Our Christian Heritage.
Some time ago we had occasion to ask whether it was possible to be sincere in one's belief and faithful to its principles without offending the religious susceptibilities of others. An affirmative answer to that question (in so far, at least, as what is generally regarded as orthodox Christianity is concerned) has come to us quite recently in the shape of a remarkable book, written by one of the highest dignitaries in the Catholic Church. The author may be regarded as a signal example of the broadening tendencies of this age—tendencies which we naturally expect to find more evident and emphatic in the new than in the old. Still in the prime of riper middle age, for he was born in 1832, in the city whose name he bears, he holds the title of Cardinal Gibbons has had a succession of promotions which reminds us of the career of another Cardinal who served an earthly Pope. He was admitted to the priesthood in 1852, and four years later he was consecrated Bishop of Richmond. In May, 1870, he became coadjutor to the Archbishop of Baltimore (Dr. Bradley), who he succeeded before the close of the year. In 1885 he presided at the third Plenary Council at Baltimore, and in 1886 he was raised to the dignity of Cardinal. Those (outside of Italy) who attain this high distinction are generally more than churchmen. It was considered a compliment to England when Dr. Manning and Archbishop Moran were elevated to the same commanding height, the choice in each case was accepted as a compliment to the country in which the ecclesiastical dignitary resided. Our readers may recall the congratulations which greeted the selection of our own esteemed fellow-countryman for so high a distinction. It was felt, without regard to the fact that a son of Canada had reflected lustre on his native land and that the whole Dominion shared in the honor. In all these instances the choice fell on typical representatives of the communities in which they ruled, and of none of them is this more true than of the New World prelate. Cardinal Gibbons is proud of being an American. The land of his birth has his fondest, his most earnest thoughts, and in the work to which we would call attention his patriotism is as noteworthy as his religious fervor. The title of his already familiar to our readers. He calls it "Our Christian Heritage," because he holds that Christianity is the heart and soul of our civilization. It is hardly necessary to say that the book is not polemical. Only a man who had been accustomed to think generously of his "separated brethren" could have written that stirring and practical work in so unassuming a style. The Last Rag of Religious Disabilities.
A bill has been drafted and printed and will shortly be introduced to the English House of Commons which has for its purpose the removal of the last vestige of religious disabilities—a bill to remove the disabilities of Roman Catholics to hold the offices of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. It has been jointly prepared and brought in by Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. John Morley, Sir Horace Lundy and Mr. Asquith. Mr. Gladstone in his public speech some time ago drew attention to the anomalous nature of this proscription, and the point he raised was touched on in reply by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach at that time, who said that the disability remained merely because no one had made a proposal to remove it. Later it was referred to by the Marquis of Ripon in his speech at Nottingham last month. "There are," he said, "a few survivors of disabilities of a curious kind. One is that of all the offices in the world which cannot be filled by a Catholic is the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland, and there is yet another high office which a Catholic cannot by law hold, and that is the office of Lord Chancellor of England. This curious state of things is now seen—that the most eminent advocate of the day, my learned friend Sir Charles Russell, is not at the present moment eligible for the highest position of his profession. But those are things which have not been set right, simply because no party has given itself the trouble to set them right, and if they are only taken up by the public I have every confidence that they will be remedied."
What applies to Sir Charles Russell in relation to the Lord Chancellorship applies as fully to Lord Ripon in the case of the Lord Lieutenancy. It is a witness that the Liberal party is within measurable distance of a return to power, for the significance of the bill consists in this—that Sir Charles Russell and Lord Ripon, who are Catholics, are the two men within the Liberal ranks to whom all eyes are turned as the most fit persons to occupy the offices in question. What attitude the government will assume towards the bill is not known yet, but if, at the command of its Orange contingent, it places itself in such a position as to be regarded as an enemy, the bill is, of course, certain to encounter the closest scrutiny, but so carefully have its provisions been framed that criticism on even such delicate points as the Lord Chancellor's clerical patronage, seems to be already discredited and disarmed. For example, it is provided that the right of presentation to the office of Lord Chancellor shall be exercised (so long as the Lord Chancellorship is held by a Catholic) by the archbishops of Canterbury and York in their respective provinces, and in each case, the ceremony of appointment shall be carried out by the Lord Chancellor. The List About Father Damien.
We are glad to observe that the Liverpool Courier, a journal with which we are so warmly acquainted, has been crying shame on the detractors of Father Damien. Our only surprise has been that any one, much less one who professes to be a Christian, should have been so found willing to put his name to such standers. But Mr. Clifford's letter in a recent issue of the Telegraph, disposed of them for good and all. Mr. Clifford says that when he was in the Sandwich Islands he had heard certain "foist attacks" on Father Damien's character, and that he made it his business to inquire into the matter. He questioned officials and persons who were "unfriendly" to the good priest. All of them admitted that the evidence for these rumors was worthless, and Mr. Clifford "had abundant evidence" that Father Damien was "a pure and good man." He came to the conclusion "that the reports must be entirely 'disbelieved.' As to the slander of the priest's personal want of cleanliness in his house, Mr. Clifford denies it from his own observation; and he mentions the official report of the health board of the Sandwich Islands, which contains an account of the good done by Father Damien to the lepers. It is the Rev. Mr. J. J. Clifford's character, and the character of the journals which first circulated these calumnies, that have suffered in the public estimation, not Father Damien's.—Liverpool Catholic Times.

The Church in Mexico.
The churches of Mexico were once the richest in the world. The wealth of quarries and mines was unostentatiously employed in their construction and adornment. Every parish church, every convent and shrine, as well as every great cathedral, was a marvel of native handiwork and matches artistic skill. The conquerors unobtrusively brought much wealth to the land of the Aztecs, but they also brought many blessings, chief among which was the true faith of Christ. Their piety led to the building of the most magnificent churches and cathedrals, the grandest church edifices trace their history back to the old Spanish days. But, alas, many of the one-gorgeous temples have been pillaged, others have been converted from their religious uses into barracks and warehouses, others still have been leveled to the ground—and all this in the name of law at the instance of despotic rulers. There are 6,000 churches remaining in this republic—not too many for 10,000,000 Catholics. Within the last quarter of a century number of bishops and priests were banished, and entire districts of people left without their spiritual guides. The priesthood, which has its hardships in every country, was here a doubly dangerous calling, and the ranks of the clergy were slowly recruited. At the present time there are but 2,500 priests to break the bread of life and to administer the sacraments. The church is supported mostly by voluntary contributions, but as the Catholics in many of the states are exceedingly poor, the church revenues are not abundant. There have been abolished under the civil constitution and valuable ecclesiastical property confiscated.

The Charlotteville Hospital.
UNDER the management of the Rev. Father Damien, a hospital for the cure of mental diseases, supported by all the convents for the treatment of such cases, is being conducted in the city of Charlotteville. The hospital is supported mostly by voluntary contributions, but as the Catholics in many of the states are exceedingly poor, the church revenues are not abundant. There have been abolished under the civil constitution and valuable ecclesiastical property confiscated.
