MABEL HOWARD, OF THE LYRIC.

CHAPTER XI
A STORY OF SHAME.

"She, and no other!" replied the signor, emphatically.

"It is a lie!" exclaimed Lord Clarence again.

Mr. Barrington motioned to him to be silent.

"Let us understand each other, if you please, Signor Ricardo!" he said, gravely. "You, whatever your ignorance of the English law may be, must be aware that this statement is of great and terrible importance to Miss Knighton—to my client!"

"Yes, I fear so!" said the signor.

"And you persist—you still repeat that it is your conviction that Mr. Knighton and the Signorina Corstia, the mother of Miss Knighton, were not married?"

"I do," said Ricardo.

"Slowly, surely, the significance of his words forced themselves upon the mind of the girl behind the curtain. She uttered no cry, scarcely moved; but one hand went to her heart, and the other to her brow, and so she stood, in an agony unexpressed, indescribable.

She was a Knighton; the Knighton blood ran in her veins; she had all the Knighton pride, and she had to realize that she was nameless, the daughter of an undying, ineradicable shame. What pen can describe the horror that fell upon her? It can only be imagined, and that, how faintly!

As she stood, leaning against the wall, white, almost breathless, the door opened softly, and Felice entered. She hurried toward Iris with quick and sharp alarm, but Iris held up her hand to silence her and motioned toward the curtain. The two women stood and listened.

Lord Clarence's voice broke upon their ears.

"I repeat, this is an infamous and—stupid lie!" he said, with contemptuous anger. "Mr. Barrington, I think we have listened long enough to this—this man's foolish story. I—I thought him a scoundrel the first time I saw him—"

Ricardo rose threateningly, then shrugged his shoulders and sank into his seat again.

"I forgive his lordship's language in consideration of the circumstances," he said, with a sinister smile. "What do you say, Mr. Barrington? Do you think my story so foolish and so false?"

Mr. Barrington looked at him sternly.

"I decline to give an opinion," he said. "I may think it false or true! How do you account for Mr. Knighton acknowledging Miss Iris as his daughter, and presenting her to the world as such?"

Ricardo waved his hand.

"Tut!" he said. "That is easy enough to explain. You, sir, are sensible and reasonable. I answer you willingly; to his lordship there, I delude no reply. Ask me first why Godfrey Knighton did not marry the signorina."

Mr. Barrington nodded.

"Because he was proud. Look you, he was an Englishman, great and noble by birth. He would not lower his name by giving it to an opera singer. You understand! Why did he not put the child away from him? Because, though he was so great and mighty, he was not inhuman. He loved her—kept her with him until it was too late to put her away and disown her. Then there was another thing. Yes! If he had no child, the property would go to one he hated—a Coverdale! He would do much to prevent that, and it was so easy to acknowledge this girl as his lawful daughter! So, you see, it is easily explained, is it not?" and he flicked his fingers triumphantly.

Clarence groaned and moved impatiently.

"Send this man away, sir, for Heaven's sake!" he said. "I can listen no longer to this tissue of lies!"

Mr. Barrington held up his hand once more.

"Signor Ricardo, your story is a plausible one; but I will not give you the opinion of it you asked for. I think it is utterly false!"

"Good!" said Ricardo, resignedly; "nobody will be better pleased than Baptiste Ricardo if he should prove to be wrong. Peste! have I not seen and admired the beautiful young creature? Am I not an old friend of her father's—her mother's? Why should I seek to do her harm? Saints and angels, no! But"—he gave a quick look at the lawyer's impassive face—"it is easy to prove the truth. Surely Mr. Barrington has discovered the marriage certificate among Godfrey Knighton's papers?"

Mr. Barrington's face grew red for a moment. He had been thinking of the certificate.

"He has not found it!" said Ricardo, smoothly.

"I have not found it," admitted the lawyer, grimly.

"Good. Then he has heard his old friend and client talk of his marriage; often, no doubt."

Clarence looked appealingly at the old lawyer.

Mr. Barrington shook his head.

"Mr. Knighton was not one to talk of the past in a loud, glib, glib way. Good! He has not heard him even speak of his wife? No! No certificate, no mention of the marriage. Why does, then, Mr. Barrington think I—I, Baptiste Ricardo, the soul of honor—? What does he think I have to gain?" and he extended his hands in indignant appeal.

CHAPTER XII
UNDER ARREST.

Mr. Barrington was silent for a moment.

"It is not for me to guess at your motives, Signor Ricardo," he said, at last, coldly.

"Good!" retorted Ricardo. Then he drew his chair a little nearer the table.

"And now you have heard my story, what will you do?" There was silence.

Clarence listened, spellbound by the man's voice and face, as a bird is fascinated by a serpent.

"I will tell you!" said Ricardo, lowering his voice. "Just go on as if I had not told my little romance. You think it is false; act accordingly. Let Miss Iris take all this beautiful place, and all this heap of gold and miles of land, and ask no questions."

He stopped, and watched the lawyer's face keenly.

There was silence.

"This Lord Hereon, this Lord Coverdale, who would come into the money and the lands, and all, why should he know anything about it, eh? Why should he be told? We keep our lips closed, and who is the wiser? So! Nobody!" and he twisted his moustache.

"As for Baptiste Ricardo, he is an honest man, and he has a tender heart, and rather than turn his old friend's daughter an outcast into the streets, he would cut off his hand. His lordship here, who has given me such hard words, he will not speak for his love, Miss Iris—is it not so?"

Clarence turned his head away.

"And you—why, you are a man of law, and men of law are proverbially silent. Come, my friends," he said, insinuatingly, "let us say no more about this matter, this romance of Italy! Let the beautiful Miss Iris take her money and her lands, and all will go as merry as a marriage bell!"

Mr. Barrington rose, plump and pale.

"Silence!" he said. "This story of yours, true or infamously false—and I believe it to be the latter—must be inquired into. My lord—and he turned to Clarence—"you know how true a friend I was of my late clients; you know that, as this man says, I would rather cut off my hand than injure his daughter, but"—the old lawyer's voice shook—"I have another client; I have Lord Coverdale to consider! I wish to Heaven I had not! But I must do my duty, I am an honest man, my lord. I trust, in all humility, that I have lived a long life without reproach. I have my honor to think of, and in honor I am bound to consider Lord Coverdale!"

Clarence passed his hand across his brow. The signor watched the two men as a cat might watch a pair of mice, a chisler smile in his eyes.

"It," continued the old lawyer, "if this man's story is true, then Lord Coverdale is the heir of Knighton and Beverley, and every penny of Godfrey Knighton's—this is, if no will can be found, and I fear it cannot!"

The signor shook his head sadly.

"What—what am I to do?" exclaimed Mr. Barrington, in deep agitation.

"One thing is clear. I must discover the truth or falseness of this man's statement. I will send—go to Italy, to this place—"

The signor interrupted him softly.

"Pardon me," he said, with a bland smile; "you can ascertain the truth much more easily than taking so long and tiresome a journey."

Mr. Barrington turned to him with a frown.

The signor wagged his forefinger impressively.

"If, gentlemen, you have paid close attention to my story, you will remember that I spoke of the signor's sister, who lived with them, and who was a second mother to the child, Miss Iris. Do you remember her?"

"Yes—well!" said Mr. Barrington, sternly.

"Well, gentlemen, the woman is in this house at the present moment. Her name is Felice!"

Mr. Barrington frowned to hide the start his announcement caused him.

"Felice," continued the signor, suavely. "She knows the truth. Send for her and ask her if Godfrey Knighton and Miss Iris' mother were married, and if so, by whom, and—where. Send for her."

Spain's Tragedy in Morocco.

"Spain seems to be in danger of losing what is practically the last of her Colonial Empire," says the Scotsman. She is fighting hard to retain her hold on Melilla, where, so long ago as 1597, she first planted her foot in Morocco, with the intention of making it the base of that great conquest of North Africa which the Catholic Sovereigns had planned as the sequel to the capture of Granada.

"It would be a curious example of the irony of history, if, as the enemies of the existing Government and political institutions of Spain are busy prophesying, and perhaps plotting, the fall of Melilla were to bring down along with it the Spanish Monarchy. Melilla has not yet fallen, however, though it appears to be hard beset. Its garrison are bravely defending it. While another reverse in North Africa would no doubt further imperil the unstable condition of Spanish politics and finance, the prediction that it will bring on a republic is probably founded chiefly on the wishes of the prophets.

"It may be said for Spain that if she first led into Morocco by ambition, she has remained there, and in late years has been pushed deeper into Moroccan territory, by force of circumstances and the incitations and example of other European Powers rather than by her own choice. The Spaniards have never yet set themselves in earnest to colonize and develop the African land that lies in sight of their own shores. The main reason may be that it has never repaid any outlay of blood or treasure they have expended upon it. The slices of territory they have acquired in the northern and in the southern part of the land of the Moors are the most unprofitable sections of what used to be the Sherifian Empire; France has fallen heir to the possession, or to the charge of the 'middle cut,' containing the most of what is of political and economic importance, and her title has been confirmed by the Versailles Treaty, which assigned to our Ally all the rights that Germany surprised and diplomatically acquired in the country. The financial, military, and the political situation at home might be eased if Spain could make up her mind to give up, until a more convenient season, attempting to keep order among the Rifles. The question will probably be settled as much by the movement of events in Madrid, Barcelona, and elsewhere in Spain, as by what happens in front of Melilla."

How the Japanese Wipe Out Insults.

Hara-kiri, or seppuku, the honourable death, is the Japanese method of wiping out insults.

Unlike our duels, there is no element of chance; and, unlike the old trial by ordeal, there is no appeal to a higher power. Hara-kiri means death. There is no escape. It is the royal road to immortality; it is the sure escape from disgrace.

It is short, it is painless, raised from a sin to become the virtue of heroism.

It is strange to us that an insulted man should deem his own death the EASY RIDING.

My car's so easy riding it gives no jar or shock, and in it I am gliding by the clock, and, as might be expected, my chores are oft neglected, and creditors, neglected, are wishing I would walk.

And every mile I travel provides new, pleasant thrills; but, as I throw the gravel, and climb the gentle hills, the morbid undertaker, the butcher and the baker, protest that I'm a fake who doesn't pay his bills. All day you see me striving to make speed laws a jest, and if I cease my driving to give the car a rest, I'm boned by merchant princes for pay for prunes and quinces, and every one evinces a spirit I detest.

Oh, why do men like tailors insist on being paid? And why so many waiters amid the marts of trade? Why do they always chatter of things that do not matter? Why do they splash and splutter in language that's decayed? "You ride in your four-wheeler," the village banker cries. "But you should pay the dealer from whom you bought your pie; if one has paid the tinner, the webster and the spinner, the seeder and the sower, the boy-riding then is wise. But if a man be owing for milk and garden sass, he then is wicked, moving his coin for sparkling gas; and this heebs are doing, all heedless they are choosing, while owing for the bling, alack, and eke ake."

Work Up Russia.

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir—Your editorial in yesterday's issue on the present low prices for Labrador fish combined with the poor demand for same, clearly demonstrate the great benefit the Russian market might be to Newfoundland at this time. Last week Sir John Aird the general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, reported in London that he found Germany busy making goods for Russia and obtaining gold payments. Now that the Prime Minister is home I trust the matter of sending a trade commissioner to Russia will be seriously considered and the possibilities of this market fully tested. Other countries are getting good business. Why not Newfoundland? Yours truly, WM. WHITE.

The members of the Poultry Association are holding a public meeting to-night in the school room at Middle Bight, near Kelligrewa, when addresses will be given on poultry culture. The meeting will be under the chairmanship of Rev. Hugh Feecey, and the speakers will be Messrs. A. J. Bayly, G. B. Williams, Walter Reid, F. Shields and W. P. Butler. This will be the first of a series of lectures which the Association proposes to give in the nearby settlements. It is expected that interest in the raising of a better class of poultry will be awakened when the advantages of having only first class stock are demonstrated.

Radium on Madagascar.

Radium bearing mineral deposits of remarkable richness have been located on Madagascar Island, following the first discovery of their presence a few years ago by a French scientist, M. Lacroix. A complex compound of the relatively rare elements titanium, columbium or niobium, and tantalum, dark brown in color and apparently peculiar to this island, constitutes the mother ore, which has been named "Betasite" from the district Betafo. While the radium content varies largely, some specimens of the mineral are found to contain as much as one-fourth grain per ton. Prospecting is done with an electroscopie and photographic plates, ore samples being wrapped in black paper and laid on the plates to test their radio-activity, which is readily determined by the relative extent of their effect on the sensitive emulsion.

England Has No Room for Ex-Emperor.

Possibly May be Exiled to Some Possession--Wirth Cabinet Sustained by Substantial Vote--French Chamber Has Confidence in Briand--Northcliffe Interviewed at Hong Kong.

KARL NOT WANTED. LONDON, Oct. 26. Under no circumstances will former Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary be allowed to come to England. This is the answer to-day in official circles to the reported desire of the ex-emperor to accept exile in the British Isles. Arrangements might be made, it was stated, for him to be exiled in some remote British possession, but in view of his airplane adventures from Switzerland last week, England is considered too close to Hungary to be a place of permanent exile.

WIRTH CABINET SUSTAINED. BERLIN, Oct. 26. The Reichstag to-night voted confidence in the Cabinet of Dr. Wirth by a vote of 270 against 152. The majority was made up of Majority Socialists, Independent Socialists, Catholics and Democrats.

GERMANY'S NEW CABINET. BERLIN, Oct. 26. Dr. Joseph Wirth to-day announced the personnel of the new Cabinet formed by him. It contains, in addition to Dr. Wirth, four Socialists, one Democrat, two Catholics and one of the old party. Upon making his announcement to the Reichstag, Chancellor Wirth declared that the new Government's viewpoint regarding Upper Silesia differed in no way from that of the preceding Government. He declared the German Government would protest against the recent decision of the Council of the League of Nations concerning Upper Silesia, on the grounds of the illegality of the allied Supreme Council having referred the question to the League of Nations. This procedure, he said, was not provided for by the Treaty of Versailles.

PREMIER BRIAND SUSTAINED. PARIS, Oct. 26. The policies of the Cabinet of Premier Briand were sustained by the Chamber of Deputies to-night when a vote of confidence resulted in 381 votes in favor of the Government to 185 against it.

FIERCE GALE. FORT MYERS, Fla., Oct. 26. The fiercest gale this section has known in several years raged for 36 hours, beginning at midnight on Monday, and attained a maximum velocity of 100 miles per hour. At St. Petersburg the entire waterfront was wiped out by the gulf storm yesterday.

BRIAND'S TRIUMPH. PARIS, Oct. 26. Premier Briand will take passage for New York on Saturday on his way to attend the Conference on Limitation of Armaments at Washington, with the prestige of one of the greatest victories of his political career, in which he has already fallen from power and been re-called as head of a Cabinet six times. The majority in the Chamber of Deputies, which seemed to be moving away from the Premier yesterday, up by the schooner Alice Hilton and brought to Nantucket.

SCHE MISSING; CREW ADRIFT. CHATHAM, Oct. 26. The four-masted schooner Henry Kregger from Walton, N.S., for New York, was a wreck on Pollock Rip Shoal to-day and seven of her crew adrift in a small boat, were missing.

NORTHCLIFFE ON ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE. LONDON, Oct. 26. The Anglo-Japanese Alliance "undoubtedly is the dominating factor which now prevents an unfettered attempt by Great Britain, Japan and the United States to solve the problem of the Pacific," declared Lord Northcliffe to a Reuter correspondent who interviewed the noted British publisher in Hong Kong yesterday. The interview was cabled to London to-day. According to the correspondent's despatch Lord Northcliffe gave as the reason for his opinion that the alliance placed the United States "outside of very definite arrangements for the control of China." "During the last two years," the publisher is quoted as saying, "I have been gradually coming to the conclusion that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance has outrun its usefulness. Japan carried out the compact during the war, and she has been well rewarded for her services. The purpose of the Washington Conference is to reach a mutual agreement, but the United States is handicapped by the arrangement already made by Japan and Great Britain concerning the chief problem of the Pacific. Prologation of the alliance only serves to irritate public and official opinion in the United States merely humiliates China, and adds nothing to the prestige of Great Britain in Asia."

HURRICANE QUITS FLORIDA. WASHINGTON, Oct. 26. The gulf hurricane which has been sweeping Florida, passed out into the Atlantic last night.

STORM NEAR TAMPA. TAMPA, Oct. 26. Two persons were killed and more than one million dollars damage was done as the result of the tropical storm which struck here yesterday. Approximately four hundred houses were washed into the bay at Palmetto Beach on the outskirts of Ybor City.

RAILWAY "WALK OUT." FLORIDA, Oct. 26. Executives of the Big Four Brotherhoods and Switchmen's Union of North America, after 4 days of verbal hectoring with the United States Railway Labor Board, declared late to-day that no power other than a satisfactory settlement can prevent a walk out.

EARTHQUAKES IN ITALY. MILAN, Oct. 26. Earthquake shocks were felt in Massa and Carrara and on the Tuscan coast of Italy last night.

Fortunes Made by Accident.

$200,000 Paid to Man of Twenty-eight.

A recent accident led to a young man discovering an art which has been lost since the days of the ancient Egyptians. Bunton, who is only twenty-eight years of age, was not a trained metallurgist, though he has discovered something that has baffled metallurgists for centuries. He is a skilled mechanic employed by the New York Blower Company. An accident called his attention to the possibilities of tempered copper. "Name Your Terms." Bunton chanced to find a few pages torn from an old book lying in a rubbish pile ready for a match. A picture caught his eye. He picked up the crumpled sheets and began to read an account of an ancient metallurgist—incidentally a murderer—with whose death the secret of hardening copper was lost. It interested Bunton, and he set to work. There are three steps in Bunton's process. The first treatment of pure copper makes it harder than copper has been made before, but keeps it still pliable; the second makes it almost as hard as steel; the third so hard that it cannot be cut by the best steel saws, files, or chisels. Bunton went to see the Steel Corporation officials. The conference did not last long. "Name your terms," said the chairman. "Two hundred thousand pounds and a penny a pound royalty," Bunton replied. "We will let you know. Good day," was the reply. A letter came accepting the terms. Bunton's new metal is believed to be of enormous importance to all the mechanical arts. It is said to be the hardest metal known. It means cutting tools for lathes that will not strike sparks; it means bearings for automobiles, marine engines, locomotives, and electric motors and generators that will not burn out; it means machine parts that will not crack.

The result of the discovery is that the United States Steel Corporation have decided to pay $200,000 and a royalty of a penny a pound to Walter Bunton for his process of tempering copper.

TO-DAY'S MESSAGES.

A MIXED BLESSING.
CHICAGO, Oct. 26.
Payment by Germany of her reparation debt to Great Britain and repayment by Allies of war loans from Britain might prove a greater curse than a blessing, said former Chancellor of the Exchequer, Reginald McKenna, in an address on International Finance. We lost more in our country, he said, by the existence of 2,000,000 unemployed, than we shall ever get in value from German reparations in thirty years.

ONE-FIFTH WAGE CUT.

'BULLETIN'S' OPINION.
DUBLIN, Oct. 27.
The Irish Bulletin, referring to newspaper criticism of De Valera's letter to the Pope, describes the crisis of the last few days as a newspaper crisis, and accuses the Government of concealing from the press the fact that the King's answer to the Pope was a statement drafted by the Government and not a personal message. The defence department of Dall Eireann, responding to complaints of forced collections for Republican army funds, states that all responsible officers have been instructed that forced levies are unauthorized and should be stopped.

NOTE.—One of the Staff correspondents of The Associated Press, who entered Soviet Russia when Lenin opened the doors of that country to admit American food and relief workers, started from Constantinople and proceeded to the Black Sea ports of Trebizond and Batum. He went on to Tiflis, in Soviet Georgia, and thence apparently across the Carpathian mountains to the lower Volga river district, the heart of the famine country. Then he moved northward, past the city of Moscow, traversing the territory to which American food was sent. On the way he sent cables reports, giving first-hand information of conditions in the famine district.

In the appended article, he describes in detail the conditions he observed in Batum and Tiflis.

Batum. (By a Staff correspondent of the Associated Press).—Entrance into Russia through the Black Sea may be compared to a visit to a dreary battle front. There's lots of fear of death and destruction, but somehow one does not find them. These elements to uneasy sleep seem to lurk always just a little farther along. The traveller has himself rammed full of vaccines, vaccines against cholera, pest, smallpox and typhoid, is made properly ill in advance, only to find that these diseases are just now out of season. The only thing he needs is quinine, not for himself but for malaria patients about the seaports. Fear of Russia should not be based on fear of violence, of bodily hurt, so much as on the discomfort of living in a land where social and economic conditions are very hard. Money is hard to earn. Dock laborers at Batum, when they work, may earn $600 roubles, or eight cents, per day, and this is the price of two pounds of bread.

PEOPLE AS USUAL.
After all the stories of revolutions and counter revolutions, the murders and whatnot, one is distinctly surprised to find people going about as usual. There seems to be more people than ever before. One wonders where they come from. They swarm about the cities, the train stations in the country, thick as ants. Yet rich and poor seem alike engaged in the process of getting out of Russia. Many of the rich have done so. Their old life has been broken up, their social life, their life of educating and rearing families. Their manner of living and thinking doesn't fit in to the new chaos, and they prefer to get to Constantinople—so much so that it has become almost a Russian city—and thence filter through to Europe and there live on charity and their wits. Some manage to retain wrecks of their fortunes, for old Russia was rich beyond the dreams of Western Europe. Everybody seems to have gold and jewels in abundance. Those with property are still slipping away, and without too much difficulty or hindrance from the Soviet.

MUST BE CAUTIOUS.
Only they must use caution. A certain Melikov, the Russian-Armenian owner of the newspaper Harizon, in Tiflis, had his home requisitioned, so he got leave to depart to Constantinople. On the way his baggage was searched, a diary was found telling his inmost reflections about the Bolsheviks and the new order of life, a diary that he possibly was intending to publish. The foolish man was hauled before the "Cheka," the secret police with extraordinary powers, from whose decision there is no recourse, and he was executed. Landing from one of the various passenger and freight vessels that run weekly in and out of Batum, he and from Constantinople, the traveller finds that the Bolsheviks are not such dreadful people after all. It is far easier than getting to it from ship in Wardrobe Words.

There is a mine of history in the names of the fabrics from which clothing is made.
Take calico. Centuries ago on the west coast of India was the great city of Calicut, whose chief industry was the making of cotton cloths printed in colours. Twice did invaders unsuccessfully try to capture the city, and learn the secret of the printed cottons. For these fabrics were highly prized by other countries.
Muslin originally came from the old city of Mosul, in Mesopotamia, famous for its delicate cottons, so thin that a great width might be drawn through a wedding ring. Caravans brought the wonderful muslins to Bagdad, whence the Europe of the Middle Ages was supplied.
Weaving the Dainty Gingham.
On the border of the Egyptian desert is an ancient city called Gaze. Its cotton was the finest and finest, hence our word "Gause."
The cotton weavers of the little city of Guingamp in France hit upon the idea of dyeing the thread before it was woven and then placing it in the loom so that it would form a pattern of stripes and checks. Hence the gay, dainty gingham so popular to-day.
Cambrie comes from Cambrai in France. Tulle, that delicate, open-mesh lace, is also French, and comes from the city of Tulle in the south of France. "Tweed" was the name given to the cloth worn by the fishermen on the river Tweed. "Melton" and "Cheviot" also take their names from the districts where they were first made.
Nearly 700 years ago the woolen trade settled in and around Worsted, near Norwich, and it was here that the twisted, double-threaded material now called "worsted" was made.

Certainly.

An unfaithful steward had embezzled a large sum and his employer asked advice as to how he should be dealt with. "Get rid of him at once," advised an Englishman. "Keep him and deduct the sum from his wages," said a Scotchman. "But," said the employer, "the sum is far greater than his wages." "Then raise his wages," suggested an Irishman.

William Cyprian Pinkham, Mfd. Bishop of Calgary.

A Man Whose Success Spells Duty Well Done.

(By MAY L. ARMITAGE, in Toronto Saturday Night.)

"To do the common duty of each day uncommonly well—that is success." Not the usual definition by any means, and not the definition either which pleases the multitude. The word "success" to the majority carries something of the spectacular with it—an enviable position, a political victory, a certain amount of money or business achievement, but "the common duty of each day," even if done uncommonly well, nothing exciting about it at all! And yet looking back over the history of the years, and the history of many a home-herp, can we not acknowledge that this brand of success has, after all, had more to do with the making of the nations than many of the sky-rocket lives which have soared for a moment and their burned out! Following this line of thought, and remembering that the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada met in Hamilton on October 5, particular interest centres on one of its members, one who through the years has done this "common duty" so uncommonly well, that he may surely be reckoned a hero of Western Canada, though not one of the spectacular type. When Rev. William Cyprian Pinkham, Bishop of Calgary, took his seat at the General Synod, he took it as senior bishop, not only of Canada and of the United Kingdom, but of every country in the world where facts are compiled, with the exception of the United States, where there are two Bishops slightly his senior. By "senior" is meant no years—though Bishop Pinkham carries his seventy-seven but lightly—but in office, his consecration taking place in the year 1887. When one considers the territory in which Bishop Pinkham has worked, the pioneering and privileges of the early years, the anxiety and stress of the moulding of a new country, the meagre financial support, the indifference and sometimes the antagonism of the foreign element, the teaching of the Indians, the organization of the clergy to meet all these demands, one looks upon this man with wonder. His eye is as keen and humorous as at his first Synod, his ruddy cheeks bespeak his love of the open, his white hair and beard so carefully kept, complete the picture of Browning's conjuring.

England. He taught, and did some private tutoring during the course of his studies, and this has an important bearing on his after activities, for, as he says, teaching has always been dear to him, and the furthering of education very near his heart. When, as a young man, he accepted the Mission call to Canada, sailing on July 15, 1868, and upon arrival taking up his work at St. James—then about three miles outside of Winnipeg—he was the youngest of twenty-two clergymen in the diocese of Rupert's Land. This diocese extended from the western borders of Labrador to the summit of the Rocky mountains, and from the International boundary line to the Arctic ocean. There were but 200 souls in the city of Winnipeg at this date, and it is of interest to note that the young clergyman did not take long in finding out the charms of one of the residents, Miss Jean Brewer. In the same year of his arrival this young lady consented to share the arduous duties of his huge parish, and well and bravely has she borne the burden in the heat of the day with him. It is of interest to recall, too, that 1921 marks the period of one hundred years since Mrs. Pinkham's father, William Brewer, came from the Orkney Isles to Canada with his family, they being some of the very oldest of the Canadian settlers. A real pioneer wedding the young couple had, though old press records show a list of distinguished guests. Dr. Machray, Bishop of Rupert's Land performed the ceremony assisted by Ven. Archdeacon McLean of St. John's College, afterwards first Bishop of Saskatchewan. It was not possible to purchase a wedding ring in Winnipeg at that date, but there was a handy tinmith there who made one out of a five dollar gold piece, the ring which was used on the occasion, and which Mrs. Pinkham has worn ever since. St. James' Rectory was from the very first a community centre, and while it was very often left to Mrs. Pinkham to care for the parish as well as the growing family—there were four sons and four daughters—while the rector was on long and toilsome journeys over his immense territory, still the little family thrives, and the common duty of each day done uncommonly well" has borne fruit in the useful lives that are its off-shoot.

Remember, there was no Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta; it was the Red River Settlement. The Indians were far from dependable, and many times the travellers went in fear of their lives. In the winter of '69 the Riel Rebellion broke out and the Pinkham family were under close surveillance. "I have been lost on the prairie many, many times," said the Bishop in recalling those days, "but have always managed to get to my destination eventually, and have been fortunate enough to be only badly frostbitten once." The young worker was appointed too, shortly after taking charge of his first parish, as the clergymen to minister to, and to welcome "incoming settlers." St. James' was on the north side of the Assinabola River on the Portage road, and through Manitoba mud and severe winter weather, over fenceless prairie and poorly defined trails, he held services at the little mission stations of Headingley, Stony Mountain, Stonywall, Victoria, Woodlands, Morris, etc., often being too travel-spent when he reached his destination to do more than fall into a chair and drop asleep after looking after his horse. And with all his parochial work the young clergyman never lost sight of one of his greatest interests, the furthering of education. After the inauguration of the Province of Manitoba, there were for a time no public schools, and when the movement got under way the choice of a superintendent of education immediately fell on Rev. W. C. Pinkham. From 1871 to 1888 he was Superintendent of Education for the Protestant Schools of Manitoba—holding his appointment under the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, starting with sixteen scattered little classes, the growth of the work came along surprisingly; new branches being opened in rapid succession, inspectors appointed and teachers brought in. A Toronto paper of February, 1870, in commenting upon the situation, says, "The schools of Manitoba are in a condition of surprising excellence considering the very short time that has elapsed since the Province was opened up." The article then went on to trace the growth and the able administration of the superintendent. In 1880 Mr. Pinkham was made the recipient of the degree of Bachelor of Divinity from the Archbishop of Canterbury, and in 1882 he was made Archdeacon of Manitoba, and one of the residential Canon of St. John's Cathedral, Winnipeg. Meantime the huge diocese of Rupert's Land had been cut into three, more clergymen gradually becoming available—though a ridiculously inadequate number for the territory. "The reward of work is more work," so in 1887 Archdeacon Pinkham received the offer of the Bishopric of the vacant Diocese of Saskatchewan, and upon his acceptance a number of the notable dignitaries of the church from the United States and England participated at his consecration in Winnipeg on August 7 of that year. The Diocese of Saskatchewan did not mean the Province of Saskatchewan alone; it took in Alberta as well, and covered an area of 300,000 square miles. The new Bishop began immediately on the tremendous work of making his administration effective, and he saw that in this enormous area there should be another diocese; his objective, almost from the first, was the forming of the Diocese of Calgary, and his efforts towards this end were not confined to Canada alone. The British press has many accounts of the active work of Bishop Pinkham, and during his several trips to the Old Land he made known the pressing needs of the new country both for workers and means. In 1892 by his efforts on both sides of the water, he was successful in raising the endowment fund for the new Diocese of Calgary.

Calgary was Bishop Pinkham's choice as his home, and his base of operations; he loves the city as well as it loves him. When the new Diocese was formed he acted as Bishop of Saskatchewan as well, making many arduous journeys for he had two separate lists of clergy, and two administrations under his care. Very few Bishops have been called upon to put forth as much executive ability as this man, and well and nobly has he discharged his duty. With his many calls as Bishop, he had, of course, to give up his position as Superintendent of Education for Manitoba—then just getting its first start—and in 1902 by his efforts on both sides of the water, he has been successful in raising the endowment fund for the new Diocese of Calgary.

Fishermen! Here's the Boot for You-"Excel"!

"EXCEL"

The Fishermen's Friend

All fishermen know from experience what happens to ordinary boots when used in fishing. You've seen how salt water seems to take the life out of rubber and how the uppers crack and the soles wear through in a surprisingly short time.

The "EXCEL" is a different and better kind of boot. It has been made especially to stand up under the unusually hard use a fisherman's boot gets.

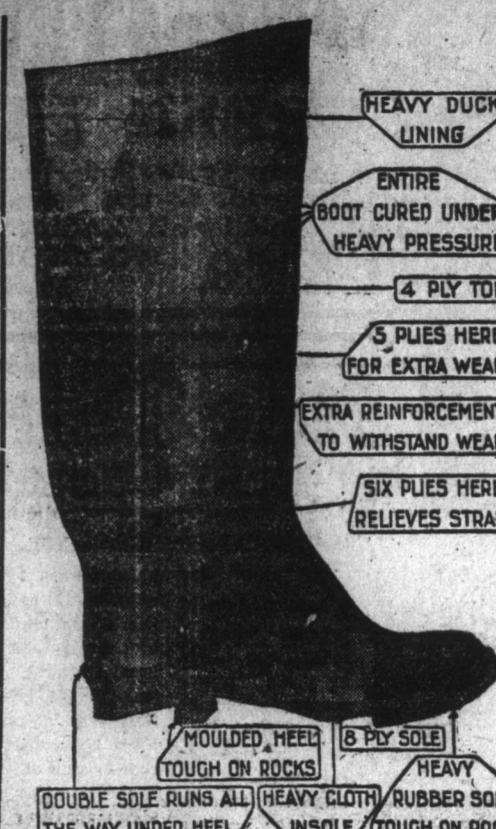

The rubber and fabric in "EXCEL" boots are of the very highest quality. But it is the special method of curing, under tremendous pressure, that makes the "EXCEL" so wear-resisting. The pressure forces the layers of rubber and fabric together so that they are actually "one-piece", without losing the least bit of life or resiliency of the rubber. Salt water has practically no effect on "EXCEL" boots. The UPPERS remain pliable and weatherproof, and resist the drying-out action of sun, heat and extreme cold far longer than other boots. Consequently they don't crack anywhere near so quickly. The SOLES are almost wear-proof, because they are made like an Auto Tire, with 8 plies of rubber and fabric welded by tremendous pressure into a "tire-tread" sole that rivals an automobile tire for toughness and durability.

strain. There is not a single feature but what has been proved necessary and desirable by tests of severest use. Your own experience will tell you that a boot with these features simply must be a better boot.

Study this picture. Learn these features. Remember them when you compare "EXCEL" boots with ordinary boots. And remember, too, that very important point which the picture cannot show, namely, that "EXCEL" boots are cured under tremendous pressure, which leaves the rubber pliable, weatherproof and wear-resisting. It is only by the use of this tremendous pressure combined with highest quality materials that the best results are obtained.

Pliable Uppers. Weatherproof and Wear Resisting. Tough Tire Tread Soles. Made "All in One Piece."

'EXCEL' Boots are sold by all reliable dealers from Coast to Coast.

Canadian and Labrador People in Actual Want.

DOMINION GOVERNMENT SENDING RELIEF TO SETTLEMENTS.

(Ottawa.—Canadian Press) — Capt. Living, in charge of the Dominion Government reindeer herd, situated at Lobster Bay, Labrador, has completed his mission here, and is returning bearing supplies of food and other necessities to the desolate natives of the winter.

An epidemic of influenza and pneumonia last spring, which has left the people in a weakened condition, has been followed by a season in which the fish and fur have failed them. There are 400 to 500 families in the Canadian Labrador who are without the absolute essentials of life. Where a fair catch has been secured the price of only $2.00 per barrel was obtained where normally $8.00 is paid by the traders. Thus the native has been unable to lay in his winter store of provisions from the outside. Many families which he has visited, says Capt. Living, are in a state of actual starvation. Indians, half-Breeds, and a sprinkling of white men married to natives constitute the population.

During the influenza epidemic Capt. Living, he covered 150 miles of coast line, having to visit each family. Practically every family was affected, and in some cases he found every member prostrated and unable to do anything for each other.

Colony Dependent.
The result of all this is that the colony is now utterly dependent upon outside relief. Though Capt. Living would ordinarily not have left his station until next June or July, he felt it imperative to come out and lay the state of affairs before the authorities. After 120 miles travel down to Harrington, he caught a steamer for Quebec. Here he interviewed Premier L. A. Taschereau and other members of the provincial government. Realizing the emergency of the case, Premier Taschereau has placed at Captain Living's disposal such quantities of flour, lard, molasses, and tea as will keep the natives alive until the spring.

The co-operation of Bishop Williamson of Quebec was also secured through whose mediation a general appeal for clothes was made throughout the province, a large number of the people being without warm things to cover them during the long, rigorous winter. A generous response has been met, with the result that Capt. Living is assured of taking back with him a large quantity of clothing suitable for men, women and children.

In addition to the supplies of food that have been forthcoming from Quebec, the federal government on its side, has provided Capt. Living with a steamer to transport him and his supplies back to the Labrador coast. During many weeks after his arrival, he will be entirely occupied in making the distribution of food and clothing by means of dog sleds.

SOURCE OF FOOD.
The reindeer, says Capt. Living, constitute the natives' continuing source of milk, butter, transportation and animal food. Although his work is of a really that of reindeer conservation, he acts often enough as counsellor and even emergency as practising physician. In the remote scene of his labors, he has often found it necessary to perform surgical operations. He will return with a provision of fat and medicines and simple medicines, prepared to meet a number of emergencies.

Capt. Living reports the natives as sincere in their beliefs and ready to make great sacrifices for them. Last spring, he says a party brought the bodies of an Indian of 24 and a young squaw of 6, from 100 inland where they had died, to the Christian settlement of St. Augustine's, so that they might be buried there. They made the final days of the difficult and hazardous trip entirely without food.

The Indian in that country, says Capt. Living, almost invariably wears a silver cross about his neck, and this has sometimes been put to a strange use. Where one of them became insane, as was not infrequent, the man was bound and the cross taken from him. This was melted into a silver bullet, with which the unfortunate man was shot to death. This is a practice, however, which the authorities have stamped out.

Rivers Burrow in the Earth.
A river that flowed underground formed the basis of one of Rider Haggard's writers of fiction have used the same theme to great advantage, and in their Haggard's romances. Other noted quest for the strange and startling have not neglected to call in being the great lakes and caverns under the surface of the earth, hidden from the eye of man.

All of these stories might have been written in Oregon, for in this state can be found the reality of every one of their inventions. Take Haggard's tale of the lost river, that one that plunged to darkness under a mountain range, emerging many miles away in a land wholly different from that of its origin. In Oregon the real Lost River flows fully half its length below the surface of the earth.

Lost River has its source far up on the side of the Three Sisters, coming down the middle divide of this great triangle of mountains through a series of fertile meadows that furnish pasture for good sized herds of deer and elk. Through not many explorers have traced the entire route of Lost River, the rangers on duty in that region relate many tales of the astonishing habits of the stream. Often for several miles there is not the slightest trace of water and few indications that there ever has been a flow of any size at the bottom of the valley. Then again within a few hundred yards the river will again make its appearance, larger and with more water than before it disappeared. At some places it can be heard as it flows along under the surface. This occurs not once, but several times in a few miles and in some places the rangers are certain of the existence of large subterranean lakes.

North of Lost River are caves which are almost unbelievable in their extent and other which have extremely odd contents. One of the most noted of these caverns is found a short distance from Bend and contains ice. How this is kept there in all seasons of the year is a mystery, as far as can be ascertained there is no chemical refrigeration. But the fact remains that these ice caves, and there are a number of them in the state as far as the California boundary, seldom show any depreciation of their contents even in the hottest of summer weather.

As the majority of the rivers in Oregon have their source in the perpetual snows of the high mountain regions it does not take too great a stretch of the imagination to figure Lost River in a similar role, only instead of starting from the exposed fields of snow and ice it might have its inception in those underground.

As Peace Omen.
Worshippers in Cathedral Looked on Dove's Visit.
How traditions and legends grow up around cathedrals is told in a story by Dr. Edward Hargaman Hall, author of the first guide book of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, which made its appearance on Sunday last, said the New York Evening Sun recently. The book is published by the Laymen's club of the cathedral. The story is about the chapel of St. Boniface in the cathedral, sometimes called the German chapel, and runs as follows:

"In the spring of 1918, some weeks after the great German drive of March 21 had begun and before the beginning of the counter-offensive of the second battle of the Marne in July, the large stained-glass window in the clerestory of the choir above the entrance to the chapel of St. Boniface arrived from England. All the ventilation openings in the cathedral windows are so arranged to exclude birds, which, however, intruding in their natural habitats, are a practical nuisance in the cathedral.

"When the stained-glass window was ready to be put into place the temporary window filling the space above the entrance to the chapel was removed for its installation. While the window was thus open, and at a period in the war when the league trembled in the balance and the world fairly held its breath in fearful expectation of the event, a white dove—very generally recognized as a symbol or harbinger of peace—flew into the cathedral over this chapel.

"On the following Sunday it soared around in the great dome of the crossing and in the choir, alighting in the most interesting places. When Dean Roberts ascended the stairs of the great marble pulpit he found the dove perched on the edge of the pulpit directly before him. The dove then flew around and alighted on the back of a vacant chair between two occupied chairs in the midst of the congregation on the north side of the crossing, and there remained quietly during the sermon.

"When the ushers started toward the altar with the offertory the bird soared across the congregation and alighted on the hat of a woman dressed in mourning, who was sitting near the middle aisle, its snow-white plumage contrasting strikingly with the somber attire of the bereaved woman, who seemed not to be disturbed by what perhaps she regarded as a happy omen. In a moment the dove flew to another part of the crossing. It remained in the cathedral a few days longer; and then one day went out through an open door.

"Soon after this occurrence the allies facing the Marne salient, including the Americans at Chateau Thierry, began the great counter movement, which finally brought peace. It was at least an interesting coincidence that this white dove came into the cathedral over the chapel at the very crisis of the war, and that almost immediately thereafter began that series of determined events which led the Germans to make overtures for peace."

To clean the breadboard and make white, rub it with a cut lemon and wash off with cold water, then set in sun to dry.

Cracker custard puddings can be made like simple bread puddings, but they require a lemon or vanilla sauce.

Stuff Spanish onions with washed potatoes and sausage meat mixed with well-beaten egg. Slices of smoked sausages are delicious in split pea soup. Flavor it with celery and onion. Pie dough can be mixed and put into the ice box, closely covered, the day before it is wanted.

Origin of Influenza.
The word "influenza" appeared first in medieval Latin under the form influenza. It was used to denote the manner in which stars and planets were supposed to exert a guiding direction over the affairs of men. Little by little the original meaning of the word was lost in a more general application of the term, until it reached its final significance of any power exerted from the outside—a power ranging from "influence at court" to the "influence of liquor."

It is from the astronomical application, however, that we secure the word "influenza"—the Italian name for a malady caused either by malignant planetary influence or atmospheric conditions which were none too well understood even by the men of medicine who gave the disease its title.

Britain Leads World in Building Ships.
Shipping under construction in all countries of the world on September 30 last amounted to 5,542,000 gross tons, according to a report of Lloyd's Register of Shipping. This amount, the report says, is a reduction of more than 2,000,000 tons from that under way on January 1st this year. Of the shipping under construction, 496,000 tons is credited to United States shipyards, and 2,094,000 to British builders.

Household Notes.
Cracker custard puddings can be made like simple bread puddings, but they require a lemon or vanilla sauce.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

A CERTIFICATE OF IGNORANCE.

The other day I happened to be present when a man who lives by his wits and means and hence is extraordinarily well versed in economic and financial tendencies was arguing about the housing situation with a woman.

He tried to explain to her that only when building becomes sufficiently reasonable to attract into it capital that is now going elsewhere, will houses become plentiful again, and rents fall. She flared up at once at that. It was all very well for him to talk, she said, but she knew all about it. She had a sister who had had this experience, and a cousin who had had the other. She herself had had her rent raised four times. If he lived in a rented house instead of owning his own, he would understand the situation. For him to talk about it was like an old maid talking about bringing up children.

He Simply Filled His Pipe.

I looked at the man, expecting to hear him try once more to explain the economic law of supply and demand to her, but he did nothing of the sort. Instead he filled his pipe in silence. When he had finished, he began to talk on a totally different subject.

Afterward I heard someone ask him why he let that woman think she had the best of the argument. He waved his pipe in a gesture of helplessness. "How could I tell her anything?" he said. "She knew all there was to know. When you find ignorance and positiveness going hand in hand, you might as well give up. People like that don't want to make use of any knowledge you may have accumulated through your particular line of work. They don't want to admit that anyone knows more about anything than they do and consequently they never give themselves a chance to learn. The more ignorant they are the more positive they are."

Save Yourself Wear and Tear.

Did you ever meet anyone like that, Reader Friend?

If you did I trust you emulated the resignation of this man and changed the subject. Because this is the only way to save yourself wear and tear in dealing with these sort of people.

We Can Forget Youth.

One would think that the more ignorant a person was, the more shy and diffident and uncertain of himself he would be. But this is seldom so. It is those who have begun to learn, and consequently have begun to glimpse how very little they know who are diffident and uncertain. It is in youth it is forgivable, one expects it from youth. But in middle and old age—well, a person who has grown up without growing less positive and certain about him in his manner is a certificate of his ignorance that all who run (usually away from him) may read.

Reversible Falls.

What are known as the "Reversible Falls" are situated on the St. John River, not far from St. John, N.B. They are caused by the rushing tide of the Bay of Fundy, which rises to a height of over seventy feet, and causes the water of the falls to reverse—thus flowing in an opposite direction to that taken at low tide. This remarkable phenomenon occurs twice daily, and the falls of the St. John River stand almost alone among waterfalls in being reversible. During part of the day the waters flow one way and during the other part in the opposite direction. In journeying up the river, passengers are taken aboard at Indian-town, above the falls, but at certain times of the tide the steamer runs down through the falls to take on freight at the wharves of St. John.

Thinks Chinks Being Smuggled via Nfld.

North Sydney.—Is smuggling of Chinamen carried on in a small way between Newfoundland and Canada? It is the belief in some quarters that there is an irregular business in this connection through obscure routes and ways entirely apart of course from the regular transportation companies.

It is pointed out that the head tax on the Celestials entering Newfoundland is only $300, while to enter Canada as a resident costs them $500 each. Numbers go through this port in bound from Vancouver, and it is claimed that more pass through than Newfoundland really requires or has work for as laundrymen, their staple occupation, till some began to go into the restaurant business. Hence it is suspected that the chinks after spending some little time in the Ancient colony find their way back to Canada again and thus evade the heavier head tax.

Wonders of the World's Largest Ship.

Oil fuel will be used on the Majestic, the Hamburg, or the White Star Line's Southampton-Cherbourg-New York Service. Her 24 boilers will consume 5,700 tons of liquid fuel on a single crossing, and her storage tanks will have capacity for a round voyage supply.

About 375 men, from chief engineer to boiler-room attendants, will be required to run the huge power plant, as against the 460 men who would be required if coal were used.

Under normal conditions, the four turbines of the Majestic, driving as many propellers, will attain a speed of 23 knots and under favorable conditions they may make 26 knots.

Passenger accommodation will be installed for 4,100 persons.

When the Majestic is put into service next Spring, the White Star line will have three giant liners of 35,000 or more tons each, the Majestic, Olympic and Homeric (ex-Columbus). Shipping men are agreed that ships of this size must run in trios, in order to operate economically and secure the greatest amount of public attention.

Dimensions Gargantuan.

Dimensions of all kinds on the great ship are gargantuan.

The hull itself, for example, if stood on end beside the Woolworth Building, would tower 184 feet above that champion skyscraper.

Four times around the ship's promenade deck is a mile.

Two trains could pass abreast through one of her three smoke stacks, which are thirty feet in diameter.

The tops of these stacks are 144 feet above the waterline of the ship and 184 feet above the keel, or a total height about equal to that of an ordinary 12-story building.

When the lookout in the topmost crow's nest on the foremast climbs into his place—by means of a ladder inside the mast—he will be 180 feet above the water, in the loftiest lookout perch ever carried on a steamship.

To make a journey from the upper deck to the lower hold one would have to travel down nine decks. To facilitate passage from deck to deck the ship is equipped with electric elevators, one being fitted in the engine room.

Pablo Rooms Great Halls.

The public rooms of the ship are great halls in dimensions, with clear spaces and lofty ceilings not unusually associated with marine architecture. The lounge has a ceiling 26 feet high, and its floor dimensions are 76 by 54 feet. The main dining room has an area of more than a quarter of an acre, of 11,466 feet, being 117 feet long by 98 feet wide. Its ceiling over an area of 2,300 feet, is 21 feet high. A restaurant for first class passengers is 116 feet long by 54 feet wide, with a ceiling 23 feet high. There is an unbroken view through the centre of these apartments 356 feet long.

As to size she will stand alone, since she is nearly 10,000 tons larger than the Olympic, and about 3,000 tons larger than the Leviathan.

For the purpose of comparison, the Majestic might be likened to a floating town, with homes for 5,200 people, since she will have capacity for carrying that number, including 4,100 passengers and a crew of about 1,100. She will have quarters for about 1,000 passengers in first cabin, 700 in second, and 2,400 in third.

Space Equals 400 Houses.

The space in the great ship, occupied by her housing facilities, so to speak, and her engines and other machinery, is equal to that in 400 average detached suburban residences of eight rooms each, or of about 800 average four-room apartments.

To accommodate its passengers with sleeping quarters, the ship will have 1,245 staterooms—these being 473 in first cabin, 213 in second, and 51 in third—besides enclosed dormitories for single men and single women respectively in the latter class.

The staterooms range from a neat little one-bed room for a single traveller to elaborate suites of half a dozen rooms each with parlor, private sun verandah, dining room and bedrooms, with private baths.

Village That Floats.

In the interior of French Indo-China there is a village whose location is a source of worry to captains of passing steamers. They are never certain when they will find it.

Its name is Snok-Tron, and its location is somewhere on the Mekong River. The village consists of forty or fifty little huts built on rafts and lashed together with rattan ropes. Here dwell about two hundred people, whose chief occupation is fishing.

The rear of the village is lashed to half-submerged trees, but the whole town changes its position from time to time, according to the vagaries of the river or the whims of its inhabitants. Steamboats passing up the river will find it at one spot, and on the return journey discover that it has moved elsewhere.

IMITATION.
It's good to hear a glad "hello" And get a smile from men you know. I like to feel, in times of doubt, That there are friendly men about, And some who care, and some who'll stay.

To help me on my troubled way, I know that oft my blood is stirred To hear a friendly greeting voiced, And some who care, and some who'll stay.

The death and warmth of fellowship, I know my heart has oft rejoiced To hear a friendly greeting voiced, And I have hummed a cheerful song Because a friend has come along.

If others mean so much to me, What must I mean to those I see? If what they say and what they do Has power to thrill me through and through, Then why should I not, as I go, Give every man a glad "hello" And try to cheer his life the way That mine is cheered from day to day?

Since friendliness makes me rejoice, To friendly words I'll lend my voice, Since kindness warms the heart of me, A kindly man I'll try to be; Since I prefer the man who gives A portion of the life he lives To others, I shall also try To be like him as time goes by.

When Chicago Burned.

The story of "Mrs. O'Leary's Cow," whose hoof upset the lamp that started the fire that burned Chicago has been told so often and with such detail that it almost seems like a sort of myth. It was in October, 1871, that the terrible conflagration occurred which reduced the great city to a vast ash heap, destroying two hundred million dollars worth of property and 250 lives, while over 100,000 people were rendered homeless. The buildings consumed numbered 18,000, making the conflagration greater than that of London in the latter half of the seventeenth century, when 13,000 buildings were burned. Possibly the great fire at Moscow in 1812 surpassed it in the number of structures destroyed, while the dreadful fire which almost destroyed Ancient Rome in the reign of Nero was greater than all. On the evening of the fire which nearly destroyed the American city, says a writer in an American contemporary, everything favored just such a catastrophe. There had been no rain for some weeks; a strong wind was blowing and the fire force had just returned to their quarters after quite an extensive fire in another part of the city. At 9.30 p.m. the call came from DeKoven Street for a fire that had started in O'Leary's barn, but to the disadvantage of the old legend, the cow had long been milked and Mrs. O'Leary was in bed at the time. A single extinguisher or an active fire force would have quenched it at the time, but the extinguisher did not and the men who were slow because tired out by the fire earlier in the day. The wind increased to a gale and the fire was soon beyond all control, sweeping northward and destroying everything in its way, one of the first buildings destroyed being the water works plant which rendered all efforts of extinguishment useless. The flames crossed the river and the burning continued for four days and about four square miles of buildings were burned. Before the fire the city was composed of wooden buildings. Brick and stone succeeded and to-day Chicago is a city of five times the population of 1871, but the dreadful conflagration of that time is looked back to as an event from which civic matters are dated.—Haltford
