informed on October 7 that Canadians were implicated in this sale of arms to Iran. I repeat my question. Was the Canadian Government informed in October of this year that Canadians were involved in the sale of arms to Iran?

• (1430)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I have already said. There is nothing at this point in time about which to inform any other Government. This is information which came up before a hearing. We do not know on what it is based. We are making an investigation and we are trying to find out the very kind of information the Hon. Member is seeking. When we get that information, we will take the appropriate action. If Canadian laws were broken, we will take the appropriate action.

SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS IN IRAQ

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have been allegations that Canadians have been involved in the sale of arms to Iran. My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Since this would obviously put the lives of Canadians living in Iraq at some risk, has the Government been in touch with officials of the Government of Iraq to inform them very clearly that it is Canadian policy not to ship arms to Iran?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, at this point I can take the Hon. Member's question under advisement. I do not know specifically what our Department has done with Iraq, but of course the point the Hon. Member makes is true. This kind of activity is against our policy.

QUERY CONCERNING POSSIBLE UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister for International Trade since she seems to be answering the questions on this issue. Is there an understanding between the United States administration and the Canadian Government that Canadian nationals are not to be used in any type of covert military activity in which an American agency is taking part? Is there an understanding that we will at least be informed if there is any involvement of Canadian citizens?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speculate in this area in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is beyond my knowledge. I am not advised of the information the Hon. Member is seeking, but I will take the question on notice and respond to him.

PENITENTIARIES

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—AWARDING OF CONTRACT TO BECHTEL QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board or the Solicitor General, whoever is prepared to reply. My question concerns the incredible and continuing story about the movable penitentiary that was taken by the Government from Drummondville to Port-Cartier, in the Prime Minister's riding. One of the most mysterious aspects of this story is the role played by an engineer, a Mr. Robert McCulloch, in awarding the penitentiary contract to Bechtel Quebec. In this respect, the President of the Treasury Board acknowledged on November 5 of this year that there was a potential conflict of interest and that it would be necessary to conduct an investigation. I would be interested to know what progress has been made. What are the results up to now?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say the investigation has been completed. There are still a few technical details that have to be straightened out, but in a day or two, I will be in a position to release the findings of the investigation. I will do so before the House. It is here, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I answer the Hon. Member's questions, and I will announce the findings of the investigation here in the House, as I promised Hon. Members I would do.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I realize this is not customary, but I intend to congratulate the President of the Treasury Board when he does.

FUTURE OF SAINT-VINCENT-DE-PAUL PENITENTIARY AND OF ITS EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary, which is probably directed to the Solicitor General of Canada. This morning it was reported that the Auditor General said it would cost only $30 million to renovate the Saint-Vincent-de-Paul penitentiary compared with the $68 million it will cost to build one in Port-Cartier, in the Prime Minister's riding. I would like to know what is going to happen to the Saint-Vincent-de-Paul penitentiary, and if it is closed, what the Government intends to do to help the 450 employees who will be out of a job.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would take this opportunity to remind the Hon. Member that it was his Government that made the decision to close Laval, not this Government. It was his Government that constructed Donnacona so that the prisoners from Laval could be transferred to that institution. We are building Port Cartier to take the balance of those prisoners. Laval, as the Hon. Member said, is in fact being closed and the employees are being offered every opportunity to secure employment within the Correctional Service.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—BOMBING MISSIONS LAUNCHED FROM HONDURAS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As he knows, many Canadians fear that the Reagan administration may attempt to distract attention from the U.S.-Iran-Contra arms deal by escalating attacks on Nicaragua. What action will Canada contribute to the international efforts to reduce the military tensions that already exist because of the use of U.S. helicopters and the bombing of Nicaragua by U.S.-made Dragonfly bombers from U.S. airstrips in Honduras?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask the Hon. Member to permit me to take that on notice in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I will get back to him.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT URGE HONDURAS TO DISARM CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, there is a further matter that should be urgently taken up by the Hon. Minister or the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Government urge Honduras, the largest single recipient of Canadian bilateral aid in Central America, to make its major contribution to international peace in that region by disarming the Contra forces and closing its border to prevent the Contras from further illegal attacks on Nicaragua?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will make careful note of the Hon. Member's suggestion and I assure him that it will come to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs upon his return.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INTEREST RATE CHARGED ON LOANS MADE TO PROVINCES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. There is concern that it is the apparent intention of the Government to continue to lend large surplus sums from the Canada Pension Plan to provincial Governments at minimal interest rates for the foreseeable future. Can the Minister tell the House at what rate of interest this money is being lent to the provinces, and if the Minister is developing a plan for the provinces' existing $50-billion debt to CPP to be repaid over a reasonable amortization period?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. friend and neighbour, the Hon. Member for London East, for his question. The interest rate charged on the new CPP loans is 9.31 per cent. This rate is set to match rates on long-term Government of Canada borrowing and it compares very, very favourably with prevailing interest rates. Provinces have been paying CPP interest payments semi-annually for 20 years and, beginning last February, have started to pay back the principal. This system is working well and the interest rates are good from the point of view of the federal Government.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—INITIAL PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and concerns the farm debt crisis. The FCC has indicated that some 39,000 farmers are in serious financial difficulty. Because only 30 per cent of the Special Canadian Grains Program will be paid in January or February, the average producer will only receive about $1,500 out of the initial payment of $5,000. Can the Minister tell us how many of the 39,000 farmers in serious financial difficulty will be saved from foreclosure or bankruptcy by this initial payment of $1,500?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most accurate way to answer that question would be to say probably about 99 per cent more as a result of the election of September, 1984, in which this Government was elected, rather than repeating the lack of programs under our predecessor.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is suddenly very non-specific.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION FORECLOSURES—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF MORATORIUM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, since the lion's share or 70 per cent of this special payment will not be made until the new fiscal year, perhaps April or May, is the Minister prepared to extend the moratorium on FCC foreclosures until the full payment has been made?

• (1440)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the matter of lifting the foreclosure is one that is very much on my mind. We are under a great deal of pressure from those people who have managed extremely well, and who are in a fairly strong and stable financial position to expand their operations.

On the other hand, we know that it would cause some serious problems to those who will not be able to survive, even though we do have the farm debt review legislation, and the farm debt review boards which are now operating. In addition to that, we have the Canadian Rural Transition Program.

The Hon. Member might take some satisfaction from the fact that we will do everything possible to ensure that those people who will not be able to succeed in the business of farming are able to make the transition as painlessly as possible.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER RETIRED ACTIVELY SEEKING JOBS WILL BE REIMBURSED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Minister of Finance in April, the Prime Minister in October and now the Minister of Employment and Immigration have all stated that the Government was not undertaking a review of the unemployment insurance system to reduce federal contributions to the unemployed.

In this optic, will the Government reimburse the benefits of the early retirees whose entitlement was cancelled if they are actively looking for employment and are still on the labour market according to Statistics Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the policy for those who are looking for a job, and we said this last week, is that those who can find a second job will be able to re-establish their eligibility. As for those who receive a pension, as these pensions are deemed to be employment income, they are deductible from the amount insurable for unemployment insurance purposes.

REQUEST THAT ALL RETIREES BE TREATED EQUALLY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Will the Minister put all retirees on an equal basis so that people like Mr. Roland Cloutier of Quebec City, who is President of the Association des retraités sans assurance-chômage, will not be refused their unemployment insurance benefits even though they have submitted, as he has done, over 150 job applications since being forced to take an early retirement?

Is it fair to exclude from unemployment insurance benefits people such as Mr. Cloutier who are working so hard to find a job?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct a misunderstanding among members of the public. People who receive a $6,000 or $7,000 pension are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits up to the maximum amount of their contributions. This means that someone who has contributed a maximum of $15,000 would receive up to $19,000 in income, which would include his pension as well as his unemployment insurance benefits.

However, what you are suggesting is that someone with a $40,000 pension receive an additional $15,000 in unemployment insurance benefits, which would give him a $55,000 income. This makes no sense and this is why pension benefits are deemed to be income from employment.

Oral Questions

SYSTEM'S ALLEGED UNFAIRNESS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Why discriminate against older people? A company shuts down and the next day an older worker goes to the unemployment insurance office. He is not eligible for benefits unless he finds another job. Yet a middle-age worker is entitled to benefits.

Why discriminate and create two classes of citizens? Why discriminate against older workers through this new program?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says so many things. He ought to be more careful about what he says.

He says that older people who lose their job and cannont find work are not eligible for benefits. This is not true. If they have a pension income of $5,000 or $6,000 they are entitled to receive the difference in unemployment insurance benefits. You should also tell that to the people.

INQUIRY WHETHER RETIREE DRAWING $50,000 FROM REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLAN WILL RECEIVE FULL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, why should anyone drawing $50,000 from an RRSP be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits? Why does the Minister not tell that to the people? He is creating two classes of citizens in Canada, and the older people who are in the galleries now will fight to force the Government to withdraw this measure.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should simply point out to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that we are talking about employment income. RRSP investments are personal investments, much like the various financial instruments a good many Members chose to make investments. RRSP payments cannot be considered as employment income because this is a personal investment, whereas pension funds are an employment income. That is the difference.

EFFECT ON WOMEN OF COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. It concerns the Forget Report and what the Minister is doing to defend women against the devastating effects that the Forget recommendations, if implemented, would have on women. In particular would the Minister tell us what her response is to the National Action Committee concerns raised regarding annualization which points out that, while most of the part-time workers are women and seemingly would benefit from the Forget recommendations, most of these people do not work the full year and would be very badly hit by the annualization. Does the Minister agree that women will be especially badly hit by the Forget Commission recommendations? What is she, as Minister, going to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last week, we told the Members from Montreal that we are indeed concerned about the particular problems of women. You are now talking about the fact that the majority of part-time jobs are held by women. It is because of this that we said that we did not yet have a position on the recommendations of Mr. Forget and that the Government has not yet said that it intended to apply the annualization principle. We shall be taking all of this into consideration when we give our response around May 15.

[English]

MATERNITY BENEFITS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. It concerns the maternity benefits recommendations of the Forget Commission Report. Would the Minister agree that equality can go too far, namely, for men to receive maternity benefits that would have to be shared; that the desirable response of the Government would be to ensure parental leave for both parents after maternity benefits; that it would be very wrong to deprive women of maternity benefits for, after all, an act which is not yet an equal opportunity employer?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague has already responded in a general way on how we view the Forget Report and the issues in it. It is not only up to me to be concerned on behalf of Canadian women, it is the Prime Minister and my Cabinet colleagues who have worked very hard on behalf of women.

Ms. Mitchell: You are an advocate.

Ms. McDougall: We understand the need for women to have good maternity benefits. This is one of the areas that my colleague has already said he will be looking at. It is something that he and I have discussed. It is for the attention not just of the Minister responsible for the status of women, but for all my allies sitting in this Cabinet.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs my questions are for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Armenian community has just learned that the Government intends to break its election promises to them. I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister the following questions. Does the Government of Canada acknowledge that the Armenian genocide occurred? Does it agree that the then Turkish Government was responsible for the genocide? Does it agree that the Turkish Government over the years has failed to acknowledge in any meaningful way its responsibility for the matter?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is sufficient to say that Canada has and will continue to deplore the tragic events of 1915.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, that is not an adequate answer, if I may say so. The Government made certain promises. The Armenian community looked to the Government, and I believe supported it because of the promises. Without pressing on the particular events that the Government promised would be estabished, I wish simply to ask does the Government acknowledge that the Armenian genocide occurred, and that the then Turkish Government was responsible for it? It is a simple question; simple justice.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): The Secretary of State for External Affairs has previously answered that point in the House.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Just like you are doing now, he did not provide an answer.

Miss Carney: He also made very clear the point that we value the contribution that has been made by Armenians to Canadian society.

WINTER OLYMPICS

LOAN SOUGHT BY 1988 OLYMPIC ORGANIZATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Canadians are now aware that the 1988 Olympic Organization is seeking $50 million in the form of a loan from the American Broadcasting Corporation. Would the Minister tell the House what has gone wrong and what has happened to the finances of that organization which forces it to seek such a large infusion of cash at this point in time?

• (1450)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the Hon. Member that nothing has gone wrong with OCO. OCO is in sound financial shape. If the Hon. Member was ever involved in business, he would know that it is normal business practice to try to take care of cash flow difficulties which arise from time to time in a situation of this nature. OCO is simply trying to obtain some advances from the extremely good contract it has been able to obtain from ABC.

Mr. Angus: We thought the reason for a corporate sponsor was to get it to pay the bills, not for it to be able to extract more money in the form of loans.

PUBLIC RESPONSE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, are the current financial problems with OCO because of the dismal response to at least two of the try out events—the ski-jumping in November and the lack of sales for the World Nordic Combined next weekend?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is so far out to lunch on the issue that he probably does not know the difference between a bob-sleigh and a luge. The fact of the matter is that ticket sales for the Olympic Games have gone beyond anyone's expectations. Financial commitments and identified funds have gone beyond anyone's expectations. I assure the Hon. Member that OCO is in tremendous financial shape and that the 1988 Calgary Olympics will be the most successful in the history of the Olympics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: You skated around that nicely, Otto.

TREASURY BOARD

LAPRADE FUND

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board, but in his absence, I shall direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The publication of the terms regarding the Laprade Fund poses a few problems because many questions remain unanswered. Indeed, we may well wonder whether the dice are in fact loaded since an amount has already been put aside to build an aluminium wheel plant in the Louiseville region.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Grondin: While the terms were revealed only last Monday—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Grondin: —it seems that amounts have already been put aside for certain projects. Is this true?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): As I have said many times, no part of the Laprade Fund has been put aside for any project. There are eligible projects which must meet the usual criteria of government programs for the region and whatever remains in the Laprade Fund will naturally be spent in accordance with criteria we have established, which basically call for the creation of permanent jobs, as we wanted to do at the very beginning, but unfortunately this was not done by the previous Government.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF FUND'S USAGE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. The terms of application are naturally related to the program, but we are concerned about the terms of application of the fund, that is how this fund will be distributed among the constituencies, because we want to know whether the money will be distributed fairly and equitably among the various constituencies involved. That is the most important, in my opinion.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should understand that the Laprade Fund is meant for the Laprade region. Naturally, in this optic, what we want to promote is the creation of permanent jobs in industry, business and tourism throughout the whole region. Naturally, the boundaries of constituencies are often set arbitrarily and they can change, but we have kept the concept of the Laprade zone, and the money which remains in the fund will be spent to improve and complement what is already available under existing programs.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

MALODOROUS UNIFORMS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It concerns the 12,000 new uniforms which cannot be used by Maritime Command because they give off such a bad odour. Since the material was produced to the Government's specifications, will the Canadian taxpayer have to pay another $2.7 million to replace these useless uniforms, and will the money have to come from the operational budget?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am a bit concerned, after this question, that my colleagues on this side of the House may be sitting farther from me than they used to. It is an important question. It is one which is being studied at the present time by the Department to determine the cause of the odour. Once we have had a chance to locate the cause of it, we will be looking at what can be done about it, and I will keep the Hon. Member informed.

COMPOSITION OF NEW FABRIC

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is on the same point. Why did the Government not conduct a second set of tests after changing the composition of the new fabric, before it went ahead and ordered almost $3 million worth of uniforms?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that would also be a very good question, if the premise on which it was based were accurate. My understanding is that in fact the composition of the fabric was not changed and that the composition being used is roughly the same as that being used for various European uniforms.

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He is aware of the desperate need in Canada for more modest and rent geared to income housing. In light of those facts, how could the Minister support the decision on the part of CMHC to make the lowest allocation of co-op housing units in the last 10 years? Is the Minister prepared to utilize the additional funds in the budget to provide for more rent geared to income housing in the current year?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that, as a result of our policies which have evolved over the last two years, we have been able to accommodate more than twice the number of households with supporting moneys and subsidies than any other Government had been able to do in the history of Canada. Dealing with the Hon. Member's particular inquiry concerning the co-operative program, the association came to us and made representations on the number of units which might be constructed under a trial program over the next five years. Basic to that proposal were certain assumptions relative to the cost of projects and financing. Unfortunately those two suppositions have turned out to be wrong and that has—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

On several occasions I have made the point that the use of French in federal departments and agencies is declining, be it in the case of the RCMP which is cutting staff, or the Canadian Security Intelligence Service which is the target of 1,400 complaints, or again the numerous departmental cut-backs. I am referring particularly to linguistic training where staff have been reduced by half and programs are down 25 per cent. I would like to ask the Government when it will have enough courage to introduce legislation to amend the Official Languages Act and put teeth in it just so we in this House might know what the Government plans to do with respect to official languages?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first may I say that I totally disagree with the premises of and the lengthy introduction to the question of my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier. With respect to linguistic training, the Government is still fully aware of the need for this program. We are trying to make it more effective and more properly geared to the requirements of our employees. This is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker, and what we will continue to do in this field.

As to a more comprehensive linguistic reform, I believe the Prime Minister has said on many occasions that we expect to be in a position to introduce legislative proposals in the House in the very near future.

DEMAND FOR DETAILED INFORMATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is a strong advocate of patience. They say: "Wait, we will come up with something one of these days." In the meantime problems do crop up, and I have raised this issue many times in the House. One problem was raised in committee yesterday. Can the Minister tell us today—while we wait for a Bill which only God knows when it will be tabled—what this Government will do to make the presence of francophones more visible in the upper echelons of the departments under his responsibility?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier says: God knows when. It is not God knows when—the Government knows when. The Government knows it will not be long now. As Member of a Government which did not do anything since the enactment of the legislation 17 years ago—

IMMIGRATION

APPEAL BOARD'S OVERRULING OF MINISTER'S DEPORTATION ORDER

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration regarding a disturbing issue in British Columbia. How can three members of an Immigration Appeal Board, who were appointed prior to September 4, 1984, be allowed to overrule the common sense and good judgment shown by the Minister himself, and also the immigration laws of this country, and give a stay of deportation to a man who has pleaded guilty to, and been convicted of, several counts of buggery and indecent exposure?

Will the Minister assure the Members of this House that he will not allow this potentially dangerous individual to stay in this country, and that he will take immediate action to protect the safety and well-being of the Canadian people by deporting this man without delay?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we issued a deportation order. As a landed immigrant, the person had a right to an appeal before the Immigration Appeal Board. They stayed the execution. My officials filed a motion to have the hearing reopened. It was dismissed. It is inappropriate for me to comment on a judgment of a quasi-judicial body such as the Immigration Appeal Board.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—SOYABEAN PAYMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will know, according to his departmental hand-outs, that the billion dollar pay-out provides Ontario farmers with pay-outs of $32.20 an acre for wheat; $45.53 an acre for corn, but only $7.80 an acre for soyabeans. Would he briefly explain to the House why soyabean production is being discouraged in Ontario?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, soyabean production is not being discouraged nor is it being encouraged by the program at all. If the Hon. Member wants to be critical of the farmers' formula, then let the Hon. Member be critical of it. I want to be complimentary and congratulate the farm leaders who worked long and hard and put together a very fair and equitable formula.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York West on a supplementary to a previous question.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAL CASE TO FEDERAL COURT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. It is true that the Immigration Appeal Board has ruled, but the Minister has the option to appeal that decision through the Federal Court. Is the Minister prepared to give the assurance to this House that he will have his departmental lawyers appeal this case to the Federal Court so that his earlier deportation order may have a chance of surviving, and perhaps correct a misconception that you have to do something wrong in this country to enter it in the first place?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I said, it is inappropriate for me to comment on the judgment of this quasi-judicial body. There will be no political interference by this Government in a decision of an independent judicial body.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX REASSESSMENT OF WESTERN FEEDLOT OPERATORS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue whose officials are busy reassessing western Canadian feedlot operators by saying, on technical grounds, that they are not in the business of farming and therefore not eligible for certain investment tax credits.

Since this exercise is costing the feedlot operators money in terms of refiling and reorganization, and since it is unlikely that any further tax revenue will be gathered, will the Minister reconsider this process and consider directing his officials to more productive endeavours?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, because my colleague is knowledgeable in this area, he knows that the present interpretation bulletin governing this type of situation is several years old. He also knows that there is an obligation on the part of the Department to audit all sectors fairly and equitably. Having said that, he also knows that our Government is very sensitive to the needs of the agricultural sector. I will give the Member an undertaking to review the matter to see if, in the light of present circumstances, there is a need to reassess the situation.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that I made an error and did not give the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre a second question. I now recognize the Hon. Member.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—SOYABEAN PAY-OUT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to my previous question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the Minister has approved an Ontario wheat pay-out of 101 per cent of the past five-year average price, a corn pay-out of 102 per cent of the past five-year average price yet a soyabean pay-out of only 92 per cent of that same five-year average price, will the Minister explain why he thinks that is fair?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that the formula was not designed by the bureaucrats or by the politicians but rather it was primarily put together by 30 farm leaders working together. What is interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the particular commodity group about which the Member is speaking was a part of that farm group.

There are other factors to take into consideration, but I believe that we must compliment the farm leaders for fairness and equity. If you look at the typical farm operation in western Canada, it pays about $9,000. If you look at the typical farm operation in southwestern Ontario, it pays within dollars of the same amount that it pays the typical farm operation in western Canada. I think the farm leaders should be commended. I think they should be congratulated, and we look forward to working with them in the future.

Mr. Ouellet: What about Quebec?

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DECISION TO CLOSE LAVAL PENITENTIARY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period, the Solicitor General claimed that the former Government had decided to close Laval Penitentiary. That is not my recollection. I have just checked with a former official and I can confirm that my position on the subject was misrepresented, that there was no intention to close that prison. Indeed, as the prison population was growing, it became clear that we would need Donnacona, Drummondville and Laval for the prison population.

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members would not want an incorrect situation to remain on the record. I must advise the House that that is not a question of privilege. That is debate. Perhaps there are other ways to make the point.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wanted to clarify for the record that you had heard yesterday a question of privilege regarding the activities of the government operations committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I certainly did hear it and heard it extensively. I would ask Hon. Members not to use a point of order to get into an argument which was closed off after extensive debate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Government Leader could tell us about the legislative program for the coming days. Could he tell us what will follow the debate on Bill C-25 tomorrow and next Monday if possible?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with Bill C-25, the Privatization of Air Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Of what?

Mr. Mazankowski: Canadair. I am sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I hear some support for that too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We would not want any other misunderstandings.

Mr. Blaikie: It is a psychological slip.

An Hon. Member: A leak of major proportions.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is encouraging to know that there is some support for that initiative.

I will be meeting with the House Leaders at 3.15 p.m. and we will be discussing the legislation for Friday and into next week and putting together a menu which we hope to be putting to the House.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House how soon we may expect to have the new native claims policy. Native leaders in the North and territorial Governments are anxiously awaiting this policy. It has been promised by the Government and it is expected to be imminent. Can the Deputy Prime Minister give us the day on which this policy will be announced?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I cannot. I will consult with the Minister and get back to the Hon. Member as soon as I possibly can.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADAIR LIMITED DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment (Mr. Benjamin) (p. 1866).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could you help me out? When we finished this morning, was there any time left in the question and comment period for the Hon. Member who was speaking?

• (1510)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There were four minutes left in the period for questions and comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). However, the Chair has ruled in the past that if the Member was not present when debate was resumed we would not proceed with the question and comment period. Therefore, we will resume debate.

Mr. Blaikie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that ruling but it is a question and comment period. If it were only a question period, then not permitting questions in the absence of the Member concerned would make sense. However, it is also a time for Members to get up and make comments which may not be questions and may not require comment in return from the Member who made the speech. I personally cannot see the logic behind prohibiting Members—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Blaikie: —who may insist on their right to comment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point just raised by the Hon. Member. However, you will recall that I raised that specific point about a year ago. I was told that if the Member who spoke at the time was not in the House and the comments were directed to him, then we could not possibly entertain any comments since he was not there. I was cut off at that time and I take it you appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member is not here and we cannot proceed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of parliamentary reform I wonder if we could not seek unanimous consent perhaps to allow a comment on some of the content of his speech, recognizing that it is impossible to make the comment to the individual.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the efforts of my colleagues of the New Democratic Party to continue to comment the excellent speech made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), but the truth is that, since the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques is not in the House, he can obviously not respond to whatever our friends from the New Democratic Party might say. The Hon. Member can say that he has no question to ask our colleague, but as he wants to say something, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, who made the speech, should at least be able to make one last comment to close questions and comments. I therefore believe that your ruling is quite legitimate and normal and I leave this matter entirely up to you.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, does this mean that if a Member makes a speech and wants to avoid comments or questions on that speech all he or she has to do is to walk out of the Chamber? If that is what the ruling means, that is not what the reform committee intended when it suggested a 10-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Fennell: How do you control it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has ruled on this point in the past. However, the Chair is willing to look at the matter again and report back.

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the ruling and to help the Speaker make the ruling I wanted to indicate in what area my comments would have been on—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair understands the representations of Hon. Members, especially those made by the two who were on the McGrath Committee, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Resuming debate on Bill C-25 with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, one could not ask for a better time to comment on this Government's plans, both present and future, for privatization than after the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) made the Freudian slip of referring to Air Canada when he should have said Canadair. That is further evidence of what the Government has in mind concerning privatization. It is more than what we have seen so far with de Havilland and Canadair.

As a Member of Parliament from Winnipeg I have a particular interest in the sale of Canadair to Bombardier. Many Winnipegers believe for good reason, and I share that belief, that the recent award of the CF-18 maintenance contract to Bombardier instead of Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg had its genesis in the sale we are now debating which this Bill implements. If there was ever unanimity about anything in Winnipeg, there is unanimity in the anger over the awarding of that contract. The bid by Bristol was technically and financially superior. In the minds of Winnipegers there is unanimous distaste for this purchase of a Crown corporation by a private company, precisely because we believe it may go as far back as when this deal was originally struck, that the Government may have made promises to Bombardier that it would receive the CF-18 contract in return for going ahead with the purchase of Canadair. If that is true, and there is no way to absolutely prove it, and it is ever found out to be absolutely and undisputedly true, then one of the greatest political frauds ever will have been perpetrated on the City of Winnipeg and Bristol Aerospace. They would therefore have been led through the whole bidding and tendering process when the decision may well have been already made at the time the deal this legislation implements was made.

What is it in particular that angered Winnipegers about the CF-18 contract? I want to say for the benefit of Conservatives in the House that I think one of things was that it went against every single principle ever uttered by the Progressive Conservative Party up until its election in 1984. Who more than Progressive Conservative Members stood in this House time and time again to criticize Liberal Governments for making decisions on political grounds rather than on sound business grounds? We can still hear the echoes in this Chamber of Conservative MP after Conservative MP criticizing the Liberal Governments for doing that. Yet what happened with the CF-18 contract? Exactly the same thing. I can understand why the business community is so upset, particularly with the Progressive Conservative Government, because Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament gave them reason to expect that business criteria and business criteria alone would be used to determine who got the contract. I do not say that business criteria should be the only criteria for the awarding of contracts. Yet the Progressive Conservatives did and consistently so. Therefore, when the CF-18 contract was awarded on a different basis, you can understand the confusion, dismay and sense of betrayal felt by the business community, western Canadians, and particularly Winnipegers. They had every reason to believe that if the tendering process was allowed to take its natural course the contract would go to Winnipeg.

The awarding of that contract to Canadair goes against everything the Government has ever said about the way in which to deal with foreign businesses. This corporation was a good foreign corporate citizen. As far as I know, it had reinvested all its profits in the industry in Winnipeg. The Progressive Conservative Government made a career in opposition of criticizing the Liberal Government for the way it dealt with foreign corporations. Good corporate citizens are hard to come by. When you find one you should regard it as a rare thing. Bristol Aerospace reinvested in Canada rather than sending its profits back home. The Progressive Conservative Government awarded the contract on political grounds, going against everything it had ever said about the way in which Governments ought to award contracts.

Many Winnipegers believe that Canadair should have remained in the public sector. However, whether Winnipegers are on the right or the left, whether they think privatization is good or bad, we all agree that if there was a hidden understanding at the time of the sale of Canadair to Bombardier, and if part of it was that the CF-18 contract would go to Bombardier, then that would be a very serious and offensive fraud perpetrated against the people of Manitoba.

I would like to say a bit about privatization. What does the Government think it is up to when privatizing Crown corporations? Does the Government believe it was a sound business move to privatize the corporations which it has? I find mysterious the intensely ideological core which seems to be behind these privatization measures.

Crown corporations cannot win with a Progressive Conservative Government. If they are losing money, that is a sign that they are a burden on the public Treasury, that Government cannot manage a peanut stand, and that Government should not be involved in things which should more properly be left to the private sector which, according to Conservative mythology, can do everything so much better than the public sector. In fact, half the Crown corporations exist because Governments moved in to save the remains of an industry which had been wrecked by the private sector.

However, let not the facts confuse Conservative mythology with respect to privatization. If a Crown corporation is losing money, that is all the more reason it should not exist. If a Crown corporation is making money, that is all the more reason for it to be in the private sector because things which are profitable should be kept in the private sector.

It seems to me that according to Conservative policy there are no circumstances in which public ownership is preferred. When a Crown corporation is losing money, it should be in the private sector. When a Crown corporation is making money, it should be in the private sector because we cannot have Governments making money. There is no circumstance in which it would be all right to have a Crown corporation.

The only conclusion which we can reach is that the root of the Conservative drive toward privatization of Crown corporations is ideological. It has nothing to do with whether a corporation is losing or making money, whether it is providing a good service for cost, whether it contributes to regional development, or whether it serves some other useful public purpose. None of that has anything to do with it in the final analysis.

The Government has developed a hit list of Crown corporations which it would like to privatize. We do not know exactly what is on that list. We do not know which corporations are the Government's favourite, but perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister gave us a hint today when he said "Air Canada" instead of "Canadair". Perhaps that is some indication of what the Government has in mind for us next.

There are other approaches. If people are unhappy with the way in which Crown corporations are run, there are solutions other than privatization. Simply to categorize the situation which we now face as either pursuing the status quo, which is basically a status quo developed by Liberal management of Crown corporations, or privatization, is to restrict severely the choices available. That severely narrows the range of options with regard to how Crown corporations may operate more efficiently, be more sensitive to the needs of the economy, and be more profitable. There are alternatives to selling these Crown corporations at fire sale prices after the public has invested hundreds of millions of dollars, as in the case of Canadair, in a major economic sector.

The people of Canada invested hundreds of millions of dollars in the aerospace industry, and that investment paid off. During the 1970s and early 1980s there were huge losses as a result of a depression in world aircraft markets, but Canadair became profitable a couple of years ago. In 1985, it recorded a $20 million profit and had great expectations for the future. Is that the time to privatize a Crown corporation? According to the Conservative philosophy that Crown corporations should be privatized whenever you can privatize them, it would be. It does not matter to Conservatives whether Canadair was making money, but it matters to us. Not only has the Government divested itself of a profit-making Crown corporation in a very important industrial, technological and economic sector of the Canadian economy, it did so at the same time as the investment made by the people of Canada in that company came to fruition.

Is it a sound business principle to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in a corporation and, just when your investment is going to reap some benefit, sell it for next to nothing to someone who will not be accountable to the goals you set for that industry when you made your investment? Does that make any sense unless you have a blind ideological commitment to privatization regardless of the consequences?

I suggest that that is exactly what happened. The Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens) is known as one of the ideological zealots on the Conservative side of the House. He wanted to sacrifice a few Crown corporations. Hopefully it will be only a few. Hopefully we will not see the wholesale kind of privatization which has taken place in Great Britain, for instance, as a result of the commitment of Conservative Parties to privatization.

There is no question about the fact there was a strong feeling in the Conservative Government that free enterprisers had to be thrown a bone or two. De Havilland and Canadair are the first of hopefully not too many bones which have had to be thrown to that paricular element within the Progressive Conservative caucus. I just hope the Government has the good sense, both politically and in terms of this Chamber, not to try to privatize a major Crown corporation which has been part and parcel of the Canadian social and economic fabric for many years. There are a number of corporations which fall into that category, such as the CBC, Air Canada, Canadian National and Petro-Canada. I hope the Government will have the good sense not to do that because, if they try it, I can promise on behalf of all my colleagues that it will have a fight on its hands like it never had before.

I am particularly concerned, as you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, coming from Winnipeg—Birds Hill, that the Government might have designs on Canadian National, although I imagine it would need more time than the Canadian public will give it to get that far down the list. Whatever privatizing the Government is going to do, it had better do it within the next two years because that will be the end of that.

I mentioned earlier that I thought there were different ways of getting at things which have irritated, not just the Government but other Canadians about the way in which corporations are run. A lot of it has to do with accountability and the feeling that Crown corporations become entities unto themselves. They become governments unto themselves in some cases and simply do whatever they like. The best example of that is AECL. It does whatever it likes whenever it likes. It goes through a lot of motions, but those motions are all set up by the Atomic Energy Control Board which is part of the same club. As far as I am concerned, if there was ever a bad example of public ownership—although I am not sure I would want to have it in the private sector—it is Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. It is not accountable and exhibits all the worst behaviour of Crown corporations.

The key is not to privatize, but to make Crown corporations more accountable, more democratic, more participatory, and bring more people into the decision-making process, particularly in important economic sectors. They should be more responsive to the needs of communities, to the rights of individuals and to the over-all economic health of the country. These are the kinds of things that people who are not seeking simple solutions might be thinking about. Instead, the Government takes a simplistic view that we should take important areas of our economy and turn the future of those important areas over to corporations which do not necessarily make decisions in the national interest, particularly when it comes to multinational corporations, although in this case it is a Canadian-owned corporation. The sale of de Havilland to Boeing would be an example.

The Government is turning important areas of our economy over to decision makers who have the publicly stated goal in life of making as much money as they can, whether they do it in the market-place or by squeezing grants and loans from the Government—farming the Government system, so to speak, in whatever way they can to add to their particular profits. That does not seem to be a very sound way to go about creating economic development. Yet that is just the kind of economic development we are unfortunately are getting from this Government.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments and then perhaps a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). First, the Hon. Member attempted in his dissertation to try to tie the sale to Bombardier of Canadair with the CF-18 maintenance contract. Certainly, the contract was made independently and had nothing to do with the Government. The Government did not make any promises to Bombardier, or to anyone else who was considering the purchase of Canadair in connection with the CF-18.

The Hon. Member also alluded to the decision of the Government to privatize. I want to bring to his attention that the Budget in May 1985 outlined the basic principles of the Government in carrying out privatization initiatives. The principles are; first, to be sensitive to the concerns of management and employees of corporations when we have considered candidates for sale; second, to consider the impact of privatization on consumers and the market competition; third, to consult with provincial Governments; fourth, to avoid selling at distress prices for the sake of privatization; fifth, to follow commercial objectives when considering the stages of privatization where there may be periods of mixed, private and public ownership; and sixth, to examine all related policy and financial considerations on a case-by-case basis before considering privatization of any given corporation.

Several benefits are expected as a result of returning federal corporate holdings to the private sector. Privatization will reduce the size of government and leave room for more private sector initiatives and will promote market competition and more efficient allocation of resources. It will improve company efficiency through market discipline and by reducing political and bureaucratic impediments. In some cases, privatization may encourage individual Canadians to take part in the ownership of major corporations through equity investments.

I know the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill and his colleagues are having a problem today. They are talking around the issue. They talk against privatization, but I know they have received pretty strong representation today from the unions and the workers in Quebec and at Canadair. That is why we hear these long dissertations today. Would the Hon. Member like to comment on a remark made by his colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who in debate on December 2 said: "If it is a good deal for Bombardier, is it necessarily a good deal for Canadians? I would say it is not".

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member was but, just in case he did not get the message, we are against the sale of Canadair to Bombardier. Let there be absolutely no doubts about that. I am not often accused of being that ambiguous. If it was not clear that I did not like the sale of Canadair to Bombardier and the privatization of that Crown corporation, for the record I will say now that we are against it.

I thought it interesting that the Hon. Member referred to the objectives of privatization as outlined by his own Government and mentioned the objective that Crown corporations not be sold at distress prices merely to transfer them quickly to the private sector. What could be more distressing than this deal? Bombardier is paying $120 million less than the $300 million liquidation value, the $224 million book value, and the $300 million to $400 million estimated technology value. In addition, it will receive $50 million in federal grants in January with $30 million to come, unspecified export financing, a $1.7 billion CF-18 defence contract, no financial obligation relating to Canadair's debt or outstanding liabilities, plus profits of $20 million in 1985 and $2.8 million in the first quarter of 1986. That is not bad for $120 million and the equivalent of $20 million in royalty payments. That is what I call a distress sale. It is what I call doing something for ideological purposes only and for no other good reason.

• (1540)

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I always listen to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) with interest and with benefit. Today I was especially interested in the logic he directed against the Government saying that, the Government feels on the one hand, if Crown corporations are losing money they should be sold, and on the other, if they are making money they should be sold. He accuses us of having a blind ideological commitment.

I want to say that the same logic applied to the argument of the Hon. Member shows that if there is a blind ideological commitment in the House it is one which he and his Party represent. Their reasoning with respect to Crown corporations is precisely as he has described, namely, if a Crown corporation is losing money it demonstrates to the NDP that we need that Crown corporation. In their eyes it demonstrates that it is a public service that cannot finance itself through private efforts and therefore the good money of the taxpayers has to be poured into it. On the other hand, if a Crown corporation is making money then according to the NDP that shows that socialism works. It shows that we need more and more such Crown corporations in the eyes of the Hon. Member and his Party. The blind ideological commitment is across the way. Members opposite want nothing but a blind commitment to use more and more of the taxpayers' money and effort to keep alive Crown corporations, an effort that thus far the people of Canada have not entrusted them to expand.

I wish to point to a questionnaire I circulated in my constituency asking for public opinion on whether or not certain Crown corporations should be privatized. In all but one instance the respondents favoured the privatization of the named Crown corporations. So when the Hon. member speaks about the Government showing good sense, the good sense of the public as I ascertain it is that we want Crown corporations to be privatized as far as possible. Crown corporations should be continued only when there is an overwhelming and obvious reason to justify their continued existence. It is on that pragmatic basis that Conservative Governments have been prepared either to organize or to continue Crown corporations.

The Hon. Member mentioned the CNR. It was a Conservative Government in the 1920s that put the CNR together, when there was a pragmatic need which justified it. When the time comes for a pragmatic value to privatize, then a Government should be prepared to take that step.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a view expressed by Members opposite that somehow when we privatize that the taxpayers do not have to pay any more. Yet I just went into a long description which no one disputed about the ways in which the taxpayers have already paid. With respect to what they have already paid, they will not be able to reap the benefits in terms of the investment they have made. Whatever money is made in the future by Canadair, now that it is in a profitable position, will not go to the taxpayers of Canada. On the face of it, it seems to me that this deal goes against the financial interests of the taxpayers of Canada. It is not something that should be regarded with relief by the taxpayers.

With respect to the so-called blind ideological commitment, the best that I can offer is an example that goes exactly contrary to what the Hon. Member was talking about. The NDP Government in Manitoba recently privatized a Crown corporation, Flyer Industries Ltd. The Government felt that, all things considered, this was the best thing to do in terms of the future of that particular industry in Manitoba, and for all the other reasons that may have entered into it. The Hon. Member is caught out on the facts on this one because there is an NDP Government privatizing a Crown corporation.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a couple of questions. Since we socialists have to teach Conservatives about sound business practice, I would like to ask my colleague if he agrees that the taxpayer as an investor through his or her Government is not entitled to the same opportunity to receive a return on that investment as is a private investor. In terms of sound business practice is it not true that when a business is sold the buying company buys the accounts receivable and the accounts payable? In this case is it not so that Bombardier is buying the accounts receivable but the taxpayers are allowed to keep the $1.2 billion in accounts payable? What kind of sound business practice is that?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is not a sound business practice at all. However, it is very characteristic of the type of deals made between Government and the private sector when Crown corporations are being privatized. It is very typical of the type of thing that goes on. It is the taxpayers, the very people whom Hon. Members opposite say they are so concerned about, who get dinged in this kind of process. They are the ones who get to pay without any return on their investment. It is the private sector that gets the fire sale price for the technology of the future. The future of the industry is dumped into its laps for next to nothing. It is the private sector that will reap the profits and not the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) who will be the last Member to have 20 minutes in which to make his speech.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Thank goodness, Mr. Speaker. I thank Hon. Members for this chance to enter the debate on this important issue.

If it were not for Crown corporations I suspect that this country would still be so many acres of uninhabited snow. Throughout the history of the country we have seen a tremendous role played by Crown corporations. It was a Crown corporation which developed the intercontinental railway from Ottawa to the East. Crown corporations gave us broadcasting when in its absence we would have been entirely dominated by the United States and its broadcasting system. We saw Crown corporations give us air service at a time when this country would have been left with no option but to be the further extension northward of U.S. services. Crown corporations have been an important line of defence in the protection of Canadian nationalistic concerns against the pressures of the very much stronger, very much more dynamic economy to the south.

That is the backdrop to this debate. Of course, it is not a justification for keeping Canadair in the public sector. To Keep Canadair in the public sector would require a careful analysis of the potential benefit of its contribution to an industrial vision for Canada. Unfortunately, the Government has given us no such industrial vision for the future. Its vision is clouded. It is unannunciated. If anything, it is a vision of somehow surviving, somehow thriving by tying ourselves to the United States with a free trade agreement. We must deal with the question of Canadair not in the way we should, that is, as part of the development of an industrial base in Canada. Instead, we have to deal with it as a commercial transaction.

[Translation]

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this is like a commercial transaction. There would be terrible losses here for any Canadian who pays taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I can give you figures that confirm what I am saying. First, I would like to point out that the Canadian public has invested $2.2 billion in this company! Based on the figures, we also know that the book value of company assets amounts to $478 million. Mr. Speaker, we therefore have a company which has received a lot of money from the Canadian public and which still has a lot of money left.

What price should Canadians pay for all that, Mr. Speaker? I must say that the price is terrible, shocking! It is a price that has nothing in common with the level of costs on the basis of Government statistics which may be found in the comparisons, in the financial aspects of the Bombardier proposal and if we look at the total we see it is less than $160 million.

Mr. Speaker, it is not fair to sell a corporation when there is so much difference between the costs incurred by Canadian taxpayers and the price paid by the private company for that same corporation. It is not fair.

• (1550)

[English]

It is for that particular reason that we find ourselves so strongly opposed to this transaction. We are not opposed to it because it is the sale of a public company. That is an important part of it but, as we have indicated, there are certainly cases of public companies being sold to the private sector and there are cases of private-sector companies brought into the public sector. However, to initiate a commercial transaction that is somehow equitable is not the same as to initiate a commercial transaction that results in the Canadian taxpayers getting hosed and ending up with far less of a return than they should be getting. This is something that is not acceptable from a commercial perspective. It would appear only to be justifiable for, as my colleagues have pointed out, ideological reasons.

[Translation]

It is for an ideological reason. It is for reasons that make no sense that this corporation is to be sold at such a low price. We cannot approve of that transaction.

[English]

It is also important to note that this company is not some kind of a basket case. It is not a company that is dealing with its future prospects with a grim certainty of facing yet more losses. Again, according to the Government's documents, the net profit of Canadair was $6 million in 1984. In 1985 it was $15.2 million, and in 1986 the forecast profit according to the CDIC plan is $23.8 million. I predict that this case will be exactly the same as the case of de Havilland. After the company was sold the profits started to mount, profits which should have gone to the Canadian taxpayers who financed the incredible investments in the new technology which is now of such benefit to the owners of the company.

In addition to these points, we note again that this transaction is not normal. Again, I refer to government material from Salomon Brothers. Salomon Brothers is not exactly part of the socialist hordes, at least according to its latest membership list. It is clearly indicated within this document that the letter of intent includes provisions which do not conform to commercial norms. In view of the low price and the need to justify this sale, I would have expected Conservative Members to put before us a case for the sale of Canadair. I have not heard that case. All I have heard is that it is a fine thing to transfer things to the private sector. If that is not ideology, I do not know what is.

• (1600)

A pragmatic, economic view would surely offer us some justification for this transaction, and that has not taken any precedence in this debate. That is our view. We are not committed to public ownership or to private ownership. As I have stressed in the past, we are committed to improving our position in Canada in the face of very difficult challenges in the years ahead. These challenges will face us in the aerospace industry, the auto industry, and in virtually any industrial sector noted across the board.

We must stop using ideology as the response. It is ideological for me to stand up and say a solution to the automobile problem which looms before us is to nationalize all of the Canadian auto companies. That would be nonsense. It would certainly not be what we would expect to carry out in Government.

If there is a case in this instance for a transfer to the private sector, let us hear it. We have not heard it. We expect that we will hear it during the hearings that we anticipate will take place on this Bill. As in the case of deHavilland, we hope that there will be witnesses called to indicate to us what was contained within their bids, and whether they might have been superior to this ridiculously low bid we have received here. We expect that these hearings will take some time to put the case clearly before us. When these hearings do take place, I hope that it will be possible for those who support this sale to indicate quite clearly why it is that this private transaction to the private sector should be supported. If that evidence is brought before us, I am sure that we will be quite open to argument. So far we have not had that position put forward, and we can only take the ludicrously low price as the basis of our opposition to this sell-out of an important Canadian resource.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James).

Mr. James: I would like to make a rebuttal to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). In the first place the Hon. Member talked about Salomon Brothers and, certainly not being part of their establishment, I believe that he was referring to their August 11, 1986 letter that talked of non-conformity to traditional commercial practice. The Hon. Member did not read the whole paragraph, and I would like to set the record straight. Salomon Brothers stated:

> The only important provision in the LOI that neither promotes Crown objectives nor conforms to traditional commercial practise is that which provides for risk sharing should insurance become "economically impracticable to procure".

As the Hon. Member knows, that was in connection with the serious problems that we have today with liability insurance.

I am sure the Hon. Member also has the letter of June 24, 1986, which is a letter from Marsh & McLennan in relation to this subject. The letter states in connection with Bombardier Inc. that:

> They have agreed to purchase insurance without any participation of premiums by the government. In the event the insurance may not be available they propose to share the cost of the claims with the government for a 15 year period on a sliding scale.

The letter further states:

> It is obvious from the foregoing that the Bombardier proposal is clearly superior in that it relieves the government of any on-going premium involvement or financial participation in deductibles. We feel there will always be insurance available in some form and therefore the proposals made by Bombardier and CAT in the event insurance becomes unavailable are academic.

In addition, I wish to speak to some other comments made by the Hon. Member of the opposition. Earlier he said that deHavilland would in essence go down the tubes, that it would not be successful. Now he says that it is successful. That certainly gives no credit to private enterprise to that end.

In 1982 and 1983 Canadair lost $1.2 billion primarily due to many write-offs. By the end of 1984 the Crown investment in Canadair had reached $2.2 billion. A comment was made earlier by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) when he was talking about the financial side of this transaction. He failed to mention in connection with that sale that the federal Government has some caveats.

The commitments that are made by Bombardier will be encouraged by the Government through retention of special shares which can only be earned by Bombardier if they deliver on the commitments in R and D, and so on, as the Hon. Member knows well. Additionally, the Government retains the rights to the Challenger technology, therefore preserving the investment of Canadians in this technology over the years.

In many ways, Canadair's technology is now being put together with a skilled workforce, and members of that very same skilled workforce are writing to this Party today and to all of us stating the importance of this sale to Bombardier. So we have Canadair's technology teamed up with a skilled workforce in the Province of Quebec. All of us know that it is very important to the province to make a successful private sector company that will carry on with this very important work.

Mr. Langdon: Within that range of words, as I identified them, I think there were four points. The first point was with respect to the Salomon Brothers' comments. I wish to quote from the letter of intent:

> The LOI also has within it a number of provisions that do not conform to commercial norms. Most (though not all) of these operate directly or indirectly to promote Crown policy objectives. Examples include a provision to preclude land speculation, mechanisms to encourage employment, growth, reinvestment and retention of sufficient working capital and an undertaking not to relocate material facilities outside of Quebec.

So certainly, there were factors other than the insurance factor that were noted within the letter.

Second, the comment of Marsh & McLennan about insurance being available, and again I quote from the Salomon Brothers' letter:

> —if insurance becomes unobtainable at economically practicable cost.

That "—at economically practicable cost" clearly can leave much more risk than the Member has implied.

• (1610)

I have a third point in respect of the special shares and the guaranteed royalties. The suggestion of the Hon. Member was that these somehow raised dramatically the price for Bombardier. I had already included them within the price I noted in my discussion. According to available government documents, the special shares are worth, at most, $10 million. The guaranteed value of royalties is worth, at most, $20 million. When added to the $120 million cash on closing, the dividend, and the payment for the airport, the total value received by Canadian taxpayers will be well under $160 million for a company with assets of $470 million, according to the August 19, 1986 edition of The Globe and Mail. I suppose one for three is not a giveaway in some people's books. However, it looks like a gross transfer to the private sector. As I said before in a previous speech, it is another gift-wrapped present for Christmas to private enterprise from the Tory Government.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) liberate himself from the ideological incarceration of the previous NDP speaker. It is clear from the very fine speech made that the basis for this consideration should be pragmatic objectives. I should like to dwell for a few moments on that point.

As is very often the case in the sale of a Crown corporation, it is not always possible for a Government to achieve the kind of sale which each of us would like. This was the problem facing the Government of Manitoba when it sold the Flyer bus line. As was reported in the Winnipeg Free Press, it would have been cheaper to close down the company than to enter into the sale, as did that Government. The sale was undertaken after the Government tried for years to cope with a failing Crown corporation, and it ultimately cost the taxpayers of that province $96 million. It would have been cheaper for that NDP Government to close down the company.

Very often a Government cannot obtain the kind of sale its critics and its opposition would recommend. However, there are two gains to the public by the sale of a Crown corporation, as in the case of Bombardier and as in the case of de Havilland, which I think need to be noted. The first is that the burden is taken off the backs of taxpayers. Year after year taxpayers' moneys were poured into the corporation to cover losses and to subsidize the company. That will finally be brought to a close. Second, by putting the company into the hands of more efficient and effective salespersons and managers, job security is given to the personnel which they lacked beforehand. When representatives are called before the parliamentary committee, the numbers should include the workers in the company who will now have job security.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for being the first I have heard in the debate to address the question of the very poor price received for the company. Frankly, his position has proved the point I was making. In the case of Flyer Industries, it was the takeover of a bus company which was losing money. It was a question of whether it made sense to keep pouring money down that sink-hole. The answer seemed to be no, that it made more sense to privatize it.

In the case of Canadair, we are talking about a company which has made profits for the last two years, and the projection for the coming year is that it will make even greater profits. Therefore, the choice before them was not to sell the company or face losses; it was to sell the company or keep the company. The company was finally providing to taxpayers the kind of return it should have provided all the time, had it not been for mismanagement under a previous Government.

CANADAIR LIMITED DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment (Mr. Benjamin)(p.1866).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in the debate on the privatization of Canadair. It is a significant event in the political and aeronautics history in Canada, although it is not an event about which I am happy.

Years ago when the Government of the day made a policy decision that the aerospace industry must be protected, it was clear that Canadair could not be allowed to go out of existence. At that time it was important for us as a nation that it be retained, and the only way to retain it was by having its assets owned by the Government of Canada, mainly because the private sector failed to ensure its viability. Whether it was through its products, marketing, or whatever, I do not know. It was up to the Government of Canada and the people of Canada to sustain that operation. Sustain it they did for a number of years. Millions of dollars were poured into the industry. I do not have to ask the workers to know that they would rather have real jobs and the money coming to them in that way than being on unemployment insurance or welfare. We must recognize that while it was referred to as a drain, it was an investment in human beings. It ensured that the industry survived and that the workers had paycheques with which to look after their families in an appropriate Canadian way. It was not a drain; it was an investment in the future.

Now the Government has decided, as part of its ideology, to get out of the business and to give it away to the private sector. Let us take a look at what Bombardier is getting for its $120 million. It is getting a company with a Canadian book value of $224 million, a technology value in the neighbourhood of $300 million to $400 million, and a liquidation value of around $300 million. It is quite clearly getting a good deal. It is almost as good a deal as the one given by the Ontario Liberal Government this week to the Four Seasons hotel chain. For a nominal sum of $4 million to sell Minaki Lodge, the private sector picked up $11 million in tax deductions. In effect taxpayers paid to give away that lodge. It is almost the same situation with Bombardier. It is getting much more than the value of the amount to be transferred.

I should like to refer to one aspect of that value. It is my understanding that three Challenger jets are currently grounded in West Germany. They have been grounded since February. They are grounded because Canadair was unable to supply the maintenance manuals in a properly translated form to be used by the German workers. Because of that grounding and because Canadair has been unable to live up to its responsibilities, the West German Government is withholding $60 million owed to Canadair. Where does that $60 million show up, Mr. Speaker? Will that $60 million be paid to Bombardier, and does that actually reduce its cost from $120 million to $60 million? Is it getting an even better deal than we think? Is that money showing up elsewhere? Will it come back to the Government of Canada? Who will be receiving that money? Those are the kinds of questions that should be answered in this House to ensure that Canadians know what kind of a deal their Conservative Government has arranged for them.

We also have to recognize that Canadian taxpayers get to keep Canadair's $1.2 billion long-term debt. I thought when one company bought another company it was a package deal. You got the receivables on one hand but you got the other side of the ledger as well. You get the bad with the good. Clearly, Bombardier is taking only the good. It has not taken the overall responsibilities. Canadian taxpayers will never get that money back. They will not get a return on their investment. It was their investment, not the Government's investment in that company many years ago. Canadair was just beginning to show a return on that investment. I believe that for the last year for which we have information a profit of $20 million was made, a small amount compared to the $1.2 billion of long term debt, but it was a start. That money could have been used to help to pay for other worthwhile projects in Canada, projects paid for by the Government of Canada. I think the Government is wrong in deciding to privatize this company.

I can understand, as others have said, that if you have a situation where a company owned by the Government has a questionable value that requires massive amounts of money on an ongoing basis with no return, there would be a need to wind it down to see if somebody in the private sector would be willing to take it over. I come back to Minaki Lodge in Ontario. Taxpayers paid $50 million for that. One million a year is still being paid out to operate it. Minaki Lodge should never have been owned by the Government of Ontario. It had no business being in that kind of a situation. Ironically, it was Ontario's Conservative Government that nationalized Minaki Lodge and nationalized Cancar Rail in Thunder Bay, but a Liberal Government sold them. Here we had federal Governments nationalizing industry and Conservative Governments selling them. It just proves once again that there is no real difference between the Liberals and Conservatives in this country when they change hands, federally or provincially.

Those are my few contributions to the debate. Perhaps the Hon. House Leader in his business question today was giving us advance notice of yet another attempt to privatize something when he referred to this Bill as the privatization of Air Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mrs. McDougall:

That Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The first question is on the amendment of Mr. Benjamin:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the words "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-25, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the amendment lost.

An Hon. Member: On division.

Sitting suspended

Motion (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion agreed to on division.

Motion (Mrs. McDougall) agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It had been our intention to call Bill C-3 at this time. However, it is my understanding that the Minister and the critics for that Bill are presently before the committee. Under those circumstances, I think it would be in order to suspend the sitting until five o'clock and at that time Private Members' Hour could commence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Parliamentary Secretary's proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House is suspended until 5 o'clock p.m.

At 4.28 p.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.02 p.m.

AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

PROVISION OF LOW COST LOANS TO FOOD PRODUCERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing an Agribond program that would provide for low-cost loans to hard pressed Canadian food producers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to present this motion to the House today. I am hopeful that Members of Parliament will in good Christmas spirit support the consideration of it. After all, it simply asks Members to put on record the fact that we are committed to the concept of the family farm. It asks Members to say that we want to see the family farm continue as a viable food-producing unit in Canada.

This motion is but one option in terms of providing long-term low interest funding for family farms and family ranches. Basically, it is an appeal to members of the Government to stand up and say that the Government of Canada is 100 per cent committed to the family farm and the family ranch and that it is not about to cave in to the pressures of agri-business or corporate agriculture.

I need not go into the details of the virtual pending crisis facing our farm community. Something in the neighbourhood of 40,000 farms face critical financial crisis, and many more are experiencing serious financial difficulties. The situation worsens by the month. I know that in my constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap on a drive through any traditionally productive agricultural valley today the most predominant feature on the landscape is the for-sale sign. As a matter of fact, some of the valley drives have become known as drives through "Billboard Alley" because of the huge signs setting out lands for sale and various financial arrangements that can be arranged and so on. It is a very serious situation. It exists in all parts of the country and has been recognized to a certain extent by the recent government initiative to assist some of the hard-pressed grain producers. For virtually every single area of agriculture we could say that a similar situation exists.

In my own constituency, which I do not think is unlike most rural areas, we see, two or three generations later, the sons and daughters of those who cleared the land or broke the soil being forced off the land. In many cases they are being forced into seeking off-farm incomes. It is a very serious situation.

What the motion proposes is that as Members of Parliament we recognize that there are solutions to the very serious problems, the most critical of which is the debt equity ratio which our food producers face, as well as the massive capital costs which really prohibit young people from going into agriculture. We have an aging farm population. Our food producers are getting older and older and young people are not able to enter the profession. The average capital cost now for a farm or ranch is about $400,000, including land, equipment and building costs—to say nothing of the annual operating costs.

This is a very serious situation, one of the answers to which is the provision of a mechanism through which long-term low interest money can be obtained. Of course, the agri-bond concept is one which would allow that. Another solution which my Party has put forward on many occasions is with respect to parity pricing. In this situation what a farmer or rancher received for his goods would be a reflection of his costs. As a result of a parity pricing situation they would be able to maintain their operations.

Let us talk for a moment about agri-bonds. It is a concept that has received the support of all sides of the House as indicated in speeches by Members and their rhetoric over the years. It is an idea which was referred to the Finance Committee some months ago. In its final report the committee recommended that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) consider the advisability of establishing an agri-bond program and it set out some conditions. The first is with respect to eligible borrowers, which would include any farmer whose equity is between 20 per cent and 50 per cent of assets. Such a program would be operated by the Farm Credit Corporation. A maximum of $300,000 per borrower would apply over the long term in terms of providing predictable interest rates.

Over the years many people have gone on record to say that they support this measure. On February 7, 1984, the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey (Mr. Gurbin) had this to say:

> Mr. Speaker, this motion is exactly the same as a motion presented by myself and 10 other Members of Parliament on November 24, 1983. The 10 were, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), the Hon. Member for Wetaskawin (Mr. Schellenberger), the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), the Hon. Member for Portage—Marquette (Mr. Mayer), the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt), the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), and the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

In my seven years as a parliamentarian I remember hearing many Members of Parliament, both from the Conservative Party and from the Liberal Party, follow the lead of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who time and time again has made the case for long-term low interest financing for farmers. He has suggested that some form of agri-bond would be an obvious course to follow.

In closing, I wish to say that if we were to support this motion it would help young people get into farming. It would allow prospective farmers and ranchers to develop themselves in these professions. It would help farmers who are presently experiencing a debt crisis and who have found themselves through no fault of their own in most cases in an impossible and increasing debt situation. Perhaps most important of all, it would provide a vehicle for investors to invest in agriculture. In this way people who want to buy or purchase an agri-bond would know that the money they are investing in the future of Canada is being invested in the future of agriculture in terms of the future of the family farm or the family ranch. It could even be tailored so that it could be invested in agriculture in the investor's part of the country. In this way people taking out agri-bonds would be able to say, yes, I have played my role. I have done what I could as an investor to put money into the hands of ranchers and farmers who are my neighbours or members of my own family. It is a tremendous vehicle.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) indicated that both provincially and federally the Conservative Party supports the idea of agri-bonds. This is the acid test today. We will see whether all that has gone on before is mere rhetoric or in fact that members of the Conservative Party in this House actually support a vehicle which they have said on many occasions they support. It is a vehicle which would place low interest long-term money into the hands of our food producers and allow this matter to go to committee for further examination.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate initiated by my honourable colleague for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on the subject of agri-bonds. Of course, Mr. Speaker, my colleague has just suggested in his conclusion that it would be the true test if Conservative Members were to support his motion. I would like to tell that NDP Member that his party has always been making promises but has never had an opportunity to keep them, so making promises comes easy, and I would like to come back to this.

Mr. Speaker, everyone does recognize how urgent it is to deal with the matter of interest rates, and this is still more obvious to this Conservative Government because many of our Members also are farm producers. This means, Mr. Speaker, that certainly we need no advice from the New Democratic Party, and much less from the Liberal Party in order to know what we have to do to help farm producers across the land. It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that both Opposition parties, and especially the Liberals do not seem to understand that this Government, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) are not acting unilaterally but hand in hand with the provinces and farm groups to find adequate solutions to the problems that the farming industry is now facing.

Of course, we are not pretending that we know everything or that we have cure-all programs, as the Opposition parties are so prone to point out, and we are well aware of that. However, the progress made by this Progressive Conservative Government over the last two years where agriculture is concerned shows how much that industry is important to us and to all Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, when we were elected in September 1984, the interest rate charged by the Farm Credit Corporation was 16 3/4 per cent; that was a shameful rate, and it was the clear, obvious and definite proof that the Liberal Government had knowingly abandoned agriculture, knowingly ignored the young farmers. Now that they are in Opposition, Mr. Speaker, they are urging us to make good the wrongs they did over the last 20 years. This is what the Minister of Agriculture, together with his provincial counterparts, obvious sectors of the economy and farmer's unions are doing, this is what we are doing as we showed once more this week by announcing a $1 billion assistance package for Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker, to give but one example of Liberal incompetence in the farming industry over their last mandate and the last 20 years, I would like to point out the crop losses caused in 1983 by drought in my own Province of Quebec.

The producers had experienced a crop loss. They sent an application to the federal Government—the Liberal Party was in power at the time—asking for help, but it was turned down. Mr. Michel Veillette, who was then the Liberal Member for the Champlain riding, followed his Government's recommendations. He said no, on the ground that Quebec was supposed to pay. But following our coming to power in September, 1984, Mr. Speaker, we have worked together with l'Union des producteurs agricoles and our Minister of Agriculture to give back to Quebec producers the nearly $30 million to which they were entitled. We have compensated them for their crop losses, because the Progressive Conservative Government had made a firm commitment during the 1984 election campaign to help our farm producers.

That is a convincing argument, Mr. Speaker.

• (1710)

As I was saying a while ago, under a Liberal administration in 1983-84, the Farm Credit Corporation was lending money at 16 3/4 per cent interest. I should like to remind the Hon. Member who is laughing because her Government had lended money to farm producers at 16 3/4 per cent interest, that it is now lending at 10 3/4 per cent interest rate, and that was a commitment and is an achievement of this Progressive Conservative Government.

Thanks to these 10 3/4 per cent interest rates, Mr. Speaker, our producers are showing renewed confidence in the future and are working very hard to produce for Canadians food of the highest quality. I know that it is not enough, Mr. Speaker, and that we will have to continue working over the next two years with the Prime Minister, together with farm organizations and provincial Governments, in order once and for all to offer decent interest rates to farm producers generally. We have set up several mechanisms, even though Members of the Opposition seem to think that we have done nothing over the first two years— but we have set up several organizations to help farm producers facing financial difficulties! Let us not forget that, after we came to power in 1984, we renegotiated interest rates, which were at 16 3/4 per cent, to bring them down to 12 3/4 per cent. We set up Farm Debt Review Boards, Mr. Speaker, and implemented the 6 per cent policy for farms on the verge of bankruptcy. These are, Mr. Speaker, concrete evidence of what our Government has been doing. What more can you ask in two years? I would like to ask the Opposition, Liberals and New Democrats, that, instead of being against everything we propose, they help us adopt quickly policies which would allow our farmers to take advantage of reasonable interest rates. And we are doing just that, Mr. Speaker. Liberals, for example, cannot ask us to do in two years what they could not achieve in twenty. We have to catch up, Mr. Speaker, and that is what we are doing. With some cooperation from the two Opposition parties, if they would only agree to forget their partisanship and to work with us, as we are presently doing with farm organisations and provincial governments, we could, in a very short time, give farmers across Canada decent interest rates which would ensure that farming remains a major economic sector in our country.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to say a few words on the motion put before the House by the Hon. Member for Kamloops— Shuswap (Mr. Riis) concerning agri-bonds. I think we just saw a beautiful demonstration of a Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Agriculture being totally rattled, into orbit, confused, distracted and on the defensive. I have never seen anything quite like it. It does not surprise me, because in looking at the record of the Government over the last two years we can see why he is a bit nervous at the prospect of trying to defend the Government's position with regard to agri-bonds.

Of the 338 promises made by the Tory Party during the 1984 general election campaign let me refer to nine or 10 that have not been kept. Promise No. 3 was that the Tory Party would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so that farmers could have access to reasonably priced funds. That promise was followed up in the spring of 1985, about three or four months after the Conservative Party came to power, with the unanimous report of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That committee, composed of a majority of Conservative Members, recommended an agri-bond program. By that time in the fall of 1984 the farm debt crisis had been well catalogued by the Farm Credit Corporation. That committee report unanimously recommended that an agri-bond program with 8 per cent interest over a five-year term up to $300,000 per borrower be provided with the idea that it would be targeted toward people who were in serious financial difficulty allowing them to write down mortgages to 8 per cent whether they were with the FCC, or with other private institutional lenders.

I can certainly see why the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was a little in orbit this afternoon, and very much on the defensive. If the rest of the promises are read, it will be seen that there are further recommendations that the Government would extend and expand the Farm Credit Corporation's special interest rates subsidy program, which of course they did not do.

Further on there was a commitment to allow the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing rates. Looking at the inventory of mortgages of the Farm Credit Corporation, 32 per cent of all the FCC loans were financed between 12.75 per cent to 16.75 per cent. Most of those 12.75 per cent mortgages were simply the $575 million conversion program of funds that were not used in the 1984-85 fiscal year of the Farm Credit Corporation to convert to mortgages over 14 per cent; not mortgages of 13, 13.5, 13.75, 14 per cent, but mortgages over 14 per cent down to 12.75 per cent. Those funds were in the FCC account and had either been borrowed from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or from private markets which were in the FCC loan portfolio and were available to be loaned and were done at a conversion in that regard.

We looked through the Budget of 1985, and we have had the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), but there has been no decision with regard to assistance for the farm debt crisis, even though 39,000 of our youngest, most productive, and most technologically advanced farmers were facing serious financial difficulties. Since that time, many of those farmers have gone into bankruptcy or have been foreclosed on. Even though there was a unanimous recommendation of the Conservative members on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, there was nothing in the Budget.

So we come around to the Budget of 1986 and, lo and behold, we see the commodity based mortgage which theoretically provides interest rates as low as 6 per cent, if the farmer has a low enough equity position in the farm. Many of the farmers will be financed at 7 and 8 per cent. But if we look at the Budget Papers, it is found that the write-down of those FCC mortgages provides only $20 million. Looking at what the provinces are doing, Alberta has a $2 billion program at 9 per cent; Saskatchewan has a $1 billion program of assistance at about 6 per cent. The Ontario Government has a program of some $50 million a year to assist in writing down interest to as low as 8 per cent.

But there are a few other catches in the commodity based mortgage. If the commodity value goes up, such as hogs have gone up by 25 per cent this year, and beef has gone up by 15 per cent, then the principal of the commodity based mortgage goes up. If that continues to rise, the individual who thought he was getting a mortgage at 6 or 8 per cent, or what he was eligible for as a result of the level of equity that he had in his property, ends up paying some 12.75 per cent at this time, or last spring it was 13.25 per cent. If he wishes to pay out the mortgage, he has to pay out the entire mortgage at that level.

On Budget night what looked like a program of $730 million over two years at 6 per cent, over the 10 year life of most of those mortgages turns out to mean that the individual will have to pay 12.75 or 13.75 per cent interest on those mortgages. If you do not have a FCC mortgage you are not eligible for any assistance. So the commodity based mortgage which looked great on Budget night has a number of adverse aspects to it, which certainly make it less attractive than programs of real support such as many of the provinces have adopted.

One other point I would like to make in the agri-bond debate is that a group of Members of Parliament went to Washington to look at its agri-bond and revenue bond programs in January of 1985. It was clearly found there that in the cost of the agri-bond system much of the benefit flows to the brokers, to the lawyers, and so on. We, on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, came to the conclusion that if an agri-bond program is going to be provided, it should come from the FCC. The Government takes the money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, writes it down to what the concessional rate is at 8 or 9 per cent, and the interest paid on that becomes non-taxable if the principle which is very similar to the small business development bond is used. In that manner, it is targeted toward younger farmers who are not in a taxable position where the interest write-off is not so important, or to farmers in financial difficulty where, because of their financial position, the write-off is not so valuable.

The agri-bond idea is one which the Government has committed itself to. I hope that they will allow it to be reviewed by the committee, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has suggested tonight.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to speak to this Bill today. Before I begin to outline some of the activities that this Government has been involved in, I realize the mover of this motion pointed out that we have a crisis in agriculture. Nobody on this side of the House would disagree with that statement. The Hon. Member also pointed out the initiatives that this Government has taken that have helped the agricultural sector.

I do have some difficulty with the comments of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who should know better since he has been in touch with the agricultural community for many years. The Hon. Member spoke about the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture having his head in orbit. I would say to the Hon. Member for Algoma that he must have had his head in the sand during the past two years, and has not watched what the Government has been doing.

I realize it is very difficult for the Official Opposition Member to speak kindly of the Government, especially considering that it did ignore agriculture for many years. Its advice to the farming community was, expand, expand; spend, spend. Get yourself into a great deal of debt and hopefully you will get out of it. That was the Government advice to the agricultural community for many years. Today, those same farmers who took the advice of the opposition Party when they were in power are the ones who today find themselves in the greatest difficulty.

One of the saddest things that we have to do as Members of Parliament is talk to young farmers who come into our offices looking for assistance. They always say they wish they had not taken the advice of the previous Government and borrowed and spent and got themselves into the position they are in today". The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) should hang his head in shame for the position in which his Government has put many young people in agriculture today. The Conservative Government is trying its best to help alleviate that situation.

• (1730)

I am pleased to outline some of the achievements of the Government. On the matter of the agri-bond program, as was pointed out previously by Hon. Members, the program went before a committee where its proposals were studied. One matter raised before the committee was why anyone would invest in an agri-bond program when he or she could obtain a better deal some place else. Farmers like everyone else will not invest in a program if they can go to the bank and obtain a better interest rate. If the Government must subsidize an agri-bond program, why should it not be done through the Farm Credit Corporation and its programs? Basically that is what we have done.

As the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, when we took office, interest rates were 16.75 per cent. Now they are down to 10.75 per cent. The pressure for an agri-bond program is not the same as it was in 1984.

I should also like to refer to the changes in the financing of FCC. The Government has brought these to light and has looked into financing programs for young people and those who are in serious trouble.

Mr. Belsher: Tell them about the slippage.

Mr. Caldwell: Yes, in an agri-bond program slippage takes place, money is lost, and it requires the setting up of another bureaucracy. Why not do it with existing agencies such as the Farm Credit Corporation?

Some people may not realize just how big is the Canadian agricultural sector. Some 1.6 million Canadian jobs depend upon that sector. It is especially important to western and eastern Canada. Many rural towns especially depend upon the farm community for economic stability. In one way or other agriculture matters to all Canadians.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pointed out Tuesday to the Outlook Conference, when farmers are hurting, the nation is hurting. The Government understands very well the importance of agriculture. We have demonstrated our commitment to the farm community with action. This is why we responded to the problems facing grain and oilseed farmers with a $1 billion assistance initiative, the Special Canadian Grains Program.

The Hon. Member for Algoma pointed out that there was nothing in the Budget for farmers. I point out to him that not everything has to be in the Budget. Over the next year $1 billion will be in the hands of farmers. The program is the largest single special program ever undertaken on behalf of Canadian farmers. However, it is not the Government's only agricultural initiative, far from it. Since the beginning we have placed agriculture at the top of our list. It was a priority at the last two conferences of First Ministers and in the Speech from the Throne. Agricultural initiatives introduced by the federal Government have contributed to the stability of the farm sector. Our actions have benefited western and eastern farmers—all farmers.

We introduced farm debt review boards. At least one board is operating in each province right now. They have the power to halt foreclosure actions against farmers for up to 120 days. This gives farm families the breathing space they need to negotiate alternatives to foreclosure with their creditors. The boards are in place to help them do that.

We introduced new and more flexible lending programs through the FCC. The commodity-based loan program has proven to be very popular with farmers. It now represents close to half of all new FCC lending. The shared risk program represents 13 per cent of all new lending under the Farm Credit Act. We committed $80 million to writing down rates over five years on about 5,600 high FCC loans.

We also introduced the Canadian Rural Transition Program which, for the first time, extends benefits to farm families that have reached the point where they are financially unable to continue farming. So far three out of four applications, on average, are being approved.

We introduced a lifetime capital gains tax exemption of up to $500,000 on the sale of farm property. We introduced farm fuel tax rebates which will amount to a savings to farmers of about $160 million over two years. We are pushing harder than ever to sell Canadian grain, and we have met with success. This year we signed a new long term grain sales agreement with the Soviet Union, calling for the purchase of at least 25 million tonnes of Canadian grains. We reached a five year agreement for 2.5 million tonnes with Egypt. We also reached a three year grain deal with Brazil. Nowhere are these achievements on the international grains market more important than in western Canada where most of our grain is produced.

Finally, the approach of the Government has led to lower interest rates. Every one-point decline in interest rates represents an annual savings to the farm community of more than $100 million. Despite our many initiatives on behalf of farmers, we recognize that everything is not right yet. We intend to do more.

We believe that long term stability of the farm community depends upon Governments and farmers working together to plan the future. This is why the national agricultural strategy is so important. Every federal and provincial Minister of Agriculture has endorsed it. The strategy is our blueprint for the future. It is not a detailed plan of action. Rather, it is the framework within which Governments and farmers can work together.

The Government is certainly not ignoring the agricultural sector of Canada. We will continue to bring in programs to benefit farmers across the country, from the East to the West. They can count on us as a Conservative Government to do a good job for them.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great pleasure to speak today on the motion concerning the agri-bond program presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). It reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing an agribond program that would provide for low-cost loans to hard pressed Canadian food producers.

Essentially I agree and have agreed for some time that some system must be established to take the burden of debt, particularly high interest rates, off the backs of Canadian farm producers. However, I wonder how many Hon. Members remember that five years ago interest rates in Canada reached 22.75 per cent. Since that time we all know that they have come down.

During the debate today it was interesting to hear an Hon. Member opposite talk about commodity loans at 6 per cent, 7 per cent, and 9 per cent, and about some FCC loans presently being as low as 7.5 per cent and 8 per cent. This is not to say that the motion before us is not a good one. I think it is the long term solution to a very difficult cyclical problem experienced by farmers. At times they may be doing well and commodity prices may be doing well. Then they are hit with drought, sometimes repeatedly, or a plague of grasshoppers. A number of such things can happen to them. Suddenly the benefit of the one good year is taken away by four or five bad years. There must be some way to improve the situation, and possibly an agri-bond program could do it.

Let us look at what has happened since the Government took office. Let us look at the trend and direction it has taken. I do this because I think the agri-bond issue is not the priority it was when interest rates were running from 18 per cent to 22 per cent. Although it still should be held high on the agenda and not put on the back burner, the emergency of four years or five years ago does not exist today.

Direct Government payments to producers have increased by more than fourfold, from $659 million in 1980 to an estimated $2.8 billion in 1986. To that $2.8 billion we can add another $1 billion for the 1986-87 fiscal year. One payment comes next spring, $300 million and $700 million. Direct Government payments have been particularly high since 1984. Let me repeat that. Direct Government payments have been particularly high to the farm community, the food producer, since 1984. In 1986, direct payments accounted for more than 10 per cent of total farm cash receipts of the average food producer in Canada. That is increasing and has increased since because of this last pay-out. That is a massive subsidy and a massive direct payment to the food producer, one that I support.

Interest rates at the same time have drastically reduced the carrying costs of farm debts through the farm debt review boards that our Government has established and through the Farm Credit Corporation. There have been write-downs on interest rates. There have been programs jointly put into place and jointly agreed to by the various provinces and the Government. All of those things have worked together to reduce substantially the carrying costs of any debt load a farmer might have.

It is not all roses yet. We know we have problems. We know, for example, that there are farmers still losing ground. Their equity base has eroded completely. Many small businesses are in exactly the same position. I have always considered the family farm as a small business. It is treated that way under the tax system and by the producer himself. The lending institutions have always looked at it that way. There is something very special about a food producer. Without him our whole economy deteriorates and falls apart. It has often been said—I forget who said it—you can burn down a city and you can burn down a town, you can destroy the city and you can destroy the town, but like magic, like mushrooms, they will spring up again somewhere else. But if you destroy the farming community, the land and the farms, the cities will wither and die. That is very true and we all know that.

I wonder whether all Members realize that the total federal and provincial Government expenditures for agriculture have today increased to about $4.5 billion annually.

Let me come to agri-bonds. One of the problems with the agri-bond is how to design the instrument in such a way that it will be attractive either to retiring farmers or to the investment community. As a result, it is taking time to study. Members who have worked on this question recognize the real necessity of an agri-bond system which would take some of the burden off the taxpaying public in the programs that we have established. How do we do it is the question. How will the instrument be sold? How will it be presented to the public in general. Those are the questions to be answered and they are under study. I do not think just because we have not brought in an agri-bond, as we indicated we would, that this concept is dead or that we have put it on the back burner. It is not a priority at this time because interest rates have descended from the 22.75 per cent, the very high of five years ago, to the present levels which have become quite manageable. Many producers have interest rates at the 7 per cent level.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that over $5 billion in credit at reduced interest rates has been provided to farmers in financial difficulty through various federal and provincial programs since 1981, primarily programs designed for refinancing. All steps that are taken are taken with the idea that sometime we may come up with an agri-bond that will take some of the burden away from governments. The majority of farmers in financial difficulty are being financed today by federal and provincial credit agencies.

I am not sure whether the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap whose motion is before us today would accept the idea that federal and provincial credit agencies should do all of the financing. That seems to be the kind of thing that would sit with the philosophy of the New Democratic Party. In my view, the agri-bond itself would be a private instrument, probably marketed through the chartered banks, credit unions or the financial institutions across Canada, or the financial markets, in some way, listed on the stock exchange. One would hope that that kind of instrument could be developed and that is what we are looking at.

I am rather surprised that the Member put this motion before us when $5 billion in credit at reduced interest rates has been provided to farmers in financial difficulty from various federal and provincial agencies. I see that you want me to wind up, Mr. Speaker, and I will. But let me say one thing. Today the majority of farmers in financial difficulty are being financed by federal and provincial credit agencies. I firmly believe that we will develop an agri-bond in due time.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to get into this debate primarily because of some of the things the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) stated. I want to respond to them before I deal with the agri-bond issue. He asked the question, I think, rhetorically, do we support the family farm. Let me tell the Hon. Member that that has been a Conservative policy over the years. I do not have to tell him of the popularity of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) who is known throughout Canada. If he goes into a riding such as min,e where century farms abound—I am sure they do not in other parts of the country—and talked to the farmers there he would find that they remember with tremendous affection the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who was the Agriculture Minister in the Diefenbaker Government some 25 years ago. He was an example of the feelings all members of this party have towards farmers.

Granted, farmers have had a plethora of problems coming at them from all sides; drought and insects in the west, heavy rains in the east and high fuel prices—you name it, the farmers have been bothered by it recently. However, those problems have all been met by a sympathetic Conservative Government, not with the Salmon Arm salute which the former Prime Minister gave, not with the question, why should we try to sell your wheat. They have been met with real answers; cash where it was possible, credit where it was necessary.

I took last week off and drove by car to Des Moines. That is a long drive at this time of year. I took three young men from my constituency. They are all involved in agriculture in one form or another. We went there to sit in on a conference put on by a firm which publishes a magazine called Successful Farming. The conference was called "Adapt 100". When the ad for this conference was first brought to my attention by a young neighbour, a very aggressive, thoughtful and, I think, successful farmer, we looked at it together and decided we should go down, listen in and see what they were doing. We were astounded. They set out 100 new ideas for farmers, 100 ways that farmers could improve their marketing and production. There were ideas to change methods of production. There were ideas covering all aspects of farm life. What a tremendously encouraging sight it was.

The conference was going to be held in a convention centre in Des Moines. That is not a very big city, about the size of Ottawa. Before they were finished they had to move the opening ceremonies to an arena; over 5,500 people came to that conference just to hear the new ideas. They started at seven o'clock in the morning and went through until nine o'clock at night, thirsty and hungry for new ideas.

Some of the things that came out of this conference were very interesting. One thing I learned was that on average 50 per cent of U.S. farm income last year came from government subsidies. I would like to relate a couple of vignettes from which I got a great chuckle. One chap was expounding about farmers producing corn at $50 a tonne and losing money, whereas Mr. Kellogg sold that corn for $3,600 a tonne and you can bet your life he made money. That same corn was sold for birdseed, together with other grains, at $2,800 a tonne. Once again, everyone made money.

I want to deal a little more pointedly with the motion. The issue of farm finances has been one of this Government's highest priorities. Agri-bonds were proposed as a means of providing farm credit at more favourable interest rates. The Government introduced a number of other measures to this end in its short two years of life. Our initial steps to help farmers included reduced interest rates for those FFC borrowers who were locked into higher rates. The shared risk mortgage program has been dealt with at some length. In addition we expanded the mandate of the FCC appeal boards to provide third party review of farm credit loans under foreclosure. We made farmers effectively free of the federal sales tax on farm fuels and increased the maximum advance under the Advanced Payments for Crops Act.

I know that at least one more of my colleagues wants to speak in this debate so I will move quickly. Others have mentioned, and I will not repeat, the federal Budget which announced farm assistance programs and commodity-based mortgages of which my friend from Algoma was so critical. Farmers in my area seem to find some benefit from that program. Then we have the rural transition program. In addition, assistance continues to be provided to farmers through the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Agriculture Stabilization Act, crop insurance and dairy and other programs of the federal Government. Direct payments to producers under these programs exceeded an estimated $1.5 billion in 1985.

I will close by saying that our commitment to agriculture was reconfirmed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on October 3 when he indicated in this House that he intended to deliver an additional $1 billion into the hands of Canadian farmers. Just this past week he appeared before the Agriculture Outlook Conference with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and announced details of the plan which you and I and others know has been so well received. We are not embarrassed at all over the fact that the agri-bond program is not yet in place. This Government has done a tremendous job for farmers and will continue to do so.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I must commend the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for his speech. He touched upon many of the points about which I was anxious to speak. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) insinuated in his remarks that if the Government did not adopt this motion it would show that it did not care about farmers. Nothing could be further from the truth and he knows it. He should not use insinuation to get his point across. However, maybe that is what the job of being in opposition is all about. Nonetheless, I can assure all Members of this House that the actions taken by this Government are on the side of farmers and agricultural production.

In the few remaining moments I have I would like to touch upon what we as a Government have done on agriculture in relation to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. We have been pushing for the inclusion of agriculture in the new round of negotiations. We have been successful because of the efforts of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in making the issue of agricultural subsidies a major point of discussion at the Tokyo Economic Summit last May. The Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board succeeded in bringing together representatives of the world's five major grain exporting nations in Whistler, B.C., to discuss this issue. The Secretary of State for External Affairs led Canada's delegation to Uruguay for the new GATT round. He, in concert with other nations, successively pushed for inclusion of this item in the GATT round. That is just another example of how this Government is concerned about the welfare of farmers and about what happens in agriculture.

In conclusion, our action plan for agriculture is very clear. The Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings referred to the $1 billion pay-out this week. I can say that we will continue to represent the interests of farmers at the international level and of course here in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—REVIEW OF PRIVATE PENSION PLANS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that you had the benefit of knowing my late father. That is most unfortunate because I know you would have liked him very much. My late father was a man who our friends and colleagues in the New Democratic Party would have described as an ordinary Canadian. To me he was a very extraordinary Canadian, just like your own father, Mr. Speaker, just like millions of other Canadians across this land.

One thing that was dominant in my father's life was his pension plan. His pension plan was extremely important to him and played a major role in all the decisions he made throughout his adult life. That was understandable. I know you will understand that when I tell you that my father worked for one company for more than 40 years. He went through the Great Depression, as did so many others. He knew what it was to work, he knew what it was to be out of work, and he knew what it was to have the fear of a lack of financial security. That fact was a great influence in his life. Financial security and his pension were always important to him because he had lived through the Depression.

In addition, he lived through the Second World War. He knew the problems of financial security and the lack of financial security which resulted from the Second World War. He knew the problems of widows and children who had no breadwinner in the family and had no financial security.

Throughout his entire adult life he worked with people from similar backgrounds, people who had the same concerns and experiences, people who knew the problems of a lack of financial security. He knew as well of the financial security, concerns and problems of single women because he supervised a great number of women. At that time the women in the workforce were mainly single women. Women were and still are underpaid and still lack adequate pension plans. It was most important to them to have at least a modest form of pension plan. That financial security was an essential cornerstone of their existence. My father knew as well of run-away inflation which ate into savings and pension plans and turned them into a very modest sum compared to the work done to save for retirement.

In addition, he knew the background of his ancestors, his father, his grandfather and his great grandfather. In the history of our family people have died in abject poverty because there were no pension plans, there was no security. It was through the combination of all these influences on my own father's life and, through him, on my own life, that I understand, just as he did, how important pension plans were and are and what a major role and priority pensions play in the lives of so many people.

I know your father, Mr. Speaker, would feel devastated, as my father would, if suddenly his pension plan collapsed or failed. That is something on which you and I, Sir, as guardians of federal pension plans, must keep a very close eye. I am concerned, and I am sure you are as well, Mr. Speaker, that two banks have gone under just in the last short while. That is why, again, it is so important that all pension plans under federal supervision be properly looked after and policed.

The Auditor General has given us a warning that there is some problem and we have to be on our guard that perhaps these pension plans are not being adequately policed. Therefore, we have to ask ourselves, for instance, about the lack of on-site inspections, the question of proper appraisals, investments, real estate or mortgages, about loan concentration problems and why 16 financial institutions under federal control and supervision have failed since 1980. Those are all questions we must be concerned about. I know you are just as concerned, Mr. Speaker, as myself.

We are happy that our own Department of Insurance is coming out with a new Pension Benefits Standards Act as of the first of the year. We are happy that all of the ways of looking after these things are being reviewed, but at the same time we want to make sure they do an even better job than they have been doing. I hope tonight we will receive assurances from the Parliamentary Secretary that those pension plans of Canadian senior citizens which are supervised by the federal Government will be adequately protected not only for today but for years and years to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in answering the question and comments by my hon. colleague, I would first like to stress that those plans mentioned by my colleague, the pension plans, are examined when they are tabled. Secondly, they are reviewed at least every three years or at even shorter intervals. Such examinations involve ascertaining that those plans meet legal requirements, assessing actuarial liabilities and reviewing the assets of those pension plans to make sure that they are properly run.

The report of the Auditor General actually refers to another inspection program, an on-site inspection program as opposed to the review program I just mentioned. Admittedly, on-site inspections are not carried out by the Department of Insurance in the case of every plan. But the program has been giving very satisfactory results to date, and there have obviously been fewer on-site inspections than for the rest.

The Auditor General clearly raised a number of questions dealing with the inspection practices of the Department of Insurance with respect to the supervision of pension plans. At that stage, the Department of Insurance, as you know, Mr. Speaker, initiated a study to get the facts and verify the allegations of the Auditor General.

• (1810)

That study would include a detailed cost-benefit analysis of increased supervision, based on the fact that most of the cost of that increased supervision will be assumed by the pension plans themselves in the form of registration fees required by the law.

We know, Mr. Speaker, and no doubt my hon. colleague knows that 95 per cent of the contributors of those pension plans under federal control contribute to specific benefit systems. If the investment performance of the plan does not meet the actuarial projections, the employer has an obligation to complement the assets portfolio so that adequate provision is made for the payment of benefits.

I therefore think that this should alleviate the concerns raised in the remarks of my hon. colleague. He also knows that the Government is presently drafting changes in the federal pension plans legislation.

A number of changes have already been introduced and will result in improved survivors' benefits, pension transferability as well as a faster devolution of pension rights.

These explanations, Mr. Speaker, should take care of all the concerns expressed by my hon. colleague.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO REINSTATE DEMOCRATIC SYSTEM IN KANASETAKE INDIAN BAND

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 I put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) about a particular problem at the Kanasetake Reserve in Oka. The reserve is now referred to as Kanasetake. Before, it was Oka, and I say this for the benefit of those who might not have been aware of the change.

Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister whether he had the authority to intervene in matters concerning the manner in which the band's chief and council members are elected and how they administer the band.

The Minister replied that he did not intervene or interfere with the elections or customs of the Indian government of the Oka band.

Mr. Speaker, what happens when there are two factions with totally different positions and there is a tie? Who decides? Does the Minister intervene to "split the band" or does he try and find out what the problem is with the system?

Mr. Speaker, I have here a submission that was presented to me by representatives of the Kanasetake Indian League for Democracy, which says: That in 1979, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had recognized a hereditary system according to the Custom & Hereditary Chief formula, with 81 people who raised their hands in the hall, although there were 270 members who were eligible to vote present. That is what that this group had to say.

The band council, elected according to the hereditary system, says that they were duly elected according to the system they had always had, and that after elections were held in 1971 and 1979, the Indians who were against the system went to court. There were a number of problems with provincial court that heard the case, and later, they said: No, this is a federal matter, and so forth. On November 12, the same clan mothers decided to unseat the big chief they had elected, and the band members who were not aware of this—there might be a communications problem—but they were not aware of this at all, and, Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier, they came to see me and asked me to intervene. I will read the last paragraph of the letter which says, in English, and I quote:

• (1815)

[English]

On behalf of the Oka Band Members who have signed this petition, I will appreciate this matter being addressed to the House of Commons without undue delay, from the viewpoint of acquiring government recognition of the fact that the people of Oka, no longer, cannot nor will not tolerate a dictatorship and are in desperate need of government assistance to entrench the democratic process once and for all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I was told 230 members of the Kanasetake Band had signed the petition, out of 537 registered members. The petition reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, members of the Kanasetake Reserve, would like to select candidates for the big chief's position and for other chief positions that will be available in the future. We also want to be able to have a say in the final selection and also in the term of the chief's mandate".

Mr. Speaker, it seems important to me that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) should be involved in an issue as basic as democracy when a dispute seriously divides a community plagued with economic conditions of a most prejudicial nature because many of its members live on welfare and there are no jobs. The Kanasetake Band does not live on a reservation as defined by the Indian Act. This is rather a federal land. This fact has given rise to various problems because they would like to be recognized and have their own territory.

Recently a decision was made and their land claim is now completed.

Now I would like the Minister to tell us what he intends to do about solving once and for all the problem raised by the Kanasetake Band's election system and since a new chief has just been elected it would perhaps be possible and I am looking forward to a reply from the Parliamentary Secretary on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) has raised a question about the Kanesatake Band system of local government and more specifically the method of selecting the chief and council. The present system of government, which is sometimes referred to as the life chiefs system, is rooted in the customs and traditions of the Iroquois confederacy and is viewed by many band members as a vital link with the Mohawk cultural tradition and a guarantee that the future maintenance of Mohawk identity will continue.

The band members opposed to the traditional chiefs' system are of the opinion that such a system is elitist and that it perpetrates the domination of the band membership by a few individuals. It should be noted, however, that the current system was adopted voluntarily by the majority of the band membership in 1969. Therefore, the solution for which the Hon. Member is looking lies within that system. It is the right and prerogative of the band members to amend or reject the current system by an additional majority vote.

As has been stated in the House, it is inappropriate for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to interfere in any of the band affairs or to attempt to alter unilaterally its elective system. With respect to the Kanesatake Band there is also a compelling legal reason restricting ministerial action on the band's elective system. The lands occupied by the Kanesatake Band known as the Oka Reserve were purchased by the federal Government in 1945 for use by the band. However, strictly speaking the lands are federal Crown lands, not reserve lands, although they are commonly referred to as such. Therefore, the election provisions in the Indian Act, which apply only to reserve lands, cannot be invoked in this case.

• (1820)

As mentioned earlier, not only would a ministerial intervention be inappropriate, but the Minister is not in a legal position to take direct action to solve these difficulties. Officials are prepared to continue to work with the various factions in the band to seek a solution. The Minister is sympathetic to the difficult situation faced by the band, and would like to see a successful and early resolution of the problem. However, it must be recognized that the initiative to change is essentially in the hands of the band membership itself.

COMMUNICATIONS—VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENTS—RADIO LICENCE FEES

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, on June 26, 1986, the then Minister of Communications tabled legislation in the House which would require that federal and provincial government departments, agencies and municipalities, pay radio station licence fees on the same basis as private users. The consequences of this measure were not immediately apparent, but in due course they became known.

The many volunteer fire departments throughout Canada were included with those organizations which were going to be required to foot the bill for these changes. It was my feeling that those volunteer agencies could not afford this, and it should not be required.

In the course of the next few weeks, while continuing to receive more and more requests from unhappy volunteers, I made representations to the Hon. Minister on behalf of my constituents, and indeed all of Canada's volunteer firemen. Local fire departments and municipalities began a concerted effort to convince the Department of Communications that this measure was neither beneficial nor cost effective for our many volunteer fire departments.

Many of them passed resolutions such as the following:

WHEREAS fast, dependable communications are necesssary for municipal police, fire and public works departments and are demanded by the public they serve;

AND WHEREAS two-way radio plays a vital role in the communication network of most Nova Scotia municipal units;

AND WHEREAS a news release dated June 26, 1986 from the office of the Minister of Communications (distributed to N.S. municipal units by the Halifax office of DOC on September 9, 1986) stated that starting April 1, 1987 municipalities, along with provincial government departments, will pay radio-licence fees on the same basis as private users;

AND WHEREAS this will result in a 400 per cent annual increase to the cost of obtaining radio licenses;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Union of Nova Scotia Municipalities requests the Government of Nova Scotia to do everything possible to attempt to have the Department of Communications reverse their policy of license fee increases;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Union of Nova Scotia Municipalities forward its concern over this unfair cost increase to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities for support at the national level.

The small municipalities and the volunteer fire deparments are the focal points for many of our rural communities. These dedicated citizens who devote so much of their time to public service certainly deserve and indeed have been assured of this Government's support and encouragement.

In the Throne Speech we promised further support to encourage the growth of volunteerism in our society. The proposed increases in radio licence fees would have averaged 400 per cent in Nova Scotia. I received 18 written submissions from volunteer fire departments within my riding seeking my co-operation and assistance in opposing these increases.

At the conclusion of the many strong representations made to the Hon. Minister in the House last Monday, I asked whether or not she had been able to resolve this matter. I was very pleased to hear her response, which I shall read:

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for South West Nova for his representations on this issue. Indeed, I have received representations on the issue from a number of other Members.

I should like to advise him and the House that I have decided to defer for the time being any changes to the regulations as they apply to radio licence fees for municipalities and volunteer fire departments.

• (1825)

I should like to commend the Hon. Minister and the Department of Communications for accepting the recommendations made on the matter. Indeed it is gratifying that the outstanding efforts of many volunteer firemen have been acknowledged in this way.

Since the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Mailly) is present in the Chamber this evening, I ask her to make a few comments on the subject.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the question of my colleague. As the Minister said in response to his question of December 1, she gave serious consideration to his representations and concluded that she would not change anything to the preferential treatment now given to municipalities, therefore to volunteer fire departments in the communities represented by the Hon. Member and in other localities throughout Canada.

The Hon. Member had asked the Minister whether she would be prepared to refrain from taking regulatory measures likely to increase municipal radio licence fees. If I understand correctly, the Hon. Member's question specifically related to volunteer firemen, and his concern was due to the existence of the Bill which had been introduced in June and to which my colleague was referring.

First I should like to point out that Bill C-3 which will probably come up for second reading tomorrow and which has already been studied by the Senate has nothing to do with regulations governing municipalities and volunteer fire departments. Therefore he should not worry. This Bill has nothing to do with municipal preferential treatment. It is simply a matter of making the provinces and federal Government departments pay their share of radio licence fees. Until now, Mr. Speaker, both these groups had been exempted and Bill C-3 concerns them, not the municipalities.

The Minister will be holding consultations precisely to decide just how municipalities should fare with respect to the cost recovery operation mentioned by the Minister of Finance in November 1984. Clearly the Minister does not want to create problems for smaller municipalities and she understands quite well the importance of volunteer fire departments as well as the services they provide to thousands of small municipalities throughout Canada. Therefore, she will show the greatest responsibility and compassion before deciding what to do regulation-wise concerning municipalities. But it is not for today and it has nothing to do with Bill C-3. I should like to assure my honourable colleague that the Minister has duly received his representations and indeed, she has personally congratulated him for the effort he is making on behalf of his constituents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 6.29 p.m. the House adjourned.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CHRISTMAS STAMP POSTAGE RATE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter from Denise North of Richmond, B.C., and I would like to share a part of it with the House. She writes:

This letter is concerning the 29-cent stamp that was issued at Christmas, as it can be used only on envelopes that have a matrix imprinted on.

This is unfair to a lot of Canadians who already have their cards from last year or from organizations who haven't taken part.

In the past few weeks we have seen supermailboxes that open easily, keys that fit all boxes, and now tick and stamp envelopes. When will Canada Post take the delivery of mail seriously and stop creating two classes of citizens? Some Canadians can send Christmas cards for 29 cents, and some Canadians have to send Christmas cards for 34 cents. Why can a 29-cent Christmas stamp not simply be a 29-cent Christmas stamp without having to buy a special envelope that ticks?

AIRPORTS

LONDON AIRPORT—IMPROVED FIREFIGHTING SERVICE

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, airport safety is of great concern to the people of London—Middlesex and indeed to all Canadians. Safety has been the cornerstone of all the Government's transportation initiatives. No stone has been left unturned.

The crash firefighting rescue service standards set by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) exceed the standards set by the ICAO. In fact Canadian standards are more stringent than those of the Federal Aviation Authority of the United States. A regular monitoring system of the people and equipment to do the job is in place. Category levels of service are appraised annually.

• (1105)

London airport will receive the new rapid-intervention vehicle which has both dry chemical and foam firefighting capabilities. Our Government is committed to safety. We will have the highest standards of people and equipment. As far as this Member of Parliament is concerned, safety at the London airport will not be compromised.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT RURAL SERVICE NOT BE CHANGED

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post project designed to curtail rural services drastically has shaken the 30 per cent of Canadians who live and work outside cities and urban areas. Canada Post intends to close 1,700 rural post offices and privatize 3,500 more over the next five years.

The Canada Post legislative mandate is to provide services to Canadians, no matter where they live. Whereas Canada Post is attempting to do away with rural routes; whereas a clan of Conservatives is trying to flout parliamentary traditions by holding secret meetings on this issue; and whereas the Prime Minister is giving us vague assurances that rural mail will not be wrecked, Canadian men and women serviced through Canada Post rural deliveries insist that such services be maintained as a matter of right.

HIGH QUALITY WHEAT—TREATMENT OF PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House a matter of great concern not only to my constituents but to all those producers in western Canada who sold high quality No. 1 and No. 2 wheat during the crop year which ended July 31, 1986. The Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board indicated recently that there may have been some cross-subsidization of prices and, as a result, there is little likelihood of a final payment on the wheat sold during that time.

Since higher grades were sold at a significant premium to the initial prices throughout the crop year, this is not acceptable to producers of those grades. The objective of the pooling system is to provide a producer with the average yearly price of the commodity he delivers, not to ensure a common return to all producers. I call on the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to review this matter thoroughly in order to ensure that producers are treated fairly in this instance, as well as to set policy for the future.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF RETIREES AND EARLY RETIREES FROM 1985

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, older workers in Quebec and throughout the rest of Canada are ever more disappointed by this Conservative Government. I can say that the elderly people who came here to defend the interests of older workers in Quebec left disillusioned. Next Tuesday, in Quebec City there will be a general meeting of all older people who have been victimized by unemployment insurance benefit cut-backs. Similar rallies are scheduled for Montreal, Trois-Rivières, and the Lac-Saint-Jean region.

Quebecers will form a common front to support all retirees and all the 1985 early retirees who are seeking a full repayment of the money owed to them, and to fight against the Government's impending legislation under which there would be two classes of older citizens, to the extent that some of them would not be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits while they are looking for other work.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—DEATHS OF PALESTINIAN STUDENTS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, on December 4, 1986, Israeli soldiers put up barricades to the entrance of Birzeit University on the West Bank. The Palestinian students protested the erection of the barricades with a sit-in. The Israelis shot two students, and violence erupted for 8 days. The end result was that 4 students were killed, 5 are missing, 52 were wounded, and 500 Palestinians were detained by the Israeli occupation forces.

Canada, with its track record as a mediator for peaceful solutions to international problems, should support the call for an immediate international conference on Palestine so as to correct the long-standing injustices to the Palestinian people.

FUNDING OF PLANT GENETIC RESOURCE CENTRE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, just as environmentalists in Canada are trying to protect endangered species of wildlife, plant geneticists at Agriculture Canada are trying to protect Canada's dwindling plant resources which are at risk because the Government has delivered severe cut-backs to agricultural research. The cut-backs last year, and further cut-backs of 22 per cent for 1986-87, have not only forced the Plant Genetic Resource Centre to ignore domestic plant varieties, but have also put our international collections in danger.

Canada holds the world's principal base collections of oats and barley, but it could face embarrassment because it is not taking proper care of its international collections.

When Dr. Charles Bishop, Canada's representative on the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources under FAO, complained to Dr. LeRoux, the then Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture, he was told that the level of technical support and storage capacity at Canada's Plant Genetic Resource Centre "has never been adequate and has in fact regressed over the past three years as a result of major budgetary cut-backs in our branch". These cut-backs must cease.

TRIBUTE TO CERTAIN MEMBERS OF PUBLIC SECURITY FORCE OF DRUMMONDVILLE, QUE.

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to some deserving members of the Drummondville police force. First of all, last June, the Governor General, the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, awarded the medal for bravery to Réjean Paul-Hus.

Last week, acting on behalf of the Solicitor General and the Governor General, I awarded the police medal for distinguished service to 29 members of the Drummondville police force. This medal is awarded for outstanding service, to express the community's recognition for services rendered in high-risk areas.

These peace officers have demonstrated their ability to enforce law and order and their conviction: Justice for all.

I welcome this opportunity to pay tribute to individuals who have such distinguished record and who are dedicated to protecting the lives of their fellow citizens.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

ALLEGED DISCUSSIONS AT IN CAMERA COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Tories are a strange lot!

Mr. Fennell: Not as strange as you are.

Mr. Boudria: It would appear that yesterday in a Tory meeting one of the Tory members of the secret committee to discuss postal issues decided to "stool" on everybody else and to reveal what had gone on at the committee. Here is what the Conservatives in majority, seemingly less one, the one who probably stooled on the others, had to conclude: That Canada Post had made no attempts to interfere with Government plans to raise a first-class postage stamp to 36 cents; that rural post offices should be turned over to the private sector; that group mailboxes are supermailboxes, as some people dare call them, and they should remain; that large publications now benefiting from postal subsidies should lose them.

This appears to be a somewhat quasi-unanimous opinion of the Tory members on that committee. I wonder what the end report will look like. I wonder what the Tory who leaked it will look like once the others get hold of him.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF PROSPECTIVE JEWISH EMIGRANTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in 1979 over 51,000 Jews were allowed to emigrate from Russia. For the last several years barely 100 Jews a month have been permitted to leave. In place of numbers the Soviet Union has adopted a cruel ploy of releasing high profile refusniks to mislead the world into thinking the U.S.S.R. is compassionate.

Nine months ago on February 11, 1986, Anatoly Shcharansky was allowed to leave Russia and join his wife, Avital, in Israel. We were thrilled by this news. However, we were deeply saddened to hear two days ago that Anatoly Marchenko, who was a member of the disbanded Helsinki Watch Group, died in prison. He had been imprisoned in Russia for over 20 years as a penalty for his fight for human rights.

The Soviet Union needs to be condemned in the strongest possible terms for its flagrant disregard of the human rights Accords it has signed.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, after months of indecision, the Government announced the Special Canadian Grains Program which has greatly disappointed western farmers.

As reported in the Winnipeg Free Press on Wednesday, December 10, Bob Douglas, spokesperson for the Keystone Agriculture Producers of Manitoba, a large farm lobby group, said that he was disappointed and that he expected a severe reaction from farmers.

In an editorial in yesterday's edition of the Winnipeg Free Press, the following was reported:

> It took months for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's Cabinet to decide how it was going to face up to its responsibility to assist western agriculture. When the equivocation ended, the Prime Minister used the distress of western farmers as a political tool—

With regard to the delay in the distribution of dollars, the Winnipeg Free Press editorial went on to indicate:

> Mr. Mulroney has no problem rolling aside such stones when he wants to corrupt the federal bidding process or to move a jail, at immense cost, to his own riding.

If I may add my own words, money was always found to bail out banks and to support unknown bank depositors. Money is going to pay off investors in the Bank of British Columbia, and capital gains will be 100 per cent tax-free for many investors. Why do our farmers deserve less?

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

ISSUANCE OF MORTGAGE BACKED SECURITIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the announcement last Wednesday by the Minister responsible for CMHC of the first issue of National Housing Act mortgage backed securities was a milestone in the history of residential dwelling finance in Canada.

The advantages of Canadian equivalents of the popular United States "Ginnie Maes" include the mobilization of further funds into residential construction, the stabilization of mortgage interest rates, and the creation of an attractive senior investment vehicle for both individuals and institutions.

As expected, once a vibrant secondary market and perhaps even a futures market develop, liquidity will be enhanced.

Congratulations are due to the Government, CMHC, and the involved financial institutions for their initiative in creating the new tradable mortgage backed securities guaranteed in terms of timely monthly payments.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES SALE OF ARMS TO IRAN—ROLE OF RCMP IN INVESTIGATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday in Question Period the Minister for International Trade replied to my questions about the Canadian connection to the arms to Iran affair by saying:

—I can assure the Hon. Member that this issue is being thoroughly investigated.

After Question Period and later in the day, RCMP spokesman Belanger apparently told the press the following: "There is no investigation in this matter. There is no file on this matter. No one asked us to start an investigation". Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain the contradiction between what the Minister for International Trade told me and what RCMP spokesman Belanger told the press later in the day? Exactly what is the RCMP doing in this matter? Who is carrying out the investigation? What has the Government found out so far? In short, why is the Government apparently so much in the dark about the Canadian connection in this arms to Iran affair?

• (1120)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with a series of unconfirmed reports and speculative stories, all of which are being actively investigated. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that through our Ambassador in Washington and the United States Embassy, the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised the matter with Secretary of State Shultz yesterday.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Did he get the answers?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am also pleased to inform the Hon. Member that the RCMP have today begun an investigation into this whole matter. The Israeli Ambassador has been asked to co-operate since there has been some suggestion of Israel's involvement. Until such time as some of the facts or speculation that has been circulating can be confirmed, I think it is very unbecoming to comment upon names and a hypothetical situation.

INQUIRY WHETHER CIA DIRECTOR WAS TELEPHONED IN ORDER TO OBTAIN INFORMATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister calls these reports speculative. However, they were confirmed personally by the Director of the CIA, Mr. Casey.

I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister for International Trade or one of their officials have called Director Casey personally to get the information about this affair. If not, why have they not done, so at a time when it is so obviously necessary?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the Hon. Member attended the Foreign Affairs Intelligence Committee hearings. He seems to know more than even Secretary of State Shultz.

Mr. Broadbent: That is possible. Do not rule it out.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact of the matter is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indeed made contact with Secretary of State Shultz. My understanding is that there has been contact with Mr. Casey and with the U.S. Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman and that it would be contrary to U.S. law to reveal any further information at this particular time.

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF CANADIANS ALLEGEDLY INVOLVED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what should worry the Canadian people is that everybody, including the press, already seems to know more about this matter than the Government.

It has been reported that External Affairs now knows the names of some of the Canadians involved in the Canadian connection to this arms to Iran affair. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give Parliament and, therefore, the public, the names now? Will he also tell us why the Government in its laxity in this matter appears to be condoning the actions of Canadians, directly contrary to Canadian Government policy against the export of arms to a country like Iran? Will the Deputy Prime Minister answer this definite question?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may have the luxury of indulging in innuendo and suggestions of wrongdoing without really having all the facts. He suggests that the reports that have been raised in the newspaper are accurate. Which ones does he consider to be accurate? That is not the information that we have been able to confirm at this particular time.

Mr. Gauthier: What have you confirmed?

Mr. Mazankowski: The American Embassy has told the Canadian Under-Secretary of State that it is impossible in the current circumstances to provide any further specific information. Notwithstanding that fact, I am trying to be as forthcoming as I can. I would hope that the Hon. Member would not want me to engage in idle speculation.

Mr. Garneau: Are you the Shultz of the Canadian Government?

Mr. Mazankowski: What I am going to give this House—

Mr. Garneau: Are you the Shultz of this Government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not for the Chair to make any comment on the substance of questions or answers. But I point out that this is a lead question. It is a matter obviously of concern to the Chamber. I think that the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister should be permitted to answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: All I wanted to tell you, Sir, and the House, is that I will not deal in idle speculation and I will not comment on stories that are not confirmed. What I will endeavour to do is provide the House with up to date and accurate information. As the information comes to our attention I will be more than pleased to provide it to all Members of the House and the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NON-DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, one thing the Deputy Prime Minister did confirm was that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had some private conversations with Secretary Shultz. In those private conversations did the Secretary of State for External Affairs get any explanation of why the Canadian Government was not informed about the Canadian connection in the Iran arms affair when the CIA knew about it on October 7?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs got an explanation. Needless to say, my understanding is that Mr. Shultz was rather short on information as well. Nonetheless, I can tell the Hon. Member that we have expressed our concern to the U.S. Government over this state of affairs. Naturally we are concerned about this breakdown.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT'S CONCERN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it appears that it is not enough to express concern. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs present a formal protest to the U.S. Government over the fact that the Canadian Government was kept in the dark on this matter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): As I tried to indicate, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the details of the information available to Secretary of State Shultz. My understanding is that the information, if he had any, was at best very sketchy. Perhaps that is one of the reasons. Nonetheless, we have expressed very grave concern over this state of affairs, and as the investigation unfolds that will certainly be one of the factors taken into consideration.

REFUSAL OF INFORMATION TO CANADIAN AMBASSADOR IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Canadian Government was made aware of the situation 48 hours ago, and it has yet to receive the names of the Canadians involved in this affair. This is incredible.

[English]

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that Ambassador Gotlieb was told either late yesterday or this morning in Washington that he will not be given access to the information which has now been revealed before the committee in Washington?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that it would be contrary to U.S. law at this particular time to release that information.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER CONTACTED UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is not contrary to good relations between allies for one ally to inform another when its nationals are being used for covert operations. This matter clearly involves government to government relations at the highest level. Therefore, has the Prime Minister gotten in touch with President Reagan since this came out in the last 48 hours to express the desire of the Government of Canada, and specifically the Prime Minister's Office, to be fully informed by the President of the United States?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making a number of assumptions in his preamble. I have tried to point out to the House that we are trying to make those confirmations. I appreciate the support of the Hon. Member, who phoned me this morning about another matter, in trying to be of assistance in this whole issue. I appreciate very much the way he has handled it.

The government to government relationship is ongoing and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been in touch with Secretary of State Shultz. An investigation is going on. Clearly that is the process to be followed and it will continue to be followed.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER OBJECT TO TREATMENT BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said on the news this morning that Mr. Shultz did not know anything about it. We are getting most of our information from leaked reports in The Washington Post or other news reports. The head of the CIA himself apparently said that he was informed some two months ago of a Canadian connection. Taking all of that into consideration, does the Deputy Prime Minister not think it is about time that the Prime Minister of Canada raised an objection to the way that we, an ally, have been treated by the President of the United States in this very sensitive matter?

• (1130)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have received no indication that the United States administration has deliberately withheld information from Canada. The key point in the question of the Hon. Member was his reference to "leaked reports". That is what they are and I think they should be considered as such. Until such time as there is some semblance of confirmation about some of these reports and unconfirmed speculative stories, it is, with respect, certainly very difficult to draw the kinds of conclusions which the Hon. Member is drawing.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT KNEW OF POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF CANADIANS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked the Minister for International Trade the following question:

Was the Canadian Government informed in October of this year that Canadians were involved in the sale of arms to Iran?

After carefully reading the Minister's answer I find, as I found yesterday, that the Minister did not answer the question very clearly. Therefore, today I will ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Canadian Government knew, prior to yesterday, from any source whatsoever, that Canadians were involved in either the sale of, or the financing of the sale of arms to Iran?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister for International Trade answered that question very clearly. If she did not, I answered it very clearly this morning. The answer is that the Government was not informed of such activities before Mr. Casey testified before the Senate Committee. I said as well that we have expressed our concern over this state of affairs to the United States Government.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER AND CERTAIN PUBLIC SERVANTS WERE INFORMED OF CANADIANS' PARTICIPATION IN SALE OF ARMS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the arms sale affair has been going on for a number of months. Apparently, the Department and the Secretary of State for External Affairs knew nothing about this. The Minister of State and her Department for International Trade knew nothing. We are told an investigation is under way. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister himself was informed and whether officials now or formerly informed by him were aware of participation by Canadians in the arms sale?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think there is some ruling about repetitive questions. That is the same question I answered a little earlier. I invite the Hon. Member to read Hansard.

Mr. Garneau: Yes or no?

[Translation]

Miss MacDonald: He said no.

[English]

Mr. Garneau: No, he didn't say no.

Miss MacDonald: He did too.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has made reference to rules in this place. The Chair can only comment that if the same question is asked repeatedly, the likelihood is that the same answer will be given repeatedly.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER CONTACTED UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Canadians have become very, very concerned about this issue because the Director of the CIA has given the impression that Canadians have indeed been involved in this very dastardly arms sale to Iran. Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs was unable to get any information from Mr. Shultz, has the Prime Minister of Canada been in touch with the President of the United States? After all, we have now known about this for two days. I assume that this is a serious enough matter that our Prime Minister would talk directly to the President.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again, I think I responded to that question. Certainly it is a very serious matter because Canadians are implicated. They are implicated by speculative stories which have not been confirmed. Surely the object of the matter is to try to determine the facts, to learn whether there is any foundation to this. Certainly if there is, at the appropriate time whatever representations are required will be made.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONTACT UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I can think of no better way to get the information than the Prime Minister of Canada speaking directly to the President of the United States. It is a serious enough matter. Taking into consideration the seriousness of the matter and the fact that every Canadian citizen is very concerned about the reputation of Canada and Canadians, would the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Prime Minister of Canada has not done that? If, in fact, he has not, will the Prime Minister do it now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has discussed this matter with Mr. Shultz.

Mr. Broadbent: He got no answer.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Shultz speaks for the administration of the United States of America.

Mr. Broadbent: But he didn't know.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, I presume if he did not know anything about it, perhaps the President did not either. I am not sure of that.

Mr. Murphy: Ask him.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact of the matter is that those discussions and representations are taking place at a very high level. Surely the Hon. Member would not expect the Prime Minister to become involved without at least having obtained some basis and foundation as to whether the stories are true or not. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Riis: Not very successfully.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have used the mechanisms at our disposal to try to determine what is factual and what is not. The representations between the two Governments will continue.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED EXISTENCE OF SECRET STUDY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for cutting unemployment insurance benefits in Canada. Mr. Speaker, on December 5, when I asked the Minister about the study by Mr. Dickinson on the annualization of unemployment insurance programs, the Minister, and I am quoting Hansard, answered that he was not aware of the study and that perhaps it was the Forget Commission.

I have before me today this secret study that was submitted to the Government in July 1985. I would like to know why the Minister was not aware of the existence of a study that is important to the reform of unemployment insurance programs and why he did not say so at the time?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of unemployment insurance, as the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie knows perfectly well, was examined from May or June 1985 to November 1986. During that period, dozens of documents were submitted, either to the Forget Commission directly or to the commissioners, at their request, and these studies were used by the Forget Commission in making its recommendations. The Minister of Employment and Immigration can hardly be expected to know every single document produced in the Department or at the request of commissions of inquiry on specific subjects.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DOCUMENTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have to say the Minister is not running his department. The secret study I referred to was carried out between November 1984 and July 1985, and if we look at the report on the study, it is identical to one of the recommendations of the Forget Commission. So I still wonder why today, the Minister, who is responsible for an area that is particularly important to Canadians, is not aware of this study. Who is running the Department?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the trouble with the Hon. Member is that he always sees a connection between a document and the way a department is managed. Running a department involves more than being aware or not of the existence of a specific document. The document is part of a range of references the department and the Commission may use in drafting a report and recommendations on a subject that will be examined by the Government and on which we shall be making recommendations in May 1987, as I have said before.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES SALE OF ARMS TO IRAN—U.S.-CANADIAN INFORMATION PROCESS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister with regard to the allegations of a possible Canadian connection to the arms sale to Iran. Can the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House that he is satisfied with the process which occurred through which we did not find out anything about this until several hours after it had become public in the United States? Does he think there should have been information given by the American Government or the CIA to Canadian officials, perhaps the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, beforehand? Is the Deputy Prime Minister satisfied with the process? After all, we are a sovereign country and an independent nation. I think we should have been informed.

• (1140)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question. The answer is no. We have made our expressions of dissatisfaction to this effect to the United States.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since the Deputy Prime Minister said that the Government has expressed its concern to the United States, will he explain whether it has sent a letter of protest to the American officials? If not, is it planning to send a letter of protest to the U.S. officials so that this does not happen again?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have said that we have expressed our concern over the way this matter has been handled. This is the fourth time I have answered that question.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

CONCENTRATION OF OWNERSHIP AND WEALTH

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I was very pleased to see the Government's concern about corporate concentration as mentioned in the recent Speech from the Throne. In an article in this week's Maclean's, the chairman of one of Canada's largest banks lashed out at corporate takeovers. What specific action will our Government initiate to examine the awesome problem of concentration of wealth in this country?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is worth pointing out that the Competition Act that was passed in June now makes it possible for the Government to annul any mergers that have a detrimental effect on competition in the market-place. Second, the Green Paper on financial institutions, written by the Minister of State for Finance, and the Standing Committee study will undoubtedly lead to legislation that will have an important bearing in the area of financial institutions. Finally, my officials are working on this subject to see if there are other changes we could make to the Canada Business Corporations Act. I understand that the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs is looking at corporate concentration as one of its items for study this term. I think that is an excellent idea.

FORGET COMMISSION REPORT—ANNUALIZATION CONCEPT—STUDY'S RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns what I understand to be a secret document, entitled "Option for Change", prepared by Mr. Dickinson. In spite of previous attempts by the Minister to divorce himself from the Forget Commission Report and the recommendation concerning annualization, will he explain the coincidence that the same annualization scheme of Mr. Forget is the one that Mr. Dickinson prepared for his Department one and a half years ago, and which is in the document that I have in my hand? Can he explain that coincidence to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell never fails to be impressed whenever he spots the word "secret" on a document. It does seem to disturb him. I can only tell him what I told his colleague earlier: lots of documents are produced within the Department. As to whether there might be a coincidence or any kind of connection between this document and the Forget Commission recommendations, the Government is not called upon to do anything. It is quite possible that—I have just received the document mentioned by my colleague opposite—Mr. Forget has drawn inspiration from it, but Government policy is not involved at all. For the third time today I repeat that we will make recommendations in May, and until then we will familiarize ourselves with documents of every description, including some which are no longer secret.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF FORGET REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, what is obvious is that Mr. Forget not only drew inspiration from this report, but he also copied parts of it. So can the Minister tell the House how it is that a recommendation which absolutely no-one, no witness claims to have made but which originated from his Department via this report ended up among those advocated in the Forget Commission study? Why is he still trying to divorce himself from this recommendation, which happens to be his own?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I may use words with which the Hon. Member is familiar, he has been unable to uncover a connection between the document and myself, he has established a connection with Mr. Forget. If Mr. Forget saw fit to include it in his report he did not seek permission from the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He quite simply decided to use that document. As I said, we will refer to it at the appropriate time, in May next year.

EMPLOYMENT

GENDER WAGE GAP—WOMEN'S SALARIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is a myth that the wage gap for women is improving. When one examines the statistics closely, they show that full-time and part-time working women, taken together, usually earn only 57 cents for every dollar earned by men. What does the Minister intend to do about the increasing trend to low paid, unprotected part-time jobs into which increasing numbers of women are being forced? This means they are being forced into poverty.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I find the question asked by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East interesting. You know that jointly with the Department of State for the Status of Women, we are examining thoroughly the whole question of women's salaries, women's income and whatever substantial efforts we want to make to improve on women's employment conditions and income.

I think that in the past two years, there have been very clear-cut improvements in the contribution of women on the labour market as well as in their income level.

However, it is obvious that we were far behind and that very few things were done before us. Moreover, we are quite encouraged at present and we will keep doing our job.

[English]

FULL-TIME JOBS FOR WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, since privatization, down-sizing, and contracting out, which are policies of the Government, are threatening full-time jobs particularly for women, what steps will the Minister and his colleague, the Minister responsible for the status of women, take to ensure that full-time jobs presently held by women, particularly in the federal jurisdiction, will not be lost? We are very concerned that they will be lost as a result of these federal government policies.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the problem of part-time jobs is a very complex, one especially since there are some jobs available in both the private and public sectors. Many women prefer that type of employment because again it is easier for them to fit into this combination.

Now the Government is trying to implement—through job creation procedures—the employment strategy, especially women's re-entry on the labour market whenever it is possible or they want it so. We are trying to create a market for full-time jobs but it is a step by step process.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANKS—EFFECT OF PROPOSED OIL DRILLING ON FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He will know that Texaco Canada Resources is proposing to drill exploratory wells in Georges Banks, some of the world's most lucrative fishing grounds. He will further know that the fishing industry and community have expressed grave reservations about such a proposal. Will he indicate to the House his views on this most controversial subject?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the concern of the Hon. Member for South West Nova is obvious because the livelihood of hundreds of fishermen living in this area could well be negatively affected if appropriate precautions were not taken in regard to any drilling proposals on Georges Banks. Until I receive specific technical proposals from Texaco, and the report of the Gulf of Maine Advisory Committee which advises me on this issue, we are not prepared to approve any proposals for drilling on Georges Banks.

Oral Questions

CHRISTMAS STAMP POSTAGE RATES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. This morning I received a letter from Denise North of Richmond, British Columbia. The letter concerns the 29-cent stamp that was issued for Christmas and which can only be used on envelopes that have a matrix imprinted on them. This is unfair to many Canadians who already have their Christmas cards. Will the Minister tell Denise North, and thousands of other angry Canadians who cannot use the 29-cent stamp to mail their Christmas cards, why a 29-cent stamp is not like any other stamp, and why it is not available to all Canadians?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a program that was put in place in 1985 by Canada Post, in partnership with the Greeting Cards Association of Canada, including such groups as UNICEF. The program is aimed at using standardized envelopes which may be processed faster and in a more economical way by Canada Post. The money saved in doing this is given back to the clients of Canada Post through the offering of the 29-cent stamp. I guess it is to the advantage of Canadians who can use it.

INQUIRY WHY CREATION OF TWO CLASSES OF CITIZENS WAS PERMITTED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): According to the letter, Mr. Speaker, this service is not available to all Canadians and, apparently, only a few companies produce this envelope, and both the card and the envelope must be bought at the same time.

I do have a supplementary question. Why does the Minister allow Canada Post to create two classes of citizens, namely those fortunate enough to mail a Christmas card for 29 cents, and others who must pay 34 cents? Does that reflect the Canada Post Christmas spirit?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to make the Hon. Member understand that envelopes are standardized under this program. They are sorted by optical scanners, so Canada Post can save money and pass such savings on to its customers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY CONCERNING PROTEST MADE TO UNITED STATES ON ALLEGED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN ARMS SALE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister relates to his earlier answer. He said a protest has been made to the United States with respect to this Canadian connection. What kind of protest was made?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have said that the Government has expressed its concern over this state of affairs to the United States. I suppose that it was done through the normal channels.

Mr. Broadbent: You suppose?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not sure just what precisely the Hon. Member is after. Is he asking me whether I protested formally or if someone did? Through the normal channels, a protest was made.

NATURE OF PROTEST

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, a protest can take the form of a telephone call to the Ambassador, or a much, much stronger communication. Will the Deputy Prime Minister please come clean with the House and tell us at least—this information—what kind of protest has been communicated to the United States on this serious matter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to obtain for the Hon. Member the precise form of the protest, the time, the hour, the date, and who presented it, and I will report to him next week.

INQUIRY HOW GOVERNMENT CAN PRESERVE QUALITY AND QUANTITY OF SERVICES WHILE CUTTING PROFESSIONAL STAFF IN HALF

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): The President of the Treasury Board being absent, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the President of the Treasury Board stated in the House, and I quote:

> With respect to linguistic training, the Government is still fully aware of the need for this program. We are trying to make it more effective and more properly geared to the requirements of our employees.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the Government announced on November 27 to civil servants and language teachers that it was planning to cut as many as 325 person-years from a total of 703 person-years, a cut of nearly 50 per cent.

How can the Government expect us to believe that it will maintain the quality and quantity of services, while cutting half of the professional staff?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could assist the Hon. Member in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board. As the Hon. Member well knows, we have under review a Bill dealing with language, which Bill may assist and meet the concerns registered by the Hon. Member.

QUALITY OF TEACHING—EFFECT OF STAFF REDUCTION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my question which has nothing to do with the law pertaining to official languages. It has to do with cutting language training courses.

On November 27 the Department announced that 325 person-years would be cut from the 700 or so people who perform this training at this time. How can one entertain the idea that we will improve, as the Minister told me yesterday, the quality and quantity of teaching when half of the teachers are being cut from the system?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member is dealing with a question which he asked yesterday of the President of the Treasury Board, I think the only thing I can do is take it as notice and advise the President of the Treasury Board when he returns to the House.

ENERGY

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD FORECAST OF NATURAL GAS RESERVES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will address my question to the Parliamentary Secretary, who I am sure will be pleased to answer.

Are the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government aware that this week the National Energy Board released a report on supply and demand up to the year 2005? The report reveals what we all know, that is, we are running out of sweet light crude oil. The report also includes the stunning revelation that in 15 years—in the year 2002—we will be running out of conventional natural gas. Does the Parliamentary Secretary remember when we were told that we had 300 years' supply? Is the Government aware of this and, if so, why is it taking steps to make it easier and not more difficult to export all our good easy-to-get Canadian natural gas?

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to answer my hon. friend's questions. The report is a good piece of analysis which will make an important contribution to the debate that is shaping up on energy policy. As the Hon. Member obviously knows, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be meeting with his provincial counterparts in a co-operative way so that they can address the very serious problems outlined by the Hon. Member.

GAS SURPLUS TESTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, eyes glaze over and pens drop when one asks about natural gas. These are really interesting revelations about Canada's future. Will the Parliamentary Secretary answer this question? Why is the Government removing safeguards, for example the gas surplus tests, rather than putting into place protections and policies so that Canadians will have easily accessible, cheap natural gas in the future?

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, certainly some of the domestic downside risks have been outlined in the report that we have received. As I say, it is a very succinct and good report. It is available for discussion by the provincial Governments and Ministers their counterpart in the federal Government. I remind the Hon. Member that he is a member of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources and that the committee is also studying the very serious questions outlined in the report.

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—1986 STATISTICS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. In reply to a question yesterday on co-operative housing the Minister said:

—we have been able to accommodate more than twice the number of households—than any other Government had been able to do in the history of Canada.

From 1981 to 1985 the co-operative housing sector built 5,500 units per year. If the Minister's program is so great will he tell us why not one single unit of co-operative housing has been built this year?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to review my answer. The reply concerning the large number of accommodations was in general and not peculiar to the co-op program. The second part of my answer was relative to the co-op program. The program is new. It took a long time to work it out with the provinces. It is now in place and progressing well.

INQUIRY WHETHER PROGRAM WILL BE AMENDED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has recognized yesterday that there were problems in connection with this program. Could he give us immediately the assurance that it will change the program to guarantee a minimum of 5,000 units per year and allow low income families which are in need of a minimum assistance and who are now excluded from this program to participate?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the co-op program is a market oriented program with a provision to include some lower income families. We have programs to accommodate those in need. They are outside the co-op program.

INCOME TAX

CAPITAL GAINS EXEMPTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. We have learned that the Income Tax Act which will be coming before the House again allows capital gains covered by the lifetime capital gains tax exemption to be exempted from the alternative minimum tax. Can the Minister explain why wealthy Canadians should not pay minimum tax on capital gains and why the Government is giving this Christmas gift to the rich when unemployed Canadians have no pay cheques to look forward to at Christmas?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has stated only half of the situation. For the purpose of calculating the alternative minimum tax, capital gains will be put in income at the full rate and not be given the 50 per cent deduction. The alternative minimum tax will be calculated after that. The division in half of capital gains which ordinary people can do will not occur under the alternative minimum tax.

MINIMUM TAX CALCULATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is telling us that capital gains will get special treatment and if taxed at all will be taxed at half of the minimum tax rate for everything else. Why do the deductions from income in calculating the minimum tax allow people deductions when they have taken the vow of perpetual poverty, made charitable donations and paid medical expenses and, lumped in with those things which are socially worth while, provide another exemption so that people will pay less on capital gains? What kind of gift is that?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, according to statistics I have seen, in the first six months of 1986 the lifetime capital gains exemption has created $3.2 billion worth of new investment in the small business sector alone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. Hockin: The Investment Dealers Association tabled that report last month as the Hon. Member would know if he read it. As a result of that, thousands and thousands of people have been put to work, particularly in small businesses.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT HAS NOT YET AUTHORIZED PURCHASE OF ROLLING STOCK

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Could he inform the House why his Government has yet to authorize VIA Rail to purchase the rolling stock it so badly needs if it is to provide an adequate service to railway passengers?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Transport is seized with that particular issue. As the Hon. Member knows, when I was Minister of Transport I tried to work out an arrangement with the consortium whereby procurement could be made at an affordable level. Those negotiations had gone on for some time and my sense is that the matter is still being considered by the Minister and his cabinet colleagues.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Deputy Prime Minister. I know that he was very committed to transport but I have the feeling that his successor is not, as he has not yet appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport. Can I have the assurance of the Deputy Prime Minister that indeed the Minister of Transport will appear very soon and answer positively to the request of the Chairman of the Transport Committee to appear before the committee to explain the situation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first and foremost let me point out that the current Minister of Transport is as vigorous and active in pursuing good Progressive Conservative government policies in transport as I was, and perhaps he is doing a better job at it. Perhaps that is why he does not have to appear before the committee.

STATUS OF WOMEN

FUNDING OF WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. There is a great deal of concern on the part of many Canadians about what they perceive as being discrepancies in the funding of women's groups. I might add that it is a perception that is shared by myself and a good many of my colleagues. When will the Minister resolve this contentious issue?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the process we use at the Department of Secretary of State for the assessment of all applications is a just and fair one, and I expect to continue that process.

POSTAL SUBSIDIES FOR MAGAZINES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public relies on its national magazines to bring it national and world news from a Canadian perspective. These magazines, including Maclean's and Saturday Night, are key to keeping Canadians aware of news from their own perspective but the financial viability of these magazines will be at risk if their Canadian postal subsidies are reduced.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister want Canadians to read Canadian news from a Canadian perspective? If the postal subsidies are removed, that will not happen. Will the Deputy Prime Minister keep the postal subsidies for Canadian magazines?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian publishing industry is vital to the existence of this country and will continue to be so. The entire question of postal subsidies and the postal corporate plan has been reviewed by a Parliamentary Committee of the House. I would trust that the Hon. Member would allow that Parliamentary Committee to report.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Committee to which the Minister has just referred has suggested that postal rates be cut. That would put Canadian magazines into jeopardy. Does the Minister agree with jeopardizing Maclean's, Saturday Night and Canadian readers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member understood what she said. She said that the committee has just recommended that postal rates, and I suppose postal rates of all classes, be cut.

Perhaps she would allow the House in its entirety to examine that report.

IMMIGRATION

APPEAL BOARD'S OVERRULING OF MINISTER'S DEPORTATION ORDER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL COURT ACTION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on immigration directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Has the Minister come up with a solution or a way of handling the situation of the ruling made by the Immigration Appeal Board in British Columbia? Is he prepared at this time to carry out a further appeal, possibly to the Federal Court of Canada, on this very important issue?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, it is clearly under IAB jurisdiction. No matter how repugnant the activities of this individual, he has certain legal rights. We are within the appeal period and there is definitely an appeal based on error in law.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED WITHHOLDING OF INFORMATION—SALE OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will now make a ruling on a matter raised on December 1 by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The Hon. Member presented a well reasoned argument relating to the legislation recently adopted to permit the takeover of the Bank of British Columbia by the Hongkong Bank. He also provided me with additional information by way of documentary material. I thank him for so doing.

The Hon. Member alleged that during the debate on the legislation in this House, certain information was withheld. He also complained that information which had been provided to a committee of the other place had not been made available to this House. The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) assured the House that no information was intentionally withheld. We are therefore faced with an argument as to whether information was withheld or not.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, together with certain other Hon. Members, feel that they have a grievance because, having co-operated in expediting the passage of the legislation in question, they were not as fully informed of the facts as they should have been. The Hon. Minister of Finance does not accept that the grievance is well founded. He maintains that Ministers dealt with all questions raised in committees of both Houses and indicated that his colleague would be prepared to appear before the Finance Committee to answer further questions.

The situation is one that is familiar in this House. Some Hon. Members believe they have a grievance and, as a result, there is a dispute. However, grievances and disputes do not constitute questions of privilege. They are matters of debate. I cannot find, therefore, that the matter complained of by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has any relevance to parliamentary privilege.

I would like to add that the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is a legitimate one in the sense that it is of very great importance for a Government to make availalble to all Hon. Members working on committees the same information that is available in other places. I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre for his intervention.

POINTS OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO ANSWER

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my response I did not wish to mislead the House. What I wished to indicate clearly was that we are within the appeal period, and that there is an appeal possible on error in law. I did not wish to indicate that we were necessarily appealing, but it is something that the officials may wish to look at. I wish there to be a clear indication that there is a possibility only on the error in law.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has properly brought this information to the House. The Chair would remind all Hon. Members that under our long tradition of the rule of law, all of us must be careful in what is said with respect to a case that is presently before a judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal, a court, or a case that may be appealed. I thank the Hon. Minister for his comments.

CORRECTION TO QUESTION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the course of my questions to the Minister, I used the term "postal rate" instead of "postal subsidy" when referring to the funds from the Department of Communications. I wish to change the word with respect to the cut from "postal rate" to "postal subsidy".

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has noted a distinction which is profound, and which sometimes escapes all Hon. Members and the Canadian public.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I also have a petition which is signed by a number of citizens of my Province of Ontario who are very concerned about low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador, and who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ends all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Forces Base, and cease negotiations with NATO for establishment of a larger base there.

PRAYER FOR PEACE SERVICES—MEAFORT UNITED CHURCH

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to present and support a petition on behalf of the congregation of the Meaford United Church, Meaford, Ontario, in my riding of Grey—Simcoe who participated in the Prayer for Peace Service, and who have now delivered their personal petition for peace to the House of Commons to ensure that all government levels continue to work for peace and harmony throughout the world.

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS POSTAL RATES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): I am pleased to present and support a petition from the residents of Stayner, Ontario and surrounding area in my riding of Grey-Simcoe who protest in the strongest terms the action of the Chairman of Canada

Post who unilaterally has unfairly denied second-class mailing privileges to the Presbyterian Record, the national magazine of the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

This action will raise the monthly mailing costs from $3,600 to $17,000 which is prohibitive. The petitioners call upon the Government to intervene and reverse this unfair decision.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have 10 petitions signed by hundreds of Canadians who humbly submit to the House that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. The tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry in the United States, yet it penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and Canada's culture. Rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens to do irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect to free trade negotiations. This petition is humbly submitted.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions that have been sent to me by citizens in Ontario who point out that in their opinion the training of pilots at Goose Bay to fly under the radar into eastern Europe is a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action that tends to endanger world peace.

The petitioners therefore call on Parliament and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to end all low-level flight training at Goose Bay, and to cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

LOCATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS TRANSFER POINTS—VANCOUVER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions. The first one is from a number of people in the greater Vancouver region who are very concerned about the relocation of dangerous goods transfer points into Vancouver east. The petitioners call upon the House to order the Canadian Transport Commission to immediately relocate the transfer of all hazardous commodities to a location outside the inner harbour of Vancouver, and further, that a permanent solution is finalized to the movement of hazardous commodities which will be acceptable to the citizens of greater Vancouver.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): The next petition is from citizens in Burnaby and New Westminster. It calls upon the federal Government to reject proposals that are contained in the proposed changes to the Patent Act that will impose high drug prices on Canadian consumers, and will be particularly unfair to senior citizens.

The second petition on the same subject is from citizens in Coquitlam, North Vancouver, North Delta, and Langley.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to protest the tax on reading and to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to stop finding reading so taxing. I have received hundreds more petitions in my office from your humble servants who wish to ask you to plead with the Government of Canada to rescind the retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language limiting the access of Canadians to literature and information. This tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet it penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors, and Canada's culture. I hope that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is listening. Whereas, rising book prices have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was hoping that the Minister was listening. I have to advise her that the Chair is also listening and the Hon. Member is going on too long.

Mrs. Finestone: May I deposit these, Sir?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has presented her petition, and the Chair thanks the Hon. Member for the petition and the intervention.

REMOVAL OF MAILBOXES BY CANADA POST

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present to the House a petition on behalf of Parkdale—High Park residents, and to add my endorsement to their call for the House of Commons to intervene and effect a return of their mailboxes, some 700 of which have been removed from Toronto neighbourhoods in recent months. The names on this petition represent residents in my constituency on Springhurst, Spencer, Jameson, Close, and Cowan avenues who have been affected by these removals.

• (1220)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Spadina who also complain about the removal of letter boxes and the great inconvenience which will be caused, especially to the elderly and the young, in crossing dangerous streets to go to farther away boxes.

They call upon Parliament to ensure that these boxes will be replaced and that Canada Post will not remove the boxes again until it has consulted with the communities affected.

Introduction of Bills

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from a number of people in the Province of Ontario who object to the Government's current legislative attempt to change the Patent Act in a way which will cause unnecessary increases in drug prices. They point out that it will hurt low-income people and people on fixed incomes, and that it is an unnecessary concession to Americans in the matter of free trade. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals on account of the increase which will injure Canadians without any assured benefit.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of people in Toronto, Dartmouth, and Halifax, Nova Scotia, objecting to the present low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador, because it disrupts the way of life of native people there who have better ways to earn a living than by being servants on the base.

It also is a provocative act in that it relates to the possible bombing of the Soviet Union by low-level flights. Therefore, the undersigned ask Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and privilege to present a petition containing dozens more names from Senior Power in western Canada. They present a grievance which is common to them, in the certain assurance that this honourable House will therefor provide a remedy.

They petition the Parliament of Canada to reject proposals to amend the Patent Act which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF CN SHOPS—NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present to the House a petition signed by a number of constituents in southeastern New Brunswick, particularly workers at the CN shops. It outlines the CN proposals with regard to the facility and urges the Government to postpone any decision by CN to close the shops until the workers have had an opportunity to appear before the Transport Committee of the House of Commons.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and indeed honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of constituents who again ask the federal Government to reconsider its plans to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They say it will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

They also suggest that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They suggest that the proposals will also result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans, and that it is another example of the Canadian Government's concession to the United States at the expense of average Canadians during free trade negotiations.

They are simply asking the Government to reject the proposals affecting the Patent Act which will increase prescription drug prices to all Canadians.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of petitioners from the area of Toronto. They are deeply concerned about the policy of the Government in terms of the tariff on Canadian books, the limitation on the publication of Canadian books.

I wish to present this petition on their behalf and to point out that the Government's retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information and, therefore, endangers our culture and our economic well-being.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Hon. Member who just presented a petition referred to a tariff on Canadian books, but I think the tariff only applies to American books.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no necessity to comment upon petitions.

Introduction of Bills. The Hon. Minister of Justice, stand; the Hon. Minister of Justice again, stand; the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer, stand; the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, four times, stand; the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington, stand—

Mr. Gauthier: What is this "four times"?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Four times for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Gauthier: Four Bills?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, four Bills. If there are four in the name of the same individual, I do not see any reason I should have to do it four times, just to expedite the business of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to caution the House. If we accept that procedure, an Hon. Member may not be ready to proceed with his first Bill but may be ready to proceed with his second Bill. Therefore, if they are grouped together, they are all stood together.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I understand that, and I am sure the House understands it. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East, stand; the Hon. Member for Peace River, stand; the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, stand; the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, stand; the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, stand; the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, stand; the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, three more times, stand; and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, stand.

LIAISON

REDUCTION OF QUORUM OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been prior discussions, and I think Your Honour would find disposition on the part of Hon. Members opposite to accept unanimously the following motion. I move, seconded by the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner):

That, notwithstanding any standing or special order of the House, quorum on the liaison committee be reduced to 10 from 15.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm what the Hon. Government House Leader has just said. There have been considerable consultations, and I believe there is unanimous support for the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 35 and 39.

[Text]

MR. PIERRE BERTON—GOVERNMENT GRANTS

Question No. 35—Mr. Graham:

In the past ten years, did Mr. Pierre Berton receive any government grants and, if so, in what amounts?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No.

CITY OF OTTAWA—BYWARD MARKET AREA

Question No. 39—Mr. Gauthier:

1. To the knowledge of the government, do Heritage Canada, Heritage Ottawa, the Canadian Institute of Urban Planning and 15 other community associations fear that the construction of high rise buildings in the Byward Market area will destroy its historical character, increase traffic and block the sun from shining upon this 150 year old market and, if so, will the government invite the National Capital Commission to take a position in the matter as soon as possible?

2. Is the NCC one of the principal landlords in the Byward Market area and, if so, will the Commission act as a good corporate citizen by blocking the construction of a 17 storey hotel which would destroy the Market's historical heritage?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Government is aware of the concerns of the numerous groups opposing this project, including those listed above, and the various impacts that this development may have on the area.

The National Capital Commission has made its position known to the Mayor of Ottawa and Council in proposing to support the city of Ottawa in reviewing building heights on the north side of Rideau Street.

There is now reason to believe that the issue will be resolved at the municipal level.

2. As a good corporate citizen and major land owner in this key urban area, the National Capital Commission is cognizant of the fact that the mandate and planning for the Byward Market properly rests with the host municipality, the city of Ottawa. Nevertheless, the Commission shares many of the concerns expressed by some of the organizations noted. In fact, in its plan for Canada's capital, the Commission has identified the Byward Market as a special interest area due to its contribution to the image of the capital. Consequently, the Commission has offered professional assistance to the city of Ottawa if the city wishes to study possible height restrictions in the area, including not only the project site in question, but on the entire block between Dalhousie Street, Rideau Street, Sussex Drive and George Street.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to Orders of the Day, I might advise that the first item of business to be called will be Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, standing in the name of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). My understanding is that there have been discussions and indeed there has been agreement to proceed with this particular piece of legislation through all stages in the House, that is, second reading, Committee of the Whole, report stage and final reading today. I think if you put that proposal to the House you will find that there is unanimous agreement to adopt that course.

Mrs. Finestone: There is no agreement with that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions that Bill C-3 would be introduced at second reading then we would go to Committee of the Whole, report stage and third reading so that if there were views and concerns that Hon. Members wanted to put, and if there were amendments Hon. Members wanted to put at report stage, that opportunity would be available. I know in the discussions that we had with the Government House Leader that was the agreement, but perhaps there have been some other problems. From the interjections that I have heard it appears there is some concern that there might not be an opportunity to debate or to put on the record various points or to suggest amendments. That certainly is not the case. Those opportunities will be provided.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, clearly that is my understanding. I thank the House Leader for the New Democratic Party for that observation. There were discussions and there was an agreement with the House Leaders at a meeting yesterday. I just want to remind the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that we in no way want to limit or prevent the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) from making her points of view and debating all stages of the Bill. We are seeking an agreement to proceed with all stages of the Bill in the House rather than referring it to the committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I was not informed of any agreement to proceed with all stages at this time. I take it our critic, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), has strong views on the question and was not informed either. Therefore, I have to reserve my position for now. I am not saying this is final, but until I have some consultations with the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) whether he would agree to proceed with this measure on second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole? Would he agree to that?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be an advantage to proceed with second reading at this time and then we will see in the course of debate how it evolves and if we can change it.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, just so that there is no misunderstanding at all, we are now going to conduct second reading. Presumably there is an assumption that since we are making a special arrangement through mutual consent to deal with Bill C-3 potentially at all stages today, not necessarily, we are also agreeing that amendments, where appropriate, would be considered as well.

RADIO ACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, be now read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be presenting this Bill for debate today. I may say in looking at it that one could say it is a modest little Bill. Nevertheless, embodied in its intent and proposals are certain more basic assumptions.

Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, will help in promoting economic renewal by ensuring financial equity and prudent administration of a very vital government service, that is, spectrum management, which provides for the effective operation of our telecommunications network and broadcasting system, and helps our enterprises to become and remain competitive.

At the same time, Bill C-3 will promote social justice by ensuring that through licence fees the costs of planning and managing the radio spectrum are shared equally among its direct beneficiaries and not borne by the general taxpayer. In other words, the people who use this service would pay for it, not the general taxpayer. The legislation will eliminate the exemptions that public sector spectrum users now enjoy from licence fees. These exemptions are unfair, since those who enjoy them often compete with private sector users who must pay licence fees.

In this electronic age, the capacity of businesses to offer services competitively often depends upon their ability to communicate quickly and efficiently. This ability depends, in turn, upon a high quality, interference free, radio frequency spectrum. The spectrum is what you might term an invisible resource, but the services which depend on it have clearly visible benefits.

Radio and television entertain and inform. Microwave and satellite facilities give us access to each other and to the world. We can be more confident of safety in the air and at sea because the spectrum is managed effectively to permit reliable radio navigation, air traffic control, radar and two-way voice and data flow. Mobile radio on land ensures a quick response in emergencies, safety on construction sites and in frontier exploration, and efficient and economical movement of people, goods and information. Simply put, Mr. Speaker, use of the spectrum can save time, money and lives.

Since 1912 we have seen the limits of the usable spectrum expand hundreds of thousands of times. Expansion of the usable spectrum has not resulted from some physical accident. It has not come about just by chance. Rather, it has been made possible through the development and mastering of technology that exploits the particular characteristics of each of its parts. Technological innovations such as digital transmission, trunking and cellular technologies have also served to expand the capacity of the spectrum.

In addition to increases in the uses of the air waves, we have also seen vast increases in the number of users. In the past 40 years the number of radio licences in force in Canada has risen over 100 times to three-quarters of a million in 1986. In only 20 years the number of mobile radio stations alone has grown from 60,000 to over a half a million, not including the 355,000 stations licenced in the general radio or CB service.

The Government of Canada, through the Department of Communications, is given the task of ensuring the orderly development and management of the spectrum in Canada. This involves assigning appropriate positions on the spectrum to particular uses and setting corresponding equipment standards.

International agreements are often required to ensure that our spectrum needs are met. These require extensive planning and negotiation with other countries. Domestic regulatory action is also taken to ensure that the spectrum resource is shared equitably among all Canadians. The role of the Government, quite simply, is to allow as many Canadians as possible ready access to a high quality radio spectrum and all its benefits.

Technology has responded to the challenge of mastering the properties of previously unusable portions of the spectrum in order to open them up for practical use. There are new challenges, however, to which a purely technical response is inadequate. We are being called upon to manage, with fewer resources, a radio communications environment made ever more complex by new applications which marry telecommunications and computer technologies. These include digital data, mobile radio and intra-building communications. We are committed to greater efficiency and cost control. The number of person-years devoted to spectrum management has been reduced and is now less than it was 10 years ago, despite sizable increases in the licensed population.

Nevertheless, we are also committed to cost recovery. Bill C-3 has been developed to ensure that legislation affecting the management and use of the spectrum in Canada is an effective tool serving government efforts to maintain the quality of, and accessibilty to, an increasingly crowded spectrum. Our objective is to recover the full cost of this management effort from all its beneficiaries. We wish to remove the exemptions that now apply to certain users and to create, through legislative reform, a more equitable environment for all spectrum users, large or small, public or private.

We have changed the radio licence fee structure significantly since 1984. Radio licence fees were increased substantially for private sector users two years ago. This was in accordance with the principle that the cost of planning and managing the spectrum resource should be borne by the beneficiaries of that effort and not by general tax revenues. Further regulatory revisions, introduced on April 1, 1986, served to make the licensing process and fee structure more responsive and equitable, a step in the regulatory reform process to which this Government is commmitted. I can report that no further general increase in licence fees is now required. Private sector users in Canada are carrying their fair share of the cost of spectrum management. However, under the current Radio Act, public sector users are not.

Public sector radio users have long enjoyed fee exempt status. Over the years this has resulted in regional and sectoral inequities. Public utilities in some parts of our country do not pay radio licence fees, while similar utilities in other parts of Canada do indeed pay. Private sector companies who pay radio licence fees are often in competition with public sector companies who do not. For example, we now have a situation where Alberta Government Telephones, an Alberta Crown corporation, competes head to head with Cantel, a private company, in the delivery of cellular mobile telephone services. Exempting government users from paying licence fees is clearly inequitable. It is also poor management. This change will spread radio licence fees evenly across Canada among 140 provincial government departments and agencies and 40 federal government departments and agencies. The total dollar value is in the order of $10 million based on available data. Government organizations which make only light use of the spectrum should be encouraged to release licences, and thus scarce spectrum resources, for other users. However, the present system creates no such incentive.

Bill C-3 would redress these problems. It would correct the regional competitive imbalances which have crept into the radio licensing system. It would ensure that all users of the spectrum pay their fair share. Its passage would result in more prudent management of government resources. The radio spectrum is a limited resource and is managed for the benefit of all Canadians no matter where they live. The Bill is intended to respond to the new reality of communications in Canada, a reality characterized by a reliance upon competitive forces and equitable management of national resources.

Fairness and equity, cornerstones of this Government's regulatory reform strategy, will be well served by Bill C-3. The common property nature of the spectrum resource requires that it be managed with efficiency and every possible application of equity. It is not only reasonable that all those who benefit from government management of the radio spectrum resource should bear an appropriate portion of the cost. Our commitment to fairness and equity requires it.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act and bring fairness and equity across the spectrum governed by this Act. Although the Bill is only a few lines long we should not be lulled into believing it is not important. It is very important. If passed in its present form it will have important ramifications for those government institutions which utilize radio frequencies for communication purposes.

At the present time the federal Department of Communications is charged with the responsibility of setting the rules for those who wish to use the radio spectrum in Canada for purposes other than broadcasting to the public. The Department regulates these users by means of a licence to operate at a certain frequency and power in a certain place so that there is no interference with others using the spectrum. In short, the Department is concerned with spectrum management. It is an onerous responsibility, not obvious to the ordinary Canadian, but one which impacts on the safety of their every day lives.

This is not the first time this Bill to amend the Radio Act has been introduced by the Government. During the last session of Parliament the previous Minister of Communications introduced for first reading Bill C-126, which was identical to this Bill. That Bill died on the Order Paper when the Government chose to prorogue. Why would the Government choose to introduce such a Bill on the next to last day before it prorogued? The only logical answer seems to be that it lacks a sense of timing and direction in its legislative agenda. If cost recovery is the goal it should have legislated on time.

Bill C-3 establishes a user-pay principle. Current provisions of the Radio Act exempt federal and provincial government departments and agencies, as well as certain Crown corporations, from paying radio licence fees. Bill C-3 would remove that exemption. As a result, those government departments and agencies would pay the same licence fees as a private sector user. That strikes me as being fair and equitable.

Opposition Parties are sometimes accused of being too negative in their approach to legislation introduced in Parliament. I would like to begin by highlighting some of the positive aspects of this Bill and indicating why I am in accordance with it.

The positive feature of charging government departments for radio licences is that those departments may be forced to reconsider whether they really need to occupy a radio frequency. Charging an entity for a service which has previously been provided free may force the entity to reconsider the need for the service in the first place and to become more efficient managers. Therefore, it is possible that some Government agencies which currently hold licences but make minimal use of radio frequencies may decide to surrender those licences. As a result, a number of frequencies may be freed up for users. As the Minister pointed out, there has been tremendous growth in this sector and there is a need to free up frequencies.

The second positive aspect of Bill C-3 is that the revenues generated from the new fees to be charged to government agencies should enable the Department of Communciations to recover fully the cost of operating its radio frequency spectrum branch. Therefore, the radio frequency spectrum branch of the Department would no longer be a drain on the federal Treasury but would become fully self supporting. I certainly support that initiative.

With respect to the private sector fee increases, Bill C-3 should also please those in the private sector who have to date been paying licence fees to support the operations of the radio frequency branch of the Department of Communcations. I understand that for the year 1985-86 private users received a very hefty increase in licence fees. I am sure these users will have a sense of relief, fairness and equity at the prospect that government users of radio frequencies will now be bearing a fair share of these costs. By placing private users and government users on the same footing, Bill C-3 will reduce one advantage previously enjoyed by government, namely, the exemption from radio licence fees. For example, when a Crown corporation such as Petro-Canada communicates through radio frequencies with its drilling rigs, the corporation will now be assessed licence fees on the same basis as would a private oil company such as Texaco.

I understand that the Crown corporation known as Alberta Government Telephones has been exempt to date from paying licence fees with respect to its cellular telephone operations. The Minister alluded to that in her speech. Yet, private firms competing with Alberta Government Telephones in the same cellular telephone market have been paying radio licence fees. Bill C-3 should eliminate this particular cost advantage enjoyed by a company such as Alberta Government Telephones.

The concern I have with regard to that is that there may not be a full understanding and appreciation of the impact of these costs to Alberta Government Telephones. According to the new fee schedule which I received from the Minister's Department, this will cost Alberta Government Telephones $1,089,122. In addition, the Saskatchewan Power Corporation will be charged $59,000. In her speech the Minister indicated that Ontario pays fees while Quebec does not. The cost to Hydro-Quebec will be $437,352. The Nova Scotia Power Corporation will pay $41,180. The New Brunswick Electric Power Commission will pay $26,000. Newfoundland and Labrador Hydro will pay $25,000 and B.C. Hydro will pay $210,790. These are large sums of money. The total for the Saskatchewan Telecommunications Network will be well in excess of half a million dollars. The Government of Saskatchewan will have to pay $695,522. The cost to the Manitoba Telephone System will be close to half a million dollars.

With those amounts of monies involved, I feel very strongly that the views of the hydro companies, telecommunciations industries and the governments upon which this will impact should be heard. For that reason I think that this Bill, although it consists of only three lines, should be examined quite carefully. The people who will be impacted should have an opportunity, through the Government's consultative mechanisms, to know exactly what the result of this Bill will be. I was informed by the Department of Communications of the amount of money involved with respect to licence fees. I hope the Minister's Department was in communication with the Departments impacted in order that they would be aware of the effect on them.

I have listed some of the positive aspects of Bill C-3, but my Party would not be doing its job as the Official Opposition if we did not point out some of the problems which we perceive the Bill may create.

One example is Section 2(3) of the Radio Act. It should be pointed out that while Bill C-3 purports to amend Section 2(2) of the Radio Act, the Bill leaves Section 2(3) of that same Act in place. Section 2(3) gives the federal Cabinet the power, on the recommendation of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), to exempt a federal Government radio frequency user from the provisions of the Radio Act itself. The Cabinet cannot exempt a provincial Government user.

One of the objectives of Bill C-3 is apparently to provide for equality of treatment among all users of the spectrum, be they federal Government, provincial Government, or private sector. Even the Department of Communications itself will have to pay radio licence fees.

Having provided for this equality in Bill C-3, I trust that, unless the Minister of Communications has very strong reasons for doing so, she will not proceed to recommend to Cabinet the exemption of federal agencies from the Radio Act, for to do so would be to remove the equality of treatment which we are told the Bill is intended to provide. If there is no indication of this in the Bill through amendment or the inclusion of some change in Section 2(3) of the Radio Act, there is no way of assuring provincial Governments and hydro electric companies that they will never be subject to an Order in Council which could change the rules of the game, which is allowed under Section 2(3) of the Bill. I think the Minister should consider that. I want to discuss that in committee when the Bill is before it.

Although the Government indicates that the fees to be charged government users under the Bill will be calculated on the same basis as the fees already assessed to the private user, Bill C-3 does not so provide. Rather, the drafters of Bill C-3 seem content to allow the regulations to stipulate that the fee assessment will be the same. This means that even if Bill C-3 is passed—Mr. Speaker, I would like direction from the Chair. I have some very important information and observations to bring to the House with respect to this Bill. As it is almost one o'clock, I ask your guidance. Shall I continue my remarks at two o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, the Hon. Member will have the floor at two o'clock. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Mount Royal had the floor.

[Translation]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I was commenting on the rather significant aspects of Bill C-3 now before the House, a measure which does not appear to be overly controversial—all three lines of it—but which will affect all Hertzian wave users in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, reads as follows:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. Subsection 2(2) of the Radio Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Subject to subsection (3), Her Majesty in right of Canada and each province is bound by this Act."

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Clause 1: This amendment sould repeal the exemption from the payment of licence fees granted to Her Majesty in right of Canada or any province.

It has been recommended that the procedure of the Department of Communications be changed so that expenditures incurred by the Department may be recovered.

[English]

Although the Government indicates that the fees to be charged government users under the Bill will be calculated on the same basis as the fees already assessed to private users, Bill C-3 does not so provide. Rather, those who drafted Bill C-3 seem content to allow the regulations to stipulate that the fee assessment will be the same. This means that even if Bill C-3 is passed, there is absolutely no assurance, other than the good will and the word of the Minister, that government and private sector users of the spectrum will be assessed licence fees calculated on the same basis. I accept the Minister's good will and her word, but it is not law. The Government could still amend the regulation to require one class of user to pay higher fees, be it the Government or the private sector.

Therefore, I hope the Government will ensure that once Bill C-3 has passed, regulations are consistent to ensure this equality of treatment. I will be recommending an amendment to the effect that the revenues be capped to the cost recovery for the Department of Communications, and that fairness and equality be assured for the public and private sector. In that regard, I want to discuss in the Legislative Committee the most effective procedures as perceived by the Department of Communications, the Minister and her staff to be able to provide the equity she talked about in her presentation.

Let me deal with the revenues to be raised by the Bill. According to the recent briefings and figures that were supplied to me by the Department of Communications, I understand that the current shortfall between the amount of revenue generated by the radio frequency spectrum branch of the Department and the cost of operating that branch is approximately $10.1 million. I am also informed by officials of that Department that the Government projects that Bill C-3 will allow it to generate an additional sum of $10.1 million from federal and provincial government agencies.

I want to make two comments about those figures. First, the Minister said this morning that the calculation was not final. Second, the Department of Communications seems to hold the view that the passage of Bill C-3 will lead some government users to give up their licences, thereby reducing the amount of licence fees collected. One wonders if the Government is aware that its projections of $10.1 million in additional revenues would appear to be based on the assumption that all current government licence holders will continue to retain their licences. One also wonders whether there may be far in excess of the $10 million raised by this procedure when we consider all the new users who are presently using this service.

Second, the prediction of $10.1 million in additional revenue to be generated by Bill C-3 also fails to take into consideration that new regulations announced by the Government in its press release on June 26, 1986 will likely generate a further $2 million in revenue from Canadian municipalities. I will have more to say about municipalities later.

It is also noteworthy that the report of the Nielsen Task Force on management of regulatory programs included a graph on page 186 which showed that the radio frequency branch of the Department cost $45 million, with a revenue of only $600,000. The Department briefing indicated that only $10.1 million was needed to make the whole procedure self-supporting. Therefore, one can only conclude that there is some confusion in government circles on exactly how much additional revenue will be generated, how much will be needed and how we can assure that this becomes strictly a cost recovery mechanism rather than an additional revenue generator for the federal treasury.

I support the Government's attempt to institute the cost recovery principle and I think it is very important that it be outlined and defined in this Bill. The Bill should include reference to capping the cost recovery that is envisaged.

I am advised by the Department of Communications personnel that they do not expect that new staff will be needed to assess new licence fees against government agencies and Crown corporations. While I appreciate that much of the additional work can be done by programming computers, I am concerned that the Department may have overlooked one point. The point is that although the names and addresses of the government users are already on the computer file of the Department of Communications, departmental personnel may, after the passage of Bill C-3, have to go out into the field to ascertain the number of base stations and mobile units which are held by each of the government users. Since I understand that the new fee will be computed according to the number of base stations, that is, the number of headquarters, plus the number of mobile units, that is, the units in each individual car or truck, extra personnel may be needed to make these calculations. If this is not the case then it could be cleared up in a legislative committee hearing which could refine and define the procedures which are to be used to evaluate the cost to be recovered from each of the organisms that will be touched by this Bill.

I hope that the Government is aware that Bill C-3 could have important budgetary consequences on certain government departments which are heavy users of radio frequency transmissions. For example, I am in receipt of figures from the office of the Minister of Communications which show that the RCMP will be faced with new licensing fees of approximately $1,012,562 as the result of the passage of Bill C-3. The RCMP was previously exempt from paying such fees. I trust that the Government will not push ahead with this Bill without considering this new drain on the resources of that agency and on the costs to the Government itself.

This is where Clause 2(3) of the Bill could be used by Government and were it could exempt this particular department, and others which I will note. It would restore the whole sense of equity and fairness. For example, the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans will receive a bill for $189,166. I do not know if that is a firm figure or otherwise. I do not know whether the Department knows that it will receive such a bill. The bill for the Department of Communications will be $27,000. As I have said, the bill for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will be $1,012,562. How will that affect the Force and from where will that sum be forthcoming? Will it be a new allocation or a supplementary allocation? For the House of Commons it will cost $10,860.

I would now like to deal with some of the Crown corporations on which this Bill will have an impact. With respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the impact will be $132,204. With respect to TeleGlobe Canada the bill will be $4,364. The figure for Petro-Canada will be $75,791. With respect to Canada Post, which we hope will break even, the figure will be $26,834. I have outlined the cost of a number of these initiatives in the cost-recovery program. The question is who will be paying for it? In the end it will be the hydro and utility subscribers, as well as telephone subscribers.

Although the Government in its findings and in this document indicates that the expense revenue from provincial Government departments will be $4.4 million and $2.7 million from provincial Government agencies, there are over $7 million coming from provincial Governments which have not as yet to my knowledge been calculated into their over-all budgeting procedure. I think the least we could do is allow them to let us know how they are planning to handle this situation. Will it be through an increase in user fees directly to the telephone subscriber, or will it be directly to the user of the electricity and heat that is coming through because they are using this radio frequency to communicate with their fleet of trucks? With respect to the $3 million which will have to come from federal Government departments out of existing budgets there is nothing with respect to municipalities in this legislation.

I am also advised by the office of the Minister of Communications that the passage of Bill C-3 will mean that the CBC, which was previously exempt, will have to pay more. It is a well known fact that the Government has already cut the budget of the CBC. Perhaps I am being too generous when I use the phrase "cut the budget" since it might be more accurate to say that it was savaged. Will the federal Government increase the CBC's budget to cover the cost of this new licensing fee? I will be seeking an answer to that question and others when the Bill is referred to a legislative committee.

I wonder whether provincial Crown corporations such as Hydro-Québec have been made aware that it will face new radio licence fees to the tune of $437,000. I know that there was a short, sharp line in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) back in February that was supposed to have advised all these organizations that they would be receiving bills with respect to radio licence fees. I do not know if they were aware of the extent of the bill. I do not know if they have made provisions for it and what is their point of view. The telephone companies in the prairie provinces which will be required to pay substantial new fees as a result of this Bill may have something important to say about it.

Thus my question is, who will pay in the end? The Minister of Finance will recover these funds into his General Revenue Fund but the provincial Governments and Hydro-Québec will have to go to the users, that is, the taxpayers, with respect to something which is a hidden tax to the homeowner, the businessman and the private telephone subscriber. I hope the Government is aware that this housekeeping cost-recovery measure will cost, and cost us all. It will shift the tax burden once again to the provinces and to the utility companies with no cap on it in its present form.

I referred earlier to the effect this Bill will have on municipalities. I have received correspondence from the head of the municipalities of Canada and from many of the mayors to find out just what was meant in the communiqué which reads:

> Communications Minister Marcel Masse, in a measure supportive of the Government's deficit-reduction plans, today tabled legislation that would require federal and provincial government departments and agencies, along with municipalities, to pay radio licence fees on the same basis as private users, beginning April 1, 1987.

Under the Radio Act as it now stands departments and agencies of the Crown are exempt from paying licence fees. The communiqué goes on to explain why the Minister feels that all users of this spectrum, both public and private, should be put on an equal footing for the first time, which will equitably apportion the costs of the spectrum management among all licence users. We have little indication that there will be any change to that. The Bill is identical, all but in number, to a previous Bill.

The Ministers have changed but the present Minister answered a question in the House which leaves cause for concern and consideration again. In response to a question asked by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau), who asked the Minister if she has been able to resolve the matter with respect to volunteer fire departments which would be required to pay individual licensing fees for their two-way radios which might have an added substantial cost to the operation of such fire departments, the Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for South West Nova for his representations on this issue. Indeed, I have received representations on the issue from a number of other Members. I should like to advise him and the House that I have decided to defer for the time being any changes to the regulations as they apply to radio licence fees for municipalities and volunteer fire departments.
> These changes are quite separate and distinct from those included in Bill C-3 which applied to federal and provincial agencies and Crown corporations. They will be proceeded with. However, the changes as they affect municipalities and volunteer fire departments will not be proceeded with.

The question remains, does that mean at all or for the time being? The Minister can giggle and be as nasty as she wishes, but her answer is unclear. If she were the mayor of a municipality she would have certain concerns. If she were the head of a volunteer fire department she would have the right to a clear and unequivocal answer from the Minister and not just a snicker. That is not an answer, and I would suggest that she take her responsibilities concerning these people a little more seriously.

• (1420)

When the Government first introduced the Bill to amend the Radio Act, it issued the press release to which I have just referred. Was the news release misleading? Was the Minister's answer ambiguous? It does give the impression that either now or some time in the future, at the whim of the Minister, the Bill could certainly have an impact which would require municipalities to pay radio licence fees. In fact, municipalities are already paying radio licence fees pursuant to regulations issued under the Radio Act.

Bill C-3 itself does not target municipalities. Rather, it would appear that the Government intends to amend the regulations with respect to municipalities in order to require municipalities to pay fees on the same basis as private users. Municipalities are presently paying fees on a reduced basis so there had better be some clarification of the equity and fairness to which the Minister referred.

There is no control over fees in this Bill. It is through regulations that municipalities have been charged fees. The intention of the Government is clearer than it would have wished it to be. Did the prior Minister of Communications indicate that municipalities should pay? Is the Government hiding this and will it spring it on municipalities later? I think the Government must come clean on this and I would like it clarified.

Some municipalities may not fully appreciate the additional costs which would be incurred. Those municipalities that use radio frequencies to communicate with garbage collectors, snow removers and street maintenance workers may receive unexpected bills from the federal Department of Communications. Furthermore, municipalities which operate their own police departments, fire departments or ambulance services may also pay more for radio licences. Based on the discussions I have had with a number of prominent mayors of Canadian municipalities, it is not at all clear to them or to me whether or not municipalities have been consulted by the Government about the proposed legislation, or that they have had their fears allayed. I would suggest that in committee, it would be much appreciated if the Minister would table any correspondence in that regard and assure the municipalities of their situation.

In order to clear up the confusion on this issue, the Hon. Member for South West Nova pointed certain things out and received an answer for the time being. I suggest that we should find out the answer once and for all as there remains some confusion about the Minister's comment that she will not proceed with the regulations for the time being. How can municipalities plan budgets?

As I said, I do wish to have this clarified but I do not wish to be obstructionist. I do not wish to cause unnecessary delay, but many people who will be touched by this Bill have concerns. I would suggest that we hear from those people as quickly as possible, as we would when dealing with any Bill that would impose unanticipated taxes or have a large impact. These people have a right to be heard.

I would also suggest that the Bill proceed to a Legislative Committee or the Standing Committee so that various provincial Government agencies or agencies such as the CBC, the RCMP and Alberta Government Telephones will have an opportunity to make representations. I do not expect that the committee's deliberations should have to be lengthy, but I do not wish to deprive interested parties of the right to appear and state their views. I would urge that this Bill be moved to committee and that deliberations take place so we may arrive at the proper decision.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Minister and to the spokesperson for the Official Opposition. I think I understand the objectives of the Government. I am a little bit at a loss, though, as to which side the Official Opposition is on. Perhaps it is on all sides. I heard the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) compliment the Minister in the early part of her speech and then complain about a few things in the latter part of her speech. This causes me to hope that she will have many amendments to move when we get into committee and report stage.

The Minister said that this Bill will help our enterprises, enterprises meaning those that use the public airwaves, to become more competitive and that the general taxpayer will not have to pay for this. I take it from that that she meant that the general taxpayer would not have to pay for the provision of infrastructure and other services provided by the federal Government. She said that the Bill would provide more confidence in safety in the air, at sea and on the land. This causes me to raise the point about the Department of National Defence cancelling all radar, direction, air-speed and ground-speed services to commercial aircraft flying in northern Canada and the high Arctic without the knowledge of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). So much for safety in the air.

When I raised this matter with him earlier in the week, the Minister of Transport was good enough to send me a letter the next morning saying that he was looking into the matter. I suspect that he was slightly annoyed about it. I suspect that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) did not know about it either. The Department of National Defence probably did not tell her either that these services for commercial aircraft that had been provided for several decades by the Department of National Defence would no longer be provided as of October 1 of next year.

The Minister said that in terms of domestic services, this Bill would provide for all Canadians to share equally and that it was a part of regulatory reform. I would like to raise a question about this equal sharing on the part of all Canadians. Here we have a situation of the Crown taxing the Crown. Taxpayers' money will be shifted from one pocket to the other or, more accurately, taxpayers' money will be taken out of a different pocket, in this case the municipalities pocket.

Taxpayers have at least four pockets. They have one for the federal Government, one for the provincial Government, one for the municipal Government and another for the educational system. This Bill provides that the federal Government will tell the taxpayers to take this money out of their municipal Government tax pocket rather than their federal Government tax pocket.

In response to a question put in the House by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) about fees to be paid by police departments, fire departments and volunteer fire departments, the Minister said that she would like to advise the Hon. Member and the House that she had decided to defer for the time being any changes to the regulations as they apply to radio licences for municipalities and volunteer fire departments. We, in our caucus, do not think that is good enough. A year from now the Minister may be promoted to a higher level, and a subsequent Minister may decide "for the time being" has expired. Pressure on this Minister by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may require her to decide "for the time being" has expired.

• (1430)

I think the Minister in her heart of hearts has no objection to building an exemption into the Bill for organizations such as police departments, municipal fire departments, volunteer fire departments, ambulances, municipal or volunteer emergency measures organizations, forest fire-fighting operations, and search and rescue operations. Why should non-profit public bodies that are set up by the taxpayers either through a municipal or a voluntary organization, for example, police departments, fire departments, volunteer fire departments, ambulance services, search and rescue operations, forest fire-fighting operations, have to pay for using something that already belongs to them, that is, the air waves in Canada? There should be a fee charged for the use of public air waves for private profit. I agree with that, and I think that my colleagues agree. But surely any public utility or service that does not make a profit should not have to pay, through taxes, for the air waves that they already own.

The federal authority in its provision of the infrastructure for these public utilities and volunteer organizations which operate for the public's well-being and safety has a duty to accept this as part of the service. They pay their federal taxes to provide those services. Why should it be necessary to transfer taxpayers' contributions from the federal taxpayer's pocket to a municipal taxpayer's pocket? Why should they have to pay for something they already own?

In the past few years since 1976 the same thing has been going on in transportation, and it is being repeated in this Bill. When the Government of the day established VIA Rail with a $1 item under the Estimates, VIA Rail got stuck for something like $75 million to $80 million worth of old railway passenger cars and locomotives, most of which belonged to Canadian National. About three-quarters of that money was for Canadian National cars. So here we had the spectacle of the Canadian taxpayers paying for all these railway cars and locomotives that they already owned. They paid for them a second time. That is a Conservative and Liberal version of sound business practice. I call it ripping off the taxpayers, not sound business practice.

The rail passenger action force set up by the then Minister of Transport who is now the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) not only asked the question, but strongly objected to the taxpayers paying through VIA Rail to Canadian National for property, that is, stations, trackage, that the taxpayers already owned. That was a spectacle of the taxpayers paying a second time. This started VIA Rail off with the deck stacked against it.

Again I have to say if that is the Conservative-Liberal version of sound business practice, then us socialists will have to teach them some lessons about sound, fair, business practice. I find that incredible. If that was tried in the private sector, it would laugh you out of town or lock you up. But the taxpayer can be victimized a second time, and annually thereafter.

The City of Regina is taking a hard look at what will have to be done with a deficit budget, and what will have to be picked up in extra fees for the police and fire departments. No chances can be taken on the Minister's assertion in Hansard that at some future date it will not be faced with having to pay fees for the radios in their police cars, fire trucks, and ambulances. Therefore, it is taking a hard look at its budget and does not know what to budget. I heard the figures that the City of Regina would be stuck with fees of $50,000 to $100,000 for all these fees to the federal Government. Regina is part of the whole general Canadian population that owns the air waves. No profits are being made; in fact money is lost on police services, fire departments, ambulance services, search and rescue, and other types of emergency operations. The taxpayer should not be required to pay any fees for radio services using air waves that belong to all Canadians.

There is no justification for any public service that is not operating for a profit to pay for the use of the air waves. There is no justification for transferring the taxation required at the federal level for this infrastructure. The Minister mentioned the facilities that the federal Government provides, as well it should. But why transfer the taxpayers' costs of those services from the federal Government to the provincial or municipal level? Is the objective to make the federal Government and its deficit look better, and the provincial or municipal deficit look worse? It does not speak well for a Government of any political stripe to be that mean—and I hate to use the word small—for an amount of $10 million in additional revenues for the federal Government, which does not amount to very much in the total scheme of things around here.

• (1440)

A public utility, whether it be a telephone company or a power corporation, established for the purpose of providing a public service and meeting a public need, not for the purpose of making a profit, should also be exempt. There is a difference between Bell Canada and Alberta Tel, Saskatchewan Tel and Manitoba Tel. The publicly owned and operated telephone companies in the three prairie provinces provide a service. Any profits they make are put back into the utilities. The shareholders, namely, the people of the three provinces, are not eligible for and do not expect dividends or a return on the investment they make, through their taxes, in the telephone companies. They do not expect, ask for, or get dividends. However, in the case of Ma Bell, there are many shareholders looking for dividends or for a cut of the profits. This is why telephone services in Ontario, the Territories, and parts of Quebec cost more than they do in the three prairie provinces. They cost more because the prime imperative of Bell Canada is to make a profit. If we told Bell Canada tomorrow that it could only operate on a break even level, it would say to the Governments of Ontario, Quebec and the Territories, we quit; you take it over.

This is not the case with the telephone companies in the three prairie provinces. They are not there to make a profit. They are there to provide the most economical service possible to the people of the three provinces. For the years in which they make profits, the profits go back into capital investment or, if any part thereof goes into the provincial treasuries, in turn the provincial treasuries guarantee loans when they have to go out on the capital market to borrow.

There is no comparison between Bell Canada and the telephone companies of the three prairie provinces having to pay radio fees. The Minister should agree to including in the Bill that those kinds of public utilities, as well as the ones involved in emergencies concerning the health, safety, and security of the citizenry, be exempted from fees.

The people who are shareholders in the ownership of our air waves are being asked to pay again for something they already own. Through their federal income taxes they have already paid for the various facilities of the Department of Communications. They have paid for them once. Now the Minister wants them to pay again for something for which they have already paid when it comes to infrastructure and facilities in the Department of Communications. Surely that does not make good business, economic or social sense.

When the matter is before the committee, I hope the Minister will present an amendment to exempt those functions in society. There is no plausible reason for going to those lengths.

I must confess that I do not understand why Ontario Hydro pays the fees and Quebec Hydro does not. They are both public companies with shares all over the place. I understand that Quebec Hydro may not be a Crown corporation—

Mr. Boudria: It is. They both are Crown corporations.

Mr. Benjamin: In that case, Quebec Hydro, Ontario Hydro, Saskatchewan Hydro, and Manitoba Hydro are equal in that respect. They are public utilities. The prime principle for their existence is to provide electrical power at cost. They are not in existence to make a profit first and to provide service second. They are in existence to provide an essential public service.

It would be great if the Minister included a regulation that any power corporation, be it publicly or privately owned, which does not put its profit back into the enhancement of service, infrastructure, or capital requirements, should pay a fee. There is a fundamental conflict in the legislation.

The Minister agreed that she would defer, for the time being, any fees which apply to radio licences for municipalities and volunteer fire departments. I accept her word and believe her. She does not want to charge them a fee. Why not have it included in the Bill? I am sure the Minister has received representations from the urban and municipal associations, fire departments, and police departments across the country. It is nothing more than financial nit-picking. The Government may feel that it is at the bottom of the revenue barrel. However, it is boring a hole through the bottom of the barrel trying to get below the bottom of the bottom, to get a few million dollars in revenue which will make no difference whatsoever.

If it is the desire of the Minister's officials to show that the Department is breaking even, tough cookie. If their objective is to indicate that the Department is paying its own way, at the expense of municipalities, volunteer fire departments, search and rescue operations, and forest fire-fighters, their objective is badly skewed and their priorities are misplaced. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot make taxpayers pay more than once for the services they receive.

It is futile and improper to transfer a tax burden from the federal authority to a municipality. It would be bad enough to do that to a province. However, to transfer those costs from the federal authority to the provincial or municipal authorities surely is not only improper but an evasion of federal responsibility. The federal Government is in charge of Canadian public air waves. Therefore I agree with the Minister that it is its responsibility to administer efficiently and fairly those air waves. There is no argument about that. Surely it is not fair to transfer the cost of a proper and constitutionally based responsibility from the federal Government to a provincial Government, a municipal Government, or a non-profit organization. It does not stand up to examination. It is patently wrong and totally unnecessary.

If we were talking about hundreds of millions of dollars or billions of dollars, I suppose one would be hard put to object in light of the government deficit, that is, if one lost a lot of sleep about the deficit. I do not lose a lot of sleep about it. About 80 per cent of that deficit we owe ourselves. The Government borrows money from us and pays it back through our Canada Savings Bonds, guaranteed investment certificates, treasury bills, bonds or whatever.

There is no fiscal or financial imperative here for the Department of Communications to be trying to make taxpayers pay again for something they already own, and I mentioned the situation of VIA Rail and the CNR. Asking the taxpayers to pay a second time for something they already own is not even funny, but it is sort of endemic in every department. Public domain is the property of the public.

When you apply the principle of user pay across the board, started by the late unlamented Otto Lang, which the Conservatives decried as vociferously as we did—probably even more so because there were more of them—to something that already belongs in the public domain it is self-defeating. It is self-defeating in the sense that you are saying to the people of Canada that the air waves belong to them. Then you are telling them that, while they have paid federal tax to cover infrasture and the cost of the Department of Communications, they now have to pay again through their municipalities. They will pay fees for their little radios, police cars, fire trucks, volunteer fire departments and search and rescue operations unless those are operated by the federal Government and are exempt.

I think of the hundreds and hundreds of hours put in by volunteer pilots with their aircraft searching for downed aircraft. Why charge them a fee for their radios?

Mr. Boudria: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Are we that desperate that we have to nitpick and pick up every spare copper that the federal Treasury can get? That does not say much for the greatness of the minds of those in the Government, and it does not speak well for the officials in the Minister's Department.

I hope the Minister of Communications will rise in her place and tell us that she does have at least one, preferably two or three amendments, that would put in practice her own view. I believe her and I accept her word that she has considered the representations made by the urban municipal associations, police and fire departments. I hope she defers this Bill for the time being. I want to say to the Minister though, as sincerely as I can, that her statement really is not good enough. To make sure that nobody will charge fees on these kinds of public services, public utility operations, one must put it into the legislation. I, and I believe my colleagues and my caucus, have no objections to those paying a fee who use the public airwaves to make a private profit. They should pay a fee because they are renting part of the airwaves. We have no objection to that. But you do not pick on ambulances, fire trucks and police cars. For God's sake use your heads over there if you are capable. This is so crazy that it would be laughable, except that it is so bad in principle.

Surely the Government has no other alternative but to extend the legislation in a small way, and that will not in any way affect the Government's ability to collect revenues from radio and television stations. The Minister wept tears over Cancom, a private telecommunications company in Alberta having to pay this fee while the Alberta Government Telephones did not. My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, did not think that was very nice. I am subject to correction on this, but I think Cancom is part of the CNCP operation and a few other fast buck operators. If they want to use the public airwaves for private profit, then they should damn well pay a fee. Why should Alberta Government Telephones, which the taxpayers bought and paid for, have to pay a fee—

Mrs. Finestone: One million dollars worth.

Mr. Benjamin: —just because Cancom does? The Government telephone systems in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are not there to make a profit, they are there to provide a service. That is why they are publicly owned and that is why our telephone rates are lower than in the rest of Canada. That is a return on the taxpayers investment in those three provinces.

This Bill flies in the face of good fundamental principle. The federal authorities are responsible for what comes under federal jurisdiction, and through the general tax system collect moneys to cover the costs of the Minister's Department and all other Departments. The taxpayers pay for that. Why then turn around and ask taxpayers, through their police departments or city councils or whatever, to pay a second time? I wish I had a spare million dollars because I would take the Minister to Federal Court about double taxation. We could have a lot of fun with that. It is just so bad in principle that I hope the Minister will agree that there needs to be an exemption built into the Bill for municipalities, police departments, fire departments, volunteer fire departments and search and rescue operations that are not federally operated. The Department of National Defence is already exempt, as it should be when it comes to search and rescue. I suggest to the Minister that she charge a fee for the use of radios by the Department of National Defence when it is flying Cabinet Ministers or Members of Parliament around the country, since all aircraft are now under the Department of National Defence. In those instances they should pay a fee. Charge them $5 or $10 for each flight for the use of radios when flying Ministers, or even me, somewhere.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, all you are doing is taking money from one department to another. I started out by saying that when you charge municipalities radio fees, the four pockets that taxpayers have, one for the federal Government, one for the provincial Government, one for the municipal Government and one for education—

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I feel my rights, not just as a Member but as a citizen of Canada are being infringed upon. I have been subjected throughout this session, on my duty day, to having to listen to a speech by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I feel under the Charter of Rights that that is cruel and unusual punishment, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1500)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has three minutes left in his speech.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I understand and appreciate the Hon. Member's remarks. One reason I pick Friday as a duty day is because that is the day you can get on in Question Period and make a speech more than once.

Miss MacDonald: Whether or not it means anything.

Mr. Benjamin: There are hardly any other Members around. The Members sitting here on a Friday are the most dutiful Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. McDermid: Beautiful?

Mr. Benjamin: Dutiful.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, sorry.

Mr. Benjamin: Dutiful. They deserve full credit for it. I do not take umbrage at the Hon. Member's remarks. All I can say is that I wish in his case I had a better, more understanding and thoughtful audience.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: But he is dutiful.

Mr. Benjamin: I am anxiously awaiting, as are my colleagues, for the Minister to accept an amendment or move one herself which will provide the exemptions in the instances I have mentioned. That would include provincial government telephone systems whose profit goes back into the system and no individual shareholder or taxpayer makes a buck out of it. If she will do that she will still be able to charge equitable fees to those who use the public air waves for private profit.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) that he is unable to be present in the House on Monday, December 15, 1986 to move his motion for second reading of Bill C-209 during the hour for Private Members' Business. Accordingly, I am directing the table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended and, pursuant to Standing Order 39(2), the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RADIO ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to comment on Bill C-3, a very thin Bill in content and principle. It looks so innocuous yet it has incredible implications for the taxpayers of Canada. It is the intention of the NDP to move with some haste to complete second reading of this Bill and get the Bill into committee. As so many people have indicated, it is important that amendments be made and that the Government be straightened out on this issue.

By and large Bill C-3 will remove the exemption from payment of radio licence fees now enjoyed by federal and provincial governments and their agencies. The Government expects to raise in the order of $10 million a year through this Bill. That money will come from public bodies such as Alberta Government Telephones, Quebec Hydro, Telesat, Petro-Canada, SaskTel and Manitoba Tel. The Department of Communications tells us that licence fees will now range from $5,000 a year to as high as $1 million from agencies such as Alberta Government Telephones. Of course, that cost will be passed on to the various ratepayers, which means the cost of telephone service in Alberta and other western provinces will increase.

In fact, while no one has made the point, this Bill discriminates against western Canada. The Bill identifies western Canadian Crown corporations and government telephone systems and adds to their costs. The lion's share, as is often the case, of this $10 million in additional revenue will come from hard pressed western provinces. This is one more example on a growing list of federal government initiatives which discriminate against western Canadians.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), indicated, additional fees will be levied on a number of organizations. What we should be doing is considering why the Radio Act originally exempted public broadcasters. There were and still are very strong arguments against the Crown taxing the Crown. The public owns the air waves already. Is it appropriate to expect public agencies and organizations oriented toward public service to now pay to use the air waves they already own? We say this is an inappropriate form of taxation. Radio licence fees are paid so that public property, the air waves, can be soundly managed in the public interest. Certainly the use of air waves should be regulated, but should taxpayers be required to pay for the use of their own property?

The federal Government, of course, is using this mechanism to reduce the deficit. In other words, Canadian taxpayers are going to be asked to pay for the use of something they already own so that the Government can collect millions of dollars in order to reduce the federal deficit. Yet in a sense all the Government is doing is transferring the cost to other jurisdictions. I suspect you are asking why I say that. I want to read from a magazine called Forum, a publication on communications for those involved in municipal Government. In its September-October issue of this year it said that this Bill, and I quote:

> —would require municipalities to pay radio licence fees on the same basis as private users beginning April 1, 1987 (for police, fire and emergency services). Former Communications Minister Marcel Masse stated that the proposed amendments to the Radio Act are in keeping with the Government of Canada's deficit-reduction plans as outlined in the Finance Minister's November 1984 Economic Statement and May 1985 Budget.

Municipal leaders have commented that the proposed amendments are inappropriate insofar as they are aimed at essential public services.

That is a critical point. They are talking about police protection, fire protection and emergency services. Those organizations will now be taxed by the federal Government to use what they already own. Does that make any sense? Is that logical? No on both counts.

The chairman of the Task Force on Financing Municipal Governments, Mr. Herb Taylor, said Canadian municipalities must do everything they can to encourage the Government to reconsider this very punitive method of deficit reduction on the backs of our policemen, firemen and emergency service workers.

It is reasonable to suggest that if the Government is doing this to raise $10 million a year, surely that is an example of being penny wise and pound foolish. If the Government wants to raise $10 million, may I simply suggest two other areas which would cause an awful lot less pain, be an awful lot more equitable, and would be considered by all Canadians to be a very prudent move.

One of these would be to reform the tax system so that corporations which, in some years, have profits of hundreds of millions of dollars, pay some tax. Mr. Speaker, I know you would think that surely to goodness corporations in Canada which are profitable do pay tax. In fact, there are nearly 80,000 corporations in Canada which make a considerable profit each year, in some cases hundreds of millions of dollars, that do not pay a single cent in income tax. If these corporations paid their fair share of taxes, not only would we make up the $10 million a year which this Bill is attempting to collect, but we would collect billions more.

I understand that later today we may hear a statement by one of the Ministers on the Port-Cartier prison. This is the prison which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wanted to build in his constituency against all the recommendations of every group and individual concerned with the penal system in Canada. Putting it in his constituency will cost Canadian taxpayers in excess of $41 million. In other words, if it was built where it should be built, we would save $41 million. If all this incredible, punitive legislation is designed to do is raise $10 million in an effort to reduce the deficit, surely that is silly and ought to be changed.

I will conclude by reading a question asked by a Conservative Member of Parliament on December 1. He said:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Some time ago I made representations to the Minister on behalf of the volunteer fire departments of Canada. It has been proposed by her Department that volunteer fire departments be required to pay individual licensing fees for their two-way radios. This would have added substantial costs to the operations of the volunteer fire departments. Has the Minister been able to resolve the matter and continue the previous practice of charging one licensing fee?

Today the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is bringing in legislation which will levy considerable additional fees on volunteer fire departments, volunteer ambulance services and various Crown corporations such as the Saskatchewan Telecommunications Network, the Manitoba Telephone System and Hydro-Quebec. We urge the Government to reconsider proceeding with Bill C-3. It makes no sense. If the Government wants to raise funds for deficit reduction, surely there are more appropriate ways which would have the support of the people of Canada, such as corporate tax reform.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Senate and the House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the motion of Mr. Rodriguez (p. 1351).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. There is unanimous agreement among the House Leaders that this Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole rather than a legislative committee. While I am on my feet, I have two amendments to move to Bill C-20. These amendments have been agreed to unanimously by the other House Leaders. One of them requires a Royal Recommendation. I would like permission to table the Royal Recommendation now before we proceed to Committee of the Whole.

[Editor's Note: See Today's Votes and Proceedings]

I would like to acknowledge that one of these amendments was made partially due to the advice and urging of the Speaker, which we appreciate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before we go to Committee of the Whole, are we going to withdraw the previous question?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I recommend that we work in an orderly fashion. We are still at second reading, as far as I can see. We can hardly go to Committee of the Whole before we give the Bill second reading. I ask for guidance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion for the previous question. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Rodriguez) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on the motion of Mr. Mazankowski, that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the Chair.

• (1520)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

On Clause 1—Override as of January 1, 1986

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, we filed an amendment to Clause 1. We may have been a bit premature in suggesting that we should be dealing with the amendment now. It probably would be better dealt with at report stage. It has been distributed to all parties. Perhaps we could in fact carry on, having passed Clause 1, moving to Clause 2, and then dealing with that particular amendment at report stage.

The Deputy Chairman: There is no debate at the report stage, so we will have to deal with it now in Committee of the Whole. Is the Parliamentary Secretary moving the motion?

Mr. Lewis: I so move.

The Deputy Chairman: These changes go beyond the scope of the Bill and require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I move:

That Clause 1 of Bill C-20 be amended by

(a) striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 1 and substituting the following:

1. (1) Subparagraph 34(3)(b)(i) of the Senate and House of Commons Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(i) the percentage that the Industrial Aggregate for the first adjustment year is of the Industrial Aggregate for the second adjustment year, and"

(2) Subparagraph 34(4)(a)(i) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(i) the "first adjustment year" is the last twelve month period preceding the commencement of the period in respect of which the sessional allowance is to be determined for which the Industrial Aggregate or the Consumer Price Index, as the case may be, is available on the first day of the period in respect of which the sessional allowance is to be determined, and"

(3) Paragraph 34(4)(b) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) the "Industrial Aggregate" for an adjustment year is the average weekly wages and salaries of the Industrial Aggregate in Canada for the year as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act."

(4) Section 34 of the said Act is amended by

(b) striking out line 1 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"(5) Subsection 34(6) of the said Act is"

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to give us a short explanation of the amendment? I understand that the previous Act was based on the composite index as put out by Statistics Canada and that we are now proceeding with an amended Industrial Aggregate. Can he tell us if there is anything we should know about this change and whether we should be aware of how the composite index is arrived at or how the aggregate index would be arrived at in the future, so that we understand exactly what is happening?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the terminology "Industrial Composite" was terminated with the December, 1985 Estimates. The new terminology and new information kept by Statistics Canada, I am informed, is referred to as the Industrial Aggregate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, the wording of page 2 of the Bill is a little unclear in relation to the wording of the last sentence of the amendment. It is listed as part (b) of the amendment, but listed in such a way as to make it rather difficult to understand. Could we get some further explanation from the Parliamentary Secretary as to just what it is that Clause (b) of the amendment amends? Does it amend page 2 of the Act and therefore is it completely separated from the previous line which amends the Act? I gather that Subclause (b) amends the Bill itself, is that correct?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, after consultations I am advised that Subclause (b) as shown in the amendment is simply a substitution for what appears on page 2 by "striking out line 1 page 2 and substituting the following".

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause, as amended, carry? The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this matter privately with the Parliamentary Secretary. I seek his assurance with respect to the texts in French and in English on page 2 from lines 4 to 11. The English does not appear to be the same as the French. I seek the assurance of the Parliamentary Secretary that it is his understanding and the understanding of his official that in fact the two mean the same. I think that I can see a difference between the two, but if I receive such an assurance from the Parliamentary Secretary then that will be sufficient.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank my colleague for bringing this matter to my attention. We have had discussions in this respect. It is our understanding that the two paragraphs are in agreement as drafted.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: I seek some clarification from the Chair, Mr. Chairman. During discussions with respect to this Bill a method of handling as easily as possible the $1,000 reduction in salaries was discussed. There was an agreement to move an amendment which would see deductions come off the next four pay cheques, that is, the pay cheques for December 31, 1986; January 31, 1987; February 28, 1987; and March 31, 1987. It is my understanding that this could be done by adding a new clause to the Bill. This matter has been discussed among the Parties.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not have a copy of the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: I will read it to Hon. Members. It states:

That Bill C-20 be amended by adding after line 11 on page 2 the following:

2. The amount of one thousand dollars referred to in subsection 34(4.3) of the /Senate and House of Commons Act/, as enacted by subsection 1(1), may be deducted from any amount payable to a member of the Senate or the House of Commons pursuant to that Act during the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1987.

I apologize to the Chair. It was my understanding that copies of this amendment had been distributed to officials of both Parties. I thought it had been done. Obviously it has not been done. On behalf of the Government I apologize for the fact that it was not done.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Clause 2?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I just want to be entirely clear here with respect to the procedure. I gather we have agreed to go back to Clause 1 or is this a separate clause numbered 2?

The Deputy Chairman: This is a new clause numbered 2.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Weiner (for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We need unanimous consent to take up the next order of business. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1540)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly prepared to give unanimous consent to expedite the passage of Bill C-14 today with the understanding, of course, since we are recognizing that report stage and third reading discussions would begin today, that the House would also welcome any amendments that might be put at report stage.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that undertaking was given when discussions took place. I think, however, that the word was "accept" rather than "welcome".

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved:

That Clause 5 of Bill C-14 be deleted.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking my colleagues for putting the process in motion so that we may have expeditious passage of this Bill today. I do wish to speak to the amendment which of course would, in effect, remove the very heart of the Bill. It would prevent us from increasing the rate of the federal sales tax in the way Clause 5 outlines. The motion put by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), if passed, would cost the Consolidated Revenue Fund $1.1 billion to $1.25 billion according to my calculations.

I know Hon. Members on all sides of the House want to see the Government of Canada give solid leadership in dealing with the deficit. Of course, this package of excise tax increases must be passed in order to come to terms with government expenditures and to continue our resolve to decrease the deficit.

I know Hon. Members are aware of the considerable success we have had in meeting our target of decreasing expenditures. If it had not been for some unforeseen calamities that have occurred in the economy, we would have been right on target. Because of the calamities, including the agricultural situation and the price of oil and gas, we have had to look to new ways of raising revenue. Of course, that is what Clause 5 of this Bill does.

The federal sales tax increase of 1 per cent contained in this Bill would raise between $1.1 billion and $1.25 billion next year. As well, because of this Bill, we will not be required to increase income taxes any further than we have to date and we will not have to increase corporate taxes or customs charges and duties.

We are going through a process of tax reform. This process will look at the federal sales tax system to which the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap is speaking. If we can bring in a broader based federal sales tax, we may be able to decrease the level of taxation even further than that of which the Hon. Member is thinking after we have finished with tax reform. Until then, of course, it is imperative that the Bill as written, including Clause 5, be passed.

Federal sales tax reform will do something for which the people of Canada have waited decades. It will put in place a fair system. As we all know, federal sales tax is now applied to commodities and to manufacturing but not to the other two-thirds of the economy, the service sector. We would like to bring down the high rate of federal sales tax and spread it across a wider base. That will be part of tax reform, together with the lowering of marginal rates of personal income tax and corporate tax. It is very important that we do that.

If we did away with the federal sales tax entirely, my calculations indicate that personal income taxes would have to be increased by almost 50 per cent at the lower end. There simply would not be enough income at the top end to make up the difference. The Hon. Member is not suggesting a total removal of the federal sales tax, but theoretically, if there were no federal sales taxes, we would have to load revenue production on to the personal income taxes.

In this particular case, $1.1 billion is about one-twelfth of the problem. If we are to raise the $1.25 billion which could very well be raised through Clause 5 through the personal income tax route instead, we would have to raise taxes not only at the high level but at the middle level and that would be unacceptable given our present tax rate, particularly while the Government is absolutely determined to decrease the levels of personal income tax after tax reform.

Mr. Benjamin: What about corporation tax? What would you do about that?

Mr. Hockin: Corporate tax as well will be studied. In corporate tax reform, we must look at the tax preferences and deductions that are in place as well as the tax losses and all of the things that make it more difficult for us to receive the revenues from the corporate sector that we believe we should receive. All of that is being looked at in the context of tax reform.

I welcome the Hon. Member's amendment in the sense that it is forcing us to think about in which direction we should go with the mix in our tax system. I also welcome the fact that all Hon. Members have agreed to give this Bill speedy passage. However, I must say that until the tax system is reformed, it is important that we not break from the direction this Bill is taking us. This Bill will give us the revenue required over the next year or two to put in place a more comprehensive and effective regime.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this Bill provides for a federal sales tax credit, an innovative and very important reform. It helps to reduce the regressive effect of a sales tax increase on low-income Canadians. As we went through the Bill in committee, there were many good questions put on this matter. We found out that with the average increase of 1 per cent per capita in federal sales tax, a person earning $15,000 or less annually would pay about $25.30 more, but we will give a $50 credit per adult. We are not just making a slight gesture toward people in that income bracket, but more than compensating them for the increased taxes they might have to pay.

• (1550)

Moving further and looking at the $25 per child, for a family including a wife, husband, and four children, there will be a credit of $200. From the calculations that I have, that more than compensates—

Mr. Cassidy: It is $150.

Mr. Hockin: It is $25 per child, plus $50 per adult for the example of the prepayment of the child tax credit. The Hon. Member is quite correct that it is $150 for the example that I gave for the federal sales tax credit.

I am grateful that Members on all sides of the House are taking an interest in the question of taxation. We wish to have all the ideas produced in the next six months in a very intensive way so that our tax reform will be effective.

It is my hope, and it is in the spirit of the amendment that over-all federal sales tax levels will be able to be diminished as a result of the BTT or some variant of it that we can bring in through tax reform.

Finally, we must remember that the over-all thrust of this legislation is to help us continue on track with decreasing the deficit. That is what has given Canadian people the confidence to invest in this economy and create the thousands of jobs that have been created. It has also given us confidence in our dollar, and kept our interest rates at a moderate level. If we do not come to terms with the deficit, we will find that our interest rates will be so high that our job creation will start to fall back, and the strength and the great confidence in our economy will dwindle.

Over-all this is a measure aimed at controlling the deficit which will do so in a way that is not regressive.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to talk about this particular section and what it means in terms of the over-all changes in the sales and excise taxes which are contained in Bill C-14.

I asked the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) a question in the House today about why the Government was giving yet another gift to the very wealthy Canadians by allowing the lifetime capital gains tax exemption to be partly free of the minimum tax. The Hon. Minister gave many irrelevant answers. He did refer to the sales tax credit. But what he did not say was that on the one hand we give a very small credit to families under very limited circumstances at the same time that we are increasing their cost of living by the increase in the sales tax which came into force on April 1, 1986. On the other hand we are giving very generously, because it turns out that the one income that people can have which will be partially exempted from the minimum tax, which I think most Canadians feel should be subject to the minimum tax, is going to be capital gains. Most capital gains income is earned or gained in some other way by people who are among the top 5 per cent of income earners in the country. So those people get a gift at Christmas from the Government—and it will be dealt with next week—and at the same time we are putting up the general sales tax from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. What this Bill does is to simply confirm what the Government did effective last April 1.

The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is to delete Clause 5 of the Bill. Clause 5 of the Bill has the purpose of increasing the sales tax to 15 per cent on wine and liquor, to 8 per cent on certain other products, and to 12 per cent on the sale price of most goods covered by the manufacturers sales tax.

Our concern is that the Government has chosen for the third time in a row to use a regressive means of taxation for raising revenues in its quest to fight the deficit. A regressive form of taxation is one that bears more heavily on people of modest incomes than it does on people who are wealthy. In other words, we are fighting the deficit on the backs of ordinary Canadians.

The figures are quite convincing, and I wish to read a couple into the record. In the February 26 Budget the sales tax increase for an average family will add about $150 to their cost of living. On top of that there is a cigarette and alcohol increase which will add about $20. The 3 per cent surtax which will be borne for the first time by average Canadians will add $170. The total is $340. In the Budget of May, 1985, there was $150 added by the broadening of the sales tax base. There was $75 added by the increase in the cigarette and alcohol tax.

There was $50 added by the increase in the gasoline tax. There were other increases which have been read into the record on a number of occasions in this House which bring the total increase for the average family to $512.50. I believe that we were estimating for a family in the $30,000 to $35,000 income range. In the November, 1985 Economic Statement there was a sales tax increase which at that time added $150 to the tax burden of the average family. In addition, it raised oil and gas prices by $200. It raised unemployment insurance premiums by $102. The total over the three Budgets plus the Economic Statement was $1,304.50.

The New Democrats have put those figures on the record, they have been communicated to the ministry, they have been put out through the press, and not once have those figures been challenged. I believe that is because the ministry accepts that our calculations are accurate for an average family with an income of $30,000 or $35,000 a year.

How much does that family benefit, if at all, from the sales tax credit which is being proposed? Well, none at all, because the sales tax credit will come into force for families with up to $15,000 a year of gross income. By the time it reaches a family of four, their eligibility for any sales tax credit will be extinguished when they hit an income of $18,000. In addition, the amount of the sales tax credit is all of $150 for a family of four with an income of $15,000 a year, which is 1 per cent of their income, not a heck of a lot. It disappears very quickly. For example, people in my constituency who are living at the poverty line for a major urban community like Ottawa, which is in the order of $20,000, will pay extra sales tax and will not receive a nickel's worth of benefit from the sales tax credit, which has been introduced in complementary legislation by the Government, and which we will be looking at next week.

I am particularly concerned by the fact that the Government in the Budget statement last February stated that it recognized that sales tax is a regressive tax unless something is done to soften the blow. In principle, it said what we have been saying, which is that sales tax cannot be increased unless measures are brought in to ensure that it does not bear as harshly on poor people and people with modest incomes as it does on people who are very wealthy. In principle, we are saying the same thing.

We are moving to delete this particular increase in sales tax precisely because the Government failed to follow up its principle with something practical to recognize what we mean. Since November of 1985, in the last 25 months, we have had one increase in the sales tax of $150 for the average family, a second increase in sales tax of $150 and now a third increase in sales tax of $150. There have been increases on cigarettes and alcohol which amounts to close to $100. There have been gas tax increases of $50. These are all taxes that tend to be regressive. The total of these various taxes would be in the order of $700.

• (1600)

What have we had to counter that? We have had one sales tax credit. Did the Government do anything to protect ordinary low-income families from the sales tax increase in November, 1984? Not at all. Did it do anything to protect those families from the sales tax increase and the gas tax increase in the 1985 Budget? Not at all. All it did was bring in something which in a modest way will reach a very limited group of families who are really very poor. They need far more to make ends meet than the sales tax credit which accompanies the sales tax increase.

When we debated the issue the other day in the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, I made constructive suggestions. I had heard what was suggested by the National Council of Welfare, that the sales tax credit should be in the order of several hundred dollars for a family of four rather than $150. In fact I moved that the sales tax credit should be $200 per adult, that is, $400 for a couple or a single parent with a child, and $100 per child beyond that. It could be phased out between $15,000 and $28,000 per year for a family of four. If implemented, it would ensure a substantial measure of progressivity in terms of the application of sales tax.

I see that my time is about up. The Government is talking about bringing in a business transfer tax. It will be a hidden form of federal sales tax reaching many areas which are not taxed right now. It is saying that we should not worry about the regressivity factor because even though it is taxing almost everything one can look at, buy, consume, or get service from, it will have some kind of tax credit to offset the effect on people with modest incomes.

I do not think the Conservatives have awakened to the fact that $20,000 these days is not a heck of a lot of money on which to raise a family. The Government is giving its blueprint for the future sales tax credit with the BTT. If this is the model it chooses, it will be inadequate. This is why we are saying the particular clause should be deleted. The Government is wrong to be increasing sales tax year after year without taking adequate provision to ensure that people with low and modest incomes, working Canadian families, are in fact protected and not hit by a regressive tax levy that they can ill afford to pay.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, if the Government can give a gift to wealthy people by exempting them, at least partially, from a minimum tax on their capital gains, it should be able to do it progressively and equitably for ordinary Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also have some comments to make on this amendment. First of all, we have here a political party that promised, during the last election campaign, that it would not raise taxes but reduce them, and today, if we look at sales tax alone, we have already had three increases: 1 per cent in November 1984, 1 per cent in May 1985 and 1 per cent in 1986.

Mr. Speaker, when the Minister appeared before the Committee and when he spoke this afternoon in the House, he was constantly referring to the sales tax credit for families with annual incomes of $15,000 or less. First of all, these incomes are below the poverty level, so the tax credit is not really adequate. I think that these people, with the meager $50 they will be getting . . . It is regrettable that the Government should burden people in this way by increasing taxes. Although it says it is refunding money to poor families, Mr. Speaker, with some simple arithmetic it is easy to figure out that for every 1 per cent increase in sales tax, this means an increase of $175 for a family with two children. So if we take the last three sales tax increases, we get a total of $525, and the tax credit referred to by the Minister would then add up to $150. So a family, a couple with two children and an annual income of $15,000 has had to pay $375 more in federal sales tax since September 1984.

Mr. Speaker, this is a situation we cannot accept, and maintaining the position we took on second reading, before the Committee and this afternoon as well, we intend to vote against the Bill. The Minister also referred to tax reform. We have been waiting for his proposals for some time, because we are anxious to know what they contain, what exactly the Government is going to propose. Up to now, we have not had much more than grand statements and window dressing. Everyone wants tax reform, but it all depends what kind.

Will it mean that, for instance, the Income Tax Act will be simplified or will the reform apply to all tax legislation? Will Canadians be able to make some sense of all this and realize what it is going to cost them, what a tax is, because today, there is no way we can make any sense of all this. For instance, not long ago, in fact last Saturday, we read in the Montreal Gazette about a small business, Alexander Ceramic Studio, which, because it had exceeded the $50,000 limit for business turnover, automatically became subject to federal sales tax. The owner of the business could no longer keep up with his competitors, and he actually lost money, first because of the additional financial outlay because he had to pay the tax retroactively, and second, he lost customers because he had to charge federal sales tax, while his competitors next door did not because they had not yet reached the $50,000 ceiling, and so, to get out of this mess, he had to reduce sales so that he would stay under the $50,000 limit.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that in the tax reform process all these things will be taken into account and in connection with the famous business tax which the Conservative Government is getting ready to introduce, I hope it will keep in mind all those small businesses which, once that tax has come into effect, will need to have a license, to report and to be subjected to all the redtape and accounting that such a tax will entail.

A tax reform should lead to a reduction in paperwork, but we have a tax here which will increase the paperwork since at least 500,000 small businesses will probably have to comply.

I therefore urge this Government to recognize that very special situation and take into consideration the last budget.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, we received a brief from the National Anti-poverty Organization. According to the figures published by the National Welfare Council, couples with two children having an income of about $20,000, which is below the poverty line in many Canadian urban centres, will pay 1.3 per cent of their family income to cover the extra cost of the sales tax and excise tax increases provided for in the 1985-86 budget. Because very often in their speeches, Government Members when talking about the sales tax credit refer only to the 1 per cent in the last budget. But with the whole package, the 1985 and 1986 budgets, we will find that this meager $50 is not enough to cover that tax, especially for families with income below $20,000.

What about those with incomes of $22,000, $25,000? That is where the whole question lies, Mr. Speaker. It is my view that the Government was fully aware of that when it decided to grant an income tax credit for families with income below $15,000 it knew very well it wanted to set a limit. That was no doubt a noble gesture to hide the true intention, this Government's real objective with all those tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to support this amendment, and I would like to add that there is one amendment that deals with the whole issue of the price of wine. We are becoming increasingly aware that we have our own wine industry here in Canada. We are starting to make good Canadian wines. There are Canadian vintners, and I think the Government should realize this and perhaps abolish sales tax altogether on wine produced in Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a few words on the record at report stage of Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. By and large, Bill C-14 imposes a whole range of new taxes on the people of Canada. The amendment before us was put forward to eliminate the increases in the federal sales tax. I think it is important that Members of Parliament are aware—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I thought he was rising on a point of order. This is the Member's motion. Therefore, I must recognize his colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). I am afraid I cannot allow the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to speak again.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad you intervened to secure justice, even within our Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: I am very happy to second this motion and support the direction which the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has taken and will be taking again. I am also pleased to have a chance to say a few words on this Bill before I leave.

What we have here is another sales and excise tax increase. I suppose the Government figures people will not notice because it is only 1 per cent in general, up from 11 per cent to 12 per cent and, along with the excise tax, it will be only $170 for the average family. The trouble is that it comes on top of $1,300 in sales tax increases since November of two years ago. It is this Government's philosophy to keep reducing the effect of tax on the rich and increasing the effect of tax on low and middle-income people.

Mr. McDermid: What about the sales tax credits?

Mr. Heap: This philosophy of the Government is different from the philosophy that we heard about some years ago, which was to trickle down. This is a philosophy of trickle up. There will be a little Mickey Mouse sales tax credit to the poor which will not come near matching what has been taken away from them in these regular sales tax increases. For the middle-income people, there will be no tax credit. The ones who have more money than they need to spend, the ones with really high income levels, will not mind paying these sales and excise tax increases. They are gaining on the income tax cuts and the increasing loopholes, such as the loopholes being made for more and more money going to fewer and fewer people through the capital gains tax relief by flipping property and playing real estate games. That sort of tax will be made more free to the really rich, and they will not mind paying 1 per cent extra on the ordinary necessities of life.

The pretended philosophy of the Government is that if we scoop money from the poor and give it to the rich then the rich will create jobs. That philosophy is not working, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding the statistics that the Government manipulates regarding jobs, the working people in this country as a whole are growing poorer. The rich do not spend in the same way as the poor. The rich spend a good deal of their money on luxuries, many of them imported. That does not create jobs in Canada. They spend their money travelling abroad. That does not create jobs in Canada. They probably send $10 billion or $20 billion every year out of this country in investments. There is no evidence that those billions of dollars created by the work of Canadians sent abroad by the rich, who have been able to collect them, create jobs in Canada. This philosophy of trickle up is making the country poorer.

What we have is a warning indication from some of the established groups in our country who provide a sort of monitoring, a sort of check on what is going as a result of these regular increases in the sales tax. The quarterly economic review published by the Department of Finance shows that in April and May, 1986 the disposable income of Canadians fell by 2 per cent. The Conference Board of Canada agrees that consumer spending will be slowed by the Conservative tax increases.

The consumers in the great, great majority in Canada are the low and middle-income people. It is those consumers whose failure to keep up the level of spending that our credit economy looks for who are causing a slowdown in the economy. Their disposable income is decreasing, the effect of which is beginning to depress the economy. If people cannot spend, then people cannot work to sell. If no one is buying, the stores do not buy and workers are laid off. This is how sales tax hits the country as well as hitting the low income and middle income people.

It would be well worth while if the people who rule this country, the people on the other side of the House, would pay attention to the statements put out by the bishops of the Roman Catholic Church three years ago in which they advocated what they called the preferential option for the poor. Their argument has a basic strong logic: A country that looks after the needs of its poorest people will find that the needs of its richest people are also looked after. It does not work the other way around. A country that rigs the tax laws the way this Government is doing, so as to take from the poor and give to the rich with a sort of vague promise that the rich will use that money to create jobs for the poor—a country that scoops from the poor to give to the rich—is ruining its own economy. It has happened many times before in history. We can see it in front of our eyes in Canada under the misguided philosophy of this Government.

That is why I support this motion to delete the 1 per cent sales and excise tax increase from this Bill, because it will not help Canada. It will bring a little more revenue to the Government perhaps at the beginning but by depressing the spending power of the vast majority of Canadians by depressing the market, a dependence on their spending power, it will cause greater troubles for our country. I ask Hon. Members to think about what they are doing this time. Two years ago it could be taken as excusable perhaps because we had a new Government, perhaps it did not know what it was doing, but by now it cannot use this excuse—

Mr. Boudria: Yes, it can.

Mr. Heap: It cannot get away with the excuse. The Hon. Member says that perhaps the Government will when it is blamed for what is happening. But the Government has had time in two years to see what is happening. During those two years Conservatives have taken twice as much through sales and excise tax increases as they have through income tax increases; $6.7 billion as opposed to $3.3 billion. Those tax increases were not paid mainly by the rich but rather by middle-income earners. It is the poor and middle-income earners who are being hit by this Government. Not only will they suffer immediately and directly, the country as a whole will suffer unless the Government wakes up to the harm it is doing.

• (1620)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we just heard an NDP Member say that the Government perhaps did not know what it was doing two years ago but today we can no longer make that accusation; the Government now knows what it is doing. However, I want to go on record as saying I totally disagree with anyone who suggests the Government knows what it is doing. I want everyone to know that before I give the rest of my remarks.

As we discuss this amendment to Bill C-14, it is important to know the commitments that those people across the way, who do not know what they are doing, made to the people of Canada before the last election. They made several promises as you will recall. I have raised those on one or two occasions in the past. They are listed in the book of 338 Tory promises, a copy of which anyone can have if they write to me, no postage stamp necessary, requesting a copy of the book of 338 Tory promises.

As I was saying, on the page dealing with small business it says that the Tories were to reduce the level of taxation facing small business and the complexity of the tax system with which they must cope. I know you want to know if it was the Tories who made that promise. The answer is yes. That is one thing the Conservative Party promised to do. What do we see instead? We see budgetary measures which mean tremendous increases not only for families but for small businesses such as the corner grocery store and small manufacturers. They all have to pay increased taxes as a result of the Government's budgetary measures.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), indicated to me earlier today that since the Government came to office the tax increases amount to something in the order of $3 billion. Not bad considering they were telling small businesses they were not going to face a tax increase.

[Translation]

If we look at the average and especially the cumulative impact of these taxes, we see that there is a broadening of the sales tax base. In other words, it means that the average Canadian, people like you and me, Mr. Speaker, it means that our constituents will now have to pay tax on certain items that were previously exempt.

Obviously, this is going to create problems for a great many people, for small businesses and especially for families on middle and low incomes.

[English]

We note as well the increase in alcohol and tobacco excise taxes. The amendment before us would remove that increase. Among other things, the tax on wine was increased from 14 per cent to 15 per cent. That is enough to drive a person to drink.

It is extremely frustrating to look at what the Conservatives are doing to the average Canadian. For example, let me bring to your attention, as I think I may have before, the cost of these new taxes and who is going to pay for them. A couple with two children making $15,000 a year will have to pay an extra $255 in taxes. Do you think that family has an extra $255? If they do, which they likely do not, I am sure they do not want to give it to the Tories, particularly when one considers their record.

You will know, because I brought it to your attention in the House earlier this week, that the Government spent $2.6 million for the Shamrock Summit in Quebec City, and the emphasis is on the first syllable. The Shamrock Summit saw five jets flying from Ottawa to Quebec City carrying one Minister each. I know they were Cabinet heavyweights but surely they could have doubled up. I know the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), who is in charge of watching the purse-strings, is concerned about that kind of activity by his colleagues. He drives back and forth from London in his car, and he would not want to see others flying in jets all over the place.

Then we hear the Government is going to pay the legal bills of a Member of this House amounting to $350,000. Why? Who knows. I see the junior Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty). He should know about wasteful government expenditures. He is well versed on the topic, and a participant, too. The Minister of State for Finance should know that this move to pay a former Minister's legal bills is without precedent.

I have a lot more to say on unnecessary government expenditures, such as the $1 million spent on the Far East trip by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but given the sense of fair play which the Liberal Party has always had, I do not want to delay the debate unduly. Given the festive season and the co-operation which is developing in this House, I think I will end my remarks and merely ask all Members to vote for the amendment which would stop these tax increases from going ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would urge all Members and of course you yourself to vote in favour of the amendment that would reduce the incredible tax increases that the Conservatives want to impose on the Canadian people.

TABLING OF REVISION TO PARAGRAPH 7.95

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the Table the revised paragraph 7.95 to the Report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986. I remind Hon. Members that this document is deemed to have been permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REGULATORY REFORM—FIRST ANNUAL REGULATORY PLAN—1987

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 19(6) and as Minister responsible for regulatory affairs to inform the House of an important milestone in the implementation of the Government's regulatory reform strategy. Hon. Members will recall that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) identified regulatory reform as an important contributor to economic growth and job creation when he announced the Government's agenda for economic renewal in November 1984.

The Government subsequently developed a comprehensive regulatory reform strategy as a result of the work of the Ministerial task force on program review. The strategy and our smarter regulation policy were announced in February. Since then, there has been virtually constant action in the Government to bring about needed and practical improvements in regulatory programs and the federal regulatory system.

Regulation is the use of law to control or prohibit private behaviour. A democratically elected Parliament is recognized as the source of those laws and of regulations affecting the freedom of all the people. It follows that Parliament has a special responsibility in encouraging sound, practical regulatory reform.

Of course, a major purpose of the regulatory plan is to respond still further to the Government's commitment to open Government. The document gives the public early notice of our intentions and this will help individuals to influence reglation at the start and not just at the end of the regulatory pipeline.

[Translation]

That is why I see it as especially appropriate to announce in the House today that we are releasing, simultaneously with this statement, the first annual regulatory plan prepared by a federal Government.

The regulatory plan for 1987 provides a comprehensive list of regulatory initiatives planned by 25 federal Departments and agencies for next year.

It is the result of the introduction of compulsory planning and priority setting introduced to the federal regulatory system as a result of the regulatory reform strategy. Because it covers all planned federal regulatory activity during a specific 12-month planning period and because it has been approved by Cabinet as a planning document, the 1987 regulatory plan goes well beyond the scope and objectives of the old regulatory agendas.

[English]

In the same spirit, I see the annual plan becoming a very useful reference document for Members of Parliament. Copies of the 1987 plan are being circulated at this time to Members' offices as well as copies of an information kit prepared to accompany the plan's release.

One of my main objectives has been to ensure that the plan is a useful tool for Members of Parliament and I hope they will let me have any suggestions on how we can improve next year's edition. This is a good example of how the smarter regulation policy is producing practical, helpful improvements that have long been needed.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was asked to act as Liberal critic on this matter because I happen to be co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Regulations. That is why my reply will not be as charitable as the Minister may have wished.

[English]

I have to say that I am interested in this document but I cannot receive it with the kind of enthusiasm with which the Minister has delivered it. It is not all that different from the regulatory agenda approach introduced years ago by my colleauge, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) when he was the President of the Treasury Board. Like that document, the trouble with this document is that it is not a law of Canada. It is not a regulation. It has no status or authority, other than a commitment by the Government to comply with it. In other words, any Department will continue to be free to put out regulations whenever it likes. Those regulations will stand or fall, not in relation to this plan but in relation to the law.

I regret that after the commitment the Government made to the regulatory reform process that it has not been prepared to do something that will have more authority than justify a statement. I hope that it will not unduly encumber the process of Departments, and that in cases where regulations have very little consequence that those regulations will be able to go forward and will not be encumbered by all this material, which although it is well intended, has to be characterized as additional red tape for departments. It is red tape that could produce good results. I do wish to indicate that it is not always a good thing, unless it is applied with sensitivity and taken seriously by the departments.

I am suspicious about the commitment of the Government to regulatory reform because of the behaviour of the Government and its caucus in relation to the regulatory process. This is a good time to mention it, because the Government wants the country to accept this document and to see it as a reform. Since it has no legal authority, it will only have meaning if the Government is committed to it.

These are the reasons that the Government has very little commitment to regulatory reform. First, it has not yet acted to amend the Statutory Instruments Act. In 1983 when Mark MacGuigan was the Minister of Justice he made a commitment that the Statutory Instruments Act would be amended. It has no teeth, it has no disallowance power, and no one was more enthusiastic about Mr. MacGuigan's commitment than the Opposition. So all of this regulatory process could be effectively controlled by a regulatory instruments process. No amendments have been introduced to carry that out.

Second, the attendance of Conservative members at the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has prevented us from doing our job. Four meetings have been called with two Liberal members, one NDP member, nine Conservative members—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There may be problems with attendance at committees, and there are sometimes problems with attendance in the House. Hon. Members know that we have a long tradition of not commenting on it. The Chair does not know what the problems in attendance might be. It may have nothing to do with lack of diligence, it may be other more pressing obligations. I would ask the Hon. Member, who is an experienced Member, to not comment further on that particular matter.

Mr. Kaplan: I wish to simply say that for four meetings the committee has not been able to review regulations because there was no quorum.

An Hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. Kaplan: Yes, I was.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is quite appropriate for the Hon. Member to say that unfortunately there was not a quorum. But it is not appropriate to single out any particular Member. The Chair is mindful that I have just heard at least one Member question whether or not the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) was there. This is an issue which I do not want to get into. Perhaps the Hon. Member for York Centre could complete his remarks.

Mr. Kaplan: My third point in challenging the credibility of this Government as a regulatory reformer is the behaviour of the Minister's former Department when she was Minister of State for Finance in dealing with regulations which we brought to the attention of the Government that challenged its constitutional authority. The committee has the responsibility of reviewing regulations. Although I could have mentioned several, I have mentioned the Hon. Minister's Department because she is charged now with the SOR/82-359, the Natural Gas and Gas Liquids Tax Regulation.

On December 5, 1984, our legal counsel wrote to the Department asking them to respond to a challenge to a regulation to its authority. There was no reply to the letter. On April 10, 1985, we wrote again. A committee of Parliament wrote to the Minister's Department and did not even receive the courtesy of a reply saying that our letter would be looked into.

The first letter was on December 5, 1984, the second letter was on April 10, 1985, the third letter was on August 20, and there was not even the courtesy of a reply from the Minister's Department. On January 2, 1986 our legal counsel wrote and again there was no reply. On April 17, 1986 the co-chairman of the committee and the vice-chairman wrote to the Minister asking for a reply to all these letters that had been written. There was no reply. On September 17, 1986 we wrote again and asked the Government to deal with, in our view, a breach of the regulations and there was no reply. So these are the reformers. I will believe it when I see it.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the statement by the Minister. They will be very few because the spokesman for the New Democratic Party on this particular issue had a prior commitment. We did not receive notice of this from the Minister's office or a statement ahead of time. I am not sure whether it was the Minister's office that was late in sending it, or whether the confusion resulted on our side. Maybe it was Canada Post. But we have not received notice of it. The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is our spokesman on this particular issue and he has other commitments at this time.

I wish to say to the Minister that we follow this issue. It is an important issue for people. We know about the committee that has been going on. The only point that I wish to make this morning is that this issue of regulatory reform is an issue which we should make sure works on behalf of the average Canadian who is affected by the laws of Canada. There will always be regulations. There will always be reform and update of regulations, regardless of which Government is in power. There must be a process that ensures that the regulations of Government work on behalf of ordinary citizens. All too often the ordinary citizen is met with red tape, regulations, and guidelines that are beyond his or her comprehension. They tend to see parliamentarians and public servants, particularly at the federal level in Ottawa, drafting very complicated regulations that can only be interpreted by lawyers, or accountants, and sometimes for the benefit of lawyers and accountants.

It is encumbent upon all of us in the three Parties in the House to make sure that the regulations are drafted in the most efficient and effective way possible that work and serve ordinary Canadians.

[Translation]

People are the most important factor. There are Canadian men and women across this country who have to work with federal Government programs, any programs. We have a policy for farmers, a policy for fishermen, a welfare policy, there are Old Age Security pensions, just about anything, Mr. Speaker. But the main thing is to communicate with Canadians across this country.

[English]

It is very important in any reform process that we have input from ordinary people, and from their organizations and associations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Statements by Ministers. The Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

PORT-CARTIER PROJECT—POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on November 5, 1986, I indicated that, further to the request of my colleague, the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), I was asking that a review be made of the circumstances which surrounded the award of the Port-Cartier project direction contract to Bechtel Québec Ltd. The request for such a review followed allegations that the Code of Conflict of Interest may have been breached. This review has been completed. The following facts were brought to my attention.

In July, 1985 Correctional Services appointed Mr. Robert McCulloch, then at the service of Correctional Services, interim project director for the Port-Cartier project. Robert McCulloch was a Bechtel Canada employee, working in the public service by way of an Interchange Canada agreement. Since this agreement was coming to an end, it was decided to retain the services of Robert McCulloch by contract.

• (1120)

A request was forwarded to Bechtel Canada Limited to prepare a proposal which would be relied upon to draft a project direction contract. Correctional Services attempted to enter into a sole source agreement with Bechtel. This attempt was not accepted, and the Department of Supply and Services required that requests for proposals be sought.

[Translation]

In December 1985, the Minister of Supply and Services invited thirteen companies to submit proposals. Eight, including Bechtel, responded. After an analysis of the proposals, three out of eight were retained for consideration, including Bechtel. The latter company was awarded the contract because its proposal was judged to be the best and least costly. An analysis of the circumstances of the entire process has shown that once the decision was made to go ahead with the construction of a penitentiary institution within a relatively short time frame, the flexibility required to develope a work plan and policies was somewhat reduced.

Mr. McCulloch should not have been appointed as acting director for the project since it was known that he would not be able to perform those duties up to the project's completion.

[English]

The analysis further indicates that Robert McCulloch's status, for example, a senior Bechtel employee and Correctional Services officer, placed him in a conflict of interest situation as soon as it was determined that Bechtel was to be requested to prepare a proposal which would lead to a contract. Robert McCulloch should then have been removed from both the project and the contracting process which would lead to a contract with the firm, Bechtel.

Robert McCulloch who, by the term of his Interchange agreement, was subject to the Conflict of Interest Code, and senior Correctional Services employees should have been more concerned about the conflict of interest situation which existed, particularly since in September, 1985, when these events were unfolding, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tabled in the House a Conflict of Interest Code, which code was introducing clearer and tougher rules.

I have asked my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), to require the Correctional Services Commissioner, Rhéal Leblanc, to examine carefully the facts which surround the matter and take such measures as he feels are needed to deal with it.

I have also asked my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina), who has accepted, to terminate the contract between Robert McCulloch, Bechtel, and the Crown in the public interest.

The Solicitor General will also be taking the necessary steps to provide for the continuation of project direction through the offices of Correctional Services and Public Works Canada.

The decision to terminate the contract is consistent with the Government's commitment with respect to the Conflict of Interest Code.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to indicate that the Official Opposition was only provided with a copy of the Minister's statement literally minutes ago. It would seem to me that there should be some common courtesies in the House. Where statements are to be delivered by Ministers, they should be given to opposition Parties in advance, in order to give opposition Parties an opportunity to assess properly the statements to be made. I hope the Minister will recognize the difficult position in which he puts the Official Opposition in trying to respond to as important a statement as the one made by the Minister. Be that as it may, I will attempt to respond to the statement of the Minister.

It is obvious from what the Minister stated that there has been a conflict of interest, that rules and regulations were not followed in this particular case. We in the Opposition have indicated from the start that an investigation was necessary into the whole question of the prison in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

The Auditor General indicated that $41 million of taxpayers' money was literally frittered away because of the Prime Minister's desire to locate the prison in Manicouagan, his riding. The Prime Minister, through Ministers of the Crown, indicated on a number of occasions that there was a need for a prison in Port-Cartier, notwithstanding the fact that the Auditor General concluded there was no such need for a protective custody prison in Manicouagan. Despite the statements of the Auditor General, the Government continued to insist that in fact there was a need. In effect, the Government, through various Ministers of the Crown, called in question the objectivity and the independence of the Auditor General. It was unprecedented in the history of the Office of the Auditor General for Ministers of the Crown to attack the Auditor General with regard to his objectivity and with regard to his independence.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One minute.

Mr. Nunziata: With the leave of the House, I would ask for the opportunity to complete my comments.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am allowing the Hon. Member an extra minute to complete his comments.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps I will have to make comments at another time. However, the bottom line is that there has been a conflict of interest. They are holding Mr. McCulloch responsible; they are making a scapegoat of him. In fact the Minister should be held responsible and the Minister should resign. If not, the conflict of interest guidelines are a farce.

They are saying that Mr. McCulloch was responsible for putting himself in a conflict of interest situation. I suggest that it is the Prime Minister who put Mr. McCulloch and Bechtel in a conflict of interest situation by insisting a prison go in his riding and by insisting that the contract be completed by September, 1988. It is the Minister's resignation which is needed, not simply the termination of the contract. This leads me to another point—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was obviously the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who gave directions to go full speed ahead with the plan for a penitentiary at Port-Cartier, without regard for the consequences.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has now recognized the existence of a conflict of interest that was pointed out here in the House. However, he has not blamed the Prime Minister, although it was the Prime Minister's insistence on this project—despite the cost and despite the fact that all Government tendering practices would be and were adhered to—that created this situation.

[English]

I recall to Hon. Members of the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) decided he wanted to have this prison as a bon-bon to give to the people of Port-Cartier. It is clear that Port-Cartier would prefer to have real development, development which provided a variety of jobs, not just prison guard jobs. However, when it was decided in the first place, he incurred an estimated $41 million in extra costs because of the relocation of the prison from Drummondville. The report of the Auditor General indicated that it would have been $10 million cheaper to have renovated the prison in Laval rather than to move it to Drummondville.

The Government decided to move at full speed and damn the consequences. It is now turning around and making a statement that poor Mr. McCulloch is to blame, that he should have realized there was a conflict of interest and should have kept out of it when he was asked if he would please stay on for a few months at the end of his Interchange Canada contract in order to get the project under way. It seems that the Government should have understood that if it were asking this particular official, who had been in Government for a very short period of time on an Interchange contract, it should have looked at the question of conflict of interest.

To blame the Commissioner of Correctional Services, Mr. Rhéal Leblanc, for the fact that the contract was not put forward correctly and that there was a conflict of interest also begs the real question—why was the Government going at such a pace? We know the reason. It was because the Prime Minister wanted to cut the blue ribbon on the project before a possible election in May or June, 1988. That was the reason. It was a politically motivated project. The Government now finds that it has egg on its face. However, I welcome the fact that it has decided to put on the brakes in terms of the particular contract.

• (1130)

I want to tell the people at Bechtel Canada that I regret their having been drawn into this matter for reasons I do not believe were their responsibility at all. I think that a private sector company has been ill served by the Government which put political priorities ahead of doing business in the ordinary way that the Government should, namely, in a way in which the bidding process is fair, above board and gives a fair chance to everybody. If Bechtel's bid was the lowest bid, then in the normal course of events it should have been awarded the contract. The fact that a conflict of interest emerged was not Bechtel's fault, was not Mr. McCulloch's fault, it was the Government's fault because Brian Mulroney wanted that prison in Port Cartier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. Presenting reports from Interparliamentary Delegations.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. Because I knew my time was limited in responding to statements I want to say that I express grave concern over the practice of the Government to give statements to Opposition critics—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Presentation of Reports from Committees.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the first report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations.

Pursuant to provisional Standing Order 99(2), your committee requests a Government response to this report. This report addresses a number of concerns relating to the Canada Post Corporation, namely, changes in rural mail delivery; closure of rural post offices; reduction in subsidies for weekly newspapers and changes in the mailing status of religious periodicals; delivery services in new subdivisions; technical deficiencies of supermailboxes and reliability of service. I emphasize that your committee intends to exercise its power under provisional Standing Order 96(2) to review and report to the House from time to time on the progress achieved by Canada Post in implementing its corporate plan.

I wish to express, on behalf of the committee, my appreciation for the contribution of many Members of Parliament who attended the meetings although they were not members of the committee.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of, I think, most of the citizens of the town of Blaine Lake, including a number of very high profile Conservatives. The petition calls upon Parliament not to put through changes to the Patent Act which will increase prices of prescription drugs for Canadians and to allow production of generic drugs and the lower cost of drugs to continue.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a petition from residents of my riding in Winnipeg with regard to the patent drug legislation which the Government has before the House. They point out that this legislation will increase the cost of patent drugs to consumers, to people who have to rely on patent drugs on an ongoing basis, that it will increase the cost to taxpayers because of increased costs for provincial drug programs. The petitioners indicate that this legislation is a gift to the multinational drug companies and they call upon Parliament to rescind the legislation.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions in the name of constituents and residents of this country. Whereas the Government of Canada having imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadian literature and information and: whereas the tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture and; whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition policies and programs of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from the villages of Drake and Dundurn in my riding. The petitioners note that the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present another petition under Standing Order 106. This petition relates to the attempt of the Government to change the Patent Act. People from Flin Flon, Cross Lake, Grand Rapids, St. Boniface and Thompson indicate in their petition that they believe this will only increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, that it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and that this is only another example of the Canadian Government giving concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the parties and I believe you will find there is unanimous consent to handle all stages of this Bill, including reference to Committee of the Whole, in this sitting.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we have agreed to this even though introduction of the Bill has been delayed for months. We would like to have the Bill go to committee where we would have the time to deal with it, but in view of the necessity to have it passed before the end of the year we have agreed to deal with it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a brief extension of a law which has been in effect since 1945 and we will accept it continuing for another six months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, as was indicated, the purpose of Bill C-31 is to extend for six months the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The Act has always contained a sunset clause. The initial period of the Act was three years, and it has been extended since then, from time, to time usually for three-year intervals. This has provided an opportunity to reconsider the provisions of the Act and amend it as necessary to ensure that it continues to meet the needs of Canadian farmers.

The last extension of this Act involved the period of 18 months from July 1, 1985 to December 31, 1986. It was our intention to carry out a full review of the program during that 18-month period so that we would be in a position to propose needed amendments to make it more useful and then extend it for a longer period of time.

Substantial work has been done on this review. However, the need to deal with some very serious financial problems facing farmers has made it impossible to complete the review and the necessary consultations with farm organizations and lenders across the country. It is because of the need to provide additional time to complete the review and the necessary consultations that I seek an amendment to the Act which will extend my authority to guarantee new loans for an additional six months.

Over the course of the review it has become apparent that in some ways the Act has indeed achieved many of its original objectives. When the program was first introduced some 41 years ago, in 1945, there was little mid-term credit available to farmers from commercial lenders. Between 1945 and the middle-1960s a very substantial part of the credit provided to farmers was guaranteed under this Act. In the late 1960s and through the 1970s the use of the program declined as commercial lenders introduced their own loan programs for farmers. The decline in the number and dollar amounts of loans extended under the Act continued into the 1980s as the serious financial difficulties facing agriculture caused farmers to cut back on their investment in farm machinery, equipment and buildings. Despite that decline, the program continues to occupy a small but very significant place in the field of agricultural credit. In 1985, the last year for which figures are available, there were just under 12,000 loans extended for a total amount of $165 million.

While this program occupies only a relatively small part of the over-all agricultural credit field, it is important to remember that it is only one part of the over-all contribution of the federal Government to the credit needs of Canadian farmers. The Farm Credit Corporation has long played a major role in long-term agricultural credit. With the serious financial difficulties facing farmers we have strengthened that role by taking such special measures as reducing the rate of interest paid by farmers locked into high interest rate loans and by introducing new financial instruments such as a shared risk mortgage and Commodity-based Loan Program. We have also strengthened and extended existing agricultural credit programs such as the small business bond, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Advance Payments for Crops Act. We also introduced a system of Farm Debt Review Boards to help farmers in financial difficulty reach settlements with their creditors. All of these initiatives have helped farmers obtain the credit they need in a period of serious financial distress.

At the same time, the initiatives taken in agricultural credit are but a small part of the total assistance we have provided to farmers in a period when external forces have created very serious difficulties for many farmers in this country. These initiatives have ranged from steps taken to effectively offset all federal sales and excise taxes on farm fuels to the $1 billion special Canada grains program that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced December 9.

When the review of this Act was carried out, suggestions were made that a radical restructuring is not really needed. However, additional work and consultation is necessary to verify this view and identify the adjustment and changes which need to be made if the Act is to continue to fulfil its role in the agricultural credit field. Again, the review is not yet complete but the consultations we have had with farm groups suggest there is basic support for the program and a recognition that some adjustment may be necessary to ensure its continued contribution to Canadian agriculture. Indeed, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture indicated its support for the program and recommended there be a short extension to permit additional time for the review and consultation to be completed.

With the passage of this Act it is my intention to complete the review as quickly as possible and introduce substantive amendments early in the new year. That will ensure ample time for deliberations on the amendments by Parliament before the six-month extension period expires. Therefore I urge my colleagues, indeed all Hon. Members of this House, to support the Bill so that we can meet the needs of Canadian farmers during that interval.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-31. While the Minister has yet to get his act together concerning exactly how he is going to amend the Bill, at least the uncertainty which has reigned supreme in this country since September 26, when a press report indicated the Government might be cancelling the program, has ended. We learned last Thursday or Friday that the Government was going to extend the program for another six months at least. I take it from the Minister's comments this morning that he may actually continue the program in the future and improve it. That is encouraging since the farm debt crisis facing Canadian agricultural since the fall of 1984 is one area where the Government has failed to take any very effective action.

Mr. Wise: Just about $3 billion, that is all.

Mr. Foster: We have seen a lot of hype about what the Government is going to do but we have not seen very much action. That is of great concern because during the 1984 election campaign the Government committed itself to allocating the necessary funds to assist producers in refinancing their loans at prevailing rates of interest. The amended Farm Improvement Loans Act might be useful in that regard because the rate of interest is 1 per cent above prime.

• (1150)

In 1979, 25,309 loans were granted under this program for total financial assistance of $265 million. In 1984 only half as many loans, 12,000 were granted for total financial assistance of $159 million. We on this side of the House wonder why so little is being made available to farmers. Perhaps the Minister will explain in Committee of the Whole why the Government is leaving us uncertain as to whether or not it is phasing the program out and why the funds seem to be unavailable.

The FCC is the important funding agency of the federal Government. Thirty-two per cent of its inventory of loans is outstanding at interest rates of between 12.75 per cent and 16.75 per cent. That seems to fly in the face of the Government's campaign commitment that it would reschedule loans to current interest rates. The Government found funding in the FCC in 1984 which allowed it to reschedule some loans to 12.75 per cent. Farmers who would swear that they were going broke had their loans rescheduled from 14 per cent and up to 12.75 per cent. It is hard to say what would have happened had there not been $575 million left in the FCC funding account in the fall of 1984.

There has been great uncertainty as to whether the Government was going to renew this program. A report in The Globe and Mail of September 26 said that there was millions at stake for cash-starved farmers and that the axe may fall on farm and fishing loan schemes. At that time the Minister obviously did not have a commitment from the Government to continue this program. He issued a press release on October 6 in which he said that he considered it a priority for Canadian farmers to have access to adequate credit. However, he did not really clarify until last Friday whether the axe would fall on this legislation.

That type of uncertainty is exactly what our agricultural community does not want. We did not know for certain until a week ago whether the Government was going to proceed with its special grain program for western Canada. The Opposition, the prairie pools and other groups have been calling upon the Government to provide assistance of between $2 billion and $4 billion a year. Finally last Tuesday the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that they were going to make the payment. However, they are going to spread it out over such a period of time that many farmers who are facing financial crises right now will not receive assistance until next April or May. In fact, farmers on average will receive only $1,500 in January or February. The $3,500 balance of assistance under that program will not be received until next April or May. For the 39,000 farmers in serious financial difficulty that assistance will come so late that it will be questionable how much help it will be.

This assistance, however, is more real than the announcement made by the Prime Minister last April 30 of $300 million or $400 million of so-called assistance, which resulted in no assistance at all because most farmers received very little from it. That program was supposed to freeze freight rates. However, it turned out that it was only a recalculation of the volume of freight rates. There was no real saving of $42 million. It was only a smoke and mirrors operation.

The Minister also implied that the Government was going to increase the domestic price of wheat from $7 to $11. In fact, it was only increasing the range. Farmers had expected a $200 million to $300 million benefit from that. He announced with great flourish that on May 1 he would remove the 2-cent a litre excise tax which he had imposed in September of 1985. He expected everyone to cheer. They did not cheer. In fact, most farmers wanted to know why the Government had imposed this 2-cent a litre tax which cost farmers $60 million or $70 million when farmers were already in serious financial difficulty. Why would any Government which was serious about helping farmers do that in the first place?

In addition, there has been tremendous uncertainty about the free trade negotiations. We wonder what kind of deal Simon Reisman will make in the dark of the night. We wonder whether he will trade away our marketing and stabilization programs. This week 50 or 60 farmers are coming to Ottawa to find out whether the Government will make the final payment on No. 1 and No. 2 wheat. There is a precedent for the Government making that final payment as it did for durum wheat in 1969-70. Farmers want to know why that $190 or $200 million payment will not be made directly to them. I am sure the Minister will change his mind and make that final payment which will be so beneficial to farmers, especially in view of the fact that he has delayed it for many months.

We are also interested in knowing why the Government is not extending the moratorium on FCC loans for the same time that it is procrastinating in making the final payment on the special grains program. I can hear the Minister saying that he has not lifted the moratorium; perhaps in Committee of the Whole he will be able to announce that he will extend the moratorium on FCC foreclosures for another few months.

Let us consider the Government's financial assistance to farmers. During this fiscal year it is providing some $65 million for the farm debt crisis, the largest proportion of which is for the Canadian Rural Transition Program which is designed to take farmers off the farm. Some $20 million is going to that program, some $10 million for the Farm Debt Review Board and the actual financial assistance for the FCC to write down loans is only $10 million. The Provinces of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta are providing a great deal more proportionately.

There is some $20 million allocated to the commodity-based mortgage for the reduction of interest rates, but when we read the fine print we see that over the ten-year life of those mortgages most farmers will in fact not only pay back all of that $20 million of interest that has been allocated, they will end up paying some 12.75 per cent interest on that program. The Government itself makes it clear in its advertisements that this is not a subsidy program and there is no assistance really available unless the value of the commodity stays extremely low.

In spite of all our misgivings about the Government's plans and the uncertainty about whether the Government will renew or hopefully improve the program for farmers who make use of it, we believe that the Bill should be passed and the life of the program extended. When we get to Committee of the Whole I will want to know why this program is not used in many parts of the country, such as in Ontario where a very small percentage of these loans are approved. Farmers are often paying from 12 per cent to 15 per cent interest, when a program such as this is available. I hope the Minister is prepared to make a commitment to ensure that the chartered banks make adequate funds available, as was promised in the 1984 general election.

In conclusion, we are prepared to pass the Bill today and see the life of the Farm Improvement Loans Act extended for another six months.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Bill we are debating today is an interim measure by which the Minister can extend the life of the Farm Improvement Loans Act for another six months. The Minister has been facing a dilemma regarding the Farm Improvement Loans Act and, like all dilemmas, it has two horns. First, shortly after the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) took office he had consultations with his various provincial counterparts and their Deputy Ministers. He was told in 1984 that the Farm Improvement Loans Act should be continued, but with some changes. Among those changes that were proposed was that the rate of interest be fixed as it was when the Act was originally introduced. Furthermore, these fixed rates should continue from one to five years and the Government's guarantees for the loans and the other aspects of the program should continue.

Faced with that proposal, which I support, he has also been faced with the proposal by the Nielsen Task Force which looked at the Farm Improvement Loans Act and said: "The study team recommends to the task force that the Government consider allowing the program to expire and transfer the administration of the claims payment to the Farm Credit Corporation". The Minister has had to deal with this conflicting advice and I believe we should examine those choices in this debate.

Since 1945 farmers have used the Farm Improvement Loans Act which has extended loans of various amounts. The program had been renewed every three years until it expired on June 30, 1985, when the Minister decided to extend it until the end of 1986. If we did not pass this Bill to extend the Farm Improvement Loans Act for another six months, it would cease at the end of this month. It is unclear what would happen with the guarantees from the federal Government on a number of loans, some of which could extend for as long as 15 years, in the event that those loans were not paid.

We are proposing to support the Minister's proposal of a six-month extension today in the hope and understanding that he will be able to convince his Cabinet colleagues that the only choice for the Farm Improvement Loans Act is that offered by the provincial Ministers of Agriculture and their Deputy Ministers, to strengthen the Farm Improvement Loans Act so that it can once again offer loans to farmers at fixed interest rates and for a term running from one to five years.

Let me explain the actual purpose of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I have already indicated that it was established in 1945 to make it possible for farmers to obtain loans from banks for a medium term of one to five years. Later, it was expanded to permit loans for buildings and other assets which have a longer life so that a loan could run for as long as ten years. The possibility of buying land under the Farm Improvement Loans Act with loans running for as long as 15 years was included in the last two or three renewals of the legislation. The maximum loan currently offered is up to $100,000 with the interest rate set at the banks' prime rate plus 1 per cent. I think this is one of the things about which provincial Ministers and their deputies were concerned.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, under the last change to the Bank Act the kinds of loans which have become prevalent under Section 176 of the Bank Act are those where interest rates vary on a weekly basis and the borrower pays 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent over that prime rate. The farmer does not really know what interest rate he will be paying six months from now or, indeed, even next week, because it changes.

Therefore, the provincial Ministers of Agriculture and their deputies suggested it was time to go back to a fixed rate for these kinds of loans in particular because farmers were being asked to pay rates considerably higher than inflation and considerably more than what agriculture could generate in terms of ability to repay. Since these loans are generally taken out by beginning farmers or those who are adding to their machinery and buildings, it is important the rate not be set too much higher than their ability to repay.

The terms of the loans are not unreasonable. They are very little different than what some of the banks will offer outside of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. A farmer must put up 25 per cent collateral on most loans with the loan amounting to up to 75 per cent of the value of the machinery, buildings or livestock. There has been one change with respect to the amount of assets the farmer or borrower must put up and that is when the purchaser wants to purchase real estate. In that case the loan can be for as much as 90 per cent of the value of the real estate.

The program has been designed to protect the lender—the banks, in most cases, although credit unions can also make loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act—against losses. The federal Government provides some funding in the event there are losses. However, the losses have not been great under this program. Since 1945 the average losses claimed under this program have resulted in a cost to the federal Government under this Act in the amount of .2 per cent of 1 per cent, so we are talking about very small losses. In other words, farmers have been very good risks under this program and have used it very carefully.

Losses, however, have increased since the farm debt crisis which was triggered in 1981 by high interest rates. Losses in 1985 were expected to reach a high of about $5 million which, considering the total amount loaned and paid back, is still much less than 1 per cent of the total amount provided. Even at the increased rate of loss over the last few years, it is still far less than 1 per cent. It is not something about which the Nielsen task force had to worry. It is not a cost unduly high for the Government of Canada to carry. It costs something less than $5 million to keep the lending portfolios of the banks current as they effect loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

I think it is important, if there is going to be a choice, and I want to reiterate this to the House, that the loans act continue in place, but not just for six months. We should go back to the three-year program which had been in place since 1945 and back to the fixed rate operation which made the program useful and usable up until recent times. Perhaps the House does not realize, but interest is becoming a very big part of farm costs. I would like to cite some figures and I know these are the kinds of things which put everyone to sleep. However, I think most everyone is asleep anyway, so what can I lose?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Pardon?

Mr. Althouse: Between 1973 and 1975, as an example, farmers had $8.81 to $7.94 of net income for every dollar of interest they had to pay. Back in those days they had a fairly large amount of net income with which to make interest payments. Those were sort of the glory years for agriculture in terms of the farmers' ability to pay interest. Between 1979 and 1984 we went down hill badly. We went from $8.81 back in 1973 to $2.81 in 1984 of net income for every dollar of interest we had to pay, according to the latest figures. Within a decade we are left with a great deal of our net income going to the payment of interest rates.

It was a Liberal Government up to 1984, and then I believe it was a Conservative Government. I do not know what conclusion we should come to from that. On the surface one would have to say that with a Liberal Government in 1973 and the Conservative Government in 1984, things had gone down hill badly, but I think there was more to it than that.

I believe there is still a very great need for this kind of program. We have seen studies recently which show the need has become so great it has been recognized by the provinces who have been picking up on the fact that the Farm Improvement Loans program is not all it should be. Therefore, we have seen over past years a number of provincial programs which attempt to fill the need from which the federal Government appears to be backing away. Instead of the prime plus one kind of lending, we see provinces introducing programs which attempt to provide better, more stable financing for farmers, such as the Quebec Farm Improvement Loans Act which provides interest rates at prime plus one half of 1 per cent. That is only slightly better than the federal program, but it subsidizes the first 3 per cent of interest up to the first $15,000.

The program in British Columbia provides up to a maximum of $300,000. It is available to those people who are not eligible for credit under normal financing. The Province of Alberta has a similar kind of program but it has no maximum loan which can be made, therefore farmers can go over the $300,000 maximum which is available in British Columbia. The rest of the Alberta program is similar to the Farm Improvement Loans program.

The Province of Saskatchewan does not have a particular loan program except for some livestock operations. Its particular program provides interest rates at prime plus 2 per cent. It is aimed at those farmers who are having great difficulty in getting credit to expand their operations. Manitoba has a program which is limited to $60,000. That program is aimed at operating credit, as well as for some livestock and machinery. Ontario has an operating loan guarantee, but no intermediate loan guarantee, similar to the Farm Improvement Loans program, and the Atlantic region has no program at all.

I think it is useful to point out at this point in time that one of the reasons the Nielsen task force gave for getting rid of the farm improvement loans program was that most of the advantage ended up going to the cropping areas of the country, and in particular to Saskatchewan. The report was worded in such a way that it almost sounded as if it was the kind of program that could be very easily dropped since most of the advantage seemed to go to Saskatchewan. I do not know if the task force felt that Saskatchewan was not very important or if it simply felt that there was not very much political clout likely to come out of Saskatchewan which only has 14 Members of Parliament out of 282. At any rate, that assessment stands and the task force continues to stand by its proposal to do away with the program.

I think we should note just in passing that the Nielsen task force report said that its study team on business subsidies and services proposed the continuation with user-fees and reduced guarantees for the business improvement loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act. That loan activity is about three to four times the level of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and has 10 times the losses. The Nielsen task force thought that this program for small businesses should continue even though its loss ratio was much higher and it seems to be less effective than the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This discrepancy in the Nielsen task force was picked up on in part by the Ontario Institute of Agrologists which just completed a study that is in the hands of many Members of the House.

The Institute points out that in its opinion, the Nielsen task force has overrated some other aspects of the economy and underrated the importance of agriculture. It also points out that in one of his assessments of the Nielsen task force, Dean Freeman McEwen of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph was quoted in the press of October 27 of this year as saying:

> He noted a task force led by former Deputy Prime Minister Erik Nielsen put farm subsidies and tax expenditures at $4.1 billion last year. He said small businesses received $16.4 billion in federal subsidies and services in 1985.
> "I would be prepared to lay on the table side by side the contribution of agriculture to Canada and the contribution of small business to Canada," McEwen told a news conference in Aberfoyle near Guelph. "Small business is just getting a whale of a good deal."

Hon. Members who are generally aware of the importance of small business in the growth of Canada should also be aware that in the opinion of many experts who understand agriculture better than those Hon. Members of Parliament, the contribution and potential contribution of agriculture to Canada far outweighs that of small business and that agiculture is not getting its fair share of assistance from this Government, nor did it get its fair share from previous Governments.

In closing, I would like to remind the House that using the floating rate loans which have been used for the last five or six years under the Farm Improvement Loans Act is in effect asking farmers to pay rates higher than the rate of inflation and much higher than the ability of farms to generate money to repay those loans. We are now asking farmers to pay in the neighbourhood of 11 per cent and 12 per cent for loans to add to the equipment, livestock and buildings on the farms and to add to their ability to produce. We are asking this at a time when inflation is somewhere between 4 per cent and 5 per cent. People who are lending money are therefore taking 6 per cent to 7 per cent of real interest.

When the Farm Improvement Loans Act program was begun the fixed rate was 5 per cent and inflation was between 2 and 3 per cent. Real interests was 2 per cent to 3 per cent at most. For the last nearly 10 years, we have been asked to carry high real interest rates when agriculture as an entity across Canada has only rarely been able to generate profits in excess of 2 per cent or 3 per cent. The ability to repay stands at 2 per cent or 3 per cent, but the cost agriculture is being asked to bear stands at 6 per cent or 7 per cent in real interest rates terms. This makes it virtually impossible for young, albeit, efficient farmers to carry these rates.

In the last few seconds that I shall speak on this issue today I would like to make a renewed call to all government Members. I realize the Minister has probably had this matter before Cabinet for some time. I would hope that when Cabinet must make a final decision on supporting the Farm Improvement Loans Act at fixed rates as Agriculture Ministers across Canada have proposed, the Government will listen to those Agriculture Ministers and will ignore the inappropriate and inopportune recommendation of the Nielsen task force so that we may continue to make this program available to farmers in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Wise, seconded by Mr. Hees, moves that Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions for the Minister on the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Has the program been subscribed to the maximum level of the funds that are available? Why have a program like this which is so sparsely utilized in provinces like Ontario, for instance? The program seems to be well used in Saskatchewan and the other prairie provinces, but it is not utilized to any great extent in Ontario. Is it simply the case that all the available loan guarantees are totally used up, or is it the case of the banks simply refusing to issue loans under this program because they can make more money issuing loans under some other program? Would the Government be willing to require that a certain level of its funding be made available under this program?

• (1230)

Even today many farmers are stuck with borrowing funds at 12 and 15 per cent. Obviously, the industry cannot afford this. For instance, only 9.5 per cent of the funds are used in Ontario, which is the second largest agricultural producing province, and it may have as large a capacity as Saskatchewan. Why is this program gradually running down? In 1979 there were 25,000 loans made available. In 1984 there were only 12,000 loans made available, even though the interest rate advantage is desperately needed today, perhaps even more so than in 1979. Could the Minister inform the House about those matters?

Mr. Wise: Saskatchwan has the greatest participation rate with 38 per cent utilization. The second province is Alberta with 29.3 per cent. The third is Manitoba with 12.8 per cent. The fourth is Ontario with 9.5 per cent. The fifth is British Columbia with 4.1 per cent.

The Hon. Member's question is interesting and one to which we have been attempting to seek the answer. The provincial industry rate subsidy programs are not as enticing and beneficial as, for example, those of the provinces of Quebec or Nova Scotia. I stand to be corrected, but I believe that the Province of Prince Edward Island also has a fairly good provincial program and interest rate reduction, and perhaps there might be some other programs. First, I am tempted to believe that it is the nature of farmers because the program is a national program; second, the banks carry out the same program and apply the same policy across the country. We have been asking staff people who have been associated with this program for longer than you and I, Mr. Chairman, and that is also the question that we are putting to farm organizations. There does not seem to be a legitimate reason for it.

With respect to the other question that the Hon. Member raises, it sounds to me as if he has been reading some of my old speeches when I was in Opposition. I can recall that during those days the bankers used to have three stock answers: One, they had never heard of the program before; it was not their policy to lend under the Farm Improvement Loans Act; that their allotment or quota was totally used up. Of course, we know it is nonsense, all three observations.

There has been some discussion that perhaps to provide a greater incentive for the banks to participate to a greater extent we may have to consider a slight increase over prime plus one, that is, if we wish greater participation in the program. That does not interest me very much, and I am sure it does not interest the farm community or the farm leadership.

These are some of the hard questions in respect of which we need time to sit down with more farm organizations, to determine exactly in which direction they would prefer us to go.

The Deputy Chairman: On a supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: I am interested in knowing whether the Minister is personally committed to the idea of requiring that a certain percentage of the loans made to farmers by the chartered banks, whether they would have to be made available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act when the Government is reviewing it during the next six months. Is the Government giving consideration to extending this to cover working capital as well as capital items such as machinery, land, and improvements? Is the Government prepared to consider that in its plan?

I ask these things, Mr. Chairman, because the current rate of interest, the real interest that many farmers are paying, is almost as high today as it was in 1981 or 1982 during the high rates of interest. The inflation rate back in those days was 10 or 11 per cent. If interest rates were 17 or 18 per cent in those days, and today they are 10 or 12 per cent with inflation rates that are only 3 or 4 per cent, the interest rate is still high. That is why there has been the tremendous downturn in farm asset value. For instance, the Farm Credit Corporation told the Standing Committee on Agriculture last week that farm asset values had dropped by almost 7 per cent in the last 12 months. That means that if the farm asset values were $100 billion in the summer or fall of 1985, they were some $7 billion less, or almost double the net farm income. With this tremendous drop in farm asset values, it is little wonder that so many farmers who are heavily leveraged are losing their equity and facing the loss of their land because their equity is going down. Any move toward giving lower interest rates will benefit that situation. Certainly, many farmers complain about paying 12, 13, or 14 per cent even though theoretically there is money available under this program at 1 per cent above prime. Could the Minister give us some indication on this points?

Mr. Wise: I have listened to the Hon. Member's speech and had some difficulty following the logic of it. His first question seemed to be quite sensible and reasonable, but I had the feeling that he is slipping back into that questionable logic that he expressed in his speech.

One of the major contributing factors and why we are dealing with a very serious financial difficulty in agriculture today is a direct result of the lack of programs, action, commitment, and financial support provided to the farm community over that period of time when the Hon. Member was a government Member. What were some of the messages flowing out of that Government that he was a member of? Well, they indicated that the inflation rate would remain constant throughout this period of time that we are presently going through. Of course, that turned out to be dead wrong.

The second observation was that the commodity prices would be at an all time high. Of course, we see them at an all time low for the last 50-year period. The Hon. Member's Government indicated that energy costs would remain constant throughout this period of time. It did not foresee what would happen to energy costs. It indicated that we would be going through a period of time when we would experience a shortage of commodities. All major food producing countries in the world are going through a period of surplus in supply, so they were dead wrong. They also indicated that interest rates would remain stable throughout the latter part of the 1970s and throughout the 1980s. However, what happened to interest rates? They went from 9 per cent to 24 per cent.

We have talked with young farmers across the country, day in and day out, seven days a week. We asked them what was a major contributing factor to the financial difficulties they were experiencing. They say that it was interest rates. They planned their operations on 9 per cent and 10 per cent interest rates, but interest rates increased from 9 per cent to 24 per cent. That is what killed them; that is what crippled them.

Every 1 per cent of interest rate is a cost to Canadian farmers of about $140 million. Interest rates increased from 9 per cent to 24 per cent or some 15 points. All one has to do is a mathematical calculation to arrive at the result to the farm community.

When the Liberal Government was in office it transferred an added input cost to Canadian farmers of about $2 billion. What did they do about it? We cannot say they did nothing, because they had a little program called the Special Farm Assistance Program. It was selective, and it helped about 1,900 farmers. However, who paid for it? It was not the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It was fellow borrowers, fellow clients of the Farm Credit Corporation, who paid. We changed that. We took that extra burden off the shoulders of FCC clients and we picked it up, thanks to the support of my colleagues and the Minister of Finance. We are picking up the extra $80 million, affecting some 5,600 clients.

I understand the frustration of the Hon. Member who was a government Member for a long time. He campaigned and provided election commitments to farmers. He came back here and sat in the Liberal Government benches, and that Government did not fulfil any of the campaign commitments. I understand his frustration. When he compares the record of his Government to the record of this Government, I understand his frustration.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, the only clause with which we are dealing today provides that during the period from July 1, 1980 through to June 30, 1987, $1,550 million will be made available to the banks for guarantees on loans during that period of time. Could the Minister update us on how much of that allocation has already been used? Is the extension over the seven years an increase, a decrease, or a continuation of the same level of loan guarantees to banking institutions?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I have checked with my officials and they indicate that we have at least a half billion dollars to be utilized. If the past is any indication of what future requirements might be, and no doubt it will be, there would be an adequate amount of money left to deal with the demand on the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, in the report of the Nielsen task force, the subcommittee looking at farm credit and the Farm Improvement Loans Act, it was indicated that losses were still less than 1 per cent. In other words, the guarantees the Government was required to make to the end of 1984 were still below 1 per cent. Could we have an update on what percentage of losses we are facing in more recent times?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, we would have in the portfolio about $5 billion. Our losses would be $4.8 million. I gather that would be less than 1 per cent.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I will make a slight change in direction. In one of the Minister's responses to the Hon. Member for Algoma he speculated that perhaps it might be necessary to extend the interest rate from 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent of prime. I want to raise that issue with him because it seemed to be somewhat of a psychological slip.

I understood that we would try to go to a fixed rate rather than to an increase in the floating rate. Is it an indication that the Minister is beginning to waver and listen to some of his cabinet colleagues? Will we be looking at a fixed rate? At what range of interest is he looking for the fixed rate? Will it be just a few percentage points over the real interest rate or the rate of inflation?

Mr. Wise: No, Mr. Chairman. I want to make very clear that it was not a slip of the tongue or anything of that nature. It was a frank observation of one of the options we might consider. There is no way in legislation to force the banks to participate to any extent or to increase their participation to a greater extent under the program. It would be nothing short of wishful thinking.

If it is the conclusion of farm leaders that they want greater participation in the loan program, and obviously that would be one way in which we could successfully encourage the banks to participate to a greater extent. I think it is just a reality. We may have to consider it as one of the options.

I indicated that it was not good news to me—and I am sure it would not be good news to Canadian farmers—because farmers would like to see greater participation at the existing prime plus one or perhaps prime plus a half like they have in Quebec. I do not know, but we will have to look at it. I made that observation deliberately.

I listened to the Hon. Member's speech when he talked about a 41 year history. I do not know what period of time it was; I have not had a chance to check it. However, he indicated that there were fixed rates over that period. It is an option which we will have to consider. I think it would be an option which farmers perhaps would support. No doubt they would be prepared to pay a bit of a premium for that stability in the program.

Farm leaders have suggested other options. One was that perhaps we could raise the $100,000 limit. Maybe we should consider other criteria to be eligible. At the moment quotas and things of that nature are not eligible under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I do not know what we would do on that one. It would depend upon the position taken by farm leaders. I see the Hon. Member smiling. He knows the problem there as well as I do.

Also, an individual can have one, two, three, four, or more farm improvement loans. Perhaps for administrative purposes it would be possible for him to put them all under one loan. There are a number of things at which we could look, but certainly fixed interest would be helpful.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, in one of my other lives I am a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Every time we ask Government Members and Deputy Ministers why they have done certain things they tell us that this is part of the restraint emanating from the Nielsen task force or the task force which attempted to review it. Many of us got the impression that the task force report was put on the shelf and ignored. Obviously it was put on the shelf as far as Parliament was concerned, but not as far as the departments are concerned.

Because of the different approach that the Nielsen task force took on this legislation, can the Minister assure us—I am pleased to hear the Minister talking about certain changes that might be plausible—that one of those changes is not a recommendation of the Nielsen task force which was to eliminate this Act and program entirely six months down the road? I know the Minister has been talking around this suggestion quite a bit this morning. I still want that assurance that we are not talking about a six months extension and then the elimination of the program.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member poses two questions. He talks about restraint. This is Government restraint and it has to be by necessity. To continue to spend money like our predecessors we would be taking $3 out of every $4 of taxpayers' money simply to carry the interest on the debt. We would not have any money for small business people, for farmers, for grains and oil seeds people, and who knows who else would fall in line. If the Hon. Member examines the record, restraint on behalf of our Government has not reached Canadian farmers.

If we compare our contribution to our predecessors, we are up $2.7 billion this year, not counting the latest billion. Since we have assumed office, our Government has taken 350 initiatives delivering $5.7 billion directly into the pockets of Canadian farmers. Again, that does not include the latest billion which would bring the total to $6.7 billion. Because of the importance of agriculture domestically and internationally, and because of the priority the Government places on agriculture—yes, Canadian farmers are going through difficult times, the most difficult in 50 years—we are responding to those difficulties to the maximum of our financial capabilities.

Hon. Members always seem to misunderstand the Nielsen task force. Maybe they do so for their own purposes from time to time. I suggest that perhaps it might be, but we must remember that the Nielsen task force expressed options and recommendations. These options and recommendations are not Government policy. I repeat and I am sure I will have to say it again, they are not Government policy. If we had followed the recommendation in the Nielsen task force we would not have delivered to the dairy farmers the long term dairy policy of $1.5 billion; we would not have doubled the advance payments crop legislation, and I do not think that we would have extended this Act. I do not know which preceded which, the last extension or the tabling of the Nielsen task force. The only appropriate message that I can send to the Hon. Member, which should give him some comfort, is that if it were Government policy to let the program expire, then we would not be here today asking for a six month extension. We are asking for a little more time to consult with the farm leaders. We could have acted unilaterally. We could have been back here with a three year extension right now. That is not what we prefer to do. We want to take the necessary time to carry out consultations with the farm community to ensure greater utilization of this Act.

Mr. Hovdebo: I would point out just as a comment, Mr. Chairman, that there are a number of recommendations about agriculture in the Nielsen task force that have been put into effect, restraints are taking place and there are increases in charges in a number of areas and so on. The suggestion that agriculture is outside of the task force report and that other areas are not using the recommendations does not follow through.

I find that loans in another program, made under the farm and small business bond program, a program which was extended for two years, are not necessarily being renewed by banks. Are we to have the same kind of thing happening in this program as in that, where, as we move down the road, the relationship between the bank and the farmer will still push the farmer out because the bank is not necessarily renewing these loans when they come due?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I do not have before me the latest information on the participation of the small business bond, but I will be happy to inquire and supply the information to the Hon. Member. I have not encountered that at all.

The biggest difficulty in the program, and it is widely known, is that as far we are concerned the banks are not participating to as great an extent as I believe they can. We should, however, recognize some of the banks that do participate. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has participated to the extent of 45 per cent. The second bank is the Toronto-Dominion Bank with participation at 19.6 per cent, then the Bank of Nova Scotia at 15.8 per cent, the Bank of Montreal at 8.7 per cent and the Royal Bank is 8.3 per cent. I do not see any reason that other banks could not participate to the same rate and extent as the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce at 45 per cent. I am dealing with percentages here, Mr. Chairman, and one would have to look at the actual amount of dollars, I suppose.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister in his last statement has outlined the problem exactly. Surely in Committee of the Whole with the Minister and his officials here we should be able to get answers. Why are chartered banks not making more funds available under the program? Is the Government willing to put pressure on them to provide more money? We know that the commodity-based loan, which is the principal instrument the Government has available to assist farmers facing bankruptcy or foreclosure, will cost most borrowers 12.75 per cent by the time they make the final payment. If we are going to have some lower cost money available to farmers, the regular chartered banks should provide funds to farmers facing financial difficulty under this program. Perhaps after Question Period the Minister could respond in some detail as to what the Government is prepared to do to provide a greater amount of money under this Act. It is not just a matter of renewing the Act until the end of June. We have to make sure the chartered banks make the funds available to farmers.

• (1300)

The Deputy Chairman: Before I recognize the Minister I would like to advise the Hon. Member that we are carrying on until 1.25 so there will be ample opportunity for the Minister to answer the question.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Hon. Member to go back and do his mathematical calculation again as to what clients of the Commodity-based Loan Program might be paying. As far as I can determine he is again dead wrong. Some loans under the program are at 6 per cent and those grain and oil-seed farmers will actually be paying less than that.

I cannot recall his second question.

Mr. Foster: I ask the Minister to review the documentation under the Commodity-based Loan Program. Some of the government literature says this is not a subsidy or assistance program. As the value of the commodity goes up the farmer has to pay more, up to a level of 2 per cent above the regular FCC loan rate which is 12.75 per cent right now. When it first came out in the spring it was 13.25 per cent and it is the principal instrument.

However, I think what is more important today is whether the Government is prepared to encourage the banks to make more money available. Will he call in the respective bank presidents and say we would like to see a certain percentage of the relevant loans made available under this Act? Clearly it is a much better rate of interest than that of a regular commercial loan from a chartered bank. I hope the Minister is willing to take some initiative in that regard because there are very few instruments available which provide this level of interest rates for farmers.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member thinks this Parliament can legislate that, then he is whistling in the dark. It is a fairyland type of approach. The reality is that we cannot. The other approach is to try and encourage the banks in this manner, and that is exactly what we have been trying to do. That is exactly why we want a longer time for review, so we can carry out the consultative process with farm lenders and The Canadian Bankers' Association and perhaps individual banks.

The other part of the equation is the farm community, of course. That is what I meant when I indicated that if we really want greater participation, then we will have to face facts, be honest, realistic, and consider whether or not it is worth the cost, be it an extra half of one per cent or whatever, to get greater participation. Are there other options such as the banks programs, the Alberta Treasury program, the programs extended by credit unions, or provincial government interest rate subsidy programs? All those factors have to be taken into consideration and that is exactly what we are attempting to do.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has talked about recognizing facts and working from the information we have in front of us. That information is the data he presented concerning the proportion of banks utilizing this Act. I think he had the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce leading the list with something in the neighbourhood of 45 per cent utilization. My recollection, and it may be wrong, is that that bank is generally the second or third most important agricultural lender and the Royal Bank is usually the biggest lender. Yet the Royal Bank was down to about what, 6 per cent or 5 per cent?

Mr. Wise: No, it is number five.

Mr. Althouse: Very low utilization at any rate.

Mr. Wise: 8.3 per cent.

Mr. Althouse: Given those figures, and before he offers the banks an increase in the interest rate as an enticement to take up more loans under this Act, would he attempt to discover why some of the very largest banks, such as the Royal Bank, use the program so little? It seems to me that if I were managing a bank I would be taking the action that the CIBC is taking, trying to put as many loans under the Act as I could. That would make certain the customers were less likely to go out of business. That is what I would do as a banker intent upon performing my function as a lender to help people stay in business so I could continue to make loans. However, if my bank's policy was to provide the kind of lending that would eventually lead to it taking over farm land, I would pursue a quite different policy.

I am wondering if he has looked at that, and if perhaps the Royal Bank's policy of providing equity loans which permits them to in effect take over a big chunk of the farm assets and manage them for the farmer, or have the farmer manage them for the bank, whichever, may be more of an impediment than the actual rate. I hope we can get a commitment from the Minister to investigate this and perhaps report back to the House or to the committee concerned.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I again underline to the House that when I was naming the banks in order of participation I was dealing on a percentage basis. As well, I suppose that before drawing any real conclusions about this rate of participation we would want to provide an opportunity to determine how much lending there was in their individual portfolios in the agri-food industry. Will we be seeking that information? The short answer is absolutely.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wise moved that Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few seconds to express my appreciation and that of the Government for the co-operation I have received from both my critics in dealing with Bill C-31 on pretty short notice. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, we try in all cases to pass urgently-needed farm legislation in one or two sittings of the House. We continued that practice today because we know of the urgency in the farm community for this legislation to be passed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I believe there is a disposition to pass this Bill through all stages at this sitting of the House. Therefore, it would be deferred to a Committee of the Whole House. I think you would find unanimous consent for that.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, we will try to pass this Bill as quickly as possible. A couple of my colleagues do want to speak on it. Hopefully we can complete it today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Siddon by unanimous consent, moved that Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

On Clause 1—

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to express my gratitude to the Opposition Parties and their official critics for allowing us to expedite Bill C-32 which was introduced and given first reading earlier this day.

The history of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act is slightly different than that of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, it having been first adopted in December, 1955. However, the purpose of this Act is much the same as that of the Farm Improvement Loans Act which was just debated in this Chamber. Loans guaranteed under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act are guaranteed to a specified ceiling within a designated period.

The present period, Period 9, as provided for in Section 6(2) of the legislation, will expire December 31, 1986, unless the amendment the Government is proposing today is approved by all Parties. This Bill will do nothing more than alter the date appearing on page 108-9 in Section 6(1) of the present Fisheries Improvement Loans Act which says that the payments to lenders are guaranteed up to December 31, 1986.

Since its inception in December of 1955 the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act has guaranteed some 18,000 loans totaling $246 million, most of which have been repaid without claims under the provisions of this Act. As at the end of the last fiscal year there was approximately $13.5 million in claims against total loans of $246 million for a default rate of about 5.5 per cent, which is not at all alarming.

The Bill is designed to facilitate credit to fishermen who need money for the purchase or construction of a fishing vessel, the purchase or construction of equipment such as auxilliary boats, engines, winches, electronic equipment, nets and so forth, or for the major repair or overhaul of a fishing vessel.

The legislation presently in place authorizes the federal Government to guarantee lenders against losses incurred on loans made in accordance with its provisions. It specifies that the maximum amount which a fisherman may have outstanding under the provisions of the Act at any one time may not exceed $150,000 and the maximum repayment period is 15 years. The rate of interest charged on loans guaranteed under the Act is set at 1 per cent over the prime lending rate of chartered banks. This is a very favourable rate for fishermen with the present level being 10.75 plus 1 per cent. The rate under the legislation floats with the prime rate for the duration of the loan.

The legislation also sets out the total principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by all lending institutions lending funds under this Act during the lending period. The present approved level for Period 9, which would have expired on December 31 of this year, is $30 million. There is a portion of that $30 million which has not yet been secured by borrowers which allows us to propose, by way of this amendment, a six-month extension of the provisions of the Act.

Loans granted under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act must be secured in the form of a chattel or marine mortgage on the item purchased or constructed and the lender is given a written promise by the borrower to repay the loan. It should be noted that if the borrower defaults he or she remains liable to the Crown for the repayment of that loan when the lending institution is compensated under this Act. Other terms and conditions of each loan are worked out between the applicant and the lender.

We are asking for a six-month extension to the present Period 9 of loan authority in order to consider options to improve our program of providing financial services and assistance to fishermen. For example, the loans extended during Periods 6 and 7 from 1977 to 1982 have resulted in a rate of default considerably in excess of the ceilings provided for within the Act. This has caused problems for many fishermen. In addition, we are looking for means to integrate more effectively our loan support assistance with the programs provided by provincial loans boards. As well, we are looking at options for financing fishermen through the Federal Business Development Bank, for instance, or by way of a meshing of this program with the Small Businesses Loans Act. For all of these reasons we have asked for a six-month extension with a view to improving financial services and access to loans on the part of fishermen. We will require no additional financial support to facilitate this extension.

Therefore, I am asking the co-operation of all Members of the House in ensuring that this amendment is given speedy passage today. It is important to maintain continuity in the provision of loans to fishermen through to the proposed termination date of June 30, 1987. I invite response from members of the Opposition at this committee stage and I hope we can pass the legislation in a timely way.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly to the amendment to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The Minister is correct that this Bill extends the effect of the Act for an additional six months and I am pleased with the reasons he has given for doing so. It is a good program which I believe the Minister should have extended for a year or longer. However, there are certain problems with it, such as the 10 per cent ceiling with respect to banks. I am also pleased that the Minister will use this six-month extension to consider options for improving the legislation.

The Nielsen Task Force report presented options to the House some time ago, including a recommendation that the Government consider termination of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, since less federal Government intervention in fisheries and allowing the industry to function in response to market forces are major thrusts of the study. Such was the conclusion of the study team which went on to say, to that extent, that financial assistance required by fishermen can be obtained from provincial loan boards or financial institutions. I hope this is not happening to this program and that the Minister is serious when he says the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act will continue and be improved to meet the needs of those for whom it is designed so that fishermen can meet their obligations in the industry.

I am somewhat skeptical because many other good fisheries programs have been phased out by the Government in the past. For example, there is the vessel subsidy program that was very important to fishermen and enabled them to obtain a one-third subsidy from the federal Government and assist them in obtaining loans from financial institutions.

Mr. Chairman, may I close here and continue my remarks after lunch?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being 1.25 o'clock, shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

EQUITY IN EMPLOYMENT

CONSEQUENCES OF BILL C-62

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, according to a study by Statistics Canada published last week, women working full time in 1984 were paid 33 per cent less than men.

Furthermore, it seems the difference depended on a number of factors, including the "occupational" sector. Women working full time in education earned 25 per cent less than men, while women working in the services sector earned 46 per cent less. The picture is even less rosy when we realize that 80 per cent of all women work in the services sector.

Mr. Speaker, in 1967, women working full time were earning the equivalent of 58 per cent of the wages earned by men. Twenty years later, the situation has improved very little in this respect. It is therefore absurd to believe that genuine employment equity could be achieved through legislation like Bill C-62, whose provisions merely tend to confine women even more to the structural ghettos of unskilled and poorly paid jobs.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TERMS OF DRAFT LEGISLATION TO CONTROL POLLUTION

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the overhauling of Canada's pollution laws has been talked about by politicians, government officials and environmental groups for two decades. Recent polls now indicate that Canadians place the protection of our environment first on our priority list, even above jobs. The 37 million people who live in the Great Lakes Basin on both sides of the Border should be able to draw drinking water from anywhere in that vast system confident that the water is free from toxic industrial waste.

Polluters beware. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) will introduce a draft Bill this week designed to put polluters out of business, to get control of thousands of chemicals presently in the market-place, to govern the introduction of new chemicals, and to control trans-border pollution which will lead to the end of acid rain.

I applaud this move by the Government and fully expect Hon. Members on all sides of the House to co-operate to ensure this Bill will lead quickly to the elimination of conflicting regulations and finally to the proper protection of perhaps our most important possession, the environment.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, happy birthday!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: The 15 per cent countervail duty on Canadian softwood is illegal. In fact it is nothing more than thinly veiled extortion. The United States is determined to convince American citizens that there are hidden subsidies to Canadian lumber producers. The December 5 issue of Financial Post reveals that this campaign against Canada now includes disinformation as part of the strategy. A recent 11 p.m. news broadcast on WINK-TV in Fort Myers, Florida, led with a story: "And if you're going to build a house, prepare to pay an extra $1,000 for the lumber and blame it on the Canadian Government".

We know the White House is involved in corruption, arms smuggling, mining of harbours and various forms of terrorism, but how is it that our neighbour and ally has chosen extortion and fabrication as part of the free trade special for Canada's largest industry and source of balance of trade? We all know that on three key occasions the political incompetence of the Premier of British Columbia got us into the glue. The final 10 per cent offer, and the final, final 15 per cent offer by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) got us in deeper. But the real insult is to have the U.S. media blame Canada for the illegal acts of extortion by the U.S. Government.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JEAN PERRON OF LA SARRE, QUE.

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, today, I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Jean Perron, President and Chief of Operations at Normick Perron in the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region. Mr. Perron was given an honorary degree by the University of Quebec at Abitibi-Témiscamingue. This is the first time it has awarded an honorary doctorate to a well-known figure.

Mr. Perron has the qualities of a leader. He is an excellent businessman with a keen interest in research. People in Quebec and across Canada are aware of the importance of Normick Perron to the socio-economic development of this country.

In his speech, the President of the University, Mr. Rémy Trudel, stressed the continuing growth of the company which has become an important part of the forestry industry east of the Rockies in less than twenty years.

In turn, Mr. Perron emphasized the essential role played by our teachers in training young people by giving them role models known for their courage and initiative. He also stressed the importance of involving the regions in their own regional development.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Abitibi-Témiscamingue are proud of Jean Perron, who is from La Sarre.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF PARLIAMENTARIANS FOR GLOBAL ACTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, during the week of November 17 five Canadian Members of Parliament and myself, along with parliamentarians from 21 countries, attended the annual Parliamentary Forum at the United Nations. This Forum was sponsored by Parliamentarians for Global Action, formerly Parliamentarians for World Order, which is a network of approximately 600 parliamentarians in 36 countries who focus on disarmament, development, and the reform of international institutions.

This year the subject for discussion was the World Economy in Crisis: Debt, protectionism, and military budgets. Among the keynote speakers were John Kenneth Galbraith, Lester Thurow, and the Prime Minister of Peru, Dr. Alva Castro.

• (1405)

Parliamentarians for Global Action was the principal initiator of the five-continent peace initiative and has now launched an international campaign against hunger. I invite all Hon. Members to join with us in these important pursuits.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

"—TO SEE OURSELS AS ITHERS SEE US!"

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, Dick Dodds, the Director of Education for the Borough of East York, the majority of which is located in my constituency, has urged the teachers in his schools to think twice before taking their students to either the Ontario Legislature or the House of Commons because, as he puts it, the undisciplined, unproductive and disrespectful proceedings do little to project or promote viable examples for students.

While behaviour in the House has improved vastly this fall, there is still a tendency on the part of many Hon. Members, encouraged perhaps by the needs of the media, to treat the House of Commons as a theatre, while most Canadians think of it as a place for serious national business. Hopefully this Christmas we will all receive a present from the famous Scottish poet, Robbie Burns:

"—the giftie gie us

To see oursels as ithers see us".

FARM DEBT REVIEW ACT—CRITICISM OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, last June when the House debated and passed the Farm Debt Review Act, my colleagues and I expressed grave concerns that the Act would be ineffective. We said that the Act provided no real incentives to creditors to be reasonable in adjusting terms of credit to farmers. In short, we said that the Act had no teeth.

We have been proven right. Farmers are telling us that the review system is not working. Not only are the boards heavily overworked but too many creditors simply are not interested in finding workable solutions to the problems.

Even the good friend of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), Premier Devine, is unimpressed with the Farm Debt Review Act. The Premier has said that the federal Act is so inadequate that his Government has been forced to extend the Saskatchewan Farmland Security Act. At least the Saskatchewan Act allows farmers to appeal to the court if a creditor proves to be unreasonable. I therefore call upon the Minister of Agriculture to prepare amendments to strengthen the federal Farm Debt Review Act which will undergo a statutory review early in the new year.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ESCALATION OF VIOLENCE IN INDIAN SUB-CONTINENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, violence of an ethnic or religious origin appears to be escalating in the Indian sub-continent. To illustrate, let us take three headlines from this morning's Globe and Mail: "54 killed, 310 injured in Pakistani ethnic riot", "Hindus riot in Amritsar after funeral of politician", and "25 Tamils left dead in clashes".

What greater affront to human rights can there be than when people are wantonly murdered and forced to live in fear for their very lives? Canada has always spoken out on human rights violations and ought to use all its persuasive powers through the United Nations, the Commonwealth, and its relations with the countries involved to bring about a reduction in these unnecessary killings.

REPORT ON MIXED GENDER EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a copy of the restricted memo which has just come from the Canadian Armed Forces regarding the charter task force report. After extensive study which involved no discussion with anyone outside of the Armed Forces, the task force concluded that there is currently insufficient positive evidence that mixed gender employment could be further expanded without an adverse impact on operational effectiveness.

Since when is it the responsibility of the citizens of Canada to prove equality? In fact the specific instructions given to the Armed Forces by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) were to find ways of implementing equality. After extensive examination which involved no outside discussion whatsoever, the armed forces have concluded that they cannot promote equality today but two years hence they might be prepared to do so. I say that that particular guarantee is not enough. I would ask the Minister of National Defence to step in immediately and determine that a task force on operational effectiveness includes civilians as well as members of the military, so that we can ensure true equality for minorities in this country.

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT AID TO FARMERS—GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Government continues to tackle the grain income problem on two fronts. Domestically, a number of ongoing programs are already in place to assist grain and oil seed farmers. These include the Western Grain Stabilization Fund which this year has paid out $859 million, and federal-provincial crop insurance which has paid out $320 million. This Government has effectively removed all federal taxes on farm fuels. Coupled with last week's announcement of a $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program, these initiatives represent the greatest governmental response to agriculture in Canadian history.

But farmers know that the root cause of their low prices lies beyond our borders, and that the long-term solution is to end international grain subsidy wars. It is for this reason that the Government of Canada continues to work strenuously on the international scene. That is why Canada has succeeded in making agriculture a top priority in the new round of negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL DIGNITY OF CANADA—SAFEGUARDING OF RURAL POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of attenting the Rural Dignity of Canada founding convention in the riding of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina). This meeting attracted 800 people to Saint-Esprit—on a Sunday evening, in a blinding snow storm—including delegates from all regions of Canada, from British Columbia to Newfoundland.

The vision of the founding convention is to create a coalition of all Canadians to safeguard rural postal services which have been imperilled by the irrealistic policy of the Government, as implemented by Post Canada officials.

Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated in this House last December 5, and I quote: "There shall be no second-class citizens in this country— postal services or otherwise.", time has come for the Prime Minister to live up to his own words. No more shutdowns! No more cut-backs! Let us have rural dignity in Canada!

SPORTS

VICTORIES FOR CANADIAN MEN AND WOMEN'S SKI TEAMS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the House that achievement in any field requires dedication, and a strong sense of team effort. No one person can achieve success completely on their own. In sport, it requires the dedication of coaches, family, and the entire team.

Canada enjoys the benefits of four seasons. Yesterday we had an example of supreme effort on behalf of two Canadian teams in France and Italy. The Canadian women's and men's ski teams each had two who placed in the top ten in World Cup downhill competitions. I wish to commend particularly the gold cup medal efforts of Laurie Graham of Inglewood, Ontario, and Rob Boyd of Whistler, British Columbia.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

IMPOSITION OF FOOD PRICE INCREASES ON ZAMBIAN PEOPLE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the International Monetary Fund could learn a lesson from recent events in Zambia where looting and rioting took place following the abolition of food subsidies. At the urging of the IMF, the Government had doubled the price of corn meal, which is the staple diet of urban Zambians. The situation became so bad that President Kaunda had to restore food subsidies.

The IMF must stop imposing economic prescriptions which disregard social realities and widespread poverty in less developed countries. The gap in outlook between the IMF boardroom and the conditions of people in the streets of Lusaka is alarming. Forcing the doubling of the price of corn meal can have devastating repercussions on people whose pockets are virtually empty.

The IMF must come to its senses, recognize the importance of non-monetary values, and replace its insensitive policy with one that recognizes the social reality that the North must accept, namely, the debt situation of the least developed countries cannot be corrected by forcing Governments directly or indirectly to increase the price of food or the level of unemployment.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS OFFER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) met with his provincial counterparts. In that meeting the Minister announced that he was going to be phasing in a $175 million increase in equalization payments. Many of the provincial Finance Ministers believed that this money was going to come in a one-year term, as that was what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised them at the First Ministers' Conference.

In addition to this cut-back, many provinces still feel betrayed by the decision of the Finance Minister to cut the Established Programs Financing Program, the money that went for medicare, post-secondary education, and other causes.

• (1415)

It is very important that the federal Government recognize the needs of all provinces, not only give the have-not provinces and what they need for equalization, but the full amount promised by the Prime Minister. It is also important that the Government fully restore the EPF cuts which it made last year.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OILFIELD

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Newfoundland has recently been very critical of the Government of Canada for the lack of progress on the Hibernia project. He said:

> Newfoundland is going to be saying clearly and unmistakably—get on with it and fast.

He also said that there was no question it was now up to Ottawa to make the concessions necessary to strike a fiscal deal with Mobil Oil Canada Limited, the operator of the oilfield southeast of Newfoundland. Those were the comments of the Premier of Newfoundland who has been noticeably quiet since the Government took office.

However, what is its record? Not only have we seen cuts in government programs such as fisheries and transport which have been devastating in the Atlantic region, but now the Government threatens to cut back further on equalization grants, something we have taken for granted over the years.

I call upon the Government of Canada, as has the Premier of Newfoundland, to get the Hibernia project going immediately and to create the jobs which its Members promised during the last election campaign.

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I offer you my personal compliments on this day, your birthday.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—TENDERING PROCESS—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He should know that his own involvement in events leading up to the awarding of the contract to move the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier in his own riding has now prompted additional scrutiny from the Auditor General. At least three members of the Prime Minister's Cabinet were derelict in their responsibilities in acceding to improper tendering and ignoring the conflict of interest guidelines. Will the Prime Minister approve an independent judicial inquiry into all facts and circumstances leading up to the awarding of the contract and the acceleration of the contract in order to meet the Prime Minister's personal deadline to have it ready for opening in 1988?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last part of the comments of my right hon. friend, there was no acceleration of the contract. As I understand the information, the termination date was set by the previous Government with regard to the construction of the replacement facility for Laval.

Mr. Broadbent: You can blame those guys for a lot, but not for that.

Mr. Mulroney: If he accepts the fact—and I do not know whether he does—that the duly elected Government is empowered to make decisions with regard to federal installations, including in various regions of the country, that we have done. It was done in a proper manner, which will be looked at by voters at the appropriate time. This morning the President of the Treasury Board referred to the conflict of interest situation, which is following a normal course. The Government has acted properly and above-board.

[Translation]

TRANSFER OF PRISON FROM DRUMMONDVILLE TO PORT-CARTIER—POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The prison to which the Prime Minister is referring was the original institution at Drummondville, the prison approved by the previous Government, not the expedient transfer to Port-Cartier. Is it not true that both the Solicitor General and his predecessor turned a blind eye on the conflict of interest which became obvious when the Prime Minister brought pressure to bear so as to finish the Port-Cartier prison as soon as possible? Will the Prime Minister dismiss these two Ministers, or is he prepared to take the honourable course and admit that he assumes full responsibility for deciding to shelve the Drummondville prison project and transfer it to Port-Cartier for his own political reasons?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what an insipid question. The Government took action in this case, and Ministers behaved with dignity at all times. We did follow procedures and rules. The former Solicitor General, faced with such a construction project dilemma, said this:

• (1420)

[English]

We have to consider a number of objectives in making fundamental choices like a $44 million decision here. I could argue that the best place for this would be Toronto. Toronto has a lot of the infrastructure required. But I do not think that Canadians want everything to go to Toronto—

And so on.

[Translation]

Yes, but the question was asked. The former administration decided that new facilities were needed. The duly elected Government decided that such facilities would be located in Port-Cartier, on the basis of the same criteria advocated by the former Solicitor General, and of considerations related to regional economic expansion and national well-being.

An Hon. Member: Exactly!

[English]

TRANSFER OF PRISON LOCATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, doesn't the Prime Minister recognize that he could take some of the heat out of this issue by admitting before this House that it was his personal decision to transfer the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier at an extra expense of $41 million, and to accelerate the contract in order to arrange for the opening and completion of the prison in time for the fall of 1988 in his own riding and, in trying to accelerate the construction, his Ministers were forced to break the existing rules on conflict of interest and on the tendering process? Why doesn't the Prime Minister just get up and admit that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Because, Mr. Speaker, both of the allegations of the right hon. gentleman are completely false. That is why. The decision can be sustained, will be, and has been by the Solicitor General.

In regard to the first point about the extra expense, the Auditor General has his opinion in that regard. I am not going to quarrel with it. The opinion is pro-rated over the life of the installation. In that case, if the Auditor General, I suppose, is right, people will still be blaming Sir. John. A. for building Kingston.

[Translation]

AWARDING OF CONTRACT FOR PORT-CARTIER PRISON—POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the awarding of a contract at Port-Cartier. This morning, the President of the Treasury Board informed the House that Bechtel was awarded a contract because its proposal was judged to be the best, and I am quoting directly. Is it not a fact that this proposal was the best one because it was the only one that would fit the Prime Minister's political agenda? And why did the Government fail to follow the guidelines of the conflict of interest legislation, the provisions of Section 49 that make it quite clear the contract should never have been awarded to Bechtel?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the conflict of interest guidelines were followed in this case. After a detailed investigation of all the facts, I announced this morning that the Government wanted to rescind the contract awarded to Bechtel because there was both an apparent and a real conflict of interest in this case.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ADMINISTERING CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, offering a few heads did not work for Ronald Reagan, and it is not going to work today here either.

My supplementary question for the Prime Minister concerns the statement that Correctional Services and Public Works will now be continuing to direct the Port-Cartier project. Can the Prime Minister tell us how it is that the Member for Halifax, the former Minister of Supply and Services, could not administer the contract in that role and that he has now been given the responsibility for administering similar or the same contracts in his new role of Minister of Public Works? Should he not be fired instead of being given new contracts to administer? Is it not obvious that he cannot do that job?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the procedure that we are following is very normal. It is the typical procedure for any government.

Mr. Rodriguez: Typical Tory.

Mr. de Cotret: It is normal for any government, Mr. Speaker. We have decided to rescind the contract to Bechtel for the reasons I outlined this morning, and the responsible Departments which are Public Works, the Department of Supply and Services, and Correctional Services, will ensure that the work is continued and a new contract is awarded.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister decided to rescind the contract only after the Government was caught doing something it ought never to have done in the first place.

CONSTRUCTION SCHEDULE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There were two statements this morning, one by the Auditor General and one by the Minister. The Auditor General said, his words, not mine, that the Government showed preferential treatment in making this decision. In his statement in the House afterwards, the Minister, incredibly, blamed everyone, including civil servants, but the Government itself. He said the reason all these normal contractual procedures were broken was because the decision had been reached to build the prison within "a tight schedule". Will the Prime Minister now acknowledge the reason this schedule was imposed is that he decided to give himself a gift in his own riding for political purposes?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement by my hon. friend is absolutely inaccurate. There was no such indication by me or my office at any time in any circumstances. If my hon. friend wishes to be fair in his analysis, the completion date was imposed by the previous Government with regard to a substitute facility for Laval. I do not change at all nor do I make any apologies for the Government decision to locate it in Port-Cartier pursuant to criteria set out by the former Solicitor General in the Liberal Government.

We took a decision concerning Port-Cartier and we stand by that decision. It was a proper and honourable decision for a region of this country which is entitled to some assistance and should never be penalized simply because it is represented by a Prime Minister, or another Minister, or the Leader of the NDP.

[Translation]

PRISON SITE LOCATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows perfectly well that the decision made by the previous Government concerned a prison in another community, not a community in the Prime Minister's riding. That is a fact.

My question to the Prime Minister is simply this: Why is the Government blaming everyone, even its officials, for the Government's decision to build a penitentiary in the Prime Minister's riding for purely political reasons?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that too is entirely false. The Government is not blaming anyone. The President of the Treasury Board quite appropriately initiated an investigation, and he has drawn a number of conclusions from that investigation to date.

You were referring to another prison, in a riding in New Brunswick, and comparing it with the riding of Manicouagan. I hope the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not claiming that peripheral areas like the North Shore and Eastern Quebec do not have a right to federal facilities, because I can tell you that federal Government facilities in remote areas are very rare indeed. In my own riding there were none.

That was why the Government decided it was entirely fair and honourable to act in the interests of efficiency. We could build all federal facilities between Ottawa and Toronto, but that would be unfair to the rest of the country.

[English]

ACCEPTANCE OF RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we do not need to listen to lectures about regional development. We believe there ought to be regional development in all the poorer parts of this country, including the Prime Minister's riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: However, we do not believe in squandering $41 million of the public's money for electoral reasons. That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If the Prime Minister would like to put an end to this and get it out of the House of Commons, will he get up and acknowledge that this decision was a mistake, taken at the highest level of government, and the Government will now commit itself to integrity in government and put an end to short run political decisions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My hon. friend says he is in favour of regional economic development, including the constituency of Manicouagan.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Mulroney: Then perhaps he could tell us what he has in mind for Port-Cartier? During the time in question a substantial part of the population was out of work without any hope at all, and without any help from the federal Government. In fact, if you examine the record of the federal Government with regard to development in the constituency of Manicouagan, in the interior of British Columbia, or in northern Ontario, you will find that it was very, very wanting.

• (1430)

The present Government believes in fairness. We make no apologies to anyone for making decisions which result in no squandering of public funds. I can think of no better use of public funds than for the Government of Canada to signal to people in faraway regions that taxpayers' money will be spent on them and their children for the future so they will not have to seek exile elsewhere in Canada.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—CONFLICT OF INTEREST INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject. The facts are clear. There has been a conflict of interest. The issue is now one of ministerial accountability. I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would he not agree that it is unfair to make Robert McCulloch the scapegoat in this matter? Would he not agree that the ultimate responsibility for this conflict of interest lies directly on his shoulders and directly with other Ministers of the Crown? Will he not do the honourable thing and assume responsibility for this conflict of interest?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague opposite well knows, we have made an extensive inquiry to determine all the facts and issues pertinent to this question. We determined that there was a real conflict of interest. We have identified some parties to that conflict of interest. We have taken action to deal with it. Further, we asked the Commissioner of Correctional Services to take appropriate action within his Department to the extent he deems fit. I believe that the actions which led up to this situation have been thoroughly investigated and reported to this House.

Mr. Tobin: Who is responsible?

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and the Prime Minister are passing the buck. The issue is who should be held responsible for this conflict of interest. I will direct my question again to the Prime Minister. It has been admitted that there was a conflict of interest. If the Prime Minister believes in the integrity of the conflict of interest guidelines, will he not stand in his place and admit that his Ministers must assume some responsibility for their incompetence in this matter?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have dealt with this issue exactly according to the conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Boudria: No you haven't.

Mr. de Cotret: We have imposed the sanctions which are appropriate in this case according to that code of conduct.

Mr. Boudria: That's not true.

ALLEGATIONS PRIME MINISTER ACCELERATED PROCESS LEADING TO AWARDING OF PORT-CARTIER CONTRACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who has just stated that the awarding of the Port-Cartier prison contract was not accelerated. In his statement tabled in the House today the Auditor General reaffirms his belief that indeed the process was accelerated and says as well that Correctional Service Canada officials saw fit to speed up the process, including in certain instances dealing with only one supplier. Therefore CSC officials thought it was justified to accelerate the process and, finally, the President of the Treasury Board has indicated quite clearly that time was of the essence. Now then, does the Prime Minister deny all such statements by officials and Ministers of his Government that he was right to speed up the contract since he had decided to make an election gift to his constituents?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member quite categorically that there was no speeding up of the opening up of Port-Cartier by the Government. In fact as early as 1981 the former Government made the decision to close Laval. This is confirmed by a Treasury Board minute. In two subsequent 1984 Treasury Board minutes signed by the former Solicitor General it was determined that Laval would close in 1987 or 1988. Port-Cartier was to be built with an opening date to meet that deadline in order that it could receive the prisoners which would become available due to the closing of Laval.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUILDING SCHEDULE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General who is responsible for Corrections Canada. When the Government changed its mind at least a year and a quarter had passed since the decision was made to build a new prison at Drummondville, where it was easy to build. It was hard to build in Port-Cartier and was bound to take more time. Therefore, the Prime Minister's Office made this conflict of interest almost inevitable by saying that the prison should be built on the old schedule rather than adopting a realistic schedule. That is what happened.

Mr. Mazankowski: That's false.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, the Hon. Member's statement is absolutely false and incorrect. I refer him to my earlier answer. There was no speeding up whatsoever of the contract. The deadline for the closing of Laval had been set by the former Government. We were trying to open Port-Cartier to meet that closing date in order to accommodate the prisoners from Laval.

Mr. Broadbent: Read de Cotret's statement this morning.

Mr. Cassidy: The public will judge on this one.

[Translation]

OPPORTUNITY TO DELAY CLOSURE OF LAVAL PENITENTIARY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, to the Solicitor General who claims that construction was accelerated at Port-Cartier not to compromise the closure of the Laval penitentiary, I should like to direct a simple question: Would it not have been better to delay the closing of the Laval penitentiary instead of accelerating the Port-Cartier project?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised the Hon. Member, the date for the closing of Laval had been set. We were trying to meet that deadline. There was no speeding up. It was a government decision to build this prison in Port-Cartier to assist a regionally depressed area of the country.

[Translation]

REASONS FOR DECISION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I will repeat my question. The Minister's response is just another question. Why did you not change the decision which you claim was taken before, and delay the closing of and transfer of prisoners from Laval? Was it not because you wanted the Port-Cartier penitentiary to be ready before the next election? Admit it!

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to admit to the Hon. Member along the lines suggested by him. I have told him that we were trying to open Port-Cartier by that date in order to meet the closing date set by his Government.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ROLE OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, today we are learning about the consequences of the political interference involved in the Prime Minister's prison. Today we have also learned about the actions of civil servants in trying to find work for one of the Prime Minister's friends, Mr. Shay.

Would the Prime Minister not agree that civil servants are being sent a message, which must be changed, that their job is to serve the cronyism of the Conservative Party in Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the Prime Minister is not—

Mr. La Salle: What is your question?

Some Hon. Members: Question, question.

Some Hon. Members: Spit it out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my question to the Prime Minister. Does he not think it is about time that an extremely strong message is sent to his Ministers, the civil service, and his friends, that there will be no more bargaining away of the interests of Canadian people just to give his friends jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, that question is mean-spirited and vexatious. I know that when he does not bring his music he cannot sing. I am sure that on a more moderate day he would want to withdraw that question.

• (1440)

ALLEGED REQUEST TO CHASE MANHATTAN BANK

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he tell us what possible justification there is for having the Government of Canada and Devco tell the Chase Manhattan Bank to try to find work for Robert "Shay", a friend of his, in a contract being done for Cape Breton Regional Development, other than it being the most blatant kind of cronyism?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the matter in question was not sustained by any written document. There was no work at all associated with Mr. Shea, who is a friend of mine and a very good friend of Canada. I think that the indication that there was no involvement of any kind by me, directly or indirectly, is that there has never been any beneficial relationship of any kind between Mr. Shea and this Government.

REFERENCE IN DOCUMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister denies that there is a document in writing. What does he make of this sentence from a report by an official, John D. McLure, outlining a proposed contract, who says:

—Chase will, at the Minister's request—

—meaning the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion:

—find some work for Mr. Shay of Boston (a friend of the Prime Minister).

There it is in writing. Why are officials being asked to do things like this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what kind of proof is this? I understand that Mr. McLure denies signing such a document and that it does not bear his signature. I understand that from the same story.

Why would my hon. friend try to tarnish the reputation of someone on that kind of allegation?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES SALE OF ARMS TO IRAN—CANADIANS' INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Apparently on Friday he phoned the Attorney General of the United States with respect to the Iran arms deal and the Attorney General was to phone him back this morning. What information did the Attorney General of the United States give him with respect to Canadian involvement in the Iranian arms deal?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to speak with Mr. Meese, and I talked to him again this morning. He indicated that he and the Department of Justice are quite prepared to co-operate with our officials and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with respect to an investigation as to whether any Canadian law has been broken. Mr. Meese did in fact confirm to me that Mr. Fraser and Mr. Miller, whose names have been in the press in the last few days, are the people in question.

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in view of this information and any other information that the Minister has, is he prepared now to launch a fullscale investigation into Canadian involvement with respect to these two individuals or any others who could be involved?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out earlier, the RCMP have entered into an investigation as to whether or not Canadian law has been broken. I am very pleased that our American friends have agreed to facilitate interviews and discussions in order to make sure that our investigation goes forward. I believe we should allow this investigation to proceed and allow the RCMP to conclude its investigation. If there is a prosecution that results from it, so be it. However, the investigation should proceed without speculation on a day-to-day basis.

PUBLIC WORKS

MIRABEL EXPROPRIATIONS—REPOSSESSION OF LANDS—SETTLEMENT OF MOST DIFFICULT CASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for Mirabel.

Mr. Speaker, like all the people from Mirabel, I was delighted to read in the press today that the Minister would not retire before he had ceded back all Mirabel land?

Mr. Speaker, although 65 per cent of the land sales was to everyone's satisfaction, could the Minister give the House the assurance today that nothing will be left undone to settle some of the more contentious land transactions?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to remind the senior Members of this House of the many and complex discussions that took place as a result of these expropriations. Today, I am pleased to acknowledge to the Hon. Member that of the sale proposals concerning 1,600 saleable properties when I took over this file, 65 per cent have already been signed, and within the next 12 months, we should have finalized the entirely justified repossession of this land by the original owners.

As for the contentious cases, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that this week I will be meeting with my director general to discuss them and give those concerned the assurance that they will be given all the help and assistance they need to obtain the fairest possible settlement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES SALE OF ARMS TO IRAN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of press reports this morning that External Affairs Minister, Joe Clark, got nowhere—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: —when he raised the matter of Irangate with Secretary of State Shultz, will the Prime Minister, given his close personal relationship with the President of the United States, tell us why his Government was kept in the dark for over two months with respect to the Canadian connection in the Irangate affair?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Hon. Member that while I appreciate her personal references to me, I will try to refrain from making any to her. Let me indicate to her that I at least intend to respect the rules of the House as they relate to the identification of individuals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I think it is evident to everyone that one of the difficulties in this case is that such facts as might turn out to exist as a result of the investigation in the United States are not known by officials in the United States and consequently have not been capable of being transmitted to us. In the conversation this morning between the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorney General of the United States, we received an indication that all information germane to investigations into Canadian law that we are carrying out through the RCMP will be made available to Canadian authorities.

Ms. Copps: I asked the Prime Minister if he would tell our country, Canada, why it was kept in the dark for two months. I am not asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make any patronizing comments, as is his usual habit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an answer from the Prime Minister for the people of Canada. Given his extremely close relationship with the President of the United States, why were he and Canada kept in the dark for over two months about the Canadian connection in the Irangate affair? This is his first chance to tell the House.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question—if that is what it was—has been answered. The Hon. Member should know that those allegations are probably baseless.

PENITENTIARIES

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—OPTION OF KEEPING EXISTING INSTITUTION OPEN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The President of the Treasury Board clearly said this morning: "The flexibility required to develop a work plan within prescribed rules and policies was somewhat reduced". The Government had an option. Why did it not pursue the option of keeping the existing prison open in order to build Port-Cartier within the prescribed rules and policies so that the integrity of the Government's operations in this matter could have been preserved?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it is self-evident that there is never any justification for a breach of the conflict of interest rules. We have found that there was a breach and we are dealing with it appropriately. Quite frankly, I fail to see what the Hon. Member is complaining about, as I believe it has been dealt with and handled well by the President of the Treasury Board.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot maintain that conflict of interest rules were breached and that there was no acceleration. It was the acceleration that caused the conflict of interest. Why did the Government not pursue its other option to keep existing prisons open for as long as it took to build the Port-Cartier prison according to the rules and policies established by the Government, if that was to be its decision?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained that the former Government had made the decision to close the prison. We were attempting to meet that and we also wanted to assist an economically depressed area. Therefore, we proceeded as expeditiously as we could.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

RENEWAL OF INFRASTRUCTURES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FUNDING

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he explain why he has rejected a unanimous request from all 260 members of the Canadian Association of Municipalities—a request that was supported by all ten provinces—that the federal Government share in a five-year program to renew the infrastructure of our cities, so creating 300,000 person years of work?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member, I think, is quite well aware, the question of municipal infrastructure is the responsibility of the municipalities and provincial Governments. We have our hands full in dealing with matters which are exclusively 100 per cent, federal government responsibility. Until we are able to get a better financial picture and our deficit down and under a greater degree of control, it will be very difficult for us to deal with this type of matter.

I advised the municipalities of this a long time ago, and the allegations they have made over the past weekend are quite wrong.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, our mayors are asking for an investment in the capital account of this country for roads, sewers and bridges, not luxuries. With employment still at 9.5 per cent, how can the Minister refuse this opportunity to put Canadians back to work?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member is asking myself and the Government to do is ignore the areas in which we have 100 per cent responsibility and deal with matters which are under the jurisdiction of the municipalities and provinces. I do not think that is a reasonable position for the Hon. Member to take, and I think if she thought about it carefully, she would agree with me.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting, as I take it from the look on her face she is, that we should ignore these areas of 100 per cent responsiblity of the federal Government, would she tell me which areas she would like us to ignore as a Government so we can get into those areas of—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cambridge.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN—ARREST OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it pertains to Phillip Engs. Can the Minister tell us whether or not the Government has been officially notified if charges have been laid against Mr. Engs? If so, could the Minister give the House particulars of the charges and also advise the House what he and the Government are doing to protect the rights and interests of Mr. Engs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can advise that we have received official confirmation that Mr. Engs has been arrested in Iran on suspicion of espionage. Tomorrow I am sending a message, which will be delivered by the Danish Ambassador who acts for Canada in Iran on these affairs, to the Foreign Minister of Iran asking for full information on the circustances with respect to Mr. Engs. I am also seeking an undertaking that we will have the right of consular access to Mr. Engs so we will be in the maximum position to protect his interests.

If I might, I would like to express my appreciation of the fulsome degree to which the Danish authorities have co-operated with Canada in these circumstances where they are represented in Tehran and we are not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

INFRASTRUCTURE MODERNIZATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It follows on the questions regarding the Federation of Canadian Municipalities' rebuilding program. The Minister will be aware that part of that program will bring about efficient use of water and better treatment of sewage waste. Would he not agree, in light of the report of the inquiry on federal water policy which indicated it was a federal responsibility, that the Minister of Finance is wrong and the federal Government does have a role to play in funding this very important program which, incidentally, will be repaid through increased taxes and lower unemployment pay-outs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is based on a false premise, namely, that the Pearse report stated this was a matter of federal responsibility. It said no such thing.

FINANCE

METHOD OF MAKING EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister referred to the role of the provinces, but last week, he informed his provincial counterparts that the $175 million increase in equalization payments would be paid over a period of two years, instead of one year as promised by the Prime Minister and himself. Mr. Speaker, my question is: Does the Minister intend to meet the political commitment made by himself and the Prime Minister? Is he going to change his mind here and now to help the six poorest provinces in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has it wrong. What was proposed by a committee of finance officials from both the provinces and the federal Government was to enhance the equalization program by $175 million, on top of the existing growth rate of between 4 per cent and 6 per cent.

What I said to the Finance Ministers on Friday was that we would accept that proposal but we would only be able to do it over a two-year period. Therefore, the full amount of the proposal will be in place as of 1988-89.

Mr. Nystrom: That is two years, not one.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think that is perfectly consistent with anything I have said—

Mr. Nystrom: But you promised one.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member said I promised one. I challenge him to tell me exactly where I promised one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMMIGRATION

OVERRULING OF MINISTER'S DEPORTATION ORDER—REQUEST FOR APPEAL TO FEDERAL COURT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the Immigration Appeal Board ruling that an American citizen who was convicted of child molesting in Canada and who is wanted on similar charges in the United States is allowed to remain in this country. Last Thursday I asked the Minister of State for Immigration to appeal the case to the Federal Court but he rejected the suggestion and in fact said that action was "political interference".

I ask the Minister for Employment and Immigration today why the Government refuses to act legitimately, as is its right, and appeal this case to the Federal Court so that citizens can be protected from such undesirable characters and our immigration standards and policies may regain some form of the credibility they have recently lost?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister of State (Immigration) pointed out that the Department was proceeding with a very careful analysis of the technical factors on which the Immigration Office's decision was based. If as a result of this assessment, we find there are grounds for appealing the case to the Federal Court, the Department will certainly take action. I may add that we should be in a position to respond on this matter by this Friday.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it was this Government which reopened the case. It was this Government which issued an order for deportation. Why is there now such procrastination, given the preceding action by the Government, to take full advantage of a legitimate course of action through the federal Court of Appeal so that Canadians may be confident that our immigration policies are intact and will come to the aid of citizens who tonight in Vancouver are establishing a group to fight this incredible decision?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that we were doing a re-evaluation on a point of law. That is absolutely fundamental, and it has always been our reference point. The decision that will be made by this Friday will in fact refer to this particular aspect.

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS LAUNCHED BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the last question. Is the Minister for Employment and Immigration aware that there are possible pending extradition orders from two States in the United States in this particular case? Would the Minister enunciate to the House whether or not his Department is aware of these extradition proceedings which are in place against this individual?

Mr. Gauthier: We hope so.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member that the Department has been apprised of all the facts. Last week, the Minister of State (Immigration) pointed out that it was becoming very difficult for the Government to intervene on a matter of substance, and that we intended and are in fact now proceeding to analyze points of law, and if we find anything, we intend to intervene quickly by this Friday.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SERVICE TO RURAL RESIDENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): My question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I would like to know what kind of assurances or guarantees he is now prepared to give residents in rural areas that the service will not be cut back, and we want the Parliamentary Committee to express their protests in this respect.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we just received the Parliamentary Committee's report today, with its recommendations on rural services. We will be taking these recommendations into consideration. We will then ask Canada Post to respond to these recommendations, and we will announce the changes before this House.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON MAINTENANCE OF RURAL SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we need specific assurances from the Government that it will maintain rural postal service.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member put the question, please?

Mr. Keeper: When will the Minister give the House specific assurances that rural postal service will be maintained, that he will stop closing rural post offices, and that he will not introduce superboxes into the rural areas?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a member of this Committee. The report was tabled this morning, and the recommendations will be examined by Canada Post which will respond to those recommendations before this House.

COST OF SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the post office. Now that Tory Members of the Government's operated committee have accepted supermailboxes as a permanent way to deliver mail in Canada, rejecting the views of a majority of Canadians who are opposed to such a monstrosity, can the Minister tell us the cost of the supermailboxes, including installation, and how long this is expected to last?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, Canada Post tabled a plan that was analyzed by the Government, and in the spirit of parliamentary reform, we submitted this plan to the Committee for consideration, and that Committee has responded with a number of recommendations. We are going to ask Canada Post to examine these recommendations, including the matter of the superboxes, and we will respond accordingly.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY IN QUESTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege which has to do with a question asked the House last Thursday when I was absent. I refer to page 2016 of Hansard where an improper question was asked by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who was swatting at gnats by asking the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Minister is rising on a question of privilege or a point of order. It helps the Chair if accusations, if it is an accusation, and the facts are put forward, but until the Chair has heard the question I think it is probably helpful not to impute motives to any Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to take your advice. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East asked a question in which she tried to tie me, "a present Minister of this Government—a former Minister of the Newfoundland provincial Government" with one Roy Furmark. The question is couched in terms that would suggest that because this particular Minister, myself, at one time knew this Mr. Roy Furmark, I was somehow associated with the events that occurred surrounding the so-called Canadian connection in Iran. In a supplementary question, the Hon. Member referred to "one of the negotiators involved with the Government of Newfoundland of the time, including a current Minister of this Government", and she went on.

My objection to these alleged facts is the impropriety of a Member suggesting that because one Hon. Member knew another person 10 years earlier, that Hon. Member was in constant communication with the one allegedly known to him 10 years earlier and therefore would know everything about Irangate. The finger was pointed at me as possibly being a bosom buddy of the Ayatollah Khomeini. This is guilt by disassociation. It was a McCarthyite attempt to cast suspicions at me—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Is there no sense of fairness in all those ranks, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister has raised a complaint about statements made by another Hon. Member. That is clearly not a question of privilege, nor was any notice of such received by the Chair. I think the Hon. Minister is getting well into an area of debate and I think that it is probably time to end the intervention.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act—Mr. Siddon—Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. When the committee was interrupted at 1.25 o'clock p.m., Clause 1 of the Bill was under consideration and the Hon. Member for Egmont had the floor.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, when the Chair called it 1.25 I was mentioning that the Government and the Ministers are not making as a priority the fishing industry of Canada. At that time I cited some of the programs of the previous Government that were extremely beneficial to the fishing industry but were eliminated by this Government. Of course, this ties in with the Bill we are discussing here today because it does relate specifically to the income of fishermen.

When I talked about the vessel subsidy program, I related how helpful it was for fishermen who made large capital expenditures on their vessels and equipment. These fishermen could use the one-third vessel subsidy allotted to them by the federal Government as part of a down payment or collateral required to obtain a vessel or upgrade one.

I would also like to mention the insignificant amount of funds the Government is giving to small craft harbours. Only approximately $46 million will be going into small craft harbours this year. Every Hon. Member who comes from a fishing community will realize that that is a mere pittance compared to what is needed for a very worth-while industry.

I receive letters daily from people from all over Canada. I have a copy of a letter addressed to the Minister that I wish to read into Hansard. It reads:

Dear Mr. Minister

I wish to draw to your attention the deplorable state of affairs.

The wharfage situation in Comox-Courtenay area is inadequate to say the least. The overcrowding and potential fire hazard on the present site is a deterrent to anyone having a vessel on these premises.

One has to wonder if this riding being N.D.P. has any connection with your apathy towards investing in the Comox Valley wharfage facilities.

Your past performance indicates you run to the pork-barrel to grease the skids of your constituency—Tom; prove me wrong.

• (1510)

This letter is from the West Coast. I have received a hundred letters from people there who are complaining to me that they are in dire need of a better infrastructure as it relates to their wharfs, harbours and piers.

Of course, it is the same thing on the Atlantic coast. Almost every harbour wharf needs some work done. The amount of money this Government is putting into these programs has a direct relationship to the income of fishermen. In order to get the best price for the product they take from the waters, fishermen have to have good quality, ice on board, unloading derricks, and a fast mode of transportation to get their product to the processing plant and to the consumer as quickly as possible. These are some of the areas in which this Government and this Minister have let the fishing industry of this country down, and let it down badly.

On top of that, there is the imposition of user fees, the doubling of licencing fees on the West Coast, and there are many other aspects to the fishing industry that are not at all being dealt with to the satisfaction of the fishermen and the industry. I must emphasize that this is a very important industry. On the Atlantic coast, it is one of our largest industries. Thousands of families depend solely on the fishery. Any lessening of effort by the federal Government toward the well-being of the fishery is certainly not accepted in good light in Altantic Canada.

We are going to give consent to this extension for six months. I will take the Minister at his word, but I will ask the question later on, does the Minister mean what he says, that he is going to bring the Bill back in six months time with improvements? There are some flaws in the Bill, and were they corrected they would certainly go a long way to helping the fishermen who are in dire straits. There are many areas in Atlantic Canada that had a very poor fishing season this year. Along with the other program cuts, there is the Forget Commission Report which comes down very hard on the side of fishermen. There is a lot of concern right now in the industry about what this Government is doing on their behalf. I will end with these few remarks, Mr. Chairman. I am sure I have some colleagues who wish to follow me, and I may have some questions later on.

Mr. Manly: I am glad to have the opportunity to make a few remarks with regard to Bill C-32, amendments to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act which will extend the life of that Act for another six months. In the New Democratic Party we are quite happy to give agreement to quick passage of this Bill, because this is obviously an Act that has provided a program of some help to some individuals in the fishing industry. For example, in the last year for which we have a report, 1984-85, there were 879 loans guaranteed which totalled almost $15 million. Since the program's inception in 1955 to the year 1984-85 there were 17,253 loans totalling some $227 million. Over the life of the program some $10 million was paid out in claims to lending agencies for loans that were in difficulty. It is important to recognize that $8.5 million of that $10 million was paid out in the last four years of the program, during which the fishing industry was having difficult times when it was caught in a squeeze between high input costs and very poor returns.

While the program may be good for some individuals, we have no idea what the Government thinks about the program's effect over the long term on the industry as whole. The Government does not know. That is why we are dealing with a six-month extension at the present time. That is why in June of 1985 the Government came before the House for an 18-month extension. At that time the then Minister said, as recorded at page 6161 of Hansard for June 15, 1985:

In the event that any Members wonder why that is so—

He was referring to why they were asking for an 18-month extension.

—it is of course because all programs including this one are being carefully reviewed. In the meantime, I think it is in the interests of the fishing community that speedy passage of this Bill be given by the House.

The program review to which the then Minister referred was tabled in the House on March 11. It was available to the Government before that time, but it still has not indicated what its plans are for the fishing industry.

With regard to this particular program, the Nielsen committee task force stated:

> A major problem in the fisheries, which has been identified by many studies, is over-capacity with too many fishermen pursuing too few fish. This program can be seen as adding to this problem, and is inconsistent with federal programs to buy back fishing licences to reduce efforts in the industry.
> The effect of this program is to subsidize low-risk fishermen who would be able to obtain credit through normal channels, as well as high-risk fishermen who are required to put up little of their own money.

It is not quite that easy even for low-risk fishermen to get loans through normal channels. The banks want some guarantee. The task force further states:

> The study team recommends to the Task Force that the Government consider termination of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Program. A major thrust of the study team's recommendations is for less federal Government intervention in the fisheries, and for allowing the industry to function in response to true market forces.

We have seen in the last few months a move by the Government to quietly implement some of the recommendations the Nielsen task force has made; to implement these without adequate debate, either in the House or within the fishing industry itself. Fishing licences have doubled. There have been cuts in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans staff. There have been cuts in research. There have been cuts in the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program. All these things have been done on an ad hoc basis without giving either the House or the industry any idea of what the Government's over-all plan or policy is.

There are two theories as to what the Government is doing here. I and my colleagues in caucus have a disagreement on this. There are those of us who feel that what the Government is doing is a matter of piecemeal adhockery; that it does not know itself what it is trying to do and what its objectives are, but it is doing it anyhow. The other theory is that there is a conspiracy that the Government really does know what it is doing, and even when it stumbles and falls it is stumbling and falling towards some objective. I subscribe to the first theory, that the Government does not know what it is doing. Whatever the explanation, there is a great deal of uncertainty in the industry. That should be of concern to Members on all sides of the House.

One subject that has already been referred to is the unemployment insurance program as it relates to people in the fishing industry. The Nielsen task force report, as well as the recently tabled Forget Commission report, recommends doing away with unemployment insurance for people who are in the fishing industry. The Forget Commission Report recommends that it should be phased out over a five-year program. The Government has refused to indicate that it categorically rejects that type of recommendation which would be extremely harmful to fishing communities and fishing provinces on both coasts of Canada. It has not categorically rejected that. Instead it says that it will take the Forget Commission report as a background paper, a $5.2 million background paper, and will tell us its plans next May.

During the election campaign Conservative Members on the West Coast promised that there would be a $100 million buy-back program to reduce the capacity of the fleet. We have not heard anything about it in the last few months. There is no buy-back program. Fishermen are being squeezed out despite the good season.

There is a story in the current issue of the union paper, The Fisherman, about a West Coast fisherman who is quitting after 30 years. Even though there was a good season on the coast, he lost money. He talks about the short openings, a recurrent feature of fisheries management today, and indicates there is almost panic among fishermen to get out there and get fish regardless of the weather. Some 16 fishermen lost their lives on the West Coast in the last year. He points to a fear that the time of the small independent fisherman might be almost over, and that if the industry survives, it will survive in the form of fish farms or aquaculture or through a centralized fleet in the hands of a few large companies.

While the six month extension of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act might help some individuals, my concern is that it will not solve the basic problem of uncertainty. There is a need for the Government to eliminate uncertainty by indicating a clear process of consultation, so that those most involved in the industry can help determine their own future. The Government has done away with the MAC, the Minister's advisory committee, and has established a system wherein a committee will be appointed by the Minister himself. However, there is considerable skepticism on the coast about whether or not it will work.

I suggest to the Minister and to the Government as a whole that there should be no more expensive decoys such as the Nielsen task force report or the Forget Commission report. The Government should come clean with what it hopes to do and establish a process which will allow the people most involved in the industry to have a say in it.

Bill C-32 will mean that one piece of the jigsaw, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, will be in place for the next six months. However, the rest of the jigsaw is scattered all over; people have no idea what will be the over-all pattern. The Minister indicated that changes were needed to resolve the problem involved in the limitation of guarantees once a certain level of claim for debts and difficulties has been reached. The difficulty was pointed out to the Minister in the last few months. At the very time when conditions were most difficult for fishermen, they found that their loans were being called by the banks because the guarantees had become inoperative. The Minister is aware of the problem. He has promised to do something about it by next spring. We look forward to the changes which he promised to bring in.

I should like to draw a final item to the attention of the Minister. Recently he won a court case in which his power to allocate between gear types and socio-economic conditions was deemed to be within his jurisdiction under the Constitution. Bill C-32 which gives him these powers is no longer necessary and, as the sunset clause becomes operative, it will die. However, Bill C-32 also guarantees consultation with the industry. I suggest that the Minister should reintroduce legislation in the House to reinstate the guarantee of consultation with the industry so that the people most affected will have the knowledge that the consultation is being written into the law, that it is not something just at the whim of the Minister.

In conclusion, we are glad to give support to the six month extension, but we urge the Government to come in with a process which will remove uncertainty in the fishing industry on both coasts, so that the fishing communities and the people involved in the industry will have some idea of what the future holds for them.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-32. I should like to echo the words of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont, the critic for the Liberal Party. We in the Liberal Party are prepared to see the Bill receive rather speedy approval today, but we have some problem with it.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has been aware for the last year of the great numbers of fishermen across Canada who through no fault of their own have defaulted on guaranteed fisheries improvement loans. They defaulted particularly last year, more so than this year, because of the nature of the fisheries and of the economy associated with it. They were rather amazed, indeed shocked, to discover that their so-called guaranteed federal fisheries improvement loans were not guaranteed at all. Fishermen have discovered that because of the fine print in the Bill, which we are now extending for six months, the Minister can say at his discretion when a particular lending institution has reached its quota of bad loans.

For example, if 10 per cent of the loans of the Bank of Nova Scotia in a lending zone and during a lending period—and that is the terminology used—turn out to be bad loans and it makes a claim on the Government of Canada, any other fisherman who defaults, unlike his neighbours and colleagues, does not have the benefit of the Government of Canada guaranteeing his bad loan. Fishermen have found out that lending institutions will come after them with collection agencies or people making third party demands.

I wrote a letter to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in which I illustrated one particular case a year ago. In fact, in October, 1985 I made initial contacts with the office of the Minister of Fisheries about a particular case. It was the case of Mr. Wilfred White of Sandy Cove, Newfoundland, which is in my riding. He was one of many—and I have been told it is thousands—of fishermen across the country who through no fault of their own, but because of difficult circumstances and a desperate fishery for several years in a row, defaulted on their loans. This gentleman put all his personal moneys into the fishery and into making his loan payments. He sold off equipment and recreation vehicles to try to make his loan payments. He went down fighting, clinging by his fingernails to his boat and his gear. He tried to make a living and to make his payments. Nevertheless he went down. He had not borrowed the money for holidays, for personal aggrandizement or for luxuries. He borrowed the money for investment in the fishery. Having borrowed the money for that purpose, he said: "Thank God, at least the Government of Canada under the guaranteed fisheries improvement loan will see to the bad debt which now rests with the Bank of Nova Scotia".

What happened to Wilfred White, this man who clung on to the last instant, who invested every last dime to the last second trying to make a go of it in the fishery? What happened to his guaranteed federal government loan? He received a letter from the Bank of Nova Scotia which referred to his liaility under fisheries improvement loan No. 0669, granted on April 7, 1980, for $11,250. The bank confirmed that it forwarded its claim for loss to the Government of Canada and that its claim under period 6 was rejected. It went on to indicate that it had no other alternative but to look to Mr. White for liquidation of the debt.

I called the branch manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland and asked: "What the hell is going on? Why are you threatening and sending in collection agencies to harass Wilfred White, an honest man, a decent man, and a good man"? The bank manager said: "I agree. He is an honest, decent and good man and I am embarrassed that I have to take this kind of action."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Members of the New Democratic Party may laugh and think it is funny that fishermen—

Mr. Rompkey: They lost the seat.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, they lost the seat.—are trying to make a go of it in Newfoundland. They may laugh. They may think that the problems of the fishermen are no more than a matter to be chuckled at in this House. They may think that the representation I make on behalf of the fishermen of northern Newfoundland is inadequate and something to be laughed at. However, let me tell my colleague from the New Democratic Party that Wilfred White is only one of dozens in his community who has been—it is not too strong a word to say—shafted by this Government. Let us look at what the legislation we are extending today for six months says:

—to make any payment to any lender—

Lenders being banks:

—in respect of loss sustained by it as a result of a guaranteed loan made during the period—

The wording of this legislation is misleading. It does not make any payment to any lender, the banks, with respect to any loss under guaranteed loans. The loans are not guaranteed. There is an escape clause. If you live in an area and deal with a bank where the economy is bad and where more than 10 per cent of the lenders have had to default at the 10 per cent level, the bank can stop receiving guarantees from the Government of Canada.

What if my colleague were a fisherman, received a loan and defaulted early, say the first time he got in trouble he gave up the ghost, went to the bank and said: "I default"? He gets his loan paid for by the Government of Canada because he is within the first 10 per cent of those to default. If my other colleague is a fighter, hangs on to the bitter end, struggles for a couple of years, not properly clothing, feeding or looking after his family in order to hang on, finally gives up, goes to the bank and says: "I have defaulted", they tell him that the first 10 per cent has been taken up and there is nothing they can do for him. What happens then?

Is it a question of having a bad credit rating? Is it a question of being embarrassed personally because you are in trouble with the bank? Fishermen are embarrassed. They have their pride.

Is that all it is? Is it a question of having great difficulty next time out getting a loan? Is that all it is? It is all of that, but much more, Mr. Chairman. It is a bank coming at you through a series of collection agencies out of St. John's, Halifax or Toronto, sending a notice to a fisherman in Sandy Cove, Newfoundland, a notice concerning his Government guaranteed loan, telling him that he better sell his truck, his house or whatever gear he has left with which to make a living for himself and his family and that he better scrape up $11,000 and repay the bank because the bank's books must be balanced. He must suffer the indignity of something less than a welfare regime because his so-called Government guaranteed loan is no guarantee at all.

That has been going on in record numbers, in particular in the last year, and I know the Minister is aware of it. It may have happened in previous years, but recently there has been a dramatic increase. The reason is that the Minister—it is not the Minister's fault—has inherited a fishery where in some parts of this country there have been four or five desperate years in a row. He has inherited fishermen who have been on their backs, trying to make a go of it for four or five years in a row, some of whom have finally buckled under the crushing burden of loan repayment. The Minister has been aware of this situation for a year.

I ask the Minister, as much as it is pleasant to see the basic concept of a fishermen's improvement loan extended for six more months because it would have run out otherwise, why it was not possible during the last year, when we Members of Parliament were aware of this problem, to have come forward with a new Bill today? Why have an extension to an existing problem that seeks to provide remedies to inherent injustice and unfairness?

I want an assurance from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that this Bill we pass today is not an exercise in fading out the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act over six months. I want a minimal assurance in expressing my disappointment that as we do not have a new Bill before us today that in six months he will come before us with a new Bill, one that will be relevant to existing circumstances evident in the fishery of eastern Canada and indeed in the fishery of the West Coast of Canada, in the Province of British Columbia.

I want the Minister to examine the plight of all of the Wilfred Whites of Canada, legitimate fishermen, honest people seeking to do an honest day's work and in the course of bringing in some new Bill to examine whether or not retroactively some kind of justice and sense of fairness can be introduced so that the unreasonable penalty that Wilfred White and many others have paid and are continuing to pay can somehow be rectified.

I, with my colleagues, support the notion that this Bill be extended for six months, but only because the concept of a fishermen's improvement loan is a good one and ought not to be lost. I cannot in good conscience—and I have written the Minister repeatedly on this issue—say that the Bill we are passing today is one that is worthy of the name Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, it is not. I beg the Minister of Fisheries of rectify this problem as quickly as possible.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, the Member has put a question and a proposal to me. I would like to respond to the suggestion that he has made. As the Minister responsible for all the fishermen of Canada, I certainly sympathize with the concerns of individual fishermen, such as Wilfred White and others whose particular adverse circumstances are brought to my attention from time to time.

I am somewhat disappointed that the Hon. Member was not able to be with us earlier when we commenced debate on Bill C-32. I understand that that was probably not possible. I did indicate that the six month period we are requesting, by way of an extension to the current loan period referred to as period nine, is not merely to find a way of amending the current Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, although that might be one consequence we will arrive at by the end of the next six months in 1987, but to look at other ways of consolidating and improving the provision of preferential financing for fishermen, whether it be through the Federal Business Development Bank, by consolidation with the Small Loans Act or perhaps even consolidation with the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Those questions are currently being examined. I want to assure the Hon. Member, not in the context of the interpretation he places on the Nielsen task force recommendation, but with a view to improving the way in which we manage credit services for fishermen that the general thrust of this Government and this Minister is to improve the way in which we manage all the services of Government and the fishery.

I do not want to appear antagonistic in suggesting that the loan period, which is causing the difficulty for the Hon.

Member's fishermen in particular, was established by way of legislation adopted prior to July 1, 1977. Period six extended a certain ceiling on loans to be financed by the major chartered banks for the period July 1, 1977, to June 30, 1980. In that period an unprecedented number of loans were issued by the major banks, some $77 million worth. Then many of the fishermen who took out those loans for various kinds of vessel improvements, equipment, et cetera, discovered, in the early 1980s, that the crushing burden of high interest rates put them in a position where they could no longer meet their loan payments.

It was the double whammy of a high rate of lending by the banks, in period six in particular, and high interest rates. We found that portion of the loans guaranteed by the Government of Canada was less than all of the defaults over the last two years. I think all Hon. Members understand that. The reason for this is the formula contained in Section 6(2)(ii) of the Act. It requires that the Government guarantee will amount to only 90 per cent on the first $125,000, 50 per cent on the next $125,000 and 10 per cent on anything above that.

In effect, under the old legislation we are allowed to guarantee defaults to the extent of 10 per cent plus a 1 or 2 per cent correction out of a total portfolio of some $76 million. The number of individuals caught in this bind is not large, but I am looking for remedies for the cases we are dealing with. I must remind Hon. Members that we have to work co-operatively with provincial loan boards in this respect. That is one reason for the requested extension of period nine. We can in that time devise a better remedy for those extremely abnormal circumstances when interest rates take off as they did in the early 1980s.

I will conclude by urging the Hon. Member to support us in speedy passage of this Bill. Over the next six months we will attempt to make the necessary amendments, which must be done in consultation with fishermen, provincial loan boards and provincial Governments, and I undertake to do that. However, I must register the caveat that what comes out at the end of that process may not be just an improvement to this Act, it may be something else. I undertake to ensure that the something else is consistent with the need to continue to assist in the development of the fishery in an orderly and helpful way.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I, too, support my colleagues in wanting to see this Bill passed quickly and I share in the comments just made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

I want to use this opportunity, and I hope you will give me some latitude, to ask a question on an issue which is very important today to inshore fishermen in Newfoundland. I am glad to see the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the House. I hope he will listen to what I have to say because it applies particularly to him. I am sure the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans would be interested as well. If I could just get the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Mr. Lewis: It is a Liberal Member who is talking to him.

Mr. Rompkey: I want to tell the Minister about an existing situation and get his assurances on a certain matter. Because of a failure in the inshore fishery of Newfoundland, some $4 million was allocated to create work programs for those fishermen who did not qualify for unemployment insurance this winter as a result of the failure of the inshore fishery. That is much less than was allocated last year, which was $6 million. There have been radio reports in Newfoundland that only $1 million of that $4 million is to be taken up by fishermen because of the qualification restrictions put on it by the Department. If the radio reports are correct, and I hope they are not, then only a very small minority of the inshore fishermen who did not qualify through no fault of their own will qualify for unemployment insurance.

The Government of Canada has allocated some $800 million to farmers in western Canada and only $4 million for inshore fishermen in Newfoundland. I want an assurance from the Minister that all of that $4 million will be available and that those who do not qualify for unemployment insurance this year for those reasons will not be excluded from this program. Can the Minister give that assurance this afternoon?

The Deputy Chairman: I will allow the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to answer that question but not the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Hon. Member will understand it is probably more appropriate that I attempt to respond to his question. All I can say on behalf of my colleague and myself at this point is that we have had discussions since this problem developed with a view to using it, not exclusively but to a considerable measure, to assist those inshore fishermen. This will enable them to undertake projects which will be beneficial to themselves as fishermen and at the same time allow them to supplement their earnings in the way the Hon. Member has suggested. We will continue with those discussions. I can assure the Hon. Member that my colleague and I are both very sympathetic to the situation.

Mr. Rompkey: But what is the answer to the question?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Chairman, the Minister said that when he brings in legislation in six months it may be to this Act or it may be tied in with agricultural improvements or small business or some other package. Are the Minister and his Government committed to the idea that the fishing industry needs some kind of government guarantee loan program and that it should not simply be left to the mercy of market forces and the normal lending institutions, as the Nielsen task force suggests?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, we understand the special needs and circumstances of fishermen. Whether it be a federal Government guarantee program or some other form of special consideration, whatever evolves between now and the end of the six-month period will be of special benefit to ensure that fishermen can continue to finance their activities without being subject to the kind of perdition that he refers to. I am working closely with my colleagues to that end and we hope the program which evolves will be equally or more helpful and eliminate some of the problems we were debating earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister indicate how he sees the future of this Act or its successor in relation to the Conservative Party's promise to bring in a $100 million buy-back program for the West Coast, which promise was made during the 1984 election campaign?

• (1550)

Mr. Siddon: I am very pleased that the Hon. Member asked that question. He touches upon one of the strange paradoxes, of which there are many, in regard to the management of the fisheries. Over an extended period of time we have financed, on a preferential basis, the expansion of our fleet, in this case the West Coast salmon and herring fleet, largely through the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Almost 50 per cent of the loans guaranteed under this program encouraged the expansion and modernization of that fleet. On the other hand, we have an acknowledged problem of excess capacity. This problem also exists in some areas of the Atlantic fisheries. It is alleged that this is one of the serious difficulties which we must confront in the southwest area of Nova Scotia in particular.

The new initiative, in whatever form it takes, must specifically recognize the fact that if the Government properly spends money to modernize the vessels and make them more efficient and safe, it should not be expected to buy them back when they become too efficient and there are too many of them. That is why, in these times of tight finances, I do not favour a direct government funded buy-back program, bearing in mind that the people of Canada have already contributed significantly through programs like FILA to the building of those vessels in the first place.

Mr. Manly: Just to be perfectly clear, is it correct that the 1984 election promise is, in the words of Richard Nixon, "inoperative"?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member examines what he considers to be a promise, I think he will find that the Progressive Conservative Party, running for election at that time, indicated that some fleet rationalization initiatives would have to be taken. From my perspective, there was never a promise that it would be funded by the general revenues of the people of Canada, although some initial funding would be required, as Dr. Peter Pearse recommended some time ago, to get such a program under way. My priority for the West Coast, as I have stated repeatedly, has been to produce more salmon rather than to buy out fishing boats and reduce the amount of employment available to fishermen. I believe we should expand the resource upon which their livelihood is based.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, the Minister keeps referring to FILA and how great it is. I presume that is the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Why would the Minister not amend the Bill presently before the House to change the 10 per cent to 15 per cent in order that the 1,000 fishing enterprises which were recently hit by the banks could have their loans guaranteed by the federal Government?

That is the problem with this Bill. There are fishermen in seven provinces who signed up under this Act for loans from banks. Lo and behold, when they could not pay their loans they sold the gear they had bought and the federal Government then refused to honour its guarantee to the banks. The Minister said that was because the banks had exceeded the 10 per cent specified in the Act.

This has never happened before in the history of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, which dates back to the 1950s. It has never happened before that practically every bank and financial institution in Canada has been cut off from the federal guarantee. Practically every bank in the Minister's riding in British Columbia was notified by FILA that it had exceeded the 10 per cent. It makes no sense for the Minister to say that it was only the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of Commerce. It was also the Royal Bank and the Bank of Nova Scotia. The Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Nova Scotia should hang their heads in shame at the thought of the letters they sent out to hundreds of fishermen. One day those financial institutions will have to admit publicly what they did to fishing enterprises and families in British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and on the north shore of Quebec.

My question to the Minister is very simple. The purpose of this Bill is to extend the period of time for six months. The last Bill which came before the House was for a one-year extension. All previous Bills were for three-year or five-year extensions. We are now going to extend it for six months, quite obviously to do away with it.

This has never happened before since the Act was adopted in the mid-1950s. Therefore why does the Minister not simply change the formula to get all the fishing enterprises off the hook with the banks? In other words, why does the Government of Canada not pay up the guarantees? The Government stood in the House the other day and claimed there was $1 billion for the farmers of Canada. Where is the paltry amount of money needed by the fishermen of Canada? They signed a piece of paper which said they were guaranteed by the federal Government. When they could not pay, they discovered that they were not guaranteed by the Government of Canada and had collection agencies, the courts and the banks down their necks.

I am told by FILA that there are 1,500 fishing enterprises in seven provinces involved in this. That is what they tell me but there are probably more than that. Take as an example a fisherman who made $5,000 in 1986 and owes $30,000. He must put up all his property and remortgage his home. We have great pride in our banks, which have a great sense of community spirit and humanitarianism. The first thing they did was to send letters to all these people asking them to take out life insurance on their loans since the federal Government no longer guarantees them. Just imagine that, Mr. Chairman. That is the banks for you.

The Minister could get the banks off the hook. I do not like the letters which the banks sent out or the actions which they took. I received a dossier the other day from Nova Scotia containing some incredible letters. However, the banks are claiming ignorance of what was in the Act. They should have known what was in it. Why does the Minister not simply change the percentage in order that the federal Government can guarantee the loans which the fishermen thought were guaranteed by the Government when they signed at the bank? That is a pretty simple question. I do not know whether the Minister has Cabinet or Treasury Board authorization. However, would he entertain such an amendment to the Bill or support a special Cabinet order to pay those fishermen off since he is going to phase out the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act anyway?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member knows that I do not have authorization to accept such an amendment and neither could I accept it. If the Member were in the banking business, whether in a private or public sector financial institution, he would never advocate that all loans in default be paid off by the proprietor. The reality is that in the 31 years since the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act was first adopted in 1955 until March 31 of this year, 18,000 loans were made. There have only been 611 claims paid to lenders for defaults at an average of $13,500.

• (1600)

The Hon. Member knows that when a fisherman undertakes an obligation to repay one of these loans, he will incur that obligation just as any other borrower, whether or not the bank received satisfaction under this Act. In other words, if the loan goes into default with the bank and the lender can claim against the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the liability will remain in perpetuity with the fishermen because it remains a liability to the Crown. I do not believe the Hon. Member is advocating that in all cases fishermen merely have their defaults paid off by the Government of Canada. Why would we have a loan system in the first place which entails a certain obligation, indeed a written undertaking, to repay this amount?

I cannot accept the proposal. The Hon. Member has referred to some 1,500 fisheries enterprises, as he calls them, which are being impacted by this unfortunate development associated with loans entered into in the early part of the 1980s. However, he has never provided me with a list of such institutions, nor, I am told by my officials, is there a list that is anywhere near that magnitude of loans in default. I do not think it is appropriate for a Member to exaggerate and sow the seeds of antagonism toward the Government for a program that he adopted and approved as a member of the Government at that time. It is he and his colleagues opposite who set these limits and established the conditions under which these fishermen are now facing hardship.

In legitimate cases we will try, through adjustments to the form of assistance given to fishermen, to rectify these injustices. However, we cannot make the system wide open and promise to pay off all the loans of fishermen who have fallen into default. I hope the Hon. Member will appreciate that.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise two matters. Those fishermen who had to put up their homes, their pick-up trucks and mortgage their lives because of this problem with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act notified the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In fact, I have countless numbers of letters which I can give the Minister. If he is saying that he would solve the problem if it existed, then let me tell him that there are seven in the community of Summerford in Notre Dame Bay, and there are 14 in Twillingate. The Minister should check the mail if he believes they do not exist. He should talk to the former Minister if he says that he has not received letters because that is where I obtained my letters. I have copies of each letter from the Minister.

The Minister asks why the Government of Canada should pay off the fisherman who has defaulted on his loan. What is the purpose of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act if it is not to provide a guarantee to a fisherman who cannot pay off his loan? That is when the Act comes into force. The first thing a fisherman loses is the property he bought with the bank loan that was guaranteed by the federal Government. According to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, for fishermen in the first 10 per cent, the difference between what the bank received on the sale of the property and what the fisherman received as a loan is paid by the federal Government. That is the purpose of the Act.

The Minister seems to be saying that regardless of whether the fisherman is in the first 10 per cent or the second 10 per cent, he should still owe the money to the federal Government. That may be legally correct, that there is no longer any debt because it is paid for by the federal Government. The Minister says that there are not 1,500 such cases in Canada and Hon. Members should not be allowed to state such figures. I suggest that the Minister should tell us exactly how many fishermen have been in this situation in the last two years. He cannot tell us that because he does not know. He does not know because he has no way of knowing. He simply notifies the banks that they have reached a limit and, for example, a letter to pay off Mr. Ron Jones in Summerford in Notre Dame Bay.

The Minister's Department sends a letter to the bank saying that the bank has reached the limit of its claims. The Minister has no way of knowing how many times the bank sends letters notifying the fishermen that they no longer honour their loans. The letters from the banks simply say that they have been informed by the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans that those fishermen are no longer guaranteed under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

The House may recall that we presented the letters to the House over a year ago, showing exactly what was said. The Minister says that the numbers are wrong but he has no way of knowing the exact figure.

An Hon. Member: Do you know?

Mr. Baker: No, I do not know. However, estimates have been given to me and we have received complaints from seven provinces in Canada, including British Columbia. It is not only poor Newfoundland or the east coast of Newfoundland that are affected, but also British Columbia and other provinces.

The Government is ultimately the only body that can correct this situation unless the banks of Canada were to agree to forget about these defaulted payments. However, we know that when the banks deal with people like fishermen and farmers, they operate the same as collection agencies. In fact, I am surprised that banks across Canada have not opened collection agencies in their front offices to act on behalf of the Government of Canada and others.

There is a major flaw in the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. It only came to light in the past two years because the fishery was not as bad as it was in the mid and late 1970s. The Minister has made several speeches in this chamber in which he recognized that the fisheries were in difficulty and people could not pay their loans. We would certainly support the Minister if he were to assist the fishermen of Canada and introduce a change to guarantee all the loans.

The Minister is going to eliminate the provisions of this Act. As a final Christmas present to all those fishing enterprises that were notified by the banks, why not introduce a provision that will pay off their loans as well. That is the point I am attempting to make.

• (1610)

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I believe I detected a repetition of the previous question in the comments of the Hon. Member. I would like to respond to him as concisely as I can. The Hon. Member suggested that we somehow establish a loan program in which the people of Canada guarantee a certain portion of the liability and that it be a loan program not a grant program.

I remind Hon. Members that in the entire period of this program, since the first legislation was passed in 1955, the claims paid to the lending institutions have amounted to $13.5 million and the recovery of those claims has amounted to only $319,000. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the people of Canada have paid out $13.5 million against those claims in recognition of the liability of the Government of Canada. Those claims have been paid, but those fishermen who remain liable have only paid to the extent of $300,000. Therefore, we have virtually guaranteed at the point the bank pays off the loan that that is the last we will hear from the fishermen.

I do not believe the Hon. Member is suggesting we let everyone off scot-free. Why not call it a grant program, if that be the case? We believe that people who borrow money should accept some degree of responsibility for the repayment of the loan, as we do in the private banking industry. We accept that the Government should help out in a small way, as is done by the 1 per cent plus prime limit on the interest rate, but I do not think the Government can be expected to go a whole lot further in dealing with the small number of fishermen who, perhaps for reasons of misfortune, bad management or bad judgment, find themselves in a position of not being able to pay back.

When the Hon. Member throws numbers around such as "1,500 fishing enterprises", he is distorting and exaggerating to a serious degree. If the letters I have received are any measure of the number of cases where this is bringing hardship to fishermen, then those 20 or so letters I have received since I was appointed Minister would be a very small measure of the seriousness of this problem compared with the numbers the Hon. Member is throwing around.

I might also add that in the past two years we have seen a remarkable recovery in the fishing industry. Last year earnings were up 20 per cent over the previous year and landings were up 10 per cent. This year the performance will be just as remarkable. Foreign exchange earnings from the Atlantic fishery alone will exceed $2 billion this year. While it is true there will always be some unfortunate fishermen, particularly in the Hon. Member's province, about whom I am deeply concerned and will try to help in every way I can, there will nevertheless be cases which cannot be resolved merely by absolving the fishermen of their responsibility to pay back.

When the Hon. Member refers to the banking institutions, I share his concern, because we have found that some banks quickly exceeded their maximum liability and others did not. That suggests to me that perhaps some banks, or branches at least, have been more careless when a fisherman went into default in perhaps paying them off without a whole lot of hassle or a lot of attempt to collect. They consumed the maximum amount we could agree to under the formula which the Hon. Member's Government adopted and the fishermen have had to look somewhere else for assistance. Other banking institutions, and I will not name them, still have some of their access to guarantees unfulfilled. I will make a commitment to the Hon. Member that during the period of the next six months we will look at that situation. We will look at the extent to which some of the banks have not consumed all of their acccess to assistance under this program while others consumed their access very, very quickly.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that in doing that we should not penalize those who have not consumed all of their access to guarantees under this program merely to advantage those banks which quickly came to the Government asking that a claim be made. Perhaps that focuses on one of the basic faults of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, an Act, I repeat, that the Hon. Member stood in this House and approved. He renewed those periods of loan guarantees probably two or three times in his time in the House as a member of the Government. Now we have this problem today which suggests there is a basic flaw in the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. We are not asking for a two-year extension, only six months, because we intend to correct that situation.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, the problem with foreclosures in the 1,500 cases which I said were in existence in seven provinces came up only in the past couple of years because the banks were notified by the Government of Canada that loans which were taken out in the 1970s and early 1980s had gone over their limit. A fisherman owning a boat is called an "enterprise", for the Minister's benefit, which is the terminology used by the banks. The fisherman stopped making payments on his loans and, of course, his property was taken and sold, which is the normal procedure. Then a claim was made by the bank to the federal Government, which is also the normal procedure under this guarantee. Therefore, it took that period of time.

The Minister says I am exaggerating and distorting the numbers. How does he know I am exaggerating and distorting the numbers when he does not know the numbers? Neither does his adviser, the expert sitting in front of him. No one knows what the numbers are.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would hope that the Hon. Member's statement would be directed just to the Minister.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I thought the Minister would want to check it out with someone. The fact is that the banks are notified in a letter from the Department of Fisheries that they have exceeded their guarantee limit with the federal Government. The banks then take over and notify the fishermen. It has nothing to do with the Minister of Fisheries nor the Department of Fisheries. I predict the Minister will rise in a moment and say: "We have asked the financial institutions from time to time about the numbers of loans we cannot collect", but he cannot be accurate on the numbers.

A year ago I took the number of representations we had and contacted the banks concerned. We came up with a general figure. That figure we came up with a year ago has now, I am sure, been exceeded because I am positive that even more people have started to default. Therefore, the numbers keep growing. The Minister can verify this, but I believe it takes some 15 years before we know just how balanced the books are with respect to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Therefore, I go back to the original question. The Minister says earnings are up 20 per cent and landings are up 10 per cent. Yes, Mr. Chairman, the landings were up on those big offshore boats, the landings on codfish on the East Coast and everywhere else was up. National Sea Products went up on the stock market. If one wants to make money these days, one would go with National Sea Products because it was given the factory freezer trawler licences by the federal Government. Yes, the landings went up and will keep going up for National Sea Products and the other companies. However, landings are down for the inshore fishermen. The Minister of Fisheries has not been around long enough to know what we call an inshore fishery. Although the Department of Fisheries says so, an inshore fisherman is not a fellow with a herring or cabling licence who has a 50-foot boat. In our books, he is not an inshore fisherman because he was able to sell to the fish plants this summer.

The inshore fishermen, the fellows with 18, 20, 25 and 30-foot boats could not sell to the fish plants. There was no big amount of money coming to them. The fishing industry's council or whatever it is, the Economic Council of Canada, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries and the federal Minister of Fisheries are all saying what a marvellous year 1986 was since landings were up. The poor fishermen all along the coast of Newfoundland are saying: "Are these fellows in Mexico? Are they from another world? From where are they operating? They must have their heads in the sand". Of course, on the books landings were up but they were not up for the inshore fishermen, the ones who take advantage of these fisheries improvement loans. Many of them got stuck because the federal Government's guarantee was not enough.

Granted, this measure was brought in when the Liberals were in power. It was brought in in the 1950s. It was redone in the 1960s and the 1970s. The last time it was redone was a year ago when this Government was in power. The formula was brought in by the Liberals, true, but the Bill before the House changes the Act. All I am asking is while the Minister is doing that, why does he not change the formula and backdate it to take care of those fishermen? The Minister says that there are not 1,500 of those fishermen. If the number is so small, why not amend the Bill and take care of those few fishermen. Maybe then I will let the Bill go through.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this legislation, particularly as it applies to the fishing industry in the Great Lakes. Not only are fishermen there having difficulties, but they are also having trouble maintaining wharfs and facilities because of the extremely high water level from which the Great Lakes are suffering. For instance, I am told that in the Lake Huron, Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair area, 55 of the 88 wharfs in small craft harbours are in serious disrepair due to the high water. Still the Department maintains an incredibly low amount of support, some $2.5 million, toward maintaining those wharfs not only in Ontario but in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Those provinces have all been gathered under the umbrella of small craft harbours which works out of Burlington.

If fishermen will not have to spend all their fisheries improvement loans on fixing government wharfs, it is essential that the Department provide additional funding. I know the Minister has been concerned about this issue. He has received many representations from our side of the House, from his own side of the House and from members of the NDP.

I hope the Minister might be able to give us an indication of just what is the situation with regard to small craft harbours. Besides renewing this legislation which is essential, will the Minister be able to improve the wharfs at places like South Baymouth, Meldrum Bay, Spanish, Hilton Beach, Richard's Landing, Little Current, Desbarats and Blind River, all of which support fishing and small craft activity?

I would like to know if the Minister will be able to provide a program of recovery and rehabilitation for those 55 wharfs in small craft harbours which have been damaged by the high water this past year or two. I wonder if he will be able to get the additional support and assistance required to carry out those improvements. I am told that it would require several million dollars over and above the regular maintenance budget so I hope the Minister will be given the latitutde to indicate to the millions of people who live in that area of Ontario and the West, people who depend on small craft harbour grants from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, that they will receive moneys for the improvements which are so desperately needed.

We note from a recent report from Michigan that President Reagan has declared some 22 counties in the State of Michigan as disaster areas. The three levels of Government in the U.S. have committed some $10 million for flood improvement to small craft harbours and coastal areas. I hope that we might be able to receive the same kind of assistance in thc Ontario region from the small craft harbours department which, of course, is a vital part of the Minister's Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief reaction to that. I think all Hon. Members would like to see the legislation before us wound up quickly. I gather there are other important items that we might debate this afternoon as well.

The Hon. Member is concerned about the high water levels in the Great Lakes. I certainly must consider seriously the damage that has been caused and it appears that in the foreseeable future, there will be no immediate turnaround. We cannot expect the water level to drop by three feet in the next 12 months. I am looking very seriously at special means of dealing with the situation. I hope early in the new year to bring in a report on it.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, as was explained during committee stage of this Bill, I and other Hon. Members have serious reservations about what is happening in the fishing community as it relates to moneys that were supposedly guaranteed by the federal Government and were then not paid because of a formula that triggered in when times were bad.

• (1630)

I suppose holding up this piece of legislation would not do any good, although I can tell you that I have a good mind to do that. As you know, on third reading there is unlimited time to speak on a Bill. I was thinking of it a moment ago as it relates to fishermen, and in the few remarks that I will make, I wish to explain why.

Many Members of this House represent the personal problems of fishermen. A great many Members in this Chamber have represented fishermen over the past two years in trying to deal with this problem of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, and the notification from the banks that loans were no longer guaranteed under the Act. A typical case is a call from a fisherman who would state: "I have just received a letter from the bank saying I owe them $20,000, and I have $2 in my bank account. What am I going to do?" A letter would be received that stated: "The bank notifies me they want full payment of $20,000 because that is the difference between what my gear has sold for and what I totally owe that bank, although, when I went into the bank, there was a sign that said 'Get a fisheries improvement loan guaranteed by the federal Government'".

The Minister has said that there are only a few of those fishermen. Nothing that we say to the Minister will make him change his mind and modify this Bill to take care of those few fishermen who were dealt such a back-handed slap by the Government and the financial institutions.

It is all too common now to see cases where fishermen have had to pay money back to the Government, to the banks under fisheries improvement loans, and who are stuck in a very bad financial situation. I had a few cases the other day that were rather shocking. For example, I had cases of 34 fishermen referred to me. They had won their cases three weeks ago before the Federal Court in Ottawa against the Unemployment Insurance Commission. They had been fighting for about six or seven years and had finally won their cases against the federal Government. The judge ruled that the fishermen won their cases. The Unemployment Insurance Commission took the decisions from all of these court cases three weeks ago, and decided that the fishermen did not win their cases. It is not going to pay up what the fishermen had already paid in.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, I will read from the case of Eric Keats, appellant, and the Minister of National Revenue, respondent; and the case of Anthony Burke, appellant, and the Minister of National Revenue, respondent. This was a judgment handed down by Mr. Justice Trahan three weeks ago in which the judge states that he has no alternative but to grant the appeals. Justice Trahan states: "It is ordered and adjudged that the determination by the Minister—be reversed". This is on the Unemployment Insurance Act. The judge further states:

> I have nothing but admiration for Mr. Eric Atkinson, solicitor for the respondent, for the way in which he took the decision, with the authorization of the Minister of National Revenue, to ask the court to grant the Appeals—

After reading that, Mr. Speaker, one would have to say, "My goodness, the appellant won the case". But, oh, no, not with this Government. Not with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and the Department of National Revenue. No. Now they are saying the fishermen did not win their cases.

In looking at the cases that go to the courts regarding the fisheries improvement loans, that judgment is not being considered in favour of the fishermen at all. You find that some of the same people who were granted appeals under the Unemployment Insurance Act were nailed with loans that they had taken out under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

I have 34 cases here from three weeks ago. On each one I phoned the Unemployment Insurance Commission and was told that the Unemployment Insurance Commission was not going to pay because it felt it had won. It feels that its lawyers in the Unemployment Insurance Commission are the foremost authority. They know what they are doing. The lawyers in the Unemployment Insurance Commission know what they are doing. "We will not pay back these poor fishermen the money that they paid and the fines they paid because we believe that the judge meant to rule in favour of the Government of Canada here in the Federal Court three weeks ago."

I went over each of the 34 cases. Apparently, there are 121. But I went over the 34 cases, and I found out what the Government was claiming as the phrase that made it decide it won. The judge states:

> I have no alternative but to grant the Appeals 83-560 (UI) and 83-508 (UI) according to the submission brought forth by the Respondent's Solicitor.

According to the judge, the respondent's solicitor had asked the court to grant the appeals. The judge then turned around and sent to every single one of these fishermen a judgment that stated: "It is ordered and adjudged that the determination by the Minister—be reversed—"

The point is that the Government is seen to be an awfully cold body of people as it relates to the fishermen of eastern Canada. It appears that the Government has said to the Departments, "Look, let's find every way possible to save money". When the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act comes up it states, "Let's get rid of it". It says that because it feels the same thing could be done under the Small Businesses Loans Act as is done under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. It even says that the same can be done by the Federal Business Development Bank as is done under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Nothing could be further from the truth. It cannot be done. If you read this Act, you see that it is directed toward fishermen. The Small Businesses Loans Act is not directed toward fishermen at all, and neither is FBDB. Looking at the reference to FBDB, now there is something. Fishermen applying under FBDB to buy a new engine? Sure. They could apply this year and it would probably be dealt with in 1990.

The Government is searching for ways to save money. There were three people who worked in the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act administration, and now there is one. That is all. Of course, when this Act is done away with in six months time, they may still have somebody there because some of these loans will be in effect for at least 15 years.

To leave these fishermen high and dry and to say in the case of people who had received loans that some of them are covered by federal Government guarantee and others are not covered by a federal loan guarantee is not good enough.

• (1640)

It depended upon the point in time a fishermen came into the bank and said that he could not make any more payments. However, the fellow who tossed it up in the air and said that he would quit the fishery benefited. Rather than work like a slave looking for fish, he walked into the bank with his fisheries improvement loan, guaranteed by the federal Government, and said that he would not try for another year. He was paid. It was the fellow who struggled to make his payments and just barely made it who found himself high and dry, with collection agencies down his neck day and night. He was the fellow who was brought to court and had his property seized.

There is no way the Minister can know the number of fishermen who were so affected by the fault in the Act. It only happened since the Government came into office two years ago. The Minister notified the banks about the cut off of the loans, affecting every fisherman who claimed thereafter. The Government of Canada notified only the banks.

A little over a year ago we calculated the figures given to us by the banks and found that it involved 1,500 fishing enterprises in seven Canadian provinces. I dare say that that number has risen by the hundreds. After notification by the Government the banks notified fishermen that they must obtain life insurance on their loans. They did not need it before because the loans were guaranteed by the federal Government. They called them all in, even the ones who were honouring their loans. They were called in or received letters indicating that they needed insurance on their loans. The banks simply said that the federal Department of Fisheries would no longer honour the loans. On top of that there was the climate in the fishing community, with a report coming in saying that their loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act would now be taken away, terminated, and folded into the FBDB or the Small Businesses Loans Act. There is now talk that their unemployment insurance will be affected as well. Actions such as this are happening now.

As I mentioned earlier a group of fishermen, over 100 of them, have fought for seven years before appeal boards and before the courts. Finally 34 of them won their cases in black and white from a justice of the Federal Court, and the Unemployment Insurance Commission turned around and said: "No, we do not think you won". It was in black and white that they won, but they were required to appeal. They did not have any money to hire lawyers. These fishermen were represented by Members of Parliament who were doing it free because they were representing their constituents.

The general attitude of the Government of Canada toward fishermen leaves a lot to be desired. This is why I said to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), the official fisheries critic, that I had in mind to rise at third reading and not sit down. I had in mind to hold up the Bill all night, tomorrow, and the next day until Christmas, and then it would be too late. I know of cases similar to the fisheries improvement cases in which the federal Government said that they had not won their cases before the Federal Court although it was in black and white that they did. Again it was the heavy hand of the federal Government. As the Hon. Member for Egmont said, at least this is an extension of the fisheries improvement loans for six months. He indicated that I would not make it any better or worse by talking all night, all day tomorrow, and all day the next day.

Mr. Henderson: They will ram it through anyway.

Mr. Baker: Yes, they will ram it through. However, it is enough to make one mad. These cases involve some of my constituents and of course constituents from other parts of Canada. The heavy hand of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the heavy hand of the federal Government came down on these poor, unfortunate fishermen with whom the judge agreed in their cases before the Federal Court after seven years of fighting.

We must find some way to right this wrong. I do not know how, unless we ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) who acted on behalf of the federal Government to rise in the House and explain. Did he lose these cases? That is what the judge said. If he says he lost them, then he will have to pay all fishermen in eastern Canada. The Minister of National Revenue is a good lawyer. He knows how to read a judge's decision. Perhaps I will ask him that question tomorrow or the next day to see what he says and to see whether he is on the side of fishermen and on the side of justice in society.

Again I ask the Minister of Fisheries, in re-examining the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, to look at those poor, unfortunate people who have had their property and everything else seized by the banks, all because they did not come in yesterday—they came in today—to get their loans guaranteed. They thought they had a guarantee from the Government.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to put the Bill through all stages today, which would necessitate reference to Committee of the Whole rather than to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Punishment

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of opposing the legislation before us or of holding it up, for that matter. However, I have some very serious questions for the Minister. As a matter of fact, I think we should congratulate him for the initiative which he is showing in this regard. I think it is a good move that penalties in the offshore are being increased. It is a measure which I applaud. We required that enforcement in that foreign fishermen or foreign ships cannot feel that they can come into Canadian waters with impunity. I fully support the actions of the Minister in this regard.

The Minister is doing something right, but everything he has done has not been right. I should like to ask him some questions about some of those other areas while we are on the topic because they are of great concern to fishermen in my riding. When we were dealing with the last Bill, the Hon. Member for Egmont mentioned the question of small craft harbours and the serious deterioration of many wharfs and breakwaters in fishing communities. I want to raise with the Minister the particular case of Lance au Loup in my riding in southern Labrador where $1 million was allocated for the improvement of a regional wharf for long liners in the straits area.

The wharf is half done. We have 12 or 15 long liners and 12 or 15 small fishing boats depending on that marine facility. It is incomplete and it is indicative of what has been happening. Attention has to be paid to our small craft harbours. We must have adequate funds. I remember very clearly one of the things our Party did when in government was to put adequate funds into small craft harbours. I remember one year in which $60 million—probably in the middle 1970s—was allocated to small craft harbours. We had a minimum of $30 million a year. That was before inflation overtook the present budget. The Minister has to address the issue that you cannot carry on a fishing industry if you do not have the proper wherewithal. It is like trying to sell automobiles without a garage. It cannot be done and the Minister has to pay attention, particularly to Lance au Loup.

There are two other issues I want to raise with the Minister, both of which he will know about, and I hope he will respond to them. The first is the situation at La Scie. La Scie is in a Catch-22 situation. The Minister, following along with the policy of our Party when we were the Government, brought in, according to the Kirby recommendations, what is known as the resource short plant program. That program is to assist those small communities and fish plants on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and elsewhere that do not get an adequate supply of fish from the inshore fishery. It is to have a supply of offshore fish landed at the small inshore plants, making them viable and keeping them going for a longer period of the year. Also, if a plant belongs to a company which has an offshore fleet, it cannot qualify for the resource short plant program. That is the situation in which La Scie finds itself.

It is interesting to know that La Scie was built, I believe, by the Government of Canada, many years ago. It is a community of about 3,000 people and serves a whole peninsula. The economy of the whole of the Baie Verte peninsula depends on that regional plant. I draw that to the Minister's attention because there is no way the community of La Scie can survive on inshore fish alone. La Scie has to have an allocation of offshore fish. I would ask the Minister to either amend the resource short plant program guidelines so that La Scie can be accommodated or allocate a supply of fish from elsewhere.

There was a proposal, for example, to allocate fish from a new facility that was built on the Labrador coast called Punchbowl, but nothing happened. That community and indeed the whole peninsula, which happens to be not only in my riding but in the riding of the provincial Minister of Fisheries, is in jeopardy because it does not have an adequate supply of fish. I hope the Minister will give us an answer of substance as to what he intends to do about this problem.

Third is an issue which we have raised with him and with his predecessor before. It also flows out of the Kirby task force report, namely, the concept of a northern fisheries development corporation. The Minister will know that in certain areas of the northern peninsula of Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador we have marginal plants. These plants in small communities cannot survive because they are not part of a multinational organization but are simply small community plants.

Kirby's idea was to put those marginal plants together in what he described as a northern fisheries development corporation and to allocate federal funds, management and marketing expertise. If that were done in a collective way, the aggregate would be stronger than the parts that make it up. Each of those plants would benefit by being part of a larger cooperative effort, but that did not happen. When in Government our Party set aside $15 million to improve some of those plants and to set up that over all northern fisheries development corporation. Nothing has happened. The money has gone elsewhere. In the meantime, small plants are still struggling. I have not seen any better answer come along, neither have I seen any alternative action taken. I say to the Minister one of two things: either come up with a better idea and put it into effect or put in place the northern fisheries development corporation. The situation will not get better, it will only get worse.

The Minister will know that evidently the stocks we thought were off the shores of Newfoundland and Labrador in 2J and 3KL are not as strong as everybody thought them to be. The resource is not there that we thought was there. Everyone will have to tighten his belt a little. That means even more belt tightening for people who are in the position that I have described. Small marginal plants are at an even greater disadvantage because of weakness in the stocks.

Will the Minister follow through now by setting up the northern fisheries development corporation for the northern peninsula and for the coast of Labrador or will he come up with some alternative suggestion about how those particular plants are supposed to operate and maintain viability in the face of the factors I have just described?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I believe that all Hon. Members would like to see these amendments to the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act adopted today as January 1 will represent the tenth anniversary of the extension by Canada of our offshore fisheries boundary to 200 miles. I think it is particularly timely and important that we recognize the prevalence of overfishing in the area at the limit of the 200 mile boundary and beyond. Through the introduction of improved surveillance methods, improved means of enforcement, higher fines and penalties, we hope to take greater control of those precious groundfish stocks, especially as they pertain to the Province of Newfoundland, in the area known as the nose and tail of the Grand Banks. I am urging and asking all Members to be as co-operative as they can.

At this point I want to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs who is in the House today. Without his leadership and co-operation we would not have been able to make significant announcements in the month of June which encompassed the measures before the House today, which were among a number of important new initiatives to toughen up and improve enforcement of those stocks for the benefit of Atlantic Canadian fishermen. I will make further comment at third reading stage, assuming we have time at the end.

I will concisely respond to the questions asked by my colleague. He asked me to give some indication of the future of the small craft harbours program, and how we intend to handle the situation of La Scie in his riding. He asked also about the status of the northern fisheries development corporation, which was an outgrowth of the Kirby task force review and is a commitment which this Government made some time ago and which we have not yet fulfilled.

The Member is correct when he indicates that the Government of which he was a part increased significantly the funding for small craft harbours. That took place in particular in the years 1983 and 1984. I do not want to criticize the Hon. Member or his Government for raising the budget for small craft harbours from about $42 to $44 million to $60 million during those two years, but I think it is reflective of what has been wrong in the management of our small craft harbour program.

If you go back over the history of that program since the responsibility to maintain those wharfs and harbours was changed from the Department of Public Works to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, you will see that before every election a big shot of funding was made and brand new facilities were built. The problem is that over the past 30 years from the post-war period, there has been no ongoing budget to manage, maintain and dredge all of the 2,200 harbours across Canada for which I am responsible.

The Hon. Member knows there were certain references in the Throne Speech. We have been promising for some months a new policy approach to management of those harbours so as to involve the fishermen more directly in the decisions on priorities and equipment purchase as well as the provision of services. We want to use available labour closer to home and at the same time overcome a number of deficiencies resulting from deterioration of those harbours. What I undertake to the Hon. Member is that we will put in place a new management regime which will not only deal with the necessary expansion and improvement to breakwaters and wharfs, but over the long term will allow us to improve general maintenance and eliminate safety-related deficiencies. I must tell him that we cannot do that at the present level of funding, but I am working toward major improvements in that area.

With respect to the La Scie situation, the Hon. Member knows that last year a competition was held to determine who would operate the new fish buying and servicing centre known as Punchbowl on the Labrador coast. One of the bidders was National Sea Products on behalf of the plant at La Scie. For reasons relating to the nature of their bid in relation to that of the Saltfish Corporation and one other bidder, they did not succeed in gaining the right to buy fish at Punchbowl and deliver it to La Scie as they intended. I undertake to the Hon. Member to reconsider the eligiblity of the plant at La Scie in the coming year because the program will be up for grabs again in 1987.

Finally, on the question of the northern fisheries development corporation, I am very conscious of the necessity for finding improved ways to expand the economy of Labrador and northern Newfoundland in order to help many of those marginal communities whose existence is dependent on the seasonal fishery, the inshore fishery in particular, and for whom the greater part of the year offers little opportunity and little hope. I am giving very careful attention to ways to embody the northern fisheries development corporation concept in a new initiative but not necessarily by creating yet another Crown corporation.

I do not believe the solution to problems is necessarily to be found in creating new institutions. We have to define our goals and objectives and then develop a plan to achieve them. I am giving serious thought to this and working co-operatively with the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries. I hope to have something soon which the Hon. Member will see as a satisfying response to the undertaking made and a way of offering hope and increased economic opportunity to the people in his riding.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to make a few comments on Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, and raise a few questions with him about it. The Act increases the fines payable by foreign vessels who transgress Canadian fishing regulations. That is something all Members of this House support. Unfortunately, it has become a necessity in the last few years.

The American poet, Charles Olson, in his Maximus poems, said that fishing was our first wild west. That was certainly true in the early years when Basque and Bretton fishermen were coming over to the Grand Banks. There were occasional disputes and sometimes violence. Over a period of time there was, however, a sense that there was enough for everyone and a reasonable regime developed so that fishing disputes were settled without violence. Unfortunately, that seems to have broken down in the last few years because of increased pressure upon the resource by other countries as well as the increased needs of Canadian fishermen.

As the Minister pointed out, 10 years ago we unilaterally extended our economic zone to 200 miles. However, some areas of the Grand Banks, the nose and tail, are still outside of that zone. They are lucrative areas for other countries to fish. They also provide some temptation for foreign fishermen to sneak into the 200-mile economic zone of Canada in a form of piracy and literally rob us of our fish. Last spring we had the rather exciting spectacle of Canadian fisheries officers being kidnapped by Spanish fishing vessels and that resulted in an exciting sea chase and so on. That sort of thing should not happen and the legislation we have before us today is intended to prevent it from happening again.

There are two needs to be dealt with in this situation. First there is the short-term need for some tough measures, such as those announced by the Minister last June. These increased fines are a part of those measures. We need to be tough in enforcing the fisheries regulations for foreign vessels. On that basis we are fully prepared to support the increase in fines. Of the other measures announced by the Minister, some of them are regrettable but obviously necessary.

Second, we have the need to return to the rule of law and reason. We can all agree that the best kind of police force is that which never needs to use weapons and force. In fact, the best kind of police force is one that does not even need to be seen, but where people know the rule of law exists and will be enforced. I hope the Minister and other members of the Government are able to work toward an international civilized approach to our fish stocks so that we can eliminate the present situation where we have to play cops and robbers and act like a beleaguered corner store operator worried about a hold-up. That kind of thing is no more healthier on the international scene than it is in the corner store. Canada has developed some reasonable regulations and we would like to see them used on an international basis.

The Leader of the Newfoundland NDP suggested that the 200-mile zone should be extended unilaterally to take in the nose and tail of the Grand Banks. That suggestion was picked up by the Premier of Newfoundland and brought to the First Ministers' Conference. I understand a committee was established to look into that. I would be interested in knowing the status of that committee. Has it been set up? Who is on it? What are its terms of reference? When can we expect some answers from it?

Second, it is not enough for us to just raise the maximum fine. There has to be some way of getting the message through to the courts that they have to raise the level of fines they are imposing because in some parts of eastern Canada the courts are imposing very low fines when compared to the current maximum. If we are going to raise the maximum, we must send a message to our courts that international fisheries violations are serious enough that they should be considering imposing the maximum fines in a number of those cases.

Third, I would appreciate it if the Minister could bring us up to date on some of the measures he announced last June 13. In particular, he said that the Government would be arming DFO Atlantic offshore patrol vessels and boarding parties. I would like to know what is happening with that. He said the Government would be exloring with DND and MOT means of increasing dedicated air and sea surveillance, acquiring one dual engine helicopter for sea patrols, and developing an electronic fishing licence which will facilitate identification of licensed vessels. I would appreciate some update as to what is happening in those areas. Again, I want to indicate our general support for this measure.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, at the end of third reading debate I will give an overview of why the Government is proceeding in this fashion. However, I will now deal with the Member's specific questions. First, he asks about the discussions which arose from the First Ministers' Conference held in Halifax in November, 1985. At that time, driven largely by the strongly held views of the Province of Newfoundland that we should do more to show our commitment to manage and maintain the stocks on the Grand Banks for the benefit of Atlantic Canadian fishermen, it was decided that federal and provincial Ministers responsible for fisheries would meet and develop a strategy for dealing with this general problem of foreign-overfishing, both within and beyond the present 200-mile fishing zone.

As a result of that, I met with provincial Ministers first in St. John's in January, 1986, and subsequently on more than a half dozen occasions. This led to a proposed course of action on the management and enforcement of regulations for the offshore fisheries. As well, we reached a very high degree of understanding and agreement on issues as diverse as aquaculture, the quality of our fish products and marketing initiatives, and international trade.

When we presented our report at the First Ministers' Conference in November of this year in Vancouver, it represented a unanimous series of recommendations to our respective governments on ways to enhance the economic benefit and employment created by our fisheries in all parts of Canada. This referred to the recreational fishery as well as the commercial. It gave attention to the potential for the shore-based processing industry to grow and to improve the quality of our products.

There was one question left unresolved at the meeting in Vancouver. That was the dilemma of how to gain increased control over the groundfish stock, particularly the precious northern cod stock which swims back and forth within and beyond the 200-mile fishing limit at the extremities of the Grand Banks known as the nose and the tail of the Grand Banks. We believe and have argued at the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Association that those resources are really a part of Canadian stocks which live a significant part of their lives within the Canadian 200-mile economic limit and that they, therefore, should be managed from the perspective of conserving and enhancing them for the benefit of Canadian fishermen by Canada.

For that reason, the Government of Newfoundland has advocated that the boundary be extended to encompass the nose and tail of the Grand Banks. For reasons of complexity of law and international diplomacy, it is not feasible now or in the foreseeable future, from the standpoint of precedents in law, for Canada to extend that boundary. However, the Premier of Newfoundland proposed to the Prime Minister and other Premiers in Vancouver that we establish a special working group to study ways and means to give effect to that which we desire, that is, to enhance our ability to manage those resources, which we believe to be Canadian resources, for the benefit of Canadian fishermen. The proposal was that only when they are surplus to our own requirments would they be shared with foreign nations and that we should find ways to improve the effectiveness with which we manage those resources whether or not it is possible to extend the boundary which, at the present time, does not seem possible.

The Hon. Member also asked for specifics about other aspects of the announcements I made in St. John's, Newfoundland, on June 13. We are dealing today with the issue of significantly increasing the fines for violations of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act by both foreign and Canadian vessels. Canadian vessels are singled out in the Act with regard to the practice of buying fish from a foreign vessel and transporting it into Canadian waters, that being clearly illegal under the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. Today we are dealing with significant increases in the penalties for such offences as well as for foreign vessels which illegally enter the Canadian zone.

We are in the process of selecting a twin-engine helicopter which will operate from the pads on our two major offshore coastal patrol vessels on the Grand Banks, those being the Leonard J. Cowley and the Cape Roger. We are well advanced in the preparation of a Treasury Board submission for the purpose of acquiring that helicopter which will effectively extend the range and the ability to give early warning to fishing vessels which are violating our fishing boundaries. The area which those very costly patrol vessels can surveil will be extended by a factor of three or four.

We will also be committing funding to obtain fixed-wing high-altitude surveillance support from a private operator with a specially instrumented aircraft for monitoring offences of our coastal fishing zone. We will continue to enjoy the support of the Department of National Defence which has made available significant hours of surveillance using the tracker aircraft, the Aurora aircraft based in Greenwood, Nova Scotia, and destroyers. In each case a certain number of hours are made available to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for such surveillance.

With regard to the arming of patrol vessels, the armaments have been purchased. The training is in process and very comprehensive and carefully considered rules of engagement are being established to ensure that these armaments are used to show that we intend to uphold the provisions of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, but in the most responsible way as all Canadians would expect such armaments to be used in the defence of our fishing zone.

The final aspect of the announcements dealt with the development of an electronic fishing licence. This would be somewhat like an emergency location transmitter on an aircraft. However, rather than sending out only a single tone, it would send out a code which would convey the number of the fishing licence carried by that vessel. Any foreign vessel found fishing in Canadian waters which was not emitting this electonic signal would be in clear violation and would be pursued and, hopefully, apprehended for illegal fishing. We are requesting proposals from the private sector for the development of such an electronic fishing licence. The technology is not complicated. It is an adaptation of an existing technology. We are encouraging the submission of proposals for the development of such a system.

I have probably elaborated at greater length than the Hon. Member expected, but I hope my comments have been helpful.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans with great interest. I do not know whether to agree with the intent of the Bill. Some may say that one would have to agree with increasing the fines for those people who violate our fishing laws, but it is morally wrong for the Government to watch as the French fleet, in the vast area south of Newfoundland and east of Nova Scotia, take four times their allocation this year. They were allocated 7,600 tonnes of fish and the metropolitan fleet from France took 26,000 tonnes in the area that goes over 200 miles down from Newfoundland to the mid-Atlantic. There was not one observer aboard those boats. However, if a Canadian overfishes his quota, the boat is hauled in and he is arrested.

The Minister can say that there is a legal dispute with the Government of France, but that does nothing about the fact that the total allowable catch on the south coast of Newfoundland and eastern Nova Scotia was surpassed this year. What did the Minister do about this? He cut back on the Canadian quota so that Canadian fishermen have a quota on the East Coast that is less than last year's quota. Meanwhile, the French continue to overfish to the point they are four times their quota for the East Coast of Canada.

Let us consider another flaw in the Bill. The Minister talks about preserving the stocks on the nose and the tail of the banks. I will give him some credit for the fact that he got an agreement from NAFO that no one would fish in some of those areas. This means that a Canadian fisherman fishing in those areas would be charged. However, if a Spanish or Portuguese boat fished these areas, there would be a diplomatic note from NAFO to that country, alerting it to the fact that it is not allowed to fish in this area. Furthermore, the United States does not come under NAFO and therefore can put its entire fleet in that area. Canadians will be fined for fishing in that area. The Americans, who are not part of NAFO, are there now, as well as the Koreans. The Spanish fished in this area three weeks ago and were sent a diplomatic note.

The fact that the Minister cannot arrest American fishermen who go to this area angers many boat owners on the East Coast of Canada. Yet, the Government brings in a Bill that increases the fine for Newfoundlanders. The other day, a fisherman was arrested because his boat was 49 feet 11.5 inches long. If his boat was 50 feet long he could have received a quota. The skipper of the boat was from Newfoundland and the boat came from Conception Bay. The skipper is known as Blackie and people from Nova Scotia will know about whom I am talking. He was 202 miles off the coast of Newfoundland with a boat that was 49 feet, 11 inches long, and he was arrested, dragged into St. John's, and charged. I believe it is wrong to increase the fines in an area that is prohibited to Canadians but open to the Americans.

The Minister said that the nose and the tail of the bank is a Canadian resource. He should explain to the House why Americans are allowed there but Canadians are not. While he may argue that the Americans are not part of NAFO, that does not help Canadian fishermen who know that the Americans are in that area where they are not permitted. It does not help the Newfoundland fishermen to know that the French are overfishing their quota by four, yet no charges are laid because there is a diplomatic dispute between the two countries.

There is only one in 10 foreign boats that have observers. The Minister should explain why he does not put more observers on these foreign boats.

I want to say something about Canadian boats. The inshore fishermen in Newfoundland are now adversely affected three ways: overfishing by foreigners, factory freezer trawlers that were approved by the Government and which gave National Sea Products the boost on the stock market, and the pound quotas now given to Canadian boats. There should be more observers on those large Canadian boats which can presently wash the small fish overboard.

The Government believes this Bill will solve the problem of foreign overfishing by charging Canadians while letting foreigners off scot-free because of a border dispute. That is not good enough in the area where the French overfished its quota by four, and it is not good enough in the nose and tail of the bank where the Americans and everyone else who is not part of NAFO are allowed to fish. This action by the Government is unacceptable.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the Hon. Member's speech with great interest. When we negotiated at the Law of the Sea Conference, we gave up the tail and the nose of the bank before we got to the bargaining table. That was discussed long before the present Minister assumed his portfolio. Recently, we were told that during all the surveillance that took place under the Minister who is now in the other place, the observers never saw foreign gear hauled in from the water or saw landed fish in the factory trawler. There was no surveillance.

I agree with the Member that surveillance is still inadequate, but that problem was inherited. I agree that the problem must be addressed, but under no circumstances should the Minister be blamed when observers were not even being put on the boats five years ago. Canadian boats were not being weighed and we were not even estimating the weight of fish that were being taken aboard foreign trawlers.

There is a great foofaraw about what is happening today. The nose and the tail were given away and as a result of the Law of the Sea Conference all those involved with the fishery know that we no longer have the control we want. How it is going to be resolved, I do not know, but blaming the Minister and the Government for an impossible situation which we inherited is not really what I would have expected from the Hon. Member whom I regard so highly and will continue to do so.

• (1730)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, this Minister of Fisheries, under the guise of trying to save the stocks on the nose and tail of the banks—and we all want to save the stocks—reached an agreement with the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization, to which so many countries belong, in the last three months, to stop fishing in an area which was considered to be a spawning ground. However, what he forgot in saying that no Canadian boat was allowed to fish there was that the Americans were not a part of NAFO. Perhaps he did not forget. Perhaps he sent his Deputy Minister to have negotiations with the United States. But, to my knowledge, it has not stopped the American fleet from fishing in an area which his Department says we cannot put our boats because it is a NAFO area and the Americans do not belong to NAFO.

Mr. McCain: Because we gave it away.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member says it is because we gave it away. Well, that area of the banks is right on the line and a little bit outside of the 200 mile zone. There is no doubt about that. However, it is considered internationally to be a Canadian resource. That is why the agreement was made. Where I have extreme difficulty is that the Government tells us that Canadians are not allowed to fish in those areas off the East Coast of Canada but there is nothing we can do about the Americans and any number of other countries because they are not a part of NAFO. I think Canadians on St. Pierre and Miquelon off the South Coast of Newfoundland are just as angry as we are with the Metropolitan Fleet from France. But right is right and wrong is no man's right. We cannot allow a foreign country to overfish a quota by four times with the excuse that we have no control over them, whereas if a Canadian boat went out, that fisherman would be arrested. That is where the Government and I differ.

We do not say the Minister is completely off track but he is certainly not on track as far as being equal and fair. The Minister can stand up and say he cannot control the French in areas 3P or 3J, or whatever one calls it, on the South Coast of Newfoundland. He can say it is in negotiaton. However, if it is in negotiation, we do not hit the poor Canadian boat owner without getting something back from the French and we certainly do not arrest a Canadian boat owner whose boat is right next to an American boat. The American is fishing away and out comes the patrol vessel. The Canadian boat owner is told he is fishing illegally and has to be towed into St. John's, Newfoundland. The Canadian skipper asks about the American right next to him and he is told that the American cannot be touched because he is not a part of NAFO. That is not good enough.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, what I think my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate, has brought home so vividly here today is the fact that this legislation touches a much broader situation than fisheries management. The Hon. Member mentioned the situation in St. Pierre and Miquelon where the Metropolitan Fleet from France is overfishing and we have no control whatsoever. He mentioned other situations as well. I think the Government and the Minister are badly lacking in fisheries management. I think the fishermen and the people of Canada see that.

The Minister of Fisheries in Nova Scotia reported there is misreporting of catches up to 30 per cent to 50 per cent. I do not know how accurate those figures are, but it leaves little for the fishermen in Atlantic Canada and in British Columbia. How can they trust the Government when they hear these stories circulating, particularly when they hear it from provincial Ministers?

This legislation on which we on this side agree—and we will pass it expeditiously today—will not be a panacea to all the ills of the fishery. I hope the Minister understands that. It is one thing to have stiffer fines and penalties for foreign overfishing, but how do we enforce those penalties? Since this Government took office we have seen nothing but cuts on the enforcement side of the Department of Fisheries. The Minister mentioned earlier that he was going to expand surveillance and I hope he does. I hope he brings surveillance back to an acceptable level because one reason there is overfishing by foreign fleets is because of the price of fish, which creates a greater demand. I hope the Minister does not believe that by bringing in this legislation it will cure all the ills of the fisheries.

There are many other issues on which we should be speaking when it comes to fish management. There are issues the Government should address very promptly. When the Committee on Fisheries and Oceans travelled to Atlantic Canada, and I see some Hon. Members here who were with us, a number of issues were put before us by the fishermen. One concern was the problem with the grey seal. I hope when the report on that is made public it will be referred to the Committee on Fisheries and Oceans and dealt with as quickly as possible.

We in the Opposition are prepared to help in any way, shape or form, the Minister and the Government to better manage the fish stocks but I must say it is very disturbing to find out last week or a week and a half ago that the Minister allocated x number of tuna to the Japanese in the St. Margaret Bay area.

I have a letter to the editor of a local newspaper, which I will not read it because it is too long, condemning the Minister and asking for his resignation because of how he handled that situation. I think that was a terrible decision made by the Minister and I hope he will learn from that mistake. It is a limited fishery. For the Minister to say it was an experimental long line Japanese fishery is so ludicrous it is not even worth mentioning. There is one thing the tuna fishermen in Prince Edward Island know and that is the keg and line and the fact that a limited number of fishermen have licences to catch tuna. That is one of the reasons there has not been too many tuna caught this year.

I am told by Mr. Robert McFadden, a member of the Atlantic Bluefin Tuna Advisory Committee, that there were nearly 400 tuna caught weighing less than 300 pounds. Good advice for the Minister would be to accept the recommendations of those advisory committees. Certainly when tuna this size is given to a foreign country, it does not say much for the management of the fisheries and the respect fishermen have for that sort of management. While we can be very critical of this, the damage has been done. I hope that it is not repeated in the future by this Minister.

I would like to get the legislation passed today, but I would like to ask the Minister if he intends, along with passing this legislation, to provide for more enforcement and to better manage the fishery resource. This is only the tip of the iceberg. Stiff fines can be imposed but we must be able to catch someone in order to impose those fines.

There are thousands of miles of coastline around Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. To be fair, I realize that there cannot be a policeman on every corner. However, with these kinds of fines, there will be much more temptation for a sort of hit-and-run type of fishing. We will have to put more teeth in the legislation than the penalties for which it provides. In fact, we will have to back it up with some authority. I hope the Minister is prepared to loosen the purse strings when it comes to enforcement.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make my response short because we want to get this Bill through the House this afternoon if at all possible. I would point out to the Hon. Member that with the reorganization within the Department which was announced in February and with the regional reorganization that occurred in September, there have been only minor changes to the enforcement contingent. I believe there was a reduction of three out of 700 persons assigned to enforcement duties. However, there have been other increases arising out of funding which was announced in June to embody the various initiatives we are discussing in this debate this afternoon.

I should also point out that some 100 observers are now travelling on foreign vessels in Canadian waters. With the introduction of full cost recovery for observers, we will be adding 100 new observers and they will now be monitoring the fishery on Canadian vessels offshore. We have increased the contingent of observers by some 100 and in fact we are strengthening both the enforcement and the observer functions in this way.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Siddon moved that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise at this point to offer a summary response to a number of the comments that have been made by my hon. colleagues. I think it is only appropriate that I do this because of some of the particularly forceful assertions which were offered by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

It seems from my perspective that the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate is not content with half a bushel. He wants the whole thing. The fact is that when the Party of which he is a member was in Government some 10 years ago, as the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain) has pointed out, the Government did not achieve the control of which the Hon. Member now speaks as being highly desirable in spite of the fact that under international law, such an extension beyond the 200-mile limit would not yet be recognized nor would be feasible in the immediate future.

That in no way negates the benefits to be gained by increasing our ability to police our fishery at the extremity of the 200-mile fishing limit for those vessels which have been displaced from within the 200-mile limit and hover along the boundary awaiting opportunities to sneak in at night to take fish essentially out of the boats of our own fishermen and the mouths of their children. We are therefore bringing measures before the House today which will substantially increase the deterrents to foreign fishing within and at the limit of our 200-mile fisheries zone.

I for one would be extremely disappointed if Hon. Members opposite did not support the substantial increases in fines and penalties which are contained within Bill C-26. The spokesman for the Official Opposition has already indicated that support will be forthcoming. I think it is particularly significant that he has said that because, as we celebrate the tenth anniversary of Canada's assertion of the 200-mile exclusive fishing zone, we are raising the fines for illegal fishing without a licence within Canadian waters from $100,000 to $750,000 maximum on indictment, an increase of seven and a half times.

We will increase the fine for convictions of illegal fishing by summary conviction from $25,000 to $150,000, a sixfold increase. For other offences, a number of which are set out in the Sections of the present Coastal Fisheries Protection Act and its regulations including evading arrest and failing to stop when commanded, fines under indictment will be increased from $25,000 to $500,000, an increase of 20 times. For summary conviction offences of the same nature, the fines will be increased from a maximum of $5,000 to a maximum of $100,000, an increase of some 20 times.

Why are these increased fines necessary? In the past three or four years, as we have displaced foreign fishing vessels from within our 200-mile limit to the very rich extremities of the Grand Bank known as the nose and tail of the Bank, we have seen a very rapid escalation in illegal fishing along the line of and within the Canadian 200-mile zone. The result of that is that in 1984, there were 49 detected violations and seven convictions. Total fines of $8,000 were imposed and the average fine was $1,000. That was the situation in 1984.

In 1985 there was a virtual doubling of violations from 49 to 90. In 1985 we collected fines of $1.25 million with an average fine of $56,000. Comparing those fines with the levels that we are discussing today, we can see how important this additional deterrence will be. Already in 1986 we have had 48 violations, but at this time in the year that represents a substantial reduction from the number of violations recorded in 1985. So far this year $286,000 in fines have been levied with an average fine of $25,000, and $46,000 in forfeitures of catch.

The principles embodied in this Bill are to give effect to the various measures announced in a speech I gave in St. John's, Newfoundland, on Friday, June 13. At that time, I indicated that we would substantially increase our ability to detect violations, and that we would substantially increase our ability to chase and apprehend violators. All of that would be of little significance if we then did not have the legal provision to essentially throw the book at those who would offend against our exclusive fishing zone. That is why it is essential that these significant increases in penalty be approved today.

I spoke earlier at the committee stage about our decision to arm our offshore patrol vessels, of which there are five operating on the Atlantic coast, with light machine-gun armaments, and to ensure that those armaments are used according to rules of engagement, so that we are in no way seen to be irresponsible or unduly antagonistic. However, we must show foreign nations, including the United States, and vessels of any other foreign origin, that Canadian fish stocks within our fishing zone are to first benefit our Canadian fishing communities and fishermen.

Hon. Members have spoken about certain complications where, as a member of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, we enter into arrangements with foreign countries that recognize Canada's authority to manage these fish stocks, both within and beyond the 200-mile limit. In exchange for their co-operation, they are allowed to fish for surplus stocks within the Canadian zone. At the same time, we expect their full co-operation on conservation measures on the nose and tail of the Grand Banks.

Unfortunately, as the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate has indicated, there are certain complications. There are unresolved questions of allocation to the French Metropolitan Fleet which are presently being discussed at the diplomatic level, as the Hon. Member well knows. There is the problem of overfishing by that French fleet in area 3PS which surrounds the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Something has to be done to bring under control that blatant abuse of resources which we believe to be Canadian. Next year the long-term agreement expires with the European nations, the Economic Community. Under our policy that allocation which the European nations have enjoyed will not be renewed. But there is also a problem with the American vessels, as the Member for Gander—Twillingate has pointed out.

Since The Hague line was established, conveying to Canada a greater portion of the rich fish stocks on Georges Bank, some of the U.S. vessels that formerly fished in an area which is now part of the Canadian fisheries zone are fishing on the tail of the Grand Banks. They are not fishing for our prime cod stocks, but they are indeed fishing for flat-fish or flounder.

Diplomatic initiatives must be continued to encourage the Americans to fish responsibly and not to abuse our stocks, as well as all of the other countries that will be subject to the fines established under this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your co-operation and that of all Members. I am sure that their good sense will persuade them to support this very important and positive initiative on behalf of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I know that I only have a couple of minutes. The fact is that today the Minister has decreased the quotas for Canadian fishermen on the East Coast. They have been decreased for groundfish. At the same time it is recognized, as the Minister just did, that the French Metropolitan Fleet is overfishing by four times what it is allowed in that entire area off the coast of Newfoundland and off the east coast of Nova Scotia. After we agreed for conservation purposes with NAFO to cut out our fishing on the tail of the bank, the Americans moved in with their fleet. The Minister says that there is nothing he can legally do about that.

The Canadian quotas are cut back. If they fish any more than their quota, they are arrested and will receive big fines. The fishermen will never get out of jail. Yet the French fleet is overfishing all it wants. The Americans are on the tail of the bank overfishing all they want. Right next to them are the Canadians who will be arrested and given these great new fines. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has admitted, and he is absolutely correct, that right now the Canadian Government cannot do anything about the foreign fleets. Yet the Canadian quotas have been reduced for groundfish off the East Coast.

What we are saying to the federal Government today is to beware. Canadian fishermen will not put up with this much longer. They will not accept that double standard that is being presented to them by this Government. They are not going to take it, and they will show their displeasure with this Government when the next election rolls around.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, so that we can get this Bill through, I wish to indicate our support for the measures the Government is taking in increasing the fines that will be levied against foreign vessels which transgress Canadian fisheries regulations, and Canadian vessels which pick up any foreign catches. That is important. The previous Member who spoke did not mean to indicate that Canadian fishermen will be hit with these high fines, because that is not the way the Bill reads, as I understand it. I stand to be corrected if the Member is correct.

These measures are important. I urge the Government to continue to take a strong position vis-à-vis France and the United States and get them to respect Canadian rights and Canadian conservation measures in these waters. Again, I am happy to give my support for these measures.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

DISARMAMENT—UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) RESEARCH UNDERTAKEN BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, these proceedings arise out of a question I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) right after the collapse of the Reykjavik Summit. That summit fell apart because President Reagan rejected a Soviet offer to cut offensive nuclear missiles and keep star wars research in the laboratory for 10 years. Instead, President Reagan wishes to deploy a ballistic missile defence system after 10 years of development.

I asked my question for the reason that President Reagan's position flatly contradicted Canadian Government policy. That policy was set out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in the House on January 23. It can be summed up in one sentence:

> Our stance toward SDI research is rooted in the need to conform strictly with the provisions of the ABM treaty.

Article V of that treaty reads as follows:

> Each party undertakes not to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based or mobile land-based.

• (1800)

Clearly the Government could no longer support President Reagan. He wanted development and deployment, which is explicitly forbidden. I was therefore astounded when the Prime Minister asserted that his Government's policy was still in effect. How could this be?

We found out when the Secretary of State for External Affairs returned from Europe. He told the House that the summit had been a great success. The only thing left to work out, according to the Minister, was the definition of research. He said that should be left to American and Soviet negotiators.

The Secretary did a great disservice to the country. Canadian lives are at risk, and they will suffer the consequences of another arms race. The Government has a responsibility to speak out for them. He also conveniently ignored the fact that his Government's policy rested on a Canadian interpretation of star wars and the ABM treaty.

Let us look at how the Americans see that treaty. Paul Nitze, the President's special adviser on arms control, told a New York audience on October 31:

> The restrictions of Article V of the treaty do not apply to ABM systems based on other physical principles and their components.

He went on to say:

> The United States need not accept limitations on permitted development and testing activities.

In a nutshell, the Canadian Government says it will support star wars only if research conforms strictly with the ABM treaty, and the Americans say they can and will ignore that treaty. Therefore, the Government can no longer support star wars.

Reykjavik should have crushed any illusions that the Government had about star wars. The House will remember that the Government began by defending SDI as prudent research to keep up with the Soviet Union. However, prudent research is exactly what President Reagan turned down by refusing to keep research in the laboratory for 10 years.

Neither is star wars a bargaining chip. Some argued that star wars would bring the Soviets back to the bargaining table. However, when Mr. Gorbachev came and made the concessions in offensive arms which the West had been seeking for years, President Reagan would not bargain. Instead he wanted to deploy his "insurance policy". Finally, the Secretary of State for External Affairs argued that star wars could be the subject of negotiation under the ABM treaty. However, Mr. Nitze's statements make it clear that the Americans will not accept limits on SDI.

It has come down to a choice between star wars and arms control. SDI is riding roughshod over existing arms control treaties, and it is preventing new agreements from being signed.

In conclusion, Canada must now say no to star wars. A responsible friend and ally would tell the United States that breaking treaties and passing up the chance for arms reductions is not in anyone's best interests.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that SDI is a research program concerning various ABM defence concepts. The technical feasibility of such a project can be ascertained only after further research which will be completed in the early 1990s, if ever.

The Government supports this research program which it views as a precautionary measure warranted by the existence of a similar program in the U.S.S.R. For a number of years now the Soviets have been doing extensive ABM defence research at centres such as Sary Shagan. In addition, both superpowers should indeed consider the possibility of jointly and progressively abandoning a deterrent, system based on guaranteed mutual destruction through offensive nuclear weapons and opt instead for defensive systems combined with reduced arsenals of offensive weapons.

This was the position of the American negotiators at the Geneva discussions on nuclear and space armament, and we supported it.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that SDI has something to do with the U.S.S.R. returning to the Geneva negotiation table and the more pragmatic approach taken by the Soviets in recent months. It is unfortunate that at Reykjavik Mr. Gorbachev unilaterally chose to make the SDI interruption a prerequisite of progress in other sectors of nuclear armament control.

The Hon. Member for Brant was wondering about a connection between SDI and the ABM missile treaty. Had he quoted Article V of the treaty in extenso he would have realized that both signatories to the treaty have undertaken not to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based or mobile land-based.

However, the Treaty authorizes the development and deployment of a fixed land system as well as research on all types of systems.

In Reykjavik, Soviet Secretary General Gorbachev however added a new dimension to the discussions by requiring that all research on anti-missile defence systems be carried out only in laboratories, which would go beyond the restrictions contained in Clause V of the Treaty. Indeed, the word "laboratory" is not even mentioned in the Treaty, much less defined.

Has my allotted time expired, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

PURCHASE OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES BY PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on December 3 of this year, in a question to the Minister of Transport, I raised the matter of the sale of CP Air to Pacific Western Airlines of Calgary. I asked the question because we Liberals, like so many Canadians, are very concerned about the increasing concentration of power in the air transport industry. If this sale is approved by the Canadian Transport Commission, it will be the seventh major takeover in Canada in less than two years. This sale, if it is approved, will put Canada in a situation where two carriers control 90 per cent of the air traffic in this country.

In the circumstances, we might have expected an entirely different answer from the Minister, because we can hardly take lightly a matter that is causing considerable concern to workers in the transport industry as well as to users of the services offered by our Canadian airlines.

The Minister said, and I quote, at page 1736 of Hansard:

—I think that Canada will be better served by having two healthy competitors than by having the giant Air Canada and a group of financially weak or regionally small airlines. We will have both. We will have two large competitive national airlines and a plethora of smaller regional and local airlines.

• (1805)

Unfortunately for the Minister and perhaps more importantly for Canadians, the Minister's analysis does not stand the test of scrutiny. Indeed, how can the Minister suggest that following the sale we would have the best of both worlds, in effect, two large carriers competing with small regional airlines when in fact over the last two years seven major takeovers have concentrated 90 per cent of traffic in the hands of two carriers? Surely the Minister cannot be suggesting that what we are experiencing today in Canada is competition in any meaningful sense of the word. Surely the Minister is well aware that, in fact, what we are experiencing is concentration of ownership in fewer and fewer hands, a situation that is becoming very serious, having to deal with the disappearance of more and more regional carriers with the resulting loss in employment and service all across Canada.

I spoke earlier about the concern of airline industry workers over the effect this purchase and sale might have on their jobs. They had expected, quite legitimately, that the Minister would offer assurances that this sale, if approved, would not result in any loss of employment. In fact, news of the purchase was immediately condemned by leaders of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks who are afraid job losses will occur. I regret that the Minister ignored their fear and has not addressed it in the House. Neither has he addressed the eventual loss of service for the region.

[Translation]

It is a foregone conclusion that Canadian Pacific and Pacific Western, which cover about the same territory in Western Canada, will no longer compete for those routes in the future. It is also clear that the new company will see to it that routes are rationalized, so that the travelling public in Western Canada, which up to now has had a choice of airlines, will no longer have that option in the future, the result being higher prices and all the other consequences of such an arrangement.

What I find surprising at this point is that despite the assurances we were given a few months ago by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs when the new competition legislation was adopted in the House, no information or prior notice was given the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding this takeover. This means that we on this side of the House were misled by the Canadian Government when it told us it was putting in place new competition legislation that would prevent takeovers if the impact would be to substantially reduce competition. Indeed the new competition legislation has yet to be enforced, and a takeover which may have dire consequences on Canadian air transport can become reality without monitoring on the part of both the Minister of Transport, who seems to be rejoicing at this takeover, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who did not have the nerve to ensure that his legislation was in force and who failed to take appropriate steps to compel Pacific Western to give the Director of Investigation and Research on combines due notice of this takeover before it was finalized.

I am asking the Minister to take another look at this file and make sure that Canada will still have two major air carriers as we had before, as well as six or seven large regional carriers and lots of small local carriers.

Such was the situation before the Conservatives came to power, but it is deteriorating at the very moment when the Government is talking about deregulation legislation which is supposed to increase competitiveness and rejuvenate the air transport market. I think the Conservative Government is treating the population as fools. I realize that we are getting close to Christmas, but the fool in all this is the Minister of Transport, not the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and his Party who treated Canadians as fools. He sits in his place and says certain things are being done and ignores other facts. The fact is that there is ample opportunity for recourse.

The Member rose to his feet on December 3 and asked the Minister to intervene, rescind and disallow. The fact is there are laws and regulations in this country. I do not know why the former Minister, as knowledgeable as he sometimes seems to be, would not know that. Section 27 of the National Transportation Act stipulates that any air carrier which proposes to acquire another transportation system must give notice to the CTC, which in turn must give notice to the public. The Member is a former Minister and he knows that. The CTC may receive objections, investigate and may hold public hearings if it considers such hearings to be necessary or desirable and in the public interest.

The CTC may intervene of its own accord. It does not need an objection, as the Hon. Member knows. In either case, the CTC is empowered to disallow, of its own authority and by its own experience, that of which the Hon. Member expresses concern and says we have no capacity with respect to.

The CTC's decision on this matter may be appealed to the Cabinet under Section 64 of the NTA. In addition, the very powerful provisions covering mergers in the new Competition Act apply to transactions such as PWA's purchase of CPAL. The Member for Papineau knows that. I wonder what is after with his smoke and mirrors act.

The CTC has a considerable degree of independence from the Government and it would be both premature and inappropriate for any Minister, let alone this Minister, to directly or indirectly intervene in this decision-making process.

The matter will go through the process. If there are objections, they will be lodged with the appropriate authority. If the CTC deems it necessary, as I expect it will, it will call public hearings and that will be the end of the matter. Due process will prevail. The Member's instructions to the Government to intervene are inappropriate and simply not acceptable, as he knows.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—SIZE OF BUDGET AND STAFF. (B) BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the middle of October when the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) made his somewhat infamous statement that there are no cuts at the National Research Council, it really stretched the credulity of Canadians across the country. It was a bit like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying he had nothing to do with putting a prison in his riding. We had to find the truth from another source.

At the press conference given by the President of the National Research Council, Dr. Larkin Kerwin, he said it would be much more difficult to avoid lay-offs with this round of cuts than with the previous round. You will recall that after the Government took office in 1984, 400 positions were eliminated at the National Research Council. Through various techniques such as a hiring freeze, early retirement and reassignment of personnel within the NRC, the Council was able to avoid all but a few lay-offs. However, Dr. Kerwin admitted that the fat had been cut and that it would be much harder to avoid lay-offs with the 200 positions which must be cut by next April 1 on the orders of the Government.

The truth is that it is ridiculous to suggest that you can recycle highly specialized scientists. Several weeks ago there was a front-page article in The Financial Post which quoted, among others, a researcher at the National Research Council who said that suggesting that one can recycle a scientist who has dedicated his life to work in a particular field was like telling a heart surgeon that from now on he can only operate on kidneys.

The truth was told by Dr. Basinski, a recipient of the Order of Canada, who has been told that he can remain with only one technician. He is losing the rest of his staff and support personnel. He indicated that under those circumstances it would probably be a waste of his time and of taxpayers' money for him to continue. The truth is that morale has never been so low as it is at the National Research Council under the policies of the Government.

I recall speaking to a scientist recently who told me that even if the cuts were reversed today, he is not sure he would want to remain at the NRC, which he regards as more of a liability than an asset to him at this time in his career.

How did we get into this sorry state of affairs? Denny Doyle, a member of the outside Council, perhaps provided a small explanation when he told our committee several weeks ago that at his behest, the NRC prepared a five-year plan after the cuts in 1984. He felt that the best way to let the Government know about the NRC's plans was to put it down on paper and give the Government an opportunity to react. If there was any disagreement with what the NRC was doing, presumably the Government, through the Minister, would say so.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology is proud to say that as one of his first actions he endorsed the five-year plan. He has repeated this endlessly, yet in one breath he endorses the plan, then asks the NRC to cut another $20 million from its budget. Is it surprising that Mr. Doyle said to our committee that he is really not sure what the shareholder, meaning the Government, wants from the NRC.

I want to be very clear. I am not saying that there should be no changes at the National Research Council, but changes should be justified and should be implemented in an orderly fashion, in a process that is rigorous and respected. This has not happened at the NRC.

I can give several further examples. For instance, I can point to the recommendations of the Wright Report that were published in July, 1984. To date, there has been no formal response by the Government to this examination of government policies and programs for technology development.

In August, 1985, the former Minister of Science and Technology asked for the views of the Science Council of Canada on how the Government might implement the recommendations of the task force. In September, 1985, the Science Council recommended that a review of government labs be undertaken by an agency at arm's length to the Government. Such a review should be thorough, fair, comprehensive and forward looking. To be successful, the review would need the support and interest of government scientists and engineers and the clients of the labs, and therefore should include interviews with them.

Fifteen months have gone by since the Science Council of Canada made these recommendations and no apparent response has yet been given by the Government.

I am suggesting that the National Research Council is operating in a policy vacuum. It does not know what is expected of it because it has not been told by its political masters. Canadians deserve a detailed statement of government policy with respect to the National Research Council and government labs. Until such time, the cuts that were announced by the Government in October should be rescinded.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the National Research Council is the single largest research body in Canada. The Government has new priorities for science and technology and it is only natural that there be a re-evaluation of individual government programs, including those within the NRC.

When programs which may have been justifiable within the context of past objectives are re-examined in terms of new priorities, some are found to be inappropriate. They are discontinued. These decisions cannot be considered cuts if, at the same time, other programs are expanded and initiated. This is what is happening in NRC.

Between 1984-85 and 1987-88 the budget of NRC will fall by about $50 million. However, all but $10 million of this reduction is accounted for by less construction. Research contributions, salaries and operating costs have not fallen significantly so that in total, the effective program at NRC is not reduced. Of course, some programs have been discontinued. At the same time, there are offsetting increases in biotechnology and other areas which will approximately equal these recent reductions.

Driving this reallocation of priorities within NRC is the Government's view of Canadian science and technology. This view is still being hammered out in discussions with provincial, university and industry representatives and significant announcements will soon be made. The Speech from the Throne outlined a renewed commitment by the federal Government to science and technology in Canada and announced several initiatives such as a national advisory board on industrial technology to be chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the introduction of a federal science and technology strategy and the establishment of a Canadian space agency. Some of the Government's intentions are clear and have influenced decisions made at NRC and elsewhere. The reallocation of work at NRC and other Government laboratories is taking place in the context of an expanded role for university and industry researchers. The expansion in external research will be the foundation for a sustained increase in total research and development in the future.

• (1825)

As the Minister has often stated, Canada must move into the 21st century in so far as research, science and technology is concerned.

PRIVILEGE

INVESTIGATIVE INDEPENDENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEES—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On November 26 the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) rose on a question of privilege relating to the investigative independence of standing committees. The Hon. Member couched his remarks in the context of the global implications for all committees. He referred to an incident between the Auditor General and the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Had the Hon. Member attempted to complain of the particular incident, I am afraid that the Chair would have had to quickly rule him out of order. It is a long standing principle that the Speaker does not intervene in matters which ought to be dealt with by the standing committees.

[Translation]

However, I allowed the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) to proceed because the Chair takes seriously any questions with a reference to the new Standing Orders adopted on February 14, 1986.

I think we must consider the problems arising from the application of the new Standing Orders if we are to make this experiment a success, and the Chair has an ongoing commitment to participating in the process as much as possible.

[English]

The specific issues raised by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North are obviously well within the reach of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. I might add that the complaint referred to by the Hon. Member seems to be related to the new dynamics that are evolving in the relationship between the new standing committees and those departments and agencies that fall within their expanded mandates.

Time and experience will contribute to the education of the Canadian public, and of witnesses as to the new powers of the committees.

[Translation]

The matter is indeed a serious one, and I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing it to the attention of the House, but for the time being, the Chair can find nothing that infringes on the privileges of Members or the prerogatives of the House.

[English]

In closing, may I say to the House that parliamentary reform is still an exploratory exercise, and some day it may well be up to the House to guarantee the authority of the Standing Committees, but it is firstly up to the standing committees to define their mandates, establish their independence, and publicize their expectations. When and if a standing committee reports back to the House that its work is being impeded, the Chair will not hesitate to intervene.

I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention.

PRIVILEGE

COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the question of privilege raised on November 18 by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), regarding the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Human Rights. The Hon. Member criticized the Committee's decision to reduce the number of witnesses proposed by its sub-committee. Instead of calling the sixteen witnesses proposed by the sub-committee, the Standing Committee decided that each Member could ask only one person appointed to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal to appear before the Committee.

[English]

I have carefully considered the complaint raised by the Hon. Member, and the submissions which were made by Hon. Members on both sides of the argument. The discussion which took place clearly underlined the fact that a matter had been raised which was of great concern to the House. A number of procedures under which we are currently operating were only recently introduced on a provisional basis. Those relating to the powers of committees are of particular significance, and it is quite normal that Hon. Members would wish to air their concerns and clarify issues which could have far-reaching implications.

The Hon. Deputy Prime Minsiter (Mr. Mazankowski) in his contribution to the discussion reminded the House of the practice whereby the House cannot officially take notice of any committee proceedings except by way of a report from the committee concerned. He also referred to a relevant citation from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Citation 117(7) states as follows:

> The opinion of the Speaker cannot be sought in the House about any matter arising or likely to arise in a committee.

Further confirmation is to be found in Citation 569(3) which states:

> The Speaker has ruled on many occasions that it is not competent for him to exercise procedural control over the committees. Committees are and must remain masters of their own procedure.

Citation 608 goes on to state:

> Procedural difficulties which arise in committees ought to be settled in the committee and not in the House.

[Translation]

The foregoing clearly indicates that the Chair cannot rule on a problem that arises in committee, unless it was reported by the committee to the House. It is also clear that a committee meeting that gives rise to a dispute does not constitute a valid question of privilege.

[English]

Having said that, I would immediately add that a question of such importance as that raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is not one to be lightly dismissed. Her complaint arises from our political process and the political system under which we operate. Briefly stated, the power of decision is given to the majority. For protection the minority looks to the rules of procedure. The House is the master of its own procedure and can change it, including the procedure relating to the conduct of committees. I quote again from Beauchesne at Citation 569(2):

> Committees receive their authority from the House itself and that authority of the House overrides that of any committee.

• (1110)

Thus, if Hon. Members are not satisfied with the present operation of Standing Order 104, or any other rules relating to committees, they should seek their remedies by way of procedural reform. I might add that that applies to Hon. Members on both sides of the House.

[Translation]

I therefore must rule that the question raised by the Hon. Member is not a question of privilege, but I do think the matter she raised deserves to be brought to the attention of the House.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present today from my constituents. All of them have been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions as conforming to Standing Order 106.

The first petition indicates that those who have signed it believe that the patent drug legislation will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on a continuing basis.

The second one indicaes that the proposed Patent Act changes are another example of Canadian government concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, in the free trade negotiations.

Finally, in the third one the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present, on behalf of my constituents in the communities of Candle Lake and Weldon, Saskatchewan, a petition which suggests that the proposal of the federal Government to change the Patent Act will increase the prices of drugs.

The undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, which has been duly certified pursuant to Standing Order 106, on behalf of residents of Winnipeg. They say that the proposed changes to the Patent Act will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis.

Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition today on behalf of a number of Canadians who ask the Government to reconsider its plan to change the Patent Act whereby prescription drug prices will increase significantly and therefore particularly hit those people who are sick, elderly, and disabled; in other words, people who should not be punished by the Government as a result of such punitive legislation. They ask the Government to reconsider its intent to introduce these proposals in Parliament.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will speak briefly, but first I would like to take this opportunity to thank Hon. Members of this Chamber for their assistance and consideration during the discussion and examination of Bill C-14.

This piece of legislation contains the necessary legislative authority to implement the sales and excise tax changes announced in the February, 1986 budget and the enrichments to the fuel tax rebate program for farmers announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in April, 1986. It provides authority for changes in the rates of federal sales taxes and excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco products which are intended to raise revenue in order to reduce the deficit.

The deficit affects us all and it threatens us all. Deficit reduction measures must be shared as broadly as possible. The Bill before you, Mr. Speaker, seeks to achieve this objective by spreading the tax increases broadly and fairly. To ensure that all Canadians will contribute in an equitable manner, a new refundable sales tax credit of $50 per adult and $25 per child will be available for lower income Canadians to help offset the 1 percentage point increase in the sales tax rates implemented by this Bill.

During consideration of this Bill by the Legislative Committee, concerns were raised about the adequacy of this new tax credit. This is an important issue and I respect Members raising it. I would like to take an opportunity to address it very briefly. First, let us not forget that this refundable sales tax credit represents a unique and important initiative and clearly demonstrates the Government's concern for low income Canadians. It is the first time in our history that the federal Government has provided an income tested refundable tax credit for low income Canadian families whether or not they have children.

In designing the credit, foremost in the Government's concern was to protect those who could least afford to absorb the increase in the federal sales tax. Given the Government's limited resources, and we all know they are limited, it was impossible to design a credit that would offset the increased tax burden exactly by family size and income level. I believe that the $15,000 income threshold beyond which benefits are gradually reduced achieves an ideal balance in terms of maximizing the size of the credit and the number of beneficiaries, within an acceptable fiscal framework, while ensuring that Canadians in the lowest income brackets are fully protected against the increase in the federal sales tax. Indeed, this credit overcompensates individuals earning less than $15,000 annually.

The measures in this Bill to enrich the fuel tax rebate program are of particular benefit to farmers. First, a one year extension of the over-all fuel tax rebate program will provide additional benefits amounting to $120 million in 1987 for all primary producers, including farmers. In addition, farmers will be entitled to an additional 2.5 cents a litre rebate to relieve them fully of the sales and excise taxes on gasoline and diesel fuel. This will be further increased to 3.5 cents on January 1, 1987 to conincide with a 1 cent increase in the excise tax currently scheduled for that date. These enrichments for farmers will provide additional assistance totalling $165 million. Over 200,000 Canadian farmers will benefit under this program. These measures clearly reflect the Government's concern for the economic situation confronting farmers.

In the coming year the net impact of these changes will be to reduce the deficit by approximately $1 billion. It should be noted, however, that for every $1 that taxes have been increased to reduce the deficit, expenditures have been cut by $3. Let me emphasize that, Mr. Speaker; for every $1 that taxes have been increased to reduce the deficit, federal Government expenditures have been cut by $3. Our policies to wrestle the deficit and manage the Government better are part of a comprehensive set of actions to deal with a wide range of economic and fiscal needs.

In conclusion, together, the tax changes and expenditure cuts are an important and fair way of restoring fiscal order to this country. All Canadians will benefit from the successful achievement of these goals.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. While we have been debating this Bill for some days now in the House of Commons, Members of this House still have some grave reservations about the effect of Bill C-14. We have raised those concerns in the House in the past and this morning I will try to summarize some of the issues that my colleagues and I have brought to your attention during the last few weeks, Mr. Speaker. This is not a very voluminous piece of legislation. It has only 15 pages or so, but the consequences of the Bill are very serious to the people upon whom we are called to represent in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if and when this Bill is passed, there will be an increase in the federal sales tax on manufactured goods; increases in the price of wine, tobacco, beer, and spirits; and increases in the Air Transportation Tax and the Telecommunication Programming Services Tax. There is also the fuel tax question and other increases that will have a disastrous effect on the tourist industry, as, I am sure my hon. friend from Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) will agree. Finally, there are the sales and excise taxes on motor fuel that will be refundable to diplomats, the collection of income tax in Canada, the fuel tax rebate for farmers, and the impact of measures related to sales tax and excise tax on the federal Government's revenues, all of which deserve consideration this morning.

[English]

We must remember that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) has just told us that the Bill is designed to spread the burden fairly among Canadians, or words to that effect, if I can paraphrase what the Minister said. If one looks closely at the effect of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, you will notice that it does not do that at all, and I ask the Minister to address it in the future.

He said that his Bill is fair. I ask him about a one earner couple with two children whose income is $15,000 a year. This couple will have a tax increase of 1.7 per cent or will pay an extra $255 in tax increases as a result of the February, 1986 Budget, the November, 1984 Economic Statement and the May, 1985 Budget. The combination of the three Conservative budgetary documents will create that situation. I ask the Minister what is fair about imposing that kind of an extra burden on a family of four earning $15,000 a year? That family does not have one extra cent to give to the Government, much less $255 more in taxes.

• (1130)

I draw to your attention the fact that a one income couple with two children, with a total family income of $50,000 a year, will be asked to pay 1.2 per cent more in taxes. It is a 1.7 per cent increase for the first family and 1.2 per cent for the second family. That hardly sounds fair. Yet the Minister tells us this is fair legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, take for instance an elderly couple with an annual income of $27,000, which has to spend 1.9 per cent more because of the measures contained in three Budgets: the economic statement of November 1984, the 1985 Budget and the 1986 Budget, which all add up to an increase of 1.9 per cent in expenses for an elderly couple with an annual income of $27,000.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think that is what we call justice.

[English]

I hear a Conservative Member saying "Not bad when they get an increase at the same time". He may think it is fair that low-income people are asked to pay a greater percentage in taxes than those who earn a great deal more. I do not think it is fair at all.

If the Government was asking Canadians equally to sacrifice, and it was at least fair for all, it would not be all that hard to swallow. If the Government followed its own prescription it would be even easier. Yet the Government is telling ordinary Canadians that times are tough and they are going to have to cut down on expenditures and expectations. They are going to have to cut down on what they receive, and give the Government more in taxes. If the Government said that and practised what it preached it would not be quite as bad.

Mr. Foster: But it does not.

Mr. Boudria: As the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) just said so eloquently, it does not.

I want to bring to your attention an article by Southam News yesterday. It talks about the spending of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He will never be accused of not having style and we have the bills to prove it. He may not have class but he has style. He may not have substance but style he has a lot of. He has so much style that his expenditures are 800 per cent more than his predecessor.

Mr. Foster: Eight hundred per cent?

Mr. Boudria: Yes, 800 per cent, as unbelievable as that may seem. If you think that was spread over one or two or three decades or something like that, wrong again. It happened immediately after his Government took over. Right away the Government plunged nose first into the trough and started to partake of the—

Mr. Gormley: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the House has rules of relevance and if they apply in this particular debate?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised a point which I think has concerned Speakers for many years. While a certain amount of latitude is allowed, I am sure the Hon. Member speaking will bring his remarks back to the Bill before us. Perhaps he can accommodate other Members in that regard.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to accommodate your wishes and be as relevant as possible. I am sure you recognize that I am discussing budgetary expenditures and we are talking about a budget Bill.

Mr. Gormley: Excise tax.

Mr. Boudria: I say to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) that the same money the people of Canada are being forced to give to the Government through this Bill will be squandered by the Prime Minister and the rest of his cronies. It is my duty to bring it to the attention of the House even if the Hon. Member is extremely embarrassed by it. He obviously is because he stood up to try and find a way to cut off the debate when we are trying to hold the Prime Minister and the rest of those folks across the way accountable to the House of Commons.

We are talking about what the Government is asking the people of Canada to do. It is asking them to fork over more of their hard-earned dollars to the Government. In order to put that in context, it is important that I quote from a not so famous book entitled Where I Stand. It was written by the current Prime Minister whose name I shall not use in order to accommodate the wish of the House that we not use personal names, which suits me fine in this case anyway.

On page 44 of the book the author talks about Government waste and maladministration. He did not find that acceptable.

Remember, that was only one-eighth of the waste we have now. He said:

> How can a Government call on a nation to restrain itself and to be more realistic in its collective demands upon our economy when its own record is an unbroken string of fiscal excess? Canadians may be many things but stupid we are not. We simply will not buy leadership that so blatantly has one code of conduct for itself and quite a different one for the rest of us.

Do you know who said that? I just told you a minute ago. It is the author of the book Where I Stand who said that to the people of Canada. Although I do not recommend buying the book, I am sure people can go to a library and view it for a moment. It would probably be cheaper. They could then see where the Prime Minister stood at the time he was Leader of the Opposition, at the time he wrote this book, at the time he so sanctimoniously told the people of Canada that the preceding Government was not as accountable as it could be to the people of Canada. Probably no Government is as accountable as it should be. We are not suggesting that any previous Government ever was. The author of the book Where I Stand talks about the fiscal excess of the previous Government. That excess has been increased eight times in two years. When something which is unacceptable is multiplied eight times, it is eight times more unacceptable.

It is important that we hold the Government accountable for its fiscal excess. We must hold the Government accountable when it asks the House for money, as it is through this Bill. It is asking for more money with which to administer the Government. Collectively we must learn what the Government is going to do with this money and only then decide whether the Government should have it.

A Member across the way indicated a while ago that my remarks were not entirely relevant to the debate. I believe that when the Government asks for more money it is relevant to point out how it administered the money we previously gave it. If our children ask us for an excessive amount of money, it is normal to ask how they spent the money we already gave them. That is what I am doing today. I am asking the Government what it did with the money we gave it before. Members of Parliament give the Government its money. We give the Government the money of our constituents. No Government has any money of its own. Governments administer the money of the people. Therefore it is important to hold the Government accountable for what I consider to be fiscal excess.

I will quote again from the article to which I referred previously. It continues:

> Mulroney was put up in a $3,400-a-night suite in the Plaza-Athenée Hotel in Paris this February. Trudeau paid $1,250 for his room in the Ritz when he last visited Paris on a peace mission in 1983.

In one and a half years the cost of accommodating a Prime Minister in Paris tripled. The article continues:

> Mulroney's entourage of 24 spent more than $11,000 for limousines to get around New York—

There are so many limousines in New York that one trips all over them. You can hire them as cabs anywhere on the street. Why was it necessary to charter enough limousines for 24 people at a cost of $11,000 for a couple of days? Some may think that compared with the past that is all right. However, the article continues:

> Trudeau's party of 11 ran up just over $2,000 in limousine bills—in January, 1984.

Mr. Holtmann: Trudeau used to ski all over the place. We were sending him skiing. Do you remember that?

Mr. Boudria: In a year and a half the cost rose from $2,000 to $11,000. If Conservative Members had not been so sanctimonious in their criticisms of the previous Government, perhaps they would have a small point.

Mr. Holtmann: We have lots of them.

Mr. Boudria: They make noise across the way.

Mr. Holtmann: Yeah, we do.

Mr. Boudria: It is not very credible noise, but noise nevertheless. However, that will not stop me from holding the Government accountable. It will not stop me from doing my job and duty, which is to hold the Government accountable even if Members dislike it.

The Prime Minister can almost make the Member for Rosemount (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) look like a bargain when she travels. The Prime Minister is probably the only person who could make her look like a good deal. Nevertheless, he does.

I will give you some other examples of excesses. The article continues:

> Mulroney was accompanied by a valet in New York and Asia, at a cost of more than $4,300 for hotels, meals and incidentals. The official records do not show a valet for Trudeau, even on the 17-day Asia tour.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are telling the people of Canada that it is too bad but they will have to give the Government more funds for its administration. They tell people receiving unemployment insurance benefits that they cannot draw UIC while receiving a pension. The Government calls that double-dipping and says it is unfair because money is scarce. Why is money not scarce when it is time for the Prime Minister to partake of the public coffers for his own benefit?

Canadians do not expect the Government to travel to other countries and to receive foreign guests in an inappropriate manner. They do not want the Government to bring President Reagan to McDonalds for lunch or to have him improperly escorted. However, the Shamrock Summit—with the emphasis on the word "sham"—in Quebec City cost $2.6 million. It cost $1 million for security and $185,000 to rent le Grand Théâtre so that we could hear the Prime Minister and the President sing to us. I do not think that was worth $185,000, not to mention the $.5 million it cost for the CBC to ensure that we could hear and see it. After having heard some of the sour notes, I think it would have been a bad deal had it been free. Nevertheless, we are footing the Bill for it.

Canadians are asked to pay for such fiscal excess. The tax increases which the Government wishes to levy are unfair. There is no good reason for levying these taxes because the Government has an unbroken string of fiscal excess.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are sick and tired of all this. It is hardly a coincidence that public opinion polls clearly show the Prime Minister's popularity and that of his Government has sagged considerably. Look at the Port-Cartier affair: $41 million completely wasted, Mr. Speaker. And why, I ask Hon. Members opposite: Why do they waste money like this?

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) sitting opposite is responsible for awarding certain contracts, but in the case of Port-Cartier, it was her predecessor. Yesterday we realized he did not do a very good job, because in the process, it seems to have been a conflict of interest, so that the contractor had to be released.

And the wasteful spending goes on: $41 million spent for no good reason. A penitentiary is being built in a part of the country where it isn't needed, at any rate not for prisoners. It may be needed as a stimulus for regional development, but there is certainly no justification for building a prison. Perhaps for building another Government building, but certainly not for building a prison, because we don't need one. Furthermore, we have to consider the cost of bringing prisoners to this institution when it is completed. How much will that cost? Imagine, the cost of putting the guards on the plane and taking these people down there, with their legal advisers, to Port-Cartier.

And finally the other point which people have a tendency to forget, Mr. Speaker, is that the inmate may be in jail, but his wife and children are not. Most prisoners will come from the Montreal area, so the families of prisoners will have no choice but to board a bus, pay $210 for return fares to Port-Cartier, and sit for 34 hours on that bus just to go and visit a family member.

I do not know whether I understood correctly, I do not know whether the Minister did say they live in Baie-Comeau, but I hope this is not what she said about prisoners' families, because they are quite free to live where they want. The fact is that most of them do not live there, quite a number come from the Montreal area.

So this will be just another burden which the prisoner's family will have to bear, again simply because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chose to feather his own nest at taxpayers' expense. He thought he would do well to unveil his very own monument in his riding. Why? Because he might lose his own seat.

If that is not the explanation, Mr. Speaker, there has to be a more logical one but we have yet to find out what it is. So I am forced to conclude that such is the explanation.

The Prime Minister took a look around and said to himself: I am going to lose my seat, I have to do something about it. It may be ill-advised but, never mind, something has to be done. So we will simply raid the public treasury, there is lots of money there and somebody else will pay for this. Like the people I was talking about a moment ago, those who can least afford to pay still more taxes just so the Prime Minister can put up this $68 million monument in his riding—$41 million more than the original estimate.

It does not matter that part of the prison has already been built in Drummondville. It does not matter that the main facilities are there and only an additional wing would be needed. It does not matter that the land is already available in Drummondville. No matter that the prison was to be located in Drummondville. He wanted it in Port-Cartier, so he is going to have it built in Port-Cartier. So what if it doesn't make sense, in fact it makes no sense at all, and creates more problems than it solves, as I said earlier. It means additional costs for the Government and for the taxpayer. It creates all kinds of problems for the inmates' families, and the location is not suitable for rehabilitation, but so what?

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister decided to go ahead just the same. This is another example of the fiscal excesses of this Government I was referring to earlier. But Canadians will remember, and they are not about to forget. This Government was elected with the biggest majority ever given a political party in the House of Commons. The Prime Minister obtained the confidence of Canadians. He made long speeches during the election campaign. He talked to Canadians about patronage. He talked to Canadians about all kinds of things, and he said he was going to clean up the mess. And what did he do?

Mr. Speaker, as I see it, this Government has betrayed the Canadian people.

• (1150)

[English]

The Government has betrayed the Canadian people. It was given the largest majority on record. The public opinion polls clearly show that the Government has lost the trust it had been given. I am not being partisan about this issue, the people of Canada have spoken about this and are clearly demonstrating today that they do not trust the Government. They do not even trust the Prime Minister. The Government has lost the confidence of the Canadian people.

An Hon. Member: That is your opinion.

Mr. Boudria: A conservative Member to my side says that it is my opinion. That may be so. In any event, it is nice to hear from the Conservative book-ends occasionally, those Members who sit on this side of the House. They are the surfers, who come in with the tide and go out with the ebb-tide. It is nice to hear an occasional bit of noise from some of these Members who otherwise are silent. Those Members give new meaning to the expression "silent majority". The silent majority is here in the House of Commons. Very little is said—

An Hon. Member: Especially right now.

Mr. Boudria: —by them to hold the Government accountable. One Member says: "Especially right now". I do not apologize for holding the Government accountable, especially to a Member who just walked out of the House and will not likely participate in this debate. It is not the duty of one Member of Parliament—

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that there should be no reference to a Member's presence or absence during the debate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I did not name the Member in question. Of course, I could if you insisted. However, I shall refrain from doing so because of my respect for the Chair and the rules of the House.

It is not just the role of the Opposition to hold the Government accountable, it is the role of the House. In view of the way in which government Members debate, it is not only our role, it is our solemn duty to hold the Government accountable. It is clear that the Government cannot hold itself accountable, as has been proven in the past and continues to be proven day after day in the House.

I suggest that the Government had better become responsible soon because the people of Canada have had enough of the way it is running the country. They have had enough of the examples it has set for others but refuses to follow itself. Frankly, if the Government refuses to take that advice seriously it will pay for it in the next election.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few remarks to this debate on Bill C-14. It has been debated on other occasions, both in committee and in the House, but I think it is worth some further comment before the House moves on to other business.

I am sure most Members are aware that Bill C-14 increases the sales and excise taxes that the Government charges on numerous manufactured goods and other items such as alcohol and tobacco. It is one of a series of tax increases that the Conservative Government has imposed since it was elected in 1984.

Many Canadians may not be aware that the Conservative Government has increasingly relied on increases in sales and excise taxes as a means of gaining more revenue than previously had been the case. The total taxes that the average Canadian family pays the Government will have increased by some $1,230 since the 1984 election of the Conservative Government. Of that amount, the average Canadian family will pay $385 more in increased income tax which constitutes around 31 per cent of the increase in taxes. They will be paying $845 more in sales and excise tax and that constitutes some 69 per cent of their taxes.

The thing about sales taxes, of course, is that they are hidden. One does not see them when they are included in the sale price. When a person buys manufactured goods, the 12 per cent the federal Government charges, and in some cases it might be a little less, is hidden in that price so that the consumer never knows how much he is actually paying in taxes. The Government is nickel and diming the taxpayers.

The Conservative Government has increased the number of items which are applicable for sales tax. It has expanded the federal sales tax in previous Budgets to include things such as vitamins, some non-prescription drugs, candy bars, softdrinks and a whole host of items which were never taxed previously. This Government, as I mentioned before, is relying more and more on the sales tax as a way of increasing public revenue. It does that because the Canadian taxpayer is not aware he or she is paying these new taxes.

Let us look at the taxes the Government has imposed since being elected in 1984. It has increased taxes through sales and excise taxes by some $6.7 billion. Personal income taxes have increased by some $3.3 billion and corporate taxes have increased by $1.4 billion. Again, these figures illustrate the Government's dependence upon increases in sales and excise taxes as a major revenue grab from the taxpayers' pockets.

We object to the increases in sales and excise taxes for several reasons. First, it is not progressive. It does not mean that the tax load is carried by those who are in a better position to pay the tax. It means people who are the least capable of carrying the tax load are penalized. The regressive nature of the tax can be seen when one looks at the various income groups and understands what the increases in sales and excise taxes since 1984 mean to them.

It is true that a family earning $15,000 a year or less will receive a rebate of $150, which is $50 for every adult 18 years of age and over and $25 a year for every child. That means an average family of four will get back $150. Of course, the $150 does not cover the total increase in sales and excise taxes the family will have to pay. It will be worse off. The family earning $10,000 a year or less will in fact pay an increase in taxes of some 0.2 per cent. A family earning $15,000 a year will pay a net increase of 0.4 per cent in new taxes. Even the very, very poor who will receive a tax rebate of $150 will still see the amount of money it pays in taxes increase because of the Conservative Budget. However, the people who get hit the hardest are the working poor, for example, the family of four which earns some $20,000 a year. That income is still well below the poverty line for many families living in larger centres. The couple earning a net family income of $20,000 per year with two children will pay an extra $269 per year in extra taxes through the sales and excise taxes. That is a 1.3 per cent increase in taxes going out of the family income.

We can look as well at the well-to-do families and find that that family pays a smaller percentage of the family income in sales and excise taxes. For example, for a family with a total income of $100,000 a year, the net cost as a percentage of family income going to tax is only 0.9 per cent. Therefore, a family with $20,000 in income pays 1.3 per cent of the family income in this new tax whereas the family earning $100,000 a year only sees 0.9 per cent of its family income going to this new tax.

The sales tax is regressive. It is not fair. It taxes those who are the least capable of affording these taxes. It is not a tax based one's ability to pay. These taxes penalize people, not in accordance with their means to pay but regardless of their means to pay.

At this Christmas time of year one must wonder how some families can afford Christmas gifts, Christmas trees and the extra food their children expect and hope for. I do not believe the Government and those people in the Department of Finance have any idea of how millions of Canadians live. They do not realize the economic hardship which exists and the difficulties which are faced day in and day out as these people try to make ends meet. I do not believe the Government, and those people in Finance who devise these master schemes for raising more money, have any idea what it is like for a wage earner who has been laid off and is now existing on employment insurance. He has children to feed, clothe and house. They do not understand the careful planning and budgeting these people must do and the difficult decisions they must make day-in and day-out as to where to spend their money. There is an amazing amount of preoccupation in the budgeting of their meagre incomes. The Government and the Department of Finance have no notion what millions of Canadians experience day-in and day-out.

When we see the type of legislation such as C-14, legislation that increases the tax load on these people, we can only conclude that not only are these measures unfair but that they are indecent. They are uncaring and bereft of any understanding and compassion for those who have to struggle on a daily basis in order to survive. It is not just a few lazy bums who have difficulty budgeting. There are millions of Canadians who find themselves in such circumstances.

The number of people who will be eligible for the $150 tax rebate is 3.4 million. These are families of four with incomes of less than $15,000 per year. These 3.4 million families will receive some redress in the form of the $150 tax rebate. However, they, too, will be paying more in taxes than they were paying before because of the sales and excise tax measures.

One can think of the millions of people who are earning between $18,000 and $22,000 per year who are trying to raise children and who will not be eligible for any rebate at all. Instead, they will be paying hundreds of dollars more in taxes because of the sales and excise tax. They will experience tremendous difficulties, particularly in the Christmas season.

When one considers the totality of the budgetary items that the Government has introduced since its election one finds that the Government has hit the poor and the middle income earners more than it has hit anyone else. To its list of taxpayers it has added hundreds and thousands of people who were so poor before that they were not paying taxes. However, they will now be paying income tax because of the various measures introduced by the Government.

When we consider the statistics, and we will have more to say about this when Bill C-23 comes forward for debate, we will show that those with low and middle incomes are the ones who are taking the brunt of the Government's revenue grab. We will show that high income earners will be paying less than they have been paying in the past because of the various tax measures and loopholes that the Government has afforded the well-to-do. We will also show that the corporate sector, those who have been doing quite well, will continue with the tax holidays they received under the previous Liberal Government and under the present Conservative Government. The inequities and unfairness in our tax system would make an honest person blush. Unfortunately, we do not have a Government that knows how to blush.

One must question the economic wisdom of taxing consumption as opposed to income. Not only is it unfair because it hits the poor more than it hits the well-to-do, but it relies increasingly on tax on consumption rather than income. We know that economic recovery means that people have dollars in their pockets which they are able to spend on goods and services, which in turn creates jobs. If taxes on consumption are increased then spending is discouraged. If spending is discouraged, then surely the demand for goods and services is discouraged which, in turn, loses jobs. I am not certain that the Government and the people in the Department of Finance fully appreciate what they are doing when they increase the sales and excise taxes. Nor are they aware of the effect it will have on inflation, consumer spending and employment. I do not think the Government fully understands the economic implications of these tax measures.

The last point I wish to make concerns the over-all justification for increasing these taxes which Conservatives offer in the House. Earlier this morning we heard the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) justify, in essence, the increase in taxes on the basis of fighting the deficit. In essence, the Government is telling the Canadian people, we are sorry but we have to increase your taxes because we have to knock the deficit down. I for one do not disagree with reducing the deficit. I think the deficit has to be reduced. It is obscene that we have so much owing, that so much of our revenue that is collected every year has to go to pay off the interest on the deficit.

Where I disagree with the Government is in its understanding of the cause of the deficit and the measures taken to fight it. The reason for the deficit is that the Government and the previous Liberal Government allowed so many tax loopholes that the well-to-do and, in particular, the large and prosperous corporations have not had to pay their fair share in taxes. The tax loss has been tremendous—in fact, it is horrendous. Billions of dollars have been lost. Taxes which should have been collected have not been collected because of various loopholes.

I have used the following example in the House before. However, I will use it again because often when one repeats a point over and over again it eventually sinks in. I wish to illustrate the point that those who should have been paying have not been paying with the following example. A female teller with the Royal Bank of Canada will have paid more in actual dollars and cents in taxes in the year 1982 than the Royal Bank of Canada paid in 1982. In fact, the Royal Bank of Canada made over $300 million in profits and it did not pay one cent in tax. In fact, it received a tax credit of some $6 million. It is no wonder we have the deficit that we do. It is no wonder that the kid who pumps gas for Shell paid more dollars and cents in taxes in 1982 than did Shell Oil, even though Shell Oil made millions of dollars in profits in 1982. It is no wonder we have the deficit.

We in the New Democratic Party claim that if we are going to fight the deficit it must not be done on the backs of the working poor. It is criminal to charge an extra $200 or $300 to the person earning $20,000 who is trying to raise a family. Let the Royal Bank of Canada, Imperial Oil, and Shell Canada start paying their fair share. Perhaps then we can begin to reduce the deficit and bring some economic and fiscal responsibility and morality to this country.

• (1220)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to make a few comments and will not take the full 20 minutes. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the House on several occasions has promised fiscal changes and reforms to make a more progressive and a fairer taxation system for ordinary Canadians. If we were to comment on the actions of the Government in the last two years, it would be found that instead of fair tax system, there is a tax system which bears more heavily on the lower and middle income people than it did before.

During the first two years of the Conservative Government, instead of introducing the fairer tax system it implemented a tax system which is much less fair than the previous one. There were many problems in the tax system before this Government came to power, but it has not done anything to improve the system. For example, the changes that this Government has brought in since September of 1984 have increased taxes by $1,300 for the average Canadian family. It has increased taxes for the ordinary Canadian by adding heavily to excise and sales taxes, instead of using personal taxes. That is a regressive tax, and it is exactly the opposite to what the Government said it would do.

In the November, 1984 Economic Statement the increase in sales and excise taxes added another $350 per year for the average family. In the May, 1985 Budget the Government again imposed a 1 per cent sales tax which cost the ordinary Canadian an average of $325 per year. Finally, in February, 1986 another $170 was added, not necessarily in income tax, but in taxes paid by the ordinary Canadian. Adding all those taxes up totals an increase of $845 per year. All this has been done in two years.

During the same period income tax increases, which are supposedly more progressive and equitable for families whose financial circumstances can vary considerably, have totalled only $385 per year, compared to $845 added by excise and sales taxes. In the last two years 69 per cent of the tax increases were covered by excise and sales taxes, and only 31 per cent by income taxes. In other words, this Government is opting for unfair and regressive tax, and not for fair taxes which will even out the structure of the tax system.

The Government has been stating that it will close the loopholes and cut personal income taxes so that the middle or lower income people will receive a better break. Most of the low income people, and many of the middle income people, do not have any loopholes. So plugging those loopholes will not help them at all. The cuts that the Government has put in place have not been in the lower tax areas, they have been in the marginal and the upper tax areas. Instead of benefiting the poorer people, the taxes that have been put in place are benefiting only the rich.

It is important to keep reminding the Government that its direction is exactly opposite to what it promised when it was elected. It is exactly opposite to what it says every time the Minister of Finance stands in the House and proclaims that he is making changes in taxes. It is rather sad to realize that most of the taxes that have been put before the House are not up front for everybody to see. In a sense this Government is not being honest, because it is hiding the taxes. The Government is not being accountable for the taxes it is putting on.

This Bill levies a series of taxes which are almost under the table type of taxes. People do not recognize that they are paying them, and consequently the Government does not have to take the political heat for putting these taxes in place. When most people pay excise and sales taxes they are unaware that they are paying a tax. Consequently, they do not react to them in the same way that they would to income taxes, which are much more progressive.

So we have a Government that opts for regressive taxes for its own benefit, even while it stands in the House and suggests that what it intends to do is make a fairer and better tax system which will not tax the lower and lower middle income people, but will increase taxes on the corporations and the higher income people.

I suggest that even as this Bill goes through the Government is using the cowardly approach. It is not dealing with fair taxation, but it is allowing its political hopes for the future to be based on the type of taxation which people will not recognize, not know that they are paying. If you have a very low income, you pay an inordinate amount of that income in taxation through sales and excise taxes. You may not pay very much in income tax if you have a very low income, but if you have a high income you pay a very small part of that income in sales and excise taxes. That is why these types of taxes should be avoided, and we should be looking at a fair taxation system which has a more equitable effect on all Canadians.

• (1230)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am quite delighted to have an opportunity today to make some comments on Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. Some very important points must be put on record.

At the outset I indicate that because of the time of year we all make efforts to expedite and facilitate the business of the House. This is probably the last speech we will make on the particular Bill. I say that so people can make their plans for Bill C-23, the back-up Bill. Unfortunately it is another tax Bill on top of the Bill which we are debating at the moment. It will see more increases in taxation.

It is important for Canadians to know that since the Conservatives formed the Government of Canada, starting in September, 1984, they have introduced an incredible number of new taxes. The ordinary Canadian family is now taxed significantly greater than it was prior to the election of the Conservative Government. As a matter of fact, if we add tax increases experienced by the ordinary Canadian family, in addition to already being overburdened with taxation, the Conservative taxes amount to $1,350 per family. That is an increase on top of the other taxes the family already pays.

For the purpose of this example, we are assuming that the average Canadian family is a family of four, including two dependent children, with a combined income of $35,000. I realize that in many parts of Canada that is not a typical family income. However, when we look statistically across Canada and include the more prosperous areas and the regions of Canada, we come up with an average family income of about $35,000.

There has been a variety of new taxes such as increased taxes on construction materials for home building and such goods, increased taxes on manufactured items, increased gasoline taxes, increased sales taxes on a variety of items, increased taxes on commodities, and increased taxes on alcoholic beverages, cable and pay television services, tobacco products, and so on. It averages, as I said, $1,350 per Canadian family. I call them Conservative taxes because they are taxes imposed by the Conservative Government. It is important for Canadians to know those facts.

My recollection of the last federal election campaign was that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was then the Leader of the Conservative Party, indicated that they should get Government off the backs of Canadians; that was the theme on various Canadian streets. Many people assumed that to mean that taxes would be lessened, that the burden of taxes on their backs would be lessened. They thought that that meant a reduction in taxes paid at the gas pumps, in stores and shops, and in the factories of Canada. However, that was not the case. As a result of various economic statements and Budgets introduced by the Conservative Government, we have actually seen an increase in taxes.

As a matter of fact, the biggest surprise occurred just yesterday when the Minister responsible for regulations tabled a 637 page report in the House. It contained proposed new rules on everything from the quality of orange juice concentrate to Canadian content on country music radio stations. They talk about the need to get the Government off the backs of Canadian citizens, yet they bring in 637 pages of federal rules on everything. As a matter of fact, the report itself weighs 1.5 kilograms. It is a massive document which shows that we are regulated in every aspect of our lives.

If I refer to my speech notes on Bill C-14, it looks like there will be more and more taxes. Surely to goodness there is an end. Surely to goodness they cannot keep increasing taxes.

I should like to refer to the May, 1985 Budget of the Minister of Finance. In that one statement alone he increased the federal sales tax by 1 per cent. He increased the tax on gasoline by two cents per litre effective September 3, 1985 and by one cent per litre effective January 1, 1986. He also said that there would be a new tax of two cents per litre on diesel and aviation fuels. He broadened the federal sales tax to include candies, soft drinks, pet foods, certain kinds of health foods, certain kinds of energy conservation equipment, and the like. Then he went on to say that the excise tax on tobacco would be increased by 52 per cent and that the excise tax on alcohol would be increased by 2 per cent. That was just in the May, 1985 Budget.

I should now like to refer to the November, 1984 Economic Statement. Again the Government announced another 1 per cent federal sales tax increase and an increase in the petroleum compensation charge. Most recently, in the February, 1986 Budget, it announced another 1 per cent federal sales tax increase for April 1, 1986, an excise tax increase on tobacco of another 6 per cent, and an excise tax increase on alcohol of 4 per cent. It goes on and on. There are literally pages and pages of increased taxes. Surely there is a limit.

A few months ago the Minister of Finance stood in his place and said that the tax system had to be changed, that it had to be improved. Many Canadians thought that that meant reduced amounts of taxes or that the tax system would be made simpler, or whatever. However, that is not the case. The Minister of Finance now wants to introduce a new set of tax regulations called the business transfer tax where everything will be taxed in every business transfer. This means that if one goes to a lawyer to write up a will for the benefit of one's children, spouse, other members of the family or friends, if one picks up one's laundry or if one goes out bowling for the evening, one will be paying new federal taxes.

I think Canadians have been pushed to the absolute brink by expecting them to pay a new set of taxes enthusiastically. I suspect a tax revolt is in the offing. When the Minister of Finance tables the details of the business transfer tax, people will realize that they will pay hundreds of dollars in increased taxes on areas which were not taxed in the past. They will say, we have had it. Enough is enough. We are mad as hell. We will not take it any more. We will not continue to pay taxes.

We see this reaction against unfair Canadian tax laws every day—the underground economy. Many billions of dollars in transactions go untaxed every year because people have lost faith in the tax system. They have lost faith in the ability of the Government to introduce a fair tax. Transactions involving billions of dollars take place underground. They are never reported and thereby people avoid paying tax to various jurisdictions. The barter system takes place and cash is passed under the table. I suspect Members of Parliament would have to admit that they are aware of the underground economies in neighbourhoods and communities. It is in the forefront. People ask, why should I pay taxes to the Conservative Government in Ottawa which does not even tax thousands of profitable corporations?

According to my last recollection, if we add up the number of profitable corporations in Canada which do not even pay a single cent in federal income tax, it totals almost 80,000. That is almost inconceivable to an average person working in an office, a mine, a mill, or a small business. Such persons pay taxes on every paycheque. They can look at their paycheques and see what they are paying in personal income taxes. They see that they are paying thousands of dollars every year, yet they know about these 80,000 large corporations.

I should like to be specific and refer to some of them. They include the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank of Canada, General Motors, Nova Corporation, Hudson's Bay Company, and Shell Oil. I could list 80,000 of those corporations that make profits year after year after year. Sometimes they make in excess of hundreds of millions of dollars of profits. In 1983 the Royal Bank of Canada made in excess of $300 million in profits and did not pay a single cent in income tax. That was the same year the Bank of Montreal made just about $300 million in profits and it did not pay a single cent in income tax. The Hudson's Bay Company that year I think made just under $100 million in profits and did not pay one single cent in income tax.

Canadians say that is unfair and unjust. It is not right and consequently Canadians are getting more and more reluctant to pay what the Government says is "your fair share" knowing that all of these other large corporations have paid zip for many years. That says nothing about the many wealthy individuals who obtain incomes from a variety of investment sources and are able to manipulate the way they conduct their financial affairs in order to pay no income tax year after year after year.

The Government said it brought in a minimum tax and I should remember that. I do remember that, Mr. Speaker. I also remember receiving in the mail an example of a letter that went out from one of the largest accounting firms in Canada saying, here are six differrent routes you can use in your financial affairs to avoid paying even the minimum tax. Already the creative accountants, tax lawyers and tax accountants have found ways and means of getting around the so-called minimum tax.

It is a very sad situation when we find once again that the Government is coming to Parliament saying, we must pass this Bill to collect even more taxes from Canadians. What kind of a Bill is this, Mr. Speaker? It is a Bill that will result in increased federal sales and excise taxes. If you look at what has happened in Canada since the Conservatives took over Government, sales and excise taxes have increased $6.7 billion in terms of adding money to the federal coffers. That money has been taken out of the hands, the wallets, purses and pocket-books of Canadian citizens through sales and excise taxes.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are the kind of fellow who would probably ask, I wonder what else has been collected? How does that compare to personal and corporate taxes?" If you look at corporate income taxes, it does not even begin to come close to the $6.7 billion which has come from sales and excise taxes. Corporate taxes increased by only $1.4 billion. What about personal taxes? They went up $3.3 billion. We all know when you talk about sales tax that it is in a sense a hidden tax. People pay gasoline taxes at the gas pumps. When you look at sales and excise taxes and combine them with the increase in personal income tax the money collected totals nearly $10 billion more.

These are Conservative taxes that now add up to $10 billion more taken out of the small communities, towns and cities for use by the federal Government for some highly questionable things. I suppose someone has to pay the extra $41 million so we can build a prison in the Prime Minister's constituency. That is where this money goes. That is why people are outraged at being manipulated and used in such an exploitive way.

On the other hand, I suppose a lot of people will say that is all right and fine, surely we have to raise money to conduct the affairs of Canada. Indeed, we do. But should we collect it from sales and excise taxes or should we collect it through a progressive tax system of personal and corporate taxes?

As New Democrats we oppose Bill C-14 because we feel that sales taxes and excise taxes are the wrong way to raise revenues, for a variety of reasons. Let me mention two or three. First, these are hidden, sneaky, sleazy, underhanded under the table type of taxes. No one knows he or she is paying them. When you buy a product manufactured in Canada and you know there are significant increases in manufacturers' sales tax, those increases are not shown in the price of that product. People do not know to what extent the federal Government is gouging them in this under-the-table, sneaky fashion. They assume this is the price of the product of the developers, manufacturers, retailers or wholesalers. But this sneaky tax is also being added, and once again in Bill C-14 the federal Government is increasing it. We do not like it because it is not an honest tax in the sense that it is not up front for everyone to see. The federal Government uses this method because it can keep the tax under the table and out of the view of Canadian citizens. We say that is wrong. It is not democratic and it is not forthright. It is sneaky as far as the Government is concerned.

Second, we do not like this tax because it is very regressive. When the very wealthy Canadian buys his or her snow tires he or she might have to pay an extra sales tax now of let us say $5. They do not even notice the $5 as an increase in the cost of a set of snow tires. But when a person from a very poor family goes in to buy that set of snow tires, which you must have in Canada, that person pays the same $5 extra in sales tax but it hurts. The poor family notices the significant erosion of the money at his disposal when he has to pay an extra $5, $10 or $12 through sales taxes. When that person buys his gasoline at the pump it costs an extra $2 or $3 because of increased gasoline taxes. That really hurts the family on a limited income, for example, the veteran on a veteran's pension, the senior citizen on a fixed income, a working family with a very low annual income. But it does not hurt the upper income earner. It does not hurt the person who is obtaining his or her income from investments in the $150,000 to $200,000 salary range. Those people do not notice it. Not only is it a sneaky tax because you cannot see it, it is unfair in that it hurts the low-income earner much more than it hurts the upper-income earner. A millionaire certainly does not worry much about paying sales tax, but the poor family certainly does.

Third, we oppose this type of unfair hidden tax because it is a toll on the consumer and, therefore, it retards the possibility of economic development and expansion in economic areas and job creation. When you take $6, $7, $8 or $9 billion out of the small towns, cities and rural areas of Canada through the taxation system, those dollars are not in those communities to circulate. Those dollars are not being spent at the local barber shop, the local service station or at the local shop down the road. Those dollars are dragged to Ottawa to be spent on priorities that the Government of Canada might have in building new embassies, in some cases, or deciding where to build prisons and that type of thing. Those dollars are not circulating time and time again throughout the year in these small communities. What does that do to the small shop owner, the small business person running a store or a small factory? It means that growth does not take place at the same rate. The consumer has less disposable income.

The most recent quarterly economic review published by the Department of Finance shows that during April and May of this year the disposable income of Canadians fell by 2 per cent. The Conference Board says that our ability to buy is becoming less and less. The National Council on Welfare goes on at some length in its report indicating that it is the middle and low-income Canadians who have less and less disposable income, a situation which harms the economy. Our type of economy requires people to buy services and goods and when they stop or they do not do it at the same rate it slows the economy. That is why in many cases we have such a sluggish economic recovery, if there is an economic recovery occurring at all in some regions.

• (1250)

Given that it retards growth and is a hidden, regressive tax, we feel Bill C-14 should not go ahead. What should go ahead is a commitment by the Government to begin a thorough and complete tax reform. It should make our tax system fair, just and equitable. It should collect a reasonable amount of the tax burden from the corporate sector and get away from the imposition of sales or excise taxes which by definition are unfair, unjust and, quite frankly, un-Canadian.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-14 which has the effect of increasing the sales tax. My friend from Kamloops—Shuswap made a number of important and significant points—

Mr. Lewis: Name one.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): And I want to underscore those observations from my experience in the last election campaign. He observed that the reaction of the Canadian people to this tax increase from the Conservative Government was likely to be a tax revolt. The irony is that the tax revolt in the U.S. has worked to the advantage of conservatively-minded political parties. They have used it to reduce government services and social programs.

The curious thing about the federal Conservative Government is that on the one hand pressure has been put on various programs, as exemplified in the spring of 1985 by its attempt to deindex Old Age Security and the carrying through in the fall with deindexation of family allowances. On the other hand, there has not been a corresponding reduction in taxation. On the contrary, taxpayers receive less from the Government than they expected to receive.

It seems particularly appropriate in these few days before Christmas to think about what that means. This is one of the most important times for department stores and shopkeepers of all sizes. If they do not do very well in December, they are probably not going to survive for very long. The consequences of recent tax increases have been to reduce the amount of business that can be done. My friend has already pointed out that disposable income actually fell earlier this year. That is an indication of the impact these taxes are having.

We have a Government made up of a party which makes a big deal about the importance of small business. That party believes itself to be a defender of families and individuals. Members across the way said all these things, but once they were in power what did they do? They started carrying out these raids on the pocket-books of families and the poor. Instead of enhancing their lives, the Mulroney Government has been grinding them down through its use of the tax system.

Mr. MacDougall: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend has slipped by referring to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by his name.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Yes, it is the Conservative Government led by the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Mulroney). We all know his name. We will all remember it in the next election campaign. He made promises in 1984 which had people hoping there would be more and more jobs and things would get better.

Some Hon. Members: They are!

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): As I said, personal disposable income is falling. Whatever people in the Metropolitan Toronto area may be thinking, in vast regions of the country unemployment remains high. People are afraid of what the Government will do with the Forget Commission report. There is no belief across the provinces of Atlantic Canada, through much of la belle province—

An Hon. Member: Come and see us!

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): —across northern Ontario, the west and into British Columbia that things will improve in the next number of months. That has a great deal to do with a Government which is behaving in so many ways as if it is in the midst of a depression. There is no depression, of course, in the Prime Minister's personal entourage. There is all kinds of squandering going on which outrages the people who have to pay for it, the taxpayers. The expectations of Canadians are not that there is going to be a better life for them in the next few months.

Mr. Lewis: Where have you been travelling these days?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): A large part of that attitude is because of the tax policies the Government has followed. The Government feels what we have to do is tax consumption, and in ways I do not understand. It seems to believe people should be discouraged from spending money. We have to guard investment capital very carefully. We have to provide all kinds of tax incentives to the wealthy. We dangle a $500,000 capital gains tax holiday before the middle-class to try and get them on side. I am always struck at how Conservative Members get busy with their papers when we talk about these things. There is hardly one looking at me and I always find that interesting, too.

Mr. Lewis: I am bored to tears listening to you.

Mr. Mayer: You do not even have any of your own Members listening to you. Everyone is bored and I cannot blame them.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): What the Government is doing is creating one of the basic problems of our economy. How can we expect to have people working and producing if people cannot buy?

Mr. Lewis: We are now going to get a lecture on productivity from the NDP.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): How can we expect factories to be working and wholesale and retail trade carried on when consumers are being discouraged through taxation from spending what they would like to spend? How can we expect prosperity for producers generally when we do not have prosperity among consumers? I do not comprehend that kind of short-sightedness.

Mr. Mayer: You do not comprehend; you said it. That is the first thing you said that makes sense.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): It makes things easy for the wealthy. It makes things seem better in the short run for those in charge of large corporations. Sure, it is nice to have tax breaks which encourage them to invest. However, if you cannot run a factory at capacity now why bother making an investment to add to your facility? There is the heart of the difficulty. We would not have to worry about protecting investment if consumer demand was at a high level.

The NDP, by speaking in defense of the consumer, is also speaking in defense of business of all kinds and sizes. We speak in support of production in the factories and in support of international trade. By being opposed to tax increases which reduce consumer demand we are doing the opposite of what the Government is doing, which is to create a kind of depression situation. The Government is mouldering and insisting that the Canadian people live in that way.

I see it is one o'clock and I will take my seat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF DOMINION COAL COMPANY OF CANADA RETIREES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the Government of Canada to acknowledge its moral responsibility to the retired workers of the Dominion Coal Company of Canada. These individuals worked for the coal mining company which has since become the Cape Breton Development Corporation. These men provided many years of fine service to this company but have never received any sort of pension income after their retirement.

As a consequence of this, Mr. Speaker, a great many of my constituents are living well below the poverty line of $12,500 for a couple living in a small town. That figure comes from the National Council of Welfare. Some people may think that this could not happen in a country like Canada. However, if we take the time to look at the specific case of one miner, we see that a man who has worked in the mines for 35 years must support himself and his elderly wife on no more than $637.96 a month. This amounts to less than $7,700 a year and, tragically, is well below the poverty line.

A Government's compassion is measured by the way it supports and assists the poor and the weak. If the Government has an ounce of compassion, it will acknowledge immediately that it has a moral responsibility to provide assistance to the former employees of the Dominion Coal Company of Canada and allow them to live out the rest of their lives in quiet dignity. I urge the Government and the Cape Breton Development Corporation to move on this matter forthwith.

THE ECONOMY

PARTICIPATION OF YOUTH IN ECONOMIC PROGRESS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): As Member of Parliament for Québec East, I want to publicly commend the Quebec university students who distinguished themselves at the Institute of Chartered Accountants final examination and especially Guylaine Bellavance and Remo Santarossa from Laval University who ranked second and seventh for all of Canada.

I should also mention that of the first ten candidates, five are from the Province of Quebec. That astounding success goes to prove the interest of Quebecers in the world of business and economic education.

In the 60's, we had in Quebec the "Révolution tranquille". We are now undergoing an economic revolution. Indeed, the Province of Quebec is in the enviable position of generating the highest number of administration and accountancy graduates of any province.

The result of that interest shown by Quebec students in business is the Quebec laureates. We, Quebecers, are very proud of their success, and I would like to congratulate students from all our Quebec universities. Bravo, keep up the good work!

EXTERNAL AID

ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY EAST AND WEST COAST FISHERMEN TO NICARAGUA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, at this time of year we celebrate the message of peace on earth, good will among all people. Some fishermen on both the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts have worked to put this message into practice. In Newfoundland, where many fishermen have not had a good year, some of them have raised money to send fishing equipment and medical supplies to fishermen in Nicaragua. In British Columbia the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union recently held their annual sale of herring. Fifty per cent of the receipts will go to their orphans fund and the rest will be divided among a number of worth-while projects, including building and supplying a fiberglass boat for Nicaragua.

Although international arms dealers continue to play the role of Herod in the slaughter of innocents, it is good to see examples of ordinary people like fishermen who make gifts to help create peace and solidarity among all people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPOINTMENT OF JEAN DRAPEAU AS AMBASSADOR AND PERMANENT DELEGATE TO UNESCO

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this Government has appointed Mr. Jean Drapeau as Ambassador and Permanent Delegate to the United Nations' Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Mr. Heap: Shame!

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Jean Drapeau, a great Montrealer, a great Quebecer and a great Canadian, was Mayor of Montreal over the last three decades.

It is an honor for Montrealers that their first citizen, whom they appreciated and loved for 30 years, has now become Canadian Ambassador to UNESCO.

The man who in such a masterly way focused world attention on the City of Montreal during the 1967 World Exhibition and the 1976 Olympic Games no doubt will succeed in setting a Canadian imprint on UNESCO, and certainly will help give that organization a wider international representativity and a rejuvenated mandate.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF LAY-OFFS ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said that he is not going to intervene with Canadian National to try to get Canadian National to take a human approach to Atlantic Canada. We are well aware of the conditions of the shops in Moncton. Another very serious situation is the further lay-offs in Sydney where nine carmen and one coach cleaner have been recently laid off, cutting in half the CN workforce of carmen in that city. This is at a time when the people of Cape Breton are looking forward to further industrial and economic opportunities.

We want consistency from the Government, not a reduction in the infrastructure or a reduction in the transportation picture, but its enhancement so that the attractiveness of the area will be increased and the economic opportunities will be more forthcoming.

I ask the House to urge the Minister of Transport to forget this Draconian attitude, to stop punishing the world for not having won the Tory leadership, and start acting like a human being.

THE ECONOMY

HOUSING—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government's economic recovery program is translating into economic growth. For example, for the first time in many years, a financial institution is offering a ten year mortgage, certainly the kind of financing which is likely to please first-time home buyers. This allows taxpayers seeking maximum security through unvarying capital and interest amortization monthly payments to avoid falling victims to skyrocketing interest rates.

At the same time, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation announced the implementation of a new mortgage securities program. This program will have a three way impact: first, the availability of mortgage funds will be increased on the market; second, interest rates will remain at a reasonable level or go down; moreover, this will encourage longer term mortgage loans.

Our Government intends to continue its action plan which, need I mention it, has restored economic stability and growth in Canada.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

WELCOME EXTENDED TO MEMBER FOR TERREBONNE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to welcome the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) in the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Following several months of serious thinking and for reasons of principle, he has decided to join the New Democratic Party. He will speak out loud and clear on behalf of Quebec men and women and all the unemployed seeking work, while promoting social reform and justice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Welcome!

Mr. Broadbent: I conclude by saying that I welcome him to the great cause of great Canadians like Tommy Douglas and Robert Cliche.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Hon. Members would want the Chair to draw to their attention the old rule about congratulatory messages. However, the Chair is mindful that this was a spontaneous demonstration and, as a consequence, once again exercises some benevolence which perhaps should come out of the time of one of the honourable Parties in the Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FORESTRY

OPENING OF CANADIAN FORESTRY SERVICE BUREAU IN VAL-D'OR, QUE.

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): For the very first time in the whole history of the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has officially opened in Val-d'Or a new office of the Canadian Forestry Service. That is a significant presence in a forest region of world-wide reputation. Hon. Gerald Merrithew, the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines), has emphasized the close co-operation with the Quebec Department of Energy and Resources which will make it possible to achieve the goals under the Canada-Quebec agreement on forestry development which should yield an average of some $6 million per year in this North Western Quebec region.

Office Director Jacques Cloutier and his staff will have the responsibility of supporting and facilitating the execution of forestry activities undertaken by Indian bands.

Mr. Speaker, it will be easier from now on to bring continuing assistance to Employment and Immigration Canada for the various job-creation programs in the forest industry.

The Val-d'Or Office will facilitate the scientific research activities which have made the reputation of the Canada Forestry Service for over 50 years.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

TASK FORCE'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, have you ever gone to the doctor knowing that he or she was not allowed to tell you you were sick, even if you were? This is what the Government did with the task force examining the cuts at the National Research Coucil.

The task force was appointed on November 7 but its terms of reference were announced only last week. The task force has been put on a short leash. It is asked to advise whether cuts endanger the health or safety of Canadians, or impair the ability of the NRC to implement its five-year plan. The task force is not authorized to question the initial decision to cut some $20 million from the budget of the NRC. It has not been asked to evaluate the basic value of the research, or to state what Canada stands to lose from these cuts if they do not affect NRC's five-year plan.

The terms of reference should be broadened. Canadians deserve a full inquiry, not a whitewash, into the Government's miserable policies.

TRADE

AMENDMENTS TO JAPAN'S BUILDING CODE—FORECAST OF INCREASED LUMBER SALES FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the fate of the forest industry in British Columbia seems to be constantly in jeopardy these days and no one is more concerned for its well-being than our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and ,Members of this Government. Today in The Globe and Mail it is reported that the Japanese Minister of Construction has recommended amendments to Japan's building code to allow the construction of three-storey single family wooden homes.

This recommendation comes in the wake of the Prime Minister's visit to Japan and his efforts to secure a commitment to this very change. It is estimated that this building code change will result in an increase in sales of 2x4's to Japan from British Columbia by 25 per cent. Last year these sales were valued at $75 million.

It is clear that the Prime Minister's trip to Japan will be worth every penny to the people in the lumber industry in British Columbia, and to all of Canada.

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—STUDENT'S LETTER TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, at this time of year it is common to hear wishes of peace on earth, good will to all people. I am pleased to say I have received a great many letters from students at John Gunn Junior High in my riding. They have written to me and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with respect to their concern about the future of the world.

I would like to read a few lines from a letter which was sent to the Prime Minister from a student at John Gunn Junior High:

> I am writing this letter because I am concerned over what nuclear war would do to my future and the future of the world.
> I am scared about what nuclear arms will do to me, my family and my friends. I want to live a full life but with this threat of a nuclear war hanging over my head, I wonder if I will.

She goes on to say to the Prime Minister:

> What I expect of you is to take this letter very seriously. I am only a teenager, you are an adult, and I have the right to live a full life such as you and generations before us have. I will not accept nuclear war ever. You have a responsibility to listen to me and understand that I want to live.
> Canada right now, I understand, does not have nuclear weapons on its soil. This is step in the right direction, but why are we supporting the Americans for their nuclear weapons, and allowing them to fly the cruise missile over Canada?

That is from a student in my riding.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROVISION OF SOUND DELIVERY SYSTEM URGED

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the installation of community mailboxes has created havoc across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kindy: It is just one more of those incompetent decisions of Canada Post. Mr. Speaker, do you remember the super-automated sorting plants that were supposed to help us get our mail the next day? We are still waiting for that mail to arrive in 24 hours. Now we are told that the supermailboxes will do for us—so the advertisement says—almost anything. And it's supposed to be fun, by the way.

Then Canada Post came up with another project, the closing down of 1,700 rural post offices. What a farce! I suggest that before implementing all these exotic ideas Canada Post should look for basics, and consider effecting more efficient management practices by setting higher productivity levels and by providing a more sound postal delivery system to all Canadians.

POSTAL SUBSIDIES FOR MAGAZINES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, magazines owned and controlled by Canadians, unlike regional and local newspapers, are primarily a national as opposed to a local medium. Their focus is from a Canadian perspective. They entertain, educate, stimulate, record heritage, and express Canadian national identity. Postal subsidies for Canadian magazines have been in place for more than 70 years. The retention of special postal rates for magazines has been supported by the O'Leary Commission, the Davey special committee, and the Applebaum-Hébert Commission.

A 1984 study done for the Department of Communications emphasized the importance of concessionary postal rates. The report warned that, if it were decided to end the subsidy, the amount and rate of increase necessary to do so would likely threaten the survival of the Canadian industry.

The vitality of a strong domestic periodical industry is important to Canadian producers of goods and services. They reach, in a cost-effective way through advertising, Canadian consumers. The postal subsidy program is key to publishers, to advertisers, the Canadian economy. It should not be phased out.

SWINE PNEUMONIA—FUNDS TO AID RESEARCH

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, over the next four years the Brandon Research Station will receive over $164,000 from the federal Government to finance the search for a vaccine to control swine pneumonia. This disease is becoming more and more of a problem for hog producers all across Canada. An effective vaccine will save producers a considerable amount of money.

The people who do agricultural research in Canada are the unsung heroes of the agricultural sector. Projects such as the one I have just mentioned may not sound many glamorous to Members of the House and they do not make very headlines, but researchers help our producers become more efficient. All of their work helps make Canada more competitive in the international market-place.
