If we had not pushed for an agreement, the United States could have imposed a higher countervailing duty, resulting in a loss of some $600 million. An American countervailing duty would deny all company exclusions. Under the countervailing duty process, the U.S. Commerce Department conducts annual reviews and can unilaterally determine the value of changes in provincial stumpage practices. The countervailing duty rate is established in these annual reviews and can be revised retroactively.

The actual level of the countervailing duty will vary with changes in the perceived subsidy level and would increase in a down market.

Under the negotiated agreement, the federal Government will return revenues to the provinces predicated on export performance. Under this plan, Ontario could conceivably earn from $35 million to $45 million based on export performance of the softwood producers. Eventually, replacement measures will be instituted by the provinces so that they can be responsible to collect the fees themselves.

From a northerner's perspective, I am pleased to hear that the Ontario Government plans to return its share of these funds collected by the federal Government to the northern region.

• (1640)

The Premier of Ontario has already announced his Government's intention to use the recouped moneys earned by the 15 per cent export tax to retrain affected lumber workers. It may even set up a heritage fund for northern Ontario. I support these initiatives since the provincial Government appears to be in agreement with the federal Government's commitments to assisting northern Ontario.

I have many personal views of where these funds might be expended for the forestry sector in northern Ontario—first, on greater control of the spruce and jack pine budworms which have been devastating our forests for years; second, on a better and higher rate of reforestation; and, third, on the search for expanded international markets in Europe and the Pacific Rim in order that we are not totally reliant upon the United States markets.

I do not deny that a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood will hurt softwood lumber producers in northern Ontario. The federal Government is concerned about potential ramifications to the industry. To this end, we have been in contact with the Canadian Forestry Service which is monitoring the activities of 28 sawmills across Ontario that account for 75 per cent of the softwood cut in Ontario. The survey will assist the federal Government in determining the impact of the 15 per cent export tax on the industry. We will be pleased to share the results of the survey and other information pertinent to the industry with the provincial Government of Ontario and with the industry.

In my riding of Timmins—Chapleau, I have communicated with all major softwood lumber producers in the region to discuss the 15 per cent export tax. The individuals involved in the industry are fiercely independent, hardworking people. They are sincerely devoted to free enterprise and are mature enough to understand the issue and draw their own reasonable conclusions. They are not ready to close down or lay off.

Some of them expressed concerns or reservations about the impact of the duty on the industry. However, all of them agree that it is better having the money remain in Canada as opposed to paying a duty to the United States. That is precisely what would have transpired if this particular deal had not been achieved. Allowing the Americans to impose and retain a 15 per cent countervail duty would result in the loss of at least $600 million. Now that the money will remain in Canada, it will be reinvested in our own country instead of providing the Americans with a financial windfall.

It is important to consider the nature of the softwood industry. It is a cyclical business, affected by many extenuating influences such as building starts and weather conditions. As a cyclical business it is prone to regular slow-downs and even shut-downs. During this period sawmill owners take advantage of the time to do other important related activities such as machinery maintenance, building maintenance, et cetera.

While I do not deny a tax increase is not altogether healthy for the softwood industry, or for any other industry for that matter, it is crucial to consider that the industry has periods when its productivity is reduced. This is a natural occurrence in the business. One must not confuse regular lay-offs or shut-downs with any potential effects of the duty on the industry.

I am disappointed the Opposition has chosen to confuse its political ambitions at the risk of ignoring the real issue. By citing statistics on what it perceives as direct lay-offs in the industry as a result of the duty, they are inciting panic.

As I stated, I am prepared to support the provincial Government in its endeavours to assist affected lumber workers. I stress at the same time the importance not to panic or over-react to instances where lay-offs might indeed be veritable regular causes and effects of the industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is deeply convinced that the deal reached on December 30, 1986 with the United States is the better of two difficult alternatives for Canadians and the Canadian forest industry. It protects Canadian sovereignty because it preserves the integrity of the Canadian stumpage system. Had the Americans refused to respect our control over Canadian resource policies, we would have had no hesitation in rejecting the deal.

[English]

I should like to refer for a minute to the comments which the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) made just a few minutes ago. I am surprised that since the beginning of the debate the only solution proposed by the Liberal Party was one which would propel us into an outright trade war with Americans. This is what we want to avoid at all costs.

I can assure the House that the sovereignty of the softwood lumber industry has been maintained. I support the Bill of the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). I will not relinquish my efforts to fight for the lumber industry in northern Ontario specifically and for the lumber industry in all of Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious to anyone who has read United States newspapers and magazines for at least two years or three years, except of course the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that the protectionist sentiment in the United States has been accelerating at a rapid rate as the American economy slowed down and as traditional industries, such as the steel industry, the auto industry, and the micro-electronic industry which employ hundreds of thousands of people, came under attack and succumbed to competition from Japan, West Germany, France, and Italy, just to mention a few countries.

Of course we must deal with the Americans. They are our neighbours and our biggest customer. We cannot live without them. Any arrangements we make or any agreements we conclude with them must bring benefits to both Canada and the United States.

When the Prime Minister met with President Reagan, they both approved of the concept of free trade between the United States and Canada. However, the Prime Minister ignored the fact that in the American political system, unlike our parliamentary system, the President may have or say he has a policy, but the House of Representatives and the Senate, as well as members of his own Party, do not have to support him. That is precisely what happened.

When the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States agreed to explore the possibility of free trade between our two countries, one would have thought that there would have been no harmful acts on the part of either country at least during the period when discussions were ongoing.

However, what have we seen since the meeting between the Prime Minister and the President in Quebec City? The Americans have taken action. They have slapped duties on shakes and shingles, steel pipe, fish from the East Coast, hogs from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and now on softwood lumber which brings billions of dollars into the Canadian economy.

The Americans announced that they were considering a tax on the Canadian softwood lumber industry on June 26, 1986. The then Minister for International Trade vowed that Canada would fight the case to the end in the ways permitted under American law and in the ways which stopped a similar proposal a few years ago.

When the Prime Minister appointed the new Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), he said: "Just watch her go". We have been watching her. On September 30, the present Minister made the first—and these are her words—"final offer to the United States to settle the dispute by raising stumpage fees on an average of 10 per cent". That was rejected by the American lumber industry.

Then what happened? On December 30, the Minister agreed to another final offer, a 15 per cent tax on Canadian softwood exports. Why did she agree to that? She indicated in the House that the agreement would avoid dangerous development in U.S. countervail policy by having the petition withdrawn. Also she indicated that it was central to the negotiations that in return for a negotiated settlement the actual petition brought by U.S. interest groups, the U.S. Coalition for Fair Lumber Prices, would be withdrawn.

The Minister implied that the agreement meant that the softwood lumber issue was set aside and there would not be a ruling by the International Trade Commission of the United States which would set a precedent for other areas and for other industries. In other words, we would not have to worry about this situation affecting other areas. But that is not what is happening. The Financial Post, one of the two major newspapers servicing the interests and the needs of the business community, on January 5, 1987 in an article entitled "Playing by America's rules" had this to say:

> Just last month Washington's Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ruled Canada's longstanding method of charging U.S. pipeline customers for natural gas must be changed to conform to internal U.S. practices. The requirement—now being appealed by Ottawa—could force Canadian gas exporters to absorb much of the cost of shipping to the border, instead of passing them on to U.S. customers.

The Financial Post for January 12 estimates that this could cost the Canadian gas companies $450 million. That indicates quite clearly that the settlement agreed to by the Government has not ended the tax on our resource industries and probably not on our manufacturing industries which United States' interests will take to try to protect their own markets.

In the same article entitled "Playing by America's Rules" in The Financial Post for January 5, 1987 we read:

> A recently formed coalition of U.S. coal companies and electricity producers, for example, is charging that provincial ownership of power companies in Canada—such as Manitoba Hydro, B.C. Hydro, Hydro Quebec and Ontario Hydro—means lower borrowing costs and no taxes, providing a major subsidy to Canadian power exports. A trade case may soon be launched.

The Province of Manitoba, from which I come, has invested billions of dollars in building a new power plant because it was able to make agreements with customers, large utilities, in the United States to sell power to states for distribution to customers at a cheaper rate than they could get it from alternate sources. Premier Bourassa of the Province of Quebec is proposing major expansions of the James Bay hydro project because he wants to sell the power to the northeastern United States.

The kind of opposition which the utilities and the coal producers in the United States will likely launch against the sale of power, using the same arguments that they used in the softwood lumber dispute, could have tremendously severe adverse effects on Canada. The Minister, who as the Prime Minister said "Just watch her go", has gone in a way which has proved a major defeat for the Canadian lumber industry. She has opened the door in the electrical power industry, in the natural gas industry, probably the steel industry and the auto industry, just to mention a few, to take the same action, using the precedent which the Americans were able to establish in this case to put the blocks to Canadians.

This decision by the Government not to fight the case as it could have in the proper way, in the way permitted by U.S. law, was a major mistake. It will have the most serious effects on hundreds of thousands of Canadians. It is one which this Party to which I belong cannot accept and one which we will oppose here and in every other way in this House and outside if we can.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to this very controversial legislation, Bill C-37. When we talk about this question we are talking about an industry where tens of thousands of Quebecers are earning a very decent living. When we see how the situation has evolved in the course of negotiations, Mr. Speaker, I think we should take every opportunity to vigorously oppose this kind of agreement and do so for a number of reasons.

I listened with great interest to what was said by a number of Government Members, which was, substantially: We have just signed an excellent agreement with the United States. It is excellent for the simple reason that the 15 per cent tax which in fact represents about $600 million will not be paid to the Americans. This money will stay in Canada. That seems to be their motivation and reasoning for endorsing and supporting this Bill. Mr. Speaker, I submit, with respect, that this reasoning and this logic would only make sense if we assumed that the United States would otherwise have won their case for imposing a tax. Actually, there is a precedent, because this is not the first time the matter has come up. There was a precedent where the Canadian position won out, and the United States had to drop their plan to impose a tax. I repeat, this agreement is entirely unacceptable, for a host of reasons.

First of all, and my colleagues on this side of the House have said this repeatedly, it is a direct attack on our sovereignty. To those who are inclined to believe this is not so, I say that at least part of the agreement would seem to be very significant in this respect. I shall read it, if I may:

"The Government of Canada will provide the Government of the United States of America with data concerning the level of Provincial and Federal softwood and total stumpage harvest, the total revenue collected from the sale of Provincial and Federal softwood and total timber, total export charge collected, total shipments of certain softwood lumber products to the United States of America, total lumber production by province and total softwood lumber production by province, for each fiscal year within three months of the close of the fiscal year."

Mr. Speaker, what I have just read is an integral part of the memorandum of agreement, and I think the conclusion is obvious. What we have here is blatant proof that the United States will now be entitled to interfere directly in a sector that in my view is a strategic and vital one and one of the most important industries in our economy. That in itself is sufficient indication that what we have here is interference and a serious attack on Canadian sovereignty.

Mr. Speaker, there are also the consequences of the agreement. The federal Government is the official party to this agreement. However, it so happens that the forestry sector and the lumber industry fall within the exclusive purview of the provinces. Now, at first glance, that 15 per cent levy might be expected to total some $600 million, but it could also come up to much more. What about those $600 million? People have said, and I hope they are right, that the $600 million will be redistributed to the provinces on the basis of their lumber exports to the United States. This of course would mean additional revenues for the producing provinces.

But the question is this: What will the provinces be doing with that tax money? Clearly, in my own Province of Québec, we have a specific forestry problem, a reforestation problem. We have a problem in the sense that we must make huge investments in that strategic sector. Those who are concerned about that important question of course would be tempted to see in those future revenues the possibility to use them to meet expenditures that are absolutely vital for Quebec's future.

But no, that will not be, Mr. Speaker. The province of Quebec will not be allowed to use those monies the way it would like, because the Americans are telling us those funds cannot be used to support the lumber producing sector.

At that point, Mr. Speaker, we in Quebec will be faced with a still more dramatic problem—producers will have to, first, pay the 15 per cent tax, and, second, dig into their pockets for the investments needed for reforestation. This means that many producers will be so hard pressed that unfortunately it is to be expected that in a near future we will be faced with a whole series of sawmill shut-downs.

Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised as well when I heard my colleagues opposite, particularly those who come from Abitibi, say that they had consulted practically every single producer and that nearly all of them endorsed the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that I too had discussions with a number of producers, including some of the most important, and that I found the picture to be quite different. Right now they are very concerned—shocked might be more accurate—about the dire consequences which the agreement mentioned in this Bill will have on the industry.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, another aspect which must be pointed out is the principle underlying the whole negotiation process.

Last Monday I listened to the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) when he gave us his own version of a progress report on the negotiations. Here is how I would sum up his remarks: Gentlemen, let us be realistic. Canada is a country which borders on the United States, a country which happens to be much bigger, much more powerful, and much more important than Canada. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix even referred to David and Goliath as an example, Canada being David, of course. He told us: In the normal course of events it is practically impossible that a power the size of Canada, confronted by a superpower like the United States, would be in a position to negotiate on equal terms and hope to reach an agreement that would not compromise its sovereignty.

Mr. Speaker, if we suffer from such an inferiority complex, if we feel so powerless, and if we think that a superpower such as the United States can do pretty well as it pleases, I suggest we should be very concerned about the future and especially about the free trade issue that is currently making headlines.

Mr. Speaker, if we start on the premise that Canada is a very small country compared with a superpower such as the United States, it is like admitting publicly that we must surrender and give up on almost all areas.

Mr. Caccia: David won.

Mr. Tardif: My honourable colleague reminds me that, in the Bible, David really did win. Based on my honourable friend's logic, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that in this case Canada should have negotiated as an equal and signed a deal which could protect the interests of Canadians in this major industry.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I represent a riding which is clearly a major pulp and paper producer which uses a large amount of wood. What guarantee do we have that, in the near future, the American Government will not act as it did in other circumstances and impose its own tax on our lumber?

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is a major surrender by Canada vis-à-vis the United States and it is a source of major concern for the future.

[English]

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I rise to speak on Bill C-37 and more precisely on the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) providing that an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence. I am left wondering what would happen if we were to accept this amendment since we as a nation have already signed a memorandum of understanding and we have commenced doing what we said we would do.

The opposition Parties are fostering doom and gloom and are claiming that the sky is falling in. Last summer when a tax on cedar shakes and shingles was levied, they felt that it was the end of the world. As a Member from British Columbia, I feel that that tax on cedar shakes and shingles did have some effect on us but nevertheless, that industry has got back up to at least 80 per cent of its capacity and is doing quite well.

I am not here to suggest that this is the finest agreement that has ever been entered into, but I must say that under the circumstances in which we had to negotiate, it is the best of a bad deal. It is a bad deal when another country threatens to take severe action against products crossing its borders. Nonetheless, it has a right to do so.

So it was that nine provincial premiers came to the federal Government and asked if we would help fight against this action. It was the federal Government's role to take this matter up on behalf of the producers and the provinces. After the preliminary determination came down which found that a 15 per cent duty would be levied or at least that bonds would have to be posted, the provinces asked us to try to negotiate a stop to this. We acted in concert with nine out of 10 provincial premiers who asked us to take part in it.

British Columbia has been seriously affected by the impact of the actions that have been taken. The Province of British Columbia accounts for some 60 per cent of the Canadian production of lumber and some 58 per cent of the value of lumber shipped out of Canada. Needless to say, about 80 per cent of Canadian softwood lumber is exported to the United States, and this seriously affects British Columbia.

There are some anomalies in the agreement that has been signed and these have been identified by various producers in the re-manufacturing sector, the people who add value to the product itself before it is shipped. Some of the anomalies that have crept into the agreement have serious consequences on many of the companies located in Fraser Valley East. Nonetheless, the majority of those companies will, I am sure, be able to work around the agreement the way it now stands. As they get on with it, I am sure they will still be in business a year from now.

Some of the products were not put on the Appendix B list, however. That covers those products which are not taxed on the value added to them in the manufacturing process. That list is not broad enough so we will have to negotiate in order to expand it. Allowance has been made for that in the agreement. I might add that if I had my druthers between doing that or taking the originating mill as the f.o.b. point, I would rather take the originating mill as the f.o.b. point. Be that as it may, we are not renegotiating that agreement today.

We have been hearing a lot of doom and gloom from the opposition Parties about this agreement. I would like to read from an article in The Windsor Star. The article is headed "Area lumber yards refilled with softwood, employees." I will just highlight some of the points made in the article. It says:

> All 20 workers laid off shortly after the imposition of the U.S. tariff have been recalled by Van De Hogen Material Handling Inc., one of Windsor's largest reloaders.
> The lumber pact restored "much needed" stability to Canada's wood-exporting system, said John Van De Hogen, president of Van De Hogen.
> U.S. lumber users shied away from importing Canadian wood because they were uncertain about the outcome of tariff negotiations. But with the uncertainty gone, "things are beginning to get back to normal," Van De Hogen said.
> Van De Hogen said the tariff dispute has little to do with low stumpage fees. "It has everything to do with our low dollar. It's cheaper for the U.S. to buy our lumber with their dollar."
> As long as a significant gap remains between the two dollars, Americans will continue buying Canadian lumber. On top of this, he said, the quality of most Canadian lumber is vastly superior to the quality of the U.S. product. "The simple fact is, they need our lumber."
> "After mid-February we expect our volumes to be slightly lower than is normal for this time of year," McKeown said.

What we have before us is the legislation needed to ensure that our Customs and Excise officials can get on with the job of collecting this tax. I for one support the Bill even with its imperfections because there is a job to be done and we cannot hide from that fact.

It is interesting to note that the unions concerned in British Columbia are supportive and complimentary of the Government over the action which has been taken. Both sides of the British Columbia legislature agree that this is the best that could have been done under the circumstances. It seems strange that both opposition Parties in this House are condemning the agreement, yet the people most affected are telling the Government that we have stuck up for them, gone out on a limb and obtained a partial victory for them.

In closing, I just want to say that I am pleased our trade negotiators were able to get this agreement and I will continue to work with them and pass on information from the various companies concerned in Fraser Valley East to make sure that the imperfections contained in the Bill are corrected. This situation posed a serious threat to those companies and caused them great concern. Nevertheless, the agreement we now have in place was necessary and this legislation should be passed immediately.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words about this Bill and respond to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) and several other speakers on the government side who have made much of the fact that members of the trade union movement, presumably in British Columbia and perhaps elsewhere, have supported what the Government has done. Whether that is the case or not, it is not what I intend to comment on. I want to comment on the irony in the fact that Progressive Conservatives, particularly the leadership, are in the habit of getting up and accusing the NDP of simply being the voice of the CLC, as if there were something wrong with that. We have been accused of taking our orders from the labour movement and so on. Those Members are now criticizing us because in their judgment we have taken a view different from that of certain trade unions on this matter. That simply goes to show that we do not take orders from the CLC or any other trade union movement—

Mr. McDermid: The only thing you take from them is money.

Mr. Blaikie: I have certainly struck a nerve. There is an old saying that when you throw a stone into a pack of dogs and you hear them yelping, you must have hit something. That certainly seems to be the case today. What is clear from our position is that we do not take orders from anyone on this. We have made an independent judgment with respect to which the Government may disagree. Fair enough. Obviously it does because it has come to an arrangement with the United States that we fundamentally disagree with. I simply wanted to point out the irony, if not the hypocrisy—and I of course would not accuse the Hon. Member of hypocrisy—in getting up and trying to use the unions against the NDP when the leadership of his own Party, on the floor of the House of Commons, is in the habit of making snide remarks about the relationship between the NDP and the trade union movement. Let us put that to rest and recognize that political parties have to make independent judgments about what they think is in the best interests of the country at large.

The Progressive Conservative Government of Canada was faced with a very difficult situation, I admit that. It made a certain judgment as to what would be the best course of action to take. We in our view are critical of that judgment.

Mr. Belsher: What about your provincial counterparts in British Columbia?

Mr. Blaikie: Our provincial counterparts in B.C. disagree with our decision? Big deal. I do not take my orders from the provincial NDP in British Columbia either. We make judgments as a federal caucus as to what we think is in the best interests of the country. We think, faced with this difficult situation which no one has denied, that the Progressive Conservative Government opted for short-term gain and the consequences will be long-term pain. That is the exact opposite of the philosophy of the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who, as Minister of Finance, on December 13, 1979, exhorted us to accept short-term pain for long-term gain. We see the wisdom of the Minister's philosophy now, if not of the measures he wanted to introduce at that time.

The fact remains that the Government was faced with a difficult situation with regard to the $600 million. However, there was only a chance that we would lose the money. We maintain that we could have won the case. However, let us imagine that we lost it. The arrangement which the Government has made has set a precedent to allow the United States of America to poke its nose into any industry in which it feels it can be successful in bullying the Canadian Government into thinking that it cannot win, as it did in the softwood lumber industry.

The real issue in this debate is the nature of Canada's relationship with the United States. Much of what we are is defined by our relationship with the United States. I contend that one of the reasons the Government is so low in the public opinion polls is that Canadians in general do not like the approach the Government took with respect to Canada-U.S. relations. Although Canadians are concerned about corruption, conflict of interest, and all the other things, the thing which bothers them most about the Government is the fact that since September, 1984, there has been a systematic restructuring and selling out of our traditional relationship with the United States. It began with the dismantling of the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the National Energy Program. It has continued with the Government's attitude toward the United States in regard to transboundary environmental problems, an area in which I have taken a special interest.

Even after today's visit by Vice-President George Bush, the Government is still not being honest with Canadians about what we can legitimately expect from the United States on the acid rain issue while Mr. Reagan is the President. The Government should be honest with Canadians and say that we cannot expect anything from that bunch of yahoos in the White House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not have to use the word "yahoos", but they should be honest about what we can legitimately expect on transboundary issues.

Canadians would appreciate an honest declaration of failure because it would at least be failure with integrity. It would be failure as a result of having our say, asking for justice, and being denied it. If acid rain continues to fall on us, at least we would have some self-respect. We presently have neither a reduction in acid rain nor self-respect. I commend a more self-respecting approach to the Prime Minister in these issues. More than failure in our relationship with the United States, Canadian people deplore the context of that failure. Canadians want to see a self-respecting country asking for justice rather than the supine, sanguine acquiescence which has been characteristic of the Government.

I am sorry that I have only 10 minutes to speak because I have a lot more to say about this and other issues which fall within the framework of Canada-U.S. relations which I believe is the Achilles heel of the Government.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. One may wonder why a Member of Parliament from Prince Edward Island would get excited about this agreement since we are not known as a major exporter of softwood lumber products. We are known, first, as an agricultural province and, second, as a province with a great stake in the fisheries, that being our second most important industry. We are known as well for tourism.

However, forestry is also a very important sector on Prince Edward Island. Over the years we have negotiated forestry agreements with federal Governments which have done much for Prince Edward Island with regard to reforestation. I am sure that if this agreement does not affect the ability of the federal Government to deal with the provinces, Prince Edward Island will continue to ask for support in an effort to regain some of the forests which have been lost.

In the 1800s one of the main industries in my province was shipbuilding. I represent an area of the province which was most prominent in that industry. In the Port Hill area we now have a museum of the shipbuilding industry. We used to have tremendous stands of softwood and hardwood lumber, especially hemlock. Therefore, Prince Edward Island had a major stake in the forestry industry at one time. However, since the land was very fertile, many of the forests were cut down to make room for the agricultural sector. We still have a lot of Class 3 land which can produce a lot of good quality lumber. That is why we are in the reforestation business at this time.

I would like to discuss this Bill in terms of what it does to our relationship with the United States and to the sovereignty of Canada. Bill C-37 is entitled "an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products". My colleague, the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), said that the Bill should be entitled "an Act respecting the imposition of the American administration's will on the weak and vacillating Tory administration in Canada".

Members on the Government side have said that Members of the Opposition do not like the Americans. That is not true at all. My father came to Canada at the age of nine years. He and my grandfather selected Canada as their home at that time. My Dad passed away one year ago at the age of 94. He was a great Canadian.

I must say that most of my relatives are Americans. Actually about 75 per cent of my cousins live in the Massachusetts area. Therefore, I do not feel that I, or most members of the Opposition, have anything detrimental to say about the Americans. They have been good neighbours and good allies. Certainly Canada has done an awful lot during its history in conjunction with the United States. However, we all have good neighbours in our various localities. That does not mean we have to crawl into bed with them. We want our country to remain an independent sovereign nation.

I look at this tax as an erosion of our sovereignty. There have been many indications of this erosion since this Government took power. There was the ice-breaker which moved through our northern waters without asking permission, not recognizing our sovereignty in the North. That was a very contentious issue. I know the Government did a lot of howling about it and I am sure the Canadian people in the last year or so, and as long as this Government is in power, will certainly take a tough stand when it comes to our sovereignty as it relates to the North and, certainly, as it relates to our country.

The softwood lumber export tax is a vitally important matter for many reasons. Of course, my colleagues have expounded upon those reasons at some length. We have heard about the negative economic impacts. However, in the short time I have to speak, I would like to comment a little more about the loss of sovereignty. I would like to expand on the subject with regard to the limits this sort of action puts upon Canada's ability to manage its own natural resources. I might add that this episode is only the latest in a number of U.S. tariff measures taken against Canadian exports since this Government took office.

In June of 1985, the International Trade Commission imposed a penalty duty of 20.75 per cent on imports of dried salt codfish from Canada. The affected companies included the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and the United Maritime Fishermen. There were other companies in Labrador and down through Quebec, some of them in the Prime Minister's own riding. These companies were all affected by the imposition of that duty. Last March, 1986, we had a 5.82 per cent duty imposed on fresh Canadian groundfish exports destined for the United States markets. Originally, there was a preliminary study which suggested it should be 6.85 per cent. However, after going through the proper channels it was found it should be only 5.82 per cent, and that was the duty which was imposed.

We did not see any great change in the fish market with the United States over that duty, but there was a good reason why that did not happen. That was because of the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar and also because the markets were extremely strong in the United States. Therefore, it did not affect the Canadian fishing industry to any great extent. However, given the fact that those conditions can change and change quickly—and we are seeing right now the dollar strengthening against the U.S. currency—I am very concerned. Ten minutes is not long enough to go into it thoroughly, but I will be speaking again on this Bill. Hopefully, I can speak for 20 minutes then.

I am very concerned, as are other members of my caucus, about the signals this kind of deal is giving to Canadians and what it is going to do to our natural resources. We have had a number of programs which were cut back. The fishing vessel subsidy program was cut back along with other programs under the Department of Fisheries. How did the Minister explain that? It was because of the countervail duties. I do not believe it is going to stop there. As a Prince Edward Islander, I am concerned about the fisheries and about our potato industry because the mood of the United States is not very conducive to a happy relationship such as the great relationship we saw at Quebec between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States when Irish eyes were smiling. Before this is all over, I am afraid there will be a lot of tears shed in Prince Edward Island by our farmers, our fishermen and all the people who use our natural resources, certainly by those working in the softwood lumber industry.

We in Atlantic Canada pay the highest stumpage fees in Canada. There are only five companies which are exempt from the 15 per cent tariff in Atlantic Canada. Put that 15 per cent on top of our higher stumpage fees and take into account our high unemployment rate, and you will see, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot afford to lose jobs. I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me those few extra seconds. You are a gentleman and I am sure that you will be one of the guys who survive after the next election.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in debate today because the Canadian forest industry has been too successful in penetrating the United States market. The large disparity between the Canadian and the U.S. dollar, the efficiency of product and its quantity and quality, make the protectionist sentiment and action of the United States forest industry all but inevitable. Canadian forest companies have moved from 17 per cent to 33 per cent of the market.

The provinces should have adjusted their forest policies several years ago. They should have made adjustments regarding stumpage, annual allowable cut and intensive silviculture, recognizing the full implications of unneccessarily depleting a precious forest resource. They should have moved toward diversification, secondary manufacturing in the prime resource field. They should have had a stronger emphasis from industry and from provincial management many years ago. But again it is difficult to move from a status quo.

I suppose at this time it is time to compliment the unions because they in fact have seen this coming for several years and were among the first to call for changes in this direction. It seems to me that as a nation we always move in after a crisis rather than recognizing the signs and the necessity for times to change. The winning of the earlier countervail duty was in fact a signal, not to shout hurrah and continue on as we were but rather to see it as a danger signal calling for a re-examination and change in our policies and our ways of thinking.

Back in 1983 the Minister of Transport was early to recognize protectionist forces in the United States and called for a comprehensive trade agreement. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as soon as he took office, moved toward a comprehensive free trade with the United States because he recognized the tide of protectionism and immediately countered with his own free trade initiative. The provinces started talking but it was too little, too late. The first thing we knew another very serious, even deadly, countervailing duty was upon us. Through the mechanism of enhanced federal-provincial relationships, the provinces called upon the federal Government to help, and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) came in and negotiated a better deal than even the money markets' managers could ever have contemplated. We are now implementing an interim measure export tax until our provinces can modernize and redesign their own forest policies. Until then, the federal Government will collect a tax for intensive silviculture and job retraining in the provinces.

Our Minister and her negotiators should be complimented and appreciated for their efforts with respect to the complicated agreement and negotiations which had to be completed on Canada's behalf. She has done a fine job for Canada, and Canadians are beginning to recognize this more and more each day.

There is a growing consensus among members of the industry, the unions, the financial community and British Columbians that the Government, facing a difficult situation to negotiate, has in fact done a good job in reaching a negotiated settlement. I get the feeling that the industry senses it can now live with the agreement. It now feels we should get on with settling the anomalies of the agreement as quickly as possible. That is really what this debate should be focused on and what subsequent committee meetings should be looking at in terms of giving priority to it.

During the parliamentary recess I was pleased to meet with many groups and representatives of the forest industry in British Columbia. Of particular importance were the meetings I held with the Independent Lumber Remanufacturers Association of British Columbia. The B.C. secondary softwood lumber industry is a sector of the forest industry which has grown in importance to the province in recent years. The industry has over 60 firms and employs close to 3,000 workers. In 1986, its sales volume was estimated to be in the range of $500 million Canadian.

The industry produces a wide range of value-added products from raw material purchased from primary lumber producers, both in British Columbia and the United States. The industry sells its products to both domestic and foreign markets. By far, it is the most important market for many firms is the United States. This small but growing sector of the British Columbia lumber industry is of utmost importance to British Columbia and Canada because the remanufacture, secondary manufacture or value-added components of the forest industry are critical to the full use and management of Canadian forest resources.

The British Columbia economy is hurt by the buffeting of primary resource boom and bust cycles. It must be levelled out through a diversified secondary industry base, the most logical and natural part of which is the secondary manufacture of local primary resources.

Because of the importance of the remanufacturing sector, and because this sector finds anomalies in the agreement as it relates to them, I was pleased to welcome Mr. Shawn Sullivan of the Independent Lumber Remanufacturers Association and Mr. Charles Widman of the Coalition of British Columbia Secondary Softwood Lumber Manufacturers to meet with Ministers and members of the British Columbia caucus to discuss the anomalies of the agreement as it relates to their sectors. I am pleased to report that the delegations felt that they received a very good hearing from both the British Columbia caucus, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) and the officials in the Departments involved. Members of the delegations left with a slight glimmer of hope that, with minor adjustments, a resolution of their problems might be found in the interpretation and implementation of the agreement.

The application of the U.S. Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports was focused on a perceived competitive inequity caused by what it viewed as unfairly low stumpage rates paid by Canadian producers. Its complaints were not directed toward value-added activities through remanufacture. This position was clearly stated in its application and followed up in the agreement. Negotiators for the agreement wisely recognized that under the pressure of a tough deadline certain anomalies might arise in areas of the agreement. As a result Clause 4 b. was put into the agreement. It states in part:

> The export charge however will not be imposed on the value added in manufacturing some softwood lumber products.

That is, of course, the key by which we will have to try to see if we can find space for some of the other products which were perhaps missed in the first place. The Independent Lumber Remanufacturers Association was pleased that the list of products it submitted appeared in the agreement, giving them protective exclusions. However, upon closer examination by all parties involved, it was recognized that a number of other products such as pallet cut stocks, bed frame components, firring strips, roof decking cedar boards and industrial clears and shop products of remanufactured, box shook, edge-glued panels, select fascia and other patterns, such as 134, 130, 116, 118, 137, 204 A&B, 206 and 141, under NLGA standard grading rules may have been inadvertently left off the list of exclusions.

Similarly, some companies which would have qualified under the corporate exclusion list had they applied were left off that particular list. Whether they did not know that they could apply, whether they knew and did not want to apply because of the risk involved or because of the paperwork effort, cost and exposure of their books, or whether they simply assumed that the matter would be settled before it affected them directly, there still exists an anomaly in the agreement. In the outcome some companies of equal standing have exclusions while others do not.

Undoubtedly, the negotiators of the United States are strong and competent. However, we must also assume that they are fair and want to correct any such anomalies that may have occurred under the pressure of time and a tight deadline. Certainly, when rough lumber that comes from the United States is sold to Canada and we treat it with wood preservatives and then send it back to the United States the Americans do not want to see us charging a duty on that since they surely must want us to continue to buy that raw lumber. Thus it will be in their best interests, as well as in ours, to have a look at some of these anomalies to see if we cannot find a satisfactory solution to them. I hope the Government will appeal to the sense of fair play well known to the United States ethic and in the interpretation and implementation of the agreement make adjustments to these anomalies in the positive spirit and intention of the agreement itself.

We must resolve this issue and move on quickly to a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Vice-President of the United States, George Bush, was visiting Ottawa today. Where was he when the Government could have used him three months ago? I understand that the Government tentatively booked the National Arts Centre theatre where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Vice-President will have a sing-song. They will sing Help Me Make It Through the Night. It seems to me they will need a lot of help through the next year and a half before the next general election.

I knew we were in for some trouble when the present Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was appointed to her post. Previously, she had been the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. She has a well-known record for her negotiations. After all, she negotiated the Western Accord, which was the result of her first negotiation process. It was easy to come out successfully in that negotiation because she gave everything away. She did the same thing with respect to the offshore rights in Newfoundland. She is a great negotiator—she gives everything away.

As a matter of fact, after she had successfully negotiated the Western Accord and the deal with respect to offshore resources on the East Coast the Prime Minister sent his Minister a note in which he stated: "Pat, bingo!". The note was signed: "Brian". Then when the Prime Minister made her the Minister for International Trade he said: "We've given the ball to the Minister with respect to free trade. Watch her go. Go, Bingo, go! Go get 'em, Bingo!" She is a tough negotiator, a real tough negotiator.

When the preliminary determination was made by the U.S. Commerce Department she had this to say: "We believe that the U.S. position is fundamentally wrong". I can just imagine her saying it since I see her in the House every day pounding her desk when she speaks. The Minister said that Governments have a sovereign right to establish conditions for the management and utilization of their natural resources. She further said that stumpage clearly does not constitute a subsidy and the imposition of countervailing duties is therefore inappropriate.

The Minister said that it was a question of sovereignty. The Minister was stating her position very clearly and very firmly. If it were to be even more clear, and we can see this picture of a determined Minister with both feet firmly planted, banging away, saying "You can't do this. We have a right.", at a press conference on October 22, this determined Minister, to drive home this determination, stated:

> This decision strikes at the sovereign right of governments to manage their own natural resources for the benefit of our own people.

She told this to a news conference after a three-hour meeting at the Metro Toronto Convention Centre. She further stated:

> We are determined to fight this decision.

Well, Mr. Speaker, she fought. When the fight was on, there was the Minister from the beaches of Waikiki, and we can imagine her saying this, "We shall fight them from the beaches, we shall fight them from the Aloha Lounge of the Waikiki Hilton, we shall fight them on the telephones; we shall never surrender".

The Minister accused the Americans of blinking. How would she know, she never eyeballed them, she was never there. She was sunning herself on the beaches of Hawaii. She was fighting them from that vantage point. I get this big picture of the surf rising in crests, the Minister lying on the beach in dark shades with a bank of telephones shouting instructions over the telephones: "Don't blink, eyeball them. I am right behind you." When the dust settled, what did bingo have to say? What was going to be the big battle over the fact that the Americans did not have a right to tell Canadians how to develop their forests, and what stumpage to charge? Now, instead of being pushed off the ledge of the Hilton in Waikiki, we jumped. We jumped without a safety net beneath us. In the Minister's own words, what is indeed a defeat for us, because it is the Americans who will tell us what stumpage to charge, and in fact the Minister's words on January 6, 1987—

Mr. Riis: What were they?

Mr. Rodriguez: There are the words. She first said that the Americans would have got a hell of a lot more out of a countervailing duty than out of this negotiated agreement. She reinforced it by saying, "By limiting the Americans only to the arithmetic we kept them out of our forests, out of our books, and out of our hair". Can you just see it, Mr. Speaker. Then she went on to say, "They blinked. We didn't,". She said the most important victories are fighting off U.S. attempts to force changes to our stumpage system. What a crock of bingle. Fought them off? When she went in to negotiate there was an exemption for the softwood forestry industry in the Atlantic region. After the dust settled and she had fought this great fight in the trenches, lo and behold, they got the 15 per cent being applied to the softwood industry in Atlantic Canada. Is that not marvellous? What great negotiations.

She snatched defeat from the jaws of victory, and then turned around and talked about how she made the Americans blink. Some blink. Some eye. The sad part about this is that the Americans now recognize that we have a patsy negotiating for us, a real patsy. It is not only the Americans who recognize that we have a patsy, but all the industrialized nations of the world. The Japanese are now talking a 15 per cent duty, because they think that we are going to be dumping our softwood lumber into the Japanese market.

Mr. Brisco: I rise on a point of order. In a fit of compassion, I thought it might be instructive for the Member to know that the camera is having a great deal of difficulty following him. It is a great speech, but if he would try to remain in place long enough for the camera to see him, then all of Canada could watch.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member should not use the name of the Minister.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Parliamentary Secretary has said that I am using the Minister's first name. When I use "patsy" I use it in a generic sense, meaning a push-over.

Mr. Riis: Carney queen.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Carney queen. A push-over, Mr. Speaker, that is what we all understand that term to mean.

The Japanese are now talking about challenging this patsy. The Europeans are talking about a 15 per cent duty.

It is a sad day, and the late Sir John A. Macdonald must be turning over in his grave at the display of this spineless reaction by this Government. If it was wrong for the Americans to try and tell us that our stumpage was too low, and that we had that sovereign right to determine the stumpage fee and any other matter regarding our resources, then we see them in court. That is what we do, we see them in court. We do not do what they want us to do for them.

Mr. McDermid: That's good, and lose all the money to the Americans.

Mr. Angus: I rise on a point of order. Looking at the clock, I see that we only have two minutes left. I wonder if the House would give permission for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to continue his very enjoyable speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this Bill C-37. There is very little time left for me. In fact, there is only two minutes before the clock runs out. I am sorry that this is being put on the edge, but the Speaker will not call it six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock now, and I can begin next week or tomorrow?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. de Corneille: I thank Government members very much for their co-operation. It is obvious that they are willing to co-operate in the new spirit of conviviality, cordiality, and co-operation. We have seen a lot of that. The Canadian people have noticed a great deal about the way in which this Government conducts its business, and they are becoming tired of it.

I wish to begin by saying that this Bill should be trashed, as should the Memorandum of Agreement which this Bill aims to implement.

The way in which we have dealt with the United States in the past has brought a relationship of a good neighbour policy where we have been able to respect one another; where the governments in the United States respected Canada and treated Canada in a way that showed that we were able to manage our affairs and live as good neighbours, because good fences make good neighbours.

The moment that this Government began to undertake its policy of trying to get in good with the Americans, trying to sell ourselves to them as special neighbours, we found that we were being repudiated and taken advantage of. Canadians believe that this Government is selling out this country. That is why at this time I rise to speak to this Bill.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—HINTON TRAIN COLLISION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67, I have the honour to lay on the Table copies of the Commission of Inquiry into the Hinton Train Collision, in both official languages. In other words, I am tabling the report of the Commissioner, the Hon. Mr. Justice Foisy. As an editorial comment I might say that it is a very well done report.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF CANADIAN-NATO PARLIAMENTARIAN ASSOCIATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the twelfth report, in both official languages, of the Canadian-NATO Parliamentarian Association. The report deals with the petition of the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) to meetings of the Subcommittee on Defence Co-operation in London, December 9.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 710 of my constituents. These are people who are deeply concerned about the statements of the Government with respect to the safeguards concerning the Auto Pact. They call upon the Government and on Parliament to maintain as deep a commitment as possible to those safeguards for the sake of their jobs and for the sake of the prosperity not just of their constituency but of all of Canada.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I also have two petitions to present which deal with the question of the changes to the Patent Act which are before the House. The first petition comes from New Brunswick.

[Translation]

The federal Government's proposals will lead to increased costs for provincial health insurance plans and an increase in the price of drugs.

[English]

The second of the two petitions comes from Ontario. These petitions provide a clear statement from Canadians across Canada that they wish to see an end to the concessions being made with respect to the free trade talks.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege under Standing Order 106 to present a number of petitions. These petitions have been signed by Canadians who are concerned about the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act, and who are worried about the resulting increase in the prices of new prescription drugs. The petitioners view these plans as a concession to the United States, at the expense of ordinary Canadians.

The first petition protesting these measures is signed by residents of Emo, Fort Frances, Stratton, Barwick, and Devlin, in my riding.

The second petition comes from residents of those communities, as well as Rainy River, Atikokan, and Burlington.

The third petition comes from residents of the aforementioned communities, as well as the communities of Sleeman and Thunder Bay.

The fourth petition is signed by residents of the City of Toronto, and surrounding areas.

The fifth petition is from residents of Don Mills, Huntsville, Peterborough, Burlington, and St. Catharines.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Finally, I have a petition which protests the plans by the Government to expand low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base. It calls upon the Government to suspend negotiations with NATO to expand the base there.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Vancouver, North Vancouver, Victoria, and other places in British Columbia. The petition complains that the proposed changes to the Patent Act, which the Government is trying to drive through, will increase drug prices for many ordinary Canadians. The petitioners point out that this will bear especially hard upon those who are on fixed incomes and required to make regular use of prescription drugs. They feel that this is another intolerable example of Canadian concessions to the United States over free trade. They ask Parliament to reject the Government's proposals on this because it will increase the drug prices for many Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I also have a petition signed by a number of residents of North Vancouver, White Rock, Surrey, Burnaby, Victoria, and Kilworthy which points out that the present program of low-level flight training of pilots for NATO at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay is disrupting the life of the native people, damaging the environment, and is also inherently an aggressive war-fighting action that tends to endanger world peace, since the intent is to promote a first strike into Eastern Europe. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ends the present low-level flight training at Goose Bay, and ceases negotiating with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my responsibility and honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of residents of Atlantic Canada who are concerned about the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners are calling upon the Government to reject its plans to proceed with this legislation.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): I have another petition to present on behalf of a number of citizens who are concerned about the low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador. They believe that this disrupts the way of life of many of the native people there. The petitioners also suggest that the training of pilots at Goose Bay to fly under the radar into Eastern Europe is a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action that tends to endanger world peace.

Therefore, the petitioners are asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Parliament to end the low-level flight training programs at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, and to cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base at that location.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour under Standing Order 106 to present a petition which has been signed by many residents of New Brunswick. The petitioners are concerned about the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and that it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners believe that this is another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in the free trade negotiations, at the expense of average Canadians. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-240, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (open competition).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce my Private Members' Bill C-240. The purpose of this Bill is to open competition in the Public Service to the most qualified and best trained Canadians within the Public Service, which I feel does not presently exist. I look forward to speaking to this Bill in the future.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA POST CORPORATION ACT

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-241, an Act to amend the Canada Post Corporation Act (exclusive privilege).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to allow private sector competition with the Post Office by removing the exclusive privilege to deliver mail that the Corporation presently has. For example, it would allow utility companies the right to deliver their own bills, if they so choose.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-242, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (loss leadering).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill is to prohibit the retail sale of a food product in a food store at a price lower than the production cost incurred by the seller of the product. We find that this has been used as a predatory pricing practice and that once the monopoly has been established on the market, the price for the product simply zooms up.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Introduction of Bills

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-243, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act (apparel industry).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to introduce this Bill which would undertake to regulate the import of manufactured clothing into Canada in such as way as to encourage Canadian domestic production by relating importation to the volume of production. I hope to have an opportunity to speak on it soon.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-244, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (grain handling).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the international agricultural subsidy wars have given Canadian grain producers enough to worry about without domestic problems such as last year's grain handling and ports disputes exacerbating their situation.

The Bill would curtail work stoppages by grain handlers and those involved in the transportation of grain from the farm gate to the port. Instead of prolonged walk-outs, a mechanism for resolution would be immediately implemented thereby avoiding such work stoppages.

I urge Hon. Members to support this initiative.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

S.O. 29

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-245, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (suspension).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, in the unfortunate event that you found it necessary to suspend someone from the House for a day or a longer period of time, the Bill would reduce his or her salary accordingly by deducting a day's pay or an appropriate amount for the time he or she were suspended. I think it would be appropriate in that, in such circumstances, obviously the person through his or her behaviour would not be adequately representing the people he or she were elected to represent.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—GOVERNMENT ADHERENCE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 29, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the unparalleled circumstances surrounding the departure from Cabinet of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnette), which has raised grave doubts in the public mind concerning the integrity of the Government's dealing with contractors and its adherence to conflict of interest standards.

I should like to cite sources which would lead Your Honour to be able to grant the request for an emergency debate. In doing so, I refer to a speech given by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) several months ago in which he said:

> You will find no quasi-independent agencies in this Code that will allow the Government to shirk its responsibility by saying that the problem belongs to someone else . . . Instruments already exist which permit the Government to respond appropriately to such a requirement. But making use of these instruments will not relieve the Government of the responsibility to decide and to stand accountable before Parliament. The principles of responsible government and the supremacy of Parliament are respected and reinforced.

He went on to say:

[Translation]

> As Prime Minister, my primary responsibility is to protect the public interest and implement legislation and policies, including policies on individual behaviour and conflict of interest. All this comes under the responsibility of the Prime Minister, who has a duty to act firmly and expeditiously in the national interest.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rising on a point of order. I think, perhaps to save time, I can anticipate the point of order.

I have allowed the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) to go a little beyond the rule that debate is not appropriate at the presentation of an application such as the one which has been brought before the Chair. However, I assure the Hon. Member that the Chair has the point and is clearly of the opinion that it is an important matter.

As to whether it is appropriate under all the circumstances to order an emergency debate, that is a matter on which I would ask the Hon. Member to permit the Chair to defer its ruling until this afternoon.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 46 will be answered today.

[Text]

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS AND CROWN CORPORATION EMPLOYEES

Question No. 46—Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton):

1. What is the total number of public servants and Crown corporation employees employed in Canada and, in each case, how many are located in (a) the Ottawa region (b) each province?

2. How do these figures compare with June 1984?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): The tables below show employee counts at the end of June, 1984, and June, 1986. Federal Government Enterprises data are not available for the National Capital Region.

Federal Government Enterprises, Total Number of Employees in June, 1984 and June, 1986.

Geographic Location	Number of Employees
	June 1984	June 1986
Newfoundland and Labrador	5,463	5,608
Prince Edward Island	994	916

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), (p. 2382).

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-37 should be trashed, as should the Memorandum of Understanding on softwood lumber which this Bill aims to implement. Why? Simply, if you look at the facts, Sir, you will see that not only is the softwood lumber industry being betrayed by this agreement but so are the Canadian people, not only by this agreement but by other evidences of Canada being sold out through other attempts to make agreements with the United States.

Softwood Lumber Products

For many years Canada has helped the United States meet its lumber requirements. Canadian lumber has filled the gap between United States consumption and domestic production. When markets are good, the United States has encouraged Canadian companies to increase production to meet United States needs for wood products. When markets are bad there have been periodic attempts by some U.S. producers to restrict Canadian lumber imports. Each time Canadian industry has never been found to be anything but a fair competitor with its United States counterparts.

In 1982, a minority group of United States producers filed a countervailing duty petition against Canadian import policies, lumber policies and lumber imports. The United States Department of Commerce, through the International Trade Administration, the ITA, undertook a detailed investigation of the Canadian lumber industry. The American Department of Commerce ruled in 1983 that the Canadian lumber industry was not receiving any significant government subsidies in Canada. That decision had a sound, legal and factual basis and was not based on mere technicalities of U.S. countervailing duty law.

Since that ITA decision, Canada has not changed any of its long-standing policies. Unfortunately, accusations of unfair competition have been revived to try to lay the blame for current industry conditions on Canadian lumber. Congress, to curb Canadian wood product imports, called for quotas and tariffs. Others advocate changes to United States countervailing duty, in effect, changing the rules of the game so that it can be replayed with a stacked deck against Canada.

At this point, the United States threatened to slap a huge countervailing tariff against Canadian softwood lumber. Canada had a choice of one of several things. It could scream foul, press for a decision by ITA and, if necessary, appeal to GATT internationally. That was the first declaration the Government made. The Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said it was the Canadian Government's view that the preliminary countervailing duty in October was flawed in law, inconsistent with established U.S. practice and in some important respects based on eroneous assumptions. That was the first reaction of the Canadian Government to American threats.

Then this incompetent Government lost its nerve. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) huffed and puffed and made a so-called final offer. On September 30, 1986 our Canadian Trade Minister made her first final offer to the United States to settle the dispute by offering to raise provincial stumpage fees by 10 per cent; a compromise already, a sell-out. Then on November 26, 1986 she made her second final offer, this time to impose a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood. The offer was rejected by the U.S. industry coalition. On December 12, 1986 she rejected a U.S. counter-offer to accept the 15 per cent export sell-out on the grounds that the U.S. demanded its say on how the provinces would manage their resources. Finally, on December 30, 1986 Canada caved in and signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the United States that did, indeed, impose a 15 per cent duty for which the Americans were asking on exports of softwood lumber products, and according to the U.S. interpretation of the Memorandum of Understanding, also severely restricting Canadian provincial management of our own resources, our own forest management, our own replanting programs and so on.

The result is total confusion for the Canadian forest industry which totally opposed this sell-out, loss of markets in Europe and Japan, the laying off of workers and the spin-down effect of lost jobs in related sectors to the lumber industry. Now the Government wants to stuff this agreement down our throats by way of this odious Bill C-37 to implement this odious agreement.

Why were we sold out to the Americans, Mr. Speaker? The answer is not hard to come by. Canada could have taken the courageous way. We could have taken on the Americans, as we did in 1982 and 1983 under a Liberal Government and faced them down and made them prove that they were unfair before the Department of Commerce, ITA and the GATT in Geneva. Before those bodies we could have argued the case. We could have called the Americans bluff, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has pointed out.

The ITC prepared a report released September 23, 1986 that the United States lumber industry was not being hurt by Canadian lumber imports and the decision, we are told, could well have gone in Canada's favour. Even if we had lost that argument there—it appears we would not have, it appears we would have won—we still could have appealed to the GATT in Geneva. This American threat of countervail is unfair. It is as unfair now as it was unfair in 1982 as it was unfair in 1983.

Why did the Government cave in and sell our forest industry into slavery? Because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has an obsession to be loved by the Americans, to be in their tent, to get a free trade agreement of some kind, any kind it would appear. First fish, then shakes and shingles, and now we find the forest industry is being sacrificed. Next comes our softwood industry. In other words, it has to be the one to suffer and sacrificed in order that we will not annoy the Americans. Canadian workers in the forest industry have had to be sacrificed to appease Americans.

Canadians are rubbing their eyes. They are becoming annoyed at seeing Canada being used, taken, mocked and, worst of all, ignored. That is why the Prime Minister desperately needed to get Bush up here once again to bluff and posture, only this time to pretend that he is tough. The P.M. now knows that Canadians realize that he has gambled through appeasements and fawning and lost.

Canadians are becoming increasingly incredulous and outraged as they realize that the Government is so corrupt, so confused and so lacking in direction that it is betraying our national interest by bad judgments and incompetence. In his misguided and amateur effort, the Prime Minister thought that by fawning to the American President he could ingratiate himself. He tried to dissociate himself with past policies of the Canadian Government which were there in place to defend our independence. The Government has taken a step to try to eliminate our protection of our resources in energy through the elimination of certain efforts to give ourselves a reserve through the National Energy Program. The Prime Minister has eliminated our control over our economy through FIRA by eliminating FIRA and thus allowing investments in Canada that are not as much in the interests of our country as otherwise would have been.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reversed the Liberal policy of standing our ground against Americans on offshore sovereignty, in world courts and with independent foreign policy. I suggest that we are in grave danger. The Prime Minister has now found that his efforts to appease the Americans have brought only contempt and disinterest.

The Prime Minister's policy of appeasement has been recognized and now Canada is seen by Americans for what it is, a country stumbling while being led by a well meaning group of incompetents. The recent deal struck on softwood lumber with the United States is a most pathetic example of this. It is a case of confusion, bravado and posturing followed by exposure of the bluff. For Canada, it is a defeat and a disaster.

I would hope that after the Prime Minister's meeting with the American Vice-President, and after he learns of the mood of the country, the Government will reconsider this agreement, go back to the negotiating table and, if necessary, throw this agreement out and begin by appealing to the ITA, the ITC and GATT. I hope the Government seeks for Canada a just solution. We have not done anything unfair to the Americans and we should stand our ground and be courageous enough to say that this is where we stand, we are not cowards.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you check yesterday's records, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) spoke, followed by the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille). I believe you will find that it is the Government's turn to have the floor.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for the intervention. I regret that I did not see the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) rise. I am sure the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) will understand that we do follow the roster.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I know that that is one of the difficulties of Hon. Members who sit on the back-bench. They are not quite as noticeable to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I may not have recognized the Hon. Member but I always see her.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in participating in this debate. However, quite honestly, I must say that I have never heard such an erroneous twisting of facts as I have heard from Members on the other side of the House. I have never heard such outrageous indignation as I have heard from Hon. Members opposite who have spoken on this Bill.

I would like to talk about some of the facts pertaining to this issue. I have been trying to figure out what is really concerning opposition Members about this particular measure. I thought it might be the plight of the forest workers. I had a chance to look back on the record of six months ago when we were faced with the 35 per cent tariff on shakes and shingles. At that time we heard the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) predict that this particular measure would put thousands of jobs in jeopardy. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) called it an incredible decision which would sacrifice some 4,000 jobs in British Columbia. The Liberal House Leader, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), upped the ante again and said that it would put at risk at least 10,000 direct and indirect jobs in the province. That was the scary stuff that was spread across Canada.

What is the reality? Six months later we know that 80 per cent of that industry is operating at full capacity. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), who represents a constituency in which many of those plants are located, found that there was not the disruptive influence that had been predicted.

Quite honestly, the record on credibility of Members opposite was not very good on that issue, nor is it on this one. Again, we have heard during this debate wailing and lamenting about the thousands of jobs that will be lost because of this horrendous imposition of a 15 per cent export tax. What is the reality? The best source to which we can turn is the unions themselves. One would expect that the unions would be upset if what opposition Members have been saying were true. Certainly the unions would be the first to verify that. Instead, the reality is this. On January 5, a few days after the agreement was reached, the Western Canadian Regional Council of the International Woodworkers of America had this to say:

> During the past few days, the softwood lumber settlement has been severely criticized on both political and economic grounds. We would suggest that many negative comments have been both ill-informed and ill-founded. All seem to be based on the assumption that somehow the 15 per cent duty could have been substantially reduced if a negotiated settlement had not been entered into. That is simply untrue.

Opposition Members have said that if we had stood our ground things would have been different. We know that that is untrue, and they know that that is untrue. Why do we not all face up to reality?

I am sure my hon. colleagues are aware of today's article in The Globe and Mail reporting on a study done by the International Woodworkers of America on the impact of this particular tax on the industry. That report's assessment is that the federal tax on softwood lumber will have little impact on Canada's lumber industry. The article quotes Mr. Douglas Smythe of the International Woodworkers of America as saying:

"We believe that because of the very high efficiency of Canadian sawmills, particularly in the British Columbia interior, the Canadian industry will remain cost competitive in the U.S. market in spite of the export tax,"—

There will be little slowdown in lumber activity. In fact, the IWA suggests that while there may be some loss of jobs—and we have all admitted that some jobs could be lost—its estimate is perhaps 1,000 jobs over a period of time, most where plant modernization has not taken place. Fortunately, in British Columbia, we have taken a leadership role and have modernized our plants to become efficient and competitive. Unfortunately, this has not been done in some other parts of the country. To be realistic, we must be competitive in this global world of ours. We cannot expect to sit back and continue on with our old ways. We must modernize and become efficient so that we can be competitive.

Obviously members of the Opposition are not in tune with what the forest workers themselves are saying. In fact, there is this really ridiculous anomaly of federal members of the New Democratic Party wailing about this export tax while their British Columbia counterparts, both in the NDP and the IWA, are saying that this agreement had to be entered into because it is the best deal we could have made. No one likes trade wars. We must do something about them because they serve no one any good in the long run. However, given the present political and legal situation, the negotiated deal was the best deal we could have made.

Perhaps my hon. colleagues are concerned about the forest companies. Perhaps members of the Liberal Party are concerned about the forest barons and perhaps members of the NDP are concerned about the terrible devastation this may have on their profits. Again, the facts speak for themselves.

Let us look at the impact this has had on the price of forestry stocks between December 29, the day before the deal was announced, and January 20. The increase in the prices of those stocks was as high as 21.6 per cent in a three-week period. The price of Canfor stock went up by 21.6 per cent and the price of MacMillan Bloedel stock went up by 17.6 per cent. Do Hon. Members think those companies are suffering? Do they think the public perception is that the investors in Canada will suffer? They will not suffer.

Obviously, opposition Members are not really concerned about the forest barons. Perhaps they are concerned about the business community. Let me quote from a letter from the Board of Trade of Vancouver to the Hon. Minister, received just a few days ago after the Board of Trade had assessed this issue:

Everyone accepts that having the $600 million duty remain in Canada is obviously far better than having it go to the U.S. government. This money can now be used for much needed reforestation, silviculture and other public works projects that will enhance Canada's important forest industry.

It is my informed opinion that a duty of at least 15 per cent or probably more would have been the inevitable result of following the legal process to its ultimate conclusion. Even if we had won the legal case under those circumstances we would have been visited with even tougher legislation in Congress given the groundswell of protectionist sentiment in the U.S.

We know what the U.S. is facing on trade issues. We do not like it, but it is there. We cannot hide behind righteous indignation.

Obviously the Opposition was not concerned about the forest barons. I thought perhaps it was the provinces because I am sure opposition Members feel they must support provincial Governments. Yet we all know provincial Governments are the winners in this situation because that $600 million will go to them. They will be able to enhance their activities in silviculture, as was pointed out by the Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) yesterday, as well as do other creative things to help the forest industry.

Obviously it is not the provinces who are losing. Given that, I finally realized who opposition Members were trying to protect. Who is hurt by this tax? It is the U.S. consumer. So we have members of the Opposition standing up and fighting for the rights of the U.S. consumer because they will ultimately be hurt by the increase in the cost of lumber. I am surprised that U.S. consumers have not spoken out earlier. However, we are well aware that U.S. lobby groups are extremely strong and I do not think the U.S. consumer realizes the kind of trade war this results in. That is something we need to address.

Obviously I cannot cover all the issues involved in the few minutes I have left. However, the facts speak for themselves. This deal that the Canadian Government was able to negotiate under very difficult conditions enables us to keep the money in Canada. It is certainly the best and most courageous thing our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was able to accomplish.

I am sure we will have other opportunities to debate this, but this situation points to the necessity for entering into new trade arrangements with the U.S. If anything underscores the importance of that fact, it is this situation. We must have new mechanisms to resolve trade disputes. The existing mechanisms are not satisfactory, whether it is in this field, in natural gas or anything else. We have to come to a new understanding of what fairness is about.

Over the Christmas holidays I had an opportunity to meet with some U.S. Congressmen. They talked very eloquently about wanting fair trade and fair access to markets. I asked them what they meant by "fair". Was it the same? Was that what they meant by "fair"? They could not really reply. That is the problem we have to start addressing. We cannot mean the same thing because we have different political and business systems, as well as social structures. However, those are the issues we have to address and this Bill will implement—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on the second last day of 1986 the Progressive Conservative Government signed an eleventh-hour deal with the U.S., a deal without precedent in our history. In what should be described as the terms of surrender, Canada sustained its most severe blow yet along the Prime Minister's path to free trade. This deal, which has Canada imposing a 15 per cent tax on all softwood lumber exports to the U.S., including dressed products and remanufactured lumber, including even American lumber which has been imported and re-exported, is comparable to a sports team coming home from an out-of-town game having sustained a terrible drubbing and then saying it could have been worse.

I would like to briefly review the chronology which has led up to this disastrous agreement. We are all well aware of the preliminary determination and, perhaps more importantly, what preceded it, the victory won by the Canadian industry lobby in front of the U.S. International Trade Commission. We are well aware of the ripple of shock which went through Canadians when it was announced that the U.S. lumber industry was again seeking an ITC ruling in its favour for protectionist measures against Canadian lumber. The preliminary determination by the ITC went against the Canadian industry and it would appear that is when our country's troubles really started. Until that time there had been little intervention by the Government of Canada. Yet at a time when Canadians should have pulled together, when Government, industry and the unions should have co-operated, it appears that our Government struck out on its own on a course which led us to the predicament we are now in.

I would like to briefly quote the President of the Canadian Forest Industries Council:

> The second thing we can clearly note from this sorry tale is the absence of a formal protocol or mechanism for coming together as Canadians.

He continues:

> The solo excursions of various politicians into what had theretofore been a successful co-operative strategy destroyed years of the most extraordinary united effort by a major industry.

There he is of course referring to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). Those are telling, trenchant condemnations of the Government's failure to consult. I do not think there is some form of vested interest in those remarks. There is no percentage in the President of the Canadian Forest Industries Council criticizing a Minister of Government in those terms, unless it be simply to put on the public record before Canadians what the truth is and where the Government has fallen down.

It is not my intention to merely conduct a jeremiad against the Government's actions. It is certainly not to indulge in the sort of Pollyanna optimism we just heard from the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). The agreement is signed and I would like to deal with the reality. Whether it was signed at 10 per cent or 15 per cent, it contains very serious defects.

The straws that the Government is clutching at in its interpretation and presentation of declarations of support are in fact assessments and analyses made by various interested partners. It seems to me that the need for certainty very much governs the assessment. I believe that is why there has been an indication from the unions in British Columbia and some industry spokesmen that perhaps they can live with the agreement. It is the greater fear of uncertainty which exists in that province and the lumber-producing sector which is less evident in other parts of the country. That of course is influenced by the very high level of unemployment in British Columbia, unemployment which the Government has done little if anything to recognize and absolutely nothing to bring down. It is said that a drowning person will clutch at a straw and that is indeed a straw which the Government has thrown to the industry in British Columbia.

We have a range of analytical and speculative factors that will govern our reaction to the possibility that without an agreement the case would have been won. I do not want to gratuitously attack the Government here. Obviously it had to make its own judgment. However, it could have signed a far better agreement than it did. It could have signed an agreement that would not lead to the many problems that this agreement will.

This agreement does indeed dangerously compromise Canadian sovereignty. Barely a commentator or analyst has attempted to rebut that point. It allows for the replacement of the export charge with stumpage increases only through U.S. agreement that the value of the stumpage increase alternative is equivalent to the export charge. We are letting the competition look at our books. Even in provinces like British Columbia, where it is acknowledged by the Government that stumpage is too low, it is unacceptable in terms of Canadian sovereignty and independence to allow the American Government to dictate what the level of increases should be.

The American interpretation specifically prohibits the provision of grants, low-cost loans, and other benefits to the forest industry. It is totally amazing that the United States Government and its International Trade Commission have been granted the power to shape the future evolution of the Canadian forest industry, far more than perhaps even they believed possible. They now have de facto approval over virtually any development in our forest industry.

The agreement states that any replacement stumpage must yield the same price increases on lumber exports to the United States as the tax. This could have disastrous consequences for the pulp and paper industry in Canada which is larger than our softwood lumber industry. If we follow the American prescription, we will have a stumpage system which will render our industry vulnerable to competition from U.S. domestic producers. It would give Sweden, Finland, and other countries which are beginning to produce pulp, a competitive advantage over the Canadian pulp and paper industry.

The export tax which is introduced in this agreement goes against GATT. It is illegal under the terms of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Our greatest counterweight to the American presence in our trade is being snubbed. Industry competitors such as Sweden may go to GATT and insist that we increase our prices for exports to all other countries, thus making our exports competitive in all of our markets.

With regard to keeping the money in Canada, if we had won the case that would have occurred anyway, because there would have been no money paid out. This agreement will cause great divisions between the provinces, particularly Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia. There is no clause in the agreement which states that it will not be used as a precedent in other proceedings. The 30-day provision is ludicrous. Our competitiveness is decreasing as a result.

In the strategic context of free trade negotiations the Government of Canada could have done nothing worse than to sign an agreement on a specific sector, because it calls into question all the other sectors on which our trade depends. It defies reason for the Member for Capilano to suggest that we need a dispute mechanism after the Minister said in the House last month that we were not going for that. This agreement is a prescription for disaster, not only in Canada's forest industry, but in many other sectors of our economy.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, the vice-president of a lumber manufacturing company in Northern Ontario has written to me with regard to the 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber. He said that as an elected representative from Northern Ontario my support is needed to oppose this tax which will have an adverse impact on the lumber industry and on communities like Hearst, Chapleau, Terrace Bay and Elk Lake. He writes: "I am of the opinion that the Government's handling borders on bungling", and that "the Government overrated the strength and role of the American lumber coalition opposed to Canadian lumber exports".

It is well known, as Adam Zimmerman, chairman of the Canadian Forest Industries Council has pointed out, that it is a nonsensical assertion and fallacious theory put forward by some U.S. lumber interests that stumpage can be a subsidy. In most cases in Canada wood costs are higher than they are in the United States. Costs are higher because it is so expensive to harvest trees in Canada, to bring those trees to the mill where they can be transformed into usable products. The costs are high because of the nature of the terrain where the trees are harvested, because of weather conditions, and because of long distances from the cutting site to the mills. The question is not one of the value of a tree on these stumps but, rather, what it costs to bring that tree to a place where it can be converted into a usable and marketable product.

On that point, the Alberta Forest Products Association, in a letter to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), said that the industry is convinced: —that we are not guilty of receiving stumpage subsidy and this fact stands up to verification procedure. We, along with other CFIC members, have spent much time and effort, along with over ten million dollars ($10,000,000.00) in professional fees, to research, analyze and present our position. Our attorneys assure us that our position is a win situation and legally sound.

A Washington trade lawyer, with regard to the agreement signed by the Minister for International Trade, (Miss Carney) said recently that "it must have seemed more sensible to the U.S. lumber industry to accept the Canadian settlement rather than risk getting nothing at the end of the day".

What will the effects be of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber? Of course, opinions on the effects vary. For example, in The Globe and Mail this morning it is reported that the director of research for the International Woodworkers of America has argued that the Canadian industry can absorb the tax and remain competitive, particularly in the interior of British Columbia. I do not know whether that is so or not. However, according to him, only about 1,000 jobs will be lost in the forestry sector as a result of this tax. The loss of 1,000 jobs seems rather serious to me. However, the Canadian Forest Industries Council itself has a different estimate. According to them, abut 6,000 jobs in the forest industry are in jeopardy as a result of this tax, and that another 11,000 jobs in allied industries and services are at risk.

A lumber company executive from Hearst, Ontario wrote a letter to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew). This individual who is executive president of the Levesque Lumber Company says:

Crown dues in Ontario are five to eight times higher than those in British Columbia, so the imposition of a 15 per cent increase in stumpage to Ontario lumber firms would be a prohibitive expense to Ontario producers. In addition, British Columbia has offshore markets and sells surplus lumber in the Ontario market because of low freight rates from British Columbia to Ontario. So British Columbia has three markets, (the United States, offshore, and the Toronto Montreal area) whereas Ontario only has the local market and the central United States market.

I was more than a little interested in what my Progressive Conservative neighbour, the Hon. Member for Timmins—Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) said in the debate yesterday when he let us know his views. First, as reported at page 2530 of Hansard, he agreed that:

—the potential ramifications of the tax on northern Ontario are serious indeed.

A little later in his speech at page 2531, he went on to say:

I do not deny that a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood will hurt softwood lumber producers in northern Ontario.

Further on he said:

—I do not deny a tax increase is not altogether healthy for the softwood industry—

But quite curiously, at the end of his speech he said:

I support the Bill of the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

As an even more curious afterthought, he said:

I will not relinquish my efforts to fight for the lumber industry in northern Ontario—

Will the Member for Timmins-Chapleau not begin his fight now and oppose and vote against Bill C-37? I believe it is more important to support our region of northern Ontario than it is to support the Minister for International Trade, so I say to the Hon. Member that the reasons given in his speech yesterday for supporting this Bill are weak and rather unconvincing.

Let me review those reasons quickly. He said that if we had not struck a deal with the Americans we may have faced a countervail tariff higher than 15 per cent. The evidence is all to the contrary. There is no evidence that it would have been higher, but there is good evidence that we would have won our case in Washington.

Second, he says that the money will stay in Canada where it can be used. For what? He calls upon the Premier of Ontario for support, saying that we can use this money to retrain forestry workers who will lose their jobs. The Hon. Member has much more faith in these retraining programs than I do.

He also talks about the establishment of a heritage fund for northern Ontario and doing more research on the spruce budworm problem.

I invite the Hon. Member for Timmins—Chapleau to come with me at the end of the month to meet a large number of bush workers from Hearst, Mattice, Opasatika, and Chapleau to make these arguments in their presence and see how convincing they are.

The Member for Timmins—Chapleau also says that the money could be used to help find new markets in Europe and the Pacific Rim. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that what prevents us from gaining access to those new markets are the prohibitively high freight rates that we must endure in our region.

Therefore, I conclude by saying that from a northern Ontario perspective Bill C-37 is just unsupportable. It simply has to be opposed by all Members from the region, including Liberal, New Democrat and Progressive Conservative Members alike. This is a clear-cut and unequivocal regional issue and I call upon the Member for Timmins—Chapleau and the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) to stand with all Members and let us have one strong voice in the House for northern Ontario against a tax which will inevitably result in a large number of lost jobs. It will be a set-back for the industry and our economy is much too fragile to be hit with yet another blow of this kind.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-37 which has been introduced as a result of an unfortunate situation that has developed between the American lumber interests and lumber interests here at home.

It is my opinion and that of many others, including many in the industry, that the Memorandum of Understanding that was signed between the Governments of Canada and the United States was concluded under conditions of some duress. The Government of Canada found itself between a rock and a hard place, and I believe without any doubt that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) reached an agreement that they believe is in the best interests of Canadians now and in the future.

While I, as well as industry, recognize that there are certain deficiencies as a result of the agreement by which we cannot come out a winner, I believe my hon. friends in the Opposition would have to agree that it is much more beneficial to have the money generated from this export tax remain in Canada for the benefit of Canadians than being collected by the Americans.

Of course, we will never know whether this dispute would have been resolved in favour of the American or Canadian interests if it had gone to the international courts. The unfortunate part of that situation is that such a procedure could take years and a decision in favour of the American interests could involve the collection of such a substantial amount of money that it could jeopardize an industry today as well as in the future. Industries would not be able to determine the price of their lumber exports to the United States because of those future uncertainties.

I want to deal specifically with the Maritime region. I am most familiar with the difficulties being experienced in the Maritimes, particularly the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia which depend heavily on the forest industry as a basis of their economy. The Government's decision as reflected in the Memorandum of Understanding could have very serious impacts on that industry.

Let me state two positions with which I sympathize and agree, which have been taken by a group known as the Coalition Against Unfair Lumber Taxes, formed by the Maritime lumber interests. The first position is that at no time were the Maritime provinces identified by the American lumber interests as being the problem. They maintain that, as they are not part of the problem they should not become part of the solution.

It is with this in mind that I implore the Government to look at the situation in the days and weeks to come, because there are opportunities within the Memorandum of Understanding to do so. For instance, the Memorandum of Understanding states that:

The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America agree that the fiscal year 1985-86 for each province will be the reference year for establishing the baselines from which increased provincial charges will be calculated.

• (1220)

Clause 5a states:

The Government of Canada may reduce or eliminate the export charge on the basis of increased stumpage or other charges by provinces on softwood lumber production.

Clause 8a states:

The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America will consult semiannually and otherwise at the request of either Government regarding any matter concerning this Understanding.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that this is extremely important for the following reasons. First, it is the position of the Maritime lumber industry that because it was not identified as being part of the problem, that is, it was not specifically named as was British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, it believes the American lumber interests would be prepared to grant a blanket exemption to the Maritime Provinces. Five firms in New Brunswick, for instance, were granted an exemption under the countervailing duty action which was the initiation of this entire procedure.

It is important to understand that the Maritime Provinces export only 1.5 per cent of the total amount of lumber which goes into the United States. Over 95 per cent of Canada's timber harvest which goes into the United States comes from other regions of the country. The Maritime Provinces account for substantially little of what is shipped into the United States, yet we pay the largest stumpage fees.

It is important to recognize that the stumpage fees in New Brunswick were increased in excess of 25 per cent and the stumpage fees in Nova Scotia were increased in excess of 10 per cent since the timeframe was identified by American lumber interests and the Memorandum of Understanding was signed with reference to the particular time-frame.

It is also important that we recognize that we in the Maritimes are paying stumpage rates now of between $46 and $57 per 1,000 compared to $1 to $10 paid by the four provinces which were named. We, therefore, submit that we are not part of the problem and we should be excluded . In fact, there is basis under the Memorandum of Understanding for the Government to take action now, to go to the American authorities and gain that exemption for us. We feel we are entitled in law and in compliance under the agreement.

I think it is also important to understand that 57 per cent of the lands in New Brunswick are freehold lands. In Nova Scotia I believe close to 67 per cent are freehold lands, whereas in the balance of the country the freehold lands only account for 8 per cent of the production of lumber goods. By definition, then, it becomes obvious that we cannot expect that lands which are not subjected to stumpage can be part of the problem or would have been part of the countervail action. There is no subsidy on freehold lands, so obviously that point becomes very important in determining the future.

There is in jeopardy thousands of jobs in the Maritime Provinces. The Government has the opportunity to address this problem under the Memorandum of Understanding which is in place. We implore the Government to utilize that power and the jurisdiction which now falls within its purview to have, if necessary, stumpage rates increased in the four provinces which have been named. I urge the Government to move in this direction immediately.

There are thousands of jobs in the Maritimes which are dependent on a healthy and competitive lumber industry. We must ensure that the Government puts in place policies which do not result in job loss or the loss of our competitive situation, which could be one of the difficulties.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): This year's New Year's present from the Government to Canadian industry is Bill C-37 which imposes a 15 per cent charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products to the United States. For Canada, this Bill is a great disaster, not eclipsed even by those disasters who have been appointed to the present Cabinet and who have had to resign.

There are several serious problems created by Bill C-37. They are certainly worse than the problems we had before, or the problems we could have had if the Government had been willing to take our case to GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The Government has set a precedent for the American lumber industry to control vital parts of the Canadian industry to a greater extent than it now does. It already owns far too much of Canadian industry, but this gives it the right to look into the books of our largest exporting industry, our lumber industry. It also gives the Americans the right to argue about federal-provincial relationships, to get into the argument of stumpage fees, to interfere between negotiations within Canada which are often difficult enough in their own right. It is also illegal. It will bring down on us the wrath of countries like Sweden, normally a good friend and ally. We will be accused of discriminating by placing a tax on exports to only one country, the United States. We will perhaps be forced to put that tax on all our exports. That will cut us out of still more of the foreign markets we have enjoyed and which we need.

There are many other disadvantages to the Bill which some of my colleagues have outlined in great detail. However, I want particularly to take up an objection made on Tuesday by the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), the Hon. Member for Halifax. He did not disprove any of our arguments so much as simply complain that the New Democratic Party is always against and never for anything. What he said was said in a very cheerful way, but it was nonsense. It was a good thing he smiled when he said it. I quote from page 2500 of Hansard on January 20:

My friends in the New Democratic Party must come out of their igloos.

I am here from my igloo in Spadina.

We are now in the 20th century. We must turn on the light bulb and become aware of the realities.

Members in that particular Party are against everything. It is about time they took a position with regard to what they are in favour of.

In the time I have at my disposal I would like to give the Minister a list of a few of the things of which this Party stands in favour. We have spoken strongly, in and out of this House, in favour of a very large Government effort to provide the sort of child care which is needed by parents, especially by working mothers. That is something we are in favour of. It might even come under the jurisdiction of the Hon. Minister if his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) does not want to handle it. We are talking about capital and operating subsidies to non-profit daycare centres, which are the most efficient.

We have also spoken out in support of the garment and footwear industries of Canada. There are certain actions this and the previous Government should have taken which would have greatly strengthened those industries without cost to the taxpayers. However, this Government, like its predecessor, is wishy-washy on that issue whereas we have taken a firm stand.

We have also pointed out that many prairie farmers are facing bankruptcy, those who have not already gone through bankruptcy need much more serious financial aid than they have received in the past, particularly because of the unfair competition from the United States which subsidizes its grain exports to about twice the dollar rate per bushel as Canada.

We have also spoken out strongly against the increase in the tolls on the Seaway by the Government. In other words, we spoke out in favour of lower tolls on the Canadian Seaway for the export of our grain, something which not only the farmers but the country badly needs. The Government is trying to squeeze revenue out of our export trade at a point at which it can no longer be squeezed. All it can do is put more farmers out of business with these high tolls.

We have also spoken many times in favour of Canada's railways, which the Government seems willing to dismantle. When I was first elected to the House a little over five years ago the then Official Opposition was against the dismantling of the railway system. Now that that Party has crossed the floor it is carrying on what its Liberal predecessors were doing. It is dismantling the system by mishandling the work of VIA Rail. We have been told that there will be legislation, but it is on the slow back burner. We are not being given any serious opportunities to discuss the railways in Parliament.

CN is planning to lay off 14,000 employees over the next 10 years. The Government says it can do nothing about that. Yet it can give $1 billion to a bank which went broke because it attracted investors with high rates of interest based on faulty loans which turned bad. In other words, we rewarded greed which was not producing anything. However, to reward railway workers for producing transportation is as unpopular with the Government as rewarding farmers for producing wheat.

We are asking for a rebuilding of the tracks. We are asking for the production of new rolling stock. We are asking for the renovation of Canada's railway system. That is something positive. I have not heard the Minister of Public Works or any of his colleagues give any support to such ideas.

We are asking for 50,000 units per year of social housing. Even at that rate it would take us 10 years to catch up on the backlog of 500,000 under-housed people, a figure supported by the former Minister responsible for housing. It is a modest figure but it would take us 10 years at 50,000 units per year to accomplish that end. Instead, the Government has cut back on social housing. We have demanded consistently that the Government intervene in favour of housing that ordinary Canadians, including the poor, can afford.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I am not too sure whether we are still debating the same Bill, but I think the Hon. Member is talking about housing. I did not say anything for a while although I believe that Members have been debating half a dozen issues which have absolutely nothing to do with the matter now under consideration.

For weeks on end the New Democratic Party had been virulently clamoring that the Government ought to deal with the softwood lumber issue, yet this morning we have heard speeches on housing, Quebec day care centres and what else except the matter under study. In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should get back to the subject on which they were so insistent for a number of weeks.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) in the closing minutes of his remarks will find a link between those subjects and the Bill which is now before us. Perhaps he will focus on the Bill in the few minutes which he has left.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I was attempting to clear up the misunderstanding created by the Hon. Member's colleague, the Minister of Public Works. Apparently, the Hon. Member and perhaps the Minister do not want to hear the answer to the question the Minister posed two days ago. I wish to make the link more clearly since they cannot figure it out for themselves.

The Bill before us will damage our chief export industry. It will damage it by cutting back on markets. Whether or not it will produce net revenue to the Government, and what the Government in its wisdom will do with that revenue has not been outlined. So far it has demonstrated its wisdom in cabinet scandals. Perhaps it will buy more armaments or become involved in more land scandals, we do not know.

There has been no indication that the supposed benefits of the Bill, the revenues which will accrue to the Government, will be used in any positive way. The Government has been asked by the cities of Canada, and by all the provinces, to take a one-third share of the cost of rebuilding roads and sewers which are essential infrastructures. The NDP supports that proposition.

Will the Government undertake to use this revenue for purposes such as the ones I have outlined? Or does it have a better purpose which it wishes to announce and commit itself to carrying out? The Government does not do anything of the sort. It simply grabs the revenue, something which will have a destructive effect on the economy of the country and which in turn will lower the Government's revenues. The Government is so short-sighted that it simply grabs the revenue without telling us what it plans to do with it. There have been some vague words about perhaps helping the lumber industry. There have been no specific undertakings, however, neither outlined in the Bill nor in the announcements of the Government. There have been no specific undertakings as to how it will help the lumber industry, the farmers, the transportation industry, the housing industry, the child care industry or any of the industries of the country which are suffering badly from government neglect.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, it is highly regrettable that the Canadian public is rapidly coming to the conclusion that the Government has been intimidated, bullied and boxed into a corner by the U.S. administration with respect to the matter of softwood lumber. I do not know whether or not it is entirely fair to go after the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) alone. There is a pattern of which the Government has failed to get hold and which it has not pursued with its contacts in Washington and in other places where we meet with members of the U.S. administration, the strains of which we can find going back to a few years ago.

I urge Hon. Members to cast their minds back to 1981 when the Reagan administration came into power. If Hon. Members do what I ask they will begin to see the roots of the problem that we are seeing here today. At that time the Reagan administration, because of inflation, introduced a severe and tight monetary policy. In other words, it attempted to re-evaluate the U.S. dollar. Thus it exported inflation where it could. In the process the U.S. dollar climbed and climbed almost out of sight in relation to other currencies.

Having achieved that by 1982-83, what began to happen gradually was that the healthy U.S. trade surplus turned into a serious trade deficit. As the deficit developed in late 1984, and then substantially in 1985 and again in 1986, the Americans began to push, press and bully other nations with which it trades to establish certain barriers and certain rules which were not in existence until then. It is Canada which has come under the gun. Japan is coming under the gun now and the European Common Market will come under the gun next.

What we in the Opposition fail to understand is why we have a Government which fails to take this debate to Washington and point the fingers at the U.S. administration, that the body which has been trying to force the solution of the problems it caused itself on other nations. I submit that this trade imbalance would not have taken place, this turn-around from a surplus to a deficit in the U.S. trade picture, if it had not pursued this ruthless monetary policy which resulted in an increase in the value of the U.S. dollar, which then resulted in the American economy pricing itself out of international markets. It did this because its products were just far too expensive and much less competitive. That is the root of the problem and one that we should advance and remind the Americans of, rather than allowing ourselves to be intimidated, bullied, and finally boxed into a corner, as was the case in the lumber situation.

There were policy options that you are probably aware of, Madam Speaker, because they have been raised in the House. Instead of arriving at a bilateral agreement, the matter could have been pursued through the American tribunal system. That option was not pursued.

As another possibility, we could have initiated action under GATT to indicate that something was going badly wrong. Why did we not explore this possibility? Because the Conservative Government unfortunately forgot that under the Tokyo Round of Tariffs we negotiated free access to the U.S. market for our lumber in exchange for giving them free access to business equipment and computers. Therefore, we have paid the price of opening our frontiers to business equipment and computers. We feel that there has been a departure from that agreement. Therefore, we would have been fully entitled to repudiate that agreement. That is something that the Government failed to understand as a legitimate Canadian complaint and pursue through GATT, that international forum created to receive and review this type of dispute.

The fact that we have been bullied by the United States administration is increasingly troubling Canadians. It also leads to the unfortunate conclusion that by the wording of some parts of this agreement there has been a serious infringement on the intangible and important sense of being Canadian, and to the sense of our sovereignty. To my astonishment, under "Exchange of Information and Monitoring" in Clause 7a, it states:

> The Government of Canada will provide the Government of the United States of America with data concerning the level of Provincial and Federal softwood and total stumpage harvest—

It states also that it will provide the Government of the United States of America with:

> —the total revenue collected from the sale of Provincial and Federal softwood and total timber, total export charge collected, total shipments of certain softwood lumber products to the United States—

And, that it will provide to the Government of the United States of America:

> —total lumber production by province and total softwood lumber production by province, for each fiscal year within three months of the close of the fiscal year or as soon thereafter as is practicable—

We see what types of concessions are made in terms of accountability on the Canadian side to another jurisdiction for its own actions.

I wish to quote Clause 7c.

Not later than sixty (60) days after the end of each quarter, the Government of Canada will provide the Government of the United States of America with a report on a province-by-province basis containing, at a minimum, the following: the quantity of softwood lumber products exported, the value on which the tax was paid, and the total tax collected for the quarter. If a monthly statement is requested, it will be provided not later than sixty (60) days after the end of that month.

In light of the content of that agreement, I do not know how in early January the Minister for International Trade could have proclaimed victory. This baffled me. I am sure that it is a source of continuing and increasing concern, as has been expressed by a number of editorials that have appeared in the national press.

When we had a similar incident in 1983, we supported the industry in the resolution of this dispute. We made sure that the industry would be given the necessary instruments to battle its case in the United States. At that time the lumber industry had the support of the Canadian Government, and it did well.

In 1986 the Government came to power with the aura and commitment to consensus building with all sectors of society. In this particular battle it decided to replace industry, go it alone, thus creating this enormous tension that we have heard about between the industry, that is making justifiable and understandable claims, and the Government itself, which took a different course of action and forgot about its own commitment to consensus building with the sectors in society.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): With regret, I must advise the Member that his time has expired.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure and honour for me to rise and speak on Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

What we are experiencing is a result of neglect of previous Governments in not looking after our foreign trade, especially with the United States. In 1984 our Party had the foresight to make this issue one of our planks, so that we would have security of trade with the Americans, our largest trading partner. This has been pursued with great diligence for the last two years and five months of our mandate. We have initiated, and some people say we have even bullied the United States, into freer trade talks. We felt it was extremely important that we have assured trade with the Americans, and that we would not have to pass a Bill such as we have before us today imposing a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

The Americans have a problem. In the past, we did not realize that the Americans may flex their muscle, that they would find that their debt load was increasing, and that their trade imbalance was causing them severe problems. A year and a half ago, this Government took the initiative to say that we want freer and assured trade with the Americans. This was on the fast track.

This is the positive step that we have taken. We knew that this was going to happen. In 1983 we knew that the Americans were having problems, and this time the best advice that we received was that we might not be as successful as we were then. Certain things had changed, and we took the best possible advice. We had to face up to what would happen and decide what to do. If we had accepted the countervail duty, it would not have been in the interest of Canadians. We knew that the lumber industry was the largest industry in Canada and that it accounted for more exports than any other product. We had to do something, and we did.

Since assuming office our Government has participated in consultation. We consulted with the provinces in 1984, 1985, and 1986, and we are continuing to consult with them. We have also consulted with labour, business, and interest groups for the benefit of all Canadians. We consulted so that we would be able to represent Canada in the best possible way.

When the softwood lumber dispute with the Americans arose, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met with nine Premiers in November 1986 at the First Ministers Conference in Vancouver. We faced the problem. We decided that in the interests of all concerned we would negotiate with the Americans. We did not want to let them take money through the imposition of a duty on our lumber, so we decided to do it ourselves and keep the money in Canada. It was a very sensible thing to do. Surely we had a responsibility. There would have been countervailing charges against Canadian lumber. With that in mind we had to negotiate with the Americans and rightly so; the reverse would have been true. We have done it in good faith and properly. We will be providing them with information and they will be providing us with information covered in the agreement.

What was the alternative to a countervailing duty? It was exactly what we did, and that is why it is good for all concerned. The provinces and the unions have agreed that it was the best possible course of action. However, if we had set up our freer trade agreement with the Americans sooner, if the previous Government had initiated it, this would never have arisen.

It is the best deal for us. The provinces will be retaining their flexibility in determining stumpage prices. In the months to come these will have to be negotiated among the provinces and the federal Government. The increased revenues will remain in Canada and will be distributed to the provinces accordingly. Of course the dangerous development of an American countervail policy has been avoided by the withdrawal of the petition.

The Alberta Government has stated that it feels this is the best possible solution under difficult circumstances. We must remember that 70 per cent of Alberta softwood lumber products are exported to the United States. Although we do not produce as much as British Columbia, Ontario, or even Quebec, it is a significant industry for us. The economy in Alberta is very fragile. The prices of oil have dropped drastically. Agriculture is in great difficulty. Tourism is attempting to grow, but it is not as big as it should be. Lumber is increasingly important, and the fact that 70 per cent of our lumber products are exported to the Americans is very significant. If the Alberta Government feels that it is the best possible solution under the circumstances, then it is. I have to stand up for what our provincial Government is stating in this case.

The Alberta Government has also stated that the Alberta forestry industry will be closely consulted about any changes which might be made to the current stumpage system. I should like to return to consultation. It is very important for our province and for our country. I am glad to see that our province will be consulting with industry and that the federal Government will continue to consult with our province and with other provinces as well. These are very important factors.

To set the record straight, the United States issued a statement on January 2, 1987 in which it made clear that Canada's sovereignty had not been compromised. This point is a very important one because time and time again the Opposition has indicated that somehow our sovereignty has been compromised. It has not. I should like to quote the statement. It reads:

> The United States will not be concerned with how Canadian authorities make changes in their forest management practices, when they do so or what form these changes take. Those are matters for Canadians to decide. The United States is concerned with the valuation measures and their impact on the export charge.

That is fair. We are maintaining the sovereignty issue. Mr. Speaker, I get the point and I see your finger; I thank you very much for this opportunity.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I hesitate to ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) to withdraw his last comment because I know you, Mr. Speaker, and would never consider the things of which he has accused you.

At any rate, the problem before us today is extremely serious. I think it has been a litany of errors down the road that has brought us to the situation with which we are dealing in the House today.

We must return to the period of 1983 when we won a case before the international trade agencies of the United States, which said that our stumpage was not a mechanism of subsidy—the finding was de minimis—and that basically we were not impairing the U.S. market with our timber exports. It was further stated by many people knowledgeable in the industry that Canada had made a great investment in additional productivity. We had made it ahead of the Americans. We had some of the most productive mills anywhere in the world.

The administration of U.S. forest lands was so poor that they hobbled themselves and created a situation where they could not access timber at a reasonable price. We wound up paying the price for incompetent administration in the United States and incompetent investment in its forest industry. If it had wanted to survive and prosper, plans should have been developed and the errors should have been rectified. Instead, we have multinational companies, which operate in both Canada and the United States, going to the U.S. Government and saying "handicap Canada in terms of international trade so that we can get our game together". These are unacceptable procedures in international trade.

The essence of the problem is that when they failed the first time, they came back a second time with enormous political pressure on their own Government. This placed pressure on our Government, which yielded to them.

How did that yielding come about? I have a growing sympathy for my colleagues on the other side of the House. In the face of enormous adversity they are trying. They were placed in an interesting position. An election was in progress in the Province of British Columbia. A man, after some successes with solving one strike and hoping to make other conquests, thought that he would solve international trade problems single-handedly. The individual, Mr. Vander Zalm, the Premier of the province broke ranks with industry, labour, other Governments and the national Government in Canada and shot off his mouth in an absolutely inappropriate way. There is a problem with our stumpage rates, we will do a review on them and try to accede to American demands, he said, when it had been agreed across the country that we would maintain our efforts, present our case again where we would likely win it again. But Mr. Vander Zalm broke ranks with Canadians and, in an obviously thoughtless and ill-considered way, destroyed the Canadian case. He went even further, saying that if the rest of Canada did not see it his way he would go it alone and make a private deal with the U.S. It is a complete betrayal of international activity for the Premier of British Columbia to do that.

When a delegation leaves this House and meets other countries we generally put partisan activities aside and deal with an issue as Canadians, not as New Democrats, Conservatives or Liberals, but as Canadians looking for the best deal. We do not break ranks. We do not shoot from the mouth. We try to put Canada in the best possible light. Mr. Vander Zalm in a thoughtless and irresponsible way destroyed the unity of Canadian resolve and destroyed the case.

That is when the Government fell into a dreadful situation. The Government was then not capable of arguing any further after the Premier of British Columbia had admitted Canadian guilt. There was no way back. We had to go to the Americans to propose an alternative and I think we made a terrible mistake. We compromised our sovereignty and moved too quickly. The old saying that you should never light a fire to a bridge that you may have to crawl back over on your hands and knees was not recognized.

We should have offered to sell raw logs to the Americans on a contract basis. They should have been allowed to bid along with Canadians for raw logs for a maximum period of three years. The contract could have been renewed every six months so that we could carefully monitor the effect on Canadian industry and our participation in the American industry.

Let us look at what that would have done. The Americans' argument that we were subsidizing our industry through stumpage would have disappeared, because they would have had access to the same wood. With sixth month renewals of a three-year contract we could have stopped the deal immediately should there have been harm, and we could have looked for another alternative. We would have been able to buy time for an adjustment to allow our industry and our Government to work out another position with the U.S.

The logging industry has been devastated on the coast of British Columbia. Most logging communities have seen more than half their employment destroyed. Alberni, one of the highest per capita income areas in Canada for a long period of time, lost 6,000 jobs in the forest industry. Had we opened that area for a short period with renewable six-month agreements with the Americans, log sales would have escalated and employment would have been developed where it has been receding. We would not have compromised our sovereignty and we would have given ourselves time to seek a negotiated solution, up to three years. Political realities would have changed in the United States, and I suspect that we would have been in a far better situation to solve this than the way we have dealt with it, without anywhere near the job loss. In fact, there would have been a substantial increase in employment. Canadian communities would have benefited. Canadian sovereignty would not have been impinged. Our trade relationship with the United States would not have been harmed and we would have built in a safety valve to protect ourselves with that short-term agreement.

There would have been some benefit to American mills. The Americans had proposed this in a roundabout way. They wanted to bid on Canadian timber and log it, but that was unacceptable. Had we allowed the Americans the right to bid on it in a purchase arrangement, Americans would have had logs at the same price that Canadian enterprises were buying logs, and that would have been the end of the discussion. It would have caused nowhere near the harm that has been caused. It would have enhanced employment in many areas of the country that have serious problems.

To recap, how did we get into this problem, Mr. Speaker? We got into it because the Premier of British Columbia put the Canadian Government, the Canadian producers of softwood lumber, and the Canadian workers in that industry in an absolutely untenable position. He broke ranks with the rest of Canadians and said: "I know better. I can solve this myself. We are guilty of exactly what the Americans have falsely accused us of and I will make a separate deal with them if the Canadian Government does not see it my way". If we had one more premier like that in Canada, Canada would be in a terrible position. If we had two or three people that irresponsible we would not be able to deal in an international forum.

We should recognize that we chose probably the least productive way of doing this. I do not think anyone in this House, either in the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party, is satisfied with what has happened. People are not satisfied with the agreement concluded by the Government. Unfortunately, when you work with a gun to your head you work under great pressure. There are those who define it as, "We got the best deal we could". Unfortunately, I do not think we did. I think we had a solution at hand that the Americans would have accepted, and that we could have accepted over a short period of time. We would have resolved not only the problem of curtailing softwood lumber exports in the United States market but created enormous employment.

The success of the Americans in doing this with softwood lumber is quite an incentive for them to try the same tactic against any range of Canadian products. They know if they go to the Province of Saskatchewan and choose a product sensitive to the economy of Saskatchewan, force the Canadian Government and the Saskatchewan Government up against the wall hoping that the Premier of Saskatchewan will cave in the same way as Bill Vander Zalm caved in, by cutting ranks with Canadians, trying to make a separate deal with the Americans—a deal that would not have been any good for British Columbians—they would see that product subjected to the same kind of extra territorial control that softwood lumber was exposed to. This could apply to every product about which the Americans are concerned.

As a recap, the Canadian Government did respond to this dilemma with a gun to its head. Unfortunately, I am convinced that the Government is not satisfied, that organized labour is not satisfied, that the producers are not satisfied and that the other provinces are not satisfied. We got into this situation because of the Premier of British Columbia's ill-conceived remarks, and we chose the wrong solution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain), and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there is an element of what is morally proper for political Parties to do in pursuit of public support. I think the Opposition Parties in this particular instance have gone far beyond the proper moral bounds of advising the public of Canada about a particular situation. I think this is a precedent which has retained our opportunity to negotiate and to avoid what might very well have been a catastrophic imposition of surtax or duty on our exports of lumber to the United States.

There seems to be no recognition of the nature of the Congress of the United States, or that a group of people interested in improving the status of the economy of their own community will join with other groups. You have the lumber group, the steel group and the agricultural group. There was no doubt, with the mood of the United States Congress, that if this matter was not decreed by industry, trade and commerce of the U.S., that it would have been decreed by legislation. I think this is a precedent of negotiation of which all Canadians should be proud, and for which the Government should be congratulated.

Yes, there have been difficulties but these difficulties have not emanated from the negotiations. Perhaps the major precedent set by this situation is that there will still be an opportunity to negotiate. If adjustments are made in Canada, there will be adjustments made to the tax imposed. What more could a country ask of another country?

Hon. Members have spoken of sovereignty. Every time a country signs a trade deal it loses an element of its sovereignty. It must indeed meet certain standards and specifications for the product in the market in which the negotiation has been conducted. In the case of fruit and vegetable exports, sanitary conditions must be met. In the case of meat and food exports, health conditions must be met. The list is endless. Whatever trade deal we undertake, we commit ourselves to the standards of another country because that is what the other country wants. The customer is always right in the private sector.

The customer, the United States, has expressed itself and has compromised with Canada. It has kept this matter on the negotiating table where it belongs and where it would not be had legislation been passed, as it unequivocally would have been passed without this type of negotiation. It is immoral not to give the Government and the industry the credit it deserves for the plans they have made and the negotiations which have been successfully concluded.

When the Conservative Party came into power in 1984, we took the place of a former Government whose Prime Minister had been treated with contempt and described with profanities or obscenities. That is the kind of relationship we had in the United States. When we came into power we were asked to remember that the former Prime Minister of Canada had said to the Queen of this Commonwealth about the Constitution: "Well, if you don't like it, just hold your nose and sign it anyway". That is a hard position for any Government that wishes to establish good relations to find itself in.

When the Law of the Sea Conference and the 200-mile limit and its restrictions were negotiated, we could not get votes from our Commonwealth partners in the United Nations. They were not available to us. Neither the Prime Minister nor the Foregin Minister of that day asked our foreign legations for their support. Do not criticize this Government for the errors of the past.

Every trade negotiation the United States has undertaken since the 1930s has been subject to legislation then in place which offered the United States Trade Department the opportunity to impose duties or penalties at its borders if a particular industry in a particular community within the United States were to be hurt. That provision has existed for some time and we have never, in any negotiation with the United States, been able to override it. Why then is criticism being pointed at this Government which is bound by historic treaty and agreement? The weakness is not in what has been done recently, but in the historic negligence of trade negotiators since about 1935. Do not forget that the Liberal Party has been in power for some 39 of the last 49 years. It conducted these negotiations and it is now throwing poisoned arrows at itself.

No country should be asked by its Opposition or by its people to put every single, solitary item of discussion on the public table. That is not good business practice. As an example, I cite the negotiations in the fisheries trade. At that time there was no way a member of the Opposition could preview what the Liberal Government was offering in its negotiations. When Liberal Members were questioned carefully, no answers were available. Except for the ill-advised approach taken, particularly in the Law of the Sea Conference and the settlement of the 200-mile limit, I was quite prepared to support the secrecy which the Prime Minister and Ministers of the time requested. A poker player does not turn his cards face up on the table until the deal is completed. There is not one private industry, businessman or conscientious director of a board who would reveal to stockholders the total plan the company has for expansion and development. Businessmen seek the greatest amount of good will with customers possible. It is very difficult for a Government of this land to establish good will with the United Kingdom, the European Economic Community or Japan if it is to be chastised, criticized and condemned by opposition Parties.

This is a Parliament of three Parties and there must be support for trading efforts made by the Government of the day regardless of what Government is in power. If there is a weakening factor in any trade negotiation in which Canada has entered in a search for freer trade, it is in the condemnatory, critical, idiotic internal criticism arising jointly from opposition Parties.

Mr. Langdon: Your own lumber bureau.

Mr. McCain: Our own lumber bureau met with our caucus and I was present during that meeting. Our own lumber bureau congratulated the Government on the deal.

Mr. Langdon: Oh, come on.

Mr. McCain: Oh, yes, it did. I was there. I do not know what any individual of that bureau may have said, but I know what the official message was. It did ask—

Mr. Parry: What else could it be, Fred?

Mr. McCain: Just a minute. The bureau did ask that there be continued negotiations on the basis of the information given by the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) that the tax was not justified in Atlantic Canada. However, the bureau felt that it was the best deal that could possibly have been made under the circumstances. It asked for further negotiations to try to get a better deal for Atlantic Canada which has costs in line with the standards which had been set. Those negotiations will certainly be undertaken.

I must say that the suggestion that we export raw and unprocessed logs runs contrary to NDP policy, to Liberal policy and to Conservative policy. It runs contrary to the policy of every provincial Government regardless of its political stripe. The worst thing this country could possibly do would be to open the door for the export of raw logs, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly). That would be in contradiction to British Columbia NDP policy, government history, Conservative policy and Liberal policy across Canada. That is not a viable solution. The export of raw logs would do very little to reduce the unemployment which may result in Atlantic Canada, because a great deal of the work is done at the mill as well as in the woods. That would be a half a loaf at the very best and would not solve the problem.

In the main, the small, private millers in Atlantic Canada own their own land at a major cost and do not have cheap stumpage under those circumstances. It is on that basis, among others, that the lumber bureau did ask us to continue to negotiate. Thank God we saved a major portion of the industry.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, since I have been a Member of this House—not that many years—I have had great respect and continue to have great respect for the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain). However, I have seldom heard him utter such drivel on a subject with which he is familiar, or make statements which so obviously follow the Party line in an attempt to put the best face on a difficult, if not impossible, situation into which Canada has been seduced, as I have today.

He refers to our previous Governments and the relationship we had with the U.S. I can say that perhaps the U.S. did not love the Liberal Government. Perhaps President Reagan did not love Prime Minister Trudeau. True, I do not ever recall seeing Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Reagan singing together as the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did with President Reagan at the Quebec City Summit. However, I can tell you one thing, our Government was respected in Washington.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: It was not loved, perhaps, but it was respected. There is no respect for that Government in Washington. In fact, Washington is almost contemptuous of the Government. We witnessed that yesterday. How many times did Prime Minister Trudeau feel obliged to summon the Vice-President of the U.S. to Ottawa to give him a so-called tongue-lashing because the Prime Minister was dissatisfied with actions taken by the American Government? The Prime Minister obviously feels deeply offended that he has given away all the chips, he terminated FIRA, savaged the NEP, genuflected at every conceivable opportunity and even looked for opportunities to genuflect before Washington, and despite all that he is unable to strike any kind of trade deal except a disastrous trade deal on softwood lumber.

The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte referred to precedents and I will do so in a moment. However, trade, as we know, is Canada's life-blood. Some 30 per cent of our GNP is dependent upon trade. The forestry sector has historically been the backbone or mainstay of Canadian exports. So it remains and so hopefully it will continue to be unless it is completely crippled by the ineptitude and blundering of the Government. The U.S. takes almost 80 per cent of our exports and is critical to the survival of the forestry industry. Intelligent management, and I underline those words, of that trading relationship is absolutely necessary. In fact, it is probably the single most important challenge for this country in its external commercial relations.

The softwood deal we are looking at now is probably the historic low point of any trading relationship Canada has had. We were not looking for miraculous solutions from the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). She had to travel a road, it is true, but it was a road already well travelled by previous Liberal Governments. I want to expand on that point in a moment. We watched the Minister in her previous role and so we did not have unrealistic expectations of her; we didn't expect much. However, we did expect a minimum of competence and that is all, frankly, that was required. The reason for that is, as I said, because the precedents were there.

Mr. McDermid: Where were you when the NEP was announced?

Mr. Johnston: I was here in 1983.

Mr. McDermid: You did not even know it was coming.

Mr. Johnston: That Hon. Member was here as well.

Mr. McDermid: You admitted it in your book!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): John, did you read his book?

Mr. McDermid: I did.

Mr. Waddell: That will teach you.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, if I had known I was going to be subject to that kind of silly abuse I would not have autographed the Hon. Member's book.

The Prime Minister said that the Minister has the ball, watch her. We watched her. We watched her fumble. We watched her trip. We watched her slide. We watched her fall. On this issue all she had to do was carry the ball down a wide open field, no opposition, and yet she ended up in the bleachers. What does this portend for other complex and complicated trade negotiations which she is involved in?

Lest you think I am exaggerating let me take you back to the Government's statement with respect to its strong position and the cards it held on the softwood lumber deal. If you will allow me to do so, and not subtract from my time the unruly intervention of the Hon. Member, following a long and exhaustive examination of similar charges in 1982, Congress determined that provincial stumpage did not confer a subsidy on Canadian lumber producers. There were three principal reasons given and documented. They were legal and ironclad, and the situation has not changed. The Government has acknowledged time and time again that the situation has not changed. Having enumerated all those reasons they said that under any test there is no government assumption of costs. The situation remains the same. There was no subsidy, the case was won, and indeed the Americans capitulated. Nothing has changed. The precedents were there. The field was wide open.

The Minister had the ball and what did she do? On September 30, 1986, she offers to settle the issue. She says we are not guilty, there is no subsidy, but we will settle. Press reports of the day indicate that settlement was in the order of 10 per cent. Why did she do it? Why would anyone do it? Why would anyone ignore the precedent of 1983 and the strong arguments which are confirmed in the document to which I have just referred? What happened, of course, when she made that offer, is that the U.S. industry quite understandably tasted blood. She, with this generous gesture, said to the U.S. competition and the world that indeed Canada was subsidizing its lumber industry. That was not the case but she said it. I ask you, faced with a 10 per cent offer, how else could that be interpreted by the U.S. industry or any objective observer looking at the relationship between our industry and that of the U.S? So she fumbled the ball right into the hands of the U.S. competition.

I think you, Mr. Speaker, were in that famous Grey Cup game in 1954 when Chuck Hunsinger was running around the left end. He had a pitch-out from Sam Etcheverry and he dropped the ball for no apparent reason. It is a mystery to this day. Jackie Parker picked it up and ran for a touchdown. That is exactly what the American competition did. Our Minister is the contemporary version of Chuck Hunsinger, but the consequences are a lot more serious than a Grey Cup, even though I know how much you cherished that victory.

If anyone in the U.S. blinked, as the Minister alleged they blinked, it was out of disbelief. They blinked the way you blink when you are playing a slot machine and hit the jackpot. Sure, you blink. When you win a lottery, you blink. If anyone blinked, that is why they blinked.

What happened subsequently—damage control? Will it end? Yesterday's exercise of inviting the Vice-President to Ottawa is clearly an exercise in some kind of damage control. It was terribly unsuccessful. Thinking of my own Leader's speech when he drew an analogy to Waterloo, it seemed to me that Vice-President Bush, in coming to Ottawa yesterday, was very much like Wellington paying a courtesy call on Napoleon after Waterloo. Of course, Napoleon would probably have given him a tongue-lashing as well.

Are you indicating that my time is up, Mr. Speaker? I have not yet come to the substance of my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes. In fact, I enjoyed the Hon. Member's speech so well that I gave him an extra 30 seconds.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity you are giving me to express my views on this Bill concerning softwood lumber products.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to take the floor because I was quite convinced that, given the support of the largest Canadian labour union and of all provincial Governments in Canada, except Ontario, as well as the excellent explanations provided by our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), it was more than enough to make Canadians appreciate what the softwood lumber agreement entails.

However, Mr. Speaker, after listening to the debate, especially the comments of Members of the Opposition, I can see that a group of people still do not understand and would much rather deal in petty politics. These people would much rather discredit the federal Government, the Progressive Conservative Government, as well as nine provincial administrations. This is what they are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, and when we listen to someone like the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) we realize just how arrogant the Liberals were during their last mandate and over the past twenty years. They simply did not listen and consult, they never came to the defence of the provinces because their own interests had priority.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was in the House working quietly on some of my files when I noticed that the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) was seeking the floor. I thought he would be making interesting remarks but, as he was speaking, I realized he had made a few mistaken statements.

His worst mistake was when he said that the whole forestry question was strictly a provincial matter.

Mr. Speaker, I said to myself, either the Hon. Member intended to mislead the House, which I doubt, since he always said he was sincere, or he did not know the facts. I made enquiries and realized that he did not know the facts and that he had an extremely short memory, because in 1980, at the beginning of the election campaign, the Liberals, and I am not naming any names, promised they would spend $130 million annually on reforestation research, to stimulate further development of Canada's forestry industry. Mr. Speaker, there are 300,000 workers involved, according to their figures, and that is what they promised at election time.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that in 1982 and 1984, they set aside a mere $50 million in their Budget for the industry? That is far less than they promised. Are we going to believe these people? We must let Canadians be the judge of whether these people are telling us the truth, whether the federal Liberals, and I am not naming any names, are sincere when they say they are defending the interests of the Canadian people and of our lumber producers. Mr. Speaker, they were the first ones to put Canadian forestry operations in jeopardy.

Mr. Gauthier: You don't know what you're talking about!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon, I was listening to the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe, who said: We have a serious reforestation problem. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do have a serious reforestation problem because when the Liberals were in power, they did nothing for the forestry sector. For twenty years they paraded their arrogance and walked all over the provinces. In Quebec we remember what it was like. In Quebec, Mr. Speaker, people remember when the former Prime Minister of Canada, Pierre Elliot Trudeau, referred to Mr. Bourassa, the present Premier, as "Un mangeux de hot-dogs". That was a sample of Liberal arrogance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, we must be watchful. Canadians must be told. We must tell them to be perfectly honest, that with these people opposite, their personal interests always come first.

Mr. Speaker, if they had only considered sitting down and consulting, a word that unfortunately is not in their dictionary, our country's forestry industry might have been in much better shape.

Mr. Speaker, when we were elected in 1984, our Government recognized its responsibilities. We were faced with a serious deficit. We had a problem. The provinces would not talk to the federal Government because of their experience with the incompetence of the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Speaker, we have signed agreements in the forestry sector. The Progressive Conservative Government has increased by about 400 per cent the federal contribution towards reforestation through subsidiary agreements with British Columbia, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and Alberta. Mr. Speaker, these are much more than election promises, these are achievements.

We spent $300 million to repair the damage done in Quebec by the previous Government, Mr. Speaker, $300 million to maintain 300,000 jobs throughout Canada, including Quebec. We are not talking about petty politics, Mr. Speaker, these are concrete measures taken to honour our election commitments.

Mr. Speaker, I can only laugh when I hear the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) say that the Progressive Conservative Party has failed to live up to its election promises. He should be more concerned about his own unkept promises, more concerned about the fact that he and his Party have misled Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a statement which again proves clearly and in no uncertain terms just how arrogant the former Liberal Government could be with respect to Quebec. Mr. Speaker, here are some of the remarks made by Quebec's External Trade Minister Pierre MacDonald during a press conference:

> Had there been no negotiations with the United States we certainly would have been unable to launch our reforestation and forest management program. There is no way we could have asked the industry to pay a tax of much more than 15 per cent which would have been collected by the United States and which would have added 7, 8 or 9 per cent to this levy. Thanks to the agreement signed with the United States we can now implement Bill 150 and revamp our forest management policy. We could not have done this if we had opted for a different solution.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest the message is quite clear.

An Hon. Member: He is not one of your Ministers!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): And he is not one of the Conservative Ministers. If he were a Conservative Minister I might say I am being partisan to a certain extent. But no, Mr. Speaker, this is a provincial Minister who did support the understanding and who now abides by the agreement he signed with the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States. Mr. Speaker, his is a responsible Government and he is a responsible Minister. What I still fail to understand, Mr. Speaker—and the Opposition will have to prove—is why the Liberals and New Democrats insist on saying it is a bad agreement, whereas 90 per cent of all Canadians endorse our action. Indeed, if nine provinces out of ten, plus the federal Government are for it, it does add up to 90 per cent, not to mention the support of the labour movement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the only advice I can offer the Liberals and New Democrats if they are sincere when they say they are aware of the Canadian people and are prepared to listen to them and to cooperate with the provincial Governments is this: Stop being arrogant, get to work, sit down at the table with us, forget about scoring political points and together we will build a strong and prosperous Canada, not as you seem intent on doing a rudderless country such as the Liberals left us with on September 4, 1884.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this Bill, I want to tell my hon. friend who just spoke that there is an important national interest that must be addressed. He should consider that there are some very efficient mills in interior British Columbia that will begin selling to Ontario and Quebec if they cannot sell their lumber in the United States. That will push out some of the more marginal producers in those provinces. Therefore, there are ramifications all across the country.

I am sorry that the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) is not in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) is watching on television. He may be outside in the lobby. The Hon. Member knows very well that he should not reflect on the attendance of Members in the House.

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I had talked to the Hon. Member. He told me that he would follow my speech and I was addressing my remarks to him. I wanted to respond to him to his face.

We know that it is worth listening to all piano players, especially the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount. I wish we had a question period after his speech because the Liberal Party is split on this free trade matter. The Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount is on one side of the issue and the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is on the other. Their Party is also split on the Constitution, with the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount on one side and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on the other. It is hardly a Party that is ready to govern Canada, and I hope for their sake, perhaps not ours, that they resolve their differences.

I want to address a number of matters that have been raised in the debate. First, it was stated that there is a difference of opinion about this deal between British Columbia and Ottawa. Let me point out what I believe to be a British Columbia position held by the IWA, Government and Opposition Members and some journalists, including a leading journalist from British Columbia, Marjorie Nichols, who will soon grace us with her presence here in Ottawa. I believe these people are putting forward a British Columbia provincial point of view which is distinct but not necessarily in conflict with another point of view that can be put forward in the federal realm.

The provincial point of view in British Columbia is simply that British Columbia has been losing $200 million a year in forestry, which is rather difficult when one considers that British Columbia probably has the best forest resource in the world. Therefore, the implication is that British Columbia Governments have been undercharging the companies for the use of that forestry resource. This has been stated recently by Premier Vander Zalm and other academics from British Columbia, and it perhaps has given the Americans ammunition to support a countervail duty.

I believe Premier Vander Zalm should have initiated an increase in stumpage fees and proceeded to fight the countervail through the usual procedures such as GATT, rather than supporting the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in making what she has called an out of court settlement. The fact that the resources have been priced so low in British Columbia has meant that some inefficient corporations have survived, unions have had higher wages and the industry has had higher profits. It was a comfortable situation and I believe the mistake made by British Columbia was not changing it soon enough.

The International Woodworkers of America, which is said to support this deal, has its own issues with which to deal. We must remember that the IWA has just finished a long strike and is looking for some stability in the industry. They want to resolve this problem and get on with working, which is understandable, but does not necessarily mean that I, as a federal Member of Parliament, must support their position.

I believe there is a bigger issue which does not conflict with the British Columbia position. It is that of nationl sovereignty. The Americans now have the ability to intervene in the setting of our resource policy in Canada, which is a bad precedent. That is an issue that is different from the issue in British Columbia facing the unions there.

The politicians in British Columbia should consider how they will use the money they will receive from this agreement.

I want to give a warning to my colleagues and friends in British Columbia. I acknowledge that keeping the money in Canada is better than giving it to the Americans. It is fine to absorb a large portion of that $600 million charge on the forest industry, as is happening now. Government Members are correct that the forest industry can make a lot of money by passing the cost on to American consumers through higher lumber prices in the United States because they still want good British Columbia lumber. However, what will happen when there is a downturn in the American economy? The situation will suddenly become difficult, with the result of lay-offs at home and problems for British Columbia producers. Taking $600 million from the forest industry will result in almost no profits this year, which is not healthy.

Let me explain why this is an issue of national sovereignty and a reason for my opposition to the deal. I believe the Minister dropped the ball on this issue because the Americans now have a precedent to intervene and are already exercising that power. Approximately a week ago a body from the United States, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, decided to intervene in the way Canadian companies and Governments calculated their prices for natural gas. Within a number of weeks after this deal, the Americans were telling Canadians how to price their gas resources. I am sure this question was raised with Vice-President Bush yesterday, because it is an intrusion on Canadian sovereignty. We will probably see the same intervention with steel and other products, because when dealing with the United States it is not wise to make such deals. It is like an elephant rolling over a mouse.

The New Democratic Party treats this issue very seriously because it is a matter of national sovereignty. If the Government does not go down to defeat as a result of scandal and sleaze, which could happen very shortly, it will go down to defeat over the issue of keeping our economic sovereignty.

We could have pursued other alternatives. Our trade critic, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), has suggested the multinational route of negotiations which has served us well in the past. He also suggested that we consider making deals such as the Auto Pact, in relation to bilateral trade issues and other irritants. These would provide proper safeguards for Canada.

There are only a few key issues which face Canada. One is Canada-U.S. relations and another is government intrusion into the private and public economies. The third would be the nationalism issue between Quebec and Canada. There are other issues, but those are the basic issues with which we will always deal in Canada. The Government has fumbled the ball on this particular issue.

• (1350)

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to make one reference. I wish the Government would read the brief by Charles Widman on behalf of the softwood lumber manufacturers. I think they got a raw deal in the agreement the Government made with the United States. They have now been lumped in. They do not just export, they do some manufacturing. They were not properly consulted. That oversight is going to cost a number of jobs in British Columbia. I say to the Government and to the Minister, for heaven's sakes, look at the deal again in terms of making some adjustments for this group because I think they have a particularly good case. They say the duty was designed primarily to impose a tariff on the primary producers of lumber and that in fact the secondary remanufacturers are being adversely affected. I think that is an unjust part of the deal.

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, whatever the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) may have said to the contrary, we certainly have no intention of playing petty politics with this Bill. We are not that conservative! In any case, I tend to take all political rhetoric with a grain of salt, and as for the applause my hon. friend garnered during his speech, it came from the only people who think they have anything to applaud about in the House today.

We look beyond what this Bill provides for here and now, in an attempt to foresee the short-, medium- and long-term consequences, something this Government is not doing at all. If the Government would try to look at the short-, medium- and long-term instead of producing Bills to cover immediate needs only, the polls would start looking up and it would still have some credibility left with the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to speak to this matter today, considering the impact of the Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act on the Province of Quebec and across Canada.

Actually, nothing would surprise me from a Government that is bending over backwards to let our American neighbours decide what is good for Canada. What does surprise me is that hardly any Conservative Members from Quebec, aside from a few who rose in the House, including my hon. friend from Champlain a few minutes ago, have been in the House to speak to this Bill. The point was brought up by several Members during the previous debate, and I noticed it myself in the course of the proceedings on this Bill.

Of course I realize Conservative Members from Quebec would be somewhat reluctant to speak to this question since the Bill has the unfortunate effect of taxing Quebec producers more than producers in some other provinces.

A Conservative Member from Quebec would have a hard time convincing his constituents that he was right to approve a Bill that applied a double standard to Canadian industries, depending on the province, since the F.O.B. value of the product varies from region to region and from province to province.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that a number of Canadian industries, including some in Quebec and particularly those which get their lumber supply from the United States, will be very hard hit by this tax ordered by the Americans.

I simply cannot understand why the Government will not listen to the representations and recommendations of lumber producers' associations which point out to the Government that this tax will eventually lead to a 10 to 20 per cent decline in the current Canadian production, worth roughly $600 million in 1987, and 15,000 to 17,000 fewer jobs. These cutbacks include about 6,000 jobs in cutting operations and 11,000 jobs in related and support industries.

A member of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association goes even further by stating that Canadian softwood lumber production might decrease by as much as 25 per cent in 1987. Mr. Speaker, how can anyone talk about stability in this industry when provisions of this Bill on the export charge, Clauses 9 and 26(3), indicate that the agreement may be cancelled within 30 days? How can an agreement which is subject to cancellation within 30 days contribute to create or maintain a climate of stability in this industry?

Mr. Speaker, this agreement may very well lead to similar demands from some of our trade partners who would want Canada to meet their conditions and would take advantage of the weakness of our representatives and of our Government to say that, since they are proud to be major economic and trade powers, we should get down on our knees before them and implement countervailing measures applicable to various other products which we export on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, signing an agreement with one of our trade partners can only be an incentive for other countries with which we maintain trade relations. Mr. Speaker, it is beyond me how our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) can walk out of the House after Oral Question Period or on any other occasion with their heads held high, and as soon as they are outside the House and meet their American friends, they crawl and start bartering away our country and our sovereignty while penalizing Canadian industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think this Bill contains clear evidence that the Minister for International Trade and this Government are not competent to manage the affairs of this country. Mr. Speaker, in the past three months we have seen the Minister for International Trade, in an attempt to end the trade dispute, offer to increase commercial stumpage fees by 10 per cent, which she did on September 30, 1986. On November 26, the Minister made a second final offer in which she agreed to impose a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber, an offer that was rejected by the U.S. commission. On December 12, 1986, she turned down a U.S. counter proposal to accept the 15 per cent export tax, explaining at the time that she could not accept this attempt by the United States to control management of provincial resources. Finally, on December 30, 1986, Canada signed an agreement with the United States which imposed a 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exports, and which, as interpreted by the Americans, will severely restrict the provinces' control over their resources.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and quote the names of groups or persons who submitted their views and find this decision unacceptable. I am thinking of an economics professor at Carleton University in Ottawa, who believes it would be foolhardy to allow Washington to have direct control over how the $600 million raised by the export tax will be spent. He also said that the Americans were clearly showing they did not trust Canada by availing themselves of the right to monitor the application of this tax. This is the same attitude they take towards the Soviets, according to our economist, which proves that distrust is not a monopoly of East-West relations.

Mr. Speaker, I think this Government—and I want to make it clear this is not an attempt to play petty politics—I think we should ask this Government to reflect and consider the consequences before signing any agreements with our trading partners.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. McDermid: Question.

Mr. Benjamin: No.

Mr. Gauthier: No, no, debate.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is one minute to two o'clock. You called the question and there were no speakers rising.

Mr. Benjamin: There were so.

Mr. McDermid: There were no speakers rising for debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to speak and I am standing in my place and I intend to speak today.

Mr. Benjamin: So am I.

Mr. Gauthier: There are very many other Hon. Members of the House who are interested in speaking—

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EARLY RETIREES' ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on December 3, 1986, the Forget Commission tabled its report and said that the unfair cuts in unemployment insurance for pre-retirement pensioners should be cancelled. On December 5 the Minister rejected that recommendation but said that pre-retirement pensioners who were receiving unemployment insurance before January 5, 1986, would have a chance to requalify if they could prove that they made their pre-retirement decisions on the basis of inaccurate information. Most pre-retirement pensioners were not satisfied with that announcement.

This week the Minister issued detailed instructions respecting that proposal. Our worst fears have been confirmed. The Minister has placed an almost impossible burden of proof on these complainants.

If the Minister will not rescind these cuts altogether, then he should at least make it easier for more pensioners to qualify. All those qualified prior to January 5, 1986, should be reimbursed their full unemployment insurance benefits.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT'S NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, many people in my constituency of Eglinton—Lawrence are upset with the Government. Part of their anger stems from the Government's handling of the free trade talks but, more particularly, from the so-called deal on softwood lumber which the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) made with the United States.

The Government has caved in to the President of the United States by imposing a 15 per cent tax on Canadian softwood lumber. First, the Minister for International Trade proclaimed that she would not bend to American pronouncements and that our lumber industry is not subsidized. However, when the President of the United States raises his voice to say: "Yes, it is subsidized and this is not fair to Americans", the Government bows in agreement. The result is increased taxes on softwood lumber and the loss of thousands of Canadian jobs.

The Government has hit an all-time low in terms of the respect in which it is held by the Canadian people. Canada's sovereignty is not for sale. We will fight this sell-out of our sovereignty because we care about the right of Canada to make its own export policies without taking orders from Washington.

HOUSING

NEED FOR AFFORDABLE HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the Government decided that all public housing funds would be directed to those most in need. Under the previous Liberal Government only one-third of the total annual housing units provided went to households in need. This year the federal Government and the provinces will fund the construction and rehabilitation of 45,000 additional housing units for needy Canadians, bringing the total number of social housing units in Canada to 450,000. That is an impressive number until one realizes it is less than one-half the number of units really needed.

According to CMHC there are more than one million households in Canada, including elderly, low income, single parent, working poor, and disabled, which are unable to obtain affordable housing. At this rate it will take at least 12 more years before all Canadians have affordable housing. Is that good enough in the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless?

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES SOFTWOOD LUMBER AGREEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has put itself, the Canadian lumber industry and Canada in a very difficult position as a result of the lumber agreement it signed with the United States.

With the Government capitulating to certain American interests we can expect other U.S. interest groups to use similar tactics and go after other Canadian industries which are competitive in U.S. markets. We are not yet aware of how badly this agreement will affect us, for the federal and provincial Governments have not yet decided if they will continue with the export tax, raise stumpage fees, or take some other action to satisfy the demands of our neighbours.

The Minister must examine carefully what further action should be taken. An increase in stumpage fees, particularly in a province such as Ontario where stumpage fees are the same for softwood and pulpwood, will have a devastating effect on the pulp and paper industry, as well as the softwood industry. An increase in stumpage fees will inevitably raise the input costs and hurt the competitiveness of the pulp and paper producers who are the mainstay of communities such as Dryden, Fort Frances, Kenora, Terrace Bay, and Marathon.

HEALTH

DEPARTMENT'S DISCONTINUATION OF POISON CONTROL SECTION'S SERVICE TO HOSPITALS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, when someone turns up at a hospital emergency entrance suffering from acute poisoning the medical staff ought to have immediate access to information about the particular poison contained in the product consumed, the antidotes, and recommended treatment. The discontinuation by the Poison Control Section of the Department of National Health and Welfare of poison control information to hospitals therefore comes as something of a shock.

Surely such information ought to be readily available by phone on a 24-hour basis to any hospital or medical practitioner across Canada. In view of the minimal cost of this essential service, the Department of National Health and Welfare should reconsider its decision.

REQUEST FOR JUSTICE FOR EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): This morning, Mr. Speaker, spokesmen for the association of retirees without unemployment insurance who represent the 35,000 early retirees in Canada stated they were utterly disappointed by the guidelines issued by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and added that the guidelines have nothing in common with the information the Minister himself gave them here last December.

Mr. Speaker, unlike in the case of repayments to the bank depositors who had $60,000 or more in their accounts, the Government's intention to repay the 35,000 early retirees whose unemployment benefits were cut off is nothing but a joke because, if we look at the guidelines, they are just another way of denying benefits to as many people as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I dare hope that all Conservative Members will make strong representations to both the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) so that these people be treated with justice.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the positive impact of the decisions made by the Conservative Government.

Recent economic indicators continue to reflect the sound basis of the economic and fiscal measures introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), as the value of our dollar rises and interest rates continue to drop.

Since September 1984, the prime rate of the chartered banks has dropped from 13 per cent to 9.75 per cent. One-year mortages are now available at 9.5 per cent.

More than 666,000 new jobs have been created in the past two years, and the unemployment rate has dropped from 11.7 per cent to its present rate of 9.4 per cent. In addition, last year's drop in the federal deficit was the first such drop in six years. With a forecast deficit of $32 billion in 1986-87, this Government will have achieved two successive reductions in the deficit for the first time in the past sixteen years.

Mr. Speaker, this Government will continue to apply its agenda for economic renewal toward improving the standard of living of all Canadians.

REFUGEES

CENTRAL AMERICAN REFUGEES' ATTEMPTS TO ENTER CANADA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, is Canada abandoning its commitment to refugees who are fleeing from Reagan's wars against the peoples of Central America? For years, death squads and armies, paid and armed by the United States, have killed and terrorized the peoples of El Salvador and Guatemala. Many of these people have fled to hide in the United States. The U.S. has now proclaimed a tough new immigration Act which will deport them back to the countries from which they fled. As they now try to enter Canada in growing numbers to claim refugee status, our Immigration Commission seeks to hinder them. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has announced that he may force them to wait in the United States while their claims are examined. This would expose them to further danger of deportation to El Salvador and Guatemala.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, and according to a resolution unanimously adopted in federal council on January 18, I call upon the Government to promise not to block the entry to Canada of the Salvadorans and Guatemalans who are fleeing the United States and coming here to be examined for their refugee claims. Instead, let the Minister bring in the long promised refugee legislation, as recommended 14 months ago by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its report tabled in Parliament. This would be a speedy and humane procedure, not a panicky slamming of Canada's doors against people in need.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINE'S DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House that this is the sixty-ninth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of Ukraine. With the fall of tsarist Russia on January 22, 1918, the Ukranian Parliament issued a proclamation establishing an Independent National Democratic Republic of Ukraine. This new state recognized the rights and freedoms of its people: freedom of speech, religion, press, and the recognition of basic human rights. It is a state that is proud of its culture and heritage.

However, the imperialistic forces of the Soviet communist regime suppressed and overthrew the Ukrainian state in 1922. A reign of terror ensued.

The Ukrainian people fought bravely for their freedom but were subjected to unspeakable horrors. During the black famine of 1933, more than six million innocent Ukrainians were forcibly starved to death.

As a Canadian of Ukrainian descent I call upon all Canadians to join in the remembrance of this historic day and to pray for the freedom from oppression of all peoples.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST THAT PORT OF QUEBEC BE REOPENED

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the latest developments in the labour dispute that has been going on for more than four months at the Port of Quebec City.

At the request of our Government, this week there were two days of negotiations, ending today, between the Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's Association.

The federal Minister of Labour, the Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux—

Mr. Speaker, I cannot go on because there is too much noise. With respect, I would ask that order be restored.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members to respect other Members when they are making their statements, and I call for order.

Mr. Tremblay (Québec East): The Canadian Minister of Labour, the Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux, invited the Quebec Harbour Corporation to delegate its chief executive officer to act as an observer during the mediation meetings intended to break the deadlock.

The expectations and hopes raised by those meetings are high. Proposals are on the table. Consultation is required and decisions are needed.

The Harbour of Quebec is a major economic force with an overall annual economic impact of close to $700 million and accounts for more than 7,000 jobs. The impact of that conflict on the economy of the region is now reaching alarming proportions.

I strongly urge employers and longshoremen to go on with their negotiations and to do all they can to reopen the Harbour of Quebec as soon as possible.

TAX ON SOFTWOOD MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, one of the many deficiencies in the softwood lumber deal is that Canadian remanufacturers of a number of wood products—pallets, bed frames, furring strips, boxing, and roof decking—now face a 15 per cent tax not only on their raw material but on the value of the finished products.

As a result, hundreds of workers in my constituency face lay-offs. Hundreds more face the same threat in other parts of British Columbia, and several softwood lumber remanufacturers face closure.

I strongly endorse the call of the Coalition of B.C. Secondary Softwood Lumber Manufacturers to the federal Government that it take immediate steps to add a number of softwood manufactured products to the short list of products already exempt from the 15 per cent tax.

I wrote to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) over a week ago urging immediate correction of these damaging oversights. I am still awaiting her reply.

ENGINEERING CENTENNIAL YEAR

OUTSTANDING CANADIAN ACHIEVEMENTS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met with senior members of the engineering profession to mark the inauguration of the Engineering Centennial year in Canada. At that event awards were presented for 10 of Canada's outstanding engineering achievements—items such as the development of our railway network, the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway, the design and construction of our Beaver aircraft, our Alouette satellite, our Bombardier snowmobile, the construction of the James Bay project, and so on.

The men and women of this profession have been builders, innovators, and creators. They have been great citizens. Over the years the House has been privileged to have among its membership great men and women from that profession. I am happy to rise in the House this afternoon to note the great contributions of those persons to Canada.

TRANSPORT

RAIL SAFETY—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO CN AND VIA RAIL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) today tabled in this House the report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Hinton Train Collision. I would like first to commend the Hon. Mr. Justice René Foisy and all the members of the Commission of Inquiry for their work and their excellent recommendations.

Unfortunately, the Minister of Transport deserves no such commendation. The Minister unfortunately failed to take the opportunity offered by our Standing Orders to issue a ministerial statement upon tabling the report.

We want to know if the Government will put its money where its mouth is.

With their present budgets, neither those Crown corporations nor the Department can do the work expected by the Minister. They will require the resources needed to do so.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDING LEGISLATION—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF COST RECOVERY CLAUSE

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Transport Committee which received representations on Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, I have met along with others my hon. colleague for Quebec-East (Mr. Tremblay) and heard the anxieties concerning the cost recovery involved in Clause 4 of the said Bill.

In the spirit of this Progressive Conservative Government to consult Canadians before making major changes in federal legislation, I would ask the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that he, and the Government, forgo Clause 4 in Bill C-75 and that this user fee, Clause 4, be the subject of further discussion with the players involved.

As Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, as Member of Parliament for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine, I firmly believe that Bill C-75 is important and indeed essential, but Clause 4 requires more consultation.

I would trust that the Minister of Transport would take my recommendation not as being negative to Bill C-75, but rather that Clause 4 be deleted from Bill C-75 until such consultation has been carried out.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DISMISSAL OF FORMER MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)—PRIME MINISTER'S ATTITUDE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, why would the Prime Minister for three days conceal the fact that it was a conflict of interest which had been the determining factor in the dismissal of the Minister of State for Transport? Why?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition is mistaken when he makes such a statement.

[English]

CONTENT OF PRIME MINISTER'S LETTER ON CODE OF CONDUCT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister gave us no facts as to why the Minister resigned and implied that everything was solved by putting it into the hands of the RCMP. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister admitted in reply to our colleague from Oshawa that conflict of interest was a factor.

I want to quote from the Prime Minister's own open letter to Members of Parliament on September 9, 1985, about his own code on conflict of interest. These are the Prime Minister's words, Mr. Speaker:

> The Government is directly accountable to Parliament and through Parliament to the people of Canada. You will find no quasi-independent agencies in this code that will allow the Government to shirk its responsibility by saying that the problem belongs to someone else.

The problem does not belong to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police when it deals with conflict of interest. The problem belongs to the Prime Minister. Why will he not make a statement in this House and give us and the people of Canada a public inquiry into this whole affair?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all of the facts of any kind made available to me were immediately brought to the attention of the police and an inquiry requested.

If my right hon. friend is referring to a statement yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister with regard to any alleged violations of conflicts of interest that might have existed, pending the resolution of the matter ultimately, I thought I resolved that definitively by requesting and obtaining the resignation of the Minister.

With regard to the third point that was made by my right hon. friend, I thought I had responded to that, but I would be happy to answer further if he has any questions.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): What have we got here, Mr. Speaker? We have a Cabinet Minister, now a Cabinet Minister's wife, a chief organizer of the Tory Party, a president of a Tory riding association, a newly minted Senator, some missing money, Cabinet leaks, and a phony blind trust. When will we have enough allegations before this House that ought to be looked at by a public inquiry, and when will the Prime Minister of this country give us a public inquiry?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I answered immediately that the decision I took was, I thought, the appropriate one. I did not close any doors for the future in regard to what might take place pursuant to events that might transpire. Obviously, this is a matter that I view with great seriousness. Otherwise I would not have acted as I did.

In regard to the specific question raised by my right hon. friend, a question which has been raised by others, a request for a commission of public inquiry, I have been advised by the law officers of the Crown that in the present circumstances it is not appropriate for the Government to establish a public commission of inquiry. The advice received by me from the senior law officers of the Crown is that, given the seriousness of the information provided to the RCMP, a commission of inquiry would prejudice the investigation of the RCMP, could lead to the abandonment of the investigation, and it could ultimately prejudice prosecution of any individuals guilty of criminal acts. That is the opinion given to me by the chief law officers of the Crown and that is consistent with their views.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Are you going to table that opinion?

Mr. Mulroney: I think that is very much in the interests of the Canadian people.

REASON FOR RCMP INQUIRY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, our opinion is that the judicial inquiry should precede the criminal investigation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: I would refer again to the letter of September 9, 1985, in which the Prime Minister said:

> The effect, all too frequently, has been simply to substitute an appointed decision-maker for an elected one, and to leave Parliament in the invidious and frustrating position of not being able to—exact accountability.

Wasn't the real reason the Prime Minister appointed the RCMP was to avoid the larger issue of political corruption in the highest circles of government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what a preposterous suggestion! We are now hearing from the Liberal Opposition that a public inquiry should precede a criminal inquiry in prosecution. The object of the exercise of handing it over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for a full and complete investigation and prosecution is to make sure that no one escapes the full effect of the law. That is why it was done.

Mr. Frith: I need not remind the Prime Minister of the Stevens inquiry.

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO RCMP

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister directed the RCMP to undertake the investigation of all the parameters of the Oerlikon affair, did he direct the RCMP to go beyond the duties outlined under Section 18 of the RCMP Act, or was a verbal order given? Was a letter sent to the Commissioner of the RCMP outlining the parameters of the investigation or was an Order in Council made? I would like the Prime Minister to table the relevant documents that led to the directions given to the RCMP in this investigation.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that my hon. friend is not inadvertently trying in any way to frustrate the RCMP in the conduct of its inquiry. The instructions are very clear and were contained in the statement I issued. The Government has requested the RCMP to conduct a complete—underline complete—investigation into that matter, and that means exactly what it says.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows very well that the mandate of the RCMP is not at all to deal with conflict of interest guidelines. Those guidelines are the responsibility of the Prime Minister and the Cabinet of Canada.

I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, or to the Deputy Prime Minister who has responsibility for the administration of conflict of interest guidelines. The Deputy Prime Minister said yesterday that one of the reasons for requesting the resignation of the former junior Transport Minister was the possible violation of conflict of interest guidelines. Given that it is his responsibility for the administration of these guidelines, could he tell us why he has not looked into the guidelines in this context, assessed the behaviour of the former Minister, and reported clearly to the House whether or not in his opinion there has been a violation of the conflict of interest guidelines?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the facts emerged, the Minister was removed from office, and all the information was immediately turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for full investigation. We are now advised by the law officers of the Crown that any action by a commission of inquiry or so on at this time might inhibit and impede the effective and proper prosecution of these matters. I would think that my hon. friend would agree with that procedure as being quite in line with the objectives we are all seeking, the prosecution of any wrongdoing and the upholding of the highest standards of public morality.

I indicated previously, and I assure my hon. friend again, that nothing I have said will in any way prevent us, at an appropriate time, from initiating whatever action is needed to meet the requirements of a new situation.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—POSSIBLE VIOLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the previous unfortunate circumstances where we were dealing with Mr. Stevens, the then Deputy Prime Minister came to the House with an assessment, given his responsibility for the administration of the conflict of interest guidelines, and reported to the House that in his judgment there had been no violation of those guidelines. The Deputy Prime Minister has that responsibility now. Given the serious allegations, has he looked at those guidelines as they pertain to the Minister who has resigned and is he prepared to say whether, in his view, there has or has not been a violation of those conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only have we looked at that, we have looked at any bit of information that was available. We did not try to segregate one piece from another. The test was relevancy to the issue. That information, all of it, was immediately turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for their assessment and action. That is exactly what has taken place. The Minister is gone. He was removed from Cabinet at my request. Nothing in what we have done, as the law officers of the Crown advise, in any way prevents further analysis of this in the future by some other mechanism. I am just telling my friend that what we have done is consistent with what I think his desire is, that is, to see justice is done.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will put this as reasonably as I can. The Prime Minister is about to embark on a trip abroad which is very important to Canada. I say that most sincerely. However, we now have allegations which even include the former Minister's wife as well as a whole range of other people connected with his Party. Given that, will the Prime Minister not agree that it would be much better in the interests of Canada and his work abroad to have the assurance that, while he is away, this matter is being looked at in the most responsible way, that is to say, by way of an inquiry which is not simply dealing with legal matters but dealing with the important conflict of interest requirements?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I say, we are advised by law officers of the Crown, the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Justice, and the RCMP Commissioner, that what is recommended by my hon. friend would be entirely inappropriate and could prejudice the successful prosecution of the case. Moreover, I point out to my hon. friend that it was brought to my attention that when a request for a public inquiry was brought forward on August 15, 1986, in Manitoba, when the RCMP was conducting an inquiry into alleged criminal wrongdoing, Premier Pawley said: "Personally, I oppose witnesses being called under oath when there is a parallel RCMP investigation under way." I think he is right. The first thing that must be done is to allow the RCMP to do their jobs unimpeded. Let the chips fall where they may. Then, if need be, with my hon. friend's concurrence and help, we can take whatever action is required to make sure all matters are respected.

MINISTER'S ASSISTANCE IN OBTAINING EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the negligent conduct of yet another of his Ministers, the Minister without Portfolio, the Member for Joliette. We learned today that the Minister directly interfered to secure a federal government job for a friend with a major criminal record. Does the Prime Minister consider the Minister's conduct in this case to be appropriate? Does he consider it appropriate for the Minister to use the Government as a half-way house for his buddies?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not to put too fine a point on it, my hon. friend's observation with regard to the whole notion of progressive rehabilitation has dealt a pretty serious death blow to the notion that fairness should apply to everyone in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I am very concerned about the matter of someone becoming a member of a Minister's staff without receiving prior security clearance and approval. I am troubled by the fact that it could have taken place in the past. It is obvious to me that serious deficiencies exist in a system which would allow anyone to become a member of anyone's staff without written clearance from the RCMP or the Chief of Security of the Privy Council Office. I have instructed Mr. Tellier to review what is obviously a serious deficiency which has existed in the system for some years, and to recommend immediately changes in procedures to ensure that this never happens again.

HIRING OF MINISTERIAL AIDES WITHOUT SECURITY CLEARANCES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, there is no problem with procedures. It is a problem with the administration of those procedures by Ministers. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister admitted that there was a breakdown in security in the Minister's office. Will the Prime Minister admit today that at least 15 or 20 ministerial aides were hired and had access to secret and top secret information without receiving prior security clearances? Will he not admit that, as a result, national security was threatened?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the specific allegation which my hon. friend makes. I am aware of the existence of the problem which I consider to be serious. It is obviously a deficiency which I am informed has, regrettably, existed for some years in terms of the procedure which must be corrected. Mr. Tellier and his colleagues are acting in that regard now. I will be happy to report to my hon. friend and to the House and to give them the assurance that that procedure has been tightened up to ensure that this kind of situation cannot recur.

OERLIKON LAND TRANSACTION AT SAINT-JEAN—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF SECURITY INJURY ASSESSMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the Government's compliance with its own security policy. The former Minister's wife and his friend and campaign manager are both alleged to have personally profited from this rather sordid land transaction. The Minister apparently personally intervened in the land rezoning and the setting of the price of the land in this transaction.

Therefore, does the Prime Minister recognize that there has been a probable breach of security according to the Ministry's own security guidelines? Will the Prime Minister confirm that a written injury assessment will be or has been ordered pursuant to the provisions of this security policy? Most important, will the Prime Minister undertake to make that written injury assessment public rather than continuing to stonewall and cover up on this very serious matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend is asking about a written injury assessment. We are not asking for written injury assessments. We are telling the police to go ahead and investigate and, if required, prosecute fully. If anyone has violated anything, they are to put them in jail.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is hiding behind the skirts of the RCMP and refusing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: —to obey his own Government's security policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are really disgusted with the facts surrounding this matter, the fact that the Minister's wife would have personally benefited—the fact that the Minister himself had made representations to City Hall—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member must ask his question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, considering the gift made to the former minister's friend, when will the Government stop covering up and order a public inquiry? When will we get a public inquiry?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): From my skirt to yours.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, when certain facts were brought to our attention, we immediately ordered a complete and full police investigation. The chief law officers of the Crown have formally advised us that a new inquiry at this time could prejudice the police investigation. Clearly, public interest is served by a full RCMP investigation in order not only to inform the Canadian public but possibly to start prosecution if necessary.

I think the Government has acted not only firmly and quickly, but in the public interest and, according to the law officers of the Crown a commission of inquiry appointed at this time, as indicated in similar circumstances by Premier Pawley in Manitoba, could prejudice a full and complete investigation.

I hope, therefore, that my hon. friend will agree with me that the police investigation which has been ordered is the right way to proceed in the public interest.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—ROLE OF RCMP

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in a previous answer today the Prime Minister said that all the information regarding the Oerlikon affair was referred to the RCMP. Presumably this includes potential breaches of the conflict of interest guidelines. Since the Prime Minister said that that was the route which was to be used, can he tell us how and where the RCMP gets its authority to investigate breaches of the conflict of interest guidelines? If the RCMP does not have that authority, is it not obvious that without a public inquiry we will never learn the truth?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, because that is quite wrong. In fact, if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, in the course of criminal inquiries—as the former Solicitor General knows full well, having been advised by the Commissioner himself—come across any matters of direct or indirect interest to the Government, they have a responsibility to report it, as they have and they shall. This is totally consistent with the broad mandate given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

REQUEST THAT RESULTS OF INQUIRY BE MADE PUBLIC AND TABLED IN CHAMBER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a bit difficult to believe everything that we hear after such an answer. First, can the Minister tell us today that, in the case of such a result, the report of the inquiry will be tabled in this House so that Members may know the truth about the allegations regarding the Minister, his wife and other people and the possible violations of the conflict of interests guidelines? Will this information be made public and tabled in this House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP Commissionner does not report to me. Once his investigation has been completed, he uses his own judgment and certain basic criteria to determine independently whether charges will be laid. This is how it must work. If we have other information which might have a relevance on this case, we shall immediately refer them to the RCMP and the RCMP can tell you about it if it so desires.

Mr. Boudria: You have just said the opposite!

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who is responsible for ensuring adherence to the conflict of interest guidelines. The Prime Minister referred to the Manitoba situation. He will also be aware that while the investigation into the legal aspect of the case was being conducted by the RCMP, the Legislature in Manitoba arranged for a parallel investigation to take place at the same time, which reported to the Legislature. That is exactly what we are asking the Minister responsible in this case—to carry out a parallel investigation while the RCMP is looking into the legal aspects of the case. Why will he not live up to his obligations and do just that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks a question that has been referred to earlier. I indicated a few days ago that notwithstanding the action taken by the Government, this action of itself does not preclude further action at an appropriate time. The law officers of the Crown have advised the Government that such a commission of inquiry at this time would be quite inappropriate, most unhelpful to them in the prosecution of their responsibilities under the Criminal Code and other statutes that exist. The RCMP has been asked to collect information in the public interest, to make determinations, and to report to the courts and otherwise. I think my hon. friend would agree that giving the RCMP a complete mandate and full authority is very much in the national interest and he would want to wait until such time as the RCMP has taken this action so that we can consider what further steps might be appropriate.

Mr. Riis: The Prime Minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot refer to the Manitoba case on one hand and change his mind and say he cannot follow the exact same procedure to have an external evaluation as well as a legislative examination.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada unquestionably believe that the time for an investigation is now and for an announcement to take place before the Prime Minister leaves on his trip to Africa.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What arrogance!

Mr. Riis: I call upon the Prime Minister to remove the whole shroud of a cover-up on this whole affair—

Mr. Mazankowski: You are covering up. You are trying to stop the RCMP.

Mr. Riis: Will he announce today that the Government of Canada is prepared to conduct a parallel investigation in a committee of the House or to have an external group do the investigation? That is what was done in Manitoba and that is what he referred to earlier. Why not do it now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the Manitoba case. On August 15 Premier Pawley said: "Madam Speaker, all the necessary answers will be obtained without jeopardizing the work of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The co-operation of all Members is required and all members of the public in order to ensure that the RCMP is able to fulfil their obligations to investigate the allegations that are raised". He said: "Madam Speaker, I, for one, will not be a party to jeopardizing the work of the RCMP".

Mr. Broadbent: But they had their own inquiry.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are getting phonier by the minute.

IMPACT OF BANK RATE REDUCTION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Considering the Bank of Canada's decision to lower the bank rate to 8.2 per cent last week, could the Minister inform the House what impact this may have on other financial institutions and on the Canadian economy in general?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to announce to the House a drop in the bank rate to 7.74 per cent, the best and lowest rate since 1977!

This record low since 1977 will help us create more jobs in this country and have more housing starts right across the country.

OBTAINING OF INFORMATION RELATING TO AWARDING OF LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE CONTRACT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was denied access by the Department of Supply and Services to all information on the Low Level Air Defence contract. The Corporation's correspondent was told that employees had instructions from the Minister's office not to release any information whatsoever on this matter. I would like to ask the Prime Minister why his Government is denying the media, and thus the public, access to information about a contract that is in the public domain. What is his Government trying to hide?

[English]

In other words, why the cover-up?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Government's position is crystal clear. The facts that were brought to our attention were immediately transmitted to the RCMP, which is conducting a general and important inquiry on this matter. All information available to the Government has been transmitted to the RCMP, and more will follow if necessary and as more facts become available. I think that is quite normal. Our legal advisers have told us this is the way to proceed. It is legitimate and will help the cause and exercise of justice in this country.

REQUEST THAT LEGAL OPINIONS BE TABLED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister claimed that his Government is crystal clear. Let him prove it! Let him table in the House the legal advice on the basis of which he claims that a judicial inquiry would prejudice the inquiry being conducted by the RCMP on the Saint-Jean "land flip". Let him table those documents and the legal advice of the law officers of the Crown! Is he prepared to do so?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was advised by Mr. Paul Tellier, Clerk of the Privy Council, and by his senior legal adviser, that according to the highest legal counsel for the Government and the Public Service—and as I mentioned this morning—setting up such a commission here and now might seriously jeopardize the conducting of a comprehensive inquiry and could even have the effect of inhibiting and impeding the prosecution of individuals. That is the information I received and the information I gave the House.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES VICE-PRESIDENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that in the Manitoba case referred to by the Prime Minister there had been no resignation of a Minister and there were no allegations of a conflict of interest.

My question for the Prime Minister concerns an entirely different subject, yesterday's visit to Canada by Vice-President Bush. As a result of his conversation with Vice-President Bush, does he now have any reasonable expectation that President Reagan will seek to amend his budget to bring it into compliance with the recommendations of the Davis-Lewis accord?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we fully expect that the recommendations in the report of the envoys on acid rain will be fully respected and honoured. We received a commitment from the administration to that effect, and we reminded them of it. The Minister of the Environment and the Secretary of State for External Affairs spelled out in direct terms the manner in which these obligations had to be met. We fully expect that they shall.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill commenced his preamble to his question with an observation which the Chair, being generous, would let go in some circumstances. However, I think the Chair must comment on the fact that the observation was utterly unrelated to the question being asked. I know the Hon. Member would not want to bootleg in comments not dealing with this specific matter.

Mr. Blaikie: Never, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to pose his supplementary question succinctly.

COMMITMENT BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister get a commitment yesterday, not one going back to the Summit, that President Reagan's budget would be amended to bring it into compliance with the recommendations of the Davis-Lewis accord? Did he get a commitment yesterday that they would do something concrete about living up to their commitment?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have a commitment written down very clearly in the report of the acid rain envoys.

An Hon. Member: Are they living up to it?

Mr. Blaikie: Let him talk.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend from the New Democratic Party asks the right question. Are they living up to it? The answer is, no, and we very much want to make sure they do.

OERLIKON LAND TRANSACTION AT SAINT-JEAN—RCMP REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, returning to the investigation, the Prime Minister tells the House that there will be an investigation conducted only by the RCMP.

An Hon. Member: He didn't say that.

Mr. Kaplan: The Prime Minister knows that an investigation by the RCMP terminates in the laying of charges or in the closing of a file. In this case, if no charges are laid or if matters arise in the course of the investigation which constitute wrongdoing but not crimes, will there be a report by the RCMP to the Government? And will the Prime Minister undertake now that that report will be made public?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks in that event will there be a report by the RCMP to the Government. The Hon. Member received, as I understand it, a letter from the Commissioner of the RCMP on January 21 wherein the Commissioner—

Ms. Copps: You are reading his mail now?

Mr. Mulroney: A copy was sent to the Government and I take the liberty of reading it. It says that "should we come across activity that might be considered unpropitious to good government, even though short of provable criminal conduct on the part of senior officials, elected or otherwise, it is our responsibility to make our concerns known to either the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General in accordance with established reporting procedures." Of course we will act upon any information which is brought to our attention.

An Hon. Member: You make it public.

Mr. Kaplan: I would be glad to have a copy of that letter to me because I haven't received it yet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Taking what the Prime Minister has read to me, that there may well be a report made to the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General, will the Prime Minister undertake now on behalf of himself and his colleague that any such report will be made public?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while my hon. friend may not have a copy of this letter, he knows full well there is nothing very revolutionary in it. This is the way the RCMP has acted for decades.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: This is the manner in which it has set out its policy.

Mr. Gauthier: You make it public.

Mr. Mulroney: Surely there can be no doubt about that. The Commissioner of the RCMP says very clearly that in the event they are investigating any alleged criminal wrongdoing and they come across any information of any kind which would be of interest to the Government with regard to alleged violations in other fields, they will of course bring it to the attention of the Government, the Solicitor General, immediately, and the Government will of course act upon it.

I tell my hon. friend that if the requirement is in any way to make it public, of course we will make it public. That is exactly the object of the exercise.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE HELD INTO CLOVERDALE AFFAIR

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He was here earlier, but since he has left, I shall ask it to the Prime Minister. This question concerns the Cloverdale affair.

On September 23, 1986, the Minister received a communication from the Hon. Member for Spadina asking, first, for a public or judicial inquiry to be held on a suspicious transaction made in 1980 by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the non-profit corporation Logisque, and second, for the 736 low rental units to be transferred to the Cloverdale Park Tenants Co-operative.

As of last Monday, we had not yet received any reply. Can the Prime Minister or the Minister responsible tell the House whether he intends to request a public or judicial inquiry on this 1980 transaction?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Minister had to catch a plane and he has left the House. I will certainly take the question as notice and ensure the Minister gets back to the Hon. Member at the earliest possible occasion.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FREEZE TRANSACTION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to tell the House that, last December, the non-profit corporation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would you please ask your question without an overly long preamble.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, can the Government also intervene to freeze a transaction made last December in relation to the transfer of the 736 units to a private company and allow these units to be transferred to the tenants co-operative?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Again, Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and have the Minister get back to the Hon. Member.

OERLIKON LAND TRANSACTION—ADVICE GIVEN BY LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I cannot recall a Government using the powers of a police inquiry relating to criminal or alleged criminal matters to choke off a general public review or public inquiry of matters affecting a Minister's public responsibilities in the administration of the business of the country.

This is a narrow use of the police power in this country. I want to ask the Prime Minister who sought the legal opinion, if there is one in writing, from the law offices of the Crown? And if he has one, will he table it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is contrary to the contention that this is a narrow interpretation. The fullest, most complete measures which are available to a Government when there is an allegation of this nature are to turn it over to the police and ask them to investigate fully, having told the House and my right hon. friend; first, having removed the Minister from office, having turned it over, and having told my right hon. friend a few days ago that nothing in that inquiry would preclude further acts as events unfold that might require another instrument to provide the kind of information coming public.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That is sweeping it under the carpet.

Mr. Mulroney: There is no intention to do other than to ensure the fullest use of the prosecution requirements under the law in the event that that is what the RCMP decide.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister may think that by firing his Minister he has closed the matter, but he has not. We have other matters and we will eventually find out when the Prime Minister first knew about this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PROVISIONS OF RCMP ACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I refer to the RCMP Act—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): How about the War Measures Act, John, and the peace power?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and the only authority the Government would have to widen a police investigation would be under Section 18(d) of the Act by Order in Council. Is there an Order in Council? And would the Prime Minister table that Order in Council, otherwise there is no authority for any investigation at all?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was informed, as I have indicated, of these facts on January 14, 1987, for the first time. That is exactly when I was advised of the information.

In regard to the police inquiry, it was initiated pursuant to the facts being brought to my attention. I was advised by the Clerk of the Privy Council this morning, and his chief legal adviser, that they had been advised by the Deputy Attorney General and Deputy Minister of Justice for Canada, as well as the Commissioner of the RCMP, of the information I have given, and the advice I have given to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have no written opinion.

Mr. Mulroney: I have conveyed to my right hon. friend the information received from the Clerk of the Privy Council who consulted with the Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Big deal.

Mr. Mulroney: He says "big deal". Maybe he could stop carrying partisanship—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Show us the opinion.

Mr. Axworthy: Show us the opinion.

Mr. Mulroney: —if you were more concerned about the application of the administration of justice, rather—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: You're a joke.

An Hon. Member: Cover up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

ENERGY

SYNCRUDE PROJECT—FEDERAL FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On January 7 the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Getty, told an Alberta Legislative news conference concerning the proposed federal loan to Syncrude, the oil sands project: "I know I had the support of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister". I repeat what he said: "I know I had the support of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister for the federal loan". Did the Prime Minister promise Mr. Getty aid for the Syncrude project or not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we discussed, among many other things, problems in the energy industry, and that was one of them. Premier Getty put out his view that this, among other ways, would be a very good way for the federal Government to co-operate—recognizing the limited existence of resources federally—that this would be a good way to co-operate with the Government of Alberta.

I think it would be a legitimate way—

Ms. Copps: Bye-bye, Alberta.

Mr. Mulroney: —and there are others.

I tell my hon. friend from the NDP that I know Alberta is of no interest to the Liberals. They heckle and they laugh when we talk about the problems of Alberta.

I agree with my hon. friend. This is a serious matter, and I am responding in a serious way to his concerns.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO ALBERTA PREMIER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister. I agree with him. Is he aware that the Premier of Alberta said further that he "wants to find out the reason for the lack of support, after being told it was there"? Am I to understand, then, from the Prime Minister's answer that he acknowledges it was there? Is he now telling the House and, most important, the people of Alberta that he is prepared to reconsider this support?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are considering, will consider and, hopefully, act again to be of assistance to the troubled and crippled energy industry in Alberta. This is vital to the national interest, within the scope of the fiscal situation that we have.

In that context the Premier and I discussed a number of things, quite obviously Syncrude, and his version of the best way the feds could help Alberta in this project. It is an entirely legitimate point of view. There are others, all of which are designed to help Alberta and Albertans through a very difficult period. Indeed, energy is not only Alberta's problem. It is a national problem. We all have to work together with Alberta to try to bring about a resolution to a difficult problem.

Mr. Speaker: I advise Hon. Members that Question Period is nearly over. I will take one more question from the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX—APPLICATION TO REMANUFACTURERS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister for International Trade. The Minister would be well aware that the Canadian people in general, and British Columbians in particular, are very happy to be receiving $600 million in reforestation funds each year. But there are some remanufacturing companies which are having difficulty as a result of the export tax. I wonder if the Minister can tell the House what the plans are of our Government—

Ms. Copps: Sit down!

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Schellenberg: I am sorry, was I talking while you were interrupting?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will put his question. I have advised Hon. Members that we are already over time. I am trying to accommodate Hon. Members. Will the Hon. Member please put his question?

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, what plans does our Government have to assist remanufacturers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. My officials are meeting with some of the remanufacturers to deal with this issue. As I have informed the House, in general principle the softwood agreement states that the export tax applies only to the input and not to the added value. In identifying what are remanufactured items, the negotiators worked from lists supplied by the industry. Some of those industry lists did not include all the products. My officials are meeting with the industry to resolve this problem.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—GOVERNMENT ADHERENCE

Mr. Speaker: I should bring to the attention of Hon. Members that an application was made this morning by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) for an emergency debate. The Chair indicated this morning that this is indeed an important matter and has been the subject of much comment, both publicly and in this Chamber. I am now ready to rule on the application of the Hon. Member who applied under Standing Order 29(1) for an emergency debate.

Before I go any further I wish to say that the Chair looks upon this as an important matter. This is not a frivolous application.

In making his application, the Hon. Member referred, and I quote from his notice, to "the unparalleled circumstances surrounding the departure from the Cabinet of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean". He went on to refer to "the probity of the Government's dealing with contractors and its adherence to conflict of interest guidelines".

The Standing Order requires that the matter proposed to be discussed must be "specific and important". The Hon. Member's application appears to raise the following as specific issues: first, the circumstances surrounding the departure from the Cabinet of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnette); second, the probity, or in other words the integrity, of the Government's dealings with contractors, although that might be assumed, whether the Government was negligent or otherwise in that dealing, and it is broad enough to do so; third, the question of whether the Government adheres to its own conflict of interest guidelines.

In relation to the last issue I think, by clear implication, the application raises the question of whether the Government has adhered to its own conflict of interest guidelines in this particular case, not whether the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean himself adhered to them.

The following is important. In the context of this issue the Chair has serious difficulty with a problem that is more than likely to arise in the course of debate. There is an inevitable risk that the debate could focus upon the conduct of the former Minister. All Members will have noticed during the vigorous questioning which has taken place in Question Period that the Chair has indicated concern owing to the fact that the matter has been forwarded to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for investigation but that as yet no charges of any kind have been made.

Hon. Members will know that there is a long-standing practice in this House to refrain from reflecting on the conduct of a Member, except by way of substantive motion, of which notice is required, drawn in terms which clearly state a charge of wrongdoing. I think it is appropriate for the Chair to say that since Monday, since the comments from the Chair, Hon. Members have taken great pains in framing their questions to avoid impinging on this fundamental precept of justice. I want them to know that this is much appreciated by the Chair.

In determining whether the situation as it exists amounts to a genuine emergency as envisaged by the Standing Order, I must take into account the fact that the following steps have already been taken by the Government. First, the Minister has been removed from office. Second, a police investigation of the matter has been ordered. Third, depending on the outcome of the investigation, the possibility of criminal prosecution has not been ruled out. In fact it has been clearly stated that it is very much something which, depending on the return from the RCMP and its recommendations, will take place. Fourth, and most important, an undertaking has been given that, should the facts contained in the RCMP report warrant further action, then further action will be taken.

In the circumstances the Chair cannot find, despite the importance of this matter, that a genuine emergency exists or that the criterion of "urgency of debate" is met by this application.

I would further point out, as Hon. Members and the public know, that the matter has formed the subject of questions during successive Question Periods this week, and will no doubt continue to do so. No Opposition Days have yet been designated in the current supply period, so that a further opportunity for debating the matter in the near future may well be available.

Therefore I must rule that the Hon. Member's application does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders. However, I hasten to say, as I said at the outset, the Chair sometimes receives motions pursuant to Standing Order 29 which the Chair, always courteous, hears out. However, occasionally I think it is important for the Chair to state that some of these applications may be more important than others. The Hon. Member for Sudbury has brought a very important matter indeed to this House. However, under the circumstances I think it falls just short of what is required, at least today, in this matter.

Point of Order—Mr. H. Gray

• (1510)

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT REFERRED TO BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order. During today's Question Period the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) read verbatim from a document which he identified as coming from the Clerk of the Privy Council. Unless I am mistaken, he did not simply mention the existence of such a document, he quoted from it verbatim. Therefore, pursuant to the well established precedents in this regard, for example, Citation 327(6) on page 116 of Beauchesne, I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you direct the document in question be tabled. The citation in part states:

> If a Minister cites or quotes an official document in debate, he should be prepared to table it.

If I am not mistaken, this precedent, and others in that regard, have been deemed to apply to documents quoted from during Question Period by Ministers, as well as those quoted from during debate.

My point of order is that because the Prime Minister appeared to quote verbatim from an official document, I call upon the Prime Minister to follow the precedents and table that document forthwith.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I was going to say that, on the point of order of the House Leader of the Liberal Party, he was being carried away with his imagination. Then in his final sentence he qualified it. He said the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) "appeared" to quote. That is precisely the point. The Prime Minister does have notes, and he makes notes as the questions are presented. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is asking the Prime Minister to table his notes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has listened very carefully to the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I might indicate to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that he has put the procedural law accurately. There seems to be some dispute. Ordinarily, I would not call for Members to rise over and over again on this matter, but I think it is appropriate to hear from the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In view of what the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) has just said, I would ask, Mr. Speaker, before making your ruling in any final form that you consult the "blues" in their unrevised form, as well as consulting the official electronic record of this House both in its televised and radio form. We cannot let this matter go in the way that the Government House Leader has suggested. The record is an important basis for the decision that I respectfully ask you to make on this important matter.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. House Leader for the Liberal Party by his statement is implying that there is meddling going on in the transcript of Hansard. I think that he may wish to reconsider making that point. The Hon. Member has been around here for a long time. To imply that is certainly most unbecoming, and I am surprised at him.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I wish to rise because I think this is a very important point. From what I understood the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to say to the House, he is denying that the document exists from which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) quoted. Is he denying that, yes or no? If he is denying it, then he has to make his case. I am saying that if there is a document, then he has to table it. That is the custom of the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: I thought I made it very clear that the Prime Minister uses notes, some of which he prepares here, and some of which he prepares in his office. That is what I suggested that he was quoting from if he was quoting.

The Hon. Member from time to time when he puts his questions quotes from a document. I suspect that if we establish that practice, we will be asking each and every Member to table the questions that they read into the record.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): I rise on the same point of order. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in reading from the document, it appeared to me that the words did not come from notes but came from a document. I would ask that the Speaker satisfy himself that it was notes, or it was a document, and personally to review the documents to assure himself before he makes a decision on this matter.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I would like to add a word. At one point I clearly saw the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reading from a document that he said was a letter to me. I confirmed with my office that we have not received such a letter. If it was a letter sent by the Commissioner to me that is passing through the hands of the Prime Minister, I would like to ask that the letter be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) probably does not realize it, but because I was talking to another Member, I was unable to recognize him and his words of wisdom will be lost. We would not want that to happen.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member who just rose on on a point of order clearly has a valid point of order. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on that occasion was quoting from a letter.

Mr. Tobin: How could he get a letter hand delivered?

Mr. Mazankowski: I can't answer that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Nunziata stole it and delivered it.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Everybody in the Chamber knows that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) would never do such a dastardly thing. I notice that the Right Hon. Member has immediately stood up and said that he withdrew any such imputation. I think perhaps the Chair has intervened just in the nick of time to save the honour of all Hon. Members.

Ms. Copps: I didn't hear it.

Mr. Tobin: Let's hear him, Mr. Speaker, on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will put his withdrawal on the record.

Mr. Shields: Let the rat pack hear it on the record, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I want to put my withdrawal on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could come back to the application. The Chair has heard the interventions of Hon. Members. As the Chair has said, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has succinctly put forward the procedural law. There seems to be some difference of opinion in the Chamber as to what was said, or what was quoted from. The Chair will examine the transcript and will do the best it can to be sure that the rules of this House are followed. I will report back to the Chamber.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order on a very important interpretation of that custom. When Ministers of the Crown quote from a document, they are traditionally expected to table that document, but not back-benchers. I think that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was extending his thoughts a little too far in pretending that back-benchers and ordinary MPs would have to table their questions. It would accelerate the procedures of the House, but I am sure it is not in the rules right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: I know of no standing order or rule of procedure that suggests that a Minister when making notes, or having notes in front of him for the purpose of answering a question, has to table them. Official documents, yes; non-official documents, no. That should be clarified.

Ms. Copps: When quoting from a document, any document.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I am sure that he is advising me wisely on a different point of order.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Not only am I rising on a totally different point of order, but I suspect it will be one that will even meet the support and consent of the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski). I am simply asking him to give the normal weekly statement of government business.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The Hon. Member in his preamble implies that in future before he raises a point of order he will get my concurrence. I would not expect that, but it is a rather nice precedent for the day anyway.

• (1520)

Ms. Copps: Wait until next week.

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps the Hon. Member behind you, who seems to be more vocal from her seat than when she stands, might want to answer that question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister will conclude his remarks.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, with regard to House business, today we will continue with Bill C-37, followed by Bill C-18 and Bill C-19.

Mr. Shields: Can you imagine being married to that?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. One of the faceless Alberta Members from whom we hear very little on a general basis says: "Can you imagine being married to that?" That particular statement, while not quoted as unparliamentary in the nineteenth century parliamentary procedures book which we have at the moment, should certainly be withdrawn in the same manner as the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) withdrew his remark.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Shields, Mr. Shields.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will please accept the Chair's invitation to order.

The Chair did not hear the words complained of. They are properly complained of. I would expect the Hon. Member who said those words, or something close to them, to withdraw them.

Mr. Shields: I would like to withdraw that.

PRIVILEGE

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: I have a response to a question of privilege to deliver to the House.

[Translation]

On January 20 the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) complained about some of the terms used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in answer to one of his questions.

[English]

I think it is important to look at part of what the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell said in putting the question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He said:

> Given the fact that the media as well as certain Members—

And Hansard has treated that as meaning Members of Parliament, and the Chair accepts that.

> —and many Canadians have been at least partly aware of these transactions for two months already—

Then the Hon. Member went on to ask questions.

In the exchange which ensued, the Prime Minister in referring to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell said:

> If he has had that information for some months why did he not bring it to the attention of the RCMP since his failure to do so could result in the obstruction of justice?

There are no hard and fast rules regarding parliamentary language, and it is usually a matter of judgment to determine whether or not language is unparliamentary. One of the important principles enshrined in our practice is that no charge may be levelled at an Hon. Member except by way of a substantive motion making a specific accusation. The Chair had reason to refer to that in the judgment which I just gave on the application pursuant to Standing Order 29. Such a motion requires notice, and is debatable and votable. The reason for that, of course, is to protect Hon. Members from attacks on their integrity and their conduct during the course of debate in Question Period, or in any other proceeding, without defining and putting a charge.

In considering the complaint of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, the Chair must determine whether the words complained of constitute a charge against the Hon. Member. He asserts that the Prime Minister in using the words which I quoted in effect used threatening language and by inference accused him of committing a criminal act. The Chair might also read into that: accused him perhaps of not doing something that he ought to have done.

Certainly that is the way the Hon. Member received the language. As I said the other day, the Hon. Member immediately brought his complaint to the Chair and then argued the matter a day or so ago.

At that time I complimented the Hon. Member and other Members for the exact and succinct and careful arguments that Hon. Members presented to the Chair.

[Translation]

These remarks ask a question and conditionally infer that a possible omission might result in obstruction of justice. The words of the Prime Minister clearly imply criticism, but the Chair cannot interpret that as an indication of threat or accusation.

[English]

However, it is clear that the words offended, and sometimes in this Chamber they do, but it is the view of the Chair that they fall short of the kind of threat of which the Hon. Member was complaining.

I would like to take this opportunity to appeal to Hon. Members to avoid the use of provocative language. Many things are said in this House which, while not necessarily unparliamentary, are nevertheless felt to be objectionable. A great deal of time is consumed in the raising of complaints about the use of language which gives offence. Moderate language is not inconsistent with strong criticism, and if there were fewer complaints there would be more time for debate. I believe the interest of the House is best served when Hon. Members observe moderation in their choice of words and expressions.

I thank Hon. Members who rose on this matter, and I hope the Hon. Member will feel that his complaint has received serious consideration by the Chair.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), (p. 2382).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, since the amendment has not been read by the Clerk, I will do so for the record:

> That Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain that the Official Opposition recommends that the adoption of this Bill be deferred for six months so that all Canadians can properly understand what this Government has signed, what kind of agreement has been made with the Americans with respect to the export of softwood lumber.

Mr. Speaker, somebody might raise the question: Why should a Member who represents an urban riding be concerned about such a major issue as the export of softwood lumber? I don't have very many—in fact, I have no farmers and no forestry operations in my riding, but I know the subject because I have had a general interest in the matter for the past thirty-five of forty years, and as the Hon. Member opposite said earlier, Members should be able to speak to subjects of interest to them, and we may, on occasion, even astonish people with what we do know.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister for incompetence and International Trade has shown how not to negotiate an agreement with the Americans. I also recall, and perhaps I may put this incompetence in chronological order, that on September 30, 1986, the Minister made her first "final" offer to the United States to end the trade dispute by increasing stumpage fees by 10 per cent. On November 26, 1986, the Minister made her second "final" offer, agreeing to impose a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber. However, the offer was turned down by the U.S. Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports. On September 12, 1986, the Minister turned down a U.S. counter-proposal to accept the 15 per cent export tax, her excuse being that it was unacceptable that the United States should insist on controlling management of provincial resources.

On December 30, 1986, Canada signed an agreement with the United States imposing a 15 per cent tax on lumber exports, an agreement that, as interpreted by the Americans, will severely restrict the provinces control over their own resources.

Madam Speaker, in the ten minutes I have I cannot—it is impossible—explain to the House the nature of the problem we are facing with the provinces as to how this whole question will turn out. The Conservative Members are enjoying themselves on the other side, they appear to understand the issue. I invite them to stand up and explain to us how the provinces will ever be able to reach agreement with respect to stumpage fees, how they will do it.

Mr. Blais: They are in agreement.

Mr. Gauthier: They are not in agreement. It is not true. It is not true, you know they are not in agreement, you know that.

Mr. Gérin: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, we know that the Standing Orders—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will resume my remarks, and once again let us hope that we will be able to get some kind of reaction from the Quebec Members. So far very few of them have taken part in this debate, and indeed they should rise and give us the views of Quebec on this question. If, as the Hon. Member claims, Quebec and the other provinces agree with the Minister with respect to this negotiation and this agreement, they should explain it to us because Canadians do not understand, and I doubt that the Hon. Member himself can say now that he understands this. It is confusion, a question of outright incompetence to try to make believe that one can understand such a . . . as far as I am concerned it is the worst kind of shilly-shallying.

I would like to give a few examples, and there are many I could quote.

There is Adam Zimmerman, president of MacMillan-Bloedel, Maxwell Cohen, a well-known economist and a judge of the International Court, Ontario Premier David Peterson, who was quoted in The Globe & Mail of January 6 as saying: "They—speaking about the American Government—will leave us with our hands tied, and if we do not behave, they will intervene. I do not like such an agreement." Also, Madam Speaker, as quoted in The Ottawa Citizen of January 6, 1987, the Premier of our province of Ontario, Mr. David Peterson, had this to say: "We have put not only our resource and taxation policies, but also in a sense our regional development and employment policies in the hands of another sovereign country. That is a dangerous precedent."

I could quote Stan Shewaga, president of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada. I could quote Ian Drummond, an economist at the University of Toronto, who is quoted as saying in The Ottawa Citizen of January 3, 1987: "The American claims are nonsense since the Canadian industry does not receive any money from the provinces who own the resources."

In addition, Madam Speaker, Edward English, economics professor at Carleton University, was quoted as saying in The Ottawa Citizen of January 3, 1987: "Natural resources are an absolute right which should not be handed over to any foreign government." "They take the same position as for the Soviets. This proves that the suspicious atmosphere in Washington is not restricted to East-West relations."

If the Hon. Members want quotes, I can give them. Robin Neill, an economic historian, had this to say in The Ottawa Citizen of January 3, 1987: "Even if Canada were to lose its case, it would be better for this country to assert itself immediately rather than jeopardize its sovereignty for the future." Madam Speaker, we are all concerned by the issue of sovereignty. The Conservative Government is well aware that this has been the key issue of this whole debate. The fact is that the Conservative Government, by fielding to the pressures of the Americans, has literally sold out the provincial resources without consulting the provinces—

Mr. Blais: The provinces are in agreement.

Mr. Gauthier: —without the agreement of the provinces and without thinking how such a consensus can be developed.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on a point of order.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, I very rarely rise on a point of order. However, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has said that Quebec has not given its agreement. I believe that he is misleading the House because I have here a press release from Minister Pierre MacDonald, who says, and I quote: "Without the negotiations with the United States, we would certainly not have been able to launch our reforestation and forest management program . . . We would not have been able to do so if we had opted for another solution."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order! The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) may have the opportunity to rise again. In my opinion, this was not a point of order but a point for debate, and I think that he himself was entering into a debate in an attempt to explain the point of order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Beside, the Hon. Member has already spoken to this amendment. Like all his colleagues from Quebec—and there are not many of them to have addressed this issue—he did what he could to show it from a biased point of view.

Madam Speaker, I know that my time is running out, but I wish to conclude by saying that the provinces, whether they like it or not, have been had by the Federal Government. They have been taken for a ride simply because some of their rights have been sold out without previous consultation and without a proper mechanism. It's a shame, Madam Speaker, and I blame this Government for acting in such a despicable and stupid manner.

Mr. Blais: This is not true!

An Hon. Member: This is Liberal arrogance at its best!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has the floor.

• (1530)

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, like my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for whom I have great regard, the export of softwood lumber is not a major economic item in our area. Nonetheless, I enter this debate through concern over one of the ramifications of the discussion thus far in the House and in the media, namely the extent to which Bill C-37 threatens Canadian sovereignty. I would like to share with you, Madam Speaker, and with Members of the House some thoughts about the way in which this Bill and this debate relate to Canadian sovereignty in so far as the intent of this Bill is designed to strengthen confederation and be understood in the most enhanced way.

To support that, I go back to an article I read many years ago as a university student by the great Canadian historian, Frank Underhill. He is often quoted on the opposite side of the House with respect, but Members on the opposite side have been so busy quoting Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Robert Borden that they must have forgotten their old guru. Frank Underhill argued that the character of confederation was such that most of its benefits had accrued to the capitalist class of both Toronto and Montreal and that confederation had been designed to satisfy not so much political aspirations but economic ambitions.

One of the things that we are attempting to do in this Parliament through the policies of our Government is to define confederation in a way that gives an equal sense of justice, participation and caring to all regions of Canada. I would hope that many of us living in central Canada are sensitive historically as well as contemporaneously to the priority of Canadian sovereignty and that the need to stress our identity would take into account the need to recognize the economic hopes and priorities of all the regions, many of which have not enjoyed the prosperity that would be their wish and ours, one of these regions being British Columbia and other lumber producing provinces.

As I see it, Bill C-37 attempts to do that because it is designed to maintain the health and integrity of the lumber industry in that area and across the country. One illustration is the way in which the revenues to be derived from the new tax will be distributed to the provinces. The provincial Governments can gain. This is a recognition both of our commitment to maintain the health and strength of the lumber industry in other parts of the country and to recognize the legitimate aspirations of the provincial Governments throughout this land.

I would argue, Madam Speaker, that rather than being a threat to sovereignty, this Bill actually contributes positively to it because it is contributing to the ongoing strength of this confederation. We have to recognize that confederation has a future only if there is an accompanying economic strength. I have a second point to emphasize in this debate. I would like to emphasize the way in which Bill C-37 will add to the economic prosperity this country has been enjoying in the last two years. It will increase the economic strength of a province that has been hit hard.

First, the Bill will allow the lumber export industry in British Columbia and elsewhere to continue to be viable. For that reason, what is contained in a letter from an official of the International Woodworkers of America is not surprising. This is the kind of official that is not always quoted on this side of the House, but I am very happy to do so today. The letter reads:

The International Woodworkers of America wishes to extend its general support for the recent negotiated settlement of the softwood lumber dispute with the United States.

Under ideal conditions, many of us would have preferred to have our "day in court" in order to try to reduce the 15 per cent preliminary duty imposed by the U.S. Commerce Department last October. However, given the realities of the strong protectionist mood in the United States, it is extremely unlikely that the 15 per cent could have been reduced substantially in the final Commerce Department decision.

And even if the correct duty were eventually determined to be lower than 15 per cent, that decision could only be arrived at through three or four years of protracted court proceedings.

In the meantime, all of the revenues from the countervailing duty would continue to flow into U.S. government coffers at the rate of 12 per cent to 15 per cent on the selling price of lumber.

This representative of a trade union is understandably concerned about the future of his industry and the employment prospects of his members. He is endorsing what Bill C-37 represents because Bill C-37 will allow trade and employment to continue. It will allow the economic growth of the province to continue, particularly when taking into consideration the way in which the revenue from the tax will stay in Canada.

We must recognize that if Bill C-37 had not been drafted, there would be a tax imposed upon the export of Canadian lumber to the United States by the United States. There is no way Parliament could have held that back. We could have protested it and taken procedural action, but as the letter to which I have just referred indicates, such a procedure would be long and protracted and would have no guarantee of a positive result for Canada. Consequently, it was incumbent upon the Canadian Government, representing the Canadian people and their interests, to come to the kind of decision very often reached by individuals.

I can recall a lawyer telling me, when discussing a matter with him, that it depends upon how much money I would be willing to spend and the costs I would be willing to bear to make the point I had in mind. As a country, we have had to decide whether or not the price to be paid in undertaking a countervailing procedure would be worth the effort while this kind of negotiated effort could bring about a settlement which, in percentage terms, would have no more serious implications than those which were indicated by the United States Government. Even more, such a settlement would keep the revenues in Canada. To add to that, it would make it possible for those revenues to be distributed to the regions most concerned.

The provincial Governments will be receiving payments in accordance with the volume of trade and taxation paid from within each province. We should look at this agreement not only in the light of the short-term considerations such as full employment in the lumber industry but also in the light of the long-term considerations of all Canadians who are concerned that the lumber resources of Canada will continue and indeed be strengthened.

Last March I had the privilege of visiting Ethiopia to inspect the relief work taking place there. I was impressed by a stark fact. The one reason Ethiopia was suffering famine was that at the beginning of this century, over half of the country was covered by trees while now, only 2 per cent of the country is covered by trees.

We must be concerned about the future of Canada's forests. I would hope that we would seize this new opportunity for revenue represented by Bill C-37 and urge the provincial Governments to use that revenue to bring about enhanced ecology programs which would do much to guarantee the future of Canada's forests. I suggest that for these reasons, we should look upon Bill C-37 as one that adds to the strength of confederation, Canada's economic viability and thus our sovereignty.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I appreciated the remarks made by my good friend, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), who quoted a very famous Canadian and an architect of the Regina Manifesto. I hope he has read the rest of that gentleman's writings.

Any nation, including ours, that wishes to maintain and exercise its independence and sovereignty must pay a price. Sometimes the price is monetary, sometimes it is great public debate, dissent and argument. However, independence and sovereignty must be maintained even when it costs.

This issue was not begun by us. Canada was found not guilty some four years ago. The problems certain circles in the United States claim exist were not of our doing but of their own making, the making of the United States Government and Congress. They are the ones who set policies to provide for a U.S. dollar of high value. That was none of our doing and that is why the problem is mostly of their own making. Canada, as a self-respecting, independent and sovereign nation, should not allow itself to be victimized by such problems.

The Americans used the excuse that stumpage fees were to blame. Stumpage fees charged in New Brunswick are about eight times as high as those in British Columbia and stumpage fees charged in Ontario are about three times as high as those in British Columbia. In the 10 provinces and the two territories, stumpage fees and other forestry fees are all over the lot and there is nothing new about that.

The Government could have exempted New Brunswick, for example, or Ontario or Nova Scotia from the export tax. However, the agreement would allow the U.S. to do something it would do in any event, with or without our agreement, and that is to impose a duty in any case. That is the reality of the situation.

Under the constitutional set-up in the United States, there are many roadblocks including the U.S. administration, the President and his Cabinet, the International Trade Agency, the courts, the House of Representatives and the Senators. Under the American Constitution, every international agreement or treaty is subject to ratification by Congress.

In Canada, an international agreement or treaty is not subject to parliamentary debate or amendment. In effect, we are now debating an international agreement under the guise of debating an export tax Bill. It is the only chance we get to do so. I hope the day comes—and I believe it will come when the New Democratic Party is in power—when every international agreement or treaty entered into by Canada will be eligible or subject to debate, amendment and ratification by the Parliament of Canada. That is long overdue because I can recall the Conservatives during the years of Liberal Government from 1968 to 1984, except for one 10-month period, complaining of treaties and international agreements entered into which we could not debate in Parliament except for the odd occasion when we used an Opposition Day and it was not subject to a vote or an instrument subject to amendment.

A country has to earn the respect of other countries in the exercise of its independence and sovereignty. Why should the U.S. respect our independence and sovereignty? They have been very free in ignoring our sovereignty. They have been very free in failing to respect our independence in our Arctic waters, on cruise missile testing, SDI, and now softwood lumber. This is not the first time and it will not be the last. We keep failing to exercise and stand up for our independence. What is next? Natural gas? Steel? Potash?

The other problem is that when other nations see what the U.S. is able to foist on Canada, why should they not decide that Canada is an easy mar?. What the U.S. can make us do, they can make us do as well.

Natural resources are administered by the provinces and harvested according to each province's own likes. It is their resource to manage as they see fit. That is the constitutional fact in Canada. That means that no national Government can allow the Government of another country to interfere with not only the powers of our national Government but with the powers and rights of the provinces and territories which make up our country. No national Government worthy of the name would sign an agreement which would allow a foreign power to interfere.

I suggest to my hon. friends in the Government that they must proceed back to the table with the U.S. and obtain an amendment, Memorandum of Understanding, addendum, or whatever they want to call it, to the present agreement. It will say that the U.S. will respect our sovereignty and independence and accept in good faith our word to behave properly in accordance with the agreement and we will not be party to an agreement which allows the U.S. to examine our books. We are not a satrap of the U.S. We are not a Poland or East Germany, Honduras or Guatemala or the Philippines. We are sovereign and independent. We are different. We must do our own thing and the U.S.A. and every other country must respect that. They will not, however, until we stand up for that independence and sovereignty, even when there is an economic price to pay. Canada is more important than that. We do not need to add new words to our national anthem which say: "Oh, U.S.A., spangled banner awave, Canada stands on guard for you." We do not need that. I want to remind the Government that Sir John A. Macdonald and John George Diefenbaker defended our independence and sovereignty. They stood up for this nation.

Mr. McDermid: So have we.

Mr. Benjamin: They stood up for its independence and sovereignty.

Mr. McDermid: So have we.

Mr. Benjamin: We do not need agreements which allow this kind of supine sell-out of what Canada is about. I hope the Government will take this Bill off the Order Paper, go back to the U.S. and say this is what we must have, otherwise the agreement is abrogated and we will fight in the courts and under GATT and take the other measures open to us if they want to play that kind of game.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the second reading debate of Bill C-37, the Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act. The previous speaker finished on the question of fighting the battle in the courts. There was a very interesting article by Robin Neill, an economic historian, in The Ottawa Citizen on January 3. With respect to fighting it in the courts he said: "Even if Canada lost the case it would be better to take it now rather than gamble with the country's sovereignty for years to come." While we may look at having to pay the 15 per cent export tax on every bit of softwood lumber which goes to the U.S., and while it will cost in the neighbourhood of some $600 million and jeopardize hundreds upon hundreds of direct and indirect jobs, we have to realize that in addition to the technical factors underlining such an agreement, there is also the other side, the substantive part, namely the process. For me the real downside of this legislation, the real sin, if you will, of the Government, lies on the process side of this equation. It succumbed to the dictation of the U.S. It did not stand up for the rights and independence of this nation.

That the U.S. has the right to set the price of this important natural resource, to regulate it and review it, is simply shocking. Members of the Government say this deal strengthens confederation. It does the exact opposite. The Government has succumbed to the wishes and demands of the Americans as opposed to voicing the aspirations, not only of the industry concerned but the will and determination of our country as a whole.

This is not a single, isolated act by the Government. It reflects a mind-set which is willing to genuflect to the U.S. We have seen in the life of this Parliament so far the Conservative Government's willingness to dismantle FIRA. Some critics would have it that FIRA was anti-foreign investment. It was not. It was pro-foreign investment, but according to Canadian needs, interests and sovereignty. Ninety per cent of all applications were accepted, but only after it was very clear that they would result in benefits for Canada. The Conservatives dismantled FIRA and put in its place Investment Canada, bowing to the wishes of the Americans.

• (1600)

Next it was the National Energy Program. The Conservatives were very quick to please the multinational U.S. corporations rather than furthering our own exploration efforts. The multinational corporations with head offices south of the border were the winners in the pharmaceutical legislation as well.

Under the administration of Mr. Trudeau, the Conservative Party was opposed to the patriation of our Constitution. They voiced their disapproval of going to another country to patriate the Constitution which would allow the Canadian Parliament to change a facet of our way of life without going, cap-in-hand, to another country for approval. Where was the vision of the Conservative Opposition then?

Under the administration of Mr. Pearson we saw the same mind-set in the Tory Opposition. They were against creating our own recognizable flag. They were also opposed to having our own anthem, a symbol of our maturity and independence.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member was not in the House when Canada's national anthem was approved. I was. It was approved with the unanimous support of the House. It is not true to say that the Conservatives were against the anthem. I ask that the Member withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Blais: Withdraw those remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order, as I think the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) knows. We are on debate. I suggest that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) limit his comments, as much as possible, to the Bill before the House.

Mr. Marchi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. While I respect the request of the Chair, I am trying to elaborate upon the sovereignty aspect, which is probably the most crucial aspect of this legislation. I would like to use my time to speak about what my constituents believe to be the most harmful aspect of this legislation, namely, the loss of sovereignty, the trading away, if you will, of our right to guide the destiny of our country without bowing to the United States. I am trying to illustrate that this is not an isolated case. In years gone by, whether in Opposition or in Government as they now are, there was a tendency and a willingness to please our friends south of the border rather than standing up for our independence.

I realize, as do all Members in my Party, that the Americans are our neighbours, allies, and friends. Although we recognize that they have a larger population, are more powerful economically, and are a greater force in international politics, that does not give them the right to dictate what our preferences and legislation should be. That does not give Canadian Governments the right to succumb to please them.

Past Liberal Governments went to Washington when necessary and, with every respect for our American friends, stood up to them for what we perceived to be the sovereignty of our country. That is a tradition of which we in this Party are proud. That is a tradition of which Canadians are proud. Although Canada is younger, smaller, and not as powerful as the United States, we were able to garner respect for our independence. We were able to stand up for our aspirations and earn the respect of the United States. I look forward to speaking on this Bill again when the main motion is before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, the Bill before us has been described by the Government as an indication of a great victory for Canada and Canadian sovereignty. Let us study what has actually happened to see what is meant by this Bill and what it says about the Conservative Government's view of Canada and the Conservative Government's relations with the United States.

For a number of years the softwood lumber industry in the United States has argued that it faced unfair competition from softwood lumber produced in Canada. It argued that the method by which the provinces imposed stumpage fees amounted to an improper and unfair subsidy, enabling Canadian softwood lumber to take too large a share of the market in the United States to the disadvantage of softwood lumber produced in that country.

Some years ago they brought a complaint to the American Trade Commission about this state of affairs and asked that a countervailing duty be placed on softwood lumber originating in Canada. The Canadian industry, with the support of the federal Government, fought that complaint and, in spite of the determined efforts of the American softwood industry, the Canadians won a victory.

Some years later the Americans brought a new complaint on exactly the same facts. However, this time there was an important difference. Instead of backing the Canadian industry completely and fighting against this unjust claim that Canadian softwood lumber was being subsidized and therefore competing unfairly in the American market, the Canadian Government failed to back up the Canadian industry.

It is true that the Government talked tough at the beginning and said the American claim was wrong. The Government said it would fight that claim of subsidy to the end but that is not what happened. While the Minister talked tough, we now know that negotiations were taking place behind the scenes which frankly, no matter what they were called, were aimed at selling out Canadian interests. When the Minister's activities were brought to light, she said that the Government had made a final offer. However, it turned into still another final offer and, just before the new year, an agreement was announced which indicated that the Canadian Government instead of the American Government would impose a tax on exports of softwood lumber to the United States, and the American authorities would have the right to say whether that tax was being properly applied and whether any measures imposed by the provinces to take the place of that export tax amounted to the same value. In other words, the Americans had a veto over what the Canadian Government and the provinces did when it came to raising the price of Canadian lumber in the American market.

If this was such a great deal, one would have thought the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) would have been there to take credit for the deal when it was completed and announced. One would have thought the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would have been there to take credit for the deal when it was announced. However, it is significant that they were both very far away. The fact that the Minister was sunning herself in Hawaii and the Prime Minister was elsewhere indicates to us that deep in their hearts the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade knew they had entered into a bad deal for Canada, had sold out Canadian interests and weakened Canadian sovereignty.

What were the objectives of the Americans in this whole process. First, it was to raise the price of Canadian softwood lumber in the United States and make it less competitive so that less would be sold and more room would be made for American lumber there. Whether the tax is imposed by the Americans or the Canadians, the result is exactly the same. The price of softwood lumber has been increased and it has been made less competitive in the United States, to the detriment of the Canadian industry, its workers, and the entire Canadian economy. No matter what the Government says, this could not possibly serve Canadian interests.

A second American objective was that once the agreement was made the Americans would have a final say about the application of this export tax or of any replacement measure. The Minister and her colleagues are trying to say that they protected Canadian sovereignty and that the United States does not have that authority. However, they are not supported by the letter sent on behalf of Secretary of Commerce Baldrige and special trade representative Yeutter in which they told the American industry what the agreement meant to them. It is clear they thought it meant they would have the final say on how Canada priced its softwood lumber. That is an intrusion into Canadian sovereignty, no matter how one describes it.

The Government says that this is simply a letter written by some Americans, as if the Secretary of Commerce and the special trade representative were just one of several hundred million people in that country. However, when one reads the agreement which has been attached specifically into Canadian legislation by the Bill before us, it clearly supports the interpretation by the American authorities. The agreement says that the Americans have the final say as to whether the value of any replacement measures for the export tax and the tax itself create the additional cost for Canadian softwood lumber that the Americans are seeking.

In short, the Canadian Government and provinces cannot change anything if it affects the final value that the Americans want to get out of the deal. The Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, at the time the agreement was announced very honestly said of the final agreement that the Americans have their pound of flesh. I commend the Minister for his honesty in that regard, but what an admission. What better proof that this is not a good agreement for Canada?

I repeat, the Minister said at a press conference announcing this bad deal for Canada that the Americans have their pound of flesh. After the subsequent press conference by the Official Opposition in which we pointed out very clearly, and obviously correctly, that this was a bad deal for Canada and an intrusion into Canadian sovereignty, the Minister and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) rushed to have another press conference that same afternoon. When pressed by journalists, he admitted that this deal would have an adverse effect on the Canadian industry and Canadian workers. Yet the Government has the nerve to present this Bill to the House to implement what the Government itself sincerely believes privately, and publicly, through the words of Ministers like the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, what is a bad deal for this country.

The deal itself is frightening, but it is more frightening because it gives a signal about what may be the real intentions of the Government for the Auto Pact and the hundreds of thousands of jobs connected with it. If the Government can say in the House that it did not intend to give in on softwood lumber but behind the scenes was busy doing just that, then there is a risk that this same Government could do this with the Auto Pact and its safeguards in the free trade negotiations. It could say in the House that the pact is working well and it does not intend to change it, but behind the scenes destroy the pact and sell out the interests of hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers in communities like my own City of Windsor.

Therefore we must oppose this Bill and defeat it in order to send a message to the Government that neither on softwood lumber, the auto industry or any other key sector of the Canadian economy will we let the Government sell out this country and destroy it. If the Government does not want to do it, at least the Official Opposition and Canadians generally will stand up for Canada. We must send a message to that effect to this unworthy Government.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I believe that the Bill we are dealing with today is yet another example of the frustration Canadians feel with the Government. I am not talking about the polls or any of the scandals that are taking place, but how the Government deals with legitimate issues that arise.

While the polls and the various scandals deal with the Government's integrity or lack thereof, I believe the issue before us now is, in some respects, much more important. I believe that Canadians no longer have any faith that the Government can represent them. I believe there is a lack of trust that the Conservative Government can continue to negotiate contracts on their behalf. This may be unfortunate because when the Government negotiates a beneficial agreement we may be in a situation in which no Canadian will believe it is possible. Unfortunately, the Government has not negotiated a good deal in this case. I think it is because they do not have faith in themselves in representing Canada. They do not believe they can sit down as equals with the Americans and say: "Look, we have interests. You want our lumber. We have a legitimate legal case and are willing to fight for our legitimate legal case". That is not what happened.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Minister fought.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, as my colleague said, the Minister fought. She rose in this House and gave a very forceful speech in which she said: "We will not accept this. We will take our case to GATT. We will fight this unfair imposition by the Americans". But could we believe it? Of course, we could not.

As a teacher, I used to negotiate for the teachers in northern Manitoba. I cannot imagine how the teachers would feel if they were assembled in this hall and I rose one day and said: "We are going to go to the school-board and fight this case", and then later I said I agreed with the school-board and we should give in. That is what has happened here. I have a few quotes here from people in Saskatchewan and Manitoba which show how these people and the people throughout the country have reacted. They basically feel they were sold out by the Government.

The feeling is that this Government went to the Americans and told them it was not even going to try to take our case forward. It was not even going to try to win our case. What it would do instead was to make one final offer and if the Americans did not like that, we would come back later and give them another final offer and if they did not like that, we would get down on our knees and offer them something else: "Take Quebec, take Ontario—even Windsor". That is the attitude of the Government, and it really is a problem.

Let us deal with the substance of the legislation. What we are being asked to do with this legislation is to impose an export tax of 15 per cent on all the lumber which may go to the United States. In addition to that we are creating problems for all sorts of other industries which use Canadian lumber to make the final products which go to the United States. We have made it that much more complicated because sometimes lumber comes in from the United States, is processed here and then returns. We will charge those people a 15 per cent export tax.

Yesterday in the House the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) called those problems anomalies. She thinks they are just little problems with which we have not dealt. Unfortunately, those little problems are part of this agreement which was signed and sealed by this Government. That does not speak well for the Government's ability to negotiate because it is now discovering—thanks to the efforts of the Opposition and people in the industry—that there are things in this agreement about which it is unaware.

I remember the brave words of the Minister during the holidays. She said: "It is a good agreement". We then pointed out some problems and she said: "That is not true". She kind of denied everything that was brought to her attention, but little by little she discovered those problems were real. Now she calls them "anomalies". I am afraid that once we pass this legislation, we are going to find more and more problems, loopholes and anomalies of which the Minister and her negotiators are unaware. I think that is a very serious problem.

This legislation imposes a 15 per cent tax and we are not even sure on what it imposes a 15 per cent tax, although we know it certainly is on our lumber products. We are told that once we pass this legislation somehow the Government is going to sit down with the provinces and do away with the legislation and have the provinces impose some new kind of tax on stumpage or something of that nature which will have the same value as the 15 per cent export tax. Then, of course, we read that whatever the provinces do it must equal 15 per cent, and it must be seen by the Americans to equal 15 per cent. They must approve of some of the projects and will, obviously, disapprove of some of the other projects the provinces may wish to undertake. That creates a problem. In passing this legislation we will not know what will happen down the road.

I listened to our Minister of Industry in Manitoba express his concern that among the proposals put forward by the federal Government is a stumpage fee on all lumber produced within the various provinces.

The problem is that we really do not know how the Government intends to take this export tax and impose it in some form or manner with the provinces. We do not know what we are going to end up with down the road. I think that is completely silly. We are being asked to pass this legislation fairly quickly. It was brought into the House as soon as the House convened. We do not have any concept of what the Government wants to do down the road and no idea how it is going to affect our export markets, not only with the Americans but with other countries, and how it could possibly affect our Canadian consumers. That is ridiculous.

Here we are dealing with a very significant piece of legislation and, unfortunately, we are only allowed 10 minutes to speak at this stage. A number of industries across the country said we should not have negotiated in this manner. The manager of the forest operation in my riding says he agrees with the industry, that we should have taken our legal position and fought for our legal rights. We could have won it.

Mr. McDermid: That is not what he told me. I spoke to Spencer on the phone.

Mr. Murphy: The name of the man I refer to is Bill Jonas. I don't know who your man is. Maybe he is another anomaly. I will conclude by saying that we do not know why the Government refused to take our position forward and fight for us. Why did the Government not do that? If we had lost we could have still had the 15 per cent export tax. However, in the meantime we would have fought for Canadian interests and stood up for the Canadian industry.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very brief comments today with regard to Bill C-37 and, in particular, to the motion moved by my Leader requesting that Bill C-37 not be read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

It is quite obvious what the Government is trying to do with regard to Bill C-37. It has been referred to as a sell-out of Canadian sovereignty and, indeed, it is. The Government, through the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), has found occasion over the past two and a half years to speak of the very close relationship with President Ronald Reagan and the United States administration. We have often heard in the House and, indeed, throughout the country, about how, as a result of the election of the Progressive Conservative Government, a new relationship has developed. Well, what has come of this so-called new and close relationship with the Government of the United States?

Over the course of the last two years we have found time and time again that the Conservative Government, through the Prime Minister, has been prepared by its actions to diminish Canadian sovereignty, in effect to sell out our sovereignty. Commentators, columnists and Canadians generally question the credibility of the Government when they hear it say that it is fighting for the interests of Canadians. As Hon. Members know, this Government is suffering from a credibility crisis. We have a Government that is desperate. As of late, as Canadians are aware, the Government has lost the trust of the people of Canada.

As Liberals we do not like to comment generally on public opinion polls—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: —but I must take this opportunity to comment briefly on the results of public opinion polls recently publicized over the course of the last number of weeks.

What do these results show? They show that there has been a trend over the last two-and-a-half years. I am not referring to just one particular Gallup poll or one particular Angus Reid poll. On September 4, 1984, the Government was elected with a massive majority. Following the election it went through a honeymoon period of popular support. During that time its popularity continued to rise. Then, at a particular point in time when the people of Canada realized that they had been hoodwinked in that particular election campaign in the long hot summer of 1984, when they realized they had been misled in terms of the promises made by the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party, popular support started to plunge. The popular support of the Government started to free fall. Where is it today? It is the third Party. The Prime Minister is the Leader of the third Party in Canada. For the first time in some 20-odd years a Government is less popular in terms of support than our socialist friends to the left, the New Democratic Party.

At some point in time the Prime Minister and his Party will have to look in the mirror and ask themselves: "Why? Why is it that the people of Canada no longer trust us? Why is it that we only have the support of 28 per cent or 29 per cent of the Canadian electorate?" The answer is obvious. It is because the people of Canada do not like what they see. They do not agree with what the Government has been doing. They do not agree with patronage. They do not agree with all the scandals that have plagued this mortally-wounded Government. They do not agree with the actions the Government has taken. They do not agree with what the Prime Minister is doing in terms of our sovereignty and our relationship with the United States.

Canadians, regardless of where they live in this great country, are proud to be Canadians. The Conservative Government does not realize that. The Conservative Government and the Prime Minister do not realize that Canadians are prepared to pay the price to be Canadian, to retain our sovereignty, our independence. We want to be different. We do not want to be the fifty-first state of the United States of America. Yet notwithstanding the wishes of the people of Canada the Prime Minister is prepared to sell out the country.

Madam Speaker, you will recall the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and what happened to him. We all know what happened to him. At one point in time he stood up in the House, and I recall this specifically, and announced that the Foreign Investment Review Agency would be axed. He said: "Canada is now open for business". Headlines right across the country shouted: "Industry Minister Says Canada Open for Business". The Prime Minister said to the people of the world: "We are open for business. Come on in, foreigners".

Canadians responded to that. They said that Canada has always been open for business. They said that they did not want to sell out the country. They asked what the Prime Minister was doing with regard to Investment Canada and we now have Bill C-37 before us, which is a Bill entitled "an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products".

I cannot conclude my remarks here this afternoon without making some brief and passing reference to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). If you recall, Madam

Speaker, when she was given her portfolio the quarterback, the Prime Minister, said: "I have given her the ball. Watch her run." Well, the Government of Canada was on the goal line. All it had to do was go over the goal line to score the touchdown. Yet what did the Minister for International Trade do? She fumbled on the goal line. She could not even hang on to the ball. She stood up in the House and said to the people of Canada: "I will fight tooth and nail for Canadian interests. We have made an offer and it is our final offer". Just a day or two later she said: "Well, we made another offer and it is our final offer". Like the Government and like the Prime Minister the Minister for International Trade suffers from a credibility problem. Perhaps it was as a result of being in the sun in Hawaii while she was basking on the beach, eating pineapple and sipping margaritas and pina coladas. Perhaps the sun penetrated the Minister and did some damage in terms of her credibility.

The so-called deal was announced on December 30. It was the Minister's new year's resolution—I note that you are indicating to me, Madam Speaker, that my time has expired. However unfortunate that may be, given the fact that I do have other comments to make, I say in conclusion to my colleagues who are hanging their heads in shame during these most difficult times the following. I can understand why they are shell-shocked and worried about their political futures. I say to them that if they want to regain some support and respect from Canadians then they must do the honourable thing and vote against Bill C-37.

Mr. Boudria: May I ask a question of the Hon. Member with the unanimous consent of the House, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the debate thus far. I suppose one can get the impression from what has been said that the Government avoids as much as possible causing difficulties for our neighbours to the south. I wish to take note of a fact that has been revealed to us, that is, the Americans are having considerable difficulty as a result of the Conservative Government with respect to determining where the additional star in the Stars and Stripes will be placed.

• (1640)

I rather like and enjoy many members of this Government. There is a certain naivety that characterizes the government side. I could say that this Government is divided into two classes: the naive and the knaves. When all the court cases and investigations are over, all of the knaves will be eliminated and only the naive will be left.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was heard to say yesterday that he is from Missouri. I do not know what part of Missouri he is from. I understand that if someone says they are from Missouri, they are likely to be pretty tough to deal with; they are not likely to be fooled by Yankee traders. This Government has been consistently fooled by Yankee traders. In Bill C-37 and the softwood issue, we are only dealing with part of the fabric of interactions between this Government and the Americans, and this has caused a great deal of concern among the Canadian people.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) indicated that when we see the great ineptitude of this Government in dealing with the United States on trade issues, we are filled with the fear of God about what may happen if, indeed, the Auto Pact was denied to be on the table what would they place upon the table. In looking at the particular instance of the softwood lumber issue, we must be deeply concerned. The issue of countervail against Canadian softwood lumber came up previously, as did other matters to do with lumber. There was the problem over shakes and shingles against which a countervail was imposed. I observed at that time that the words "shake" and "shingle" were the vernacular for a neurological disease and the symptoms thereof, and reflected on the rather nervous way in which the Government has approached issues involving negotiations with the United States.

Referring back to the 1983 decision, Canada won because it had a good case. If the Government had the courage of its earlier words, we would have won again. I wish to remind the House of those earlier words. "We will fight this all the way. Today it is lumber, tomorrow it will be any number of issues". That was stated by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), and she was certainly correct. Indeed, if we fold as we have folded on this matter, then it is only a matter of time before similar issues will arise with respect to other trade relationships, or other products traded with the United States.

Clearly with the terrible surge of protectionism in the United States, it will regard what we produce and how we produce it very closely, and it will discover subsidies almost everywhere. It is a nation under attack on trade, in large measure because of its own action, mismanagement of its economy, and its own inefficiencies. It is clear in the Americans' trade relationships with Canada that the moment Canadians, or indeed any other nation, begin to compete effectively with them, it tries to search out means of retaliation.

In this particular instance, it was argued by the Americans that the stumpage fees in parts of this country were too low and constituted a subsidy. After an initial threat of a countervail of some 35 per cent, they settled on 15 per cent by virtue of the initial ruling.

Laying that fact aside for the moment, it could be argued that the softwood lumber transported to the border experiences a railway subsidy. If we examine the matter carefully, one could discover a number of areas where the Americans, in their absolutely relentless search to find excuses for their own poor performance, will find with respect to lumber that there are subsidies all over the place that need to be countervailed.

This is an example of what can happen elsewhere. It is not just the fact that we have had imposed upon us a countervailing duty in response to which we have a negotiated Memorandum of Agreement. It is that by virtue of the export tax substituted by that agreement, we have a whole host of difficulties presented to us.

One of the things that will result from our failure to adequately deal with this dispute with the Americans is that it is raising disputes within our own country between, for example, the maritime provinces and the western provinces. They take note of the fact that their stumpage fees vary between $50 per lot, as compared to $1-$10 in British Columbia. In large measure they are subject to the same export tax. With this differentiation in stumpage fees, there will be a tendency to unload the lumber that does not go to the United States, and they will begin to compete and sell their softwood in the Maritimes.

It has been pointed out that this particular export tax, which under this agreement is applicable only to the United States, may well be an infringement of the GATT. If that is so, we are presented with greater difficulties. Beyond the imposition of this tax, it may well mean that the cost of our exports to other countries will go up commensurately. That certainly will hurt. If the stumpage fees increase for every type of wood products from softwood lumber, that will mean that the domestic costs of wood products will increase for all Canadians.

One wonders what we have won. We have failed to fight the battle that we should have through the American courts and GATT. There is much evidence that we might have won. We would not then have established an unfortunate precedent that will not only get us in trouble with our other trading partners but means trouble for us with the United States. In spite of the tough words that we uttered: "We will fight this all the way. Well, we are not going to fight it, we will offer a 10 per cent export tax. You don't think that is good enough? Well, a 15 per cent export tax", if we had fought the issue properly, and not caved in after those meaningless threats, then we would not have been opening ourselves to similar attacks on other exports to the United States.

Of course, there is the issue of sovereignty. The issue of sovereignty is encased in all that I have said so far, in substance; but in fact the Memorandum of Agreement permits the Americans to impose upon us what they feel should be our domestic policy with respect to softwood lumber. What will be next? What other area of manufacture, resource management, or efforts to benefit the regions of this country will be under attack because the Americans do not like it? What future empty threats will we make in response to an American threat that will end up in concessions that will hurt our country and which compromise our sovereignty?

If one thing has become clear during the circus which has been the Government's relationship with the United States, it is that Canadians are becoming jealous of our independence and sovereignty. It is perfectly clear that this Government is increasingly seen as not representing their views, failing to represent a sovereign future for Canada, and as a Government that is ready to say: "I give up. Take what I have got, or tell me what to do, because we are so anxious to be friendly with you, Ronnie Reagan"

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher)—Air Canada—Employees' pension plan—Request for full annual reports; the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell)—Ports—Vancouver—Request for funds to upgrade facilities. (b) Request that port users committee be established; and the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)—Refugees—Deportation of Iranian from United States. (b) Request for issuance of ministrial permit.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), (p. 2382).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate, albeit briefly, in the debate on Bill C-37.

What is Bill C-37? Of course it is about lumber but, more important, Bill C-37 is about Canadian sovereignty. That is what is really important.

I am not here to diminish the importance of the jobs of those working in the softwood lumber industry; obviously their jobs are important too. The Bill goes far deeper. The Bill is an act of surrender on the part of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to a foreign Government.

We have heard the Minister tell us many times in the House how she would be tough negotiating with the Americans. As a matter of fact, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed the Minister, he referred to the fact that she would be a real tough ball player and that she would act in such a way as to ensure that she obtained the best deal for Canadians.

What happened? On September 30, 1986, the Minister for International Trade talked with the Americans about the softwood lumber issue. She said that she was making what she called her final offer. It sounded real serious, almost threatening as a matter of fact. The Americans could lump it or leave it, according to the Minister. Of course the terms included a 10 per cent stumpage fee.

What did we hear? On November 26, once the final offer had not gone through, the Minister made a second final offer. Perhaps, Madam Speaker, you do not believe there can be such a thing as more than one final offer. You have to understand Tories. I know you do not understand how they operate because you are non-partisan in this place, Madam Speaker. You would have to put yourself in the mind-set of a Tory, although I know you cannot, the non-partisan person you are.

Those Tories across the way make threats and back off because they are dealing with their American friends. Not long after the Prime Minister was sworn into office, he cozied up to President Ronald Reagan in such a way that now he cannot be authoritative in any way, shape or form; he destroyed credibility in the past. He sang "When Irish Eyes are Smiling" on Canadian television from coast to coast. I want you to know, Madam Speaker, that my television set has never been the same since. He spent $2.6 million of Canadian taxpayers' money putting on an extravaganza in Quebec City and telling everyone that they were only as far away as their telephones. He also told everyone that they would settle every problem that occurred.

Obviously Ronald Reagan gathered from this that the United States could do just about anything because the Prime Minister of Canada was such a friendly guy. Obviously he gathered that they could take whatever course of action they wished and that gradually Canada would succumb.

As I indicated a while ago, there was a final offer on September 30. Subsequently, on November 26, there was a second final offer. This offer would have imposed a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood, but it was rejected by the United States industry coalition. On December 12, the Minister for International Trade responded to the American counter offer. That was the third final offer. However, she refused the third final offer from the Americans and countered with acceptance of a 15 per cent export tax. On December 30, Canada signed the now infamous Memorandum of Understanding with the United States.

What did that get us into? I was holidaying outside the country in late December. I picked up a newspaper, and what did I read about Canada? It was an article which contained a story about how, according to a very well-known and respected Canadian university professor, we had surrendered part of our soveriegnty to the United States in the way in which we decided to deal with the matter.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, in addition to all these concerns, I am also worried about our multilateral agreements. What is going to happen to GATT, for instance? What kind of an agreement is this, a bilateral agreement that imposes a surtax on exports to another country? What happens in a case like that? Many of us feel that other countries might well bring Canada before an international court of justice, and that they would have a very good case, to ask us to justify the action taken by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), supported by her leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the few Conservative Members who spoke in favour of this Bill—many Members said nothing at all, as usual, Madam Speaker. I realize that it has recently become particularly hard for a Conservative to speak.

It is embarrassing to be a Conservative. I realize that. It must be a very humiliating experience for those poor Conservatives sitting opposite. I know it must be hard. The time may come when they won't want to go back to their ridings. They will decide to stay here within a radius of three or four blocks from Parliament Hill, afraid to go farther afield because they might meet some of their constituents. After all, what this Government has been doing is shameful. Of course I don't blame them for that. But as I said earlier, most of the Conservative Members have said nothing. They didn't even support the Bill. However, when it is time to vote, they will make their silent gesture of approval, as usual.

Mr. Blais: The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) spoke this morning and you weren't even here. You just came in five minutes ago.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I hear the Hon. Member opposite who usually doesn't say anything either. We see him from time to time in the corridors. I welcome him now that he has decided to visit us today in the House. It is very good of him to come to Parliament, and we appreciate his presence.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais), on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, first of all, according to our Standing Orders the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) is not supposed to mention, make use of or discuss the presence or absence of Members in the House. I take it as a personal insult because I have been here all day, and he just came in five minutes ago, except for Oral Question Period when they can get in front of the television cameras. That is the only time we see his face. Otherwise he never makes an appearance in the House.

Mr. Rossi: Madam Speaker, I don't think the Hon. Member is raising a point of order. He seems to be jealous because he is not as photogenic on television as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Besides, he is never here.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROTECTION OF WHISTLEBLOWERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Criminal Code to protect "whistleblowers", public officials who, acting to promote the public interest, disclose government wrongdoing or misinformation, from harassment, persecution and prosecution by the Government or its agents.

He said: Madam Speaker, I feel very lucky to have the opportunity, with all of the Bills and motions that Members have on the Order Paper, to present this idea, which is a very important one. There is no doubt in my mind it is an idea whose time has come. At the same time though, I am disappointed because I understand that the Government intends to prevent this motion from proceeding. I hope it will be indicated during Government Members' speeches, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Gérin) can indicate, that the motion does have some hope of being considered and that we can look forward to legislation some time soon on this subject.

What I am talking about in this measure is the official inside a Department, sworn to secrecy, bound by the master and servant duty, stuck with the Official Secrets Act to do his duty, who discovers something while he is working that he feels must be brought to the attention of the public. The word which has developed to describe this individual is the whistleblower. It is a good word. It describes an individual who feels in the course of his duties that he has learned something and feels justified in blowing the whistle on his Department and on the Government by bringing the matter to the attention of the public.

I have looked at this problem not only from the side of the Opposition where we can make political mileage out of things that whistleblowers bring to light, but I have looked at it also from side of the Government's. I do not think the present Government will last long and I hope Canadians will give the Liberal Party their confidence to form the Government in the next election. I have looked at the whistleblower problem not only from the point of giving the Opposition good mileage, but also responsibly from the Government's point of view. I did so because I want Ministers to be able to rely on officials, to be able to confide in them and to be able to seek their advice. If the whistleblowing concept goes too far, Ministers will stay at arms length from their Departments. They will be very reluctant to share their thoughts and concerns because of the fear that officials, knowing the way a Minister is thinking and what a Minister has said, might rush out and blow the whistle.

Let me say a word about public opinion. I will start with a British example. Members of the House will remember the sinking of the Belgrano during the British war with the Falkland Islands. The Belgrano was sunk by the British navy. But was the British defence force entitled to sink the Belgrano? The Minister, defending that action, which escalated a war which was serious enough in any event, said that the Belgrano was approaching the area of conflict and that the British were justified in firing because of that. Information inside the Department in question, about which officials of the Minister knew, was that the Belgrano was leaving the area of conflict, heading in the opposite direction.

The Minister had misinformed the British people. The official who blew the whistle on the Minister contributed to public debate and understanding of what had happened. He had exposed a Minister who was not telling the truth to the House and he was charged with a violation of the Official Secrets Act in Britain. By the way, the Official Secrets Act in Britain is a lot like ours. The case went to trial and at the end of it, the jury was directed by the judge, on the evidence presented, to convict.

Britain does not have a whistleblower provision in its legislation, as we do not have here in Canada. The jury retired to consider its verdict, and as only juries can do in the great British traditional system of justice that we have, the jury refused to convict Mr. Clive Ponting, the individual who went public. In a sense, it was a scandal of the law that the British people were telling their Parliament that they felt whistleblowing should be permitted when a Minister told a lie.

We had our own case here in Canada, namely, the Richard Price case. In this instance, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was assuring the Indian population, the native people of Canada, that the Government would be supporting and increasing native programs and that there would be no cut-backs. At the very same time inside the Department, plans were being drawn up to cut back the expenditures in the Department of Indian Affairs by something like $300 million. I could be wrong about the figure, but it was some very substantial amount of money which would have dismantled the department. Richard Price, working at the time for the Department of Indian Affairs, had a crisis of conscience. Later when he told the story, he said that he felt he should blow the whistle on this operation but he was not sure about it. He consulted his spiritual leader in his religious community, reflected on it a lot and decided to blow the whistle on the Government.

The Government folded the plans it had for cutting back programs of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In fact, they do not exist anymore. Richard Price was charged with a violation of his oath of secrecy, I think, under the Criminal Code. In any event, we asked questions about it in the House. There was a great uproar in the country and a lot of editorials urging the present Government not to proceed against Richard Price. The Government decided not to. I assumed it recognized that there was a public interest to be served in exposing misrepresentations of Government policy even if the misrepresentations were made by the Prime Minister of the day.

I give this background to demonstrate that Canadians by sending a message to this place, are beginning to recognize, that officials should not be subject to a rule of secrecy or confidentiality that has no exceptions, however useful it makes them to the Government.

I am inviting Members of this House to think about circumstances which justify whistleblowing and justify an official going public. The Criminal Code should contain some provisions that free a public servant under some circumstances from his oath of office, from the master/servant duty, from the provisions of the Official Secrets Act, from the constraints in the Criminal Code that prevent him from blowing the whistle in proper circumstances.

If you look around, you will find many jurisdictions that are more progressive than this one. The United States and a number of jurisdictions have whistleblowing legislation. Some of them are too broad as far as I am concerned. To say that the whistle can be blown whenever the public interest requires it gives too much discretion to public servants.

Where there is wrongdoing in a Department, where the law has been broken, whistleblowing should be permitted, for instance where misrepresentation of a circumstance is made or there is lying. Where a public servant is motivated by a desire to protect public health and safety or a desire to protect the environment if that is the justification and if it is sustained and reasonable, then whistleblowing should be immune from any of the sanctions that I have described. I hope that the motion will be supported in principle by the Government and that there will be an undertaking to do something about it.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): First of all, Madam Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to extend special greetings to the residents of Coaticook in my riding of Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead who for the first time earlier this week were able to watch the debates of the House on television, thanks to the co-operation of the firm Transvision Coaticook and its president Marcel Denis.

So as their Member this is my first opportunity to address the House of Commons as they watch this live telecast, and it is a great honour for me.

The people of Coaticook know me as an expert criminal lawyer with many years of experience. Indeed, Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have been able to serve Canada through my legal expertise for over 18 years already, more recently with the Department of Justice as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada.

I am sure the people back home will realize that the motion introduced by the Liberal Member for York East (Mr. Kaplan) is unacceptable in its present form. One only need read the motion itself to realize that the content is unacceptable as well.

Madam Speaker, although you did read the motion a few moments ago, allow me to read it again for the benefit of our listeners:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Criminal Code . . .

But there is no reference to the section or chapter which ought to be amended. There is no mention of that. This is vague, hollow, it does not refer to anything in particular. The French version states:

—afin de protéger les informateurs, fonctionnaires qui—

Does that mean that public servants have become informers, spies? The terminology is heavy, to say the least—

—who, acting to promote the public interest—

I would like the Hon. Member to define the public interest he has in mind. What sort of public interest could allow a public official to become an informer and break his oath of office?

—disclose government wrongdoing—

Where is, in the Hon. Member's motion, the definition of wrongdoing? What would constitute a wrongdoing? Is it intended that wrongdoing would include for instance an unjustified one-dollar expenditure? Would that allow a public official to decide on his own that some wrongdoing is involved, and therefore to leak a whole confidential file to newspapermen, or else to competitors in a bidding process, for instance? Could it go that far?

So what is the definition of wrongdoing? The Hon. Member gives no indication of that. He introduces a motion of an extremely general nature without making any kind of distinction. And, besides, he leaves the House immediately after putting forth his motion, without taking the time to say—

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please! The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows our rules. The Hon. Member who introduced the motion perhaps went behind the curtain for a few moments. I think it is unfair for the Hon. Member I just saw on this side while the other Member was speaking, to comment on the presence or absence of a Member. In this House, we usually respect the fact that an Hon. Member may have to go to the telephone or take notes. I do not think it fair to make that kind of reference to the absence or presence of an Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is aware of these Standing Orders.

Mr. Gérin: Madam Speaker, I apologize for mentioning the absence of the mover——from harassment, persecution and prosecution by the Government or its agents.

Our listeners and all Hon. Members are well aware that as moved this motion could not be accepted anyway for reasons of substance or form because it would amend a provision of the Criminal Code. Which section? Which chapter? Which definition to choose?

If the Hon. Member really wants to behave as a responsible legislator, why does he not take the time, to define, in his motion, such essential elements which would make it possible for us today to really debate a serious piece of legislation? Instead, the House has wasted one hour of its time which it could have used to consider better drafted, bills thus helping all Hon. Members to make valuable decisions which could be useful to the Government and the country in the future.

As to the substance—As everyone knows, Madam Speaker, people who join the Public Service must take an Oath of Office. They swear to protect confidentiality and never to reveal what they learn while carrying out their duties. This does not force them to keep for themselves everything they learn. Not only they may, but they must communicate all information to their superior. Nothing prevents them—it is even their duty—four informing their immediate superior of anything wrong or any mistake they might notice. I suppose they could even inform the Minister himself, or the Deputy Minister, or any other person in a responsible position within the Department or the Government, while respecting their Oath of Office.

But could this civil servant who, for any reason whatsoever, has noticed what he considers to be wrongdoing, bring it to attention of a person who has just submitted a tender, for instance? Could he inform a newspaperman? Why should he have this privilege? Why should he be able to break his oath of office when his Department is not partisan and does not report to any political party in particular? Why could he not act within that Department?

In my opinion, that is the problem with this motion. That is why it is unacceptable both in form and substance.

The original idea behind this motion of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) was related only, at least so I would imagine, to the principle of freedom of information, on which we agree ourselves. Instead of amending the Criminal Code without knowing exactly how to proceed, I believe that it would be better if the Hon. Member thought of ways to improve the Freedom of Information Act to do what is necessary to provide good government administration.

Madam Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me and I would like to say that if this motion comes to a vote, I shall vote against it.

• (1710)

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I am not sure if you are delighted or feel unfortunate that this is the second time today you will have to listen to me. I am pleased that you are there to do so.

I congratulate the Hon. Member who moved the motion for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. I hope that the motion is accepted in principle by all Parties, approved and brought into play either through this motion or a government Bill.

I have been an employee of several different operations, including the Government of Canada and a number of private-sector companies over the years. It has been my experience that a conscientious employee, someone who knows their job and tries to be very good at it, who finds errors of omission or commission by their employer or supervisor and tries to do something about it as someone who likes their work and tries to do a good job becomes the victim rather than the one who did their job properly. If he reports a violation of a rule, regulation, practice, or policy of the employer, be it public or private, he is accused of being insubordinate, transferred to different positions, and no longer eligible for promotion. Almost invariably they do not want to go public. Yet if they have no other choice, what are they supposed to do?

Of course, they do have some choices. When they think about blowing the whistle on a malpractice, and I do not mean that in just medical terms, their alternatives are as follows. Keep their mouth shut. Look the other way. Make sure they protect their own backside. The alternative is running the risk of losing their job, being harassed, demoted or moved until they get so fed up they quit. Yet there is another alternative. They can put it all in a plain brown envelope addressed to their MP, MLA or alderman. All of us have had some experience with that. I wish I could find out but I will never know for as long as I live who sent me a cabinet document back in 1980. Not even the media would believe me when I held a press conference and made it public. That is beside the point. I will never know who the heck sent me that cabinet document. However, that is the other recourse available to the whistle-blower.

It seems to me that an employee, whether or not they are violating their oath of secrecy or anything else, knows that if their whistleblowing turns out to be totally unfounded, then they will obviously have to apologize and suffer some penalty. They will know that ahead of time. If it proves to be justified, they should also know ahead of time that they will not be victimized in those various ways I mentioned earlier.

I wanted to speak on this Bill today because of what happened earlier today with the publication by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) of the hearings on the tragic Hinton rail disaster. That brings us to what goes on in transportation in Canada. A carman phones up and says that during a standing inspection he found a car in the middle of a train which has to be taken off. His supervisor or assistant superintendent or yard foreman says it stays on the train and overrules him. If he asks for that in writing he is told he is being insubordinate, disruptive, and delaying the departure of a train and its freight or passengers. Next thing you know he has demerit points or he is not going to be promoted. That happens on a daily basis in Canada's transportation system. The Minister can say all he likes about all the things the Government is going to do about safety, maintenance, security and inspection, but if the bodies are not there and the money is not there it is just another speech in favour of motherhood.

When a conscientious employee with a good record is faced with those alternatives, it is a rare one who will take his chances on losing his job and being victimized. Errors of omission or commission, deliberate or not, continue. When a machinist says a jet engine has to be overhauled now, but because of the pressures of deregulation or competition or whatever, his supervisor or regional manager says we will run that thing another couple of hundred hours, of course, 99 times out of 100, or 999 times out of 1,000, nothing happens. However, the one time something does happen whose neck is on the line? That is when the search for a scapegoat starts. That is when the covering of backsides starts, from the very top management all the way down to the last supervisor at the bottom of the ladder. The poor slob on the ground doing the job then gets it in the neck. Why? Because he did not see to it being corrected or, if he tried to, he was insubordinate. He is damned if he does and damned if he does not.

There is provision under a wide variety of law and regulation and practice whereby the chronic bellyacher, the incompetent, or the person who tries to manufacture out of whole cloth an illegitimate blowing of the whistle, can be dealt with. Therefore, it seems to me there is nothing to fear from having the legislation proposed by the Hon. Member adopted and put in place. Alternatively, a government spokesman could get up now and say the Government will bring in a Bill that covers this. If that is done the Government will be surprised at just how quickly it is dealt with. We will be happy to co-operate and see to it that it is put in place in the whole regime, including what I have talked about today concerning transportation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, this is the second time this week that the debate during Private Members' Business is more or less on the same subject. Tuesday, the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet) introduced Bill C-229, for the purpose of legislating protection for public servants who, when public health and safety are an issue, feel an obligation to call the attention of the general public to any action or measure by the Government that would be against the public interest?

Today, we have a motion by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) which proposes similar legislation, or rather not legislation, it is a request that the Government consider the advisability of amending the Criminal Code to protect "whistleblowers", public officials who, acting to promote the public interest, disclose government wrongdoing or misinformation, from harassment, persecution and prosecution by the Government or its agents.

I was surprised earlier today to hear the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), commenting on the presence of Members, when we realize that last Tuesday he wasn't in the House either to speak in support of the Bill introduced by his colleague, the Conservative Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington. I also feel very strongly about the fact that the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead went so far as to accuse the Hon. Member for York Centre of wasting the time of the House by presenting an almost identical motion that I, Madam Speaker, consider to be a very important matter. It is a matter that has raised considerable concern among public servants, who are anxious to have their right to inform the general public protected by law and— I don't want to repeat what I said this week on Tuesday, but if anyone wants to know my position on this matter, nothing could be easier, and I say and I repeat, there should be a mechanism, an umbudsman if you like, a trustworthy person whom public servants could consult now and then to mention or report actions, instructions or even measures which, in their opinion, might jeopardize public security and be contrary to the national interest.

I suggest it is quite normal that public servants would seek protection against harassment, against legal action, or even against the possibility of being dismissed if the employer should say: So, you have breached the confidentiality provisions related to your job. You reported to the media or to somebody that such or such task you were expected to perform would compromise health or security; a decision you have taken which, according to the employer, might be harmful to public interest: you are fired.

This kind of thing happens, Madam Speaker, I mentioned a few cases. Recent such incidents occurred at Revenue Canada and elsewhere which prompted several Members of this House—excluding the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead who has a lot to learn about this issue and does not understand anything about it—to be concerned about the public interest and make a point of seeing to it that federal employees are protected if, now and then, they find themselves in a position where they feel compelled to indulge in whistleblowing. I can understand that a public servant would do so with some reluctance, but if he has to do it, first he should be given some protection if he is to remain an efficient employee and, second, he should have the tools needed to do so.

I do not want to repeat my speech of last Tuesday. There were good speeches given in the House by the Members for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet) and the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Most of the Members in Opposition spoke in favour of it. The Members for North Vancouver—Burnaby (Mr. Cook), Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), and Kootenay-East—Revelstoke (Mr. Graham) spoke against it. That is what this House is all about. It is to exchange views. There is a motion before the House which asks the Government to consider the advisability, that is all.

The Parliamentary Secretary is asking what we are going to do about this and what we are going to do about that. Well, that is why we have a motion. We are asking the Government to take its responsibility and make a study to see whether there is a need in this country for legislation such as that which exists elsewhere in the world. The Americans have had legislation for years to protect the whistleblowers, public servants who disclose things which they believe are contrary to the security and national interests of the country.

There is nothing very difficult about this. The Government says that it will not do it. Fine, let us get rid of the Government and elect a government which will do it. That, in my view, is what we should do.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I was amused by the final solution of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It sounds like a simple one. Of course, he was a member of the Government which was in power for so many years that I have almost forgotten how many it was. It was too many, anyway. I did not notice that his Government proposed—

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I invite my colleague to read previous Hansards. I can send him the index if he would like. He will find that I spoke many times on this issue.

Mr. Schellenberger: I appreciate the Member's intervention. I am glad he has taken such an interest in the subject. The Member did, however, propose a solution which I think is worth considering. The wording of the present motion leaves the House only one option, that is to say that we agree that a person disclosing what he or she considers to be wrongdoing should not be subject to harrassment or prosecution by the Government or other agencies. The Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) gave examples of individuals in the Public Service who have blown the whistle on the Government and found that the country generally agreed with their action. However, he failed to indicate that many examples to the contrary are also on the public record. People have given information which hurt the public interest.

The difficult aspect of this issue is how to determine whether something is in fact contrary to the public interest. When individuals believe that something is wrong it gnaws at their conscience and they should have a strong enough conviction to go public with it while realizing that they may jeopardize their employment and their position with their colleagues.

As I said, the difficulty is in determining whether a wrongdoing exists. I suppose that is easily determined when a criminal wrongdoing is involved. However, the example which was used before of a cut-back within a Department is more of a philosophical disagreement with the Government than an actual wrongdoing. That can be very harmful to the planning of any Government or Department.

Other jurisdictions are attempting to deal with this problem outlined in the motion and I believe it is beneficial to look at those examples. One alternative that I believe is worth some merit concerns an ombudsman or an arbiter, as I prefer to use. That is one procedure used and let me offer some advice along those lines.

If someone in the Public Service was able to go to an arbiter to disclose a wrongdoing that he or she felt should be exposed, that arbiter could then cause an investigation to take place and in fact report the wrongdoing to the Minister or the Government for the appropriate action. In my view, there would have to be a disclosure of those wrongdoings rather than of the individual who came forward with the information to determine whether the Government or the Minister acted upon that.

In the case of a very serious wrongdoing, it would not be adequate to have that disclosure once or twice a year but the arbiter would cause a report to be laid upon the table of the House of Commons at more frequent intervals so that everyone knows what has been reported, including the press, the public and the House.

It seems to me that the only solution envisaged in this motion is that the individual would disclose the information to the public and, after doing so, would not be subject to any consequences. Of course, this meets with great favour to the media, for which I cannot blame them, because it often results in stories that sell numerous papers. The media would be disappointed with a solution to the problem because it would stop a story.

All of us who have been in opposition are familiar with the so-called brown envelopes that we have received from time to time. We appreciated receiving those because it gave us information with which we were able to occasionally embarrass the Government. However, while I enjoyed receiving those envelopes when I was in opposition, I did not believe that it was the best way to deal with problems. It seems to me that it would be far better for a well intentioned person to have the opportunity to appear before a person within the Public Service who was designated by Parliament to present evidence of a wrongdoing so that it could be acted upon, rather than leaking such information to the media. When such information is leaked, but not substantiated, or involves a philosophical difference, it can do irreparable harm not only to the plans of the Government but to the well intentioned work of many others who work alongside that individual.

I believe that there are cases of wrongdoing that should be brought to the attention of the Government and the public, but there ought to be a method for dealing with it.

I do not support the solution that has been offered by the Member who presented this motion. I presume he is attempting to anticipate what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) may be preparing. I know that the Canadian Law Reform Commission is bringing forward its second volume of the new draft to the Criminal Code and perhaps the Member is anticipating something that will appear there. I hope he takes the advice of some private Members and perhaps redrafts his motion or encourages the Government to include a suggestion such as an arbiter or the suggestion by the Member for Ottawa—Vanier for an ombudsman so that public servants can deal with these difficulties.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate on this motion. It is interesting to note that it is the second time this week during Private Members' hour that we have been debating a motion dealing with the issue of whistleblowers. Earlier this week we debated a motion put forward by a Member on this side of the House who sought to amend a number of pieces of legislation to give protection to whistleblowers.

Today we are debating a motion by a member of the Opposition who is suggesting that we amend the Criminal Code to protect the public officials who, acting to promote the public interest, disclose government wrongdoing or misinformation, to protect them from harassment, persecution and prosecution by the Government or its agents. I understand that another motion dealing with this issue was tabled today. Obviously, this is not a partisan issue, but one that concerns Members on all sides of the House.

It is a new issue as far as I am concerned and has not been brought to my attention by constituents or public servants. I read the debate from earlier this week and listened to the debate today. I hoped there might have been some definition of the problem because I honestly do not know either qualitatively or quantitatively what the problem is. I find it to be a rather theoretical discussion since there has only been mention of an English case and one case in the Public Service of Canada. I doubt that one makes major amendments to legislation in order to deal with one case and I am interested to learn whether this is a serious problem or one dealing with just one or two instances.

It has been mentioned that Members of the Opposition often receive plain brown envelopes containing information that I presume we hear about during Question Period. It is a great source of research and information for members of the Opposition and one might suspect that those Members might anticipate receiving an increasing flood of those envelopes if this protection were provided to whistleblowers and further their attempts to discredit the Government. However, I am sure that my hon. colleagues would not be so ill intentioned.

As a Member of the Government I have never had the opportunity to receive such an envelope referred to by my colleagues. I have some serious reservations about whether we should give such carte blanche protection, particularly through the criminal system. The motion states in part: "public officials who, acting to promote the public interest". That is a very broad definition. We in the Government may have one perception of public interest which may be very different from that of my colleagues opposite. Public Servants may have a very different perception of public interest.

Who would decide whether the particular information brought forward was in the public interest? As we all know, once the information is out, the damage is done. We could go through a process later in dealing with it but whatever information comes out later is usually on the last pages of the newspaper. Therefore, I think there have to be some important deterrents to public servants to ensure that they act responsibly. I think, in the main, 99 per cent of public servants act responsibly, but from time to time there may be those who might be enticed to think that if they could leak some information, whether from personal vexatious interests or their own perception of public interest, and if they could do it with immunity, they might be led to do so. However, we have to look at the legislation now in place. The Official Secrets Act was brought in for very good and valid reasons. Public servants swear an oath of secrecy. I would not want to do away with that carte blanche as I fear these motions would do, with the only rationale being "the public interest".

On the other side, we have the Freedom of Information legislation. I had the opportunity last year to take part in some of the deliberations of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. We were looking at that particular piece of legislation which provides, quite honestly, at this point, almost all information to be accessible to the public. Sometimes I think from our point of view, almost too much. However, philosophically I believe it is right.

The only things not available under the Freedom of Information Act would be cabinet documents, in some instances leading up to the policy-making process and in some instances relating to national security or our relations with foreign powers. Most information is available if people take the time to put it all together. I am not sure that there is a big problem we are trying to address in this particular instance.

I thought it was quite ironic that one of my colleagues opposite earlier on suggested that the United States had this kind of protection, so why not Canada? All week we have been debating a Bill with respect to the imposition of an export tax on softwood lumber and my colleagues opposite have been berating the United States, saying how terrible it all is.

Suddenly today they are saying the system in the United States is wonderful and that we should be copying it, we should be "me too-ing it". So much for consistency.

I hope that the Hon. Member who put forward the motion has had a chance to look at the Law Reform Commission of Canada. It recently published its Working Paper No. 49 entitled "Crimes Against the State". Chapter 5 of this document deals with the very issue of the leaking of Government information. The Commission observes that there are strong arguments both for and against considering making the leakage of Government information an offence under the Criminal Code. I quote from page 53 of that report:

> In favour of criminalizing such conduct, one can make the following points. First, government today possesses enormous quantities of information about private individuals living in Canada, that, if released, could be extremely detrimental to these people. Surely civil servants should not be able to exploit their ability to gain access to this information for their own interests, with only the threat of disciplinary action to deter them. Second, government requires certain level of secrecy in order to function effectively.
> For example, bargaining positions in federal-provincial negotiations would be jeopardized if civil servants could disclose confidential information with immunity. Another example is that of criminal investigations that require secrecy in order to be effective. When the stakes are high, the disciplinary process is an inadequate means of redress against talkative civil servants.

In that respect the Law Reform Commission is putting forward an argument to make it even more onerous than it is at the moment. On the other hand, the Law Reform Commission gives the other side, and I quote:

> Arguments against the criminalization of leaking Government information are as follows: First, the Government does not want to be seen as using strong arm tactics to protect itself and to keep secrets from the public. Second, the public has a right to know whatever it can get its hands on, and a leakage offence would be inconsistent with the policy of freedom of information behind the Access to Information Act.
> Third, the administrative process, disciplinary measures and dismissal, and the civil process, injunctions and suing for damages, are the appropriate remedies for such wrongdoing.
> Fourth, there may be situations in which the well-being of the nation actually depends upon the immediate public disclosure of classified information.

I think it is certainly worth while looking at the arguments which the Law Reform Commission has put forward as we think about some of these issues which we should address in considerable detail in the future. I just want to say that I feel serious concerns about this issue, although I think it is one worth debating. I would particularly like to follow up with a suggestion that my colleague made of looking at other ways. Perhaps the arbiter ombudsman might be a more appropriate way for public servants who felt they had information which should be made public but that might end up under abrogation of their responsibilities under the Official Secrets Act. I look forward to further discussion on this issue.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise today at the request of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General of Canada, my Hon. colleague for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), whom I view as someone vigourously and strenuously defending his convictions and those of his constituents. I would like briefly, in view of the time at my disposal, to discuss the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), to amend the Criminal Code to grant "whistleblowers" a certain immunity from prosecution. I will therefore take some time to look with other Hon. Members for a solution to the problem of leaks by public servants in the federal Government.

First, Madam Speaker, we must give serious consideration to the reasons why an employee or a public servant may act against his superiors or his employer. Such a public servant who betrays his oath of office and confidentiality surely must face a grave problem of conscience and professional ethics. A leak may not be the best form of denunciation. Disclosure by a public servant who sees no other way, but who also may know only part of the facts, could seriously embarrass the Government and even cause irreparable damage to innocent people. Where newspapermen are concerned, you will notice that increasingly they tend to check their sources and are very reluctant to disclose information based on rumours or more or less convincing evidence. On the other hand, others might view leaks as an effective control over bureaucracy and even legislators.

We could also ask ourselves how such a procedure is viewed by the public. I think people have conflicting feelings in that respect. Some will feel outraged at such misconduct by "whistleblowers", while others will be relieved to know there are some watchful people who stay alert and blow the whistle.

I see that my time is running out. What I would propose is perhaps the appointment of an ombudsman, with the power needed to do his work. Of course, opponents will say that we are only adding to an already huge bureaucracy and will only succeed in compounding and multiplying problems. My answer is that fire is best fought with fire. Water is best fought with water, and bureaucracy and its abuse are best fought by yet an additional bureaucratic level.

As I said, Madam Speaker, the solution does not lie in an amendment to the Criminal Code to protect "whistleblowers" against harassment, persecution and prosecution. It lies rather in the strength of an independant ombudsman who could deal confidentially with complaints and who will expose wrongdoings after a responsible enquiry has proved there was wrongdoing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the item is dropped from the Order Paper. The House will now revert to Government Orders.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), (p. 2382).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is as follows: Miss Carney, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be now read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Ouellet, moves the following amendment: That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-37, An Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The question is on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)) which was negatived on the following division:

Is the House ready for the next question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We shall resume debate on the main motion.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise tonight to speak on this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I appreciate very much the applause from all sides of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: What did you do, buy them supper?

Mr. McDermid: One would think that I bought them supper, wouldn't one? I have sat through the entire 17 and one-half hours of this debate and I think it is one of the better debates we have had in the House of Commons. Many points of view have been expressed and some very excellent points have been made. Tonight, I hope I will be able to answer some of the concerns that have been expressed by a number of Hon. Members from all sides of the House.

First, I would like to deal with the issue of sovereignty—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. Order. The Chair would very much appreciate hearing what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has to say. It is actually impossible right now to do so with all the noise in the House.

[Translation]

Please, I would ask all Hon. Members to allow the Chair to hear what is being said in the House. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I was saying that there are some areas I wish to cover that have been debated in the House. The first issue with which I would like to deal is the issue of sovereignty.

In my view, a trade negotiation is an exercise in sovereignty, not in surrender. All trade negotiations involve commitments made by participants with the understanding that arrangements can be terminated by any of the principals prepared to suffer the consequences. As such, there is no loss of sovereignty but rather its use through an agreed exchange. If I may, I would like to give a couple of examples of this.

In 1935, Canada and the United States successfully negotiated a bilateral trade agreement which lowered tariffs on each country's products. Subsequently, Canada, in a series of GATT rounds, negotiated agreements which lowered barriers to our trade. In doing so, we also agreed to limit the use of our sovereign power by subsidizing exports, by discriminating against foreign-made products through our tax system, by raising tariffs or by purchasing non-competitive Canadian products through federal procurements. That was part of the agreement made at that time. We gave something up to get something and that is the history of trade agreements.

I contend that simply belonging to GATT and following its rules means that a country gives up a little of its sovereignty, but it does that through trade agreements. Today we are discussing a trade agreement signed between two sovereign countries. Had the countervail gone through, I might be arguig on the other side of this issue. I might be arguing that some of our sovereignty was lost, because under the American countervail law the Americans have unilateral powers. They could check the books of the federal Government, the provincial Governments and the industries. They could raise and lower the tariff at will—

Mr. Benjamin: Not under GATT.

Mr. McDermid: I am sorry, but they can. Under the GATT rules, that is allowed.

Mr. Benjamin: The GATT can do it, not the U.S.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member will have a chance to debate later on.

Mr. Benjamin: I did.

Mr. McDermid: I am simply telling him that that is allowed under the rules of countervail and it has been allowed for a very long time.

Mr. Langdon: Give them the full system.

Mr. McDermid: Look, I sat and listened to both Hon. Members very, very quietly when they debated this issue.

Mr. Benjamin: No, you didn't.

Mr. McDermid: We are back on the Bill again and those Hon. Members will have all the opportunity in the world to debate this issue. I only have 10 minutes and if they would give me a chance to put my remarks on the record, they may rise and say their piece. Is that a fair deal?

Mr. Benjamin: Yeah.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you.

Mr. Benjamin: We won't be any noisier than you were.

Mr. McDermid: Another agreement under which certain commitments were made on both sides of the border was the Auto Pact. There were give and takes under the Auto Pact, and again two sovereign countries negotiated an agreement. The same is true of the issue that is before us now. Therefore, I do not believe for a minute that sovereignty has been lost by the Government of Canada through this agreement.

We are also talking about provincial resources. Earlier today an Hon. Member said that before his Party could approve the Bill he wanted to know how the money would be spent. Since we are talking about provincial resources, we are talking about provincial money. The provinces will be spending the money and that is explicit in the Bill.

With the exception of a small administrative fee, the money will go to the provinces. It is rightfully theirs because, under our Constitution, the provinces own the resources. The decision as to how to spend the money will be theirs. As long as they do not subsidize the lumber companies, there are all kinds of things they can do in the forest industry with those funds. Without committing a specific amount to a specific area, the provinces, with the exception of Ontario which has committed some $45 million to workers, will do with the money as they will. Many of them have indicated that it will be used for reforestation, silviculture and adjustment for workers who might be put out of work.

If I may, I wish to touch on some of the fear-mongering that has been going on. On May 29, 1986 we heard the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) say that the 35 per cent tariff on cedar shakes and shingles would do away with 4,000 jobs. We know that that has not happened. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that the tariff has put 4,000 men and women out of work in British Columbia. That is just not true. The industry is almost back to full capacity. They are selling their product and competing very well. We are now hearing once again those same exaggerated claims. I can tell you, Madam Minister—or Madam Speaker, that in fact—

Mr. Axworthy: You are out of date. She is another one that is gone.

Mr. McDermid: I am sorry?

Mr. Axworthy: She is another one that is gone.

Mr. McDermid: Go ahead, insult the Speaker. That is fine. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—

Mr. Axworthy: I am just trying to help you out.

Mr. McDermid: —insults the Speaker sitting in the chair. That is typical of him.

Mr. Axworthy: Running number three in your riding, are you?

Mr. McDermid: I might say these wild claims—

Mr. Axworthy: You are running behind the Rhinoceros Party.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: You look like a rhino so you should be running with them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) makes it very difficult for anyone to express his or her ideas. I think it would be fair and normal to listen when Hon. Members are debating.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Obviously I am striking a sensitive—

Mr. Axworthy: I am just trying to be helpful.

Mr. McDermid: —note. Since we have been debating this Bill for 17 and one-half hours, and the Opposition is going to carry on like that, I move that the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. McDermid, seconded by Mr. Lewis, moves:

That the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, finally we see the true face of the Conservative Party and its willingness to carry on debate on this—

Mr. McDermid: Carry on.

Mr. Langdon: —serious issue. It is unfortunate that the Government chose to move a motion like this, especially after such a misguided speech of misinformation which unfortunately Canadians across the country have had to listen to.

I want to say two things in trying to persuade the backbenchers of the Conservative Party to at least react against the effort on the part of their front-benchers to try and ram this agreement, dishonourable as it is, through the House of Commons. I want to first quote an organization which I thought the Conservative Party would have some sympathy for, a group which they would take with some seriousness. I am speaking of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association.

That group just sent to their members and Members of this House an information update on Canada-U.S. softwood lumber exports. They are talking about the U.S. letter sent to the U.S. lumber coalition. They say: "We believe this letter actually charts U.S. intentions on our case." As I indicated in my previous speech, that letter indicates very clearly that the suggestions made by the Parliamentary Secretary and previously by the Minister, that it would indeed be possible to assist our lumber industry with the $600 million, will not be possible.

Mr. Dick: You believe the Americans, do you?

Mr. Langdon: I am indicating the belief of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association. As well, there is, not an informal side letter, as the Minister suggests, but a very clear and specific indication signed by President Reagan indicating that he can do anything whatsoever to see to it that their understanding of this agreement is put into effect the way they wish to see it put into effect.

Mr. McDermid: As it was negotiated.

Mr. Langdon: The letter makes it very clear—

Mr. McDermid: Do you believe the Americans?

Mr. Langdon: —that the U.S. is absolutely concerned, committed and adamant about the fact that this money will not be used to assist the lumber industry in this country. It goes further than that and indicates that among the things we cannot do is award contracts for silviculture, road building or recreational and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis. If we chose, for example, to give to a co-operative in New Brunswick, or a group of young people in British Columbia, or a group of native people in Alberta the chance to build recreational facilities on the basis of a non-competitive contract because we believe it is socially right, the U.S.—

Mr. McDermid: No, no, no. That is crazy.

Mr. Langdon: I can quote the details in the letter.

Mr. McDermid: That is nonsense.

Mr. Langdon: It is absolutely the case.

Mr. McDermid: It is nonsense.

Mr. Langdon: That will not be permitted. It is right here in black and white. Anyone who wants to see it can write our office and we will send it to them. As I say, it is not from the U.S. but from the Canadian Lumbermen's Association who have concluded that this is the intentions of the U.S. in this case.

I have to go on and indicate that as well as—

Mr. McDermid: Where does it say that?

Mr. Langdon: I seem to remember the Parliamentary Secretary saying he was going to be quiet.

Mr. McDermid: Fair ball; just tell me where it is in the letter.

Mr. Langdon: As usual, he is not sticking to his commitments.

• (1900)

I make the point very clearly again that this same set of detailed points made by the Canadian Lumbermen's Association indicates, first, that the agreement "demonstrates that the lack of input from the involved softwood lumber industry created unnecessary problems and backlash from January 1 to date". It indicates as well that there were very important producers within their association who "were left in limbo". It also indicates that exclusions for the Maritimes must be included on the agenda of the first modifications meeting in 1987.

Worst of all, Madam Speaker, the letter indicates that the Canadian lumbermen learned last week that:

—our European softwood lumber customers are worried they will be flooded—

Accordingly, we understand, on very sound authority, a number of European importers are trying to have their governments initiate action to impose a 15 per cent tax on our softwood lumber imports.

In addition to the industries opposition, I want to quote the detailed reactions of the Canadian Paperworkers Union which represents 65,000 men and women across Canada. This union indicates that it studied the agreement very carefully. It strongly believes:

that such an agreement threatens the livelihood of our membership in the lumber sector— The agreement not only endangers jobs in the sector but also dramatically illustrates the untenable position of the Mulroney Government in its talks with the United States on the issue of free trade.

Let us be very clear that it is not only industry but a major part of the trade union movement in the country which stands with us and many newspapers across the country which have opposed this agreement. There is a widely and deeply felt opposition to what is seen as a massive sellout of the hopes of the country and our economic independence. The Conservative Government is trying, not only to force this legislation through, but to force it through by cutting off debate. I say shame and I am sure the country says shame as well.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, thank you for giving me the honour of speaking in this debate. This is my second opportunity to do so this week. As the saying goes, the speech gets better the second time around. I was hoping that we would have an opportunity to hear clarification of this abominable piece of legislation from government Members. Unfortunately, they have been plagued for the past while with severe and traumatic psychological depressions and, therefore, have not been able to rouse themselves to the full fervor of an explanation, which I know they would otherwise like to provide.

Earlier today my colleague from York South—Weston talked about Shakespeare and quoted Hamlet most eloquently. That brought to mind how much we in Canada need Shakespeare to describe the present Government. When the free trade initiative was first launched Government members were full of hosannas. They paraded out on the streets that this was going to be the salvation of Canada. Shakespeare spoke of the seven stages of man. With regard to the first stage he said:

—the lover, sighing like a furnace with a woeful ballad made to his mistress' eyebrow.

That was certainly the position of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He was singing a ballad to his mistress' eyebrow, telling us all what a furnace of affection he would have for the Americans as he brought about free trade.

Watching the face of the Prime Minister yesterday brought to mind the second stage of man as Shakespeare expressed it. He said:

—the whining schoolboy with his satchel and shining morning face creeping like snail unwillingly to school.

Only Shakespeare could describe our Prime Minister in such eloquent terms, going from the woleful lover to the schoolboy sneaking like a snail as he went, cap-in-hand, to the American vice-president supplicating to save his political skin.

You, Madam Speaker, have had the peculiar honour of having to listen to a large part of this debate. The Government justifies this legislation by saying that the stock market has gone up. I see that we can now create public policy based upon what speculators on the stock market think is right. On that basis, of course, we should be paying great homage to all those who are involved in the amalgamations, take-overs, junk bonds and other finaglings. They are now the decision makers on Tory policy.

Their other argument was that this legislation is going to be of great assistance to the industry. They find a remote quote from someone they found deep in the depths of a Fraser type think tank who says this is a wonderful thing. The Government is still financing groups of reactionary right wing brain trusts which run around the country and appear on Canada AM telling us how the particular and peculiar policies on this continent will serve us well.

We listened to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary tonight. Was that not wonderful? He said that we should not ask the Government for explanations, that that was up to the provinces. He said the Government is doing this only to give the money to the provinces. Although there is a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and the trade negotiators, they are only insignificant people and we should not pay any attention to them. They are our partners to the agreement and they have set out very clearly in a letter how they interpret the agreement. If that is the case, when our brave Prime Minister met with the Vice-President of the United States yesterday, why did he not say that we have a different interpretation of that agreement and explain our interpretation to him?

The Prime Minister did not say that our interpretation is that once the money is transferred we can spend it as we like. He did not do that because he knows that is not the case. When the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and her officials appeared before the provincial Ministers they were asked how the money could be spent and no answers were given. They said they did not know how the money could be spent. The provinces are now facing total and complete uncertainty. They do not know.

The Parliamentary Secretary has stood in the House and said that it is up to the provinces to decide. How can they decide when the rules of the game are masqueraded? How can they decide whether they can reforest, build a road, or provide worker retraining when the Government has not had the wit, brains, or intelligence to get a fair answer from the Americans as to what is going on? Madam Speaker, is it any wonder that Members on this side have raised some concern and told the people of Canada that they are buying a pig in a poke?

This is a Trojan horse with many hidden implications. The passage of this Bill will be the beginning of the erosion of many of the basic principles about how we run this country. What is at stake is the sovereign right of Canada to price its resources and determine policies for its natural resources as we see fit, and want to do it, not as it is interpreted by the United States Commerce Department, the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, or by the President of the United States.

Mr. McDermid: This agreement allows it.

Mr. Axworthy: This agreement says nothing of the kind. The Bill gives the United States the right to obtain all kinds of confidential information. It says that the Minister can provide information to whomever she pleases. She will give it to the Americans.

It is also very clear that the United States has a right to comment upon and be consulted about the calculations of replacement measures. We know full well what will happen when they start trying to impose those replacement measures. If the provinces are required to implement increases in their stumpage fees, it will mean a substantial rise in cost, not just for lumber products exported to the United States but for lumber consumed in Canada and lumber exported to other countries. Rather than being a $600 million Bill, it will be a $1 billion Bill. Therefore, we must conclude that there will not be replacement measures, but we will be stuck with an export duty tax that will become a permanent part of the tax structure of this country.

What will be the consequence of that? Other countries with whom we are competitors in the international market, such as the European Economic Community, will ask why they cannot do the same as the Americans. We have a letter from the Canadian Lumbermen's Association saying sources now report that the Europeans are thinking of imposing an equivalent export tax. The Government has opened a Pandora's box, with a whole series of consequences that it did not know about. The Government cannot tell us about these consequences, yet it expects the House to pass the legislation. That is why it is called a blind trust.

We know how the Government administers blind trusts and we see day after day in the House how the Government and its Ministers go about administering blind trusts for themselves. We do not want a blind trust on the national resources of Canada, which is what this legislation is asking of us.

The Parliamentary Secretary went on to say that the Government signed an agreement that is no different from signing an agreement under GATT. How can the Government be more obtuse than to equate a bilateral trade agreement with a multilateral agreement where there are some 80 other signatories and a whole host of countries defining the rules. As I read into the record of the House yesterday those rules are designed to protect smaller, weaker nations against the imposition of the interest of larger, more powerful nations. One of the purposes of GATT is to set rules to enable large and small countries to exist universally and equally. That is why we have most favoured nation treatment rules.

The federal Government, not only in lumber, but in the larger free trade negotiations, is attempting to sign a bilateral agreement with the most powerful economic nation in the world, and one that has a very different agenda and a very clear trade interest. Their trade interest is to reduce their trade deficit and they will do it on the backs of their customers, their partners and their allies.

We asked George Bush for the timetable for the trade agreement. He said he could not answer that, which is obvious, because the Americans want to prolong this process for as long as possible since they are the big winners. They win on pharmaceuticals, on books, on fish, on energy, and on softwood lumber. What is next in line? It will be steel, hydroelectric power, potash and all our other resources because the Government has caved in on the fundamental principle, so that the country to our south can now help determine how we set our natural resource policies. That is why the Bill is wrong.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am saddened to speak in this debate now that the Government is trying to choke it off. We have had only a few short hours to relay information to Canadians about what is really happening.

I liken what is happening in this situation to what the United States did in mining the ports in Nicaragua. That small country of Nicaragua had enough gumption to fight in the world court. In our case, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) rose in the House and said that the 15 per cent countervail is an illegal act by the United States which we will begin fighting under GATT. There was a special panel set up to fight and have our interests as a smaller trading nation heard by an international panel.

However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed to have the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) sign a side letter saying that we will not follow this any further with GATT. The United States has done just as it did to Nicaragua in mining their ports. It has mined our forest policy and made it very difficult for small and large companies to operate in any kind of profitable and manageable way in this country.

I want to talk about some of the associated events that led up to this situation and why the Americans were so sure they were dealing with a scatter-brained Government. It is a government that became supinely acquiescent on fish, steel, hogs, raspberries, shakes and shingles, and every other commodity on which the United States wanted to slap some kind of countervail. The Government was mute and did not go to the assistance of those industries.

Let us go back to a meeting in Vancouver where the former Minister of International Trade, the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), was speaking. The U.S. subcommittee on trade was present, on its way to Tokyo. At this meeting, where members of the U.S. Congress and Senate were present, the former Minister offered to amend the Gibbons Bill which was before the U.S. Congress. I was, and I am sure most Canadians were, absolutely flabbergasted to see that kind of simple-minded activity coming from the former Minister for International Trade.

We then saw his replacement, the new Minister for International Trade, go to Washington and make the failed 10 per cent one time only final offer. Within weeks it was jacked up another 50 per cent, despite the fact that the Government itself had gone on public record and said that the countervail duty as it had been put together was illegal. I am not talking only about the double counting, because there must be some kind of criminal activity to have come up with an illegal duty. The Department of Commerce and International Trade Commission was forced to place an illegal 15 per cent countervail against Canada. How did our Government respond? It imposed the 15 per cent export tax against us on our side of the border.

Let me go back a little further. The argument being put forward by Government Members is false and fraudulent in two ways. First, Government Members are saying that this was the lesser of two evils because either the money was going to go into the United States or come to Canada. They are espousing from coast to coast that Parliament should support this because it is better to have money coming to Canada than going to the United States. That is faulty reasoning and I will go back into the history of why it is such a stupid position for Government Members to tell their constituents.

The parallel argument that has been flowing from various Cabinet Ministers' offices to these naive back-benchers is that this $600 million a year will be going back to Canada's forest industries. As my collegue, our critic for international trade, has pointed out, under almost all circumstances that money cannot go back to assist the forest industry. Yesterday Tory Members from British Columbia were saying that this is $400 million of new money for reforestation. Let us think about that for a minute. If Mr. Vander Zalm had been serious when he started skating the feds off the ice and was going to raise stumpage rates as he indicated, that was the time to do so. At that time it would have had significant political impact in the United States. Instead, he is now looking at $400 million as new money. As he has publicly indicated, that money will not go to reforestation or into the forest industry. He will look at his government's priorities for that money. I think it is wrong and despicable for Conservative Members to tell their constituents that this money raised under export tax will be used to assist those workers who are displaced, will go to reforestation, retooling, road construction and to assist those single industry towns that rely on the forest sector. Let me now deal with the posturing taken up by the Minister of Forests of British Columbia, Mr. Kempf and the Premier, Mr. Vander Zalm, as he skated this naive, scatter-brained Government right off the ice. The first statement came early last fall when the Minister of Forests said, of course we are subsidizing. He said it publicly. He said: "We get $150 million revenue from the forest sector and we spend $350 million a year through our forest services". That is a net loss of $200 million. We all know the Socred Government of British Columbia cannot run a pop stand. We have known that for years. However, it managed to finagle its way back into Government.

The Premier now has himself a new mandate. He has already skated the feds part way off the ice during the countervailing process last fall. What is the next step he takes? First he says he is going to go it alone to Washington with the Province of Quebec. However, a few quick calls to Premier Bourassa and we learn there have not been too many opportunities, or actual communications between the Premier of British Columbia and the Premier of Quebec, so Premier Vander Zalm abandons that idea after skating the feds even closer to the edge of the ice. Then late in the evening he hears an erroneous radio broadcast in his office. I suppose he had one of those "rocket" radios in his ear. He hears an erroneous news broadcast so he calls a press conference and says a deal has been struck, finally skating the naive feds, this marvellous largest Government in Canadian history, right off the ice, and we see the bureaucrats and the Minister flocking down to Washington to cut a deal on an illegal countervail.

I do not think this House should forget that the countervail duty was illegal. It was illegally composed mathematically and the findings which were made were illegal. We are the largest trading partner the United States has. Ontario alone has a larger trade balance with the United States than does Japan. It is amazing that our largest trading ally is bullying us in this way because of protectionist sentiments in the United States.

Let me now really deal with the issue. Industry had an opportunity and it now realizes the effects of allowing the Government to do it. As Adam Zimmerman put it, it was like allowing the orderly in the hospital to do the heart surgery, the five-way bypass. We have seen how this Government has mismanaged from start to finish.

I went down to Washington almost two years ago with Hon. Members of the House who were interested in this issue. We took the pulse of protectionism and found out the affect the U.S. coalition was having on elected representatives in the United States. We found they were very effective. Our Ambassador, Mr. Gotlieb, a very intelligent and well informed man, was well aware of where this issue was starting to move. He had certain ideas which I brought back to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), as did other members of that delegation.

We pointed out we had to get to U.S. consumers. The U.S. consumers know this will increase the cost of a house in the United States between $1,000 and $4,000 U.S. That is very likely going to bring about a further reduction in housing starts in the United States. We are lucky right now because there is a bit of a blip in the United States because interest rates are down and people are still buying homes. However, the fact is that the culmination of this export tax, with anything like the 1982 reduction in demand for Canadian SPF products, is going to have devastating consequences, particularly for small mills, and, if Mr. Widman is correct, to a far greater extent in eastern Canada than in western Canada, in part due to the nature of stumpage policies in this country. If one compares British Columbia and the Maritimes, one finds that the Maritimes pay six times the stumpage fees now paid in most of British Columbia.

That brings me to the point where again members of the Government say that these hundreds of millions of dollars are going to be converted into stumpage increases, and so on. There is no incentive now for Mr. Vander Zalm or Mr. Kempf, or for the B.C. Government, to increase the stumpage rates in British Columbia because of the bottle-neck which will be created with the Department of Commerce, first, and also the fact that they receive fluid cash every month from Ottawa under the export tax which they can spend on ferries, roads, or whatever kind of nicknacks the provincial Government decides is politically popular.

I would like to end my remarks with the point of this whole exercise. We should have gone to the United States consumers, not as Parliamentarians, not as a forest industry, but through trade consulates in the United States, as all countries which have an evolving, mature relationship with the United States do. Finally, this whole issue revolves around the fact that the American forest industry is using this as a means to fix prices. It is going through this whole conundrum to fix prices in the United States, to drive them up. We should all remember that ITNT were the ones who drafted the resource pricing section of Sam Gibbons' Bill. They are after our forest lands and our industry with a vengeance. We should have stood up stronger and more firmly as a country and fought this to the ground before it ever got to the countervailing duty stage.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. I had a few minutes to speak earlier this afternoon and I was hoping that at that time I had made a convincing enough argument that all Conservative Members would want to change their vote. However, as you know, being a non-partisan person sitting in that chair, and being able to evaluate these things, obviously these Tories need a bit more convincing. So let me try it one more time.

Mr. Marchi: Very eloquently.

Mr. Boudria: My colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) says "very eloquently", but these Tories are stubborn. We have to explain this point again and again to the Conservative Government.

What we have before us in Bill C-37 is not an issue involving only softwood lumber. Of course it is that, but as I said earlier this afternoon, we are talking about sovereignty, our country. We are talking about relinquishing and surrendering some of our rights, the rights of a sovereign nation, to another country.

This is indeed precedent setting. What we have to ask ourselves is why we are doing it. If it were the proper thing to do, if there were no other alternatives, it would still be wrong to relinquish our sovereignty in this way. But it was not the only thing to do. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could have stood up to the President instead of being busy kissing his shoes. He could have stood up to the President and told him: "Mr. President, Canada is a sovereign country and we cannot allow a wrong policy of the United States of America to dictate to us in our country and tell us how we are going to run our internal affairs". We should have said we cannot agree to a piece of legislation by which another country will be able to determine whether or not what we are offering to Canadian industry is a subsidy.

What is next, I ask you, Mr. Speaker? I represent a constituency in which there are some 2,000 dairy farmers under supply management. We really have to wonder whether the Government at some point in the future is planning to sacrifice our dairy policy. Would it be planning at some point in the future to sacrifice our regional industrial policy? Would it be planning to sacrifice anything else to the Americans in order to keep them happy?

I see the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) in the House. He is the Hon. Member for Dollard. He says: "No, of course not". I believe him. He probably would not himself.

Mr. Marchi: He is a provincial Liberal.

Mr. Boudria: I am told that he is a provincial Liberal. I knew there was a good side to him, but I just could not figure out what it was exactly.

Be that as it may, I am sure he would not do it. It is his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) whom we do not trust with these types of negotiations. It is the Prime Minister who was too quick to cosy-up to the President of the United States the moment he took office. He was too quick and too hasty to tell everyone that what he wanted to do was simply please another country and not be running his own.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is why Canadians no longer trust this minister. That is why they no longer trust this government which could not stand on its own two feet.

The Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux), who represents the riding next to mine and who sits on Government benches, certainly knows that his Prime Minister has surrendered part of our sovereignty to the Americans when he introduced that legislation. Some might argue that he did not do it himself, but that his Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) who spends her time in Hawaii did it, and they would be right.

I should like the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil to tell me who appointed the Hawaiian minister? Well, it was the Prime Minister, and you know, Mr. Speaker, as we all know now, that it was a poor choice.

We know that we should now ask the Minister responsible for International Trade to move somewhere else, to do something else, perhaps warm up one of the back-benches over there, and to ask one of the Hon. Members who do not speak often, for I am sure that among all of them, there are at least one or two who are able to speak—I am not really sure of that, for I have not seen any of them open their mouths yet—but because of the law of probability, I am sure some of them could speak.

I am sure also that the Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) who represents the riding situated to the South-East of mine, could speak in the House, and that as a Minister, he could do just as good a job as the current Minister. He could certainly not do worse than she.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my friend and neighbour would at least try to defend the interests of Canadians. His riding runs along the American border, so that he is well aware of the influence and size of that neighbouring country.

[English]

We are not discussing here whether the United States is a friendly or unfriendly neighbour. Of course it is a friendly neighbour. That is not the issue. I have friendly neighbours of my own. That does not mean that they are allowed to enter my house and run away with everything that is there. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has his office right next to mine. I consider him to be a friendly neighbour.

Mr. Shields: Have you noticed we always close our doors?

Mr. Boudria: He does not enter my office and run away with my furniture, which is precisely what the Government is proposing in this Bill. It is offering a means by which someone will be able to decide whether or not what we are doing in our country is right. They will not even have to come here to do it. They will be able to stay at home in Washington and tell us from there whether or not we are governing a small aspect of our country in the proper way.

Some may say that this issue alone is not relinquishing totally the sovereignty of our country—perhaps not. But it is a foot in the door. It is very clearly a decision aimed in that direction.

As I said at the opening of my remarks, this was done erroneously. Most Canadians believe that had the case gone through the proper adjudication methods we would have won, as we have in the past. Members opposite say: "We won in the past but the process started again, therefore we did not really win at all because we won and then a couple of years later the Americans started threatening us again with a countervail". That is fine. What is there to say that they will not start again the day after we pass this Bill? What is there to say that they will not ask that the 15 per cent be increased to 35 per cent, or whatever? How are we to know? In the past we wanted what we felt was right, and we did so for the right reasons. However, the Americans came back to us demanding that things be changed.

I say to the silent Tories, those who form the silent majority, those who never say a word in the House other than to holler the odd heckle, that there will be a day when they will have to speak up. It is fine for them not to stand in their places, not to speak on behalf of their constituents. However, some day they will have to return to their constituents and be accountable. Their constituents will say to them: "Where were you when the softwood lumber issue was being discussed?" They will have to say that they were sitting in the back row watching members of the Opposition speak. That will not be good enough. Their constituents will not accept that. They will turf them out of office the next time around and put the Liberals back in.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to put on the record the facts which face us in this country. I would like to limit my remarks to facts. I do not want to enter into rhetoric, attempts to destroy personalities and individuals, attacks on the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) which are strictly out of character in this House. However, it is not something which is out of character for members of the Liberal Party or members of the New Democratic Party.

Let us consider the facts. Some two years ago a dispute developed with respect to softwood lumber entering the United States. The Americans wanted to impose a countervail. What happened? The case went before a tribunal and Canada won.

Just two years later another fact emerged. The climate in the United States was such that the Americans were becoming protectionists. There were something in the order of 300 Bills in Congress alone which proposed to bar imports from other countries. A real protectionist mood has developed in the United States. We all know that. Every Member sitting in the House knows that.

So it is fact that a dispute developed. Members of the lumber industry in the United States approached their Congressmen and Senators and said: "We want a countervail. We want you to impose a 15 per cent duty". That was done, it was not just proposed. A 15 per cent duty was imposed on the import of softwood lumber coming from Canada to the United States. Where did that money go? It went straight into the Treasury of the United States. That is where it went. By the way, that was only an interim solution. The lumber industry down there said that the hurt it was feeling was closer to the equivalent of 25 per cent and that is a fact.

Thus the process started. What was going to happen? We were to appear before a tribunal. Members opposite say that if we had fought the situation right through we probably would have won the case. I want to tell Members opposite that the whole situation in the United States has changed. The temper has changed. The best judgment of the government experts we consulted was that this was not going to happen. We were told that we probably would lose.

The other side of the coin is that, even if we did win it would take four years to do so, during which time the 15 per cent would still be in place and going directly to the Treasury of the United States. That is a fact. If we were able to win the case, which could have happened, then there was nothing in place to stop the United States with their protectionist attitude from coming in with legislation and imposing the 15 per cent anyway. Our best judgment told us to strike a deal with the United States so that we could keep those funds in Canada. The important issue was to keep the money in Canada. With that money, we can assist with the problems that may face the industry. That is a fact.

The other fact that everyone glosses over or does not allude to is that after the agreement was signed the stocks of all of the softwood lumber industry went up very dramatically on the Toronto Stock and the Vancouver Stock Exchanges. Not only did the stocks go up, but the price of lumber to the consumer in the United States went up approximately 13 per cent. This means that all that happened is that the price of lumber has gone up in the United States market, and the consumer in the United States is paying the 15 per cent difference that is being collected for the Canadian Treasury.

The money will be put into a special fund. That fund will be passed to the provinces proportionately. The provinces will determine how this money will be handled, whether it is spent on silviculture or reforestation. Those are the facts that, when speaking on behalf of our constituents, all Members on this side of the House have expressed time and time again.

What do we hear from the Liberal-NDP coalition? We hear nothing but character assassination of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). We hear nothing but innuendo and character assassination of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), and of every member of this Government who states the facts. They do not wish to listen to the facts. What they wish to do is malign and carry on a fractious House, and say things in the House that they would never admit to saying if they walked out on to the street. They would never admit to saying some of the garbage that they try to throw in the form of debate. It is not debate, it is a rat pack mentality that has taken over with the Liberals, and the NDP are falling into line like the lemmings heading to the sea; one lemming starts and all the rest follow. That is the way it works.

I would like to talk about the sovereignty issue and the types of things that are being mentioned. We heard the Member, who calls himself my neighbour, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), say that we lost sovereignty. I heard the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) talk about sovereignty. I also heard the NDP talk about sovereignty, and how we have given it away. When two people have a dispute and those people come to an agreement, they agree to do certain things. They both lose a little bit of their free choice. In the dispute to resolve the dispute, each side has to give a little bit.

In the truest sense, there are certain things that we cannot do with the 15 per cent tax that we will be collecting, but we have agreed to that. The United States Government has said that it wishes to monitor what we do, because it is not sure that we will not give it to some of our producers of softwood lumber through the back door. That is a reasonable thing. But we have also extracted from the United States Government that it, in turn, will not come back in on a countervail and break the agreement; that it will live with a 15 per cent export tax, and not come after it again. So we have solved the lumber dispute. They have given up the sovereignty that we extracted from them, because that is the nature of bilateral agreements. Every bilateral agreement signed between governments means that each government has to give up something to make that bilateral agreement work. All Members in this House know that to be true. And all Members of this House, if they were acting responsibly, would stand in their place and say so, and cut out this foolishness and garbage that they are throwing in as an obstruction.

We have other business to attend to in the House, to make sure that the Government and the people in Canada are getting what they put us here to do, that is, to give them proper Government. Interest rates are falling. We have economic problems to face. We have unemployment. We have many things to be addressed in the House. Most importantly, we have freedom to move legislation that will, once and for all, remove the freight rate inequity between western and eastern Canada. We want to get this on the board and discuss it. We want to get it into committee and pass it, so we can equalize the opportunities across this country. We have the good old socialist NDP and Liberal coalition doing everything they can to obstruct action in the House. I wish to put on record that I resent that attitude. I hope that they will be men enough to stand in their place and say what a good deal we have received in this trade war.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the last speaker, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), talked about character assassination. He said that our side was interested in character assassination. We are not interested in character assassination as far as the Conservative Party is concerned, because they are committing suicide with their own characters. We just need to watch them. Day after day they are involved in a suicidal mission, as far as their characters are concerned, so there is no need for assassination.

The Hon. Member stated that he wished to put some facts on the table. I would also like to place a few facts on the table. The first fact is that the Tory Government is trying to stifle debate on this issue. There are Members on this side of the House who have more things they wish to say, some important facts that we wish to put on the table. We also believe that there are some back-benchers in the Tory caucus who have some things to say, if they can wait long enough to get up the gumption to stand up on their hind legs and say it.

When I had a chance to speak a couple of days ago I outlined some of the history of bungling that has characterized the way that this Government has mismanaged the entire free trade relationship with the United States. Nevertheless, the Minister claims that she won a victory when she reached this deal in the dying days of 1986. She claims it was a victory. It reminded me of the Battle of Blenheim where a couple of small children, 50 years after the battle, find a skull. They asked their old grandfather to tell them all about the war, and what they fought each other for. "That I cannot say," said he, but it was a famous victory. I can imagine some child 50 years from now finding an old newspaper and looking at it and asking to be told all the softwood facts, and how we got the export tax. "That I cannot say," said she, "but it was a famous victory," with just the odd anomaly. The Minister had to admit that there are a few anomalies in this agreement. There are a few people who should have been protected who are not.

Whatever victory the Minister might have found in this agreement, most of us fear that if we have two or three more victories like that, there will be precious little of our sovereignty left. Is this the type of victory that the Government is looking for in the whole free trade negotiations with the United States? I very much fear that this is the type of victory that we might end up with, an agreement in which we get the short end of the stick and the Government stands up and states that we won a great victory. The end result of this victory is that workers will pay for it with the loss of their jobs.

Yesterday, there was an IWA study released in British Columbia which indicated that from their point of view they thought that British Columbia would be able to weather the storm not too badly in the short term. I hope that they are correct. I hope the facts that at present the American consumers are absorbing the greatest percentage of the tax; that at the present time there is a buoyant housing market in the United States; and that most of our mills in British Columbia are fairly technologically competent means that we will be able to weather this storm with a minimum of further disruption to our economy. The forest industry in British Columbia has suffered a great deal. It cannot afford to suffer more.

I talked to an IWA official who said that even though they do not anticipate any massive lay-offs, this deal means that there will not be the anticipated and hoped for recovery of the economy. There will be no third shifts put on at mills that have been barely staying open. Even in British Columbia where they think it will not have that much of a negative impact, it will certainly dampen any hopes for recovery.

Even if British Columbia is not as heavily hit in the short term, at least three other factors need to be taken into consideration. First, there is the long-term implications for British Columbia. If the U.S. market is buoyant right now, what will happen when there is a downturn? We know that there are upturns and downturns in the U.S. housing market. When that happens American consumers will not be absorbing the increased costs. This means that Canadian manufacturers will have to absorb them. They will have to lower their price to export to the American market.

Can the Canadian lumber industry absorb an increased cost of $500 million or $600 million per year? In effect, that is their profit right now. It would mean that they would have to operate at a loss or without any profit. It would also mean that they would have to reduce prices to sell to the American market. Then the question would be, are we to have a two-price system for exports? Are we to expect that the Japanese will let us export to the United States at a lower price while they pay a 15 per cent higher price? Of course not. The lower price they will have to absorb for the United States market will have to apply to other importers of our softwood. That sort of thing will hit British Columbia woodworkers hard in the long term.

Second, we must look at the effects on other parts of Canada. The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) spoke about this very eloquently on Monday when he asked for an emergency debate. As reported at page 2346 of Hansard, he said:

> My request under Standing Order 29 is based on the recent decision to impose a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber which has caused grave concern among Maritime lumber producers. Many producers fear for the economic viability of their operations, and the jobs dependent upon their competitiveness.
> The agreement imposes the tax upon all but five Maritime softwood producers that previously enjoyed exemptions from such action. The consequence of such a decision creates a situation whereby the livelihood of Maritime softwood producers is threatened by an action designed to resolve a problem created by extremely low stumpage fees in British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, and Quebec.
> Many lumber producers fear that they will not survive if they are required to pay not only the highest stumpage fees in Canada, but also an additional 15 per cent tax on their exported products. There is also a very real concern that the lumber market within the Maritime provinces may be swamped by western lumber seeking refuge from the tax.

These were the comments of the Conservative back-bencher who was speaking out of concern for what the Bill would do to his constituents and to his region. I commend him for having the gumption to stand and raise these concerns in the face of a Government which does not seem to care.

Third, we must look at the effect of this 15 per cent export tax and the deal reached with the Americans on other industries. I am not referring only to the softwood lumber industry but to the pulp industry, for example. In many provinces the stumpage rates for pulp and lumber are the same. If the softwood lumber export tax is replaced by increased stumpage fees, it will mean increased costs for pulp mills. In turn, it will be very difficult for some of those operations to continue.

The total effect will be that small communities will be devastated and jobs will be lost. Many single industry towns across the nation depend upon the lumber industry, but the Government has no plans in place to help them.

Finally, we see this deal as a way of giving away our sovereignty. I am reminded of the words of an old poem:

> Ours is a sovereign nation
> Bows to no foreign will
> But whenever they cough in Washington
> They spit on Parliament Hill.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, earlier we heard the very feeble reply or rebuttal of the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). He ended his weak intervention with the ultimate expression of fear. When the debate became uncomfortable, unbearable, and pretty unpleasant on the part of the Government, which is embarrassed and uneasy about the measure, he moved a motion that we now come to the conclusion of the debate. When that happens we know that a Government is in trouble.

The position put forward by government spokesmen on a number of occasions since the beginning of the debate has been one of defending Canada's sovereignty. It was only two days ago when that great scholar on matters related to sovereignty, the most learned Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), came into the House and told us that the softwood lumber agreement respected and maintained our sovereignty and avoided intrusion by the United States into Canadian affairs. It was on Monday that he said that.

Having heard that statement, some of us on this side of the House drew his attention to the letter signed by the U.S. Secretary of Commerce and by the U.S. Trade Representative. This is the letter which was sent to the chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports. In part the letter read:

> It is the understanding of the U.S. Government that the U.S. Government would have to approve any changes in the export charge or calculation of the value of any replacement measures.

Then the letter went on to indicate:

> Any changes made without U.S. Government approval would be considered a violation of the understanding.

When we brought this letter to the attention of Hon. Members on the government side, they said: "Oh, but you should not read that letter; it was only signed by the Secretary of Commerce and another official". They said that we should look at the agreement for the real substance.

We looked at the agreement as well and we found the basis for Mr. Yeutter's and Mr. Baldrige's conclusions in their letter to the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports. They draw these conclusions from Clause 7a which lays the foundation for the obligations Canada undertakes in respect of this memorandum of understanding. Among other things it indicates:

> The Government of Canada will provide the Government of the United States of America with data concerning the level of Provincial and Federal softwood and total stumpage harvest, the total revenue collected from the sale of Provincial and Federal softwood and total timber—

As if that were not enough, it continued:

> —total export charge collected, total shipments of certain softwood lumber products to the United States of America—

As if that were not enough:

> —total lumber production by province,—

• (2000)

As if that were not enough:

> —the total softwood lumber production by province, for each fiscal year within three months of the close of the fiscal year or as soon thereafter as is practicable—

We asked the Government on a number of occasions whether the letter by Yeutter and Baldrige was an incorrect interpretation, for a rejection of the meaning and content of the letter and for an understanding as to exactly what the clause meant. So far we have had no reply. So far, Madam Speaker, the provinces do not know what they can do and what they cannot do as a result of this agreement. There is silence on the part of the Government. Here we are at the crucial point of this debate being asked to close it off by the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown just because the heat is getting too much. It is getting too hot in the kitchen and the Government would like to shut down the whole business.

Here we are with the great champions of the free market economy, the great believers in the market-place who have caved and given in to pressure by the Americans. They have decided that that was the answer Canada should accept and adopt rather than taking the matter to the international tribunal of GATT or the American tribunals for that matter to fight the matter.

Today in the mail we received an interesting letter from the Canadian Lumbermen's Association. It is signed by the Executive Director, Mr. J.F. McCracken. I will read a couple of paragraphs from it because the thoughts and position of that Association should be put on record for historical reasons and for the purposes of this debate. First, is the following statement:

> The December 30 agreement is a very fragile, open-ended rigid document. It is a minefield for our industry and must be closely studied for its total impact.

The letter goes on with another relevant and important paragraph on page 2:

> CFIC believe that the softwood lumber industry must be a working partner with federal and provincial authorities. The agreement signed December 30 demonstrates that the lack of input from the involved softwood lumber industry created unnecessary problems and backlash from January 1 to date.

This is a very serious indictment brought to the attention of the Government by a number of speakers in this debate, namely that the lumber industry was cut off from negotiations with the United States, in sharp contrast with the way a similar situation was handled in 1983. But that is not enough. In the same letter, Mr. McCracken goes on to say:

> We learned last week, our European customers are worried they will be flooded with our softwood volumes we can't sell in the U.S. Accordingly, we understand, on very sound authority, a number of European importers are trying to have their governments initiate action to impose a 15 per cent tax on our softwood lumber imports.

Imagine, Madam Speaker, we are going to be hit two ways by an initiative in the European markets to impose a 15 per cent tax on our softwood lumber imports on the one hand and, at the same time, we are going to see an increase in the cost of our exports to other nations other than the United States as a result of this imposition because this agreement with the United States will mean an increase in the price of lumber to the consumer and an increase in the price of the lumber we export to countries other than the United States. What a sham, what a terrible situation to be in. For the Minister of State for Forestry to say that Canada has not lost its sovereignty is simply a silly statement to make.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I am so delighted, Madam Speaker, that you chose to remain in the Chair to hear me for the third time today. You can decide whether it has been your lucky day or not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I am delighted to take part in the debate on the motion of the Government Member whatever, his name and whatever riding he is from. He is there. He is somewhere.

Mr. Axworthy: Not for long.

Mr. Benjamin: The motion is that the question now be put. That is debatable, I mean the motion is debatable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Of course the Government and the Government Member who moved it are debatable too but it is a debatable motion on which I am about to embark.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I am trying to figure out the motives for the moving of this debatable motion that the question be now put. Is it possible—I do not want to think this but one is led to think it might be possible—that the Tories are so anxious to get this out of sight and out of the minds of Canadians that they will go to this length?

Mr. Nystrom: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Perish the thought. They would not want to do that, Madam Speaker, but they did. Is this a motion that might help get the Premier of Saskatchewan and a few others off the hook? Perish the thought, Madam Speaker. They would not do that, but they did.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: One has to examine the motives for the motion. I have to assume what must be part of the motives. Is this more of a mad rush on the part of the Government to evade its responsibility to preserve, protect and extend our independence and our nationhood? Is it a way of getting the Tories and some of their apologists off the hook? I have to think about this. I am not a suspicious type of person. I would not impute motives or anything else.

I read from The Winnipeg Sun, which you could hardly call a journal of raving socialist thought, an article by Dale Eisler who happens to be a resident and a writer in Regina, Saskatchewan. He said on January 20:

> A devout free trader, Premier Grant Devine initially talked as though he was firmly opposed to any capitulation to the U.S. protectionist pressure demanding higher prices for Canadian lumber in the American market.
> It was a position he shared with Ontario Premier David Peterson, as both argued it would create an extremely dangerous precedent.
> When the first ministers met in Vancouver last November, Devine went to the meeting saying that Canada should fight the countervailing duty in court. If Canada should fold to American pressure on the lumber issue, then Devine feared the U.S. would start targetting other imports such as potash and uranimum, which are critical to the Saskatchewan economy. "They'll pick us off one by one if we don't stick together," Devine said.

• (2010)

Then Mr. Eisler goes on to say the following:

But in the backrooms of the first ministers' conference, Devine mysteriously changed his position.

I suppose he changed his position from a vertical one to a horizontal one, I do not know. The article goes on:

He fell in line behind the federal government's move to not fight the U.S. duty in court and instead reach an agreement. The result has been the creation of the 15 per cent federal export tax on softwood lumber.

This columnist goes on to say about the Premier of Saskatchewan, whom this motion is trying to bail out as quickly as possible, the following:

—when the former Liberal government introduced its National Energy Program, complete with an export tax on oil and gas. It triggered an immediate constitutional debate, one that became redundant when the export tax died with the demise of the NEP—

But to this point, there has not been a word of protest raised by Devine about the export tax on lumber.

That is passing strange. Mr. Eisler goes on to say:

The problem Devine has is that his hands are tied on federal-provincial issues, a dilemma of his own making.

Just like this dilemma was of the making of the United States. To continue, the article goes on:

His unfailing support of federal initiatives and his about-face on how the lumber issue should be handled have left him with no credible way to now take a strong stance in defence of Saskatchewan interests.

These are not my words. These words do not come from a raving democratic socialist like me. These words come from Mr. Dale Eisler and they appeared in The Winnipeg Sun of January 20.

Mr. Eisler goes on to say about the Premier of Saskatchewan the following:

By failing to stand and fight the U.S. action, the door has been opened for other American industries to put pressure on Canadian natural resource imports they view as unfair competition. It was the very argument Devine advanced before he did a complete turnaround and, given the tide of protectionist fever in the U.S., it becomes a very real possibility.

A premier of one of Canada's provinces is working on both sides of the street, as is the Conservative Government which ranted and raved about an export tax on oil and gas when the Liberals were in power but is doing exactly the same thing now. That will not wash. The motion that the question now be put will not wash even if the Government wins the vote because there are other stages of the Bill that must yet be debated.

This country must earn the respect and regard of other nations about our sovereignty and independence. We will not do so through this supine sell-out. We must stand up for our country. Regardless of what 10 premiers might do in 10 different ways, a national Government must act in the national interest when it comes to sovereignty even if there is a price to pay. The price is worth paying and we do not agree that the question should now be put. This is the last and only chance Parliament has to debate this issue. We cannot debate an international treaty or agreement, we must do it under the guise of debating an export tax Bill. That is what we are darn well doing right now.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): As several of our colleagues have just pointed out, Madam Speaker, it is rather strange—considering that the Conservative Government should be so intent on pushing through this 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exports—and I wonder why not one of the Conservatives wants to take part in the debate this evening. They probably show interest when they have meetings with Mr. Bush, with the president—

An Hon. Member: It is only today, and you were not here.

Ms. Copps: But I was here all day, I even took the floor yesterday. This is the second time in two days that I speak to this issue because it is of great interest to all Canadian men and women. But now the Progressive Conservative Party wants to impose a tax on Canadian lumber and give the Americans the right to get directly involved in this nation's business.

It seems to me— We have all heard the words "Masters in our own home". So why here, in the Parliament of Canada, are we not masters in our own home? Why should the United States, the President and the Vice-president who are talking about the export situation and who, as a result of this Bill, now be given the right to come to Canada at the invitation of our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney)? They are allowed to come to Canada, snoop in our revenue ledgers, and dictate our forest policies at both federal and provincial levels.

If we now conclude forestry agreements for instance to try and help small lumber companies in Northern Ontario, where I happen to be going tomorrow, in North Bay, and I know that many people in Northern Ontario are wondering why this Government is now pushing forward with this Bill that probably will destroy thousands of jobs held by Canadian men and women. Why do they do that? Because they crave for a free trade agreement at any cost. Madam Speaker, earlier in the week we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) make this promise as he said:

[English]

"I'm going to put my political career on the line because of the free trade question". We heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) make that bold statement last week. It is not the Prime Minister who is putting his career on the line, it is the taxpayers and the workers of Canada who are paying very dearly for an agreement which, for the first time in Canadian history, sets a precedent allowing the American Government to check this country's books and tell us how to run our affairs.

If the Province of Ontario wants to come up with a forest management agreement to assist the northern forestry and lumber workers, why must we look to the United States to get permission to do so? What happened to the notion of Canada governing its own affairs?

I understand why Members on the Conservative side have been speaking from their seats. I do not understand why these same Members are not speaking out on every aspect of this insidious and odious legislation which is a forerunner of things to come. It is a harbinger of the kind of maladministration that was begun on March 17, 1985, when, in all his blarney, the Prime Minister, at the shamrock summit in Quebec City, put "sham" back into the word "shamrock" and "con" back into the word "Conservative". That was the beginning and we have been singing for our supper ever since.

There are many Canadians involved not only in the softwood lumber industry but in the steel industry or automotive industry or the agricultural industry who want to know just where the Government stands on the question of Canadian sovereignty. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) promised the Auto Pact would not be on the table. We now see their American counterparts intend to extract a price from us.

Marketing boards have led to at least some measure of supply and management and some measure of an evenly-balanced price for certain products in Canada. If we have to give up marketing boards in order to obtain a free trade agreement, in the same way the Government was prepared to sacrifice the softwood lumber industry, then we will see the demise of the family farm as we know it. That is why people are watching this Bill with much interest. It speaks to the heart and soul of what a Government is supposed to do.

Unlike the Conservative Government, when the Liberal Government was confronted with a similar crisis in 1983 we did not capitulate. We did not go to the Americans on bended knee and say please, we will pay 15 per cent, we are guilty, please let us have our trade with you. What we said, and what we in the Liberal Party still believe notwithstanding the sell-out by the Conservative Government, is that we are fair trading partners. Whether it be in the forest industry or the steel industry, we are fair trading partners and we will fight to prove how fair we are in any international court and we will win our case.

We took that to an international court and we won. We had the courage of our convictions and the guts to stick through to the very end. Compare that with the Conservative Government which literally days before the preliminary judgment was expected went to the Americans and said we are not guilty but we are going to make you a final offer; mea culpa, mea culpa, mea culpa. We will pay 10 per cent. That is our final offer. We heard that from our Minister for International Trade. She was carrying the ball. She carried it about as well as the Edmonton Eskimos carried it in the last Grey Cup. She dropped it. She said 10 per cent is our final offer. A few weeks later she comes back in a panic. Oh, my goodness, Christmas is coming and we have to get an agreement. We will give you 15 per cent and a few other concessions.

The Americans would not go along with that. They wanted more. What they wanted and what this Bill and the Memorandum of Understanding will give is not only the 15 per cent but give the Americans the right to come in and go through the books and the companies in the lumber industry to make sure that, according to their standards, we are living up to the agreement.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Ms. Copps: It also makes clear that the U.S. Government will have a say in what kind of agreements we want to make at the provincial or federal level in the forest industry. Whether it relates to forest management agreements, stumpage fees or specific subsidies, we cannot do anything. Our hands are tied until we get the express permission of the U.S.

The Minister said 10 per cent is our final offer. Would you trust her? She is now asking the Parliament of Canada to pass a Bill to give her the right to open the books at her discretion to whomever comes in from the U.S. and wants to go through them. That very same Minister negotiated herself into a corner. She gave up a good and solid Canadian case which would have endorsed the principle that we are fair trading partners. She cannot be trusted. This Bill cannot be trusted. If any Conservative Party Member really believes this Bill could be trusted then I challenge them to speak out tonight. We have not heard from the silent masses and we would like to hear where they stand on this issue, or are they hiding behind the coat-tails of the incompetent Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker—Madam Speaker! As my time draws nigh, my eyesight weakens and the chair becomes farther and farther away. My apologies.

A lot of the problems the Government faced in choosing the solution it did were based on the actions of the Premier of British Columbia. He did not consider himself a Canadian at that time, he simply acted alone in an unthinking manner and precipitated a situation which created a great dilemma for this country. I must comment on a few of the submissions made tonight by the previous speaker from the Liberal Party. I wonder if my Conservative friends might concur when I say that we have seen a presentation of just incredible proportions tonight. The Liberal Party of Canada is one of the great sell-out organizations in this country. The Conservatives are rank amateurs compared to them but they are racing to try and catch up.

Mr. Comeau: You are rank.

Mr. Skelly: I see my friend from South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) agrees entirely.

Mr. Comeau: I said you are rank.

Mr. Skelly: The presentation by the Liberal Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was incredible. She forgets that the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government in 1983 did virtually nothing when this tariff problem confronted us. Absolutely nothing. It was the Canadian forest industry, organized labour, and many individuals involved in the industry and not the Liberals. The Liberals sat on their hands and did nothing. When invited to do something they refused to become involved. That was a very serious matter at that time and that Government would have seen us sold out.

Mr. Axworthy: You are almost stupid enough to be a Tory.

Mr. Skelly: The Hon. Member said it was the Conservatives who put the sham in the shamrock. That is interesting. One of the things that was sold out without a Quebec City meeting was the West Coast salmon interception treaty. It was the Liberal Government that set the format for that sell-out. The Prime Minister of Canada showed up with a document which the Liberals had drafted and signed it just to have something to sign with Ronald Reagan.

The Hon. Member might have made some errors because she was not a Member of this House when those things happened. She can probably be forgiven for her ignorance and her lack of understanding of the process. However, she certainly should take a long hard look at the Party she represents and its record of selling out this country. Most of the ills forming the foundation of the problems of the present Conservative Government were formulated by Liberal Governments in previous years.

We should remember that those 211 Conservative Members were not elected on their own, they were elected in order to throw the Liberals out of Government. They were put in those chairs to get rid of the Liberals. That was a disaster of international proportions. However, it is really and truly something to sit here and listen to the distortions expressed by members of the Liberal Party. I guess all we can say is how soon they forget. They have cast off the robes of the old corrupt organization and are trying to present new clothing to the public. Yet they have really done nothing.

They have inherited the misfortune of the Conservative Government without making one constructive proposal in this House. They are feeding on the misfortune of others. The Canadian public will not forget how disastrous the previous Liberal Government was. They will not forget that the country was sold out and they will not forgive. When the next election comes around it will be a sad day of reckoning. That tour of the horizon should be sufficient to ensure that the previous speaker is more aware of the disastrous nature of the previous Government and is more cautious and humble in her presentations in the House.

This is a serious matter, Madam Speaker. The Government has committed a very serious error.

Mr. Axworthy: Who is this clown?

Mr. Skelly: The former Minister of Transport in the Liberal Government is talking about clowns. He is a prime example of Liberal disaster in this country.

The Conservative Government has created a very serious problem. It had many options available which it did not choose to exercise. Grant Devine, the Premier of Saskatchewan, and his counterpart in British Columbia, Bill Vander Zalm, undercut the efforts of the forest industry, the federal Government, and organized labour to put forward a united national face against the very wrong position of the United States. Their breaking away undermined our unity and made it impossible for the federal Government to put forward a solid presentation.

Bill Vander Zalm admitted guilt on the stumpage issue. He said that the Americans had a point and that we would examine our stumpage. By saying that he condemned Canada and ruined the argument put forward in the 1983 hearings. He put us in a position of great difficulty. Instead of co-operating with the national position, Vander Zalm said that if the federal Government did not see it his way, he would go it alone. One can only speculate upon what kind of proposal British Columbia would have made and upon the depth of the sell-out which would have occurred. I believe that individual made a very embarrassing, sad and tragic mistake in trying to fulfil his responsibility as the premier of a province by breaking ranks and failing to co-operate with sister provinces and the federal Government in the face of American threats.

The Government has essentially imposed closure on this debate. I believe the Government has recognized that it has made a very serious error and is attempting to limit the political damage which will be done. This is so reminiscent of the previous Liberal Government which treated the House to closure nearly once a week.

Mr. Nunziata: That's not true.

Mr. Skelly: My colleague from the Liberal Party says that that is not true. The previous Liberal Government used closure extremely frequently. It had a studied comtempt for the democratic process. That cynical Liberal Government used closure time after time, not caring about the political consequences or the odious legislation put forward. It continually smashed this place with its majority hammer.

Unfortunately, the present Conservative Government, which threw that Liberal Government out, learned all of its bad habits, its contempt for this House, the Opposition, and democracy. It is sad that the Government is falling into the habit of invoking closure.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, is enough to make the Fathers of Confederation roll over in their graves. One hundred and twenty years after Confederation the Conservative Government is giving away the Canadian sovereignty for which they built this nation. Sir John A. Macdonald would not be very proud of the gang which now occupies the seats of Government.

Yesterday or the day before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had the nerve to stand in this House and brag about the Conservatives having started Canada. Can you imagine? What a tradition. They should be ashamed of themselves. They gave up the law process. They could have gone the route of the process of law, but they refused to do that. They went the political route and look where we are today. We know that politics is everything to the Government. Politics covers everything from forestry to patronage to contracts to the destruction of the fair bidding system in our country. The day of judgment by the Canadian people will arrive very shortly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: We hear great statements that trees are beautiful, and they are, that trees are useful, and they are. We hear all kinds of things about conservation and the wealth of our forests, one of the greatest assets of our nation, and jobs. How often have we heard the term "jobs"? The forest industry of Canada has traditionally represented 11 per cent of our labour force. The three staple crops in Canada before and since Confederation have been forestry, fish and agriculture.

Mr. Nickerson: Since when is fish a crop?

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member asks since when fish has been a crop. Fish are a crop. People grow fish today. Why are trees a crop? People thought it was foolish to speak of trees as a crop. Forests are located on private lands, Crown lands and parklands. We are not just talking about forestry costs in this agreement. We are not just talking about stumpage fees because that 15 per cent goes on the initial cost of the timber, its milling, the wages, compensation costs, equipment costs and the trucking costs, until it reaches the border at 15 per cent. That 15 per cent tax does not increase our stumpage fees in Canada but taxes labour, our sawmills and processing mills in Canada.

There is a large lumber mill in my area that sells to a wholesaler in Ottawa, which also sells to an Alexandria moulding company in eastern Ontario. When it sells its product it is still paying 15 per cent. Let us assume that the cost to the moulding company is 30 per cent for its equipment and wages to produce the moulding. The 15 per cent tax will not be on the lumber or moulding the wood, it will be on wages and equipment that the manufacturer purchases. The effects of this tax should be put into proper perspective.

At the turn of the century there was much discussion about commercial union between Canada and the United States, but it was overwhelmingly rejected by Canadians at that time. The fact that the Government is proposing a 15 per cent duty on our wood products in Canada at the request of the United States is evidence of internal interference and the practical beginning of commercial union. Adam Zimmerman was right when he said that the Government sold out.

The Government has talked about "jobs, jobs, jobs" but the jobs are gone. We recall when the Government told us that there would be no problems as a result of removing protection for the shoe industry. Today, over half those employees are gone.

Mr. McDermid: You are kidding yourself.

Mr. Hopkins: Just listen. I know that the forests are not too thick around Brampton, but there is a lot up the Valley where your wife comes from.

Many of my constituents are already paying market prices for wood that they buy on private woodlots and they also pay market prices for products from the Algonquin Park Authority. They will be paying an additional 15 per cent.

In the Province of Quebec they will pay market costs for timber they take from private property and they will pay the Province of Quebec the timber fees on Crown land. There will be an additional 15 per cent to pay, even after the milling costs. These operators are faced with those costs whether or not they are paying the market price.

I suggest that the larger companies will move in and buy the smaller manufacturers of lumber products in Canada. Those larger companies will not continue those small industries in the towns and villages across Canada but will simply close them down and take the resources to be manufactured elsewhere. The regions of this country will suffer the great loss of jobs in the basic forest industry.

In many ways, this Bill is a gift to the major corporations because the smaller competitors will be eliminated. I predict that we will soon hear a request to curtail the production of pulp and paper.

The Government should have taken this issue to the courts. There was opportunity to appeal if we lost, even though the chances of winning in the courts were much greater than they were with the person whom the Prime Minister appointed to carry the ball in the wrong direction.

The American industry is getting everything it wanted. We are paying market prices in many of our industries plus a 15 per cent tax while they have no tax. Some of our manufacturers produce half of their products for Canadian use. One company produces 60 million feet of softwood per year, 30 million feet of which goes to the United States. Yet that company pays a total of 15 per cent tax, including labour and manufacturing costs.

Let us consider the cost of wood, for example. Because of the great demand for pine, it costs far more for the additional work in producing the various sizes in lumber than it does to produce hemlock which has a very small profit margin. A 15 per cent tax on hemlock will result in a smaller demand that will result in less product in the sawmills. The Government that talked so much about jobs in the last election is, in effect, taxing the very jobs that exist.

Some timber rights in Ontario are more than 100 years old. People who own those timber rights spend a lot of money on reforestation and road maintenance. Yet they are being taxed for managing that forest.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret that I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey).

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: I move:

That the Member for Vancouver East be now heard.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) did not rise at that point.

An Hon. Member: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): No, she had not risen when I recognized the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey). The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: He had not said a word. I rose before him—

An Hon. Member: Let him be.

[English]

Stick to your toys, Paul.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is true the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi had not started to speak. I must then ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) if she assures me she had risen. As far as I am concerned, I did not see her rise and ask to speak. If she assures me that she did so, as two Hon. Members at this point are seeking the floor, I will have to recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

• (2050)

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I am really glad I have a chance to make a few remarks on this very important Bill which has extreme implications for many people in Canada, particularly for the one million forest workers. I would like to say that I meet from time to time with many of the forestry workers and those people who are related to the forest industry in my riding of Vancouver East. For a long time we have been very concerned about the forestry policy in British Columbia, or the lack of policy, I should say. I mention this because I think the background is quite important to this Bill.

I think the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) outlined from a historical perspective that for many years the Social Credit Government has really refused to look at what was happening to our forests in British Columbia. I think most Hon. Members would agree that we have the most beautiful forests in the world. Yet we have had our hillsides stripped and there has been really no government policy which has been effective in replacing those trees. This means that we are really selling out our future. The federal and provincial Governments from time to time have talked about reforestation and silviculture but they have done very little in this respect. We had hoped when the Conservative Government came into office it would appoint a senior Minister of Forestry and perhaps that person would mean we were finally going to get some real action in developing a sound forestry and reforestation policy. However, we have a very junior Minister and one from whom we have heard only a little, I am sad to say.

As to the lumber export tax, I think it is such a complicated process and policy that it is unfortunate the Government has chosen to try to stifle debate. I was astounded to hear from my colleagues that once again the Government is really trying to push this Bill through and in effect impose closure. It is important that we get all the facts. I would like to have a chance to do much more research and get more views as to the projected effects not just of the lumber export tax but of the whole precedence which has been set in place in the way this international incident, if you like, has been handled.

I think most of us on this side of the House, and I hope I can include the Hon. Members at either end when I say this, would agree that there has been really a lousy process of negotiation with the United States on this issue from beginning to end. We have been intimidated and have fluctuated back and forth. We have not been consistent. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the negotiations are not over yet. I would be very interested to see how the Government and the Minister makes out in trying to resolve many of the interprovincial policies with which she will be faced when this Bill goes through.

I am sure, as my colleagues have been saying tonight, that we negotiated from a position of weakness. That is very unfortunate. As I was coming out of my office this evening, I overheard one of the speakers saying it is absolutely appalling that the Minister could not take a sound and strong position. She probably should not have got involved in the first place. There are those who feel this should have been left to the courts. However, once she did get involved, the kind of inconsistency, which really weakened her whole position, and in turn weakened Canada's negotiating position, is well known and well documented. She offered 10 per cent as a final offer. I think she said two or three times she was making a final offer. Then, of course, she backed down and went up to 15 per cent.

I must say, I feel a little sorry for the Minister because I am sure during this process she was not assisted at all by the interference of our Premier of British Columbia. He just could not keep his nose out of it. It was not at that stage a provincial question. It was part of federal negotiations. I think it was most important that he be sensitive to the whole free trade negotiations. The role of the provinces is to work in collaboration through the federal Government, not to intervene, compete and grandstand and try to take over in place of the federal Government. There was an election and a post-election period and the Premier of British Columbia wanted to be a hero. I wonder what kind of a hero he has turned out to be? What he did was create a situation where he is an embarrassment to us. I understand he was in the United States in this last week or so. I hate to think of what kind of things are now being negotiated behind our backs.

We have heard about a lot of the issues. I know I will be repeating some of them but I would like to put some of them on the record. The first and probably the most important issue, aside from the process I have already mentioned, is the implications that this whole incident has had, and will continue to have, on Canada's sovereignty. The United States now has the power to intervene and influence the forest policy of Canada. That is a very bad precedent for free trade negotiations generally.

I want to mention again what my Hon. Leader said when he spoke on this issue. He said with reference to the issue of sovereignty that the agreement contains the following words: Calculation of the value of any replacement measures in relation to the export charge will be subject to further consultations and agreement between the two Governments. Canada's fiscal and forestry policies will be subject to further consultations and agreement between the two Governments.

The word "agreement" is not an ambiguous word. If a provincial Government replaces the export tax with increased stumpage or other charges, it will have to obtain the agreement of the United States Government. I agree with our Leader. Certainly that would appear to be the case. He goes on to say that we are now involved in any change in implementing the replacement of the 15 per cent at the provincial level with the provinces having to go to the federal Government, and the federal Government having to trot down to Washington to say: "Will you please agree with us because if you do not, we cannot do it".

I think that any way one looks at it, it is a deplorable situation that we are losing such face and such control over our own forest industry. It is even more important that this is a precedent which will affect our total negotiations and our relationship with the United States, not to mention with other countries. If this example is effective with the United States, what are our friends in GATT and the European Market going to say to us?

We know that sovereignty is one of the very major concerns and sovereignty is a federal responsibility. Some of my colleagues in British Columbia do not care as much about the sovereignty issue. They are concerned with the forest industry primarily. As federal politicians that is our responsibility. We are Members of Parliament. We have a Government that is in charge of all the external relationships of Canada. It is responsible for protecting our sovereignty. I do not think it has done a good job at all in this case.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AIR CANADA—EMPLOYEES' PENSION PLAN—REQUEST FOR FULL ANNUAL REPORTS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, late in November I had the opportunity to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) a question concerning the availability of pension fund information for Air Canada employees. I had received some inquiries from a few constituents of Fraser Valley East who were worried that excess pension funds may be used incorrectly.

After examining the issue and after having the opportunity to question officials of Air Canada, I have found that instead of excess funds in the Air Canada pension fund there is actually an unfunded liability of some $248 million. This figure is readily available from the Public Accounts, 1985-86, which is published by the Receiver General.

This unfunded liability is not a problem, however, since it is very closely monitored by actuaries. The actuarial studies are done over a 30-year period and the funding is being handled by annual payments over various periods ending in 2003. The actuaries ensure that a stream of payments exists that will eventually eradicate the unfunded liability and change the payments to meet the needs of the fund. The apparent lack of information about the pension fund experienced by some pensioners could be a result of misinterpretation of the actual details.

The Air Canada pension fund is based on a final earnings plan which means that the employees' pensions are guaranteed to the maximum, regardless of anything. The employer must meet that obligation. Since 1973, Air Canada has increased the pensions yearly, but this is done on an ad hoc basis, not by indexation. Ad hoc calculations include many important factors such as review of inflation, an examination of other large pension funds, ability to pay and community influences. In many cases this method actually gives the pensioner a higher increase than an indexed pension.

The Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985, which came into effect on January 1, 1987, includes a number of measures to try to further ensure the financial solvency of federally-regulated pension plans. The PBSA sets minimum standards for pension plans established by companies in federally-regulated industries, such as Air Canada which is a parent Crown corporation.

Because of this Act pension plan administrators will have a statutory obligation to administer the pension fund to protect the benefit of plan members.

In his recent report the Auditor General stated that "the viability of pension plans is of vital importance to Canadians". He recommended, to further protect the interests of Canadians, that independent reviews must be carried out by the Department of Insurance, which regulates all federally-registered employee pension plans. At this time the Department supervises some 750 plans, covering 600,000 employees. As can be seen this is a huge workload. According to the Auditor General there is the risk, that the present supervisory procedure of the Pension Benefits Division will not permit it to do an adequate job of monitoring the financial solvency of all employee pension plans.

He recommends that the Department of Insurance should undertake a thorough review of its present supervisory practices for pension plans. In particular, the Auditor General recommends that it should review the adequacy of procedures for monitoring pension plan assets.

The Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985, will no doubt give the final assurance that federally-regulated pension plans maintain minimum standards. The Public Accounts of the Receiver General continue to provide the public with information on the financial statements of Crown corporations such as Air Canada. The information from the Public Accounts Report is used to write the company's annual report.

On a more local level, Air Canada pensioners are well served by representatives across Canada. These people keep in close contact with Air Canada's head office.

At this time, Air Canada could not do anything with the pension funds, in terms of investing or selling out, because not only is it against the law to take funds out when there is an unfunded liability, but the unfunded liability would increase. Finally, close actuarial control does not allow this to happen in any case.

In closing, I appreciate having this chance to address the House, but particularly to be able to report to the people of Fraser Valley East on this matter. They must not only be reassured that there are not any excess funds in the Air Canada pension fund but that there is not any reason to be concerned about the unfunded liability either.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) for his representations in respect of an important matter. I am certain his concern for retired Air Canada employees is greatly appreciated by them.

Air Canada management has told the Minister that there is an annual report prepared on the pension fund. The report is available to the pension committee, which consists of representatives of employee groups, retired employees, and management. The report is not widely distributed, but the information in it is available to all interested groups through their representatives on the committee. May I remind the Hon. Member, and anyone else who is interested, that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has made it clear that he will "personally see to it" that anyone wanting the information will have it. If they encounter any difficulty in getting it, if he or anyone else will contact the Minister, he will see that they receive a copy of that report.

Air Canada also advises that it has been the company's policy to provide annual ad hoc adjustments to its retirees' pensions based on a number of factors, such as the company's financial performance, inflation rate, performance of the pension fund investments. These ad hoc payments have been made regularly over the past eight to ten years. The 1986 ad hoc adjustment was recently announced to all employees by the Air Canada board of directors.

I hope that these brief comments provide some clarification for the Hon. Member with the concern.

PORTS—VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR FUNDS TO UPGRADE FACILITIES. (B) REQUEST THAT PORT USERS COMMITTEE BE ESTABLISHED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I wish to speak to the question that I raised in the House on November 17, 1986, relating to the Port of Vancouver. There are some very urgent problems faced at the Port of Vancouver. It desperately needs upgraded facilities in order to be competitive.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was asked by me for an assurance that the federal Government would take some positive action that would not just be a reaction to the management-labour crisis at that time, but would really help with the port's long-term development. First was that there would be an upgrading of port facilities, particularly three new cranes that are very badly needed. There should also be improved rail facilities in order to be competitive with the American rail facilities which largely accommodate container traffic.

Second, we asked that they establish a port users committee, or that they work with the Vancouver group to establish a committee to seriously assess the problems, the solutions, and the priorities to ensure the long-term viability and competitiveness of the Port of Vancouver. I asked this question when the labour dispute was at a peak when the Maritime Employers' Council had locked out the ILWU from the Port of Vancouver. Unfortunately, this ended with some very harsh legislation brought down by the federal Government, which we are still very concerned about because it threatened the collective bargaining rights in that jurisdiction.

Unfortunately, the Deputy Prime Minister was so absorbed with the labour dispute that he failed to provide an adequate answer to my question. This is very typical of both Liberal and Conservative Governments. They only seem to become interested in the Port of Vancouver, which is away out on the Pacific West Coast, when there is a crisis, and when that crisis usually involves labour troubles. In this case it was management that had imposed the lock-out. They ignore the long-term problems.

The dispute in the port at that time was a symptom of much greater problems facing the port. We must find a way of dealing with those. Unfortunately the labour dispute drew much attention from the media and the Government. It was based upon the so-called container clause which allows union members to unpack containers and load their contents on to trucks or railway cars, if the contents are consigned to more than one owner within a certain radius of the port. It is designed to protect jobs for a certain number of longshore workers.

However, it is important to note that it affects only 12.6 per cent of inbound containers through the port, a relatively small amount of port traffic. Yet the powers that be, and even the port administration, treated the issue as the primary problem facing the port.

Years of neglect under both Liberal and Conservative Governments have helped to erode the viability of the Port of Vancouver. It should be developed. It has the potential to be developed into a competitive world-class port. It is a wonderful location. We have the needed skilled workers, industries and so on, but we need a method of bringing together all these parts in a comprehensive way to do some long-term planning and improvements.

This is why I supported the port awareness campaign sponsored by the longshoremen's union, the ILWU. It is called "a world-class port for a world-class city". It offers positive solutions to the port's serious problems. It is important to congratulate such groups when they are working on the positive, long range side of things.

First and foremost, the Port of Vancouver needs genuine local autonomy. The Ports Corporation Act, in which I recall being very involved a few years ago, was passed by the Liberals. It was supposed to develop autonomy in ports, particularly in the Port of Vancouver. However, there are still far too many "made in Ottawa" decisions.

The Board of Directors of the Vancouver Port Corporation is comprised of political appointees. It was the Liberal Government which set up that structure, so it is not surprising that the present Government has carried through on it. Although these members undoubtedly work hard and are genuinely concerned about the affairs of the port, they are influenced by Ottawa and by the agenda of the Conservative Government. It is difficult for them to be concerned about all the various factions involved in the entire operation and the future of the port. It is not their fault; as I say, it is the structure.

The first step on the road to a more responsive and autonomous management of the port would be to establish a port users committee as was outlined. This committee should include shippers, key users of the port, railways, unions, surrounding communities, local levels of Government, the grain industry, and so on. It should help to study the Port of Vancouver and to develop a long-range plan as well as deal with immediate problems.

We have a serious problem competing with the Pacific northwest. If we do not have a better, improved railway system, we will not be able to take the container traffic eastward or back and forth across Canada. It will continue to go through the American routes.

I am sorry that my time is almost up, but again I urge the Deputy Prime Minister to take another look at the matter. He has a good background in the whole transportation field. We urge both him and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to support strongly the establishment of a port users committee, to ensure that funds are available for at least three more cranes, and to bring all parties together to see whether we can have an improved Port of Vancouver.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with respect to the establishment of a port users committee for the Port of Vancouver, I point out to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) that a regional advisory council was established for ports on the West Coast in April, 1983. As I am sure the Hon. Member knows, the council advises and makes recommendations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) on matters related to ports in the region. These involve regional interests and concerns relative to port development, land-use planning, transportation, economic and environmental issues.

The membership of the Western Regional Advisory Council, I am told, includes the chairmen of harbour commissions in the region, the chairmen of the local port corporations in the region, including Vancouver and Prince Rupert, a representative of the Department of Transport, two representatives of the Province of British Columbia, a representative from each of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and various industry representatives.

Over and above the requirements of the legislation, the Vancouver Port Corporation itself has established continuous communication with the Western Transportation Advisory Council, which include governments, producers and shippers, ports, labour, carriers and trade associations; the Vancouver Board of Trade, the Longshoremen's Union, the Maritime Employers' Association, each of the adjacent municipalities, the Chamber of Shipping, the Council of Forest Industries, the Wharf Operators' Association, the Canadian International Freight Forwarders Association and the Economic Development Ministers of the four western provinces.

In addition, the Vancouver Port Corporation Board has always included a senior representative from labour. Currently, Mr. Jack Munro of the International Woodworkers' of America serves on the board as successor to Mr. Don Garcia who is currently President of the Canadian area of the ILWU representing the longshoremen on the West Coast.

Second, with respect to facilities at the Port of Vancouver, I am pleased to advise this House and the Member that the Port of Vancouver has invested in excess of $75 million since 1983, including approximately $33 million directly and indirectly related to container handling and distribution.

Present operational container crane and shore-side equipment has the capacity to handle an estimated 325,000, 20-foot equivalent units per year. This will be substantially increased when terminally handling equipment now on order by the terminal contractors becomes operational in mid-1987. The through-put in 1986 was 222,781 20-foot equivalent units, thus indicating that Vancouver already has additional capacity in excess of 100,000 20-foot equivalent units annually.

Finally, the Vancouver Port Corporation has estimated its capital requirements over the next five years to be $75 million, which will be funded from port operations. This includes provision for additional container handling equipment as demand develops.

REFUGEES—DEPORTATION OF IRANIAN FROM UNITED STATES. (B) REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF MINISTERIAL PERMIT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise this evening to review a question that I asked the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) in the House last December, 1986. The question involves the case of one Mr. Moatanedi, a 25 year-old Iranian student who is presently in the United States pending deportation to Iran.

The question of the matter revolves around the issue that the Canadian Government does not wish to extend a hand of humanity to this one individual who faces certain persecution and probably death as soon as he touches the tarmac in Iran.

There is a community in eastern Canada in the Province of Nova Scotia that is willing to sponsor this individual. There are individuals across Canada who have written and phoned the Minister over the course of the last two months. We have a policy where we recruit some 12,000 refugees from around the world. We have 6,000 additional refugees who are supported and sponsored by communities in Canada. We have ministerial permits that are granted to individuals who merit special consideration because of their special circumstances, and yet we have this one individual who is looking to Canada for assistance and looking to Canada to stay his eventual departure from the United States, a deportation that was already attempted once. En route to Iran the plane stopped in Paris and Mr. Moatanedi tried to commit suicide as opposed to facing death in Iran. The French returned him to the United States, the Americans did not even blink and are prepared to put him on a plane for the second time in under a year.

My questions to the Minister were simply why the Government was not allowing Canadians and the community of Yarmouth to sponsor this individual and give the green light. If the Government did not wish to allow a community or a group of individuals to sponsor this man why could the Minister not find something within his department to extend a special ministerial permit, given the very special circumstances of this 25 year-old.

My office was in touch with this individual's lawyer in Washington today and she confirmed for the record once again that this individual is still in hospital in Washington waiting for Canada to extend its arms to him if the United States maintains its original position.

At the time I asked the Minister the question, he gave me a number of reasons why he could not do it, why the individual was not a bona fide refugee and why his papers were not in order. The answers to those questions were certainly inadequate. I look forward to hearing the Parliamentary Secretary provide Canadians, and particularly the sponsors in eastern Canada, with an update as to where the Government stands vis-à-vis Mr. Moatanedi's case and what he can look forward to if anything at all from Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am happy to add to the reply given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on December 1.

As the Hon. Member is aware, Mr. Moatamedi was admitted to the United States in 1978 at the age of 17 as a foreign student. In 1981, he married an American citizen and held a job in that country until his student visa expired in the summer of 1984. On his return from Mexico in the fall of 1984, he was apprehended by the United States Immigration Services and he asked for asylum in that country at the hearing to review his deportation order. He was later refused asylum in the United States and a deportation order against him was maintained in April 1986 to force him to return to Iran.

His desperate act during a stopover in Paris postponed his return to Iran since the French authorities decided to send him back to the United States where he has since been detained in a psychiatric centre.

As the Hon. Member already knows, the case of this man has been reviewed in depth by Canadian visa officers in Washington to determine whether he could be admitted to Canada as a refugee under the terms of the convention. For the information of the House, both Canada and the United States are signatory countries of the 1951 Geneva Convention on refugee status and the related 1967 Protocol. The visa officers evaluated the request of Mr. Moatamedi, but based on the individual merits of this case, it was established that his claim for refugee status was unfounded.

As you already know, the Minister of State for Immigration subsequently refused Mr. Moatamedi a ministerial permit which would have admitted him to Canada since there were not sufficient humanitarian reasons to justify such a claim as this case was under the jurisdiction of the American authorities. The United States Immigration Services have continued to pressure for the deportation of Mr. Moatamedi and had been expecting to expel him from the United States as early as January 7, 1987. However, in the meantime, there have been two major developments which could allow the American authorities to reverse their stand in favour of Mr. Moatamedi. First, the representative in Canada of the United States High Commission for Refugees advised Mr. Weiner on December 31, 1986, that his organization had decided to grant Mr. Moatamedi refugee status under the terms of the Convention because of all the publicity his case had received in Canada. The representative of this organization in the United States confirmed his agreement with this decision and so informed the lawyer of the claimant who then requested that United States Immigration Appeal Commission defer execution of the deportation order of her client.

Mr. Moatamedi's lawyer is expected to submit to this Board an application for review in order for this applicant's case to be presented again to the U.S. Immigration and, for this purpose, she will advise the board members of the decision rendered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees that Mr. Moatamedi is now deemed by the representatives of this organization in the United States to be a refugee under the convention.

We are waiting for a final decision from the United States Immigration Appeal Board and we hope that the decision rendered by the High Commissioner will bring about a favourable solution to this matter which continues to come under the American authorities.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 9:26 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DRAFT LEGISLATION—MINISTER'S ACCUSATION AGAINST ENVIRONMENTAL LAWYER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has made an unprecedented attack on a Toronto environmental lawyer who criticized his environmental protection draft Bill. In a letter sent to some environment groups, and some members of the news media, the Minister accused Toby Vigod of the Canadian Environmental Law Association of being "factually wrong" when she criticized his draft law.

In an interview, Ms. Vigod and other environmentalists said that they could not recall a federal Environment Minister launching such a public attack on an environmental figure for criticisms of the Minister's work. "He seems very defensive of a Bill which is only a draft Bill," Ms. Vigod said. "We are willing to sit down with him and suggest changes." A spokesman for the Minister said the Minister had offered to meet with Ms. Vigod and that he wanted "to smooth things out".

This temper tantrum by the Minister is pathetic, considering his Government's promises of openness, consensus-building, and consultation.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIALITY CROPS—REQUEST THAT GROWERS BE INCLUDED IN AID PACKAGE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, farmers who grew speciality crops like mustard, peas, lentils, tomatoes, et cetera, received no assistance from the billion dollar aid package this year. Hon. Members should be aware that 900,000 acres were seeded to these crops in Saskatchewan alone last year.

The Government has indicated that speciality crop prices do not follow wheat, corn, and soya bean pricing and therefore were unaffected by the U.S. Farm Bill. However, how does it explain the price declines of more than 30 per cent in virtually all these so-called contract crops? Yellow mustard has fallen from $15 per hundredweight to $9.50 per hundredweight; canary seed from $12 per hundredweight to $8 per hundredweight; and lentils from $22 to $16, all since the decline in grain prices precipitated by the U.S. Farm Bill.

I call upon the Government to include specialty crops in any remaining aid yet to come, the $700 million, to be fair in its allocations from now on, and to include all crops affected by the U.S. Farm Bill.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the New Democrats and the Liberals have set their sights on a single target these past few days. Why are they so intent on conducting a negative opposition campaign against on the RCMP investigation into the Oerlikon affair?

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, they are not putting up a smoke screen so that Canadians might be blind to the fact that the deficit has been declining steadily since the Conservative Party took office. Our Government has taken the necessary steps and the deficit has already been reduced by $10 billion.

[English]

The Opposition does not want Canadians to know that the Bank of Canada rate has fallen to its lowest level in 10 years or that five-year mortgage rates are down 3.5 percentage points to 10.75 per cent, a savings of $116 per month or almost $7,000 over five years on a $50,000 loan.

Employment is up, unemployment is down. The number of Canadians living below the Statistics Canada poverty line declined by over a quarter of a million people, the first such decline since 1981.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government's avowed objective is to manage the country on a sound economic basis, a fact to which a number of financial institutions have been attesting all along. We have been doing very well until now, so the Opposition Parties may indeed scream and talk rubbish about any issue which strikes their fancy.

S.O. 21

Mr. Speaker, you may rest assured that Canadians are fully aware of the significant issues on which they will cast their ballots at the next election, and we will be re-elected.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired.

DAY CARE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, last week opposition Members were calling for the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for a statement which he was supposed to have made in an interview. It is the height of irresponsibility for those opposition Members to mislead the public on this matter.

The Minister, in replying to a question on whether he felt day care was the best stimulation for children, actually said: "nothing is exclusive" and "for some children, day care is the best stimulation, but one should not dismiss that for some other children the best stimulation is the parental home".

Both opposition Parties, with the support of unions, day care advocates, and feminists, are claiming that a universal day care system is needed. Yet, all across the country in our hearings many other people have come forward and said that universal day care was not the answer but that there was a need for day care and that the Government should help those who need help.

Let us not fall into the trap set by the socialists on the other side of the House who see universal day care as the cure-all for all problems. I, for one, am hopeful that the parliamentary committee, which will report at the end of March, can give the Government the necessary direction on how to treat this very crucial issue.

HOLLAND COLLEGE MARINE CENTRE

IMPORTANCE OF NAVIGATION COURSES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the future of the Holland College Marine Centre in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, is in jeopardy because of the Government's plan to remove deck officers from the list of CEIC designated occupations for 1987-88.

This Marine Centre was built with CEIC funding some 17 years ago. Over the years it has acquired an excellent reputation with its highly qualified instructors and its up to date equipment. In 1985, 90 per cent of the students who took navigation courses obtained employment.

If accepted, the proposal would force the Marine Centre to close. This is completely unacceptable to the citizens of Prince Edward Island.

I call upon, in fact I demand the Minister to reject this misguided plan and reinstate navigation courses on the list of designated occupations for training at the institution.

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES—EFFECT ON SENIORS' SAVINGS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, interest rates are falling again. The prime lending rate of chartered banks is now down to 9.25 per cent as compared with a high of 22 per cent under the former Liberal Government. That is good news because it means more people can afford to buy homes, more people can afford to buy cars, more businesses can afford to invest, and more jobs will be created.

However, for some Canadians, especially senior citizens living on their savings, falling interest rates are a worry. For them it means lower incomes at a time when taxes are increasing and the cost of living, albeit more modestly than before, is still increasing.

Seniors are worried as well by rumours that their incomes will be reduced even further by the elimination of the $1,000 investment income tax deduction. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will bear their concerns in mind as he prepares his 1987 Budget.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF CANADAIR TO BOMBARDIER—FORMER SENIOR OFFICIAL'S EMPLOYMENT BY BOMBARDIER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, our Party believes that Canadian taxpayers received far too little for the sell-out of Canadair to Bombardier. Now suspicion over the sale must be increased by one of the senior officials dealing with the sale, the Associate Deputy Minister of DRIE, moving to a senior position with Bombardier. I call on the Minister responsible for DRIE to give the House a full report as urgently as possible of all dealings this official had with the Canadair sale through all its stages. I also call on the Government to stop such direct moves of senior officials to private firms that have benefited from the Government, as in the Oerlikon case and now with Bombardier.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): As a result of our sound administration, Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada prime rate is now down to 7.75 per cent.

Interest rates soared as high as 22.75 per cent under the Liberal administration. Through endless borrowings the Liberals created such a strong monetary demand that they pushed interest rates to unprecedented levels.

It is not as if the funds they siphoned off to the detriment of Canadian developers, businessmen and others anxious to build houses had been directed towards economic expansion. No, Sir, they used the money to bribe the electors and create such as hoc employment programs as "Canada Works".

The socialists are just as guilty. In their quest for power—like the Liberals—they did not hesitate to shift our national debt of more than $250 billion onto the shoulders of our children and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, we are putting Canada's economy back on an even keel. Interest rates are acceptable, mortgage payments are manageable, and developers are launching new businesses which create jobs: 600,000 of them.

Mr. Speaker, we have every intention of steering this course despite the efforts of the Opposition to belittle such concrete results.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN HELSINKI

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government's recent decision to close the Canadian embassy in Helsinki, Finland, is a terrible blow to Finnish Canadians and a backward step for our country. It is especially unacceptable when it is being done to save money at a time when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spends millions of dollars for foreign junkets with huge entourages of his friends and cronies.

Sault Ste Marie has a large population of over 4,000 Finnish Canadians who have made a tremendous contribution to the city and to Canada. The Finnish Rest Home Association, for example, has built two excellent senior citizen housing facilities for 170 people. These Canadians are concerned about how consular services will be maintained for them with their families in Finland. Cultural ties between our two countries will be damaged by this move. Tourism will be hindered by this ill-conceived plan of the Government. Who will look after families who visit Finland in the future?

I call on the Government to rescind this order to close our Canadian embassy in Helsinki, Finland, which order is an insult to every Finnish Canadian.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

AWARD OF CF-5 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT TO BRISTOL AEROSPACE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, Wednesday was a great day for Manitoba. It was announced in Winnipeg that Bristol Aerospace was awarded a $300 million contract to service a CF-5 fighter aircraft.

Speaking about the CF-5 contract, the company president of Bristol said:

> It creates more business, it creates more jobs in the long haul.

More jobs and more business are important to every area of Canada. As the president of Bristol has stated, Manitoba will receive more jobs and more business as a result of the CF-5 contract. The president is confident that Bristol can win additional foreign contracts on CF-5 aircraft with the capabilities developed by his company under this contract. It is looking more and more that this contract could have a far greater benefit to Manitoba than the CF-18 contract which went to Canadair. Why all the fuss?

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF LUMBER MILL AT HAZELTON, B.C.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the workers and residents of the Hazelton area share my outrage about the enormous job loss proposed by Westar in closing the existing mill and opening a new mill at Carnaby this fall. According to federal government figures, the project will reduce direct mill jobs from 197 to 85. While the new mill will produce 200 million board feet to be sold to customers in Japan and the United Kingdom, thus avoiding the murderous 15 per cent Tory export tax, the hard-pressed Hazelton area will lose 112 vitally important mill jobs.

• (1115)

Since the federal Government is heavily involved in this project through a $4.5 million interest-free loan, I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all cabinet Ministers to take the necessary steps along with Westar to put together a plan to keep those 112 mill workers working after the closure of the old mill and opening of the new Carnaby mill.

These families, 75 per cent of whom are native, have built their economic lives around the forest industry and have paid mightily to the federal treasury and the profits of Westar. Let there be no misunderstanding. Westar and the Government had best take prompt action now because Hazelton and this Member will not take these kinds of job losses lying down.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

ESTABLISHMENT IN OTTAWA-HULL AREA ADVOCATED

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, I applaud the Government's announcement in the Speech from the Throne of the creation of a Canadian space agency. The space agency will essentially be a consolidation of personnel and facilities now existing in several government Departments and agencies all of which are located in the National Capital region. Accordingly, I urge the Government to establish the space agency in the Ottawa-Hull area.

It would be costly and counterproductive to move the approximately 200 people now working here in this field to another part of the country. Hon. Members should also be aware that the Canadian space industry is located in virtually all regions of the country. A neutral management centre here in the nation's capital, free of regional favouritism, is essential to the future development and growth of a cost-effective space industry. Much of Canada's space program activity also involves participation with other countries. In my view the nation's capital is clearly the natural and most cost-effective area in which to locate the head office of the new Canadian space agency.

INDUSTRY

EFFICIENCY OF CANADIAN SAWMILLING INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF EXPORT TAX

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are being punished by the Government. Canadians are paying a 15 per cent tax on Canadian wood products because Washington wants it, and what Washington wants from this Government, it gets.

Canadians are being punished because of the inefficiency of the American sawmilling and processing industry. In terms of productivity, a Canadian worker in a sawmill in Canada averages 500,000 foot-board measure of lumber per year, but because of the inefficiency of the United States sawmilling industry an American sawmill worker averages only 300,000 foot-board measure per year.

Canadians are being punished because they are being more productive. They are being charged a 15 per cent tax not only on stumpage but on labour costs, sawmilling costs and processing costs, because of the inefficiency of the American industry. This Government should be ashamed of itself for the way it is treating one of the main, staple resources of Canada.

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)—INFORMATION ALLEGEDLY EMANATING FROM PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It appears from all media accounts that the Prime Minister's Office is selectively leaking information about the resignation of the former Minister of State for Transport and, indeed, about his wife. Why is this being done? What is its purpose? Does the Prime Minister not feel that that is manipulating justice and interfering with the judicial process and the police inquiry?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I will not comment on any specific news report containing allegations, alleged information, or even straight-forward information. I would only say to my right hon. friend that the police who are conducting this full inquiry will, no doubt, if they feel that any action, alleged or otherwise, by anyone anywhere is inhibiting their investigation, pursue their investigation in that area.

PUBLIC INQUIRY—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TABLE LEGAL OPINION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister insisted that he wanted nothing to interfere with the police investigation. Yet it appears that members of his staff are, for political purposes, interfering with that process by selectively leaking information to the media. Because the Prime Minister read from some document yesterday and referred to a legal opinion from the law officers of the Crown, would he be willing to table that opinion from the law offices to the effect that a public inquiry would interfere with the police investigation? Would he also table the Order in Council, or whatever document was obtained, authorizing the RCMP to delve into this whole matter?

• (1120)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the notes yesterday, when Mr. Tellier visited with me to convey the opinion of law officers of the Crown I made notes of the advice he was conveying to me so I could impart it faithfully to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and other Members of the House. Those were my notes of the advice given us. The information was conveyed to me by the Clerk of the Privy Council and his chief legal adviser verbally and that was the information I conveyed to the House. I hope that answers the question of my right hon. friend. If there is anything else, I would be happy to answer.

OERLIKON LAND TRANSACTION—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that after the Prime Minister's statement in the House yesterday the law officers of the Crown and the Privy Council Office are scrambling to get their written documentation in order, but we in this House would very much like to see a copy of that legal opinion to justify the Prime Minister's position yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, doesn't the Prime Minister understand that selectively leaking information in the form of rumours may prejudice and harm the chances of anyone involved in legal proceedings? In the interests of the people of Canada and of all those concerned in the Oerlikon affair, wouldn't the best way to clear up this matter be to have a comprehensive public inquiry?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all the experts we saw this morning seem to be in complete disagreement with what the Leader of the Opposition just said.

[English]

It seems in refusing to conduct a public inquiry while the police are investigating the affair the federal Government is probably taking the wisest and fairest legal course, according to academics familiar with public inquiries. "It seems to me to be a sensible decision that takes into account the rights of an accused person," said University of Toronto law professor Martin Friedland. That appears to be a widely held view in legal circles which is not inconsistent with the view expressed by the law officers of the Crown.

I regret the derogatory insinuations in regard to the public servants made by my right hon. friend. They conveyed straightforward legal advice which I conveyed to Members of the House. I know we saw the position of the Liberal Party set out yesterday by the Hon. Member for Sudbury. You do not want the facts, you want a circus. We are here to tell you that the RCMP will conduct a full inquiry and justice will be done.

OERLIKON AFFAIR—ROLE OF MR. JEAN BAZIN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the "land flip" at Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why, in his statement on January 18, his friend Jean Bazin failed to indicate that he had been doing work for Oerlikon since last February and had been on the management board since April, and only said that he had been involved with Gestion Farillon since last August?

Why did Mr. Bazin make his statement the way he did?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know in this particular instance, all information requested from Mr. Bazin was made public.

EXTENT OF INFORMATION POSSESSED BY CABINET MINISTERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Considering that the law firm of Byers, Casgrain started investigating the "land flip" at Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu last February, almost a year ago, and in view of the articles on the subject that have been appearing in the papers since last spring, does the Prime Minister still maintain that not a single Minister or Minister's office, including his own, had heard about the "land flip" at Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu until January 13? Does he still maintain that today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday and on several occasions I said that the RCMP had received a full mandate to investigate all the facts, and the Commissioner of the RCMP has said that the force will do so vigorously. And if, in the course of a police investigation of criminal charges, the RCMP finds claims that may be of interest to the Solicitor General, these are immediately reported to the Solicitor General.

I can therefore inform my hon. friend that all complaints and concerns and all the issues raised will probably be investigated by the RCMP.

APPARENT INFORMATION LEAKS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. For five days the Prime Minister has refused to answer questions about the possibility of a conflict of interest on the part of one of his former Ministers, the Minister's wife and a number of Conservative friends, while during that same period, people in the Prime Minister's Office have been leaking incriminating information. Why the double standard?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that for five days I have been refusing to answer any questions whatsoever about the Minister. That is false. I have given direct answers to all questions put to me.

As for the Hon. Member's specific question, I have said that as the Prime Minister I could not segregate information. I immediately made a value judgment on the information that was brought to my attention. I decided that the facts justified the Minister's dismissal and an immediate policy inquiry. I acted quickly and, I believe, firmly in this matter and I have answered my hon. friend's questions.

• (1125)

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows very well that he has refused to answer directly questions about a conflict of interest. They are the questions he has refused to answer.

The Prime Minister has indicated for the first time that perhaps he is willing to answer such questions. I would, therefore, like to read to him what he said when he announced his conflict of interest guidelines. He said:

We have taken great pains to ensure that the new Code leaves no doubt that the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal government rests with the Cabinet and, more particularly, with me.

I have a very direct question for the Prime Minister. When he had the conversations which he did have on Sunday morning about the former Minister he knew of the conflict of interest guidelines. Will he now accept his responsibility and tell the House whether he concluded at that time that the Minister was in a conflict of interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the information which was imparted to me was of sufficient importance for me to exercise immediately my right and duty in the circumstances to relieve the Minister of his responsibility, and to call in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and ask them to conduct a complete inquiry, irrespective of where it led. To me that is a Prime Minister fulfilling his responsibilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that that is not the case. He knows that the RCMP deal with legal matters. Does he think it is proper for him, as the Prime Minister, to systematically refuse to accept his responsibility for conflict of interest while, at the same time, having officials in his office systematically leak to the media slanderous information about citizens of Canada on a selective basis? Why this double hypocritical standard by the Prime Minister?

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt a lead question, but I would ask even Leaders to be very careful in the use of language in this very difficult situation. The very fact that the Leader of the New Democratic Party prefaced his question with concern about slanderous actions alleged by some people indicates that even the question is concerned about this. I would ask Hon. Members to be very careful.

I must say that during this week, in a very difficult and sensitive area of great importance to the country, Hon. Members have been extremely careful. As I said yesterday, the Chair is very grateful for that, but I would ask that Hon. Members be careful. The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on the obvious unfairness of the statement made by my hon. friend. He has asked me literally dozens of questions this week and I have responded completely to all of them in this regard. As the Speaker points out, it is an extremely sensitive and delicate matter where the rights of individuals are involved. However, the premise of his last question was based on the assumption that he stated that the RCMP only deals with legal or criminal matters. The implication is that because the RCMP only deals with those matters some other kind of inquiry is required. The statement, the premise is false.

The Commissioner of the RCMP says that:

—should we come across activity that might be considered unpropitious to good government, even though short of provable criminal conduct, on the part of senior officials, elected or otherwise, it is our responsibility to make our concerns known to—the Solicitor General.

The RCMP do not go in wearing blinkers; they go in to look after the possible prosecution of offences. If they find other violations en route they act upon those as well. That is why we have acted with the RCMP to ensure that justice is done.

REQUEST THAT RCMP QUESTION ALL MINISTERS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As part of the RCMP investigation will the Prime Minister instruct the Commissioner of the RCMP to ask every Minister of the Crown and their staff when they first learned of any irregularities concerning the Oerlikon affair and what the Ministers of the Crown and their staff knew about those irregularities concerning the Oerlikon affair?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when a matter is turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Commissioner and his colleagues, who command the respect of the country, investigate and set the parameters of their own inquiry. They react to events and they investigate fully. When they are satisfied that they have exhaustively analysed a matter in the interests of Canadian justice, I suppose they either report to a Crown prosecutor and lay charges or report back to the Solicitor General. It is not for me or any member of the Government to interfere in any way with the conduct of that inquiry. I allow, quite properly, the Commissioner of the RCMP to exercise his judgment, as he should. He does not need any advice from any Member of the House of Commons as to how to conduct a police inquiry.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ADVISE MINISTERS TO BE AVAILABLE FOR QUESTIONING

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister then advise every Minister of the Crown in his Government, and their staff, to be available to the RCMP to answer questions as to when they first learned of the irregularities concerning the Oerlikon affair and what they knew of those irregularities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that goes without saying. That is exactly consistent with the clarity and celerity with which I and the Government approached this matter. I submit that is the position of the Government.

It is interesting to note that yesterday the Member for Sudbury stated the position of the Liberal opposition. He said, as reported at page 2569 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, our opinion is that the judicial inquiry should precede the criminal investigation.

Our position is that if there is any possibility of a crime having been committed, we must proceed immediately with an inquiry by the police in Canada.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am holding a copy of the statement on conflict of interest made by the Prime Minister in October, 1985. Since these are the Prime Minister's guidelines on conflict of interest, does he believe, regardless of any RCMP investigation or other inquiry, that it is within his responsibility to tell us whether the former Minister was in conflict of interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my responsibility when apprised of the facts that possibly affect the public interest to decide immediately the best manner in which it ought to be dealt with. It was my judgment, when presented with certain information, that the public interest of Canada could best be served by my immediately turning that information over to the RCMP and asking for a full investigation.

PUBLIC'S RIGHT TO KNOW

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question will be slightly different. Does the Prime Minister not agree that since these are the Prime Minister's guidelines and the Government of Canada's guidelines, the public has the right to know whether the Prime Minister feels that one of his Ministers has broken his guidelines? Does the public not have the right to know that from the leader of the country and their Prime Minister, apart from an RCMP investigation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing at all in what I have done or what we have stated in the House that would inhibit the police or anyone else from making a determination in regard to whether guidelines have been infringed. The more important question right now is whether there have been any violations of law. That is where we differ from others in the House. I believe it is my responsibility and that of other Members of the House to act consistent with the laws of Canada in this matter.

INFORMATION ALLEGEDLY EMANATING FROM PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Both the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have been unable to receive direct answers from the Prime Minister with respect to leaks that have been coming from his office. Members of the Opposition are concerned that the Prime Minister's Office may be attempting by way of selective leaks from his office to prevent the possibility of potential criminal charges ever going to court because of an inability to conduct a fair trial. Is the Prime Minister concerned about the selective leaks that are coming from his office?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has just contradicted completely the arguments made all week by his Leader in favour of the other side, and the position stated exactly by the Member for Sudbury who said you people want a commission with everything floating around rather than prosecutions. I am telling my hon. friend that there is a profound inconsistency between what the Liberals have been saying all week and what the Member is saying today.

Ms. Copps: No way. Nobody is buying it, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, empowered with this inquiry, shall make their own determination and, as the days go by and events unfold, they shall take whatever action they deem appropriate.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INVESTIGATE SOURCE OF LEAKED INFORMATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want is to assure the Prime Minister that the Opposition does not want the Prime Minister's or his staff's directly edited version of the story. We do not want selective leaks that we believe may be designed to prevent this matter from ever being brought to court. Is the Prime Minister not concerned about these selective leaks and will he take action now to investigate the source of those leaks in his own office?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any act that the police judge to be untoward, unacceptable, or unhelpful, will be investigated fully and completely. It is their responsibility.

Mr. Berger: That is not the job of the police.

An Hon. Member: Who is running the country?

Mr. Mulroney: Any action or any statement by anyone, that is inconsistent with the pursuit by the police of a full investigation, should be dealt with by the police. I know that the police will act promptly, no matter from where the accusation comes, to make sure that there has been no inhibition of their inquiry.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT ACT MORE QUICKLY IN CASE OF MINISTER'S ASSISTANT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister about the firing in January of Mr. Frank Majeau, Assistant to the Minister of State (Mr. La Salle).

We have just heard that the RCMP informer in Montreal, Mr. Jean-Pierre Galipeau, informed the authorities of Mr. Majeau's criminal connections last May and that he passed the information on to the Solicitor General last October.

Could the Prime Minister explain why the Government did nothing about Mr. Majeau in May or October and why it did not take any action until Maclean's started to investigate?

[English]

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, under House rules it is impossible to comment on an individual case, and it is in accordance with established practice. It should be understood that, for investigative reasons, the existence of a confidential source could neither be confirmed nor denied. I would also like to refer the Hon. Member back to the statement made, or point of order, by the Solicitor General on January 20 indicating the timing of all events taking place in that particular case.

WITHDRAWAL OF POLICE PROTECTION FROM INFORMANT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister, in view of his statement just made that the police will act promptly if any allegations are made. Can he explain why it took almost a year before action was taken in Mr. Majeu's case, and only when it came to the attention of the press? Is the Prime Minister aware of Mr. Galipeau's statement that he has had his police protection as an informant withdrawn because his statements to the press embarrassed the Government? What kind of message is that to people who may have information about the Oerlikon affair that if they bring that information to the police they may too find their rights infringed upon because they embarrassed the Government?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the press. It is very clear when the Solicitor General received that first information. The Hon. Member also mentioned that an individual had his protection withdrawn. It has to be understood that if the RCMP has a confidential source, and if there is a legitimate threat, protection has to be given—if there is a legitimate threat made against any individual.

MEDICAL CARE

TREATMENT OF VICTIMS OF BRAIN DAMAGE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. There are 400 centres in the United States which specialize in the rehabilitation of victims of brain damage. There are none in Canada.

People are aware of the progress of policeman Robin Easey who suffered brain damage in a shooting here in Ottawa, but that help came from the neurological centre in Cortland, New York. Some provincial government health insurance plans, including Ontario's, do not recognize these treatment facilities as bona fide hospitals. For that reason, Sergeant Dan Duggan of the Ottawa Police Department must pay his own way for his brain damage condition. Will the Minister encourage provincial health insurance plans to cover the cost of treatment of brain damaged victims? Will he take the lead in seeing to the establishment of at least one such centre in Canada, rather than relying on the 400 centres in the United States?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing that matter to the attention of the House. I will investigate. I think all of us have been following the case of Constable Duggan with interest. I cannot confirm to the Hon. Member some of the points he makes as to the manner in which the provinces which have responsibility for the delivery of health care, have dealt with this issue, but I would be very pleased to discuss this with the provinces and find out what the exact action is.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that in issues of health care where the service is not available but is covered under the insurance services, the provinces do pay not only out of province rates but also pay for the service out of country. That would have to be investigated as well.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

WITHDRAWAL OF PROTECTION FOR INFORMANT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns Jean Pierre Galipeau of Montreal who is the individual who made public the fact that there was a security breach involving Mr. Frank Majeau. According to Mr. Galipeau, he is or was an RCMP informer and he now fears for his life.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that in fact he was an RCMP informer and that his protection code was withdrawn on January 5, 1987? And can he explain why the RCMP found it necessary to withdraw his protection code and thereby put his life in danger?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, it is impossible to identify any source regardless of whether they be an informant or not. As far as the withdrawing of protection is concerned, if there is a legitimate threat against any individual—a legitimate threat—protection should and would be there.

REQUEST THAT POLICE PROTECTION BE OFFERED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Galipeau is going public because he fears for his life. He is admitting to being an informer and the Government refuses to offer him that protection. Will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that the real reason why Mr. Galipeau's protection code was withdrawn was because he embarrassed the Government? And will he immediately instruct the RCMP to offer Mr. Galipeau police protection?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not think direction has to be given to the RCMP, or to anyone, because if there was an informant, no matter who it would be who was being threatened, I do not believe that would be the case.

Mr. de Corneille: What would be the case?

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF LABOUR'S CHIEF OF STAFF

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Labour is one of many Ministers who is now living in interesting times. Could he explain to the House, and more importantly to the public, considering his former Chief of Staff had access to all sorts of confidential information, what discrepancy forced the Minister of Labour to fire his Chief of Staff?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated already, on January 19, 1987, I was informed of a discrepancy between the information submitted to the RCMP by Mr. Hennessey and the information obtained by the RCMP through a preliminary security check. After advising him it would take some time for the RCMP to complete its full investigation, Mr. Hennessey resigned.

REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. When does the public have the right to know when something is going wrong in a cabinet Minister's office? Can the Prime Minister tell us, and the public, when we are going to find out information such as in the case of the Chief of Staff of the Minister of Labour? Why is the public not being told the truth?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this matter completely yesterday. I indicated to my hon. friend, and all Hon. Members of the House, exactly what the Government planned to do about it. I share the Hon. Member's concern which is why we have acted as quickly as we have.

Mr. Murphy: What is the discrepancy?

An Hon. Member: Read Hansard.

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)—REPORTED INFORMATION LEAKS FROM PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. All week the Prime Minister has been telling the House that justice must be done in this most sensitive matter and nothing should be done to prejudice the rights of any individuals unduly. Is the Prime Minister now telling the House today that he will not undertake to investigate those selective leaks from his office which could have the potential to affect unduly those individuals whom he says he wishes to have protection?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking me, as he says, will I not undertake to investigate such and such, the answer is no. I will not undertake to investigate—

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Mulroney: —because the police are going to investigate it fully—

Mr. Broadbent: How about leaks in your office?

An Hon. Member: Did you initiate the leaks?

Mr. Mulroney: —if this is their determination. Any allegations of any kind, if they are deemed to be serious, will be dealt with by the police in their assessment of the requirements for them to secure justice.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Prime Minister is abandoning his responsibilties.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Dingwall: As the First Minister of this country he ought to undertake—

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Dingwall: —an immediate investigation and then to convey those investigations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is forcefully putting his point but it was getting very argumentative. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Why does he refuse to exercise his responsibilities, investigate these selective leaks which are prejudicing individuals unduly, and then give that information to the RCMP? Or is there a cover-up, a sleezy operation, by the Prime Minister?

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would prefer, as the Chair has indicated, that some care is used with words. The word "sleazy" was originally used to describe garments or clothing of a low quality. Perhaps it is not completely unparliamentary, but I would ask that all Hon. Members be very careful in the use of words describing less than high quality clothes in a context which might be taken as offensive.

Mr. Mulroney: All Members understand the need for the little theatrics of the Hon. Member to make the clip tonight on the news.

The Liberal Party is already in up to here with regard to their statement of principle by the defence critic that they are not interested in the police prosecuting this matter, they are interested in a circus from which they can profit politically. This is not a partisan issue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa is rising.

ATTRIBUTION OF LEAKS TO PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred to the need for justice for everyone. Earlier this week the Prime Minister described the former Minister as a good Canadian, and subsequent to that he quite correctly said that there should not be prejudging of the individual. In the last 48 hours there have been leaks, directly attributed to his office, on the radio, television, and in the newspapers, that can only be described as slanderous in their content about the Minister, his wife, and former associates. Will the Prime Minister now commit himself to undertaking an investigation of this terrible, damaging information in pursuit of the very justice for which he is calling?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My hon. friend has said there have been leaks in the last 48 hours that are slanderous, damaging, and unfair. Think of the statements made by members of the Opposition in their prefatory remarks that have been slanderous, damaging, and unfair to a number of people in regard to the serenity and the fairness of this particular inquiry.

Mr. Broadbent: Which ones?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Prime Minister will answer the question and, as I have asked other Hon. Members, try to refrain from getting into a debate. I must point out that some questions are more provocative than others, and it is only natural that the response will end up in much the same vein.

Mr. Mulroney: I wish to say to my hon. friend that if he is seeking the truth via a fair and impartial way when confronted with serious allegations, I hope he will agree that the most important and proper way to do this is through an unfettered police inquiry, which in no way prohibits or inhibits the possibility of any further action at an appropriate time. Nothing should be done that would in any way inhibit the fairness of that. I agree with my hon. friend in that regard. That is why any suggestion to the contrary should and no doubt will be investigated immediately by the police. It is important that they maintain that authority over the inquiry.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SPEAK TO STAFF MEMBERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Prime Minister has said publicly that he wants a fair and impartial assessment to take place of the Minister, and all those associated with him, and not have a slanderous approach. Will the Prime Minister undertake to speak with the people in his office and find out who is leaking these stories that can only have a slanderous and negative effect on the personalities in question? In other words, would the Prime Minister make sure that there is no self-serving activity by the people in his office, and instead assure justice for those who are subject to very serious accusations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Given the police inquiry, what my hon. friend is suggesting has some serious implications. It will not astound anybody in the press gallery to learn that from time to time they have had leaks from the NDP and the Liberal research offices.

Mr. Gauthier: On a criminal matter? Come on!

Mr. Mulroney: Precisely. There the point is made. In this matter there is an allegation of sufficient importance for us to have called in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The police are presently investigating this matter. If the police believe, in reading the newspapers in the morning or watching television at night, or given any allegation made by a member of the press inadvertently or otherwise, that the matter ought to be pursued, or an individual ought to be pursued, then no matter where that individual is, either on my staff or the staff of the Leader of the NDP, the police will exercise their usual vigilance and good judgment and pursue it to the end.

INVESTMENT CANADA

WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY—APPROVAL OF SALE TO FOREIGN OWNER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister on an equally serious but different subject.

On December 24 Investment Canada made a decision to approve the sale of West Kootenay Power & Light Co. Limited to an American utility; for the first time in the history of this country we are approving the sale of a public utility to a foreign owner, without reference to any of the transcripts or material that was gathered by the B.C. Utilities Commission. Considering the dangerous precedent that this sets in terms of the control of our natural resources, and the impact it has on our international treaties, and the erosion of our sovereignty, will the Prime Minister take action to overturn this Investment Canada decision?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Investment Canada has reviewed this matter and is satisfied as to its propriety. The Public Utilities Board of the Province of British Columbia is now examining it very closely with a view to ensuring protection of the customers. That review should be concluded shortly.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE SET ASIDE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): The Investment Canada decision was taken without any reference to the evidence that had been gathered by the B.C. Utilities Commission. It did not even bother to obtain the transcripts of the hearings held. The B.C. Utilities Commission was holding hearings after the Investment Canada decision had been made. Under these circumstances with the incredible consequences it has for our natural resources and for the impact upon our sovereignty, will the Prime Minister, as Leader of the Government, not take the decision to set aside that Investment Canada decision until all these important questions can be answered, and the interests of the country can be protected?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Very briefly, I think that is what I have just indicated. The Government of Canada is awaiting the outcome of the further review by the Public Utilities Board of British Columbia. Investment Canada is satisfied that it meets the criteria. I need not remind the Hon. Member that this government agency or board is charged with the responsibility of ensuring the protection of sovereignty with respect to the manner in which he raises it.

CHILD CARE

REQUEST FOR FUNDING TO EXTEND SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My question is directed to the Prime Minister on another important question. The Prime Minister knows that the crisis in child care is urgent, and that children are at risk in many care arrangements. This has been substantiated by researchers, many witnesses and experts.

Will the Prime Minister seriously consider allocating up to $320 million as a budgeted amount in the upcoming Budget to help stabilize and extend quality child care? As I indicated to him last December in a copy of a letter to the Minister of Finance, will the Prime Minister intervene in this matter?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am glad to report to the House that the federal-provincial meeting has concluded and quality child care was the first item on the agenda. Agreement has been reached on a fast-track work plan between the federal Government and the provinces to put forward the solution and a proposal on a national basis for child care, as the Prime Minister when he was in Vancouver had indicated he would be instructing us to do. I am pleased to report to the House that the work is proceeding very quickly, and all provinces agree that a good plan has been put into place.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East on a short supplementary, please.

REQUEST FOR FUNDS IN FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he or will he not allocate money in the upcoming Budget for child care? He found emergency funds for the banks. Will he find them for children?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada found money for pensioners whose pension funds were in jeopardy in the banks; that is what it found money for. The Government of Canada found money for grain farmers, principally in western Canada. In respect to the individual point which the Hon. Member makes, some provinces put forward a request. By the way, her numbers change. A few weeks ago it was $150 million; this week it is over $300 million. I wonder what it will be next week. That is how consistent she is. I would suggest to her that she start getting her—

SALE OF WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On November 6 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated in a speech in Toronto that it was not the policy of the Government to approve acquisitions by non-Canadians of Canadian companies valued in excess of $5 million and in a healthy state. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion now says that that applies only to oil and gas companies and does not apply to West Kootenay Power and Light Company. Why is the Government abandoning its own policies in its rush to give away to foreigners our natural resources and our public utilities?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to the Hon. Member. It is a very important question. Given the specifics of it, I would ask the Hon. Member if he might be so patient as to wait until the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion returns to the House on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDING LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF COST RECOVERY CLAUSE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He will know that Bill C-75, respecting the former revised Canada Shipping Act, was generally well received by all except for Clause 4, the cost recovery clause. Will the Minister introduce new legislation containing safety and the other beneficial provisions contained in the former Bill C-75, without the inclusion of the offensive cost recovery clause?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member asked that question because the provisions of Bill C-75 are extremely important in connection with the safety of shipping and other matters dealt with in the Bill. I have decided—and it has been concurred in by my colleagues in Cabinet—that we should reintroduce the legislation without Clause 4. We will go forward with consultation with all interested parties in the shipping industry to see how the cost recovery provisions can best be formulated. After this period of consultation we will introduce new legislation. This is as a result of the representations made to me by Conservative Members of the House of Commons Transport Committee.

PRIVILEGE

OMISSION FROM QUOTATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Your Honour, this is my first opportunity to make this point relating to an exchange in Question Period two days ago.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the Hon. Member that I find his application completely in order. I am not concerned about notice.

Mr. Caccia: I was saddened and upset yesterday to discover in the evidence a serious and fundamental discrepancy between the oral reply, as registered in the electronic record, given by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), when we exchanged questions and answers on acid rain, and the printed record in Hansard.

There is a word of fundamental importance, I submit to you, which the Minister chose to omit after having identified a document, the Envoy's Report on Acid Rain, and after having identified a specific page. Having done so, the Minister quoted from the document and decided, in my submission, deliberately, to omit the word "research", which was fundamental in that particular exchange, thus distorting the dynamics of that question and answer.

Having done so, Mr. Speaker, I have to raise this point because I find that behaviour unacceptable and affecting the privilege of Members, because that is not the way of quoting, in a selective manner. By omitting a specific key word, namely, "research", which is the essence of that particular Envoy's

Report and the policy inherent in that particular document, it gave, therefore, an impression to the House that is not consistent with what, a few hours later, was printed in Hansard correctly, as it should also have been in the oral quotation recorded electronically.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Chair has allowed the submission. In the interest of fairness on all sides, surely we should not be dealing two days later with something which is alleged to have happened both electronically and in Hansard. Had this matter been raised when it should have properly been raised yesterday, the Hon. Minister would have been here to defend himself.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is the reason for the rule, that one should bring it to the attention of the House as quickly as possible. Now we have a day when the Minister is not here and this point has been made.

Second, I submit that the operative words of my colleague which make this a matter of debate and not privilege are the words "decided, in my submission". That is debate. He is alleging that the Minister decided something.

When somebody brings forward what he calls "a serious and fundamental discrepancy" between Hansard and the electronic record, if we are to deal with it as a House, if we are to bring the issue to the floor, surely it ought to be something where the Minister is given a chance to defend himself and where we can examine the record and take a good look at it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is very appreciative of the comments of both the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, but I want to comment upon the remarks of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

The point the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary makes is that this is a couple of days late. I want to advise the House that the notice was dated yesterday, and it may well have gone awry in the Speaker's office. That is why I indicated immediately to the Hon. Member for Davenport that I had accepted the notice as legitimate, and I am not concerned about the time.

On the second question, if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would prefer that this matter be deferred until a day when the Minister is here, I think that would be acceptable to the House.

I should indicate to the Hon. Member for Davenport that it would seem to the Chair that this is a point of order and not a question of privilege. In any event, there is a complaint here. Unless both Hon. Members want to defer this matter to another day, I think it probably could be settled now by the Chair saying that I will consider the matter. The complaint is on record. If a correction can be made, discussions can be undertaken or had to do that. I think maybe we can leave the matter there. Does the Hon. Member for Davenport want to rise again? The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville.

TABLING OF QUOTED DOCUMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order of which I have given you notice. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not here but the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is.

Earlier in Question Period today, in answer to one of the opposition Members, the Prime Minister quoted from a letter from a senior law officer of the Crown or the Commissioner of the RCMP, I am not sure which. I wonder whether, under Citations 327 (6) and (7), the Prime Minister would be willing to table that letter for the House.

In part Citation 327(6) reads:

Citation 327(7) reads:

> When a letter, even though it may have been written originally as a private letter, becomes part of a record of a department, it becomes a public document, and if quoted by a Minister in debate, must be tabled on request.

If possible, I should like to request that the Deputy Prime Minister table the letter so that we can all have a chance to peruse it.

• (1210)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the point which the Hon. Member makes is correct. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did quote from a letter that was sent to the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the former Solicitor General, in response to a letter that he sent to the commissioner. I presume that if it is with the consent of the Hon. Member for York Centre, who is not here but he did, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, raise this issue yesterday, I would have no difficulty tabling the letter. In the interests of proper procedure, perhaps we might make doubly sure that the Hon. Member for York Centre agrees to having it tabled, then we would certainly not have any difficulty with it.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) on a question of privilege?

Mr. Frith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED HARASSMENT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the House that yesterday my former secretary during my tenure as chairman of the regional municipality of Sudbury from 1977 to 1980 received a phone call from the Deputy Prime Minister's (Mr. Mazankowski) office asking for information of a factual nature.

I do not feel personally affronted by the nature of the question asked of my former secretary, but I do believe this is a breach of my privilege as a Member of Parliament. I would suggest, Sir, that this is harassment of my duties as a Member of Parliament and I would suggest, if I can—just one last sentence, Mr. Speaker—that if the Deputy Prime Minister has time to check into the backgrounds of Members of Parliament he might want to start with Members of his own Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) has raised a matter which obviously has caused him some concern. It is outside the House. The comments have been made and have, no doubt, been heard.

ALLEGED IMPERFECTION—BILL C-37—S.O. 108

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will just give you notice of a point of order pertaining to today's Government Orders. We are shortly going to be returning to the debate on second reading of Bill C-37. Clause 2 (3) of the Bill reads as follows:

> In interpreting the schedule, recourse may be had to the Memorandum of Understanding concerning trade in certain softwood lumber products between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States dated December 30, 1986 and tabled in the House of Commons on January 19, 1987 and recorded as document number—

And there is clearly a blank there, Mr. Speaker. The same words appear in the other official language.

I had inquiries made of the Table. I am informed that the document referred to in Clause 2(3) was not tabled on January 19 or subsequently.

Quite apart from that, Sir, I submit that the words of this paragraph and the fact of their incomplete nature clearly infringe Standing Order 108 which reads:

> No Bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

Clearly this clause involves a blank. It is clearly imperfect. Therefore, the Bill purports to have been introduced contrary to this very clear rule.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on Monday of this week we agreed, in order to facilitate discussion of this Bill, to abridge greatly the normal procedure for introducing legislation. We allowed first reading of the Bill and, in fact, the beginning of the debate on second reading to come the same day on which the Ways and Means motion was voted.

Mr. Mazankowski: To accommodate you.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Government House Leader has interjected from the sidelines saying to accommodate the Opposition. For days prior to the House opening the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was saying that he intended to call this Bill on Monday. My point, just by way of comment, is that there was very little time to study the Bill as to form. I mention this in the event it is argued that this point should have been raised earlier. Also in that regard, there is nothing in Standing Order 108 limiting the time as to when a point of order can be validly raised and sustained with respect to a breach of Standing Order 108.

I submit that Standing Order 108 has clearly been breached. The rules have been contravened and, therefore, I suggest that the debate until this point on this Bill has been a nullity and the Government must re-introduce the Bill and commence the debate all over again.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point which my colleague has quite properly made. The Memorandum of Understanding, which is referred to in the Bill, could not have had a document number or what might be called a sessional paper number in either the Ways and Means notice of the motion or the first reading version of the Bill which the Government had preprinted before Monday's introduction of the Bill.

The House has accepted from Monday until now both documents in that format, as have the law officers of the Crown and the table officers. There has been full and frank debate on the issue at hand, the substance of the matter approaching, I understand, some 20 hours.

The date of January 19, 1987 was used in both the Ways and Means motion and the first reading version of the Bill debated last Monday because the Minister had intended to table the Memorandum of Understanding in both official languages but, by an oversight, which is admitted, in all the printing preparations for last Monday the Memorandum of Understanding did not get tabled. The Minister is ready to table that Memorandum of Understanding today. We apologize and admit that that should have been done.

We are all in the same boat. We have all debated at length the substance of the Bill. We would all have to say that we have not examined every last clause and the impact of that last clause on the substance of the Bill. We are doing that now, quite rightly, with a procedural discussion.

The Memorandum of Understanding, which was a lengthy document and not necessary to have in both official languages for the purposes of an understanding between the United States Government and the Government of Canada, but necessary for presentation in this House, has now been translated. I am sure that that document was used by Members of the House in preparing their comments. We are now looking at the tabling of the document.

It has been a very busy week for the Minister and for all officers of the House. There was a clerical error made. We are not denying that the responsibility is here. We are not denying that we all share responsibility for it.

As I suggested, Mr. Speaker, the document is going to be tabled. We suggest that it will be in order during the discussion at the committee stage to put forward an amendment which will correct the date of tabling of this Memorandum of Understanding, which is really what we are talking about. Since we share a previous occupation, I suggest, Sir, that this procedure may be viewed in terms of perfecting the record, in that it is not essential to the debate that this actually had been tabled. It is essential that it be in existence and it was in existence. I will get to that, if I may, in a minute.

At committee stage, we would suggest that an amendment be moved to correct the date. We suggest that it would have no impact on the essence of the Bill or on the essence of the debate that has taken place. We all have to ask ourselves if Canadians wish us to get on with the job at hand, which is to perfect the record and get the Bill into committee, or whether Canadians would wish us in the taxpayers interest simply to scrap this week of debate and start again. I think you would find that Canadians would come down on the side of taking the debate as read and going from there.

I would also like to refer to the specific wording in the Bill if I may. You may not have this before you, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure you will have an opportunity to consider it. Clause 2(3) of the Bill includes the words "recourse may be had". I think the operative word there is "may". This means that the Memorandum of Understanding and the interpretation of the Schedule can be dealt with by using other methods. The clause is permissive. It is neither direct nor specific but indicates only that recourse may be had. The Schedule is appended to the Bill and explains in detail the elements of the Memorandum of Understanding. As I have said before, it does not go to the essence of the Ways and Means motion and the Bill. The clause is merely permissive.

If you do some research, Mr. Speaker, and I must admit that I was busy doing that myself last evening, you will find that there is a suggestion in Erskine May that alterations rather than amendments can be made to a Bill. Page 526 of the most recent edition of Erskine May indicates that alterations can be made to correct clerical errors. I submit that this is a clerical error which will be corrected when the Minister tables the document.

I would also submit that the clause in the Bill refers specifically to this Memorandum of Understanding and uses the words: "and tabled". The document is in existence and if the clause used only the word "tabled", I think we would be in trouble. However, it uses the words "and tabled". The document which is in existence is an agreement between two powers, the United States of America and Canada.

I would draw my remarks to a close by saying that no one in this place is suggesting that Standing Order 108 does not exist. I admit that it exists. However, I think it is fair to suggest that the people of Canada would like to see us deal with those Standing Orders in a way that serves democracy and assures that debate takes place. I suggest that we are all in this together, whether it is the Opposition—

Mr. Gauthier: Keep your own troubles. Come on now, wiggle out of that one.

Mr. Lewis: We are dealing with them. We have all debated this matter for a week. There is a clerical error which can be corrected by the Minister tabling the Memorandum of Understanding and that will take place in a minute.

I suggest that the Bill stands on its own. The tabling of this document and the perfecting of it by giving it a number is not something that goes to the essence of the Bill or the principle of the debate at second reading but is something which naturally will be corrected at committee stage.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humbolt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I note that the traditions and practices of this House have been to follow the rules quite strictly and that we vary from those rules only with the agreement of all Parties in the House, and we do that quite regularly. There was no such call by the Government for that sort of agreement from the various Parties in the House when the Government did not table the agreement as the Bill indicated it should have done.

The second point I wish to make is that this agreement that has not yet been tabled has not yet been translated into French. Because it is such an integral part of this particular piece of legislation, I think Francophone Members of the House have every right to expect it to be translated accurately into French before they decide whether to support or not to support this Bill in principle at second reading stage. How can Francophone Members decide on the principle of the Bill and the position they wish to take on it if such documentation is not available to them?

On those two counts, I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to rule in favour of the point of order put forward by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). As well, I would urge you to recall that previous legislation had been delayed in the House simply because certain paperwork had not been done properly. The most recent such Bill I can recall is Bill C-22. Last June, the Government did not get the Bill put through simply because it had not completed the paperwork. I think this case is similar in some ways to that one. I would urge you to pay some attention to the very good arguments made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West and to pay some fair amount of attention to the fact that all of the extremely pertinent documetation on a very important international agreement was not available to Francophone Members of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on whether Bill C-37 may be debated in the House at this time. Standing Order 108 says clearly that:

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

Point of Order—Mr. Gray (Windsor West)

In Bill C-37, on page 2, clause 2(3), there is a blank in the last line, line 12, which in my view would make the document entirely unacceptable according to our Standing Orders.

[English]

I should remind Hon. Members that it is not very difficult to refer to Hansard of January 19 to learn of the events that unfolded here. On January 19, a Ways and Means motion was tabled by the Minister and, in order to proceed with the Bill, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) received from us unanimous consent to deal with that motion. We divided on it at the time and a Bill was presented at first-reading stage by unanimous consent. We proceeded to second reading thereafter by unanimous consent because the Government insisted that it wanted the Bill to be studied. However, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I rose in my place to draw to your attention the fact that we did not have the Bill and that some of the information pertaining to the Bill was lacking. I was assured that we would have full co-operation from the Table which we eventually got. We finally received the Bill in the afternoon while debate was going on.

Today I rise in my place to draw to your attention that we feel that the Standing Order is clear. There is no interpretation possible other than that the Bill is faulty and must be withdrawn by the Government. The Government has an obligation to present another Bill, amended as it should be with the proper date and the number of the documents in question included. In my opinion, this faulty Bill must not only be withdrawn but must be debated over again at second-reading stage. The Speaker will have to inform the House that a new Bill has been presented to the Table and we will have to proceed with first reading, second reading and subsequent stages of the Bill.

Speaking to the point made by the Parliamentary Secretary on the tabling of the documents, the Minister could have tabled those documents on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

[Translation]

She could have done so, but she did not.

As far as the translation is concerned, the House will of course recognize that as the Parliament of Canada, we cannot accept that a document be tabled by the Government in one language only.

Of course the Government's problem was that it had to order a translation. The translation must always be tabled by the Minister with the original document, and if they didn't get the translation until today, it is their fault, not mine. They can not do anything right, Mr. Speaker. What do you expect? They're all the same, that bunch. You people don't know what you're doing here in the House.

• (1230)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is an important matter. This is not a court of law, but we are all aware that in a court of law things have to be done in a proper way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With the co-operation of Hon. Members, the suggestion is that because something was not included in a Bill the last number of days of debate should be wiped out as if they never happened. The Chair wants to ask Hon. Members to address the question of what prejudice has the public interest suffered or any Member suffered as a consequence of the fact that the Bill has an error, which is admitted by everyone and which can be quickly and easily remedied. What prejudice has been suffered?

Mr. Gauthier: The rules!

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, you referred to what I was just about to get into. We have certain accepted, indeed the compulsory, procedures that we follow. As the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) mentioned, we had a similar situation with the first attempt by the Government to change the Patent Act in June of 1986. It was admitted, with some reluctance I suspect, that the Government had not gone through the proper procedures and the debate could not begin.

Regarding what you have asked us specifically, the point is that certain Members of this House, especially those who are Francophones, did not have access to documents in their language. The debate is continuing, and if Government Orders are correct we will continue the debate in a few minutes' time. It is not fair to Members of this House to continue this debate at this time without access to all the information.

I do not suggest that all that has been said is going to be struck from the record. I do believe it is possible for the three House Leaders to get together and discuss how we would reintroduce the Bill, recognizing that certain debate has already taken place. However, I believe that not only on this occasion but on any future occasion we must ensure that legislation is passed in the proper form, starting with the proper introduction, and that all documents referred to in a Bill as being available must indeed be available to all Members of this House.

Mr. Belsher: What do you think committees and third reading are for?

Mr. Murphy: My question is what is second reading for? It is a procedure of this House, a procedure we are in right now, and thanks to a motion made by the Government last night it is now impossible to make any amendments. Even the Government cannot make any amendments. We have to ensure that we go through the proper procedure, and I submit that to continue debate at this time on this Bill would be completely improper and unfair to Francophone Members of this House.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my comments to the question Your Honour has raised regarding how this prejudices the public interest. If one goes through Hansard over the last three or four days one would see that a large part of the debate, in fact the core, has centred on the impact that the Memorandum of Understanding, the agreement in effect, will have upon Canadian economic interests, sovereignty and other issues. The specific nature of the undertakings included in that agreement are absolutely essential to the debate.

We have only been able to debate agreements that we informally possessed; they were not part of the Bill. That is of particular importance because in Question Period yesterday, in answer to a question by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) indicated there was a problem as it related to Schedule B of the agreement. That did not include a list of products to which the primary tax would not apply. A number of secondary manufacturers of lumber products were severely affected by that fact. The only way the problem can be resolved is to renegotiate the agreement and to have it include the list.

The Minister said officials were now meeting in an attempt to resolve the problem. At last count we have 80 or 90 companies who are in a state of limbo. A tax is being collected which is 200 per cent or 300 per cent over and above what they expected, given the countervailing duty. The only way that can be corrected is if the Memorandum of Understanding is tabled so that they and we know what the law is. Not having it tabled, not knowing what is on the list, not knowing if the list is going to be changed, given the answer by the Minister yesterday, means those manufacturers, including several thousand workers and a large part of our value-added manufacturing, are in a state of uncertainty.

It is clear that the only way the Parliament of Canada can properly respond to the interests of those manufacturers is to ensure that we know exactly what is going to be included in that Memorandum of Understanding and the schedules attached to it. They will then know exactly what they are going to be taxed on and there will be no uncertainty.

There is also a much larger issue. There is a large number of people in the industry, as well as provincial Governments, who are asking questions for which there is presently no answer. How does the Memorandum of Understanding apply to them? In contacting various provincial officials to get their response, they say that at the last meeting when they asked to what extent does the $600 million apply, no answers were forthcoming.

Miss Carney: That is not true.

Mr. Axworthy: There was no response. There was still a high level of ambiguity as to the meaning and interpretation and application of the Memorandum of Understanding. I make the case to you that the Memorandum of Understanding is not a clerical error. It is not a bagatelle or a side-show. It is essential to the functioning of this law. Not being part of the law and not having it in both languages means the law we are debating would be not only ambiguous but could also be unfairly applied and would put a number of companies and provincial Governments in a high state of uncertainty.

Mr. de Corneille: Point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: A point of order has been raised. Unless something has happened to interrupt the orderly debate on that point of order I would like to carry on recognizing Members as they rise. A Member has said "point of privilege" and I would want to defer that unless the Member presses the point. We are on a point of order, but if the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) has a point of privilege which has suddenly arisen and which is of great importance, of course, I will hear him.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you would interpret it as a point of privilege or a point of order, but my privilege to be able to speak in the House and have access to documents it seems to me is also affected.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for the intervention. I think it is on the same point of order. Has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) completed his remarks at this time?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the flow of debate on this point of order, which is important. However, the question has arisen as to when the document was available in both official languages. That is a key point and I admit it. I am advised by officials in the Minister's office that the document was available in both official languages from the Minister's office on January 5, 1987. I have copies of the Minister's statement and—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Was it tabled in the House?

• (1240)

Mr. Lewis: Parliament was not sitting on January 5, 1987. It was available in both official languages from the Minister's office on January 5, 1987. The question one must ask oneself is whether one asked for it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to address briefly the issue you raised with the House, that is, what prejudice the public would suffer if debate on this imperfect Bill were allowed to continue.

First, I observe that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) tried to make a substantial argument to the effect that the gap in the Bill was simply of a clerical nature. I submit that the clerical nature of the error does not relieve in any way the extent of the transgression of the Standing Order.

Second, the Parliamentary Secretary quoted from Erskin May. I submit that, unless it is shown that the words of Erskin May relate to a Standing Order of the British House of Commons in the exact words of our Standing Order, that which the Parliamentary Secretary has cited to the House has no relevance or application here at all.

With regard to the matter of prejudice, I suggest that when the House of Commons, in its wisdom, decides that it should have a Standing Order formed in certain words, you are required to take juducial notice that the House of Commons has decided that, in the absence of that Standing Order being followed, there would be prejudice to the public interest. There is nothing in the rules which permits you to decide that some of these rules will be followed in part, or some not followed at all, on the basis of a determination of the degree to which the public interest would be harmed or supported by the following or lack of following of those rules.

With all due respect, if a principle that it is the degree of prejudice to the public interest that counts in determining whether a rule should be followed is to be enshrined into the precedents of this House, it would be open to you, Sir, or another Speaker to say that it does not prejudice the public interest not to follow the rule requiring a debate and vote on second reading. It would be open to you or another Speaker to say that it does not prejudice the public interest if the Government forgets to allow committee stage proceedings on a Bill.

With the utmost respect, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in our Standing Orders which permits you or any other Speaker to pick and choose which rules are to be applied in the fullest and which are to be applied only in part, depending upon the circumstances.

Standing Order 108 says:

> No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

That Standing Order exists to the same extent as do any of the other Standing Orders. It is not put into a special category headed, "Rules to be followed if it is not important or the public interest is not prejudiced". It is set out in Chapter XX, Proceedings on Public Bills, in exactly the same way as are all the other Standing Orders in that chapter.

Some may wish to argue that there is some vagueness or imprecision which would allow the Speaker to make a ruling apart from the clear wording of the rule. In that case, I respectfully draw to your attention Standing Order 1 which reads:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisidictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

I have already pointed out that the citation read to us from Erskine May has not been shown to be relevant. However, the real reason I read the Standing Order is to say that the case we are dealing with is provided for exactly as is set out in Standing Order 1. It is "provided for hereinafter" in the very specific words of Standing Order 108.

In conclusion, I submit again that in adopting this rule the House has said that it is contrary to the public interest, that there is a prejudice to the public interest in not following Standing Order 108 to the same extent as any and all other rules of the House are followed. I submit, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that if you do not uphold the very clear words of this rule, which apply very clearly to the defect in the Bill, the public interest, by definition, will be subject to a prejudice, and both In the short and long run the operations of this House and our democratic systems will be harmed.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the points made by both sides are well taken. However, you will recognize, Sir, that there were some rather extraordinary circumstances which allowed us to embark upon debate on Bill C-37. There was a desire by at least two Members in this Chamber to have an emergency debate on the issue under Standing Order 29. There was a great amount of co-operation by all Hon. Members to allow a debate on this issue to take place to the fullest extent. Presumably that is why both opposition Parties, after consideration of the matter, decided to provide the unanimous consent required to allow us to proceed with the tabling of the Ways and Means motion and with the motions for first and second reading, allowing us to begin the debate in an abbreviated length of time. There has been a great deal of co-operation. It was in the interest of all Hon. Members to facilitate the process to allow this piece of legislation to proceed.

Standing Order 108 states:

> No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

The decision which you must make, Mr. Speaker, is whether this Bill was imperfect in shape. I am not sure whether there is a clear definition of an imperfect Bill. Certainly a blank Bill would be imperfect. I would submit that failure to outline the principal aspects of the Bill or details pertaining to the principle of the Bill would put the Bill in a position of being void. However, we are dealing here with simply a slight technicality which can quite easily be changed.

The issue is whether Hon. Members opposite had access to the agreement, which is clearly part of the Bill, and to answer your question as to whether any prejudice has been suffered. We are now told that Hon. Members did have access to the agreement. I understand that they quoted from it during the course of debate and they have quoted from it during Question Period. To suggest that it was not available is inaccurate. It was available and was used.

To deal with this issue in its clear technical sense, I refer you to Standing Order 235 which suggests that any Member is bound to bring to the Speaker's notice any incident that he considers a breach of order, and that he should do that at the earliest possible time. It has been suggested that Members opposite were aware of this so-called imperfection for some time. That is based on the remarks they have made. I suggest that if that was in fact the case, they were duty bound to bring forth the notice of breach of order to the House at the earliest possible opportunity. They failed to do so.

• (1250)

Quite frankly, I believe the Parliamentary Secretary has outlined the background to this issue in fairly succinct form. However, to clearly answer your question about whether prejudice has been suffered, in my humble submission, I believe the answer is no.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. The Hon. Government House Leader seems to have referred to Standing Order 235. My set of Standing Orders only goes up to Standing Order 158.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sorry, I was referring to Beauchesne, Citation 235.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): May I say that a citation of the kind found in Citation 235 cannot override the clear and precise words of a Standing Order. I further submit that, in any event, the breach of order we are complaining of did not happen only on Monday, but began on Monday and continued without a break until this very moment. Even if this precedent has some relevance, which I submit it does not, I think we are consistent with it because the breach in question began on Monday and continued without a break until this very moment, and continues as we speak.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I believe there are three crucial issues we face on this point of order, and with which you obviously are faced in making a decision. First is the very cogent case that has been made by the House Leader for the Liberal Party which I believe, from my reading of the sections of the rules as a relatively new Member, would appear to be absolutely clear-cut.

I think there is a second, equally important consideration. It is that a great many of the issues which have been debated and discussed before us as Members of Parliament have themselves been questions of fact, and difference of fact, which would indeed have been greatly facilitated by the tabling of the original agreement with the United States. In particular, I recall an exchange between myself and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in which she made the point that what we believed to be clearly part of the agreement was, to her mind, clearly not part of the agreement. I suggest that the tabling of the document would have been of considerable benefit in facilitating a logical debate.

Third, I believe a logical contradiction has emerged in the Government's defence to this fairly serious charge. First, it has claimed that these documents were not tabled because they were not translated. It has turned around to say that they were translated on January 5. Clearly, the documents could have been tabled in both official languages.

Finally, we would not want to see this week's debate simply disappear and wiped off the record. I believe we feel a sense of grievance about the attempt to cut off debate which was taken last night. I think that is probably part of what underlines what is taking place here today. However, I believe that it should not be beyond the capacity of the Speaker, perhaps with the House Leaders, to work out some compromise by which this period of debate can stand, yet still allow the possibility of more extensive debate next week, making it possible to have full scale consideration of what I believe is one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation that has ever come before the House of Commons.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, certain facts are clear. First, a piece of legislation, Bill C-37, was introduced in the House of Commons in an imperfect form.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): And in a blank form.

Mr. Nunziata: And in a blank form. In my view, the issue is whether the imperfection of Bill C-37 would render the introduction of the Bill and the debate to date void ab initio. It is my respectful submission that the imperfection of Bill C-37 renders the proceedings to date void and that the only proper course at this point is for the Government to reintroduce a Bill in perfect form.

To accept a Bill in this form would, first, be in direct breach of Standing Order 108 which is clear and unequivocal. It states:

> No Bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

In my respectful submission, you ought to ask yourself why did Parliament in its wisdom adopt that particular Standing Order? I think the reason is obvious. A Bill has to be complete. It would be contrary to the principles of natural justice and the rule of law for a Parliament or any legislature or governing body to introduce a Bill that contains some blanks.

The Government argues that it is a clerical error or a minor imperfection. However, how does the Government intend to correct the imperfection? When will the blank be filled in, and how is that done? It seems to me that the only way to correct the imperfection is to either start again or introduce another Bill to fill in the blank.

You indicated in your comments that the standard to be used is whether prejudice has been suffered as a result of the imperfection.

Mr. Speaker: I am listening very carefully to the words of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I would not want any misunderstanding here. The Chair was not saying that that is necessarily the standard. The Chair was trying to get at the common sense of the matter and asking Hon. Members to address that. That is why I asked what prejudice has anyone suffered so far? However, I am listening to all of the arguments and I am not predisposed to making any decision.

• (1300)

Perhaps the Hon. Member may want to rise again after the adjournment.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.03 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[English]

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members that at the time of adjournment there was before the House a point of order that had been raised with respect to the agreement referred to in Bill C-37, which has not yet been tabled. In the Bill it refers to the document as having been tabled on January 19 under number, and then there was a blank, because when the Bill was printed no one knew what that number would be.

Debate commenced on Monday by unanimous consent, and after there had been an application for an emergency debate. The Speaker did not have to rule on the application for an emergency debate on the softwood issue, because all Parties agreed to bring this legislation into the House. The Bill was brought into the House and debate commenced. But, for whatever reason, the agreement between Canada and the United States on the softwood issue, was not tabled.

It is my understanding, and I think that this was expressed to the Chamber this morning, that later today the Minister intends to table that document. It is also my understanding that the document is in both languages. I see the Parliamentary Secretary nodding.

The point made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), which has been reiterated by others, is that because the pieces of paper that constitute the Bill did not have printed on them the number of the agreement, and because there was an error in saying that it was tabled on January 19, strictly speaking, under the rules, the Bill ought not to have been accepted in the Chamber.

Some Hon. Members are arguing as a consequence of what various people discovered late yesterday afternoon that the debate of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday is a nullity, and that it ought to be treated as if it had never happened. Others have said that they do not go quite that far, but in order to remedy the defect the Bill ought to be reintroduced, and Hon. Members be invited to restate the vivid positions they made in the vigorous debate that took place on during Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

During the interventions this morning the Speaker did ask Hon. Members to address this question, because I felt it was important in the public interest, and knowing that the public is watching this debate, what prejudice has anybody suffered. I have heard some response to that. One is that if there is any change from the absolute literal legalistic interpretation of a rule, that is a breach of the public interest, because the rules were obviously designed in the public interest.

The Speaker has been considering this matter over noon hour. I have not come to any conclusion. I invite Hon. Members to listen carefully to the debate. I also felt it important, because the public may be wondering what this is all about, that some explanation, as concise as I could make it, and without taking one side or the other, ought to be made at this point.

Before the noon hour the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was addressing the Chair. I suggested at that time that he may wish to return to his argument and continue it after the adjournment. I now recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: I appreciate your comments, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated before the lunch break, it would be my respectful submission that, as a result of the fatal flaw in Bill C-37, the proceedings to date should be rendered or declared null and void by the Chair, and that the debate should be rendered academic.

I said so for a number of reasons. First, to allow the debate to continue and to recognize the debate over the last four days as—and I use the term loosely—legitimate would be in direct contravention of Standing Order 108, which reads as follows:

> No Bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

The language in that particular Standing Order is mandatory, I would submit. It is not permissive. It does not give authority to determine the extent of an imperfection in a particular Bill, or to determine the impact or prejudice involving a breach of the particular section, or to ignore the particular section. Our parliamentary system is made up of a lot of jurisprudence. We often refer to different works on the subject such as Erskine May and others. We refer to the law of precedents, rulings made by the Speaker on previous occasions. Parliamentary jurisprudence,the law of Parliament, and therefore the law of Canada, also includes the Standing Orders.

It has been suggested by the Government House Leader that the flaw with regard to Bill C-37 is a slight technicality. With the greatest of respect, I must take issue with the House Leader for the Conservative Party when he says that it is a slight technicality.

Clause 2(3) is the crux; it goes to the very heart of Bill C-37. Bill C-37 was a piece of legislation introduced in the House to give full force and effect to the Memorandum of Understanding which was signed by the Government of Canada and by the Government of the United States. Clause 2(3) reads:

> In interpreting the schedule, recourse may be had to the Memorandum of Understanding concerning trade in certain softwood lumber products between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States dated

December 30, 1986 and tabled in the House of Commons on January 19, 1987 and recorded as document number—

There are two major problems with this particular section. First, there is a major error. The Bill says that it was tabled in the House on January 19, 1987. It was not. The Memorandum of Understanding was not tabled in the House on that particular day. On that particular day, first reading was given to Bill C-37.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is absolutely accurate in what he says about the Bill where it says tabled January 19, which was the first day of debate; that was Monday. In fact the agreement, that document, was not tabled; he is absolutely correct. However, I think it is important for Hon. Members to remember also that that apparently was not as a consequence of any deliberate neglect.

The argument used by the government side is that the entire situation is a consequence of the arrangements, loose as they may have been, on that day. The Hon. Member's point is exact with regard to January 19 and the blank, which would have been the number of the tabled document; that is how the Bill appears. The Hon. Member's point is that that is enough to fatally flaw the document.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I was not suggesting that there was deliberate neglect. However, I would submit that there was neglect. It is not my intention this afternoon to lay blame at the doorstep of any individual. Someone erred, someone fell asleep at the switch. If anyone is to assume responsibility for the negligence surrounding this particular incident, it is the Government. However, it is not my intention now to criticize the Government. We are faced with this situation. Your Honour is put in a position where you must make a rather difficult decision.

In my view, as I indicated, there is only one course of action for the Chair to take, that is, to declare the debate which has occurred null and void and thereby require the Government, if it so desires, to reintroduce the Bill, whenever it so decides.

To rule otherwise would not only be in contravention of Standing Order 108, but it would set a very dangerous precedent in the future. It would set a precedent which would say to Governments and Parliaments of the future that they could introduce legislation in the House of Commons which is imperfect, which is in direct contravention to Standing Order 108, and that they could introduce a Bill with blanks in it. That is no way to run a railroad; it is certainly no way to run a Government.

If one considers the public interest—and I submit that your decision, Mr. Speaker, should be based exclusively upon what is in the public interest—I believe you should rule in favour of respect and adherence to the rule of law, including the Standing Orders.

I can draw an analogy to the criminal law. Often arguments are made based upon technicalities surrounding the laying of an information in a criminal court, or surrounding the obtaining of evidence. There are technicalities in criminal law which are considered so basic and important in going to the root of the criminal justice system in Canada that charges are thrown out of court. Judges and courts have said that they must show to the world, or to all citizens of Canada, that they believe in respect for the rule of law. Notwithstanding that an individual may be set free after having likely committed an offence, it is more important that they respect the rule of law and, therefore, based upon a technicality, they declare a certain proceeding null and void.

Similarly, given our democratic system, I believe it important for you, Mr. Speaker, to send a very clear message, not only to the Government but to all parliamentarians and Canadians, that as lawmakers we will respect the laws we pass and that we will follow very strictly rules and regulations in place in Parliament to ensure that democratic principles are followed. They are part of our democracy, these rules which give the Opposition certain rights of debate and reply and give the Government certain rights.

One could argue that there is really no necessity for second reading debate on any particular piece of legislation. One could ask, what prejudice is there to the public if we eliminate a certain portion of the proceedings? In order to pass a piece of legislation in Parliament there are very firm rules and regulations. A Bill must be introduced in the proper form. Second reading debate follows. The Government is given an opportunity to introduce the Bill. The Opposition is permitted to respond. After second reading debate, which is debate in principle, is exhausted or closure is brought in it is referred to a committee, or goes into Committee of the Whole. Committee has the opportunity to amend. It comes back to the House for third reading. Royal Assent is given.

It is very important in our parliamentary system to ensure that democracy is pursued. The moment we start tampering with those very important and crucial rules, the moment we start saying "Well, we made a mistake, but so what; it is technical in nature; it is a slight technicality; it is really not that important", that is the moment the system starts to crumble. That is the moment respect for our parliamentary rules and regulations is adversely affected.

I respectfully request, Mr. Speaker, that you rule in this particular case that the Bill is flawed, that the flaw is fatal, that the proceedings that have taken place were irregular and that the debate cannot proceed on this Bill introduced in the form it was introduced. The only alternative then would be for the Government to re-introduce a Bill that complies with Standing Order 108 and complies with all other rules and regulations of this House. Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Sir.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is confusing an indictment in a criminal case where, you will recall, it is very important that it be worded precisely and contain all the ingredients of an offence. When there is a defect, as Your Honour knows, the court strikes the indictment down. You will know from your own experience in the courts that when no application is made at the beginning of a trial, the trial goes through to completion. There is a rule that if you do not object at the earliest opportunity the defence is taken to have consented to the form of the indictment. With respect, Sir, I think that is the fundamental mistake of the Hon. Member who just spoke.

This Bill can go to committee where it can be perfected, if there is a defect in it.

Mr. Gauthier: No. Standing Order 108; it does not cure it.

Mr. Kilgour: It can be perfected at the committee stage or when it comes back for third reading. Doubtless it will be perfected. The point the Member makes that there has been a prejudice because there has been a fatal flaw is, in my respectful submission, nonsense. Nobody has been prejudiced by this. There has been lengthy debate on the Bill. Members have spoken on and on. But no one raised this point until about two and one half hours ago. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) pointed out from Beauchesne that you must raise the point at the first available opportunity, which was not done in this case.

Mr. Gauthier: That doesn't cure the Bill.

Mr. Kilgour: In short, probably no Bill that comes into this House is perfect. I am told there is no precedent on what this term "imperfect" means in Standing Order 108. I respectfully submit that every Member in this House would look very foolish if we were to try to say that the Bill was void ab initio now, an argument by the other side. Bearing in mind the fact that the reputation of Parliament is a factor, and bearing in mind that there is no precedent of which I am aware as to what "imperfect" means or does not mean, I would respectfully ask you to rule that the Bill is sufficiently perfect, that there has been no prejudice and it can go ahead to a vote and committee stage, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I wish to comment on only one point, Mr. Speaker. A number of other important points have been made, and I know you are taking them into account. You did raise the question for us, Mr. Speaker, as to what prejudice or what harm may have been done by the oversight, if it was an oversight, and we assume that it was. In that connection, I was quite surprised by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's argument in connection with the word "may" in Clause 3. He read, as it is:

> In interpreting the schedule, recourse may be had to the Memorandum of Understanding—

The Member says that is permissive. My reading of the English of it—being more versed in the English language than I am in law and what we have to deal is the English text—is that any Member may have recourse to the memorandum. It does not mean in the same permissive sense that the Government may make that recourse available. In other words, permissiveness is one way. Any Member may use that document—quote that document if he has it—have access to that document—that is implied—but it does not mean there is anything permissive on the part of the Government introducing the Bill. Members are not told the Government may or may not make it available. This means the Government shall. That is the clear intent although it is not worded so. The memorandum shall be available and any Member may make use of it.

In fact, in the business of the week after I got here I did not immediately become aware that there was this memorandum supposedly available. We were told, of course, that it was available to us in the Minister's office. That raises a very interesting point. It says here that it shall be tabled and it may be available, or we may use it. That is the rule of law, that it shall be tabled, that it shall be printed and available in a public way.

Not by any means is everything in a Minister's office public. There is a great deal that does not become public until the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) office or somebody leaks it. In this case, I do not think there is any question that the Minister would have withheld the document if anybody had asked for it or when people did ask for it. I do not think there was any question of withholding it. In fact, that is not the method prescribed by the Standing Orders for making available to all Members of Parliament and the public the basic document upon which this Bill rests.

The only reason for having this Bill was the agreement embodied in that memorandum. Not only the 282 Members of Parliament but a number of interested persons, therefore, have an interest in that memorandum being readily available. To say, "Well, we didn't table it; you could not have got it by asking the Clerk; it would not be distributed in the normal course to Members offices as a tabled document, but if you had thought to ask the Minister for it, she would have given it to you", is not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

It is not only a matter of some potential injury to Members of Parliament who did not have it readily available, as I did not—nobody told me until today to ask the Minister for it—but to members of the public who know the rules even less than anybody here. They do not know that the document is available. They might guess, but they do not know. The Bill says it is available in the sense of a tabled document, which is simply not true. During this week when the matter has been in the newspapers and in other media every day, when a number of people outside this House of Commons were interested, that document has not been as available as the Standing Orders and this section required.

Therefore, I think there has been injury and there could be a great deal of injury in future were you to rule that this oversight makes no difference and the debate we have had is just as valid as if that document had been properly available to all Members of Parliament in both languages and properly available to the public, which it was not. If that were to be the precedent, Mr. Speaker, then we have not the rule of law but the rule of persons. While one does not need to discuss the personality or character of this or that official or Minister, we obviously do not wish to have a situation in which documents are available only on the action of our Minister. They should be available in an impartial way on the action of the Clerk.

I believe, although it may seem strange or unnecessary, it is necessary to rule that the debate we have heard heretofore was an interesting conversation, but it was not the debate as prescribed by law on second reading, particularly because that ruling would have regard for the possibility of the Government introducing measures to limit the debate. The debate has not been full because the document with all the facts was not fully available.

• (1430)

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, when I rose before, I said that I wanted to talk about my privileges as a Member of Parliament simply because there is a Standing Order that states that no Bill may be introduced either in blank or in imperfect shape. That is part of the rules that are given to me by which I as a Member of Parliament operate. The rules guarantee that I have certain rights and privileges on behalf of my constituents. I believe I have a right as a Member of Parliament to say that my rights to represent my constituents are influenced by my ability to depend on the Standing Orders and my knowledge of the rules by which I will operate. It is important for me to know that you will also watch those rules as the Speaker and I know that you have done an excellent job in that respect. No disrespect to you is meant by my point. I am simply bringing up my concern about the debate that took place thus far.

In the debate, I was unable to discuss the text with authority. I would have spoken to Clause 6 of the mutual agreement but, instead, I debated the way in which the agreement was reached rather than the terms of the agreement itself.

The absence of a specific document could be extremely important. If, after the debate had moved along, one were to find that there were changes or differences between what one thought the document was and what it really was, things could become extremely difficult. One would look as if one were quoting from a flawed text.

It seems to me to be an absurd argument to say that we could go to the office of a Minister to get a document. This House is a political place. Could you imagine, Mr. Speaker, from a political point of view, that I would go to the Government for anything accurate these days? Can it be imagined that I would go to the office of a Minister to beg for his documents and then trust those documents? It is the House of Commons to which I must be able to come to get the official text, and not some office of the Government.

If a precedent is set that it is acceptable to go to an office of a Minister if we want information about our Bills, it would be a very serious departure from anything we have done in the past. There is the Table, there is the Speaker's office and there is a way for Members of Parliament to come to you without having to become beholden to the Government for anything. We should be able to come to the House of Commons for documentation, and if such documentation is not tabled, and is part of a Bill, then in fact that Bill is not complete.

When I debated the Bill I spoke to the issue of how the mutual understanding was brought about, but I did not speak to the issue of the text. I have here notes on what I might have said later in this debate. But, in any case, the Government chose to try to strangle the debate. My remarks would have dealt with Clause 6 of the agreement, but I do not yet to this minute have from the Table the access to Clause 6 which I need to be able to debate it. That is why I was talking about privilege. I was referring to my privilege as a Member of Parliament to be able to carry out my functions without being beholden to the Government, or finding it necessary in any way to turn to the Government for anything to do with the text of a Bill to be debated in the House of Commons.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with great interest to the debate that has been going on and I would like to make a few points if I may.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) talked about tampering with the rules as if this were being done deliberately. I contend that in fact, we tamper with the rules every day as we did when this Bill was introduced. At the time it was introduced it was not introduced in accordance with the Standing Orders. We tamper with the rules from time to time.

The Hon. Member who just spoke said that he could not discuss the text of the Bill with authority. However, I listened with great interest to the speech he made yesterday and, as found on page 2545 of Hansard, he said: "but so are the Canadian people, not only by this agreement," which he had in his hand, "but by other evidence". Then, on page 2546, he said the following:

—Canada caved in and signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the United States that did, indeed, impose a 15 per cent duty—

If he did not have the facts in front of him, how could he have been so emphatic when he said that these things were indeed done?

I agree with my colleagues, including the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), who have submitted that the public was not prejudiced. The documentation was in the public domain and was available to anyone on December 31. Members were not prejudiced. The documentation was sent to their offices in both official languages on January 5. There have been 20 hours of debate on this matter so far. Every Member of Parliament, without exception, I believe, had a copy of the agreement, and many of them quoted from it rather—if you will pardon the expression—liberally during the 20 hours of debate. I do not believe that either the public or the Members were prejudiced in this particular instance, and I feel that we should get on with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and then move on to Orders of the Day.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, a very exact rule of order is involved here. The rule is Standing Order 108 which indicates that no Bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape. What we have here is a Bill that has been introduced in both a blank shape and an imperfect shape. It is not one or the other but both.

Where is the blank? The blank is on page 2, line 12 of the Bill. There is the blank.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member if he can see the blank.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I can see the blank because there are dots there. In fact, there are about 15 dots there. That, Mr. Speaker, is a blank.

What is the imperfect shape of the Bill, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The blank?

Mr. Baker: No, Mr. Speaker, the blank is in a perfect shape. It is in a straight line and it is all dots.

What about the imperfect shape of the Bill? We know the Government is imperfect and perhaps that is what led to the introduction of this imperfect Bill.

It is interesting to listen to lawyers discussing issues in this House. Of course, Mr. Speaker, you are a lawyer and you will know the truth of what I am about to say. Two lawyers are arguing back and forth about what should or should not be in a Bill, but they know that a Bill that is not complete cannot be introduced into the House of Commons. As you know, Mr. Speaker, a judge has to make rulings on the basis of the intent of legislation.

In this particular clause, there is the following phrase: "in interpreting the Schedule, you can use a document which is number" blank. What are we coming to in this Chamber? Any logger, anyone in the forest industry, would know what the Schedule is. It talks about dressed lumber, drilled lumber, treated lumber, rough lumber and softwood lumber. That is what the Bill is all about. However, in interpreting the all-important Schedule you have to refer to document number, blank.

We are not blaming the drafters of the legislation. They are trying to do their best. We have some of the best drafters of legislation in the world; overworked, underpaid, but they are the best in the parliamentary system of Government. However, in drafting this particular clause the draftsman had nothing to work with. Not only did he not have the document, he did not have the number. What did he do? He had to leave a blank and he put in 15 or 16 dots. It now comes to the Parliament of Canada. It went to the Minister's office, was ordered to be printed by this House, but we did not know there were blanks in it. We can see there are blanks in it now. How were we to know then that the Government of Canada for the first time, as I understand it, brought a Bill in with blanks in it? We did not know that when it was first being printed. We only noticed it a few hours ago.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: The rule is clear. We ask you to rule on the basis of Standing Order 108. This Bill is both blank and in imperfect shape. It is also certainly a good reflection of the Government of the day.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, today's debate has revolved around the interpretation of Standing Order 108. As you well know, that says that no Bill may be introduced either in blank or in imperfect shape. That is quite true, but of course the House has the power to change any rule by unanimous consent. You will note that in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 6, Citation 13, there is comment to the effect that within the ambit of its own rules the House may proceed as it chooses. It is a common practice for the House to ignore its own rules by unanimous consent. Thus Bills may be passed through all of their stages in one day, or the House may decide to alter its normal order of business or its adjournment hour as it sees fit. The House is perfectly able to give consent to set aside its Standing Orders and give its unanimous consent to waive procedural requirements and precedents concerning notice and things of that sort. Whenever the House proceeds by way of unanimous consent that procedure does not constitute a precedent.

It is not in order for one Member to ask for unanimous consent to compel another Member to do something.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on January 19, as recorded in Hansard at page 2370, when this legislation was introduced, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) moved that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be now read the first time and be printed. The motion was agreed to, the Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed. That was done through unanimous consent. What happened, in my respectful submission, is that the House, in accordance with the provisions of Citation 13 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, has by unanimous consent agreed to introduce this Bill. In effect, to introduce it in whatever form it was in.

You will remember that at that time you were being pressed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to proceed with an emergency debate on this very issue. All sides of the House were most anxious to press on with the debate. It is my submission that Hansard indicates there was unanimous consent to the introduction of the Bill. In effect, the House accepted the Bill in the form it was in by unanimous consent and there is no question whatsoever about Standing Order 108 being invoked. In fact, it was unanimous consent, as indicated in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, whereby the House proceeded on its own to ignore its own rules and proceed with the introduction of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is rising, but there are other Members who have not yet spoken.

Mr. Gauthier: I just wanted to correct some of the points made by the last speaker. I do not disagree with his argument that we gave unanimous consent for the Bill to be presented on first reading. We never questioned that. What we did not give was unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 108. That is the debate. I am not disagreeing with his reading of Hansard of January 19, not at all. I am just telling him that the Bill is imperfect, it is not acceptable, it goes against Standing Order 108 and that is the whole argument.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate this morning and this afternoon and I do not think there is much doubt that if it comes to making a decision you will have to rule that the Bill has been introduced in imperfect form and, therefore, the point of order raised by the Liberal House Leader will have to stand.

I think we should look at this from the point of view of what is best for the people of Canada. We oppose this Bill, but we were willing to co-operate on January 19, as the previous speaker mentioned, in introducing the Bill and waiving the time period between first reading and second reading and so on. We were prepared to have a reasonable debate beginning on January 19 without going through all the technicalities.

The concern of opposition Members is that the Government decided to play hardball on this whole question. Last night the Parliamentary Secretary moved that the question be put. He was interested in stifling debate. He wants to use the rules against us to prevent a full and proper debate of this Bill. We think that debate is necessary. We have issues that have to be raised. His motion means that that kind of debate cannot take place.

Perhaps there is a way out of this impasse. Perhaps you could call for a 15-minute recess and sit down with the House Leaders and see if some kind of deal can be made. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary might want to withdraw his motion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. I will hear him out. However, I just point out that the Hon. Member in inviting all Hon. Members to work out a deal has created instant, mild disorder in the Chamber. That is a most extraordinary result of an Hon. Member making what seems to the Chair to be such an eminently sensible suggestion.

Mr. Manly: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit that if an agreement cannot be reached among the three Parties, you have no alternative but to rule that the Bill was introduced in an imperfect manner.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any doubt in people's minds that there is an imperfection in the Bill before us which has been debated for the last several days. However, with regard to the suggestion that has been made that people do not have access to the information, on the afternoon of January 8 when I called upon various remanufacturers in my riding who were vitally interested in the contents of the memorandum of understanding, I found that they already had a copy. The information had gone out and had been widely disseminated. It is false to say that the people of Canada and Members of Parliament did not have that information.

I hope that common sense will prevail. As imperfect as we all are, our nation's business should proceed. We should deal with the Bill in its present form after making the necessary corrections. I do not think anyone noticed the imperfection in this Bill until yesterday afternoon. Everyone took part in the debates on the motion to alter this Bill and to delay it for six months. It would be an injustice to the Canadian public to wipe out all that has happened in the last several days.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, since my last intervention several points have been made, particularly by yourself, which I think require a response.

I can sympathize with the interest of the Chair in resolving the matter satisfactorily in order that debate can continue. As our House Leader pointed out in his first statement, there is a very important principle at stake here, that is, the sanctity of the Standing Orders. While we respect the suggestions to "fix a deal", as helpful as they may be, it is vital to resolve this problem correctly. Knowing the weakness of the Government in negotiating deals, knowing that it always gives in to any negotiations, the offer is tempting. However, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) is not in the Chamber and we would certainly want her to be available for those negotiations. I would not like to suggest that perhaps she has left for Hawaii, but we do not know.

This is simply not a matter of trying to work out a minor clerical error. There is a fundamental principle involved, which I am sure Your Honour fully respects. If the last speaker reflected upon the matter more carefully, I am sure he would realize that this matter does not deal only with an export tax. It is a matter which will govern the proceedings of this House in this and future sessions. To compromise our Standing Orders would be to set a very dangerous and serious precedent.

The argument has been made by the Government House Leader and others that the unanimous consent of the Opposition to proceed with the debate on Monday was an acknowledgment that we were prepared to accept the Bill. One can see from reading Hansard that that is not accurate. We had moved a motion to have an emergency debate at that time. The Government House Leader said that they would instead introduce a Ways and Means Motion to debate the matter. As you well know, our preference was to have an emergency debate so that we could debate the issue in principle before the Bill was introduced. We cautioned the Government that its haste in introducing a Bill in an unreflective manner would lead to trouble. However, we conceded to allow debate to be generated in that fashion. It must be remembered that the Ways and Means motion was introduced before the Bill was fully published and we reserved our caution.

The argument has been made that there was opportunity during the last four days of debate to consider the Memorandum of Understanding. The fact is that we were fully aware when we finally saw the Bill that the Government had made a mistake. It was only when the Parliamentary Secretary moved that the question be put, which would cut off debate, and we realized we would not have an opportunity to see the Memorandum of Understanding until second reading was concluded, that we took the action which we did.

Mr. McDermid: It was sent to your office on January 5.

Mr. Axworthy: It was the action of the Parliamentary Secretary to restrict the debate which made us realize that the Government obviously had no intention of tabling the memorandum which would have made Bill C-37 a proper Bill. Although they say there were copies of the Memorandum of Understanding available in the Minister's office, there was no assurance given that that was the proper and official memorandum. Only by having it tabled in this House as part of this Bill could we be assured that it was the official memorandum.

As I pointed out in my previous intervention, the Minister herself said yesterday that she was going to start negotiating a change to that agreement with regard to the remanufacture of secondary products. They were going to change the agreement before they had even tabled it. Therefore, at that point in time we were being asked to buy a pig in a poke, a Bill which was incomplete and flawed. When the Parliamentary Secretary moved a motion to cut off debate the Government had not lived up to its obligations. Our House Leader then took action at his earliest opportunity, which was before Routine Proceedings today. The crucial point is that the Government precipitated the problem by moving the motion which it did yesterday.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we have now heard from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) why they took the action which they did. We have heard a lot of fluff around here.

Mr. Gauthier: What do you mean, fluff?

Mr. Murphy: You screwed up. Admit it.

Mr. Gauthier: You messed it up yourselves. Come on.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is exactly what it is, Mr. Speaker. The words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) clearly acknowledge that they knew when we began debate on the Bill that the Memorandum of Understanding was not tabled. The first words that he uttered, as reported at page 2375 of Hansard, were:

> Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House incorporates an agreement, which presumably in due course will be tabled—

Mr. Axworthy: Sure, we were waiting for it.

Mr. Mazankowski: What has transpired, Mr. Speaker? There have been several days of debate.

Mr. Gauthier: We haven't even had the Bill yet.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I have the floor, please? If the Member wants to speak, I will certainly hear him out.

Mr. Gauthier: I am on the record. I asked for the Bill. You did not have it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has made a single contribution to the debate. If he wishes to rise and add something, I am sure there will be an appropriate time to do so and the Chair will recognize him at that time. In the meantime, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has the floor and is making points of interest to Hon. Members and to the Chair.

Mr. Gauthier: Stick to the facts.

• (1500)

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member says: "Stick to the facts". I am sticking to the facts and I am quoting exactly what his leader stated in the House.

The other fact is that this Bill has been voted upon. An amendment was moved and a vote was taken. I submit that there are two clear examples of the fact that clearly the Opposition, which is now—

Mr. Nunziata: You cannot correct a nullity.

Mr. Speaker: I think all Hon. Members will agree that the Chair has listened with great patience and interest to all arguments. Most of the arguments have been put with very little interruption.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am pointing out to you that it was clearly an acknowledgement of the fact that the Memorandum of Agreement was going to be tabled in due course. It can be tabled today. The other fact is that the Bill has been voted upon. Members opposite certainly would not have allowed a vote to take place if they thought the Bill was out of order.

I submit that you have been very patient, very diligent, and you have been very generous with all Hon. Members. I submit that whatever your decision, it is the time to have a decision as soon as we possibly can so that we can either get on with the continuation of this debate or go on to other business.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, there are three points which I believe show flaws in the argument which the Conservative Members have put before you this afternoon on this important point of order. The first flaw is that the agreement itself has not yet been tabled. If there had been a mere delay in the tabling on Monday, perhaps that would have represented a mild oversight which, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has noted, was recognized by the Leader of the Official Opposition during the debate. However, that does not offer any excuse for the agreement not to be tabled for the rest of the week.

Second, the question was raised on Monday as to what unanimous consent was being given. It seems quite clear to me, and I believe to most Members of the House, that unanimous consent was being given to Standing Order 68 rather than Standing Order 108. Standing Order 68 states that 48 hours notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a Bill, resolution or address. That was the exemption which we accepted unanimously in order to facilitate consideration of the Bill. There was no intimation at any time that Standing order 108 was, itself, being exempted by unanimous consent.

Finally, it must be made very clear that it was not the Bill that was voted on, but a procedural amendment to put the Bill off for a period of time. There has not been any vote on the Bill itself. Instead, it is a question of a procedural amendment which took place and one that would have removed the Bill for some considerable time before such a vote took place. I suggest that argument is essentially hollow.

In view of these facts and the lack of willingness on the part of the other two Parties in the House to talk seriously about some arrangement which might take us through the impasse—about which I have spoken to representatives of the other Parties—unfortunately it now becomes incumbent upon you to come to a decision. I would urge that that decision be very much in accordance with the rules of the House so that there is no precedent that under any circumstances rules can somehow be overlooked.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in order to be of assistance to you in making a decision, I want to draw your attention to a precedent. This happened on June 26, 1984, in the second session of the Thirty-Second Parliament, when the matter under discussion was the second reading of the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act. The citation can be found on page 5139 of Hansard for that day. At that time something very similar happened, again on page 2, Clause 2 of the Bill under discussion. The blanks and the number of the agreement had been omitted from the Bill. I argued then just as strenuously as the Opposition is now arguing that the Bill was therefore defective and should not be admitted.

However, at that time, members of the Liberal Party argued that this was merely a technicality and should not prevent discussion of the Bill as it stood. The Deputy Speaker at the time found in favour of the Liberal Government Members who had argued that it was merely a technicality and should not prevent discussion of the Bill. I think you might want to look at that precedent before you render your decision.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, the House can do almost anything in terms of the way we proceed if it so agrees by unanimous consent. I imagine that we could have proceeded if we were dealing with a subject that was debatable and one which we felt the Government wanted to debate. However, when we hear the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) state that there are further changes that might be negotiated in the Memorandum of Understanding, we may find when it is tabled that that part of the debate which has taken place was not totally relevant because changes may have been made therein. On the basis of that type of problem, we are faced with the Government's text, not the text of the House of Commons. The very fact that it might be renegotiated means the Government must state clearly whether it is tabling a final Memorandum of Understanding, or will it also be under review? Will the Government use its power to obstruct that?

This is a very serious matter. We are talking about an untabled document that is related to the debate that has taken place so far. We may find that it has changed or that the Government may want to change it in the future. The question before us is one of a Bill that we see one minute and not the other.

I believe this is a matter of principle and precedent. I do not believe that the question of this Memorandum of Understanding, that is so basic to the whole Bill, can be called a small technicality.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to rise again on this point of order. However, in the ensuing discussion I feel there has been an attempt—I am sure not a deliberate attempt—to kind of muddy the waters. I think it is very clear that under our new rule, Standing Order 108:

• (1510)

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

According to Hansard on January 19, 1987, page 2370, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) moved:

—that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be now read the first time and be printed.

That is when we ran into problems. We assumed, and rightly so, that the Bill was in perfect shape and was able to be introduced and printed at that time. The Bill before us, as has been explained by a number of Hon. Members, is not perfect. It is not complete and does in fact have a blank on the top of page 2. That is the problem we face.

The Government had an obligation to prepare and to present a Bill in a perfect and complete form. That is the intent and the exact wording of Standing Order 108. The Government failed in that obligation. As a result, it is possible for the Government to now put almost any memorandum or piece of litterature in front of us and claim that is what we are indeed debating.

The purpose of Standing Order 108 is very clear. The House of Commons must have a complete document. That is what we should be debating. That is why we have a first reading, second reading, committee study and third reading, so we can deal with legislation in a proper form and go through the proper procedures. We have not done that.

I would submit the Government has failed to present a proper Bill in a complete form. The Government has admitted that time after time over the last few hours. It has admitted it has broken the rule which says that no Bill may be introduced either in blank or in imperfect shape. Because the Government has broken not only the intent but the actual wording of Section 108, I submit the Chair has no choice—it always has a choice, but I would think it is necessary for the Chair to say that this Bill has not been presented correctly and, therefore, it cannot be acceptable for debate at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thanks Hon. Members for their interventions. I think there is a general disposition in the Chamber to close off debate on this quite interesting point. I will not take the risk of prolonging debate by posing any further questions to Hon. Members. Therefore, if there are no other Hon. Members rising, we will continue for now with Routine Proceedings.

In any event, I want to make it clear that I will have to reserve on this ruling. Because of the number of Hon. Members who have spoken on the matter and the attention it has been given, I think Hon. Members will understand that it is very important I do reserve. Therefore, I will not be giving a ruling this afternoon. We will now move to Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly understand the need to fully evaluate all the evidence. I would just like to ensure, however, concerning all the points which have been raised, that once we are finished with Routine Proceedings, Government Orders will not include Bill C-37, that we will not proceed with Bill C-37 but go on to other Government business until such time as the Speaker's ruling is made on Bill C-37.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) rising to make the same point?

Mr. Murphy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) that as long as the Chair has not made a ruling at this time, it would certainly be inappropriate for the House, for the next little while, to debate a piece of legislation which a vast number of Hon. Members have submitted has been improperly placed before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank both Hon. Members. All Hon. Members will know it is not for the Chair to say at this point what the conditions of the reservation are. I am indicating to the Chamber that I am going to reserve. I think Hon. Members will know why. There are a number of points which have been raised and they are serious points.

My purpose now is to carry on with Routine Proceedings. If Hon. Members want to rise after that, they, of course, are free to do so.

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2) I have the honour to lay upon the table copies, in both official languages, of a Memorandum of Understanding respecting the export of certain softwood lumber products and referred to as Bill C-37.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 23 petitions, Nos. 332-309, 332-319, 332-331, 332-345 to 332-347 inclusive, 332-407, 332-432 to 332-438 inclusive and 332-449 to 332-457 inclusive.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility of presenting a petition duly certified by the Clerk regarding low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador. The petitioners point out that these flights disrupt the life of the native people and that training pilots to fly under the radar into eastern Europe is a provocative and aggressive war action which tends to endanger world peace.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ends all low level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

TRANSFER OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. The first petition is from a number of constituents in Vancouver East, particularly those living in the Chinatown area of my riding. The petitioners feel that the federal Government's decision, through the Canadian Transport Commission, to locate the transfer point for dangerous goods in the riding of Vancouver East presents an extremely hazardous situation for residents and workers in the surrounding vicinity which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is a very densely populated downtown area. The petitioners are very concerned that this transfer point be changed. They also ask that the Canadian Transport Commission finalize a permanent solution to the movement of hazardous commodities which will be acceptable to the citizens of greater Vancouver and the region.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My second petition is one we continue to receive. It is signed by residents of Port Coquitlam, Burnaby, White Rock and New Westminster. They again ask the federal Government to withdraw its plans to change the Patent Act which they feel would be very damaging to Canadian citizens, that it would raise the price of drugs and is also another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations.

CANADA POST—MAIL SERVICE—ROSSPORT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which has been certified correct as to form and content according to Standing Order 106. It is signed by the business people of the hamlet of Rossport in northwestern Ontario. The petitioners call upon Parliament to allow for the continuance of a small post office within Rossport and the hiring of a postperson for same.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, by the authority vested in me by virtue of my election to the House of Commons, I consider it my duty and honour to present to the House seven petitions, each containing the names of 25 Canadians who request that the Government rescind the tariff which it imposed on imported books in the English language. The petitioners call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry. It compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations. All the petitions have been certified by the Clerk.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty as well to present to the House a few petitions duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. These petitions originate from people in Belleville, Ontario, in Vancouver, British Columbia—a region with which you are very familiar, Mr. Speaker, certainly among the most beautiful in Canada—and from Ottawa.

[English]

The petitioners humbly pray that Parliament rescind the tariff on books. This tariff threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Pursuant to Standing Order 106, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table petitions humbly calling upon the Government to rescind the tariff on books which is doing irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries with respect to the free trade negotiations.

[English]

I also have other petitions which humbly ask the Government to rescind the retaliatory tariff it has imposed on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. This tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, and distributors of Canada's culture. Rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens to do irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry, and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect to the free trade negotiations.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 106, I rise to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Victoria, Vancouver, Whitehorse, and Winnipeg concerning the retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language, which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. The tariff has had a negative effect on the publishing industry, penalizes Canadian consumers, and has a major deleterious effect on the opportunity of Canadians to understand the proper and important area of literature and information. I present these petitions on behalf of Canadians who are deeply concerned about this issue.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of some 50 residents of Ontario which calls upon the Government to withdraw the retaliatory tariff on English language books, because of the negative impact it will have on the Canadian book publishing industry, and the book sellers groups in various parts of the country. It also threatens to do irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises our policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations with the United States. I have great honour in presenting this petition.

Order Paper Questions

[Translation]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Pursuant to Standing Order 106, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition bearing the signatures of residents of Vancouver and Calgary.

[English]

These petitioners wish to call upon the House of Commons because of their concern, as members of library associations, about the effect of the tariff upon libraries in their communities, especially in Calgary and Vancouver. The retaliatory tariff is hurting Canadian books, libraries, book publishers, and particularly the citizens who have to pay taxes in order to buy these books. Therefore, I am presenting this petition to the House of Commons on their behalf.

I also have a petition from people who are in St. John's, Newfoundland; Ottawa, St. Catharines, Montreal, Winnipeg, Kingston, Niagara Falls, New York; and Edmundston, New Brunswick. These petitioners are presenting this petition to call upon the House of Commons to do something about the problems concerning the tariff on books which is greatly affecting the libraries in our communities.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present this afternoon. The first deals with the Government legislation to amend the Patent Act. It is from my home constituency of Essex—Windsor. The many Canadians who have signed this petition feel that the changes being suggested will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. It will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of those drugs. It will result in higher costs to the provincial government drug plans. As I have noted before with such petitions, they too, as with the lumber agreement, are clearly concessions in the free trade talks that we are carrying on with the United States.

The second petition is precisely the same type, but it comes from the Province of Saskatchewan. It includes signatures from people in Moose Jaw, Regina, and in a number of other municipalities within the Province of Saskatchewan. This petition makes precisely the same points.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): The third petition is from people in Toronto. This petition protests the low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador. It suggests that hunting, fishing, tourism, and mining can provide more stable, healthy and peaceful employment than the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base. Therefore, it calls upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base, and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there. As I say, it is signed by people from Toronto, and also by a significant number of people from Ottawa.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): I have the honour under Standing Order 106 to present a petition on behalf of residents of Thompson, Manitoba, who express their concern with the federal Government's attempt to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. In the petition these Thompson residents have expressed their concern that the result of this change in legislation will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also express the belief that this is yet another example of the Government conceding to the United States at the expense of the average Canadians in the free trade negotiations.

• (1530)

Therefore, the residents of Thompson humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which would increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, under the authority of Standing Order 106, it is my pleasure to introduce a petition approved as to form from a number of residents in Toronto, Pickering, Islington, Kleinburg, and Montreal. These people are protesting the present low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador. They say that it disrupts the way of life of native people, and also pollutes the area, and that hunting, fishing, tourism, and mining provide alternative employment in the area and could be promoted by the Government better than they are.

Therefore, because of that and because of the danger to world peace of this provocative and war fighting training, they ask Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end these low-level flight training programs at Goose Bay and cease negotiating with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 51 and 56.

[Text]

GOVERNMENT GRANTS TO CORPORATIONS

Question No. 51—Mr. Shields:

For each year since 1980, by province, did the Government make any contributions of more than $1 million to corporations in Canada by means of (a) grant contributions (b) loan assistance comprising interest rate buy downs, interest free loans or low interest loans requiring $1 million of government expenditure (c) loan guarantees where the Government has been exposed for more than $1 million and, if so, in each case, what was the (i) name of the company (ii) amount of assistance (iii) date the project was accepted?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The information requested can be found in Volume II—"Details of Expenditures and Revenues" of the Public Accounts of Canada tabled each year in the House of Commons.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

Question No. 56—Mr. Gauthier:

Over the past 15 years, what were the amounts paid by the Government for the financing of benefits under the Public Service Superannuation Act (PSSA) and, what was the amount for indexation?

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board):

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, January 22, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p.2601).

Mr. Nunziata: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Axworthy: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps, if the Chair says something now, some of the interventions may not be necessary.

The Chair has signalled the intention to reserve on what is clearly a complex question which is concerning many Hon. Members in the Chamber. I think there is a general disposition in the Chamber to agree that the Chair needs time to consider the matter. As a consequence, we have moved through Routine Proceedings, and it is appropriate now to carry on with Orders of the Day and with debate on Bill C-37.

Having said that, the condition which the Chair would put on proceeding with debate on the Bill until the end of today would be that further debate would be without prejudice to any of the points made in the arguments today. I would hope that that would meet with the approval of Hon. Members. If Hon. Members still want to argue the point, they can, but I think I am indicating what is the appropriate procedure under the circumstances.

I make it very clear to all Hon. Members that continuing the debate until four o'clock will not in any way prejudice any of the positions taken on the point of order and in the arguments which have been so fully put. Of course another undertaking or condition is that the question will not be put. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we certainly take—

Mr. Lewis: Are you rising on a question of privilege or a point of order?

Mr. Axworthy: On a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Your colleague was seeking the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be some confusion. Perhaps I can help. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was seeking the floor on a question of privilege. It probably should take precedence. Could I hear the Hon. Member?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to set down my question of privilege until the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) completes his submission.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague. I believe my point of order in fact will address the issue to be raised.

We certainly accept and thank the Chair for the condition applied, that any debate would take place without prejudice. I would only say, in parentheses, that it is unfortunate the Government House Leader or his Parliamentary Secretary, taking into account what they heard today, did not show some eminent sense and simply defer debate on the Bill until such time as we have had an opportunity to hear the Speaker's ruling. Nevertheless, that was their decision, and the commentary it makes about their respect for the process of this House stands.

However, what I want to raise by point of order is the conduct of the debate. The Government has just now tabled the Memorandum of Understanding. There are people with immense talents on this side of the House but a capacity for speed reading is not necessarily one of them. For us to ask Hon. Members to proceed with the debate, having just received that memorandum—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —is a matter of privilege.

Miss MacDonald: Come, come, don't you read your mail?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be the first to admit that through my own ingenuity I was able to procure a copy of the Memorandum of Understanding at an earlier date. However, that was certainly without facilitation by the Government. It was just that we have an incredibly effective staff that is able to pursue these things to the furthest reaches of the earth.

However, that may not be the case of other Hon. Members who are busily occupied with other matters. As the trade critic, I would have more of a preoccupation. However, we still have Members of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, can you hear me over the uproar?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to make a further point, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry that I can hear him. I am having a little more difficulty understanding him, but—

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I know it is late in the afternoon. I realize the powers of comprehension have a tendency to wane by this time of the day.

The second point I would make is one which was made earlier. How do I know that the document just tabled is the same document as the one that was signed? There have already been indications by the Minister that the document was to be changed. We are now faced with having to continue a debate on the basis of documents in a Memorandum of Understanding which we are not sure are bona fide or in fact whether it is the same Memorandum of Understanding which was signed on December 30.

I simply wanted to make that point of order and perhaps plead with the Government House Leader that, for the sake of some respect for the rights of Members of Parliament, he call another order of business until such time as we have perused these documents, and of course to await the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would have otherwise been scheduled to speak on Bill C-37 at second reading stage exactly four minutes ago. I requested a copy of the Memorandum of Agreement about 10 minutes ago. It was tabled about 15 minutes ago in the House. I just received the Memorandum of Understanding signed by officials of the Government of Canada and by officials of the Government of the United States.

It is a 17-page document. I have to take exception with the Government for proceeding with Bill C-37, notwithstanding the fact that we have argued the point as to whether or not Bill C-37 is properly before the House. I submit that that shows contempt, not only for other Hon. Members in the House but for the Chair, in view of the fact that the Chair has reserved on this particular ruling.

My question of privilege is as follows: If as a duly elected Member of Parliament I am required to speak to a particular piece of legislation, which is in question at this point in time, how am I able to do so when I have been given four minutes to read and understand a 17-page legal document?

I submit that it is your responsibility as Speaker of the House of Commons to protect the rights of individual Members of Parliament who may be affected by the actions of the Government. I cannot speak to Bill C-37 given the circumstances that occurred. The Memorandum of Agreement was just tabled. I say to you, Sir, that this is the first time I have seen this Memorandum of Agreement referred to in Bill C-37.

Mr. Speaker: I will respond immediately to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) who, as usual, has made his points succinctly. I want to say to the Hon.

Member that the situation we are facing here is one that has come about as a consequence of a unique series of events, including, of course, the unanimous consent to bring the Bill in and including, of course, that a number of days of debate have gone by.

The Hon. Member says that he has only just seen the agreement referred to in the legislation and he cannot speak to the Bill. That might well be. I say that sincerely. But the Hon. Member will have another opportunity to speak. It may be that as time goes on he will find time to look at the agreement and may feel that he is then in a position to speak. If something happens that the Hon. Member is denied the right to speak as a consequence of anything that has transpired then the Chair will hear him again.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised and shocked at the arrogance of this Government, after two and a half hours of debate during which we tried to explain that Bill C-37 is defective as to form and that the date it contains for the tabling of a document, January 19, 1987, is wrong. We will have to amend this Bill.

As for the item on page 2, we spent two and a half hours on a fairly comprehensive debate on Standing Order 108 which clearly says that the Government may not introduce a Bill that is incorrect or incomplete, with blank spaces. And now this Government is calling the same Bill after a two-and-a-half hour debate. How stubborn can you get? They refuse to understand that the Bill is defective and that it will have to be reprinted and amended to conform with the standards of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why this Government doesn't show some common sense and do what it has to do, namely, call another order of the House, since our speakers are ready.

I think it is incredible they should persevere in this blind arrogance and maintain before the House a Bill that is incorrect and defective as to form and that infringes our Standing Orders.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I want to echo the points which have been made by a number of those on this side of the House. It seems to me very, very unfortunate having had quite a serious, careful and I think thoughtful debate about the problems that present us procedurally with this Bill.

Let me make it clear that what I think is unfortunate is that the Government has brought this Bill forward nevertheless. I think in the tentative ruling you have just presented to the House it is not possible to have a vote on the Bill today. I assume that also means debate will not be completed on the Bill today. It seems to me pointless for the Government to bring this forward and to expect a debate to take place. As things could very well exist, we could all simply sit in our places and no debate would take place from now until four o'clock and by your ruling it would not be possible to move to a vote. Neither would it be possible to cease having speakers in the future. I really do plead with the Government to see sense in this case and to move to another piece of legislation which will permit us to carry forward discussion and to make at least some minimal use of the few remaining minutes of today's session of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In speaking to the point of order as to whether it is a matter of a point of order or a matter of privilege as to accessibility of the Bill to Hon. Members in preparing themselves for the debate, which is the issue now before you on a point of order, I would not for a minute have gone ahead with the debate if we felt it would prejudice the rights of anybody to enter into discussions.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. The Chair felt that there was a point of privilege on the question of the accessibility to the agreement raised by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I have ruled on that. I said that it may well be that he cannot speak now because he has not yet had a chance to look at the Memorandum, but that there may come a time when he will be able to speak. If, however, as time went by a Member for some reason due to what has happened could not speak, then I would hear him again. If something has happened that strikes the heart of whether a Member can be heard or can speak, then that, of course, would get very close to privilege. That is the position the Chair has taken. I might also point out to the Parliamentary Secretary and to other Hon. Members that Standing Order 22(2) reads:

> Government Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the Government determines.

The Government is within its rights to carry on with Bill C-37 this afternoon if it can.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to enter into the debate since I have waited patiently for an opportunity. If other Members find themselves in an awkward position, since I believe we are in the 10 minute period for speeches, I would be prepared to alleviate them of the necessity of scurrying through their notes to debate. I would ask for the floor if all points of order and privilege as to whether or not the debate should proceed are finished. I have some interesting comments—

Mr. Gauthier: Just a minute. Are you on a point of order or are you speaking to debate?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Gauthier) usually likes to wait until I have a chance to recognize him.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, I am usually polite.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on debate.

Mr. Gauthier: No. He was on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rose on a point of order but he made it quite clear before he sat down that he was prepared to carry on with debate. I am prepared to recognize the Parliamentary Secretary on debate.

• (1550)

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would argue that it is irregular for an Hon. Member to rise on a point of order and, without resuming his seat, seek recognition again for debate. That is not the regular way we proceed in this House. In fact, the Hon. Member has been recognized for two distinct actions and I submit to Your Honour that that is not the regular way to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps in trying to facilitate things, I have confused things. Is the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) putting the point that there were others rising for debate?

Mr. Penner: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the point. Perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would kindly defer. Who was rising on debate?

Mr. Penner: I was.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior on debate.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to put it on the record that even as of this time, I have been unable to get a copy of the Memorandum of Understanding from the Table Officers. I have spoken to the Pages and they cannot get one because there are not enough copies available. Again, I wish to use this to illustrate to you the position in which we as members of the Opposition are being placed when it comes to checking if the document is the same one.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised a matter of importance. I am sure something will be done as soon as possible to find copies. The Chair also points out that debate has gone on for a number of days apparently without copies or with one copy that someone could find. In any event, I recognize the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior on debate as I think that is what he wishes.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, in rising to debate this Bill, I am at the outset cognizant of Your Honour's instruction to the House that my participation will not in any way prejudice Your Honour's decision on the important point of order that has been raised this afternoon.

I must say that the softwood lumber issue is of immense importance and concern to the people of northern Ontario, the region which I have the honour of representing. Since this may be the tail end of a debate which will in time prove not to be in order and since what has already been said and what remains to be said may be determined by Your Honour to be null and void, I have no choice in the matter but to move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And fewer than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the point I wanted to make was that it is very clear from the opening speeches of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that the agreement in question was available to these Hon. Members. Hon. Members opposite who have claimed they could not get a copy of the Memorandum of Understanding had difficulties within their own caucus. On page 2377 of Hansard, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition quotes from the agreement.

Mr. Manly: Does your Leader give everything to you?

Mr. Lewis: We will get to the Leader of the New Democratic Party in a moment. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition goes on to say that this agreement determines the price. This is the agreement to which none of the members of the Liberal Party had access.

On page 2379 of Hansard, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition mentions the 30-day cancellation clause. Once again, this is from the Memorandum of Understanding which was not available to my colleagues in the Liberal Party yet the Leader of the Opposition had this agreement. He goes on at page 2380 to mention the agreement contained in this Bill. Obviously, in preparing his notes, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had available to him the Memorandum of Understanding which my colleagues opposite claim they were not able to obtain.

I do not want to leave the impression that the only competent person on that side of the House is the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the New Democratic Party also had access to the agreement. On page 2385 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) mentions paragraph 6 of the Agreement negotiated by the Government with the United States. Further down on the page, he said that he wanted to say with reference to the issue of sovereignty that the same agreement contains the following words, and he goes on. This is the Memorandum of Understanding the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) could not find. However, it was sitting there on the front-bench seat of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Langdon: I said nothing about that.

Mr. Lewis: He said: "My goodness, I'm prejudiced. I can't find it. Oh, I see, it's over there on the seat of the Hon. Member for Oshawa".

On page 2385 of Hansard—

Mr. de Corneille: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does the Speaker believe that the present debate is at all related to the Bill?

Mr. Lewis: I will save you the embarrassment of answering that, Madam Speaker, because I do not wish to embarrass the Hon. Member any further. The point is that the Memorandum of Understanding was in the hands of the Opposition, in their offices, and they did not take the time to read it. To spend the time of this House suggesting that they did not have it in their offices is nonsense and all Hon. Members know that. The fact is that the Memorandum of Understanding was quoted by both Leaders of the Opposition.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that since it is four o'clock, we should end the debate on this delightful and informative note and proceed with Private Members' Business. By the way, I was shocked to see members of the Liberal Party try to deny a private Member her right—

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. That's a lot of nonsense and he knows it too.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

The House resumed from November 20, 1986, consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) that Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising.

Madam Speaker, I think this is an extremely important matter, especially now that we have had clear evidence for a number of years that smoking is indeed harmful to the health of Canadians.

The House will recall that not long ago, I think it was December 11, 1986, The Ottawa Citizen published the results of a survey in the Ottawa-Hull region that asked people if they would be agreeable to a complete ban on smoking in offices. Much to the surprise of the firm that conducted the survey, 79 per cent supported a ban on smoking at their place of work.

Of course I know that for a long time, the medical profession in particular has always been in favour of a ban on smoking in public places. Since 1938 some very important studies have been made, and in fact I think that in France, in 1859, more than a century ago, reports made on patients who died of cancers of the lip indicated that of sixty-eight cases, sixty-six were pipe or cigar smokers. As I recall, it was in 1938 that John Hopkins University Professor Pearl proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that the mortality rate among smokers was much higher than it was among non-smokers.

A number of other studies made in Canada, Great Britain and the United States also indicated quite clearly that the death rate among male smokers was 70 per cent higher than among male non-smokers.

In 1968-69 I had the pleasure of chairing the committee which studied the whole question of tobacco and cigarette use, and I can tell you that our report had a worldwide impact because we were the first country to make an in-depth study on the harmful effects of smoking.

We made a number of recommendations and some of them have since been implemented, such as a ban on radio and television advertising, as well as warnings on cigarette packages and cartons, including certain precautions to be taken by people who did not give up smoking.

If no action is taken in this respect, I am afraid there may very well be a 50 per cent increase in the number of lung cancer cases by the turn of the next century. Lung cancer is now the main cause of death among all cancer patients. It has a direct bearing on coronary arteries, which happens to be one of leading causes of death in Canada.

I commend my colleague from Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for introducing this Bill because I think it is imperative that we do something about this disease. I use the word "disease" advisedly for the simple reason that, if we fail to take appropriate action, air pollution in offices, public places and public transit systems will boost the lung cancer rate by 50 per cent, as I said earlier.

It is rather strange that, in our report to the House in 1968-69, we recommended that the members of the Canadian population who should lead by their example in Canada be encouraged to do so. This included such people as parents, naturally, as well as teachers, doctors, nurses, and all those who had direct or indirect dealings with public. We also found some rather strange facts in our study as concerns the example which some people should give when it comes to smoking.

For instance, at the beginning, men smoked much more than women, but for some reason, during the sixties, women started to smoke more than men. However, since 1981, there has been a slight tendency for women to smoke less. Another interesting fact is that those who do smoke seem to do so more than ever because, while the number of smokers has gone down, the volume of cigarette consumption has increased, which could lead to a national disaster if we do not take action to put an end to this ill, which I find worse than acid rain, and we know what harm acid rain can cause to vegetation in this country. However, in this case, it is human beings who are being harmed.

From the submissions presented to the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare, we also found that it was essential to educate the public, and this point is closely related to the role of those who should preach by their example. However, we found, for instance, that there were cigarette machines at the door in certain school boards. Then we asked some school boards: "Why not put them in a remote spot?" And they replied: "It is our only livelihood. The money coming from the machine enables us to carry on certain activities which otherwise we could not." I think that educators entrusted with the care of our children should act consistently and intelligently. There has been no co-operation since 1968. I know that lately there has been a bit more co-operation from some professional organizations which seem to be more eager to exert pressures on the Government so that legislation is passed to eradicate totally the nefarious effects of smoking in Canada.

We should also point out that, strangely enough, youngsters under 15 years of age are smoking and drinking. Both are closely related.

Madam Speaker, I should have liked to have dealt more thoroughly with this very interesting issue but I have to close now to allow another Hon. Member to speak. I hope that when the matter comes to a vote, all political parties in the House will agree to eradicate forever the dangerous and lethal effects of smoking.

• (1610)

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Madam Speaker, it is rather refreshing to finally debate something today. If this kind of nonsense continues, perhaps we should have five or six hours of debate on Private Member's business and one hour on Orders of the Day.

It is quite appropriate that this Bill is being debated so soon after "cold turkey day". I commend the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for her Bill and would like to say a few words on behalf of the smokers of Canada, of whom I am one. I will first comment on the good things about Bill C-204. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood and I have sparred with each other in the Committee on Communications and Culture. She would not allow any smoking in that committee. I was not there the infamous day she broke all the ashtrays, but I heard a great deal about it. I believe the Hon. Member means well, although there is a clause in this Bill which does impugn minority rights.

In her remarks on the introduction of this Bill on November 20 the Hon. Member complimented the Government on the parliamentary reform which allowed her to bring in this Bill. She also said that discouraging smokers will mean more jobs in other sectors. She said:

> People who stop smoking buy other products and other services. They go to the movies and to restaurants, they buy clothes, and so forth. I think rising demand in these sectors will create more employment.

That is a very good point and very reasoned debate. She also said that this Bill "would provide for designated smoking rooms for those individuals who do not smoke, who happen to be a majority in this country". I agree with that. However, she went on to say:

> It would also mean that there would be no smoking in common carriers under federal jurisidction.

I will get into that in a moment.

The portion of Bill C-204 which makes eminent good sense is that which deals with the banning of the advertising of tobacco products. Cigarette smoking is emerging as a major public health concern for many Canadians. As a result of this growing awareness of the effects of cigarette smoking, the public wants some action on several tobacco issues, including tobacco advertising. The Non-Smokers' Rights Association has documented numerous violations of the current tobacco manufacturers' voluntary tobacco advertising and promotion, including the practice of advertising tobacco products on billboards and store posters within 200 metres of school property.

Moreover, the "Tempo" cigarette ad campaign last year raised public concern and was, in my opinion, clearly directed at recruiting new smokers among Canadian youth, in contravention of the voluntary advertising code. The new 15-cigarette Export A pack has also been a worrisome tobacco marketing practice since the lower price does make the product more accessible to Canadian youth. Unfortunately, in a declining tobacco market an increasing number of these questionable advertising and promotion campaigns can be expected.

Advertising and promoting such a hazardous product has been a source of concern for some time. This is due to the fact that advertising associates tobacco products with healthy, exciting and glamorous lifestyles, that it increases the acceptability of tobacco products among young people, and that it generally legitimizes tobacco use.

I remember that when I was very young there were advertisements on television for a certain brand which claimed to be the "coolest, cleanest, and most refreshing". You may remember that as well. My oldest sister was smoking that brand in the house at the time. I thought to myself how wonderful it would be to enjoy that coolest, cleanest, most refreshing, fun thing. Therefore, the advertising does have an impact.

A number of Canadian magazines and newspapers, including the Kingston Whig-Standard, the Brockville Recorder and Times and The Globe and Mail, are now refusing to accept tobacco advertising because they believe it is unethical to advertise a product which is so clearly hazardous to your health. They may consider banning political advertising for the same reason.

My colleagues in the federal Government have met with representatives of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council with a view toward taking stronger action on tobacco advertising and promotion. Of special concern are the issues of life-style advertising and promotion aimed at teenagers and adults, the effectiveness of current health warnings, and the effectiveness of current compliance procedures.

Smokers must face another reality which I, as a smoker, accept. More and more employers are establishing policies which restrict smoking in the workplace. For example, the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia and a variety of other companies have adopted as their goal a smoke-free workplace and are moving in that direction. Bata Industries Ltd. has already entirely banned smoking on the job. Municipalities such as the City of Ottawa are banning smoking at work stations and are working toward a complete ban on smoking in the workplace. In my home Province of British Columbia, the City of Vancouver passed a by-law significantly restricting tobacco smoke in most indoor public places in the city including places of employment. Workplaces in Vancouver must now automatically become non-smoking areas if no consensus can be reached among employees on smoking in the workplace. Smoking has also been banned in areas such as taxis, retail shops, service counters and queues.

In my own riding of Nanaimo—Alberni many municipalities and school boards are restricting the presence of tobacco smoke, but they insist on having an area somewhere in the building where employees can enjoy a puff, or sneak a puff, as is the case these days.

When this debate began on November 20 my colleague, the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), mentioned that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has proposed a new air regulation to ban smoking in Canadian aircraft for both domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less. Most smokers can accept that. Most of us manage to sit through a movie for two hours without feeling the urge. However, the key is "two hours or less".

Generally smokers are courteous. Some may be surprised at that, but we are. We normally respect the rights of others, but we have rights as well. Clause 5 of the proposed Bill reads:

No person shall smoke anywhere, other than in a designated smoking room, in or on an aircraft—a ship—a railway car—(or) a motor vehicle operated pursuant to—

This puts a whole new meaning on the old political adage that as far as the NDP are concerned, if it moves, legislate it. Why should we expect any Canadian who takes a six or seven-hour flight across the country not to be able to indulge in a cigarette? This legislation may be enforceable on a boat, a train, or a bus, but I think that is asking a bit too much on the long flights which some of us often take across the country.

We are told that one-third of Canadians smoke and two-thirds do not. We know that all Parties in this House are concerned about minority rights. We would not want to unduly infringe upon the minority rights of Canadians.

This Chamber is a good example of how courteous smokers can be. There are many unwritten rules in the House of Commons. No smoking is allowed here where we stand. I understand that is also the case in Quebec, although the previous Premier slipped one day. No coffee is allowed in this part of the Chamber and male Members must wear a jacket and tie. Female Members do not have that regulation imposed on them, but I am sure equal rights will get into that as well. Yes, Madam Speaker, you do wear a jacket and tie. Madam Speaker is looking very spiffy today.

I believe it is only common courtesy to allow those of us in the minority in Canada to continue to do as we wish as long as we do not infringe, in the long haul, on the rights of other Canadians who do not smoke.

I offer those words of wisdom on behalf of my fellow Canadians who do smoke. I hope we can pass this Bill after making a couple of amendments in committee, if at all possible, which would allow those of us who must have a puff to do so on common carriers, and particularly on airplanes.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that more and more groups are supporting this legislation. I would like to begin my remarks by listing some of the groups which have indicated their support for the legislation. I will not give a complete list, because I would not have any time left to speak on the legislation itself. Those groups which support the legislation include The Lung Association, the Medical Society of Nova Scotia, the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Health Unit, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health, the Canadian Medical Association, the Manitoba Medical Association and the Canadian Hospital Association. As I indicated, that is only a partial list because there are more groups who support the legislation.

As the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) mentioned, this is something that has been studied in the past but on which we have not had government action. The problem we face at this time is that if Members of the House do not support this legislation it will not pass. We have no guarantee that the Government will act in this matter.

I am not giving away any secrets, but it is interesting to note that the Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and myself met with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) on Wednesday morning. He indicated that as far as he knew there was no government intent to act, although he would consult with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to see if perhaps they had some plans about which he could be made aware. In fairness to the Minister of Labour, he stated that he understood something might be implemented with respect to advertising and other matters.

It is ironic that on a matter which concerns the health of so many Canadians and indeed the lives of so many Canadians, the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the enforcement of occupational health and safety across the country does not know what the Minsiter of National Health and Welfare or the President of the Treasury Board, who is responsible for workers in the federal Government domain, may or may not be doing.

I am very concerned that there is no Government action and that the best we get is an occasional indication that perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare will put his foot down on the tobacco companies. That is not good enough because it does not provide the leadership that many Canadians want.

This week the federal Law Reform Commission indicated that our federal laws with regard to workplace safety are completely inadequate. Polluters are allowed to get away with anything and it is suggested in the report that Canadian workers are treated as guinea pigs, and that it is dangerous to work in Canada. These remarks are made by a very responsible group and they indicate the problem we face in general with workplace safety. Yet, referring back to the Minister of Labour, I asked him prior to Christmas if there would be any new legislation with regard to occupational health and safety. Again, he indicated that he did not think that would happen. He could not commit himself to inaction for two years but he did not think there would be any legislation. It is evident that the Government is not taking the lives of Canadians seriously.

The Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer pointed out in his learned statement to the House that allowing smoking in Canada is costing lives. It is not a matter of whether the Member from British Columbia believes he should have the right to smoke on his flight to British Columbia because it is seven hours long. I am going to British Columbia twice in the next couple of weeks and I do not want to have to be on the same airplane as that Hon. Member because his smoking will affect my health. That is the problem.

For some reason, there are Members in the House and people across the country who believe that we are picking on them as a minority if we say they should not smoke. The truth is that if they want to smoke in an airplane, in an office building, or want to smoke at the workplace, they are endangering not only the health but the lives of other Canadians. Public education is necessary for those people, as well as young people of Canada, but it is not just a matter of talking about the dangers to their own health and lives, but a matter of them understanding how they are hurting other Canadians.

There are very few Canadians who really believe that smoking is acceptable. There are very few Canadians who believe they are not hurting themselves when they smoke. There is an attitudinal problem among a number of smokers because they believe they are hurting no one else but themselves.

Perhaps someone in the middle of a field or at the bottom of a mine shaft is not damaging the health of other Canadians, but most Canadians work closer to each other and travel in more confined quarters. There are areas of the House of Commons that are certainly not very healthy to walk through when there have been a number of smokers there.

We need legislation that will protect Canadians. I believe the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood should be congratulated not only for presenting this Bill in the House, but for the very forceful manner in which she has often made sure that people across the country know that this legislation is here. I hope Members of Parliament will do the same as the Member for Broadview-Greenwood and ensure that the people of Canada know that this legislation is before the House of Commons and solicit their views on how the legislation can be strengthened, rather than weakened as proposed by the Conservative Member from British Columbia who, to be fair, I believe is speaking for himself.

It is important that this legislation be strengthened so that Canadians can work, travel and live in a healthy place. That is the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I want to commend my hon. colleague, the Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), for introducing this Bill in the House.

The Bill seeks, through a number of measures, to control smoking by Canadians and thereby improve and protect the health of Canadians. This is an objective that all Members of the House support, as the health hazards of smoking are very well documented.

Measures to control smoking in public places are receiving strong public support and have resulted in a number of government actions and proposed initiatives. They are initiatives to control or restrict smoking in public areas, in public transportation, and in the workplace. Public support will continue to increase, not only among non-smokers but among smokers as well. It is important to note the support of many smokers for these measures as it is a recognition by the smokers of their responsibility to avoid exposing non-smokers to tobacco smoke. This support must be encouraged and sustained in order to avoid situations which could create confrontation and conflict.

Exposure of non-smokers to tobacco smoke varies greatly depending on the size of a room or other indoor areas, the number of smokers, the amount of ventilation and other factors which determine the concentration of tobacco smoke in a given location. There is, however, no doubt that exposure should and must be controlled.

In proceeding with control of smoking in the workplace there is a need to recognize that smoking is considered an addiction by smokers themselves; that smokers still constitute approximately 30 per cent of the workforce; and that the support of smokers is necessary to achieve the objective of controlling smoking in the workplace.

The approach used to achieve this objective must be carefully considered to ensure a successful voluntary compliance with such a policy on smoking in the workplace. Recognized authorities in health, education and psychology all agree that voluntary compliance based on the full co-operation of all concerned is the assured method of achieving the successful application of any new practice, behaviour or policy.

The Department of National Health and Welfare and Labour Canada support this approach and the recent U.S. Surgeon General's report states that creating a smoke-free workplace is successfully achieved when such a policy is jointly developed by management, employees and employee organizations; is instituted in phases and is accompanied by support and assistance for smokers to quit smoking.

It is apparent that the only two ways to meet the intent of the proposed legislation are, first, to totally ban smoking everywhere federal employees are located or, second, to provide a separately ventilated smoking room at each federal worksite. Let us review each option in turn. As defined in the proposed legislation, a totally smoke-free environment would have to be provided in worksites which include federal buildings, airports, railway stations, rented or shared accommodation with employers not under federal jurisdiction and with members of the general public, penitentiaries, buildings and ships in which employees work and live 24 hours a day, and in a number of other varied work locations.

Notwithstanding these differences in worksites, work situations and employee populations, employers under federal jurisdiction would have to ensure a smoke-free environment in situations over which they have a minimum of control.

Let us now review the second option to establish separately ventilated smoking rooms in each federal worksite. Costs for establishing such rooms would vary greatly and would depend on the extent of the renovations required to each building's existing structure and ventilation systems. A recent survey indicated that public service departments are located in 30,000 worksites across Canada—I repeat, 30,000 worksites. There are tens of thousands of other worksites under federal jurisdiction to which this legislation would also apply. The establishment of a separately ventilated room in each of these thousands of worksites, plus the ongoing expense of maintaining or renting the space required for these rooms, would result in astronomical costs to the Canadian taxpayer.

Apart from cost considerations, establishing these rooms would encourage the continuation of a habit which is recognized as harmful by all and which society is increasingly trying to discourage. The Vancouver by-law on smoking in the workplace, which is viewed by many as a most progressive approach, allows for more flexibility in establishing smoking areas. These areas can be established where agreed upon by all employees and are not limited to separately ventilated smoking rooms.

It is apparent that there are problems with these two options. Other measures must, therefore, be considered which will resolve the general issue of smoking in the workplace in a fair and responsible manner. The Government is aware of and is closely monitoring the rapidly evolving changes which are taking place in employee and public attitudes and in other employer practices and experiences on smoking in the workplace. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) has recently issued interim guidelines to assist Labour Canada safety officers in their investigations and response to complaints regarding smoking in worksites under federal jurisdictions. These Labour Canada safety officers are responsible for the application of occupational safety and health regulations to prevent accidents and injury to health arising out of, linked with or occurring in the course of employment.

Changes are also occurring rapidly with respect to smoking in the Public Service. In 1985, the Treasury Board issued guidelines on minimizing the effects of tobacco smoke. These guidelines were jointly developed and approved by the Public Service Unions represented in the National Joint Council. It was agreed that these guidelines were an important first step in addressing the issue of smoking in the workplace and it was also agreed they would be upgraded to a more stringent standard by 1988.

In early 1986, a survey of Public Service Departments indicated that over half of the departments surveyed had developed departmental policies on smoking. The Department of National Health and Welfare, Statistics Canada and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion were the first to implement smoking bans in the workplace. These measures have resulted in many employees quitting smoking.

In less than two years since the issuance of the Treasury Board guidelines on smoking, there has been much progress made in controlling smoking and continued progress is anticipated. I believe that such initiative should be encouraged.

I further believe that introducing legislation which imposes behavioural changes on employers and employees, without due consideration of the special and varied circumstances, and situations of which people in the workplace are aware, should be avoided at this time. Such actions would be premature and disruptive to the harmonious resolution of this issue which is already underway.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the Bill before the House today, Bill C-204 presented by Ms. McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood), the purpose of which is to control smoking in the workplace—I will run through this fairly quickly—to add tobacco and tobacco products to the list of products under Part 2 of the schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, and also to ban smoking from the workplace and from public transportation.

First of all, Madam Speaker, I have to say that I am a reformed smoker. Those are probably the worst, but the fact remains it has been nearly seven or eight years since I touched the noxious weed, and I certainly feel a lot happier and I think a lot healthier. I stopped smoking for the simple reason I thought it was a filthy and unhealthy habit. It made me take more trips to the cleaners than I would have liked and made me cough occasionally, and since I had been an asthma sufferer for years, I finally decided that enough was enough. I quit just like that, and it wasn't too hard. I would encourage all Hon. Members in this House who persist in this unfortunate habit to try and make the effort. It is possible, it isn't so hard and it is better for your health and your bank account.

I wanted to say that what makes this Bill particularly interesting is that even when I was a smoker, I did not like being in a closed space like a plane or an office and have to put up with cigarette and tobacco smoke. I smoked very rarely in such places, and I found it annoying when others did. So that doesn't make me one of your hard-core smokers, but in any case, I realized that I was getting sinus trouble and all kinds of health problems and that it was not exactly a healthy habit.

There are a number of experiences in life that have a lasting impact, and one of the things that surprised me in my political career was the reaction of Canadians to the urea formaldehyde issue. Members will recall when insulation was the thing to save energy and keep our homes warm. The Government had been campaining vigorously for home insulation, and there was one product called urea formaldehyde that was very popular for this purpose. A few years later, it was found that urea formaldehyde produced dangerous gases. Then everybody wanted to get rid of it.

Madam Speaker, I was told that smoking a single cigarette in a house is as bad as all the gases produced by urea formaldehyde. That made me stop and think, and I said to myself: If urea formaldehyde is bad, and just one cigarette is as bad as urea formaldehyde, we must be crazy to go on smoking while we are spending millions of dollars on getting rid of urea formaldehyde, as we did at the time. But why do we continue to smoke in enclosed spaces? This really struck me because I was then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Urban Affairs and I had to try to sell the idea of home insulation while telling people: Listen, urea formaldehyde is hazardous. But at the same time people had forgotten that smoking was hazardous as well.

I think the consideration of this Bill has been a rewarding experience and that, at least in principle, it is a constructive measure to restrict smoking in enclosed spaces. I am told—and I have no reason to doubt it—that it is impossible to recycle all the air aboard aircraft. Although there are places or areas, seats reserved for smokers, non-smokers eventually have to breathe the same air since the same atmosphere and same poisons are recycled. And that is bad.

Not long ago I read a newspaper article about the fact that in the United States it is illegal to smoke aboard carriers of fewer than 30 passengers. Well, if it is illegal to smoke aboard a public carrier of fewer than 30 passengers—and that is the American law—for heaven's sake, why do we not have this kind of legislation in Canada and adopt restrictive measures concerning smoking in enclosed spaces?

I also want to say that the example given by adults to children is cause for concern. I know that children like to identify with some of the things done by adults, not necessarily good things, and with respect to current television programming one might be led to think that smoking a cigarette projects a macho image and looks nice, but this is wrong.

The same applies to the publicity for beer and alcohol. Advertisers should not try to appeal to young people by telling them that it is "in" to smoke and to drink, that it will make life more enjoyable for them. It is simply not true.

I know that smoking has increased recently among young people. I can sincerely tell you that this worries me.

I also believe that the Government is contradicting itself on the whole tobacco issue. I have here a release of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, which represents over 150,000 public servants the Government to use its power, asking to ban smoking in the workplace.

On the other hand, last October 27, the Federal Court of Appeal, in the case of Peter Wilson, which dealt with hazardous substances such as tobacco, gave a majority ruling which I find hard to understand. According to this ruling, the regulations on hazardous substances did not apply to tobacco smoke in the workplace. This reflects a lack of consistency in the Government policy on smoking in the workplace.

The Treasury Board has appealed this ruling, but I wanted to raise this issue because I know quite well that, in certain Government agencies, such as the Department of Health and the Public Service Commission, which I visited recently, there are areas reserved for smokers. I have been told that it is difficult to extend this to the whole Public Service and to set aside special areas for those who want to smoke. All sorts of reasons are given including the so-called smokers' rights. But I have the right to breathe clean air. Economic points are also raised. Well, I will tell the Government and all those who come up with this argument that according to my information, it costs $6 billion in health care to fight the effects of smoking, while the tobacco industry brings in only $3 billion in revenues. Therefore, in monetary terms the disavantages of tobacco smoking outweigh the avantages on a 2 to 1 ratio. Madam Speaker, I feel this simply does not make sense from an economic point of view.

Let us not forget that there are benefits to non-smoking. Non-smokers pay lower life insurance premiums because they are less likely to shorten their life expectancy.

Madam Speaker, I do not want to overlook the major consideration that the cost per capita to the Canadian community is enormous. In the United States, for instance, a smoker costs his or her employer $5,000 a year from losses due to absenteeism, morbidity, insurance costs, reduced productivity, maintenance, furniture and equipment depreciation, as well as employee morale. Not to mention risks of fire: the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) reminds me that smoking is a fire hazard. These data can be found in a letter from Ottawa resident Michel Ouimet which was published in the daily newspaper Le Droit on June 9, 1986. I thank Mr. Ouimet for his information on the high cost of smoking which is indeed a fact.

Madam Speaker, you are indicating to me that my time is running out. I am sorry because I would have liked to have provided other examples to convince the House to adopt this Bill at second reading. All we want is to refer this Bill to a committee for a detailed item by item study, as well as an in-depth consideration of a Bill which deserves to be adopted while contributing to the education of the Canadian people in general by pointing out the dangers of tobacco smoking.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am delighted on behalf of my constituents in Nepean—Carleton to rise and address Bill C-204, a Bill to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers, and to amend the Hazardous Products Act. It is a Bill introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Madam Speaker, and colleagues, the human and economic dimensions of the cost of smoking are horrendous. When we think about the damage to health, the loss of time in the workplace, the anguish of the families who are involved, and about the cost of medical expenses in the course of time that may be in place, it is a horrendus cost for Canadians and for mankind in general.

Every year cigarette smoking results in over 30,000 premature deaths. It is the single most important cause of preventable illness and death. Thirty per cent of cancer deaths, 30 per cent of heart disease, and 90 per cent of chronic obstructive lung disease deaths are caused by tobacco and its effluents.

Mounting awareness of the health hazards associated with smoking and "passive" smoking keeps the question of smoking in the workplace in the centre of controversy. Research has shown that side-stream smoke, or smoke in the atmosphere, in some ways is as dangerous as smoke inhaled by the smoker. Smoke from the burning end of a cigarette has high concentrations of many noxious compounds. Results of some international studies indicate that non-smokers, who were exposed to cigarette smoke in the workplace, had as much lung function impairment as if they had smoked up to 10 cigarettes per day. Colleagues, think about that. At least 500 non-smokers die each year in Canada from lung cancer that may have been caused by tobacco smoke in the workplace.

Maternal smoking can result in fetal injury, spontaneous abortion, and low birth weight. Parental smoking is a major contributor to respiratory illness in children. Involuntary exposure to cigarette smoke is particularly a problem for those who are regularly exposed to smoke at work.

Increasingly, public institutions and private companies are moving toward the creation of a smoke-free work environment. More and more private businesses are introducing no smoking policies in the workplace, and municipalities are enacting by-laws to prohibit or cut down on smoking in public places.

We have excellent examples of this in the City of Ottawa, the City of Kanata, and the City of Nepean. Municipalities across the land are recognizing this, as has the federal Government to a certain extent.

Treasury Board has issued guidelines to government departments and agencies outlining measures which should be taken in order to minimize the effects of tobacco smoke in the workplace. The guidelines are as follows. Managers should consult with their employees in order to designate, where desirable and possible, non-smoking areas in the workplace. Areas where smoking is permitted should, if possible, be located near air vents. The following should be designated as non-smoking areas—elevators, stairwells, change rooms, computer rooms, clinics, health units, service wickets, service counters, and any other location where the public is involved. In addition, Departments may also designate as non-smoking areas all or part of cafeterias, waiting-rooms, lounges, hospitals, and theatres. Smoking should not be permitted during meetings unless there is a consensus among all who are present. Persons who occupy private offices or have shared workplaces may designate their offices or workplaces as non-smoking areas.

This initiative is to be complimented. However, many of my constituents share with me the concern that these guidelines are not being adhered to, that managers in the Public Service are not identifying and designating non-smoking areas in the workplace as it was thought they would. Thus, other initiatives will have to follow to bring this about.

A survey to ascertain the views of federal Members of Parliament on the issue of smoking in the workplace was conducted by the Non-Smokers' Rights Association. It indicated that 85 per cent of the Members of Parliament who responded support or are sympathetic to non-smokers' rights in the workplace, 89 per cent of the respondents favour the establishment of non-smoking areas in the workplace, and 78 per cent of the Members of Parliament who responded believe that Treasury Board should order all Deputy Ministers to establish non-smoking work areas. In addition—and this is the interesting statistic which I hope in time will follow through to a material result—only 22 per cent of the Members of Parliament who responded were opposed to supporting a Private Member's Bill dealing with the problem of smoking in workplaces under federal jurisdiction.

As a non-smoker I am very sympathetic to the problem created by side-stream smoke in the workplace. As a Member of Parliament I believe that the health and rights of non-smokers should be respected. Perhaps it is difficult for me to recognize and accept the problems of smokers, but I believe the rights of non-smokers are more important.

In other ways the federal Government is concerned about the devastating effects of smoking on Canadians. It has already put into place policies and programs which aim to reduce tobacco consumption in the country. The Government has been active in developing a policy on tobacco which is both comprehensive and health oriented. Accordingly, I support—and I believe the Government supports it—the essence and spirit of this Private Member's Bill which attempts to protect Canadians from the hazards of smoking.

I could outline many areas this afternoon which I think are important as far as some of the government initiatives are concerned. The Department of National Health and Welfare devotes thousands of dollars each year to carry out routine monitoring of tar, nicotine, and carbon monoxide levels of cigarettes and to perform tobacco smoke analysis and research. It also conducts epidemiological studies and behaviourial research on selected tobacco topics such as the effect of involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke. Surveys to monitor the rate of tobacco consumption among Canadians are also undertaken.

The entire program falls under the "Break Free for a New Generation of Non-Smokers" theme. To date the program has been spearheaded by a national advertising campaign targeted at youth aged 12 years to 19 years. The youth message has been produced in rock video style for television and radio featuring the break-free theme and challenging young people to be themselves, to go their own way, and to break free from the pressures of smoking.

The federal Government has also met with representatives of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council with a view toward taking stronger action on tobacco advertising and promotion. There have been serious concerns expressed by many Canadians about the effectiveness of the Council's current voluntary code on tobacco advertising and promotion. Several options are being considered, and I hope legislative measures restricting tobacco advertising will become a real possibility.

Recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) proposed a new air regulation to ban smoking on Canadian aircraft for both domestic and transborder flights of less than two hours. The action is a positive step in ensuring that the travelling public is protected from involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke.

The federal Government plans to build upon these accomplishments in order to continue the decline in the rate of smoking. Surveys of public attitudes indicate that Canadians favour current initiatives in this direction. Enhancement of the federal Government tobacco policy must be directed toward improving the protection of Canadians against tobacco smoke.

I hope in the course of time that all Hon. Members of the House will see fit to support the type of legislation being debated this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I would prefer, if other Members are agreeable, to call it five o'clock now, rather than speak for two minutes and leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) this order shall be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 4.59 p.m.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present petitions on behalf of Canadians concerning a monopoly situation being created for drug companies engaged in research which will prevent competition by less expensive generic drugs, thus leading to an increase in the price of drugs for the Canadian consumer and severely restricting the ability of many Canadians to buy the drugs they need; and the amendments to the Patent Act that will directly affect all Canadian men and women not covered by public or private health insurance plans; and Government proposals that will further increase the high cost of provincial drug plans; and the fact that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's making concessions to the United States during the free trade talks, to the detriment of the average consumer.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject these proposals that will increase the price of drugs for Canadians.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have other petitions dealing with another subject.

The petitioners humbly submit that whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language, which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information; whereas the tariff has little negative effect upon the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canadian consumers, book publishers, sellers, distributors, and Canada's culture; and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain upon the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade.

These petitioners come from the Windsor area, from out west, and from the Toronto area.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I again have the honour to present a petition under the provisions of Standing Order 106. This petition is signed by people from Flin Flon, Manitoba; Flin Flon, Saskatchewan; and Creighton, Saskatchewan.

The petitioners humbly call upon the House of Commons to reject the proposals of the federal Government which will result in an increase in prescription drug prices for Canadians. In their petition the petitioners state that they believe this is yet another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States, at the expense of the average Canadian, in the free trade negotiations. They state their belief that this will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs and will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from Canadians living in Montreal, Ahuntsic and Montreal North who respectfully state:

That the monopoly position given drug companies engaging in research will prevent competition by less expensive generic drugs, thus leading to an increase in the price of drugs for Canadian consumers and severely restricting the ability of many people to purchase the drugs they need;

That the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will have a direct impact on Canadians who are not covered by public or private drug plans;

That the Government's proposals will further increase the high cost of provincial health insurance plans and that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's making concessions to the United States in the course of the free trade talks, to the detriment of the average consumer.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject the proposals that will increase the price of drugs for Canadians.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have with me today, pursuant to Standing Order 106, many petitions which are calling for the removal of the offensive tax on reading which is both discriminatory and a disincentive to our population. The petition reads:

WHEREAS the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited access to Canadians to literature and information, and;

WHEREAS the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and;

WHEREAS rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries.

WHEREFORE the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to: rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

I have thousands of names. People from Glencoe, Ontario, Collingwood, Ontario, Calgary, Grand Forks, Toronto, Vancouver, Hanover, Ontario, Winnipeg, Windsor and Marine Drive, Vancouver. The petitioners are from across the land and each and every one of them from Calgary, Edmonton, Montreal and the Northwest Territories hope that the Government will listen to and heed their plea to remove the tax on reading.

RESEARCH—OPPOSITION TO CUT-BACKS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present, the first from petitioners from across Canada. They call upon the Parliament of Canada, first to rescind the funding cut-backs to the National Research Council, including all consequent terminations and cut-backs in research activities, second, to provide funding for the space program from sources other than the National Research Council's budget and, third, to develop a national policy for research, science and technology based upon a target of 2.5 per cent of the gross national product devoted to research and development.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from constituents in my riding in the Wynyard, Dafoe and Mozart area who call upon Parliament to reject proposals before the House now that will, in their opinion, increase the price of prescription drugs. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject that legislation.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition on behalf of residents from a wide-ranging number of communities in Canada, from Whitehorse, Yellowknife, Victoria, Winnipeg, Toronto, Mississauga, Ottawa and parts of Nova Scotia. The petition concerns the proposal of the Government to impose a tax on the book publishing industry. The tariff that has been achieved is seen by these petitioners as one that will have a severe deleterious effect on our book publishing industry. It will cause a major rise in book prices, place a strain on our libraries by a cut-back of budgets and, therefore, the petitioners present and humbly pray that Parliament to rescind this tariff because it represents irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and will severely compromise in many ways the cultural industries as we negotiate a new trade arrangement with the United States.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners mostly from my home constituency and surrounding areas. I add these names to the hundreds of names that have already been presented on this particular issue. These petitioners call upon the Government to withdraw or reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for all Canadians. They recognize that these proposals are already before Parliament.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 106 I would like to present petitions at this time from residents of Vancouver, West Vancouver, Victoria, Nanaimo and other centres on Vancouver Island. They relate to the Government's decision to place a retaliatory tariff on book imports, and state that this measure is hurting Canadians much more than it is hurting Americans. It is limiting the access of Canadians to literature and information from very important sources.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-246, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, sale of liquor.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to re-introduce, and I wish to emphasize the word "re-introduce", my private Member's Bill of March, 1986, from the first session of the 33rd Parliament, entitled an Act to Amend the Canada Elections Act repealing Section 67 which prohibits the sale of alcoholic beverages during federal elections and federal by-elections.

Over the past year I have received considerable positive response for such an amendment from organizations like the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association, the tourism industries of Alberta and Ontario, the Tourism Industry Association of Canada and the Canadian Restaurant and Food Association. Many small businesses in Canada will be very pleased to have this amendment passed because it will have a positive effect on our tourism industry. I should add, Sir, that it will also expand the federal treasury.

I call upon the House to ensure that this Bill is agreed to, as has been called for a number of times by Canada's Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Jean Marc Hamel.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT AND PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to inroduce Bill C-247, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my intent to introduce this Bill which amends the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, there is a very contradictory set of rules which apply to federal Government employees who wish to take part in elections, go to conventions, assist in elections and the like. It is the intent of my proposed legislation to ensure that people who work for the federal Government are able to act like other Canadian citizens by being politically involved.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS—CDIC

CHANGE OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the referral made earlier of appointments by Order in Council which were tabled last week. Orders Nos. 2810 and 2811 respecting the Canadian Development Investment Corporation which were referred to the Standing Committee on Government Operations should be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion. I would ask that the record show that.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED IMPERFECTION—BILL C-37—S.O. 108—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Before I call Orders of the Day, I have a ruling to make arising out of the debate which occurred on Friday, January 23, 1987. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) rose on a point of order to argue that violence had been done to Standing Order 108 in Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

Standing Order 108 reads as follows:

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West referred to Subclause (3) of Clause 2 of the Bill in which the Memorandum of Understanding is clearly mentioned establishing the relationship between this Bill and the Canada-U.S. Agreement. The Hon. Member complained particularly of lines 11, 12 and 13 at page 2 of the Bill where reference is made to the tabling of the Canada-U.S. memorandum on softwood products as having been made on January 19, 1987, and recorded as a Sessional Paper, the number of which is omitted in the Bill. He subsequently submitted that debate on the Bill should be deemed a nullity and that the Government should be required to reintroduce the Bill and commence the debate and its proceedings all over again.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) admitted that the Memorandum of Understanding had not been tabled as had been originally intended and conceded that a clerical error had been made. He suggested that the correction of the date of the tabling and the insertion of the proper Sessional Paper number in Clause 2 could be made by way of amendment at committee stage. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary argued that the date of the tabling of the Memorandum of Understanding and the absence of the Sessional Paper number did not go to the essence of Bill C-37.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) maintained that because there was a blank in line 12 on page 2 of this Bill, this made the Bill entirely unacceptable, according to Standing Order 108, and that consequently, the Government should withdraw the faulty Bill and present an amended version with the correct date and the correct numbers of related documents.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) referred the Chair to a previous Speaker's ruling on the drug patent Bill which occurred in June 1986 when the Speaker refused to propose the question on the introduction of the said Bill because the Royal Recommendation which was required in that case had not been secured. They drew the analogy that, not having gone through the proper procedures, Bill C-37 ought to be rejected in the same manner.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) claimed that since the Memorandum of Understanding is essential to the functioning of the law, Bill C-37 is defective because the said Memorandum of Understanding is not contained therein. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski), in his presentation, attempted to define an imperfect Bill. He stated that a blank Bill would be imperfect. He submitted that failure to outline the principles of a Bill or details pertaining to the principles of a Bill could render a Bill void, but that in the present case the House is faced with "simply a slight technicality that can be easily changed".

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) contended that because of the wrong date and the omitted document number, Bill C-37 is flawed, that the flaw is fatal, that the proceedings thus far are irregular and that the Bill and the debate thereon should be ruled void ab initio.

[Translation]

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) countered that no Bill was perfect in itself and that Bill C-37 was sufficiently complete to be adopted on second reading and referred to a committee, where it could be improved. He added that no Members had been prejudiced by this and that the Chair should decide to let the debate continue.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) referred to a ruling of the Chair in the previous Parliament which can be found at Hansard, page 5139, of June 26, 1984. At that time there were blanks in copies of the printed Bill in the hands of Hon. Members but, as the Deputy Speaker informed the House, there were no blanks in the House copy filed with the Table at the time of introduction. Therefore, that particular case is unfortunately of little guidance since there was in fact a blank in Bill C-37 when it was introduced on January 19 last.

At this point, it might be desirable to relate what proceedings have transpired so far on Bill C-37.

On January 19, 1987, during Routine Proceedings, the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) tabled a Notice of Ways and Means motion relating to the Canada-U.S. softwood lumber Memorandum of Understanding and asked that a day be designated for its consideration pursuant to Standing Order 84(1) and 84(2). At three o'clock p.m. the same day, by unanimous consent so as to waive the restrictions of Standing Orders 84(1) which prevent the consideration of such motions on the same day they are tabled, the said motion of Ways and Means was concurred in on recorded division.

Bill C-37, the Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act, was introduced and read the first time, again by unanimous consent so as to waive the notice prescriptions of the Standing Orders. A Royal Recommendation duly signed by the Governor General was properly attached to the Bill.

The House gave unanimous consent once again to proceed forthwith with the consideration of the second-reading motion, thereby suspending Standing Order 111(1) which stipulates that the three several readings of a Bill shall occur on separate sitting days. During the debate on the same day, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) moved a six-month hoist amendment to the second-reading motion. On Thursday, January 22, the question was put on the amendment and it was negatived on a recorded division.

[Translation]

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) subsequently moved the previous question, namely: "That the question now be put."

That is where we were after four days of debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-37, and it was at this point that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) raised his point of order.

• (1130)

In arriving at a decision the Chair has reviewed all of the arguments and I will attempt to deal with most of them. I have already told the Hon. Member for Western Arctic that the precedent he alluded to, while similar in its content, was of little guidance because the official copy of the Bill he referred to did not contain blanks at the time of introduction in June of 1984. I thank him nevertheless for his comments.

The Hon. Member for Churchill and the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre make reference to the June, 1986 drug patent Bill and I must say that that precedent is not quite on point either. If the Speaker ruled, as he did in June, 1986, it was not because of Standing Order 108 but because of Standing Order 86(2) which requires that the Royal Recommendation be annexed to every Bill which requires one. Bill C-37 had, on January 19, 1987, a Royal Recommendation properly attached to it.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and the Hon. Member for Spadina made reference to the fact that the Memorandum of Understanding is not contained in the Bill. I refer them to a ruling made on May 17, 1956 which established that it was not necessary to include agreements in Bills providing for the carrying into effect of those agreements. The Speaker referred the House to Chapter 71 of the Statutes of 1948, an Act to provide for the carrying into effect of treaties of peace between Canada and Italy, Romania, Hungary and Finland, in which none of the agreements were inserted in the Bill.

[Translation]

After resolving these two important points, the Chair still has to deal with what was said by the Hon. Members for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), with respect to Standing Order 108 and their statement that Bill C-37 was a Bill in blank and in an imperfect shape owing to lines 11 and 12 on page 2 of said Bill.

[English]

My predecessors have been very diligent in the past in ruling blank Bills out of order. These Bills were usually Private Members' Bills introduced and read a first time and subsequently found to have only a title and for which no text existed or had been finalized. I refer Hon. Members to a ruling of Speaker Jerome on May 16, 1978, at page 5461 of Hansard, and more particularly to a ruling of Speaker Sauvé who, on December 15, 1980, declared the proceedings relating to Bill C-622 null and void. She said the following and I quote from page 5746 of Hansard:

> —while the document with respect to the motion was prepared, the Bill itself had not been drafted and, therefore, was not ready for introduction.

Standing Order 69 is very clear:

> No Bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

It seems that Standing Order 108 was very clear to Speaker Sauvé and the Bill in blank shape meant simply a Bill with only a title or only partially drafted.

The aforementioned references are cited to establish the difference between a Bill in blank shape and a Bill containing a blank. In the opinion of the Chair, Bill C-37 is not a blank Bill according to our practice and previous Speakers' rulings, but without doubt, as was so ably demonstrated by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), Bill C-37 does contain a blank. It also contains an error, namely, the reference to the tabling of the Memorandum of Understanding on January 19, 1987. Having come to the conclusion that what we are dealing with are errors or anomalies in this Bill, the Chair must decide whether these errors render the Bill imperfect in relation to Standing Order 108.

On September 24, 1985 the President of the Privy Council sought the unanimous consent of the House to correct errors in Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, which had been introduced earlier, and stated that a new Royal Recommendation had been obtained accordingly. The House gave its consent. While there was no ruling from the Chair, it was obvious at the time that the errors in Bill C-75, which omitted in its title and text as well as in the Royal Recommendation, references to the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, were so grave as to render the Bill imperfect. Because the errors were fundamental to Bill C-75, only two recourses were available to the Minister; either obtain consent to correct the errors or start again.

The Chair has reviewed the errors at page 2 of Bill C-37 and the arguments surrounding them, including those of the Deputy Prime Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary. I have concluded that the two mistakes do not affect the essence, the principles, the objects, the purposes or the conditions of Bill C-37. The Chair is also satisfied that the terms of the Royal Recommendation are not affected or altered.

However, the matter cannot lie there. This point of order has taken up much of the House's time, indeed a full sitting day. The House might allow me to add that it has preoccupied your Speaker over the past weekend.

In seeking a solution I was inspired by the ruling of May 17, 1956, which I referred to earlier. In elaborating on the first reading procedure Speaker Beaudoin said:

> —at the moment the Honourable Member cannot raise a point of order because he does not have a copy of the bill. The bill has not been printed. My satisfaction must be made on a very summary basis because Honourable Members cannot expect the Speaker to study every bill in an effort to find whether or not something has been omitted. Honourable Members have taken care of that situation themselves by insisting in their procedure that after second reading all bills be referred to one of their standing committees or to the Committee of the Whole.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition at page 79, Citation 238, says:

> When a bill is under consideration, points of order should not be raised on matters which could be disposed of by moving amendments.

The errors in Bill C-37 could indeed be corrected by an amendment in committee, but it seems to the Chair a rather cumbersome solution to correct what is essentially a minor error or oversight.

Pursuant to Standing Order No. 1, I have reviewed the practice in the United Kingdom and in the Lok Sabha of India and found the following. At page 493 of the Practice and Procedure of Parliament, Third Edition, edited by Kaul and Shakdher it is stated:

> No alteration can be made in a Bill as introduced or as reported by a Select or Joint Committee except by way of an amendment adopted in the House. However, the Speaker has the power to correct any obvious printing or clerical error at any stage of a Bill by issue of a corrigendum to the Bill.

In the Twentieth Edition of Erskine May at pages 377, 383 and 526 the Speaker of the House of Commons at Westminster is given considerable latitude in altering minor errors in motions and bills.

Therefore, I hereby order the Clerk of the House to alter the House copy of Bill C-37 as follows:

> lines 11, 12 and 13 shall be struck from the Bill, line 10 shall be altered by adding a period after the words "December 30, 1986" and by striking out the word "and".

By doing this the incorrect tabling date and blank document number are removed from the Bill. However, that part of Subclause 2(3) which allows for recourse to the Memorandum of Understanding in interpreting the schedule remains. The alteration being made is therefore not one of substance but one which will correct the errors complained of. The Law Clerk and parliamentary Counsel shall also reprint the Bill accordingly, including an explanatory note referring to this ruling and the above-mentioned alterations ordered by the Chair.

This is not an innovation on the part of the Chair, for Speaker Jerome on April 23, 1975 ordered certain amendments made in committee, stripped from a Bill, and ordered a reprint of the Bill. Members may wish to consult Hansard, page 469 of that day.

In closing, I wish to add a few comments on clerical errors and oversights, for I do not necessarily take them to be of little significance. This error has been the subject of a full day's debate; it has now caused the reprint of a Bill at considerable expense. It has proccupied Members on both sides of the House for several days, and has been of grave concern to your Speaker. No doubt this error will continue to be a point of some controversy. Let not those responsible for it be confident that in the future this ruling may be used to cure their mistakes. It is possible that a clerical error can affect the fundamental principles of fair play that govern parliamentary proceedings and debate. This ruling addresses the clerical error in Bill C-37 only. In future such clerical errors will have to be assessed with regard to their impact on the draft legislation before the House, and the consequences that will flow therefrom.

[Translation]

Let there be no misunderstanding. This kind of error can affect the rules of fair play that govern our proceedings. This ruling corrects only the anomaly in Bill C-37. In future, such errors will have to be considered in terms of their impact on the proposed legislation before the House and the consequences that may result.

[English]

Accordingly, debate on the second reading of Bill C-37, as altered by the Speaker, will proceed.

I wish to thank all Hon. Members for their contribution to the debate on Friday, which the Chair took as extremely serious. I hope that the comments in this ruling will make it very clear that if mistakes are made this is not a ruling to be looked to with much comfort for the correction of those mistakes, and as a precedent it must be viewed in its most narrow and factual form.

Again, I thank all Hon. Members for their conduct during what was a very difficult question, a question that touches on the rights of all Members, and especially what must be accepted and understood in our parliamentary tradition, that the rules of procedure are very important to the conduct of this place.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may seek your guidance on a matter arising out of your very thoughtful and complete ruling.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is this. Since we do not have before us copies of Bill C-37 reprinted as directed by you in your ruling, would it not be more consistent with the appropriate operation of House business that debate on this Bill be deferred until we can have the Bill before us corrected as set forth in your ruling?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West raises an important question to which the Chair gave some consideration last evening.

The practice is that the Bill is in the process, immediately upon my ruling, of being corrected at the table. Copies of the Bill as corrected in longhand are available to Members. That is a practice that has been followed in the past.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have another question which I would like to put, with your indulgence.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, you have set out the authority you have with respect to correcting errors in Bills. Under the circumstances, would it be possible for you to use this authority to strike out the clause imposing the export tax on our softwood lumber going to the United States, because it is clearly an error on the part of the Government which is very harmful to the public interest, if it is perpetuated.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has illustrated how many various issues were raised, obliquely as they may have been, during the debate on Friday.

I apologize to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I have notice of a question of privilege, and I will hear the Hon. Member.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I have to rise this morning on a matter which I think is a very serious question of privilege reflecting on all Members of this House. It arises out of comments made on Friday by the Member of Parliament for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), which I think reflect upon Parliament and may be in contempt of Parliament itself.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The point of order is pertinent to this question of privilege?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, my point of order is directly related to the point of privilege.

The Member quite rightly brought the question of privilege to the attention of the Chair and the Chamber at the earliest possible moment. But, in view of the nature of my colleague's question of privilege, I submit to you that it is inappropriate that it proceed at this time without the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) being in the Chamber to hear the comments of Members, and to participate in the debate. We will try to reach him immediately in order that he may be in attendance for any comments on this matter. I would ask you to defer it until that time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has raised a matter. Without ruling as to whether it is a question of privilege, the Chair has no hesitation in saying that it is an important matter, and it may well be a grievance of some weight, and, depending on what is heard, it might be a question of privilege.

I would ask Hon. Members to consider that it has been my practice whenever a matter was raised as a question of privilege to ask if the Hon. Member who might be the Member complained of was in the Chamber. It has been the disposition of the House to try to be as reasonable as possible in ensuring that when a complaint is made of the conduct of another Hon. Member that if that Hon. Member can be in the Chamber, even if it requires a deferral of the matter for a short period of time, that is probably the better course.

Having that in mind, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville who now has his point on the record, could defer his remarks until a little later on in the day when the Hon. Member, whose remarks are complained of, might be in the Chamber. That would be the disposition of the Chair.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with what you have suggested. My only concern is that, for reasons that we may not be able to predict, the Member may be away from the House for some length of time. We would have some concern that this issue be raised at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure Hon. Members that the Chair is very cognizant of the concern just mentioned by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Without in any way imputing anything to any Member, the Chair would expect that the Hon. Member would be here soon.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: In that case, Mr. Speaker, out of respect for your feelings in the matter, I will wait until the Hon. Member appears in the House, on the understanding that he will be here soon. I do not receive that understanding directly from the Parliamentary Secretary, but I understand that he is not far away.

Mr. Speaker: I think the House has the sense of the Speaker's intention in this regard.

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

POINTS OF ORDER

ACCURACY OF STATEMENTS ON PETITIONS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my point of order concerns the petition that was just submitted by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). During her presentation she said that there were thousands of signatures on the petition. An examination of the petition indicates that there are less than 375 names on it.

• (1150)

This constant exaggeration of the names on a petition is demeaning what is a very honourable and time honoured practice of Members of Parliament to present petitions on behalf of their constituents.

It is a good petition. Its wording is quite suitable and the petitioners raise a good point about the tariff on books. That feeling is shared by many Canadians. Why should Members demean this practice by these phoney numbers and passing petitions about from one Member to another to make it appear that there is more feeling out there in the constituencies than there is? It is beyond me.

I know I have your agreement on this matter, Mr. Speaker, but we do not seem to be able to get any probity among the Members of some parties. I do not know what the answer will be, unless we completely change the rules about petitions in the House.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in making the presentation, and having made presentations during the last six to eight weeks when the House has been in operation, I have alluded to the fact that I have received thousands of names. I have had two cartons full of petitions containing at least 25 names per page which, I suggest, add up to thousands of names. Perhaps the Hon. Member does not understand the meaning of thousands of names with respect to all of the petitions. This is only part of what is left to be presented in the House. I suggest that if he looks at these petitions and adds the names he will find to his surprise that there are thousands and thousands of names.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) has raised a point which has concerned the Chair. I have noticed an improvement over a number of weeks in the tone of comment and the content of comment in the presentation of petitions. I am grateful for it.

I believe the Hon. Member for Victoria does have an important point. It is very necessary that the comments that pertain to the petition relate to the petition that is in fact presented. I am sure the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) will, as a consequence of a concern raised by a fellow Member of the House, be very careful to take this into account in the presentation of her petitions.

The Hon. Member for Victoria in fact praised the Hon. Member for Mount Royal for having a petition that is legitimate and in the proper form. I am sure the Hon. Member for Mount Royal will try to accede to the wishes of other Hon. Members in the chamber.

APPROPRIATENESS OF COMMENTS ON PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could give some advice with respect to the subject of petitions. How long may a Member speak when presenting a petition? It seems to vary from Member to Member, since some presentations are one or two sentences while others are longer and almost become a speech. Perhaps the Speaker could give us some guidance?

Mr. Speaker: The rules are clear. A speech is not acceptable. The Chair has made it quite clear that as far as I am concerned, inflammatory language in introducing the petition is not acceptable to the Chair because it causes difficulties in the chamber. Brevity is the soul of wit, as someone once said, and I also believe that brevity ought to be sought.

Having said that, I say to all Hon. Members that it takes more mental effort to say something with precision and brevity than it does to ramble. I know that all Hon. Members would wish that the Speaker, in listening to their remarks, realize that they are indeed capable of using succinct language, in brief form, to make their point. I would ask all Hon. Members to do the best they can in that regard.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, January 23, 1987, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) had the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you have suggested that we make our comments brief and try to do in half the time what otherwise might take the full time. I spoke for five minutes on Friday and I believe I made my point. Therefore, in keeping with your suggestion, I shall yield the floor.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the decision to be brief has been made for me since the House has placed a restriction of ten minutes on speeches. I do not believe I can be much more brief than what has already been dictated to me.

This Bill is extremely important in its ramifications on the country. I have already mentioned that there are two very important aspects to this debate; one is the provisions of the Bill respecting the sale of softwood lumber to the United States, the second being the ramifications of the bill itself.

The Bill is detrimental to softwood lumber exporters and the Canadian economy as a whole. It was poorly drafted by the Government and the best arguments on our behalf were not put forward in the negotiations because our negotiators failed to recognize the increased profitability of the softwood lumber industry in the United States.

This memorandum did not come as a result of the negotiating expertise of the Canadian delegation, but because the Americans realized that the profitability of the lumber industry in the United States was improving and that it would be advantageous now to enter into this Memorandum of Understanding that is more favourable to the Americans than to Canada. If the matter went further and on to another forum, the Americans would not be able to reach such an agreement as this.

As a result of this agreement, Canada will allow the United States to dictate to us how we conduct our trade with them. They will have a right to make periodic checks of the softwood lumber industry in Canada to assure themselves that we are adhering to their interpretation—not the written word—of the agreement.

The actual wording of the memorandum makes it very clear that we have given the United States complete jurisdiction over the setting of guidelines and terms of reference for our trade in softwood lumber with the Americans. That is unacceptable for a Canadian industry.

This agreement has serious ramifications for our softwood lumber exports to other nations. It may seriously affect arguments we may make before GATT on other matters that will undoubtedly arise in very difficult trading problems with the United States. The United States has now set its sights on curtailing Canadian imports into the United States, certainly from the point of view of ensuring that trade with the United States is less favourable vis-à-vis, first, prior circumstances and, second, to give its own people more of an edge in the market-place. This is at a time when we are in negotiatons on the whole question of free trade.

This is not the first instance of a setback in the intentions of the federal Government to secure free trade with the United States. This has happened right from the very beginning. In fact, it has happened since September of 1985 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made his speech in New York wherein he said that Canada is open for business. Indeed, it is not only open for business, but we are giving away a lot of free samples, and this is very unfortunate.

The trend has been consistently downward. We have gone from one thing to another. From the opening bell of the Government's intentions to negotiate a free trade agreement with the United States there has been a red flag raised to all lobbyists in the United States that somehow Canada was going to get a preferential deal and there was going to be a great give-away of opportunity to Canadians. That is certainly not the case and it was never the case.

However, these lobbyists then went to Washington buoyed by the comments from the industry to talk to the respective politicians. The politicians, of course, were very interested and concerned about their vested interest and immediately went into action. The curtains started to come down on Canadian commerce with the United States. This is very unfortunate because we have had a very proud tradition and a very good relationship in our trade with the United States. Now, of course, one thing just leads to another. There is a domino effect happening which could only mean a great deal of difficulty for Canadians.

We have seen this effect on the shakes and shingles industry, and there are so many other examples. We are now in the position of dealing with softwood lumber. There is a ripple effect from the actual Government and the immediate Government agencies to regulatory bodies in the United States. There is the case where the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has stated Canadian exporters of natural gas cannot pass along the pipeline charges to the buyers of this natural gas in the United States, even though the Canadian producers and American buyers have a signed agreement that this is going to take place, and even though the National Energy Board has approved this manner of doing business. This is just not some trivial inconvenience for Canadian exporters of natural gas. This will mean the loss of approximately $450 million in sales of natural gas to the United States at a time when our energy sector is undergoing a very severe downturn.

What is being done? The Government did not really twig to this danger and did not respond to it because it does not want to alarm the United States or hurt its tender feelings. However, Canadians have tender feelings. Canadian businessmen and Canadian exporters have tender feelings; not only are their tender feelings not being eased any, they are being made worse because there is alarm in this country that the Government is not standing up to the rights of Canadians. The Government is not putting the interests of Canadians first. It is putting the interests of the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States first.

What is the President of the United States doing? Instead of saying that the Memorandum of Understanding with respect to the softwood lumber industry is not fair, he is telling the producers of softwood lumber in the United States: "Do not worry. We are looking after you. Canadians are not going to have the rights they once had in trading with us. We are going to make sure they are hobbled and hobbled severely". This is not the action we expected from the First Summit in Quebec City between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States. It is not what we anticipated when we listened to the words of the Prime Minister, and it is not fair to Canadians.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a number of comments I would like to make about this Bill. I regret the Bill is not going straight to a vote according to the terms of the motion before us to call a question on second reading. I regret that because it was said on the weekend that there was one Minister who was happy with the Government's problems with the former Minister of State for Transport and with other Ministers. That Minister, of course, was the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). She was happy because the problems of the Conservative Party in Quebec and its problems with patronage deflected public attention from the fact that we had effectively two weeks of debate last week on the softwood lumber issue. The House agreed to have extended hours last week which meant that the debate which might have gathered more momentum across the country was compressed into one week. But that does not alter the fact that there are very serious questions the Government has not at all satisfactorily resolved. I want to speak to a few of them in the time available to me.

The first question quite simply is what does this say about the Government's free trade negotiations? You will recall,

Madam Speaker, that on May 8, 1986, in order to get the fast track agreement from the U.S. Senate, President Reagan wrote to Senator Packwood and told him he would press for an expedited resolution to what they called the softwood lumber problem "independent of the comprehensive negotiations". He concluded his letter by saying: "We fully realize that lumber and other pending trade irritants must be resolved before we submit to the Senate the results of the comprehensive negotiations". In other words, by the time they resolve all of the trade irritants, as they are viewed by the Americans, there will be no reason for the Americans to want to conclude a free trade agreement on any other issues with Canada.

I then turn to the Minister's own speech in the House last January 19. She made a number of statements which are at variance with the facts. I cannot be more specific and be parliamentary. However, for example, she said this agreement is supported by the union which represents the forestry workers. Last week I met with the paperworkers' union representing large numbers of forest workers who are cutting timber and producing lumber. They are opposed to this 15 per cent agreement. I met with the President of the CSN, the Quebec Union, and a number of those workers of the forest industry are opposed. I met with people from l'Union des producteurs agricoles in Quebec. They are very concerned about what is happening. At least three unions which represent substantial numbers of workers in the forest industry are opposed, and when the Minister of State for International Trade (Miss Carney) says otherwise it seems to me she is misleading the House. I would hope it is inadvertent—I cannot say it was advertent—but nevertheless the conclusion is obvious.

The next point the Minister made is that this is supported by the nine provinces which own the resource. Everyone agrees there is no forestry to speak of in Prince Edward Island, therefore, I presume the Minister for International Trade was maintaining that Ontario, among other provinces, supports this agreement with the United States. That is certainly not what I am hearing from Premier Peterson and from the Government of Ontario.

I would like to go back a year or two to my visits to Washington. From my contacts in Washington I heard very clearly, first, that our Embassy was not reporting the state of congressional opinion with respect to the lumber industry, and I accept there were problems there, and second, that the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada had not seized on the problem, but instead was steering towards what we now have, which I would say is disaster. It may have been possible to have found out more about what was on the minds of the Americans and possibly have found a way out of the impasse into which the Government had steered, had it seized on this problem seriously at the beginning of 1985. It did not do so. It is my information that by the beginning of 1986, although the situation was becoming more serious, the good friends of the Canadian Embassy and of the Government in the Reagan administration were saying that there was no need to worry. Our officials, both in Washington and in Ottawa, were not keeping a weather eye out for what was happening in Congress. The result is what we now know, that is, a substantial opinion grew up in Congress and we did not head it off. It grew into a firestorm.

The Government has said that we had but two choices. There was either this deal or accept a countervail which could have been much greater than 15 per cent. In the Minister's speech on this matter she said there were three choices. First, she said that we could fight and risk losing the case. Second, she said that we could plead guilty and enter into a suspension agreement. She said the third option was to negotiate a settlement. What she did not say is that if we had done what the lumber industry wanted us to do, which was to continue the fight as it had been carried out successfully in 1983, then there was still the option of reaching some type of an agreement in the event that the case did prove to be unsuccessful.

In November the Minister said that she had concluded that something had to be done, that we had to reach some kind of deal. She said this despite the fact that on October 21 she told the House of Commons we would fight to reverse this verdict, that the U.S. ruling was deplorable, artificial and contrived, and that it would not stand up to extensive analysis. A week later she told the House that the decision was unacceptable. She said it was an unacceptable attempt to impose U.S. views on how other Governments should manage their natural resources. What was unacceptable on October 27 became so acceptable that on December 30 the Government agreed to exactly that.

The Minister also said on October 27 that the Government felt the preliminary ruling by the U.S. Commerce Department had no basis in U.S. law. But the Government would not fight it in the courts. She said that it was badly flawed. But the Government would not challenge it, it knuckled under. She said that it was inconsistent with the U.S. obligations under the GATT. So much for Tory backbone!

I wish to point out something else which I think will come back to haunt the Government. From reading the letter which was sent to the U.S. industry I know the Americans understand that the agreed replacement measures to the 15 per cent export tax will have the equivalent economic impact, on average, on each unit of export to the United States as the 15 per cent charge or that portion of it which is being replaced. I know, and I have told the House again and again, that this tax is 50 per cent higher on production in Quebec than it is in British Columbia. This is so because the f.o.b. price in Quebec is around $230 per 1,000 board feet as compared to about $150 or $160 per 1,000 board feet in British Columbia. The tax is computed on the f.o.b. price.

In equity, it would seem to me that the replacement measures, if they are to be put in place, should bear more heavily in British Columbia than in Quebec. In other words, a replacement measure in British Columbia should be something in the order of 20 per cent or 25 per cent as opposed to 8 per cent or 10 per cent in Quebec. This is borne out as well by the fact that stumpage in Quebec is 50 per cent higher than in British Columbia. But our great Canadian negotiators, led by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) from the beaches of Hawaii, bore no reference to that fact at all. They were not aware that they were negotiating the Quebec industry into a tax which would be $10 or $11 per 1,000 board feet higher than the tax in British Columbia.

Effectively, unless they can persuade British Columbia to bear a much greater burden with the replacement measures than Quebec, they are permanently disadvantaging the industry in eastern Canada as opposed to western Canada. The situation in Ontario falls somewhere between that in Quebec and British Columbia. However, the two major producing provinces are Quebec and British Columbia. The tax is much higher in Quebec than it is in British Columbia.

[Translation]

I ask the 56 remaining members of the Progressive Conservative Party in Quebec how they can justify the fact that the tax on lumber produced in Quebec is higher than on lumber from British Columbia. How many of them will be re-elected after showing that they were willing to accept a tax and replacement measures which were much more costly for Quebec lumber producers than for producers in British Columbia?

[English]

I will conclude on that note. Contrary to what the Minister said, the industry is furious at the way it has been drawn into this particular situation. It is furious at the way that its good reputation is now being used and abused by the Minister who says that it supports this rotten deal entered into by the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, the question before the House concerns the previous question, namely that the debate come to an and after a few more hours, and it was the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) who moved that we end the debate and vote on the motion for second reading of Bill C-37. Madam Speaker, this is another example of the impatience of this Government and its complete inability to read public opinion.

The situation is rather serious. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has just made an important comment. He invited Members from Quebec to tell us what they think about the lumber issue and the 15 per cent export tax which would cost the industry at least $600 million and probably $800 million if it applies to all categories of lumber.

Madam Speaker, I asked the same thing in the House on January 22. I invited the Members from Quebec to take part in the debate and tell us what they think of this issue. They replied that they agreed with the Government. I could name all those who were shouting during my speech, particularly the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Gérin) who told us some strange things. I told him at the time, and I can still assure him that Ontario does not agree with this export tax on lumber. I wish to emphasize another point now that I have the opportunity to do so. The fact is that the sovereignty of our country of Canada in the area of natural resources is being jeopardized and probably prejudiced by this agreement.

[English]

In the agreement which we finally saw on Friday we see that indeed the Government has signed an agreement which gives the American Government and the American lumber industry the right to look into our affairs in regard to the 15 per cent export tax. They can look into how we set the rate, how we collect it and how we disburse the funds collected. That is an attack on our sovereignty. It is regrettable that the Government has agreed to give the United States Government and the American lumber industry the right to look into how our provinces, which are responsible and autonomous on questions of natural resources, will set the rate in regard to the tax and how they will collect it and disburse it.

The next point I wish to make is perhaps one of the most important. It is that the U.S. Government can object to the way we manage our natural resources. It can object to the ways and means by which we will set the rate, collect and disburse it. I repeat that this is in direct contradiction to maintaining one's sovereignty over one's natural resources. It is a direct weakening of Canadian sovereignty and our control over our natural resources.

• (1220)

In her remarks in the House the Minister drew our attention to Clause 5 of the Memorandum of Understanding as the possible sovereignty clause. It provides the following:

> The Government of Canada may reduce or eliminate the export charge on the basis of increased stumpage or other charges by provinces on softwood lumber production.

Clause 2(3) of the Bill respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products indicates that the Memorandum of Understanding, tabled in the House on Friday of last week, may be referred to when interpreting the export charge Act. In the Minister's mind this establishes that the sovereignty claim is protected.

Clause 5b of the Canada-U.S. agreement provides the following:

> Calculation of the value of any replacement measures in relation to the export charge will be subject to further consultations and agreement between the two Governments.

According to this clause, should the U.S. disapprove of any measure which Canada may introduce to replace the export tax, it could conceivably oppose it and possibly have it changed on the grounds that it does not have an effect on total Canadian softwood exports which is equal in value to the export tax—the huge amount of money about which we are talking, the $600 million at best.

Clause 6 of the Memorandum of Understanding provides the following:

> The Government of Canada will take no action, and will take all reasonable steps to ensure that no other governmental body in Canada takes any action, directly or indirectly, which has the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures—

Furthermore, in early January, President Ronald Reagan pledged in writing: "I will take action if Canada does not live up to the terms of the agreement". The question is, what action will he take. President Reagan said that the action might include tariffs.

Similarly, on December 30, 1986, a letter was written to the Coalition for Fair Lumber Exports by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige, identifying seven different types of Canadian government assistance to industry which the U.S. Government would not accept. These included rebate, remission or deferral of the export charge, provision of grants or low-cost loans, exemption from other federal or provincial government charges, assumption of obligations currently borne by the industry, reduction in stumpage or other fees, changes in the way that the volume of timber is measured, and the non-competitive awarding of contracts for silvaculture, road building, recreational, and other forestry activities.

In other words, and I am quoting from Clayton Yeutter and Malcolm Baldrige, Clause 6, according to the U.S. interpretation, severely limits if not outrightly prohibits Canada and its provinces from helping the forest industry and the communities involved. That is about what we are talking when we say our sovereignty is at stake here and our sovereignty has been affected by the agreement. This is why we strongly oppose the Bill. This is why we object to the Government bringing in a measure which prevents us from debating further or prevents us from bringing in further amendments. We will have to vote at the end of the debate, when our 40 Members and the 30 members of the NDP have finished debating.

We have not heard what members on the government side have to say about it. Its Members from Quebec and everywhere else have been very quiet and very subdued in this debate. They remind us of little trained seals when they say "yes, yes, yes" and "no, no, no".

Mr. Mantha: Oh, come on.

Mr. Gauthier: I hear the Hon. Member from North Bay. The Government of Ontario, through Mr. Peterson, said that it opposed this issue. The Hon. Member, coming from North Bay, should know better than to vote for the measure. I happen to know that in his area there are large interests in the wood industry. He has lumber mills and forestry operations. They need roads and they need to develop that resource. If I am mistaken, the Hon. Member can rise in his place and say so; I would invite him to do that. However, he will act like a trained seal and say "yes, yes, yes, Mr. Prime Minister", will he not? I invite him to answer that question since he made a comment. Does he want the floor?

Mr. Mantha: Why didn't you settle it in 1983?

Mr. Gauthier: I hear the Hon. Member. We settled it in 1983; we obtained a favourable judgment.

Mr. Mantha: Short term.

Mr. Gauthier: He is debating with me, Madam Speaker. I invite the Hon. Member from North Bay to rise in his place. I realize my time is coming to an end, Madam Speaker. I hope you will recognize the Hon. Member from North Bay and that he will get up to give us the benefit of his thoughts on the matter.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, you may note that I took a considerable length of time rising to my feet. It was in the hopes that perhaps the Hon. Member from North Bay would accept the invitation to speak, or that perhaps a government Member from Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or any other province adversely affected by the proposed legislation would rise to speak.

Mr. Mantha: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Murphy: All of us in the House face a serious problem when government Members refuse to rise to defend legislation. We can speak about the faults we see in the legislation, and we see many of them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Put the question.

Mr. Murphy: All we get from government is heckling from a back-bencher who will not get up to speak on the piece of legislation. That is not what Parliament is all about. We can point out error after error, mistake after mistake, in the Memorandum of Understanding and in the legislation before us. We can also point out how the legislation will negatively affect vast regions of the country. However, the Government will not put up any of its Members to explain what they believe is positive in the legislation. If the Government will not rise to say that we are wrong because of this or that, then it leaves the impression that it does not have a good case.

The proceedings of the House of Commons are being televised. Reporters will be covering some of the debate. People watching the debate will ask why the Government is not explaining its own case? This broadcast is going across the country to many people and communities directly affected by the legislation. Those people will say that a good point was made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and perhaps the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), but that the Government did not respond to it. They will be rightfully concerned because it is their jobs, communities, and livelihoods which are being affected. It is a serious problem.

It is not new to this Government; we had the same problem with the previous Government. When it wanted legislation passed it would not rise in the House to explain it. Rather, it would hope that the Opposition, especially when its numbers are limited as in the present House, would not be able to continue the debate at the end of its 10-minute speeches and, therefore, the whole issue would go to committee or elsewhere and not be in the public light. That is a concern of not only the Opposition but of many Canadians across the country.

Dealing with the legislation itself, I am concerned that there is so much doubt in the country and in the House about what it will do. We have already heard quotes from the infamous letter which American government officials sent to the American lumber industry. We have heard the interpretation which senior cabinet level people in the United States put on the agreement. We are told that the American government interpretation, which has been sent out to their industry, is not correct. We are told by government Ministers that it is not correct. That is not very informative. We would like more information from the Government as to what it believes the Bill means. People in our communities would feel a lot better if they knew that employees who will lose their jobs as a result of this legislation were eligible for government programs. If the Member wishes to speak, he will have an opportunity afterwards.

Mr. Oostrom: Tell us the truth then.

Mr. Murphy: As I was saying before I was interrupted by those who do not have the courage to speak, people in these communities will lose their jobs as a result of this legislation. Even the Minister admitted that people will lose their jobs. She said so with regret, but she admitted that. People, Madam Speaker, have no understanding of what is allowed and what is not allowed under this Memorandum of Understanding. We have read the American interpretation but we do not have the equivalent Canadian interpretation. Whether there are any disparities between the two views, we have no way of knowing. If I were a person who lost my job as a result of this legislation and the Memorandum of Understanding behind it, I would like to know what the forest companies can do, what the provincial Governments can do and what the federal Government can do and cannot do in order to give me a job, maybe not with the forest industry but perhaps a forest related job.

It is interesting to read the American letter. It points out that road construction and recreation efforts, if not tendered, cannot take place. In other words, people employed in northern Ontario or northern Manitoba who lose employment as a result of this Memorandum of Understanding may find themselves in a situation where they cannot work on Government or company projects which are set up to help resolve the unemployment problem. That is a serious concern, Mr. Speaker, and one that Government members and the ministry itself have not addressed.

Obviously, if we do have large pockets of unemployment in northern Saskatchewan, northern Ontario or elsewhere the provincial Government and unions affected will want something to help people. We do not want to see communities in northern Saskatchewan, northern Manitoba or elsewhere having large numbers of young people unemployed and being unable to do anything about it.

What happens if the Government of Manitoba decides—presumably Manitoba will have more money as a result of this legislation in the long run—it wants to expand the recreational network in northern Manitoba? According to the American interpretation that is not acceptable unless some funny tendering system is set up to allow many other people to make application for those same jobs.

We recognize the right of governments and we certainly recognize the right of employers to direct work toward a certain group of people within the population. Obviously if 2,000 people become unemployed in northern Ontario or 1,000 in northern Saskatchewan, northern B.C. or other parts of B.C. as a result of this legislation, we would have to look at projects to create employment. It does not make a lot of sense, Madam Speaker, to tender jobs if it really means that people in Vancouver, Winnipeg or Toronto will end up doing the work. That is the irony of it all.

We as a Government may have compassion, companies may have compassion but communities may have real worries as a result of this legislation. There may be a desire on the part of many of those components to do something for the unemployed but the Memorandum of Understanding, as the Americans understand it and as our Government has yet to refute it, may prevent it. For example, expansion of the recreation network and road construction, although providing necessary services to our communities, if that work happens to be perceived by the Americans as an undue benefit to people normally working in the wood industry it cannot be done. That is a real problem and a problem which the Government and its backbenchers should have the moral courage to address.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, we are looking at Bill C-37 which has created a great deal of concern throughout the country. I have been hearing from many of my constituents concerned about Canadian sovereignty. This Bill, which the House has been asked to address, includes a Memorandum of Understanding whereby the Americans will look at the softwood lumber industry of Canada and have the right to determine what, how and where we are to make our determinations concerning the rates we pay for our softwood lumber.

We have been party to an agreement, through the Government's action while the Minister sunned herself on the beaches of Hawaii. The Minister, with her deputies signed an agreement which will have a very serious effect on the cost of the export of softwood lumber and will be detrimental to this industry in great measure. It is really the greatest sell-out in the history of our negotiations with the United States. It is the greatest betrayal of a major industry by a Minister who should be more responsible than she was.

Our softwood lumber industry will now pay a 15 per cent export tax on every bit of softwood lumber going into the United States. It will cost the lumber industry, on the basis of this tax, supposedly $600 million; perhaps more when we start looking at how this tax is to be converted into timber cutting fees, or as we call it stumpage fees, at the provincial level. This will create great disharmony for a Government that has touted harmony at the federal-provincial level, as it tries to figure out and negotiate who shall get paid what, how it will distribute the money coming in through the tariff and how to convert it into the stumpage fee. This amount may well be $950 million to $1 billion levied against an industry year by year, not just one year.

A number of industries in Quebec have told us that mills will close and thousands of workers will lose their jobs, but the Minister has said that everyone except Ontario approved of this particular direction. I do not think that is what the country wanted. I do not think that is what the industry wanted. It has not done very much for the sovereignty and sovereign rights of Canadians in making decisions in our own name. It gives the United States the right to examine how we will set our rates, how our provinces will, can, should and may collect the tax on softwood lumber. It gives the United States the right to see how we manage our own industry. This is not the way Canada wants to be open for business, despite what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said.

Maxwell Cohen, one of Canada's foremost experts on international law, a Judge on the International Court of Justice in the Gulf of Maine resource dispute, a former Professor of International Law at the University of Ottawa and a renowned expert in the field, said on January 3 the following:

> The lumber deal is a dangerous precedent that threatens Canadian sovereignty . . . It is a strange procedure to allow someone else to monitor our own stuff— They maintained the unilateralness of something that is joint in effect because the Americans have a right to know everything about Canada's activity, information or anything else.

Notwithstanding the fact that all the other provinces are not 100 per cent in agreement, Premier David Peterson has been very outspoken. He said:

> They (U.S. Government) will have the thumb screws on us at all times and if we don't behave they will put the blocks to us. I don't like a deal like that . . . We've turned not only our resource and taxation policies but in a sense our regional development and employment policies over to another sovereign country. It's a dangerous precedent.

As to the industry itself, Adam Zimmerman, the Chairman of MacMillan Bloedel, has said that the lumber deal at one step creates an industrial paraplegic out of the lumber industry and that we have handed over our sovereignty and ruined our industry. The President of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada, Stan Shewaga, has said that the deal will only encourage the United States to widen its protectionist net to other areas. I would suggest that we have seen that that particular observation might come true. We now have concerns about the Auto Pact and our cultural industries. This kind of move only opens up all kinds of concerns with respect to what the Americans can do while spreading their net. Let us look at what happened with regard to shakes and shingles industry, our book-publishing industry, our Christmas tree industry and our exports of natural gas.

I would suggest that this signed agreement is far from being in the best interests of Canada and certainly has an impact on our sovereign right to decide what we want to do with our own industries. As an example, will we have the right to use stumpage fees to reforest our land or will the Americans tell us that that is not part and parcel of the agreement? There is serious concern on the part of the industry.

We met with representatives of the industry who said that they cannot even compete because of the 15 per cent export charge contained in the Memorandum of Understanding. This 15 per cent charge makes it non-competitive for Canadians to move into the American market. That is one of the reasons that Americans felt that this was a good move for them. It cuts back on a good Canadian product which had been able penetrate into the American market and compete on a fair basis.

We must also remember the self-interest of the United States in this matter. In the United States there is a different environment in which to grow trees. The weather is warmer, the trees grow faster and Americans have a much easier time than Canadians when cutting lumber.

I am very concerned about what is going on. Clayton Yeutter, the trade representative, and Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige identified seven different types of Canadian Government assistance to the industry that the United States will not accept. They have some nerve determining what they will or will not accept. They consider to be Canadian Government assistance any kind of rebate, remission or deferral of the export charge, provision of grants or low-cost loans, exemption from other federal or provincial Government charges, assumption of obligations currently borne by the industry, reduction in the stumpage or other fees, changes in the way the volume of timber harvest is measured and the non-competitive awarding of contracts for silviculture, road building, recreational and other forestry activities. In other words, the interpretation of the U.S. of Clause 6 severely limits, if not outrightly prohibits Canada and the provinces from helping the forest industry and the communities involved, irrespective of what it will cost in terms of lost jobs and industries.

We must be very, very cautious in this debate because of its implications on our sovereignty and on our other industries. I see that you are signalling that I have less than a minute left, Madam Speaker. I would point out that the Canadian Council of Forest Industries estimates that the tax will eventually cost between 10 per cent and 20 per cent of the current Canadian production and between 15,000 and 17,000 jobs. This includes 6,000 sawmill and logging jobs and 11,000 jobs in allied industries and services. I think this is something we can ill afford. We ought to examine it very cautiously before we move in this area.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of saying a few words on this tax on softwood lumber that has been imposed through our Government's acquiescence to the requirements of the United States. It is a major loss of sovereignty on the part of the Canadian Government. The speed with which the Government acquiesced to the requirements of the United States was almost indecent. The decision to take this action provides not just a simple solution to one problem but has an impact on all related forestry industries as well as many other industries. With the loss of sovereignty which this implies, the Government of the United States can step tomorrow or next week into other Canadian industries.

For instance, there is already considerable concern in the United States that the Canadian pulp and paper industry is taking what Americans consider to be unfair advantage. The key phrase of the American protectionist vocabulary is their definition of unfair advantage. They have said that they do not mind trade of any kind as long as it is on a level playing field. However, what really is an unfair advantage? Canada has many remote areas in which the harvesting of lumber is difficult. If we were to suggest that because of the cost of transportation in the remote areas, we should allow harvesting there without charging any stumpage fees at all we would be told immediately that we could not do so. A side effect of this agreement has been that it has become impossible to begin harvesting lumber in many remote areas of Canada. The lowering of the price, which is another effect of this tax measure, will give two reasons for remote areas to either quit harvesting or never begin harvesting. Any advantage the Government might suggest would be considered an unfair advantage by the United States Government and the Americans would immediately react by imposing further tariffs. The point I am making is that any advantage we try to give any industry in Canada can now be designated by the U.S. Government as an unfair advantage if we try to sell the product into their market, and subject that product to a countervailing duty.

The NDP has for years been lamenting the fact that the provinces and the federal Government have not been spending enough money on forestry. I suppose if there is any advantage to this Bill it is that there will now be some money to be spent on forest development. However, the U.S. interpretation of how that money can be spent is very restrictive. According to Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, and Malcom Baldrige, the Secretary of Commerce, we cannot use the money for silviculture, to provide grants, low-cost loans or other benefits to the industry. They also suggest they will take action if there is a reduction in stumpage fees or other changes. We have forests in Saskatchewan which, because of the cost of transportation, cannot be harvested unless we assist the industry. Therefore, they cannot be harvested without endangering an agreement which was bad to begin with.

When the Government made this agreement it was, theoretically, to assist the sale of Canadian softwood lumber into the U.S. market. However, all the peripheral effects of this agreement appear to be negative for other parts of Canada and other industries in Canada. The methods used by the U.S. to get its way in this case can be used to hurt many other industries. We have a long tradition in Canada of attempting to assist industry with its problems, and I suppose many people in the forest industry would feel better if at the same time it took this decision the Government said it would address the problem of job losses and closing of mills which will occur. Yet it appears that the Government has no real concern for the primary producers of this country; the farmers, fishermen and lumbermen who have now all been affected adversely by the policies put forward by the Government. What is next, the pulp and paper industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the 15 per cent softwood lumber tax. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre and Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) refers to Canada-United States Memorandum of Understanding paragraph 5(a) as being the sovereignty clause because it relates to the export charge on the basis of increased stumpage or other charges by provinces on softwood lumber production—Clause 2: Softwood Lumber Production—The export charge measure tabled on January 19, 1987 provides that recourse may be made to the Memorandun of Understanding to interpret the law.

Madam Speaker, this indicates quite clearly that the Minister is wrong when she claims that Canadian sovereignty is intact, because Memorandun of Understanding paragraph 5(b) stipulates that calculation of the value of any replacement measure in relation to the export charge will be subject to further consultations and agreement between the two Governments.

Pursuant to this paragraph, if the United States—Madam Speaker, I see that a Quebec Member on the other side is laughing. I would urge him to take the floor and speak up because I am sure his riding is home to some people who are involved in the lumber industry. The Hon. Member indicates that I am right. Well, I urge all Quebec Members to stand up and defend this piece of legislation, this tax. The Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) should speak up. Quite a few of your constituents are in the lumber business—I should know, I travel to Portneuf very often—stand up and have the courage to defend your Portneuf constituents.

He could still oppose this measure and ask that it be amended by claiming that its over-all impact on Canadian softwood lumber exports is not the same as that of the export tax.

And speaking . . . You are not standing up as Member for Portneuf. I will go and see your constituents, I know the people of Portneuf very well.

S.O. 21

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bourassa should address the Chair. Undoubtedly the Hon. Member for Bourassa will want to continue his remarks when the debate resumes and, upon his return, I would strongly urge him to address the House through the Chair.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SERVICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): On December 5, 1986, Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), it was stated, and I quote from page 1820 of Hansard:

> First and foremost must be the interest and welfare of Canadian citizens, particularly, for example, in rural areas. There shall be no second-class citizens in this country as long as this Government remains in office, postal services or otherwise.

Those Canadians who were following the House of Commons proceedings on that day were reassured by the commitment to maintain similar postal services for all Canadians.

Despite their promise not to create second-class citizens in this country, Canada Post management continue to discriminate against Canadians in both rural and urban areas. This is why Canadians from coast to coast are rallying to protest against the decision which was made by the Government and Canada Post and which undermines our whole postal system.

I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to bring pressure to bear on his colleague responsible for Canada Post to ensure that no shutdown of rural post offices will be considered, that the installation of superboxes will end once and for all, and that home delivery will be restored for all Canadian taxpayers.

SPORTS

CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE—OTTAWA ROUGH RIDERS—COMMUNITY OWNERSHIP

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, whoever said that Investment Canada was not working was dead wrong. Whoever said that the National Capital Region did not have any normal, down-to-earth grass root people, also was dead wrong.

Last Friday, January 27, the Ottawa Rough Riders finally came home. The governors of the CFL unanimously agreed that the team ownership be passed from foreign hands in Toronto to community-based ones here in Ottawa. That great western spirit of local ownership and initiative has finally arrived in eastern Canada, and none too soon. The one day of the year when we all continued to put aside our regional differences on Grey Cup day will now continue more vigorously with this transfer of ownership.

My congratulations to Hillary, Tucker, Hamilton, Gasvie, Holtby, Kielty, Logue, Nicholls, Robson, and all the rest. You have kicked your first extra point of the 1987 season—Good luck to all!

HOUSING

CHANGES IN ELIGIBILITY FOR RENT SUPPLEMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the accomplishments of the co-op housing movement are being threatened by the Conservative Government. In addition to going back on its promise to provide 5,000 co-op housing units per year, the Government has tampered with the formula for setting rent supplement assistance. Because of the narrowly defined criteria set by CMHC many people who previously would have been eligible will be denied assistance and thus denied the opportunity to live in co-op housing. The restrictions now being imposed by the Government threaten this type of housing.

In addition to the eligibility changes, the over-all amounts for rent supplements have been lowered. The Government had budgeted rent supplement assistance for 1,500 co-op units for 1986, but now, because of over-all cut-backs to the program, it is only providing 950.

I call upon the Government to reassess its rent supplement program, and to provide the already budgeted rent supplement to 1,500 co-op housing units. If the Government were interested in creating jobs, jobs, jobs, this is one of the most productive things that it could do to create employment, and decent, affordable, adequate housing.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Canadian Coast Guard. For the past quarter century it has provided exemplary services in all aspects of marine navigation and safety for shippers, fishermen, and recreational boaters alike.

On January 26, 1962, the Hon. Leon Balcer, Minister of Transport in the Diefenbaker Government, stated that the Department of Transport's fleet of ships would, from that day forward, be known as the Canadian Coast Guard. Today's Coast Guard has evolved considerably since then in keeping with time, technology and tradition in all facets of marine activity. This includes aids to navigation, coast guard radio stations, ice-breaking, eastern Arctic sealift, ship inspection, pleasure craft regulations, marine search and rescue, as well as public harbours and wharves. Indeed, Canada's maritime history, which predates Confederation with the first lighthouse at the Fortress of Louisbourg, now entails satellite-assisted vessel traffic services, and the like.

Our Coast Guard fleet is now comprised of some one hundred vessels ranging from the heavy gulf ice-breaker CCGS Louis S. St. Laurent to inflatable inshore rescue boats. There is much enthusiasm for the proposed Polar 8 ice-breaker which will continue the Coast Guard legacy of quiet pride and service for the benefit of all mariners and, of course, fly with pride the Maple Leaf in the Canadian high Arctic. I take great pleasure in honouring the Canadian Coast Guard on this milestone, on behalf of the Minister, and all Members of the House. I trust that all Members will feel likewise with respect to its plans, missions, and aspirations for the future.

FISHERIES

LICENCES GRANTED TO FRENCH FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, last year Canadian fishermen were outraged to hear that French trawlers had caught 26,000 tonnes of fish, more than four times their quota. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has now issued licences to nine French factory freezer trawlers to conduct an open season on Canadian fisheries.

The Minister should know that one factory freezer trawler can catch up to 12,000 tonnes. The Minister has stated that the quota of 6,400 tonnes remains. This is complete and utter nonsense. The Canadian Government will not even be monitoring these trawlers.

• (1405)

Canadian fishermen are horrified. They cannot understand why the Minister is constantly giving in to the demands of the French trawler fleet. On behalf of my colleagues and Atlantic fishermen, I demand that the Minister reverse this bizarre decision and cancel these licences forthwith.

VICTORIAN ORDER OF NURSES

TRIBUTE TO SERVICES ON OCCASION OF NINETIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to bring to the attention of the House, during national VON Week, the contribution that VON Canada has made to the development of health services in our country. This year the Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada is celebrating 90 years of caring for Canadians.

Since its earliest days VON has pioneered the development of health services. Today a network of 72 branches across the country provides a range of health services designed to meet needs of local communities. VON believes that everyone has the right to comprehensive and compassionate health care. This includes a commitment to enabling people to maintain their independence and to remain in their communities and homes near family and friends.

Last year VON nurses provided over 2.8 million nursing visits to 127,000 people. Some 14,000 others received adult day care, volunteer visiting, meals-on-wheels, homemaker services, and educational preparation for expectant couples.

VON also believes that increasing the knowledge and expertise of staff, evaluation of existing services, the development of new programs and research projects directed toward finding new and better ways to care for people, are essential to ensure that VON continues to respond effectively to the changing health needs of Canadians.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MEMBER

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the comment which the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) is reported to have made to the effect that cronyism, backroom deals and bribes are generalized and part of the accepted political mores in the province of Quebec is false and injurious to all Quebec men and women and their elected representatives.

If the Hon. Member for Kitchener wanted to improve the image of Conservative Governments in Ontario and elsewhere in Canada, he did not choose the most appropriate way.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is well aware that it is customary in the House, when making references to other Hon. Members reflecting on their character, or even imputing motives to them, to do so with the utmost caution. I suggest the Hon. Member's remarks might be more appropriate elsewhere.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE TO PREVENT CLOSURE OF CN SHOPS AT MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, Ports Canada, a Crown corporation, appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport. At one point, the discussion focussed on the port of Churchill in Manitoba. According to Ports Canada authorities, the port of Churchill is not profitable, and if it was up to them, it would be closed.

However, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has intervened and ordered Ports Canada to maintain the Churchill facilities. Good for him! This port represents the major economic activity in that part of Manitoba.

Why is this same Minister refusing to intervene in the case of Moncton to prevent the closing of the CN shops, which belong to another Crown corporation, and to save 1,000 jobs? It is a striking example of how this Government and its Ministers deal with the Atlantic region. They have set us adrift.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INCREASED GRAIN EXPORTS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, despite the massive farm subsidy and export enhancement programs of the EEC and the United States, Canada's share of the world grain market continues to rise. During the past year Canada actually increased its share of world wheat sales by 1.5 per cent.

There are two reasons for this: first, the high quality of our Canadian wheat which puts it in demand, and second, the outstanding job being done by the Canadian Wheat Board in marketing Canadian grain in the face of fiercely competitive and, at times, hostile international markets.

The International Wheat Council forecasts that Canada's share of the world wheat market will increase even further in 1987, from 19.8 per cent to 21.5 per cent.

Clearly, the Canadian Wheat Board should be applauded for its marketing efforts. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) should also be congratulated for his initiatives both in seeking solutions to the international grain wars and in maintaining and enhancing Canada's export opportunities.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

CALL FOR REINTRODUCTION OF CANADIAN LAWS OFFSHORE APPLICATION ACT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it was well over one year ago that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), in the wake of the Polar Sea transit, announced a series of measures intended to protect and enhance Canadian sovereignty over our Arctic regions. Foremost amongst these initiatives was the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act which was introduced into Parliament as Bill C-104 in April, 1986. This Act would have confirmed Canadian jurisdiction within the area defined by drawing straight base lines around the islands of the Arctic Archipelago.

Bill C-104 died on the Order Paper last June and to date it has not been reintroduced. What has happened to this Bill? Why has it not been brought back? Those of us who take more than just a passing interest in these matters would certainly like to know the reasons for the delay.

HOUSING

SUPPORT URGED FOR CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING DEVELOPMENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, January 11, there was a sod-turning ceremony in my constituency for a new co-operative housing development, Tamil Co-operative Homes. Fortunately this project was approved before the Government reneged on its commitment to provide 5,000 new housing units under its new co-operative housing program.

Co-op housing makes a strong contribution to the housing issues facing Canadians. It is affordable and it is flexible, meeting the particular needs of seniors, families with children, and people with disabilities. Instead of reducing its support for co-operative housing, the Government should seriously reconsider this matter and demonstrate to Canadians that it is serious about assisting the thousands who are in need of decent affordable housing.

YOUTH

IMPACT OF CHALLENGE '87

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) announced recently that our Government would be committing $180 million under Challenge '87. This Government initiative is important to our young people. Last year, in the Labelle constituency alone, Challenge '86 created 335 jobs and represented $535,000 in investments. In my constituency, it is vital for young people who want to complete their schooling to work during the summer. As they live far from major centres, they must often go elsewhere and become self-sufficient. Challenge '87 is a concrete example of an initiative taken by our Governement to improve the employment prospects of young people. Indeed, even at a time of budgetary restrictions, our Government is aware that the future of Canada belongs to young people, as clearly shown by Challenge '87.

GOVERNMENT'S PAYMENT OF ACCOUNTS POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I continue to cherish the principle that, except in time of war or other national emergency, a Government in a democratic society exists to serve the citizens, not the other way around. Let us put this principle to the test in the Government's payment of accounts policy. This policy, as interpreted for me by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), states that the valid date of an invoice is the date that invoice is received by the Government. It is not the date it is postmarked, but the date it is actually received by the Department. However, the invoice is considered to be paid by the Government on the date the cheque is issued. It is not considered paid on the date the cheque is received by the individual or company which rendered the service, but the date issued. Thus the Government wins both ways. What about the citizen? "Heads you lose, tails you lose. So sorry."

POLITICAL PARTIES

NATO—LIBERAL PARTY'S POLICY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of all Hon. Members a matter of great concern to Atlantic Canadians. The people of Atlantic Canada are very disturbed by the inconsistent statements made by the Liberal Party on matters affecting defence. At the Liberal Party Convention in November the Liberals called for an end to our NATO commitments. Where does that leave Canada's sovereignty?

Are the Liberals so naive to believe that a country is sovereign if it has no means of defence? Where does that policy leave the thousands of Atlantic Canadians who depend on NATO for employment? A severance of our NATO obligation will cost Nova Scotia thousands of jobs. The former Liberal defence critic admits that policy conflicts with Canada's NATO commitments, but where is he? Now demoted. The Bay Street boy is back and he will stay at the back. It is time for him to come clean with Atlantic Canadians.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) seems to blame the population of Quebec and immigrants for the problems which the Government faces. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) implies that it is the media which are largely to blame for the perception of the Government, mainly because most people who cover Parliament live in Ottawa. The Prime Minister's Press Secretary, Bill Fox, alleges that it is because federal government employees might be Liberals who are responsible for the problems the Government faces. The Government should realize where the blame lies and where the buck stops.

FINANCE

BENEFIT OF FLOW-THROUGH SHARES TO NORTHERN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before the Christmas break in a debate on Bill C-23 the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the finance critic for the NDP, rose in the House and called for an end to the flow-through shares program. In his comments he stated that flow-through shares benefit only the rich and do nothing for exploration and development in northern Ontario and Quebec. How misguided are those statements by New Democrats!

In fact, flow-through shares have created benefit to the people of northern Canada in terms of real economic growth. For instance, one company in my riding reported an impressive increase in volume. In the last half of 1984 it had an increase of 49 per cent. In the last half of 1985 it had an increase of 80 per cent. In the first quarter of 1986 it has had an increase of 100 per cent. This translates into more jobs and further development in the North, for the North. We can certainly see from the Hon. Member's statements that the NDP has no idea about the grass roots of the North.

OERLIKON AFFAIR—COMMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR KITCHENER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In commenting upon the Oerlikon affair, the Hon. Member for Kitchener is reported to have made some inflamatory—indeed irresponsible—remarks about Quebec.

[Translation]

I realize the Deputy Prime Minister does not share this view and that is why I want to ask him this: Will he, on behalf of the Government of Canada, officially denounce the offensive remark made by the Hon. Member for Kitchener?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is accurate in his assumption that I do not associate myself with the remarks made by the Hon. Member.

It was an issue that was raised as a question of privilege earlier this day. Because the Hon. Member was absent from the House the Speaker decided that the issue should not be proceeded with. I would like to tell the right hon. gentleman that when the Hon. Member returns to the House I presume he will be making a statement to that effect—

Mr. Murphy: Explain!

Mr. Mazankowski: —explaining his comments. Until such time as he does that I would submit to you, Sir, it might be inappropriate to speculate or comment upon the meaning or otherwise of the comments that have been made by the Hon. Member.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC INQUIRY BE HELD INTO OERLIKON AFFAIR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope that at some time the Deputy Prime Minister will find it in himself to be even more explicit about the Government's position in this affair. We will wait for the Hon. Member to arrive in the House, but meanwhile, I hope the Deputy Prime Minister will announce the Government's position.

Mr. Speaker, about the Oerlikon affair, although the former Minister of State for Transport and Hon. Member for Saint-Jean apparently asked the Prime Minister to order a public inquiry, the Prime Minister's Office is selectively leaking information about the Hon. Member.

Will the Government order a public inquiry to meet the personal request made by the Hon. Member in question?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I am sure the right hon. gentleman would understand that I have not had an opportunity to speak to the Hon. Member for Kitchener. He is due to arrive in Ottawa later this afternoon or tomorrow. I think he would expect me to discuss the issue with him to see whether he was quoted accurately and to get a feeling from him as to just what he did say. Of course, I disassociate myself and the Government disassociates itself from the words that were reported. As the hon. gentleman knows, there are times when there are some inaccuracies—and I am not suggesting that is the case here. However, I think that in fairness the right hon. gentleman would allow me to speak to the Hon. Member first and, if appropriate, I will make a statement.

• (1420)

With respect to his reference to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean requesting a public inquiry, I am not aware of that. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman might indicate the source of his information.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was reported in the media—yes—until now—I think the Deputy Prime Minister should confirm with the Hon. Member when he returns to the House. But I would like to ask another question.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—EX-MINISTER'S BLIND TRUSTEES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have one more question, if I might, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister has a responsibility, as we understand it, for the conflict of interest guidelines and for blind trust arrangements made by Ministers. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell Canadians who were the blind trustees for the ex-Minister? Would he confirm or deny that the ex-Minister's wife was one of those blind trustees, or the president of the provincial riding association of Saint-Jean? Would he clarify that situation for the country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, now the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is basing his questions on reports in the media. I think that that is one of the difficulties that arises when there is—

Mr. Allmand: They have been pretty good so far.

Mr. Mazankowski: —when there is so much speculation and innuendo, fabrication, and I would think the right hon. gentleman would want the RCMP to conduct its investigation in an unfettered way.

With regard to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition's questions pertaining to the blind trust, any information that has been ascertained has been turned over to the RCMP, and that is a matter for their investigation.

OERLIKON'S DISMISSAL OF FORMER LEGAL COUNSEL

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not see the need for a public inquiry, now that we have learned that Oerlikon's long-time legal counsel, Raymond Lette, after he informed Oerlikon about the irregularities concerning the land transction, was fired and replaced by the law firm of the Prime Minister's good friend, Jean Bazin, for reasons—and I quote Mr. Lette—that had "absolutely nothing", to do with the practice of law? Didn't it have everything to do with political influence?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest the hon. gentleman's comments over the weekend where he suggested that it was not appropriate to engage in innuendo, and I think he has done that just now. I do not know—

An Hon. Member: Overcome by the rat pack.

Mr. Mazankowski: —why Oerlikon decided to change—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sometimes the Speaker chooses not to hear things and sometimes the Speaker cannot help but hear things. I would ask the Hon. Member for Sudbury to remember there is a rule that questions should be put to Ministers within the area of their responsibility. I am sure the Hon. Member, in his supplemental question, will be careful to adhere to that.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the question, because I believe the Deputy Prime Minister has the responsibility to request a public inquiry. I have simply quoted the former legal counsel for the firm of Oerlikon where he said that he was fired and replaced by Bazin's firm, specifically Bazin's firm, for reasons that had "absolutely nothing" to do with the practice of law. That is why I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister that the Government appoint a public inquiry. I am not suggesting that there is any legal wrongdoing, but I personally believe that the public needs to have its trust rebuilt in the political process in the country, and that it is his responsibility.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the only people who can answer that question with any accuracy are the Oerlikon people themselves. I have no way of knowing why they chose to change lawyers at the time that they did.

With regard to the repeated request for a judicial inquiry, I think the Prime Minister has outlined and explained in reply to about a hundred questions which were advanced last week the reasons why the Government believes it appropriate to proceed with an RCMP complete investigation. He has also left the door open for any further action should that be necessary. There has to be some consistency on the part of all of us.

It is rather interesting to note the vigour with which the Hon. Member and the Leader of the Opposition argued against the appointment of a public inquiry back last year, on May 16, and I could quote ad infinitum—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Minister probably could, but it is getting into debate. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

• (1425)

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR KITCHENER CONCERNING QUEBEC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It also pertains to what the Hon. Member for Kitchener is alleged to have said on the weekend. In discussing bribes, the Member went on to say that it is quite common in Quebec. It is a different province. "Quebec is different than the rest of us".

If, after the Deputy Prime Minister checks and finds that the Member for Kitchener actually said this, will he demand an apology from the Member to all the people in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of ifs in that question. As I undertook to the Leader of the Opposition, I will speak to the Hon. Member to determine the accuracy of the press report. First and foremost, I indicated that I disassociate myself from those comments if they are an accurate reflection of the Hon. Member, as do my colleagues. I think at this particular time the Hon. Member would want me at least to discuss the matter with the Hon. Member for Kitchener before making any further comment.

Mr. Broadbent: I agree with that, Mr. Speaker, but I also strongly believe that if the Member did say those things the Deputy Prime Minister must demand an apology from him.

EMPLOYMENT OF FORMER GENERAL BY OERLIKON

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I now have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Today I have learned that a J. B. Peart is now vice-president of corporate affairs for the Oerlikon Corporation. Will the Minister confirm for me that this is the same Mr. Peart who not long ago was his chief of staff—or a special assistant—and was the same man who was chief of staff to the former Minister of National Defence at the time the Oerlikon contract was let? If so, when Mr. Peart left his employment with the Government did he comply with Section 58 of the conflict of interest guidelines?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. First, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party need not have waited until today to discover that; that information was in The Toronto Star last week.

Second, no, he was not my chief of staff. He was chief of staff to the Hon. Erik Nielsen and stayed on as a special adviser during the transition period.

Third, General Peart served over 30 years in uniform. He was at no time involved in any way in the Oerlikon dossier. The Oerlikon dossier was handled after his arrival by the office of the Associate Minister of National Defence.

To respond to the other element of the Hon. Member's question, all information related to this matter was fully disclosed by General Peart to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, who indicated that General Peart was in full compliance with the conflict of interest guidelines.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, Section 60(c) of the conflict of interest guidelines prohibits a person who was in Mr. Peart's position, for a period of 12 months after he has left the Government from advising, for commercial purposes, any company or business entity on the policies and programs of the Department which he left. If this is the case, it would seem to me on the surface that we do have a violation of the conflict of interest guidelines.

Would the Minister explain why Mr. Peart is not in violation of Section 60(c) of the conflict of interest guidelines?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, General Peart fully disclosed all relevant information to the Deputy Registrar General.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not it.

Mr. Beatty: All relevant information was disclosed to the Deputy Registrar General. General Peart received a letter from the Deputy Registrar General indicating he was in full compliance with the conflict of interest guidelines.

I would think that this distinguished gentleman who served for over 30 years in uniform deserves the thanks of our country and not this sort of innuendo.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FULLY DISCLOSE ROLE OF MR. BAZIN IN OERLIKON AFFAIR

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Government is engaged in a cover-up operation. It knows a lot more than it is letting on. Mr. Bernard Roy had a meeting with people who gave him plenty of details. When is the Government, among other things, going to inform the House fully on the specific role played by Senator Bazin in the Saint-Jean land flip?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again we hear the word "coverup". The Prime Minister has been in the House every day with the exception of one day last week, and he answered every question put to him. We are here today answering questions. An RCMP investigation has been launched. Other action may be taken as the situation unfolds.

Mr. Bazin has issued a public statement. I know of no charges that have been laid against him. He is not accused of anything. Unless the Hon. Member has some clear indication of wrongdoing on the part of Mr. Bazin, perhaps he should cease and desist this sort of innuendo.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury said quite correctly on the weekend that innuendo is certainly something that should not be part and parcel of this very serious matter. Here we have his colleague engaging in that same sort of activity. I think we should allow the RCMP to complete its investigation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MEMBER OF CABINET

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The Deputy Prime Minister pointed out that Mr. Bazin issued a statement. He is right. Perhaps he could explain why a Minister of the Crown, the Minister responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations, namely the Hon. Lowell Murray, reproduced this statement word for word under Government letterhead? Why is he circulating Senator Bazin's incomplete and watered down version under his Government letterhead? Can you answer that?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member is getting at. I know Members of Parliament and Senators have mailing privileges and there are certain guidelines that are adhered to, but certainly Members of Parliament have some latitude in terms of communicating with constituents and/or interested people.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why this one?

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps that might be a question that his colleagues in the other place may raise with the Member.

INFORMATION CONCERNING LAND SPECULATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and also concerns the Oerlikon Aerospace affair and possible connections to senior Conservatives close to the Prime Minister and the Government. We learned today that Lette & Associates in fact learned of the land speculation in Saint-Jean and informed Oerlikon in January or early February of last year, and that Mr. Bazin and his firm became informed of land speculation in the winter or early spring of last year. Somehow they were not able to bring this together and have what they considered to be sufficient proof of irregularities until January, 1987. Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain the reason for this long delay between this information which suggested irregularities being in the hands of the company and its legal advisers, including Mr. Bazin, and this information being given to the Government? Will this be investigated?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That question wouldn't even be good at Queen's Park.

Mr. Speaker: I must say to the Hon. Member, with great regret, that that question clearly involves acitivities which are not related to any Minister of the Government or to the Prime Minister. It is outside the ambit of ministerial responsibility.

Under the circumstances, Hon. Members have been asking for a public inquiry and I have allowed those questions. The Government has responded, as is recorded in Hansard. The question now being put is directed at some activity outside this place and outside the responsibility of a Minister.

The rules are quite clear. The Chair cannot allow the question. Perhaps the Hon. Member could seek to find the information he wishes or seek to find the intentions of the Government by rephrasing the question, keeping in mind the admonishment of the Chair.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, you make it a bit difficult to ask questions. I recognize that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Ask proper questions.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If you can't take the heat, join the RCMP.

Mr. Crosbie: Learn the rules.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and his colleagues remained courteously quiet while the Chair made the ruling that the Chair just made. I think equal courtesy is expected when the Hon. Member rises to put his question.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House how there will be an investigation of the curious circumstances under which neither Oerlikon, a company with a $600-million contract with the Government, nor Mr. Bazin, its legal adviser and a top Conservative, came to inform the Government of certain irregularities for a period of some 10 months? Will this be subject to the RCMP investigation, or is it the Government's position that there will be no investigation on these matters to which the people of Canada deserve to have an answer?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first the Hon. Member asked for a legal opinion. Second, he asked a question which has been answered in this House on many, many occasions. He will just have to be patient and allow this to take place on a step-by-step basis.

There are some who would want a police investigation and a judicial inquiry going on at the same time. There are some who would rather have a judicial inquiry first and perhaps an RCMP investigation later. The Government has charted a course. It has turned this matter over to the RCMP for a complete and full investigation. The Prime Minister has left the door open if at any time during the course of those proceedings, or later, there is the necessity of the further involvement of a Parliamentary Committee or an inquiry of some sort. That option is still available. I wish the Hon. Member would accept that, because it seems to me that it is acceptable to most legal experts in the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Hon. Minister has tried to meet the question that was asked and has given a response.

DELAY BY RCMP IN QUESTIONING MR. OUELLETTE AND FORMER MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Perhaps he could explain why, as we have just been informed, neither Mr. Ouellette nor the former Minister have been questioned by the RCMP. Furthermore, is the RCMP acting this way on instructions from the Government, which wants to avoid a public inquiry about the role played by Mr. Bazin and other friends of the Government?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member. He is now by inference suggesting that we should tell the RCMP how to conduct its investigation. The Government, the Prime Minister, myself and the Cabinet will not do that, I regret to inform him.

FISHERIES

LICENCES GRANTED TO FRENCH FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister has issued nine fishing licences to French factory freezer trawlers in 3PS. The Minister should know that one of those large factory freezer trawlers can catch up to 12,000 tonnes of fish.

The Minister knows that the French fleet overfished their quota by 20,000 tonnes last year. When will the Minister stand up to the French fleet and fight for the rights of our fishermen?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, indeed this Government is taking initiatives to resolve finally and once and for all a problem which was started by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part. It is a matter of history that nine French national fishing vessels have been fishing in 3PS since 1972 when the Trudeau Government accorded to France the right to fish in those waters without regard for the fact that that was indeed a Canadian resource.

Mr. Henderson: The Minister should know the difference between a wet-fish trawler and a factory freezer trawler.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own officials are quoted as saying that the French fleet will overfish by 25,000 metric tonnes. With nine factory freezer trawlers, I contend that it will be more like 60,000 metric tonnes. Will the Minister just sit on his hands and allow Atlantic Canadian fishermen to sit on the wharf twiddling their thumbs while they watch the French fleet take fish from their waters back to France?

• (1440)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the practice of licensing these nine French trawlers was initiated by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part. Over the past several weeks this Government has been advancing negotiations with France which will end, once and for all, that exploitation of our resource which was legitimized in June of 1984 when the Hon. Member's Government agreed to turn a blind eye by way of an exchange of diplomatic notes to French overfishing in the 3PS area.

OBSERVANCE OF QUOTA BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not good enough simply to blame this situation on the previous Government. His Government has an obligation to deal responsibly with our fish resource. Can the Minister assure this House, and organizations such as the Newfoundland Fishermen's Union and the Association des pêcheries du Quebec, that the French will respect this quota? If not, why did he issue the licence?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Canada established a quota for France in the disputed area of 6,400 tonnes of cod. France insisted on its right to harvest 25,000 tonnes. That is why we have sought an agreement with France, the final details of which will be announced shortly and which will see interim fishing arrangements established for this area for the first time in history.

REASON FOR GRANTING LICENCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question. He did not give the House any assurance that this quota—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know Hon. Members would not want to use preambles just to make a comment that the Minister may not have answered the question asked. The purpose of the supplementary is to ask a question which will evoke from the Minister the answer desired. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Manly: Can the Minister tell the House why he granted these licences before he had any assurance that Canadian quotas were going to be respected?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, may I repeat that in June of 1984 the previous Liberal Government agreed that each party in the disputed zone will abstain from regulating fishing vessels flying the flag of the other party. The solution to this problem is to be found by way of diplomatic negotiations and we are now very close to announcing an agreement which will establish a common management regime in that area.

CONDUCT OF CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans have instructed the Secretary of State for External Affairs "to manage our fisheries discussions with the French in a manner that does not jeopardize the cordial relationship between Canada and France." I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in these negotiations was the Minister party to the issuing of enough factory freezer trawler licences to the French not only to surpass their own quota seven times but to catch more fish than the allowable catch on the entire south coast of Newfoundland? Is the Minister planning on running in France in the next election?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is not instructing the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this question. We are following a protocol established by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part and which agreed not to interfere in the regulation of the fishery in the disputed area pending an acceptable settlement of the boundary issue which this Government is advancing very vigorously with France.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in their desperation Newfoundland fishermen have actually been driven to inquire into the possibility of obtaining a French registration for their boats to allow them to fish on the south coast of Newfoundland without the danger of being arrested by our Government. A Newfoundland fisherman raising a French flag! Vive le Terre-Neuve libre.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, what negotiating position does the Government have left when it has already given the French everything they have asked for?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, we would not be required to give the French what they insist on in the disputed area had a previous Government not ignored this very important problem. I might add that an agreement to negotiate an interim fishing arrangement will be announced within hours and the Member, I hope, will be well pleased.

FUEL TAX REBATE—DENIAL TO FARMERS USING VEHICLES ON HIGHWAYS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Prairie farmers are being denied their tax rebate on fuel used on the highway in the business of farming. As part of the 1987 Budget will the Minister consider amending the Excise Tax Act so as to base the rebate not on artificial considerations such as whether it is used on highway or off highway, but rather on the essential consideration as to whether the fuel is used in the business of farming?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there was some difficulty, after we announced the fuel tax rebate, with the allocation of what was on and what was off highway use. Last year the Minister of National Revenue changed the procedure to allow for what is admittedly an arbitrary arrangement but one that we felt was fairly close to what would be the normal allocation between on highway and off highway use. We have tried to meet the objections of the farmers in this regard by a simple administrative change, but I would remind the Hon. Member that we have moved a long way on the fuel tax rebate. We have also seen interest rates fall close to five percentage points over the past two and a half years and that has made the life of the farmer an awful lot better.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF REBATE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the problem is that farmers have already excluded their personal use from their calculations and the Department is still taking a percentage of what is left. I do not think that is fair. Will the Minister reconsider the matter in the Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern expressed by the Hon. Member. Other Members have made the same views known to me. As the Hon. Member has asked, I will take their views under consideration in the preparation leading up to the Budget.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns his statement last week that the bank rate had been brought down to 7.74 per cent. Could the Minister explain why Canadian consumers are still paying interest rates of up to 28 per cent on credit cards which is a spread of more than 20 per cent? What specifically does the Minister intend to do to correct this situation?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, regarding credit card interest rates, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is going to report on that very soon and I look forward to acting on that report. I may also remind the Hon. Member that if he will shop around he will see there is an enormous number of rates. Trust companies and banks offer different rates with different conditions. We will, of course, look at the report very carefully, but I do urge the Hon. Member to shop around.

[Translation]

Mr. Toupin: Interest rates are as high as 28 per cent. We could suggest a number of ways to deal with this.

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER IMPOSE CEILING ON CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Why will the Minister not establish a ceiling on credit card interest rates to protect consumers, as is done in the majority of U.S. States?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): A ceiling on credit card interest rates is something that will be considered when the committee reports.

An Hon. Member: Well, do it.

Mr. Hockin: We must wait for committees to report.

Mr. Rodriguez: You haven't waited on any so far.

OPPORTUNITY TO RECONSIDER APPOINTMENT OF MR. JEAN BAZIN TO SENATE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and, again, concerns the Saint-Jean land flip.

Canadians have now been informed that Lette & Associates, former lawyers for Oerlikon, had warned the company about the land transaction, and that they were sacked for their pains.

Since the business and thus the files went to the law firm of the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Jean Bazin, doesn't it stand to reason that the Prime Minister's friend knew or at least ought to have known about the land deal? And doesn't it also stand to reason today that Mr. Bazin's appointment to the Senate should be reconsidered, at least until the inquiry is over with?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has been very precise on the dates when the information was first given to him. Mr. Bazin has issued a statement. If the Hon. Member wished to read and reflect on those statements, he would have the answer to his question.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly why I am asking these questions, because we are getting conflicting information.

The newspapers say this appointment had no connection with the practice of law. Again, as far as hiring the law firm of the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Jean Bazin, is concerned, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Do you have to hire one of the Prime Minister's pals to be awarded a contract by this Government?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: What a scumball!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Contemptible!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, an answer to that question would only dignify the question, and I think it would be inappropriate for me to do that.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—COMPLIANCE BY FORMER GENERAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister has stated that General Peart had complied with Section 58 of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines, which pertains to the fact that he wrote a letter and received clearance from the Deputy Minister General.

Section 60, Subsection (c) of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines prohibits full-time ministerial appointees from working with or counselling a company for commercial purposes on the policies of the Department which he has left, for a period of one year after he has left that Department. In light of that, my question is this. Since General Peart is now the vice-president of corporate affairs with Oerlikon, which has a significant contract with the Department of Defence, is General Peart not in violation of Section 60, Subsection (c) of these guidelines?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again we have innuendo against a distinguished former General of the Canadian Forces.

Mr. Broadbent: It's a question.

Mr. Beatty: We receive questions from the NDP, and then they try to drown out the answer.

Ms. Jewett: When you make a silly remark like that.

Mr. Beatty: I wonder if they will give me the courtesy of responding to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask all Hon. Members to permit the Minister to respond. The question, although long, was quite straightforward.

Mr. Beatty: Indeed it was, and the answer is quite straightforward.

As I indicated to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, General Peart communicated with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General and fully disclosed to him. The finding of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General was that he was not in conflict of interest. Since receiving the question from the Leader of the NDP, I have called the Assistant Deputy Registrar General specifically with regard to the section cited by the Leader of the NDP, and by my hon. colleague opposite. Again the Assistant Deputy Registrar General said there was no conflict of interest. The Hon. Member is welcome to call him.

GUIDELINE PROVISION QUERY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Can the Minister then explain why there would not be a conflict when Section 60, Subsection (c) explicitly states that you cannot give counsel for commercial purposes for a period of one year? Could the Minister tell us what the guideline means, if it doesn't mean that he cannot work for a company like Oerlikon for a period of one year after leaving the Department? What does this guideline mean, if that is not the case?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wishes an interpretation of the guidelines, why does not not ask the official charged with the responsibility of interpreting them? His number is 995-0721.

Mr. Cassidy: He used that in the Stevens inquiry, too.

OERLIKON LAND TRANSACTIONS—STATEMENT ISSUED BY MR. JEAN BAZIN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I wish to ask him whether or not the Government stands behind the statement of Mr. Jean Bazin issued on January 18 indicating his involvement in the land transactions by Oerlikon at Saint-Jean, Quebec.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any reason why the Government should stand behind a statement made by any Hon. Member, or any hon. person. In this particular case, the Senator made a statement based upon his knowledge of the facts. Together with Mr. Nantel, he brought this information to light in the first place. The dates that have been alluded to, both in the Prime Minister's statement and in his statement, are dates which we accept.

USE OF MINISTERIAL STATIONERY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister should know that the statement in question has been issued on the letterhead of a Minister of the Crown, that is, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and one would then presume that the Government would stand behind that statement.

Why is the Government of Canada, and a Minister of the Crown, using his letterhead and his offices to put out a statement of Mr. Bazin—presumably because they supported it—and at the same time carrying on a campaign of selective leaks aimed at the former Minister of Transport? What type of contradictory action is that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure on what basis the Hon. Member can charge the Government of selectively leaking information.

Mr. Tobin: The Prime Minister admitted it last week.

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps if he has some knowledge, he may wish to impart that information to the RCMP.

As far as the other part of the question is concerned, presumably it was for the intention of imparting some accurate information for a change. That is something we have not been receiving from Members opposite.

ACCIDENTAL DISCHARGE OF MACHINE-GUNS IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. I am concerned about the safety and security of persons within the National Capital Region. In the last four months we have had three incidents of machine-gun firings through legs and guard huts by RCMP special constables. This has been endangering innocent lives. I ask the Solcitor General if these dangerous weapons will be replaced, or will adequate training be given to their users?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I share his concern. As late as last week I discussed this matter with the Commissioner of the RCMP. He advised me that they do in fact go under very rigorous specialized training. As a matter of fact, it comprises some 32 hours on the gun alone. He advised me that the gun is a safe gun, and it is used by many other countries. At my request he will review the matter once again.

HEALTH

USE OF EDUCATION TO COMBAT AIDS DISEASE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week the Minister was quoted in the media as having said that while there will be more money provided for research on AIDS, he was not prepared this time to provide any more money for preventive education. My question to him is this. In view of the fact that education is the only effective way of combating this very serious disease, how can the Minister justify such a statement in view of Canada's pitiful effort compared to the United States and Great Britain?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the Member says that public education is the only manner of combating the disease, that is simply not the case. It is one method. For example, in the same interview I said that $39 million in five years would be used for AIDS, $22.5 million would be used for research. Is he suggesting that is not a good manner in which to combat AIDS?

Additionally, the Canadian Public Health Association is putting forward ads. They have been given the responsibility for those ads. I understand from them that those ads are fairly close to completion and airing.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister really believe that research will be a more effective preventive measure than education? If so, we are in serious trouble. Will he not think about the matter and come to the conclusion, about which everyone is aware, that it will be five to ten years before research produces any results?

If we do not have an educational program that is effective now we may face a very, very dangerous situation in this country.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have already given the Hon. Member the background about what was being done with the Canadian Public Health Association in regard to public education. Where does the Hon. Member get the evidence of five to ten years in research? Researchers will not give any time frame. I wish the Hon. Member would not use such inflammatory statements like those he just made, which are simply not the case in this issue.

INDUSTRY

ALGOMA STEEL CORPORATION—FUTURE OF WAWA MINING OPERATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last Thursday, Algoma Steel Corporation in Sault Ste. Marie announced that within a few days it would commence the shut down of its iron ore mining operations in Wawa unless a solution to the freight rate problem with Algome Central Railway is found. Since 350 jobs in mining are involved and at least 2,000 jobs in the district, when will the Government make a decision? Will it give a commitment today that it will provide the necessary assistance to see that these freight rates are lowered so that this mining operation at Wawa can continue?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, for some months we have been asked, through the Member for Sault Ste. Marie, to look into this matter. There have been ongoing discussions for some time and I understand good news may be announced shortly. The Ontario Government, federal Government, and the companies are continuing these discussions.

Mr. Speaker: There is time for one further question. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Highlands-Canso.

TRADE

NOVA SCOTIA CHRISTMAS TREES—ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKET

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He is aware of concerns of Nova Scotia Christmas tree growers about access to the United States Christmas tree market. What assurances can he give Christmas tree growers in Nova Scotia that their exports to the United States will not be hit with a tariff in 1987?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the continuing interest that the Hon. Member has expressed in this matter. When Vice-President Bush and Secretary Baker were in Ottawa last Wednesday we discussed the question of shakes and shingles and the desire to work jointly toward the resolution of that problem. We have agreed to take steps in that direction and work is continuing. Hopefully we will be able to deal with the problem of concern to the Hon. Member and the Christmas tree industry, as well as other industries. I should remind him that the decision was taken last May in response to a national problem. It required a national response. We will continue to work on it.

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to a word used by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in one of his answers during the Question Period just concluded. I heard the Deputy Prime Minister use the word "fabrication" in answer, I believe, to the Leader of the Opposition. Citation 320 of Beauchesne says that since 1958 it has been ruled unparliamentary to use a number of expressions, one of them being "fabrication". Apparently this was a ruling made on January 27, 1959, at page 385 of Hansard.

To be perfectly fair, I did not make a note of the total statement in question. I would be quite prepared for you to treat what I just said as notice so that we can check the "blues". I would then be in a position to give further argument based on the total context of the use of the word.

Mr. Speaker: I might point out that the Chair would want to be very careful to ensure that if the word was used, it was used and directed at an Hon. Member. If it had been used to describe a general series of allegations that may have taken place outside the Chamber, of course, it would be in a different category.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe you have qualified the manner in which I used the word which the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party has raised. I certainly did not accuse any Member of the House of a fabrication. If that appears to be so upon checking the "blues", it would be inadvertent and I would be more than willing to withdraw it. As you suggested, Mr. Speaker, I was describing the sort of state of innuendo, rumours, fabrication and so on that was associated with this. It was certainly not directed at any one individual Member of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will consult the "blues". The explanation may be adequate.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) had the floor. I gather that the Hon. Member has concluded his remarks. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, while I am pleased to participate in this debate, I must say that I am discouraged by the motion moved by Members opposite that the question now be put. It can be concluded by any reasonable person that the intent of the motion is to cut off meaningful debate on a subject that is very significant and important, not only to those communities in Canada that are involved in the lumber industry but to Canada as a whole.

While this legislation raises a number of issues that deserve consideration in the House, one particular issue is that of Canadian sovereignty. I have concluded after reading the Bill and listening to arguments by all Members that this Bill will be very damaging, not only to Canada's economic interest but to our sovereignty and independence as well.

Canadians will have to pay a 15 per cent export tax on all softwood lumber exported to the United States, and figures introduced by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) show that it will cost the lumber industry some $600 million on the basis of that tax. If it is converted into a timber cutting fee, or stumpage fee at the provincial level, the figure may well be some $950 million to $1 billion. Such huge sums will negatively affect the forest industry in western Canada, particularly in British Columbia, and will have a long-term effect on the people of northern Ontario whose livelihood is based on that sector of our economy. It has serious ramifications for the people of Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

I am shocked and outraged that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) would mislead Members of Parliament and Canadians as a whole with statements that somehow this legislation has been drafted and negotiated with the United States with the paramount interests of Canadians being kept in mind. All Canadians expect their governments, regardless of political affiliation, to stand for the best interests of Canada. They should not be hoodwinked by the United States nor, indeed, by other nations. When we look at the substance of the agreement and see the powers which have been conveyed upon the other signing partner we can see how absolutely devastating it is to Canadian interests.

Clause 6 of the Memorandum of Understanding should be noted:

> The Government of Canada will take no action, and will take all reasonable steps to ensure that no other governmental body in Canada takes any action, directly or indirectly, which has the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures, except as provided in this Understanding.

• (1510)

The heading of Clause 7 is "Exchange of Information and Monitoring". Who has the upper hand with regard to this legislation and, obviously, the agreement which will be subsequently tabled? Is it the people of western Canada or the people of British Columbia? Is it the communities in northern Ontario and Quebec or is it those communities in Atlantic Canada? Are they the ones which will have the upper hand in determining where this information may go? The answer is obviously no.

The agreement provides in Clause 7a:

> The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America will exchange information necessary for the implementation and monitoring of this Understanding.
> The Government of Canada will provide the Government of the United States of America with data concerning the level of Provincial and Federal softwood and total stumpage harvest, the total revenue collected from the sale of Provincial and Federal softwood and total timber, total export charge collected, total shipments of certain softwood lumber products to the United States of America, total lumber production by province and total softwood lumber production by province—

And so on and so on.

The interpretation I put on that clause is that the United States will have the upper hand with regard to this particular agreement. I say to my colleagues opposite that my opinion is an opinion which was put forth in a documented way by the chief American trade representative in a joint letter to the U.S. Coalition of Lumber. I know the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will be very conscious not only of the substance of this particular letter but, indeed, of the very devastating effects it will have for the people of British Columbia, northern Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

The chief American trade representative said that "The U.S. Government would have to approve"—would have to approve, Madam Speaker—"any changes in the export charge or any calculation of the value of any replacement measures. Any changes made without U.S. Government approval would be considered a violation of the understanding".

We have given away to our good neighbours to the South, the United States, the upper hand on a sector which is extremely important to the Canadian economy. How in good faith can Members opposite, in particular the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for International Trade perpetrate such misleading statements to the House and to the general public that somehow this export tax will be in the long term interests of Canadians?

We see the signs every day of a Government elected by the majority of the people of Canada which is totally incompetent to have the trust of the people of Canada. In this particular instance it has bungled a most important sector of our Canadian economy by giving way to the United States. The only response which comes from the Government benches, "Well, we did the best we could". But there were other alternatives available to the Government and it chose not to proceed with those alternatives. Clearly, history will tell us that this particular export tax of 15 per cent will be extremely devastating to the Canadian lumber industry. It will have, in particular, devastating effects on those small rural communities throughout Canada, and their livelihood and economic prospects for the future.

This also says something else about the Government. It says that when sovereignty is at issue, the Prime Minister is prepared to sit on the knee of the President of the United States and sing. He has certainly sung in this particular instance. He has given away our sovereignty and the opportunity of Canadians to embellish their livelihoods in this most important Canadian sector. That is what the Prime Minister has done.

In concluding, I wish to say to Hon. Members opposite that there is no shame at all in saying to members of the cabinet "We will vote against this legislation", because their first obligation should be to provide good legislation for all Canadians and not legislation which will only embellish the Prime Minister's personal relationship with the President of the United States.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I took my time in rising because I wanted to give the opportunity to Members of the governing Party to enter into the debate. I must say I am a little disappointed they did not take advantage of that opportunity. We want to hear their point of view with regard to the legislation before the House dealing with the imposition of the lumber export tax.

I have three basic perspectives regarding this legislation that I want to mention. Basically, I want to deal with the question of Canadian sovereignty and some of the things the Canadian Government has given up by entering into this deal with the Americans. I also want to make some comments about the relationship of this legislation to the over-all economic strategy of the Government, the strategy on which it has pinned its future, the free trade negotiations with the United States.

The most shocking aspect of this legislation is the damage it does to Canadian sovereignty and the fact that a Canadian Government would sign this agreement with the United States, one of the most powerful countries in the world which has often been compared to an elephant. It is the elephant under which the Canadian mouse must sleep. If the elephant rolls over, the Canadian mouse is in great danger. The Government has become in fact a mouse in its relationship with the United States.

After the Government puts in place the lumber export tax, it then wants to put in place an equivalent charge under provincial jurisdiction, because resources in our country fall under provincial jurisdiction, but it first has to have the approval of the United States Government. After provincial and federal Governments sit down and devise a regime for replacing the federal tax with a provincial charge, it will then require the approval of the American Government. That is the agreement the Conservative Government has made with the United States. It is giving up a significant portion of Canadian sovereignty. It is getting down on one knee before Ronald Reagan. Living beside such a powerful nation it is important for Canadians to be ever vigilant with regard to our sovereignty, not only with respect to trade matters, such as softwood lumber, but also with regard to boundary matters.

There is a controversial matter concerning boundaries in British Columbia with respect to which the Government must be strong and tough. If a Canadian Government shows weakness in one area, then the Americans will see that weakness and follow up in other areas. The weakness demonstrated by the Canadian Government in this area as a result of backing down on a question of sovereignty will have implications in other areas.

I ask Hon. Members to consider the whole question of northern sovereignty. Canadian maps show that large portions of the Arctic fall within Canadian jurisdiction, and the Americans doubt that jurisdiction. They therefore doubt our sovereignty in this area. If we are weak when it comes to the export of lumber, then they will think that we will be weak when it comes to our boundaries in the Arctic.

So it is important for a Government to be able to stand up to the Americans, not necessarily in a belligerent fashion but in a firm way, in order to demonstrate that when it comes to the question of sovereignty Canadians will not compromise. It took a long time for Canadians to establish their sovereign rights. It took the courage of Prime Minister after Prime Minister. First, we had to stand up to Britain in order to establish the legitimacy of Canadian sovereignty. It took Canadians who fought in the First World War and the Second World War to establish Canadian sovereignty. Canadian sovereignty has been brought about at a very high price and over a long period of time. It is a mistake for the Government to rush into an agreement on softwood lumber in order to save a few dollars, which is the argument we have heard, which will weaken our sovereignty. It is a tragic error in strategy and approach on the international level.

The agreement not only envisions the Canadian Government going on bended knee to the American Government to say: "Can we put this particular provincial tax in place of this federal tax now", it also prohibits the provision of grants, low-cost loans and other benefits to the forestry industry by federal or provincial Governments.

One argument the Government has used is that the money that will come from the tax could be funnelled into the forestry industry, thus being of benefit to that industry which is now suffering as a result of this extra barrier to trade with the Americans. The agreement specifically prohibits that money from being used for those purposes. While it is obviously necessary to continue to retool the industry and to ensure that it is capable of being as competitive as possible on the international level, it is necessary to spend money if there are plant closures in the industry so they can adjust and move to other industries. This agreement prohibits the use of grants for those types of purposes since the Americans will simply see them as unfair subsidies to the industry. Thus this agreement hits at not only Canadian sovereignty but at the capacity of the Canadian Government to work in a way that will improve and strengthen the softwood lumber industry.

The Government has given up a number of things in making this agreement with the Americans. One thing it has given up is its opportunity to go the full length with the legal processes in the United States. The last time a Canadian Government went through the legal process of appeal before American authorities on a matter such as this it won and the tariff barrier was not put in place. By making this agreement the Government has given up the opportunity to go all the way with that approach, to test it. There are arguments and evidence to indicate that we would have had a fair-to-even chance to beat this matter before those authorities. But we gave that up.

We also gave up the opportunity to win our appeal under the GATT. We gave up a great deal when we signed this agreement, when we went in such haste to the Americans and said: "Will you make a deal with us?" We gave up at least a couple of other avenues that were open to us for resolving this matter in favour of Canadian interests. We just let them go by the way.

I wish to talk a bit about free trade, something which is central to the Government's economic policy. If the Government handles the free trade issue in the way it has handled the softwood lumber negotiations, then we are in deep trouble. It is time the Government stood on its own two feet. It is time for our Government to get firm with the United States rather than for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to try to be pals with the President of the United States. Our Government must adopt effective negotiation strategies. The Government must be tough with the Americans because the Americans are being tough and ruthless with us.

I call upon the Government to withdraw this legislation and use the other avenues which are open to let the Americans know without a doubt that we will stand up for our interests. We must let the Americans know that we are not ready to lay down just because some particular group in the United States gets angry or feels that competition from the Canadians is too tough.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members opposite may tell us that practically everything has been said that could be said on the subject. Personally, I read through all the speeches made since the beginning of this debate, starting on Monday, January 19, when Parliament reconvened. Sometimes I think it is pretty hard to come up with anything new, although we do want to make Canadians aware of the threat to our forestry industry this agreement represents, an agreement under which this Government, through the responsible Minister, has decided to make our future dependent on the United States.

I tried to come up with a more practical point and did so after a meeting we had with a distinguished representative of the Quebec Lumber Manufacturers Association, who met with the caucus to make us aware of the problems that would be facing the Quebec lumber industry.

As far as Canadian sovereignty is concerned, I obviously agree wholeheartedly with what was said by my colleagues in the Official Opposition as well as by our colleagues in the third party in this House. However, I was very surprised no one had talked about the people in Quebec whose lives will certainly be very much affected and who are very, very concerned about what the Government is about to sign or has signed with the United States, without necessarily knowing all the whys and wherefores of this agreement.

Madam Speaker, we could usefully look at some of the facts contained in a document entitled: The Lumber Industry in Quebec, published by the Quebec Lumber Manufacturers Association, 1985 Edition. Delivery of lumber, by administrative region. The Lower St. Lawrence provides 6 per cent of Quebec's production. I see that Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean provides 25 per cent. In the Quebec City area the percentage is 18 per cent, and I was very alarmed to see that in the breakdown by administrative region in Quebec, the North West is responsible for 39 per cent of the lumber production. This is a matter of great concern, because anyone who knows Quebec realizes that the lumber sector is one of our major industries and provides a great many jobs. I have the figures to prove it. In Quebec, the industry provided 21,500 jobs in 1984. It was hard for the industry at times. If we look at 1970, the sector provided 9,135 jobs in Quebec, and in 1980, the figure was up to 24,000. Twenty three thousand and 18,000 in 1982, and 21,000 and 21,500 in 1984.

Madam Speaker, I think that when we look at the details of each of these agreements and of the overall agreement the Government is considering, we have every reason to be concerned. The general concept of a trade agreement with the United States may be a great and noble idea that makes a lot of sense, but when we get into the details, we realize how dangerous such an agreement could be for us in Quebec. I am of course speaking for Quebec, but I also speak as a Canadian, because other sectors may also be affected, eventually.

For my own satisfaction and for the information of the House and Hon. Members, I made a quick survey of Members who might be affected. I found out that even the Minister from Blainville—Deux-Montagnes (Mrs. Landry) is affected. Her riding has a number of industries that belong to the Lumber Manufacturers Association, and if I remember correctly, Blainville and Sainte-Thérèse are in her riding.

I realized that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), the Hon. Member for Roberval, would be severely affected, because 25 per cent of the jobs are in his riding. I see that the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) is very much affected. I noticed that the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) is affected.

To my surprise, when I was looking at the list of members of the Quebec lumber industry, high up on the list I found a large number of small-and medium-sized businesses in Quebec. We all know the Beauce region. We all know that Beauce is an area that is on the move. It is one of Quebec's dynamic growth areas. We know that. However, Madam Speaker, I don't think the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) seems to realize—I hope he knows his riding better than I do—how many industries and small- and medium-sized businesses are directly affected by this agreement, and there are quite a few if we take a close look at the Quebec Lumber Industry, their advertising and if we consider the meeting we had with officers of the Association.

I see that the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) is directly affected by this agreement. Personally, I am a pragmatist, I'm not an ideologue. I am very down to earth, which is probably why I always identify with the Liberal Party. I think we should go back to the source of the problems that will arise in this vast enterprise in which the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) would like to see us involved, this great trade agreement.

Madam Speaker, I am very concerned, and I could go on. I also found that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) is very much affected. There are so many. I could name them all, and if anyone cares to consult this document, the Quebec Lumber Industry, they will find the names of a great many companies in their own ridings. In fact, we intend to write to them to get them moving and on to their Members to tell them: Listen guys and gals, do something because this is getting too close to home. These are all small businesses.

Madam Speaker, in Canada it has often been our experience that when large agreements are signed, people say it doesn't affect them, it isn't serious. However, I may recall the size of the small- and medium-sized business sector in Quebec. Now, this Government wants to sign an agreement covering a specific sector within the trade agreement with the U.S. at any price. Our partner within this vast agreement is the friendly giant next door, I said friendly, and I know the Right Hon. former Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) always says not to attack the United States frivolously. I could not agree more, but our great big friendly neighbour takes giant steps and when he takes one step he crushes everything in his path. And why not, since they are more powerful than we are. Madam Speaker, let us have no illusions about making the U.S. Government backtrack should its interests clash with ours. What we want to do and what we shall do in the weeks, the months and the year to come is draw the attention of Canadians to the daily dangers inherent not in the overall agreement which will not be signed until the very last but in all those smaller intermediate agreements that with a single signature may wipe out all or part of our small- and medium-sized businesses.

And we have not mentioned all the other possibilities. What will happen next? What will my good friends and colleagues and I hope friends and colleagues of the Government of Quebec say if a U.S. senator or several U.S. senators or members of Congress should decide that all this hydro-electric power from Quebec is unfair competition, and we have another Minister scurrying to Washington? I hope this time they will not be vacationing in Hawaii. If I mention this, it may be because we have heard so much about it or because we are envious not to have been there ourselves. But that's beside the point. The question remains: What will happen? I will conclude, Madam Speaker, because I always obey the Chair. I conclude by asking: What will it be? What will our attitude be the next time if the same thing happens in other major areas such as the sale of our electric power resources which is so beneficial to Quebec? The same thing will happen, because the Americans will have the same fear. With the Americans, we should be constantly on the look-out. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the Government was not on the look-out when it signed this agreement. If we are continuing this debate now, it is to emphasize that the Government did not exercise the expected cautiousness, and there will be Hon. Members taking part in this debate as long as the Government does not assure us that it will be constantly on the look-out from now on. I thank you for your patience.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I too should like to make a few comments on the very important matter now under consideration in the House, namely Bill C-37 on Canadian softwood lumber and the 15 per cent tax on the export of certain softwood lumber products to the United States. It is an important question with respect to Canada's sovereignty, just as it is an important question with respect to the relations between Canada and the United States, and between Ottawa and the ten Canadian provinces.

Madam Speaker, the softwood lumber industry is very important because thousands of people work directly or indirectly in this industry in most Canadian provinces. As far as I and many more people are concerned, the free trade issue and the free trade negotiations between our country and the United States are also very important, as they are to the chief negotiators of the two countries, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is in the House today, and to our chief negotiator, Mr. Simon Reisman. I spent a lot of time in my riding during the Christmas recess and I know that many of my constituents are deeply concerned about a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States because we are a small country of only 25 million people. There are a lot of people living in the United States, ten times as many as in Canada, a total population of 250 million. It would create a problem for us. It is somewhat like a mouse and an elephant sharing the same bed. It is a good thing for the mouse to share the bed of a huge elephant, that is until the elephant has a bad dream and turns over. So much for the small mouse.

But, Madam Speaker, it is a question of sovereignty. Some legal experts have told us we gave up much of our sovereignty on this issue. I am afraid that if we continue to steer this course we will end up being the 53rd State of the United States.

Madam Speaker, I wonder what has happened to the Progressive Conservative Party, a party once recognized as truly nationalist here in Canada. I remember Sir John A. Macdonald quite well. He had a national vision. He was truly nationalist. At the time, it was the Liberal Party, not at all the Conservative Party, which had a continental vision. That remained the philosophy of the Conservative Party up through the time of John Diefenbaker. Mr. Diefenbaker also was a great Canadian nationalist. He had a vision of the Canadian North. He spoke very strongly for Canada, claiming that this was an independent country and so on and so forth.

But now, under the new Progressive Conservative Party Leader, there is a different philosophy. The new PC Party Leader often observes that he is a great friend of Mr. Reagan, the President of the United States, and that Canada has very close ties with the United States.

• (1540)

It does not seem to matter, Madam Speaker, whatever happens we seem to respond time after time to what the Americans want us to do. This time it is softwood lumber and an export tax of some 15 per cent. A few months ago, after the March conference with President Reagan and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) we heard about changing our drug legislation, of getting rid of generic pharmaceuticals, something we have had since 1969. This was proposed in response to a request by the President of the United States to change our patent laws in Canada to coincide with the patent laws in the United States. The President wanted a free flow between the two countries. He wanted to have a free flow of pharmaceuticals and a free flow of information. You cannot have that when you have a different law in Canada than in the United States. The Americans have patent protection for drugs. After a certain amount of time we in Canada could have competition from generic companies. Because of that competition drug prices came down to a level much lower than in the United States. I remember well my second year as a Member of Parliament in 1969 when the drug Bill was brought in. At that time prices of drugs in Canada were significantly higher than in the United States. Because we have had real competition between major drug companies drug prices in Canada, according to Professor Eastman, are now much lower than in the United States.

Once again we have had pressure from the Americans to change our law, to change our policy to suit their country and their people. Exactly the same thing is happening to softwood lumber as will happen to pharmaceuticals.

It is time that we stopped acting like a timid little mouse and stood up for our rights and for our country like Diefenbaker and Macdonald did years ago. It is time that the Prime Minister stopped treating Canada as branch plant Canada. I know he worked for many years for huge American multinational companies. He was at one time the president of Iron Ore Canada. He has a mentality, perhaps from his background and where he grew up, that branch plants are absolutely fantastic for this country, and if it were not for Uncle Sam we would not be where we are today. He is also the same man who closed down Schefferville.

I know sometimes that American investment has helped us in the job area. The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) is shaking his finger. Maybe he does not agree with me but sometimes American investment may have helped. It is important to remember that we have to be masters in our own house—maîtres chez nous. I think the Prime Minister has taken his policy of branch plantism from the private sector. He has a vision of this country as branch plant Canada where Uncle Sam and Uncle Ronnie in the United States call the shots rather than the Parliament of Canada. This is good enough.

[Translation]

I have already mentioned the generic drug issue and the lumber issue here in Canada, Madam Speaker, but there is also the issue of the Canadian energy policy which has been changed under tremendous pressure from the United States. There is also the issue of foreign investments here in Canada. We used to have here a screening agency for investments in Canada, but under pressure from the United States, the Government led by the Prime Minister changed that also. There were four examples. The Prime Minister has listened very well to the President of the United States, but not to the Canadian public.

[English]

That is not good enough, Madam Speaker. We have legislation before this House now that will allow the Americans to tell us what we can do without export taxation. We cannot change the stumpage fees unless the Americans agree to it, nor can we set a certain stumpage fee unless they agree to it. It is not good enough to let them call the shots and determine what we do in our own country. We are a sovereign state. We are not the fifty-first state of the United States and it is about time our Prime Minister realized that.

Even in sectors where we have free trade, such as shakes and shingles, a few months ago we saw where the Americans moved with a tariff anyway because we had pierced their market. We had done very well. We were very efficient and the Americans did not like it. They became very protectionist and they protected themselves.

[Translation]

That is exactly the same situation for our farmers here in Canada. There was in the United States a farm bill providing massive subsidies for American wheat and grain exports elsewhere in the world. Sometimes, they take over Canadian markets because of their enormous subsidies.

[English]

I say that I cannot support this kind of legislation, Madam Speaker. My constituents do not support this kind of legislation. They fear as I fear that we have a Prime Minister who is gradually selling out this country. It is time to stand up for Canada.

[Translation]

Now is the time for our country to act. The time has come for Canada to act, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Madam Speaker, this is the second time I have had the opportunity to address the House on Bill C-37 dealing with the lumber agreement made between Canada and the United States. I would like to review for the benefit of Members of the House several of the reasons that the Conservative Government feels Bill C-37 is necessary. I would like to outline the rationale behind the way in which the Conservative Government went about dealing with the difficulties that Canada's lumber industry was having with the American lumber industry, and in that attempt, to some extent, put some logic to Bill C-37, logic which I do not believe can be found but nonetheless I will attempt the task.

First, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) indicated that the deal was made to "protect thousands of jobs in the Canadian lumber industry". Second, she indicated that the deal was signed because "We were convinced we would lose the final determination." Ostensibly I would assume that the Minister for International Trade had a legal opinion to back up that comment, and I will come back to that in a moment. Third, the Minister indicated that "If we lost our case, we would be entrenching a dangerous legal precedent." Lastly, "Why should we as a country be concerned about this agreement when, in fact, the federal Government has not interfered with the provinces rights to use their own resources?" Those are the four major points made by the Minister for International Trade in her address to the House. I would like to respond to each of those reasons for us to support the Bill.

Upon close examination of the arguments in favour of supporting this piece of legislation, one finds that each point has a flaw in its logic. Let us deal with them. The Minister for International Trade mentioned that the deal was made to protect thousands of jobs. I assume that the Minister was simply referring to jobs in the lumber industry itself. She did not mention what would happen to the thousands of jobs in the value-added industries that will be lost as a direct result of the export tax being applied to these goods.

I would also quarrel with the notion that this agreement will protect thousands of jobs on the grounds that a large segment of the Canadian forestry industry has a great deal of concern about the impact of the export tax on markets. I say this in an attempt to simplify a very complicated situation. There is a danger that as a result of the loss of markets in the United States the lumber industry in British Columbia, which has traditionally not been a competitor in the Ontario market supplied by northern Ontario and Quebec, will find itself faced with competition that never existed before. The concept of thousands of jobs being saved through the imposition of this export tax which is placating our friends South of the 49th parallel has a flaw in its logic.

Second, the Minister indicated that the deal was good because, as the Minister said, we were convinced that we would lose the final determination. That has always been true. That is an inherent danger for any industry that comes under question by our American trading partner. There is a tribunal before which Canadian workers can complain about being unfairly attacked by American products, and that is true of our neighbour South of the border as well.

This problem did not come about overnight. We had the same difficulty in 1982 and 1983 when the American lumber industry complained that our stumpage fees were an unfair subsidization of the Canadian industry. At that time the Liberal Government did not cave in to the pressures of the American lumber industry, but chose to fight the imposition of an offsetting tax. We were very successful in our fight before the tribunal which deals with international trading disputes between the two countries.

As late as December 23, 1986 a preliminary report indicated that the tribunal judging our case may well have voted in favour of Canada. Yet by legislating Bill C-37 we have pre-empted any choice. We have no choice in this matter now that the Government has caved in to the American demands and has imposed a tax on our own industry. In my opinion, that sets a very dangerous precedent.

Speaking of precedents, the Minister of International Trade went on to say that the third reason we should sign the agreement was that if we lost our case it would entrench a dangerous legal precedent. Good heavens, she was worried about legal precedents, but what kind of precedent is set by acquiescing to the demands of the United States to sign the lumber agreement?

I submit that as a direct result of caving in to pressures from the United States on the lumber industry we have opened up a number of other critical sectors of our economy to the same kind of pressures. The American lumber industry does not operate in isolation from other associations representing the interests of steelworkers and the agricultural sectors of the U.S. econmy. It is no secret that the United States is in more of a protectionist mood than it has been in for several decades.

Canada can complain about falling victim to the pressures put on the U.S. administration by the U.S. lumber lobby, but in fact Americans have moved on several other fronts to put up tariff barriers on products from other countries. One need simply look at the reaction of the United States' chief negotiator, Mr. Yeutter, in reply to the European Economic Community's decision to allow Spain into the EEC. The United States agricultural community lost some $230 million worth of its market as a result of that decision and the U.S. has retaliated against the European Economic Community by imposing a tax of up to 200 per cent on certain items entering the United States from France, including wines and endive from Belgium.

We cannot view the tendency of the United States toward protectionism in isolation from other events that are happening throughout the world. By caving in to the U.S. demands to impose a tax on our own resources we have given up the opportunity to use our rights through the trade tribunal to put forward our own sovereign Canadian viewpoint.

I believe many Canadians feel that because of the way in which the Government has dealt with the lumber issue it has given up many of our traditional rights to protect cases at the international level. I think caving in sets a very dangerous precedent and there will be other industries that will be similarly challenged.

Finally, the Minister indicated that part of the reason we should accept the agreement was that in no way would we tread upon the provinces' rights to use their own resources. I submit that that last point is flawed in its logic as well. The provinces do not have the right to use the money in whatever way they want. Clearly the memo from President Reagan to Baldrige commits the United States to using retaliatory action if Canada slips in any way as defined by the Dennison letter.

Clearly, in submitting Bill C-37, the Canadian Government has given up its rights and this will set a very dangerous precedent. I should hope that members of the Conservative Party will see the error of their ways and vote to throw out Bill C-37.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, this is the second time I have entered debate on Bill C-37. However, this is not just the second time I have spoken about it in this House. I first raised concerns about this Bill in a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 in which I pointed out that remanufacturers in Ontario were being forced to pay a 15 per cent tax on lumber originating at exempt mills in parts of Canada and the United States. At that time, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was furious with me. She heckled from her seat that I had my facts wrong. She went so far as to depart from her own prepared remarks to say that I had misled Canadians. However, I checked my facts.

Apparently, so did the Minister, because when I questioned her on the same matter later in the week her attitude had changed completely. The Minister even thanked me for bringing what she called these anomalies—her word, not mine—to her attention. Evidently her officials had done some checking and advised her that there were indeed loopholes in this Bill. The Minister went so far as to plant another oral question from her own benches to help her correct this mess. This time the Minister agreed with the member of her Party that there were problems with the Bill. She admitted that some remanufactured softwood products had not been covered by the original legislation and she promised that she would meet with industry representatives to get all the facts. Now the Minister will have to get the Americans to agree that other products should be exempted from the export tax. Such an oversight tells me that this legislation was drawn up rather hastily, to put it mildly.

There should be no holes in such important legislation. We are dealing with a Bill that affects thousands of jobs in the softwood industry, a Bill that goes to the very heart of our sovereign rights as a nation. Yet there are obvious problems. I am not an expert on this issue. Indeed, not many in this House are experts on the softwood lumber trade. Yet I was able to find glaring errors in this legislation. How many more might be found by lumber and trade experts with time to examine this proposal in detail? Certainly the Minister must wonder. I imagine there were some red faces and scorched ears in her Department when these mistakes were discovered.

There seems to be ample evidence in just this one illustration to show that a six-month delay is definitely warranted. However, there are other examples as well. Last Friday the Government attempted to force a vote on this Bill. Only then was it pointed out that there were blank spots that had to be filled in. The rules of this House prevent us from voting on blank Bills and for good reason. It goes to the very heart of our responsibilities in this place. We are being asked to consider and approve laws which affect the lives of our constituents. It would be negligent for us to give carte blanche authority by approving a blank Bill. I am not suggesting the Government was seeking carte blanche. Undoubtedly this was just another oversight. Indeed, the sight of people scurrying around the Chamber with copies of the agreement last week showed that this was no sinister plan. Yet again, the Government showed it was ill-prepared. It was seeking House approval without ensuring that it knew exactly what it was asking the House to approve. Again that shows a delay is worth considering.

Finally, there is the U.S. part in this to consider. The problems we have uncovered, and any others which trade and softwood lumber experts might uncover, would have to be negotiated into the agreement with the Americans. It will do us no good to go through the exercise of debates and votes if we have to do it all over again in a few weeks or a few months. Canadians expect us to consider legislation carefully. Let us get it right the first time. Let us make sure we all understand what we are doing when we say yea or nay in this Chamber. Part of that understanding has to be a realization that we are ceding power to the U.S.

I know the government benches will be quick to point out that this Bill only authorizes the Canadian Government to collect a tax from its own citizens. However, that is really a technicality. We are not legislating of our own accord. We are doing so under a direct threat from an economic pressure group in a foreign country. This legislation would legitimize the protectionist powers in American society. It would say that we approve of our Government accepting terms of trade dictated from the other side of the border. This is not some penalty imposed by a neutral body. It is not the finding of some international tribunal. This is simple acknowledgement of power. It is the triumph of American economic power over Canadian sovereignty, signed and sealed by the Government of Canada. That is frightening.

No one can say where that power will be exerted next. It could take aim at the regional development programs which have been of such benefit to my riding, for example, and many other ridings in this country. Will some American competitor look at aid to industry and declare that this is the stumpage fee of that industry? That would be disastrous. By all means, let us pause to reconsider this Bill. Do we really want to acknowledge that we lie in the American sphere of economic influence? Canadians may bless or curse us for the consequences of the actions we are considering today. I urge caution, and counsel that we accept the necessity of this delay.

In conclusion, I say that in the eyes of the Americans, in the estimation of Washington, the tougher we act and the tougher we negotiate in this country the more respect they will have not only for this institution, this Government which is faltering very badly right now, but the greater respect they will have for our country. If we simply sit back and acquiesce in virtually everything they demand, and I think this is the beginning of that sad and sorry road, there will be no respect, nothing but utter contempt. They will continue to take us for granted and that indeed will be a very sad day for this country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Herbicides—Use of weed killer 2,4-D; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Trade—United States duty on Canadian softwood lumber. (b) Minister's position—Canadian proposal; the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)—Canadian Human Rights Commission—Appointment of Antonio Arcangel to Human Rights Tribunal. (b) Request for investigation of appointee.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to speak on this Bill. I must say that it is the second time I rise in this debate on a Bill which will impose a 15 per cent tax on lumber exports to the United States.

I am a bit shocked by the amendment asking that the question be now put for the simple reason that I believe this Bill to be very important and a threat to our sovereignty.

Government Members would like us to believe that our sovereignty is not being threatened. I respect their views, but I would like to make a few points.

In the memorandum of agreement, it is written that the Americans can come to Canada and impose their will. They can refuse to approve certain measures which the Canadian Government and the provinces might want to take in relation with our natural resources, especially lumber.

Madam Speaker, sovereignty is something that cannot be measured, but it is certainly something that can be felt. As Canadians, we feel proud of our country, proud of being masters of our own destiny, and I believe that all Canadians want the House of Commons and the Government to see to it that this sovereignty is respected by everyone, both in Canada and abroad. We have a very special role to play in this area. As I said, Canadians have the feeling that we are masters of our own destiny, that we can decide what we will do and how we are going to act and how this country will be governed.

Madam Speaker, I believe that the sovereignty of a nation must be respected. This means that our sovereignty should be respected by our neighbours. They must respect us and we must express our concern every time we feel our sovereignty is being threatened.

Hon. Members will recall the Polar Sea icebreaker incident in the Canadian Arctic. All that this icebreaker did, Madam Speaker, was to trace a path in the Arctic waters. There are no signs left of its passage.

An Hon. Member: It broke the ice.

Mr. Robichaud: It broke the ice, as my colleague has pointed out. In fact, I am certain that the Inuits who live in that region were threatened because the ice is the habitat of the fauna on which they depend.

As I was saying, all that this icebreaker did was to leave a path in the ice which has probably disappeared completely by now. The fact remains that the Americans took this initiative without even consulting us. We did not react sufficiently strongly to prevent them from violating our territory. Indeed, I consider that there really was a violation of our territory. I feel that this is important, whether in the northern, the eastern, the western or the southern parts of the country. Canadians must by all possible means seek to preserve that sovereignty.

Of course when I say that our sovereignty is threatened, I do not mean we expect to see tanks at our borders and soldiers marching in to conquer us. Of course not. I think that the Americans have enough respect for us not to do such things. However, as Canadians we must make them realize that this land of ours has boundaries that must be respected.

Madam Speaker, some Hon. Members might say that we cannot build fences between ourselves and our neighbours to the south.

Certainly, we should not offend our friends to the south. However, I should like to say that good fences make good neighbours. We could thus avoid many quarrels and surely a fence is as good as the friends sharing it. We have to show mutual respect for that line dividing both properties, that is our two countries.

Now, Madam Speaker, that is why I said I was rather shocked to see that an immediate vote has been requested on that Bill which I find so important. But let me deviate slightly from the sovereignty concept which I find very important, and deal with New Brunswick, in the Maritimes. I can say that the Bill is most unfair to the lumber industry in the Maritimes. Because, you see, in our area, the lumber industry must pay stumpage fees that are a great deal higher than in the other provinces that our mentioned in the Memorandum of Agreement, that is British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec. We pay as much as eight times more than elsewhere. And out of the 130 or so companies in the industry, five from our area have been exempted from the export tax.

Of course, this is good for those being exempted from the tax, but it is very bad for the others that are not. So there are 125 companies, and most of them that provide a livelihood to whole villages will be hurt by that unfair tax, and I say very unfair. Apparently, in this case, our area has been completely ignored, and we find it very hard to understand why we were ignored because, Madam Speaker, you know very well that the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) is from New-Brunswick. This is sad, but on the other hand, we have the representatives of the Maritime Lumber Bureau who said that up to the last minute they thought they were going to be exempt and they could not understand why they were not. Well, personally I find that a little easier to understand. Because, Mr. Speaker, in this case, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), who is from New-Brunswick as I said, has also decided to ignore other very serious problems, problems such as the CN Shops where we are going to lose 1,000 jobs. Besides, this is the same Minister, Madam Speaker, who ignored our Christmas tree producers who feel threatened and certainly will be threatened by the Americans if they decide to impose a countervailing duty on Canadian tree imports.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Today is my first opportunity to speak on Bill C-37. I do so under a threat to close off the debate as a result of a motion moved the other day by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid).

Later in my brief remarks I wish to point out some of the economic impact of this lumber agreement to Canadian lumber producers and to jobs in Canada. Before I do that, I wish to point out that what we have here is a process which is well established in the United States, the quasi-judicial process with the International Trade Commission. Until this situation came before us, Canada in fact considered it a quasi-judicial process, one that is above political interference. Yet the specific reason that the Minister gave for coming to this questionable agreement was that she thought we would lose the case before that legal body. We had won a similar case on similar arguments in 1983. We had established that our method of assessing stumpage charges to the cutters of logs was not a subsidy on the exportation of our lumber to the United States. This was done on appeal, but we did win it.

This time the Government, together with some of its advisers, threw up its hands. This thinking was best set out by Dr. Peter Pearse, who is a leading resource economist at the University of British Columbia. He appears to have had quite a bit to do with the advice that the Minister followed. At one point he stated: "The U.S. Government had already imposed an interim duty and the political environment in the U.S. has changed totally" since 1983.

If the ITC was in fact a quasi-judicial process that we submitted ourselves to, the political climate in the United States should have nothing to do with the type of rulings that come out of that process. Either it is a legal situation where we have a case, or we do not. Political interference by the United States should not have been a point in question.

As a result of this agreement, we have given the United States some rights over the way we conduct our business as a Government and as a country that it did not have before. Therefore, we have given up some of our sovereignty. The Government entered this agreement without giving due recognition to the fact that provincial rights are infringed upon with this agreement. The forests are directly under the management of the provinces. When they were on this side of the House, the Progressive Conservatives portrayed themselves as the defenders of provincial rights. Now that they are in Government they are ignoring the rights of the provinces to the forestry resource. Suddenly they have discovered that the Constitution contains a section that allows the federal Government to use any mode or system of taxation to impose a tax. The Government is using that section of the Constitution.

The solution that has been offered is not only questionable on legal and political grounds, but as one who was elected to stand up for the rights of Canadians, I must also question this deal on economic terms.

In that vein, let me refer to an economic impact study on the Canada-U.S. softwood lumber agreement which was prepared by Widman Management Limited of Vancouver. It points out that the agreement has a negative impact on the Canadian economy. First, the timing of the agreement was bad. My colleagues and I have pointed out that the initiation of the U.S.-Canada free trade talks was badly timed because some 80 per cent of the trade between our countries did not have any type of tariff arrangements. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) initiated an agreement to increase that tariff-free trade to more than 80 per cent, to make it virtually duty free on all products. Since these negotiations began just over one year ago, duty free trade is now slightly over 70 per cent, thanks to the protectionist measures that have been implemented by the Americans as well as by Canadians in retaliation.

In terms of economic initiative, the agreement was badly timed because housing starts in the United States are beginning to decline. In 1983 there were some 1.7 million housing units developed in the United States. In 1984 it went up to 1.74 million units and, in 1985, levelled at 1.74 million units. In 1986 housing starts jumped to 1.825 million units. The forecast for 1987 is that there will be barely 1.5 million units started, which is down 325,000 housing starts.

Not all of these housing starts require lumber, so it is estimated that the total U.S. demand for lumber will be down about 8 per cent this year as opposed to last year. This means that the U.S. market will not absorb a 15 per cent increase in price for Canadian lumber because there will be no demand for Canadian lumber whose price is higher than last year.

Our producers will have to absorb virtually all of the 15 per cent. This is particularly bad news to the stud industry because a number of mills were particularly developed to service that United States demand. There are several in my Province of Saskatchewan. According to this study, in 1986 studs were bringing in about $153 per thousand feet. It estimates that the price for 1987 will drop to about $120 per thousand feet. The production costs in stud mills in northeast Saskatchewan run at approximately $140 per thousand feet, which means that there will be a net loss of $20 per thousand if they continue to try to sell to the United States market. Instead, these mills have done the prudent thing by cutting back production and have actually laid off 30 people in the last couple of weeks as a result of the drop in demand.

Government revenues from the 15 per cent tax will be close to $565 million. However, the loss of approximately 17,000 jobs as a result of this tax by the federal Government, the loss in corporate taxes, unemployment insurance payments and personal income taxes will create a debit of $505,000. This means the Government will have a net gain of $60 million.

The Government boasts that it made this deal by being tough bargainers with the United States and that it did not blink. We know that the Government closed its eyes and Canadians are beginning to wake up.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, technically, at least, we are debating a motion by a Conservative Member that "the question now be put." The question that I and Canadians ask is: why is the Government so anxious to choke off debate on this important measure to impose, we believe wrongly, an export tax on the sale of our softwood lumber to the United States? Why is the Government in such a hurry to bring the debate to an end and force this measure through the House? This measure will impose an additional tax burden of some $600 million directly. It is a measure that we believe and the Government admits will have serious consequences for the softwood lumber industry and the entire Canadian economy.

The leaders of the industry say that $600 million represents their entire profit margin of the softwood lumber section. They say that tens of thousands of jobs could be lost. This debate began last Monday and continued last week. Friday was taken up with what the Speaker has described as a very important point of order. When it comes to debating a measure of this importance, with these likely adverse consequences, I think most people would say that we are far from reaching a point in time when debate on it has gone on for too long.

Why is the Government in such a rush? Why did this motion to choke off debate come when it did, at the end of last week? The thought suddenly struck me that the motion came just after the visit to Ottawa of Vice-President Bush of the United States. I, and I believe all Canadians, should wonder what was discussed at that meeting. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he reprimanded Mr. Bush over the slowness of U.S. action on acid rain. Surely, however, that could not have been the only main subject during those talks.

The Prime Minister also expressed concern about the lack of interest of the United States in the free trade discussions, but surely that did not take up all the time available for the discussions. Surely the Prime Minister must have known for close to a year that the Government of the United States was not taking seriously the famous Accord, the supposed great break-through on reducing acid rain which the Prime Minister and President Reagan entered into at their last Summit. Surely the Prime Minister has known for some time that the United States is not giving the same degree of priority as himself to the desire of the Conservative Government to enter into is an agreement on comprehensive free trade which many of us think would be harmful to Canadian interests. In fact the lack of interest on the American side is leading the Government into a very dangerous and weak bargaining position. It is offering more and more in an effort to keep these talks on the rails in the face of this less than active American interest.

I must, therefore, ask myself what else was discussed at this meeting with Vice-President Bush? I have to raise the suspicion in my mind that the real reason Vice-President Bush rushed here was to give orders to the Prime Minister and his Government to get on with the passage of the Bill to impose the 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber. That is why I have to express my suspicion as well about the Government suddenly deciding to bring forward this motion to choke off debate on this Bill when discussion at second reading stage had barely begun. I can see the scene now with Mr. Bush saying to the Prime Minister: "Look here, my boy. If you want us to even remember we are causing a problem with acid rain and that there are discussions going on on free trade, you had better get that export tax Bill through the House or you will be hearing from us on some other matters". I have a feeling that the Canadian representatives at that meeting said in effect: "You told us to jump, Mr. Vice-President, so all we really want to know is just how high?" Vice-President Bush then said: "Get on with that Bill to impose the export tax on Canadian lumber". Therefore, I have a suspicion, as well as do Canadians, that that is the real reason we are now facing this motion to choke off debate on this thoroughly bad Bill.

I have said this is a thoroughly bad Bill and many reasons have been advanced as to why the Bill is bad. In the time remaining to me in this debate, let me advance one or two other reasons. The Government wants to translate the export tax into some form of stumpage fee. I understand the industry is saying that to get the same yield from stumpage fees as it would get from the export tax, it would have to impose higher stumpage fees, not in the area of $600 million but in the area of $1.5 billion or thereabouts. These higher stumpage fees would not just apply on softwood lumber for export but on the entire tree, which would raise the price of new homes for Canadians and even for someone who only wants to put in some new flooring or build an extra room on to their home. That is an unfair burden to be placed on millions of ordinary Canadians because of the Government's bungling of the softwood lumber issue and of its general relationship with the United States.

If the American Government does not agree with the manner in which our Government translates the export tax to stumpage fees, and if it does not agree with the way in which the stumpage fees are to be used for such things as reforestation or training, then all we will have is another tax grab from the pockets of the industry and from the pockets of the Canadian consumer for this Conservative Government and for the provinces, with no real benefit for the Canadian economy.

I might also say, returning to my original point with respect to what happened at the meeting between the Prime Minister and Vice-President Bush, that if the Prime Minister had wanted to do something useful at that meeting, he should have raised the matter of the Auto Pact and said categorically that the Auto Pact and its safeguards for Canadian jobs cannot and will not be on the free trade table. Instead, he admitted the subject was not even raised. The Prime Minister blew a wonderful opportunity to send a message to the Americans that the Auto Pact and its safeguards are too important to be given up and sold out on the free-trade negotiating table as the Government did with respect to softwood lumber.

I say we have to reject the motion "that the question now be put" just as we have to go on to reject this Bill which is further evidence of the way this Government is selling out our sovereignty to the Americans on softwood lumber. I said before and I will say again that if we let the Americans get away with this, they will do the same thing with the Auto Pact and its safeguards. Canadians do not want that. If the Government will not stand up for Canada, Canadians expect individual Hon. Members to do so. Let us not miss this opportunity to stand up for our country in opposing this Bill and making sure also, to the extent we can do so, that the Auto Pact is not given up and destroyed on the free-trade altar.

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENTS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, reference was made earlier today to remarks attributed to me in the media as a result of an interview given on Friday, January 23, to a reporter from the Kitchener—Waterloo Record. I wish to make a full and complete apology to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to my colleagues in this House, to all Canadians and particularly to the people of Quebec.

Further, I wish to withdraw, and apologize for, any direct or indirect inference that reflects negatively upon my colleagues in this House, the people of Quebec and all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure every Member in this House views the statement made by the Hon. Member as being in this House's great tradition. I thank other Hon. Members. Events as we had today are very difficult for the Chair.

[English]

I want to emphasize that the comments of the Hon. Member and the restraint exhibited by all Hon. Members I think speaks well of the good will and sense of appropriateness and decorum in this Chamber. I think what has happened today is an example that Hon. Members can rise above events they may regret and concern themselves with that which is of such great importance, the unity of our country and the good will of all our people among themselves and from every region of the country. I thank the Hon. Member for the very full, frank and honest statement he has made.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I know many of my colleagues will not agree with me. I listened closely. First I read with great attention the comments made by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). I listened to his comments. I must tell him that on behalf of all our fellow citizens who today have felt hurt in Quebec—please, I knew that not everyone would agree, but throughout the day people on the "hot lines" as they are called in Montreal, did nothing else but comment on this question—but I listened closely to the comments made by the Hon. Member and I think that, in that spirit of co-operation and mutual understanding in Canada, we should now consider the matter closed.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, as the person who initiated the Question of Privilege this morning which I thought reflected upon this Chamber and all Hon. Members of the House, I want to say that I appreciate the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) rising and in an unqualified way withdrawing the remarks he apparently was alleged to have made and apologizing to the House. I thank him for that and hopefully this will be the end of the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the matter is closed. Thank you.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to address the question of the Government's capitulation in the case of the softwood lumber agreement. In listening to the speeches that have been made in this debate I have been struck by the number of exceptions, inconsistencies and evidently unforeseen consequences that have been instanced by Members of this House as flowing from the now notorious agreement. Indeed, after we have reviewed not just the text of the agreement but the text of the letter that was sent by the United States Trade Representative to the President of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports over the signatures of the Secretary of Commerce and the U.S. Trade Representative, Mr. Clayton Yeutter, I believe we can only be astounded that the Government of Canada would have signed such an accord. It is an accord that apparently places such power over our economy and our softwood lumber industry in the hands of a foreign Government, albeit that of our greatest and principal trading partner.

I think it is instructive to quote a part of the statement, the asseverations made in the letter and instance how our Government really has no response to them. It is stated in the letter:

—nothing in this agreement will prejudice the consideration by the Department of Commerce of a petition on behalf of producers of products not enumerated in the Understanding. We would not consider such a petition to be inconsistent with the agreement or its enforcement.

This brings me to a point upon which I was developing and expanding in my last speech on the question of the softwood lumber agreement. What about the situation of Canada's pulp and paper industry? What is there in the present agreement to prevent American producers of newsprint, of pulpwood, from bringing a similar sort of petition to the U.S. Trade Commission and pleading that because Canada has conceded de facto the point by signing the softwood lumber agreement that in fact stumpage rates in Canada constitute a subsidy to the pulp and paper industry and therefore not only could but should be countervailed?

Amazingly enough, as a result of the signing of this agreement the Government has actually strengthened the hand of some American industries in possible future countervailing duty protections and countervail actions. I think Hon. Members will agree that it is astounding that the Government would have signed such an accord, an accord which, essentially, has nothing in it to say that it would not set precedents that might be cited before the Trade Commission of the United States or, indeed, any trade commission that Canada might set up.

We have heard the Government talk about the effect of retaining the money in Canada. I think everyone would agree that there is some definite benefit to retaining this money in Canada. However, the sum of $600 million or so that is projected in fact constitutes more than the entire profits of the softwood lumber industry over the course of a year. Obviously, the tax which our Government as opposed to the American Government will collect puts a tremendous strain on the margins of that industry.

Let us consider the ways in which Canada will be constrained and tied down in the expenditure of this $600 million. We have heard it said that the American Government would consider almost any measure to aid the forest industry from the results of that tax as being something that could be again the basis of a petition. It is instructive to quote the actual statements made in this amazing letter from the United States Trade Representative to the industry representative. It states:

—we would consider that the follow-up actions by the governmental bodies in Canada—

—as if we did not have Governments like any other country—

—could have the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures within the meaning of paragraph 6 of the Understanding.

At this point in the letter we find listed no fewer than seven separate items to which the United States would object under the terms of the agreement. They are: the rebate, remission, deferral or non-collection of the export charge, except as provided in the understanding; the provision of grants, low-cost loans and other benefits; exemption from obligations otherwise imposed by the Government of Canada and other governmental bodies in Canada; assumption of obligations currently borne by the producers or exporters of certain softwood lumber products; reduction in the price of stumpage or other charges on softwood timber harvested from provincial Crown lands; changes in log scaling or lumber measurement rules or procedures which affect volume determination; and awarding contracts for silviculture, road-building, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis. This is a bundle of constraints upon our industry that no Government should have ever contemplated.

Another part of this agreement which I think all would feel is something of questionable implication for Canada and something about which we should be truly concerned is the amazing 30-day opt-out clause. Essentially, what we have in the softwood lumber agreement is a commercial treaty. For the Government of Canada to enter into such a commercial treaty with the provision that the other side, with all the powers that are reserved to it and with all the actions which we have admitted that the United States can still take against Canadian industry, should then opt out at 30 days' notice is to me rather amazing. I might say it is rather appalling.

The implications of the lumber deal for Canadian sovereignty are obvious. Canada's Government has subjected not only the federal Government's actions but also provincial Governments' actions and the traditional negotiation and review of each other's actions by the provincial and federal Governments to the supervision of the United States Department of Commerce. I use these words advisedly because, after all, Canada will be providing the Americans with all sorts of statistics under the provisions of this agreement. So having submitted ourselves once to U.S. supervision in this softwood lumber agreement, what then is to stop the United States Trade Representative from demanding such supervision in any future free trade arrangements? It seems to me that what we have here in the softwood lumber agreement is something that runs completely counter—absolutely opposite—to the whole thrust and spirit of the free trade negotiations that the Government has so foolishly and firmly committed itself to undertake. Surely this point must be made: Is this not the first domino for Canada's trading relationship? Is this not the first block that has been taken out of the wall that must eventually collapse?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Parry: Is this not the first straw of which the last will indeed break the camel's back?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I hear cries of dissent from my Conservative colleagues in the House. But do I hear them defending this agreement? No, I do not. Are they telling me that this does not weaken Canada's position in the free trade negotiations? I certainly cannot believe they would make such a ludicrous proposition when we now have one of Canada's major industries on the block and when we know very well that it is the intention of the U.S. Trade Representative to put every other major Canadian industry on the block, or on the table as they say in these free trade negotiations.

With respect to the terms of the free trade negotiations, I keep hearing about the level playing-field. I cannot find a Conservative Member in the House who will tell me that this softwood lumber agreement represents part of the level playing-field concept. Everyone knows what happens on a level playing-field—the larger and heavier, numerically stronger team wins and generally rolls over the side that is smaller, weaker or less represented in terms of numbers. That is the meaning of a level playing-field for the people in Canada's forest industry and for the workers who will be affected by this agreement. It is an agreement in which the Government has not only unthinkingly legislated a whole range of disparities between the industry in the different provinces and different parts within provinces, but it has also put at risk very substantial sectors of Canada's forest economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, it is after considerable hesitation that I decided to take part today in the debate on softwood lumber. I was prompted to do so by the comments I heard before lunch from the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), who barely used up two or two and a half minutes of his time, only to rail against me. I would have liked him to go on with his comments after lunch, but he did not come back to the House. Should we conclude that he would rather indulge in politicking than attempt to find solutions to very serious problems?

I also heard the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Of course there are surely many forests and a great number of softwood producers in his riding.

The Hon. Member for Windsor-West (Mr. Gray) is also a great expert on forestry issues. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier told the House that UPA members were not in favor of the proposed agreement with the Americans, which is not quite true. He was probably misinformed, since I had the pleasure today, at noon hour, along with one of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgeault), to meet with a number of presidents of the Quebec federation of lumber producers. These people are quite satisfied with the agreement concluded between the Americans and the Canadian government.

Some have tried, as members of the Opposition are doing it now, to draw a red herring by claiming that Canada's sovereignty had been eroded.

Mr. Prud'homme: You bet!

Mr. Ferland: Well, I may not entirely agree, and I would like to quote what Mr. Pierre MacDonald said at a press conference in Quebec City, and God knows how much Quebecers value the concept of sovereignty. This might not be true for the Liberals at the time, though.

On the matter of sovereignty, this is what Mr. MacDonald said, and I quote: "I would like to draw a parallel on one aspect of the differences mentioned by Miss Carney which is sometimes misunderstood. We are talking about supervision. Any shareholder of a business receives a financial statement every year. He can examine that statement, he can examine the developments in the light of the system which would have been implemented if the countervailing decision had been taken. The United States could have sent us a team of internal auditors on a regular basis. It is quite another possibility for us to produce our own statistics which would then be made available to all interested parties. If the Americans want to examine those figures, let them do it. But no team of internal auditors will come and browse in our Department of Forestry".

I think that is quite clear.

The Hon. Member for Westmorland Kent (Mr. Robichaud) said that to be on good terms with your neighbours, you should have a fence. We should not forget, however, how this debate on forestry came about and how we were led in Canada to take these decisions and to introduce Bill C-37 in the House.

Let us not forget that in the 70s, the percentage of Canadian lumber on the American market was in the order of 25 per cent. That is something that few Members mentioned in the House. Yet, through the efficient efforts of Canadians and the Canadian industry, I should say through its agressive policies on international markets, we have been able to control, by the 1980s, at this very moment, some 33 per cent of the US lumber market.

I also remember hearing people in the forest industry say a few months ago: Maybe we should tone down our agressive policies on the US market. We might shake them awake. Well, we did wake them up. And we got what we might somehow have expected. Of course, it is a good thing to have fences between good neighbours. You can have them as high as you want. But when your neighbour trespasses a little too much or too often on your property you tell him: Listen, Joe, why don't you move back on your side a little? You are stepping on my toes. You are getting to be a nuisance. The Americans took that attitude, somehow. What did we do? We had several alternatives. We could have gone the Liberal way, that is let the Americans levy a 36 or 25 per cent tax which would have been collected by the American Treasury. How bright! Giving out Canadian money to the American Treasury.

There was another alternative which was to negotiate, to try to reach an agreement while protecting our American markets and try to save the greatest possible number of jobs in Canada. We had to find a compromise and that compromise was the 15 per cent tax.

This 15 per cent tax is not inconsistent with the position held by the Quebec Government since it had already decided to reconsider its forestry policy, according to Mr. MacDonald, well before the United States initiated any contervailing measure. I should say that the Federation of Lumber Producers is not so much against an increase if the Quebec Government decides that the 15 per cent tax will be used to reduce the price or the increased stumpage fees because some of those people thought the government was somehow in conflict with private industry or in competition with it. This will allow 120,000 producers . . . because it should not be forgotten that the Quebec Federation of Lumber Producers represent 120,000 owners of small private wooded lots, small businessmen. Those people will be in a position to develop their business, to have a place in the sun and open up some markets.

When the Opposition refers to sovereignty, I have to say that nothing in that Bill encroaches upon Canadian sovereignty.

Mr. Prud'homme: Come on!

Mr. Ferland: You can say what you like, gentlemen, the agreement was negotiated with the consent of the provinces. Of course . . . I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I am sure that he will not agree about that, because negotiating with the consent of the provinces was never the strong point of the Liberal Government to which he has belonged for years. This is quite sure. He could never understand that. We are doing this with the approval of the provinces, with the approval of the Quebec Government. And speaking of sovereignty in Quebec, all Quebec Premiers, from Mr. Duplessis through Mr. Bourassa who is there again, Mr. Lévesque and everyone else—

Mr. Prud'homme: Hydroelectric power.

Mr. Ferland: Never mind electric power. We are dealing with lumber here. Let us not mix the hare and the hound. That has always been the Liberal position, to try and confuse everyone when there is a very clear-cut and specific matter at hand.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is said that one's precedent can become another's precedent.

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, it would be interesting for once if Liberal Members would listen instead of chattering, as they do all the time when we—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has just suggested that nothing in the legislation affects this country's sovereignty. It is obvious he has not read the legislation, or the agreement, that I would like to remind him there are things in this Bill, Madam Speaker, things—

Mr. Bernier: Your comments are silly.

Mr. Rossi: The Hon. Member for Beauce did not even rise. He is the silly one.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: Stop saying we are silly, because you did not even rise to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier knows very well—

Mr. Rossi: Do not call others silly, you are the silly one.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Madam Speaker, those are unparliamentary terms.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. Dealing first with the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, I say its was not a point of order, but a point of debate in my view. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Beauce has used language I submit is unparliamentary, and I want him to withdraw his unpleasant comment. Rise in your place, if you have the guts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I admit and I will admit to all Hon. Members that, what with the noise and exchanges, conversations in the House, at this point I did not hear the comments made by the Hon. Member for Beauce. He will decide whether he should withdraw.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, it is true that there was a lot of noise, but I think everyone heard the comments made by the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier). It could be that, in a spirit of co-operation, since we readily accepted that the matter be closed concerning his colleague's unfavourable comments about Quebecers, he might do the same and say that the matter is closed and he did not mean to say those things about us.

I for one, when my colleagues are not here, if it is not meant for me, I just ignore it, but if they look at me when saying those things, I presume they are directed to me. I suppose this was not the case. If it was not the case, I would appreciate—

Mr. Bernier: Madam Speaker, I said half of the comments made by Hon. Members opposite were silly. Let us say that half of them are not silly.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, may I call it 5 o'clock? This could make the proceedings easier.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN HUMAN PERSONS

The House resumed, from November 21, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mitges (Grey—Simcoe):

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution Act, 1982, to include unborn human persons, and that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone including a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The last time this motion was before the House the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) had the floor. He has four minutes left. The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Indeed, Madam Speaker, last November 21 I pointed out that this motion moved by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), the topic of a major debate in Canada these days, has certain basic flaws.

First of all, for the benefit of my colleagues in the House and all our viewers, allow me to repeat the Hon. Member's motion:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution Act, 1982—

—which means amending the Constitution of Canada to include unborn human persons, and that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follow:

"7. Everyone including a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

First, Madam Speaker, I must point out that abortion is not now allowed in Canada, except in very special cases which are examined by hospital therapeutic abortion committees, doctors and people who normally have the expertise required to evaluate these cases. The general principle in Canada is therefore that abortion is not only forbidden, but also subject to very severe penalties under the Criminel Code.

However, two points must be made. First, the famous therapeutic abortion committees for which special legislation was passed a few years ago are now granting, especially in Quebec, an unbelievably high proportion of authorizations.

Archbishop Fortier of the Sherbrooke diocese told me recently that, of 600 requests, a mere ten or so did not end with an abortion, either because the abortion request was withdrawn, because the women involved decided not to have the abortion, or because, in two cases, the therapeutic abortion committees rejected the request. It is therefore obvious that therapeutic abortion committees in Quebec are not examining carefully every request for abortion and are in fact granting abortion on demand.

I believe that this is not in accordance with our laws. In addition, Madam Speaker, Hon. Members will know that many people have tried to bring criminal charges against doctors who practice abortions openly without going through therapeutic abortion committees or, if they do, without applying the spirit and the letter of the law. We are still waiting for the rulings in the case of Regina versus Morgentaler, Smoling and Scott, for instance. The Supreme Court will perhaps say that, even though Dr. Morgentaler was acquitted several times, the law does not seem to have been respected and another trial is required.

You are indicating, Madam Speaker, that my time has expired. Four minutes is not very long for such an important subject as this one. But I am certain that the House will use the four hours of debate remaining to examine this issue very carefully.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the question before us today is one which has to be addressed. It is not a question that I can say I am pleased to speak to because it is not the kind of thing that brings pleasure to the debate, but it is a question that needs to be addressed and faced. The motion of the Hon. Member is on the question of whether abortion should fall within the purview of the Constitution. In other words, should women in Canada have access to therapeutic abortion as a constitutional right? Should the provinces and the federal Government get together and determine whether the availability of therapeutic abortions will be put in the Constitution?

First, let me question that notion. Why should we turn over such an important moral and medical matter to the courts? In a matter that so divides the country and our communities, a matter on which individuals must reflect, surely it is better handled in public policy, in legislation, so that we can see how it works, to what extent it works and to what extent it does not serve a public purpose. Legislation is much more readily amended than matters of constitutional import.

The resolution of the Hon. Member fails on the basis that it calls upon us to deal with this matter as a constitutional one. We know that legislative matters are at times difficult to get before the House and difficult to get amended. The present law concerning therapeutic abortion has been on the books for a number of years. Obviously there are people of differing views calling for an amendment to this legislation, but federal governments have backed away from facing up to this question and have chosen not to address it in the House. In fact the Government of the Hon. Member who proposed the motion has chosen not to.

While it is difficult to get legislation amended at times, it is even more difficult to amend constitutional matters, and for that reason I do not believe this should be a matter for the Constitution. For a matter of such deep concern to individuals, it makes more sense that it be a matter of legislation or public policy. If we were to debate and amend the existing law and live with it for a number of years, we could see how it worked and we could have the flexibility to change it if required.

I have a few words to say about the present law, Madam Speaker. The way the law reads presently, a woman who requires a therapeutic abortion must go before a committee of medical doctors. The committee decides whether or not she may have access to this medical procedure. The application of this law is unequal. It is not applied in the same way all over Canada nor is it applied in the same way for women of various income levels. There are inequities in the application of the law let alone the fundamental premises underlying it.

People who live in remote northern communities have less access to hospitals with therapeutic abortion committees and therefore fewer opportunities to apply for this medical procedure. Those who live in cities like Winnipeg have access to major hospitals with committees. A woman faced with the difficult decision of whether or not to have the procedure who lives in Winnipeg could have access to the law whereas a woman living in a remote part of northern Manitoba where there is no large hospital would not have the same access.

Women living below the poverty line cannot afford transportation from, say, Winnipeg to Minneapolis and have less access to this medical procedure than a woman with a middle or upper middle-class income who can afford to take a trip to the United States, spend a few days there, have the procedure and then return. The application of this law is unfair, by virtue of both income and location.

I would also like to discuss the matter of who should decide whether or not a woman should have a therapeutic abortion. Should this decision be made by a committee of doctors or should it be made by the individual who is in fact asking for this procedure? It seems to me that the making of this very difficult decision is better suited to an individual who may be able to reflect upon this procedure and to consult with spiritual or medical advisers. The decision should be made by someone who may reflect upon taking a very difficult step. A committee is much more bureaucratic. People attempt to draw up guidelines and members of committees have other responsibilities. They can be very pressed to make decisions and may not have time to do the kind of adequate reflection that may be necessary when making such a very difficult decision. I think this kind of decision is much more suited to people who have opportunities to reflect upon it because it is obviously a very difficult one to make.

I wish to touch on the question of reducing the number of therapeutic abortions that take place in Canada. It is the contention of this motion that tougher laws and regulations will reduce the number of abortions that take place here. I would suggest that tougher laws will simply put us back to where we were before 1969 when people who needed therapeutic abortions ended up getting them under the table by people who were not qualified. Women's lives were put in danger. Rather than reducing the number of abortions that take place, tougher laws, though they will put the question out of sight, are likely to see that abortions will continue to take place.

A more effective strategy for reducing the number of therapeutic abortions in Canada, a worth-while and worthy objective that we should pursue actively, is to focus upon prevention. We must prevent situations in which women would consider taking this step. We need better education on contraception and better education in human relations for young people so that they will not be taken advantage of as readily. That way, fewer teenage girls will find themselves choosing between being a parent at a very young age, thus cutting off their education and personal development, or taking such a serious step as a therapeutic abortion.

I see that you are indicating that my time has run out, Madam Speaker. I would like to close by saying that this motion requires a great deal more study. There are various constitutional and policy questions that have been suggested by the Hon. Member in bringing forward this resolution.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak on a motion proposed by a colleague of mine, the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), on a matter which I consider to be extremely important in that it deals with the protection of the unborn child. Abortion has been debated in Canada with varying degrees of vigour since 1967 when then Justice Minister Pierre Trudeau introduced changes to the abortion law which did not legalize abortion but rather made it permissible, when a committee of three doctors at an accredited hospital ruled that the continuation of pregnancy would be likely to endanger a woman's life or health.

Since that time, the subject has been raised in this House on many occasions, often to a further polarization of views, eliminating even the possibility of constructive compromise and efficient reform. That is why the motion raised by my hon. colleague is so significant. It allows us the opportunity of addressing this issue in an attempt to find some degree of common ground in order to protect and enhance human life.

After all, we are not suggesting a consensus for the sake of political expediency or partisan gain. Instead, we are engaging in productive dialogue that will enable us to improve the human condition. The former Hon. Member for Edmonton East, Mr. Yurko, stated while introducing two private Members' Bills on this subject in 1980:

> This is not a partisan issue. It is a moral issue of profound importance. It is an issue upon which each individual must reflect and make up his own mind.

When dealing with such a controversial subject matter, our first inclination is to pre-suppose a high degree of radicalism and extremism on both sides of the issue. I submit that while a certain amount of this is obviously in existence today, a great deal of the emotional and sometimes violent contentions are confined to select and limited interest groups. For the most part, Canadians are quite willing to strike a balance for the sake of more effective laws serving all of the public.

Contrary to most popular conceptions, it is the responsibility of democratic institutions to serve the people at large rather than follow the narrowly prescribed dictates of limited and specialized interest groups. Results obtained from surveys conducted in my riding reveal a substantial portion of individuals who take a moderate position between the more radical factions of pro-life and pro-choice supporters. I agree with figures suggesting that this group accounts for approximately 60 per cent on a national basis and I also support the contention that neither of the extremist positions can claim support from more than 25 per cent of the population. A review of Gallup polls on abortion taken in 1975, 1978 and 1983 indicated that only 16 to 23 per cent favoured abortion under any circumstances while an even smaller proportion, 14 per cent to 17 per cent, opposed it under any circumstances.

The motion on the floor today would amend the Constitution Act, 1982, by including unborn persons and would read as follows:

> Everyone including a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

● (1720)

In preparing and introducing this motion, the Hon. Member for Grey Simcoe is to be strongly commended for the strength of his conviction and the courage he has exhibited in dealing with this rather crucial topic. He has continually conducted passionate and at the same time logical discourse on a subject of an extremely sensitive nature. Therefore, in keeping with that tradition, I would like to take this opportunity to briefly review the question of abortion, which contains no easy answers for anyone who does not pretend to have a monopoly on morality or virtue.

Whether or not one supports or opposes liberation of the abortion law, there appears to exist a general agreement with respect to the need in certain instances for terminating pregnancy. I seriously doubt that any well-intentioned individual could disagree with the destruction of a foetus if, in the opinion of qualified members of the medical profession, the pregnancy actually endangers the life of the mother and could even bring about her immediate death. This brings us to our current dilemma of attempting to frame legislation which adequately addresses the complex concerns involved while sympathetically considering the views of both the pro-life and the pro-choice advocates.

Both the content and application of the abortion reform law have been actively criticized since its inception. On the one hand those advocating the discrimination of therapeutic abortions believe that the rules are too awkward and confining. They feel that in the final analysis the present provisions restrict the rights and freedoms of women. Instead of a committee of three doctors deciding her fate, they contend that the decision should be left up to the individual concerned and her personal physician. Conversely, those who maintain the need to protect the foetus believe that the criterion of health as a justification for therapeutic abortion is too vague and does not adequately control against abortion on demand. They suggest that the condition of health should be eliminated or at least narrowly defined, restricting it to strictly physical health or by omitting socio-economic circumstances of the individual in assessing mental health or competence, for example.

The obvious difficulties involved in the various interpretations given the abortion law actually forced the Government in 1975 to establish a committee headed by Robin F. Badgley to investigate the legitimate concerns which had arisen as a result of the abortion reform law. The Badgley committee conducted exhaustive examinations in hospitals across Canada and determined that women did not have equal access to therapeutic abortion for various reasons, including a myriad of provincial rules and regulations governing the creation of therapeutic abortion clinics and hospitals, and the conflicting attitudes of members of the medical profession as well as hospital boards of directors. The most disturbing element of the Badgley committee's findings is that the problems identified in the report are just as prominent now as they have ever been.

The Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe has given us a possible avenue to pursue in our desire to create an effective policy on abortion. When he last raised this issue during Private Members' hour in November, 1986, a number of legitimate concerns were raised. For instance, some warned he was being too rash considering the fact that polls revealed Canadians are evenly divided on the issue. Others suggested that the constitutional approach and the amending procedure is too complicated to be efficiently handled in Private Members' Business. All of the difficulties mentioned by Hon. Members are important, to be sure. However, they still do not bring us any closer to resolving the problems I outlined earlier.

In conclusion, I support the motion proposed by my hon. colleague to include unborn human persons in Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is improper and indeed I consider it to be immoral to deny children the right to life and the right not to be deprived of life save in accordance with principles of fundamental justice. However, having said that, I would like to emphasize that we cannot give rights to children at the expense of women. To do so would be to replace one injustice with another. For that reason I would like to close my remarks with an amendment which needs to be made for clarification and at the request of the mover of the original motion. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil):

That the motion be amended in the paragraph numbered 7 in the English version by adding immediately after the word "unborn" the word "human".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On division? It is debatable.

Mr. Cassidy: Point of order. I seriously question whether the House should be asked to vote on this point right now. The amendment is debatable and during the course of that debate Members will be able to comment on the general resolution as well. Therefore I suggest that it not be voted on at this time but be left open for debate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Your ruling is a very easy one. We are now debating the amendment. You need not put the question immediately and, eventually, if we get to that point, we can vote on the amendment and the motion. There is no problem.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I wonder if you might consider whether or not such an amendment is in order. The resolution is presented to us in the projected order of business so that we can have an opportunity to read it before debating it in the House. I suggest that if we allow amendments to Private Members' motions like this during the debate we then lose the opportunity to be forewarned about the nature of the resolution. It could even lead to a situation in which the committee with the responsibility for choosing what kinds of resolutions will come before us would be undercut because we could have an amendment which could change the meaning of such resolutions in a significant way.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Madam Speaker, with regard to this amendment, on the contrary I believe it is possible to introduce amendments. However, in this event, all Hon. Members—eight or nine, I believe—who have already spoken have the right to speak again on the amendment to explain to what extent this could change

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Domm: By way of clarification, the amendment as read by myself, and duly moved and seconded, was brought into the House at the request of the mover of the main motion, not to change the intent or the content of the motion, but by way of an explanation. It was to say in this motion the Member was referring to human beings. All we are asking for is that clarification by the insertion of an omission of the word "human" after "unborn". The amendment is only to explain in clear words what the intent was of the mover of the main motion. I did not expect to get into debate, but if we are into debate I hope that you would defer a negative ruling, if that is your intent, until it is opportune for the Member who is sponsoring this motion to be present in the House. All the Member wishes to do is refer to this person, this human foetus, as an unborn human being. It can still be voted down, if you so desire, at the time the main motion is placed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Table and the Chair have received this amendment and have considered it correct to be presented. I will put the question to the House. This amendment is debatable. Any Member who wishes to debate the amendment may rise and do so. Otherwise, I have to put the question. If Members do not wish to adopt the amendment at this time, it is debatable.

On debate the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I will speak on debate. I accept that you do have the right to make that ruling. I have put forward a point of order which suggested that I have some questions on your ruling, but I will talk specifically to the amendment.

The proposal in the amendment is to insert the word "human" after the word "unborn". It seems to me that a couple of things flow from that. One is parliamentary and one is in terms of the sense of the motion. The parliamentary question is this. There is a very real possibility that once debate begins on this amendment, which in my opinion has unfortunately been introduced by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), we will not return to debating the main subject of the motion of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), but we will concentrate on the one narrow point of the whole matter which is before the House. I find that regrettable.

I appeal to the Hon. Member to consider withdrawing this proposed amendment and allowing the matter to be considered on the basis of the original motion. It would certainly be open to him, as a supporter of his hon. friend, to suggest that he consider that as an amendment that might be introduced in the event that this matter were to go before a legislative committee. In order to respond after a day's debate to objections which were raised in the House by saying that we will change this could lead us to a situation where we might get further suggestions for change proposed in six or seven weeks when the Bill comes back for the third round, and then further changes proposed when the Bill comes back for the fourth round, to the point where the House is being asked to do the work which, in my opinion, should properly be done in committee.

If it is the opinion or the desire of the Hon. Member who proposed this motion in the first place that he wished to distract the debate in the manner that is now taking place, then I regret that. I think that is improper and an unjustified use of the time of this House.

I have been struck by the tone of debate. I have taken the opportunity to read the debate of November 21 when this matter was first broached in the House of Commons. The tone of debate was that all Members, including the Member for Grey—Simcoe, did take a somewhat balanced approach to the situation. I happen to be in disagreement with the main motion but I note, for example, that the Hon. Member proposing the motion talked about the need for contraception and education and spoke of the fact that in an ideal world abortion would not be needed. Everyone is in agreement that it is not something that we desire. A number of other Hon. Members have also put both points of view even though, like the Hon. Member for Peterborough, they wind up declaring themselves to be for rather than against the motion that is before us.

My second point is this. The question of whether the foetus is a human being is obviously very much one of the questions which has been debated by people on the side of the Right to Life movement, by people who have been advocates of choice in matters of abortion, and is an extremely difficult question. It is so difficult that even in the Province of Quebec where the population is largely Roman Catholic, it has been felt as a matter of public policy that essentially federal law should be adapted and interpreted in a way which permits relatively free access to abortion services. That is a fact.

It is an issue which even theologians have not been able to adequately resolve at what point the attribute of humanity begins. Everybody agrees that it begins at the point of birth. But whether it begins at some point before then during the course of pregnancy, at the point of conception, or at the point of inception where a man and woman decide that they would like to conceive, who knows. It is a very difficult question. That is one of the reasons why this whole matter has been left to the opinion of the individuals involved, and many people have argued that it should be. That, of course, is the majority opinion of Canadians today.

What I am trying to say is that by inserting the word "human" into this resolution as originally proposed, effectively this is thwarting what might be a decision of the courts if this resolution in the end becomes a part of the Constitution. I am hoping that this matter will not be held to the Constitution. A number of Hon. Members have argued, as I would if I were speaking on the main motion, that it is wrong to put this matter into the constitutional forum when it has been admitted by everybody that what we are really talking about is a question of whether we, as the Parliament of Canada, wish to see changes in the abortion law.

I suggest that a resolution that on the one hand would, if amended, refer to the right of the unborn human being to life, liberty and security, and then on the other hand say that you cannot take that away except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, would create enormous contradictions. What about the rights of the woman who bears the child, who is also a human being with 20, 25, 35 years of life on this planet, and who maybe has to consider her obligations to earn a living, or to other children already born, or to a deformed or crippled child whom she is devoting a great deal of energy to maintaining here on this planet?

I feel that the injection of this word would further complicate a resolution which in the first place I find complex and rather difficult to accept. Therefore, I conclude by asking in a very serious way the Hon. Member to stand up and withdraw his amendment. I am sure he would be allowed to do that on a point of order and with the consent of his seconder, and to indicate that he would perhaps like that to be proposed as an amendment in committee, and that it is the intention of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe to propose such an amendment, if this matter goes to committee, but not to confound and confuse the debate on this difficult and sensitive issue in the House of Commons by having further debate on this particular amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We are debating on the amendment. Is the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) ready to debate on the amendment?

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I am certainly pleased to speak today to the amendment to the motion that was put forth by my colleagues from Grey—Simcoe and Peterborough. I want to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that I understand the Bill would not go to committee.

• (1740)

I welcome this opportunity because it brings to the foreground an especially sad and complex issue. It is an issue that should stir and upset the conscience of every male or female who would ever think of taking away a life, with never a chance to live.

I want to backtrack a moment and speak briefly about the history of legalized abortion. In 1969 parliamentarians were dealing with the idea of competing rights, the rights of what were thought to be only a clump of cells versus the rights of a woman. Some parliamentarians at that time thought they were being asked to legalize what was already taking place in the hospitals, in other words, to make legal a few hundred abortions a year for serious medical reasons.

Are we prepared to recognize that our laws must accord intrinsic worth and equal value to the life of every human being, regardless of its stage of development or condition? It is surely a specious argument to say that a foetus in any stage of development is not a person. What then is it? Science is slowly but inevitably providing the evidence to support the long held view of many people today that the separate identity and unique humanity of the foetus can only lead us to the conclusion that any foetus is a little human being who, given half a chance to grow and prosper, will some day be an adult dressed as you and I in this chamber today.

I have always believed that the humanness of the unborn child is the key issue in the abortion question. Instead of a few hundreds abortions to save the lives of women, we have the shame of our present day and age with 70,000 to 80,000 abortions a year, done for the sake of convenience in our local hospitals.

As a parliamentarian I am deeply disturbed, disappointed and distressed that compassionate people in just about every walk of life today turn a blind eye to the rights of the unborn. The Charter of Rights states that everyone has the right to life, to liberty, the right to security of the person, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

I mentioned in a speech a number of years ago in the House that if the development of the treatment of babies in the womb moved further into the earlier stages of pregnancy, the argument over the point at which the foetus becomes human would diminish in relevancy. I believe my thoughts have to be substantiated. With foetal treatment already taking place in the fourth month of gestation, we have moved back beyond the point at which even very recently the supporters of abortion had argued that the foetus could not be considered human. Except in situations which are clearly life threatening to the mother, the taking of the life of the unborn child will be increasingly difficult to justify, regardless of the stage of development.

Medical research has now revealed that despite the fact that most pregnancies are not detected until the sixth week, even by then the baby's heart has been beating for three weeks and brain waves can be read, the nervous system has been complete, and he or she is about to begin moving although the mother will not feel it for three and a half months more.

Recently, in the middle of October, I read of a procedure that allowed surgery to be performed on a foetus outside its mother's body. The baby, Michael, had a birth defect. He would have died without this operation. A team of surgeons successfully operated to correct a blocked urinary tract and then returned him to the uterus and sewed up the womb.

At the time of the operation, the foetus was only 23 weeks old, just under six months. Certainly it was a living being then and happily a living being now.

What further medical advances await us? I stated that the conscience of all must be alerted to those who disrespect and hold little value for life. I am particularly appalled at the phenomenon of what I call a new evil: the development of chemical abortifacients. I quote:

> It is speculated that with the use of an oral abortifacient, the woman undergoing the killing of a new person within her uterus will not experience the guilt attendent upon the majority of surgical abortions. This is true insofar as she "will not be sure" if she has conceived, at what gestation age the baby was, nor exactly when she aborts the baby.

Such an abortion inducing drug may be marketed in France within a year. Will it be as easy now for a mother to abort a child as it is to cure a headache with an aspirin?

If we, together, can build a reasonable case for the belief that a child is human from conception; if we can bolster it with scientific evidence; if we can, over time, secure the attention of the medical profession, the courts, and certainly the politicians, and the people, I believe our argument will then prevail.

We must argue that this child—this foetus—is not the same person as the mother, that it is not part of the mother. He or she is a genetically unique being, totally dependent on the mother for a while, but possessed of the potential to become as strong and healthy and prosperous as any of us here today.

Let me make one last important point. We who support this position have a duty to put an end to the unwholesome practices of a society which condemns the unwed mother. This is the attitude that I believe led to the proliferation of illegal abortion which caused our law to be changed in the first place. I believe that any pregnant woman who has the courage to take her child to term deserves our full support as politicians, whether she keeps it or gives it up to the thousands of adoptive parents whose homes are warm and waiting. The child merits the concern and protection of society, regardless of the circumstances of conception and birth.

When life is granted and when life is produced, it is then that pro lifers must be at their most active, to replace rhetoric with dollars and helping hands to ensure that this life can be lived in conditions of decency and love, with basic needs satisfied. Otherwise, we receive the label of being hypocrites and do-gooders.

I believe there is a tremendous role for the church to play today. What an opportunity to reach out to bewildered, hurting people. It is not enough for the church to condemn and criticize, we need to offer a positive alternative to aborting babies. The church family can reach out today in love and sympathy to unwed pregnant women, assisting in every way possible.

If we can provide homes and ensure profitable lives for the infants who today are being aborted, then we can assure Canadians that every child born in this country can indeed be a wanted child.

[Translation]

Mr. Parry: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on a point of order.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the obvious discrepancy between the two bills, the one in English and the one in French as printed in the Projected Order of Business. I should like to know whether the amendment is in order when it is only presented in English. It is obvious, when referring to the French text, that the substance of the amendment is already included in the motion which means that there are two texts for the same motion under consideration, one in English and one in French which are different.

• (1750)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair does realize that the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has a very valid point, and I will reserve on it for the time being, the amendment having been presented in the way it has. I think all Hon. Members can at this point continue with the debate and the next time the Bill comes up for debate, the Chair, with the help which has been given by all Hon. Members, will be able to rule on the discrepancy between the French version and the English version of the main motion.

Mr. Althouse: I wonder if you could indicate to the House what your position will be with regard to the Speaker's list. You have indicated we are now speaking on the amendment. In the event it is determined that the amendment was not in fact a necessity, that it was simply a printing error, will those Hon. Members have an opportunity to speak to the main motion, if they have already spoken to the amendment—even though the amendment was improperly put?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair does not see this as a printing error at all. Therefore, anyone who has spoken on the main motion can speak again. There is no problem. We will reserve on that point, but anyone who wants to speak again has the possibility to do so.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I want to address a few words on the amendment and on the motion by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), as well. I think it will come as no surprise to Hon. Members of the House that I agree in both principle and in practice with the motion which has been proposed. I extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for his courage and perseverance in moving the motion.

The particular amendment suggested is, in my opinion, strictly a technical amendment which will introduce the word "human" to clarify that the motion does indeed deal with "human beings", and in so doing comply with the French version.

It is more significant than simply an amendment that the word "human" is dealt with because of the general thrust of the motion that the Government should consider the advisability of protecting the human foetus along with the human being in the Charter of Rights. Therefore, the role of humanness becomes very fundamental. If one reviews the Criminal Code thus far, the status of the "human being" is very ambiguous. Section 206 of the Criminal Code states that:

> A child becomes a human being . . . when it has completely proceeded, in a living state, from the body of its mother—

I think that this particular definition of humanness overlooks over a decade of medical research and development. We now have in utero surgery and more advanced research in genetics and foetal development, and it is clearly evident that a human being, distinctly and genetically different from its mother, does exist before the time in Section 206 when the human being simply emerges from the mother. Therefore, it is very important that we emphasize the humanness of this particular issue.

The motion, as it has been put, should be considered by all Hon. Members of the House within the framework that we are simply asking the Government to consider the advisability of amending the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. When Hon. Members vote on this motion, if they vote in the affirmative, that is they vote to agree with the motion, that is not saying the Government will change the Charter of Rights immediately or even proceed to do so. I would like to address this to those Hon. Members who have expressed some reservations about the amending formula and the degree of consultation required between the provinces and Ottawa. Now is the time for consultation. Now is the time we should consider this question as a constitutional question. However, this motion reads that the Government should be asked "to consider the advisability", and I hope Hon. Members will keep that in mind.

Most important, this motion is a call to accountability of Members of Parliament. It has been a very reasoned debate thus far. However, I am a little disappointed in my colleagues on the Government side as well as from the two Opposition Parties when I hear the argument that we need more consultation, that we must give this issue more time, that this issue is so morally delicate that it should not be addressed by politicians. These are some of the points raised, and I know they have been raised in good faith by Hon. Members of all Parties. However, it is because of the moral delicacy of this issue and because of the fundamental importance of this issue in Canadian society that I submit this motion should be a rallying point for Members of Parliament and for the Canadian people. It is vitally important that Hon. Members stand up and be counted on this issue. I do not think it is acceptable that Hon. Members say we should give the issue more time or further consultation.

Often polls and different polling data is introduced into discussion on this issue. I know all of us, regardless of what particular view we take on the sensitive issue of abortion, acknowledge there have been many polls done. However, I think we should, with a balanced and reasonable view, look at the most important poll of all, and that is the lengthy list of the numbers of abortions performed every year in Canada. I agree with Hon. Members of all Parties that in a perfect world there would be no abortion. I agree with the need for contraception and information. But this is not a perfect world. We have within a myriad of regulations in the Criminal Code an ambiguous collection of laws which allows over 70,000 abortions to be performed every year. That is some imperfection, Madam Speaker. It is an imperfection which is literally depriving Canada of a generation of citizens.

What do we do about that? We can no longer rely on the provinces through their administration of medical services plans or on hospitals under whose responsibility falls therapeutic abortion committees because to do so is to abdicate the fundamental responsibility of this issue. The fundamental question is life, humanness and the definition of where and when that life begins and how we, as Members of Parliament, should deal with the question of humanity. This is strictly a matter for at least the Criminal Code and quite probably, as this motion indicates, for the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We cannot, and should not, say any longer that it is someone else's responsibility. It is the responsibility of all 282 Members of this Parliament to see this issue is addressed.

In closing, I want to state again my strong and unwavering support for this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe. I would like to ask—in fact, to put it in stronger terms, I would like to plead with Hon. Members to view this particular motion in its context. This motion asks the Government of Canada to consider the advisability of amending the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I think we should ask the Government to consider looking at this issue. Regardless of what point of view one brings into this House, I think it is not too much to ask that the advisability be considered of entrenching a right to life of the unborn. I know that time does restrain all of us. I have a number of other points to make, but I will close by thanking you, Madam Speaker, for giving me this time. I would like to extend my thanks to all Hon. Members, particularly to the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe, and I would encourage all Hon. Members of Parliament to be heard on this issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) this order shall be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper. It can be expected to be scheduled for debate next on February 13, 1987.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

HERBICIDES—USE OF WEED KILLER 2,4-D

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, as I was sitting here this evening, I wondered if you happened to be now or whether you had ever been a member of a service club. I happen to be a member of the Lions International, and I wondered if perhaps you might have been a Lioness. It does not really matter whether Your Honour is a member or have been a member of a service club, I know that you are definitely aware of all of the good works that the service clubs do, whether it be the Rotary Club, the Kiwanis Club, the Kinsmen, Civitan, Zonta, the Lions or whatever.

I know that you are aware, Madam Speaker, as well, that the main purpose of service clubs is to try to raise money to help the unfortunate, the disabled and to help out in one's own community and in other communities around the world.

Different service clubs have a variety of ways of raising money. For instance, my own club raises money by selling fertilizer every spring. Actually, every spring since 1965 I have been out on the trail in our own community knocking on doors, selling fertilizer. We have found in our community and in our club that the most popular form of fertilizer is, of course, one which contains a weed killer. That is quite understandable because we all know what a problem broad-leaf weeds can be, whether they be dandelions, plantains or whatever. Every spring we have to get out in the yard and dig them out and by late spring they are sprouting again, as they are in the fall. So all of us are interested in having something in the way of a weed killer that gets rid of weeds in our lawns, if we happen to have one.

It came as quite a shock to me to hear that it may very well be that the main weed killer ingredient in those fertilizers, and for that matter the main weed killer for all broad-leaf weeds, 2,4-D, may be banned in this country by the spring. Of course, spring is almost on us. March 21 of this year marks the beginning of spring. So it came as quite a shock to me to learn this information.

I investigated just what was going on. I found that 2,4-D apparently has been suspected of being a cancer-causing agent. That came as a real shock to me because I know that 2,4-D was developed some time after the end of the Second World War. It has been with us now for something in the order of 40 years. Not only is it used on our lawns as a weed killer, it is used by the forest industries to choke out the growth that may destroy young plants and young trees that are coming up. It is also used in our agricultural industries to control weeds among our grain crops, crops such as wheat, oats and barley, since apparently they are all forms of grass.

There will be quite an enormous impact on all of us individually in our everyday life at home and in our industries, including food, agriculture and forestry. There will be an enormous impact because I am told that last year there was some 4.5 million kilograms of 2,4-D sprayed on some seven million hectares of land in Canada and that around the world 2,4-D is used in some 1,000 different products. Last year they had sales around the world amounting to $14 bilion. If the manufacture of 2,4-D is suddenly shut down in the country, it will have an enormous impact upon all our lives.

I understand that the Province of Ontario and the Province of New Brunswick have already imposed some form of restriction on the sale of 2,4-D. Ontario, for instance, says that it has placed a moratorium on any new products which contain 2,4-D.

Three Departments of the federal Government are investigating the situation—the Department of the Environment, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of National Health and Welfare. They will determine, apparently by spring, whether or not we should be banning 2,4-D in the country. Of course some say that 2,4-D is a pesticide and that it is a health hazard. However, I have been told by others, particularly a good friend and horticulturalist, a broadcaster on the subject of horticulture in Metropolitan Toronto by the name of Art Drysdale, that it is really not a pesticide, that it is really a hormone, and that it does not deserve all the bad publicity which it has been getting.

One way or another, whether it is a health hazard or whether it is a hormone which is not harmful, the federal and provincial Governments are investigating it. I understand that the Americans are also investigating to see whether or not they will shut down and ban the use of 2,4-D.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will throw some more light on the subject tonight, because it is of vital importance to all Canadians. Whether we be urban dwellers, whether we work in the forest industry, or whether we work in agriculture, it has a vital impact on all our lives. I am looking forward to hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary what is the latest word on the potential banning of 2,4-D this year.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond more fully to the question raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) on November 18, 1986.

As the Hon. Member indicated during his question, the herbicide 2,4-D has been registered for use in Canada for approximately 40 years. More recently, a consortium of companies which manufacture and sell 2,4-D formed a task force for the purpose of sponsoring a variety of studies on the chemical.

In June, 1986 the task force submitted to officials of the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare the results of its first long-term feeding study in rats designed to determine the potential of 2,4-D to cause cancer under experimental conditions.

Officials of the Health Protection Branch conducted a comprehensive review of the information made available in the particular study. They concluded that the administration of 2,4-D in a lifetime feeding study to rodents produced a statistically significant increase in the incidence of malignant brain tumors as compared with contemporary control animals.

In addition, Dr. Sheila Hoar and her co-workers at the United States National Cancer Institute have recently published the results of a study conducted in Kansas. The authors of this study have concluded that Kansas farmers using a variety of herbicides, in particular 2,4-D, were at an increased risk of developing a rare form of cancer. We believe that the evidence recently published by the doctor and her co-workers, when taken together with the experimental results demonstrated in rodents, suggests that 2,4-D may be a potential human carcinogen.

Officials of the Health Protection Branch have advised their colleagues in the Department of Agriculture that human exposure to 2,4-D should be kept to an absolute minimum and that alternate chemicals should be used wherever possible.

I see Madam Speaker signalling that I am running out of time. I should like to conclude by saying that consultations and the co-operation suggested in the studies are ongoing with the various Departments. Indeed some positions will be arrived at in the not too distant future.

TRADE—UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION—CANADIAN PROPOSAL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, on December 5, I put a question to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) concerning the Government's plans with regard to the softwood lumber countervail duty which had already been imposed in a preliminary way on the industry. Since that time, the Government has totally capitulated to the United States and has not waited for the U.S. to impose or not impose a countervail duty. Instead the Government has imposed an export tax. There is a significant difference in the two arrangements. Clearly the Canadian softwood lumber industry is violently opposed to the Government imposing an export tax. People in the industry and many others believe that we could have defeated the U.S. softwood lumber coalition plan either in the trade tribunals in the United States, in the trade courts, or before the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade panel in Geneva, Switzerland.

In any event, the Government has moved ahead with the imposition of an export tax which is most unfair. It infringes on our sovereignty and does not take into account the traditional arrangements we have had for native people. It is a decision which will come back to haunt the Government and future governments for many years to come. Outstanding constitutional experts and international legal experts during the past two weeks have said the same thing.

We are most concerned in my section of the country of northern Ontario. During the months of November and December, while this countervail duty of 15 per cent was in place, three major softwood lumber producers shut down operations or reduced the number of shifts. This would be bad enough if that were the end of the issue, but the softwood lumber industry does not make the estimated $550 million to $600 million a year which the 15 per cent export tax is expected to cost. The industry does not make that much profit now. How can companies absorb the tax and turn any profit at all? No industry can operate indefinitely without some profit margin.

It has been made clear in a letter from Trade Representative Yeutter and Secretary of Commerce Baldrige to the United States Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports that they intend to have control over where that money goes in Canada. It cannot be used for forestry related projects, for roads, or for supporting or encouraging the industry. Where will the money go, Madam Speaker? It will go to the provincial Governments but it cannot be used in support of the industry. The more distressing concern is that the United States Government is demanding the export tax of $550 million or $600 million be imposed at that same level as a stumpage charge by the provinces.

Stumpage charges are, of course, right across the board. When you impose that level of tax as stumpage, the total cost to the industry and to Canadian customers and other export customers will be closer to $870 million, as estimated by the United States. If the industry cannot afford a tax of $550 million or $600 million, how will it be able to afford a converted stumpage charge? Of course, the precedent will be set for the American pulp and paper industry to demand and receive a similar kind of tax to be imposed on the Canadian pulp and paper industry whose exports to the United States are two to three times as large as those of the softwood lumber industry.

Areas like my riding are faced with an incredible dilemma. Many plants had to shut down during the month of December. The industry does not know how it will pay this tax and still survive. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to give us some answers and some hope. I hope she will appreciate the dilemma that is faced.

The tax is unfair. Producers in Ontario pay a stumpage charge of something like $17.50 per thousand board feet while in British Columbia, the equivalent stumpage charge on similar kinds of softwood lumber is about $4.50. Yet the export tax is identical: 15 per cent across the board. It is much easier for B.C. lumber mill operators to pay the tax and still survive. In Ontario, the producers have to pay the very high stumpage fee while still paying the flat tax.

I hope the Government will move decisively on this because the industry is facing a terrible dilemma. Hundreds and thousands of jobs in northern Ontario will be lost due to this export tax.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to the question my colleague directed to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) on December

5. It will be recalled that following the United States Commerce Department's preliminary determination on softwood lumber on October 16, a number of options were identified and assessed in close co-operation with industry and the provinces. None of these options were without significant problems and there were widely divergent views on how best to proceed.

It soon became apparent, however, that notwithstanding our strong case, a reversal of this preliminary determination was most unlikely and that the final ruling as well would go against us. In the circumstances, it was decided to explore the possibility of a negotiated solution which would protect Canadian interests to the greatest possible degree.

There is no doubt that the understanding signed on December 30 fully meets these objectives. The Minister pointed out previously that it recognizes the sovereign right of the provinces to manage their own resources. It ensures that any additional revenues will remain in Canada. Finally, it avoids creating a precedent in the implementation of United States countervailing law that could have an extremely damaging effect not only on our trade in lumber but on a wide range of other resource-based products.

These negotiations were carried out in the face of pressures from the United States for a far more stringent settlement. The pressures were successfully resisted and the settlement we signed was on our own terms. It represents, I believe, the best possible solution to a long and troublesome dispute.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.20 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

COMMITTEE REPORT—POSSIBLE BREACH OF CONFIDENTIALITY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Mr. Speaker, yesterday after Question Period I granted interviews to the media in the customary manner outside the doors of the House of Commons. During the course of conversations with journalists they queried me concerning the report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure with respect to the registration of paid lobbyists, which report is to be tabled later today in the House of Commons. While I refrained from referring specifically to the report, during my remarks on the general theme of the registration of lobbyists I may have inadvertently revealed some of the contents of the report to the media. After reviewing press clippings this morning, Mr. Speaker, I recognized one of the comments as being mine.

If my colleagues on the committee feel such is the case, as I understand it is at least in the one case, I apologize to the House, and more particularly to the Chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), and to the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish) and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) with whom I have worked on this committee. More than anything else, I want the report to be adopted in the non-partisan reform manner which characterized our committee's very fruitful deliberation.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the House that we are happy to accept the Member's apology for his good wishes toward the committee, for the work that we have done in the past and for the work that we will continue to do in the future.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I will not sit here and let my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) take full responsibility for any inadvertent remarks. Yesterday after Question Period I, too, was accosted by a Mr. Iain Hunter from The Ottawa Citizen who wanted to get a copy of the report from me. I said that I could not give him a copy of the report because we had agreed that the matter would be dealt with at the press conference today. He then went on to question me about my response to the whole question of registering lobbyists and I discussed the matter in general. He may have taken from my comments to him remarks which then found their way into his articles in the paper.

I want to say to my friend that I, too, was in the same situation and I apologize to our chairman if anything that I may have said that was misinterpreted by Mr. Hunter in his article. I believe that our report got unanimous agreement in the committee. That took some doing because we spanned the political spectrum from somewhere to the right of Genghis Khan to Karl Marx.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I sincerely hope nothing I said could throw any shadow on the fine work we did together as a committee.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank all Hon. Members, certainly the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for coming into the Chamber and making the statement that he has made. I compliment the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) for his response, and I thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for his contribution.

I might say to all Hon. Members that this is a signal, a salutary example of how these matters ought to be settled among Hon. Members in this Chamber. I thank Hon. Members for their co-operation and good sense of propriety as to what this place is all about.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LOSS OF MICROFICHE IN THE MAIL

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Just before I start my statement, Mr. Speaker, as the oldest living inhabitant of this place, I would just like to say that I have heard proceedings for many, many years and I want to congratulate the Members who have just made statements. That kind of sentiment makes this place a better place in which to live and work. I congratulate the Members on the attitude they have taken and for what they have said. What they did is very admirable, indeed.

I rise to inform the House of a very unfortunate incident involving loss of several microfiche sheets in the mail. The facts are quite straightforward.

Every month for the past 10 years, the Veterans Affairs head office has been forwarding standard pension payment information to our 31 district offices across Canada. The information is used by these offices to answer any questions disability pensioners may have about their cheques. It is a simple but very valuable service for pensioners. I was informed on January 9 that two of the 31 parcels forwarded from Charlottetown, and containing the data on the December cheque release, had been delivered in damaged condition. Worse, some of the contents were missing.

An investigation conducted by Veterans Affairs and Canada Post found no indication whatsoever of any wrongdoing. Quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. The investigation found every reason to believe that the microfiche should have been packaged in a stronger container to ensure safe transmission by first-class mail. The result was that the two boxes had broken open while in transit with some of their contents falling out in the process. Even so, we took the added precaution of informing the RCMP. The RCMP advised my officials that they found no evidence to suspect that the loss of the microfiche was in any way intentional.

I would like to set out very briefly just what readable information is on these cards, and that is as follows: the pensioner's name, the name of the spouse and any dependent children, the service number, the amount of the cheque and the mailing address. In addition, and for a maximum of 10 per cent of the pensioners, the Social Insurance Number is given because that number corresponds to the pensioner's service number. However, the majority of the entries on the microfiche are coded and therefore of no value to an unauthorized person. A complete set would provide information on approximately 144,000 pensioners, and slightly less than a complete set is not accounted for.

While I am personally convinced that the information on these cards cannot be used to anyone's detriment, I fully acknowledge the seriousness of this matter. Indeed, I feel very badly that it has happened. It is one thing to make a mistake; it is even worse to know that the mistake could and perhaps even should have been foreseen and thereby prevented. Put simply, this material should not have been distributed in the way it was.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this material will not be distributed that way in the future. This method of distribution has been stopped and more secure methods will be found to permit us to continue this very important service for pensioners. In the meantime, steps have been taken to make sure that pensioners are not inconvenienced in any way. The two methods we will be using will be Telex and computer link-up.

I have prepared a very detailed information package concerning this matter and it will be distributed to every Member, every Senator and the news media immediately after I conclude this statement.

As a final point, and although I am satisfied that the information appearing on these cards cannot be used for improper purposes, I was furious when I learned about the incident. There is, however, a positive side to all of this. For 10 years, personal information on pensioners has been distributed to Veterans Affairs district offices in this manner. No one had any reason to believe that it was not secure because nothing like this, to the very best of our knowledge, had ever occurred before. We are now fully aware of the risks the department was unknowingly taking and this gives us the opportunity to safeguard our veterans' interests by tightening security and making as certain as humanly possible that this never happens again. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you and all Hon. Members that we will make absolutely certain that veterans will continue to receive the good service they have come to expect and fully deserve.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition critic for Veterans Affairs, I first want to thank the Minister for having informed me of this incident which, fortunately, will have no serious consequences.

I think the Minister acted responsibly by making his statement before the House, not outside the House or to the press. I think he deserves to be congratulated and that his colleagues would do well to follow his example. Statements on incidents involving departments, whether they involve the Department of Veterans Affairs or any other department, should be made here in the House.

Nevertheless, one wonders what is going on, because Revenue Canada lost some microfiche not long ago. In addition, the Auditor General has criticized the Department of Veterans Affairs about overpayments, and today, we are told some microfiche were lost.

I realize it is not necessarily a matter of incompetence, but there was certainly negligence, because generally speaking a Minister is responsible for what goes on in his department. That is why Ministers must always be vigilant and monitor what is going on in their departments. They have that responsibility and cannot leave it to someone else.

In this particular incident, while part of the responsibility lies with the Department of Veterans Affairs, I realize that Canada Post has a far greater responsibility than the Department.

At Canada Post, mail delivery has been chaotic in recent years. For instance, a letter sent from Ottawa to Hull has to be routed via Montreal. This is absolutely crazy. We know what happened to mail sent from the main post office on Prince Edward Island. We know how the mail got lost. Fortunately, as I said, there was no confidential information. Everything was coded. Be that as it may, I do want to congratulate the Minister again for having selected other means to route the microfiche or the necessary information to regional offices in Canada, for the simple reason that we can no longer rely on Canada Post. The Minister opted for telex, which I think is far more reliable.

Speaking of Canada Post, Mr. Speaker, my constituents and Canadian businessmen have been complaining about poor mail delivery, especially business mail. We are getting letters and telephone calls daily about this.

So I want to congratulate the Minister on having selected another means of delivering the microfiche to the 31 regional offices of Veterans Affairs Canada.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with the Minister's statement. I trust that with his political experience, he will be able to deal satisfactorily with this problem and will deal as quickly with any other problems that may arise in his department. I hope the other Ministers will take a leaf from the Minister's book in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Minister and I want to thank him for having acted as responsibly as he did by making this statement before the House today.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I too want to thank the Minister and his office for making me aware of this particular problem yesterday and for giving me the opportunity to discuss with the Minister the type of information that was stored on this microfiche. I found it refreshing as well that as soon as the Minister found out about this, he immediately ordered a full investigation into the circumstances surrounding this particular incident.

• (1120)

I am also assured that the information contained on the microfiche is such that the veterans and their families should not be concerned about its confidentiality. It is very limited in the information it provides. Veterans and their families should have no great concern about personal information which may be lying around out there and which could be a threat to their privacy and security.

I had the opportunity of reading the chronological sequence of events which took place between December 17 when those packages were mailed out, and January 13 when the Minister was informed. It seemed to me as I read through these events that the Minister should have been informed by his officials long before he was. I am sure the Minister has made known his views to his officials. I am also quite interested in why it took between December 29, a Monday—and I can appreciate that the festive season was involved—and January 15, some 18 days, before the RCMP were asked to investigate. It seems to me to be far too long before the police investigation was conducted.

In conclusion, personal information on Canadians which is stored in computers has to be secure. There have been incidents over the past several months which clearly indicate that security in all government Departments requires some re-examination. While I fully appreciate the efforts of the Minister as soon as it came to his attention to make sure everything was done to protect veterans and their families, I would also say to other Ministers of the Crown, let this be an example. If they have not already done so, I seriously urge them to sit down with their department officials responsible for information stored in computers and make damn sure the information is secure. This is for the protection of not only government departments but individual Canadians who could be seriously affected, in circumstances other than the present one, by a violation of privacy.

Again, congratulations to the Minister, and on that note I will not say anything else.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House in both official languages the first report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. The report is presented as a result of the Government's discussion paper entitled "Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists", which was referred to the committee in February of 1986. Our work was interrupted by the summer recess and the termination of the first session of this Parliament. However, through hard work and long hours we grappled with the subject, and I am pleased to tell you that the report I place before the House today, recommending the implementation of a registration system for paid lobbyists, has the unanimous support of the representatives on the committee from all Parties of this House.

I would like to especially thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) and the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish) for their important contribution to this work, along with two staff members, the Clerk of the Committee, Sandy Birch, and Mr. Bruce Carson from the Library of Parliament. All of those individuals have allowed us to come together with a unanimous report which I think is both topical and significant.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition from a large number of people in Scarborough, Pickering, Agincourt, Whitby and Toronto. They wish to petition the House of Commons to rescind a tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations. The petition is presented because of a Bill before this House which they hope will be rejected.

I have another petition from Canadians living in Toronto and Scarborough who also wish to express their concern about rising book prices which has placed a strain on library book acquisition programs. They are particularly concerned because of their association with libraries and feel the Bill before the House will threaten those libraries and their ability to provide an adequate library service to Canadians.

I have another petition from residents of Don Mills, Ontario, and the City of North York. They are concerned about the retaliatory tariff on imported books which the Government has raised and which endangers the book publishing business, book sellers and distributors. They wish to express their discontent with this Bill and therefore humbly petition this House of Commons to rescind the Bill.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): I also have a petition signed by Canadians from Rainy River in northern Ontario and other places. They call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians. They are concerned about the changes to the Patent Act and the problems to be faced by senior citizens and others who will have to pay higher prices for prescription drugs than would otherwise be the case if the Bill were not passed by this House.

[Translation]

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my duty to present—

[English]

—petitions which ask the Government of Canada to withdraw the tariff on books. Whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited access of Canadians to literature and information, and whereas the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry in the U.S. yet penalizes Canadian consumers, book publishers, sellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book publishing industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of the ongoing free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I also have two petitions concerning the Government's proposed legislation that will increase the price of drugs.

[English]

The petitioners humbly submit that the proposed changes to the Patent Act affect directly all Canadians not protected by private or government medicare programs. The federal government proposal will raise the cost, already high, of provincial health care programs. The monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and result in increased drug prices. It will also severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act represent another example of Canadian Government concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

REQUEST FOR DEPORTATION OF JOHN MICHAEL LEWIS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 the attached petition is certified correct. It contains 350 signatures and is in tandem with the one presented by the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) which contained 8,000 signatures.

The undersigned protest in the strongest terms a ruling by the Immigration Appeal Board to permit John Michael Lewis, a convicted child molester, to remain in Canada. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to request this ruling be overturned forthwith and demand his immediate deportation to the United States of America.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which contains several dozen names from various communities in Ontario, protesting the imposition of the retaliatory tariff on English language books which the Government imposed last year in response to the cedar shakes and shingles countervail duty imposed by the United States. These petitioners outline that it will have a very negative impact upon the publishing industry and will penalize Canadian consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors, and Canadian culture generally. It will also place a real strain upon the budgets of the nation's public and specialized libraries. They call upon the Government to rescind this 10 per cent duty which is strictly retaliatory and really hurts Canadians more than the Americans it was designed to retaliate against.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition with several dozen names of Canadian citizens in various communities in western and eastern Canada. They protest the Government's decision to amend the Patent Act, which will have an adverse impact upon the price of drugs, especially for elderly Canadians or senior citizens and those covered by drug programs. It will also reduce the competition by generic companies and will thus raise unnecessarily the price of prescription drugs to Canadians.

It is also pointed out by these petitioners that these changes to the Patent Act are being done as a concession in the free trade negotiations. Of course the impact is negative upon all Canadians, whereas the concessions under free trade will not necessarily be of any benefit to Canadians.

I hope the Government will respond in a positive way to these petitioners who are asking for a change in these decisions by the Government.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I also have the pleasure to present a petition which has been certified correct as to form and content. It is signed by a number of residents of the City of Toronto who state that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of the average Canadian to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for all Canadians.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a duly certified petition from a number of Canadians concerned about changes to the Patent Act. They see these changes resulting in higher drug prices both for individuals and for provincial drug plans. They also see them as another form of Canada granting concessions to the United States. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposed changes, which I sincerely hope Parliament will do.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table some of the thousands of signatures on petitions obtained in the City of Windsor in opposition to the Patent Act amendments which would drive up the prices of drugs for Canadians and impose a heavier burden upon taxpayers, primarily in the interests of the profit-making of multinational drug companies and in obedience to the direction of the Americans. With that, I table this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, this petition, and that petition from the City of Windsor.

An Hon. Member: Can't you count?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, and indeed an honour, to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 concerning the changes the Government plans to make to the Patent Act. The petitioners indicate that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They call upon the Government to come to its senses and reject the proposals in their tracks before the legislation continues any further. Indeed, they go on to say that the proposed changes are simply another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, in its attempt to continue free trade negotiations.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I would like to submit two petitions. One is from residents of Bristol, Shawville, Norway, Portage du Fort, and neighbouring communities who wish to express their desire that the Government reconsider the measures it is proposing to take in changing the Patent Act which, as we all know, will result in increased costs of drugs, prescription medicine, and the like.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the other petition is signed by people from the town of Berthier and the riding of Bellechasse. They ask the Government of Canada to reconsider proposed amendments that would lead to an increase in the price of drugs, and they humbly pray that Parliament will reject this proposal that will increase the price of drugs for Canadian men and women.

CANADA—U.S. AUTO PACT—SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition consisting of another 250 names from my constituents in Essex—Windsor who are deeply concerned about indications from the Government that there are serious plans afoot to give up the safeguards in the Auto Pact. This would severely threaten the jobs of thousands of Essex County and Windsor workers, as well as the economic prosperity of the region. Therefore, these petitioners call upon the Government to reject completely any give-away of the safeguard provisions of the Auto Pact in the free trade talks with the United States.

STARRED QUESTION

CN RAIL LINES

Question No. *58—Mr. St. Julien:

Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act

1. From January 1, 1980, to date, what were Canadian National's revenues and expenditures with regard to the (a) Chapais subdivision (from Franquet to Chapais and Chibougamau, mile 72.1 to mile 199.l) (b) Taschereau subdivision (from La Sarre to Cochrane, Ontario, mile 99.0 to mile 181.0) (c) Val d'Or subdivision (from Senneterre to Val d'Or, Malartic and Noranda, mile 00.0 to mile 101.5) sections of line?

2. Did the government spend any money closing down CN lines in the Abitibi region during the same period and, if so, in what amounts?

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. Information regarding revenues and expenditures by subdivision, including those in the Abitibi area, is considered confidential and, for marketing reasons, cannot be communicated.

2. No.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 16 minutes, beginning at one o'clock today.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, January 26, 1987, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Late yesterday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I was unceremoniously interrupted by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who did not seem to appreciate the fact that we are trying to make him see the light with respect to the situation as it relates to Bill C-37.

As I was saying, the agreement on softwood lumber has no bearing whatsoever on Canada's sovereignty. Opposition Members have been unable to come up with any kind of solution to this question, and they are trying to convince Canadians that our sovereignty is on the line. That is utter nonsense because, pursuant to the provisions of the agreement, any information we might give the United States will be known to the public, and American officials will not have to come up here to check the facts.

The signing of this agreement is a major achievement. Compared with a suspension agreement, this settlement is infinitely more preferable. As in the case of a suspension agreement, the money remains in Canada, but what matters more is that it spares us the irksome control of the provinces' forestry management methods that would result from a suspension agreement.

The Opposition just cannot understand that if a countervailing duty had been imposed as we feared, and I hope all Hon. Members realize that, the forest industry would have had to assume the double burden of a tariff and an increased stumpage fee, for the only way for us to get rid of a countervailing duty would have been to increase stumpage fees to the point where the United States Department of Trade would unilaterally decide that the alleged subsidy was compensated for.

Mr. Speaker, the Opposition assuredly understands nothing, absolutely nothing about the softwood lumber issue and the benefits which this agreement will have for forestry workers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the definition of a specialist given by Mr. Guy Antoine Lafleur, professor of political science at Laval University, applies perfectly well to our Opposition friends, and I quote: "I am very suspicious of specialists, for a specialist is someone who learns more and more about less and less, until he reaches the point where he knows everything about nothing."

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this remark applies perfectly well to members opposite who are really trying to convince Canadians that this lumber agreement does not benefit Canada, when the fact is that it is altogether beneficial to the forestry workers and industry.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill C-37 and the motion moved by the Government. I was interested in the comments made by the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) because he has obviously swallowed hook, line and sinker, the Government's position that this agreement really does not infringe on Canada's sovereignty. I would ask the Hon. Member to read statements made by Maxwell Cohen, one of Canada's foremost experts on international law who was a judge on the International Court of Justice in the Gulf of Maine resource dispute and a former Canadian Chairman of the International Joint Commission. He stated in the Ottawa Citizen on January 3:

The lumber deal is a dangerous precedent that threatens Canadian sovereignty.

He goes on to say:

It is a strange procedure to allow someone to monitor our own stuff.

And:

They maintained the unilateralness of something that is joint in effect because the Americans have a right to know everything about Canada's activity, information or anything else.

Edward English, a professor of economics at Carleton University, also stated in the Ottawa Citizen on January 3:

> Natural resources are a birthright that should not be surrendered to any foreign government.

He goes on to say:

> They are taking the same attitude that they do with the Soviets. That shows that the atmosphere of suspicion in Washington isn't restricted to East-West relations.

The Hon. Member should also take note of the comment by Robin Neill, an economic historian who said in the Ottawa Citizen on January 3, 1987:

> Even if Canada lost the case it would be better to take its hit now rather than gamble with the country's sovereignty for years to come.

If the Hon. Member does not believe those eminent individuals, he may want to listen to what Alberta's Don Getty said on January 5:

> Any tax on a provincial resource we feel very srongly must be the result of a federal-provincial agreement and we won't be part of any agreement that is not.

If the Hon. Member for Portneuf read those quotes he might not have been nearly as certain that our sovereignty is not being impaired.

We should also consider the letter from Malcolm Baldrige, Secretary of Commerce in the United States and Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, which was obviously prepared and ready to be sent the day of the signing of the agreement. In their joint letter to Stanley Dennison, chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports—perhaps unfair pricing for Canadians—they make it clear that Canada does not stipulate how the funds to be raised by this export tax will be spent. Any arrangements to transfer those funds to the provincial Governments or to transfer tax from a federal export tax to a provincial stumpage tax must be approved by the U.S. Government. Item four of the letter from Mr. Yeutter and Mr. Baldrige states that the United States:

> —would have to approve any changes in the export charge or calculation of the value of any replacement measures. Any changes made without U.S. Government approval would be considered a violation of the Understanding.

Does that sound like a sovereign country that will call its own shots with regard to natural resources?

• (1150)

Our natural resources, under our Constitution since about 1931, are the property of the provincial Governments.

The letter signed by Mr. Baldrige and Mr. Yeutter goes on to say that under this agreement the export charge which is being collected for Canada must not be used for any purpose such as a rebate, remission, deferral or non-collection of the export charge. It must not reduce in any way the price of stumpage or other charges on softwood lumber harvested from provincial Crown lands. The letter points out that the awarding of contracts for silviculture, road-building, recreational and other foresting activities is on a non-competition basis.

That is frightening enough, but the United States has made it very clear that not only is it going to control how that money collected is spent under this agreement—and there will be some $550 million to $600 million—but it is also going to control how that export charge is transferred to a stumpage charge.

The forest products industry in my constituency, and we have some of the largest mills in eastern Canada, asks how it can operate. It does not make $550 million or $600 million. How can it pay the tax and still have any profit without making cut-backs? I think the Tories are going to find that the export level to the United States will be severely dampened by this export tax. Although the Canadian forestry companies want to maintain their market share in the United States, they will not maintain it indefinitely if they are losing money. A few companies in my constituency have said they are switching to more hardwood operation and laying off shifts in the softwood operation. They want to monitor the situation but are not going to ship nearly as much to the U.S.

There are two factors over and above this development. Although the present situation is bad, it may very well get a lot worse. The Hon. Member for Porneuf is obviously not aware of this. The United States is demanding that when the export tax is transferred to a stumpage charge, the stumpage fees charged by the provincial Governments will match the percentage or volume of softwood lumber which goes into exports to the United States, We cannot impose a stumpage charge just on the trees which are used for export to the United States, the stumpage charge will be applied right across the board on all trees, including the lumber from those trees which ends up being used domestically and for export to the European countries and so on.

If the industry is feeling poor today because it does not make $550 million to $600 million in profits, which is the export charge it will have to pay, it is going to feel even worse because it is going to pay a lot more. The United States has indicated it estimates that when the tax is transferred from an export tax to a stumpage charge, the actual amount of tax which will have to be imposed as a stumpage charge will increase from the $600 million to about $870 million. It is little wonder that the forest products industry is devastated by this deal. It has not only spent $10 million fighting this in the United States trade courts and tribunals, but it is now facing an export tax and then an even larger stumpage charge which will absolutely devastate that industry. It will not be able to function or make a reasonable profit.

I see this legislation as devastating. It is a bad decision by the Government and it will live to rue its decision. It will take years to make an agreement with the provincial Governments, and in the meantime our softwood lumber industry will suffer dramatically and intensively for many, many years due to this agreement.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it saddens me to think that this is the last opportunity we will have at this stage to speak to Bill C-37, an Act to impose an export tax on exporting softwood lumber to the United States, because the Government has decided to, in a sense, muzzle debate. It has cut off debate on a very critical and complex issue.

An example of this complexity is reflected in today's Globe and Mail which reports: "Little progress made in the lumber tax talks". Of course, these talks are an attempt to determine how on earth the Government will convert the 15 per cent export tax into increased stumpage rates for each of the respective provinces and territories.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the United States lumber lobby claimed that the Canadian industry receives a 32 per cent stumpage subsidy as a result of the low provincial charges across Canada. These stumpage rates are charged on a province-by-province basis. They are different from one province to another. Yet somehow or other this across the board 15 per cent tax has to be integrated into changed stumpage rates. That is a very complex situation, but the Government has decided to curtail and cut off debate, to muzzle and close down debate on this critical issue in the House of Commons, therefore making it impossible for us to explore thoroughly the various complications attached to Bill C-37. I regret the Government has decided to do that.

I think we have to recognize that this action taken by the United States Government is really a back door approach to price fixing in the United States. The combines legislation of the United States prohibits price fixing by corporations. It does not allow monopoly control of the market-place, which can be done in Canada as a result of our weak and toothless combines legislation. This is a back door approach by the United States for its lumber industry to ratchet up the price of softwood and curtail competition from our industrious, creative and energetic Canadian marketeers in the United States. The sad thing is that the Government of Canada has agreed to allow the Americans to do this. While we were reinvesting in terms of modernizing our forest industry, the Americans were deinvesting in their forest industry, enabling part of its softwood industry to continue as outmoded, redundant and uncompetitive. Now, of course, they are using this back door approach to obtain their share of the market-place which Canadian entrepreneurs and marketeers took from them as a result of our aggressive forest industry.

I do not understand why the Government has decided to co-operate with the United States on this issue, particularly after the Minister of State for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said in this House on a number of occasions that what the United States was doing was illegal and inappropriate, it had no case and it was something that Canada must fight. However, they in a sense caved in and agreed to go along with this situation. That is history now. We have to now decide on the most appropriate way to proceed at this point.

May I suggest that the Government commit itself, very publicly, that appropriate portions of the $600 million which Canada will collect from this export tax on lumber going to the United States will be returned to the provinces to reinvest totally in our forest resource. There are a number of alternatives the Government might want to pursue.

Last weekend, after having held a number of meetings in my constituency, I came away with a list of suggestions which were put forward with respect to how my constituents feel the Government of British Columbia ought to be reinvesting this $400 million which it will receive in terms of developing the forest resource to ensure that it is maintained as a continuous resource.

One of the suggestions brought to my attention included the development of markets other than the American market. It was suggested that support be given to various private and public organizations to go out and identify and develop new markets for our softwood products. Hand-in-hand with that would be support for the retooling of some of our mills to meet the demands of these new markets, be they in the Far East, Latin American, Africa or Europe.

Another suggestion involved the whole area of reforestation. We find a rather abysmal state of affairs in certain provinces where the appropriate amount of tree planting and silviculture is completely inadequate. The Province of British Columbia certainly falls into that category. On a recent tour to Finland it was pointed out to me that for every tree that is cut in that country four trees are replanted. Then, over the years, as a result of brushing, thinning, spacing and fertilizing the poorer trees are culled, leaving one tree to grow in the best possible and most productive fashion. In Canada, for every three trees we cut down we replant only one. The replanting of that one tree is often poorly done. Consequently, even that one tree that is planted does not often see the completion of its life cycle.

Apart from money going into reforestation and various silviculture practices we would certainly want to see money invested in brushing, thinning and spacing, fertilization, the development of nurseries and the putting in place of an infrastructure to ensure that appropriate stocks are available for replanting at various elevations, as is required in provinces such as British Columbia.

It was also suggested that money be invested in pest and fire control techniques and methods. In central British Columbia at this time there is an infestation of spruce budworm which is affecting 500,000 hectares. There is now something other than chemical spraying to contain and control the continuation of such infestations. Specifically, the biological agent BT is being used. Now that there will be adequate moneys at our disposal, control of infestations of this type of pest can be contemplated.

Also, money which is collected from the export tax ought to go into research and development into new and improved techniques for disease and pest control and for the development of more sophisticated fire control techniques. There are a variety of excellent measures that can and must be taken to follow up on the $600 million that the provinces will now have at their disposal to ensure the long-term continuation of our forest resource.

I have become concerned about this matter because of the recent musings of the Premier of British Columbia who was quoted as saying that he did not know whether or not all of the $400 million would be reinvested in the forest industry. He has said that the Government of British Columbia might decide to use this money for other purposes. We saw a similar situation take place with respect to the amount of money the federal Government has given the Province of British Columbia for health care and post-secondary education. We find that the province has taken these funds and diverted them into all sorts of projects that are perhaps more visible and more politically advantageous. We simply do not want to see that happen in this case.

In closing, I would say that, while we are disappointed that we will not have an opportunity to continue debate at this stage on Bill C-37, we hope the Government will be steadfast in ensuring that the $600 million collected from this lumber export tax goes to the respective provinces and that they, too, commit the money to investment in the development of the forest resource.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-37 implements a Memorandum of Understanding with the United States that is a disaster and a defeat. I say this not only because of what so many others who are knowledgeable on the subject have said but because all one has to do is cite Clause 6 of the agreement to come to the same conclusion. If one looks at Clause 6 one will see that it states the following:

> The Government of Canada will take no action, and will take all reasonable steps to ensure that no other governmental body in Canada takes any action, directly or indirectly, which has the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures—

That phrase alone indicates the completeness of the prohibition of the Government of Canada on the taking of steps within our own country to bring about some amelioration of suffering or of the unfair impact this agreement will have on various aspects of our lumber industry, or other industries that are related to it.

In a letter dated December 30, 1986, from the U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and the Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige to the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports they identify seven different types of Canadian government assistance to the industry that the United States will not accept. In fact, not only have they been kind enough to sign an agreement with us telling what we cannot do, they have also made it clear to their American counterparts that they have seen to it we are bound hand and foot. In this letter they make that clear. It also serves as a warning to Canada that this is an all-encompassing understanding and agreement. The United States will monitor it and see to it that Canada will not go beyond or impede any limitations set upon us.

What is it that the Americans will not accept? They will not accept anywhere from Canada, either from the federal Government or the provinces, or any other body, rebates, remission or deferral of the export charge. They will not tolerate provision of grants or low-cost loans. They will not allow exemption from other federal or provincial charges. They will not accept assumption of obligations currently borne by the industry reduction of stumpage fees, changes in the way that the volume of timber harvest is measured, and the non-competitive awarding of contracts for silviculture, road-building, recreational and other foresting activities. My goodness, they will even watch over our shoulders to see what we are doing recreationally. They will look to see that we do not do anything in our own recreational fields that would impair, impede or have anything to do with the forest agreement.

We are told that Canada and the provinces will provide full and complete privileges to the United States in order for it to monitor our forest industry on a quarterly basis. The Americans will come up here every quarter and go through our books, check us out, to ensure that we are abiding by their rules. That is the promise that has been made. We will be under surveillance as a result of this agreement. We also find that the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has taken away from the provinces the right to govern their own resources.

While this is a disastrous agreement from the very terms which I have cited, it has been estimated by the Canadian Forest Industries Council that this tax will eventually cost between 10 per cent and 20 per cent of the current Canadian production, that is, $600 million in 1987, and between 15,000 and 17,000 jobs. Therefore, it is simple to conclude that even an ordinary citizen who listens to the terms of the agreement which have been made would be stunned to think that we would agree to such a surveillance and to such a form of humiliation. But those who are more sophisticated in working with those matters find that there is a much stronger condemnation than I made. The Government knows that the condemnations exist. That is why it has moved to choke off debate in the House of Commons. That is why it has said that the previous question shall be now put, a parliamentary manoeuvre to stifle debate and cut it off, similar in effect to closure. It knows if the Canadian people have the facts and the truth about this agreement brought to their attention powerfully enough and long enough, Canadians will scream out with outrage and will not allow this Bill to be carried on in this hurried way. Of course, the Government wishes to hurry away this embarrassment, this sell-out.

• (1210)

Sir Winston Churchill was allowed to rise day after day in the British House of Commons to warn Britain that Chamberlain was selling out to Hitler. In this House of Commons we are muzzled as we warn Canadians that we are being sold out by a Government with no sense of direction, that is stumbling and staggering around, and which cannot find resolve to defend our sovereignty. A quick fix for a few dollars is more important to the Government than our national survival, our credibility and honour, and our ability to manoeuvre our sovereignty.

This agreement has been condemned by people such as Dean Maxwell Cohen, who is one of our great international lawyers. Over the decades, he has helped Canada negotiate agreements such as the agreement on the sea, the matter of the extension of our limits to 200 miles. He has been involved in Canadian efforts to guarantee, protect, and uphold our sovereignty in international courts. He does not speak out in a rash way, but he has said:

> The lumber deal is a dangerous precedent that threatens Canadian sovereignty.

In that one sentence is the condemnation of what has been done.

Mr. Adam Zimmerman, chairman of a major resource-based company, Noranda Inc., looking at it from his perspective of private enterprise says that if the agreement is an indication of what is in store, Canada is "bound hand and foot and tied to a tree."

Others in this country who hold responsible positions, for example, Premiers of our provinces, have spoken out. The Premier of Ontario in reviewing what has been done to us through this agreement stated that "They will have the thumb screws on us, the Americans. They will have the thumb screws on us at all times. If we don't behave, they will put the blocks to us. I don't like that".

It is not only the Premier of Ontario, David Peterson, who has spoken out, so has Mr. Pauley, the Premier of Manitoba. One is a Liberal, the other is an NDP. Then we hear Brian Peckford, who is enraged by another sell-out, the sell-out to France by this Government and he says:

> Apparently, when France rattles its swords, Canada bends 1its knees—

Mr. Peckford is a Tory. Therefore, a Liberal, NDP, and a Tory Premier have this same observation, that the Government does not know how to negotiate. Peterson, Pawley, and Peckford, these three Premiers speak out as to what they feel is happening.

Do I need to recount for people's minds what the Government has done in its track record of negotiations on fish, hogs, FIRA, the national energy policy, the polar sea ice-breaker, Star Wars, shakes and shingles, defending our culture, acid rain, caving into multinationals on patents and on the matter of the cost of drugs which is so important to medicare, and on the Auto Pact? Peterson, Pawley, and Peckford say it for us all this Government has brought to us nothing but compromise and appeasement. It is time not merely that this Bill be turned around, but that the Government's entire policy be turned around if Canada is going to survive.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-37 entitled the Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act.

I have had an opportunity to read both the Bill and the Letters of Understanding on this export tax that were signed by the Government with the United States Government. I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that you will be interested in a quote of something said in the House some years ago by Tommy Douglas, who was once the Premier of Saskatchewan, and subsequently the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Ottawa. What Tommy Douglas said at one time is equally appropriate in describing what the Government has negotiated with the United States Government. What Mr. Douglas said was, "It's bad enough to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, but it's even worse when someone else decides how much wood you will hew and how much water you will be allowed to carry." That is exactly what the Government has done in these negotiations.

At the conclusion of the negotiations the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in her attempt to justify the actions of the Government to Canadians said that Canada had received a good deal because the American negotiators had blinked. I am not surprised that the American negotiators blinked. They could not believe their good luck at what the Government had negotiated.

Tommy Douglas also had something to say about that type of attitude from Canada Government officials. When a Canadian came away from discussions with the United States thinking that he had received the best part of the deal, he said: "When a Yankee trader tells you that you are a tough negotiator, you know you have been taken to the cleaners." The Canadian people have been taken to the cleaners by the Government, and not for the first time.

In looking at the conduct of the Government in these negotiations, and coming here with a background of some 17 years of experience in labour-management negotiations, I have never seen a party enter negotiations by giving away the store before the negotiations begin. That is exactly what the Government has done. Before it started negotiating with the Americans, it began negotiating with itself. In the process, it has sold Canada down the river and, as I say, not for the first time. Even before the negotiations began, the Americans, on behalf of the pharmaceutical industry in the United States, demanded that Canada change its policy on patent law insofar as pharmaceutical products were concerned. We know what the result of that is. There is now a Bill in committee which gives the American multinational drug companies everything they ever wanted, and more than that.

The history of Canada's policy on pharmaceutical products is a policy that was demanded by Canadians prior to 1969, and it has found a broad section of support since that policy was changed. Since 1969 there has been no patent protection for pharmaceutical products in Canada, which has resulted in reducing drug prices for Canadians to among the cheapest in the world, whereas prior to 1969 Canadians were paying some of the highest prices for drugs.

• (1220)

The policy adopted in 1969, which the Goverment is trying to change today, did not come about by accident. It came about as a result of great concerns expressed by Canadians about the high cost of drugs. It also came about as a result of no less than four studies during the 1960s, including the last one which was a study by a House of Commons committee comprised of members from all sides of the House. Canadians were paying such high prices for drugs, the committee concluded, because the multinational corporations enjoyed a monopoly on drug pricing, which monopoly was driving up prices and keeping them up.

What the Government of the day decided to do, based on the recommendations from these four major studies, was to remove patent protection from drugs to allow Canadian generic manufacturers to enter the field and copy high-priced drugs, thus providing Canadians with lower priced drugs.

Since 1969, as a result of pressure from the pharmaceutical industry, no less than another four studies were conducted into Canada's policy. Everyone concluded that Canada's policy was a correct one. It was certainly of great benefit to Canadian consumers. The last study, which was one of the most major examinations of Canada's policy respecting the Patent Act and also a major investigation into the pharmaceutical industry not only in Canada but world-wide, was conducted by Professor Harry Eastman. Professor Eastman tabled his report in the House of Commons in 1985 and concluded a number of things. In the most recent figures available to him he clearly showed that in 1983 alone Canadians saved $211 million as a result of Canada's policy. He made some minor recommendations to keep the multinational drug companies happy. In essence, he said that Canada's policy was fine and it should not be changed.

But what did this Government do, Mr. Speaker? Because the pharmaceutical companies could not persuade Governments since 1969 to change Canada's policy, they went after Ronnie Reagan in the United States. Ronnie Reagan listened to them, came to Canada and said to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) "We want that policy changed". That is exactly what the Government did. It changed the policy, not because it is in Canada's interest, not because it is in Canadian consumers interests but because it is in Ronnie Reagan's interest and the drug companies based in the United States.

As a result of that change in policy, Mr. Speaker, over the next 10 years alone it is estimated that it will cost Canadian consumers an additional $4.3 billion in increased drug prices because Ronnie Reagan asked the Government to change policy.

Apart from what the Government is doing with the present piece of legislation, we are changing a policy because the Americans are demanding that we change the policy and I find that terribly offensive. It is offensive to me as a Canadian, and I think most Canadians across the country find it equally as offensive. If the Government does not change its course and its way of thinking as it negotiates with people in the United States on free trade, we will find what the Prime Minister himself said when he was seeking the leadership of the Conservative Party speaking about free trade, that "When you climb into bed with an elephant and you are a mouse, when that elephant rolls over, the mouse is likely to get crushed". That is exactly what will happen in these negotiations unless the crew over there smartens up.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to rise in this debate on Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

First, I would like to deal with the motion which aims at closing the debate before all parliamentarians have been able to express their views on this very important matter which threathens the very existence of Canada. There are only 70 members in the Opposition while the Government has 210 members. I therefore do not understand why there should be such a motion to close the debate instead of letting it continue normally.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is not what is happening. The strategy of this Conservative Government is to reduce the length of debates both in the House and in committee, and we had a very clear example of it this morning. In the Committee on Government Operations, a motion was moved to call back Canada Post before the committee, but the chairman ruled the motion out of order because a witness was scheduled to appear. Then, there was an agreement to hear the witness before the debate on the motion, but later on, when time came for debate, there was not a single Conservative member left in the committee and it had to adjourn because of a lack of quorum.

Such is the strategy used by the Government so that Canadians will be unable to see how it is selling out Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have to remember that the two major objectives of the Canadian Confederation were to protect sovereignty and deliver the mail. These two objectives are being ignored by this Government. The agreement under consideration in the House completely ignores Canadian sovereignty, and since November 5, when we learned about the postal plan of the Government, the mail delivery service in Canada has suffered tremendously, in both rural and urban areas.

However, this debate deals with Bill C-37 and there will be other opportunities to contribute to this other debate which is now going on throughout Canada, and I hope that we shall have such an opportunity in this House.

Let us go back to the question of sovereignty, Mr. Speaker. I would like to dwell on that, because representing as I do an urban area my constituents are not that much interested in the technical problems behind such an agreement.

Mr. Speaker, sovereignty is something that is most important to my fellow citizens and to myself. I would like to state, first, that I am a Canadian by adoption and not by birth. I came to this country when I was 16. That was my choice. After coming here, I decided to stay and to make this my country. I am proud of it. Today, when we see what a foreign government is allowed to do, and it is a foreign country even though we are friends of the United States! Are we to give away everything because we are friends? Or will we defend our own rights, Mr. Speaker? There is the whole question.

Today, we let the United States interfere in our own affairs, and require us to levy taxes. If tomorrow morning the United States—they did that before—decide they are against unemployment insurance coverage for our fishermen, are we going to stop paying UI benefits to our Atlantic fishermen during our Canadian winter? If the United States decide they are against unemployment insurance being paid during maternity leave, are we going to stop paying UI benefits during maternity leaves just because the Americans want us to do so? If the Americans decide they are against medicare in Canada, are we going to do away with medicare? If the Americans decide they are against our offering preferential interest rates on small business loans, are we going to abolish that preferential interest rate? That, Mr. Speaker, is the whole question. That is what this is all about, sovereignty. Of course, the Hon. Member said earlier today that, had we not accepted the agreement, the American Government would have levied a surtax and then the whole Canadian industry would have been penalized. Come now: that is not a sound argument. Now, every time the Americans say they will force a tax upon us, we will respond by saying we will levy it ourselves. If sovereignty is not at stake, what is?

Members say we are exaggerating, they say Liberals have no solutions. Of course we have a solution, Mr. Speaker. There is an international tribunal dealing with those matters. We should fight to the end to keep our sovereign rights as a sovereign nation. And I think that the Liberals have proved it in the past. We stood our ground and we got what we wanted, whereas in this case, the Conservative Government is slowly selling out the country.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Council of Forest Industries has calculated that this tax will eventually bring about the loss of some 10 to 20 per cent of present Canadian production, which will mean $600 million in 1987, and some 15,000 to 17,000 jobs. These include 6,000 jobs in sawing and sawmilling and 11,000 jobs in related and support industries.

Mr. Speaker, these are not our projections but those of the Canadian Council of Forest Industries, which is, by any standard, an important organization in this area.

According to Mr. Bob Rivard of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, our lumber production could decline by as much as 25 percent in 1987.

As for Widman Management Ltd. of Vancouver, British Columbia, they predict that about forty sawmills will be forced to shut down.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we will not only lose our sovereignty but also drive an industry close to bankruptcy. That is what this Bill is about and the Conservative Government is so embarrassed that it will not even allow its own Members to rise and speak on the issue. We may be wrong, but if we are, why do you not stand up and say so and try to explain to the Canadian people why you are doing this, rather than keep silent, as you have been doing since this morning—and all day yesterday, as far as I can see. Are there only Liberals and New Democrats to rise and speak for Canadian sovereignty?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the Tory Members think that such an agreement does not jeopardize our Canadian sovereignty, they should, the 210 of them, rise one after the other and say so. There is no point in introducing a closure motion to pass such a Bill. They have an absolute majority. It is incredible that in a democratic system such steps are taken and it is unfortunate that the parliamentary reform has now become a joke. How can we refer to parliamentary reform, how can we suggest that a Member has a role to play if he is prevented from speaking in the House or in committee for any reason? This morning, two members of the Opposition and four Tory Members showed up. They could have accepted and discussed the motion and if they disagreed, they could have voted against and the motion would have been rejected. However, they decided to leave and since there was no quorum, the motion was not even discussed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Government has no direction and no plan; it is only trying to sell out Canada.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-37 is derived from a trade issue. Of course, this issue lies within the broader and more controversial question of free trade with the United States and the concern this has brought to many of us about future implications of the free trade negotiations on Canadian sovereignty.

I need not remind the House of the history of the legislation with which we are dealing today. The Canadian softwood lumber industry has for some time competed effectively in the American market by virtue of its efficiency and adaptability. This should warn us about the Americans' future tendency to examine all of our effectively competing industries to find excuses, explaining why Canadian industries have in their own markets competed so effectively.

The history of this controversy is that the Americans reached the conclusion that Canadian softwood lumber was being subsidized by low stumpage fees. However, in 1983 the issue was fought when an attempt was made to impose a countervailing duty and we won. We need not deal with the story of bluster, threat and subsequent surrender that is the history of the legislation before us. Nor is it necessary to review the consequences of this legislation on Canadian trading partners, other than the United States. If the export tax continues to be in force, other nations will identify this as an abrogation of GATT.

In the negotiations with the provinces, whatever substitute taxes or levies are imposed, other complications will be introduced. When looking at the agreement, one is struck by its similarity to an agreement which might be found under American law. There is constant reference to the power of the United States Government over the implementation of whatever may substitute for the export tax. The question has become one of sovereignty.

The agreement refers to the ability and, indeed, the power of the American Government to exercise its judgment over the appropriateness of whatever we might do when making arrangements with the provinces and how any money that results from any new imposition or, indeed, the export tax will be used. It has power over whether or not this money will be used to enhance the forestry industry, to retrain workers or, indeed, to build roads. What has occurred is a challenge to our sovereignty.

I am sure that when the Canadian people review the history of recent dealings with the Americans they will recall that in the life of this Government the Americans asked for and received changes in the national energy policy, a substitution of something called Investment Canada for FIRA and changes in the Patent Act that would chiefly benefit American-owned multinational drug companies.

When Canadians look back on that short period of time, they will reflect upon the fact that Gulf and Western asked for Prentice-Hall and said that if it did not get it, it would impose a scorched-earth policy. So they asked for and got Prentice-Hall.

• (1240)

In the same period of time an American submarine sailed merrily through our waters. They asked for and got permission without conceding the infringement upon Canadian sovereignty. We test their Cruise missiles. We obeyed them when we resigned the NORAD agreement and ignored the fact that it involved an abrogation of the ABM Treaty. If one looks at the history of the last couple of years one finds example after example of concessions to the Americans, and one must seriously ask whether there is anything left that one might refer to as sovereignty.

One of the significant issues raised by this further concession to the Americans is the question, if the Government continues in office, of whether there will be a Canada left to be concerned about sovereignty.

If one examines the export tax and the manner of its implementation, and the conflicts it occasions between the eastern provinces and the western provinces and between one kind of softwood dependent business and another, one sees a contribution to another problem in this country, divisiveness between its various parts. I want to take particular note of the inequitable application of this tax as between original producers and remanufacturers.

I was surprised to find in my mail just yesterday a letter from a Windsor concern. One does not normally associate the City of Windsor with softwood lumber. One would not have thought softwood lumber would be of significant importance in that city. The letter is from Raymond Clavette, General Manager of Qualipack Wood Products in Tecumseh, my home town. It calls attention to some of the stupidity involved in the application of the export tax. He says:

> Our Company, "Qualipack Wood Products Ltd." manufactures pallets and crates for the local market and we also operate a remanufacturing centre for Canadian Wholesalers shipping to the U.S. We employ 16 people and have been anticipating good growth to bring our employment up to approximately 30 people.

However, now he has discovered that this export tax is applied not only to the mill value of the lumber but on the remanufactured lumber. That includes the price of lumber f.o.b. the mill, the freight to Windsor, which I am sure you can imagine is quite considerable, the cost of remanufacturing, and the wholesalers' profit. He goes on to say:

> I strongly believe that applying the tax to freight, remanufacturing, and wholesaling is totally out of line—

It is, and one must wonder how the Government could be so stupid in allowing it to apply to a category of softwood products to which it was not intended to apply.

We have heard other similar examples. There is a British Columbia firm which would normally have paid something like $350 in tax on a given lot of lumber product, and that has now become $1,000. It surely must be evident that that is an exorbitant sum which threatens the very survival of that remanufacturer, as it does some 100 other remanufacturers in this country. This is shameful and should be corrected.

We have this sad story evolving in Windsor. Mr. Clavette says:

> This type of tax on remanufactured goods would leave us no alternative but to move our operation to the U.S. since we could not compete with the U.S. remanufacturing centres under these conditions.

Windsor does not need another example of Government stupidity causing the loss of jobs in that city.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief points on Bill C-37 as it affects Atlantic Canada. When I last spoke I mentioned that there were only five companies in Atlantic Canada exempt from this tax. Most of those five companies have larger concerns. We have a great number of very small companies that tell me they are going to be hurt very badly by the imposition of this 15 per cent tax. I also pointed out the other great concern of lumber producers in Atlantic Canada regarding stumpage. Producers in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia pay the highest stumpage fees in Canada. On top of that, the companies tell me that more lumber from Quebec and Ontario is coming into the Atlantic region in competition with the local producers because of this most regressive piece of legislation.

I want to refer to Clause 6 in the Memorandum of Understanding, which is a clause abo;ut which we have a lot of concern. It provides that the Government of Canada will take no action and will take all reasonable steps to ensure that no other government body in Canada takes any action, directly or indirectly, which has the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge. That means provincial Governments, Crown corporations, and any other agency of government.

• (1250)

In my last speech on the Bill I mentioned how silviculture and reforestation were playing a major role in my province of Prince Edward Island and how it was very dependent upon help from both the federal and provincial Governments. Most of the land which is being returned to forestry was originally purchased by the Land Development Corporation of Prince Edward Island. The poorest class of that land, class 3, was leased to the Department of Forestry of Prince Edward Island, and in turn programs were designed by the provincial Government over the years. When I was a member of the provincial Government we started that program in conjunction with the federal Government through DREE agreements. At one time it was part of the comprehensive development plan. Since that development plan was phased out, it was part of the ordinary DREE agreements with the provinces.

I wonder what relationship clause 6 may have with future agreements with my province as far as reforestation is concerned. It is a direct subsidy which goes into the reforestation of class 3 lands. When the Americans see these agreements, I wonder whether they will say "Canada, you are breaking the agreement, our Memorandum of Understanding".

Furthermore, in early January, President Reagan pledged in writing that, "I will take action if Canada does not live up to its terms of agreement". He was referring to the agreement signed by our Government, and it was in a letter from the President to the United States forestry industry. He also said that if Canada did not live up to the terms of the agreement, action might include tariffs. This means that if any form of action is taken whatsoever to help the forestry industry, the President and the American industry will return with more tariffs. That is the way I read it.

Similarly, in the letter of December 30, 1986 to the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige identified seven different types of Canadian Government assistancse to industry which the United States would not accept. These included a rebate, remission, or deferral of an export charge, provision of grants or low-cost loans, exemption from other federal or provincial government charges, assumption of obligations currently borne by the industry; reduction in stumpage or other fees, changes in the way the volume of timber harvest is measured, and non-competitive awarding of contracts for silviculture, road-building, recreation, and other forestry activities. In other words, in the interpretation of the United States Clause 6 severely limits if not outright prohibits Canada from helping the forest industry and the communities involved. This is where I have a great deal of concern about the Bill.

The forest industry in Atlantic Canada certainly needs some upgrading. The mills need help; they are not very affluent. In fact, they need a lot of help in order to upgrade their equipment and productivity. From where will they receive help? I can only say that without some of the DREE grants, or DRIE grants as they are called now, and some help from the provincial governments, many of the small operations could not improve their technology and efficiency.

I wonder how the Americans will look at some of the spraying programs of the Government of New Brunswick. What would happen to the many forests in Atlantic Canada which were hit hard by the spruce budworm if there were no spraying programs? Unless action is taken by aerial spraying or other means, we will have no forests to talk about.

These are my concerns. We have seen many things happen between our Government and the Government of the United States. We could look at fisheries and the taxes placed on fresh fish and salt cod going to the United States. We could also look at how the Government was supposed to have tremendous relations with our good neighbours south of the border. After the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met with President Reagan at the Shamrock Summit he indicated that there would be great new innovations in the control of acid rain by the two countries. However, we have found out that once again the United States is reneging on that commitment.

Of course, the Americans are fighting a deficit situation. They are implementing a new tax Bill. They cannot spend, under legislation, a whole lot of money on some programs which are very important to Canada. Therefore, they are not adhering to their agreements. They come up here and tell the Government that they will do something. They use nice words but there is no action. We have seen much of this. We have seen the Government's reaction to Christmas tree operations. There are many very unsatisfied people in Atlantic Canada in terms of the tax which Canada placed upon the importation of American Christmas trees. It is a big industry.

I would like to refer to a letter to Mr. Jim Barkhouse from Mr. Duncan Walker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. Could I ask him to conclude very briefly, please.

Mr. Henderson: I just want to put this letter on record. It is from Duncan Walker, a Christmas tree producer in Nova Scotia. He wrote about the tax and how it would affect the Christmas tree industry, a very important industry. They are here today to express their concerns to Members of Parliament. He said:

I have been a Tory all my life, but with moves like this tariff, it is becoming increasingly difficult to stay one. This is also the feeling of a large number of the Tories in the industry.

The Government is foolish if it ever thinks it will elect anyone in Atlantic Canda when it imposes user fees and taxes which once again hurt the poorest part of the country.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the Hon. Member has points which he has been unable to develop fully, I would like to ask for the unanimous consent of the House for him to expand his points about the Christmas tree industry, which are clearly important to Atlantic Canada and very much related to this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cardiff: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

• (1300)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express some of my views and those of a number of constituents and others who live in areas that are not directly involved with the lumber export tax. However, they have many concerns about the Government's incompetence in this situation and some of its implications on Canadian sovereignty.

There are some direct implications on the area of communications and culture, an area in which I work very hard. The link between the lumber industry and the free trade negotiations generally, and the health, vitality and independence of the communications and cultural sector are very important issues. Therefore, I want to examine some of the effects the export tax will have on the lumber industry and the Canadian economy as a whole.

The New Democratic Party believes that this agreement is a very dangerous assault on Canadian sovereignty. For example, the replacement of the export charge with stumpage increases can only be done through American agreement that the value of the stumpage increase alternative must be equivalent to the export charge.

While there has been considerable consensus that the stumpage, particularly in British Columbia, is low and should be increased, we take great offence to the idea that the United States should decide on the value of this resource which our Constitution regards as provincially controlled. Furthermore, this sets a dangerous precedent for other industries because the United States has identified many irritants in other industries, some of which are vital to the health and economic welfare of families and communities in Canada.

The American interpretation of the agreement specifically prohibits: "The provision of grants, low-cost loans and other benefits" to the forest industry by either the federal or provincial Governments. In other words, the Government has agreed not to extend any subsidies, as described by the Americans, to the forest industry which might in their view offset the export tax. The NDP and many independent experts have argued that there must be government support for modernization in the industry. There are some old mills in the industry, especially on the British Columbia coast where assistance is needed to help the industry build new facilities that are capable of producing higher value added and more finished products. However, these programs and even those to train displaced workers in the forest industry would be subject to American control. That is an offensive intrusion into economic decision-making in Canada. The United States has the power to shape the evolution of a vital, major exporting Canadian industry that is absolutely essential to our economy. We have never experienced so much intrusion into our decision-making.

The fact that the export tax applies only to the United States is illegal according to the rules under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Government admits that this tax is contrary to commitments it has made under GATT and that our forest competitors from Sweden, for example, could go to GATT and insist that we similarly increase our forest product prices on goods exported to the EEC and elsewhere where Sweden competes with us. The Government's action has created the potential for more damage to the industry and its exports to other parts of the world.

Canadians are extremely concerned about the ineptness and vacillation on the part of the Government in this matter and do not accept the argument that it was necessary to have such an agreement in order to keep the money in Canada.

The transition from an export charge to stumpage increase can only be made through a federal-provincial agreement. Yet, the provinces have very different histories, with different methods of applying stumpage fees with these industries. For example, the stumpage fee in British Columbia is approximately one-third of that in Ontario and Quebec. Will Ontario and Quebec have to raise their stumpage as much as British Columbia, or can British Columbia change its system if Ontario does not wish to do the same? These are complicated issues that we expect will cause enormous difficulties in relationships between the provinces.

The fundamental concern of Canadians is that this measure represents a precedent for the United States to exert pressure for other concessions it is demanding with respect to other resource industries, agriculture and the cultural industries. The Americans have not been shy in demanding these concessions in negotiations. For instance, the copyright committee held hearings a year ago last summer, where American corporations, such as CBS, NBC and ABC made the most outlandish demands for further compensation from the Canadian Government and broadcasters in Canada. They claimed that the enormous amount they were making in Canada from their cultural exports was not enough. One of the outstanding irritants between Canada and the United States is in broadcasting where millions and millions of dollars are at stake. We are opposed to any negotiation of our cultural industries.

We saw as a result of the American action on shakes and shingles the absolutely ludicrous 10 per cent tariff on books, which only hurt our own book publishing industry. It was a very prejudicial action because it discriminates against English language books and against books in Britain as well as the United States. The Government has shown very poor judgment in its negotiations. It took steps which it believed to be swift, sure and effective, but which were in fact more harmful to our industry than that in the United States.

I am very dismayed about the long-term effects of this extremely misguided provision. Anomalies have been raised about this provision, but the Minister has responded to them in a most casual, off-hand manner. She says that they will be investigated. Yet we are dealing with the life or death of a community with a single industry that will not be exempt from this tax, while the industry in a nearby town will be exempt. These measures are only damaging our economy and affecting the political relationships between communities and provinces.

Our Party will fight this misguided approach as hard as we can because of the economic consequences to those communities, and the long-term political consequences for a country that wants to run its own affairs and is perfectly capable of doing so. We are already spending far too much money on the cultural industry in the United States, from which we may face even greater interference.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, by asking us to adopt Bill C-37 which imposes a charge on the export of softwood lumber, the Government is in fact asking us to ratify and approve the shameful agreement on softwood lumber now in place between the Canadian Government and the U.S. Government. I am not saying this only because I sit on the opposite side of the House. This reflects the views of many important people who play a key role in Canada's lumber industry, people who have expressed themselves in similar terms. For instance, Mr. Adam Zimmerman, President of MacMillan-Bloedel Ltd., one of Canada's biggest lumber companies. Mr. Zimmerman is President of the Canadian Forest Industries Council and thus represents a large number of people in the industry in Canada. On December 31 last year, he said in The Ottawa Citizen, and I quote:

> In one fell swoop, the softwood lumber agreement has made an industrial paraplegic of the lumber industry.

Those are strong words from a President of the Canadian Forest Industries Council, Mr. Speaker. On January 6, he said: We have given up our sovereignty and ruined our industry. Those are prophetic words from someone who knows the lumber industry. Professor Max Cohen, one of Canada's greatest experts on international law, who sat on the International Court of Justice, is a former President of the International Joint Commission and is now a professor of international law, said on January 3, again as reported in The Ottawa Citizen:

> The lumber deal is a dangerous precedent that threatens Canadian sovereignty.

He went on to say:

> It is a strange procedure to allow someone else to monitor our own stuff—They maintained the unilateralness of something that is joint in effect because the Americans have a right to know everything about Canada's activity, information or anything else.

Here we have another expert in his field who, after looking at the agreement between Canada and the United States, is firmly opposed to it and in this specific case talks about a violation of our sovereignty. I understand how Mr. Cohen feels because, if I may get into some of the details, the Minister claimed that Clause 5(a) of the Agreement protects Canada's sovereignty. However, she tends to forget that the following clause, Clause 5(b), obliges Canada to consult with the United States, and if the United States disapproves of a measure imposed by Canada to replace the export tax, they may object. The Canadian Government has made the Canadian lumber industry fair game for whatever the Americans may want to inflict on the industry.

President Reagan has promised to take action if the Canadian Government does not observe the agreement according to his interpretation. And in the letter, the infamous letter sent on December 30 to the U.S. Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports by trade representative Clayton Yeutter and Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige, seven areas were identified where the Americans could object if any level of government in Canada attempted to help the lumber industry. I will name the two areas I find particularly obnoxious. There is the exemption. What would happen if for any reason, the Canadian Government decided to exempt certain lumber companies from the tax? A number of specific examples were raised in the House, but the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) did not comment. There are some lumber companies, especially in eastern Canada that import U.S. lumber to process and then export to the United States. Do you know what we will have to do if we want to exempt these companies, these sawmills? We will have to go to the United States to have the exemption approved. I think that is unconscionable. There are obvious cases where the provinces and the Canadian Government should themselves be able to judge whether or not a sawmill or lumber company should be exempted from the tax. But no, we first have to go down on our knees before the Americans and ask whether they agree to an exemption. I must say I find this caving in to the Americans profoundly nauseating.

But there is worse. On the list of seven capital sins, the seven types of measures the Canadian Government may not take to help its industry, we find granting subsidies or low interest loans to the industry. This means that the Americans will now be sticking their noses in every single decision the Canadian Government makes with respect to regional development grants. What happens if the Canadian Government decides to help a lumber company or a sawmill? It has to go and ask Uncle Sam whether it may proceed.

Mr. Speaker, do you understand why we on this side of the House are opposed to Bill C-37? I would go on, but my time is up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will have four minutes this afternoon to finish his speech.

It being 1.16 p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.16 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

DOMINION COAL COMPANY OF CANADA

PLIGHT OF FORMER EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, shortly before Christmas I drew the attention of the House and the Government to the plight of the former employees of the Dominion Coal Company of Canada. The Government, through its Crown corporation the Cape Breton Development Corporation, has completely ignored the plea for assistance that I made on behalf of those individuals last December.

In this day and age, in a country as rich as Canada, people should not be made to live under such circumstances. The Cape Breton Development Corporation has no legal responsibility for these people; on that there is no dispute. However, there are many who argue that this Crown corporation has a very large moral responsibility to assist these individuals. These people have devoted their lives to the coal industry and the island of Cape Breton, and are owed something by this Crown corporation.

I call upon the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) to come to the assistance of these people at once. Many of these people are living well below the poverty line. It is time for the Minister to initiate an investigation into this matter, report to Parliament forthwith, and provide substantial funds for these individuals.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUCCESSFUL PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1984, the Government announced its agenda for economic renewal which included a policy of privatizing those Crown corporations that no longer serve a public policy purpose.

The goal of privatization is not primarily to correct the mistakes of the past but, rather, to ensure the best possible future for the companies and their employees. To date, six Crown corporations, including Canadian Arsenals, de Havilland, and Canadair have been sold. In every case the divestiture was successful.

Privatization reduces the size of government, stimulates private initiative, promotes competition and better use of resources, and improves the efficiency of the corporation by subjecting it to the practicalities of the market-place and by reducing the opportunities for political and bureaucratic interference.

I congratulate the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) and urge her to proceed with privatization of the Petro-Canada empire as soon as possible.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RETENTION OF SATURDAY SERVICE IN RURAL AREAS ADVOCATED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Saturday service at the post office is being cut off in rural areas. We have received documentation from Sudbury in this regard. This move continues the pattern of treating rural citizens as second-class citizens when it comes to postal service.

When the plan for the Post Office was announced it was done so after its development behind closed doors. As a consequence, when Conservative back-benchers saw how terrible the plan was for rural Canadians, they revolted. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was quoted as saying that no longer would rural citizens be treated as second-class citizens.

The committee has held its hearings, and they were a farce. The plans are still in place to cut back on service in rural Canada. Rural Canadians are still being treated as second-class citizens. They have been forced to organize. They have organized a group called Rural Dignity, which is holding meetings across the country and which is seeking a meeting with the Minister. The Minister has refused to meet with this group. He has refused to respond to its request for a meeting. The committee continues to refuse calls for public hearings with regard to postal service.

We on this side of the House call for the first-class treatment of rural residents. We call for a reinstatement of Saturday delivery in rural areas. We ask the Government to reverse its policy of cut-backs in rural service.

APPEARANCE OF DR. WEITZMAN BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the fact that Dr. Weitzman appeared as a witness this morning in front of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Dr. Weitzman is known world-wide as the author of The Share Economy: Conquering Stagflation, which is acclaimed in many quarters as the best idea since Keynes.

We were privileged to have had the opportunity to hear Dr. Weitzman. We encourage the Government to follow suit with the examination of labour force adjustment.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my sincere thanks to Mr. Weitzman for sharing with us here his expertise and knowledge.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SIZE OF FUNDING FOR NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, "Was there ever a worse year for science and technology than 1986?" This question was asked by the English magazine, New Scientist, in a year-end editorial pointing to, among other things, the Challenger and Chernobyl disasters.

Similarly, many Canadians could not be faulted for asking: was there ever a worse year for science and technolgy in Canada? Let us face it. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) had a downright miserable year in 1986. But he has the opportunity to redeem himself in 1987. He could start off by cancelling his ill-considered cuts at the National Research Council. In light of new revelations that these cuts could seriously damage our air defences, the Minister should immediately order that the cuts be cancelled.

• (1405)

The Minister does not need the task force that he appointed to tell him what is right and what is wrong. How much more evidence does he need? Our national security is at risk. The Minister should act now.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES SOFTWOOD LUMBER AGREEMENT—CRITICISM OF ONTARIO PREMIER'S POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, the following is an editorial statement which was read by Warren Barker of radio station CKNW. I wish to read it unedited:

Among the provinces Ontario is the principal critic of the softwood lumber deal with the Americans.

Ontario Premier David Peterson has become a loud voice in the chorus protesting that the 15 per cent export tax jeopardizes Canadians' sovereignty and creates a dangerous precedent, under which the U.S. may now demand similar concessions from a string of other Canadian export industries.

The December 30th softwood lumber agreement did not create the precedent. The real precedent—the landmark "special deal" on over-the-border trade—was the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact, which for a generation has enriched Ontario. While Peterson condemns Ottawa for making an agreement with Washington to protect the forest industry, the Ontario Premier is loudly defending the special deal that has artificially concentrated a disproportionate share of the North American auto industry in his province. Peterson demands that the Mulroney Government scuttle free trade negotiations rather than consider any revision of the Auto Pact.

The Americans argued that our lumber industry was unfairly subsidized. But what about government subsidies to the auto manufacturing industry in central Canada—particularly Ontario?—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

APPOINTMENT OF FEMALE GENERAL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House should note with pride the appointment of Canada's first female General. Brigadier-General Sheila Hellstrom has breached one of the last bastions of male domination in Canadian society. She has done so on her own merits.

Brigadier-General Hellstrom has been a member of the Armed Forces for 30 years. She earned her promotion by working her way up through the ranks. It is also important to note that Brigadier-General Hellstrom spent her entire career in either personnel or administration. I am not denigrating her chosen career. But it must be tough to reach the rank of General in a narrow field. After all, there are only so many senior positions in personnel and administration.

We may see more women Generals if more areas were open to them in the Canadian Armed Forces. That will only happen when the Government realizes that women should compete with men on the basis of individual merit for all positions in the Armed Forces. I look forward to the day when the promotion of a woman to the rank of General is no news at all.

BANKS AND BANKING

SPREAD BETWEEN BANK RATE AND PRIME RATES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, recent reductions of prime rates by major Canadian banks have been like a sleight of hand trick designed to persuade people that appearance is reality. The appearance last week was the cut in prime rates. The reality was that one week ago the spread between the bank rate and the prime rate was 1.55. Today it is 1.51. The reality is no significant difference at all.

This situation is all the more shocking when we realize that one year ago the spread between these two rates was .67. In one year the spread between the bank rate and the prime rate has more than doubled. The Government and the Bank of Canada are helping the economy by slashing interest rates. When will the chartered banks do their part?

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT ON NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this morning Newfoundlanders were alarmed when they realized that a very important bilateral agreement had been struck between Canada and France which negatively affects the fishermen of Newfoundland, their traditional rights, and fishing grounds. Apparently that agreement was struck without consultation with any Member of Parliament from Newfoundland, including the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who is Newfoundland's sole cabinet representative.

The Member for St. John's West, as Newfoundland's cabinet representative, this morning said that he too was concerned with the way this matter was managed. If that is the case, if we are being told now that an agreement which negatively affects our people for a long time was reached without any consultation with our sole cabinet representative, then I demand, on behalf of all Newfoundlanders, that the agreement be declared null and void by the Government, and that it be renegotiated with Newfoundland's best interests at heart.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), in stating that Canadian history is being made today of the utmost importance. I am delighted that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has just appointed the first woman to the rank of General since Confederation. Sheila Hellstrom, a native of Nova Scotia, is today promoted to Director General, Personnel Carriers Officers. This is a key position within the Canadian Armed Forces and all Canadians may be justifiably proud of this event.

Ms. Hellstrom first served her country in 1954 as a Flight Cadet in the Royal Canadian Air Force and received her commission two years later. She has an impressive history with our Armed Forces and is an excellent choice on the part of the Minister. I sincerely hope that this is the first of a trend to appoint women of Canada to postings of such dignity and importance.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been advocating the appointment of a woman General to at least six Ministers of National Defence. I wish to commend the present one for finally bringing this about.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

RENT INCREASES AT BRACONDALE HOUSE, TORONTO

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, tenants at Bracondale House, an apartment building for seniors and low to moderate income households in Toronto, are angry and outraged at the rent increases being imposed by CMHC.

Yearly increases of between 11 per cent and 21 per cent will continue for the next three years. Compounded over that period of time, a two-bedroom apartment rent will go up an incredible 77 per cent.

Tenants in the private market would have some recourse to this sort of extortion by going to the Residential Tenancy Commission where, in 1987, property owners must justify rent increases over 5.2 per cent.

CMHC went ahead with exorbitant increases of over 10 per cent at Main Square in my riding last year and the year before. The Government refused to have those increases submitted for independent appraisal by the Ontario Residential Tenancy Commission. It seems that the Government is becoming more brazen and uncaring in squeezing those Canadians of moderate income who have chosen to live in CMHC controlled housing. It should be ashamed of itself, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

IMPROVED ECONOMIC STATISTICS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): I have nothing but good news, Mr. Speaker. Canadians continue to applaud the Government's increased job creation, low interest rates for consumer loans and mortgages, stable inflation, increased housing starts, and improved federal government finances.

Since September, 1984, some 660,000 jobs have been created, resulting in a decline in the unemployment rate from 11.7 per cent to its current 9.4 per cent. Over three-quarters of these jobs have been full-time. This compares with the previous Government's record of less than 20 per cent full-time job creation.

For the first time in almost 20 years, home buyers can obtain a six-month mortgage for 8 per cent. What a far cry from the 20 per cent to 22 per cent mortgage rates of six and seven years ago. Dreams of owning a home are once again a reality for thousands of additional Canadians as housing starts continue to rise to meet consumer demands. Our Government has met the challenge for an improved economy and all Canadians are benefiting.

FOREST INDUSTRY

NECESSITY TO REPEAL TARIFF ON AMERICAN CHRISTMAS TREES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, today Canadian Christmas tree producers came to Parliament Hill and tried to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) realize the situation in which he has placed them.

When the Minister of Finance levied a 30 percent duty on American Christmas tree imports, he jeopardized the very existence of Canadian producers who export for nearly $90 million's worth of trees to the United States.

The Canadian Christmas tree industry is shaken because the Americans threaten to hit it with retaliatory measures.

Until now, the Minister of Finance has turned a deaf ear to the representations of our producers.

Time is of the essence, and the Minister must abolish the tariff on American trees, failing which American producers will ask for retaliatory measures that could mean the loss of thousands of jobs in Canada.

HEALTH

INCREASE IN INCIDENCE OF AIDS DISEASE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, more and more Canadians are becoming increasingly alarmed by the increased incidence of AIDS. The latest medical evidence reports that the rate of disease in British Columbia has now risen to 65.6 per million people for the month of November compared to a rate of 46.6 in October. As of mid-December, 823 cases of the deadly AIDS virus were reported and 432 victims died as a result.

• (1415)

Education is certainly an important vehicle in making the public aware. However, we must recognize that the root of this problem lies with alternative lifestyles practised by some Canadians, including homosexuals and intravenous drug users. This has spilled over into heterosexual relationships in which one partner has practised both heterosexual and homosexual relations.

Unequivocally, we as a society should not encourage deviation from the norm of sexual relationships between men and women. With the passing of Bill 7 in Ontario by the provincial Liberal Government of Premier Peterson, the Ontario Government is doing just that. Clearly we must get to the root cause of this problem and not get sidetracked by surface issues.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—COMPLIANCE BY MINISTERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on July 24 last after the revelations about the former Minister of Regional Industrial expansion, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister in this House to take steps to ensure that Ministers were obeying the conflict of interest guidelines. The Deputy Prime Minister refused to do so saying that compliance was up to the Ministers. Now we have the spectacle of the blind trust of the Minister of State for Transport.

Again, are the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government prepared to take steps to ensure that these Ministers are not simply telling the Assistant Deputy Registrar General that they are complying with the guidelines but that in fact they are complying with the guidelines?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the process is very clear. The conflict of interest guidelines are established, and they are administered by the Assistant Deputy Registrar

General. If the Hon. Member has any specific recommendations to make, I would be pleased to receive them.

TRUSTEES OF BLIND TRUSTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Deputy Prime Minister for this assurance, because when I met this morning with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General he refused to give me the assurance that none of the Ministers have among their blind trustees spouses, business associates, or riding association executives. No such assurance was given to me by the official to whom I spoke this morning and I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister for that assurance.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, here we go again. The Hon. Member is perpetuating innuendo in his question and is implying that that is the case. I cannot give him that categorical assurance right at the present time but I will undertake to find out.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH PUBLIC JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think that what the Deputy Prime Minister has just stated is very serious, and since the question of standards with regard to conflicts of interest does not involve criminal law in Canada, nor the current investigation by the RCMP, I would like to ask him whether he is ready to give Canadians a public judicial inquiry in order to give us all the facts on those issues and others.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised that that question is coming from an Hon. Member who is a former Solicitor General. He knows very well that it is the considered opinion of the senior law officers of the Crown, of legal experts across the country, and of most people who have looked at this matter in a serious way that anything that would impair, impede or interfere with the RCMP investigation at this time would certainly not be in the best interests of seeing justice carried out.

OERLIKON CORPORATION—EMPLOYMENT OF FORMER BRIGADIER-GENERAL

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. On June 12, 1986, when the $1-billion contract was awarded to Oerlikon, Mr. J. B. Peart was the Chief of Staff of the then Minister of Defence and subsequently became a senior policy adviser to the present Minister. What information did Mr. Peart give to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to convince him that Mr. Peart had no significant official dealings during the period of one year immediately prior to the termination of his service in public office? Would he table the relevant data in the House?

• (1420)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, because of the privacy legislation I cannot table the letter sent by Brigadier-General Peart. I can say that in the letter he indicated to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General that, first, he was not involved with the dossier, that it was handled by the office of the Associate Minister of National Defence. Secondly, he had joined the staff of my predecessor after the short list had been drawn up for the awarding of the LLAD contract.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Defence will know that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General does not do in-depth investigations. The ultimate responsibility for compliance rests with the Minister. What did the Minister do to ensure that Mr. Peart was not in an apparent conflict of interest? In other words, what transpired between the Minister and Mr. Peart to avoid this apparent conflict of interest?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in this case I did what I would do with any employee looking to go to the private sector. I asked him to comply fully with the conflict of interest guidelines, to disclose fully to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, to seek the advice of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, and to follow it.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND COD FISHERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday the news of an interim agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of France concerning fishing of our northern cod stocks off the coast of Newfoundland leaked out, producing outrage in that province. The industry opposes this agreement. The unions affected oppose it. The Government of Newfoundland opposes it. Therefore, how could the Government of Canada ever agree to something which is totally opposed by the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the media yesterday that the agreement reached between Canada and France on the weekend would be released as soon as editorial measures were completed. That release has taken place in this hour. The agreement will move us along the road to resolving a very unsatisfactory situation, the boundary dispute between Canada and France, which must be resolved in the long-term interests of the fishery and to the benefit of Canadian fishermen throughout Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: I would add, all being done at the expense of the people of Newfoundland.

EXTENT OF CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government has made much of the need for process in reaching decisions. The industry, the unions, and the Government of Newfoundland were part of all the discussions up until the December meeting. Why were those central players in this decision cut out entirely when the Government entered into this secret deal with the Government of France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the agreement does not exceed conditions which have been the subject of extensive negotiations with the Government of Newfoundland and the industry. It will assure once and for all an end to the blatant overfishing by France in this disputed zone. I must add that the benefit to be received by Atlantic fishermen by the ending of this overfishing will far exceed any modest cost to get France to sit down and negotiate this very important question.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Minister contacts Newfoundland now he will find that all over the province on radio programs they are conducting a referendum on Confederation as a result of the incompetence and insensitivity of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW FROM AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport, who is snickering over there, has publicly expressed opposition to the process of this agreement. The industry, the fishermen, and the Government of Newfoundland are all opposed. Therefore, will the Government now give us its assurances that it will not make an agreement with France on this important matter unless it has the support of the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the NDP may never come to realize that from time to time Governments must take difficult decisions and act. In this case we will be able to demonstrate very clearly, as these negotiations proceed, that a substantial long-term benefit will accrue to all of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada if a successful conclusion is reached on this very difficult problem.

• (1425)

I might add that in the process of this negotiation not one fish, not one additional benefit, has been given away by Canada.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, to conserve fish stocks the Government banned Canadians from fishing on the Nose of the Banks; to conserve fish stocks the Government restricted Canadians from fishing on the south coast of Newfoundland; and to conserve fish stocks it has reduced the fishing quotas for Canadians in the northern cod stock. Since all that was done to conserve fish stocks, I ask the Minister of Fisheries why the Americans are allowed to fish the Nose of the Banks, the French, unrestricted, on the south coast of Newfoundland, and now, worst of all, we learn of quotas being given to the French in the northern cod stock. Is it because the word "conserve" to the Government means to con Canadians and to serve foreigners?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted a response, in June of last year a number of important initiatives were taken and announced by the Government to protect Canada's sovereignty and to ensure a strengthening of our vigilance and our surveillance of the resources along our 200 mile limit. The remaining unresolved problem is to remove this irritant of an unresolved boundary dispute with France and blatant overfishing. I might add again that we have not given one additional fish, by way of a commitment to France, to achieve the signed agreement which is being announced today.

Mr. Baker: To have this Minister representing Canadian fishing interests in negotiations with the Americans and with the French is like having a jellyfish in with a bunch of sharks.

ALLOCATION OF QUOTA TO FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister explain to Canadian fishermen why he has asked them to conserve the cod resources in the northern cod stock and reduced their fishing quotas, while at the same time a major policy change was being made in secret, behind the scenes, to give a foreign country a quota in that very zone? Does he think the Canadian fishermen will swallow that hook, line, and sinker? They will not, you know.

Some Hon. Members: Resign.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, once again the Opposition does not want to hear the response. It would do well for the Hon. Member and the opposition Party which was in government to reflect on all the reasons that led to Canada being in this unsatisfactory state where French trawlers are blatantly overfishing in the disputed area. We have now achieved an agreement, an agreement whereby that boundary decision will be referred to international third party arbitration, solving once and for all a problem, and bringing untold benefits to Newfoundland fishermen.

NEED TO CONSERVE COD STOCKS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, we can always get an agreement if we are prepared to go down on our knees. In the fishery sector paper which the Minister tabled in November at the First Ministers' Conference it says:

> Resources surplus to Canadian needs should be allocated to foreign fleets in accordance with bilateral treaty obligations and international law, but conditional primarily on conservation co-operation.

Why did the Minister, in violation of this agreement by provincial Fishery Ministers, agree with the French to give them an extra 15,000 tonnes when Canadian fishermen had been cut back in order to conserve stocks?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Members who like to fire first and ask questions later will read the text of the agreement which is being released in this hour, and the terms under which these negotiations will conclude. The Hon. Member will see that we have given nothing in addition to that contained in the 1987 groundfish plan which was published at the end of December, and nothing that industry was not well aware of in terms of contemplating the conditions under which this important boundary dispute would be referred for international arbitration.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT RATIFICATION BE POSTPONED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, considering that even the codfather, who is a member of the Cabinet, does not agree with this process, will the Minister either postpone ratification or cancel this deal until it has been brought into conformity with the agreement that had been reached by the provincial Fisheries Ministers and is acceptable to the province and the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to be known as the codfather, not my hon. colleague.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are a flounder.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Some of the opposition Members are floundering.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon Minister could answer the question as directly as possible.

Mr. Siddon: We had three choices in this serious matter of overfishing by France in a disputed area outside the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. They were to continue to ignore the overfishing, fight by way of direct confrontation between two nations, or negotiate. We chose the latter course—

Mr. Broadbent: Or to sell out.

Mr. Siddon: —and have acted in the best interests of the Atlantic fishermen.

INTERESTS OF CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It concerns this outrageous decision to allow factory freezer trawlers from France into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Minister has not consulted the Premier of Newfoundland or the Premiers of the other three Atlantic provinces. He says that this agreement will go to arbitration. He knows that it will take four years and there will be nothing left to arbitrate. The Minister has given everything away.

When will he begin looking after the interests of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, the fishermen of British Columbia, and certainly those most affected, the fishermen of Newfoundland especially in the area of the northern cod stocks?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what this Minister is doing and will continue to do as we gradually and forcefully turn all of the fish resources within our 200-mile economic limit to the advantage of Canadian fishermen. While previous Governments may not have had the courage to address this serious question of sovereignty over our resources and tough negotiations with countries such as France, this Government does have the courage and is not giving away any interests of Canadian fishermen in the process.

Mr. Henderson: It does not take much courage to give everything away.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, we need someone who has a strong will to stand up to foreigners. How can the Minister decrease allocations for Canadian fishermen on the one hand while, on the other, give all our fish away to the foreigners? How can he do that and expect to have any kind of respect at all from the fishing industry?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the phraseology in the Hon. Member's question reveals his total misunderstanding and, I suggest, almost total ignorance of the situation. He referred to a total giveaway—

Mr. Tobin: Who are you trying to kid? You are the expert on ignorance.

Mr. Siddon: There has been no giveaway. In fact this is a positive step forward that is long overdue. It will pay many benefits to the industry in Atlantic Canada about which I have been maintaining close contact with the office of the Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland and other representatives of the fishing industry.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LIMITATIONS IMPOSED ON FORMER EMPLOYEES' ACTIVITIES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister explain how it is that our officials can leave the Department of National Defence and immediately take charge of the Government Relations department with Oerlikon Aerospace in Ottawa without being in violation of the Government's guidelines under which former civil servants are barred from making representations to their former department on behalf of a corporation for a one-year period?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I can repeat the answer that I gave yesterday to exactly the same question. It is the obligation of all Government employees covered by the conflict of interest guidelines, who are leaving to seek outside employment, to disclose fully to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, to seek the guidance of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, and to abide by his decision.

APPLICATION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the integrity of the Government. We are also talking about the integrity of the guidelines which say that, for a period of a year, former office holders shall not make representations on behalf of a company to their former department. What good are those guidelines if the Government will not enforce them in order to prevent real or apparent conflict of interest when a senior defence official can leave the Government and show up the next day as a lobbyist seeking government work. What good are guidelines that allow that?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question is essentially rhetorical. The obligation of any employee of the Government who is leaving to seek outside employment is to seek the advice and counsel of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, to disclose fully the situation to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, and to abide by the decision taken.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—CABINET DECISION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans whose answers today to Members in the House have all the attractiveness of a beached sculpin to the fishermen of Newfoundland. The people of Newfoundland want to know whether anyone in Ottawa is representing their interests around the cabinet table? Will the Minister tell us whether or not the Newfoundland representative in the federal Cabinet, the Member for St. John's West, was consulted or advised in advance of this decision being taken with respect to the French fleet?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when a Government deliberates on very difficult matters and reaches a decision, a Government takes that decision. That is exactly what this Government has done. We have an example here of overfishing by France, to the extent of tens of thousands of tonnes of fish a year in the disputed area. That problem must be resolved once and for all. I hear the Opposition saying that we should not solve that problem to the benefit of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Manly: You have not solved it.

INTERESTS OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the opposition Member is saying that Newfoundlanders want to know whether they have a voice, a squeak, or the sound of silence sitting around the cabinet table. Was the Member for St. John's West—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Tobin: —our representative in the Cabinet, consulted before this decision was taken, or is he braying like a banshee in Newfoundland while quietly agreeing to this agreement in Ottawa? He cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Speaker: Of course the Chair is reluctant to interfere in a matter about which the Hon. Member feels very strongly and concerns the province from which he comes, but Hon. Members will realize that the question of where one Minister was when cabinet matters were discussed is not appropriate for the Chamber.

Mr. Tobin: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question has been asked. I will only assure the Hon. Member that as always, his colleague, the Minister of Transport, speaks very loudly, strongly and positively—

Mr. Tobin: Was he consulted?

Mr. Siddon: —on behalf of the interests of the Newfoundland fishery. I would just conclude my response by saying that there is no bloody way that we are going to give up fish to France in an exchange or any way that diminishes the rights and economic viability of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED EXPORT OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO CHILE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will recall that just four months ago Chilean dictator Pinochet made the following pronouncement: "We are going to get tough. Those people talking about human rights must be expelled from the country or locked up". The Minister will know that last year he authorized the export of $11.261 million worth of military equipment to Chile. Does the Minister feel that he has blood on his hands—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: —for permitting the export of military equipment to a regime that tortures and jails its own citizens?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Member if it might not be appropriate to put that question another way. I think the very vivid words he used and the direction in which they were pointed are perhaps exceeding what is necessary to make the point. I would ask the Hon. Member to put the question again in more appropriate words.

• (1440)

Mr. Riis: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain to the House why he personally approved the export of over $11 million worth of arms to Chile?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your intervention. I had thought there were lows to which the New Democratic Party could not sink, but I guess I was wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Right down in the scum.

Miss MacDonald: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that the Chair is always reluctant to intervene. However, when the Chair has intervened, I would hope that might be the end to the matter.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member, I believe, knows, and it would be well for the House to know, that the content of those export orders to Chile had to do primarily with electrical equipment, not to do with arms, matters which are technically described as defence equipment.

While I am on my feet I should repeat to the Hon. Member my request made three times and ignored three times, that if he is seriously interested in contributing to more effective export control laws in our country, he can help us with positive suggestions of how that might be done.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Order.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have asked him three times. I have heard a resounding silence because he is interested only in scurrilous accusations and not in effective results.

Miss MacDonald: Right on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap in this question can offer some of the suggestions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: That would be unusual.

Mr. Nystrom: Joe Clark sure needs them.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, three times I have asked and three times I have been denied lists of the equipment which has been shipped to countries like Chile. I have been denied them at every request—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Why?

Mr. Riis: —which I will repeat, and perhaps this time the Secretary of State for External Affairs will see fit to provide that list of so-called non-military goods.

ALLEGED EXPORT OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO SYRIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Not only did the Minister approve the sale of $11 million worth of military equipment to Chile, but to other countries as well. Would the Minister explain why the Government of Canada, through himself, approved the export of military equipment to Syria, a country which has been condemned by many countries as actively supporting terrorism in the Middle East and Europe? Why are we exporting arms to that country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again to be clear, we are not exporting arms to Syria. I will make a deal with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Watch it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will be prepared on a confidential basis—and I will make the assumption that since he is an Hon. Member of the House I can trust his word and confidence—I will make available to him the details of those particular exports with regard to Chile, on a confidential basis, if he will agree—

Mr. Orlikow: Why confidential?

Ms. Jewett: Why not to all of us?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why confidential? Because there are commercial confidences involved here.

Mr. Cassidy: What about human rights?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Get out of the business.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There are thousands of Canadian jobs involved here. I know the New Democratic Party does not care about Canadian jobs, but I do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You should get out of the arms business.

THE ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED CONTRADICTIONS CONCERNING OERLIKON PRODUCED DEFENCE SYSTEM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence concerning the Oerlikon affair.

In his letter dated October 2, 1986 and addressed to my colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke the Minister wrote, and I quote:

The Oerlikon-Burhle project met all specifications— including the requirement that it be fully operational in any kind of weather.

I have here a document from Oerlikon Aerospace which contradicts the Minister, so my question is this: Why did he give such assurances concerning a $1 billion project, knowing as he did that such was not the case?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Because, Mr. Speaker, the evaluation team which looked at Oerlikon and the other proposals found that the Oerlikon proposal was able to shoot down anything which was able to fly in any weather.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister said that. I also have a document from the Department of National Defence which states that it is essential "that the LLAD system deployed in defence of the brigades—" not just in the air "—be capable of defending in all weather conditions". How can the Minister justify spending that kind of money? How can he justify the response he just made when it is clearly in contradiction to both the Oerlikon document and the review made by the Minister's own department, which I have right here in my hand? How can he explain that?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the review which was made by my department was anxious to determine whether or not the Oerlikon system would be capable of shooting down anything able to fly and the response was, yes it would.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Cassidy: It shot down the Government.

An Hon. Member: You guys never could fly.

Mr. Gauthier: You never could fly in your life.

THE PAPACY

POSSIBLE VISIT BY POPE TO FORT SIMPSON, N.W.T.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As a result of the meeting yesterday between the Prime Minister and His Holiness the Pope, can it now be confirmed that the Pope will be visiting Fort Simpson in the Northwest Territories next fall? And have the dates for such a visit been set?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Don't waffle now, Joe.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister met His Holiness in the Vatican. I can confirm that the visit to Fort Simpson will occur. His Holiness expressed a very strong desire to come to Canada and the Prime Minister, of course, indicated how welcome he would be. There was a question as to dates. The Hon. Member will know that this is an invitation which has been issued in the course of a parochial visit on the part of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. They will be discussing with the Pope the establishment of the date.

TRADE

PROPOSED UNITED STATES' WHEAT SALE TO CHINA

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister will be aware of reports today indicating that the United States has extended its unfair trade practices to China by selling to China one million metric tonnes of heavily subsidized wheat. Has the Government sent an appropriately worded message to Washington indicating that the Canadian Government has a strong displeasure at this kind of trade action?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises, I think, what everyone would agree is a very serious matter. The Hon. Member should know that what has been extended is an offer, and the Chinese have not yet purchased. We continually say to the Americans that we do not think their approach to markets will work and, better than sending them messages, we have been taking action.

Mr. Nystrom: It hasn't worked.

Mr. Mayer: In fact our percentage of world wheat markets actually went up last year—

Mr. Nystrom: The price went down.

Mr. Mayer: —and the prospects in the coming year are that we are going to increase our markets again. We are taking action, not just sending protests.

UNITED STATES' TRADE POLICIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has publicly supported and defended U.S. action in Algeria. Does the Minister not believe it is time he stopped defending the United States' unfair policies and started taking action on behalf of Canadian farmers instead?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that I have not been defending the American actions.

Mr. Benjamin: You sure did.

Mr. Mayer: We have been saying consistently, and loudly and clearly, that we do not—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Spineless.

Mr. Mayer: We all know you can print anything in the press—

Mr. Riis: Blame the media.

Mr. Mayer: —so what the Hon. Member is holding up does not hold any weight as far as I am concerned. We have been publicly and consistently raising protests not only about what the Americans are doing but about what the Europeans are doing. We are not supporting the Americans, we are supporting our farmers, that is what we are doing.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WEATHER CAPABILITY OF LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE SYSTEM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Last fall when I asked questions regarding the all-weather capability of the Low Level Air Defence system awarded to Oerlikon, the Associate Minister of National Defence stated: "All weather does not include blizzards, sleet, hail, hurricanes and tornadoes". In answer to the same question the Low Level Air Defence Project Manager, Mr. Dave Hampson, stated recently: "This system will fight anywhere in any weather". How can the Minister expect the public to share his confidence in this system when the Associate Minister and the chief official involved cannot themselves agree on its capability?

• (1450)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first, let me sincerely say to the Hon. Member that I am pleased to see him back and pleased to see him in good health.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, as I understand what the Hon. Member is saying, my colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence, said that the system could shoot down anything that could fly in any weather. The disagreement was with whether it might even be able to go beyond that. The critical question is: if something can fly and attack either our bases or our troops can it be shot down? The answer is yes.

ALLEGED CONFLICTING STATEMENTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the former Associate Minister of National Defence announced that the Low Level Air Defence system will provide protection "under all weather conditions", which is contrary to what has been said, while the chief technical adviser of the Low Level Air Defence project office has stated the system "will be useless in foul weather". What does the Minister really expect the public to believe when Ministers disagree with each other, when officials disagree with each other, and when Ministers disagree with their own officials?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has received an offer of a full briefing with regard to our LLAD system. We will be offering the same thing to all members of the Defence Committee this Thursday.

I suppose the question the Hon. member would want answered is this: if it can fly, can it be shot down? The answer is yes. If it cannot fly, it cannot be shot down.

FINANCE

ALLEGED USURIOUS INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CREDIT CARD COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance.

Yesterday the Minister said that he was looking forward to acting on the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs regarding credit card interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, will the Minister make sure that the action he is talking about will include both a decrease in and a ceiling on credit card usurious interest rates of up to nearly 29 per cent?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West brought this subject to the attention of the House over a year ago.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Then do something about it!

Mr. Hockin: It has been looked at very carefully by the Government.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising this issue. With regard to ceilings, the concern that any Government would have with ceilings is that ceilings very often become floors. What we have to do is take a look at this question in the broadest possible context. We have to look at not only the levels themselves but the terms of the interest rate being calculated, as well as the amount of the loan on which the interest rate is calculated. There have been concerns expressed about all three of these issues. They must all be considered in the Government's response.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, what I really think and hope is that in fact the Minister is, first, conscious of the gravity of this situation and, second, conscious of the necessity to take immediate action in this matter. As the Minister has just said, the Conservative Member for Scarborough West finds it unconscionable.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wants the Government to act on ceilings only. We will act across the whole range when the time is appropriate.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Hockin: I remind the Hon. Member today, as I did yesterday, the market itself yields all sorts of different interest rates for different credit cards, and I ask him to shop around.

PORNOGRAPHY

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice who knows that many Canadians were very disappointed when his predecessor's proposed legislation on pornography died at the end of the session. Can the Minister of Justice reassure the House that legislation will be introduced into the House in the very near future and that it will be strong and effective legislation?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TARIFFS

TARIFF ON U.S. CHRISTMAS TREES—EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The implementation of the 30 per cent tariff on the importation of American Christmas trees is threatening Canadian Christmas tree producers. In particular, it has a very negative effect on the Nova Scotia industry which is valued at approximately $25 million.

Will the Minister of Finance give an undertaking to the Christmas tree producers in this country, accede to the request of the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia and eliminate this tariff forthwith, a move which will restore stability and confidence in this most important sector of our economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to that question on a number of occasions, and as recently as two days ago in response to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

We are very conscious of the concerns of the Christmas tree growers in Nova Scotia, as well as in other parts of the country, including Quebec. We raised this issue at the discussions that were held between the Prime Minister, Vice-President Bush and Secretary Baker last week. We are looking for ways of trying to resolve the matter on a joint basis with the United States. I hope that we will be seeing good progress over the coming weeks and months.

Mr. Penner: Rescind the tariff.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMPENSATION FUND

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister of Finance that shingles cannot be made out of Christmas trees.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Dingwall: If the Minister of Finance is so confident about the outcome of his discussions with his American counterparts, will he not undertake to set aside a sum of money in trust so that in the event those discussions break down, or in the event the Americans retaliate against Canada in this particular sector, the Christmas tree growers will have a fund that will directly benefit them? If the Minister is so confident, will he now put his money where his mouth is?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that this action was not taken with a great deal of pleasure on the part of the Government. I made that quite clear at the time the announcement was made last May. But we have a national problem, a problem that we felt necessitated a strong response to the Government of the United States in order to make it very clear that the protectionist actions it had undertaken were wrong and had to be dealt with. We took that action. We got our message very clearly through to Washington. If we had not taken strong action, I am sure the Hon. Member would be on his feet saying: "Why are you not taking the action? Why are you not showing the Americans that you are against this type of protection?" That is the reason why.

Mr. Penner: Rescind the tariff on Christmas trees.

Mr. Dingwall: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

REQUEST THAT TARIFF BE ABOLISHED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, a Christmas tree war may be very amusing to the Minister of Finance. If he really believes that the message has gotten through clearly to the United States then why is he not prepared now to cut out that tariff and give security to these workers for the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to hear the two sides of the fence on which the Hon. Member plays the trade issue. On the one hand he says: "You guys better stand up to those Americans and hold firm on the Auto Pact and make sure you do some things that protect the sovereignty of Canada, because if you do not we are going to whip you and we are going to whip you hard". Then he turns around and says: "Roll over, Mike. Roll over and do those things that the Americans want you to do". On which side is the Hon. Member?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor on a short question, please.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have hoped for many years that the Minister would roll over and find some sensible—

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: I have been hoping for some minutes that the Hon. Member would put his second question succinctly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: My supplementary question to the Minister is this. Since there has been so much discussion with reference to this issue, as he has outlined, why does he continue to defend what was a bad decision to start with and remains a bad decision, especially because it will lead to potential retaliation in the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have always said that the decision by the Americans to impose a tariff on shakes and shingles was a bad decision. The Hon. Member and I are in full agreement on that.

POSSIBLE ACTION BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of any individual rolling over. The industry will roll over and be dead if action is not taken. I wonder if the Minister knows that in the first week of February the American Christmas Tree Association is meeting in Atlantic City, and it will start preparation for its retaliatory action against the massive importation of Canadian Christmas trees, $30 million alone from Nova Scotia, against $1 million of American Christmas trees that come into Canada.

Why has the Minister of Finance taken a national problem of shakes and shingles and levered and lumbered the Christmas tree industry of Atlantic Canada, particularly Nova Scotia?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: The Opposition wishes it could ask questions like that.

Mr. Benjamin: Say goodbye, Pat.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Nobody is going to say that was a planted question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot outdo you on that, and I will not even try.

That is probably the first good question that we have had in a long time.

Mr. Riis: Let's hear a good answer, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will shortly be meeting with the representatives of the Christmas tree industry. I was supposed to be meeting with them two minutes ago, and I will leave right from the Chamber to meet with them. I am sure the matters that the Hon. Members have raised will be the subject of our discussion.

We are concerned about the possible actions that the United States may take. This is the very reason why we have taken the matter as forcefully as we have with the Americans, and why we are following through and trying to find a resolution of this matter.

Mr. Benjamin: Promise you won't send Carney.

PRIVILEGE

OMISSION FROM QUOTATION

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise the House that I am now ready to deal with the complaint raised by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). The point raised by the Hon. Member for Davenport concerned a reply given to a question by the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) on Thursday, January 22, 1987. The essence of the complaint of the Hon. Member for Davenport was that there was a discrepancy between the Hansard record of the Hon. Minister's reply and the electronic record of his reply. I wish to inform the House that there is a perfectly satisfactory explanation for this discrepancy.

I have received a letter from the Editor in Chief of English Hansard which pointed out that, in the interests of accuracy, Hansard obtained a copy of the report in question that the Minister was referring to when he gave his reply, and noted that the Minister had omitted from his answer two words which were contained in the report. Hansard included these two words in the printed record, in spite of the fact that they had been omitted by the Minister. The Hon. Minister did not alter his "blues", and is completely innocent of any attempt to change the meaning of what he said in the House.

Hansard has the responsibility of producing an accurate report which does not change the meaning of anything said in the House. To perform this task a certain amount of editorial flexibility must be allowed.

In his letter to me the Editor of Hansard apologizes for an error in judgment, and for having embarrassed the Hon. Minister of the Environment, and the Hon. Member for Davenport. However, I do not attach any great blame to Hansard. They were only trying to perform their task in a professional manner by ensuring that the reply of the Minister conformed to the wording of the report to which the Minister was referring.

I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on a question of privilege.

RULING OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the proceedings this morning before the Standing Committee on Government Operations. I wish to make it quite clear that I consider this a question of privilege, because the actions before that committee prevented me from doing my job as a Member of Parliament. I will relate to you my reasons for coming to that conclusion.

In the specific instance this morning, my job was to call for public hearings into the Post Office plan. This is a matter of public policy which the committee has the responsibility to investigate. There were impediments and blocks put in my way when making this call for such hearings. The impediments were as follows. One, an unprecedented ruling by the chairman of the Committee that a motion before the Committee to call for public hearings on the Post Office was out of order. This is a matter under consideration by that committee. That was the first impediment. After I discussed this with the Chairman by way of a point of order, the chairman agreed that this motion would be considered at the end of the meeting. So this was understood by the members of the committee.

The second impediment was when I asked the committee to call for these hearings. By the end of the meeting, all the government members of the committee, except for the chairperson, had left the room, had vacated and abandoned the committee. Therefore, they robbed the committee of a quorum and the opportunity to consider the motion.

The effect of these impediments was that I was prevented from doing my job as a Member of Parliament, and calling upon Parliament, through its Committee, to perform the function of holding public hearings with regard to a plan that was being considered.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but may I ask him whether he will have another opportunity to make the representations at the Committee which he feels he was not able to make today?

Mr. Keeper: I do not know, and I will explain why. The next scheduled meeting of the committee is on February 5, which is some time from now. This matter is fast proceeding, since the Minister only has 60 days within which to consider public input. The reason I say that I do not know whether I will have the opportunity is that I took the opportunity to bring the resolution forward at the meeting this morning. We previously had in camera meetings, at which this was considered. This was the first opportunity in a public forum to ask the Committee to call for these hearings. The committee could have voted me down, or debated it out. By way of ruling the motion out of order, and by way of abandoning the committee, it simply refused to give me an opportunity to call for the committee to fulfil one of its functions. I do not know whether I will have an opportunity to call for this again, because I do not know whether they will behave in the same manner at another meeting.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to briefly respond to the Hon. Member's point with respect to the alleged breach of privilege in a committee hearing.

First, as we all know, the committees are masters of their own destiny. I think the Hon. Member had the opportunity to place his motion on the floor. There may have been some discussion as to when it came on the committee's agenda but I do not think the Member can complain that he was prevented from putting the motion on the floor of the committee.

• (1510)

Second, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member commented that Members had other business on a busy day, such as Tuesday. They might have had other meetings to go to. I do not think it is in order to comment on this matter without thinking about the fact that the Member had his opportunity. He placed his motion on the floor at committee. We have all lost votes in committee—

Mr. Keeper: There was no vote.

Mr. Lewis: We have all had quorums disappear on us. I think the Hon. Member will have an opportunity at another meeting to place his motion on the floor. Let the will of the committee decide. This activity goes on daily, Mr. Speaker, and I cannot see that it is a question of privilege. The Member's privileges have not been abridged. I submit, therefore, that there is no question of privilege to be considered by the Chair.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government and its supporters make much of the change in the rules of the House whereby so much of the work of the House is done in committees. The Government and its supporters claim that the rules as they are now give unprecedented power to Members with respect to legislation and the operations of Government. If this is to be the case, the system must work fairly for all Members, including those of the Opposition.

There may be those who argue that the propriety of raising such a matter in this Chamber is perhaps of some question. However, I submit that you, Sir, at the very least have moral authority if not formal authority on behalf of all Members of this House to ensure that all portions of our parliamentary system, as they pertain to the House of Commons and its committees, are operating fairly for all Members. Nothing more quickly undermines the credibility, in the eyes of the public suggestions, particularly on behalf of the Government, that Parliament now works better, more fully and more freely in the interests of individual Members of Parliament if there is a multiplying of cases, piling one on top of the other, which indicate that Members in support of the Government are doing things but which have the result, whether intentional or not, of preventing or making it difficult for Members of the Opposition Parties to do the jobs for which they are elected.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that you do have authority, at least moral authority, to ensure that all portions of our system, including the committees, are operating fairly for all concerned. I respectfully urge you to take very seriously the submissions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken and to take such steps as you can, as I feel you want to take to make sure that the committee system as well as what goes on in this House of Commons operates fairly for all concerned in the interests of the effective operation and, perhaps more important, the integrity and good reputation of this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann). I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) in a moment.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I have a short intervention on this issue brought forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). Like this House, which has a standard set of orders for the day which establishes what it is going to discuss and lays it out, the committee also has business meetings to set its agenda. In fact, the agenda was set and duly transmitted to committee members about what we were going to do today, and what we were going to do the following Thursday and next week. The Hon. Member sat in on this meeting. But here we were commencing a committee hearing with a Member jumping up to change that whole direction agreed to at a meeting which he attended.

I have been at a committee meeting and seen a chairman make a ruling. I guess a Member could question, according to Beauchesne, the ruling of the Chair, and if that exercise had been carried out this morning we would have had no problem. But that did not happen.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could put the same question that I put to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). Could the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) give the Chair any assistance as to when the next occasion might be that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre might raise the matter that he wished to raise?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the committee, I had asked the Hon. Member whether he would like to attend a special in camera session to adjust our agenda, to which he replied no.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as deputy chairman of the committee, I would like to try to offer some assistance to the Chair. As the chairman has mentioned, the committee met in camera on January 20 to set a specific agenda. At that meeting we discussed the very point which the Hon. Member raised today in his motion and there was committee concurrence to deal with the matter at a later point. In agreement with my chairman, the opportunity again was put to the Member to discuss a specific time or date for this issue. The motion today was made in the presence of a number of members of the media. With all due respect to the Member, I really question whether he was dealing more with the agenda or more with a topical news item of particular concern to him.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I just want to respond to some of the statements that have been made by way of information.

First, I want to respond to two points which the Deputy House Leader made. I think he would want to be aware of these facts because they affect the operation of all committees, not just our committee. The Deputy House Leader said that I had an opportunity to present the motion. That was not the case. I invite him to read the record of the committee. There was no opportunity to present the motion.

Second, people leave committees. I want to inform the Deputy House Leader that these Members left the committee after there had been an understanding with the Chair that the resolution would be dealt with toward the end of the meeting. It was within the allotted time for the committee, between 9 and 11. It was not any unusual time. I wanted the Deputy House Leader to be aware of those two points.

Third, there was a standard set of orders, I think my colleague said. The business of the committee was discussed in an in camera session. I made my proposal at that point. I did not discuss it publicly because I wanted to respect the confidence of the committee, which has been a matter of controversy before. My first opportunity to raise the matter was in public session. I must say that even the order that came out of the in camera session was not presented to the public session by way of a motion, which I think would be a normal procedure. Whatever comes out of the in camera session to the public session to adopt as the business of the committee by way of a motion was not done.

The chairman on a previous occasion had allowed such a motion by a government Member to be tabled before the committee. That is in the minutes of the committee. On a previous occasion when hearing a witness, a Government Member introduced a motion for us to take certain action. He allowed that. He reversed his own ruling.

What I was seeking was an opportunity to deal with this matter in a public forum because I found that the in camera sessions had not dealt with it adequately. What I was seeking was an opportunity to call upon the committee to do its public work. Obviously, the media was there. That is part of our work in this environment. I do not know what else to say.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to rise on this question of privilege because I was present at that committee meeting and I feel that my privilege as a Member was affected. I would like to make two sets of remarks, Mr. Speaker. I will start with the decision of the committee Chairman not to accept the motion because we had a witness, whereas in a similar circumstance, on December 4, 1986, when a witness was being questioned, the chairman of that same Committee, the same chairman accepted a motion by Government Members. Although some discussion had taken place, we decided as opposition Members to accept the reasons put forward and for the sake of the witnesses and media attending, we reached an agreement that the motion would be debated after the committee had heard all the witnesses.

• (1520)

After hearing all the evidence, Mr. Speaker, Members left one after the other and the committee had to adjourn for want of a quorum. Mr. Speaker, although Members are free to withdraw at will from a Committee meeting, I consider that the chairman was applying a double standard system in his decision, and we also tend to think that the behavior of the Members on that occasion was not proper, unless they had good reasons, and I am willing to say that it was not the case, so we have serious doubts, we are left to wonder why. Why was there an agreement to debate the motion at the end of the meeting at which time in fact we were left without a quorum?

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank Hon. Members for the views expressed. Hon. Members will know that it is unusual for the Chair to get involved in committee matters. This is therefore a very difficult situation for the Chair as we are dealing with a substantive claim, and also a difficult situation for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). I think the question is quite simple. Would there be a situation in a Committee meeting where the Hon. Member might have leave to introduce a motion or a statement, possibly in another form, the right to . . . It is of course a problem for the Chair, and I believe that in the present situation we might be better advised to adjourn this debate for a while to examine whether the possibility exists where a Member might raise the question on another occasion in a committee meeting. If that were the case, there would be no point in pursuing this discussion.

[English]

As a consequence, I will adjourn this debate and perhaps the Hon. Member can have a discussion with his colleagues in the committee to work out the problem among themselves.

If the complaint that comes to the Chair is that a Member has no opportunity at all to speak in a committee, that causes the Chair concern because it gets close to breaking the fundamental rule of privilege by closing off the right of free speech. I would reiterate by saying that I would hope the committees would work together in such a way that the Chair is not put in the position of exercising an authority which in the long history of Parliament it has been deemed wise for the Chair not to exercise. There can always be the accusation that the Chair is interfering in the affairs of the committee.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) said that the Chair has a certain moral authority in a case like this, even if the Chair might not have the strict procedural authority to intervene. I recognize that the Chair, exercising common sense, and calling on the good sense of all Hon. Members, does have a certain moral authority, but that moral authority can certainly get pretty thin if the Chair exercises it too often.

If Hon. Members would leave this matter for a few days, I would invite them to discuss it, and if after that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre still feels that his complaint is there I shall hear the Hon. Member.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I had the floor when the House adjourned for lunch, and as you will recall, I was describing the seven capital sins mentioned in the December 30 letter sent to the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports by the American Trade Representative, Clayton Yeutter, and the American Secretary for Trade, Malcolm Baldrige. The letter identified seven types of measures which the Americans would not accept that Canada, that is either the federal Government or the provinces, take to help the lumber industry.

I had just pointed out that the granting of subsidies or low cost loans to a lumber company would be viewed by the American Government as a violation of the odious agreement between the two countries.

To continue, the letter also mentions forest management as a forbidden area of intervention. This means that provincial Governments would not be able to develop reforestation programs.

Yet, as we know, in many Canadian provinces, especially my own Province of Quebec, there is an acute need for reforestation. Forest management and stock renewal have long been neglected in Quebec. In many parts of my province, log cutters have to go further and further to find trees to harvest, which increases their operational costs.

In addition, the Quebec Government has just announced measures to promote reforestation in the province and members of the industry will be asked to contribute. The representatives of the forest industry whom I had an opportunity to meet recently told me that it is financially impossible for them to contribute to the reforestation program of the Quebec Government while paying a 15 per cent tax on the wood they export to the United States.

This means that this odious agreement between the Canadian Government and the Government of the United States on the lumber issue threatens the reforestation programs of the various Canadian provinces. This is one more thing which leads me to say that this agreement between our two countries came about because the Canadian Government decided to capitulate and go down on its knees before the American Government.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the reasons why Members on this side of the House are strongly opposed to giving second and even third reading to Bill C-37. We would prefer the Bill to be shelved. The only way to get out of this mess would be for the Canadian Government to get back to the table with the Americans to negotiate a more reasonable agreement which would benefit, not harm or diminish, the Canadian forest industry.

That is what we want, Mr. Speaker. Since my allotted time has expired, I shall now resume my seat.

• (1530)

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to comment on a Bill that is extremely important for the entire country. We must not forget that the forestry industry involves one million Canadian workers, with over 200,000 in Quebec.

The previous speaker pointed out that our Canadian forests had been neglected, especially the forests in Quebec. I think that is an indication of the previous Liberal administration's failure to act, Mr. Speaker.

Agreed, we have not been sufficiently concerned about reforestation in Canada, and that is why this Government has signed a number of very important agreements with the provinces, including Quebec. It signed an agreement involving $300 million a few months ago, to help make up for the lack of reforestation in recent years.

Mr. Speaker, Members from ridings where the forestry industry is very important have a hard time keeping a straight face when Liberal Members make comments that are sometimes entirely incorrect. I remember the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who said that all the provinces were against this agreement. I think it is absurd to say that, when we all know that nine provinces out of ten spoke out in favour of the agreement and that the province that was opposed has about 4.5 per cent of total production in the industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think people should know that this Government is fully aware of the importance of the forestry sector. How could anyone be against an agreement introduced here in the House that will enable us to inject another $600 million into rescuing our Canadian forests? Instead of letting the Americans skim off $1.4 billion, we will be able to reinvest that money here in our own forests.

I think this amply demonstrates that Members who do not represent ridings with forest areas are not well-informed on the subject. How could anyone say that the provinces are opposed when the Quebec Minister of Trade has said that this is a very important agreement, because of what it contains and also in terms of Quebec's sovereignty? I would like to quote what was said by Mr. MacDonald of the Quebec Government, which is certainly not against the agreement, Mr. Speaker. He said, and I quote: "I would like to draw a parallel to clear up the misunderstanding about the differences referred to by Miss Carney. We are talking here about monitoring. A shareholder of a company receives a financial statement every year. He can look at the statement and find out what has been happening. If a decision to impose countervail had been made, the United States would have had the right to send in a team of internal auditors regularly to check our books. The difference is that under the present agreement, we will be producing our own statistics which will then be made available to the parties concerned. If the Americans want to look at those figures, they may do so. But there will be no team of internal auditors traipsing around our Department of Forestry."

Mr. Speaker, this means that even the Liberal Party will have access to the statistics published by the Canadian governments concerned.

I may point out that the official Opposition, as represented by the speakers I have heard up to now, consists mainly of Members from basically urban ridings. I do not have the impression that the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has a lot of forestry activity in his riding.

I would like to take this opportunity to read to you part of an editorial by Michel Roy who is possibly one of the most objective journalists in Canada and who described even better than I could what motivates Liberal Members in their eloquent rhetoric on practically every subject.

This particular issue, with its forestry connection, is a good example of the confusion reigning in the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker. Later on, I will have an opportunity to address the Liberals' confusion about the economy, the Constitution and national defence—three issues on which that party has no idea where it is going, and in which Canadians cannot place their trust.

To get back to the debate on this Bill, Mr. Roy pointed out, and I quote:

"The Opposition whose exaggerated language gives a gross caricature of a very disturbing issue for the future of the Canadian economy will not be taken seriously by Canadians who are aware of the facts. And the Canadian people will not listen either to its criticism because they know that the Liberal Party has no clear policy on free trade". To say the least.

We only have to read over excerpts from the proceedings of a seminar held by western Liberals on July 2 and 3 to learn about the spokesman of the Liberal Party on trade, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We also have to read the comments of Senator Van Roggen who is not a Tory senator. That Liberal senator is an authority on trade and he attended the seminar led by the Liberal Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Senator Roggen said the following: "You heard no fair-minded statement at our seminar. There was only an appeal to your lowest instincts".

Therefore, I think, Mr. Speaker that such a statement made by a Liberal senator, a Canadian authority on trade relations, has resulted in the Liberal spokesman on trade issues, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, losing all credibility.

The same senator added this:

"Canada is now part of a world that is increasingly competitive and protectionnist and which no longer allows for discussing and waiting indefinitely before taking action." I will say to my dear colleagues opposite that the status quo is unacceptable and provides no solution for the future. Current and future economic prospects in Canada are inextricably linked with those in the United States, whether we like it or not, and Ottawa had better realize it and act accordingly."

This is what this Government has done, Mr. Speaker, negotiating day after day agreements of major importance to all Canadian provinces, and this agreement that has just been reached is a good illustration of this Government's pattern of action. We were used to living in a country where quarrels and frictions were the way of life. This has changed over the last two and a half years. And the results are there to prove it.

All this to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the area of trade relations and the economy, this Government has absolutely no lesson to learn from the official Opposition, and especially from their trade critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who even in western Canada is yet unable to strike a consensus among Liberals on the matter of freer trade negotiations with the Americans.

Mr. Speaker, they keep talking about sovereignty. The best way for a country to exercize its sovereignty is in the first instance to ensure an economic renewal, and if this Government has failed to prove it in two and a half years, remember the Liberal Party's record. During the last five years of their mandate, they were creating 1,255 jobs a month, while this Government has created 25,000 jobs a month for two and a half years. In all areas of Canada the unemployment rate is steadily declining, Mr. Speaker.

It is interesting to hear Liberals talk about sovereignty, about protecting our sovereignty when we know so well that in Liberal parlance this is the be-all and end-all of the constitutional issue in Canada. After having put Quebecers to sleep for fifteen, twenty years, Mr. Speaker, they threw us out in 1982. It is also interesting to see Members from the New Democratic Party use the word "sovereignty" on each and every occasion. I look forward to the next convention of the New Democratic Party, to see how far they will bend backwards to get votes in Quebec.

You may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that Quebecers remember where the New Democratic Members were in 1982 when it was time to defend minority rights. All that, and certainly I will have the opportunity to return to that in other debates, to illustrate the Liberal Party's lack of specific policies, the total absence of programs on economic matters, on constitutional matters. How can we have confidence in a party that has governed during three-quarters of a century and that has just passed a resolution at its convention to withdraw from NATO? I am anxious to see the Liberal Party with its electoral platform and its resolutions. I think, Mr. Speaker, they will have to strap their suspenders tight, because when the time comes to look at the record of this Government's management, it will be a pleasure to confront it with Liberal goals, and especially to point out the Liberal Party's economic failure, in the face of which we had to assume our responsibilities two and one-half years ago.

• (1540)

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I too am very pleased to take the floor for the second time and express my views on this very important measure. If I may, I should like to refer generally to the conclusion of my colleague from Chicoutimi who has just spoken to this subject and referred to the Liberal record over the past twenty years. Well, I am glad to point out to him that during the past twenty years under the administration of the Liberal Party which I represent and to which I belong, it never had to face as many difficulties as this Government did in only two years. I think Canadians will know what I am referring to when I say that.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, they talk about Liberal Members as being totally unfamiliar with the lumber industry, they talk about some of my Party colleagues who spoke strongly against this measure as being babes in the woods, most of them representing urban ridings, they say. My colleague who rose before me and spoke on this matter appears to be patting himself on the back while saying: I know this business because I represent in the House a riding or a region where lumber is a major industry.

Mr. Speaker, how very strange, how very peculiar that the Hon. Member who uttered these words should go on to say: Hats off to the Government for signing the agreement, we will recoup $600 million and be in a strong position to help the forest industry. He made that kind of statement after telling us that his Government had signed a $300 million agreement with the Province of Quebec.

But that is the whole problem, Mr. Speaker, and the most eloquent proof that the Hon. Member from Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) knows absolutely nothing of the consequences of this major Bill, for this is precisely the reason why the political party I am a member of has denounced, denounces and will continue to denounce this initiative. Of course, if instead of investing them in the United States, Canada had had the choice, the freedom and possibility to do with these $600 million as it pleased, the critics from this side would have been a lot less caustic. But that is beside the point. That is not at all the result of this agreement. The result of this agreement is this: this 15 per cent export tax will cost our producers some $600 million. But what makes this problem particularly difficult is that the Canadian Government and the provincial governments will not be able to use this money as they please, meaning that they won't be able to spend or invest these large amounts of money in the areas of activity of their choice. That is the reason we say—and I think we have every reason to do so—that this is an extremely painful and serious blow to our sovereignty.

On the one hand, the Canadian Government, because it feared being imposed a burden heavier than this 15 per cent tax, has yielded to the United States. Mr. Speaker, I feel it has kowtowed to them, as a way of saying: Yes, gentlemen, we are going to do exactly what you want, we are going to collect this 15 per cent export tax, and we will try to convince Canadians that we are collecting, thanks to this agreement, $600 million which otherwise would have been spent in the United States. If we can, we will have them believe that because of this agreement, they are $600 million richer. That is utterly false. In order for that to be true, we would have to presume that Canada would have lost its case during the hearings which are held in the United States on similar issues.

Mr. Speaker, I find the situation of our trade relations with the United States all the more tragic since this is an issue of vital importance for Canadians and Quebecers. It affects 250,000 jobs in Quebec and nearly one million jobs in Canada. We just have to look at how many jobs are involved to see how important this is.

Mr. Speaker, what is frightening in the recent agreement is the precedent it could set. I believe that Canadians and Quebecers have every reason to be worried about the future.

I represent a riding which is a major lumber producer. Pulp and paper is also important in my constituency. I have the privilege to have in my constituency the dynamic Cascades group, the Kruger company and Domtar, which account for thousands of jobs and use wood products in their operations.

It is therefore quite reasonable to fear the worst, namely that in the near future, the Americans will tell us: Canada is sending us a product whose major component is wood. We are going to impose a tax to curtail exports of this product to our country, which is one of your best customers. I think that this will happen in the case of many other products and materials.

That is why the agreement signed by the Government should be rejected outright, not because of potential threats, but because of very real threats which will become evident within a few months or years.

Another thing which I find just as unfortunate is that the Canadian Government will be forced to interfere in areas of provincial jurisdiction in one way or another. The Canadian Government will decide how this money is distributed by telling the provinces: You cannot do such or such a thing with this money because, if you do, for instance to stimulate the forest industry, our agreement with the Americans could be denounced since our good friends, the Americans, have reserved the right to denounce the agreement with 30 days' notice.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that it is really sad and disastrous that the Government does not allow a more thorough, a more in-depth debate and has decided with that notice to curtail the debate in order to deliver the goods to their good American friends, and show them once again that Canada is just a tiny partner, and that this tiny partner is willing to do whatever the Americans wish in the end.

Mr. Speaker, that decision will have painful and dramatic effects in the long run, and thousands of jobs will be lost in Quebec as well as in every other province.

The problem may prove to be particularly severe in Quebec. My colleagues before me have described the situation as it exists in Quebec. The problems of the forest industry may have been overlooked these past few years. Massive investments will have to be made in that strategic area. The Government will have to do its share, but so will producers. They will have to contribute huge amounts of money. Producers will therefore be forced in a way to co-operate, to share in the reforestation process, and on top of that participation, they will have to pay the famous 15 per cent tax.

I don't think you have to be an accountant, an expert in that field to understand that lumber producers in Quebec, in the very short term, will be clearly powerless, will be at a clear disadvantage in comparison with other producers in other provinces.

That is another outcome of that Bill, Mr. Speaker.

A number of speakers have also dealt at length with the disastrous consequences of that agreement on the very important lumber sector.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I will once again urge all my colleagues in the ministerial team opposite to take a closer, deeper look at this matter. They will realize that this Bill will have other consequences, other impacts beyond the fact that the $600 million will stay in Canada rather than go to the United States. I believe that if they took the trouble to meet with producers, they would soon realize the painful and dramatic consequence or consequences of that agreement on those producers and on a very large number of jobs, as I said earlier. Some people have said that 250,000 jobs may be affected in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to participate in the dying moments of the debate on this very important subject. It is interesting to note that today we had another example of a tough negotiator on the Government side. First, we had General Custer who is not here now, but she is probably somewhere. Today the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) gave us an example of his negotiating skill with the French Government. Look how tough he was, Mr. Speaker. He has given away everything.

Mr. Fulton: Fifteen thousand extra tonnes.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right, 15,000 extra tonnes, and no agreement on conservation of the fish stocks. He just gave it away. That is really tough negotiating. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) negotiated with the western premiers with respect to the National Energy Program. Even I could come out a winner if I gave everything away. She negotiated with the Governments in the Atlantic regions with respect to offshore resources. Anyone can come up smelling like roses if they are prepared to surrender certain interests like the national interests of the country.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) was saying to me that the way in which the Minister negotiated with the Americans was all political and she really gave up on this softwood lumber issue. I replied that there seems to me to be more to it than meets the eye. I thought what was really betrayed was the courage, conviction, perseverance and determination to stand firm when the interests of the nation are at stake. As a democratic socialist, I believe in the decentralization of political power and the evolution of federal powers. I think there are certain concerns which are vital to the existence of the nation. One of those concerns has to be our relationship with other countries. Another concern has to do with the natural resources of the country.

Mr. Vander Zalm, the Premier of British Columbia, obviously convinced the Conservative Government that his position should carry the day, which was that we should negotiate our rights. But, we cannot have a foreign power telling a sovereign nation how it is going to exploit its resources. We cannot have a foreign nation telling us what stumpage fees we are going to charge. We cannot have a foreign nation telling us which particular remanufacturing will be exempt and which will not, and how much tax we have to put on. No self-respecting nation would allow itself to be pushed around like that, but this Conservative Government did. The dangerous part about that is that a precedent is set. The Americans had a patsy negotiating with them, and once they found the soft spot they proceeded to push the Government around on softwood. What will be next, the Auto Pact?

Mr. Fulton: Steel and fish.

Mr. Rodriguez: Whatever.

An Hon. Member: Nickel.

Mr. Rodriguez: You have it, brother. The Conservatives have allowed themselves to be pushed around. They have allowed this to happen. John A. Macdonald is probably rolling over right now at the sad and sorry state to which the Conservative Party has fallen. For example, what came out of the initial ruling of the Commerce Department in the United States—

Mr. Fulton: October 16.

Mr. Rodriguez: —on October 16? It stated it was British Columbia and Ontario which was really subsidizing the softwood industry with low stumpage fees. The Atlantic region had the highest stumpage fees of the whole nation. There was some feeling even among the First Ministers when they met in the west on this issue that the Atlantic Provinces would be exempt from the 15 per cent export tax. But after General Custer finished negotiating at Little Big Horn in Waikiki, it turned out that the Atlantic region got included. Then there was a fight to get some exclusions and exemptions and who got exempted, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Fulton: Irving.

Mr. Rodriguez: Irving is not exactly a struggling softwood lumber producer. I think it owns just about everything that is not planted and rooted.

Mr. Fulton: Or tied down.

Mr. Rodriguez: All the small and medium producers of softwood lumber in the Atlantic region are now subject to this 15 per cent tax.

Mr. Langdon: Ninety-seven of them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Ninety-seven in at least 40 single industry towns in the Atlantic region. There are all sorts of studies done about the single industry towns. Here is one particular situation where the Government has been digging the hole and acting as pallbearer for the single industry towns in the Atlantic region. One would get the distinct impression during this last week as we have been debating this particular Bill that we are pallbearers for those communities in the Atlantic region which depend on the softwood lumber industry. They are now subject to this 15 per cent. That is tough negotiating?

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave the ball to the Minister of State for International Trade. He said: "I have given her the ball. Watch her go". She took the ball and what did she do with it?

• (1600)

She said: "We looked the Americans in the eye and they blinked three times". As far as she was concerned it was a blinking contest. What has she done in the process? We had such a good case, one which we won in 1983. Right was on our side. Yet in this process of negotiation she even gave away our right to prosecute the matter before the GATT.

Surely, if it was believed that we were right and that we had won the case in 1983 then the response should have been: "I will see you in court, brother". The Minister said: "Blink, blink, blink," and it was gone. If we had such a good case then why did we not say to the Premier of British Columbia: "In the interests of Canada and our sovereignty, Mr. Premier, you just sit tight there in British Columbia. We are going to prosecute this case. The Americans are wrong. They are dead wrong in accusing Canada of subsidizing our softwood lumber industry."

I think we should have fought the case in court. We are now just whipped on the issue, and we will be whipped down the line on another issue while all the Government can do in terms of retaliation is pick on Christmas trees and books. Just look how tough we are. We sell $30 million worth of Christmas trees to the Americans and they sell us $1 million worth. What do we do? We are going to be tough and tax their Christmas tree imports into Canada. We are going to tax reading. That is Tory toughness. I think the Government should be ashamed of itself for having sold away the birthright of this nation with respect to this particular issue. It is a marshmallow government. I think it should be dismissed to the dustbin of history.

Mr. Fulton: As soon as possible.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin)—Unemployment insurance—Payment of benefits in Atlantic region. (b) Regional disparity; the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer)—External affairs—Lifting of sanctions against Soviet Union; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Natural resources—Utilization of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick coal in Ontario—Request for study. (b) Request for government consideration.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. McDermid (p. 2601).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment of Mr. McDermid:

That the question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. McDermid) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment carried.

Mr. McKnight: I was inadvertently delayed in entering the Chamber. You were reading the question when I entered, Mr. Speaker, and respecting tradition and having decorum maintained in the House, I did not vote. I would have voted with the Government had I been here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Benjamin: Five o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Orders of the Day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that we call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: No. Orders of the Day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Orders of the Day.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Speaker rose to ask whether it was agreed that we call it five o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: I said no.

Mr. Tobin: Everyone in the House agreed. Some Members somewhat belatedly changed their minds. The Speaker has ruled. If Members are challenging the ruling of the Speaker, there is an appropriate way in which to do it, not by yelling "no" belatedly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed with Orders of the Day.

National Transportation Act, 1986

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, December 19, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When Bill C-18 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) proposed an amendment which the Chair took under advisement. I have now had an opportunity to study the amendment. I am prepared to accept it and will therefore propose it to the House. Mr. Benjamin moves in amendment thereto:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

[Translation]

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, very seldom do we have an opportunity to come to grips with part of our destiny, our future. In the area of transportation, the last major legislation, the last significant amendment was passed in 1967. So many things have happened during those 20 years, Mr. Speaker. Serious changes here in Canada, in Ontario, in Quebec, in British Columbia, changes in attitudes and significant changes in the way we negotiate with our neighbours, close and remote. Our products and methods of production also have changed.

Our whole history, Mr. Speaker, was already based on our ability to move around in the best possible way, in the fastest possible way, to best survive against the worst of elements. Transportation, Mr. Speaker, always has been the mortar of our national policy.

We depend to a great extent on our transportation systems more especially as a major part of our economic strength is based on the export of our products. The quality of our products, our costs and the reliability of our delivery systems can and should make the difference. So let us have the courage to ask certain questions, Mr. Speaker. Does Canada now have, and will it have tomorrow, the passenger and freight transportation systems required by those new realities?

Does Government approach to transportation problems correspond to recent changes, the last economic upheavals at home and in our other traditional markets?

Recently, our major economic partner has taken new steps in the area of transportation.

It is clear that we are under no obligation to copy what is being done by our neighbours to the south. It is also clear that we cannot afford to ignore the implications of decisions made by those neighbours. So much so, that nearly 80 percent of our external trade is dependent on them. Whether we like it or not, Mr. Speaker, that is a fact.

We have no intention of forgetting that fact. If we do not change, if we do not evolve, we might very well see a significant part of our external trade escape us, and it is rather more difficult to regain markets than to lose them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

TRADE

UNRESTRAINED INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, interprovincial trade ought to be unrestrained.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me considerable pleasure to rise to begin debate on this motion. It is probably one of the shortest motions on the Order Paper but that is certainly not on account of it lacking in importance. I must confess that I am an unabashed supporter of free trade. I firmly believe both in theory and in practice that it has been demonstrated that the unrestrained flow of goods and capital, and labour for that matter, results in the maximum benefit for the maximum number of people. In general, I think that concept is supported by most Canadians and by the Governments of those Canadians both at the provincial and federal levels. In general, they would agree with it but then go on to state they have certain exceptions.

The Macdonald Commission report, which was largely prepared under the auspices of the previous Government, was, of course, in support of free trade. The Government of Canada is in continuing GATT negotiations on a world scale. We also, of course, have very important bilateral discussions going on with the United States of America. The harmful effects of recent United States protectionist measures show how important it is that we get this bilateral agreement with the United States, our greatest trading partner.

However, I think it is time that we took a look at what is happening within our own borders, right here at home, right here in Canada. The initial concept of Canada, as we know it today, at the time of Confederation was that there would be a customs and commercial union. This was the idea espoused by the Fathers of Confederation. If we look at what was then the British North America Act of 1867, now renamed the Constitution Act, we see in Section 91, which gives the jurisdiction to the federal Government, that the federal Government was to have the exclusive jurisdiction over the regulation of trade and commerce. That was to prevent the various provinces, the former colonies, from making restrictions among themselves. Similarly, the Constitution of that day gave jurisdiction in other areas along the same lines to the federal Government, areas such as navigation and shipping, bills of exchange, promissory notes, legal tender and patents. All that type of thing was put fully into the hands of the federal Government.

More specifically, in the Constitution of 1867, we should look at Section 121 which states: "All articles of growth, produce or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall, from and after the union, be admitted free into each of the other provinces". It is quite clear what was envisaged at that time, that is that there was to be a customs union and no restriction.

What has happened over the last 100 years as a result of special invested interest and "beggar-thy-neighbour" policies? I do not want to be too forceful because I know how some of these things come about. These types of policies were pursued by the provinces, often with the concurrence of the federal authorities. We now have a veritable mishmash of restrictive practices which have grown up. It is probably worse in the agricultural field. There are, I believe, 144 various marketing boards marketing agricultural products in Canada. If one is trying to sell milk from a province outside of Ontario into Ontario, it is almost impossible. It is the same in British Columbia with respect to pork and eggs, for example. I am familiar with the CEMA problems because the egg producers in the area I represent are unable to sell 60 or 70 miles across the border. It is impossible for them to do that and that is an unnecessary restriction on trade within our own country.

There are various subsidies set up in the agricultural field both federally and provincially. There are differential prices. The Liquor Commission of the Province of British Columbia has a 50 per cent mark-up on wines from British Columbia and 110 per cent mark-up on wines coming in from other provinces of the same country. Surely, that is not fair. The field of Government procurement is another very important aspect. For certain jobs in the Provinces of Quebec and Nova Scotia, no bids are even entertained from firms outside of those provinces. There are systems of provincial preference of one kind or another in most provinces of Canada. There are big differentials put into effect where I come from. We are one of the worst offenders. We have a bid differential in favour of resident companies when it comes to construction contracts.

With respect to provincial hiring practices, there is practically no province which is immune. There were special rules put into effect for the limestone project in Manitoba. Look at construction in Quebec. If one is not from Quebec, there is practically no way one can get a job on a construction site in that province. Work in the oil industry was reserved for Newfoundlanders in their province. There is unnecessary labour licensing legislation. Although we are now trying to make an effort at deregulation in transportation, the trucking industry is a veritable jungle of red tape.

There are all kinds of competitive giveaways and tax incentives to try to get people to locate in specific areas. Of course, there are the back-door methods such as the imposition of British Columbia's sales tax. If one has a construction job in British Columbia and one wants to move one's machinery, one has to pay a British Columbia sales tax. If it is only a two-week job, it is hardly worth-while. Those are the kinds of back-door methods being used.

The result of all this is a lack of competitiveness with Canadian industry and Canadian suppliers. It results in higher consumer prices to the eventual consumer. The cost of all the lobbying which has to go on to get these special favours has to be paid for by someone. A lot of these restrictive practices were put on with the effect of guarding employment within a certain area. However, the wider effect is to create more unemployment elsewhere. In general, it results in an inefficient allocation of resources which in turn results in lower over-all standards of living for Canadians.

How do we reverse this trend? How do we get back to the economic union envisaged by the Fathers of Confederation? First, it will take self-restraint on the part of the special interests involved. They should not look at their special daily interest, they have to be able to look further ahead and try to be fair to all Canadians. There must be self-restraint on the part of governments and legislators who really never like to say no to people. It might take the form of court action because I am sure a lot of these restraints are clearly contrary to Section 121 of the Constitution Act.

I have put forward a proposal which was put forward by the Canada West Foundation for an interprovincial trade commission made up of representatives of various provinces and the federal authorities. The reason for this would be for the negotiation to reduce all these unnecessary barriers. No one likes to say: "I am going to go first", so if we can do it in a co-ordinated way, the Canada West proposal for an interprovincial trade commission might work to our advantage.

• (1710)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to begin my remarks by complimenting the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for introducing this resolution. I think it is a useful contribution to debate in the House. Frankly, it is a resolution that should have been introduced much earlier. It has a major bearing on the broad discussion we have been having over the past 18 months or so with respect to the free trade initiative the Government has inaugurated with the United States of America. The two cannot be divorced.

The theory being put forward by the Hon. Member who argues for a greater sense of economic union is one to which we would all adhere. We all believe that it would be useful to have a clear examination of how we can reduce provincial barriers. From my experience as the Minister of Employment and Immigration I can certainly testify that the seeming irrationality of various labour licensing codes and professional codes from province to province totally impeded the movement of labour across Canada.

There is one thing which we should have learned from that experience, that is, why do we have this mosaic of different rules and regulations that provides preferences or allows differences from province to province? In large part they have emerged historically as a result of economic necessity and imperative. If the economy of a particular province is dependent upon a certain resource, whether it be the fruits and vegetables of the interior of British Columbia, or similar products in Nova Scotia, then it is important for those producers either to find a way of maintaining a market against all the odds of transportation, and sometimes geography, or going out of business.

The peculiar Canadian genus which has developed over the years has been a willingness to pay slightly more in order to maintain this curious amalgam of regions called Canada. It has been to say that we are not a derivative of the Adam Smith textbook, that in Canada, in some ways, we fly against the logic of the economic theorists, whether they be the 18th century Adam Smith or the 20th century Donald Macdonald. The fact of the matter is we fly against that logic and maintain ourselves accordingly.

The reason I say that those are important factors is because if the objectives set forward by the Hon. Member to reduce provincial barriers is to be taken legitimately, then we must recognize that the problem has been compounded geometrically by the initiation of the negotiations with the United States. Not only has that placed an initial burden on each of the provinces to try to reconcile its differences with its neighbours, they must now reconcile their differences with their American competitors. We saw such an example of that raised in the House today. There were members of the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party who stood up to try to protect the interests of the Christmas tree producers in the Province of Nova Scotia. Why? Because they recognize that it is an important industry in that province and that it needs to be represented. However, what we know as a result of dealing with the free trade negotiations is that there are a couple of central issues at stake.

The first issue is that the major American objective is to have a good go at our subsidy programs. That was certainly the case when I met with a senior trade negotiator two weeks ago in Washington. He very clearly told me that the issue comes down to one thing. We have been told by the Americans: "We do not like the way you subsidize your industries. We want you to get rid of those subsidies." That means freight rates in the Maritimes and the marketing boards in British Columbia. It means procurement policies in Manitoba. We are told that we have to wipe those out. We have been told by the Americans: "If you want to change our countervailing policies and laws, if you want greater access to our markets, then you will have to be prepared to accept the elimination or reduction in the type of programs and policies that ensure or have maintained the regional vitality of Canada". We have been told that we cannot have a maritime freight rate or a vegetable or fruit marketing board in British Columbia under the concept of free trade with the United States. The Americans are insisting upon the principle of national treatment.

By the way, this is a principle that has been accepted by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) in two of his major official statements on free trade. Once that is accepted as a principle then it must be said: "You cannot discriminate against the activities or entrepreneurs in the United States by giving preference to someone in Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec or British Columbia". So we have thrown a real curve ball at the fruit and vegetable producers of British Columbia, the brewery workers of Nova Scotia and the corn producers of southern Ontario by saying that they can no longer have any form of preference, advantage or discrimination in terms of local industry.

In presenting his resolution promoting a national economic union, the Hon. Member must do so with the immense overarching knowledge that that union is very much threatened by the integration into a continental market. That continental market carries with it certain fundamental principles which basically eliminate, or have the potential to eliminate, the 120 some-odd years of development that have allowed us to maintain a regional balance in Canada.

I see the new Member for Pembina (Mr. Van de Walle) is here in the House. I know that he is interested in the question of the use of Alberta coal in Ontario Hydro proposals. It makes a great deal of economic sense for British Columbia and Alberta to move clean coal into southern Ontario for hydro purposes. But it cannot be done under the free trade negotiations. I say that because the Americans say: "How can you provide a preferential rail rate to move western coal to Ontario and discriminate against the movement of coal from Ohio, Indiana or West Virginia?" It is forbidden. It cannot take place.

If the Hon. Member is sincerely interested in pursuing the very difficult but necessary objective of trying to reduce the barriers between provinces, then I say to him: Why add on to that the incredible weight of having to cope with the elimination of all our regional programs and initiatives by negotiating an economic integration in the entire North American continent? I have nothing against dealing with the United States on trade issues. As a Minister I was part of those negotiations. I negotiated the new air pact—

Mr. Forrestall: You ignored it for years.

Mr. Axworthy: I did not. I was responsible for breaking through the negotiation on new air routes to the benefit of the province from which the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) hails in terms of opening up routes into Boston and the New England markets. But we did it on a one-by-one basis. We did not make the kind of commitments to the principle of national treatment that placed at threat the Maritime Freight Rates Subsidization Program, the marketing boards and the specific procurement policies that allow this country to give certain incentives to our own industries on a regional basis.

That is the real issue at stake here. Until the Government is prepared either to develop an effective regional development program, as opposed to cutting back to the tune of $600 million or $700 million as has been done over the past two years, while at the same time ensuring that there is an effective program for adjustment for the industries and workers affected, then we cannot make those changes. Rather than knocking out the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program or the Community Futures Program that allow industries to meet competition, rather than wiping those out and leaving people naked to deal with the change, we cannot make those changes. We cannot go about taking away the livelihood of people, destroying communities and pulling out the regional props and say that we will do absolutely nothing to provide for an adjustment or transition in between.

• (1720)

The Hon. Member's resolution is inadequate. It does not complete the statement. The statement is that in order for the Government of Canada to fully support the reduction of interprovincial trade barriers, the Government of Canada must also ensure a fair and equitable distribution of regional economic opportunity and adjustment programs to ensure that there can be transitions. Then the Provinces of British Columbia, Nova Scotia, or Ontario will be interested in negotiation. If those programs are wiped out and there is nothing in return, the type of progress that we would all like to see in reducing interprovincial trade barriers will not take place.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House is short and sweet, and perhaps one might say a little simplistic:

That, in the opinion of this House, interprovincial trade ought to be unrestrained.

When the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) raised this question, what occurred to me first was: Is he really calling for exactly this type of unrestrained market system across Canada? If so, what will that do to many of the privileges presently built into our legislation to assist the Arctic areas? These systems create certain tax advantages which attempt to offset the geographic problems which exist. When the Member has a chance to comment further on some of the points raised I would be interested in his capacity to say "Yes, I am prepared to see my region suffer because of the unrestricted, beautiful market system which I want to see operating."

I think that hidden in this vision of a complete market system are very serious dangers which would not only damage what we have historically built in this country, but damage a great many people. For instance, our social progress has come province by province. That is part of the reason that we have a patchwork quilt system of different regulations and structures in different provinces. This capacity has allowed provinces to experiment and put into place new systems of social and economic relationships which, in the end, has benefited Canadians a great deal.

For example, tremendous differences in approach were taken with respect to pay equity and to affirmative action in the different provinces as they affect the women of Canada. The Province of Manitoba has taken a different position and is experimenting with different approaches than the Province of Quebec followed in the past. The Province of Ontario is now experimenting with systems which are again different than those in British Columbia. That is part of the value of the provincial structure that we have in Canada that permits us to experiment and compare different approaches in different contexts.

I am sure the Hon. Member himself, and many Members of the House recognize that there are parts of the country which are far less advantaged than the part of Ontario which I represent. The economic development of those parts of Canada also must be encouraged by specific measures which try to run in the face of the normal push of the market which would leave those parts of Canada as disadvantaged, and perhaps even more disadvantaged in the future.

There are experiments taking place in Yukon under the New Democratic Party territorial government that has been established there. For the first time, it has established a strict policy of local purchase for quite a number of its needs in Government. This has led to considerable increases in local jobs, local production, and to a new sense of economic growth and expansion in Yukon which I applaud.

From my trips across Canada two years ago with the action group of the federal New Democratic Party, I have a sense of the dreams that many Canadians have of being able to have a much greater sense of local control, a much greater handle locally on what is happening to them and to their economy, whether it is shipbuilders in Saint John, fishermen in Newfoundland, carpenters in Saskatoon, groups who have formed co-ops in British Columbia, or municipal development corporations. These groups at the grass roots have attempted to build in their locality a sense of something that they can do about the economic problems which face them. It worries me that an expression of opinion which says that the market system should rule supreme would very much undercut their dreams and their hopes for the future.

Picking up here on one of the positive points that the Member made in his introduction to his motion, I think it is important that we have more integration of our economy. For us to do that, we have to plan for it in co-operation with the private sector for the development of high technology sectors in certain parts of the country. We have to shape our transportation system so that western coal, for instance, does serve Ontario Hydro, and so that Cape Breton is producing steel for CN across Canada. That type of planning is the antithesis of the unrestrained market system which I think has been put before us in this motion today.

• (1730)

I think if we as Members in this House of Commons want to reflect somehow on the dream that most Canadians have, that dream has to be a dream in which we build our country from the bottom up, through planning, through organization, not through some kind of market based unrestrained allocation of resources.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): There is a guy who doesn't trust anybody. He thinks the Government can better do for them than what they can do for themselves.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I must at the outset of my remarks in response to the intervention this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) say that I regret very much the literally supercilious argument that we have had from the socialist in this Chamber. He waffled and was on all sides of the question. He was in favour of a great Canadian community but "By God, we have got to plan it. We can't trust anybody to do it himself. Don't trust the private sector".

What did the distinguished Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) say? Just as my socialist friend, he was on four sides of the question. I lost track when he was waffling through the third one. Where was he for 20 years? Where was the Liberal Government for the last 20 years except asleep at the switch? Let there be no equivocation whatsoever, this Party stands for free interprovincial trade. We stand for the removal of the barrier, the lowering of the difficulties that frustrate interprovincial trade.

Mr. Langdon: Especially in Newfoundland.

Mr. Forrestall: I am pleased to speak on behalf of the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) who, God love him, if he is watching, I hope is resting comfortably. He is in hospital with some minor difficulties. Bernie, I will do my best. I am pleased to report on his behalf that he and his provincial colleagues, Ministers responsible for regional and economic development, met last October to discuss this very issue. They did agree in principle. Unlike my socialist and Liberal friends, there is some common sense among our provincial counterparts with regard to a very substantial program, substantial in the sense that it is an historic first step. We will recommend to the First Ministers the putting in place of mechanisms to begin to deal with the questions raised by the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic.

The Minister will recommend to Government and through the Government to the First Ministers the establishment of a priority short list that will really move this question off centre, off the base it has apparently been stuck on for some years. We will start with Government procurement policies. We will look particularly, for example, at liquor regulations that cause enormous problems between the provinces.

If the First Ministers accept these recommendations, and I would hasten to add that recent events encourage us to believe that this will be the case, the federal and provincial Governments will be embarking on a very historic process of reducing barriers to interprovincial trade for the first time. This process will bring long-term benefits for all Canadians by stimulating growth and encouraging a dynamic and a relatively more competitive economy.

The agreement which was reached on October 29 has, as its origin, a recognition by the federal and provincial Governments that increasing interprovincial trade can be an important means for stimulating regional development. With access to the larger Canadian market, competitive firms will be encouraged to grow and become more competitive. This is particularly important to firms located in the less populous regions of the country where markets are often too small to support an economically viable operation. For such firms, ensuring freer interprovincial trade could well be crucial to their continued growth.

Encouraging interprovincial trade will also encourage the development of a dynamic and competitive economy. That is, after all, what we are after. Entrepreneurs in all parts of the country will have greater access to the wider Canadian market. Those with the ability and ambition to take advantage of the opportunity will become those entrepreneurs who will be our success in the future.

Encouraging the development of competitive and dynamic businesses is essential to Canada's long term economic well-being. We are, as we all know, heavily dependent for our well-being on our ability to export and on our ability to compete in foreign markets. In today's world, foreign markets are increasingly competitive. Only the most competitive suppliers can succeed. For our own good, we must encourage Canadian firms to become competitive internationally. How better to do this than by first encouraging Canadians to become more competitive within Canada. But to do this, Canadians must first have access to as wide a market as possible within Canada. When I talk about market, I refer to the topic areas that range through the whole spectrum of our culture and economic well-being. They range and touch upon everything.

On this subject of international trade, I should note in passing that the said practices that result in barriers to interprovincial trade also result in barriers to international trade. Consequently, some of them will arise in the context of our trade negotiations on an international basis. I would like to emphasize, and I am sure the Minister would want me to do so, that we are concentrating on the domestic effects of these practices rather than on their role in the international trade discussions.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) will be dealing with their effect as barriers to international trade in another context and at another time. Needless to say, whatever happens on the domestic front, Mr. Speaker, and this is the point we are trying to make, will be of importance on the trade front, just as the trade negotiations will have to be factored into whatever we do in terms of international barriers. Consequently, the Minister of State will be working closely with the Minister for International Trade to ensure that we achieve compatible results in the international and domestic aspects of this question.

The current international trade talks have focused attention on barriers to interprovincial trade. People have, quite rightly, argued that we must put our own house in order if we are to negotiate closer trade ties with other countries. Reducing barriers to interprovincial trade is one way of putting our own house in order, so to speak, as we enter international free trade discussions.

While the connection with international trade talks is important, I do not want to leave the impression that this is the only reason we are pursuing this subject. Quite the contrary. Barriers to interprovincial trade predate the trade talks as an issue and have repeatedly arisen in many other contexts. Such barriers restrain economic growth, raise costs to consumers and hinder the development of competitive Canadian suppliers. We must work to reduce barriers to interprovincial trade come what may on the international free trade talk scene.

In embarking on this consultative process, all provincial Governments have demonstrated a great deal of goodwill. They have recognized that we as Canadians must work together to ensure our mutual prosperity. Discussions have taken place in a cordial and co-operative atmosphere. The provincial Governments are to be commended on the positive approach which they themselves have brought to these discussions.

The federal Government has also been an active participant in these discussions. I intend to continue to participate in support of my Minister on behalf of the talks that are going on. I would urge members of this Chamber to commend the Member for Western Arctic for his beautifully simplistic statement. We must work toward the removing of interprovincial trade barriers and we, as a Government, have pledged to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to add a few words to this debate.

I would first like to mention that I am very pleased to have as much as ten minutes of time, and not only three minutes, as was the case earlier.

Mr. Speaker, I shall begin by congratulating my hon. friend for the Bill which he introduced in the House this afternoon. To my mind, it is a very important Bill for the federal Government as well as for the provinces of eastern and western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I believe also that my hon. friend has put an important question. For several years now we have been talking about Canadians and Quebecers. I am a Quebecer and proud of it, but I am also a Canadian and therefore proud to be a Canadian from Quebec.

With regard to the Bill which is before us this afternoon, we knew the obstacles beforehand, but we must be aware of the fact that in each province of our beautiful country, whether in the Gaspe Peninsula or elsewhere, jobs are important to us.

Sometimes we tend to say that the Gaspe region is where we want to live and the jobs we want saved are those we have at home. Well, that is what we want, Mr. Speaker, and that is what I am working for.

But we are looking further ahead with a plan of action for our future: that is what we aim to do, and that is why we were elected in 1984. Canadians had had enough of the former Government.

Once again I want to congratulate my colleague for introducing this motion. As I pointed out earlier to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) when he said "we are prepared to hold consultations with the provinces", I would suggest that the fact this process is already under way is indeed very significant, Mr. Speaker.

A few examples might be in order. I am sure that the example of the sidewalks conveys a message to us, to our constituents, and to all Canadians. As you may recall, because the paving materials had been bought in a neighbouring province, the municipality had to demolish the sidewalks. Here is another example, Mr. Speaker. The Hay River Dene band was considering setting up a commercial egg producing company, and the only way it could have shown a profit would have been to get access to the egg markets outside the Northwest Territories. However, not being signatory to the first egg marketing agreement reached in 1967, the Territories will not have a quota and the company will be allowed to sell its products only within the Northwest Territories market.

Mr. Speaker, if Canadians, Hay River Denes or others want to market their eggs in Quebec or the Maritime Provinces, as a federal Member, as a Canadian and as a Quebecer I would suggest that they be allowed to sell their products anywhere they want in this country.

Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect to all this. We know that interprovincially the more we buy at home and the freer we are to shop at home or elsewhere, the more buoyant our economy—and it has been a thousand times more buoyant since 1984. The stronger our economy, the more jobs we create on a national, provincial and regional basis.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, each province has its own marketing board. I would not want the federal Government to disturb existing programs.

I am asking this House and this Government, as well as my hon. colleague, to work in co-operation. This is what we want to do; it is our formula for success in Canada.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that, in addition to the economic importance of these proposals, it will be because of Canadian solidarity that our country and we ourselves as citizens will grow stronger. Think of what has happened in the past and look at our discussions and negotiations with the provinces, and that does not necessarily always mean good or positive things—I could speak longer on this subject. If we take another example, such as transport which was mentioned earlier, the rules change from province to province. This is illogical, Mr. Speaker. However, I understand that the provinces have agreed to discuss the matter and to try to improve our economy and our society for the good of Canada.

[English]

It is time for each of us in the House of Commons, regardless of Party, to look at this question because it is important to Canadians. It is important that we can negotiate between provinces. Interprovincial trade is important to the Dene band in Hay River, to the people on the Gaspé, to the people in the west, to the people of British Columbia, to the people of the Maritimes and to the people of Nova Scotia. The secret to our success is working together as good Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am more than delighted to have an opportunity to speak to this particular motion. I will vote for it if it does come to a vote because it is a move in the right direction. I am a western Canadian. In fact, I come from the far west. I have watched what has been happening in this country for a lifetime. The fact that central Canada is so favoured by freight rates quite frankly appals me.

We in Canada talk about unity. We talk about the country being unified and about all of us working together. That should include everyone. I have several examples of inequities I would like to cite.

A farmer with a farm in Saskatchewan and an egg ranch in Alberta was not allowed by the Canadian Wheat Board to move his own grain from Saskatchewan to Alberta to feed his own chickens. Is that free trade? Flour mills basically no longer exist in western Canada because it is much cheaper to ship grain to eastern flour mills than it is to ship flour. There is nothing fair about that whatsoever. The rate on flour should be the same both ways. Freight rates must be part of the issue of free trade. That an egg farm in the Northwest Territories cannot ship eggs anywhere in Canada it can compete I find offensive as well.

Let us talk about marketing boards for a moment. They have been mentioned and looked on with favour by some of my political opponents. Why is there no one who speaks for the consumers? Quite frankly, marketing boards increase the cost of everything to consumers and I defy any marketing board to deny that statement. In effect, marketing boards subsidize the inefficient producer. That was the case with egg marketing, milk marketing and many other areas in my Province of British Columbia. I am against them. They achieve nothing except to subsidize the inefficient.

• (1750)

My home in Vancouver is within an hour's drive of the City of Bellingham, Washington. The difference in prices between those two cities is intolerable in many respects. I will give you one concrete example dating from a few years ago when I became interested in the issue. A major manufacturer of paper products, Westminster Paper Products, is located in New Westminster, British Columbia. The paper towels they manufacture can be bought in Bellingham, Washington, for something like 40 per cent less than in Vancouver. They are manufactured in my city yet they charge me more than they do 50 miles away in Bellingham, Washington.

I inquired as to why. The reason was very simple, they said. In order to have a Canadian market they add the freight rates on in Canada, equalize the price, and sell the product for exactly the same in Toronto as they do in Vancouver and other regions of the country. Of course, export sales are a different matter. That is all very good except for one thing. If you were buying an automobile in Ontario at that time it was $300 less than it would cost in Vancouver. It suddenly occurred to me that there is something manifestly unfair about that because if our manufacturers equalize their rates and charge the same price across the country, why are we paying that extra amount in Vancouver? Perhaps General Motors should equalize its rates and allow those who buy cars in Ontario next to the factory to subsidize those who are further away. Yet that does not happen. There are many examples of this kind of thing where free trade does not truly exist in Canada.

Another small example. Why can we ship our cattle to eastern feedlots at a very low freight rate, yet if we want to ship dressed beef from our own feedlots in refrigerated cars to eastern Canada the freight rate makes it almost impossible to do so? We are talking about free trade now so let us talk about free trade and economic freedom for the west. Rail freight rates are a major issue in that respect. For years and years and years in the City of Kamloops, about 160 miles into the interior from Vancouver, if you wanted to ship two-by-fours to eastern Canada the freight rate was structured in such a way that it was cheaper to ship the lumber all the way to Vancouver and then turn around and ship it to eastern Canada. Kamloops did not get the benefit of the lower rate directly.

If we want this country to work, if we want to discuss free trade with any intelligence at all, we have to look very closely at not only federal but provincial marketing boards. Who do they really help? Believe me, they do not help the consumer and it is about time we stopped using marketing boards to subsidize inefficient producers who should not be in the business at all because they do not know what they are doing. As long as we allow them to exist, no one is looking after the consumer's interests. As someone who represents consumers, I would certainly like to see a lot more protection for them.

Let us turn now to the alcohol business. I do not think there is any doubt at all that if there had not been provincial protection across this country, there would be very few breweries in Canada. In any event, all of them would be located in eastern Canada. I am not so sure that is bad. I believe my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), mentioned the Maritimes and beer. Obviously he is not aware that Moosehead beer out of the Maritimes is sold all over North America and extremely successfully. That company knows what it is doing. It has good business people. If you are running an inefficient brewery, if you do not know what you are doing, why are you in the brewery business? We have breweries in British Columbia that can compete with any in the world and should be allowed the same right across this country.

Again, so many of these things have built up over the years. There is such a patchwork of regulation that it will be a terrible job to get back to where the efficient survive and do well and the marginal producers who really do not know what they are doing are forced out of business. Market forces will do that. More than that, I believe the role of Government is to ensure safety and health standards, but when you have to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to obtain a quota for some product, that is where the problem begins. The simple fact is that it is the consumer who is paying that money and it is about time someone spoke up in favour of consumer protection as opposed to inefficient producer protection.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I first want to express the view that I am glad eastern Canada did not get blamed for the number of breweries we have in the country. Second, I want to tell the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) how pleased I am to be able to participate in this debate.

At the outset I want to say that Governments at both levels have been paying lip service to a reduction in interprovincial trade barriers for as long as I can remember. For those of us who come here from industry and who happened to be involved in industries which are vitally dependent upon interprovincial trade, this has been an almost insurmountable road-block. We as Canadians are being urged to become more competitive so that we can take our rightful place in the world in bilateral and multilateral trade with the U.S. and the rest of the world. Yet we have all these road-blocks thrown in our way in our own country. In a nation as large as ours, regional disparity is a fact of life. It is a problem we have to address and there is no doubt about that. Unfortunately, the way we have chosen to attack that particular problem in many cases impacts on the way we do business across the country.

• (1800)

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker, just as I was getting started.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PAYMENT OF BENEFITS IN ATLANTIC REGION. (B) REGIONAL DISPARITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on October 14, 1986, I put a series of questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) regarding the recommendations of the Forget Commission, recommendations which would see the Government of Canada cutting the sum of $3 billion from the Unemployment Insurance Commission fund, with some $727 million coming out of the Atlantic Canada economy. I asked the Prime Minister to give the House and Canadians the position of the Government of Canada to the report of the Forget Commission. At that time the Prime Minister said that the report had not been tabled, that it was not formalized, and that therefore he could not speculate on what indeed would be the response of the Government of Canada.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the Forget Commission report has been tabled for some months, since the end of November. The House and the people of Canada have still not received from the Government of Canada a response to the recommendation to cut some $3 billion from the UIC fund and, more specifically, to cut three-quarters of a billion dollars out of the economy of Atlantic Canada alone.

The Government has now had a matter of months to study the report. I would like its formal response to what I would call Draconian recommendations.

The other matter I raised was the whole question of a government strategy or policy to deal with regional disparity in the country. On October 14 the Prime Minister indicated that he was going to Charlottetown to meet the provincial Premiers and hoped to initiate a new day of consultation, co-operation, and discussion to ensure that a regional development policy was forthcoming soon. That was in October; much water has gone under the bridge since then, and we still see no regional development policy. We certainly have not seen the dawning of a new day of consultation and co-operation.

The fact of the matter is that even today in Question Period there were some very strong and angry questions being asked about the actions of the Minister of Fisheriess and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) who proposes to sign an agreement or a protocol with France on fish stocks off Saint Pierre and Miquelon, which will have the effect of denying to Newfoundlanders their traditional and historic right to catch fish in Canadian waters.

That agreement was signed without consulting any Atlantic Premiers, the unions of Atlantic fishermen, Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, or even, we have been told today, cabinet members from Atlantic Canada. If that is the dawning of the new day of consultation and co-operation in federal-provincial relations, then God forbid that this new policy should ever mature beyond the present mess which was exhibited today by the Minister of Fisheries.

We will not let the matter die. Again I ask the Government: What is the formal response to the report of the Forget Commission? Will it attempt to balance the books on the backs of the people who can afford it least? Is that the policy of the Government, or is it something else? When will the Prime Miniser and this administration recognize that, beyond the borders of southern Ontario and the growth centres, people in the extremities of the land are suffering unbearably high unemployment. People are asking that their existence be recognized. People are asking that a policy for all Canadian citizens, not only some of them, be developed.

Will we see co-operation, consultation, sensitivity, and caring from the Government which would prevent the kind of brutal and insensitive decision taken by the federal Minister of Fisheries in the absence of any consultation with Atlantic Canadians, a decision which resulted today in otherwise intelligent and rational people calling open-line programs in Newfoundland and talking about having a referendum on getting out of Confederation just as we had a referendum on getting into Confederation. That kind of talk is not the answer and I do not endorse it, but neither do I endorse the kind of arrogant action by a federal Government that would give rise to that kind of arrogant reaction and anger. We expect an answer.

• (1805)

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) I wish to respond in greater detail to the question of October 14 from the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

The objective of the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance was to study thoroughly and impartially the unemployment insurance program and make recommendations to the Government to improve and simplify the program.

In the past few years, the Macdonald Royal Commission, the House Commission in Newfoundland and other studies have reviewed the unemployment insurance program. The recommendations of these several studies are not compatible in many instances. They were studies that were prescribed by the Liberal Party of Canada.

The Government does not endorse the Commission of Inquiry's or any individual report and will not respond directly and specifically to the details in them. All these reports, however, will be used as references in the Government's consideration of unemployment insurance.

Unemployment insurance in its present form is imperfect and adjustments are required. Our objective, as stated in the 1985 Budget, is to improve and simplify the unemployment insurance system to make it fairer and to ensure that it encourages opportunities in the labour market.

I want to emphasize, as did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget in May, 1985, that our purpose is not to reduce federal contributions to the unemployed. The main objective of unemployment insurance will always be to provide temporary income protection for unemployed workers. The unemployment insurance program should also be able to enhance work incentives and prospects for long-lasting and productive employment. The Government has embarked on such a program.

The Government will listen to the public debate that will follow these studies and will return to the House by May 15 with the Government's proposals.

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are no points of order. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—LIFTING OF SANCTIONS AGAINST SOVIET UNION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the announcement that the Canadian Government decided to restore cultural, educational, scientific and technical contracts with the Soviet Union led me to question the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) as to the reasons for his decision and the timing of the announcement. As my hon. colleagues will recall, the sanctions were imposed in order to censure the Soviets for their invasion of Afghanistan.

The Minister responded to my question by stating that while the sanctions were successful when first imposed, it was time to consider using other instruments in order to change the practices of the Soviet Government. He has stated his belief that sanctions against the U.S.S.R. do not work.

Almost simultaneously, the Minister has imposed sanctions against South Africa and on numerous occasions has stated his belief in their effectiveness. This would appear to be a contradiction and I would welcome the Minister's further elaboration on why sanctions work against South Africa and not against the Soviet Union.

If we accept the premise that sanctions were originally imposed to lend moral weight to our opposition to the Soviet invasion and illegal occupation of Afghanistan, then the question is raised: have circumstances in Afghanistan improved to warrant withdrawal from our earlier position? I submit that circumstances have not improved in Afghanistan since 1980. As a matter of fact, they have worsened significantly.

The United Nations Human Rights Commission, Amnesty International, and Helsinki Watch have all reported numerous documented human rights violations and that violations by the Soviet and regime forces continue on a massive scale. The Soviets have mounted reprisal attacks and an indiscriminate air and artillery bombardment. The use of anti-personnel mines has been widespread. Bombs have been concealed in pens, soap, matchboxes and bundles of bank notes. For more than a year now we have had proof of the most horrendous of their activities, the use of butterfly shaped bombs disguised as toys whose primary target are children.

• (1810)

Canada's Ambassador to the United Nations, Stephen Lewis, has stated: "It is inconceivable that in 1986 any invading army, no matter what the circumstances, no matter what the provocation, would use such weapons against innnocent children. But it is being done. It suggests a sickness equivalent to depravity".

There is no question that Afghanistan has become one of the great horrors of our time, a scene of devastation, torture, massacre and famine. Surely, in light of the Soviet Government's role in these atrocities, Canada should be considering strengthening our stance in opposition to the U.S.S.R., not weakening it. The United Nations has put the number of official political murders at 12,000 and disappearances at 9,000. Amnesty International adds another 4,500 unofficial "liquidations". About one half millon people have been reduced to a state of famine. Total casualties amount to over one million while 4.5 million refugees have fled the country. These figures are appalling, yet the international community seems to be reluctant to intensify pressure against the aggressive and repugnant tactics adopted by the Soviet Government. The United Nations Human Rights Commission Report of February 1986 sums up the situation. It concludes: "Continuation of the military solution in Afghanistan will lead to a situation approaching genocide".

It is clear that Canada must not forget with whom we are dealing. To suggest that the pursuit of normal relations with the Soviet Union will allow us to exert a more effective influence on the Soviets vis-à-vis Afghanistan, is to, and I quote from the Minister's own statement at the CSCE Conference in Vienna: "—forget that one participating state, U.S.S.R., has over the past seven years violated virtually all principles guiding relations between states".

The time for questioning the effectiveness of sanctions has passed. Canada has a duty and responsibility to uphold sanctions until such time as the Soviets cease their illegal occupation of Afghanistan.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs in answer to my question stated that sanctions have helped to galvanize world opinion on Soviet atrocities in Afghanistan. He was correct in this assessment and I urge him to once again focus international attention on the abhorrent situation in Afghanistan by setting an example of Canadian commitment and opposition to Soviet aggression. Canada has a moral obligation to do so.

In accepting the Nobel Peace Prize last year, Elie Wiesel said:

> We must always take sides, neutrality helps the oppressor, never the victim. Silence encourages the tormentor, never the tormented . . . When human lives are endangered, when human dignity is in jeopardy, national borders and sensitivities become irrelevant. Whenever men and women are persecuted because of their race, religion or political views, that place must, at that moment, become the centre of the universe".

Will the Minister accept this noble challenge on behalf of Canada? And will he act to ensure that Canada's opposition to the unconscionable Soviet occupation of Afghanistan is expressed by strong and tangible action? Will he reimpose sanctions against the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know of no Minister more aware of the cowardice of the neutrality position than the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I welcome the Hon. Member's intervention and his expansion on his earlier question.

• (1815)

In response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan the Government did in fact introduce, in concert with similar actions by our NATO allies, sanctions designed to demonstrate our condemnation of this unjustified act of military aggression. As was stated before by the Secretary of State for External Affairs: "These sanctions were successful at the time because they helped galvanize world opinion against the Soviet actions in Afghanistan". They were also intended to warn the Soviet Union against further adventures of this kind.

It is clear, though, that by their very nature many of these sanctions could only be temporary since high-level dialogue, wider contacts and greater co-operation are all necessary in order to develop more secure and broadly-based East-West relations. In deciding to resume our academic, scientific and cultural exchanges with the Soviet Union, we not only acted in accord with our efforts to contribute to better East-West relations, we also took into account our own interests and needs. The program we have drawn up is very much on a mutually profitable basis.

Moreover, the resumption of these exchanges at last puts Canada in a similar position to its NATO allies, many of whom did not suspend such exchanges. In fact, since Afghanistan, Canada has been generally more conservative than many of its NATO allies in the reinstatement of suspended programs.

With respect to Afghanistan, we are bringing pressure to bear on the Soviet Union by other means. We do not accept the continued Soviet military intervention in that country nor its flagrant violations of human rights.

We are working hard to ensure a continuing and increasing international pressure on the U.S.S.R. vis-à-vis Afghanistan. The statements by the Secretary of State for External Affairs during the Shevardnadze visit and at the opening of the CSCE review meeting in Vienna leave absolutely no doubt about that.

While our sanctions against the U.S.S.R. were meant as a political signal that would have an immediate impact on that country, our sanctions against South Africa are intended to convince the South African authorities that they should change their policies. Because of a different political and economic context, and South Africa's greater vulnerability, we believe there exists a possibility of real progress. We are hopeful that in his visit to that part of the world the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be able to bring about some meaningful progress. I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention.

NATURAL RESOURCES—UTILIZATION OF NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK COAL IN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR STUDY. (B) REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight with regard to a question I posed to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on December 10, 1986. At that time I asked about the utilization of Nova Scotia coal and New Brunswick coal in Ontario. At the time I was somewhat amazed, but not really surprised, that the Government had taken upon itself the initiation of a coal utilization study for western Canadian low-sulphur coal. With respect to the substance of the matter, I am happy to see that research and development in this very important area will take place, and has taken place, in terms of coal technologies and the utilization of coal.

But there is another region of the country that deserves some consideration by the Government of Canada. When the federal Department of the Environment, the Department of Transport and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources combine their resources to look at one region of the country and purposefully forget about another entire region of the country whose coal reserves are somewhat substantial, then I say that something must be done. Indeed, the economic base of eastern Nova Scotia has been predicated on the utilization of coal, not only for the purposes of export markets, but also for the production of power in the Province of Nova Scotia. On that very day I directed a question to the Deputy Prime Minister as to whether any consideration was or will be given to the utilization of coal from the Atlantic area. He was not in a position to give me an undertaking, but he took it under advisement. I hope that today the Parliamentary Secretary or his representative will give the House a clear undertaking and commitment that studies will commence forthwith into the utilization of coal from eastern Nova Scotia and parts of New Brunswick, both for the purpose of Ontario Hydro and the purpose of the added-on value that will take place as a result of new coal technologies which may result from any investigation.

It is high time that the Government of the day stopped playing cheap, dirty politics in placing one region against another. To those of us who reside in Atlantic Canada, it seems that we are the brunt and the goat with regard to national policies taken by the Conservative Government of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

I wish to give you two other examples, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) placed a 30 per cent tax on the importation of Christmas trees from the United States. Who does it affect most negatively? The Province of Nova Scotia. What about the sovereignty issue with regard to the giving of the nine factory freezer licences to France to fish in an area in Newfoundland where Newfoundlanders have been told that they must conserve?

Now when we look at a Canadian resource, the Government has totally abandoned and forgotten eastern Nova Scotia, which is a region whose economic livelihood has been based on the utilization of coal. We are not asking for anything to which we are not entitled. We are just asking for fair treatment for the future so that the coal industry in those communities can be buttressed and embellished to create new jobs and wealth for the people in that area. How can it be done if the national Government refuses to recognize its importance, and refuses to spend dollars for research and development and the utilization of our coal in both domestic and international markets? It is very difficult to achieve those objectives that all people would like to see in eastern Nova Scotia, particularly in industrial Cape Breton.

I am disappointed that to date the Government has only moved on one front, that is for western coal. I am not against western Canadians. I am for western Canadians. But I am also for Atlantic Canadians. We do not like this unfair treatment. I echo those words not in a partisan way. There are members and union representatives of the United Mine Workers of America who have written to the Prime Minister, asking him to deliver on his election promises of 1984 and come up with an eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Canadian low sulphur coal utilization study. Who knows what the results of that study may be. They may be very good for the economy of Canada. But stop forthwith this playing of one region against another. It is unfair, un-Canadian, and in breach of the intent of the Canadian Constitution which quite clearly states that all Canadians notwithstanding where they may reside should have an equal economic opportunity.

I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Parliamentary Secretary who will be responding tonight: Give us some answers. Give us an undertaking that you will utilize our coal in eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Stop playing one region against the other region because it is fundamental to the economic well-being of eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary, who I know has a great interest in energy-related matters, to give me that undertaking not two weeks from now, but tonight on the floor of the House of Commons.

• (1825)

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is reprehensible that the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) would demean a very sincere representation he made to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on December 10 by his rhetoric tonight.

In response to a question in the House on December 10, 1986 from the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond, the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that he would take into consideration the Hon. Member's representation to consider the utilization of eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick coal in the Province of Ontario by Ontario Hydro.

As the Hon. Member knows, references the Deputy Prime Minister has made to western Canadian coal have been in response to the joint federal provincial task force on the use of western Canadian low sulphur coal in Ontario that was tabled in August of last year. This report was initiated in response to important environmental considerations, particularly acid gas emissions that result from the use of high sulphur coal.

As Ontario Hydro has to reduce its acid gas emissions by 50 per cent by 1994, the two levels of Government agreed to study the potential to meet these requirements by utilizing low sulphur coal in Canada. As well, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has been meeting with all concerned parties in order to work toward a possible solution to some existing barriers to the project. The Deputy Prime Minister has met with union officials, Ontario Hydro officials, federal officials, and next month he will be meeting with Premier Peterson in order to discuss this proposal.

There are, for instance, transportation costs that must be dealt with in order to make this project a reality. Through the National Transportation Act we can reduce the unit costs in our transportation industry, whether it be by rail or lake vessel. We can be more competitive and attract more business, such as this, and ultimately create more jobs.

This project is one which this Government supports and one which I am sure the Hon. Member understands is good for the economy, good for the environment and good for Canadians.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond suggested that the Government consider eastern coal from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Certainly this is an idea worth considering which, if possible, would also be good for regional development reasons and create jobs in a very depressed area. The environmental concerns that are the driving force behind the decision to use low sulphur coal in Ontario are, of course, central to the development of any proposal.

Officials are investigating the possible use of low-sulphur coal from regions in Canada and whether there are these important environmental benefits. I know all Parties support a proposal which will reduce environmental concerns and create important jobs across the country, and our Government has taken the lead to ensure that this can become a reality.
