POETRY.

Love is Never Lost.
What was the song we sang together,
"You and I in the long lost time!"
Something to-day in the dreary weather
Brought back a strain of the tune;
And it carried me back to a moon-lit evening,
Roses, music, beautiful eyes;
You seemed an angel out of Heaven,
And I was in Paradise.
I think it was something that night we were singing
For only a strain of that song comes ringing
Into my life to-day.
Our bark on the sea of life have drifted
Widely asunder since that June night,
And clouds have gathered, and clouds
have lifted,
And days have been dark and bright.
But I think of the love that brightened
our May time,
Though lost and forgotten in time's
swift flow,
Has been with us always in night time and day time—
I think it is always so;
Love is never outlived completely—
Is never wasted or thrown away;
Some part of it lives and comes back to us sweetly,
Like the strain of that song to-day.
Words we forget, but a strain of the measure
Flows back to us ever, now and then,
In days of labor, or hours of pleasure,
As we move about with men,
And our steps keep time to it, beating, beating
Into our lives the measured time;
So ever and ever we go on repeating,
The song of our youth's glad prime.

SELECT STORY.

A Life for a Love.
BY L. T. MEADE.

"Nurse, is anything the matter? You don't look well."
"That's it, madam. I'm not ill in body, but I'm sore fretted in mind. Now, baby, darling, don't you put your dear ma to trial. The fact is, ma'am, and sore I am to say it, I'm afraid I must leave this precious child."
"Nurse!"
Valentine's arms dropped away from baby; baby raised his own curly head, and fixed his brown eyes on the woman, his rosy lips parted.

"Sore I am to say it, ma'am," repeated Annette, "but there's no help. I've put off the evil day all I could, ma'am; but my mother's old, and my own boy has been ill, and she says I must go home and see after them both. Of course, madam, I'll suit your convenience as to the time of my going, and I hope you'll get some one else as will love the dear child. Come to bed, master baby, dear; your mother wants to go down to dinner."

A few days after this, as Helps was taking his comfortable breakfast, cooked to perfection by Cherry's willing hands, he raised his eyes suddenly, looked across at his daughter Esther, and made a remark.

"I'm told poor young madam is in no end of a taking."
"What young madam, father?"
"Mrs Wyndham. The nurse is going and the child has got whooping cough. He's had, too, poor little 'un, and frets about the nurse like anything. My master's in a way, too; he's wrapp'd up in that little lad. It was he told me; he said perhaps you'd know of a nurse as would suit, Esther."
"Don't stare so, Cherry," said Esther. "Anybody would think father was talking of ghosts, to see the likeness of your eyes. Well, father, yes, I'll think about a nurse. I'm sorry the child is ill."
"Don't you go and get a nurse from the slums," retorted Cherry. "You're all slums, you are. My word, I am having a time since that new lodger took possession."
Here Cherry passed to pour fresh water into the tea-pot. Esther and her father exchanged frightened glances.

"Brother Jerome, indeed!" proceeded this energetic young person. "He's a mighty uneasy sort of Brother Jerome. His good deeds don't seem to quieten him, anyway. And why does he always keep a hat stuck on his head, and never raise it when he passes me on the stairs. I know I'm broad and I'm stout, and I've no looks to boast of, but it's meant for men to raise their hats to women, and I don't see why he shouldn't. Then at night he walks the boards overhead, for recalls half so dramatic as I did, because I can't go to sleep unbroken."

"Your tongue ain't stopped, anyway," said Jerome, almost crossly. "Esther, you'll think about the nurse for young madam."
He rose, and went to the room.
Esther sat still a little longer. She heard Cherry rattling the plates in the kitchen. Presently she got up, put on her bonnet and called good-bye to her mother, and went out. There could scarcely be a better Sister of the Poor than Esther Helps. She was near enough to them socially to understand their sorrows. She had never known starvation, but she could take in what they meant—their mode of speech was comprehensible to her, she was sufficiently unfastidious to go into their dirty rooms, to witness their unclean, semi-savage ways without repulsion. She liked the life, it suited her, and her it. She was the kind of woman to be popular as a district visitor. She had abundance of both sympathy and tact. When her sympathies were aroused, her manners could be affectionate. In addition, she had a very lovely face. The poor of East London adore beauty; it comes so rarely near them in any case that they look upon it as an incalculable treasure. The women and children liked to watch Esther when she talked and when she smiled. The men treated her with the respect due to a regal presence.

Esther went down as usual to her mission work to-day. Sister Josephine the head of this branch of work, greeted the handsome girl with a smile when she came in, drew her aside, and spoke to her about a particularly difficult undertaking which was soon to be commenced. This undertaking would require the utmost tact and talent; the sister asked Esther if she would be willing to become the head of the movement.

"I don't know anyone more suitable," she said in conclusion. "Only if you come, you must consent to sleep away from home. Some of our work—our principal work—will take place at night."
Esther's clear ivory-tinted skin became a shade paler. She looked full at the sister with troubled but unshrinking eyes.

"You do me a great honor," she said. "But I am afraid I must decline it. At present I cannot sleep away from home. It is also possible—yes, it is quite possible—that I may have to give up the work altogether for a time."
"Esther, are you putting your hand to the plough and looking back?"
"I don't know, Sister Josephine. Perhaps I am."
The sister laid her hand solemnly on the girl's arm.

"Esther, if you love anyone better than God, you have no right to come here," she said.

Then she turned away and walked sorrowfully down the long mission room. She was disappointed in Esther Helps, and though Esther's own heart never faltered, she felt a sharp pang pierce it.

That night she came home late. "Has Brother Jerome come in?" she asked Cherry.

"No. How you do fash about that man! His supper's waiting for him, and I saw to his fire. Now I'm going to bed. I'm dead tired."
"Do, Cherry. I'll sit up for Brother Jerome."
"Ask him, for goodness sake, not to march the boards so frequent. He'll have my grey hairs to account for. He's picked up a cough, too, and because of the creaking of the boards, and the coughing, I have nice nights lately."
"You study too much, Cherry, or you wouldn't mind such little noises. Now go to bed, dear. I'll give Brother Jerome a hint."
"Good-night, Esther. Uncle's been in bed an hour or more. I hope that brother of the slums won't keep you long."
Cherry ran upstairs, and Esther went into the bright warm little kitchen. She left the door wide open, and then she sat and waited.

The substance of Sister Josephine's words rang in her ears.

"If you love anyone better than God, you have no right to come here."

God? No, no, impossible. A man had influenced her life, and because of his influence she had given herself up, soul and body, to God's service. How could she love the man best? He had only pointed to the higher way.

Then she heard his step outside; his latch key in the door, and she felt herself tremble. He went straight upstairs, never glancing in the direction of the kitchen; as he went he coughed, and his cough sounded hollow. His figure, never remarkably upright, was much bent.

Esther waited a few minutes; then, her heart going pit-a-pat, she crept very softly upstairs, passed her own room and Cherry's, and knocked at Wyndham's door.

He came and opened it.
"Can I speak with you, brother?"
"Certainly. Come in, Esther?"
The attic had been converted into a wonderfully snug apartment. The bed and washing apparatus were curtained off, and the part of the room which surrounded the hearth revealed a bright fire, a little table on which a tempting cold supper was spread, and a deep easy chair.

"Sit down, brother," said Esther, "and eat. Let me help you. I can talk while you eat your supper. Are you very tired to-night? Yes, I am afraid you are dreadfully tired."
"I am always tired, Esther. That is in the condition of things."
He sank back into his chair as if he were too weary to keep out of it. Then, with a dash of the old Gerald Wyndham in his eyes and manner, he sprang up.

"I was forgetting myself. Will you sit here!"
"What do you take me for, Mr.—Brother Jerome, I mean. I have come up here to see you eat, to see you rest, and to—talk to you."
"Esther, I have no words to thank you. You are, yes, you are the noblest woman I know."
She flushed all over; her eyes shone. "And isn't that thanks for ever and ever?" she said in a voice in which passion trembled.

Wyndham did not notice. He had taken off his hat, and Cherry's good napper stood by his side. He ate a little, then put down his knife and fork.

"Ain't you hungry, sir?"
"No. At first, when I came here, I was so starved that I never could eat enough. Now I am the other way, not hungry at all."
"And, sir, you have got a cough?"
"Yes, I had a very bad wetting last week, and a cough is the result. Strange. I had no cough when I slept out of doors."
"Mr Wynd—Brother Jerome, I mean, you wouldn't go back to that old life? Say you wouldn't go back."
The almost anguish in her voice penetrated for the first time to Wyndham's ear. He gave her a startled glance, then said with warmth:—
"Esther, you and your father have been good Samaritans to me; as long as it is safe I will stay with you."
"It shall and must be safe. Who would look for you here, of all places, when they think you are buried under the waves of the sea?"
"That is true. I expect it is perfectly safe for me to stay."
He lay back in his chair, and gazed into the fire; he had almost forgotten Esther's presence.

"And you like it—you feel happier since you came?" she asked, presently, in a timid voice.

"What did you say?"
"Mr Wyndham," the forbidden name came out with a burst, "do tell poor Esther Helps that you are happier since she found you."
She had fallen on her knees, the tears were streaming from her eyes; she held out her hands to him.

"Oh," she said, "I would give my life for yours."
In a moment Wyndham's dreamy attitude left him; he sprang to his feet all alive and keen and watchful. He was the old Wyndham; his eyes were full of pity, which made his whole face radiant.

"Hush," he said. "Get up. Don't say any more. Not another word—not a syllable. You forget yourself. Esther, I saved you once—I must save you again. Sit there, and be there."

truth. Esther, I said just now that you were the noblest woman I know. You must go on being noble. I will stay here on that condition."
"Oh, sir, will you?" Poor Esther would have liked to shrink through the very boards. "Will you forgive me, sir?"
"Hush; don't talk about forgiveness. There is nothing to forgive. Esther, I will show you how much I trust you. I will talk to you about my wife. I will tell you a little of my story; I mean the part I can tell without implicating others."

CHAPTER XLII.
Esther was now seated in the easy chair; Wyndham stood by the mantelpiece. He had got a shock, and that shock had given him strength, and a good deal of his old manner.

"Esther," he said, "I cannot tell you all the story, but some of it I should like you to hear. You are a friend to me, Esther, and the part that relates to myself I will confide to you."
"Sir, I know the other part; you have been the victim of a wicked man."
"Hush; I don't wish to speak about anyone but myself. I don't blame anyone but myself. I loved a woman, Esther Helps, so much better than myself that for her sake I resolved to die to the world. I need not give you the reason of this. It seemed to me necessary for her happiness that I should do this; and I did not think it too much to do. I married my wife knowing that the great love I had for her was not returned. This seemed all for the best, as when I died, as die to all appearance—I should, her heart would not be broken. She could continue to live happy and honored. Do you follow me?"
"Yes, sir, yes. Are you tired?"
"Will you sit, Mr Wyndham?"
"I was never less tired. When I speak of my wife I feel as if a fresh vigor were coming into me. We were married, and I soon found that I had overtaxed my own resolve. In one particular I could not complete the sacrifice I had undertaken. I tried to make her love me, and for a time—short time—I thought I had succeeded."
The speaker paused, and the eagerness of his tone changing
"I failed. The heart that I most craved for was not to be mine. I tested it, but it did not respond. This was best, no doubt, but the fact preyed on me dreadfully. I went on board the Esperance, and then, God forgive me, the thought took possession of me, the idea overmastered me, that I would make my fictitious death real. Every thing had been carefully arranged with regard to my apparent death. That part implicates others, so I will not touch upon it. I resolved to make certainty doubly certain by dying in earnest. Thus my wife's future would be assured. My death would be real, the thing that might come upon her would be averted for ever. I was in a condition when I could not balance right and wrong; but my intellect was sufficiently keen and sensible to make me prepare for the deed I contemplated. I took steps which would prevent anyone on board thinking that I had fallen overboard by design. My death would be attributed to the merest accident. Thus all was made absolutely safe. What is the matter, Esther?"
"Oh, Mr Wyndham! Oh, you frighten me. Did you—did you think of your soul, sir?"
"I did, Esther. But I loved my wife better than my hope of heaven. I resolved to risk even that for her. As I tell you, I had no sense of personal right or wrong at that time. You see that I am a very wicked man, Esther—no hero—a man who yielded to a dire temptation. I won't talk about this. The night came, and I dropped into the water. There was a storm that night. It was dark, but now and then the stars could be seen through the rifts of the clouds. As I leapt overboard I looked up, and saw the bright nose of the Southern Cross. Then I went under. The great waves closed over my head. The next instant I came to the surface only possessed with one fierce frantic desire, to save the life I meant to throw away. Better be a living dog than a dead lion, I said to myself. Then I saw the light of the

In one particular I could not complete the sacrifice I had undertaken. I tried to make her love me, and for a time—short time—I thought I had succeeded."
The speaker paused, and the eagerness of his tone changing
"I failed. The heart that I most craved for was not to be mine. I tested it, but it did not respond. This was best, no doubt, but the fact preyed on me dreadfully. I went on board the Esperance, and then, God forgive me, the thought took possession of me, the idea overmastered me, that I would make my fictitious death real. Every thing had been carefully arranged with regard to my apparent death. That part implicates others, so I will not touch upon it. I resolved to make certainty doubly certain by dying in earnest. Thus my wife's future would be assured. My death would be real, the thing that might come upon her would be averted for ever. I was in a condition when I could not balance right and wrong; but my intellect was sufficiently keen and sensible to make me prepare for the deed I contemplated. I took steps which would prevent anyone on board thinking that I had fallen overboard by design. My death would be attributed to the merest accident. Thus all was made absolutely safe. What is the matter, Esther?"
"Oh, Mr Wyndham! Oh, you frighten me. Did you—did you think of your soul, sir?"
"I did, Esther. But I loved my wife better than my hope of heaven. I resolved to risk even that for her. As I tell you, I had no sense of personal right or wrong at that time. You see that I am a very wicked man, Esther—no hero—a man who yielded to a dire temptation. I won't talk about this. The night came, and I dropped into the water. There was a storm that night. It was dark, but now and then the stars could be seen through the rifts of the clouds. As I leapt overboard I looked up, and saw the bright nose of the Southern Cross. Then I went under. The great waves closed over my head. The next instant I came to the surface only possessed with one fierce frantic desire, to save the life I meant to throw away. Better be a living dog than a dead lion, I said to myself. Then I saw the light of the life. Esther, I said just now that you were the noblest woman I know. You must go on being noble. I will stay here on that condition."

"Oh, sir, will you?" Poor Esther would have liked to shrink through the very boards. "Will you forgive me, sir?"
"Hush; don't talk about forgiveness. There is nothing to forgive. Esther, I will show you how much I trust you. I will talk to you about my wife. I will tell you a little of my story; I mean the part I can tell without implicating others."

CHAPTER XLII.
Esther was now seated in the easy chair; Wyndham stood by the mantelpiece. He had got a shock, and that shock had given him strength, and a good deal of his old manner.

"Esther," he said, "I cannot tell you all the story, but some of it I should like you to hear. You are a friend to me, Esther, and the part that relates to myself I will confide to you."
"Sir, I know the other part; you have been the victim of a wicked man."
"Hush; I don't wish to speak about anyone but myself. I don't blame anyone but myself. I loved a woman, Esther Helps, so much better than myself that for her sake I resolved to die to the world. I need not give you the reason of this. It seemed to me necessary for her happiness that I should do this; and I did not think it too much to do. I married my wife knowing that the great love I had for her was not returned. This seemed all for the best, as when I died, as die to all appearance—I should, her heart would not be broken. She could continue to live happy and honored. Do you follow me?"
"Yes, sir, yes. Are you tired?"
"Will you sit, Mr Wyndham?"
"I was never less tired. When I speak of my wife I feel as if a fresh vigor were coming into me. We were married, and I soon found that I had overtaxed my own resolve. In one particular I could not complete the sacrifice I had undertaken. I tried to make her love me, and for a time—short time—I thought I had succeeded."
The speaker paused, and the eagerness of his tone changing
"I failed. The heart that I most craved for was not to be mine. I tested it, but it did not respond. This was best, no doubt, but the fact preyed on me dreadfully. The Wheat Crop.

The wheat crop, which is now being harvested in the North West, is phenomenal. The Toronto Globe's special correspondent says the farmers there are harvesting at the rate of 2,000,000 bushels per day.

Special Meeting of Town Council.

A special meeting of the Town Council was held on Friday evening last. Present—the Mayor, Couns. Starr, Porter and Collins, and the Recorder.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted: Whereas, since the meeting of this Council death has for the first time invaded our ranks and Almighty God in his infinite wisdom has taken from our midst Councillor J. B. Davison; therefore

Resolved that this Council take this the earliest opportunity to express their high appreciation of the late Councillor Davison and in his demise feel that they have lost a wise and valued member of the Board—who, notwithstanding the fact that he was ill much of the time, was ever ready to aid and assist in the business of the Town in any way possible.

Resolved that this resolution be engrossed upon the Record books of the Town as a mark of our respect and esteem for the late Councillor, and also that a copy of the same be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

Resolved that Sept. 10th, be the day for holding the election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Councillor Davison.

The Swimming Tournament.

Evangeline Beach presented a lively appearance last Saturday afternoon, on the occasion of the swimming tournament. Wolfville turned out in force and there was a big demand made upon the livery stables. Every team that could be pressed into service was in use and a number of persons who would have liked to have been there were unable to procure a conveyance.

When the ACADIAN arrived at the Beach the scene presented was a pretty one. The tide was well up to the banks which were lined with spectators. A raft for diving had been constructed and a number of boats were sailing along the beach. The gasoline launch, with a party on board, presented a pretty appearance. The buoys had been arranged in position and all was ready for the sports to begin.

First on the programme was a 150 yds. boys' race in which there were three contestants. The course was against wind and tide. This race was won by Harold Tufts in 4.30—with Wallace Hutchinson second.

The next event called was the men's short race, distance 75 yds. This was won after a good race, by E. W. Porter, with Stanley Gilmore in second place. Time 1.50.

The ladies' race, was the most interesting event of the day, and was won by Miss Cox, of Annapolis, in good style, Miss Aggie Johnson getting second place. The other competitors were: Mrs. A. H. Johnson, Miss Sherwood, Miss Lina Burgess and Miss DeWitt.

The Men's 300 yds. race closed the day's sport, E. W. Porter being again a winner, with H. D'Almeida and Stanley Jones finishing in the order named. Time 4.50.

An exhibition of diving and fancy swimming was given by some of our experts, which was enjoyed by the spectators.

An amusing feature of the afternoon was the arrival on the scene in a flat-bottomed boat of a colored gentleman with his wife (?), who afforded no small amount of amusement for the young people.

The visitors had a drizzling rain for their drive homeward, but in spite of this the affair was voted a good time by all.

Merry Wedding Bells.

Wednesday evening the residence of Mrs Wm. O. Bishop, at Greenwich Ridge, was the scene of an exceedingly pretty wedding. The contracting parties were Mr Chas. W. Clark, of Hatley, Mass., and also engaged in the grocery business in the city of Boston. Mr Clark is a business man of rare talent. Miss May Bishop is the third daughter of the late Wm. O. Bishop who was a highly respected and very successful farmer on Greenwich Ridge. The wedding took place at 11 a. m. in the presence of some forty relatives and friends. The Rev. T. A. Higgins, pastor of the first Baptist church of Wolfville, officiated. The bride was dressed in pure white dotted swiss, and looked perfectly charming. She was given away by her brother, and her little sister acted as bridesmaid. The nuptial knot was tied under the old willow tree in front of the house. A large arch had been constructed with a ball hanging over the bride and groom. Immediately after the ceremony a wedding dinner was served after which the happy couple were driven by Mr W. J. Balcan's handsome pair of grays attached to the finest barouché in town, to Wolfville, where they took the west-bound Flying Bluebonnet amid showers of rice and good wishes. After a few weeks spent among the lofty hills of New Hampshire Mr and Mrs Clark will settle in their new home, No. 58 Cliff street, Roxbury, Mass. Com.

Letter of Condolence.

To Miss Margaret A. Davison and family of our late Brother Joseph Benjamin Davison, P. M. St. George's Lodge, No. 29, A. E. and A. M., B. N. S., in condolence, Greeting:—

As we, the Master, Wardens, officers and members of St. George's Lodge, revere from the performance of the last sad rites, committing the remains of our very esteemed Brother and your husband and father to the grave, cherishing his memory here, there flows sympathy to you, dear sister, our Brother's widow, and to your children, even as it naturally did when his death was announced.

With you we mourn his loss and chronicle his virtues—a warm man, an able mason, a good councillor, an upright man with whole hearted charity, a man who loved and feared and bowed the knee unto God, the Great Architect of the Universe, whom we reverently adore. He never shrank from his duties. Alas! our Brother; yet we believe his spirit has passed into the company of the faithful in that land from whose bosom no traveller returns.

We wish to be remembered to the far away one, Sidney, in Winnipeg; and to Bro. G. W. Cox, called away by duty from his wife in her sad comforting attendance on her father.

With tenderest expressions of sympathy and any kind act any of us can do for you, we remain in the fraternal ties of our order.

Very truly yours, ELIAS N. FAYERS,

IN DEEP DESPAIR.

A Montrealer Relates His Wonderful Experience.

He Had Tried Foreign and Local Physicians and was Operated Upon Without Success—By Willing's Pink Pills Cured. When all Other Medicines Failed.

Instances of marvellous cures by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are numerous, but the one related below is of special interest, owing to the peculiarity of the illness, and also to the fact that in the present instance the gentleman is well known in Montreal.

Mr. Charles Frank, inspector of the mechanical department of the Bell Telephone Co., at 371 Argyle street, and who resides at 54 Argyle Avenue, in an interview with a Herald reporter, related the following wonderful cure by the use of Pink Pills. Mr. Frank, who is 25 years of age, is a Russian by birth, exceedingly intelligent, speaks several languages fluently, and is now apparently in good health. "My illness came about in a peculiar way," said Mr. Frank. "Up to three years ago I was in the best of health. About that time while in Glasgow, Scotland, where I was employed as a clerk in a hotel, and while sealing on the Clyde, a storm came up, and I lost a pretty rough time of it for a while. I evidently must have injured myself internally, although I felt nothing wrong at the time. On my way home, however, I fell helpless on the street, and had to be conveyed home in a cab, as my legs were utterly unable to hold me up. I was confined to bed for several days in the same helpless condition, when I rallied, but found that my urine was of a strange reddish color. I called Caught in a Storm on the Clyde. In a physician, who prescribed, but did me no good. I then called on Sir George McLeod, M. D., who also prescribed and advised me to go to the hospital. I was averse to doing this, and he advised me then to try a change of climate, telling me that my bladder was affected. I acted on his suggestion as to change and came to Montreal. I did not do anything for about a year, as I wished to get cured. All this time my urine was tainted with blood, although I was suffering no pain, but this abnormal condition was a source of continual anxiety. I finally went to the General Hospital, where the physician in charge advised me to stay, which I did. After remaining there for five weeks with no benefit, a consultation of physicians was held and an operation was decided on. After the operation was performed I was no better, my condition remaining absolutely unchanged. From this point I was continually trying medicines and physicians, but derived no benefit from anything or anyone. I was in despair, as the physicians who had operated on me could not decide as to my trouble. I visited the hospital once more, and they said they would operate again; but I did not care to undergo a second and perhaps equally unsuccessful operation. Some physicians thought my trouble was consumption of the bladder, others that it was Bright's disease, but could not cure that strange bloody condition of my urine. "Finally I went to work for the Bell Telephone Co., some two years ago, where I worked myself up to my present position. But I was in a state of constant anxiety, as I felt myself getting weaker all the time, and was listless and sleepy and weak in the legs. I was also pale and ill-looking, no doubt owing to loss of blood. From a naturally cheerful man I became morose, and gave up all hopes of ultimate recovery. One Saturday, some months ago, while walking along Bleury street, having seen the advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the Montreal Herald, I stopped at John T. Lyons' drug store, and bought a box. I had tried so many medicines that I said to myself, 'If they don't cure me I can't be worse off than before.' After taking the first box I felt stronger and more cheerful, although there was no change in the bloody condition of my urine. But I felt encouraged and got three more boxes, determined to make a thorough trial of Pink Pills. After I had finished the second box I found my urine was getting clearer, and I continued the use of the Pills, taking two after each meal. When I had finished the third box my urine was quite clear, for the first time in three years. I was delighted, and continued taking the pills until I had finished six boxes. I am stronger now and have had no recurrence of the trouble, and as you can see, the flush of health shows itself in my face. To think that I was cured by the use of $3.00 worth of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills after trying a number of physicians and undergoing an operation in vain is a puzzle to me, and I am sorry that I didn't know about this grand medicine before. I would have willingly given $200 or $300 to have been guaranteed a cure by anyone. "I am willing," said Mr. Frank, in conclusion, "to see anyone who wishes to verify this interview, as I consider it my duty to my fellow-men and a matter of pride to the marvellous cure their ailments has effected. I have come to the conclusion that Pink Pills are the best blood builders in existence, and I think everyone should try them."

THE CATHOLIC TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union recently held a national convention in New York city. As this gathering celebrated the twenty-fifth year of its existence, it was accepted by the Catholic church as an occasion for some special demonstration in behalf of temperance reform. The presence of Mr. Bellotti at a service in St. Patrick's Cathedral, together with a sermon by Archbishop Ryan and the attendance of many notable dignitaries, bear witness to the interest felt by the Roman Church in the temperance movement. The attitude of its clergy has for some time past been very pronounced against the evils of the liquor traffic, and this convention cannot fail to result in adding somewhat to the weight of influence so recently exerted in New York city in favor of the enforcement of the Sunday closing law. The Boston Herald says: "The Catholic Total Abstinence Union has to deal with a portion of the community where the liquor selling interest is strongly entrenched, and it can do more to advance the temperance movement in its own circles than all the Protestant societies put together."

At this convention there was a majority and a minority report presented. In both a bitter attack was made on liquor sellers, and a strict Sunday excise law was advocated, but the minority report in addition to its resolutions of similar import condemned the Catholic monks of St. Vincent's Abbey for making beer and selling it. After much discussion the majority report was finally adopted. The following extracts are taken from a letter sent to the convention by Archbishop Ireland: "I have the vivid remembrance of our early conventions, when honors were held out to us by sparing and reluctant hands, and only our courage and our confidence in the virtue of the cause moved us to plan, resolve and do. Our work was deemed visionary, and the many kept sedulously aloof from us. We had no results on which to build our claims to public attention, and our hopes were treated often as dreams. You assemble to-day in the metropolis of America, where you are recognized as victors, to whom no praise comes unmerited, and to whom no manifestation of approval is refused. You have made the sin of intemperance odious as it should ever have been among Catholics. Liquor sellers know that their business as usually conducted in this country is frowned upon by the church. Entertainments and pleasure parties under the patronage of this Catholic organization are not disgraced by the presence of Honor, and public language among Catholics are held without the beer and wine bottles. All this has been the work of your union. Individual Catholics may yet to-day find it difficult to interpenetrate, but you minister to its spread, but the Catholic church as such, has in the eyes of the whole American people liberated herself from all alliances with intemperance, and with occasions leading to it, and she is proclaimed, even by men other than its unwelcome friends, to be the powerful advocate of sobriety and social virtue. The Catholic total abstinence union has merited and secured the solemn official approval of the church, which PLACES IT ABOVE THE REACH OF CARING CRITICISM, whether as to its aims or its methods. The third plenary council of Baltimore has blessed and sanctioned it, and the great Leo has addressed it a letter, in which he has incorporated in the volumes of official documents of the holy see, and he has opened in its favor the spiritual treasury of the church. Can it and its pontiff breathe with honor the banner of temperance which you hold aloft before the country in the 25th general convention of your union. Another quarter of a century opens before the union. Let it give itself well for the work which the golden jubilee will record. What advice shall I give you for your guidance? Words which I write in a former convention happen to be before my eyes. I repeat them. Be more than ever resolute and fearless. Let others who know you less than I do, and who confide less than I do in your intelligence and your sense of religion, talk to you of going slowly. I bid you go forward with steady and rapid steps. Let other caution against manichaeism and ghostly errors which fit some your minds. I caution you against the timidity which looks up in a suppliant the talents which God commands to make fruitful, and against the weakness which sometimes overcomes the soldier when the battle is nearly won and repulse victory by defeat."

Mr. Trotter—"Look here, didn't you guarantee that you would train that kicking horse of mine so that I could drive him just as well as you could? Celebrated horse trainer—"Certainly." Mr. Trotter—"But he kicked my buggy to pieces as soon as I got him home. Celebrated horse trainer—"Well, he kicked mine to pieces about five minutes before."

I think I'd like some corned beef and cabbage, said the freckled-faced young man. I got some here the other day and it was nasty good. Very sorry, sir, answered the waiter, but we haven't any corned beef to-day. You've got beef, haven't you. Yes, sir. Well, corn some, hang it! I ain't in any hurry, I'll wait.

Jones is always growin' at the world. Yes; made before he was born; and he didn't have a chance at it.

Hotelkeeper—"What's the matter here? You're just raising the deuce! Waiter—"No, sir; it just dropped the tray."

MINARD'S FAMILY PILLS are purely vegetable. I can forgive but never forget the whipping, said Tommy. That is just what I want you to do, said his mother.

I hear Donaldson is short in his accounts. Well, he may be short in his accounts but he is long enough in his payment.

Cherokee Vermifuge kills worms every time. He—Do you think blondes have more admirers than brunettes? She—I don't know. Why not ask one of the girls who have had experience in both capacities?

Tramp—"Madam, I'm d'arvin'! Kin I eat grass out here in 'st back yard?" Mrs. Housemaid—"Yes; but don't you stray over into that new pasture—we're to cut that for hay."

MINARD'S HONEY BALSM is a sure cure. Percy—"Don't two negatives make an affirmative?" Papa—"Yes, Percy." Percy—"I'm real smart." Papa—"Why?" Percy—"Because the teacher says I'm a 'know-nothing.'"

Do you love me? I said the paper bag to the sugar. I'm wrapped up in you, replied the sugar. You sweet thing, murmured the paper bag.

"Waterloo is avenged!" shrieked a jubilant Gaul when the French horse won the Derby. "Yes," growled a Briton who had laid against him; "you ran well in both cases."

MINARD'S HONEY BALSM, once tried, always used. Small Son—"It's funny about bridal pairs. They are not like other pairs at all." "Why not?" "Because they're softest when they are green."

She (excitedly)—"Oh, George, some woman on the car has stolen my purse!" He—"How do you know it was a woman?" She—"Why, I had it in the pocket of my dress."

An Arkansas City woman used concentrated lye instead of baking powder in her biscuits. Her husband ate of them and none of his friends have been able to put any dependence in what he said since.

Mamma—"Now, Teddy, to-day we must all try and give up something while times are so hard." Teddy—"I'm willing." Mamma—"What will it be dear?" Teddy—"Sleep."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla contains Iodide of Potassium and iron, and vegetable blood purifiers. The professor in the medical department of Columbia college asked one of the more advanced students: "The seal of the teeth that a human being gets last?" "False teeth, of course."

"Oh, yes, my husband has been a collector of curios and such things for a number of years." "Was he in that business when he married you?" "Yes, indeed." "I thought so."

The use of Hall's Hair Renewer promotes the growth of the hair, and restores its natural color and beauty, free from the smell of dandruff, tetter, and all impurities. Judge—"You say you are innocent. What then, were you doing with the watch if you did not intend to steal it?" Sam Johnson—"I just wanted ter wind it up for him, boss. Dat's de solemn troof. I can't tell a lie if I was ter for a week."

A Parallel Case. People in Detroit very interested in a Great Resemblance to Two Cases. Detroit, Mich., Aug. 26—Much interest has been manifested here over the recovery of Mr. G. H. Kent, of Ottawa, from Bright's disease by using Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which is now in universal use, and many people have a clear recollection of the similar case which occurred in London, Ontario, not long ago namely, that of Mr. Wm. Langley, who for some time was an inmate of Harper's Hospital here and was operated upon without effect by several Detroit physicians. It was owing to this connection with Detroit and the long accounts published in the press that so much interest was taken in the case, and led to such an enormously increased sale of the medicine.
