NEW MEMBERS INTRODUCED

Jennifer Cossitt, Member for the electoral district of Leeds-Grenville, introduced by the Right Hon. Joe Clark and the Hon. Walter Baker.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WEST COAST WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the work stoppage on the West Coast is paralysing the grain industry in western Canada and actually crippling the economy throughout Canada, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That the Government order everyone involved in the West Coast work stoppage back to work at once and back to the bargaining table immediately and, if agreement is not reached in 90 days, the matter should be brought back to Parliament for appropriate action.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

HOSTING OF 1986 WORLD CUP SOCCER CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the withdrawal of Columbia from the hosting of the 1986 World Cup Soccer Championship opens the way for Canada to focus world spotlight on this nation in a favourable way, and to promote a sport experiencing phenomenal growth here at home and internationally recognized as one permitting mass participation with significant benefits to the health and fitness of all those who do participate. I therefore move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Government of Canada make every effort to assist and co-operate with the Canadian Soccer Association in bringing to Canada the 1986 World Soccer Cup Championship Tournament.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT

LAY-OFFS IN LEEDS-GRENVILLE

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given that a number of my constituents who have never before been unemployed are now being laid off in record numbers in Leeds-

S.O. 43

Grenville, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Prime Minister respond immediately to this devastating, deplorable and tragic situation by introducing concrete, specific employment measures to halt this disastrous trend of increasing unemployment and also to put the people of Leeds-Grenville and this nation back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

WEST COAST PORTS LOCK-OUT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the adverse effect the lock-out in the British Columbia ports is having on many sectors of an economy that is already depressed, we welcome the news that the employer's association and the longshoremen are resuming negotiations this afternoon. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House calls upon the two parties to carry out continuous negotiations until a settlement is reached.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT ACTION AGAINST SOLIDARITY MOVEMENT

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise, seeking the attention of all Hon. Members of this House, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. Recent events in Poland have been shocking. On October 8, 1982, the Polish Government de-legalized the Solidarity Union in Poland, a union which received widespread support from the Polish people. In view of Canada's strong support of major international human rights agreements, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) and the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That this House express its strong concern and indignation at the action of the Polish Government with regard to the de-legalizing of the Solidarity Union Movement.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1415)

Mr. Flis: I would just like to take this opportunity to thank all three parties in this Parliament for supporting this motion. Two years ago the whole world rejoiced as the Polish government recognized the independent union, Solidarity. This month people around the world were shocked because Solidarity unions were delegalized. Mr. Walesa is still interned. Many of the Solidarity members are still interned. The country is still under martial law.

I know, Madam Speaker, it is not up to this Parliament to tell the Parliament of Poland what to legislate and what not to legislate, but it is the duty of this Parliament to express our strong objections when another country signs agreements on protecting people's human rights and then does not live up to these agreements. This is why, Madam Speaker, I thank all parties for supporting this motion.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): I rise, Madam Speaker, to support the motion and, of course, it is with a feeling of regret that it is only a motion moved by a government backbencher and seconded by backbenchers on this side. We lament and regret the total lack of action by the Government of Canada as represented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in connection with the dissolution of Solidarity by the Polish government several weeks ago, and the failure to express any opposition to it.

I refer, Madam Speaker, to a release that was issued by the Government on February 23, 1982, in connection with the Polish situation. After applying some very weak sanctions to the Polish government because of the situation in Poland, ministers urged the Polish government to live up to its declared intention to re-establish civil liberties. They called upon the Polish authorities to end the state of martial law. They called upon the Polish government to release those arrested. They called upon the Polish government to restore immediately a dialogue with the Church and Solidarity.

Since the government made those pious statements it has taken no action to try to encourage the Polish government to take any of those steps. None of those steps have been taken, to the regret of us on this side of the House who feel that much sterner sanctions should have been taken. Now we have a situation where, despite these pious platitudes by the Government of Canada and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), not only are civil liberties not re-established, not only is there no dialogue between the Church and Solidarity, but Solidarity is abolished. Lech Walesa is still in prison, martial law is still in effect, and our government takes no further steps to indicate our disapproval of the Polish authorities for ignoring their obligations under the Helsinki Agreement.

We have already made suggestions that some more effective sanctions should have been taken, so we support this resolution. We regret that the resolution is not one that apparently finds favour with the government in the sense that it is going to take any action to express abhorrence or to impose further sanctions that might be effective in encouraging the Polish government to re-establish civil liberties in that country.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party welcomes this opportunity to support this very positive motion. I think it indicates that our Parliament is concerned. We want to demonstrate this concern.

We are grateful that all three parties have supported this motion. I think we do have a moral responsibility. There are many Canadians who have friends and relatives in Poland, and they are legitimately concerned. Therefore, for our part we want to express our wholehearted support for this motion.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ECONOMY

FORMULATION OF INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, whereas the rate of unemployment in the constituency of Erie is currently at an intolerably high level, and the number of unemployment insurance claimants has dramatically risen in the communities of Port Colborne and Erie by 112 per cent since October, 1981, due to the failure of the Liberal Government's policy to provide stimulus to the economy, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Liberal Government immediately formulate an industrial strategy designed to increase employment and stimulate the economy, thereby helping to ease the suffering of those who have been victimized by the Government's failure to take this action in the past.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

● (1420)

PADLOCKING OF BUSINESS DOORS

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, in his third address, made a direct appeal to bankers, who see small business men struggling to keep the doors open, to ask themselves what will be served by a bailiff's padlock. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That, taking note that at this very moment officials of Revenue Canada and of the Federal Business Development Bank are in the process of padlocking business doors in Okanagan-Similkameen and throughout Canada, this House enjoins the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada to instruct officials of Revenue Canada, the Federal Business Development Bank, and other agencies of government, to heed the Prime Minister's admonition to, and I quote the Prime Minister, "Take a chance on a Canadian."

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, between 1951 and 1966 seven million Canadians were born and are generally known as the "baby boom". The Liberal Government has known about them for years, yet the National Energy Program and all of the budgets since 1980 have destroyed the business climate and reduced the number of jobs for them to fill. As a result, youth unemployment is now 21 per cent. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the Liberal Government and Liberal Party stand condemned for their arrogant and callous disregard for the future of our young Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—SUGGESTION BANK LOAN BE OPPOSED

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The Inter-American Development Bank will soon be voting on an $18 million loan to Guatemala. As a member of the Bank, Canada is able to vote on that loan. In Guatemala in recent months human rights violations have increased, and I specifically cite the horrifying increase in extra-judicial executions. In view of this fact I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the Minister of External Affairs instruct the Canadian Executive Director at the Inter-American Development Bank to vote against the granting of the proposed $18 million loan to Guatemala.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER REQUESTED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, on Monday of this week a press release was issued by the office of the Minister of Employment and Immigration designating the week of November 1 to November 7 as Canada Career Week.

It is sad that on a day when the over-all level of unemployment has passed the 1.25 million mark, when the number of discouraged Canadians who have given up even looking for work is estimated to have risen some 95 per cent on a year-to-year-basis, when the vast majority of the potential work force of Canada is thinking not in terms of a career but just in terms of a job, a pay cheque—anything—one really must condemn the Minister's slip out of reality, passing through his own private looking-glass to the happier, more pleasant domains of the land of make-believe.

I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall):

That the Right Hon. Prime Minister be requested to bring in, in his place, a minister of employment and immigration who is at least aware of what is going on in the country around him.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

WELFARE

ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will be aware that over the next nine months over 600,000 Canadians will be exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits and be forced to go on welfare or take other extreme action. The Prime Minister will know that today, and every day this month, 175 Canadians a day are already being forced to turn to welfare because their unemployment insurance benefits have run out.

The Prime Minister has recently spoken of co-operation. He would know about the all-party report on federal-provincial fiscal relations in Canada. In the spirit of co-operation and of helping Canadians in need, will the Prime Minister agree now to accept the all-party committee recommendations, first, to create a special job-creation fund for those provinces where the welfare rolls are higher than average and, second, to increase the federal government's contribution to the Canada Assistance Plan in those provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has drawn attention to a very serious problem affecting the country, the economic performance and, certainly, the welfare of thousands of people. The Government has been addressing this question very seriously in the past weeks. The Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance particularly have enjoined the Government to act in this direction.

I cannot assure the Leader of the Opposition that we will follow exactly the ways recommended by the all-party committee, but I do want to assure him that that problem will be addressed no later than today by the Minister of Finance and, on subsequent occasions, by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, it is the Prime Minister who is in the practice of drawing attention to problems. I have drawn attention to two specific solutions that were proposed unanimously by an all-party committee of this House. It is time that the Prime Minister of Canada, instead of simply outlining the problems of the country, began to address specific solutions to those problems.

FINANCE

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN BUDGET PROVISIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me make another specific, constructive proposal to the Prime Minister and see if he will respond to it. The Prime Minister will know that the budget provisions of his Government have driven billions of dollars of investment out of the country and have caused the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. In light of the number of jobs lost to his policies, will the Prime Minister agree to change the budget provisions in his Government's budget respecting capital cost allowances as a means of generating jobs and growth in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition misunderstood my answer. I did not intend merely to indicate that I was aware of the problems of which the Leader of the Opposition is aware. I did say, it seems to me rather clearly, that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration would be bringing forward solutions to those problems. I pointed out that they might not be exactly the ones recommended by the Leader of the Opposition but, as he knows, there will be an occasion to debate those solutions. I can assure him that, if his solutions are better than ours, we will adopt them and we will be very happy for his co-operation.

In so far as the other question about budgetary measures is concerned, I would just ask the Leader of the Opposition to wait for a few minutes. The Minister of Finance will be making a statement this afternoon bearing on the economy and he may find some way of addressing some of the problems about which the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is concerned.

HOLDING OF CONFERENCE ON ECONOMIC MATTERS WITH PREMIERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question that is very clearly in the Prime Minister's field, and he cannot leave it up to someone else to answer for him. He will have to take his reponsibilities as leader of the government in this House.

The Prime Minister has mentioned the need for Canadians to work together, and I would like to know whether he is still opposed to the unanimous request by the provinces to have a first ministers' conference on the economy.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I am not opposed to such a conference being held, but I must say that this request by the provinces has not been repeated lately, on the contrary. For instance, the Premier of Ontario, if I understood correctly the tenor of yesterday's telegram, is proposing bilateral meetings with his ministers and members of his government. Some of these meetings have already taken place. The House is aware that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has also scheduled several meetings with his provincial counterparts, so that together we can deal with the problem of job creation, especially in sectors where unemployment is very high. The House is aware of this, and a number of provincial ministers have already commented that they were pleased with the co-operation that had already begun to materialize.

MINES AND MINING

ADAMS MINE LAY-OFFS

Mr. John MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my first question in the House is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. I would ask the Minister what hope or encouragement she could hold out for the 390 miners at the Adams Mine in Kirkland Lake who will be laid off for the second time this year on Friday, and can look forward to only two paycheques between now and what promises to be not a very Merry Christmas.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, while I sympathize with the plight of the miners, I would remind the Hon. Member that this is a temporary lay-off and that they will be off work, as I understand it, for just that short period before Christmas. There are a great many miners in Canada who are facing much longer lay-offs than the ones at Adams Mine.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

PROCESSING OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMS

Mr. John MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could ask the Minister if she will talk to her colleague, the "Minister of Unemployment", to ensure that these victims of Government policy can rely on prompt and effective handling of their unemployment insurance claims rather than just being more numbers in the computer.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there is a special team in place to handle all these claims and that the claims are being handled faster than they ever have been before. We intend to speed up that process.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE SURTAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the new Minister of Finance and I express the hope, I am sure of Hon. Members on all sides of the House, that we will get better answers than we got from his predecessor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the House last met in August, we have lost no fewer than 100,000 jobs from the Canadian economy. Considering that the Government in last fall's budget cut the taxes of upper income Canadians by some 9 per cent, and considering that the Prime Minister went on television recently and talked to Canadians about the need for sharing and caring, my question to the Minister of Finance is this: will the Government now practise what the Prime Minister preaches, by bringing in a surtax on Canadians who can afford to pay it, in order to obtain millions of dollars to put back to work thousands of Canadians who would like jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my first wish would be to provide the Hon. Member with as good and as competent answers as my predecessor gave him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: In reply to his question I would answer that I have read his proposals in that regard in a speech which he made recently in Hamilton; I have examined them. I will take these as a suggestion that will be considered as part of the budget which I hope to introduce in the House in early 1983. I invite him to work hard at it again, because the analysis I have made seems to indicate that the figures he mentioned as being produced by that tax are barely half the amount he is talking about. I hope his research assistants and my officials can sit down and work out any discrepancies which there might be in his proposals, but generally I look forward to proposals from all sides of the House, having in mind the preparation of the next budget. I can assure him that I will not discard his proposals even if they come from a Member of the Socialist Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the only difference between this Minister and his predecessor when it comes to evasion is that at least this Minister smiles.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE LONG TERM ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In his address to the nation last week, the Prime Minister talked about trust and attitude, which everyone on this side of the House, and indeed the vast majority of Canadians, think are important at this time. Since the same Prime Minister about two years ago promised the people of Canada that his Government would produce for our nation what has been taken for granted by industrial nations in Europe for a long time, and by Japan for a long time, namely, an industrial strategy, and has not in those two years produced it, will the Prime Minister again implement his own call for trust by telling Canadians now that, by Christmas at the latest, the Government of Canada will produce an economic strategy for the long term for the nation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about an industrial strategy and an economic strategy. I believe his question related to an economic strategy. Yes, I can assure him that my statements on television last week were meant to set the background and hopefully the mood for precisely that. Already today the Minister of Finance has decided to take the initiative and begin to lay the groundwork and give precision to the elements of such an economic strategy.

REQUEST THAT MANUFACTURING STRATEGY BE PLACED BEFORE PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I will return to the term which the Prime Minister used in the past, as indeed we have, namely, an industrial strategy. More specifically, he talked in the City of Windsor about a manufacturing strategy for the country as a whole. Will the Prime Minister give his unequivocal assurance that by Christmas the Government of Canada will have before Parliament a manufacturing strategy for the nation which, for the first time, will have a time frame that is longer than the next election?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to indicate to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that an industrial strategy, in the sense that he is asking for, is something that cannot be given in one statement. I think there has been a misunderstanding which has been entertained for a long time on the thought that there can be one industrial strategy for Canada.

There is division of jurisdiction between the Federal and Provincial Governments. There are many industries in Canada—some in manufacturing, as the Hon. Member said, and some having to do with natural resources and with services. Therefore, I do not envisage that there ever could be one industrial strategy for Canada. There can be many and, indeed, the Government has been employed since the 1980 election in announcing many elements of that industrial strategy. The Minister of Transport, just to take one example, has already by his initiatives in the area of the Crow taken a very important step in the area of industrial strategy, in the area of transportation, and so it goes for all the other areas.

LEVEL OF BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns a story which was published at noon today on CP Wire. The short paragraph which I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister and ask him to comment upon concerns unemployment insurance benefits. It reads:

> Officials have said the Government cannot afford to carry that deficit indefinitely. Axworthy is said to be looking at various ways to cover it, including cuts in benefits—

I should like to give the Minister the opportunity to deny that part of the story and to assure the House that he and his Government have no intention of cutting unemployment insurance benefits.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has been in politics long enough to know that he should not put much trust in unverified stories. I have not seen this particular article, but I can tell him that we certainly have no intention of cutting benefits. What we have been working on is a program to ensure that the unemployment insurance system continues to work as it has been working to provide basic income support for many Canadians who need it during these very difficult times. The Minister of Finance will be issuing a statement later today which will explain how the Government intends to go about doing that. I can tell this House that the unemployment insurance system is something which this Government is here to protect and to continue to maintain as a way of providing that security for Canadians.

ASSURANCE SOUGHT ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Let me ask a short supplementary for assurance, Madam Speaker. I am aware, as all of us are, of the strain which the fund is under, and we are going to be listening with some anticipation to what the Minister of Finance will be saying later on with respect to the fund. I want it clearly understood from the Minister that there is no policy under consideration now or in the foreseeable future in the Minister's understanding that would involve a cut in insurance benefits.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I will just repeat what I have said. We are here to protect and maintain the system. In fact we have been able to use the unemployment insurance system to provide a number of very creative initiatives in job creation and work sharing. We now have over 170,000 people involved in work-sharing programs through UIC, which shows that we are broadening the use of the system, and not trying to reduce it.

INQUIRY WHETHER DIALOGUE WILL BE ESTABLISHED WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the new Minister of Finance. The minister knows as well as I do what the unemployment rate is in the province of Quebec. He knows that the number of unemployed workers is gradually reaching the half-million mark, and in the circumstances, and also considering the fact that relations between the two governments have been less than satisfactory during the past twelve months, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he firmly intends to restore relations with the Quebec ministers responsible for economy-oriented projects, so that both governments can work together in order to achieve what is best for Quebec?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not up to us to take further steps in order to restore relations. The Prime Minister, myself and my colleagues have repeatedly made it clear that the door was open, that we are prepared to co-operate with the Quebec government and Quebec authorities, to make the joint effort required on the part of both governments in order to remedy the unemployment problem and stimulate the Quebec economy. There is not one minister in this House who has refused to co-operate, and I would ask the hon. member to take note of the fact that the Government of Canada and the federal ministers in this House have always been prepared to co-operate with the government of Quebec. As for the few incidents which may have taken place, I think that if my hon. colleague would take the trouble to check these very carefully, he will realize that generally speaking, any refusal to co-operate did not come from the federal government.

REQUEST THAT CO-OPERATION BE ESTABLISHED WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary, and regarding the minister's suggestion, I would like to remind him that not long ago, the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was quite categorical in a statement to his Quebec counterpart regarding payment of the $200 million in the Laprade affair, saying that if Quebec did not reach a decision, he would proceed unilaterally to allocate these funds. I do not call that co-operation. My question may be similar to the first one: Can the Minister of Finance give us the assurance today—and I think this is very important to Quebecers—that he will take steps to achieve co-operation between both governments and that provincial priorities which are not necessarily incompatible, and I am thinking of job creation objectives, be given due consideration, insofar as doing so is not incompatible with the philosophy of the federal system?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can assure my hon. colleague that that would be the case and I have no trouble doing so. However, regarding the matter of the Laprade fund I would remind him that this fund was formed by the Canadian government which took the initiative of setting aside $200 million to be used in assisting this area in Quebec's heartland, when the heavy water plant we had started to build had to be abandoned because of a drop in demand for heavy water, and the Quebec government decided not to proceed with the nuclear energy project. So the plant was abandoned because there was no demand for heavy water, and subsequently the Canadian government set aside $200 million to help the area in question. I would like to point out that for three or four years we have been ready to discuss the matter and to have consultations, and it was impossible to reach an agreement quickly. In any case, the fund was set aside for the benefit of the people of the area, and the government of Canada will decide how its own funds will be spent for the benefit of the area, and my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is looking into this matter at the present time. We already allocated nearly $10 million from the fund a few months ago, and my colleague intends to proceed quickly with further allocations in the months to come. This may be done in consultation, there is nothing against that, but I would like to make it clear that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the government of Canada will decide how these funds are to be allocated.

FORESTRY

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS AND POLICIES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to our new super star in waiting, the Minister of State for Economic Development. With our number one export industry, the forest industry, now operating at less than two-thirds of capacity across Canada with over 30 per cent of forest workers unemployed, and in view of the government's self-admitted failure regarding the Employment Bridging Assistance Program which has in B.C., for example, created only 15 per cent of the promised 10,000 jobs, what new programs, if any, does the Minister and the Government now have to get forestry workers through this winter, and what new policies does the Minister now propose to ensure that there is employment and needed forestry work done in the industry next spring to meet both Canada's wood supply shortages and future market expansion needs?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, in these new responsibilities which I have assumed, Members may rest assured that the regional sensitivities of all areas of the country—and the Hon. Member refers particularly to his own—are under most serious consideration by all the Departments that can make a contribution within the area of economic development and within the Committee on Economic and Regional Development, of which I am the Chairman. With respect to specific programs, they will, of course, be announced from time to time, as they have been and will continue to be, by the Ministers who have specific responsibilities in these areas.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF SALE OF CROWN ZELLERBACH COMPANY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Crown Zellerbach, the second-largest forest producer in Canada, is now being sold. This is the third major forest company controlled from the U.S. to be abandoned by a U.S. parent. The fire sale of U.S. companies operating in Canada appears to be the prelude to a collapse of the Canadian forest industry rather than a prelude to a period of recovery. Would the Minister investigate the loss of international marketing of Canadian forest products in Canada, and would he further be prepared to intervene through FIRA to investigate whether this sale of Crown Zellerbach is being undertaken in the best interest of Canadians?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I was just advised of this take-over this morning. As we all know, all foreign take-over applicants must go through the FIRA process. I will be discussing this matter with the FIRA officials in the next couple of days.

With respect to international marketing in forest products, the industry and the Government have made substantial progress in the last couple of years. My colleague, the new Minister of State for International Trade, and I will be working very closely together to expand international markets for Canadian forest products.

WEST COAST WORK STOPPAGE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It concerns the work stoppage on the West Coast that has halted the exports of Canadian grain, sulphur, potash and coal. The Minister will know that in addition to the jobs lost in the port areas there are presently thousands of other Canadians who have lost their jobs. This situation unfortunately is at a time of record unemployment. First, does the Minister specifically think that the difficulties between labour and management justify the damage that is being done to the total economy? Second, how long is the Minister prepared to wait before the Government gets involved directly?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, because of the concerns he expressed about the repercussions, not only on the incomes of the harbour workers' families, but also on the incomes of those in the affected industries, including the ones the hon. member mentioned, I sent a telex on Monday to the two parties involved urging them to reconvene their meetings to try to resolve the dispute on their own. It is my understanding they are meeting in Vancouver this afternoon, and I hope that their efforts will lead to some positive results ending the dispute.

• (1450)

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, we appreciate that, and it is my understanding that the parties are meeting at two o'clock Vancouver time, which is five o'clock Ottawa time. I would like to suggest to the Minister that talk is certainly not enough.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER RESUMPTION OF WORK

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Is the Minister prepared to get directly involved to the extent of instructing the parties to go back to work while the negotiations are under way? His lack of action, again at a time of record unemployment, is causing very serious damage to the total Canadian economy and especially to the western grain farmers. I would therefore urge the Minister to accept his responsibility as Minister of Labour and to become directly involved with this unfortunate dispute.

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member does not realize that a Commissioner was appointed in March of this year, that he consulted with both parties and produced a report in August this year, and that the two parties have exhausted all possible means available to themselves. I hope that, with good will and determination, the two sides can resolve the matter. If not, the only final recourse would be to bring the matter before Parliament.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—ENFORCEMENT OF CANADIAN SANCTIONS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the new Secretary of State for External Affairs. On February 23 of this year, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs made a belated and half-hearted statement on behalf of the Canadian Government in connection with the situation in Poland. He announced certain very minor sanctions that the Government was imposing because it objected to what had happened in Poland concerning the crackdown on Solidarity and the human rights abuses there. Among those, for example, a program of Canadian-Polish academic exchanges was suspended. Since that time none of the objectives set out by the Government in its release have been met.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs is the Government enforcing even those minor sanctions. Since these have been unsuccessful and the Polish Government has gone on to further violations of the Helsinki Accords to dissolve Solidarity legally, is the Government now planning further sanctions of a more meaningful nature? If so, what are those sanctions, and will the Government do more than have its backbenchers practise rhetoric concerning this situation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe that the Canadian Government has been extremely outspoken about the plight of the Polish people who recently, as was indicated by the motion presented earlier, were deprived by law of the possibility of maintaining free trade unions. Certainly Solidarity was banished and we have protested that action, not only because it is at variance with the wishes of the Polish people but also because it is in total contradiction to the international obligations undertaken by the Government of Poland.

The Hon. Member asks whether we propose any further sanctions. I want to tell him that if in present circumstances there could be a concerted way by which additional pressure could be brought upon the Polish Government to bring about changes, then we would consider any such action; but in present circumstances it seems to me, in view of the turbulence which is accepted by the Government of Poland within its own country, and in view of the demonstrations by the Polish people which have been turned back by the Government, that the effect of additional sanctions in the field of exchanges would likely be very ineffective indeed. If the Hon. Member can produce a series of proposals which would have an important effect in changing the attitude of the Polish Government, then I would certainly be the first to consider them.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the Minister's foreign policy is as clear, concise and effective as his financial policy was. I would refer him to my statements of March 24 and October 15 of this year for a concise program of action that he might take.

SALE OF GRAIN

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My supplementary question is as follows: the Prime Minister of this country gave implicit endorsement to what happened in Poland last December and early January, and the Government has done nothing effective since then. Specifically, will the Government renew the agreement entered into with the Polish Government which expires on December 21 and which provides extremely generous credit terms concerning the sale of grain to Poland? I understand that by December 21 we will be out approximately $1.25 billion under that agreement. Will the Government renew that agreement with these generous credit terms, or not? Will it take any action with respect to the quotas given Polish trawlers to take fish within our 200-mile economic zone, which is not required by treaty nor any other way, but given at the discretion of the Government? Will it do anything convincing at all? Will it act at all, or make decisions at all?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked whether a decision has been taken with respect to the provision of credit to Poland for the purchase of agricultural products. I must tell the hon. member that no decision has been taken on that point as of now, but I would certainly take the interests of the Canadian farmers into account before reaching a decision. I would take into account whether sanctions of that kind would have any effect on the Polish Government before I would adopt the rather simplistic proposals made by the Hon. Member, whose foreign policy in his new post as critic of external affairs is as turbulent and explosive as were his unsuccessful financial policies.

FISHERIES

PEARSE COMMISSION REPORT—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Tom Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister knows that British Columbia has been hit harder by unemployment than any other Province west of the Ottawa River and that the resulting economic hardship is particularly serious in the West Coast fishing industry. In his final report to the Government, Commissioner Dr. Peter Pearse stated that his findings point inescapably to "deficiencies of federal government policy", and noted that "the cost of this disarray has been staggering". Dr. Pearse's report contained a host of innovative recommendations which he says are essential if the B.C. fishing industry is to be restored to good health. Will the Minister agree to refer Dr. Pearse's report immediately to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that Parliament may take decisive action on behalf of West Coast fishermen?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have had an opportunity to meet the commissioner, and Dr. Pearse and I had a long conversation. I intend to visit the west coast shortly to meet industry representatives and fishermen to discuss the recommendations and how they have been received. I hope that in a few months, in fact as soon as possible, I will be in a position to make my own recommendations to cabinet, and the government will then make its decisions.

However, Madam Speaker, I do not want to sit down before taking this first opportunity I have had to say a few words in praise of my predecessor, who brought about the extension of the 200-mile zone, which I feel is one of the Canadian government's greatest diplomatic achievements since the Second World War, and furthermore, if we look at the statistics for exports on the west coast since 1977, we see that remarkable progress has been made, thanks to my predecessor.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: In other words, Madam Speaker, the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry is not to have any opportunity to deliberate upon and make recommendations arising out of this report. I say, for shame!

BOYCOTT OF CANADIAN FISH PRODUCTS

Mr. Tom Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the same Minister deals with another factor which is jeopardizing the jobs of West Coast fishermen in the planned boycott against Canadian fish products in British and European markets. The Minister knows that this boycott is being promoted and supported by Canadian groups which do not seem to concern themselves with the economic plight of Canadian fishermen or their families. What steps has the Minister taken to prevent this boycott which is already damaging our international markets for Canadian fish?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, on the first point raised by the Hon. Member, I will tell him that it is not my custom to give instructions to parliamentary committees. If the Parliamentarians on all sides want to discuss an issue, this is their responsibility. I will not be giving them instructions.

With respect to the second question, the question of marketing, that will be among the priorities that I have set for myself during my tenure as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. All that I hope is that I will see some consensus between the different players in that regard, and I expect the support of the Hon. Member.

THE CONSTITUTION

GOVERNMENT HELP FOR MINORITIES INVOLVED IN COURT ACTIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and it concerns federal assistance granted to minority groups in the case of appeals to the courts. We all know that since February 1978, the federal cabinet has been authorizing financial support for cases challenging provincial legislation as it concerns Sections 93 and 133 of the British North America Act. Since the Constitution Act, 1982 was passed, educational rights for members of official language minority groups have been governed by Section 23 of the Charter of Rights. Considering these facts, can the minister inform the House whether the government is prepared to expand its financial support so as to cover Section 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in addition to Sections 93 and 133 of the British North America Act, in the case of appeals to the courts?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State of Canada): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the member for Ottawa-Vanier for his question. I agree that this is one of the priorities the Department of the Secretary of State should consider. I have asked the people concerned to assess as soon as possible the impact of the request formulated by the hon. member today, and I shall then be in a position to report to the House on the financial assistance to be provided and the accompanying conditions, so that Canadians who want to exercise their rights to equal access to French or English schools under the law can receive assistance from the Canadian government.

PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR ACCELERATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has spoken considerably about co-operation. I am sure he would know that the downturn in the automobile industry, the construction industry and many other industries has now settled to the point where it has affected the basic steel industry very dramatically.

Would the Prime Minister consider asking the provinces and the municipalities, in addition to his own ministries, what projects they could expect to go ahead with but have delayed as a result of economic conditions, and then meet with them and others to try to find ways to accelerate the process in order to get those projects under way so that the steel industry will not have to get to the rock bottom stage that it anticipates it will get to during this coming winter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, much was done by the Minister of Finance in regard to the Hon. Member's leader. I want to say that this is a very constructive suggestion indeed. I think that the Hon. Member will be pleasantly surprised when he will see that it is exactly the form of action that we are contemplating. The discussions to which he refers have already begun between the Minister of Finance and some of his counterparts and, of course, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, which I referred to earlier.

It is crucial to our thinking, as I believe it is to the Hon. Member's, that the federal funds be used wherever possible to lever or to assist municipalities or the private sector, public and private corporations and provincial governments, so that they will be prepared to take risks now investing money which will be needed to build an infrastructure which Canada will use very effectively when recovery does come.

In the meantime, the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for action is exactly one of the ways in which we intend to act.

Mr. Deans: I am sure that the Prime Minister will recall that I made the same suggestion about 18 months ago. Perhaps if it was acted on then we would not be in the mess we are in now.

SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF SASKATCHEWAN WATER PIPELINE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is aware that in the city which I represent we will have unprecedented levels of unemployment, perhaps as high as during the Depression, maybe higher in fact than during the Depression.

Let me give the Prime Minister a specific example of something that might be done and get his assurance that it will be done. There is a demonstrated need for a water pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to Regina and Moose Jaw. Ipsco has indicated that it is prepared to provide the steel at cost. Will the Prime Minister sit down with the Government of Saskatchewan and work out those ways necessary to take advantage, to provide that project now in order that in the steel industry at least they will be able to have some work during the winter? It is one idea on how we might be able to deal with the current economic problems.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the fact, as he put it, that he mentioned this idea 18 months ago. I accept that. I would remind him that many of the actions of the Government in the previous year have been precisely an implementation of that kind of thinking.

Let me give him an example once again of the action of the Minister of Transport in the area of transportation, particularly in the west. The suggestion that has been worked at in very lengthy consultation between the Minister and his provincial counterparts and the private sector, as I recall it, is that the Minister was prepared to put forward something like $3 billion in order to assist the railways to get on with some of these projects, which would have meant spending by the railways of perhaps some $15 billion, meaning work not only in the west, not only better transportation, but work throughout Canada for all those industries which are related to the railways, including steel and so on. That is one example.

Another example is the announcement by the former Minister of Finance in the Budget of some $400 million for housing. The Hon. Member shakes his head. I want him to understand that we are trying that idea precisely.

Mr. Deans: What about the water pipeline?

Mr. Trudeau: When we offer each new home buyer $3,000, that is a matter of using federal money in order to permit the private sector, home owners and builders, to get on with projects which are much larger. In other words, the federal money is used in order to lever the private sector to do something beneficial for the individual and for Canada.

As far as the specific example mentioned by the Hon. Member is concerned, it has already been mentioned by the members of the Western Affairs Committee in the federal Government, and it is being discussed. If it is something that the Government of Saskatchewan sees as a priority, we will be very anxious to discuss it with that government.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO ATHABASCA RIDING

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The allocation of funds to the Athabasca riding under the Canada Community Development Program is down considerably from last year, and this during a year of high unemployment in the Athabaska area because of the disastrous shutdown of the Alsands and Cold Lake projects. Will the Minister be allocating more funds to the Athabaska riding?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as always, I am prepared to look at the allocations on the constituency level. I would remind the Hon. Member that under the $300 million program that we announced last July, which is just now coming into effect, there is a special allocation called the Special Response Fund which is designed to be allocated to those areas particularly hard-hit by immediate or recent changes in the employment picture. If the Hon. Member would like to prepare a dossier for me concerning the conditions faced by his riding, he knows I would give a sympathetic hearing, as always.

PROJECTS FOR NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabaska): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the minister is aware, northeastern Alberta contains most of the area covered by Treaty No. 8 and a number of reserves where employment is probably hitting 90 per cent or 95 per cent. Will some of that special allocation fund be made available for employment projects for native people in the Athabasca riding?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I have to remind myself exactly of where the money has been allocated in that portion. I would again point out that as part of the community development job creation effort, we do have a special stream for native people, an additional $10 million which is designated according to where there are large concentrations of reserves or native communities. I am sure that that portion of the money has been allocated in that area, but I will check to make sure that it has been done in an equitable way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we have had consultations with representatives of the various parties who are responsible for the business of the House, and it would seem that if you are patient and are flexible in applying the provisions of Standing Order 15(3), there will be no complaints. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is expected to speak for about 45 minutes, perhaps for as long as an hour, in making his statement, and we on this side of the House will certainly have no objection to members being given at least equal time to reply and ask questions as they feel appropriate. However, there is also an agreement and we would certainly not want this practice to be considered as a precedent. There is an agreement, Madam Speaker, that before the statement by the Minister of Finance, the latter will be authorized to introduce today, for first reading, the bill intituled: An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority (No. 2), which will enable the House to proceed with second reading tomorrow. And since the following will be at the request of the Conservative Party House Leader, I would like to specify right away that tomorrow, we intend to proceed with the debate on second reading of the bill which will be introduced in a few moments by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde); Friday will be the second and Tuesday the third day of this great debate on the economy. Monday will be an opposition day, and tomorrow I intend to be more specific as to the business of the House for the remainder of next week.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Madam Speaker, that substantially reflects the agreement reached with respect to the borrowing bill, which will be called on Thursday and debated on Thursday, Friday, and the following Tuesday. With respect to today's statement, as long as the Opposition is given equal time to the minister in proportion to the number of seats held by the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, we are happy with that arrangement.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I wonder if I might for clarification ask the Hon. House Leader for the Conservative Party just exactly what he means by that.

Mr. Nielsen: No problem, Madam Speaker; it means that normal, equitable practices prevail in this House.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, that is, of course, the agreement that we came to, that normal, equitable practices would be maintained.

Madam Speaker: The House then agrees unanimously that the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will have leave of the House to introduce a bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my purpose this afternoon is threefold. First, I want to report on Canada's economic performance this year and on our prospects for 1983. Second, I wish to inform Parliament and the people of Canada of the fundamental principles that will govern me and my actions as Minister of Finance. Third, I will indicate some additional and immediate actions the Government is proposing to ease further the hardship inflicted on Canadians by the recession, speed economic recovery and enable Canada to take full advantage of the development opportunities that will materialize as the world economy recovers.

Last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) reviewed with the people of Canada the extraordinarily difficult situation in which we find ourselves. He did not promise a quick and easy solution because none exists, but he charted a course we must follow to restore our country's capacity to survive economically, in a world where the survival of the fittest has become a rule of life.

The world-wide recession has cut our economy to the bone. We have lost half a million jobs during the past year. Almost a million and a half among us are looking for work. Many others have temporarily given up the search for gainful employment. Virtually no Canadian has been untouched by the recession. In every region of the country, those who have been spared the worst have relatives, friends or neighbours who are struggling to cope with hardship and insecurity—be they unemployed textile workers in Quebec, grounded fishermen in the Atlantic Provinces, idle lumbermen in British Columbia, laid off miners or auto workers in Ontario.

[Translation]

Throughout the country, in union halls and boardrooms, in factories, shops and offices, Canadians are struggling to protect their livelihood, to preserve the basic comforts of their families, and to keep alive their hopes for a better future. All too few will have any respite from this struggle during this coming winter. But Canadians know that recovery is possible and that the next few months will be decisive ones in our effort to turn the economy around. They know that adversity has caused us to set aside our differences and to approach the management of our economy with a growing sense of realism and national purpose, and a renewed spirit of cooperation.

The people of this country recognize that the recession is a global problem. They are all too aware that Canada, as a major trading nation, has been hit more heavily than many other countries. But people also know that we are not simply drifting on the tide of world events. They are also aware that we can mobilize our energies to make Canada a tougher, more resilient country, that we can emerge from the recession in a position to compete, prosper and fully develop our considerable economic potential.

We have made remarkable progress since last June in implementing the 6 and 5 program introduced by my predecessor, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), to break inflation and lay a solid foundation for a durable recovery. The response of provincial governments and the private sector to federal leadership in this regard has been effective and broadly based. Inflation, interest rates and mortgage rates are coming down. Our prospects are by no means as bleak as they were at the beginning of the summer.

[English]

Last week Canadians were given by the Prime Minister the strongest assurance that the Government of Canada will not kick the social props from under them and abandon them to struggle alone. This government will not tighten the screws on the economy, cut billions from Government spending, or seek to eradicate inflation by brute force. The Government will continue to act decisively to ensure that the strong and the more affluent among us help the weak and the more vulnerable through these difficult times. As my predecessor said last June:

> Solidarity and sharing built Canada. That sharing is what the unemployed, the many firms in trouble, and the thousands threatened by lay-offs now need. I count on the willingness of all Canadians to bear their share of the collective effort to bring down inflation.

I subscribe without reservation to this basic principle of Liberal Government. That is why I am proposing today the reallocation of over $1 billion from existing spending programs to finance a new employment program, provide more stimulus for the housing industry, and speed up the expansion and modernization of rail capacity in the west. That is why I am announcing arrangements designed to relieve the workers and employers of this country from the full burden of mounting unemployment insurance costs. And that is why I am proposing to Parliament a series of tax adjustments to ease the financial and administrative burden on individuals and on businesses.

I have been Minister of Finance for 48 days now. I must say I have received ten times that many suggestions and proposals. I want to reflect on these and to pursue a good many of them in further consultations. There may be some who believe that an immediate budget is imperative, indeed, who would demand a new budget every three months if the last one has not resolved all of our economic ills. But I can say that in all of the consultations I have had, no one has urged me to bring in an immediate budget, and some have even suggested that I should wait until spring.

I will not be rushed into action for the sake of appearing to act. Many urgent bills from previous budgets are still before the House and must be dealt with. To be sure, other critical issues need to be addressed and decided upon. But I intend to arrive at decisions that are sensible, constructive and durable, and I will take the time that is required to do so.

Since my appointment to this portfolio I have had extensive consultations with business, labour, co-operatives, women's organizations, economists, professionals, provincial Ministers and many others. I am grateful for their views. I have also received helpful advice from Members of Parliament from all parties. I wish to express my particular appreciation for the work of the House committee that has examined the detailed ways and means motions resulting from the last two budgets.

I also want to thank the officials of my Department who have worked beyond the call of duty in the past few weeks to assist me and the Government in our deliberations. I express particular gratitude to my Deputy Minister, Mr. Ian Stewart, who is in all respects an outstanding public servant and an outstanding Canadian.

These consultations have been most valuable and I intend to pursue them in a spirit of openness, candour and co-operation. Over the next few months, as I work towards my budget, I will be seeking advice on how we can build on the six and five program to develop a full-fledged strategy for national recovery. Throughout this process, indeed throughout my tenure as Minister of Finance, I will be guided by the following principles.

First, we must continue to practise fiscal responsibility. We must persist in restraining spending. We must strive to contain the rise of the deficit even while the recession cuts into Government revenues and raises public expenditures. This means that we must rigorously review our priorities to ensure that existing programs continue to serve valid objectives. It also means that we must not hesitate to trim existing programs to fund new initiatives.

Second, we must not abandon the victims of the recession in the mistaken belief that such callous action might speed our recovery. This Government has worked consistently over several decades to develop a social security system that effectively supports Canadians in need of help. We will not put the axe to that system at the very time when Canadians need it most. More constructively, we will continue to look for ways to improve our social programs and to make them more effective for those who need help.

Third, we must continue to rely primarily on the dynamism and creativity of the private sector as the engine of growth in Canada. The government will be seeking areas where it can act in close co-operation with business and labour to improve the financial health of the private sector as well as its ability to expand and prosper. I intend to foster the certainty and stability that are basic preconditions for a favourable economic climate.

Fourth, we must remain outward-looking as a nation and recognize that our future well-being depends critically on order and stability in international economic arrangements. The depressed level of economic activity throughout the world has increased the risk of financial disorder and growing reliance on protectionist measures. It has also dealt a heavy blow to the aspirations of developing countries. Not only must we not turn inwards ourselves, but we must use our counsel and influence in world affairs to assist in the process of repair.

Fifth, we must continue to develop effective mechanisms for consultation so that the broadest range of organizations and institutions, as well as provincial governments, may participate in the continuing revision and improvement of our economic policies. We have made significant progress in this direction over the past year, but it is imperative that we persist in our efforts. It is my fervent hope that we will find ways to involve labour organizations more productively in this process of consultation.

In this connection, it is my intention to appoint a panel of economic advisers made up of outstanding Canadian economists to advise me on the broad and complex range of economic policy issues that we must face as a nation. I will announce the membership and terms of reference of this panel in the next few days.

Sixth, and most importantly, we must build on the spirit of the six and five program to devise and implement an effective strategy for national recovery and economic development. As the Prime Minister emphasized last week, six and five is not an end but a beginning. It is not a solution to all our programs but a standard, a goal that we can all accept and, by doing so, make it possible to find together workable solutions to the many other challenges we face.

We all know what these are. Our productivity performance continues to lag. New production techniques must be developed and implemented. This requires development of our technological base, increased investment, and new and innovative approaches to organizing work and labour-management relations.

Infrastructure development is required across the country. Our railway system in particular desperately needs to be upgraded. There is little point in cutting our production costs and increasing our productivity if we cannot deliver our goods to the markets where they are sought.

We have an abundance of resources that need to be developed. Markets for our energy may not be very buoyant today. But the lead times of development are long, our energy will be needed in the 1980s and 1990s, and planning ahead can give us an important advantage in an increasingly energy-reliant world. Likewise, our forests need replenishing and our fisheries careful husbanding if we are to sustain our resource base over the longer run.

These are some of the things we need to do. There are many others. We must undertake them together, as Canadians, if we are to succeed. Just as governments cannot break inflation by themselves, so they cannot bring about economic recovery by themselves. But just as the public and the private sectors are now implementing jointly a national program to break inflation, so we can join together to strengthen our economic system, sustain our recovery and enhance our future growth prospects. And just as the Government has shown its willingness to lead in the fight against inflation, so it is prepared to lead wherever necessary and to co-operate with business, labour and the Provinces to promote economic growth.

I would like now to comment on the economic and financial outlook. The recession has been deeper and longer lasting in Canada than the Government anticipated when the June budget was presented. We are going through the most severe period of recession since the 1930s. The publication of the National Accounts in late August confirmed that the gross national product declined by 2.1 per cent in the second quarter of this year, bringing it 6.2 per cent below the level it has reached in the second quarter of 1981. Subsequent monthly information suggests that the economy continued to be weak through the third quarter and may have declined by a further 1 per cent, although national accounts data will not be available for several weeks.

Nevertheless, there are signs that economic recovery will begin in the current quarter. Inflation is abating. This has accelerated since the introduction of the six and five program. On a year-over-year basis, the consumer price index increased by 10.4 per cent in September compared to 11.2 per cent in June and 12.5 per cent on average in 1981. And over the three months ending in September, the average monthly increase, seasonally adjusted, was under six-tenths of 1 per cent. This contrasts with an average monthly increase of nine-tenths of 1 per cent in the first six months of 1982.

The moderation in inflation we have had, together with prospects of continuing improvement, has made it possible for Canadian interest rates to decline as U.S. interest rates have fallen. The bank rate has come down for ten consecutive weeks. It is now more than five percentage points lower than it was at the end of June, and almost ten percentage points lower than the peak level reached in August of 1981. Other interest rates have followed the bank rate down. Mortgage rates have also fallen by five percentage points since last June. What this means is that the monthly payment on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years, to take one example, has declined by $200 a month during the same period. These lower interest rates are also easing the difficulties faced by businesses and helping to stimulate economic recovery.

For 1982 as a whole, real gross national product is now expected to fall by 4.4 per cent and the unemployment rate to average about 10.9 per cent. Given the high rates of inflation recorded in the first half of the year, the consumer price index for the whole of 1982 will likely rise by 10.9 per cent. Nevertheless, the trend is clearly downward, and I expect inflation to be running at less than 10 per cent by early next year.

Looking forward to 1983, the recovery should gradually gather momentum. Real growth of about 3 per cent may be expected next year. Broad adherence to the six and five program should bring the increase in the CPI down to an average of about 7.5 per cent in 1983 and to about 6 per cent by the end of 1982. Our trade balance with other countries, which has already attained record highs this year, should be even stronger in 1983. Continued strength in our trade position, together with the prospect of continuing decline in U.S. interest rates, will make possible further lowering of interest rates in Canada as our inflation gains are consolidated.

The area of greatest concern in 1983 will be the labour market. I expect employment growth to resume soon. The number of Canadians at work should increase by 2.5 to 3 per cent from the fourth quarter of 1982 to the fourth quarter of 1983. However, as economic and employment growth resume, many people who have temporarily left the labour force over the past year will once again begin to look for work. As a result, the labour force will also grow strongly through 1983, and the unemployment rate will decline only gradually. Unemployment is expected to decline, reaching a level slightly above 11 per cent of the labour force by the end of the year; but for 1983 as a whole, the unemployment rate will likely be slightly above 12 per cent.

The unemployment outlook therefore remains distressing and demands continuing efforts to improve employment prospects and help those most in need. That is why I am announcing today a number of measures that go beyond the additional $1.4 billion the government has already allocated for these purposes over the past year.

I now report to the House on the government's fiscal position for the past and the current fiscal year. The Public Accounts for fiscal year 1981-82 have just been tabled. I am tabling with this statement the standard summary statement of transactions for fiscal years 1981-82 and 1982-83. Financial requirements excluding foreign exchange transactions were $8.3 billion in 1981-82, virtually identical to the estimate made at the time of the June budget. This is almost $2 billion lower than in 1980-81. The budgetary deficit in 1981-82 was $13.6 billion, about $1 billion higher than in the previous fiscal year. Total outlays were $68.9 billion, up 17.6 per cent from 1980-81. The major factor accounting for this large increase was interest on the public debt, which grew by 42 per cent. Outlays other than public debt charges were $53.7 billion, reflecting an increase of 12.2 per cent over the previous fiscal year. Budgetary revenues stood at $54.1 billion, 19.1 per cent higher than in 1980-81.

In 1975, the government pledged to hold federal spending to the trend rate of growth of GNP. From 1975-76, the fiscal year in which this commitment was made, to 1980-81, total outlays declined from 22.9 per cent of GNP to 20.1 per cent of GNP. The Public Accounts show that total outlays in 1981-82 increased slightly as a share of GNP to 20.8 per cent. But I emphasize that this increase was more than totally accounted for by an extraordinary and unavoidable increase in interest charges. Exclusive of interest charges, total outlays on government programs have fallen continuously from 20.5 per cent of GNP in 1975-76 to 16.4 per cent of GNP in 1980-81 and, further, to 16.2 per cent of GNP in 1981-82. Those who assert that federal expenditures are "out of control" should check the record of the past seven years.

My predecessor reported in June that the fiscal position of the government in 1982-83 had deteriorated significantly from what was anticipated in November of 1981, essentially because of the onslaught of the recession. I must report today that further weakening of the economy in the intervening months has aggravated this deterioration. The budgetary deficit was then projected to be $19.6 billion. I am now estimating it at $23.6 billion. About 70 per cent of this slide is directly attributable to the impact of the recession on anticipated revenues.

Total outlays are now expected to be almost $80 billion, about $1.1 billion higher than projected in June. Interest charges are now forecast to be more than $900 million lower than in June. This has been more than offset, however, by major increases in the costs of statutory programs, such as the government share of unemployment insurance, the Canada Assistance Program, Equalization, and Railway Act payments, which are related in substantial part to the depressed levels of economic activity. The net increases in statutory program costs total some $1.5 billion. We have also faced increases in costs due to other government undertakings. These include the just announced decision to provide $400 million to strengthen the equity bases of Canadair and de Havilland and an increase in payments to Via Rail. In many cases such increases also reflect the state of the economy and the desire to minimize further adjustments which are imposed on labour and other markets under current conditions. In planning its expenditures, the government does, of course, provide reserves which, in more normal times, should be adequate to cover such contingencies. However, they have been substantially exceeded this year. The new outlays projection does contain an allowance against further possible upward revisions in existing program costs.

Outlays as a share of GNP will rise this year, reflecting both the low rate of GNP growth and the pressures of the weak economy on government expenditures. This is primarily a cyclical phenomenon, however, and the government remains committed to containing spending growth to rates below the trend rate of GNP growth over the medium term.

While outlays have increased by slightly more than $1 billion since June, revenue estimates have fallen by almost $3 billion. This is almost entirely due to the weakness of the economy, and reflects the operation of "automatic stabilizers". Our tax and expenditure systems have been deliberately designed so that spending for major social programs rises more rapidly and government revenue more slowly when the economy falters. This is precisely what is now happening. Indeed, total budget revenues are expected this year to grow by less than 3 per cent. The net effect of these adjustments is to support economic activity in times of recession.

The government's financial requirements, which were estimated in June to be $17.1 billion, are now expected to be closer to $22.2 billion. Some $4 billion of the increase is attributable to the increase in the budgetary deficit, the reasons for which I have just spelled out. Most of the remainder—about $700 million—is due to increases in the deficit in the Unemployment Insurance Account, partly in response to much higher than anticipated unemployment rates, and partly as a result of the government's decision on unemployment insurance premiums for 1983 to which I will return in a few moments.

Personal savings are at an historically high level and private borrowings have been very weak through the first half of the fiscal year. Consequently I do not anticipate problems in meeting the government's borrowing requirements. Moreover the government is of the view that in current circumstances the federal deficit provides appropriate support to economic activity and individual Canadians suffering from the recession.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the government is presently seeking a $4 billion increase in its borrowing authority under the provisions of Standing Order 72A. I have outlined the factors leading to this request. I have also made it clear by the estimates I have presented that further borrowing authority will be required before the end of this fiscal year. In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

[English]

I have heard it said, Mr. Speaker, that statistics make good soporifics. I fully realize that the figures I have recited probably mean very little to the average Canadian. After all, numbers do not pay the rent or buy the groceries. The man in the street wants to know, quite rightly, what the Government will do for him, so I now turn to the additional actions the Government is proposing to protect Canadians from the worst effects of recession, enhance our prospect for recovery and position ourselves to take advantage of future growth opportunities.

The fiscal position I have just described clearly shows that the Government's room for manoeuvre is very limited. While I am prepared to accept the larger deficits resulting from our weak economic performance, the principle of fiscal responsibility prevents consideration of massive new spending programs.

Some have argued that the measures introduced to bring down inflation have extracted a heavy toll from Canadians. However, it is now recognized by virtually every responsible government in the world, whatever may be its political stripe or ideological bent, that failure to check inflation and the pernicious expectations to which it gives rise would leave national economics in an even more devastated state.

To change course now would be foolish and irresponsible. It would break the trust we have sought to build with Canadians. It would perpetuate the cynicism that inflation breeds. The people of Canada would feel betrayed because their Government, when it came to the crunch, lacked the resolve to persevere. I am confident that Canadians will continue to support and adhere to the Government's six and five program and that we will move into the 6 per cent world by the end of next year. I am determined to avoid any initiative that might compromise this achievement. The additional measures I am announcing today to meet pressing needs will accordingly be financed by spending reallocations.

To help those Canadians who have been directly hit by the recession, the Government is introducing a new Employment Expansion and Development Program.

The June budget recognized the need to take action to reduce unemployment and provide support to those hardest hit by the recession. My predecessor announced measures to expand employment programs, stimulate housing and other employment-intensive construction, and promote economic development. More than $1.4 billion is allocated for these purposes in the current fiscal year.

These programs are now in place and, along with unemployment insurance and other employment initiatives, provide an important line of defence against the hardship of unemployment. Through the Canada Community Development and special youth programs, close to $300 million dollars will be spent for job creation programs this winter, providing employment for over 60,000 Canadians. Most hirings will occur during November, December, January and February. These jobs will be targetted as much as possible on our most vulnerable communities.

However, it has become apparent since last June that additional help is required for those who face severe financial difficulty because of prolonged unemployment. The duration and depth of the recession have led to a significant increase in the number of people who will no longer have access to unemployment insurance benefits. Lacking employment and other sources of income, many people will be forced to seek social assistance, often for the first time in their lives. We cannot, as a nation, ignore their plight. It is to help these people that the New Employment Expansion and Development Program is being put in place.

[English]

Through this Program the Government will draw upon the abilities of all employers in Canada whether they be in the public, non-profit or private sectors to generate employment. We face a national problem requiring a national solution. The Federal Government cannot solve it alone. By working together we can find productive and socially useful jobs for those who are in greatest need of gainful employment.

The Federal Government is prepared to commit $500 million to this new Program. It is expected to provide jobs for 60,000 individuals over a period of 18 months. I am calling upon Provincial Governments to facilitate its implementation. I am also inviting them, wherever possible, to supplement the federal contribution. Joint action can bring about a significant reduction in the number of people who would otherwise be forced to seek social assistance. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), will contact his provincial counterparts in the next few days, and he will announce very shortly the details of the new Program.

Because of the importance of the construction industry in stimulating economic activity, I am announcing that an additional $150 million is being allocated to two existing housing Programs—the Canadian Home Renovation Plan and the Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan.

Under the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, eligible home owners can receive a grant equivalent to a third of their costs for home repairs up to a maximum of $3,000. Indeed the Program has been very successful, and the $65 million allocated to date has been almost completely committed. I am announcing a further allocation of $50 million to the Program, and this should provide an additional 13,000 jobs.

The Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan introduced in the June budget provides relief from high interest rates for prospective home buyers. Grants of $3,000 are available to all purchasers of new homes on which construction started before December 31, 1982, and to first-time buyers of existing houses before that date. The Program has been very well received and close to 65,000 grant applications have already been approved. In addition, seven Provinces have home ownership assistance programs which complement the federal plan.

Since June mortgage interest rates have fallen considerably and home buyers are under less pressure. In addition, housing prices have come down. Statistics Canada's new house price index showed a year-over-year decline of 3 per cent in September, but the construction industry has still not recovered from its slump and this continues to be a matter of concern to the Government. I am therefore announcing that the $3,000 home ownership stimulation grant will be extended to the end of April, 1983 at a maximum cost of $100 million. There will be, however, one important modification. Starting on January 1, 1983 assistance will be extended to purchasers of new housing only to generate the maximum amount of activity and employment.

To better position Canada to benefit from world recovery, the Government is earmarking an additional amount of up to $400 million to speed up the expansion and modernization of rail capacity in the west and to facilitate an early, fair and balanced resolution of the Crow rate issue. The commitment of these funds will be contingent upon detailed proposals recommended by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

The Government is determined to implement swiftly its comprehensive approach to expand the western rail transportation system and modernize the freight rate regime for grain. Early action will ensure that the railways will be in a position to increase rail capacity as required to move the substantially higher volumes of export commodities projected from the middle of the decade onward. This expansion is critical to Canada's economic development in the 1980s. It will pave the way for the exploitation of additional coal, potash and sulphur resources as well as increased exports of grain. The over-all plan will also stimulate western agricultural development and facilitate economic diversification.

Railway investments amounting to $11.8 billion in 1982 dollars are planned over the period to 1991 and will generate substantial economic activity, not only in the west but in virtually every region of the country. In addition to major construction activity and sourcing of materials in the western provinces, the railways' requirements for steel rail, locomotives, rolling stock and electronic equipment will provide major stimulus over the period to the manufacturing sector, particularly in central and eastern Canada. As a result of the direct railway expenditures, it is estimated that some 400,000 jobs will ultimately be generated.

But to get the full benefits from the plan and to speed national recovery it is imperative that we get an early start. The Government will therefore seek firm and specific undertakings from the railways to commit funds for the expansion and modernization of their facilities in the west. If I receive assurance from the Minister of Transport that these undertakings are satisfactory, I will be prepared to extend the special additional capital cost allowances on railway track and other rail assets provided under the Income Tax Act beyond December 31.

While I am addressing the issue of transportation, I would like to say a word about the current situation in the west coast ports. The Government of Canada and the people of Canada cannot pour hundreds of millions of dollars into the modernization of our transportation system and see that system close down for extended periods of time by labour-management disputes. Such a situation is even more outrageous at a time when the country is in its worst recession since the 1930s and when such an interruption paralyses one of our most active and dynamic sectors. The Government in its anti-inflation battle has relied on voluntary participation and called upon the sense of responsibility and of solidarity of both management and labour. Unfortunately, this does not seem to have worked yet in the west coast ports dispute.

I am pleased to note that talks are now planned to resume between the parties today in Vancouver. However, I am giving notice on behalf of the Government that it would be in the interests of both parties to resolve their dispute in the next few days. If the dispute is not settled by Monday at the latest, the Government will carry out its responsibilities on behalf of the Canadian people and take decisive action.

The measures I have announced are being financed by reallocations of existing expenditures amounting to $1.1 billion. Consequently, they will not add to the deficit over the current and coming two fiscal years. I am pleased to confirm that this has been achieved without weakening in any way the social security system that is currently sheltering millions of Canadians from the full brunt of the recession.

From now through 1984-1985 some $660 million will be freed up in the energy area by scaling back funds allocated to a number of programs. The existing allocations for the Petroleum Incentives Program will nevertheless be maintained.

Outlays in the areas of defence and official development assistance will be reduced by $230 million and $245 million respectively from the dollar levels previously allocated. These reductions, which have been made possible by lower rates of inflation and GNP growth, will take place without prejudice to our ability to maintain our commitment to 3 per cent real annual growth in defence expenditures, or to achieve our aid commitment level of 0.5 per cent of GNP by 1985-1986. They will, however, require some adjustments in the nature of the programs we had planned to undertake.

Not only is the government freeing up funds for immediate new initiatives, but it is seeking to ensure that it will have the capacity to respond to contingencies likely to arise. Some reductions in other programs are therefore being made to provide for such contingencies and contribute to the financing of the new initiatives I have just announced.

This reallocation exercise has been very difficult. I want to thank all my colleagues for their co-operation in this regard. One billion dollars may not seem like very much in the context of total outlays of $80 billion. But roughly 75 per cent of total Government outlays is made up of transfers to persons, Provinces and other countries, grants or capital assistance to industry, subsidies, loans and interest on the public debt. Of the 25 per cent or $20 billion remaining, which accounts for the operating expenditures of the Federal Government inclusive of defence, some $11 billion is made up of wages, salaries and other personnel costs, which have already been restrained by the six and five program.

It has not been easy to make deep cuts in Government spending without hurting some group of Canadians already reeling from the impact of recession. But the Government, having urged Canadians to restrain their incomes, had no choice but to revise and pare down federal expenditures. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has introduced over the past few months stringent restrictions on spending in the Public Service. The Government has asked him to look again at departmental expenditures to ensure that no fat is left in the system and, even beyond this, that outlays are being pared down to the lowest level compatible with maintenance of adequate service to the public. He will soon report to the House on this issue.

I am also announcing today the Government's decision to set employee and employer unemployment insurance premium rates for 1983 at levels significantly lower than would be required to prevent the deficit of the unemployment insurance account from rising further next year. In effect, the Government will limit the increase in premiums to about half what would be required to balance the operations of the account in 1983.

In so doing, the Government is accepting the recommendation of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, which includes representation from both business and labour, and a similar recommendation made by the Economic Council of Canada. Effective January 1, 1983 premium rates will be set at $2.30 per $100 of insurable earnings for employees, and at $3.22 for employers.

Unemployment Insurance is the first line of defence of Canadians against temporary loss of income resulting from unemployment. Honourable Members are well aware that over the past year it has been drawn upon more heavily and extensively than ever before to meet the objectives for which it was designed. The program is financed through premiums paid by workers and their employers, and through contributions from the federal government. Over the years, premiums have moved up and down in response to general economic conditions and the consequential demands made on the Unemployment Insurance Account. Premiums were in fact reduced last year from the 1980 level of $1.80 for employees to $1.65 per $100 of insurable earnings—the same premium level as in 1976.

Unfortunately, we now face a very different situation. The severity of the recession has resulted in a very high number of claims on the Unemployment Insurance Account. It is estimated that by the end of 1983, in the absence of any increase in premium rates, the cumulative deficit could rise to more than $6.5 billion. Some increase in premium rates is therefore unavoidable. However, balancing the Account at this time would have imposed an intolerable burden on the private sector, requiring an employee premium rate as high as $3.75 in 1983.

To have raised premiums to such levels would have amounted to a massive tax increase on Canadian workers and businesses, an increase that would have jeopardized economic recovery. At the same time, keeping rates at their current levels could have added more than $3 billion to the government's cash requirements in 1983. It would also have required even higher rates in the future since the deficit of the Account would continue to mount.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration and I have both consulted with business and labour as to the fairest way to resolve this dilemma. There is a strong desire on the part of the private sector not to tamper with the basic insurance principle of the program. The government supports this principle. Yet a strong case can be made for sharing more widely the burden of unemployment insurance in current circumstances, thereby enhancing the stabilizing properties of the program and demonstrating the willingness of Canadians to help those among us who are most in need. Setting premium rates at the levels I have just indicated will require the government to advance more than $1 billion to the Unemployment Insurance Account in 1983, over and beyond its normal contribution as an employer. The government's borrowing requirements will increase by an equivalent amount. The government's decision will lead to an increase in the cumulative deficit in the Account in 1983—a matter of serious concern to all of us. Over the coming months, my colleagues and I will continue to assess closely the extent of the deficit and its implications, and to pursue the matter in further consultations with business, labour and other interested parties.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to go into a number of taxation issues, particularly bearing in mind the decision I have just announced relating to unemployment insurance. Taxation policy has been hotly debated over the past year. Our tax system must balance the need for fairness, the need for incentives, the need to avoid distorting private sector decisions, and the need to raise revenues. Many commentators have emphasized the importance of tax simplicity. I agree. However, some degree of complexity is unavoidable if the tax rules are to reflect the real and very complex world in which we live, and if tax incentives are to apply only to those for whom they are intended.

The government has welcomed consultations and constructive suggestions on tax policy. A committee of this House has examined the tax proposals from the November 1981 budget. Several groups of outside tax experts and private sector representatives have been appointed to examine important tax proposals. I have personally held many consultations on taxation issues since becoming Minister of Finance and I plan to continue this process.

I have a number of announcements to make concerning certain measures from the November budget. Many of these respond to representations made by individuals and associations either directly to me or my predecessor, or before the House Committee.

In reviewing these representations I have been guided by three considerations. First, it is important to ensure that incentives extended to some taxpayers are fair, that they do not unnecessarily distort economic activity, or result in higher tax rates for others.

Second, I do not believe that the Government can continually pile incentive upon incentive without looking at the revenue loss involved, the overall government deficit, and the capacity of the country to afford these incentives. The November changes were in the right direction and I am not prepared to abandon that approach, as some have suggested.

Third, since last November the Canadian economy has been hard hit by the world recession and, for this reason, some adjustments in the government's tax proposals are warranted. Now is the time to remove uncertainty, to end the debate over the merits of this or that proposal, to reduce tax complexity, and to move on to the many pressing economic problems that confront us.

Working Canadians are faced with uncertainty in employment and restraint in their living standards. The government is asking them to share with other Canadians the burden of mounting unemployment insurance costs. I am therefore making two tax adjustments that will directly benefit working Canadians.

I will not proceed with the proposal to tax the health and dental plan benefits of employees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: We as Parliamentarians, must recognize, that while this proposal would have improved the fairness of our tax system, now is not the time to introduce it. I expect that this adjustment will reduce the administrative burden on employers.

I am also responding positively to the numerous representations the Government has received on the taxation of housing and travel benefits extended to employees in northern Canada and other isolated locations. Such benefits are now tax exempt but the exemption expires at the end of this year. To continue to exempt all benefits would be unfair to other northern residents who do not receive such benefits, and to Canadians living in other parts of the country, who have to bear their full housing and travel costs out of after-tax income. An unlimited exemption would also encourage those affected to substitute tax-free benefits for taxable wages beyond what is reasonable.

However, there is a need for special rules for the valuation of housing and travel benefits that take into account the special circumstances of employees in these locations. Furthermore, I have concluded that, because of the very severe impact of the recession on communities in northern Canada, it would be inappropriate to begin subjecting such benefits to tax at the present time. I also recognize that northern employees and employers are being asked to adhere to the six and five program, and I do not want to impair their ability to do so.

Accordingly, I am extending today the current exemption of benefits by one year, to the end of 1983. I am also proposing a modified tax regime for benefits that will be phased in gradually, beginning in taxation year 1984 and ending in 1987. Full details will be provided in a document I will release shortly.

I would now like to say a few words on taxation affecting business, Mr. Speaker. Canadian businesses are presently confronted with very serious financial problems. Profits are at very low levels and must be restored if investment and economic activity are to pick up again. The decline in interest rates that has occurred since the June budget and the measures that I am announcing today will provide much needed relief. But I have come to the view that reducing the complexity of business tax measures and removing the uncertainties still lingering would help businessmen concentrate more fully on managing their affairs in these difficult times. I am therefore announcing today several tax adjustments to ease the businessman's burden.

The Small Business Bond was introduced last year to assist eligible small businesses in financial difficulty. The program, which was due to expire on December 31, 1982, has proven to be effective and has been used extensively. I am pleased to announce today that the program has been extended for one more year to December 31, 1983.

The change in tax treatment of professionals' work-in-progress will not apply to professionals who are ineligible for the low small business tax rate, or to other professionals who would be ineligible if they were incorporated. This includes doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, veterinarians and chiropractors.

The Government has proposed that the federal sales tax be moved from the manufacturers to the wholesale level as of January 1, 1983. This change would greatly improve the tax structure and remove serious biases that work to the disadvantage of domestic manufacturers and in favour of imports. I have received representations from both small and large businesses on this issue. They have generally recognized the need to remove the biases in the current system but they have taken the view that now is not the time for a changeover.

Some groups, notably a joint task force of business associations that I recently met with, have requested the opportunity to explore further whether a modified proposal could meet these objectives. Accordingly, I have instructed my officials to work with industry to explore possibilities in this regard. I invite the interested associations to designate their representatives as soon as possible.

As I noted previously, in the current economic environment I am receptive to the notion that any change, no matter how beneficial, imposes costs and uncertainty on businesses. I want to minimize such costs while continuing the policy of making the structural changes in the tax system that are required. Consequently, I am also announcing that the date for implementing the proposal on the sales tax will be delayed until after the legislation has received Royal Assent and that, in any event, implementation of the new system will not commence before the middle of 1984. This will give adequate time for the Government and the private sector to consult further, for Parliament to review the legislation and for taxpayers to gear up for the new system.

The November, 1981 budget imposed a tax on dividend distributions by small business to correct a serious anomaly in the taxation of such firms and their shareholders. In my judgment, the objective of the tax is sound and many have agreed with its purpose. However, the original proposal was unduly complex. It was also criticized as applying retroactively to dividends paid out of income that small firms had earned before the measure was introduced.

In order to resolve these concerns, I have concluded that the tax should apply only to dividends paid out of corporate income earned in taxation years starting after the year 1982. Dividends paid out of business income will be considered to come first out of income earned after 1982. This change removes one of the features of the tax that small business and the tax community found objectionable, and together with other technical adjustments will simplify the tax quite significantly.

Before the November 1981 budget, tax on capital gains was deferred in various corporate reorganizations. That budget proposed to end these tax deferrals in certain circumstances. The application of the proposal has been deferred until 1983, pending consultation with a group of independent tax experts. The issue remains under study and it is my intention to publish a consultative document containing specific proposals.

However, I want to remove uncertainty for businesses which are currently in the process of or are contemplating reorganizations. I am thus announcing that the pre-budget rules on corporate reorganizations, with the exception of the changes contained in the June 28, 1982, ways and means motion, will continue to apply after the end of this year. As well, any new proposals arising from ongoing studies and consultations will not apply to reorganizations that are substantially advanced on the date that new proposals are announced.

I have one adjustment to announce concerning taxation of the investment income of individuals. My predecessor referred a proposal to restrict tax deductibility of interest expenses to a committee of prominent tax professionals. That proposal would have limited tax deductions for investment interest expense to the amount of a person's investment income that was taxable in the year. I have received the report of the committee. Their recommendation is not to proceed with the proposal and I accept it.

However, in any move to eliminate tax on the inflation-related portion of capital gains or interest income, it may well be necessary to enact rules to ensure that taxpayers would not also be able to obtain a tax deduction for the inflation-related portion of borrowing costs they incur to make the investment. This matter will be further reviewed.

On April 21 my predecessor announced disbursement rules for private charitable foundations that met the objectives of both the foundations and the Government. These rules require the distinction to be maintained between charitable foundations and charitable organizations. In many cases this distinction in unnecessary. Accordingly, I am examining the possibility of applying the same rules to both charitable foundations and charitable organizations. I propose to make public later this fall draft legislation which would apply the rules proposed to both types of charities and to delay passage of the legislation until consultations with interested parties are completed. In any event, the new rule would apply only in taxation years commencing after 1983. However, the special rules concerning non-qualified investments, as announced on April 21, will apply at that time to all charities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the recent report of the Ministerial Advisory Committee on Inflation and the Taxation of Personal Investment Income, chaired by Mr. Pierre Lortie, the President of the Montreal Exchange. The Committee's report was released to the public on October 20. I wish to thank its members for the considerable and impressive work they have done on important tax issues. I have found the consultative process and the Report itself most useful. The Committee has supported the general thrust of the government's proposals to base taxation of investment income on real ability to pay. It has stressed the paramount need to reduce inflation. It has recommended that the Registered Shareholder Investment Plan proposal to exempt the inflation portion of capital gains from taxation be proceeded with in a modified form. It has recommended against adopting a proposal to adjust for tax purposes the interest income of individuals on funds lent to farmers, small business, and homeowners.

Since early June, interest rates have declined by five percentage points and are now at levels comparable to what they were two years ago. As we persevere in our efforts to reduce inflation, they will go even lower. Moreover the federal government and many provinces have introduced assistance programs for homebuyers, mortgage renewers, small business and farmers. I have just announced additional support for housing. In the light of these facts, I accept the Committee's recommendation that the proposal for indexed term deposits and indexed loans not be proceeded with.

[English]

I do not need to be persuaded of the crucial importance of encouraging the revival and growth of equity markets in Canada. I therefore intend to proceed, as recommended by the Committee, with the Registered Shareholder Investment Plan under which tax will apply only to the real portion of capital gains on common stock of public companies.

• (1630)

In my judgment, it is important to ensure that the details of the approach the Government will put forward take into account the Committee's suggestions and not prejudice any possible move to adjust the taxation of business income for inflation. I also believe it is desirable to work out the full details of this approach in the form of draft legislation available for public comment prior to implementation. It is my intention to table such draft legislation before the end of this year.

The Committee has recommended that a major study be undertaken to determine the desirability of adjusting the taxation of business income for inflation. I am well aware of the distortions and disincentives to investment that can arise when the tax system does not recognize that inflation affects the measurement of business income. I am therefore receptive to this recommendation and will consider how such a study could be conducted.

To sum up on tax issues, the over-all effect of the changes I have just announced, exclusive of the Registered Shareholder Investment Plan, will be to reduce federal revenues by $45 million in the current fiscal year and by approximately $300 million on a full-year basis. This financial impact is included in the financial statement I presented earlier. The revenue effect of the Registered Shareholder Investment Plan will depend on the exact details of its structure and when it comes into effect.

I will be releasing soon the draft legislation on the taxation of investment income and life insurance. I plan to table in the first two weeks of December final legislation to implement the proposals from the November and June budgets, as revised today. The legislation has benefited significantly from comments that have been made on the draft that was made public last June. I thank those who took time to send comments to me, my predecessor and my officials.

Madam Speaker, I did not attempt today to paint a rosy picture for Canadians. The world recession has severely weakened our economy. Recovery will take time, and unemployment will not come down overnight. But if the best is by no means assured, neither are we inevitably fated for the worst, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister has reminded us so often, quoting his favourite Portuguese proverb. The strong support that individual Canadians, private sector organizations and most provinces have given to the 6 and 5 program introduced by my predecessor last June has significantly improved our economic prospects. As a result, inflation has abated and interest rates have come down over the last four months. These hopeful trends point to an early recovery. The measures introduced in the June budget and those I have just outlined will sustain activity and help those among us hardest hit by the recession until recovery makes it possible for them to find jobs.

Last week the Prime Minister formally committed the government to maintain and improve the social programs put in place over the past 40 years to counter the effects of unemployment, poverty, bad luck and economic disruption. The measures I have just announced bear witness to the fact that this was not empty rhetoric. Expenditure reallocations will enable us to devote over a billion dollars to employment support, housing assistance and modernization of our railway system without adding to the deficit. Moreover, the government will absorb next year half of the additional cost of unemployment insurance to make sure that workers and employers are not saddled with an intolerable burden. The tax changes I have proposed will likewise ease the burden of taxpayers and make it possible for them to devote their full attention to essential tasks: to produce more efficiently and more cheaply, to improve their products and techniques of production, to fully exploit markets at home and abroad—in short, to make the Canadian economy more competitive and better able to prosper as world growth picks up. This is the challenge we will have to meet together, and it will remain my first priority as Minister of Finance.

[English]

As some of you may know, I come from a farming family. My ancestors worked the land on Ile Perrot for almost 300 years. I still make my home on that farm. Because he depends so directly on the land for his livelihood, the farmer is more closely attuned to nature's quirks, the too sudden winter or late-arriving spring.

I have seen that the shrewd farmers use the long winter to their advantage. They sharpen and repair their equipment and tools, take account of their stock, store their grain and protect their animals. They know that they will be ready for spring.

Well, the next few months will test our collective strength as a nation. Like the wise farmer, let us use the time wisely, together laying the groundwork for the spring that awaits us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, today is not a happy day for Canadians. It is not a happy day for the former minister of finance. It is not a happy day for the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The former minister of finance has seen a good part of his last two budgets thrown right into his face.

This is the first budget of this Minister of Finance, and let us call it a budget, because that is what it is. It is not an economic statement or financial statement, it is a budget. It is the third budget that we have had in the House of Commons in less than 12 months.

This Minister of Finance has been asked to carry the can for his predecessor. He has told us that the economy is still in a downturn. The drop in the national income is at least 7¼ per cent during this recession and may go still further down. The budget deficit is an astonishing $23.6 billion, $4 billion higher than the Minister's predecessor estimated some three and a half months ago. I hope these figures are correct.

I hope they are not going to be worse than that when we have the next budget which the Minister is going to bring down some three months from now. The advice the Minister has been getting is coming from the same place that gave us the estimates of the $10.6 billion deficit, the $19.6 billion deficit and now the $23.6 billion deficit. They are the same people. And Canadians, Mr. Speaker, cannot take many more shocks like this. I fear that if these projections that the Minister has put forward for the balance of the year are still on the low side, then Canadians are going to be deeply disturbed and deeply affected by the effects of this Minister's statement. I hope I am wrong. I hope he is on target. Hon. Members and Canadians must be stunned by the magnitude of these figures and by the magnitude of the problems that we are facing, as set out by the Minister. The Minister seems to be trying to turn over a new leaf. He is trying to put those Cape Breton days behind us. But Canadians must all recognize that the Minister has not presented this statement without having some blood on his hands, because it is his National Energy Program and the collapse of the oil industry that have led to the increase in unemployment in the country today and the significant drop in revenues that have caused the deficit problems we have.

Members are probably looking at this seat over here and wondering where the Deputy Prime Minister is. They must have seen him leaving the House with that look of guilt, that sheepishness on his face, as he saw all those budgets, the November budget, the June budget, disappearing before his very eyes. It was a sight to behold, the embarrassment of that man.

The Minister of Finance, in one simple act today, has acknowledged that the November, 1981 budget of the Deputy Prime Minister was a total disaster and the worst budget the country has ever had in its financial history. No less than eight more pieces of that budget have been cancelled. That is in addition to the 36 changes that have already been made in the budget. These latest changes, Mr. Speaker, have caused significant concern and hardship to many Canadians, Canadians who feared that they were going to be losing their dental and health plans, as well as small business men, professionals, accountants, the retailers of the country, charitable organizations and northerners.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the treatment of the northerners still is not much improved over what was in the budget. There is still a great deal of uncertainty as to what is going to happen to the people living in our north and who are suffering so much with the current economic downturn. These were proposals that hurt our economy. They caused uncertainty, they caused a tremendous amount of time lost by people fighting these proposals at a time when the economy can least afford that diversion.

I welcome this new-found sense of co-operation that the Prime Minister spoke of today in Question Period, that he will accept openly any proposals that the opposition suggests which will improve the situation. But why has the Prime Minister taken so long? Why has it taken a full year to get these changes into effect? We welcome the tax changes. We should, because we have been fighting for them for approximately 12 months alongside those people who are affected.

Last January, some 62 Members of the Conservative caucus travelled across this country meeting with Canadians from coast to coast, seeking out their concerns, seeking out their ideas as to how the situation could be improved upon, what changes should be made in the budget. We made a full presentation of this in a report that was issued some eight months ago, but it has taken all this time for the Government to come to its senses and understand the nature of the changes that were proposed last November, the impact that it was having on the social fabric of the country, as well as the economy. Why did we have to wait so long? Why were the original proposals made and why did it take such a long time to change them?

This enormous flip-flop, this incredible admission of incompetence, of lack of understanding, is not complete. There are still more changes to come. There are still more changes that we will be fighting for in committee, changes which will affect farmers, small businessmen and home owners. There is still the uncertainty because the number of changes and proposals that the Minister has made has pushed the decision out one or two years into the future. The uncertainty is still there, and if there was one message that came through loud and clear in all the hearings we have had on the budget proposals this year, it is that the uncertainties are just killing people's ability to make decisions, killing our ability to fight the recession that we are in now.

The Minister said in his speech that we have been demanding budgets every three months. We did, Mr. Speaker, and I make no apologies for that. We did, because that budget of November, 1981 was wrong. Canadians wanted a change. We wanted a change. And it has taken almost 12 months to get those final changes made. One has to ask oneself a question: do we have a new standard of ministerial responsibility being presented to the country today? We have the Deputy Prime Minister, the author of that budget, still in the Cabinet, when the Deputy Minister of Finance has quit, when the Principal Secretary to the Cabinet, who is very much a part of that budget, has also quit. But where is the Deputy Prime Minister? He is still in his seat in the House of Commons. This in other parliamentary democracies would just not be accepted.

I would like to comment now, Mr. Speaker, on the substance of some of the presentations that the Minister made today. He talked about tight control of Government spending as being one of the answers to reducing the size of the government deficit. Those are only words. They are words we have been hearing for three years now, but they are words without any substance, because, again, in this budget, Government spending is still increasing at 20 per cent per annum, the same as it increased last year. The figures in the budget for the period from 1976 to 1982 are misleading, and I will debate that with the Minister any time he wants to debate that point. They are misleading. They are comparing apples and oranges, and Canadians are being misled by them.

I want now to discuss the impact of something that is quite within the control of the Government: Government spending on the administrative costs of departments. The minister has said there are statutory increases in spending that cannot be controlled without changing the laws. Let us look at some of the administrative costs. In the 12 largest departments of the government, the administrative costs in the estimates for 1982-83 compared to the forecast expenditures for last year are projected to increase some 17.1 per cent.

Let us look at some of these departments: Agriculture, 22.8 per cent; Employment and Immigration, 40 per cent; Indian Affairs, 14 per cent; National Health and Welfare, 32.5 per cent; Transport, some 20 per cent. That is not an indication of a government that is serious about controlling its expenditures. That is where the Government can take some action, but they have shown no indication that they understand the importance of displaying some spending control. They continue to spend money without any regard to what is going on in the country, without any regard to the fact that they have put forward a six and five program, calling on other Canadians to hold themselves to 6 per cent, but still going blithely along at 17.1 per cent.

In this budget that the Minister has just presented, unemployment insurance premiums are going to increase by 40 per cent. This is purely and simply a tax increase. It is a tax increase when it can be least afforded and it is another colossal error of the previous minister of finance in that November budget. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance premiums at that time were reduced, reduced at a time when we were facing record high unemployment, when we knew that there would be record demands on the unemployment insurance fund. If those premiums had been held level last year instead of being reduced, the shock to the economy would have been far less severe than this 40 per cent increase now, and could probably have been held to something in the 15 per cent range.

The Minister announced a 500 million dollar job-creation program. I guess we have to say, Mr. Speaker, it is a step in the right direction. They have addressed the problem of unemployment in this budget, but it is a very small step. Five hundred million dollars sounds like a lot of money but it is $300 per unemployed worker and amounts to some one quarter of one per cent of the total size of our economy today. It is a step in the right direction but we have a long way to go, and we on this side are convinced that the only way to achieve true, permanent job creation is a set of policies, which I will come to later, which will address the problem of 1.5 million people unemployed, not 50,000 here or 30,000 there.

Now, the Minister also announced that the government is going to spend some $400 million on the west. Mr. Speaker, I may be hard of hearing, my memory might be short, but I seem to have some recollection that the previous minister of finance was talking about another figure, and I think this Minister forgot a zero. I think we were talking about a $4 billion Western Development Fund some two years ago. There is another aspect of this. Perhaps the Minister is simply saying to us: when we tell you that we are going to do something, we discount it by 90 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Now, Mr. Speaker, we also welcome the decision that the Minister has made on the Lortie Commission to accept its recommendation to provide some relief on the capital gains tax to Canadian public companies. This is the right direction to take and we are pleased that he has taken that step. We are also pleased that he is not proceeding on the indexed term deposit. This would have been a very dangerous step. It would have led this country directly into wide-scale credit allocation by a small coterie of bureaucrats and politicians in Ottawa doing things that the broad economy should be doing.

So that is the right decision. However, having taken that decision, the Minister has to acknowledge—and he did not in his statement—that those who proceeded to take the advice of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Finance and the Minister responsible for housing, who is in the House today and who encouraged Canadians to go ahead and buy a home because this proposal was going ahead—in the words of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) "there is no question of chance, the plan will be implemented". Canadians responded to that, they bought houses, they put their money on the line, and the minister has a responsibility to tell those Canadians what he is going to do to protect them after taking on that high cost mortgage three or four months ago. That is a responsibility that the minister has not discussed today.

Now, the Minister today, and the Prime Minister last week, tried to tell Canadians that we are doing better in this country than many other countries in the world. But let us take an objective look. Mr. Speaker, I want to give you some of the facts that the Prime Minister did not lay on the table last week in his fireside chat and that we did not hear from the Minister of Finance today, facts which will help Canadians understand why we have 1.5 million people unemployed today.

Euromoney, a respected international financial journal, sets out annually a survey which has a composite indicator of all the broad measures of the economic performance of 81 countries; economic growth, inflation, exports and exchange rates are all included. Where do you think Canada fits into this survey of 81 countries, Mr. Speaker? It is No. 40, over a period from 1974 to 1982. This is not Progressive Conservative research material, this is Euromoney material, an objective observer of the international scene. In the most recent 12 months we have slipped from No. 40 to No. 55. Who do you think is beating us? Saudi Arabia, sure. Germany, Japan, the United States. We would expect that. But how about Cyprus, Burma, Honduras, India, Pakistan, Papua and New Guinea? These countries are all ahead of us. I can produce that chart for any member of the House of Commons who wants to read it.

The reason we have suffered so much in these past two years from the international stresses and strains in the economy is that No. 40 position. For 15 years now our economy has been gradually weakened, year in and year out, by successive Liberal Government policies which have gradually eaten into the strength that we enjoyed some ten and 15 years ago. So that when interest rates in the United States shot up, our rates shot up even further, to as much as four to six percentage points over those in the U.S. Why? Because our inflation rate was higher and because we were suffering a record outflow of capital over the past two years. When the international economy slumped, our economy slumped further. Why? Because our productivity rate has been the lowest of the industrialized countries for the past eight years, and this has been compounded by the attack on productive investment in the November, 1981 budget.

When high interest rates and slow growth have caused 1.5 million people to lose their jobs, the federal government has had little resources to draw on to fight unemployment. Why? Because for ten years we have had reckless Liberal spending and a total disregard of the deficit problem, which has resulted in the staggering budget deficit the Minister told us today of some $23.6 billion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this mess did not just start in 1980 with the National Energy Program or the budget of November, 1981. It started back in the early 1970s when Edgar Benson brought in his tax reform which favoured redistribution of wealth and ignored the creation of jobs and technology and economic growth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The tax reform favoured consumption and discouraged job creating investment. Then, with John Turner, this whole thing continued because he presided over a period of reckless government spending, increasing in one year by 26 per cent; uncontrolled monetary policy where the money supply increased at a rate approaching 20 per cent, and this fed the inflation problem in a most serious way and resulted in the anti-inflation program that came in two weeks after he jumped ship. Also during that time we had a total loss of control of the collective bargaining process in the public sector.

As I said, this led into the Anti-Inflation Board. Period under Donald Macdonald and the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), a period of government regulation and intervention which has been unsurpassed in Canadian history, except in wartime, regulation which produced bottlenecks and discouraged investment. It was a period during which the government was going to address the structural problems, it was going to solve some of those structural problems which were leading to inflation in the country. But nothing was done during that period and the result has been runaway inflation and the high interest rates of the past two years.

Finally, we have the period under the current Deputy Prime Minister, the former Minister of Finance, who presided over the destruction of our oil and gas industry following his first budget, and the rest of the small and large business community in his second budget.

Now, a common thread, Mr. Speaker, through all of these Ministers of Finance was that none of them had a business background prior to becoming Minister of Finance. They did not understand management.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: They did not understand the importance of the economic problems, they did not understand the importance of the deficit or the importance of investment in new technology. That is the background we are looking at today, Mr. Speaker, which tells us why we have the current mess that we have today. And what the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance neglected to say is what I have set out before the House today. All the Prime Minister said was, "Trust us. Trust us and we will win. We will beat inflation". But we are going to beat inflation, Mr. Speaker, not because of six and five; that has hardly taken effect. We are going to beat inflation because the economy is so desperately weak that there is no demand to push prices up. The six and five in fact may even hurt the economy because if it is not administered in an equitable way, people are going to turn away from the desire that the government has set out of people pulling together to beat this thing called inflation.

If people think they are being tricked because some civil servants are getting six and five and others are getting nine and ten, if TransCanada Pipelines are getting 16 per cent and Bell Canada getting 6 per cent, if we have the beer excise tax going up by 15 per cent—if all these inequities are allowed to slip into the system, people are going to ask whom they can trust in this Government if that is the way it is playing the game.

The problem with inflation today is not the private sector; the problem with inflation is Government regulated prices, prices for government services and excise tax on various commodities. The Minister of Finance knows that since the beginning of this year the federal excise tax on natural gas has gone up some 80 per cent. That is the problem with inflation in this country today.

Economists are predicting that inflation will drop, that it will be down to well below 10 per cent next year because of that weakness in the economy. What we need today is not a continued fight against inflation—we have to maintain the pressure there—but a shift in direction to free up and encourage the private sector to invest and to create jobs. The problems today are with the million and a half people who are without a job; the problems today are with the 500,000-odd people who are running out of unemployment insurance entitlements because they have been out of work for too long.

And the Prime Minister asks us to trust him. The Prime Minister says that if we trust him everything will be all right. When Canadians across this land wake up in the morning and ask themselves, what is this Government going to take from us next, confidence is replaced by suspicion and trust is overwhelmed by fear. That is the tragedy of the Prime Minister's three-part series last week. That is the misfortune of the statement of the Minister of Finance today. That trust is gone. The response is empty. Today's rhetoric is not enough. Canadians are saying, "Don't tell me, show me". Canadians want opportunity; They want security. These goals are linked because opportunity leads to growth and growth brings security.

People ask me how the private sector creates jobs. Let me illustrate by telling of two Canadians—not big businessmen, but two Canadians who are trying to build a good life, Canadians who thought they had a secure future and were providing secure jobs for other Canadians.

One of these Canadians appeared before our budget committee last January. He told us he left a major U.S. subsidiary some ten years ago and competed against it in a small way quite successfully and built a nice business which employed 55 people. I asked him if ten years ago there had been the same tax environment as there is today, would he have left the company with the higher salary, the perks and the security of a larger company to go out and risk it all and try to build this business. He thought for a moment and said, no, he would not have left that company. If he had not left that company, 55 people working for him today would not be working for him, they would not have those jobs.

The other man is a constituent of mine. He employs 26 people. Three times since the November budget, which hurt him very, very badly, he took specific steps to move his business to the United States. If things do not change, if there is not a better environment, if he does not see opportunities here, he will leave and the 26 people currently working for him will be out of jobs because he is the driving force in the company.

This is the way jobs are created by the private sector—by individual Canadians who are working hard but who are fragile individuals. We have seen how the goals and lives of these people have been seriously hurt by government policies in the past year.

Budget deficits of the size of $24 billion can destroy jobs and undermine security in the country today. The budget deficit we have seen today causes the Government to panic and grab money from people wherever it can get it. Tax incentives are removed, small businesses dry up, jobs are lost, health and post-secondary funding is cut back and health care and education suffer, pensions are cut and universal social programs are threatened.

When the elderly and the unemployed need the safety net and security which governments can provide, at a time when Canadians need government assistance the most, the Government cannot produce because it is broke. It cannot find any more money.

For years the Liberal Government has ignored or never understood the problem of the deficit. I can still remember that in 1979 the Prime Minister, the finance critic of the Liberal Party at that time and the NDP as well, asked why the Conservatives were so preoccupied with the Government deficit? They asked what the problem was with the Government deficit.

We now know, Mr. Speaker. It was because successive Liberal Governments have attacked the private sector, the producing side of our economy, for 15 years. The results are clear in that No. 40 position which I showed in the Euromoney study. The results are clear in that position in the economy today.

I said earlier that Canadians want opportunity and security. When opportunity is blunted, security is threatened. The nation's elderly can never be secure unless the nation's productive workers are encouraged to seek opportunities. That statement is more true today than ever before. Since 1976 our population over age 60 has grown by 800,000 people. Our population under age 20 has declined by some 700,000 people. What is missing from the Prime Minister's statement last week and the Minister's statement today is a plan on how to encourage people, how to challenge people to create jobs, to develop a productive side of the economy—the people who will provide the security for our seniors.

We must start now to change the policy direction of the government, to strengthen our economy, to avoid being battered by international pressures as we have over the past few years, to develop a strong private sector and to encourage job-creating productive investment.

We must set an environment to stimulate growth to help Canadians face the future with confidence and optimism. These are the policies we have been setting forward for a number of months and I should like to summarize them now.

A Progressive Conservative government would reduce the deficit and the size of government. We would redirect and limit government spending.

An Hon. Member: How?

Mr. Wilson: The Hon. Member asks how. I set out just two minutes ago that the administrative costs of government have been going up by 17 per cent. Surely even the NDP can understand and see where a little money could be saved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: We would simplify the Income Tax Act and encourage risk-taking investment. We would create a positive and open investment climate by reforming the Foreign Investment Review Agency and rewarding the creation of job opportunities and economic growth. We would amend the National Energy Program to reduce government red tape and eliminate government confiscation.

We would reduce the burden of government and unnecessary regulation. We would assist Canadians to reach the forefront of new technology with aggressive research and development policies. We would support Canadians, particularly those who are out of work today, in training and education programs to take advantage of this new technology so that they will see it not as a threat to their jobs but as a path to a better job. We would encourage small business to start new businesses.

People have said we need lots of megaprojects in this country. What we need are mini projects; small businesses starting up and creating jobs, as did the two men I referred to a minute ago. We must continue to reduce interest rates through sensible monetary policy and a tight control of Government-regulated prices which, as I said a minute ago, are at the heart of our inflation problem. Finally, we must expand Canada's trade potential, particularly in the Pacific Rim countries.

There is no magic in this Program, there is no quick fix, and there are no major government spending programs here. We know where we want to go and we know how to get there. The combination of these policies will set a clear framework for success, a clear change of direction from the past 15 years. It will send a clear message to businessmen, such as the two small businessmen to whom I referred, that they can build and grow and prosper in the country.

Governments cannot fine tune an economy. We have learned that painful lesson time and again as the Liberal Government has drawn more decision-making into the bureaucracy, and it has not worked. Governments can set the environment. We have seen how bad management, runaway deficits, tax laws and a lack of understanding of the importance of investment can kill an economy.

The Progressive Conservative approach provides a clear change in that environment. It will lead to more economic growth and more jobs. The Liberal policies have led us into a zero-sum world. It is a world of factionism and mistrust; one man's gain is another man's loss. That is the fatal flaw of the message of the Prime Minister last week. He says that we must have trust and that we must be generous with our neighbours. But when people are struggling for survival, when people fear that they will lose their jobs or that their children cannot find that first job, there is not much trust and generosity. Rhetoric will not produce the harmony we all want, but a healthy economy will.

We must reject the zero-sum world of the Liberal Government. We must move in a new direction where Canadians are encouraged by a government which understands the value of risk investment, investment that will create jobs, a government which understands the importance of competent management, and a government which knows that security only comes with a healthy economy.

Last week Canadians in three ridings rejected the zero-sum world. These Canadians confirmed recent Gallup polls. Canadians want this new direction. Canadians want to be proud of our country. We were proud of our country in 1967, of our people, of our way of life, of our industries and of our position in the world community. But Canadians have been robbed of this pride in recent years by 15 years of neglect and mismanagement.

Hon. Members today must take the first steps to regaining that pride, that hope for the future, that opportunity to rebuild the country of which we were so proud 15 years ago. The Minister's statement is a start, but it is only a very small start; we must go much further.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before I comment upon the observations of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) this afternoon, I should like to put this debate in the context of what the country is facing right now. Up to this point in 1982 we have had somewhere between 9,000 and 10,000 businesses which have gone bankrupt. In real numbers we have had something like one and three-quarter million Canadian men and women unemployed, people who would like to be obtaining cheques for working, not cheques from the Unemployment Insurance Commission or the welfare office. Because of the Liberal Government's total lack of concern with the seriousness of the economic situation, I want to indicate to the Minister that between now and Christmas we will have the loss of probably between 80,000 and 100,000 more jobs. Also we will have—and it is a conservative estimate—about 2,000 more businesses which will have gone bankrupt. Every region and every sector of the Canadian economy is affected by the recession that we are going through. That is the situation in which the Minister made his statement that went on for 25 or 27 pages.

What has the Minister come up with for the men and women who are looking for some hope? They are not looking for a pie in the sky or a quick fix. They want to believe that between now and Christmas there is some reason for economic hope; they are looking for that. What did the Minister come up with? I ask the Conservative critic to check his numbers. If he looks at the direct spending program and reads the fine print of the Minister, it is for 18 months, not 12 months the $500 million allocated for direct job creation would not even be adequate for 12 months. If we add the slight changes that were made in housing spending to the changes in fiscal outlay which the Minister said we will now get for direct job creation, we will have a total, in an economy measured in billions of dollars, of $480 million being allocated for job creation. This will create at the most some 60,000 jobs. What we need in a crisis, because surely that is what we have, is a crisis program. In Canada right now we need a national recovery program, not the pittance thrown out by the Liberal Government this afternoon.

I will return to the Conservative Party in a minute, but all I can say at this point is that if clichés were a substitute for policy, we certainly heard them from the group on my right today. Having said that we must address those concerns, I want to underline it for those of us who have jobs. For some of us in the House of Commons they will be temporary jobs, I am convinced, but those of us who are working must consider the effects of the unemployment crisis. Michael Harrington of the United States wrote a book a number of years ago about the hidden poor. In a human sense we have in Canada the hidden unemployed. There is a great tendency for us to think in this land of ours that because we have unemployment insurance and the social fabric of the welfare state, not completed but at least in place in a way that it was not in the 1930s, somehow the men and women who are unemployed are not really suffering. There are Hon. Members on all sides of the House who have talked to the unemployed, but I do not know if there are Cabinet Members who have done so. The kind of unemployment we are experiencing now has a corrosive effect on the affected people, of which anyone who is at all sensitive is fully aware.

Men and women in this country want jobs, as we have said on other occasions. It is true that they want jobs; they do not want handouts. They do not want from their national Government 25 or 27 pages of so-called analysis. They would like to see a 25-page program which could be implemented now; that is what they want. There is a human concern out there which we must address. It is very real. Rather than coming up with a Program which is a drop in the bucket in the short run of less than $500 million, we are proposing a spending Program in the short run of more than four times that amount. We do so and do not hesitate to do so. If the Tories are afraid to mention dollars because of some kind of perceived backlash, I can say that we in this Party are not afraid to talk about the need for spending to meet a human requirement right now—to create jobs. We say that by spending $2.2 billion, using the same multiplier the Minister used in his figures earlier today, we would be able to create a minimum of 250,000 jobs for the men and women who need them.

Again unlike the Liberals and unlike the party on my right we are prepared to say concretely that those who are in a position to help pay now should be out there in the front of the line with their pay cheques, because the time for rhetoric about justice, the time for rhetoric about caring and the time for rhetoric about co-operation is over. It is time to start implementing the socially desirable goal right now.

Therefore, we are prepared to say—and I did not hear the Tories talking about this nor did I hear it coming from the Liberals—that it was a social injustice of high proportions that we put a six and five wage and salary control guideline on the people in the federal public sector urged the provinces and urged the private sector to follow suit—which the Tories supported—and at the same time cut by over $1 billion the tax paid by the wealthiest people in this country. That is a disgrace.

We say there is a source of revenue.

Mr. Gamble: Another illusion.

Mr. Broadbent: Another illusion, says a Tory. I say to the member who just spoke, after having heard the Tories' speech, there has been one Government in the world that has implemented the Canadian Progressive Conservative Party's program and that is the Government of Margaret Thatcher. Britain's unemployment rate has risen 38 months in a row under Margaret Thatcher, and the same thing would come from the Tories here.

We say that if we need money to create jobs, we are prepared to start practising a little of the equity that other parties talk about. We would rescind the tax cut that was provided by the Liberals last fall for upper income Canadians, and we would say "Yes, indeed, if workers are going to be holding down their incomes to six and five and if pensioners in this country are going to pay income tax, then it is time to put a surtax on upper income Canadians to get money to help create jobs that are needed now."

At the same time we are saying that if the Government had looked with some imagination at federal spending programs—and again I did not hear any specifics from the Tories—it would find that there are areas in which cuts could take place that under normal times I say would not necessarily have to be cut at all. If, however, there are areas of federal Government spending that do not have as their leading priority job creation, then we in this party say that many of those areas should be cut out, and we do not hesitate to say it.

Therefore, in this context we have proposed that the planning under way to spend money on embassies abroad in the coming year be cut. Also, of money that is being spent in the National Unity Information office we say that one-third of the over-all budget which the Government allocates for publicity for its programs could be cut. If we did that, we would have a saving in public spending already allocated of some $400 million, and $1.3 million would come from surtax.

Finally, we would take another program introduced by the Minister. I see the Minister questions the surtax figures, but we have checked and double checked, and we stand by our figures. I say to the Minister that his department is the last in this country that should try to correct anybody else's figures at this time.

Mr. Lalonde: It is National Revenue then?

Mr. Broadbent: I come to another proposal. It came in last fall's budget which came from the Minister who was then the minister of energy. He provided a special kind of handout to the oil companies. I refer to the PIP grants. We said at that time when we voted against them—the Tories, of course, voted for them—that it would lead to irrational investment. We said that, if we wanted to Canadianize the oil industry, we should do it as do most other energy producing countries in the world, that is, use the public sector to do it and not the taxpayers' money to finance private investment. We voted against that Program.

An hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Broadbent: I tell my hon. friend to check the voting record. We voted against it, not only because we have a public instrument which we say is a better way of dealing with the energy sector, but also because we said it would lead to irrational investment, even if you wanted to go the private sector route.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If the Tories would calm down, I will tell them something about what happened. They should know, among others because I have heard some of them complain, that a monumental disaster occurred, the biggest private disaster in Canada since the Second World War. I am speaking of the Dome Petroleum situation. That bail-out, which was inappropriate, was the direct result of this Government's program, supported by the Tories. We say to that cut that out.

We say that if the Government will not cut it out, at least let it give us $500 million out of it and put that money into direct job creation.

I want to say something now about the way we will spend the money. We have the naive view on this side of the House, unlike the Party to my right, literally, figuratively, and in every other way, that an opposition Party, particularly at this point in our history, has an obligation to say what we would do. That is an obligation.

An hon. Member: You have not had a single idea.

Mr. Broadbent: We would take this money now, recognizing that there is unemployment from British Columbia in the west to Newfoundland in the east, and put some $220 million into reforestation programs that will not be "make work" but would do for our reforestry what western Europe has done for its forests for decades, that is to manage forests in a sensible way so that when the market picks up in very significant proportions at the turn of the century in the United States, we will have the trees to service the market. In short, we could create jobs now for an immediate benefit, but also we would have a long-run economic benefit for our forests. That makes sense.

Similarly, we would not put the pittance in housing which the Minister has talked about; we would immediately inject some $500 million into housing to create more jobs in many sectors of the economy. In particular, we would deal with those one-industry towns, normally in the resource sector, that are so terribly affected now, whole communities like Port Alberni, like Sudbury, like Faro in the Yukon, like Rouyn-Noranda in Quebec, like Bathurst, and like the Miramichi region in New Brunswick. I am talking about communities totally dependent upon one sector of the economy that are now experiencing horrific social consequences as a result of this recession.

In the short run we would allocate part of the moneys that I have just talked about to these communities. On behalf of my colleagues, starting on Friday in Sudbury I will be announcing very specifically what can be done in one-industry towns where there is a crisis problem now. Things can be done Mr. Speaker, and I looked for a little imaginative action coming from the Minister on that side of the House about what can be done for these communities.

Another example is the situation concerning the fisheries on both coasts. We would use part of the money for fishery enhancement programs that many Members on all sides of the House have talked about. We in this party believe money should be allocated for that purpose now.

These are just some of the areas and sectors on which in the short run we think money should now be spent to create jobs that are badly needed by men and women, young and old, who want to work.

But having said that, what we have heard from the new Minister of Finance is just a repetition of his predecessor's crisis management, just stumbling from one situation to another. If the short run program is so in adequate, in human or in economic terms, as I think it is, then I ask you, what about the long run? Here is a Minister who used to pride himself in trying at least to address the long-run interests of the country. There were a number of aspects of the National Energy Program which this party supported because some contents in that program did have the long run in mind. I want to say that he, as Minister if Finance, has revealed himself as the ultimate Liberal once again, because we have no perspective at all of what lies beyond the end of this year, let alone beyond the next election.

In the next couple of minutes I want to address an unstated assumption, both by this Minister in his presentation today and also by the Conservative Party to my right, because I think it is a very serious one. The unstated assumption is really that the marketplace must be relied upon to get us out of our very difficult situation.

An hon. Member: Good idea!

Mr. Broadbent: One of the Conservative Members says, "Good idea!". I would ask that hon. member to compare what has been happening in Great Britain for the past 38 months with what has been happening in other western European countries. Only one country has had 38 months of perpetual increase in unemployment. That has been under Margaret Thatcher, because she has relied entirely upon the marketplace. That is what happened.

Through Your Honour I want to urge the people of our land, particularly right now, to think historical terms and to keep in mind that this not 1932, it is 1982. Much has gone on in other countries in the world in the past 50 years. If the Party to my right wants to take us back in history and if the Liberal Party is already doing that, they can go that route. There is one Party in this land that believes we should learn a little from history and from what is going on in other countries so that we can create a country which will be decent and exciting in the future. We do not want the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, I would ask a rhetorical question of my friends in the Conservative Party and in the Liberal Party opposite as individuals. Many are friends in this House even though we have profound differences about policy. I would ask them to really think about what they are saying and to consider whether it has been our overwhelming emphasis on the private sector alone in this country in the last 30 to 35 years which has got us into a situation where we do indeed have low productivity, where we are not carrying out research and development, where "management in this part of the world, unlike western Europe and unlike Japan, is too preoccupied with the short-run buck, not enough concerned with long-run investment". I do not quote from a socialist source but, rather, from the Harvard Business Review.

If the private sector alone has created this mess that we are now in, why, in heaven's name, should we turn back to the private sector to get us out of the mess? That is the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, we in this party, like the Social Democrat movement in western Europe, would ask a question. There is not a country in western Europe with a Social Democrat Government which has an unemployment level which is even half of ours. I ask the Minister, and maybe he should ask the question: why is it that West Germany, Sweden, Norway and Denmark which, of course, are having difficulties now, have unemployment levels which are less than half our level?

I now come to the substantive point which I wanted to make to the Minister. He should understand it. I wish he would only act upon it. The point is that these societies in western Europe learned from the Depression. Overwhelmingly, they had Social Democratic Governments. However, there is another country on the other side of the Pacific Ocean, Japan, which has not a social democratic government. I say to the Minister and to the Tories that there is no major economic decision made in that country called Japan without the full involvement of the Government of Japan. The Japanese know what they are doing. They do not rely on the unfettered results of the marketplace.

I say that what distinguishes us as a party from the Conservatives and the Liberals is that we want to deal with realities. We do not want to deal with myths about private enterprise. We want to deal with the reality of facing our mixed economy now, in 1982, because that is what it is, and finally to make it work for the people of Canada. We want to make changes to achieve that. Specifically, we say it is necessary that the federal Government show a little leadership. God knows, it has made bad decisions in the past. We should have a government which should commit itself to a plan for the future. It should consult with the Provinces, by all means, in a federal state. That is essential. It should consult with labour and with the private sector. But then, like the leading nations in western Europe, like Japan, the federal Government, the Cabinet, should bring before the Parliament of Canada a development plan for this nation and should say, "Over the next decade, this is where the money will go to create long term jobs for the people of Canada". That was totally lacking, of course, in the approach of the Minister today.

I want to say that we were not only concerned about the inadequacies of the short run and long run programs. What was more alarming in the sense of equity was the proposal to increase the UIC premiums. As I said, during the past year the Government cut the taxes of the richest people in our land by over a billion dollars. The Government has imposed a six and five guideline program on the working people of Canada at the same time. The Government reduces the cost to the rich with one hand and increases the burdens of the workers with the other. That is what it did between last October and last August. But now what is the Government doing? It is coming along and saying to working people, men and women, "We will increase your premiums by 40 per cent".

Mr. Gamble: And employers.

Mr. Broadbent: And that of employers, yes, but I am not referring particularly to the people who got it in the neck so far this year. The Government will increase it by 40 per cent. This is not six and five, which the Government keeps preaching. This is not a 6 per cent increase or a 5 per cent increase. It is more than a 6 per cent times 5 per cent increase. It is a 40 per cent increase. We must keep it in mind that this is really a form of taxation.

It was not recommended by the labour movement, Mr. Minister, and you can check your records on that. I listened to the Minister's wording with care. He said that he had consulted labour and management. I say, through Your Honour, that the Minister did not say that labour supported it, because he knows darned well that no labour movement in this country would accept such a regressive tax as a 40 per cent increase on the premiums paid by ordinary workers.

Mr. Lalonde: You do not accept anything.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not think Your Honour could have a better example of the hypocrisy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) than what we heard last week when he spoke of the need for fairness. I think one of the wonderful phrases was that the strong must help the weak. Of course, we reject the notion that unemployed men and women workers should seem to be the weak. They are unfortunate citizens who are out of work because we have not managed our economy appropriately. Surely we have had enough of this hypocritical rhetoric. If the Government of Canada is bringing in what can only be described in historical terms as a reactionary program, as a program which wants to take us back in the form of economic decision-making to a distant past, to take us back to a distribution of income which was inequitable and is becoming more inequitable, then for God's sake at least spare us the rhetoric about justice and co-operation. If the Government Members are to be reactionary, let them be honest reactionaries like those in the Party to my right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I believe the Minister set out eight different items that he was withdrawing from the November budget. However, he did not make any change in two key areas. In particular because of the significance of the economic impact, why did the Minister avoid making a change in the capital cost allowance, which has clearly had an impact on reducing the level of investment in Canada?

• (1740)

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, obviously there are a number of areas where additional changes could have been made. All would have had significant impact on increasing the Government deficit and loss of revenue.

I examined this particular issue very carefully. I found that the changes which had been proposed are quite appropriate, and I support them.

Mr. Wilson: Investment activity creates revenue because it creates jobs. It provides people with employment and takes people off of the unemployment rolls. Surely, when the Minister was making that decision, he could have taken into account the revenue-generating impact on that and reinstated that particular credit because of its impact on job creation. Could he answer the question in the context in the investment-generating impact and the job creating impact?

Mr. Lalonde: Again, one could decide to abolish the corporate income tax completely and decide that the companies will use the money for all kinds of good purposes for creating investment and jobs. One could do the same with personal income tax. People would find all kinds of uses for the money they would be left with. However, as long as you have a state, you have taxation, expenses and public programs. You need to raise funds.

In this particular instance, the Capital Cost Allowance is one of those benefits that could be adjusted, and this is what we have done. I completely support what my predecessor has done in that regard.

The Economy

Mr. David Crombie: (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question specifically relating to the program which the Minister has entitled the New Employment Expansion and Development Program, the NEED Program. I believe that most of us would have understood what the Minister was saying if he had said that the allocation of the $500 million was to create 60,000 jobs over one year. My question relates to the source of his data, that he could look after that need by creating 60,000 jobs over 18 months.

As I understand the rule of thumb used by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the Government would have been at least technically in a position of having to create 60,000 over a 12 month period, not over an 18 month period. I am conerned that the Minister's data is faulty and therefore the allocation of funds will not be sufficient for the so-called exhaustees between now and June.

Mr. Lalonde: The Minister of Employment and Immigration will be available to answer specific questions on that particular Program. I just want to point out that it will take a few months, first of all, to gear up the Program. We have to have consultations before the Program can begin to be implemented. The money is proposed today but I doubt funds will be available to start before the beginning of 1983.

Therefore, when you are calculating the time of this announcement and the time that the Program will come into effect, I think this adds a few months to the Program. I suspect that this is the reason why this period has been mentioned.

In addition, there are some expenditures that are incurred after the Program is technically terminated in the sense that you are not starting new projects, for instance. Even after the Program is stopped some projects still continue for a few months because they have come in before and are, let us say, three, four or five month programs.

I suspect the total expenditure of the Programs will be spread over 18 months, but I will ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to address this particular situation and provide the Hon. Member with more specific information.

Mr. Crombie: My supplementary question relates to part of the problem he described in his answer. That is, when a program is gearing up he knows that between now and the end of the year more people coming off the unemployment insurance benefits will be going on welfare. The Minister indicated on page 14 of his statement this afternoon that he was going to have further consultations with business, labour and other parties. I wonder whether or not that included any discussions with provinces and municipalities with respect to any change in the Government's contributions under the Canada Assistance Plan which could assist municipalities with respect to welfare payouts?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): The Minister announced that the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program will only apply to first-time buyers of new houses as of next January. I can understand that in some respect because only 22,400 of the 63,000 applications taken up so far have applied to new houses. My concern is that Mr. Lortie, in his recommendations, recommended against the mortgage reduction scheme because it would apply only to new houses and would hence have a distorting effect on the marketplace. How will the Minister get around the distortion of the marketplace, which I think will happen, if he applies the Home Ownership Stimulation Plan as of January to new houses only and not to first-time home buyers?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would have a very good point indeed if it was a permanent program, something that would be in operation for all time where one would have that kind of distortion in favour of housing at the expense of other allocation resources. But this is a short-term program. It will expire at the end of April. It is aimed at stimulating a sector of the economy that is extremely weak at the present time and which, as the Hon. Member knows, has significant impact in terms of tertiary job creation.

This is the reason why the program is continued, in order to try to prime up this particular sector which has been very weak this year indeed.

I agree with him that if this were a permanent program it would have the impact which he has mentioned. However, on the basis of a short-term program, to inject funds and encourage the consumer to buy new houses, we think this is a valid approach.

I would also say that, looking at the decline in interest rates which has taken place since June, and looking at the fact that the price of houses has declined on an average across the country, I would hope that we will see a resurgence of activity and that house builders will get into business. Inventory of new houses has been drawn back in the last few months. I hope that we will see a serious rise in that sector.

Mr. McGrath: We can only hope that the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is not taking his advice from the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), the former Minister responsible for housing. We know the disastrous consequences of that.

Can the Minister tell us why he is proceeding with the Canada Rental Supply Plan? As the Minister knows, of the 30,000 units permitted for the Canada Rental Supply Plan in the last budget, less than 25 per cent have been taken up thus far. He made no provision for co-op housing. We are facing a problem of affordability. Housing starts are down. That speaks to availability. They were down into the 80,000 bracket in September and August. Why did the Minister not re-direct the money that is going into the Canada Rental Supply Plan, which has not been taken up across the country, and put that into co-op housing where there is immediate demand for low-cost housing and which would provide a quick fix in terms of housing starts?

Mr. Lalonde: I will be giving serious consideration to the suggestion put forward by my friend. I will examine this particular situation. I thank him for drawing it to my attention.

Mr. Nelson Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest when the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was commenting on the six and five program and the fact that a great deal of concern on behalf of the Government is still over the question of inflation. I want to deal with an area which is very close to him because of his previous experience, the question of energy. Considering that the cost that Canadians will experience in the year ahead will certainly have a very definite impact on the rate of inflation in this country, when an increase in the price of energy has such an incredible effect when you consider a country as vast as Canada, will the Minister comment on his thoughts about re-entering negotiations with the producing Provinces in an effort to put a cap on the increases anticipated in the months ahead that will result in a number of percentage points increase in the rate of inflation?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, having lived through that experience for a year and a half, particularly before reaching an agreement, I think I would invite my hon. friend to go ahead as an explorer. I would be very happy to give him letters of introduction to the various Ministers of Energy in the various producing Provinces. If he has some success, I will be ready to give him credit for that success.

Frankly, we have a firm agreement with the producing Provinces. Those agreements provide for adjustments in the price of energy, oil and gas in particular. In Canada we are still in a situation of catching up with the international prices for oil and gas. We will end up in a situation where for oil discovered before 1981, we will pay 75 per cent of the international price by next July when we have reached the ceiling. Therefore, we in Canada are benefiting. We have benefited and we will continue to benefit in Canada with oil and gas prices well below the international prices. Provincial taxes in particular have a significant impact from Province to Province, but fundamentally the price of oil and gas in this country will remain below the international prices, all over the country.

The solution is in trying to re-negotiate those contracts. Frankly, I do not think anybody would be well received in any of the provincial capitals concerned. I wish my hon. friend good luck if he wants to try his hand. If he has some success, I will put him in touch with the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). Maybe he will have great success.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the western part of Canada, like all parts of Canada, is experiencing a devastation of the critical industry of forestry. I listened with interest to the statements tonight when the Minister commented on the extension of the existing programs that presumably are to assist and stimulate the housing industry and, therefore, the forest industry as well. We know how successful these programs have been in stimulating housing construction across Canada as well as the forest industry and related manufacturing industry—not very impressive.

My question is, why would people in Canada, who are very concerned about the forest industry, feel encouraged by what the Minister has said tonight? From what I have been able to gather, he has not said anything new in areas that would assist that very critical Canadian industry.

Mr. Lalonde: On the forest industry, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that I have added to date $150 million for expenditures in the area of housing. Second, as the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) indicated, the change that I have made to the Home Ownership Stimulation Plan will be restricted after January 1 to new houses so that we will not have some of the takers who at the present time are just buying existing houses. The program will be geared to creating work and building new houses.

As far as the forest and lumber industries are concerned, and I am sure the Hon. Member knows this as well as I do, one should not be under any illusion about what we can do in Canada in terms of the forest and lumber industry.

I was rather surprised to hear his Leader talking about this a few minutes ago. We know in effect that we could close all the lumber plants in Canada, with the exception of two in British Columbia, and that would be enough to supply the Canadian demand. In effect, quite clearly the forest industry in Canada will start a real recovery when the housing industry in the United States has its recovery. There will be a world demand for it.

We have a world-size industry in the forestry field. That will not be true only for housing starts in Canada, but we will be able to sustain the forest industry we now have. It will have to come from a worldwide recovery because we have a worldwide industry.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), first of all, of course, about the matter of trust which cropped up so often in his own speech and the television address of the Prime Minister last week, and I would also like to know how the minister can ask employers, and especially employees, to pay 40 per cent more for their unemployment insurance premiums while asking these same employees and employers to accept the 6 and 5 per cent formula or else be penalized. When I think about the just society we were promised, I wonder how the minister can see any equity in imposing the six and five formula at the same time as a 40 per cent increase in unemployment insurance premiums to the same employees.

Mr. Lalonde: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am rather surprised at the reasoning of the hon. member. First, unemployment insurance is, as its name indicates, a form of insurance, and insurance premiums increase or decrease according to the risk factor. The hon. member owns a car. His automobile insurance will increase or decrease according to the risks incurred during the year. The premiums are not related to the 6 and 5 formula or to anything else; it is an insurance program. When we lowered insurance premiums in 1981, we brought them down to the level of 1975. We did not ask the workers to take pay cuts because their insurance premiums were lower. Their collective agreements were maintained and the workers did not reduce their salary demands because they could say that unemployment insurance was a different matter, an insurance plan. If there are fewer unemployed, our premiums decrease and if there are more, our premiums increase. It is a simple as that and it has nothing to do with the 6 and 5 formula. Moreover, the hon. member says that we are now increasing the premiums by 40 per cent. What he forgets to mention is that the government of Canada has absorbed 60 per cent of the increase, which means that if all the Canadians are willing to contribute, the government will not increase taxes and will borrow $1 billion to help both businesses and workers so that they will have to pay only 40 per cent and not 100 per cent of the amount as provided under the unemployment insurance scheme. As I noted earlier, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which includes representatives of labour and management, has specifically recommended the increase I have implemented. I believe that it is a matter of equity. The hon. member speaks about social justice and this is a very good example of social justice, since those who work share with those who are unemployed, and moreover, the government absorbs 60 per cent of the costs of this increase, which the employers and the employees would have to bear if the act were strictly applied.

[English]

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). It involves the statement that he supported the income tax measures from the other two budgets that he has not addressed in his new budget. Several of these measures involve the concept which Canadians find unacceptable of taxing deemed income. For instance, the Minister did not address the issue of taxing capital gains reserves, although in many cases, particularly in farming communities to which he referred in his own background, farmers are taxed on money they do not have in their hands. Does he mean to imply in his statement that he supports the measures he has not addressed, that he is continuing to support the concept of taxing deemed income or taxing money that people do not have in their hands?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a budget. I have not made a budget statement today.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour, the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-201, An Act to amend the Holidays Act: Chapter No. 124;

Bill C-127, An Act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and other offences against the person and to amend certain other Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof—Chapter No. 125.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just want to reserve a point of order now. We are in the middle of discussions with the Government House Leader with respect to proceedings tomorrow. We had an arrangement which we fell somewhat short of this evening, in our view. The Government House Leader will be speaking to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) this evening, getting back to me tomorrow, with respect to Routine Proceedings. I do not intend to raise the point tonight. But in the event that our discussions are fruitless, I will want to raise a point of order immediately when the House resumes business tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, p.m. the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 6.10 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is twofold:

One, to compliment the freshman Minister of Finance for having the wisdom and courage to break with Party and Cabinet solidarity by rolling back the half-baked taxation measures of his predecessor in that portfolio and,

Two, to chide him for his cavalier treatment of the very serious snowballing effect of the budgetary deficit, with a total debt heading for $200 billion.

This is not a matter to be treated lightly or taken in stride. He is mortgaging future generations by his excessive and wasteful spending. Madam Speaker, I so move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga).

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

HOSTING OF 1986 WORLD CUP SOCCER CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Soccer Association did earlier make application to host the 1986 World Cup Soccer Championships. We are all aware of the phenomenal growth of this sport in Canada and its benefits to the health and physical fitness of all those who participate. The withdrawal of Colombia from hosting these championships gives us the opportunity once more to focus the world spotlight on this nation in a very favourable way. I therefore move, in the anticipation that today it will have the support of all Members of this House, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Government of Canada assist and co-operate with the Canadian Soccer Association in bringing to Canada the 1986 World Cup Soccer Championship Tournament.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

PROPOSED INCREASE IN CALGARY RENTS

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, whereas Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has caused the people on fixed incomes living in the low-cost housing project of Vista Heights Court in Calgary a rent increase of 250 per cent effective January 1, 1983, due to a horrendous bureaucratic bungle, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That the Minister immediately investigate this serious situation and resolve the bureaucratic bungle in the most expedient way to eliminate the unnecessary additional financial burden to these people caused by Canada Mortgage and Housing, and also that the Minister report the outcome of his findings through a letter through me to the constituency.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PORTS

WHEAT SHIPMENTS THROUGH SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has received a brief from the City of Saint John's waterfront unions requesting that he favourably consider the movement of wheat and flour shipments through that port on a year-round basis rather than just the winter, which would provide badly needed jobs during a depressed time of activity. As this is clearly within the capacity of the Government to arrange, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Government take the necessary steps now to correct an obvious inconsistency, as other ports in eastern Canada are considered favourably, and ensure the workers that they too will receive their fair share of work through an equitable movement of wheat and flour through the Port of Saint John on a year-round basis.

Some Hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

McDONALD RESTAURANT CHAIN'S REFUSAL TO BUY CANADIAN BUNS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that in western Canada McDonald's restaurant chain is refusing to use Canadian hamburger buns, and since the green-felted clown masquerading as Canada's Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has refused to intervene on the grounds that McDonald's does not like the quality of Canadian-made buns, an insult to Canadian farmers and Canadian bakers, and a loss of Canadian jobs, and since Mr. Cohon, the Chairman of McDonald's Canada chaired the Liberal fund-raising dinner last night at which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked for trust and co-operation, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the Prime Minister remind his Liberal friends at McDonald's of his message last week "Why don't you take a chance on a Canadian?" or, if the Prime Minister feels up to it, that he phone Mr. Cohon and sing him a verse of "Give Canada a break today at McDonald's".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR HOLDING OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that this House has been graced by the presence of two new ladies.

Now that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has spoken to the nation on the economic malaise facing Canada and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has brought forth an economic statement, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That the Prime Minister call a First Ministers' Conference immediately to evolve a joint federal-provincial national employment program to put people back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED LEGAL RECOURSE AGAINST UNION OR MANAGEMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, this is the ninth day of the work stoppage in the major ports on the west coast of Canada which is costing the Canadian grain farmers $8 million a day, a total of $72 million to date. For every day that their product is not delivered, grain farmers and the economy of Canada suffer. Innocent third parties have been affected by these strikes in the past. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House instruct the federal government to establish and maintain the right of innocent third parties to have legal recourse against union or management which deprives them of their livelihood.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT OF NATURAL GAS TAXES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, natural gas taxes imposed under the National Energy Program are causing major problems for the growth of the petrochemical industry in western Canada. This is because most of its products are exported and the taxes normally cannot be passed on to consumers for competitive reasons. Fully nine petrochemical projects in Alberta alone, which depend on natural gas feed stocks, have been delayed, deferred or cancelled since the new taxes were introduced. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the government consider how much in lost construction jobs, lost permanent jobs, lost income tax revenue and lost exports these heavy new taxes are costing Canada with a view to reducing them at least for export purposes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES IN CANADA

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas thousands of Canadians are going to join in "refuse the Cruise demonstrations" across Canada this Saturday, indicating the rapidly growing opposition of Canadians to the testing of U.S. Cruise missiles in our land, and whereas the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) in a letter to me, dated October 18 of this year, said that the specific negotiations on Cruise testing have not yet begun, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That the government heed the wishes of the majority of Canadians by refusing the Cruise and by not going ahead with these negotiations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PERFORMING ARTS

FUTURE OF THE ATLANTIC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra is an important element in the cultural life of east coast Canada and has provided quality musical entertainment to thousands of Atlantic Canadians over the years. But its continuation as a performing symphony is now in jeopardy and the livelihood of over 50 highly qualified musicians is threatened unless new financial aid is provided. Accordingly I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House direct the Secretary of State and the officers of the Canada Council to co-operate with provincial and municipal government authorities and with community leaders to establish a plan for reasonable assistance that will assure the continuance and future viability of the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO RURAL AREAS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of some urgency. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in his statement yesterday, promised an aptly named NEED Program which undertakes to provide 60,000 new jobs for the bargain basement price of $500 million. By my calculations that works out to a figure of $8,333 per job, surely a bargain in these times. The minister knows the majority of these benefits will find their way into the hearts of our cities where they will, I am sure, be thankfully received by the electorate who restored him and his party to power two and a half years ago. But in many ways it is in the rural areas of our country where the need is greater, where the un-Liberal tradition of self-reliance is still so strong. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration make certain that a significant portion of these funds be allotted to the rural areas of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADOPT SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Ayerst Company, which has the third largest industrial research laboratory in Quebec, is going to close these facilities and move them to the United States, and whereas Canada is becoming increasingly dependent on patents and inventions developed in other countries, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That the government adopt a national science policy in order to protect the jobs of our research scientists in a sector that is so important to our country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO NEW PAGES

Madam Speaker: Members of the House will have noticed that we have a new crop of pages at the beginning of this sitting and I think all Members will want to join with me in wishing the pages a very fruitful experience in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I wish to welcome our new pages, who have already been instructed in the customs of the House of Commons, and we hope that this experience will be a fruitful one for them.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EFFECT OF INCREASED PREMIUMS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance whose budget, the more often one looks at it, resembles more and more another trick of smoke and mirrors, and the kind of misleading budgetary projections we have received too often from this Government.

Will the Minister clarify this point. He has announced a program involving the expenditure of $500 million by the federal government to create about 60,000 jobs. Ottawa will give $500 million; Ottawa will take from the private sector $1.7 billion in increased unemployment insurance premiums. Can the Minister confirm our estimates that that taking from the private sector, particularly from small businesses which are on the edge of difficulty now, will cost the creation of at least the 60,000 jobs that the new $500 million program will create? In other words, will he confirm that the Government's increase in unemployment insurance premiums is going to cost Canadians at least as many jobs as his new program is going to create? And if he disputes that figure, will he tell the House of Commons how many Canadian jobs will be lost, how much capacity to create jobs will be denied Canadian small businesses as the result of this increase in unemployment insurance premiums?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I regret that the Leader of the Opposition is approaching this very serious and very important issue of our economic situation still in a very partisan manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I want to indicate to him that the Government has reallocated $500 million indeed specifically and directly to create jobs to help those unemployed who are in the most difficulty, and we have allocated another $600 million for activities that will also create jobs.

As far as the question that he raised is concerned, indeed the charge that will be taken in the form of premiums is in the range of the figures he has mentioned, but I remind him that all that money does not come to the government. It goes back to the unemployed people of this country to help them go through the difficult period we are experiencing at the present time. We, as a Government, are not taking money for our own purposes in this regard.

The unemployment insurance system is an insurance system and what we have done to minimize the impact is we have absorbed, through borrowing, more than half the total cost of the premiums we should have had to charge. We have done this to help small business and large business and the workers of this country. We are not charging the premium increase that we could or should have, according to some, in order to help those workers and businesses in this country who are going through the difficult times they are facing at the present time.

I would also remind the Leader of the Opposition that this decision has been taken upon the advice and recommendation of the advisory committee on unemployment insurance which is composed of employer representatives and labour representatives.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S ESTIMATE OF IMPACT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me deal first with the suggestion that we should be blaming the advisers. We do not believe, on this side of the House of Commons, that when Governments make mistakes they should fire the Deputy Ministers. We believe they should fire the Ministers when Governments make mistakes as they have done with these budgets.

Let me take the Minister's own words. The Minister has admitted he is taking $1.7 billion from the Canadian private sector through the increase in unemployment insurance premiums. He has admitted that. That money would have been used by Canadian small business in particular, either to keep people working or to create new jobs. When Canadians in business cannot use that money to hire other Canadians or keep them in the jobs they hold, that means Canadians lose jobs. We estimate that 60,000 jobs will be lost. How many Canadians does the Minister estimate that his increase in unemployment insurance premiums is going to put out of work—60,000, 70,000 or 100,000? What is the Minister's figure?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I regret again that the Leader of the Opposition prefers partisan rhetoric to serious consideration of this particular issue. I want to remind him that the contribution of $1.7 billion I was referring to is not going to be contributed mainly by small business but by business generally, employers generally, and the workers. I would also remind him that yesterday I provided over $300 million of breaks to workers and employers in this country in order to give them an opportunity to do what has to be done to help us out of the current recession.

As far as the question the Hon. Member raises is concerned, I will tell him that I would be able to provide the answer to this figure if he could tell me how many jobs we are going to create by ensuring that those benefits are going to be paid to unemployed people who are going to spend the money and create jobs also in this country.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister needs a sabbatical in Paris to learn a little bit about the private sector, along with Ed Clark.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister probably does not know that most of the jobs in this country are created by small business. Small business in this country is operating very close to the margins right now—those operations that are still functioning—and there is going to be a massive loss of jobs as a result of this increase in unemployment insurance premiums. The Minister owes the House the honesty to give us the projections he must have of how many new Canadians he is going to put out of work.

Let me ask the Minister a question about his so-called job creation program on which he indicated yesterday he was going to invite the provinces, and I quote, "—wherever possible to supplement the federal contribution." Would the Minister tell us which provinces specifically he consulted about this Program before announcing it to the House of Commons, or will he tell us that there was no consultation in detail with any province? If there was consultation, with which provinces?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all I regret again that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition prefers to make funny jokes on this very important issue. I will remind him that I would rather trust the judgment of the spokesmen for the small business organizations who endorsed, very strongly, the statement I made yesterday, than his own judgment in this particular issue.

As for the specific question he raised on the issue of consultation, I understand that the Minister of Employment and Immigration had discussions with the Ontario Government on a preliminary basis. He has also been in touch with the Quebec Government and was going to arrange a meeting which he held yesterday. What we have provided has been funds and a very broad framework for a program. The details of that program are going to be finally worked out as the Minister of Employment and Immigration concludes his discussions. I understand Quebec officials are coming to meet with officials of the Minister this week and that the Minister is going to Ontario again this afternoon and that he will be out West and in the Maritimes in the course of next week. He will have terminated the consultations during the course of next week after which he will be able to announce the details of the Program we have talked about.

I said that as a Government we are ready to take and provide leadership to this country, but we are also ready to consult, and that is what we are doing.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM DETAILS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, just so that I am clear on this, the Minister of Finance has now indicated that, in so far as advanced consultation is concerned, the Liberal Government believes that this is a country of two Provinces, Ontario and Quebec, and that the other eight Provinces and two Territories are called in after the fact.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Let me put the following questions to the Minister of Finance who introduced this Program. Are the details of the Program now established? Is the proposition being put to the Provinces that they can take it or leave it as Ottawa dictates, or is there more flexibility? Can we have the details of that proposal spelled out in the House of Commons now, details which were announced in general terms by the Minister of Finance yesterday?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, perhaps I can take the opportunity to respond to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who seems to be preoccupied with the question of consultation. I do not know what he did with his summer vacation, but all summer I talked to the Provinces, business and labour, concerning job creation. I did not see him at any of those meetings or discussions.

The fact of the matter is that the Provinces are approaching this in the spirit of co-operation, unlike the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who is just here apparently to make political points. The fact is that we are developing a program in consultation with them because we recognize that there are people in the country who are suffering severe hardship as a result of unemployment. We want to devote our efforts and our resources as much as possible, in combination with the Provinces, the municipalities and the private sector, to mount a maximum effort on their behalf. Frankly, we invite Members of the Opposition to put their best efforts forward in this regard rather than simply their criticisms.

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I ask him to give us a little more detail on the programs announced yesterday by the Minister of Finance. Since the Government last year reduced its transfer payments to the Provinces, forcing them to close hospital beds, fire teachers, and lay off workers, where does the Minister expect the Provinces to get the money to participate? Equally important, will the Provinces be required to contribute matching funds before the federal Government participates?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there was very much a false premise in the basis of the Hon. Member's question. The Provinces are not closing hospitals because of a lack of transfer payments. In fact transfer payments were increased on the basis of 12 per cent per year, which is a substantially higher contribution than most provincial Governments were making to those very same programs. I think it is important to get those facts on the table. In this area we are going through a very honest and open process of discussion with provincial Governments and others so that we can combine our efforts and our resources to determine how, where their own efforts are devoted and targeted at those particular groups, we can provide a match-up. But we do not go on the basis of saying that there must be requirements; we go on the basis of looking for the best accommodation.

EFFECT ON YOUNG UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last night he said that he could spare funds to employ only 60,000 of the 1.3 million Canadians who are currently unemployed. One of the problems of these programs is that they are not often effective. For instance, in Port Alberni, British Columbia, where there were 4,500 people out of work this summer, there are only 24 employed at planting trees because people who have exhausted their unemployment benefits are not eligible for the Program. What assurances can the Minister give us that these 60,000 jobs will be targeted to those Canadians who need them the most—young Canadians who account for nearly half the unemployed and Canadians who have lost their unemployment insurance benefits? I hope this Minister of Finance can speak to his own budget, unlike his predecessor.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, again I will answer the Hon. Member who wants specific responses concerning this Program. We have made it very clear that this particular job-creation program is targeted at those people in the community who have run out of unemployment insurance benefits. We are providing them with an option to work for an income in order to re-establish their stability and basis.

I should point out that that is not the only job-creation program. We have a number of programs presently in place. For example, the Canada Community Development Project is providing an addition to the 60,000 jobs through the NEED Program and another additional 60,000 jobs to the community development projects as well as a number of programs targeted specifically at young people and others in need. In fact, the budget at this present time for direct employment programs is well over $600 million and we are adding another $500 million to it for this particular group. Therefore, this government is committing well over $1 billion at this point in time for direct employment programs to cover a wide variety of people who now have employment problems.

SITUATION OF "EXHAUSTEES"

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, a new sociological phenomenon is happening in Canada these days and, as a result, a new vocabulary is emerging. The term "exhaustees" is becoming very critical now in discussions and debates in this House. The Department of Employment and Immigration tells us that in the months remaining this year every month 55,000 Canadians will come off UIC benefits. That figure will increase over the whole of 1983. The Minister's mini-budget statement yesterday suggested that 1,200 people a month between now and the end of the year will be serviced in terms of new jobs. What do we do about the short fall of 53,800 Canadians who will find their UIC benefits exhausted.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member would read the study thoroughly he would find that, when it comes to people exhausting their benefits, a large percentage of those are able to gain alternative employment within the first six or seven weeks. That is well over 35 per cent of the total.

Another large group in that range of people have other forms of income support.

An Hon. Member: Yes, welfare.

Mr. Axworthy: This program is targeted for those who have the greatest need, those who face no other choice but to go on welfare. The program was designed to meet the needs of that group of people which the survey points out represents only 10 per cent of the total number of people who would be exhausting their benefits. It is because of the need to give them the maximum amount of assistance that we have targeted the program particularly for that group.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, that is why I termed it indirectly as a sociological phenomenon which obviously the Minister of Employment and Immigration does not understand. His department has provided statistics that show that a significant number of those people losing their jobs, going onto UIC and now coming off UIC, are the bread winners in those families. They are not sons or daughters or spouses; they are the sole bread winners of their families. That is the phenomenon of the last number of months. However, I would like to try my question again but this time I will address it to the Minister of Finance.

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the Program of the Minister of Finance indicated that 60,000 jobs would be created in the next 18 months. Using the figures of the Minister of Employment and Immigration we find that 1,155,000 Canadians will be exhaustees. Will the Minister of Finance please have the courage to rise and tell us what do we do with this shortfall of over 1,000,000 exhaustees in the next 18 months when all the Minister is going to create is 60,000 new jobs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am sorry if it appears that the Hon. Member did not hear my first answer. What I pointed out to him is that out of the people exhausting benefits many of them find alternate employment within a matter of the first six or seven weeks. Certainly we do not want to design a program that would provide a disincentive for them to go to work. Therefore, we want to design a program that is targeted very much at those who face the greatest hardship.

In addition to that, as I pointed out in answer to previous questions, we also have in place other employment programs, for example, the Canada Community Development Program which is presently providing a substantial amount of employment in the Hon. Member's own riding. He knows what is available to provide those kinds of alternative employment. We are trying to cover as broad a base as we can. We have to husband our resources as carefully as possible. That is another reason why we have invited the Provinces, the private sector, other communities and non-profit groups to join us in this effort so that we can share responsibility in providing as much employment as possible to those in need.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, the Minister is saying that his programs are trying to provide employment to get people back on UIC. That is not the kind of job-creation programs that we in this Party would like to see the Government implement.

WELFARE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL FUND FOR MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have been asked to rise today on a matter on behalf of one community in western Canada, but the same could be done for communities across Canada. The Mayor of Kamloops has asked me to ask the Minister of Finance for some special consideration. In our city of Kamloops we have hundreds of people each day who are unable to provide food for their families. These are exhaustees. The Department of Welfare encourages these individuals to approach the Church, the Salvation Army, and food banks in our community, because they are not eligible for welfare. Would the Minister of Finance consider giving some special consideration for a special fund to allow municipalities across Canada to provide food for people who fall between the UIC and welfare traps?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is a social assistance program in this country to which the federal government contributes 50 per cent of the cost. There is an Unemployment Insurance Program to which the federal government also contributes quite significantly. There are cases quite obviously where there may be a lag between the time when somebody gets off unemployment insurance and gets into welfare.

Mr. Riis: There is no lag.

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend says there is no lag. If there is no lag, then these people will get social assistance.

Miss Jewett: They are not eligible.

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend had better explain even further then.

Miss Jewett: You do not understand. They are not eligible.

FINANCE

ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, if I could draw his attention away from his bedmates over there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: In the Minister's budget speech yesterday, he announced two decisions which will reduce employment in the country. The first is the increase in unemployment insurance premiums by some 40 per cent to 50 per cent. The second is to refuse to withdraw or reverse the reduction in the capital cost allowances that came about as a result of the November budget last year. Both of these he said were because they would cause an increase in the deficit. How does the Minister justify these decisions when there will continue to be unnecessary government spending, such as the 17.1 per cent increase in the administrative costs of the 12 largest departments of government as I pointed out in my speech yesterday?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the question of administrative costs in the Government are constantly being reviewed. The President of the Treasury Board will have an opportunity to address that very issue in the next short while. I will provide to the Hon. Member full explanations as to the reasons for particular increases in particular departments. The Minister, however, will have an opportunity to examine the figures mentioned by the Hon. Member and explain the situation fully. I might add that those costs have been examined by the various parliamentary committees when the estimates were tabled and they have been approved by this Parliament. I invite my friend to reflect on those considerations that have taken place in the various expenditure programs.

MEASURES TO CUT GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I cannot understand why the Minister said that the particular question I raised could be addressed some time in the future.

Before he made that decision, he should have addressed that question. Those costs were not approved by this Parliament, they were approved by the Liberal majority in this Parliament.

In the previous budget, the former Minister of Finance said that he could not cut back unnecessary government spending any further than we had done. Yet in this budget, this Minister has found ways in the areas of energy, foreign aid and defence to cut back further. Is the Minister saying today that there is absolutely no other way to cut government spending other than to cut into important social programs, as the Government has done to date in the case of pensions, health and post-secondary education? Is there no other way of cutting government spending other than in those areas?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, we are constantly reviewing government expenditures and trying to cut any expenditures which do not meet the highest priority compared to the other expenses that we have to incur.

Mr. Clark: Ask Ed Clark.

Mr. Lalonde: We do this consistently and regularly. As I indicated in my speech, the President of the Treasury Board has been asked to look again at areas where additional cuts can be made to try to maintain a much lower rate of growth in our expenditures. This is going on all the time and it will continue.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

PARLIAMENTARY APPROVAL OF FUNDS FOR CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It touches on his announcement made only two days ago that he is intending to seek the approval of Parliament for an injection of $400 million of equity into two Crown-owned aircraft manufacturers, including $200 million to Canadair alone.

Would the minister indicate to the House what he means by parliamentary approval? Is his Department going to propose the sham that was thrust through this House only a few months ago, a $1 item in estimates, where we were asked at that time to approve the guaranteeing of $1.2 billion of liabilities in favour of Canadair? Is that what he means by parliamentary approval, or will there be a proper opportunity given for this House to examine why he feels such expenditures should be made on behalf of the people of Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I recall the Hon. Member's discussion with my predecessor, it was the concern of the Opposition with respect to letters of comfort that had been authorized previously. The former President of the Treasury Board and my predecessor decided at the time that from then on we would go to parliamentary estimates for any funds asked for by the two Crown corporations. This is exactly what we have done.

I also recall that the Member was one of those who insisted that equity injections be given to these particular companies rather than debt capital as before. That is exactly what the Government has done.

TIMING OF FUNDING

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce again. I would like him to show evidence to back up either of the statements that he has made touching on what I have asked for in previous Parliaments. I take it then that we will only be given the opportunity to approve an injection of $400 million into these two Crown corporations by approving a $1 item in supplementary estimates yet to be seen.

Would the Minister indicate what he means by having two task forces at work, one to be updated in their report and the other to be constituted in due course? Does he not feel that it is backwards, if you like, to be asking Parliament to approve something before he even hears from the two task forces that he says he has in place to recommend, or otherwise, whether equity should be put in these two companies?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the reason we put the request before the President of the Treasury Board to put this in supplementary estimates was to ensure that the Opposition would have an opportunity to discuss, at the parliamentary committee stage, the activities of both Canadair and de Havilland. I think the Hon. Member has heard the questions from his colleagues yesterday and today with respect to job creation. I can think of no more important a sector in Canada than the aerospace sector. The Hon. Member, as well as colleagues on both sides of the House, will have the opportunity to put questions of this nature to Canadair and de Havilland officials when those estimates come forward.

ENERGY

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROGRAM CUTBACKS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and is with regard to cutbacks in the energy program. He said in his speech yesterday that the Petroleum Incentives Program grants would be maintained at their existing levels. What programs, then, is he planning to cut, and how many jobs will be lost by these cuts?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on her first question in the House of Commons. I would like to say to the House that I will be in a position to report some time in the future on the nature of the cuts in my Department.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I think that we have to review some of the programs to make sure that there is no abuse and that they are serving the public, but perhaps cutting some of the costs of these programs. I do think that it is possible in the ministry to find some cuts.

I am very shocked to see the Tories do not appreciate a minister who tries to cut down expenditures in his Department.

CHIP AND OFF-OIL PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the purpose of a job-creation program—that is by reallocation of funds—is that more jobs be created in the new program than are lost in the programs being cut. I am somewhat disturbed to see that no calculation has been made.

I wish to inquire about two programs particularly, the CHIP Program and Off-Oil. These are Programs both important for conservation and job creation. Can we have the assurances of the minister, or any minister for that matter, that these two Programs will not be cut?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it is my intention to maintain these programs but I will try to use them in a more efficient way. There were some complaints which I received from the private sector that there were a lot of abuses in the system. I would like to make them more efficient so that the consumer would benefit from these programs but at the same time the taxpayer would have equal value for the money invested.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INVESTMENT IN CAST SHIPPING GROUP

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning the continuing involvement of Canadian National Railways in the CAST shipping group. The minister knows that Canadian National Railways have already invested $60 million in CAST. They have provided extensive credit for freight rates and credit for onshore facilities. Now the time has come to cut the losses and bail out of CAST.

Will the Minister give the House his personal assurance that no more public funds will be given to this foreign owned shipping group? Will he make Canadian National Railways co-operate so that all the facts related to this unfortunate investment will be disclosed to the Canadian Transport Commission hearing in November? Other Canadian ports and shipping interests have a right to know these facts.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think that anybody who has read the papers in recent days knows that the Chairman of CN has been quite clear on the subject. CN is remaining in CAST to protect its investment, but he has added that there is no intention on the part of CN to add to the liability it has in CAST presently.

With respect to the facts and fiction on the CN investment in CAST, there will be any number of inquiries. There is one coming soon to the CTC which will be looking into the second CN investment in CAST. I presume that the parliamentary committee on transportation could look at it again. I am quite sure that there will be a number of learned essays, books and articles on the subject in the future.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport must know that Canadian National Railways have consistently fought to keep the relationship with the CAST shipping group secret. They have taken cases to the Supreme Court of Canada to prevent disclosure of these facts. He also must know that Canadian National Railways on other occasions have indicated that they would no longer invest further public funds in CAST and went back on this word by becoming involved in other activities with CAST. Would he simply state his position before the House of Commons with respect to the matter of Canadian National Railways' involvement in CAST. He was in favour of it a year ago. Is he still in favour of continuation on this relationship?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, everyone knows that I try not to run on a day to day basis these Crown corporations for which I am responsible. When the chairman of one of those corporations states as clearly as Mr. Horner did yesterday that there was no intention on the part of CN to increase its liabilities in the CAST organization, I prefer to quote him than to take responsibility myself for imposing these views on an excellent board, excellent chairman, and an excellent president.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCED CUTS IN BUDGET AND ADJUSTMENT OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday the Minister of Finance announced a $230 million cut in the defence budget. I presume that this cut is in addition to the $200 million cut announced at the time of the June budget. Would the Minister tell the House how much of this cut applies to this fiscal year and how much to 1983-84? Would he also explain the remarks of the Minister of Finance that there will be some adjustments in the nature of the programs we have planned to undertake? What adjustments, and what programs?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the reallocation of the defence moneys to the job-creation program was made through the years 1983-84, 1984-85. It does not affect the present budget of 1982-83. This reallocation of money is made possible because of the policy of the Government, of six and five which is very successful. We can effect savings in these two years due to the six and five, because salary increases were projected at 11 per cent or 12 per cent when the estimates were tabled last November. As you know, at the same time we have a special economic model at DND, an economic model which forecasts or predicts rates of inflation. This also was revised too, considering that we have been very successful to the moment in bringing the inflation rate down. This was calculated using the DND model at, let us say, an inflation rate of about 13 per cent or 14 per cent for these years. Considering that the Canadian rate of inflation is going down and that the United States rate of inflation is also going down, we will save money as a result of these factors, and then we re-allocate the money saved for the job creation program.

Mr. McKinnon: It is interesting to know that the Armed Forces will pay for their own equipment. The Minister should remember what he said on July 12 when he admitted in the House that he was unable to find the $200 million from the imposition of 6 per cent ceiling on servicemen's pay raises, through this year and next year.

LAY-OFFS OF INSTRUCTORS AT ST-JEAN, P.Q.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I want to point out to the Minister that last week, when the Prime Minister was giving his trilogy, he told those Canadian employers thinking of cutting jobs to cut costs to consult with their employees as they might find that the workers would be prepared to participate in work sharing in order to save jobs. In view of that statement, why has the Minister laid off 42 English instructors and 15 French instructors at St-Jean? The military management there has refused to consider work sharing. Could the Minister explain the Department's refusal to comply with the Prime Minister's pleas to employers?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, this is a special circumstance, I know, relating to St-Jean. I think the explanation I gave when I was asked by some of my colleagues why some teachers were laid off at St-Jean was very simple. It was a normal administrative decision. At the moment, as the Hon. Member knows very well, recruiting is at about the lowest level possible. We have fewer enlistees than ever before because people now stay in the Forces. Therefore, we do not have any attrition, and teachers in different schools and different training programs are simply not required any more. Thus, we had to lay off some of these people who were not needed any longer.

INCREASE IN PREMIUMS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Mr. Minister, you increased unemployment insurance premiums to deal with the unemployment insurance deficit, created—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Through the Speaker.

Mr. Keeper: Very well. Through you, Madam Speaker, to the Minister of Finance, I would ask a question. Yesterday the Minister increased unemployment insurance premiums in order to deal with an unemployment insurance deficit which has been created, at least in part, by his detrimental economic policies with regard to the economy, which create unemployment. To quote the Prime Minister, he said in June that "it is still possible to scare the hell out of people by creating more unemployment". These unemployment insurance premiums will cost the average working person, earning who is, let us say, $20,000, some $460 in the new year, which is a tax increase of some 53 per cent. Mr. Minister, is it fair to impose a 53 per cent increase in a regressive tax on the average Canadian in these economic times?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in case the Hon. Member does not know that unemployment is more than a strictly Canadian problem, I would remind him that there are 30 million unemployed in the OECD countries today and we expect that there may be even more next year, so it is not a purely Canadian phenomenon.

The Government has made its decision after consultation with both labour and management. We have held meetings with spokesmen for the unions. Some were invited but, like the CLC, decided not to show up. Instead, the CLC sent a letter merely stating, "extend the benefits and do not increase the rates". That was the extent of its contribution. The others, those in a responsible union leadership, said they were ready to consider an increase but that there should be a sharing of the cost of the increase. The same view was taken by management. The advisory council on unemployment insurance, representing both labour and management, recommended that we set increases at $2.30, and this is what the Government has done.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER INCREASE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, surely the Minister does not deny that his Government has contributed to unemployment. Under the economic policies of the Minister's Government, the average working Canadian earning $20,000 a year will be losing $2,200 as a result of salary restrictions under six and five, some $450 from higher income tax under de-indexation, and some $320 by the unemployment insurance premium increase. Considering the impact of the loss of some $3,000 to an average Canadian who may be earning $20,000, will the Minister at least reconsider his increase in the regressive unemployment insurance premiums and place some of the burden to pay for that Program on the general tax revenues?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, out of the increase that has been announced, if we take into account the deficit this year and next year, the Government will be absorbing about 70 per cent of the additional cost which this will represent. I think that is a fair contribution by the general taxpayer to the system when one realizes that, out of the rest, the employers contribute about 58 per cent and the workers contribute about 42 per cent. I think the Government of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada in general have indeed made their contributions to this particular situation.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON MANDATORY SUPERVISION PROGRAM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. For over a year the Solicitor General has been saying, "At any time now there will be a policy statement with regard to mandatory supervision," that social failure. In the meantime, because of his inaction, the Chairman of the National Parole Board has had to make a test case in British Columbia with regard to the Minister's policy. Can the Minister tell us when we can expect a policy statement from him, or legislation, which will put the security of the public of Canada first?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am now ready to discuss, with my critics in the Opposition, the amount of time that might be required to deal with the legislation I propose to bring forward to tighten mandatory supervision.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, if the Minister were not so interested in spending $60,000 to train mice to sniff out marijuana, he could perhaps have had this ready a long time ago.

SECURITY OF CITIZENS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is as follows: Will this policy change come as legislation, will it come as an Order in Council, and will it, above all else, put the security of Canadians first?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I cannot assure the House that the Opposition will totally agree with the provisions to tighten the rules of mandatory supervision which I am proposing, but it will be by legislation. I do hope to have the support and co-operation of the Opposition so that the House can deal with it rapidly when it is brought forward. The measures have in no way been held up by any considerations with regard to mice.

TERRORISM

INVESTIGATION OF CRIMES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Solicitor General would have some statement or comment to make on the ugly emergence of violent terrorism in this country over the last few months. I am specifically speaking of the destruction of power facilities in British Columbia, the execution of a foreign diplomat on an Ottawa road, and the dangerous blowing up of the front of a Defence plant in Toronto. Are arrests in any or all of these cases near?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the detection—the solving of these crimes, if I can put it that way—is primarily a responsibility of local police forces. I can assure the Hon. Member that my understanding is that local police forces are giving them top priority. However, to the extent that national security and international terrorism are a factor in them, I can again assure him that the Security Service is discharging its responsibility in gathering information about them and in fully co-operating with the local police forces so far as the furnishing of intelligence available to our national Security Force is concerned.

USE OF STOLEN EXPLOSIVES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, just to emphasize the national aspect of this matter, of which I am sure the Solicitor General should be aware, early in this year a large quantity of explosives was stolen in British Columbia. Later, only part of these explosives were used to destroy power facilities in that Province. I ask the Solicitor General whether he can tell us if some of those same explosives stolen in British Columbia were used to blow up the front of Litton Industries in Toronto, and whether he can inform us of the whereabouts, the quantity and the quality of the presumably unused remainder of those explosives, especially in light of threats being made about every second or third day against some other plants in this country. That is a national police matter. It is not a local police matter.

• (1500)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I am well aware of the substance of the matters that he put forward before the House. I would again like to remind him that in view of the division of constitutional responsibility and policing responsibilities, any progress in solving these cases will be announced by the local police departments concerned.

Business of the House

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Government House Leader the usual Thursday question with respect to the business of the House for next week, whether there have been any changes since our last discussion?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, until further notice, the business of the House remains unchanged as far as today, tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday are concerned. Yesterday, I asked the House to wait until today for further details about our business for next Wednesday and Thursday. So, today, we will start the debate on second reading of Bill C-128, a measure to provide the government with supplementary borrowing authority. Tomorrow will be the second day of this debate, which should end next Tuesday by 9:45 p.m. Both Monday and Friday next week will be opposition days. As far as Wednesday and Thursday are concerned, there are bills arising from the last budget which we should like to have debated in the House as soon as possible. These bills will be introduced in a few moments by the ministers concerned. The bills we wish to consider on Wednesday and Thursday are the following, in that order—provided, of course, that more than one is passed. The first one will be the bill in the name of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), entitled "An Act respecting rebates of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act". The second bill to be considered concerns small business, and is entitled "Small Business Investment Grants Act", and the third bill still arising from the June budget that will be presented to Parliament for consideration is in the name of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) and is entitled "An Act to amend the National Housing Act (No. 2)".

Thus, the order of business for next week is very straightforward and clear-cut, except for Wednesday and Thursday when we will be considering, in order, a number of bills arising from the last budget. These are the bills I have just mentioned and they will be introduced in a few moments.

Now, I shall, if I may, add a few remarks about the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). We expected the minister's statement to take up about one hour, in fact it was a bit longer than that, so that, at the request of the opposition parties, Madam Speaker, we have agreed that when we get to Statements by Ministers, the question and answer period following the statement will continue today for an additional period of not more than twenty minutes, and I may add, as I said yesterday, that we would not want this to be considered a precedent.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, as the Government House Leader has indicated, we have had some discussion on this matter. It relates to a reservation I made last night immediately prior to the adjournment, namely that there was a point of order that might arise today with respect to the item upon which the House should have commenced proceedings today.

There is a substantive argument that could be made procedurally that we should have started today's proceedings where we left off yesterday, namely under the item on Routine Proceedings entitled "Statements by Ministers". There is an argument that can be made under Standing Order 7 and Standing Order 15 and Bourinot, May and Beauchesne all support that. However, since the Government has agreed to extend the examination of the Minister of Finance for a further 20 minutes, it is not my intention to advance that submission today.

I rise now simply to make certain that the record will show that our acquiescence to this proceeding today, that is, embarking on the question period rather than continuing the item we left off yesterday, is not to be taken in any way, shape or form as any precedent for the future should we find ourselves in a similar position.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I also was involved in this, but I hope it is a precedent in fact in that it shows the goodwill that can be obtained when we try to work together.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRESENTATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, as chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the Twelfth Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which concerns Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, and I wish to request an extension until November 30, a memorable date, since it is Winston Churchill's birthday and mine as well.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRIESEN—PRODUCTION OF PAPERS ALLEGED INCOMPLETE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, it was my understanding that this question of privilege would arise after "Statements by Ministers", but I am prepared to proceed now. I beg the indulgence of the House on this matter.

I rise on a question of privilege relating to the rights of this House and the rights of Members to full and complete disclosure in answer to an order of the House, and also to indicate that the House and its Members are entitled to complete production of all documents to comply with an order of this House.

On April 1, 1982, under Division No. 157, this House by a vote of 160 to 5 agreed to my Private Member's Motion for the Production of Papers. This decision, arrived at after near unanimity, followed the lengthy debate of December 17, 1981 and April 1, 1982.

It is my view that a prima facie case of privilege exists since the return is not complete. In view of the ruling of the Speaker of the House on February 16, 1954, page 2121 of Hansard, which establishes a precedent that there is a prima facie case for this question of privilege, it is my right to raise the question at this time.

The order of the House that we presented on April 1 and on which we voted read as follows:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, memos, telegrams, and communications relating to the order respecting Emergency Planning P.C. 1981-1305, May 21, 1981, Registration SI/81-76 June 10, 1981.

It was in defiance of Citation 213 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, 1958 and Citation 389 of Beauchesne's third edition, 1943 that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) finally did table some of the documents on July 29, 1982, four months after that order of the House was issued and only after I was forced to raise this specific matter of neglect to the House on two separate occasions.

There is no doubt that the Government has not complied with this order. Over the summer months I have collected hundreds of pages of documents which should have been tabled at this time but were not.

The omissions that I have uncovered reveal that there were many and various kinds of correspondence, tabled documents that were not included. I would like to give just one example of this omission. It is a letter tabled in the Alberta legislature, and, therefore, is public property. It is addressed to the "Hon. Yvon Pinard, President of the Privy Council." It says in part, and this is why it is so important that we have in all the documents:

Alberta is seriously concerned, however, that the proposed federal legislation will not necessarily be confined to emergencies of an overriding national concern but that it also contemplates federal authority in what may be very localized situations.

That gives some import to the particular motion which I had voted on in the House. You will note, Madam Speaker, that the Motion for the Production of Papers reads "—all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, memos, telegrams and communications." It does not say "part of the documentation" or "most of the documentation", it says all of the documentation.

In addition, Madam Speaker, you will note that there is no date attached to this motion and that the order is quite specific as it relates to any documentation concerning that order, either before its implementation or after.

The government might want to argue that the undisclosed material is privileged information. As I have already indicated, that information is readily available in the legislative assemblies because it has been tabled in the legislature of at least one of the Provinces, and, I believe, those of several other provinces. For example, in a letter dated April 28, 1982, to Mr. Marvin E. Moore, the Minister in charge for the Alberta Disaster Services, the President of the Privy Council states that he has certainly—and I quote:

—no objections to your tabling in your legislature the exchange of correspondence between us and the subject of legislation on matters relating to Emergency Planning.

In fact, Madam Speaker, that letter, together with five others, was tabled in the Alberta Legislature. Yet the President of the Privy Council refused to do the same in this Chamber even despite the fact that there was a House order to do so.

In addition, memoranda of understanding were reached with the Provinces at a meeting held in Ottawa at the Chateau Laurier Hotel in January of this year. Subsequent to that meeting, these memoranda of understanding were made public, yet those documents are also missing, despite the fact that they are accessible elsewhere.

To underscore my point, the President of the Privy Council issued a news release just two days ago in which he announced the significance of that memorandum of understanding with one of the Provinces. In that release the minister states that a memorandum of understanding has been signed in the Province of New Brunswick, thus indicating, of course, that the document exists.

I should also point out that under Citation 389 in Beauchesne's third edition it is stated:

—If parties neglect to make returns to orders of either House in reasonable time, they are ordered to make them forthwith; or so much of returns as has not been made. If they continue to withhold them, they are ordered to attend at the bar of the House; and unless they satisfactorily explain the causes of their neglect, and comply with the order of the House, they will be censured or punished according to the circumstances of the case.

That Citation, Madam Speaker, refers to specific cases where information sought has not all been provided or where information having been sought was not given. The wording is taken from May, pages 562 and 563, twelfth edition; and I also refer you to pages 256 and 257 of the fifteenth edition.

I fully understand, Madam Speaker, the general theory which can be found in the fifteenth edition, which is to the effect that if there is a failure to comply, a sufficient cause must be demonstrated for the exercise of that power. If consideration of public policy can be urged against a motion for Papers, it is either withdrawn or otherwise dealt with according to the judgment of the House. That theory is alluded to by the Speaker of the House of Commons in a decision rendered on July 16, 1955, page 6246 of Hansard. In addition, the Speaker goes on to say:

—if the hon. member wishes to complain further about the non-compliance with the order, it is not a point of order or a point of privilege, and he must do so by moving the proper motion if he deems that advisable.

I respectfully submit, Madam Speaker, that in the case affecting my motion, in contrast to that decision rendered almost two decades ago, there is sufficient cause to justify a prima facie case of privilege. In my view, in this case no consideration of public policy can be urged against the motion for these papers since many of these documents are readily available now through the provincial Legislatures.

I also refer to a decision rendered on March 20, 1962, found at page 1967 of Hansard, where the Speaker states:

Perhaps the hon. member who feels the order of the House has not been sufficiently complied with would inform the minister of the specific documents which he says have not been produced. Then if he is not satisfied there is provision under our rules for a debatable motion to produce documents. This procedure gives a remedy for that matter which the hon. member for Laurier now raises.

In contrast to this decision, I have, first of all, already alluded to those documents which have not been produced. Second, I am satisfied that an order of the House was not discharged. In my view, a blatant contempt of that order has been demonstrated by the Government for its failure to produce these documents. How is it possible for a Member to indicate that all of the documents have not been produced before the Government decides to table those documents which it wants to? It is an impossible task.

I might refer to page 3793 of Hansard, May 11, 1956. You will note that in that particular case the Government did indicate its responsibility to table all documents and undertook to look into any oversight which may have occurred. However, in this case no oversight could possibly have occurred by the very magnitude of the number of documents which I have uncovered are missing.

You will note that at the bottom of pages 562 and 563 of May's twelfth edition and at pages 256 and 257 of May's fifteenth edition, there are footnotes which refer to the Journals and Hansard from which these specific cases were extracted. Going back to the Journals of 1834, 1835, 1841, 1876 and 1820, and also Hansard for these periods, you will note that the House has in the past ordered certain officers to produce certain documents. These points are a subject of the Speaker's remarks on Saturday, July 16, 1955, at page 6245 of Hansard, to which I have already alluded.

You will note that the Speaker refers to one case in which the Clerk of the Peace of Caernarvon was involved. The reason the Clerk was not producing the documents was because he felt the expense of producing such documents should be paid by the House, whereas a Member suggested it should be paid for by the Member who moved the motion. In another case, the man involved was a witness who appeared before a committee and refused to produce a book in his possession. The Speaker does not go into the other particular cases involved, but the Speaker ruled, upon looking into the background of these documents, that it would appear that ordinary citizens were involved with neglect rather than direct officers of the Crown.

It is my contention, Madam Speaker, that if an ordinary citizen can be held culpable for neglect, for whatever reason, so too should officers of the Crown, especially when they are Ministers of the Crown and have a direct responsibility in the operations and conduct of democracy in this country.

In other words, Ministers must be held accountable for their actions to an extent even beyond that of the ordinary citizen. Going over all the debates which have taken place on the Emergency Planning Order, the Government and its representatives have consistently adopted the view that there was nothing secret about the Emergency Planning Order. Indeed, it has indicated on almost every occasion that it wanted to make information available to clear up any misapprehension which could have occurred concerning this order.

Once the House order was passed on April 1, 1982, the Government said there was a problem only for the translation of the documents, that as soon as the documents were translated they would be made available to the House. At no time was a question of public policy raised as to the confidentiality of the record.

In addition, I would like to refer you to the ruling of the Speaker on February 21, 1979, page 3460, in a response to a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre. You will note that the question dealt with the failure of the then Minister of Transport to make available documents to the House which had been made available to an inquest conducted by a coroner on the crash of an aircraft in Saskatchewan. The Speaker clearly indicates that if the Hon. Member had actually said he had made application pursuant to motions for the production of documents and that the Minister subsequently refused to produce them, then it could have been brought forward within the ambit of privilege.

I understand, Madam Speaker, that over 70 people are directly employed by the federal Government to develop the Emergency Planning Order passed by Order in Council. I stress that these people are directly employed and do not include all those others indirectly involved. I find it impossible to believe that such a large contingent could produce such a small quantity of papers as were tabled here in the House. I think it is a byword across the country that the main industry here is to produce paper.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to Citation 395 of Beauchesne's third edition, which tells us that once papers and files are entrusted to the Clerk of the House and recorded in the Journals, they become the property of the House. I suggest that, given the fact that many of the items to which I have referred earlier, and which I will not go over again, are already a matter of public record in the provincial legislatures, the President of the Privy Council must be obliged to table the missing documents in order to ensure that the rights of the Members of the federal legislature are respected. As a matter of fact I would state, Madam Speaker, that the documents are now already public property here and that the President of the Privy Council is withholding public property.

In addition, Madam Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that a prima facie case of privilege does exist and that the conduct of the President of the Privy Council and the Minister responsible for emergency planning in Canada in failing to provide documentation which he was to have provided under an order of this House of Commons should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, the committee to have the power to call persons, papers and documents and report its findings to the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am not so sure I understand what the Hon. Member means. He is saying there are documents that are now public property and that I am at fault because I am withholding them. Now if they are public property, how can there be any question of my withholding them! He is saying that what is important is not really the content of those documents but the amount. He is saying that this is a country where a lot of paper is produced and that, considering the number of employees we have, we should have been producing a more impressive pile of documents. I think the Hon. Member has a rather superficial attitude, and I am trying to understand what he really means, although frankly, I am at a loss.

The Hon. Member ought to know that the documents we produced were tabled with the consent of members on both sides of the House. We accepted this motion for production of documents in good faith, and I asked my officials to do the necessary research and obtain the appropriate material so as to respond in a full and adequate manner to the request and the order of the House. My parliamentary secretary tabled the documents himself in the course of his duties, and he tells me that the pile was about as high as the pile of documents he has here which he is going to table today in answer to another request. Perhaps the Hon. Member wanted a bigger pile and that is why he is now accusing me of withholding documents which are already in the public domain. I really cannot follow his reasoning.

In any case, Madam Speaker, perhaps I could draw your attention to a citation in Beauchesne which says quite clearly that a question of privilege ought rarely to come up in this House, and that the definition of privilege where members' rights are concerned is very limited and applies primarily to a breach of members' rights to freedom of speech. In the circumstances, I say that we acted in good faith, with the unanimous consent of the House, that we tabled all the documents we believed to be relevant and that if the Hon. Member were to indicate a document or documents in which he is interested and which could be tabled, I assure you I would do so without hesitation. However, I am sure that the Hon. Member never intended to question my good faith, because otherwise I would have a thing or two to say about that.

Madam Speaker: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has raised a number of questions. For the benefit of the ruling I will have to make on the question which has just been raised, I would like the minister to tell me, first of all, whether he is invoking the restrictions indicated by Beauchesne, in Citation 387 I believe, with respect to these documents? As far as I know, the government never invoked any of those restrictions and had always given the House to understand that it was prepared to produce the documents. The member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) was very clear as to the documents he would like to consult if they were laid on the table of the House. He mentioned a number of documents he has as yet been unable to consult because, for some reason, the government has not yet tabled them. I do not know whether it is because they have not been translated or because the government does not have them at this time. In any case, to help me in making my ruling, I would appreciate it if the minister would tell me whether he is invoking Beauchesne's restrictions or whether he has another reason for not tabling the documents.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, while the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is thinking about that, I might intervene and submit to you, with respect, that it does not make any difference at this stage whether the Government wishes to invoke the discretion of privilege. The fact is that the House passed an order. That order called for the production of all papers and documents relevant to the subject matter of the motion which was on the Order Paper. That motion was accepted by the House. Normally, if any conditions or restrictions are going to be placed upon the agreement by the Government for the production of those papers, that is the point at which those conditions or restrictions are invoked. Now, that period of time has gone by so my submission to you, Madam Speaker, is that it is too late for the Government to attempt to impose restrictions on an order of this House which requires the Government to produce all documents and papers with respect to the motion.

The President of the Privy Council used the words "production of relevant documents." I submit that that discretion is now beyond him. The order of the House did not call for the production of all relevant documents, it called for the production of all documents, and it is a little late now for the government to invoke the doctrine of irrelevancy, the doctrine of privilege, or indeed any other doctrine that might have been available to it under the rules at the time the House adopted unanimously the motion of the Hon. Member.

It seems to me, Madam Speaker, from what I have been listening to, that the Hon. Member who raises the point has very succinctly and clearly made out a prima facie case of privilege and any doubt—and I submit that there can be none in your mind, but if there might be a lingering doubt—has to be resolved in favour of the Hon. Member who raises the question. There is only one instrument for resolving it and that is the Standing Committee to which the Hon. Member wishes the whole matter to be referred so he might produce there, in that forum, the documents which are public in other legislatures of the country but which for some reason or other the Government will not make public here, notwithstanding the existence of an order of this House that those documents be produced.

Never has there been a clearer case of privilege, Madam Speaker, and I would suggest in this instance that it is a most appropriate case for allowing the motion to be put that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee, so that apparently the hundreds or dozens, or whatever, of other documents that the Member could not reach in the limited time available to him for making the point which he has very ably done might be also produced.

The main point, Madam Speaker, is that it is too late now for the Government to invoke these restrictions and qualifications which, if it wanted to do so, should have been done at the time the House passed an unqualified, unrestricted, unconditional order for production.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, you asked me a question. You referred to a list of documents mentioned by the Hon. Member. You said that it would have been repetitive to table documents in the House that were already public property. You said that we acted in good faith when we tabled a large quantity of documents. Today, the Hon. Member is mentioning other documents he would like to examine. I said earlier that I would like to have time to check what documents he is talking about. I did not receive prior notice of this question. I am aware that according to parliamentary procedure, the Hon. Member is not obliged to give notice, but since we were acting in good faith in tabling a very large quantity of documents and the Hon. Member would like to have more of these, I would like to have time to check whether we have the documents and whether they can be tabled, and then answer your question later on, if you will give me enough time. However, I still think, and this was my reaction straight away, that as far as documents that are already in the public domain are concerned, it would be repetitive to table them in the House. Furthermore, the agreement with New Brunswick referred to by the Hon. Member was signed only a few days ago. I signed it last week while Parliament was still in recess. In the circumstances, I do not think a complaint is justified.

• (1530)

[English]

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) has made his case quite completely. Hon. Members will notice that I have let him go on for a considerable time to give him a chance to give his complete submission in this case, especially since I believe this is the second time he feels he has had to raise this question before the House. I needed to have his complete submission in order to make a finding in this particular case. There is still some doubt in my mind as to the way my decision should go. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I am sure, is not suggesting that when I am in doubt I should automatically decide in favour of the Member who has raised a question.

Mr. Nielsen: Let the House decide.

Madam Speaker: When I am in doubt I try to find out more information about the case so that I can give a ruling which is not doubtful. That is precisely what I want to do.

There is no question in my mind that if there is a disobedience to an order of the House then this is a prima facie question of privilege. It is not as clear as I would want it to be to decide that the Government has refused to obey an order of the House. I agree with the Hon. Member that it is taking some time, and maybe his patience is coming to an end. Perhaps there are reasons for that.

I should like also to look into the point raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon about whether the time has passed at which a Member can invoke some other restrictions. As I understand it now, the Government has not invoked any restrictions, so that point is clear.

If Hon. Members would allow me to look at the order that has been made—I looked through my documents and I do not have it with me—I will rule on it later.

Mr. Nielsen: That is eminently reasonable, Madam Speaker. I do not want to be misunderstood on the question of doubt. I was not suggesting that if any doubt resided in the mind of the Chair it should be resolved in favour of the question. What I was suggesting to the Chair has been common practice in the past and it has been followed by at least two of your predecessors, and that is that where a doubt exists—and they are on record as saying this several times—it is resolved by allowing the motion suggested by the Member to be put to the House. I suggest that is the proper course here if there is any doubt.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if I understand correctly, you are giving me time to argue my case further and to invoke restrictions if necessary. I think I understand you are not closing the door on any arguments I may bring forward, but as I said earlier, the request is so complex and the pile of documents tabled is so substantial that I would like to know whether anything was really left out and whether we had any reason to leave it out. Meanwhile, I would remind the House that as far as the time factor is concerned, since you mentioned the time involved when you were discussing the Hon. Member's question of privilege, the Hon. Member himself is well aware of the problem. On this side of the House we like to table documents in both official languages, and because of the number of documents involved, it took some time to have them translated, which explains the delay. So I hope the Hon. Member is not going to complain that we took the time that was necessary to observe the Official Languages Act.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

Madam Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member on his question of privilege. Perhaps we should end the debate there and I will look at the different submissions and rule later.

HON. J. REID—ENTRANCE TO HOUSE IMPEDED

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice of my question of privilege yesterday. It is based on the fact that since my return to Ottawa after the summer I have been stopped three times from entering the House of Commons. I must admit I have not been absolutely prevented from entering the House of Commons, but I have found my entrance into the House of Commons impeded. I understand as well that Your Honour has had discussions with the Members of the Management and Members' Services Committee and I understand that the Whips have gone to all the parties to seek some general consensus in terms of imposing upon ourselves new restrictions in respect of the security of Members of the House of Commons. In general I have no problem with that and in general I am sympathetic to the position Your Honour found yourself in when you were informed of the dangers that apparently were involved.

My question of privilege is on the basis that while a general consensus has emerged and while there has been some specific discussion with the Management and Members' Services Committee, the stories going around are that there are to be far more restrictions placed upon the ability of Members of the House and their staffs to move around the building.

I understand the dilemma that Your Honour has since the House Leader has not seen fit to set up the Committee on Procedure and Organization which has traditionally looked into this kind of matter. I was a member of that committee in 1971 when we looked into the Chartier case. For Members who do not remember, that individual wired himself up as a bomb and blew himself up in one of the washrooms near the Prime Minister's office. The second time, of course, was in 1975 when the Procedure and Organization Committee looked into the question of security again.

I do not want to proceed with a formal motion on my question of privilege for two reasons. First of all, the people affected would be the constables who were trying to follow the directions of their superiors. I think it would be unfortunate, when they were simply trying to obey instructions from their superiors, if they were to go through the kind of process we would have to put them through.

If we are going to impose restrictions upon ourselves as Members of Parliament, I think the Speaker should have the advice and assistance of a standing committee of some sort. As Hon. Members know, and as I am sure you will understand, Madam Speaker, what is going to happen is going to be fairly controversial.

I make an appeal to the House Leader and to the Leaders of the other parties to make some arrangement to provide this kind of help and assistance to the Speaker. I know that not many of us wear the pins and the identification that we have been given. In my own case I wear no wedding ring and no other kind of jewellery. I have no identification that proves I am a Member of Parliament. I have never required any identification to prove that I was a Member of Parliament until this September. If we are going through this process, then I think there ought to be a wide-ranging set of discussions within the House of Commons.

As I say, Madam Speaker, I understand the difficulty you are in. I am fully in sympathy with the decisions you felt you had to take and I am prepared to support them. I would make an appeal to the House itself and to Members to take much more interest in what is going on.

Madam Speaker: I was just going to interrupt the Hon. Member. Of course, I cannot be asked to rule on a hypothetical situation where the Hon. Member is saying that in the future some more stringent security measures might be imposed upon Members. I can assure him that there has been no discussion at the present time of any more stringent measures being imposed upon Members. I can assure him that there has been no discussion at the present time of any more stringent measures being imposed upon Members except the ones that have been agreed to by the different caucuses. The Hon. Member is raising a question of privilege based on some rumour that has circulated around the Hill. He has been here long enough to know that there are a lot of rumours circulated around the Hill and that it is not always a good idea to give credence to those rumours.

Security measures have now been put in place. There is one more that will be put in place later which has been agreed upon by all caucuses after intensive consultation with the Whips, the Whips having brought the problem to the caucuses which have discussed it. This is, of course, an administrative matter that I could probably have decided upon myself but I would not have wanted to deprive myself of the wisdom of all Members in the House in this very delicate matter.

Members should understand that I get informed of certain incidents which, in the time that I have been here, have given me and others cause to worry. We have had to come to the conclusion that certain of these measures were necessary. They are as repugnant to me as they are to many Hon. Members, but I ask the House to co-operate in the implementation of these measures.

I would like the Hon. Member to wear his pin if he could, but it is not necessary for Members of Parliament who do not like to wear jewellery. The guards have been trained to recognize all Members. If the Hon. Member has been stopped at the door, I am sorry for that, but it must be one of the exceptions. That it should happen to him three times in a row is very unlucky for the Hon. Member, but I think we all realize that Parliament must be open to everyone. That remains a very, very important principle, but some kind of security measure had to be put in place in order to protect us from people who, for some reason, want to do harm to us. I do not understand why, but some do.

I appreciate the Hon. Member raising this question, but it could have been raised more properly with me privately since it is a matter of the administration of the House of Commons.

PETITIONS

MR. TAYLOR—REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR CERTAIN CRIMES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of some 116 Canadians who are residing in the Province of British Columbia, largely in the riding of Comox-Powell River. Ballots were printed by Proctor Publications Ltd. in The Press newspaper of Sechelt, British Columbia. The petition requests that capital punishment be reinstated for premeditated crimes of first degree murder and for the murder of children. A growing percentage of the population of adults in Canada want capital punishment reinstated, and this petition is representative of the thinking of more than 80 per cent of Canadians.

The Government has a responsibility to reflect the thinking of its people in its legislation. The petitioners pray that the Government will bring a Bill to the House of Commons reinstating the death sentence for anyone found guilty, beyond the shadow of a doubt, of deliberately taking the life of another human being, particularly anyone murdering a child.

MR. SKELLY—LABOUR DISPUTE AT NORDAIR

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would also like to submit a petition on behalf of a large number of Canadian citizens interested in participating with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Government in this new age of co-operation.

The clerical and technical employees of Nordair have been on strike since June 24, 1982. This company is 86 per cent owned by Air Canada, and Nordair refuses to bargain. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) refuses to answer a request from Nordair employees to appoint a mediator to attempt to resolve this nasty and prolonged dispute. The petition asks the Government to practise what it preaches and begin some co-operation by appointing a mediator.

Madam Speaker: I caution Hon. Members that these two petitions have been presented in an argumentative way. I think Members are going beyond the rule and making a habit of presenting petitions in this manner. The titles of petitions should be presented to the House, and that is it. That is the way in which petitions should be presented to the House.

Statements by Ministers. I understand that by unanimous consent we will continue for a period of 20 minutes with questioning which follows the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I was not consulted on this new type of procedure in terms of questioning the Minister on a statement. I agreed with the unanimous consent yesterday to move forward on that basis or with that type of procedure, but I do not agree today to extend it.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, when the Government House Leader made his submission with respect to the results of the meetings between House Leaders at the opening of the House, he disclosed the fact that there was unanimous consent. Madam Speaker will recall that I rose afterwards and I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) did likewise. I submit that it was at that point that unanimous consent was sought and achieved, and it is too late now for the Hon. Member to rise in an attempt to refuse unanimous consent.

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I am amazed at how the House Leader of the Official Opposition can distort the facts. You asked for unanimous consent to extend this unusual procedure just a few minutes ago. There was no attempt to ask for it before then.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, there is an interesting point which should be considered in this matter. I agree with the House Leader of the Official Opposition that we in fact commented upon the request of the Government House Leader some time ago with regard to extending the period into today. There was no evidence at that point that anyone objected to it. I would point out, however, that all that is being done is that the length of time in total to be afforded to questions to and responses of the Minister will not exceed the length of time taken by the Minister yesterday. I suggest that with that in mind, and also with the previous consultation which took place, perhaps unanimous consent is not required.

Mr. Nielsen: And with the previous consent of yesterday.

Madam Speaker: I remind the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) that earlier in the proceedings of the House the matter of continuing the questioning of the Minister on his statement of yesterday was raised. Both Party Leaders agreed that that was the conclusion which all Parties had reached. No one at that time posed any objection, and I assumed that the consent of the House had been given to proceed to the period of questioning.

Furthermore, Standing Order 15(3) indicates that the Speaker has some leeway in determining the period of time for these question. It reads:

> Mr. Speaker shall limit the time for such proceedings as he deems fit.

If I read the sentiments of the House, it seems to me that a period of 20 minutes for questions is quite appropriate.

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I wish to put a serious complaint before the House with respect to my privileges on the basis that it was not—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have ruled on the matter. The Hon. Member has had a chance to express his views, but regardless of his views, which I appreciated, I have ruled that we will have a period of 20 minutes to question the Minister.

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I would inform the House and the Chair that it is my intention to raise a point of privilege at the earliest opportunity in connection with your ruling just now, because you did not seek unanimous consent earlier.

Madam Speaker: Order. If the Hon. Member feels he has a question of privilege, he may raise it. He does not need to give notice to the House but only to the Speaker in writing. If he consults the rules he will remember that any question of privilege may be raised after a written statement has been given to the Speaker. However, I warn the Hon. Member that a ruling has been made and that he may not discuss it.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 27, consideration of the statement of Mr. Lalonde.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) proposed a $500 million program to provide jobs for some 60,000 individuals over the next 18 months. Meanwhile, his Government's own projections show that there could be as many as 790,000 individuals who will run out of unemployment benefits during the next nine months. Many of these people will have to go on welfare, which is causing an enormous amount of concern in the country. Where does the Minister expect municipalities such as Toronto, Kingston or Sudbury suddenly to find their share of the money which they will have to pay to support these people through the winter, people who are without jobs not because of anything the municipalities have done but because of the economic policies of the Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) answered this question in good part earlier this afternoon when he revealed from his scientific study released this summer that between 35 per cent and 40 per cent of those who exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits find jobs. Then there is another group of people who either have savings or have managed to rearrange their affairs, and only 10 per cent of the total actually end up on social assistance programs.

The program we have put forward will significantly contribute toward dealing with the particular difficulty raised by the Hon. Member. I would also like to point out to the Hon. Member that in addition to the $500 million, there is an amount of $1.4 billion in direct job-creation programs and other programs that we have announced over the course of this year which are either in effect at the present time or will come into effect in the next few months. Literally there will be hundreds of thousands more jobs created, a lot more than the 60,000 jobs to which the Hon. Member was referring. For instance, there is a particular program for November, December, January and February, which will encompass expenditures of $300 million to help those who are unfortunately no longer receiving insurance benefits. I think the Hon. Member has to bear in mind the totality of the programs that are in operation at the present time, not only the ones that I announced yesterday.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I regret that the Minister's answer only underlines the fact that he has not taken into consideration the tremendous problem arising for a great number of people who will have to go on welfare this winter. They have no other way out.

How are municipalities expected to prepare for this massive assault on their very limited resources? The Minister may very well know that the municipalities cannot even get reliable estimates outlining how many people are going to go off UIC benefits and on to welfare for weeks ahead, let alone for the whole of the coming winter.

Could the Minister at least undertake to make this information available to individual municipalities throughout the country? If the Minister of Finance does not have the information, will he order the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to get that information and provide it to the municipalities?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, again the Hon. Member has referred to 790,000 people. Assuming the same percentage, 10 per cent, would apply or 79,000 people, for the program I have announced and the programs that we already have in operation will be more than able to cope with the particular problem which the Hon. Member has raised.

Second, I would remind the Hon. Member that there are some Provinces where the provincial government is paying the full 50 per cent of the social assistance.

Miss MacDonald: No, not in Ontario, Manitoba or Nova Scotia.

Mr. Lalonde: I know this is not the case in Ontario. It has been the decision of the Ontario Government to divide the responsibilities for social assistance that way. We are still paying 50 per cent of whatever social assistance is required.

Finally, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, as I have indicated, is in Toronto this afternoon proceeding with those consultations to which she has referred. When the program and the details of it are finalized after the Minister's consultations, we will certainly make sure that the municipalities are aware of the program so they can make the necessary arrangements to accommodate themselves within the guidelines to be issued.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, could I ask the Minister to give us a clear idea right now when the municipalities can get that information? I cannot underscore enough how necessary it is to have this advance information as quickly as possible in order to prepare for the difficulties that are going to face so many people in the months ahead. That is all I am asking for. The municipalities need that information now.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member is referring to the program I announced yesterday.

Miss MacDonald: No, Madam Speaker, what I am asking for is for the Minister to supply the municipalities with an estimate of the number of people who will be coming off UIC benefits and going on to welfare week by week and month by month for, say, the next six months so they will know what revenues they will have to raise for their share of the payments.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I will certainly raise the matter with the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is administering the UIC program.

Miss MacDonald: The municipalities have nothing.

Mr. Lalonde: I suggest the Hon. Member could raise this matter directly with the Minister, but I will pass her suggestion on to the Minister. As a matter of fact, I know of municipalities that have arranged to get that information already.

Miss MacDonald: They cannot. The Minister will not give it to them.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. lady says that they have not. I am telling her that to my knowledge there are municipalities who have similar arrangements. Nevertheless, I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) yesterday he said:

> Our productivity performance continues to lag. New production techniques must be developed and implemented. This requires development of our technological base, increased investment—

The Minister knows that in the November 12 budget the most antiproductive productivity measures were measures that cut back on capital cost allowance and affected soft costs, particularly soft costs in connection with money expended to extend productive plants, factories, office buildings, and so on, by existing businesses. Why did the Minister in his budget not make some changes in the capital cost allowance structure to take into account particularly that soft cost issue that affects the extension of existing industrial plants? Why did the Minister not also at the same time take into account, by some change in the capital cost structure, capital cost allowance arrangements with respect to the purchase of production machinery and that type of thing that would increase productivity?

On the basis of representations made very eloquently by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, this would not have completely upset the Minister's capital cost structure or his soft problem, but it certainly would have gone a long way to increasing productivity, and also adding some credibility to the Minister's statement. Could the Minister explain his attitude?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, in my statement yesterday I left out a number of issues that are still to be considered in terms of the amendments to the Income Tax Act arising out of the previous budget. I have not gone through all the details of that particular amendment. The issue of soft costs is one that I am addressing. When the bill is introduced I hope that the clauses in the Bill will be to the satisfaction of the Hon. Member. I thank him for drawing my attention to it.

Mr. McDermid: Why don't you scrap it and start again?

Mr. Wilson: More changes.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as capital cost allowance is concerned, I answered a question in the House yesterday posed by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, the method of dealing with capital cost allowance was a brutal one, whereby capital cost allowance in the first year was treated at 50 per cent of the regular rate. There have been some amendments to the capital cost allowance already. I believe it is contained in Schedule 29. Why could the Minister not also change some of the features with respect to that across-the-board sweeping measure to make sure that there is really something in his speech yesterday with respect to productivity? I thank the Minister for the soft cost matter. But on this question, it should not be too difficult to come up with something that would make it possible for people to buy new productive machinery, new technological equipment, so that we can compete as a nation with the Japanese and others in the automobile industry particularly and perhaps in the electronics industry. Sure there must be a method by which the Minister can create another schedule of capital cost allowances, change the system slightly and ameliorate the effect of the rather blunt method that the former Minister had in his November 12 budget.

• (1600)

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, in my statement in the House yesterday, and in answer to a question, I indicated that I had studied this question of capital cost allowance. I found that the measures put forward by my predecessor were fair and adequate and that I did not intend to make any changes to them. The Hon. Member is making representations in that regard. If he wishes to put them in writing and send them to me I will promise to examine his point of view again. However, I must tell him at the present time that my conclusion is to the effect that we should not make changes to the capital cost allowance rules that have been put into effect.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I carefully listened to the statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) yesterday and his concern about fairness and equity. Soon the limit on earnings of contributors to unemployment insurance will be at the $20,200 level. Those earning incomes beyond $20,200 will not contribute to the fund. In the essence of pursuing a fair system which could be called progressive as opposed to regressive, would the Minister give some consideration to raising funds to assist building the base of that very important fund these days by making the system more progressive, asking those people who earn incomes $40,000, $60,000, $100,000 and $200,000 per year to pay a little larger share to the UIC fund?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member is making a suggestion that concerns budgetary matters and also fundamental reform of the UI program. As he knows, there have been discussions about revisions to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I will pass the representations of the Hon. Member on to the Minister of Employment and Immigration for consideration in the review that he may want to make of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

As far as the other aspect is concerned, I will consider it as a representation for the forthcoming budget and I will bear the Hon. Member's representations in mind.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): My question to the Minister is with regard to the $400 million that has been allotted to the railway system in western Canada. Will the minister ensure, if this program comes about, that the railways will not be laying off workers to the extent that they have? They have given notifications in Calgary, Winnipeg and Montreal of 3,500 lay-offs in their shops.

I would like to have the assurance from the Minister because these railways have received many benefits from the six and five program, saving literally billions of dollars. If we are now going to put $400 million into a railway fund, will we have the assurance that there will not be any future lay-offs and that they will upgrade their equipment, bring about those things which are needed and available at this time to get our people back to work? Will they ensure that their equipment is ready when the economy does pick up?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, our intention is to try to speed up the railways' operation, rehabilitation and modernization in the west. If we can succeed in getting the railways to spend the $11 billion that is talked about in terms of capital investment for railway improvement over the next nine years in the west, that will obviously have a significant impact on jobs.

However, I am sure that the Hon. Member recognizes that I cannot give him a guarantee that there will not be lay-offs of certain types of employees while other types of employees are being hired. This is a matter for the railways to decide.

I would also like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that while he says that the railways have benefited significantly from the six and five program, he must also realize that the railways are incurring very large deficits at the present time, like many private companies, because of the recession. They are not laying off people because they like to do it, but because there is no work for them.

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I know that time is running short and other Members want to ask questions of the Minister, so I will try to be as brief as possible. The Minister concluded his financial statement yesterday with some reference to the agricultural community. I believe he was speaking sincerely and with some compassion, but what was disappointing was that there was actually nothing in the budget for the agricultural community, a sector which is extremely important. It is the largest single employer and it is going through one of the worst financial situations since confederation. We talked about the six and five program. I am sure that my farming friends in the House would be happy if all segments of the agricultural community could even achieve that six and five goal. In fact, farm income will be down by some 17 per cent this year.

Referring to his statement, the Minister indicates that he is accepting the recommendation of his blue chip committee and the fact that the agribond concept will not be implemented. That will be very sad news to the agricultural community. I would like him to comment about that.

Second, he indicated that the Small Business Bond provision would be extended, which is fine. However, the real problem with the Small Business Bond is the same problem which existed with the Farm Improvement Loans Act, that is, that the banks will not participate. What does he plan to do with respect to that?

The other problem which the agricultural committee was looking at was for some easement or relaxation in the capital gains legislation. I say to the Minister through you, Madam Speaker, that it was his Government who promised to update evaluation day values from 1970 to 1974 during the last election. The Government has four opportunities to do so and has not taken advantage of any of those occasions.

I have other questions but I will yield the floor to the Minister so he may respond.

Mr. Lalonde: I would first like to tell the Hon. Member that I indicated in my statement yesterday that I intended to present a budget in early 1983. I did not intend to cover the whole taxation sector in my statement. I did not perceive my statement as a budget.

Second, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the $400 million which we have allocated for railway improvement and the settlement of the Crow issue in the west is in addition to the $3.2 billion that my predecessor, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) have already announced. We hope that these measures will significantly benefit the western farmers.

I have also indicated that the Government is giving the west coast entrepreneurs and longshoremen until Monday to settle their strike and lock-outs. Otherwise, the Government would take the necessary steps to ensure at least grain movement very soon.

Finally, there is a Bill before the House that will be considered in the next few days, I hope, which concerns helping the farmers in terms of credit, in terms of the advantages given to farmers. These are matters addressed to the farming community particularly. I think all around what I am doing and what I will try to do as Minister of Finance is not so much to attempt to sprinkle small benefits here and there like dew all over the ground, but to try to get the economy moving for everyone and lower interest rates for everyone. Interest rates are now around 14 and one-quarter per cent on mortgages and 13 and three-quarters per cent on the prime rate. If we can get them down further for everyone in the next few weeks and months, the farmers will benefit significantly from that as well. I am trying to act on a global basis as well as trying to face the special situations which we must face.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): I would like to pursue what the Minister talked about concerning the $400 million for western rail expansion. Would the Minister be more specific and indicate whether that is a one-time fund to be added to the $3.2 billion that he just referred to? Is that to be thrown into the so-called pot as part of the Gilson recommendations? Is it to be used for one-time capital expenditure by the railways for some specific project? Would he comment on whether or not any of that money will be used to offset some of the concerns that the Ontario and Quebec farmers have over what may happen to their economic advantage if, in fact, the Gilson Report is implemented?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have not divided the specific allocation of funds between direct allocation for railway improvement and settlement of the Crow issue. I have allocated $400 million to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to deal with this particular issue.

Mr. Mayer: Over what period of time?

Mr. Lalonde: It will greatly depend on how quickly the Minister of Transport can get a resolution of the Crow issue. However, spending the money could begin right away. The particular allocation will depend on negotiation with the railways and the Crow negotiations. We would like the railways to immediately start in the west with some of the operating and improvement provisions and the Minister of Transport will meet very shortly with the railways with regard to that matter.

As far as the Crow negotiations are concerned, the Hon. Member knows the point at which they are as well as I. The money will be available without delay, but I cannot guarantee at what time the payments will occur because it will depend on two sets of negotiations.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, when a Minister stands to speak about the distribution or redistribution of revenues, he gets dangerously close to making a budget speech. Therefore, if the Minister does not wish to call it "a budget", I will settle for "a budgetary statement".

On page 4 of his budgetary statement, I am glad to see that he did mention the abundance of Canada's resources and their present waning state. He mentioned the need for our forests to be replenished and our fisheries to be husbanded. I was very carefully listening for that second shoe to drop, if you like. Within that statement, have I somewhere missed a provision that our forests be replenished and our fisheries be husbanded?

I will ask the Minister a second question as well. On page 12 he spoke of the reduction of some $245 million in official development assistance which will not prevent us from achieving our aid goal, "our aid commitment level of 0.5 per cent GNP by 1985-86". The Minister went on to mention the adjustments of the programs. Could the Minister tell us where that $245 million will come from in the ODA, the official development assistance, and what programs will have to be adjusted in order to provide for that $245 million saving?

Mr. Lalonde: My colleague has raised several points in his intervention. I will try to deal with them individually and, as I recall, the last one had to do with CIDA.

First of all, with respect to the forest industry, I should like to remind the Hon. Member that my colleague, the Minister of Environment (Mr. Roberts) announced in early September an agreement with the provinces and the industry under which expenditures in that field would increase from $300 million to $650 million between now and 1985. If my memory serves me well, my colleague has increased the federal share by up to an additional $170 million for the forest industry, precisely to make sure that forest resources will be fully protected in the future and that the necessary measures will be taken to ensure, among other things, reforestation and a better administration of our forest resources. So I did not refer to any specific measures since my colleague had already dealt with that issue barely two months ago. I would refer the Hon. Member to the statement by the Minister of Environment.

With regard to fisheries, I am pleased to inform my colleague that cabinet is now examining the whole question. As he knows, we have received a report concerning the west coast, the Pearse report, as well as another one concerning the east coast, the Kirby report, which is now under close scrutiny by cabinet. I hope to have something to announce in that respect in the near future. Concerning the CIDA cutbacks, I am not in a position to be more explicit as to where those cutbacks will be implemented because, as the Hon. Member knows, they stem from a lower inflation rate and a decline in the growth of the gross national product. Our targeted contribution to CIDA programs based on our GNP have remained unchanged. Our objectives are the same, but lower inflation and a declining gross national product have made it possible for us to reduce our over-all contribution. As a result of this, in certain cases CIDA will have to reconsider some of its financial commitments with respect to foreign countries, either over a somewhat longer period of years or by decreasing certain contributions in some cases. CIDA is now actively engaged in that reconsideration and the details are not available to me. However, I am advised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) that he would see to it that the information is available as soon as he gets it.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have a notice under Standing Order 26 from the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight).

WEST COAST WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I seek leave to move that adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26, seconded by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), to debate a specific and important matter requiring immediate consideration, namely the work stoppage at the Port of Vancouver and at other major ports on the west coast. This is the first opportunity that we have had since Parliament resumed to present this motion, arising because of a national emergency.

Since October 19, this work stoppage has had and continues to have a serious and negative impact on the economy of Canada. Yesterday and again today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that the Government wished to wait until Monday before taking action on this national emergency. The cost is $8 million a day to the grain producers alone in western Canada. This situation has now gone on for nine days. If on Monday the grain is not moving and the workers are not at work on the west coast, under our rules and procedures it will take another four to five days to act, at an additional cost of some $75 million to $80 million to the people of Canada.

Over 3,000 lay-offs have occurred to date in the railway, grain handling and other industrial sectors. Commodities such as coal, lumber, potash and sulphur are sitting idle on western Canada sidings. Lay-offs are occurring daily in these and other industries. Canada's $6.4 billion grain export trade and our reputation as a reliable supplier is at stake. This matter is particularly urgent in light of the concern of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) over Canada's declining productivity and our failure to compete in foreign markets.

If you find this application acceptable for debate, Madam Speaker, I would so move the appropriate motion.

Madam Speaker: The problem is obviously an important one. The impact on the country, as the Hon. Member just stated, is very considerable. However, the Hon. Member knows, of course, that in allowing a debate under Standing Order 26 the Speaker has to consider whether the matter might be brought into the House within a reasonable time.

I will tell the Hon. Member that this afternoon after Routine Proceedings a Bill will be called under which the Hon. Member may discuss this matter if he so wishes. Another Bill has been announced in the House relating to Canagrex which also would allow the Hon. Member to debate this question. Further, we all know that negotiations have been reopened. These negotiations could lead to a settlement. At any rate, I believe the Hon. Member does have opportunity to discuss this question under different proceedings. For that reason, I feel I cannot allow an emergency debate.

CBC— MISS SUSAN REISLER

Question No. 1—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Miss Susan Reisler an employee of CBC and, if so, does she assist Mr. Mark Starowicz in producing the programme "Sunday Morning"?

2. Has she visited Cuba on one or more occasions to assist in the cutting of sugar cane and has she ever expressed admiration for Fidel Castro publicly?

3. Did she cover for the CBC the "Non-Alligned" Conference in Havana and, if so, who made the decision to send her including the names and job designations of any persons involved?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Ms. Susan Reisler is a CBC employee and assigned as Washington correspondent for CBC Radio News.

2. The CBC does not monitor or interfere with employees' opinions or off-duty activities if they do not conflict with the Corporation's established policies.

3. Ms. Reisler covered the conference of non-aligned nations in Cuba for the CBC. The details of her assignment are among those areas of internal management and administration which Parliament has not, as a matter of custom, required the CBC to provide. The background of this custom was explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

CBC—MR. LIONEL MARTIN

Question No. 561—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) What is the complete employment history with the CBC of Mr. Lionel Martin and is he presently stationed in Cuba (b) what were his qualifications that led to him being considered suitable for employment with the CBC?

2. Did Mr. Martin, on Sunday, April 13, 1980, take part in the program "Sunday Morning" on CBC radio and, if so, did he present views corresponding with those of Premier Fidel CASTro of Cuba and, if so, in such a case, what steps does the government intend to take?

3. Is it government policy to allow the management of the news to be governed by the political views of those working in CBC radio or television?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Lionel Martin is not a CBC employee. He is a freelance journalist living in Cuba who reports for CBC from time to time.

2. He did take part in "Sunday Morning" on April 13, 1980, in a segment about Cuban refugees. He reported conditions at the Peruvian Embassy and the Cuban government's actions and statements in relation to the refugees.

3. The CBC was established as a Crown corporation for the purpose of producing and broadcasting, independently of political or commercial influence, programs for a national broadcasting service. Successive Governments have not sought to direct the CBC in the discharge of its responsibilities under the Broadcasting Act.

Question No. 775—Mr. Cossitt:

Was Mr. Lionel Martin, when broadcasting from Havana, representing the CBC, and did he praise the CASTro regime for digging a latrine across the road for fugitives in the Peruvian Embassy grounds and not shooting these people when they dared to use such a latrine and, if so, does the CBC and the Government consider this balanced news broadcasting?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: As a freelance broadcaster, Lionel Martin is not a representative of the CBC. In a report broadcast on April 8, Mr. Martin described the conditions inside the Peruvian Embassy grounds and then stated that the Cubans had "built a row of outhouse-type toilets outside the fence of the embassy" and refugees "could go to the toilet and return without being molested". Mr. Martin was reporting facts and there was no praise spoken or implied of the Cuban action.

Question No. 776—Mr. Cossitt:

Is Mr. Lionel Martin an American who served as an advisor to Prime Minister CASTro and was he a correspondent for a Communist newspaper either before or after he was used by the CBC and, specifically, what are the names and job designations of all CBC personnel authorizing the use of his broadcasts?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Freelance reporters are chosen for use by the CBC on the basis of their previous work as reporters. The Corporation, in using Mr. Martin's services as a freelancer, does not have knowledge of his full career history.

The names of CBC staff members involved in individual program projects are among those details of internal management and administration which Parliament has not, as a matter of custom, required the CBC to provide. The background to this custom was explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

Question No. 777—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. Lionel Martin broadcasting for the CBC from Havana when he made the statement, that the thousands who jammed the Peruvian Embassy grounds in Havana are criminals, thieves, prostitutes and particularly "delinquents or anti-social elements" and, if so, how did he investigate the background of these 10,000 people in a matter of a few hours in order to reach such conclusions?

2. Is it CBC policy to require its reporting staff to authenticate news statements before they are made and, if so, in what way does this apply to Mr. Martin?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Examination of tapes of the contributions by Lionel Martin has failed to disclose the characterizations of refugees in the Peruvian Embassy with the exception of describing some of them as "delinquent". In a report broadcast on April 20, Mr. Martin describes the refugees as "the disaffected, the alienated, the ideological dissidents and even a good number of delinquents". In the light of subsequent general knowledge, these would seem to have been accurate journalistic assessments.

2. Yes. CBC expects those reporting for its news service to authenticate their statements, and this policy applied to Mr. Martin.

Question No. 1,057—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has Mr. Lionel Martin been broadcasting for the CBC from Havana, Cuba, recently and, if so, is the CBC or the government aware that Mr. Martin was employed on or about 1961 by the Ministry of Education in the Cuban Government of Fidel CASTro?

2. To the knowledge of the government or the CBC, was Mr. Martin for some time the Cuban correspondent for the American newspaper The Guardian and has this paper been clearly labelled by many as a Communist publication?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1 and 2. As of the date of the question, the CBC had not used a broadcast by Lionel Martin since April, 1980. The Corporation is aware of Mr. Martin's professional experience as a freelance broadcaster but has no knowledge of his employment in other capacities.

CANADA COUNCIL ART BANK

in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville and, if so, for what reason?

2. Did an official of the Canada Council inform the Hon. Member's office on June 12, 1980, that the exact cost was $99,900?

3. Does the Canada Council define "somewhat less" as the sum of $100?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: 1. Yes. 2. Yes. 3. Yes.

GOODS TRADED IN METRIC OR IMPERIAL UNITS

Question No. 2,444—Mr. Flis:

What is the number of countries that have their companies manufacture products for export in (a) "metric" (b) "imperial"?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Restrictions as to whether goods traded are in metric or imperial units are imposed by the importing not the exporting country. Currently, there are 154 United Nations countries of which 152 are metric or are converting to metric usage.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada.

DSS—LOCATION OF FEDERAL SERVICE BUREAUX

Question No. 2,542—Mr. Cossitt:

1. At what locations are the federal service bureaux set up by the Department of Supply and Services and, in each case, on what date was the bureau opened?

2. Is a bureau planned for the Province of Ontario and, if not, for what reason?

3. Did the Minister of Supply and Services make a statement on May 25, 1981 to the effect that the only step being taken in Ontario was the establishment of a partial facility in Toronto rather than a full facility at a future date?

4. Is the Province of Ontario, with the largest population of any of the provinces, being treated in a lesser fashion than other areas of the country and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): On the date this question was asked, a significant answer was not available. This information has now been compiled as of December 15, 1981.

Sydney	July 6, 1981

2. Yes, see 1 above.

3. The Service Bureau project is to some extent experimental in that through it the government is going to measure the need for this type of service as well as the best methods of providing it. To meet this objective the Task Force on Service to the Public has 14 offices in major cities across Canada, plus mobile services covering an additional 75 communities. The Service Bureaux are therefore both providing a service to Canadian citizens on a broad scale and providing the knowledge needed to evaluate success in meeting this particular demand. In Ontario, there is a Service Bureau at 50 Bloor St., West in the shopping concourse and a mobile service covering northeast Ontario from a base in North Bay. The results of the first year of Service Bureau operation will be available by the middle of 1983 at which time a decision will be made on the future of the operation.

4. See part 3 above.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Figures for "active and available" strength can only be provided through detailed analysis of each unit's personnel status on a given day, in this case February 1, 1981. The department does not have the resources to carry out such an analysis. Furthermore, the aggregation of the detailed information requested would reveal classified operational capabilities the release of which could be injurious to national security.

However, the functional strength of the major formations as of March 31, 1982 is as noted below.

BANK OF CANADA—ART COLLECTION

Question No. 2,624—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the Bank of Canada own and is it adding to an art collection and, if so, what is (a) the total cost of all items in the collection to date (b) a list of all items, including the name of the artist and the amount paid in each case?

2. (a) Is Mrs. Simon Reisman in any way connected with the acquisition of the paintings and, if so (i) in what capacity (ii) what is her salary or commission, including the details of any contract she may have (b) what are the names and details of employment of other persons connected with the acquisitions?

3. For what reasons does the Bank of Canada require an art collection?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): In so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, I have been advised by the Bank of Canada as follows.

1. The Bank of Canada does not now have, nor is it planning to acquire, what it thinks can appropriately be called an art collection. It owns some paintings, some acquired recently and some in earlier years, which it uses to decorate the lobbies, meeting rooms and offices in its buildings. Since its establishment the Bank has purchased some 141 portraits, paintings and prints by Canadian artists at a cost of $170,000. Most of the paintings in use in the Bank are rented from the Canada Council Art Bank.

2. Mrs. C. Carin Reisman is employed by the Bank on contract as a consultant to advise Bank officers on interior furniture and furnishings in the Bank's buildings and in the course of doing so has provided some assistance with paintings. She is paid for her work for the Bank on the basis of an hourly fee.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMP FOR ROYAL WEDDING

Question No. 2,644—Mr. Beatty:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, will independent member countries of the Commonwealth, other than the United Kingdom, Australia, the Bahamas, Barbados, Fiji, The Gambia, Lesotho, Mauritius, New Zealand, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Vanuatu and the Solomons, be issuing stamps to commemorate the Royal Wedding?

2. Did the Government issue a commemorative stamp on the occasion of the marriage of then Princess Elizabeth and, if so (a) what was the denomination (b) what number were printed?

3. Is the Government issuing a commemorative stamp for the marriage of the present heir to the Throne and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation has informed me as follows:

1. At the time the question was asked, the Government was not aware which independent Commonwealth countries, other than the ones mentioned, would be issuing stamps to commemorate the Royal Wedding.

2. (a) and (b) Canada Post commemorated the marriage of Princess Elizabeth with a 4 cent stamp issued on February 16, 1948. The number of stamps printed was 50,010,000.

3. No. This is because the "Policy Guidelines for the Selection of Subjects for Canadian Postage Stamps" effective

March 1981, state that "postage should not be issued to honour living persons other than the sovereign."

REQUESTS FROM THIRD PARTIES FOR DATA FROM STATISTICS CANADA

Question No. 2,719—Mr. Beatty:

Since March 1, 1980, did (a) Statistics Canada (b) the Department of National Revenue receive requests from third parties (i) within (ii) outside the Government for personally identifiable information about individuals which was collected from those individuals under the threat of penalties for failure to disclose the information to the Government and, in each case, what was the response of Statistics Canada or the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Revenue and Statistics Canada as follows:

(a) Since March 1, 1980, Statistics Canada has received requests from third parties both from within and outside the Government for personally identifiable information.

The disclosure of identifiable information about individuals collected under the Statistics Act is forbidden by the Act except when such disclosure is explicitly consented to by the individual in question. For example, individuals request that their census records be disclosed to pension authorities for proof-of-age purposes. Some 13,000 requests of this nature are serviced by Statistics Canada each year.

(b) Since March 1, 1980, the Department of National Revenue has received requests from third parties, within and outside the Government, for personally identifiable information about individuals as extracted from income tax returns. While no record is kept of all requests received, the Department accedes when the requester has a legal entitlement to such information under subsection 241 (4) of the Income Tax Act. See also question 2,681, answered October 21, 1981.

ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS TO OFF RESERVE STUDENTS

Question No. 3,735—Mr. Althouse:

1. Did the Department of Indian Affairs order a cutback of student allowance payments on January 1, 1982 to off-reserve Indian students and, if so, prior to that date, by province, what amount was expended on the program?

2. By province, how many Indian students are attending school off reserve as opposed to on reserve?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Under the 1971 revision of the Department's Educational Assistance policy Indian students attending provincial or private high schools are provided with educational allowances to cover miscellaneous and personal supplies and to enable students to take part in community affairs and social activities. The rates are $10 monthly for students aged between 14 and 17 inclusive in grades 9 and over and $20 monthly for students aged 18 and over. The student allowance was being paid to registered Indian students in grade nine and above, irrespective of place of residence.

Following legal advice that the Department's authority under the Indian Act did not extend to providing educational services to elementary and secondary students normally resident off reserve, regions of the Department took steps to phase out programs of educational assistance to off-reserve students. Since 1980-81 was a transitional year, disparities between regions were at a maximum as the allowance had been phased out in some regions but continued in others. The Saskatchewan region discontinued the payment of allowances to off-reserve elementary and secondary students on January 1, 1982.

The record of payments to off-reserve elementary and secondary students combines student allowances and expenditures for books and school supplies. The breakdown by Province for 1980-81 is as follows:

Atlantic	$ 11,000
Quebec	nil
Ontario	nil
Manitoba	13,000
Saskatchewan	225,400
Alberta	51,000
British Columbia	34,000
Yukon	3,100
Total	$ 337,500

2. The number of Indian students for whose education this Department is responsible and in respect of whom the Department and Indian education authorities entered into tuition agreements with provincial and private school boards in 1980-81 is as follows:

Atlantic	1,760
Ontario	6,425
Manitoba	5,864
Saskatchewan	8,088
Alberta	7,680
British Columbia	10,895
Total	48,344

The number of Indian elementary and secondary students who attended federal and band-operated on-reserve schools in 1980-81 is as follows:

Atlantic	1,701
Quebec	3,196
Ontario	7,189
Manitoba	9,059
Saskatchewan	6,461
Alberta	4,095
British Columbia	2,751
Total	34,457

The 48,344 students in respect of whom the Department entered into tuition agreements were all resident on reserves as were the 34,457 attending federal and band-operated on-reserve schools. All of the 48,344 reserve residents attending provincial schools and meeting the grade nine, 14 years of age and above criteria continue to be eligible for student allowances.

The number of students who were off-reserve residents in 1980-81 and who received student allowances and/or books and school supplies was approximately 6,189 distributed as follows:

Atlantic	200
Quebec	nil
Ontario	nil
Manitoba	811
Saskatchewan	3,005
Alberta	849
British Columbia	1,286
Total	6,189

PURCHASE OF SAVIN CORPORATION BY CDC

Question No. 4,150—Mr. Corbett:

1. How many jobs are expected to be created in Canada as a result of the purchase of the Savin Corporation by the Canada Development Corporation?

2. How many Canadian scientists will be hired by the Savin Corporation?

3. Does the CDC intend to open any Savin branch plants in Canada and, if so (a) on what date (b) how many (c) at what locations?

4. Does the CDC intend to open a Savin Corporation research and development facility in Canada and, if so (a) on what date (b) at what location?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1 to 4. The Canada Development Corporation (CDC) is a private business corporation. More than 50 per cent of its equity is held by private investors. The federal government is an investor in the shares of the company under the CDC Act. It is currently holding approximately 46.5 per cent of the equity shares.

The federal Government cannot participate in any way in the day to day business activities of the CDC. It has never sought to influence the business decisions of the CDC which are the responsibility of the Board of Directors and its managers. As CDC is not in any way an agency of Her Majesty, information in reference to CDC must be sought from that company.

ONTARIO LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

Question No. 4,151—Mr. Beatty:

1. During the recent Ontario Liberal leadership convention, did CBLT employ anyone on a temporary basis and, if so, what were their names and duties?

2. Who is Lurch Pringle and what is his profession?

3. Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation receive any complaints about any of its temporary or full-time staff working at the convention and, if so, what was the nature of the complaints and what did the CBC do to investigate them?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. CBLT employed 15 people on a temporary basis as pollsters, technical personnel, a director and cable watchers. Additionally, there were six on-air guest commentators.

With regard to the names of other personnel, it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the names of personnel involved in individual program projects. The background to this custom is explained in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975.

2. Howard Pringle is a freelance security man widely experienced in such work in the Toronto entertainment industry.

3. CBC received no complaints. It was informed that a complaint was made to the Ontario Liberal Party on behalf of television station CFTO-TV regarding CBC's engagement of four cable watchers. CBC was not informed of the wording of the complaint but understands that officials of the party investigated and concluded that it was not a valid complaint. It should be noted that the hiring of cable watchers is normal practice in the television industry whenever crowded convention floor situations arise.

LOCKHEED L1011 TRISTAR AIRCRAFT

Question No. 4,187—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Is the Minister and the Department of Transport aware of any problems encountered with the Lockheed L1011 Tristar aircraft?

2. Shortly after the takeoff of an Air Canada Tristar from Miami on March 14, 1982, did one engine overheat because of a lack of oil and partially disintegrate, forcing the aircraft to return to Miami?

3. Were other complaints of this nature made to the Department and, if so, how many?

4. Were investigations undertaken by the Department with regard to this problem and, if so, what were they?

5. Is the Department taking precautions to prevent future dangerous incidents of this sort and, if so, what are they?

6. Were directives issued by the Department, Air Canada or any other public authority on this matter and, if so, what were they?

7. Were consultations made with the FAA and other American agencies and departments with reference to this problem and, if so, what were they?

8. Was related correspondence received by the Department and, if so (a) what was it (b) would the Minister table all such correspondence as well as any reports or studies the Department initiated or received with regard to the safety of the Lockheed L1011 Tristar?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Department of Transport is not aware of any problems with the Lockheed L1011 that compromise safety.

2. No. The aircraft in question suffered a mechanical failure in one of its wing mounted engines. Following the failure, prompted by increased vibration and rising gas temperatures within the engine, the crew followed mandatory procedures and shut down the engine concerned. The engine was at no time in imminent danger of disintegration. Following the engine shut down, the crew landed the aircraft using standard emergency procedures.

3. No complaints of Rolls Royce RB 211 engine failures have been received by the Department.

4. The Department received a telephone report from Air Canada and Rolls Royce which indicated that reports will be submitted when the metallurgical studies of the broken components are completed.

5. No special precautions are being taken by the Department because of the mechanical failure which occurred on March 14, 1982. See parts 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7 and 8 of this answer.

6. No. See part 5 above.

7. Rolls Royce indicated there was no indication of design or manufacturing discrepancy and until metallurgical studies are completed no action is recommended.

8. No correspondence has been received and the failure does not warrant at this time the initiation of a Transport Canada independent investigation. This is standard procedure for engine failures.

EDC—LOANS TO EMPLOYEES

GUN CONTROL

Question No. 4,302—Mr. Greenaway:

1. Since January 1, 1979, by year, what amount did Government Departments and agencies spend on the enforcement of gun control regulations?

2. For the same period, by year, what amount did the Government collect through the sale of firearms acquisition certificates?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. Since the enforcement of gun control regulations is a provincial responsibility under the purview of the provincial Attorneys General, no reply can be provided to part 1.

2. Moneys collected by the Government through the sale of firearms acquisition certificates since January 1, 1979 are as follows: 1979-80—$2,262,827; 1980-81—$1,526,025; 1981-82—$1,081,941.

FAMILY PLANNING SERVICES

Question No. 4,304—Mr. Herbert:

By province, what amount was contributed in each of the past five years for the development of family planning services and what amount was paid directly to the treasuries of the various provincial governments?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The following amounts have been contributed in each of the past five years, to the provincial and territorial governments which requested them, for the development of family planning services:

	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82
	$	$	$	$	$
Newfoundland	—	—	—	—	9,000
Prince Edward Island	—	37,700	37,000	18,000	40,300
Nova Scotia	—	30,630	—	40,000	—
New Brunswick	—	—	—	13,000	24,383
Quebec	357,429	380,000	81,566	90,000	91,498
Ontario	—	—	—	—	—
Manitoba	—	—	—	—	—
Saskatchewan	—	—	—	40,000	54,867
Alberta	—	—	—	—	—
British Columbia	—	—	25,000	30,000	38,344
Northwest Territories	—	—	—	50,000	56,043
Yukon	—	—	—	31,537	55,007
	357,429	448,330	143,566	312,537	369,442

These grants have served to fund various demonstration projects, training projects, as well as the development of family planning services in Quebec's local centres for community services.

Funds for the development of family planning services were not paid directly to the treasuries of provincial or territorial governments, but to the relevant departments administering the funds. As well, some of the funds provided to the provinces through the Established Programs Financing Act and the Canada Assistance Plan may have been directed towards the development of family planning services, however, no specific amounts can be determined from these fiscal arrangements.

ARMED FORCES ANNUITANTS AND DND PROMOTION POLICY

Question No. 4,324—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of (a) Armed Forces annuitants (b) widows of Armed Forces annuitants (c) widows in receipt of an annuity due to the death of a spouse?

2. What is the total number of Armed Forces annuitants who died in each of the past 10 years, including the fiscal year 1980-81?

3. Did the Department of National Defence issue a directive number 4983-1B?

4. Did the Department issue an Order respecting Promotion Policy—Officers—Regular Force, OAFC 11-6 and, if so, does the Order carry out the provisions set in directive 4983-1B?

5. With respect to paragraph 10 of the Policy, how many officers were in the "protected" category for 1981 and how many are projected to be in the "protected" category for 1982?

6. Of the total number of "protected" officers in 1981, how many were promoted when a new promotion quota was authorized for each particular rank and officer classification?

7. What are the Department's projected figures for promoting "protected" officers in 1982?

8. If a "protected" officer is not promoted, what is his/her employment status?

9. By priority, what are the elements of the merit system used by the Department in its hiring and promotion procedure?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) The total number of Armed Forces annuitants as of March 31, 1982—60,462. (b) and (c) Total number of widows of Armed Forces annuitants in receipt of an annuity as at March 31, 1982—8,095.

Note: Records are not available of widows of Armed Forces annuitants not in receipt of an annuity.

2. The information regarding the number of Armed Forces annuitants who died in each of the past ten years is not readily available and would require a great deal of manual checking of records for which the Department does not have the necessary resources. However, broader data pertaining to discontinued annuities per fiscal year which includes deceased, re-enrolled and transfers to public service superannuation and RCMP is listed below:

Fiscal Year	No. of Discontinued Annuities
1972-73	437
1973-74	549
1974-75	478
1975-76	566
1976-77	555
1977-78	592
1978-79	791

3. The Department of National Defence twice yearly issues a document file No. 4983-18 entitled "In-service Five Year Training Plan". The document identifies quantitive requirements for individual training over a five-year period.

4. Yes. Canadian Forces Administrative Order (CFAO) 11-6 is concerned with promotion policy of regular force officers. However, there is no relationship between CFAO 11-6 and document 4983-18. The CFAO deals with officers promotion policy whereas the document is concerned with other ranks initial trades training as well as with Anglophone/Francophone proportions in certain trades training plans.

5. For 1981 there were 14 officers in the protected category. For 1982 there are 15 officers in the protected category.

6. All 14 "protected" officers were promoted during 1981.

7. Thirteen of the 15 "protected" officers have had their promotions authorized although the effective date for some promotions has not yet arrived. The other two "protected" officers will be promoted in 1983.

8. All "protected" officers have been or will be promoted. There are two possible circumstances when a "protected" officer would not be promoted: (a) a deterioration of performance or conduct by the officer where his supervisor no longer recommends promotion. (b) a deterioration of health where the officer is no longer fit for promotion.

The career status of officers in these situations would be subject to review.

9. The main elements of the merit system used by the Canadian Forces in selecting members for promotion are performance and potential. Each member of a merit board scores candidates out of a total of ten points: eight for performance and two for potential. Performance is evaluated by examination of past performance as described in annual Personnel Evaluation Reports. Potential is evaluated from a consideration of the member's professional attributes, depth and breadth of experience, qualifications including education, bilingual ability, special courses, etc., and any other factor considered to be important by the merit board. The rating for potential is not structured; no one aspect of potential is assigned a particular portion of the score.

The merit system used in recruiting consists of five elements, the most important being military potential. This is a numerical rating assigned to the applicant as a result of an interview by an experienced military career counsellor. The rating is based upon what the candidate does, has experienced, or has done, together with an estimate of both the candidate's ability to cope with military life in general and the likelihood of success in recruit training. The second element used is the candidate's score on the general entrance test. The third is the aptitude of the candidate, as determined by a series of tests, for the particular vacancy. The fourth element taken into consideration is the length of time the candidate has spent waiting for a vacancy. The final factor is the candidate's trade preference, i.e. whether the candidate indicated that the vacancy that exists was his or her first, second or third preference of trade.

ELECTRIC VEHICLES

Question No. 4,326—Mr. Gurbin:

1. Did departments give financial support to the Electric Vehicle Association (EVA) of Canada and, if so, what amount?

2. Which departments have corporate memberships in the Association?

3. Is research and development funding being allotted for the electric vehicle industry for independent research into electric vehicles, batteries and their components and, if so, which departments are doing so and what were the exact amounts for the past fiscal year?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Transport and the National Research Council as follows:

1. No financial support was given to the Association. In the early days the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce supported the Association by preparing and distributing its newsletter until it could finalize its own arrangements.

2. Industry, Trade and Commerce; the Road Safety Branch of the Surface Administration of DOT; the Medical Services Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

3. Yes. In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned, the Department has authorized through its Enterprise Development Programs a contribution of 190,000 to R and D projects.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

In so far as the National Research Council is concerned:

In the fiscal year 1981-82 there was no R and D funding allotted for the electrical vehicle industry from the Hydrogen and Energy Storage Program of NRC. Electric vehicle related research is a new responsibility to this Program as of 1982.

Hydrogen and Energy Storage Program activities for 1981-82 which are of potential interest to the electric vehicle industry are those concerned with advanced battery research as follows:

Contract	Contractor	Funding
High temperature lithium cell development phase V	Institute of Research Hydro Québec	$ 120,000

AVERAGE LIVE FED CATTLE MARKET PRICE

Question No. 4,328—Mr. Hargrave:

1. What was the average live fed cattle (steers and heifers) market price for 1981 as required by the Agricultural Stabilization Act?

2. What was the previous average five-year fed cattle market price immediately prior to 1981?

3. What was the previous average five year fed cattle market price prior to 1981 adjusted for the cost of production factor?

Does the Government have agreements governing the entry of migrant workers to Canada and, if so (a) with which countries (b) are copies of the agreements available for public scrutiny (c) under the agreements, what responsibilities does Canada undertake for the protection of the workers' occupational health and safety?

Order Paper Questions

(b) The Canadian Government has no objection to releasing the documents, however, in accordance with normal diplomatic practice the consent of the other signatory governments would have to be obtained.

(c) Canada, through the employment agreement between the employer, the worker and the foreign government representative, as provided for in the Memoranda of Understanding, requires the employer, among other conditions:

(i) to provide such adequate living accommodations to the worker, without cost to the worker, as meet the approval of the appropriate government authority responsible for health and living conditions in the province where the worker is employed and, in the absence of such authority, the approval of the foreign government's representative; and,

Terms of Reference: To advise the Minister of National Health and Welfare in relation to the storage and utilization of human sperm, having considered: (1) the extent of storage and utilization, actual and projected, of human sperm in Canada; (2) methods of collection, preservation and reconstitution of human sperm; (3) methods of assessment of donors and recipients, the counselling of prospective parents and the effects on the child and the family; (4) the need for the control of the importation of human sperm from other countries; (5) the biological, legal, medical, philosophical, religious and social implications of the use of stored human sperm; (6) the scientific evidence concerning the effect of storage on the genetic integrity of human sperm, the course of the resulting pregnancies, and the health of the resulting offspring.

Rationale for establishment of Committee: At the Annual Conference of Provincial Ministers of Health in the autumn of 1974, concern was expressed about the potential hazards of commercial exploitation of the technique of preserving human sperm by freezing. Accordingly, the following recommendation was forwarded to the Minister of National Health and Welfare for comments by the Chairman of the group:

"Ministers of Health to request the Federal Government to prohibit the storage of human sperm on a commercial basis until further evaluation has taken place. Research and control studies to be carried out".

The Minister responded by suggesting that in view of the wide range of issues raised by the storage and use of stored sperm, consideration would be given to establishing a committee to give advice as to possible courses of action.

TELEGLOBE CANADA'S QUARTER CENTURY CLUB

Question No. 4,371—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Is Teleglobe Canada's Quarter Century Club sponsored with moneys from public funds by Teleglobe Canada?

2. Is a weekend party to be held on Saturday, October 23 and Sunday, October 24 at l'Estérel and are members of the Club invited to bring an escort and, if so (a) is Teleglobe in any way paying any of the cost towards the party from public funds (b) was the President of Teleglobe Canada, Mr. Jean-Claude Delorme, given the necessary funds by Teleglobe Canada through the Department of Communications to pay for a lavish dinner, entertainment and one night's lodging for those invited together with their accommodation?

3. What is the anticipated cost of this party and what are the names and addresses of all persons who had a letter delivered to them inviting them to this party?

4. Does Mr. Delorme guarantee that those who come early can enjoy the indoor pool, whirlpool and sauna?

5. (a) What is the anticipated cost of liquor at the cocktail party at 6.30 p.m. (b) what is the cost of the dinner and the dance and what orchestra is playing at the dance?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by Teleglobe Canada as follows:

1. The Teleglobe Quarter Century Club is composed entirely of persons having 25 years of service or more with Teleglobe or its predecessor companies and independently organizes and funds its own activities. Each year for the past 15 years or so, Teleglobe has supported the cost of a dinner for these employees and their spouses.

2. For its forthcoming annual dinner, the Quarter Century Club has sought an expression of interest from its members as to whether they wished to hold their dinner this year at l'Estérel, instead of Montreal.

(a) If and when Teleglobe management is approached for support towards this annual event for 1982, it intends to provide the club with support similar to that which it has given it in the past, namely the cost of the dinner (including cocktails); (b) No.

3. The anticipated cost of the dinner has not as yet been communicated to the Corporation by the club and as the Corporation takes no part in the invitations or arrangements for the dinner, it is not in a position to answer this question.

4. See 1 above.

5. (a) See 3 above. (b) See 3 above.

SALE OF ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Question No. 4,373—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many Argus aircraft has the Government sold thus far and, in each case, to whom was the aircraft sold and at what price?

2. How many such aircraft remain to be sold?

3. Did the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation ever receive a letter from the Commonwealth Air Training Plan Museum Inc. of Brandon, Manitoba requesting that the Museum be notified of all retired aircraft which the department had for sale?

4. Did the Corporation ever notify the Museum of any aircraft which they had for sale?

5. Was the Museum ever notified about the sale of the Argus aircraft and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No Argus aircraft were sold in their whole state. Twenty-three aircraft were classified as scrap metal, declared surplus by DND and sold to Bristol Metals, Toronto for $71,936 on December 3, 1981. For other information, please refer to question No. 3,893 answered April 1, 1982.

2. None.

3. CADC has no record of ever receiving a letter addressed directly to them from the Commonwealth Air Training Plan Museum, however carbon copies of correspondence between the Museum and the office of the Minister, Employment and Immigration was received by CADC on April 21, 1982. The Museum had already been placed on the aircraft mailing list on May 7, 1981. This mailing list is used by CADC to solicit bids from interested parties when aircraft, in their whole state, are declared surplus by the Crown.

4. It is presumed that the Museum was notified of any aircraft sold in their whole state after May 7, 1981.

5. The Museum was not notified about the sale of the Argus. The Argus was sold as scrap metal and not in their whole state because of DND policy prohibiting the sale of combatant type aircraft, including the Argus, to private individuals or organizations.

FORESTRY EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

1. Did the Department of the Environment consult existing forest sector employers to see how they could best provide more jobs before announcing the Forestry Employment Program?

2. Did the Department consult the wood processors to see whether there is a market for additional wood?

3. Did the Department do an analysis on the market to see how additional wood will affect the present prices paid to producers by processors?

4. How does the Department estimate this Program will affect existing forest sector employers?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes, the Department of the Environment did consult with several industry groups prior to announcing the Federal Employment Stimulation Program Forestry Component.

2. No, the Department did not consult the wood processors because the Program expressly avoids creating additional wood except as a limited by-product of stand improvement work.

3. No; since additional wood would be minimal and in no case would the volume of wood produced through stand improvement work be sufficient to affect market prices, no analysis was necessary.

4. The program will benefit existing forest sector employers by keeping laid-off woodworkers in the local community so that they will be available when economic conditions return to normal. In addition, the work done on the forests will help to ensure a long-term supply of wood, securing a future for these employers.

3. Did officers of the Department responsible for the erection of the billboards in the Province of Ontario state that no unilingual English-language billboards were erected in the Province of Quebec and, if so, how does the Department justify the preferential treatment accorded to French-speaking Canadians in the Province of Ontario, while denying similar treatment to English-speaking Canadians in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. (a) Yes, unilingual French billboards were erected in Metropolitan Toronto starting March 17 and ending May 4. (Due to the fact that billboard postings do not all take place on the same day, some were erected later than March 17 and some were removed earlier than May 4, but all were displayed for the standard 28-day period.) (b) A total of 18 unilingual French boards were posted in Ontario.

2. Neither unilingual-English nor unilingual-French nor bilingual boards were posted in Quebec due to insufficient billboard space availability at the intended time of posting.

Question No. 4,398—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What are the Department of National Defence's projected capital requirements for 1982 to 1997 broken down into (a) major equipment (b) other equipment (c) recurring replacement (d) construction (e) research and development?

4. What is the projected real growth in the Department's annual capital budget for the fiscal years 1983-84 to 1985-86?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. Projected capital requirements are subject to Cabinet decisions on the over-all defence envelope. Figures shown below are totals for the 15-year period expressed in 1982-83 dollars.

Fiscal Year	Forecast Capital Budget (millions of dollars)
1985-86	2,500

The envelope levels announced in the November 12, 1981 federal budget should provide for 15 per cent growth in 1983-84. At this point there is no provision for real growth from 1983-84 to 1985-86. Real growth may be achieved through internal budget adjustments during each fiscal year but specific amounts could not be forecast at this time.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR TEXTBOOK, "UNDERSTANDING CANADA"

Question No. 4,424—Mr. Gurbin:

Did the Government, through the Academic Relations Division of the Department of External Affairs, give financial support (a) to the Association for Canadian Studies in the United States (b) for the production of a textbook entitled "Understanding Canada" and, if so, in each case, what was the amount?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Academic Relations Division has given financial support to the Association for Canadian Studies in the United States within the conduct of its mandate to develop an informed, well disposed and sustained interest in Canada as a whole among members of foreign leadership groups in support of foreign policy objectives. No grant was given to the Association as such for the production of the textbook entitled "Understanding Canada". Over the last twelve years the Department has granted $100,000 (U.S.A.) and $100,000 (Canadian) to the Association to enable it to promote teaching and research about Canada in a widening circle of institutions of higher learning in the United States.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 4,427—Mr. Malone:

1. Did the Government receive a request from Mr. Leo J. Vos of Strome, Alberta for a record of his earnings and future entitlement to a Canada Pension Plan retirement pension and, if so, was this confidential information mailed to Mr. Richard C. Perrott of Granville Ferry, Nova Scotia?

2. Did the Government receive a request from Mr. Richard C. Perrott of Granville Ferry, Nova Scotia for a record of his earnings and future entitlement to a Canada Pension Plan retirement pension and, if so, was this confidential information mailed to Mr. Leo J. Vos of Strome, Alberta?

3. Are precautions taken to ensure that the confidential record of earnings and retirement benefit information of one Canadian citizen is not mistakenly disclosed to another Canadian and, if so, what are such precautions?

4. Were any such precautions followed in the cases of Messrs. Vos and Perrott and, if not, for what reason?

5. On how many occasions have errors occurred and how frequently do errors occur with respect to such confidential information, such that one or more Canadians are being informed of another citizen's record of earnings and retirement benefit status?

6. Is any recourse available to a citizen who has had confidential information shared with others by intention or in error and, if so, what is such recourse?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Canada Pension Plan Administration received a request from Mr. Leo J. Vos of Strome, Alberta for a record of his earnings and information concerning future entitlement to a Canada Pension Plan retirement pension. A reply was prepared May 28, 1982 and apparently mailed in error to Mr. Richard C. Perrott of Granville Ferry, Nova Scotia.

2. The Canada Pension Plan Administration received a request from Mr. Richard C. Perrott of Granville Ferry, Nova Scotia for a record of his earnings and information concerning future entitlement to a Canada Pension Plan retirement pension. This reply was also prepared May 28, 1982 and apparently mailed in error to Mr. Leo J. Vos of Strome, Alberta.

3. Precautions are taken to ensure that the confidential record of earnings and retirement benefit information of one Canadian citizen is not mistakenly disclosed to another Canadian. In cases where a record of earnings only is requested it is automatically sent in a window type envelope which ensures that it is mailed to the intended recipients. Where additional information is required the request must be processed manually. All of the staff involved in this process are aware of the confidentiality of the information and the need for extra care in handling such information.

4. In the cases of Messrs. Vos and Perrott the precautions were followed in processing the information however, in the enveloping of the information the material for Mr. Vos was placed in the typed envelope addressed to Mr. Perrott and the information to Mr. Perrott was placed in the typed envelope addressed to Mr. Vos. Our procedures stipulate that a check is to be made to ensure the correct letter is enveloped but in this case an error was made.

5. The Canada Pension Plan Administration is aware of only two other incidents in mailing information to contributors and as a matter of record some one million records have been mailed since the beginning of 1982 alone. In addition, the procedure of sending all requests for information in window type envelopes has recently been adopted. This will provide a further measure of safety against errors in mailing information to contributors.

6. Section 107 of the Canada Pension Plan Act provides that any employee who "knowingly" contravenes the confidentiality of information on the record of earnings of a contributor is guilty of an offense punishable on summary conviction. There is of course no such recourse for human error.

Is there a Canadian Environmental Advisory Council and, if so (a) what are its terms of reference (b) who are the members of the Council (c) what, if any, funding is provided by the Government (d) what matters did the Council consider in the fiscal year 1981-82 (e) what was the total cost to the Government of the Council in the fiscal year 1981-82?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Yes, there is a Canadian Environmental Advisory Council.

(a) Its terms of reference are:

1. To offer advice to the Minister on environmental problems referred to it by him.

2. To review the Programs and Projects of the Department of the Environment in the field of environmental protection and to criticize them to the Minister where he feels this is necessary; and

3. After consultation with the Minister, to conduct investigations and/or public hearings and to release factual reports of its findings on environmental matters of great public concern, in order to inform the public of the issues at stake.

(b) The membership of Council is as follows:

Chairman	Mr. T. Beck
Vice-Chairman	Dr. R. Bergeron
Members
Ms. S. Holtz	Ms. N. MacPherson
Mr. M. Hummel	Mr. H. D. McRorie
Mr. T. G. Jeanes	Dr. P. F. M. McLoughlin
Professor A. R. Lucas	Dr. P. Meincke

(c) The Government provides an annual budget to cover operating costs of the Council.

(e) $240,000.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES

Question No. 4,466—Mr. Wilson

1. Was Econalysis Consulting Services of Toronto given a contract for $47,500 by the Department of Communications in May 1982 "to conduct a study analysing refinements and possible alternatives to the capital cost allowances" and, if so (a) for what reason (b) was the proposal for the study initiated by the Department or by the company?

2. Does the Department have responsibility for changes in capital cost allowances or is this matter under the jurisdiction of the Department of Finance?

3. Could the study have been undertaken by the Tax Policy Branch of the Department of Finance and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, for what reason was it necessary to engage outside advice?

4. Does the Department of Communications intend to make the study public?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. Econalysis Consulting Services was given a contract for $47,500 (later amended to $62,325) by the Department of Communications.

(a) The study was commissioned in order to describe the current impediments to the operation of a successful Canadian film industry and to develop and analyse a package or proposals to deal with these problems. The film industry is in the midst of a very difficult period since traditional sources of financing have dried up and the level of production of films has decreased. A study was necessary in order to evaluate alternative policy strategies, so that aid to the industry can be directed most efficiently.

(b) The proposal for the study was initiated by the Department.

2. The Minister of Communications is responsible for the development of initiatives to stimulate Canada's cultural industries. However, changes to the Capital Cost Allowance must be approved by the Minister of Finance and the Policy Committee of Cabinet. The Minister of Finance has paramount responsibility for the management of the tax system and for short-term stabilization policy. However, as part of the Minister of Communications' over-all cultural responsibilities, he can put forward tax and tariff changes (including remission of tax under the Financial Administration Act).

3. The study could not have been undertaken by the Tax Policy Branch of the Department of Finance because the scope of the study goes beyond tax policy, dealing with other possible incentives to the production of films and videotape in Canada.

4. The Department will be making the study public.

*ACT STUDIES ON CHANGES IN CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Question No. 4,102—Mr. Nystrom:

Did the Government undertake studies on the impact of the contemplated changes to the Crowsnest Pass rates on trade, on the balance of payments and on the value of the Canadian dollar and, if so (a) what were the studies and on what date were they completed (b) are there studies or proposed studies now under way (c) does the government intend to make the studies public?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to question 4,102 is as follows:

A consultant's study, recently completed for the Department of Agriculture, included an assessment of Canada's agricultural trade balance as part of its analysis of the impact of a change in the Crowsnest Pass freight rates.

(a) This study, "An Economic Analysis of the Crow Rates", by Dr. D. R. Harvey was completed on January 18, 1982. It shows that revising the Crow could improve Canada's agricultural trade balance by as much as $220 million in 1990, measured in 1981 dollars.

(b) No further studies are proposed or underway at this time. Export grain prices are established on the basis of world markets, and are not affected by changes in the cost of transportation within Canada. Canada's ability to export grain, however, is dependent on an adequate transportation system. It is this issue that the government's proposals to change the Crow rates are meant to address.

(c) Dr. Harvey's study is now available to the public.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-128, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

• (1630)

He said: Madam Speaker, the Financial Administration Act stipulates that statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to increase its outstanding debt. Consequently, in order for the Government to borrow money to meet its financial requirements, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament. Bill C-128 currently before the House seeks additional borrowing authority of $4 billion for the current 1982-83 fiscal year.

As Hon. Members will recall, so far this fiscal year the Government has obtained parliamentary approval for a total of $17.1 billion of borrowing authority. This amount is equal to the financial requirements forecast for 1982-83 in the budget presented by the Government in June. It is made up of $3.5 billion of unused borrowing authority carried forward from earlier years, $6.6 billion of authority for 1982-83 provided by Bill C-111, and $7 billion supplementary authority provided by Bill C-125.

Hon. Members will recall that the original Bill seeking supplementary borrowing authority for 1982-83 included a non-lapsing contingency reserve of $4 billion over and above the $7 billion needed to meet the financial requirements of the Government. However, during its passage through the House earlier this year the Bill was amended, the contingency reserve was dropped, and in lieu of the reserve the House moved that the Standing Orders be amended so that, if at any time prior to March 31, 1983 the Government introduced a Bill requesting new borrowing authority of not more than $4 billion, debate on all stages of that Bill in the House would be limited to a period not exceeding three days. Bill C-128 to obtain this amount is the one before the House today.

I mentioned earlier that the $17.1 billion of borrowing authority already granted was equivalent to the financial requirements for 1982-83 projected in the June budget. As Members of the House are aware, the financial requirements for 1982-83 have increased to $22.2 billion. These developments were explained to the House yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The Minister pointed out that the major share of the increase in the financial requirements was due to the increase in the budgetary deficit resulting from the weakness of the economy which had become more severe since the earlier forecasts were presented in the June budget.

As a result of this unanticipated weakness, revenue estimates have fallen almost $3 billion since June while outlays have increased by slightly more than $1 billion. Most of the remainder of the increase in financial requirements is due to the increase in the deficit in the unemployment insurance fund.

In view of the $5 billion increase in the financial requirements for 1982-83 since last June, the Government is required to enter into a larger debt program. This is the reason we are seeking additional borrowing authority at this time. However, the additional $4 billion sought in the present Bill will provide the Government with total borrowing authority for this fiscal year of $21.1 billion, less than the $22.2 billion which I referred to. Furthermore, foreign borrowing, excluding the use of the standby lines of credit, has, on balance, used some $0.9 billion of the borrowing authority provided for this fiscal year.

In his statement to the House the Minister of Finance made it clear that, from the estimates he had presented, further borrowing authority would be required before the end of the fiscal year. The Minister stated that he intended to present a budget to the House early in 1983 and at that time would review the fiscal situation and seek additional borrowing authority as required.

I would like to draw the attention of Hon. Members to the fact that projections of financial requirements are made exclusive of future foreign exchange transactions. Recently the dollar has been firm; the Canadian dollar cash balances have been used to accumulate foreign exchange reserves. Foreign exchange markets can be extremely volatile and can have a major impact on the Government's operations. If the Canadian dollar were to continue firm, foreign exchange operations would result in further acquisitions of foreign exchange and cash balances would be depleted. This would necessitate a larger debt program to replenish the cash balances and would speed up the use of available borrowing authority. On the other hand, if the Canadian dollar is weak, exchange operations would run down official holdings. This would create the possible need to draw on standby credit. This too would accelerate the use of borrowing authority.

As a matter of interest to Hon. Members, I would like to set out the Government's debt program so far in the current fiscal year and the amount of borrowing authority that has been used to date. Before doing so I would like to reiterate and remind Hon. Members of the view the Minister expressed Wednesday, that he did not anticipate any problem for the Government in carrying out its debt program or that it would create difficulties for other borrowers. In fact, private borrowing has been very weak through the first half of the year while savings rates have been at very high levels by traditional standards. As a consequence, there is clearly no shortage of funds to satisfy the borrowing requirements of both the private sector and the various levels of Government. Indeed, given the current circumstances, it is appropriate that the Government provide the support to economic activity through its deficit, and the Minister in his speech dealt with that at length.

Up to November 1 the Government will have used a total of around $8 billion in borrowing authority, leaving $9.1 billion of the original $17.1 billion unused. The use of the borrowing authority is made up of $0.9 billion as a result of foreign borrowing and $7.1 billion as a result of the domestic debt program. The foreign borrowing represents U.S. $750 million borrowed in the Eurobond market last June and a partial redemption of a Deutschemark maturity earlier in the year. The domestic debt program comprises approximately $5.2 billion raised through the issue of treasury bills, $3 billion through the issue of marketable bonds, while Canada Savings Bond redemptions have reduced the amount borrowed by an approximate $1 billion.

The 1982-83 Canada Savings Bonds campaign is now underway and we expect that this will use up a major proportion of the remaining unused borrowing authority. However, even though we expect that the amount of unused borrowing authority now available will cover expected net sales of Canada Savings Bonds, it is nonetheless exceptionally difficult to fine-tune Canada Savings Bonds sales results. There are about 13,000 branches of financial institutions across the country acting as CSB sales and issuing agents and it is not possible to determine the exact aggregate amount of bonds they have sold at any point during the two-week campaign period. Up-to-date sales results have to be projected using sampling techniques which contain an element of error. In view of this uncertainty, Mr. Speaker, Section 3 of the Bill states that the new borrowing powers will be enforced on November 1, 1982. This provision has been used in the past to ensure that all Canada Savings Bonds sales are covered by unused borrowing authority.

Putting the request, Mr. Speaker, in the context of the present economic situation and the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance, the economic situation that our country is facing has been outlined recently by the Prime Minister in his remarks on national television. He outlined how Canadians are facing this problem together, as witnessed by the support for the six and five program contained in the budget in June. This program, as we know, is designed to achieve recovery and reintroduce strength into the economy.

The choices that the Federal Government faces are clear. We could, as the Prime Minister said, wring out inflation by brute force, cut billions from Government spending. We believe, of course, that such a course would be disastrous. We reject it immediately. We do not believe that it would improve the economy and certainly, Mr. Speaker, such a course of action, as has been indicated, would deprive Canadians of the help that they need desperately at this time.

We will not let down the unemployed, the aged nor the young people who are desperately looking for their first job. These people need unemployment insurance benefits, old age security pensions as well as training programs.

The industry needs grants for research and development as well as financial incentives. Farmers need loans at reduced interest rates. The building contractor will be tremendously helped by grants provided to home buyers.

[English]

The Minister of Finance's announcement will bolster business confidence. The many changes the statement made concerning the tax aspects of the other Bills before the House will bolster that confidence. That will result in improved investor confidence and, of course, Mr. Speaker, all of that is directed towards the creation of jobs, a singularly high priority for the Government.

In summary and in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, approval of the borrowing authority in Bill No. C-128 is sought to support the needs of Canadians and to support Government programs at this time, all of which, as has been indicated, are directed toward the objective of economic recovery.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of numbers from the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), and I would like to give him two numbers. The first is that the average family income in this country is $29,900. The second is that in my home province of British Columbia the average family's share of the federal public debt, thanks to the Finance Minister's new budget, is $20,800. If you add in the provincial debt of around $9,900 per family, the fact is that the debt load faced by my constituents amounts to about $30,700 which exceeds the average annual family income in this country. That is the reality behind Bill No. C-128. That is the appalling and unpleasant truth which Canadians face today, and it is the shameful result of this Government's mismanagement of a rich and vibrant Canadian economy over the last decade. That is Bill C-128.

I would like to give the House some more numbers. In the economic statement last night the Government projected spending of $79.2 billion this year and a deficit of $23.6 billion. The gross national debt last March was $134 billion. Interest on the debt will cost Canadian taxpayers $16.7 billion this year.

These numbers are so large, Mr. Speaker, that they do not make a lot of sense to Canadians so we have broken them down in a more personal way. Government spending this year will be equal to $8,400 per taxpayer. This compares to only $1,700 per taxpayer in the year before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. On a per capita basis Government spending this year will amount to $3,200 per man, woman and child in Canada, compared to only $500 per capita in the year before the Prime Minister first took office. Government spending is now more than six times greater than it was when the Prime Minister first took office and 15 times greater than any spending in any of the war years. One result is that one tax dollar in three is used to service the debt, compared to one tax dollar in nine only nine years ago.

We are now in a position, Mr. Speaker, where the increase in federal spending between the return of the Liberals in 1980 and the end of the current fiscal year will be 65 per cent, which is nearly double the increase in the nominal GNP of 35 per cent. Our party, of course, is pledged to keeping expenditure growth equal to, or less than, growth in GNP.

We need to review the reasons for this in order to understand the significance of this bill. One reason that the deficit has grown so rapidly is that the Government's financial forecasts contained in the infamous November 12, 1981 budget were wildly inaccurate. In order to correct its errors the Government asked Parliament last June to grant it authority to borrow another $6.6 billion, and in July the Government came back to us for another $11 billion. This, of course, was in addition to the carry-over of $3.6 billion in borrowing authority from the previous year.

My colleagues in the Official Opposition realized that this had to stop, that we could not keep writing a blank cheque for the Government to spend as it saw fit. We therefore forced the Government to reduce its last request for borrowing authority to $7 billion. The Government requested the additional $4 billion as an emergency fund, a slush fund, but we forced it to agree to return to Parliament if it needed to spend this additional money. We call that accountability, making the Government recognize that it is accountable to Parliament and to the Canadian people for the money it spends. We do not think that accountability is an unreasonable request. We expect the Government to explain to taxpayers what is being done with their money. We are not suggesting that the Government stop spending on important social programs. We do seek to force the Government to explain why it needs the money.

When the $4 billion we are currently debating is added to other requests for borrowing authority, as the Minister has explained, the total amount which the Government is requesting in this fiscal year is $21.2 billion, and the Government's financial requirements as set out in the Minister's statement last night now exceed $22 billion. In that statement the Minister of Finance made it clear he will be forced to seek even further borrowing authority before the end of the fiscal year, and in fact he intends to do so in his spring budget.

It is important to examine the reasons for this huge increase in borrowing authority. In his "fire side chats" the Prime Minister led us to believe the huge deficit we are accumulating is all due to the recession, and both he and the Minister of Finance have pointed out with some justification that revenue has dropped and expenditures on some safety net social programs have soared since the economy was allowed to free-fall. This is a seductive argument but it ignores an important point. Parliament will recall that the deficit for this fiscal year alone of $10 billion was projected in the November 12 budget on the premise of a third quarter recovery. In fact, when I asked the former Minister of Finance to explain why he expected the recovery since there was clear evidence that we had not bottomed out, he was unable to answer. The Minister in his own mini-budget now admits he expects the deficit to exceed $23.5 billion.

This huge and indefensible error in forecasting meant that Government spending was well out of control even before the economy began its drastic slide. Our current deficit is not so much the product of spending public money in bad times to protect the public interest; it is a direct result of spending too much money in good times and thus undermining the public interest.

The Minister maintains that the deficit will be reduced when the economy recovers. He is optimistic about gradual recovery in 1983, he says, when he expects real growth of about 3 per cent next year. However, other independent observers do not paint such a rosy picture. The Conference Board of Canada cites consumer spending and business investment as major factors in determining the timing of the recovery, seeing some recovery of consumer spending but no reversal of the decline in the rate of business investment in Canada. I think we can understand that, considering the losses that business has incurred during this recession.

Regardless of the hoped for recovery and its timing, today Canadians live in a besieged economy. It is an economy hammered by two destructive budgets and a punitive National Energy Program, at a time when the key international markets have collapsed.

Many people in my home Province of B.C. are struggling simply to survive. I meet them on the streets and in my constituency office. There was the fisherman whose bank called his loan at the height of the salmon fishing season. There was the importer who told me in a state of near hysteria that the proposed retail sales tax changes would quite simply put him out of business. I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is reviewing that provision. There was the young businessman in a state of hysteria who slammed a government form down on my desk and said: "It will take me two weeks to fill out this form and I am already losing money." There was the man in desperate need of his income tax refund who was calmly told by the government clerk that because there was a change of address his refund would be another twelve weeks in arriving. There was the single woman who had been unemployed for more than a year and who was alarmingly suicidal. There was a former employee of mine, an extremely competent secretary, who told me that in the absence of work she was having to apply for welfare. In some communities people are bartering deer, which they hunt, for such staple foods as potatoes.

On a Province-wide basis the statistics define the body count. In B.C. total bankruptcies soared 90 per cent in the first seven months of 1982. That is triple the Canadian increase. In the forest industry, which accounts for 50 per cent of our provincial output, at mid-summer the IWA, our largest forestry union, estimated that 50 per cent of union members were off work and in the logging sector the number of workers laid off rose to nearly 65 per cent.

In our second biggest industry, mining, the Mining Association of B.C. estimates that 54 per cent of B.C. mine workers are laid off or unemployed. Some of the mine closures are permanent. About 3,500 mining jobs have been lost in the last year alone, some permanently; others are lost for a year or more. There are mining towns in B.C. which are in danger of becoming ghost towns. In Yukon, where the work force is laid off through the closure of Cyprus-Anvil Mining Corporation, people are staying in Faro because they have no place else to go. They will go through a cold winter with cold comfort from this Government. The construction industry, which has suffered through a strike, is reflecting the 49 per cent drop in building permits in the first six months of this year compared to the same period last year and the 80 per cent drop in housing starts since August, 1981.

This summer the B.C. unemployment rate was more than 13 per cent, which is more than double the unemployment rate of the previous year. To put that in terms of people, it means that there were 80,000 unemployed workers in August last year and that number rose to 180,000 unemployed people in August this year.

B.C. employers have projected a net hiring decrease of 25 per cent this fall. The rate at which people are applying for UIC has jumped by 80 per cent from September, 1981, to June, 1982, over the same period the year before. That is an 80 per cent increase for claims in unemployment insurance in the summer months, which are high employment months. In September this year 7,600 B.C. residents had exhausted their UIC benefits and will have to turn to welfare. That is almost double the rate for September, 1981.

The people of Canada do not need fireside chats by the Prime Minister to tell them to help each other or to work together. In Port Alberni, B.C., where, as I told the House this afternoon, 4,500 people were out of work at one point this summer—nearly one-quarter of the entire population—the unemployed have organized to form a volunteer organization which distributes food and clothing to the needy. Similarly, in the Cowichan Valley on Vancouver Island, out of work people have organized themselves into a group which gives counselling to those who are losing their jobs. Indeed, one of my constituents, a student who cannot find work, is employing his skills and earning money by designing and producing anti-Government buttons and stickers. He tells me there is a good demand for his product and that he anticipates an expanding market.

This economic climate is inflicting special injuries on two groups. The first group includes the people who may never return to their jobs. It is a fact that many companies are forecasting reduced payrolls and a reduced work force when the recovery does resume in the future. Some of these people have worked at their jobs for 20 years. They are finding the outlook for the rest of their working lives to be very grim. They are obsolete in their forties.

The second group which is being especially hard hit is young people. In terms of jobs, they are in danger of becoming the lost generation. Almost one-half of the 1.3 million unemployed in this country are between the ages of 15 and 24. These Canadians are the first to be fired usually, and the last to be rehired—if, in fact, they have ever worked at all. Many of them are seeking their first jobs. In B.C. unemployment among this age group has tripled over the last year to 22.1 per cent. The national average is still around 21 per cent.

In B.C. 25 per cent of young men are out of work and two-thirds of this age group will probably be laid off over the next year. As one frustrated young man said, describing his quest to find a job, "I have as much chance of finding a job as of becoming a Girl Guide."

In addition to cold statistics, there are thousands of other young people who have simply given up seeking a job. They are among the hidden unemployed. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has estimated that one out of every six Canadians gives up looking for work after a month of job search, after they have run out of unemployment benefits. Many young Canadians who have invested years of effort in seeking a professional education are finding that their hard won knowledge and hard won skills are not wanted.

In B.C. at my university, UBC, of the 60 foresters in the graduating class, only 26 found work and all but three of those jobs were in the public sector. Almost 40 per cent of UBC civil engineering graduates failed to find jobs since their most likely prospects were in the resource and construction fields, both of them in a severe recession.

Only one in three teachers graduated from Simon Fraser University have found jobs. These young Canadians are being denied the opportunity to explore and to achieve their potential and to provide for themselves and their families. They are the unwilling and unhappy victims of this Government's economic policies and they are the Canadians who are expected to pay off the enormous debt load which has been accumulating in the name of the public good.

What has been the Government's response to these difficulties? The Prime Minister has asked us to have faith in him, to trust him and to believe him. We are asked to accept the word of a man who implemented wage and price controls one year after promising not to and who campaigned in the last election on a promise of keeping oil prices low.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance rose in the House to present a budget masquerading as a financial statement. He also told us of his Government's new principles of economic management.

Mr. Speaker, do you want to end this debate at five o'clock, in which case I could resume at eight o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): We shall now see the clock as reading five o'clock and the Hon. Member can continue at 8.00 p.m. tonight.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Labour Conditions—West Coast work stoppage—Minister's position. (b) Request that Minister order resumption of work; the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—the Constitution—Government help for minorities involved in court actions; the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly)—Foreign Investment Review Agency—Request for investigation on sale of Crown Zellerbach Company.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers).

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the latest signed agreement between the government and the Province of New Brunswick under the Canada Assistance Plan.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I get directly into the subject matter of today's motion, I should like to make a couple of remarks concerning the use of Private Members' hour. I am a Member of the committee which is looking at the regulations of the House, and obviously the subject of the use of the time devoted to Members is one of our points of discussion. I hope we will be able to have a system in the future which will be a little more constructive, constructive in the sense that we know this afternoon we will be discussing an interesting subject and will talk through to six o'clock, at which time the debate will end. That is all that will happen.

The proposal I made as an individual Member of the committee—and of course I have no way of telling what the eventual recommendation will be—was that all representations made by Members in the form of bills, motions and motions for papers should be referred to a special committee established for the purpose of studying Private Members' business. That committee would then report as it saw fit on such items back to the House, at which point the House would debate the report of the committee and the House would have an opportunity to express an opinion via a vote. Since the vote would be on the report of the committee—and the report might be quite different from the representation originally made by the Member—there could be a fairly free expression of opinion on the part of Members. It would not have the effect of law, but nevertheless it would be a clear expression of opinion and would be about the nearest thing we will ever come to in a free expression of the opinions of Members of the House.

The reason I want that procedure or something similar to it to be put into effect in the House is that at the present time we have no way, as far as papers are concerned, of obtaining, except by request, the documents we desire. This motion calls for the document which was signed between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of New Brunswick. Because of the moneys that were spent I believe that it should be made public.

The argument against making some of these documents public is that there would be comparisons made between Provinces which could lead to pressure on the part of the public for better services or more assistance. In other words, it would become more costly for individual Provinces. I consider this a specious argument. I believe it should be possible for individuals in various Provinces to make comparisons to see whether in their particular case their own Government was spending more or less than another Province on one particular service.

Another matter which I have tried to promote is that in the case of the Canada Assistance Plan, where the Federal Government contributes 50 per cent of the costs that are decided by the Provinces, the two distinct parts of the Plan—moneys which are paid for social assistance and moneys which are paid for social services—be separated. At the present time right across the country the proportion is approximately $2 for social assistance for $1 for social services. In my latest mailer to my constituents I showed, for example, that in the Province of Quebec for the last fiscal year, 1981-82, just under $1 billion was transferred by the federal Government under the Canada Assistance Plan to the Government of that Province. Approximately two-thirds or some $652 million was for social assistance and approximately one-third or some $346 million was for social services.

Just to put on the record the totals for the whole of Canada last year, the amount sent to all Provinces was $2,664 million. Again the proportion between social assistance and social services was approximately two to one—social assistance, $1.8 billion and social services, $864 million. The breakdown in the Province of Quebec for the last year, of course, I do not have, but the proportion has remained fairly constant from year to year. It might be just as well if I indicated that in 1977-78, for example, when the amount transferred to the Provinces was only $1.5 billion—and I have just read that it went up last year to almost $2.7 billion—the social services side of the payments was split, most of it going to homes for special care; the next largest sum for various welfare services; and smaller amounts for child welfare and health care.

The point I made in previous remarks in the House was that it was entirely the decision of the Province as to which social services they will support and the extent to which they will support them. Therefore I suggested that we change our system of support. Since the Federal Government has a tremendous impact on the amount of moneys paid out by the Provinces for social assistance—and of course that impact comes in the form of all its social programs such as unemployment insurance, pension plans, child tax credits, family allowances, and so on—I believe the Federal Government should pick up a bigger proportion of the cost. Initially I propose that we increase the contribution from the federal treasury for social assistance from its present 50 per cent to two-thirds of the amount spent by the Provinces. I suggested, on the other hand, that the federal contribution to social services be reduced and, just for the sake of argument, I suggested that they be reduced from 50 per cent to one-third.

Because the social assistance payment is approximately twice the size of that for social services, the effect would be to increase the federal contribution. Why do I want to do this? There are two reasons. First, it should be abundantly apparent that social assistance payments are much greater in Provinces where there is greater need. This is why I chose this afternoon to use New Brunswick as an example. Where there is increased unemployment or where a Province, because of its lower taxes, does not have the same revenue as wealthier provinces, then obviously there is a much greater cost to the taxpayer and possibly lesser benefit for those in need.

If we were to increase our contribution to social assistance we would be directly assisting those Provinces with the greatest need. Specifically, that would be the Maritimes, the Atlantic Provinces, the Province of Quebec, and to some lesser extent the Province of Manitoba. I have discussed this before, but this federal Government is going to have to consider some basis of payment across the board, some standard, some minimum income plan. This will be the first step toward federal intervention in the field of social assistance. In other words, by increasing the amount from 50 per cent to say, two-thirds, it can go on increasing until it picks up the lion's share. Ultimately, I would hope this might be as much as 85 per cent or even 90 per cent. The plan would continue to be administered, as it is at the present time, by the Provinces, but obviously as the contribution from the federal treasury to social assistance increases, so too will the Provinces be in a better position to give roughly equivalent service or assistance across the country. Because the amount spent on social services is somewhat smaller, there would not be the same financing difficulty for the Provinces.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I hoped there would be some revision of the method in which we use these Private Members' hours. In the past, as we know, Mr. Speaker, we have been allowed to speak for 20 minutes. However, if I use my allotted 20 minutes, the spokesperson for the Official Opposition uses his or her 20 minutes and the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party does likewise, then there is no time for Government response. I would like to hear from the Government today if possible before this hour expires at six o'clock whether the Government has any ideas at all regarding a change to the format of the Canada Assistance Plan. With the increased social assistance payments this year, I have no doubt that last year's total of $2.7 billion will be considerably exceeded. I imagine that in the current year we are probably looking at a figure considerably in excess of $3 billion, $3 billion being the federal contribution, which means that the total money spent must be in the order of some $6 billion or more.

I would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary who will be speaking on behalf of the Government whether the Government is giving any serious consideration to revising the Canada Assistance Plan so as to make it somewhat easier for the less wealthy Provinces to provide the social assistance payments necessary in these difficult times in those areas of the country where there is increased unemployment and where, as a result, more people are having to turn to welfare to put bread on the table.

I find it unfortunate that we have to go through a motion to request documents which, I believe, should already be in the public domain. I hope that with this continuing pressure one of these days the Provinces will agree that, in instances where the public purse is spending such large sums of money, all the material necessary for scrutiny will be available to the public.

I must put this on the record. I understand that it is not a refusal on the part of the federal Government to produce but that the federal Government must have the approval of the Provinces before it can produce the document I am requesting today. I would be happy if the Parliamentary Secretary would also comment on that point.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). His Notice of Motion No. 75 requests a copy of the latest agreement between the federal Government and the Province of New Brunswick under the Canada Assistance Plan.

As I know you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, New Brunswick relies quite considerably on its co-operation with the federal Government, particularly in its dealings with the federal Government in assisting it to meet its obligations to those citizens of New Brunswick who are perhaps not as fortunate as their colleagues and who do require assistance from time to time either through the Department of Social Services or in a more universal way through the health care programs which the Province of New Brunswick has instituted. I am pleased to say that these are second to none in the nation.

I would also like to say a portion of these funds are channelled through to our educational requirements in the Province of New Brunswick which also are second to none in the Dominion of Canada.

As the Hon. Member has pointed out, New Brunswick does perhaps suffer more from a climate of difficult and poor economic times than the more industrialized parts of the nation, despite the efforts of the provincial government to attract new and exciting venture capital, which it has done quite successfully. The fact is that New Brunswick, along with Atlantic Canada, has suffered depressing times because of extenuating circumstances beyond its control over the last number of years.

I think it is also appropriate to point out that most likely New Brunswick, as well as its sister Provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, the maritime Provinces, provides a greater proportion per capita of its provincial income to these social programs, areas of social assistance, education and health programs than a number of its counterparts throughout the rest of the nation. So it is extremely important that New Brunswick continue to maintain a level of compensation from the federal Government that will ensure New Brunswickers are given as fair an opportunity as the rest of the citizens of this nation who live in other Provinces.

In that regard New Brunswick, I think, has probably experienced, over the last several months in particular, some devastating blows to its economy, blows which will, over the next few weeks or months, create a tremendous economic burden on the provincial government, the treasury and ultimately on its citizens. We have some very obvious examples, examples that unfortunately would not have had to come about if it were not for some of the policies that were instigated and undertaken by the present Government.

I would like to point out in particular the Federal Government's decision to close down CFB Chatham and to move the facility of that air base to Quebec. This move will put approximately 3,500 jobs out of existence in the Chatham-Newcastle area. Despite the assurances of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) during the recent election campaign, which was successfully contested by the New Brunswick Conservative Government for an unprecedented fourth consecutive term, that the Government would relocate a department of its pay division to the Chatham area which would create 350 jobs—apparently 250 new ones since I understand that pay division only has 100 paying jobs in its department at the present time—this is a long way from replacing jobs which will be sorely missed by the Chatham and Newcastle region as a result of the Government's decision to move that air base from Chatham to the Province of Quebec. Those 350 jobs will barely represent 10 per cent of the total jobs which will be lost by the movement of that air base.

I would like to point out as well that the Province of New Brunswick has done much to alleviate the unemployment situation at a time when the Federal Government should perhaps have been taking a more active role in living up to its responsibilities and commitments to Provinces such as New Brunswick by ensuring that the citizens of that Province could live in an atmosphere and climate where they would be able to continue working and provide a decent living for their families.

During recent months we have seen negotiations successfully completed between Heath-Steele Mines, again in the northern region of New Brunswick, and the provincial government. Due to poor markets and a poor economic climate it was about to close down and throw a number of other people out of work. However, the provincial government succesfully concluded negotiations with that company to have those jobs reinstated during a time when the picture might have been much more bleak than it currently is. I think these successful negotiations are to the detriment of the federal Government because it did not take its responsibility seriously.

We have also seen the Government of New Brunswick take the responsibility upon itself to ensure that the plywood mill in the Newcastle region was able to keep its doors open for another few weeks or months so that the workers in the industry in that region—at a time when Christmas is just around the corner—would have the opportunity to put at least a few dollars aside so their families may have a somewhat more pleasant Christmas than might have otherwise been the case.

Last year we were treated to the spectacle of the Government proposing to decrease equalization payments to the Provinces over a period of three or five years. Eastern Canada was to receive approximately $5 billion less in equalization payments. Obviously, this will make it much more difficult for Provinces like New Brunswick since it will adversely affect its health care program, increase the financial burden on the shoulders of the taxpayers in the Provinces, particularly the poorer provinces such as New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Quebec. It will affect the educational programs which we are so rightly proud of in New Brunswick. It will mean less funding to the universities and as a result will cost the students more money if, indeed, they are able to obtain the money to continue their education. I dare say that some students will now be denied the opportunity to acquire an education because the Government has determined that it will decrease equalization payments substantially in the next few years to those provinces which so desperately require the additional assistance.

We have seen various programs introduced. We have seen the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tell the nation and the House of Commons yesterday that a job creation program will be set in place that will create untold numbers of jobs. This will be done with $1.2 billion which will be saved and gathered from other Departments which would have spent the money in other areas. We were told that there will in fact be a tax increase which will be paid by the employers and the workers of this nation which will amount to something in the vicinity of $3 billion plus.

There are more logical, reasonable and responsible ways that this Government could carry out its responsibilities. Let me give one or two examples of how this could be accomplished particularly in New Brunswick, since the Hon. Member's motion deals with that Province. In recent days the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board has been asked by a committee of concerned workers in the Port of Saint John to arrange for a few additional shipments of wheat and flour through the Port of Saint John during the off season. This is not something that the Minister has not heard before because I raised this matter in the House last May. I know that the Minister has been contacted previously by various officials of the Port Development Authority, the City of Saint John, other unions and officials from the city as well. All they were asking was that a few additional shipments of wheat and flour be shipped through the port facilities, which are fine facilities that have been developed over a number of years. The port has a good reputation and its workers are hard working and industrious people who have a good work history. They were only asking that a few additional shipments of wheat be sent through during the slack season so that the port may be utilized on a year-round basis. This would assist the workers in that area substantially. It is not an unrealistic request. Indeed, it is very acceptable. It is certainly within the Government's purview to arrange it.

For some reason the Government has determined that it will not treat the Port of Saint John as it treats other ports in eastern Canada. The Minister informed me that this would be inconsistent with present policy. It would not be in the best interests of the wheat and flour suppliers of the country. I question that reason because it is a fact that it is apparently acceptable for other ports in eastern Canada. If it is good for other ports, why can it not be done in the Port of Saint John?

I suspect that rather than a problem of economics it is a political problem. I believe if one were to examine the shipments going to the other ports it would be determined that with a proper attitude in the Government benches shipments of wheat and flour could indeed be diverted to some extent to the Port of Saint John during the off season instead of only during the winter months when that port, along with other ports in eastern Canada, are already busy. Of course, the Port of Montreal is an exception since it is frozen during winter. But no, we are told that that cannot happen.

The workers of that port city are not taking that as an answer. The workers have banded together and have formed a committee called the Port of St. John Committee of Concern. Indeed, they have a great deal to be concerned about when they see the utter rejection and lack of response from the Government with regard to their plight. In the City of St. John we have a shipbuilding industry which works out of a shipyard which is an excellent facility. If the Government were to take an attitude that is a little more objective toward the re-establishment of a merchant marine in this country, that shipbuilding facility in St. John and the shipbuilding facilities in Quebec and Halifax would find that currently they are providing very few jobs in comparison with those which would be created as a spin-off of a positive attitude toward the re-establishment of a merchant marine in Canada.

Daily I receive letters and petitions from workers facing lay-offs in the shipbuilding industry in my region and others throughout New Brunswick. Those who have been laid off or who are facing lay-offs are saying, "Where do we turn? For whom do we look?"

The Canada Development Community Projects will certainly not assist to any degree those people who have skills in the shipbuilding industry. However, their needs must be addressed. The Government should take a positive attitude, one which would ultimately result in the creation of thousands of jobs across this nation in port cities such as St. John, Halifax, Vancouver and Quebec. It would mean a tremendous boost to the economy of the more depressed areas of this nation, such as those in New Brunswick and others in Atlantic Canada. It would mean a great deal to the citizens of those areas. It would mean that they could walk the streets with their heads held up high, knowing that they had jobs and did not have to go to the welfare or social assistance office, knowing that they did not have to come to Ottawa to petition their Members of Parliament to go to the Government and encourage an increase in welfare payments to the provinces.

We could be substantially more self-sufficient if the Government were to take a positive approach to encourage investment in this country, but it seems to take just the opposite point of view. What a pity, what a shame, that rather than standing up here today and discussing how we will make this country more vibrant through the establishment of a new shipbuilding facility, a new steel facility or a new ancillary facility for some industry which could be meaningful in terms of creation of jobs, we must speak about providing more social assistance so that people can go to the welfare offices and perhaps not be turned down as often as they are today.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have some brief remarks to make with regard to this motion. We will obviously allow time for the Government to respond, so we will not take up all the time that is available for this motion. First, I would just say that I think it is a good motion because it calls for the production of papers, papers which should be public. They should be readily available to people. I understand that one of the problems under this Canada Assistance Plan is that ordinary citizens, people interested in these programs falling under the Plan, have difficulty in finding out the full information with regard to the programs.

The Canada Assistance Plan is really a cost-sharing arrangment between the Provinces and the federal Government on a 50 per cent basis in order to provide social assistance across this country so that people can have their basic needs of food, clothing and shelter met. There are some good arguments why certain Provinces, such as New Brunswick, which are mentioned in this motion should have a more generous cost-sharing relationship than richer Provinces. For example, the Federal Task Force on Fiscal Federalism in Canada, a task force which was manned by a number of Members of this Parliament and which made recommendations in this area, recommended that in the case of have-not provinces, there should be a cost-sharing relationship which would require the Federal Government to pay 75 per cent of the cost and the have-not Provinces to pay 25 per cent. I think that is a good idea and would improve the Canada Assistance Plan.

However, I want to refer to the sort of central notion behind the Plan, which is that every citizen in Canada, every human being, has a right to have his basic human needs met, needs of food, clothing, shelter and recreation. These needs are normally met by the economy, by employment. In other words, if one has a job, not only does one receive the pleasure and satisfaction of doing one' work and the fulfillment that comes from being active, but one also receives a paycheque and can therefore meet the basic needs of one's family. The problem today, of course, is that a great number of Canadians, well over 2 million in real terms, do not have employment.

We hear many predictions from respected agencies, such as the Economic Council of Canada, that very high levels of unemployment will continue for a long period of time to come, perhaps four or five years, and that even after the so-called recovery arrives, we will have 10-plus per cent unemployment. That was really quite unheard of in Canada. We will have to do some very hard thinking should these predictions actually come to pass. Obviously, the first thing we should do is to take a look at how we manage the economy in this country. How do we create wealth? How do we create employment? It is evident today that we are not doing a very good job of that.

The fundamental change in policy and direction that we must make is not to rely upon monetary and fiscal policies alone as instruments of managing the economy because that is no longer sufficient. We must move beyond that point. We must adopt an approach today which allows the Federal Government, in consultation with provincial governments, labour, business and the financial community, to set some national economic goals for this country. Other countries have done this, countries such as Japan, Sweden and Germany, countries which have a lower level of unemployment than we have today. Our unemployment rate is at 12.2 per cent. Their rates are at much more modest levels. It is important to take note of the unemployment rate in the context of the Canada Assistance Plan because, as I said earlier, it is normally through employment and the income derived from employment that our basic human needs are met. It is only because some people cannot have employment that we must create something like the Canada Assistance Plan. I would therefore hope that in the not too distant future this country would make a very clear decision to move beyond treating the economy through the use of the traditional instruments of economic management which I have mentioned, fiscal and monetary policies, and begin to set some national economic goals, to take economic management, direction and development seriously.

I must again refer to the predictions I referred to earlier. The prediction is that even after the recovery, we will have unemployment in this country in the 10 per cent range. There will be many more people in this country without income to meet their human needs. They will not receive it through the normal accepted way of distributing income in our society.

In order to face up to that question, we will have to do some serious thinking as to how income is distributed in this country, for example, whether the Canada Assistance Plan is adequate. When we have the recovery and begin to face the real question of long-term unemployment, it will be time for us to look at an idea which is perhaps considered passé today, that is, guaranteed annual income.

A number of experiments respecting the guaranteed annual income have been carried out in this country. One was in Manitoba. The advantage of a guaranteed annual income over social welfare programs is that it provides incentives for those on welfare and our working poor to seek employment because the level of assistance received is graduated. If someone earns money, he does not necessarily lose the financial assistance being provided by the community as a whole.

The guaranteed annual income program has that advantage. It has other economic advantages in the sense that it will continue to ensure that people have money in their hands in order to purchase the necessities of life. That provides a demand for goods and keeps other people working.

It is very clear that we have to come to grips with the notion of providing sufficient employment so that there will be sufficient wealth to meet the needs of all of us. I suggest we again examine the idea of a guaranteed annual income in terms of its impact on demand and, in turn, keeping the economic engines of this country moving.

The Canada Assistance Plan has served this country well. If the Government moves to the point where it is going to re-examine this, I hope it does not make the mistake it has made in other social areas it has touched on to date, that is, withdraw its commitment, withdraw its money and retard advances we have made in terms of human need in the past.

Even though we are in an economic crisis, we must first consider the needs of the individual in this country. It is only on the basis of considering the basic human needs of all Canadians that we can ever hope to build a sane and rational economy, one that can function and provide employment and income for all and allow us to provide assistance to those who cannot provide for themselves.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise to speak on this motion concerning the Canada Assistance Plan. The Canada Assistance Plan Agreement between Canada and all Provinces and Territories as well as the amendments to schedules under the Agreement are public documents and, further to his request, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has received a copy of all agreements.

The Canada Assistance Plan, which was established in 1966, is still one of the Government's major vehicles for responding to the need of Canadians for income and social services in times of difficulty. These programs, which are of such importance to a great number of Canadians, are cost-shared by the federal Government through the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

In an effort to help Canadians increase their understanding of an important social welfare program, an information pamphlet describing the Plan has been distributed to all recipients of federal pensions and family allowances. The pamphlet is available upon request from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The social service area of the Plan is perhaps the lesser known provision of the Plan, and I would like to make some remarks on this from a Canadian social context. This will enlarge somewhat on the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil.

Generally we may say that personal social services are those professional and voluntary services which complement, supplement or are in place of services and care rendered by families or friends on an individual basis to relatives, friends or other individuals, but it may also be recognized that many of the ills that beset us in life are unsought. We do not voluntarily lose families and friends, become old or handicapped. The personal social services have been created to meet and mitigate some of these personal needs we may all experience.

As soon as we begin to think holistically about this set of services, we may also begin to recognize that these services are far from comprehensive and far from meeting all recognized needs, let alone those unrecognized or likely to emerge as our society changes.

It is one of life's ironies that personal social services have come to be recognized as a definite sector of services at the very moment when economic prosperity has itself come under challenge in North America.

Modern personal social services have evolved from institutional forms for care provided in the past for the more indigent, elderly and handicapped of the general public. It is perhaps because there was really no satisfactory place for children in Poor Law institutions that a variety of special institutions were created for young people who were beyond or without the care and control of their families or were delinquent. But industrial schools and reformatories did not stem the tide of children and young people who were needing some form of care. The creation of juvenile courts and the child welfare services was a response to the perceived needs of these children.

Personal social services still consist in large measure of institutional, that is residential, provisions and provisions which seek either to provide a substitute family or to support people in their own home.

It may be appropriate at this stage to recognize the interrelationship between the early child welfare services and the first measures of financial support, which was mother's allowances, given to families, especially widows who have children. What was recognized in the early years of this century is that children in single parent families are likely to be economically, if not socially, disadvantaged.

In the early days of the child welfare services, it was recognized that in the absence of some financial support being provided to vulnerable families, many more children were likely to be brought into care. Viewed in this way, mother's allowances were thus seen to be a preventive measure and they were the ancestor of most of our modern income assistance programs.

Notwithstanding this financial provision, the child welfare services have been called on to care for many thousands of children, and it is not always obvious that the care thus provided has necessarily been beneficial, and that without the provision of more generous financial assistance, especially childrens' or family allowance, many children might not have been able to stay with their families.

I believe too that we must be aware that Canada has been much influenced by the American war on poverty. In the first place, this external influence was important in the mid-1960s when the federal Government sought to consolidate and expand the few existing cost-shared categorical income programs. The Canada Assistance Plan provided fifty-fifty cost-sharing of income assistance programs provided by the provinces to people in financial need. It also incorporated the new element of sharing the cost of personal social services provided to people in need or likely to be so.

So far as the social services are concerned, the Canada Assistance Plan has led to a grouping or re-grouping of services usually under the provincial departments of social services. While not exactly like the British model of free-standing social service departments, there are many similarities. This model has proved attractive in both Canada and the United States. Separation of income assistance and personal social service programs in the United States, imitated to some extent in Canada, has made it more possible to see the personal social services as a distinct sector. In both countries there has been a substantial growth in public expenditures on the personal social services since the early 1960s. In fact, so much was this the case that by the early 1970s in the United States the official view was these expenditures were uncontrollable. As a consequence, in October 1972, the United States Congress placed a ceiling on the total amount of such expenditures to be shared with the states.

One of the problems of two or more levels of government in the federal system of government is the equitable and predictable provision and distribution of public goods and services throughout the country. Personal social services have traditionally been provided by a heterogeneous set of public and private agencies in both the United States and Canada. As I indicated, the Canada Assistance Plan brought about some greater semblance of order. In the United States the 1974 Social Service Amendments, Title XX of the Social Securities Act also sought to bring greater order and equity by requiring all states to engage in a public planning process for the personal social services and, on the basis of such planning, to submit claims for revenue sharing to the federal government.

There was indeed a growth of expenditures in the social services under the CAP. Part of the growth simply represented the program maturing and being implemented. Until the early 1970s there were more children in care, and the child welfare service was growing, both in terms of staff and facilities. As in the United States the growth of expenditures did not all represent new services. It represented, rather, existing services becoming eligible for cost sharing.

There was also creation of some new sectors of provision. Child care services expanded until the mid-1970s, but the rate of growth then decreased. The growing number of old people in the general population, especially the proportion requiring institutional care brought about something of a crisis in the early 1970s. Most provinces recognized that they could not continue building and supporting more and more residential institutions. A number of comparative studies revealed that European countries in particular give much greater emphasis to community support services for the elderly and the handicapped. There was some hope that community care might be cheaper than institutional care. Not for the first time in the personal social services area, cheaper services may also be preferable from the point of view of the consumer. Many provincial governments are now providing quite extensive home care services.

The Canada Assistance Plan has itself operated with a somewhat restricted mandate. The test of financial, or potential financial, need has meant that the federal Government has not been able to encourage and assist the establishment in providing services for all income groups. Yet, what has become obvious is that child care services, home care services, homes for the aged, and so on, are needed by Canadians from all walks of life. In the early 1970s concerns about the terms of reference of the Canada Assistance Plan and public interest in the problem of poverty led the federal and provincial Governments to review their existing programs.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that personal social services in Canada, in both the public and private sectors, have grown significantly in the past 15 years. Their funding base is still linked in the main, however, to the financial mechanism for providing income assistance to poor people. There have not, to date, been sufficient funds available in the non-government sector to provide a wholly viable voluntary system of services. These are some of the problems.

Personally, what I believe needs to happen is a movement of personal social services from residential to a more respected and institutionalized role in our country. It is important that we, as representatives of all people in this country, ensure that social services become available to persons at all levels. I recognize that we are in a time of restraint and that scarce resources must be distributed in such a way that those who have the greatest need are cared for. At the same time, we must look to the future and recognize that each one of us, at some time in his or her life, will have a need for a social service for ourselves or for a member of our family. Who can tell when a difficult birth may result in a child being born with a handicap? Who has not had an emergency, financial, emotional or physical, when their marriage was threatened? Who will not grow older? Do we know how healthy we will be? What kind of support will we need to continue living the kind of satisfying, useful and independent life we all want to lead? We are all vulnerable. We all need social services. I believe it is imperative that our legislation and programs support these needs.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow, just for a minute, the sterling comments made by my friend and just point out to my colleague from Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that if he would take note of the number of private members' bills that have been tabled in the House and talked out by the Government, rather than the Opposition, then he would not be so concerned about the issue. And if, as he suggests, it will be talked out by the Government, then maybe there is a signal going out across the country today that Government backbenchers find even greater barriers in talking to their colleagues on the Liberal side, and if the Government has difficulty talking to people across the country, that same phenomenon is happening within the Liberal caucus. If he wants to get the bill passed, all he has to do is talk to his Minister and get it negotiated before it is tabled in the House.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to participate in this debate this afternoon. As you well know, when the Canada Assistance Plan was passed in 1966, it replaced four federal-provincial programs which had been directed toward special target groups, the elderly, the blind, the disabled and the unemployed. At the time of its introduction, CAP was progressive legislation because it was based on the premise of providing assistance to all persons in financial need, regardless of the cause of that need.

Under CAP, a federal government shares in the cost of provincial and municipal social assistance payments as well as certain social service programs which are referred to in the act as welfare services. To be eligible for cost sharing, social assistance programs must meet, as you all know, three conditions. They must utilize needs testing, they must have an appeal system, and they must not impose residence requirements. The beneficiaries of the social assistance programs funded under CAP are those who have insufficient income to meet their basic needs. A large proportion of beneficiaries are disabled.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The hour provided for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8.00 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-128, to provide supplementary borrowing authority (No. 2) be read the second time and be referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) had the floor.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I began this speech this afternoon I discussed the shocking rise in government expenditures and in the deficit which has more than doubled in the last 11 months to $23.6 billion, according to the estimates of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I spoke about the size of the public debt which, at $134 billion in my province, exceeds the average family income on an annual basis.

I discussed how we had forced the Government to reduce its original borrowing bill from $11 billion to $7 billion and why we are having this debate on the additional $4 billion, in order to establish accountability to the taxpayers who put up the money. At five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the Prime Minister's reaction.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance rose in the House to present a budget masquerading as a financial statement. He told us of his Government's new principles of economic management. His Government has discovered the benefits of fiscal responsibility on the eve of asking Parliament for an additional $4 billion borrowing authority. His Government has also concluded, he says, that our economic dynamism stems from the health of the private sector. To encourage growth in the private sector, the Ministre intends to consult with business and labour and to provide an atmosphere of certainty and stability. This comment, Mr. Speaker, comes from the Minister who was responsible for the National Energy Program which was so destructive of trust, so destructive of the private sector, and certainly was destructive of stability.

Last night in his statement, the Minister made it clear that he could find no ways of financing his job-creation programs other than by increasing unemployment insurance premiums and in some re-allocation of existing funds. He has repeatedly rejected our Party's suggestion of an all-party committee which would review programs and suggest possible reductions in expenditures.

Let me identify some areas of spending in the past. These are drawn from the annual reports of the Auditor General, Order Paper Questions and estimates.

One is the area of cost over-runs. Shortly after becoming President of the Treasury Board in the Clark Government in 1979, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) requested a list of current capital projects that were experiencing cost overruns. Treasury Board compiled a list of overruns of $1.1 billion. All of the overruns had occurred under the Liberals. In addition, he identified a further $920 million in overruns before the year was out.

Another area is employee efficiency. A study conducted by the Auditor General found that work performed by 50,000 clerical and regulatory employees could have been done by 38,000 employees.

Then there are the expensive, inefficient white elephants such as Mirabel Airport. This unnecessary and unwanted airport cost the taxpayers of Canada $500 million to build and has lost over $200 million since operations began in 1975. In the last fiscal year, 1981-82, Mirabel lost $30 million. In contrast, Malton Airport in Toronto had a profit of $39 million.

Then there is the wasteful expenditure on administrative expenses, including the $150,000 sabbatical being enjoyed by Dr. W. Edmund Clark in Paris. Dr. Clark was the head of the energy sector at the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and was the bureaucrat responsible for developing the National Energy Program, which resulted in the loss of billions of dollars of drilling activity in Alberta and the loss of thousands of jobs. Documents leaked in September show that Dr. Clark is being paid an overseas adjustment of more than $6,000, relocation expenses of $25,000, education allowances of $5,000, living allowances of $33,000, and $2,000 for travel and research. All this is in addition to his salary, which is in excess of $80,000 per year.

In my own city, just down the block from me, resides a government official who is in charge of Transpo 86, the World Fair on Transportation and Communications. The rent on his apartment is $4,000 per month for five years. His neighbour in the same building pays $1,500 per month. When this was brought to the attention of the then secretary of state for External Affairs, an aide described this wasteful expenditure of $3,500 per month for five years as chickenfeed.

I sense among my own constituents a resolution that in a country of such enormous wealth as Canada, in terms of both its resources and its people, there must be better ways to reach our potential.

• (2010)

Our Party has developed a ten-point program which was described last night by our finance critic. It is our contribution to a national recovery program. In brief summary, because it was well described last night by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), we suggest a control of the deficit and that the Government spending policy be contained. We would simplify the Income Tax Act and encourage risk taking. We would create a positive investment climate by reforming FIRA in order to support the dollar. We would amend the National Energy Program to reduce red tape and remove the retroactive confiscation feature which is considered such an unpleasant part of it. We would reduce red tape and unnecessary regulations. We would develop new technology through more aggressive research and development policies. We would emphasize training and upgrading of the labour force so that Canadians could take advantage of our new job opportunities and technology.

This may mean that employers would have to train people who would leave them in the future and that unions would have to be more realistic about retraining programs, but I think that is a responsibility which they are now prepared to share.

We would implement mini-projects as well as megaprojects and identify small business opportunities. We would continue to reduce interest rates and, in particular, moderate increases in regulated prices. Finally, we would expand Canada's trade potential, particularly in the Pacific Rim which is our front door on the fastest growing economic region of the world. This is what we would consider to be a constructive program which in time would, hopefully, eliminate the need for debates such as this one on excessive Government borrowing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the dubious distinction tonight of rising to speak on Bill C-128, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for $4 billion. It is not unrealistic to ask in what context this request is before us this evening. Of course, the most obvious statistic which jumps to one's attention is the fact that unemployment in the country is now in the 12.2 per cent range, meaning that approximately two million people are out of work in Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is really 17.5 per cent.

Mr. Riis: In real terms it is 17.5 per cent, as my hon. friend suggests. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that we should not worry too much about this figure because he has a job-creation program which he is introducing. He is saying, "So what if two million people are out of work; we will create jobs in the next year and a half for 60,000 people." That still leaves approximately two million people out of work. The Government seems to think that this is an economic statement of which it can feel proud. It is beyond me, it escapes logic.

Also the Minister of Finance had the courage—and I give him credit where credit is due—to suggest that unemployment will continue in 1982 at the 12 per cent rate. His Department suggested that for the next five years it will be in the double-digit range, at least. I read with interest the suggestion of the Conference Board that in 1983-84 it will be about 13 per cent. Another prediction agency suggested as high as 14 per cent for the next year or two. Can we listen to the facts and figures which come out of the Department of Finance? Can we have any faith in the figures which come out of Government departments?

I remember very distinctly about a year ago when the then minister of finance rose and said that he was very disappointed in the size of the deficit that year. He suggested that the deficit for the fiscal year 1982-83 would be $10.6 billion. People shuddered at that figure; it was an incredible figure. Not many months later there was an upward revision, a slight upward revision from $10.6 billion to $19.6 billion!

Mr. Anguish: A small miscalculation.

Mr. Riis: It was a sharp shock, a small miscalculation as my hon. colleague says. Then 15 weeks later it was revised upward again to $23.6 billion.

Mr. Blenkarn: They are raising the deficit like they do the gas prices.

Mr. Riis: We are still not at the end of the year. What will the final figure be? It seems as if the game of roulette is being played—spin the marble and see where it comes up, and it goes up higher every time.

The Government asks us to have faith in its ability to manage the finances of the country and to have a sensible fiscal and monetary policy. It must be dreaming.

I should like to refer to one small point which was made by my hon. colleague to the right. She drew attention to the fact that some months ago the Progressive Conservatives took some credit for the fact that they had encouraged the Government to manage its fiscal responsibilities better, that they had stopped the request for a huge borrowing amount and that they had made a deal so that the Government would have to return and explain once again how it would spend $4 billion. Mark my words, those fellows across the aisle will not be explaining how they will spend that $4 billion. They will whistle and waffle and pull figures out of the air. They will try to explain all the jobs they are creating—60,000 out of a need for two million. I ask Progressive Conservative colleagues to my right whether they were successful in encouraging fiscal management across the way. Was their tactic an appropriate one?

Mr. Blenkarn: We got them back in the House for another shot at it.

Mr. Riis: Indeed. There is no question that the Government of Canada has misread the economy of Canada.

I listened with interest a few nights ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sat down to his three-act play to explain to Canadians the difficulties which they were facing, as if all of us lived in some mystical world, some never-never land, and were unaware of the problems. He laid them out in his very philosophical and articulate way so that everyone would understand how difficult things were today in Canada.

Then the Minister of Finance rose in the House yesterday, backtracked on the two previous budgets and changed a number of taxation policies which the previous minister of Finance had brought in. The previous minister had changed his budget 36 times. The new Minister of Finance changed it another eight times. They do not know what they are doing. They do not know if they are coming or going, it is obvious. What kind of leadership are these people providing for Canadians? The Minister of Finance rose in the House and said that resources needed to be developed—a profound statement—that forests needed to be replenished, that fisheries needed careful husbandry, that we needed new production techniques established in Canada, that we must develop a new technological basis in the country, and that we needed increased investment. The people across the way have been living in a fairyland. There is no question that Canadians were not aware of all of these needs many, many years ago. It was not a revelation to hear that we need to manage our forests more adequately and to seek more investment in Canada's growth. Why has it taken these people so long to realize what Canadians have known for a long time?

The New Democratic Party had a task force which toured the country last December. We visited every part of the country. We held open hearings and asked everyone who was interested to come forward.

Mr. Blenkarn: We had 63 Members out. How many did you have out?

Mr. Riis: When this man to my right has nothing else to say, he bleats and yells out. I will listen very carefully to his profound words in a moment.

An Hon. Member: Profound!

Mr. Riis: Did I say, "profound"? I meant preposterous.

In our task force hearings last December the people of Canada made it very clear that they understood the seriousness of the economic situation facing Canada. They understood where the unemployment figures in the country were going, the problems in the fisheries, in the agriculture, mining, service and quaternary sectors. They understood that we were facing unprecedented levels of personal, business and farm bankruptcies. They recognized that the tax proposals of the previous minister of Finance were inappropriate, were thought through in a rather casual and lackadaisical way, and that they were ill-conceived. As a result, week after week we have seen those same tax proposals gutted from the Government's position. For the Government to take a year from last November to come before this House to make a very profound statement on the difficulties facing Canadians is not only disappointing but it is rather irritating as well. The Minister of Finance stood up and said to those in western Canada, "We have good news for you. We are going to set aside $400 million for the western Canadians." Do you not remember, Mr. Speaker, that not long ago we were promised $4 billion in the Western Development Fund?

• (2020)

Mr. Blaikie: It shrank.

Mr. Riis: It shrank. As the previous speaker indicated, I think the Government put the zero in the wrong place. It was not $4 billion because we now find out it is only $400 million.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had a great deal to say about the survival of the fittest in these times. The Prime Minister said that the weak must be assisted and helped. What he meant, of course, was that the 2 million people unemployed today are weak. I find that a very painful statement. I find it to be a very thoughtless statement coming from the Prime Minister of this country. To think that 2 million people who are presently out of work because they are weak is wrong. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is a result of the ill-conceived economic policies of this Government over the last 14 years. That has resulted in the economic environment which has led to these 2 million people being unemployed. I realize that there are other circumstances that must be brought to bear on that explanation as well. There are external factors that influence the picture. However, we would have to admit that to a large extent the Government of Canada brought us into this mess and it is up to the Government of Canada to get us out of it. Work, not welfare, is what the unemployed in this country want.

What did the Minister of Finance say about assistance to the forest industry, an industry which cuts across every province and territory in this country? He said nothing to assist the forest industry. He said nothing to assist the mining industry. He said nothing to ease the energy costs of farmers and fishermen. He said nothing to assist the various service groups in this country and nothing to assist the small business sector. Sorry, that is not true. The Minister did say that he had something to assist the small business sector. He was referring to the small business bond. But try to get a small business bond, Mr. Speaker. Small business bonds are provided through the banks of Canada. The banks of Canada do not issue small business bonds because the banks have already used up that capacity. But the Government takes out full page ads in the newspapers and magazines of Canada stating, "Here we are, we are helping small business. Take out a small business bond." But small business bonds do not exist in this country. There are no small business bonds. Then the Government says, "We have another program as well to assist small business but we have not introduced it into the Commons yet. We will, however, approach the banks of Canada asking them to have faith in us."

Would you have faith in that group over there? Would you have faith in the Government of Canada considering where it has taken this country? The bankers do not have faith. Canadians do not have faith. There is no way on this earth that the banks of Canada will introduce a program until it is signed, sealed and delivered in this House of Commons and the Senate.

Again, where is the assistance to small business, other than in the myths and in the rhetoric that we have become used to in this country? There is nothing for the steel industry. There is nothing for the auto industry? There is nothing for the home owners of this country, except for a couple of minor programs. We have seen how successful they have been in stimulating the construction industry. I look across the way at a person who understands the housing crisis only too well. Today he must admit that the stimulation we were promised for the housing industry of Canada is yet to come. We are still waiting for it.

There are nearly 2 million people in this country who are unemployed. Canada is known as the basket case of the western industrialized nations. We are the losers. We are the laughing stock of the western industrialized nations. It is with a great deal of concern that I say that. I have just had the good fortune of returning from attending an international congress of small business. There was talk about small business around the world. People from Sweden, West Germany or Britain ask which country you come from. When you say Canada, they have a funny look on their face. People thought that Canada was one of the richest countries in the world. People thought that Canada had more advantages than virtually any other country in the entire world. Why then are we the basket case of the western industrialized nations? Why is Canada falling behind?

Mr. Cosgrove: It is your fault.

Mr. Deans: You could not build a house.

Mr. Riis: This man across the way could not build a house. He is responsible himself for the housing situation in this country. It is at the lowest ebb it has ever been since the 1930s, and he is saying that it is our fault?

We should have three priorities in this country. I was hoping the Minister of Finance in his economic statement yeaterday would identify those three priorities. Those three priorities ought to be jobs, jobs and jobs. Until we start putting people to work in this country, there will be no economic recovery.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Start spending money.

Mr. Riis: You cannot have an economic recovery in a system like ours, a capitalist system that depends upon continued expansion in terms of goods and services, if people cannot buy them. That is what we are up against today. People cannot purchase goods. People cannot purchase services. The way, presumably, to resolve this is to throw a few more people out of work.

The Minister said that he was going to set aside $500 million to create 60,000 jobs over the next year and a half, jobs essentially to get people back on UIC. What he is saying is that so many people now have been on UIC for a year who are now moving on to welfare and we have to get them back on to UIC. Therefore, we have to give them a temporary job for a few months so they will requalify and so continue on UIC benefits. That is an imaginative way to get Canadians working in a meaningful way. To accomplish this the Minister of Finance is going to take some money out of one pocket in order to put it into another. He is going to take jobs from the energy sector and he is going to take jobs from the foreign aid sector. There are a number of jobs in the foreign aid sector when you start cutting back considering the amount of tied aid that our colleagues across the way have. They are going to be losing jobs in the defence sector, and because we will have UIC premium rates increased for the workers of Canada by 40 per cent it will mean that an average of $135 will be taken out of the pocket of every working Canadian. Those dollars will not be purchasing goods and services and creating jobs. For employers the premium will rise 50 per cent. This will take in excess of $1 billion out of small businesses in Canada. Is that the kind of encouragement, nurturing and support this Government gives small business and the workers of Canada?

I will venture a guess this evening that rather than create 60,000 additional jobs because of the programs introduced by the Minister of Finance in his statement yesterday we will lose more than 60,000 jobs. There will be a net decline in job creation in this country as a result of this imaginative proposal introduced by the Minister of Finance.

We hear a great deal about the six and five program, and yet we increase the UIC premium 40 per cent and 50 per cent. The Government calls for justice, equity, sharing and concern. Where is the justice in increasing those payments 40 per cent for the workers of Canada? Where is the justice? If we want to have a fair system in this country and if we are really trying to raise money for the unemployed, why is it we put a cap on the income you must reach after which you pay no more premiums for the UIC fund? That ceiling will be placed at about $20,200 in the next number of weeks so that those people making $40,000, $50,000 or $100,000 a year pay the same as the person making $20,000 a year. That is a regressive system. I want to emphasize that to my colleagues across the aisle who like to use the terms fairness and equity in their rhetoric. Let them describe the fairness in that approach.

This peculiar situation in which we find ourselves today is becoming a sociological phenomenon. Canadian society, in terms of its economic relationships, has changed fundamentally in the last six to ten months. There are people now numbering in the tens of thousands who find themselves needing welfare but cannot qualify for it. They made the mistake of owning a modest home or car and now they do not qualify for welfare.

What kind of figures are we speaking about? In the remaining part of this year, 1982, 55,000 people will run out of unemployment insurance benefits every month and will essentially be looking at welfare for support. How many jobs a month will the new program of the Minister of Finance create? It will create 1,200. That leaves a shortfall of 53,800 every single month for the rest of the year. In January it will begin to rise to the tune of 90,000 people a month who will fall off UIC. Is there any talk of extending UIC benefits? Of course not.

There is nothing in the Minister's statement regarding interest rates, which still remain unchecked and volatile. We have seen them migrating downwards for ten weeks in a row now. What will happen after the Congressional elections in the United States? Will they stay down? Just watch what happens. I remember very distinctly when Ministers across the aisle indicated not too many months ago that there would be interest rate relief for home owners. I remember the previous minister saying on television, "Mark my words, you will have interest rate relief." We have a program and we will definitely introduce it." I heard the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Rompkey) say that as well. I heard the Minister responsible for Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) promise interest rate relief. Where is it? There is no attention being paid to stabilizing those unstable interest rates.

History was made not long ago when 80 economists met in central Canada and actually agreed on something. They agreed that interest rates must be lower and the money supply must be loosened if we are to have any economic recovery in Canada. We may not need economists to understand and figure that out and make that claim; we have been claiming that for three years. However, it is encouraging to see 80 economists agreeing on anything, let alone something which ought to send a very clear message to the Government.

Was there any discussion by the Minister of Finance about research and development? There was nary a word. Whether it is a stopgap or band-aid—call it what you like—this Government is taking Canada nowhere.

We have a few programs. The ILAP Program was to be the program to save the troubled cities of Canada. It is saving one troubled city which is Windsor. It is not surprising that three Cabinet Ministers come from that city. Perhaps one must find a city where there are three Liberal Cabinet Ministers in order to receive some aid.

Mr. Deans: It is not working very well there.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) says, it is not going very well there. It did not work in Uranium City either.

In British Columbia we heard a great deal about the famous bridging program that was going to put all the unemployed IWA workers back to work. Believe me, that has not occurred. The words that come to mind to describe that program are not utterable in the House.

Mr. Deans: Fraudulent.

Mr. Riis: Fraudulent is a good word. Again, the hopes of IWA workers in Canada were lifted just like the Government has been lifting the hopes of Canadians from all walks of life, peaking their interest, only to dash their hopes time and time again. We heard an economic statement the other day. Canadians were watching and listening very closely, with their hopes lifted only to be thoroughly disappointed.

The work-sharing program introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) was a joke. Again, it was not thought through in an adequate fashion and will not serve the purpose for which it was intended. Under these catastrophic economic times we are not even able to assemble an adequate bureaucracy to process UIC claims on time. People in various parts of Canada must wait one month, two months and three months simply to have their claim processed. What are they to do in the meantime? They are out of a job through no fault of their own and they do not qualify for welfare. They have paid into that insurance fund for many, many years and are unable to take advantage of something that ought to be there in place for them. That is the least that the Government can do, but even in that case it has faltered and failed to deliver.

One must ask why this Government does not introduce decent long-term job-creation programs which will have results for many decades into the future, such as, for example, a massive reforestation program. What part of Canada has been nurturing and husbanding its forests adequately? What part of Canada has a reasonable and sensible re-forestation silvaculture program attached to it? Virtually none. This must be done in order to continue to have a renewable resource in our forests. Again, this is not the kind of program the Government introduces.

Another example is the salmon enhancement program. We can look at mining exploration, site preparation and the placing of marginal farmlands into production. There is a great variety of programs that the Government could be introducing, but it continues with the simplistic make-work, look good programs that have resulted in the type of economic structure in this country which is inappropriate in many cases.

For too long we have looked to others to solve our problems for us. We have looked to the private sector. I frequently hear from my colleagues to the right who suggest that we should leave it to the private sector because they do everything so well. Consider what Dome Petroleum has achieved and how well Massey-Ferguson did. They have done an excellent job. We in this Party are certainly not looking to the open marketplace to solve our problems for us. It is time that we stopped looking to the American, Dutch or French corporations to solve our problems. Let us look to ourselves, let us turn inward for a while and say that we can solve our problems in this country. We can lead the way in solving our problems. We have looked to foreign corporations and others to resolve our economic difficulties for too long.

Let us examine western Europe and Japan to see what they do. Those governments have a goal, a strategy or a master plan that indicates the way their countries should be evolving. They do not do it on their own, it is not a government idea. They consult with labour, management and their various states or provinces to come to a consensus that recognizes the strategic advantages of the country to determine how they will proceed. They send out a very clear signal to the private sector, the local governments, provincial and regional governments, as to the direction in which the country should be proceeding. The western European nations have done this and Japan has done it. To this day they have not experienced the basket-case status of Canada. They have a concept of where they are going and they implement strategies to get there.

We can do the same thing. It is obvious to anyone who examines what our economic advantages are in this country. We have the existing vehicles necessary to accomplish this. We can use the tax system to encourage the strategic economic sectors of this country. In the short term, we can develop job-creation programs that will produce results later on, such as re-forestation to build a sound economic forest resource base in Canada. We do not need to expand the deficit to accomplish that. We can look at our tax system, discover its faults and ask why it is that every year hundreds of Canadians who earn incomes well over $100,000 pay not a single penny in income tax. Why is that? Should that not be changed? Of course it should. We should be plugging these loopholes so that those who ought to be paying taxes pay their fair taxes. All we ask is that there be a fair tax.

Mr. Blenkarn: If you don't earn a living, you don't pay taxes.

Mr. Riis: Listen to the bleating person over here who says, "If you do not make a profit, you do not pay taxes". Some things in life are self-evident. A person who makes $100,000 or $200,000 a year should be asked to pay some income tax, but this man does not think he should pay income tax. That is the Tory logic. The Tory base of argument and discussion.

During these very difficult times when we are attempting to raise funds to put people back to work in meaningful ways, is it not reasonable to expect that we would ask those in the upper income brackets to assist a bit more, to ask those folks making $40,000 or $50,000 a year in taxable income to simply add 2 percentage points on to that? If one made over $200,000 a year, we would ask that that person's income tax be increased by 9 per cent. Is that being unrealistic? Yet the hundreds of millions of dollars which would result in a simple tax adjustment like that would put many Canadians back to work under meaningful job-creation projects. Then we should consider some of the waste which could be cut from the Government departments.

An Hon. Member: Cut the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Riis: Some people would call the Canada Unity Information Office a propaganda arm of the Government for it simply promotes Government advertising. I wonder how pleased those Canadians who are unemployed, or who are being threatened with the possibility of becoming unemployed, are to see these full-page ads in all the newspapers, costing tens of thousands of dollars, which state, "We are that close to energy-self-sufficiency." How does one feel, when one cannot put food on the table for one's children, to know that the Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars on advertising to tell how wonderful it is? I will tell Hon. Members the best way to tell the people of Canada how wonderful the Government is: do something for the people of Canada. Do something as opposed to simply talking about some of these simplistic programs. Yes, there is a great deal of waste slush material which could be cut from the Federal budget. I suspect that no one would even know if it was gone. That, again, is what the Government needs to do.

I can say without hesitation that there are answers to our problems. In a recent speech in Hamilton, my leader laid out a recovery program for the country. Unlike our friends in the Progressive Conservative Party, he said, "This is precisely what we would do to get us out of this disastrous situation". He laid out the precise steps: one, two, three, four; he broke it down: A, B, C. The Progressive Conservatives say that we must change the national energy policies, make some airy-fairy comments about improving Government and so on. I hope that when Hon. Members stand up to speak following my speech, they will be precise as to their ideas concerning economic recovery.

We know that this country has a great deal of potential. We know that there are alternatives, choices and opportunities which have not been identified or addressed by the Government. Tonight we are being asked to approve the expenditure of $4 billion. The Prime Minister asks us to pull together. From this side we are asking, what is it that we are pulling together? Why are we pulling it together? Where are we pulling it? These are the questions. What are we doing? The Government needs $4 billion to do what? We would simply like someone to tell us what we are pulling together, why we are pulling it and where we are pulling it.

Until the Government can present an industrial strategy to this House of Commons, an economic statement which will lay out in clear, articulate fashion a program which Canadians can support and embrace, this Party will never approve the borrowing of an additional $4 billion.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I am really most anxious to start my speech. I have seldom seen the members opposite as attentive as they are now to what I am about to say to the House and to the Canadian people this evening. Everyone is here to learn something and I fully intend to give them a few lessons here tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to be taking part in the debate this evening, because in recent years when we have been discussing borrowing authority bills, the bills were introduced in a context that was often a very difficult one. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we listened to a statement on the economy by the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), a statement that according to Quebec's editorial writers, and I am thinking of Marcel Roy and Jean-Louis Roy and a host of others, was very well received. One of the editorials appeared under the heading: A glimmer of hope, while another bore the title: Direction and leadership at last. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that people who are complaining that our government failed to provide long-term policies in yesterday's message by the minister entirely failed to understand what the point of the exercise was, because the minister was, in fact, responding to a situation that is temporary. And as I said this morning, during a debate I had with a member from each opposition party who called it a budget, if they want to call it a budget, they are welcome to do so, but it is an economic statement.

However, Mr. Speaker, in the present situation, in this worldwide economic recession, is there any hope at all, is there a light at the end of the tunnel? The unemployment rate is absolutely devastating. In Canada, for instance, it has reached an average rate of nearly 12 per cent. However, we must not forget it is 10 per cent in the United States and 14 per cent in Great Britain, and nearly 15 per cent in Quebec, as you know, Mr. Speaker. It is a situation that is causing great hardship for those who are being affected at the present time and it also causes a general malaise among those who feel the threat of unemployment hanging over them. One thing is very important and it is something I appreciate in the current debate, namely that the government on which people used to depend for solving all their problems, meeting all their aspirations and satisfying all their claims, is no longer the only one to play a role and this, people have finally understood. For the first time since 1940, we have all had to realize, and this is something new or perhaps not so new, that ailing economies cannot be cured, cannot be treated lightly, with stimulants or tranquilizers. Inflation and unemployment are problems that cannot be treated lightly. The present recession has also taught us that remedies that proved effective in the past are not necessarily effective today. Quite often, the exact opposite may be necessary. Take, for instance, Mr. Reagan in the United States who decided to cut taxes and has now brought them back. So all our economies are now convalescing. My hon. colleague from Regina East (Mr. de Jong) is making some inane remarks. A pity I did not understand what he was saying, but I am sure it was pretty inane. It is a habit he has. So all our economies are convalescing, and although each one is a separate and distinct case, they are all suffering from the same disease: inflation. It is the main affliction of all our economies. Look at Canada. To survive, it must be able to compete on international markets. Being competitive is of primary importance if the Canadian economy is to be successful. However, if we look at wage costs in Canada, for instance, we see that wages have increased at a much faster rate than they have in the United States, Japan or Europe. Our export industries are particularly handicapped by this fact, and they are the ones that are competing with other imports. As you know, our wages are already higher than they are in the United States. In the lumber industry, for instance, we see that in Canada it is functioning at only 70 per cent of capacity, and this may go down to 50 per cent.

The fact is that in today's buyers' market, customers go where the lowest prices are to be had. Our costs are not necessarily the lowest if our inflation level and wages are perhaps too high and if there is no advertising. The average rate of inflation in Canada could reach 11 per cent in 1982, that is 4 to 5 per cent higher than in Germany and Japan. It is quite obvious that inflation distorts corporate balance-sheets. Capital gains will often only represent an artificial increase in the worth of assets which correspond to inflation. Corporate profits are often increased by inflation to the extent that revenues reflect such inflation, while deductions are often based on cost prices so that bookkeeping is often distorted. The federal government does not have many means at its disposal to correct those conditions. We could surely, as it has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, take massive financial and tax measures to stimulate the economy. Some people are advocating—we heard them today and even a while ago—a drastic reduction of expenditures and tax measures meant to drastically reduce the federal deficit. Some people suggest a comprehensive price and salary control, while others would like to see some immediate steps taken to intensify inflation control.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has repeated throughout the summer and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said last week that we have to completely change our economic attitude and show once again a greater willingness to maintain some discipline and enforce necessary restrictions. It is to that basic change of outlook that the government has decided to devote its efforts instead of taking drastic, ill-advised and unwise measures. If voluntarism entails a risk, freedom is also jeopardized but a reduced inflation rate is a prerequisite to a constant improvement of our economic welfare and employment.

Inflation, Mr. Speaker, erodes the vital energy of our economic system. It unsettles the self-confidence we need to provide a new impetus to the economy and reduce unemployment. Inflation is the true cause, the root of high interest rates, because as long as a rise of inflation rate is expected, Mr. Speaker, pressures for higher wages will remain strong, the cost structure will continue to worsen and we will be unable to compete abroad. It is therefore imperative that people should stop thinking in terms of continuing inflation because their expectations do add fuel to the fire. Wages are trying to catch up with prices, prices in turn try to keep up with wages, in an endless spiral. We must break out of that vicious circle and governments ought therefore to set the example forthwith.

The $1.1 billion NEED Program announced yesterday is in addition to the $1.4 billion already earmarked for economic renewal since June. Canadians should be told that these are not new investments, but rather a reallocation of funds. Taking a closer look at it, we see that $500 million have been set aside for a new program to develop public utilities or infrastructures required by municipalities and the private sector. It is to be hoped that the provinces will climb aboard the band wagon, precisely in keeping with the renewed spirit of co-operative federalism advocated yesterday by the Minister of Finance, that there will be co-operation where it may have been lacking in the past. I suggest that it is appropriate to remind the people of Quebec, after God knows how many clashes through the media, and other people, that Quebec's employment minister Pierre Marois, who is one of my constituents, has just signed a draft agreement with our Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the hon. member for Winnipeg, in a climate of full co-operation. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there is precious little to be gained by engaging in parochial fisticuffs in an attempt to score a few political points on the backs of the unemployed, of those who are walking the streets in seach of jobs and who are listening to us today. I have a feeling that Canadians will close ranks during the crisis and that the various levels of government will at last begin to co-operate, and that is what we must keep going. In addition to the $500 million, another $150 million in grants is available to new home owners and others who want to renovate their homes. In a riding such as mine, Laprairie, where the house building market is active, that is very important because it creates jobs and fires up the economy.

Then there are $400 million for rail expansion in western Canada.

I could make a whole speech on western transportation problems. I did make a few in the past and perhaps on another occasion I might explain at length what has to be done to revive the transportation industry. Of course, I cannot skim over the $160 annual increase in unemployment insurance premiums, and the $225 employers will pay per employee. Those revenues will account for nearly $2 billion in the fund to which the government itself will contribute additional billions of dollars. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said earlier today, there are three groups contributing to the unemployment insurance fund—the federal government, employers and employees—and the federal government pays in almost 70 per cent of all contributions, employers about 18 per cent and employees 12 per cent. It is unfortunate that members opposite should argue that higher unemployment insurance premiums will create more unemployment. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in the federalist state in which I live and which I want to see, it is quite essential that those who are better off and stand a good chance of surviving in life be even more generous towards others who are not so lucky. Mr. Speaker, that is what I hope will happen in our country.

So those are the job creation programs which will be financed by way of cutbacks in other fields, namely energy, national defence and foreign aid. The Minister of Finance also announced ten changes to the November 1981 and June 1982 budgets. Members opposite are bragging and boasting that they are responsible for those changes. I would suggest that it is quite appropriate to point out that in drafting the economic statement all members of our caucus were just as severe in reminding the former minister and the new Minister of Finance that certain items in his program were hurting badly, particularly with respect to health-related programs. I thought it did not make much sense to levy such a tax, the one which members opposite wanted removed, the one which my colleagues and I wanted removed. The minister did listen to us. Because one thing must be said about the new Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker: he is a good listener. Ever since his appointement 48 days ago, he has been holding a great many meetings and discussions, and instead of isolating himself in an ivory tower, he gave another example of his willingness to hear what people have to say, through his newly created advisory committee which is made up of Canadian experts in fiscal and macroeconomic matters.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is in this context that last July, just before leaving for the Summer recess, we acted to impose 6 and 5 per cent ceilings on civil servants' salaries for the next two years. That is why, as members of the House, we have agreed that our own salaries be not only frozen but cut to show the way to Civil Service employees who are well protected and enjoy benefits unknown to workers in the private sector. We had to be in the forefront. Public servants would not have accepted to be the only ones to bear the brunt and without our own involvement the 5 and 6 program would certainly have failed. In the public sector, there are two ways to fight inflation and other economic woes, one is, monetary restraints and the other tax increases. We are aware that monetary restraints have been in place for several years in Canada, and are most unpopular, although they have succeeded in bringing inflation under control, but the money supply controlled by the Bank of Canada is only one—albeit essential—lever of the government.

My objection is that for too long people seemed to believe that this was the only lever open to control our economy, while there are also monetary or fiscal policies. Fiscal policies have played a major part for quite a long time and the results are not very brilliant, in view of the rising deficit. People are saying that perhaps we are not collecting enough money, but we are currently caught in a strait-jacket and the situation is specially unacceptable. It will cost a lot of money to pay for programs to help needy Canadians who up to now had helped fill up the public coffers with their taxes; but who can no longer afford to pay taxes, and it is in this respect that we are in a straitjacket. Therefore, it is not so much our expenditures other than social expenses to help needy Canadians which are increasing, but rather our revenues that are shrinking because these people are no longer able to pay income tax.

That is why we have to come to the House once more for a few billion dollars. Obviously many will object to it, on the basis of political or economic reasons in an attempt to correct and change a few programs. I feel that a politician's duty is often a difficult one. A good politician can be compared to a good car racer. Anybody can press on the accelerator but he who wins the race is the one who knows when to apply the brakes, who knows that under this government, abundance is no longer the key word and that we shall never have as many investments as we had before. What we must ensure and what the Canadian people are entitled to demand are quality investments. This is the important thing. This is what we must be looking for and what must be emphasized—the quality of investments. Therefore, upon consideration of what the Minister of Finance did yesterday and what he intends to do in the coming months, we realize that quality is here. He could easily have spent four or five billion dollars, but this would have been sheer madness.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I think we have developed a healthy economic policy that will be hard to criticize, even for Hon. Members opposite. They will say it is not good enough, or that it comes too late. But no one can say that it is wrong, and this is what really counts. They are a bit upset because they would like to score political points, since it is their job here to find fault with everything. But precisely, in this spirit of support and co-operation which I hope will be thriving in this House, I think we should overcome this tendency, and together attempt to find solutions.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we have no reason to rejoice these days, but here and there, a few comforting lights appear at the end of the tunnel. Mention should be made that since last August, interest rates have decreased 4 or 5 points. It is a significant sign of recovery which means much lower payments for many investors, therefore giving more money, more cash flow to the people. Interest rates should keep on going down. If we look at the inflation rate, we see that it is not going down as fast as it is in the United States, but it is going down nevertheless. This has an important psychological impact on people. And we cannot help but noticing what is happening in the Stock Exchange; things were not looking too good yesterday and the day before, but the Dow Jones indicator has passed the 1,000 level in the United States, and in Toronto and Montreal, the volume of sales is incredibly high. A lot of people are making a lot of money because confidence is coming back. People are now investing in businesses. That is just what we want. Canadians must change their attitude of playing it safe, their attitude of small time investors who put their savings in a nest egg or in a bank account and leave it there forever.

If we want to lower interest rates, and if people want a good return on their money, we must encourage Canadians to invest and to have faith in this country. And in fact, in my view, that is exactly what we are doing now. Given the extent and the duration of the unemployment situation, one should not stir false hopes. The problem is too serious, it will stay with us for a while. And it is precisely for the people concerned that the minister has made an economic statement yesterday, whether you choose to call it a budget or not. In fact, it is an economic statement because the real budget will come in February or March. So, Mr. Speaker, let me say this in conclusion: as long as our labour costs remain high, and our productivity is low, we will have no other choice but to innovate. American unions have understood the important role they play in the economic structure of the United States. The crisis has made them wiser, more responsible. In Canada, it seems to me that the public is entitled to a similar readjustment, a new form of co-operation. This, Mr. Speaker, will not solve all our problems. But I do want to say in conclusion that we are in the process of solving them, and the signs of improvement are quite obvious.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the fifth Borrowing Authority Act to come before this session of Parliament. Since February 18, 1980, this Government has come to the House and asked for money, and so far in this session they have asked for $47.6 billion. This is an unbelievable sum of money.

Mr. Deans: You agreed to it before. You agreed to it in the spring.

An Hon. Member: You have the socialists going already.

Mr. Deans: But you are a bunch of hypocrites.

Mr. Blenkarn: When they took office, Mr. Speaker, this Government came into power with $5 billion unused borrowing authority. If you take a look at the unused borrowing authority they had, together with the borrowing authority they have taken up because of their—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Order please. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You cannot help these people on my left; they just do not know where they are at. They think they are in a circus. That is why they interfere in Parliament. Their heckling is not worth a damn. If it was any good I would reply to it, but it is not competent so it is not worth replying to.

Mr. Deans: A point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: He is now trying, Mr. Speaker, to get up again, but the truth of the matter is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Hon. Member, in his wisdom, would be prepared to accept a question with regard to the opening comments that he has made?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Mississauga South prepared to accept a question?

Mr. Blenkarn: After I have completed my remarks. I would expect from the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) some reasonable discretion in terms of the kind of heckling that is proper in this House, because proper heckling does something to bring on the quality of remarks and improve a debate; but the kind of heckling we have been getting from the New Democratic Party is a disgrace in this House. It indicates the kind of attitude they bring to this House.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you tell us how you agreed to this in the spring? Tell us how you agreed to give them this money in the spring?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I want to go over the various borrowing authority bills that have come before this House in this session of Parliament. The first one, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, was after the budget of April 21, 1980. That was supposed to be an economic statement. That, Mr. Speaker, was when the words of the Auditor General and the Lambert Commission were still fresh in our minds. You will recall that both of those statements indicated clearly to the people of Canada that the Government had lost control of its spending. Therefore, it was important that that borrowing authority be looked at closely. At that time we were spending $4 for every $3 we took in taxes. The situation is far worse than that today.

Sir, there is nothing wrong with borrowing money for capital goods. I think even the New Democratic Party would agree with that. But there is certainly something wrong with borrowing money to pay the grocery bill. What we have had is this Government coming to the people of Canada, to this Parliament, and saying: we want more money because we are going to spend more money, because we are going to spend and spend and spend, without any reference to productivity or building the country. Just spend. That was the beginning of the Borrowing Authority Bills we faced in this Parliament.

The second Bill was as the result of the October 28, 1980 budget. That Bill was for $14 billion. At that time all Members of this House were concerned. We made several suggestions to the Government. We said that it had better cut down some of its expenses. I myself said that it perhaps should look at the CBC. At that time the CBC, Sir, if you will recall, was spending $577 million. Now the CBC spends $737 million, and despite the rulings from the CRTC about CBC-2, it wants to carry on with another expansion program.

We said the Government had to look at its files, its archives, look at the National Capital Commission, look at the museums, look at Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Look at the various projects you have. Are they still necessary? Are they still fulfilling the original requirements? But it refused to cut. At that time the Government could have cut its borrowing authority to $8 billion and could have easily cut a great deal of program activity, but it wanted to spend and spend and spend.

Mr. Fisher: What about the revenue guarantee, Don?

Mr. Blenkarn: Then we went on to the Bill which resulted from that iniquitous budget of November 12, 1981. That is the bill where the Government wanted $6.6 billion. It said that would cover the current fiscal year. One of the reasons for needing $6.6 billion was it had blown $1 billion in overpayment of interest on the 1981 Canada Savings Bond. The Government just wasted $1 billion. And it continues to waste money.

Throughout 1981 and 1982 we saw Canada geese flying across our screens, telling us how wonderful Canada is. We have had the ads telling us that energy self-sufficiency is this close. We have had the billboards saying that Canada is working. Where is Canada working? The unemployment insurance lines, that is where Canada is working. Now we have the advertising, the propaganda, the absolute and incredible propaganda where they can take our money and send me a box of goodies this long, full of pamphlets and posters and election stickers telling me all about six and five and Canada working together.

Mr. Fisher: I sent you that, Don.

Mr. Blenkarn: Sir, that stuff came under the signature of the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Fisher: I am proud of it.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Hon. Member for Mississauga North says he is proud of the huge waste of taxpayers' money—

Mr. Fisher: I am proud of the program.

Mr. Blenkarn: —on pure, unadulterated propaganda.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Blenkarn: He ought to be ashamed of himself because he should take a look at last year's Auditor General's Report which shows this Government blew at least $50 million in extra photocopying costs.

Mr. Fisher: I like the program, Don, do you?

Mr. Blenkarn: He likes extra photocopying costs, that is the kind of costs he likes.

Well then, Sir, we came to the further Borrowing Authority Bill where the Government came to the House and asked for $15 billion. We said, "You cannot show me this $15 billion. Cut your costs down to $11 billion, and with a limited debate we will let it through, but no more. You want that extra $4 billion, you have to come here." They are here tonight, 15 or 16 weeks after that Bill—

Mr. Deans: After you promised it to them.

Mr. Blenkarn: And all of a sudden the Government needs more money and there seems to be no end to its appetite, because if you look at these almost unbelievably inaccurate figures set out in what is alleged to be a financial statement given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) yesterday, the $4 billion is not enough and the Government is going to be back here again with another Bill and another Bill and another Bill.

When, Sir, is this overwhelming majority of sheep, which does not want to pay any attention to the realities of economics, going to say to their own leadership: enough is enough? Sir, it used to be said by the Members of the New Democratic Party, I have heard it said by them many times, that borrowing or deficit financing, or whatever you call it, is stimulative. I do not know how you can be stimulative by putting the country in debt. Nobody is ever stimulated by a great big debt hanging over their head. This country is faced with a huge debt over its head. Sir, if you have been in business, you may borrow money to buy a machine or buy a plant or something of that nature, and you buy that asset on the basis of its payback. You buy a machine, you probably want in this market a payback in two or three years. You figure the machine must earn enough for you to pay for itself and on that basis you can afford to borrow money to buy it. Where is the payback in this borrowing? Where is the infrastructure being built with this borrowed money? The answer is, Sir, that there is nothing being built. It is being spent on the groceries.

There is no effort being made to cut back on the administration, no effort to cut back on a whole host of programs. I call them alphabet soup programs. We have a couple mentioned here in the budget papers. I see we have a program called CCDP and LEAP and PED, whatever that is, and then of course we have that wonderful program of nip, dip, and ship, and a rehabilitation program of some kind, I have forgotten the initials for that one. You almost have to be a magician to figure out what programs and what new letters they will put together for another program.

Every one of these programs requires a host of administrators. They require a set of applications, usually in quadruplicate or quintuplicate, filed and submitted and read and crossread and a cheque issued, maybe, if you know the right person.

Sir, there has to be a limit to this. There has to be a re-examination by this Parliament, before this Bill is completed, of where we are going in Government expenditures. Surely to goodness this financial statement, which seems to have found $1.1 billion somewhere for further job-creation programs, could find another $2 billion or $3 billion or $5 billion in additional administration expenses.

Sir, let me point out to you one thing very quickly. The National Accounts tabled in the budget papers indicate that expenditures by the Government for current goods and services in the years 1981-82 were $16.898 billion, which have risen to $19 billion, an increase of somewhere around 18 per cent or 19 per cent. Sir, that is the kind of thing which has gone on in one fiscal year. Talk about six and five! The expenses for goods and services have gone up 19 per cent. Where are we going? I admit, Sir, that this budget does say that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has been instructed to make stringent restrictions in spending, and he will be reporting to this House. I say to the Hon. Members opposite that they have an obligation as Members of the Government to insist that the President of the Treasury Board make that report, and that that report be referred to a special standing committee or special committee of this House, it does not matter which. Then we as Members of Parliament could go over that report and over the other items that are available, such as the spending estimates of the Government, to determine which items of spending are essential, which are perhaps only less desirable and which items of spending are really nonessential.

Mr. Blaikie: What about the $6.5 billion for the oil companies that you voted for?

Mr. Blenkarn: You have been around here a long time, Mr. Speaker, and you know as well as I do that there are a host of things that are nonessential.

Mr. Fisher: Give us an idea what you are talking about.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, my friend asked me to give him an idea of what we are talking about. Perhaps he would like to tell me how really essential the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is. How really essential is that, when we have people who cannot pay the mortgage on their home, who cannot buy food for the table? How imperative is it that a government spend money to entertain people at the Grey Cup Game? Is that the kind of thing we should be spending money on when people cannot pay their bills and in many cases cannot get welfare? Is that the kind of spending we should be directing the Government of Canada to make? I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that there are a great number of things and he knows them—

Mr. Fisher: Let us have some more.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, you want a quick one? Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that the other day one of the planes owned by Transport Canada was parked illegally at the Ottawa Airport. The people in the Department of Transport did not like that and they were running the airport, so they imposed a fine of $50 for illegal parking. The airport is owned by the Department of Transport and the plane is owned by the Department of Transport, so one part of the Department took another part of the Department to court and spent $2,000 on legal fees to determine which part of the Department should pay a fine!

That is the kind of thing you do. You laugh. You know where the waste is. That is the kind of thing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let us get on to some things which are positive. Let us go on to consider what we can do to clean up some of the problems we have.

First of all, I think the Government must be commended for taking note yesterday of the suggestions made in the report of the Finance Committee with respect to the Income Tax Act. A number of changes were made that I think will be helpful. I refer particularly to the health plans, the change in northern benefits, cleaning up to some extent the problem of the 12.5 per cent dividend tax, cleaning up the problem with respect to taxing work in progress for professionals and, particularly, the delay with respect to the ill-thought out sales tax plan. But there are a number of other things that must be done and that were not thought out properly. These positive suggestions must be made to the Government.

First of all, we must completely examine the unemployment insurance situation. Unemployment insurance premiums represent a regressive payroll tax. They are anti-employee. What we are trying to do is to put people back to work, and one thing you do not do when you want to put people back to work is make it more expensive to hire people.

The effect of the budget change yesterday was to increase the tax on hiring people a total of $5.52 for each $100 of insurable earnings. That payroll burden is unrealistic. It is damaging to employment. It is the kind of thing that must be rethought. This Parliament must come to grips with unemployment insurance and with what we really can afford in terms of unemployment insurance. We must have a parliamentary inquiry into that problem and into the proper financing of unemployment insurance, particularly in these difficult times when tax money, or even borrowed money for that matter, from the general revenues will have to be used to make sure that people have enough earning power to pay their ordinary household bills. This matter is serious and essential. It is imperative that the Government come to grips with it and trust Parliament again as, to some extent, it trusted Parliament with respect to the study of the Income Tax Act.

Second, the Government must come to grips with the whole question of bail-out. We have seen the Government invest $125 million in Massey-Ferguson this year. We have seen the Government guarantee loans of $1.3 billion to Canadair and $4.50 billion to de Havilland. We have seen the Government decide, for some strange reason and without rationale at all, to back Maislin Transport. In the last week we have seen the Government seemingly get together—and without parliamentary approval, I might add—to do something for Dome Petroleum. There is a further $400 million in the budget which presumably is to be split between de Havilland and Canadair.

We have to look at these borrowings and seriously consider where these Crown corporations are going and where we as a country are going with this bail-out problem. Are we really saving jobs or are we costing the country jobs? When we take money out of the country, from the productive side where it could increase employment, and use it to bail out people who are obviously incapable of running a business profitably, we are probably costing the country jobs, not saving jobs. If these bail-outs are to continue, what we are really doing is saying to those who are productive and capable that they are going to pay taxes to those who are incapable. That does not improve the productivity of Canada, Mr. Speaker. That does not secure permanent and honest and good employment. That is the kind of thing that is anti-employment and anti-productive.

Before any more money is spent—and that includes the $400 million further bail-out money to Canadair and de Havilland—it is absolutely necessary that this advance of money by the Government to corporations cease, whether they be private corporations or Crown corporations. If those corporations cannot stand on their own feet they must be examined in detail by Parliament. The fact is that what we are doing is taking from the capable, those who can create employment, and giving to those who are going to cost us employment. The cost of these bail-outs is unrealistic in terms of jobs.

Speaking of Canadair, in the Challenger Jet we now have Canada's newest Concorde. And speaking of de Havilland, why we are spending money to build an airplane, the A-320 Airbus, when there is a total lack of demand for commercial airplanes in the world, is beyond my comprehension.

The next thing we have to do, and we have already spoken of this but I will mention it again briefly, is to control seriously the propaganda efforts of the Government. There is no way that public money should be used to propagandize the political efforts of a political Party just because it is in power.

We must look very hard at the National Energy Program. This country has more petroleum resources than probably any country in the world. We certainly have more petroleum resources than the entire Middle East in the heavy oil deposits, the ordinary deposits, the tar sands and the like in western Canada. In addition we have deposits, perhaps not proven out enough, in the Beaufort area and on the east coast. In fact, we should be exporting petroleum. If we want to make ourselves self-sufficient in petroleum, we must allow the industry the incentive to go ahead and export if it has a surplus.

One thing which is holding back exploration right now is that there are all sorts of capped gas wells and 100,000 barrels of petroleum being held back from markets because it cannot be sold. Such an effort at self-sufficiency is wrong. We will not become self-sufficient by keeping our reserves buried in the ground and by preventing people from exploring and developing new reserves. The National Energy Program must be reversed. The whole question of employing bureaucrats to administer PIP grants, to pay one oil company because of its share of ownership more money than another, or to worry about whether a company is 50 per cent or 80 per cent Canadian-owned or foreign-owned, really does not have much to do with finding oil, making jobs and building Canada. We want to become self-sufficient. We want to create employment. If we looked at the world we could probably say to some countries such as Japan, for example, that we could give it an assured supply of petroleum; that if the Japanese wanted to invest in a tar sands plant, we would guarantee them so many barrels of oil per year as long as they put up the money. If that kind of negotiation took place, I suspect we could obtain the money and put people to work.

Also I suspect that we would create perhaps 150,000 to 250,000 new jobs in the energy field if we would just get away from the National Energy Program, reverse it 180 per cent and get on with it. Energy resources buried in the ground are not worth anything to anyone. It reminds me of the situation in a place called Belle Isle, Newfoundland. Iron ore reserves were found in that area in the 1880s. Mines were started in the 1890s and carried on until 1966. If iron ore had been found in Belle Isle today, or even ten years ago, no one would have dug it out because mining methods changed, productivity changed and the way we do things changed. That ore would have stayed bottled up forever. We could well wind up, in an effort to be self-sufficient in petroleum, leaving tar sand deposits buried forever, leaving heavy-oil deposits buried forever. It is time to look at our resources and to take advantage of them. God gave them to us. Let us do something to put our people to work.

I made some complimentary comments with respect to the Minister's efforts in his statement yesterday, but he did not address the issues of capital cost allowance, soft costs, reserves or life insurance and annuities. The changes made in our tax system on November 12, 1981 were anti-entrepreneurial, anti-growth and anti-employment. Those changes must be reversed. We must return to the tax system which we had before November 12, 1981.

The Government has already gone through 45 changes or so to that budget. The budget of November 12 is shot full of holes. No one knows where they are going. I call upon the Minister and the Government right now to get back to realism. Let us abolish the November 12 budget, write if off as a bad job. The Government has already shown that it is a bad job. It is time to get down to realism and to get rid of that budget completely.

Next we must have some tax simplicity. Last summer the chartered accountants, lawyers and specialists in income tax came before the Finance Committee. They made clear to us that there was no way that they could simply fill out their own tax returns. The Chairman of the Committee from Coopers and Lybrand told us, "When you get into that field, I am really not quite sure; I will have to have my colleague answer the problem". In other words, the Income Tax Act has become so complicated that even leading chartered accountants cannot be sure as to what are the tax implications with respect to a transaction. They go one step further and say, with respect to small business taxation, that it is far more complicated than large business taxation. People are not able to calculate their taxes or plan their businesses. The problem, when people are treated that way, is that they wind up avoiding tax, evading tax, just not paying tax or dealing in the black economy. This will cause the country untold problems. Therefore, the first thing we must do immediately is to get another committee of the House to work on the Income Tax Act and come up with solutions to simplify it.

I see the Minister is present now. He almost indicated that he will have to present a budget in January or February. He should give us a White Paper, a thought-out proposal, with respect to simplifying the Income Tax Act. I suggest to him that one of the problems with the 12.5 per cent dividend tax matter is that some people would become small businesses and get advantages which other people are not entitled to have. I say that is not hard to correct. All he has to do is to return to the way small business tax was handled prior to 1971. There could be a low rate of tax for all companies for the first $125,000 and a top rate for everything over that amount. There are only 12,000 companies or corporations in the country paying at the high rate of tax. There are 175,000 paying at the low rate of tax. If we had to give a little benefit to those 12,000 corporations, big deal. The Government could take it out of their hides by changing the measures with respect to investment tax credit, the inventory allowance or something of that nature. It would not be very hard. The Act could be simplified enormously. If the Minister is worried about revenue, equity and so on, he could simplify the Act and do it right. It is not difficult. All it requires is a little imagination. I say to the Minister that this is the kind of thing we expect from him as a Minister of Finance. He should change that Income Tax Act and make it simpler.

I have taken quite a bit of time, but I do want to mention one more thing, Mr. Speaker. I think it is absolutely essential that the Foreign Investment Review Act be altered. It is ridiculous that I have a constituent who is being prosecuted. He is a Canadian. He happens to own 51 per cent of KCR Limited, a company that imports kerosene heaters. My constituent is now before the Federal Court of Canada because he happens to own 51 per cent of the company. He has $8,000 in the company, and the American head office has about $200,000 in the company. The Foreign Investment Review Agency says this is a hidden way for an American to come in and sell kerosene heaters in Canada. There are lots of ways around that problem. I do not see any reason, in the interests of protecting Canadian business and investment, that we should be worried about foreign investment when the amount is less than $10 million. After all, that is not going to change the makeup of Canada one way or the other. We want investment in the country. We want jobs and we want people doing things in the country. We want people paying income tax and doing things in the social and in the voluntary fields building our country. We really do not have to worry about whether a transaction as small as $250,000 is foreign-held or Canadian-held. It really does not matter. The thing is that we want to put people to work to get things done. Surely the Minister must realize that when things occur like those that have occurred under the terms of the Foreign Investment Review Act you turn off Canadians and you turn off people who come to Canada to invest and to create.

I say to you, Sir, that it is very important that the Foreign Investment Review Act be altered, and I say to you that a $10-million threshold limit is appropriate.

I want to say that the budget should be based on a national accounts basis. We are spending in excess of $90 billion. One dollar out of every $3 that we take in taxes goes to pay interest. The share of borrowed money represents in excess of 6 per cent of the Gross National Product of the country. We have got to the point where the amount of money expended is some 25 per cent of the GNP on a national accounts basis. The Minister may say that a national accounts basis is not a fair way of looking at it. But I want to point out to the Minister that the Auditor General, in Volume I of the Public Accounts for this year, clearly pointed out that the method by which this Government has been doing its accounting is all wrong. As well, with respect to the Oil Compensation Fund, the Government must now do its accounting to treat those accounts properly in the Public Accounts. I say that the only kind of accounts that we can ever compare are the national accounts. If we do not compare national accounts, we wind up with peculiar changes that have taken place in the way the budget is kept so budgetary accounts are not comparable from year to year.

This is a serious matter. We are now in excess of 25 per cent of the Gross National Product being handled by this Government. In addition, we have an enormous amount of the Gross National Product that is handled by provincial Governments. Also we have the handling of the accounts of the country by Crown corporations. Well over 50 per cent of the Gross National Product of this country is handled by governments. When my friend in the New Democartic Party says that the problem is that people cannot purchase the goods, I say he is right. The reason people cannot purchase the goods is because the goods are too expensive. Why are the goods too expensive? Because we use so much of our labour, energy, effort and productivity in governing ourselves, that is the reason. Therefore, the cost of everything we produce has to bear the burden of government. No wonder our goods are too expensive and no wonder we are not too productive. No wonder we have problems. What we must do is to lower, not our expectations, but our cost of production. What we must do is to become more productive in that sense. What we must do is to produce more and use less of our energies in governing ourselves and more in reducing the price of what we produce so that we can be more competitive in the world. Until we do that, we will never have enough money in the hands of the consumer to pay for the goods produced. The goods have to be produced less the tax wedge. The cost of the Government's wedge is to high. When that wedge is so high, as high as it is today, we will continue to have massive unemployment and lack of productivity. That is the challenge we face in this country. We will never solve that problem by borrowing more money and trying to borrow our way to prosperity.

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) consider a question concerning the remarks that he has just made?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, earlier in his remarks the Hon. Member referred to the CBC. It seemed to me at least that he was advocating that perhaps the CBC should be done away with. Is the Hon. Member espousing official Conservative policy which advocates the abolition of the CBC? Could the Hon. Member answer yes or no to that question?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of famous questions to which you are asked to answer yes or no. The Applebaum Commission took a look at the cost of producing drama by the CBC and found that it could be produced a good deal cheaper elsewhere. There are a whole lot of things that we are doing in entertainment and broadcasting on a national basis that could be done a lot cheaper, and my hon. friend knows that.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Blenkarn: My hon. friend knows it is a lot cheaper to tender and hire to get something done than to have it done with your own forces and with that organization. I say to the Hon. Member that the organization is not productive in comparison with other organizations in producing television.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due regard to the Hon. Member, I must advise him that the time allotted to him expired.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, that is a hard act to follow. I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate, which is really the third budget debate in this House in less than a year, smuggled in under the guise of a statement on the economic and financial outlook of the Government of Canada, along with Bill C-128.

Bill C-128 as introduced by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) provides authority for the Government to borrow an additional $4 billion in new money in the current fiscal year. When combined with the $7 billion in borrowing authority granted in Bill C-125, plus the $6.6 billion granted in Bill C-111, plus $6.3 billion left over from previous years, the Government, according to my estimation, will have a total borrowing authority of something like $21.2 billion in the coming fiscal year. I am sure that you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a tremendous amount of money. In my opinion, it represents an excessive demand upon the savings and energies of some 24 million Canadians, while placing tremendous power in the hands of a few people.

I listened very carefully to the Minister of finance (Mr. Lalonde) yesterday when he addressed the House. I could not help but notice at least one difference between him and his predecessor. At least he smiles while he is driving the knife directly into the pocket book of the Canadian taxpayer. He is also the master of what I call double-speak. In one sentence he says that he is announcing arrangements designed to relieve the workers and employers of this country from the full burden of mounting unemployment insurance costs. Then, on page 13, he announces an increase in workers' contributions from $1.65 per 100 to $2.30, while employers will pay $3.22. I ask him, whatever happened while he was doing these computations? Whatever happened with six and five?

This is, of course, not the total amount. On the next page we read that these increases are so low that they will require the Government to advance another billion dollars to the unemployment insurance account in the year 1983 over and above the normal contribution. Why not simply say that it is necessary to increase taxes of the workers and the industrialists of this nation, those who are left to pay the bills, that the Hon. Minister is raising the taxes by another $2 billion just to take care of the unemployed?

Another example, among many, of the doublespeak of the Minister of Finance can be found on page 3. There he states:

> First, we must continue to practice fiscal responsibility. We must persist in restraining government spending. We must strive to contain the rise of the deficit even while the recession cuts into government revenues and raises public expenditures.

It is not only the recession that has raised public expenditures. It is the foolish, extravagant expenditures and actions of this particular Government. How can the Minister say that he will persist in restraining Government spending, and then say in the same speech on page 7 that the $10 billion deficit predicted by his predecessor last November, which was upgraded in June to something like $19.6 billion, is now predicted in October to be $23.6 billion? I suppose that he realizes this is an increase of some one and one-third times more than the November estimate.

Using that yardstick, a final deficit in this budget may well be in the $26 billion or $27 billion area. We are a nation of 24 million people. A deficit of $24 billion is really $1 billion for every million Canadians. How can this government have the gall to say that it is practising fiscal responsibility? I submit that it does not have a clue as to the actual meaning of the word.

The United States is a nation of approximately 240 million people. The deficit for that nation, comparable to our own, would be $240 million. Yet their deficit is listed in yesterday's press at $110.7 billion for 1982, and they are calling it the year of the greatest red ink in that nation's history. On a percentage basis, the United States deficit is less than half of the deficit in Canada. A comparable figure for Canada's deficit would be in the $11 billion to $12 billion bracket. If the United States administration, with all the demands that are made upon it nationally and internationally, can come up with these figures, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why can we not manage to do the same in Canada?

I have seen flip-flops in my day but never was it so apparent in the House as in the two budgets introduced by the "laird" of Cape Breton which showed his complete lack of business experience and complete lack of compassion for the people of Canada.

Yesterday's budget speech by the present Minister of Finance reminded me of an old Laurel and Hardy comedy. Stanley and Ollie were trying to build a house. Every time that Stanley would put a plank in place, Oliver, when reaching for a second plank, would knock the first one down. This operation continued for some time until Stanley noticed that no progress was being made. He then reached into his lunch bucket, brought out a plate, and the scene ended with Ollie being smashed in the face with a cream pie. Somewhat disturbed and unhappy, he left the scene of destruction, which is exactly what happened Wednesday in this House.

We have gone through almost an entire year of uncertainty, indecision and a lack of business development throughout this country simply because of the stubborn arrogance on the part of the Government which failed to realize its mistakes and take the necessary action to mend its ways. This, of course, is what always happens when one puts round pegs into square holes.

In my opinion, this third budget in less than a year will still not stimulate the economic recovery of which we are capable because it does not address the fundamental question, which is the curtailment of extravagant and unnecessary Government expenditures. Bill C-128 simply buttresses that assertion. Obviously this Government is now aware of the problem, for the Minister of Finance stated that the world recession has cut our economy to the bone. We have lost half a million jobs during the past year, and almost a million and one-half among us are looking for work. Many others have temporarily given up the search for gainful employment. Virtually no Canadians have been untouched by the recession. In every region of the country those who have been spared the worst have relatives, friends or neighbours who are struggling to cope with hardship and insecurity, be they unemployed textile workers in Quebec, ground fishermen in the Atlantic, idle lumbermen in B.C. or laid-off miners or autoworkers in Ontario.

There will be a few more unemployed after the next election, and they all will be on that side of the House. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that never in my 25 years in the House have I listened to such a sordid admission by a Cabinet Minister of his government's neglect and mismanagement of our economy, and little that he did will restore the confidence of Canadians in this country during this period of crisis.

I do not agree with the Minister of Finance when he says that no solution exists to resolve our special present extraordinary economic situation. This is somewhat like the poison that is being mixed in some drugs today by some crank who obviously hates humanity. It is the kiss of death. We are still a great country, the second largest land mass on this globe. We have untold natural resources in every Province of Canada as well as in the Yukon and Northwest Territories and only 24 million people to share the wealth. We have more fish than we can fry, more wheat than we can eat and vast reserves of coal, gold, silver, nickle, copper, uranium, oil and timber. You name it and we have it.

Ask yourself, "What would the Almighty have had to give us Canadians as a nation to make us all wealthy?" We as Canadians are the envy of practically every other nation on the earth. No one will ever convince me that we could not do better as a nation if we had proper leadership and started to concentrate on developing our economy and working together on those things that unite us rather than concentrating on those things that divide us.

There has been too much divisive, non-productive legislation introduced to date by this administration. The backlash from some of these policies have brought us to the brink of economic disaster. This is not Government planning, this is a Government drifting inexorably into a whirlpool of depression. Its ineptitude is bringing us all down into the depths of despair. Amid all of this gloom and doom, however, the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) did try, without success, to cheer us up a bit with his three TV spectaculars. It was Mork, in my view, without Mindy. If it was a tryout for him in the role of a newscaster after leaving office, I do not believe it was very successful. Our Prime Minister asked Canadians to trust him, but he is the man who campaigned against wage and price controls in 1974 and then imposed them in 1975. He campaigned along with his entire Party against our program to raise the gasoline tax by 18 cents in 1980. Since that time he has imposed a much higher tax, not only on gasoline but also on home-heating oil, which we believe should be accepted.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House deemed to have been moved under Standing Order 40.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—WEST COAST WORK STOPPAGE—MINISTER'S POSITION. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER RESUMPTION OF WORK

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon in the House I had a chance to pose a very serious question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) regarding a very unfortunate labour stoppage on the west coast. All exports of grain, potash, sulphur and lumber and almost all exports of coal have been stopped. We know that Canada is very much a trading nation and that to be a trading nation, we must export. We also know that for those of us on the Prairies, the ports on the west coast are the only ones we can use on a year-round basis. It therefore becomes very important to us that those ports function at peak capacity on a year-round basis.

The work stoppage has been in effect since a week ago Monday. It now appears from the statement yesterday, not by the Minister of Labour but, rather, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), that the work stoppage will continue for at least two weeks. This causes very serious concern to those of us in western Canada who are directly affected. It should be of major concern to every citizen of this country and should be taken extremely seriously by the Government. It seems absolutely ludicrous to many of us that at a time when, by all accounts, somewhere in the neighborhood of 1.5 million people are unemployed, we should allow work stoppages like this to occur.

On assuming his portfolio, the Minister of Labour made a statement which I will paraphrase. He said he thought strikes were outdated and that another form of settling disputes should be in place. I thought that was a bold statement for a new Minister and I congratulate him for it because I certainly think it has some merit. However, with the chance to act and become directly involved, putting some of his apparent beliefs into action, he has fallen much short of them.

Yesterday I first tried to find out from him whether he thought the damage to the total economy caused by this dispute between labour and management was of such magnitude that we could allow the dispute to continue. It seems to me, and to most reasonable Canadians, that the dispute between labour and management is not great enough to allow the total number of ports on the west coast to be shut down. I think most people would agree with that.

I also tried to find out what the Minister intended to do, and how long it would take before the Government assumed its responsibility, stepping in and ensuring that these ports export those commodities produced in this country to which the Hon. Member who spoke previously referred. I received no real response from him.

It was interesting to me that less than an hour later the Minister of Finance stated in his speech, which was really a budget speech, whether he wants to admit it or not, that if the parties did not resolve their differences by Monday, the Government would accept its responsibility. By that, I assume he meant that the Government is prepared to step in and consider back to work legislation.

Let me briefly refer to what is being offered to the longshoreman on the west coast. We have gone through the labour-management negotiations. The Allan Hope report recommended that on top of an hourly base-rate of $12.55, there be an additional increase in the first year of $1.60 an hour and $1.55 an hour in the second year. That seems to be extremely generous because it is more than 12 per cent or more than twice the six and five to which the Government is referring in the first year, and the same in the second year. It is in the order of 13 per cent or 14 per cent in the first year and slightly less than that in the second year. I fail to see why, if the Government is serious about its six and five program, it would have any hesitation at all about stepping in and imposing a settlement, if that were the last recourse, on the basis of the conciliation report. There should be no concern there, based on the Government's six and five program.

The other thing that the Government is playing with and playing with very seriously is Canada's international reputation as a reliable supplier of raw materials. We have a record grain crop on the prairies in terms of quantity. Over the past two or three years we have managed to build up a somewhat tarnished reputation as a reliable supplier of grain. We must look after our customers in terms of things we can do; solving the man-made problems. We know we cannot predict, or do very much about, bad weather, mud slides and snow slides which shut off rail passage to the west coast. We know these are going to cause problems and there is nothing we can do about them. However, we can do something about the man-made problems; and that is what we face.

I see the parliamentary secretary here this evening. He is listening. I hope he will respond in a somewhat positive fashion to the suggestions I am going to make.

The Government should, first, step in and the Minister of Labour should personally become involved and see these are meaningful negotiations. Second, when the negotiations are going on, the people should go back to work. There would be nothing wrong with that. It would indicate goodwill on both sides. We would then be earning the much needed export dollars we so desperately need. The west coast ports would be adding to employment in this country instead of causing additional unemployment at a time when we cannot afford one more Canadian out of work. It is already going to be a long cold out-of-work winter for too many Canadians.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) for his very interesting question. I think it would be very useful if I briefly outlined the chronology of events to date in the dispute.

The dispute concerns renewal of a collective agreement which expired on December 31, 1981 covering some 3,500 longshoremen in various ports on the west coast. The parties to the dispute, the British Columbia Maritime Employers' Association and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (Canadian Area) met in direct negotiations over a period of some three months without reaching agreement on a new contract.

The Minister subsequently appointed a conciliation officer to assist the parties, but his efforts were unsuccessful. On March 3, 1982 he appointed Mr. Allan Hope, Q.C. of Prince George, B.C. as conciliation commissioner in the dispute.

Mr. Hope was initially successful in bringing the parties back to the bargaining table for direct negotiations, but he too was unsuccessful in assisting the parties in resolving their differences. He subsequently filed his final report with the Minister and it was released to the parties on August 13.

The BCMEA indicated that they were prepared to accept the recommendations of the conciliation commissioner as the basis for a new collective agreement, but the ILMU rejected the total report as an unacceptable package, at the same time indicating a willingness to negotiate further on those items where it was not prepared to accept the conciliation commissioner's recommendations.

The parties acquired the legal right to strike or lockout on August 21, 1982. Since that time, the parties have met several times in direct negotiations with little progress being made towards a final settlement. The union held a series of one-day port closures to conduct informational sessions for their people and in addition, instituted what they termed a "work-monitoring program" which effectively slowed the unloading and loading of ships to the point where several major shipping consortia began diverting their vessels from Vancouver to the Port of Seattle. This situation culminated with the BCMEA locking out the longshoremen on October 19.

On Monday of this week, the Minister sent a telegram to the parties in which he strongly advised them to immediately resume negotiations. He made it clear that, failing an early settlement of the dispute, the Government would accept its responsibility, repugnant though it might be, to bring about resumption of vital shipping operations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

THE CONSTITUTION—GOVERNMENT HELP FOR MINORITIES INVOLVED IN COURT ACTIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) concerning the financial assistance granted by the federal government to official language minorities in cases dealing with clauses 93 to 133 of the British North America Act. Indeed, since February 1978, the federal cabinet has authorized the Department of Justice to give assistance to the plaintiffs in such cases either by providing the services of counsels to help them prepare their legal argument or by granting some funds. I would like to ask the federal government to extend such an assistance to cover clause 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As we know, since the Charter has come into effect, constitutional guarantees are given such as the right to education for official language minorities. Before the adoption of the Charter, those constitutional and educational rights and guarantees came under the denominational provisions of clause 93 in the Constitution and were entirely inadequate as far as language protection was concerned. To understand perfectly well that situation, Mr. Speaker, we have to consider the social and historic context in which our Fathers of Confederation lived.

As a matter of fact, in 1867, religion played an essential part. The two cultural communities were separated by the religious issue. Traditionally, Catholics were French-speaking whereas English-speakers were for the most part Protestant. Therefore, when the 1867 Constitution was drawn up, this social reality was the first to be recognized. Language rights were in some way protected through religious differences. This situation remained until 1981, when the Charter of Rights changed all the rules of the game. Education of our children on the basis of religion still remains but in addition, we have a constitutional right to have them educated in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds. Some people might be surprised by my request, however, if you look back through history, Mr. Speaker, you will easily realize that it has always been very difficult for French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec to have their rights to be educated in their own language recognized. French schools that are now available have all been acquired after years of struggling; moreover they are continuously threatened, either by budgetary cuts, by the alarming rate of assimilation or the ever-decreasing birth rate, or simply by administrative problems created by various provincial levels. Therefore, the minority must not only struggle to get a new school, but they must fight without respite to operate that school which was given to them through some arm-twisting. We must also go back in time to fully understand the situation. The Constitution of 1867 contained some provisions regarding how majorities should treat their minority groups.

Whether the majorities actually complied and whether they acted responsibly in this respect is another story. In some provinces, these provisions were not observed and in others, these rights were categorically denied. For instance, it took seventy years to remedy the situation in Manitoba, where the provincial government had decided to act against the Constitution. And what about Ontario's infamous Regulation 17, which had the effect of banning the teaching of French in this province. Thus, in theory, the 1867 Constitution provided guarantees, but in practice they were not always observed. Why not? Because quite often, francophone minorities were isolated and purposely weakened by provincial governments which left them to their own resources, and so it was a very slow process to obtain the concessions and advantages they did manage to get.

That is how Franco-Ontarians managed to get a few French schools. Let us not forget that as the present government sees it, these concessions to francophones are not rights that have been granted but privileges which could be taken away at any time.

Faced with this situation and observing the reluctance of provincial governments to treat their minorities in a manner that was fair, generous and just, the federal cabinet set up a program for assistance in cases where provincial laws were challenged in relation to Section 93 and 133 of the British North America Act. That decision has already brought results. I am thinking, for instance, of the Forest case in Manitoba and, more recently, of the case heard by Judge Deschenes in which the constitutionality of Bill 101 was challenged. If we look at the court actions, our minorities have indeed made some progress. As such court proceedings are long lasting, involved and expensive, the Government of Canada should, of necessity, provide assistance to individuals and groups who are fighting for their rights. It should be emphasized that when a French-speaking resident of Ontario wishes to oppose a piece of legislation or a regulation established by the government of his own province, he has to fight against the big machine of the Department of Justice through the Attorney General. Individuals or groups find themselves in a situation where they must face high legal costs while their opponents can use public funds and a team of highly experienced legal advisors.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by saying that the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms has given new rights and hopes to Canadian minorities. Now, we must provide them with the means to have them recognized in their daily lives, because their political representatives here have willingly agreed to transfer part of their powers to Canadian courts, so that people must now have easy and inexpensive access to these courts.

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if this issue had not been raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I should probably have raised it myself outside the House. Not that it is not in my view one of the most important elements of linguistic minorities, rights which have been guaranteed by the Constitutional reform last spring, but because in a just and democratic society, it is only normal and legitimate that the majority should facilitate court access to the individuals and minorities whose basic rights are being jeopardized.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind you, if I may, that the request the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier made yesterday and is making again today is not exceptional. There have been several cases in our country where the Canadian government has provided financial assistance to individuals and groups who sought to challenge provincial or even federal legislations in court. I would remind them, for instance, that the Canadian Expropriation Act reimburses a plaintiff if he wins his case. The same applies to the Canada Pension Plan. The legal department does the same for veterans' pensions. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs finances individuals or groups under certain conditions when it is in the interest of the consumer. The Department of Justice and the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs financed famous cases in the past, especially within the context of the James Bay project in Quebec, where the plaintiffs were awarded high legal costs. There is therefore nothing new in the request made this evening by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. He is right to point out that we have had since 1978 a program available to all Canadians and which was used effectively in Manitoba and Quebec to help financially those with claims under sections 93 and 133 to go before the courts.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I share wholeheartedly the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, and I can tell him that I hope I will be in a position by the end of the year to inform the House that a financial backing in support of Section 23 of the constitutional Act of 1981 will be brought about.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION ON SALE OF CROWN ZELLERBACH COMPANY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to cover a rather complicated subject quickly. It relates to the question I put yesterday in the House to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley).

The Government of Canada sees itself as supporting the forest industry in this country by subsidizing or providing incentives for house building. I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) perhaps overestimated it in his remarks when he said that two sawmills could cut sufficient lumber to provide for the housing needs of Canada. In fact, even then, the forest industry of British Columbia would still be at a complete standstill. I think the answer given by the Minister yesterday and the program put forward by the Prime Minister indicate a great depth of ignorance about the present situation in the forest industry in Canada.

I should like to point out several factors Mr. Speaker. First of all, there has been an abandonment of Canada by major U.S. forest companies which formerly had operations in this country. Rayonier of Canada has left. It sold its assets to Western Forest Products. International Paper has left. It sold its assets to Canadian Pacific Investments. Before us today is the prospect of Crown Zellerbach of Canada being sold to a New Zealand firm and, in fact, the parent company retrenching in the United States.

The interesting aspect of all those sales is that the firms left with one thing, and undoubtedly Crown Zellerbach will leave with this also; that is, a contract for the parent company, now an international competitor and no longer an operator in Canada. Those companies will have the responsibility for the international marketing of Canadian forest products. This is a disaster, Mr. Speaker, because our foreign competitors in the United States, which will no longer have an interest in Canada, will be responsible for selling Canadian forest products. This involves three major corporations, Mr. Speaker.

Another aspect of the forest industry is the fact that MacMillan Bloedel was recently the subject of a takeover by the Noranda Corporation. There is a persistent rumour that MacMillan Bloedel will be integrated, division by division, into the Noranda Corporation and that the corporate structure of that major forest producer, one of the strongest in the world with a major international marketing capability controlled by Canadians, will be broken. The integrity of that corporate structure will be broken and the efficiency lost to the Canadian international forest marketing effort. The disappearance of those four companies from the Canadian scene, taking with them their international marketing capability, would spell disaster, Mr. Speaker.

There is a question about why this is happening, Mr. Speaker. I should like to put forward three short ideas before the Parliamentary Secretary enlightens us on what the Canadian Government intends to do about this great structural problem other than the incentive.

The first question is why these companies would leave. I suggest it is because the forest industry and the forest resource in Canada has been treated like a mine and high-graded. What we are left with is the remnants in an impaired condition.

Over the years we have seen the alienation of a great deal of forest land and, I would say, the depletion of the capability, in many areas, of the forest soil as a result of poor management. In Canada the regeneration of the forest is an 80-year cycle compared to some sub-tropical regions and the southeastern United States where there is a 40-year regeneration period. In addition, in taking their allowable annual cut the forest companies have taken it out of valley bottoms, easily accessible areas where it has been cheap to log the trees. The trees that remain are up on the mountain slopes, in inaccessible regions, so it is going to be very expensive to get them out. Canadian forest resource material will no longer be competitive, therefore, with those companies that wisely husbanded their resources.

In short, Mr. Speaker, over the years we have seen our forests depleted by fire, by insect and disease-kill and by logging. We have not undertaken reforestation programs to replace the loss. Finally, our forest reserve is no longer what it was. Perhaps the American companies see that it is time to leave this country because the forest base is no longer here.

There is a second very serious aspect. Four of the major corporations which managed the forest and contributed $13 billion in earnings of foreign export credit in the country have left to return to the United States in an attempt to recapture the market there, to retrench there, to invest there and to reorganize its forests. If they obtain the co-operation of the administration in the United States to pace the recovery market and to fight off the intrusion or penetration of foreign competitors through agencies such as the International Trade Commission, and through some very skillful and very tough-minded trade bargaining, we will find that we will not be allowed into that market again. At the same time they have retained the responsibility for marketing the Canadian products that exist in the international market. It is clearly a suicide mission if there ever was one.

Yesterday I asked the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion if he would be prepared to intervene in the Crown Zellerbach sale through the mechanism of FIRA and through the direct intervention of the Canadian Government to ensure that the sale of this corporation was in the interests of Canadian people and in the interests of strengthening the Canadian forest industry rather than its fragmentation and gradual weakening. He did not appear to understand the depth of the problem and the doomsday scenario which face Canadians in this very vital industry.

Of course, the second aspect is the international marketing effort. There is a desperate need for a Canadian-controlled international forest products marketing corporation. I hope the Government wakes up in time basically to save this effort for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer briefly the four questions put to me. We are dealing with the sale of the Crown Zellerbach Corporation of Canada Ltd., a subsidiary of the Crown Zellerbach Corporation of San Francisco. It is correct that this company is negotiating the sale of 84 per cent of its shares and right now, some Canadian as well as American companies have indicated their interest as possible buyers. First of all, I want to stress that an article in yesterday's Gazette mentioned the matter. Consequently, it is open for public discussion. In addition, I want to stress first that in the forestry sector as a whole sales have declined by more than 6 per cent in comparison with the same semester last year and second, that wood and paper shipments are down by 9.5 per cent. The fact that the industry is operating at only 80 per cent of capacity accounts for the fact that the American company wants to sell its Vancouver subsidiary. In any case, this very afternoon, the Department of Industry and Commerce received a telegram confirming that a New Zealand firm, Fletcher Challenge Ltd., is currently negotiating with Crown Zellerbach of San Francisco the take over of the assets of the Canadian subsidiary. The negotiations have not been concluded, but they are being actively pursued, and as soon as an agreement is reached—if it ever is, because negotiations being what they are, a satisfactory outcome is by no means certain—the Hon. Member will so be advised. Obviously, before Fletcher Challenge Ltd., from New Zealand, can take over that company, namely Crown Zellerbach from Vancouver, it will have to abide by all FIRA's criteria and requirements which means, as Hon. Members know, that such a transaction must be beneficial to Canadians. Assuming the take over does take place, I want to assure the Hon. Member that the provinces concerned will be consulted as well on this matter. I realize that time is running out, Mr. Speaker, but there are three other matters I would like to raise. First, about the forest industry, it is a well known fact that DREE and the provinces have come to an agreement on the modernization of pulp and paper facilities; Second, there is an agreement on reforestation between the provinces and the federal government, under which the federal government pays large amounts to insure that Canadian forests be of high quality and protected against unstructured deforestation.

MEDICAL CARE

PREMIUM INCREASES UNDER GROUP SURGICAL-MEDICAL INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, whereas the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has authorized large increases in the monthly premiums payable under the federal Group Surgical-Medical Insurance Plan, increases of between 30 per cent and 100 per cent, effective August 1, 1982, and whereas these increases are clearly a violation of the Government's own six and five per cent limits, and wreak an intolerable hardship on many war veterans, widows, and other pensioners, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That Cabinet order the President of Treasury Board to roll back immediately GSMIP premium increases of more than 30 per cent, which were announced several weeks ago, to a maximum 6 per cent effective August 1, 1982.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, whereas, in a memo circulated on Monday, October 25, Canada Post smugly announced its intention to follow the requirements of the six and five program by limiting its latest increase to only two cents, or 6.6 per cent, forgetting that the resentment has barely subsided over the incredible 13-cent or 76 per cent jump in rates last year, and whereas that rate increase was conveniently implemented just before the six and five program was tabled, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That, in fairness to the Canadian people, postal rates be maintained at their present level for the foreseeable future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF ALBERTA NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the NDP in Alberta is promising to protect property rights, and whereas the NDP and the Liberals in Ottawa took property rights out of the Charter, after the Progressive Conservative Party put property rights into the Charter; therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the people of Canada beware of a party that speaks with a forked tongue.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTION MINISTER ACT AS MEDIATOR IN WEST COAST PORTS DISPUTE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which I am sure will be supported by all members of this House. In view of the adverse economic effects of the strike/lockout on the West Coast, and the fact that agriculture is one of the only sectors that has been operating at nearly full capacity, and in view of the hardships thereby caused to farmers and railway workers, I move a motion that is based on a precedent set by the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), when he was Minister of Labour. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That this House urges the Minister of Labour to go to Vancouver and make himself available to act as a mediator in this dispute, and to stay in Vancouver until a satisfactory resolution is achieved.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR RESOLUTION OF WEST COAST PORTS DISPUTE

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The shutdown of shipping at the Port of Vancouver is costing farmers $8 million per day in lost grain sales. Canada's reputation as a major exporting nation is challenged. In addition, western farmers have produced the largest grain crop on record and the economic impact is great to this country. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Government give more than lip service to solving the very serious situation that exists and take some affirmative action and order the dispute resolved.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PEARSE COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, there are serious rumours circulating on the West Coast to the effect that the West Coast Fisheries Act will be enacted by this Government in December by Order in Council which will include major recommendations of the Pearse Report, including those for ground fish species. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the Minister of Fisheries make a statement on motions elaborating on the Government's intentions so that the fishermen so deeply affected by this Report will not be taken by surprise.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

CALL FOR ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance, in his "this-is-not-a-budget" budget, stated that interest rates are now at levels comparable to those of two years ago, and whereas the five-year conventional mortgage rate in October, 1980, was 14.5 per cent compared to the latest figure of 16 per cent, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Minister look once again and more carefully into the differences between the mortgage market of two years ago and today's mortgage market and offer some concrete assistance to those home owners in difficulty with mortgage renewal at rates that are still far too high.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DISARMAMENT

SUPPORT URGED FOR WORLD REFERENDUM

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas 70 per cent of the voters who marked their ballots in municipal referenda this Wednesday in Saskatchewan voted "yes" for disarmament, and whereas people in the town of Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, which is next to the bombing range where the Cruise missile will be tested, voted 70 per cent in favour of stopping the testing, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That the Canadian Government introduce at the United Nations a motion calling for a world referendum on disarmament, and put into practice the Prime Minister's proposal of suffocation by cutting short negotiations on the testing of the Cruise missile, testing which will be opposed by thousands of Canadians at rallies across the country tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON USE OF SATELLITE DISH RECEIVERS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, two years ago the Governemnt said it would take no action against owners of satellite dish receivers but that their use was illegal. Six weeks ago the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) announced that some owners of dishes would be prosecuted, contrary to the rule of law. Last week the Minister opened a dish manufacturing plant in southern Ontario. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That the Minister of Communications be requested to clarify what Government policy in this area truly is so that Canadians, who are investing hard cash in the manufacture and purchase of these products, will know whether their investment is safe or whether and when they may expect the dish police to come calling.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, over the past few months hundreds of unemployed forestry workers and others in B.C. alone have been cut off regular UIC payments as they entered into the Employment Bridging Assistance Program, and have been forced to wait without incomes for up to six to eight weeks and more while the employment bureaucracy and the Minister just fiddle around. These victims are the latest to be added to the thousands who have to go on welfare or rely on charity while waiting week upon week for the UIC benefits to which they are entitled. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House present the Emperor Nero Award with dead maple leaf cluster to the Minister of Employment and Immigration in recognition of his continuing foul-ups and fiddling while unemployed Canadians burn, and urge him to stop feeding unemployed Canadians to the lions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONSTRUCTION PROJECT TENDERS

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, the major theme of the Prime Minister's three messages was trust. Trust is an essential element in democracy. Recently in my area three separate instances have been brought to my attention in which contracts with the Government of Canada have been awarded in circumstances which abuse normal tendering practices. In consideration of this I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That this House enjoin the Government of Canada to guarantee that, when inviting tenders for government construction projects, all conditions of tender be scrupulously observed to avoid the inference of political or other unworthy consideration which destroys the spirit of trust of which the Prime Minister spoke and the trust upon which the future unity of our nation is so dependent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROVISION OF FULL-TIME JOBS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has announced the New Employment Expansion and Development Program. He said in his budget speech, and I quote, "It is expected to provide jobs for 60,000 individuals over a period of 18 months". Will those 60,000 jobs be full-time jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that this is a direct job-creation program and these jobs would be of a temporary nature, at least 20 weeks. But that will depend, obviously, also on the co-operation of industry in many instances. Many of these jobs will be of a permanent nature and will be extended; other jobs that may be created, also in co-operation with the provinces, may be of a permanent nature. That will have to be assessed as the Program develops. The 60,000 jobs I have announced are going to be directly created by that Program. I have not included the indirect job creation that results from any such activity.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Minister missed the question but he did tell the House that what was announced by him a couple of days ago, as 60,000 full-time jobs, will in fact be 60,000 20-week jobs; or perhaps there might be something more depending on somebody else doing something. This is a "maybe" program.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM DETAILS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask the Minister about the details of this Program. He said in his budget speech that his colleague, the minister on unemployment, "will announce shortly the details of the new Program". Let me ask the Minister if those details are ready. Does the Government know what it is proposing?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we know very well what we are proposing, but the Leader of the Opposition has to make up his mind. He cannot on the one hand accuse the Government of refusing to consult and having everything ready and at the same time, while I was speaking the other day, I heard him shout that that was no consultation, because we were proceeding with the Program without really consulting with the provinces. Now he is asking that we announce all the details before we have completed the discussions. I would say to him, make up your mind if you want consultation or if you do not.

We are consulting with the Provinces at the present time. We are adopting a flexible attitude on this and we will release details once the consultations have taken place. There will then be a full opportunity for the Leader of the Opposition to make up his mind whether he likes them or not.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the translation of that answer is that the Government does not know what it is proposing. It has no details to announce.

TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration told the Minister of Finance for Ontario that this program would not be available at least until January—that no one would start working at least until January. It may be later; it may be April. Will the Minister of Finance tell the House of Commons how long it will be before this Program provides its first job for one Canadian?

• (1120)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all I am pleased to inform the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that we have already $1.4 billion at work in terms of job creation in the country and that there is a $300 million program of community development activities starting in November. It will create jobs in November, December, January and February. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is trying to get this additional Program into effect as fast as possible, and we expect that this will be in January. If we can get it going even faster, this is what we will do. But I remind the Leader of the Opposition that we already have more than $1.4 billion of help for the workers and the unemployed of the country to fight unemployment, and that money is at work now.

Mr. Clark: The translation of that, Madam Speaker, is that the Government does not know when this Program will begin to deliver the first job to one Canadian in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PLIGHT OF PERSONS INELIGIBLE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will know that his Government's own figures indicate that over the next nine months there will be a further 540,000 Canadians who will become ineligible for unemployment insurance. This means that over the next 18 months, if that trend continues, more than a million Canadians will become ineligible for unemployment insurance. He is promising as an answer for these more than a million Canadians who are going off unemployment 60,000 20-week jobs. What will he do to help the million other Canadians whom this Program does nothing at all to aid?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, since the Leader of the Opposition seems to need translation this morning, I will answer this one in French.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Do you want it in English?

Mr. Crosbie: Let's have it in Japanese.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: The program I announced will provide $500 million, while another $600 million will be provided to assist the residential construction industry in Canada and the expansion of rail capacity in the West. The program involves expenditures of $1.1 billion, in addition to, as I said earlier, the $1.4 billion already approved in the supplementary estimates. This year, the Canadian government has allocated additional funds of $2.5 billion for job creation and programs to fight unemployment. The Government of Canada is quite aware that these programs and the government's efforts alone will not be enough to wipe out unemployment in this country. Bringing down the unemployment rate will depend on how successful we are in putting a stop to the present recession and stimulating the private sector. That was the message I gave in my statement to the House earlier this week. That was the message I gave when I announced tax cuts for workers and tax cuts as well as tax exemptions for business. I am very pleased with the reception given these measures throughout Canada, and especially in business circles, and I hope that the private sector will be able to play a substantial part in achieving the economic recovery this country needs. The Government of Canada will be there to provide leadership and the necessary support in the coming months.

PORT OF VANCOUVER WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour my question is directed to the Prime Minister. One in ten jobs in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia are directly dependent upon the Port of Vancouver—56,000 workers and a weekly payroll of $16 million; 3,500 longshoremen and warehousemen are out; 1,336 CN employees are out; 490 CP employees are out and there are more to come; 300 grain handlers are about to be laid off; commodity handlers have laid off 200 and there are more to come; and English Bay is filled with ships on demurrage charges of $2,500 up to $20,000 a day. This strike cannot be allowed to continue.

• (1125)

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to allow this interruption in the Canadian economy to continue as long as "meaningful bargaining takes place" or, as the Minister of Finance suggested this week, regardless of bargaining, if the Port is not opened on Monday morning, will emergency legislation be brought to this House to open the Port immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance made it quite clear in his statement to the House on Wednesday that if the parties had not settled their dispute through the process of free collective bargaining by Monday night this Government would ensure in some way that the strike would be ended, and that is still our intention.

Mr. Cook: The Prime Minister's answer is satisfactory, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cook: I believe from what he has had to say that we can anticipate the Port of Vancouver being opened at the latest on Tuesday, regardless of what happens with bargaining.

CUSTOMS CLEARANCE FOR CARGO LANDED AT SEATTLE

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that much of the commerce of the Port of Vancouver is now unloaded in Seattle which amount so far is 60,000 tonnes, an amount increasing hour by hour, what special arrangements have been made by the customs service to expedite border crossing by the new flood of trucks heading north?

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I wish to advise the Hon. Member that I will take notice of his question and bring it to the attention of the Minister when he returns.

Mr. Clark: Which minister?

INCOME TAX

EFFECT OF PROPOSED SURTAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On Wednesday, in the House, the Minister said that the New Democratic Party proposal for levying a surtax on all those Canadians earning over $40,000 a year, namely, the richest 7 per cent of Canadians, would not obtain for job-creating purposes the $1.3 billion we said that it would. Will the Minister now admit that he was wrong? Further, will the Minister acknowledge that the same group of rich Canadians, as a result of the government's tax changes last fall, will get an additional $1 billion in tax benefits in the coming year?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to admit I was wrong, if I were. But I invited the Hon. Member to have his research assistants come to my office or to my department to compare notes and figures. I told him, and I repeat to him, that the estimates of my Department and those made by officials who know about the fiscal system and about national revenue, are to the effect that the revenue resulting from the tax proposed by the NDP would barely come to half the amount mentioned in the speech made by the Hon. Member, if he speaks about the revenues that would be generated in one year. I do not know whether he has added a few years in order to arrive at his figures, but if the Hon. Member tells me that his figures relate to revenues that could be generated in a single year, our estimation is that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is wrong again, by about 100 per cent.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to send a letter to the Minister. I want to say to him at this point, however, that the average tax increase of 5 per cent on this group that we have proposed, will obtain 15 per cent additional revenue from the same category of rich Canadians, and we in this Party believe that the rich in Canada should start to pay their fair share at least, especially in terms of job creation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE SURTAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have another question for the Minister of Finance in that context. Since, on Wednesday, the Minister announced an increase in the UI premiums paid by the ordinary worker, which is an indirect tax of over $800 million, and since the Government continues to tax pensioners and continues to tax those living at the poverty level, why does the Government not bring in a surtax on upper-income Canadians to generate money for badly needed jobs?

• (1130)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated before, if we had applied the spirit of the Unemployment Insurance Act, what would have been required would have been an increase of something like 125 per cent in the premiums under the Unemployment Insurance Program. The Unemployment Insurance Program is what it is, an insurance program to which employees and employers are contributing for their own security. Due to the current economic situation and difficulties, the Government decided that we would not apply the normal rule, but that in effect, the Government would assume 70 per cent of the deficit that was being incurred by the fund and only 30 per cent would be assumed by the employers and employees. This is the contribution of the Government of Canada in the current situation.

Our decision was made after consultations with labour and management and in the case of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, it recommended exactly what we have implemented. In our consultations with most labour unions and management, they agreed that they should be contributing a share of that increased premium.

With respect to the question raised by the Hon. Member, I have already told him, and I repeat, that I have set up a nice "budget box" in my office. I have heard his representations on this proposal and, as I prepare my budget for 1983, I will give his proposal and suggestion careful consideration.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CHANGE TAX BENEFITS FOR WEALTHY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister smilingly is quite prepared to increase the tax burden on every ordinary Canadian but is totally unprepared to make wealthy Canadians pay their share at this time. We in this party find that totally unacceptable.

I want to return to another part of the first question that the Minister did not answer. Will he admit that, as a result of closing a couple of loopholes that benefit upper-income Canadians which he announced on Wednesday, in addition to the tax changes brought in by his predecessor last fall, the upper 7 per cent of Canadian income earners will get over a billion dollars in tax benefits in the coming year, while we overtax the average Canadian? If he will admit that, will he bring in a change now, and not six months down the road, that will make upper-income Canadians pay their share at this time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in my statement earlier this week I estimated that the total tax benefits granted were $300 million over a full year. The largest single element in that tax break is going to the Canadian men and women who are working in this country, through abandoning the proposal to tax their health and dental plans. The Leader of the New Democratic Party should recognize that.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Minister has indicated, he will be seeking parliamentary approval for a further $400 million equity injection for Canadair and de Havilland. Would the Minister indicate and assure the House that none of those funds have been advanced or borrowed to date, nor will such funds be advanced or borrowed directly or indirectly by those two companies prior to Parliament having an opportunity to take action on his request?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, to my knowledge none of those funds have been advanced to Canadair and de Havilland. However, it would seem inappropriate to me not to advance those funds to Canadair and de Havilland, because one of the things that they want to do is reduce some of their high interest rate loans and then take advantage of lower interest rate loans when the money is required. To me, it would impede the progress of Canadair and de Havilland if that money were not advanced.

VIABILITY OF CANADAIR

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again I question the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has just indicated that parliamentary approval will be virtually just a rubber stamp if it is given. In view of the fact that Canadair alone will have a total exposure now of $1.5 billion backed by the Government and the people of Canada, would he indicate if he can assure the House that Canadair is in fact viable, bearing in mind that that will mean that it has triple the indebtedness of its main competitor, Gulf Stream America? It will in fact have an indebteness equal to $300,000 for every employee in that company. Is it viable?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, many companies which rely on export markets are experiencing financial difficulty today. Canadair does not control the international marketplace. It does not make decisions as to who buys corporate aircraft. If we did not think that Canadair was viable, if we did not think that jobs were important in the aerospace industry, we would not be coming to Parliament and requesting another $200 million in equity infusion to the company.

DURATION OF NORDAIR STRIKE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Many employees of Nordair have been on strike since June 24. It has been the longest and most disruptive strike in that company's history. Will the Minister give the House a progress report on the strike, and can he explain why the Government of Canada through its Crown corporation, Air Canada, which owns about 86 per cent of the shares of Nordair, has not acted to bring an end to this strike to get Nordair's planes back in the skies to service the many communities across three provinces in this country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I inquire regularly as to the happenings in that particular strike. I regret that the strike is being extended. Occasionally, when I do inquire, I am told that progress is being made. I hope that progress will materialize one of these days.

The reason why the Government does not take action in this strike as strongly as it does on the west coast strike, is simply that the Nordair one does not have the same national dimension as the west coast one.

DELAY IN REACHING SETTLEMENT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, perhaps we can illustrate one example of why progress has not been made. Would the Minister find out from his colleague, the Minister of Labour, why he has repeatedly turned down Nordair's request and has not even acknowledged several requests from the union to appoint a mediator to resolve the clerical workers' grievances? Why does the Government, in effect, appear not to be in too great a rush to settle this strike?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will do that this afternoon and report to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

FINANCE

SMALL BUSINESS ACCESS TO CREDIT

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has claimed that 60,000 new jobs will be created with $1 billion of the taxpayers' money. How many jobs will not be created? How many jobs will be lost because the Royal Bank, other major chartered banks and the federal Government are withdrawing $1 billion in credit possibilities from the money market in order to bail out Dome Petroleum, $34 million for Maislin, $130 million for Consolidated Computers, $400 million for Canadair, and millions more for Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler?

What does the Minister intend to do to ensure that millions of individual Canadians and small businesses are guaranteed access to credit markets commensurate with their assets so that they can invest in Canada, and spend in the Canadian economy in order to create real, new and lasting permanent jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that yesterday, for the eleventh week in a row, the bank rate in this country went down. There has been significant progress on the interest rate side since last June.

Second, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the rate of savings in this country has never been as high. At the present time it is running at about 13 per cent, and this is more than twice the savings rate in the United States. The Hon. Member also knows, or should know, that there is not a great demand from the private sector for borrowing at the present time. There are a lot of savings presently. There is a lot of money which can be borrowed and, thank God, it can be borrowed at much cheaper rates than used to be available in the past few months.

There has been significant progress on the interest rate side. I hope this progress will be maintained and continued over the next while. Frankly, I do not expect difficulties in terms of the money being available on the market for people who want to borrow for valid purposes.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He may know, but then again he may not, that Canadians everywhere, including B.C. Liberals and the residents of Meadow Lake who voted yesterday, are overwhelmingly opposed to the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and the fuelling of the nuclear arms race. They are opposed to the secrecy with which all of these negotiations have been kept. Can the Minister now tell the House the stage of the negotiations, both for the umbrella agreement and the Cruise missile testing agreement? Is it too late for the negotiations to be stopped? Have the agreements already been signed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will be pleased to inform the Hon. Member that negotiations are still under way with respect to the umbrella agreement. It is not certain when the negotiations will be completed, but until the umbrella agreement is completed and signed, it will not be possible to enter into any particular project for the testing of any weapons system.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT TERMS BE REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, in a letter to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake, dated October 18, the Minister of National Defence indicated that the umbrella agreement would be signed within a few weeks. I would like the Minister to comment on that. Furthermore, will the Minister honour the promise made by his predecessor, sitting nearby in disguise, at the meeting of the Standing Committte on External Affairs and National Defence on March 24, 1982? As reported at page 22 of the Minutes, the Minister stated:

—there is no reason why we cannot reveal not only the fact of the agreement but all of the terms of the agreement as soon as the negotiations are completed—

Before any other agreements with regard to Cruise missile testing or anything else are entered into, will the Minister give a reference to the Standing Committee outlining all of the terms of the framework agreement, the letter from President Reagan to the Prime Minister asking for it in the first place, and the Prime Minister's reply, and all of the terms before any negotiations for Cruise testing are undertaken?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The first answer, Madam Speaker, is that it may be possible that the negotiations for the umbrella agreement will be completed within a few weeks. I am not certain because new items have been raised within the last short time which must be dealt with before any agreement can be signed.

Miss Jewett: Like public opinion.

Mr. MacEachen: On the second question, I will look at the commitment made by my predecessor. If the Hon. Member has quoted him correctly, it seems to be a reasonable commitment and I would be happy to follow his wise leadership on this point.

CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

ALLEGED THEFT OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In recent months, travelling salesmen have been going from door to door in the Gaspé and in a number of other areas throughout Canada, selling insulation at $20 a bag, while the same material is available from local dealers at $9. They are selling weather-stripping for $100, while the same product can be purchased for $30. The customer's bill is always for $350 and is charged to the grants provided by the Canadian Home Insulation Program. Many homeowners buy these products without really knowing what to do with them. They pass them on to their neighbours, use them to insulate cottages or garages or leave them lying around in their backyards. My question is: can the Minister inform the House whether his government is going to stand any longer for this fraudulent use of CHIP grants, especially since the money involved would be far better spent on creating jobs in the riding of Gaspé, where the unemployment rate is 50 per cent?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, yesterday when I was answering questions in the House, I said that I was going to review this program. I agree there are people who are misusing the system and taxpayers' money. I am going to try to combine some of these programs to ensure that we get the desired results; in other words, conserve energy and at the same time prevent fraud, while the people taking advantage of these programs will pay part of the cost instead of receiving the full amount from the government.

RAILWAYS

USE OF ANNOUNCED FUNDS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Could the Minister explain to the House the application of the $400 million, to which reference was made in the Finance Minister's statement this week, with respect to the expansion and modernization of rail capacity? Is this sum of $400 million to be used a grant, an advance, part of the Crow solution process or part of the Western Development Fund, or both?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I cannot be very explicit this morning. By the way, I am grateful to the Minister of Finance for having made this amount available, on top of previously announced amounts of money in order to bring about the resolution of the Crowsnest Pass rate and to bring about tremendous expansion of western rail transportation capacity. In due course I will state where each one of these dollars will be going, but I am not in a position to do so at this moment. However, the decision certainly indicates the dedication of the Government to the resolution of the problem and to the expansion of railway service in the West.

REQUEST FOR JOB-CREATION ESTIMATE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Is the Minister in a position to clarify to the House whether this sum of $400 million is part of the grant or subsidy package, or is it simply an advance to the railways to accelerate the development of rail capacity? I think that is a very important question. If so, what will it mean in terms of jobs and when will these jobs come on stream?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): That is exactly what I cannot answer this morning. I just said that.

However, it is not part of the Western Development Fund. It is part of the western railway transportation project. Yesterday the Minister of Finance said that the number of jobs it will bring about amount to 400,000 person-years, if I recall well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Forty thousand.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT CALGARY RENT INCREASES BE DEFERRED

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister responsible for housing. I have written to the Minister and met with him last week with regard to the outrageous rent increases at Vista Courts Apartments in Calgary. Is the Minister in a position to defer this horrendous 250 per cent rent increase until the question is resolved, since no consultation took place between the management and tenants, especially in these hard times when we are preaching six and five?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in the area of housing, which is under the control of CMHC, the six and five policy is certainly very strictly adhered to, and this was announced by my predecessor some months ago. In the area of concern to the Hon. Member, I can tell him that these are units which were offered for purchase to the builders. They had received subsidized rents. However, I have considered the matter and asked CMHC to review that decision and hope to be able to give information to the Hon. Member in the next few days.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, has the Minister had any communications or carried out negotiations with regard to divesting responsibility for low-cost housing to the municipalities or the provinces? If the Minister has, will Parliament or the community have any input at all before a firm commitment is made by the Government?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I hope that the hon. member's very general question does not lead me to misinform him. The Government of Canada certainly does not intend to lessen its interest in what we call social housing, which provides assistance for those whose income is really not adequate to meet the cost of housing on a competitive basis.

There are some areas where discussions do take place with provinces and municipalities. If we can arrive at a solution where these organizations or jurisdictions help us in providing more housing for those on low income, that of course is very beneficial. I will try to develop these matters and consult with Parliament through committees and otherwise as Hon. Members desire.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

AUDITOR GENERAL'S CERTIFICATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This week the Public Accounts of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1982, were released. The Auditor General has levelled a most serious and, I believe, unprecedented qualification in his certificate on pages 2.15 and 2.16 of the Public Accounts. The Auditor General told the Minister of Finance that, in his opinion, the accumulated deficit, which makes up the national debt over the years, could be as much as $17 billion more than what in fact the Government is reporting because of its shabby and unapproved bookkeeping methods. I am sure the Minister is very concerned about this. What is the Minister willing to do to expose this understatement of the Accounts of Canada to the people of the country? Also, what is he willing to do to rectify this very serious situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member has not been a Member of this House for many years. If he had been, he would realize that this debate has been going on for many years with the Auditor General and in the accounting profession. There has been debate on this subject in the Public Accounts Committee. There is an honest division of opinion as to the best way of presenting the accounts of the Government. Some accountants argue on one side, and some accountants argue on the other side. That debate has been published and is well known. It is on the record in the Public Accounts Committee. Indeed, it has been demonstrated in the statement to which the Hon. Member has referred. It is not new. It is a question of honest division of opinion.

Mr. Anguish: With all due respect to the Minister of Finance, I may be a young Member of Parliament, but I am certainly not stupid.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General is an officer of this Parliament. He has told us that the Accounts of Canada are in shabby shape. We have not honoured his request over the years to do the proper accounting that is necessary. He has told us this many times. I am not surprised that the Deputy Minister resigned—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is now arguing. There is a time to argue and a time to ask questions. I would ask that he get to his question.

Mr. Anguish: What steps is the Minister of Finance willing to take to honour the requests of the Auditor General to, in fact, put the books of this country in good order?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member not to argue the point too much in the way he has done because he will raise questions as to his own statement about himself. I will just repeat what I told him, that for years there has been an honest division of opinion. We can list a number of accountants who will argue one side of this issue and a number who will argue the other side. That debate is well known. It is public. The facts are available for everyone to see. I do not personally intend to pursue the matter in this regard. I am sure this matter will again be examined. If there is a change of view in this regard, I will let the Hon. Member know without delay.

WELFARE

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF TORONTO RECIPIENTS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Earlier this week the Chief Executive Officer of Metropolitan Toronto announced that he had the largest number of people on welfare in Metro's history. Mr. John Kruger said "the number is at an all-time high and will grow as more of Metro's 170,000 jobless exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits." He went on to say that we are going to have 50,000 more on welfare by Christmas alone. I would ask the Minister, since she has a responsibility under the Canada Assistance Plan, what she intends to do about this situation.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the CAP Agreement under which we reimburse 50 per cent of all welfare costs to the Provinces is an agreement between the federal Government and the Provinces and, unfortunately or not, not with the municipalities. The Province of Ontario has its own agreement by which it redistributes our funds and theirs to the municipalities. I have no control over that nor, to my knowledge, do I have any reports and factual information. Therefore, as far as the federal Government is concerned, we will continue under this agreement to reimburse as quickly as possible all welfare bills presented by the various Provinces in order to assure Canadians of the cushion needed in these very difficult times.

REQUEST MINISTER ACT TO CHANGE COST-SHARING AGREEMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, welfare costs in Metropolitan Toronto for next year, in response to this problem, will go up by 53 per cent. In response to that problem, Mr. David Dodge, an Assistant Deputy Minister in the Employment Department, said "the problem is that the municipalities don't have the money to pay for these people and, that, cleary is a federal responsibility". This is not a problem only for Metropolitan Toronto. It is a problem that is going to affect all municipalities right across the country. Surely the Minister can take some initiative and offer some leadership to change the CAP Agreement so that the municipalities will not be, as Ron Anderson said last week, bled dry by the fact that all of these people are now coming on to welfare rolls.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I do not think we should enter into a constitutional debate on something that has to be provided to those on welfare. Ontario is a province which has decided to use the municipalities as agents for distributing welfare. I do not know what the Province of Ontario gives to the municipalities. Neither do I know, nor is it my responsibility under the Constitution, to check whether the Province gives proper moneys to the municipalities. This is a constitutional problem the Hon. Member wants to open that does not even exist. We pay 50 per cent of every welfare bill in this country. We pay it to the Provinces. It is their responsibility to match that by 50 per cent and no less. Past that point, I suggest the Hon. Member write a letter to the Province of Ontario and to continue to inquire about the municipal onus.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which I put to the Prime Minister the other day. Will the Government accept the unanimous recommendation of the all-party task force that the federal Government's share of contributions under CAP be increased to those Provinces where unemployment is higher than the average and the number on the welfare rolls is higher than the average? Will the Government, in the spirit of leadership, move on that all-party unanimous recommendation of a committee of this House, supported by individual Liberal Members of this House of Commons?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I do not know the text of the recommendation, but the spirit is surely met by the nature of the Program. The Program is such that the Provinces decide on their own initiative what amount they pay for the various allowances, etc., provided basic human rights are respected. We automatically reimburse 50 per cent. Therefore, any Province in a deeper situation of hardship automatically receives far more. An additional part is distributed to these provinces, and that should not be forgotten, through the general transfer payments of the Government of Canada, the equalization payments.

• (1200)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACCEPT RECOMMENDATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Surely the Minister knows what the all-party task force recommended. It recommended that in the case of Provinces that are unusually hard hit by economic circumstances, and thus are not able to find money quickly, or as easily as other Provinces, there should be a federal contribution higher than 50 per cent for those provinces. That was the recommendation of Liberal Members of the House of Commons and, indeed, the unanimous recommendation of a committee of this House. In the spirit of leadership, in solving the problems this Government created, will the Minister of Health and Welfare accept that unanimous recommendation?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think that to play games like that is very easy for someone who is not in Government. Does the Hon. Member want me to cut into my other programs or increase the deficit? He does not tell us. There is one thing that he keeps forgetting. The Program exists and functions very well, and, of course, there is an increase in times of hardship. There is a very important part of the transfer payments to, for example, the Atlantic Provinces, which covers exactly the problem identified by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, namely, that they have less front-end money to advance.

I have just completed a study of the request from these provinces for more money for medicare. I have news for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. They have done better under medicare, with all our transfer payments, than the other Provinces.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YURKO—QUESTIONING OF MR. LALONDE—REQUIREMENT FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT

Madam Speaker: I have a notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I feel severely affects the rights and privileges of every Member of this House, and certainly my rights and privileges. I raise this matter as a question of privilege because I think the rules of the House have been breached in such a manner as to reflect on the reputation, character and good name of the House itself.

The incident I am referring to occurred yesterday when I rose after the question period to deny unanimous consent to allow further questioning of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on his Wednesday statement. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the House Leader for the Official Opposition, quickly jumped up and said as reported at page 20120 of Hansard:

—when the Government House Leader made his submission with respect to the results of the meetings between House Leaders at the opening of the House, he disclosed the fact that there was unanimous consent.

I want to repeat that last phrase, Madam Speaker, so that everyone in this House understands it very clearly. The Hon. Member for Yukon said the House Leader disclosed the fact that there was unanimous consent. He then changed his story slightly. He said:

Madam Speaker will recall that I rose afterwards and I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) did likewise. I submit that it was at that point that unanimous consent was sought and achieved, and it is too late now for the Hon. Member to rise in an attempt to refuse unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Rather than reading these quotations, I would like the Hon. Member to tell me forthwith what his question of privilege is. I do caution him that he may not comment on my ruling of yesterday, which I maintain. I would like to know immediately what his question of privilege is, and he can elaborate on it once he has enunciated what it is.

Mr. Yurko: I do not intend to be too long, Madam Speaker, but I must take a few minutes to set the scene. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the House Leader for the NDP, took quite a different tack in responding to my objections. He said that based on the previous consultations that had taken place, perhaps unanimous consent was not required.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I have to be very strict with the Hon. Member because he is probably referring to a ruling, and he has to make it quite clear to me now that he is not. I therefore ask him to state what his question of privilege is and he may then remind me of the statements made in the House by other Hon. Members. I want him to tell me, please, what is the basis of his question of privilege.

Mr. Yurko: I have never seen, Madam Speaker, anyone have as much difficulty with the Chair as I have in terms of trying to put forth a matter of privilege. This is my basic point. As far as my understanding of the rules of the House are concerned, any changes in the routine daily order of business have to be sanctioned each day the Routine Proceedings are superseded, and unanimous consent of the House must be sought and obtained. In this particular case it was not.

I would like now to refer to your statement yesterday, when you said, as reported at page 20120 of Hansard:

Statements by Ministers. I understand that by unanimous consent we will continue for a period of 20 minutes with questioning which follows the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

Your statement indicated that we had unanimous consent for a period of 20 minutes to question the Minister, and I find nowhere in Hansard that such a question was even put to the House, much less agreed to. That was the reason I took objection, because that question was never posed to the House.

I want to say that I objected to the additional questioning of the Minister because I did not think—

Madam Speaker: Order. The House is quite aware that the Hon. Member is objecting to the additional 20-minute question period after the statement made by the Minister. He did that yesterday. Having received the guidance of the House and having confirmed that there was unanimous consent of the House at that time, I ruled that the question period would continue for a further 20 minutes. I had some discretion about allowing a 20-minute discussion after the statement from the Minister of Finance and I used that discretion.

On the particular point which the Hon. Member is now raising under a question of privilege, but which should be a point of order, I must repeat to him that that particular incident is closed and I cannot allow him to comment further on a ruling which I made yesterday.

MR. FRIESEN—PRODUCTION OF PAPERS ALLEGED INCOMPLETE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, you will recall that yesterday I sought permission to look into the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) so as to be able today to complete briefly my argument and add a few remarks. I did read the lengthy comments which you had the patience to listen to yesterday and I did not see anything in the facts—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, I hope the Government House Leader will forgive me for interrupting, but I notice that the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) is not in his seat.

Madam Speaker: He is here now.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I was about to say that I have examined the Hon. Member's allegations, and realized that, to bolster his case, he based his arguments on two documents of which he was allegedly made aware subsequently, that is after the documents were tabled in the House. The first point I want to make is that the documents to which he referred have nothing to do with the order of the House. The order of the House—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Minister would be doing me a great service were he to give me the additional information he promised yesterday and confine his remarks to giving me that additional information; otherwise, I will again have to hear other Members for a second time on a question of privilege. Yesterday the Hon. Member asked whether he would be allowed to seek futher information and provide that information to the House a little later. That I can allow, I mean he may provide additional information because yesterday he sought permission to do just that, but I cannot let him embark upon a new argument because the practice of the House is that I can hear Hon. Members only once on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I was about to do just that. I would refer you to Beauchesne's Citation 390 and point out that the documents mentioned by the Hon. Member have nothing to do with the order of the House, that his case does not rest solidly on facts and that there are no grounds for a question of privilege. If he wants another address to be presented to Her Majesty for the tabling of documents, he ought to introduce another motion. All that is provided for by parliamentary practices, and if you do not want to hear further arguments, that sums up the facts, as far as I can see. All you need to do is to read carefully Citation 390 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and go by those references rather than those submitted yesterday by the Hon. Member, which relate to incidents dating back to 1820, 1834, 1835, 1841 and 1876 and which have nothing to do with the evolution of parliamentary practices. Citation 390 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition refers to cabinet directive No. 45 since 1973. Quite obviously, we never did have an opportunity to ask for exemptions. We were waiting to see whether the Hon. Member wanted other documents in addition to those he had asked for, and that is why we are exercising our exemption right. Therefore, I am doing that now because we had no opportunity to do so and I reserved my right to that effect yesterday. Be that as it may, the documents to which he referred have nothing to do with the order of the House and, since the facts are contradictory, there simply cannot be a question of privilege.

In essence, Madam Speaker, that is the new fact I wanted to bring to light by referring you to Citation 390 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. It spells out the exemption which is provided for and the rules which govern the tabling of documents by the government. In light of the facts related by the Hon. Member, once again he has no justification to say that we did not abide by the order of the House. Finally, you know that the documents were tabled on July 29 and that the House sat until August 4 inclusive. The Hon. Member is definitely late in raising his question of privilege.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I am afraid that does not dispose of the very serious question that was raised by the Hon. Member yesterday. What is before the Chair is hard evidence, read into the record, of some documents which were not produced pursuant to the unanimous order of this House that all documents be produced. Not all relevant documents, not all documents subject to any condition or qualification, but all documents.

The production by the Government was deficient, as revealed clearly by hard evidence placed on the record yesterday by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). So that his suggestion to the Chair that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections I think is the only solution—certainly in my submission it is the only solution—to determine whether or not the Government has complied with the adoption unanimously of an order of the House that all documents be produced. I submit, as I did yesterday, Madam Speaker, that if there is any doubt on that question, the House should decide it by your putting the question.

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from Standing and Special Committees.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Madam Speaker. I am sorry, but am I to assume the Chair is further reserving her decision?

Madam Speaker: Yes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONCURRENCE IN TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I will facilitate your work, Madam Speaker. I got unanimous consent for the motion I am going to present.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) but since the Hon. Member for St. John's West is temporarily absent—

[English]

I would ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), to second the motion. Therefore, I move that the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence which I presented yesterday be now adopted.

Madam Speaker: Well, the Hon. Member is not really presenting a report. He can come back on motions for this particular one.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is exactly what I was asking.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has to be recognized and I recognized him. I thought he was presenting a report. We will come back to that later.

Madam Speaker: Motions. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): May I say, Madam Speaker, that I knew I was supposed to do this on motions, but I thought you wanted to accelerate it so I could leave for Montreal.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, with the leave of the House, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) that the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence presented in the House on Thursday October 28, 1982 be concurred in. I have also obtained the unanimous consent of the House including that of the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,306, 3,307, 3,551, 4,105, and 4,230.

[Text]

MR. JAMES A. WINDSOR

Question No. 3,306—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. James A. Windsor of Prescott, Ontario a term Immigration Officer at Prescott, Ontario from May 25 to August 24, 1981 and did he file for a competition to become a permanent employee?

2. Was Mr. Windsor advised that he would be interviewed on October 13, 1981 and was he telephoned on October 9, 1981 from Cornwall, Ontario to confirm whether he would still be able to make the interview?

3. Did he receive a letter dated October 2, 1981 and signed by Mr. Fern LeBrun, Manager of the Department of Employment and Immigration Centre in Cornwall, Ontario setting up an interview on October 13, 1981 at 2 p.m. and was this interview cancelled minutes before it was to take place and, if so, for what reason was Mr. Windsor treated in this fashion?

4. Was he discriminated against in any way whatsoever?

5. What were the names and job designations of all persons involved in any attempt to stop him from being interviewed?

6. Did (a) Mrs. Bonnie Trotman (b) Mr. J.R. Gaudet of the Department of Employment and Immigration in Prescott, Ontario play any part in this matter and, if so, what part?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. to 6. Mr. James A. Windsor was a term CR-5 employee at the Prescott Canada Immigration Centre (Immigration Examining Officer Assistant) from May 25, 1981 until August 24, 1981. All other parts of the question request information of a personal nature concerning Mr. James A. Windsor, the disclosure of which is governed by the Canadian Human Rights Act, Part IV.

Order Paper Questions

MRS. BONNIE TROTMAN

Question No. 3,307—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mrs. Bonnie Trotman, an employee of the Department of Employment and Immigration in Prescott, Ontario, go to the home of Mr. James A. Windsor, formerly a term employee of the Department in Prescott, Ontario and did she intrude on his premises, challenge his right to apply for permanent employment and request data that she was told was none of her business?

2. Was she acting on behalf of the government and, if so (a) under whose authority (b) under what authority did she enter onto the property of another staff member?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1 and 2. No report has been filed with the Commission/Department concerning this matter, therefore, all information would be of a personal nature to Mrs. Trotman.

Question No. 3,551—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to question No. 3,307 which asked in part why a Department of Employment and Immigration employee, Mrs. Bonnie Trotman, entered the premises of former temporary immigration officer, Mr. James Windsor, asking questions, did Mrs. Trotman recently file a report with the Department that she entered such premises because she was a personal friend of the family?

2. Is the Government aware that Mr. and Mrs. Windsor deny that she was ever a personal friend of the family?

3. Is the Government further aware that Mr. and Mrs. Windsor are requesting a full report from the Government concerning this immigration employee entering their home and asking personal questions?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1 and 2. See reply to question No. 3,307 answered this day.

3. No.

COMPETITION FOR IMMIGRATION EXAMINING OFFICERS

Question No. 4,105—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Department of Employment and Immigration hold a competition No. 81-EIC-CC-0-499 for a CR 5 position and, if so (a) what were the names of those who applied under this competition and what were the names of those actually interviewed (b) was the position filled and, if not, will immediate consideration be given to one of the applicants, Mr. James A. Windsor of 366 James Street East, Prescott, Ontario?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Competition 81-EIC-CC-O-499 was a closed competition for PM-1 Immigration Examining Officers, not for a CR-5 position.

(a) Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act, Subsection 52(2) precludes release of information on these applicants.

(b) This competition was run to select persons for anticipated vacancies only as part of a pro-active approach to staffing. By doing this, the Commission/Department is prepared in advance to make appointments as vacancies occur, rather than being caught short-staffed and having to wait for three to four months to staff a vacancy on an indeterminate or acting basis.

This particular competition was also conducted at this time to enable the Commission/Department to make an acting appointment to a PM-1 position, since one of the indeterminate Immigration Examining Officers is acting at the PM-2 level in the Cornwall Canada Immigration Centre to replace an indeterminate employee who is absent on full-time language training.

All eligible applicants were considered.

The House resumed from Thursday, October 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-128, to provide supplementary borrowing authority (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in the brief period that was available to me last evening I referred to Bill C-128 presently before the House, as well as the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on the economic outlook for Canada, and the TV spectacular of the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) in which he tried to lay the blame for our $24 billion deficit on the mistrust which exists between Canadians rather than on the inefficient management of his own Government. The fact that we are falling behind by $2 billion a month in a nation of 24 million people has to be some kind of record, of which none of us can be proud. The United States, with its 240 million people, would have to show a deficit of $240 billion to equal our record. Their deficit, at $110.7 billion, is less than half of Canada's deficit on a per capita basis, yet they are worried sick about all this red ink. However, all will be well, says the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal, if we only trust him.

I ask in all seriousness, along with hundreds of thousands of Canadians, on what can we base that trust? He is the man who campaigned bitterly against wage and price controls in 1974 and then imposed them in 1975. Along with his entire party he campaigned against our program to raise the gasoline tax by 18 cents in 1980. Since that time he has imposed a much more expensive tax, not only on gasoline but also on home heating oil, which we believe should be completely exempt. Every time the administered price of gasoline goes up, the credibility of the Liberal Party and the Liberal administration erodes in the same ratio.

I wonder how much the contemplated purchase by Petro-Canada of BP assets will further increase the cost of our gasoline in Canada. Some have estimated that the BP purchase would take some $500 million more out of Canada. I believe this money could be spent more wisely if it were directed toward job creation rather than the further nationalization of existing industries.

The whole range of Canada's economic policies needs to be rigorously examined and the spending priorities need to be carefully reviewed. This is not my view alone; it was expressed on many occasions, and most forcefully, by a former Auditor General, James Macdonell, in his report to the Commons in 1975 and he repeated it again in 1976. He said, and I am quoting him:

> I am deeply concerned that Parliament and indeed the Government has lost, or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse. The present state of the financial management and control systems of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness.

This was the warning, the signal, given to this Government seven years ago—a warning to caulk the ship of state for leaks, to lighten the crew so that she would be more manageable, and to trim the sails. Obviously this simply was not done. That is why Canadians today look with suspicion and mistrust at every new move made by this administration, a Government in which Canadian people no longer have any confidence.

How can we have confidence in a Government which, of necessity, had to change its Finance Ministers? Yet the new Finance Minister is as fuzzy in his concept of FIRA and its effect on Canadians as was his predecessor. Perhaps we should look at the Foreign Investment Review Act and apply to it the same sweeping criteria its administrators apply to the proposed investments of those who come before it.

Is FIRA of significant benefit to Canada? Well, when you look at the curtailment of foreign investment in Canada, there is no positive evidence that would decide that question in FIRA's favour. We must ask ourselves how the blocking of any investment in an economy which is in deep depression, with an unemployment rate in excess of 1,343,000 Canadians, provides Canadians with a benefit? Indeed, how much higher is unemployment in Canada today than it might have been without this yoke around our necks, this throttling of possible job-producing investment?

The question of benefits to Canada should be the primary issue in the FIRA debate. When our new Minister of Finance says he will not make any changes in FIRA to please the Americans, I submit that he is missing the point. He should be revamping FIRA to benefit Canadians. Any unemployed Canadian put back to work tomorrow by American capital, by German marks, French francs, the yen, the pound or the kwacha, will have no trouble telling the Minister of Finance how to define what is of significant benefit to the Canadian economy.

The mismanagement of our economy is taking its toll, not only on our Canadian corporations but also on the individual social fabric of the nation. Our people are hurting and they are hurting badly. In its excessive demand for taxes, the Government is destroying not only our individual ambition and initiative but also the very homes of our people, the rock on which our nation has been built.

In Nova Scotia many citizens, our farmers and our fishermen, are in arrears in their payment of income taxes, many of them through no fault of their own. Despite their pleas for an extension of time in which to pay back taxes, the Government has cracked down hard on our fishermen. For example, it is demanding 20 per cent for 1982 taxes and 40 per cent for back taxes of all fishermen's shares in a year when fishing is at an economically low ebb. It is demanding immediate payment for back taxes from Nova Scotia farmers as well.

I wish to place on the record one letter out of many letters and telephone calls I have received which adequately describes the economic situation of many of my constituents. It is dated May 25, 1982 and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Crouse,

I don't know if you can help us do anything about our situation or not but it won't hurt me to find out.

My husband and I bought a new house about three years ago, with every intention of paying for it. Starting last fall there was so much income tax taken off John's pay that we lost our car. We did without oil all last winter because we couldn't afford to buy it. Now the government is taking two years income tax off John's pay. They are taking off for the present and the past year.

On April 24 his pay was $1965.35 and he came home with $510.22 and on May 12 his pay was $1965.39 and he came home with $598.76. The scallop draggers are only making one trip a month.

Our house payments are over four hundred dollars a month. How can we make our house payments. I am looking for a job since before Christmas but there isn't much available. In fact I can't find anything. I don't know what to do or where to turn but I sure hate the thoughts of losing our home.

I know the income tax must be paid but why so much at a time. We should be able to have enough of my husband's hard earned pay to live on. I guess the lucky (people)? are the ones selling dope and living income tax free. I have no dreams left, just nightmares.

That letter is on file, of course, in the Minister's office. I will not reveal the writer's name because I do not want to cause her any embarrassment. It is typical of hundreds of letters that I have received and all of them have been forwarded to the Minister's office with a plea to review the situation.

I submit that this situation has reached epidemic proportions in Atlantic Canada, so much so that I am informed it became absolutely necessary for the Right Hon. Prime Minister to move the portfolio of National Revenue out of Newfoundland. Before leaving the portfolio, I understand that the former Minister appointed a Mr. Bill Rowe as a special investigator to look into the tax problems of the Newfoundland fishermen. As a result of this investigation, third party demand was reduced from 50 per cent to 25 per cent, except for cases in which this would result in a level of payments too small to keep up with the interest owing.

In addition, no homes, no property, boats or other assets used in the fisheries will be seized. Any future taxable income paid to the fishermen by Government will be followed up by T4 slips. This will clear up the confusion among the fishermen that resulted from the payment of a federal groundfish grant, or subsidy, during the late 1970s. Many fishermen did not realize that this grant or subsidy was taxable, since no T4 slips were issued by the Government, and then suddenly found, several years later, that they had to report how much was paid to them.

To the best of my knowledge the steps I have outlined have been applicable only to Newfoundland, even though I have written to the Minister on numerous occasions about similar problems among Nova Scotia fishermen. This leads me to ask the Government why there is a double standard and why the fishermen of Nova Scotia have been harangued, bullied and threatened when faced with income tax problems similar to those that occur in Newfoundland. These people are not trying to avoid the payment of their income tax; they know that they owe it. What they are pleading for is a little more time in which to meet the payments since the very resource industry upon which their livelihood is based has declined in this particular year.

The Government is guilty of complete insensitivity to the situation that is faced by Nova Scotia fishermen as well as by Nova Scotia farmers, whose plight I have documented in letters to the Minister as well.

We now have a new Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), who is the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg. I would enter a plea to him to give the same consideration to the farmers and fishermen in Nova Scotia who are in arrears with his Department as has been recently given to the fishermen of Newfoundland.

• (1230)

The new Minister of Finance is concerned with job creation, and for justifiable reasons. In his budget address the Minister stated that $1.4 billion was allocated this year for employment programs and to help those who are recently unemployed; a new Employment Expansion and Development Program is being put in place. This leads me to ask why the Government requires such a large and expensive bureaucracy to inform it about the proper job-creation programs it should establish. What hyprocrisy! There is not a Member of Parliament in this House who could not, if requested, provide the Government with a number of worth-while projects which, if implemented, would provide jobs and assist in providing more jobs when completed.

If the Minister wants a comprehensive list of genuine make-work projects which will really help build up the infrastructure of the nation, I would be pleased to submit it on behalf of my riding as it applies to Nova Scotia, and I am sure my colleagues would also be pleased to do likewise.

Sometimes I am asked, "What would you do if you were in Government to help solve our present economic problems?" The answer to that question can partially be found in the Minister's statement to the House wherein he pointed out that Canada's budgetary revenues stood at $54.1 billion this year, some 19.1 per cent higher than in 1980-81. This is the figure to aim at when calculating budgetary expenditures, and in times of restraint all expenditures for projects that are not urgently required should be curtailed. For example, we must all ask ourselves whether it is urgently necessary for a Crown corporation to propose the construction of two new museums in Ottawa, an area which has the lowest unemployment rate in Canada at this time.

We need sunset laws to eliminate unnecessary programs. We need strict control of the spending and activities of Crown corporations, as indicated by the Auditor General. We must re-establish parliamentary control over public spending, and I believe we should seriously consider letting private industry purchase and operate some of our Crown corporations.

There is a desperate need to eliminate some of the present duplication of Government services. We must ask ourselves whether we really need a federal Minister of Agriculture—and I am not picking on him but he is as good an example as any—and Ministers of Agriculture in each and every Province of Canada. The same question could be asked about other ministerial duplications throughout the nation for, after all, it is the individual Canadian taxpayer who pays for all governments whether they be federal, provincial or municipal. None of the recommendations I have made is a cure-all for our economic ills, but I submit that if they were implemented we would go a long way toward the goal which leads to a balanced budget in Canada.

Finally, this Government does not need to stand alone in its attempts to solve our economic problems. It has been offered much help and assistance by all of Canada's provincial Premiers—help, I might add, which unfortunately has been refused. In late August the annual Premiers' Conference was hosted in Halifax by Nova Scotia's capable Premier, the Hon. John Buchanan. At the conclusion of that Conference an invitation was extended to the Right Hon. Prime Minister to meet with all provincial Premiers in early September. The invitation was declined. They called upon Ottawa to join with the Provinces in developing the appropriate conditions and policies to restore investor and consumer confidence in Canada. They drafted an economic recovery program which called for a change in monetary policy to ensure that Canadian interest rates follow any drop in United States interest rates, for substantial changes in the National Energy Program and FIRA to restore investor confidence, and for a commitment by both the federal and provincial Governments to reduce deficits and to work toward a manageable public debt or freeze on any further federal reductions in Established Programs Financing to Provinces for education and hospital care. The latter one is causing untold misery throughout Canada, especially in Atlantic Canada where hospitals have been forced to seal off some of their wings and let beds sit idle, while the sick and needy are unable to get treatment because there is no money to finance the required nurses to look after them.

A request was also made for provincial participation in the GATT meetings on trade and tariffs, plus many other worthwhile proposals. These are all before the Prime Minister. I cannot understand for the life of me why he did not accept the offer. I understand the offer still stands. I urge the Right Hon. Prime Minister to reconsider his stand and to meet with all the Premiers of Canada in a joint effort to resolve our immediate problems.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. This is the first time I have had occasion to address the House in my new responsibilities as Minister responsible for Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation.

On Wednesday my colleague said that he had been Minister of Finance for some 48 days and that he would not be rushed into action simply for the sake of appearing to act. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated that he intended to arrive at decisions which were sensible, constructive and durable. I have been Minister responsible for CMHC for some 30 days, and I know exactly what the Minister of Finance meant.

I should like to say that the economic statement presented by the Minister was in fact sensible, constructive and durable. It addressed in a straightforward way the problems faced by the victims of the recession. It gave the assurance that they will not be abandoned and that the social security system which the Government has put in place will not be dismantled at the very time when it is most needed.

It contained fiscally responsible measures and recognized the private sector as the engine for economic growth, and this is surely true in the field of housing. Also it reaffirmed the need for continued efforts to reduce inflation. These are the critical elements of an effective strategy for national recovery.

In particular I should like to refer to the measures relating to housing and to say that they too are sensible, constructive and durable. On taking on my new responsibilities, my first concern is with the availability of good housing. I am worried about the rate of housing starts. I am concerned about the state of the construction industry. I am also concerned about the ability of Canadians to become home owners and that rental accommodation be made available. Most importantly, I am concerned that low-income families should have good accommodation without having to pay unreasonable proportions of their income. I am deeply concerned about the housing conditions of native Canadians and of low-income families in rural areas as well as those in cities and towns.

In facing up to these challenges I will be building upon a foundation established by my predecessor, the now Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove). He held this portfolio at a most difficult time, and the programs he brought forward showed his deep concern for the housing problems faced by many Canadian families. During the past year the Government has put close to $1 billion into the housing sector, the direct result of my predecessor's efforts to ensure Canadians continue to be among the best housed people in the world.

The Government has acted through the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan to assist home owners who are facing hardship in renewing their mortgages. Some $75 million has been set aside for this purpose. The Government has acted to support rental production through the Canada Rental Supply Plan under which the production of some 30,000 rental units will be supported during the remainder of this year and next. Close to 9,000 units have already been committed and an additional 5,000 are expected before the end of the year. An amount of $350 million was provided for this plan.

The Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan has now been extended. People buying newly constructed homes will be eligible to receive the $3,000 grant if their house was built before the end of April, 1983 and they purchase it before the end of December, 1983. In the case of people who have never owned a home before and are buying an existing house rather than one just newly built, they can get a grant as long as they make the purchase before the end of this year. For this program $400 million has been set aside. To date, some 65,000 householders have benefited from the program, and many of them were assisted in moving out of rented accommodation into homes of their own. This helped to relieve the scarcity of rental units.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced that $50 million more will be allocated to the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, therby increasing total funds for this program to $115 million. It is estimated that some 34,000 households have already benefited from this program. The average cost of renovations has been about $6,700, of which $1,675 or 25 per cent was contributed by the government. Homeowners had to pay the remaining 75 per cent, so that this program has not only been an incentive for Canadians to improve their homes but has also stimulated private investment of up to $240 million in direct job creation. I should also mention that the average income of households benefiting from the program is between $24,000 and $25,000, considerably less than the national average of $30,000.

As I said before, up to now the present government has provided nearly $1 billion to improve accommodation for Canadians during the current year. It is estimated that in terms of jobs, these measures have created between 120,000 to 125,000 person-years of work. The Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan will help create 40,000 jobs, in other words, one job for every $10,000 invested by the government. The Home Renovation Program Renovation Program will provide 28,000 jobs a little more than $4,000 per job—and the Canada Rental Supply Plan 54,000 jobs or one job per $6,500. Since all these programs attract investment by the private sector, they have proved to be very effective as a source of job creation. In addition to this very substantial contribution by the Government of Canada in stimulating the housing industry, other factors have come into play. Mortgage rates have dropped 5 per cent since June, and following the initiative taken by the federal government, seven provinces have introduced measures to stimulate housing construction. The economic outlook is becoming more encouraging. Inflation is going down. And as the Minister of Finance said Wednesday, support for the 6 and 5 program will help bring the inflation rate down to about 7.5 per cent in 1983. This kind of development will probably help reduce interest rates even further next year. As the economy recovers and continues to do so in 1983, I expect to see a net increase in housing starts during the last month of 1982 and throughout 1983.

[English]

Despite these positive and encouraging signs, the potential growth in the housing industry continues to be constrained by consumer attitudes. Householders, perhaps understandably, are cautious in making the important decision to purchase a home. As the economic recovery gains momentum and inflation abates, this uncertainty should be significantly reduced. In the meantime, I will be examining the feasibility of measures which could provide purchasers, as well as investors, with some measure of protection against the hazard of very volatile mortgage interest rates.

In all of these deliberations I welcome the participation and advice of industry associations as well as consumer groups and other interested organizations. I have already had an opportunity to meet with representatives of national builders and real estate organizations. I see these meetings as very useful and I will continue the tradition of consultations set by my predecessor.

In enumerating my concerns about the housing problems of Canadians, Madam Speaker, I do not want to leave the House with a distorted view of our present circumstances. For that reason, I would like to remind Hon. Members that, by the most reasonable standard of comparison, Canadians are very well housed.

The most recent international statistics indicate that Canada stands well ahead of most countries in terms of its investment in housing and the rate of construction related to population. We outrank the United States in both our construction rate and in housing investment as a proportion of gross national product. We stand second only to the United States in the proportion of homes occupied by the owners. It is interesting to note that, despite all of our recent difficulties, well over half of all homes in Canada, some 60 per cent, are owner-occupied.

The fact that we are generally well housed, however, serves only to emphasize the problem of the relative few who are not. There is an important minority, many of them native peoples, who are still inadequately housed or who are paying a very high proportion of their income for housing. The problems faced by these people are likely to grow in the years immediately ahead as the population becomes older and as energy costs rise.

The principal programs designed to help poorly housed people who have inadequate incomes are the co-operative and non-profit housing programs which provide federal contributions to reduce the mortgage interest paid by sponsoring groups to an effective rate as low as 2 per cent. These programs have been extremely popular and there is no lack of public-spirited organizations, such as churches, service clubs, unions and the like, who are anxious to sponsor a project.

This method of assisting people who for whatever reason cannot provide for themselves has certain obvious advantages over the conventional public housing system which tended to isolate tenants from the rest of the community. I am not satisfied, however, that the co-operative and non-profit programs over the next few years will be able to make significant inroads on the backlog of nearly three-quarters of a million Canadians whose housing is less than satisfactory.

My predecessor had begun to seek more effective and less costly ways of dealing with that problem and I intend to continue and encourage those efforts. In the same vein, I intend to pursue the work already well under way to improve the Rural and Native Housing Program, the principal instrument in our hands for alleviating the housing conditions of our native people and other people of low-income living in rural and remote parts of the country.

Another important and very successful program with a social orientation has been the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, known as RRAP. This program provides forgivable loans of up to $10,000 to help with repairs and improvements designed to restore deteriorating housing to acceptable standards of health and safety and to prolong its useful life.

The maximum income of home owners eligible for RRAP assistance was recently increased from $16,500 to $23,000 a year. At the same time the forgivable part of the loan was increased from $3,750 to $5,000 for home owners and from $2,500 to $3,000 for landlords. In addition, a maximum loan of $13,000 was offered to home owners who intend to make their housing more accessible to disabled people. In that case, $5,250 of the loan is forgivable.

The objectives of RRAP, unlike the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, are essentially social. There are limits of income on eligibility. Nevertheless, it too has its economic side effects and it is estimated that the $170 million allocated for RRAP in 1982 will generate over 11,000 jobs.

I would like to conclude by saying that I am looking forward to my new responsibilities with a great deal of interest and enthusiasm. I am still finding my way about this new portfolio but I already have some idea of the broad direction I wish to pursue.

I am very conscious of the current and urgent economic priority. I appreciate that some of the most effective levers for employment generation lie within my hands as the Minister responsible for housing. The recent announcement by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, makes substantial new resources available to intensify and prolong these job creating efforts. I am very much aware of the difficult decisions that had to be taken to free up those funds. I can assure the House that I, and my officials at CMHC, will see they are put to the best possible use.

At the same time, I do not propose to lose sight of the fact that good housing is a basic social need and as long as there are families and individuals anywhere in Canada whose shelter is inadequate or unaffordable, the Federal Government has an obligation, in the name of equity and justice on behalf of fellow Canadians, to offer them help.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Gentleman permit a question if there is time?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly permit a question. I hope I have the answer.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): At one time I had asked his predecessor, given the difficult situation with respect to tenants and renters in terms of rents as part of the family cost, whether or not he would be prepared to convene a meeting of provincial housing Ministers and the federal housing Minister with respect to the problem of rent review generally and other problems facing tenants. Unfortunately, his predecessor said no.

So that the Minister is clear, rather than meeting with them individually, I am talking about a federal-provincial conference. He may not be able to answer me directly today, but would he undertake to consider the convening of such a conference with respect to this problem, given the final statements in the Minister's speech this morning?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I would have to assess whether that approach would be the most useful one. I certainly detect a spirit of co-operation on some of the present problems and economic issues in the country. I must confess to the House that that aspect of the portfolio is not one with which I have become completely familiar. I hope to give a fuller answer to the Hon. Member in the days and weeks to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As a courtesy to the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), I can indicate to him that if Hon. Members find the intervention of the lunch hour discomforting to their address to the House, they sometimes seek unanimous consent of the House to call it one o'clock and begin at two o'clock. Obviously, that is the choice of the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we are lean and hungry over here. Looking over there, they look like a hungry bunch also, so may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it agreed to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12:56 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock for the lunch break, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) had been recognized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that warm welcome.

In beginning my remarks today, I would welcome my two new colleagues to the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) and the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), as well, of course, as the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I am sure they will enjoy their time here in the House of Commons, as I have, and I pledge them my help, support and encouragement in welcoming them here now.

Today we are taking part in a debate on Bill C-128. It is not one of the mammoth bills when it comes to voluminous paragraphs commencing with such words as "Whereas", "Wherefore" and "Thereto". It is a one-page, simple little bill asking that the Government be allowed to borrow $4 billion. If one says it fast, $4 billion does not hurt. I recall that last spring the Government wanted to borrow $11 billion on top of what it had already borrowed. The Opposition asked, "Do you need it all?" The Government said "Oh, no, we do not need it all; we want a contingency fund". The agreement was that if the Government did not need it, it would not get it. We said, "We will approve the portion of $6.6 billion; if you want to borrow more, come back". Well, the Government has come back very quickly.

It was kind of interesting to hear the Government House Leader say on "Canada AM" earlier this week that the first order of business in the House would be a major debate on the economy. He did not say one word about borrowing another $4 billion; he said it would be a major debate on the economy. When I consider the borrowing authority of $21.2 billion that this Government has already had approved by the House of Commons, I am sure it just warms the very cockles of Canadian taxpayers' hearts to hear that this Government has gone out all over the place borrowing $21.2 billion to cover its wild spending, and wild it is. This year it will be spending 17 per cent more than last year. Not many people in this country can afford to spend 17 per cent more this year than last year, because they just do not have it and they cannot afford to borrow it.

Canadians will be pleased to know that our total debt is about $150 billion. Before this fiscal year is finished on. March 31, 1983, I am sure this excuse for a Government will be back to borrow more money. I am positive that we will debate another borrowing bill before the end of this fiscal year; I do not think we have seen the end of it.

If the Government decided to start paying back the debt it owes—and I will leave aside the interest for a moment—paying back $1 billion a year, it would be paid off 150 years from now. Who will be paying it? Those young people in the gallery will be paying for it. They will be paying for the mistakes we make today. Their children and their children's children will be forever paying it. This Government is not serious about that, not one bit.

Where is this Government cutting expenditures? We hear that next year $245 million will be cut from defence spending. When we asked the Minister about this, he said that by limiting salaries to 5 and 6 per cent, $245 million to $250 million will not have to be spent, even though this is not now being spent. What kind of saving is that? Smokescreens and mirrors, as my leader said the other day, and he is absolutely right.

Let us talk about interest payments. The figures the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) spoke about show that interest payments on the public debt are now $16,715 million. That is more money than the transfer payments which this Government makes to the Provinces, while at the same time saying these payments are tying them down. It is almost $1.5 billion more for interest payments than transfer payments to the Provinces. It is absolutely shocking.

What is this doing to the taxpayer? Let us take a look. Interest on the debt has increased 1,058 per cent since the right hon. gentleman took over 14 or 15 years ago. It seems like a century; in fact, it seems like forever. I am sure Canadians will do something about that the next time they have an opportunity to go to the polls.

With interest having gone up 1,058 per cent, every taxpayer in this country now owes $14,116. If we take it off the taxpayer and put it on every single individual in Canada, including those bright young Canadians in the gallery today, they each owe $5,473. Every one of them now owes that amount. Is this Government really serious about cutting spending?

Over the last five months I have lost some weight, Mr. Speaker, about 30 pounds, and I will tell you how I did it. I did without some of those things it is nice to have and I would like to have—I inherited my father's sweet tooth—but didn't. I sacrificed that. I trimmed down and I slimmed down. I cut the fat off. That is what this Government should be doing. It is nice for them to have their little toys, their four Canadair jets to flit around the country and all the other little perks such as drivers to transport Ministers to the Hill. Those gas guzzlers sit there for hours, keeping the car warm in winter or cool in summer so that the Minister will be in absolute comfort and not have a bead of sweat on his forehead when he arrives at the House of Commons. You can go chapter and verse through this Government and each Minister and trim off a lot of fat, but it is not being done. I repeat, spending is up over 17 per cent this year.

Unemployment figures in Canada are a national disgrace, especially among young people. Statistics Canada tells us that 1,458,000 people are out of work. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) sits there grinning, laughing, thinking this is a great joke. I say to him that the people of Mississauga North do not think it is a big joke. A lot of people there are out of work. He can sit and laugh if he wants, but it is not funny to the 1,458,000 people out of work. An unemployment rate of 12.2 per cent is not funny.

Let me put on the record what is happening in this country. In Newfoundland there is 18.6 per cent unemployment, 14.8 per cent in New Brunswick, 11.1 per cent in Ontario, 9 per cent in that Province that is supposed to be doing so well, 13.4 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 15 per cent in la belle province de Québec, 9.2 per cent in Manitoba, 13.4 per cent in British Columbia and 6.7 per cent in Saskatchewan. That was the September unemployment record in Canada and it is shocking.

What does the Minister do? The Minister of Finance introduced a mini-budget or un-budget. All kinds of nicknames have been dropped on it. The Minister said it was just a financial statement but it was a lot more than that.

The Minister talked about the great program he will introduce that is going to produce 60,000 jobs. He says there are programs now in place, which there are. Some money has been sent to the riding of Brampton-Georgetown. It will provide about 50 jobs. They will not be full-time or permanent. I hope some training will be involved.

As of September 30, in Brampton there were 8,005 registered for unemployment insurance and 1,485 in Georgetown. That means over 9,500 people are now registered for unemployment insurance. A year ago there were 3,700 people and the year before that 1,500 people. This Government with its great give-away programs is going to provide 50 jobs. The people who get those 50 jobs will be thankful. However, the other 9,500 will not be happy. The Minister tells us we should be thankful for small mercies.

I had a small company in the town of Georgetown, a publishing company by the name of Irwin Dorsey, which employed about 30 people. Actually it was a distributorship in Canada for a publishing company in the United States. When that company was sold the only Canadian asset was Irwin-Dorsey, which employed 30 people in Georgetown. When the company applied to FIRA, FIRA said no, sell that little part off to a Canadian. If anybody did buy it they would get it at a very low price because they knew they were being blackmailed. FIRA did not let that deal go through. Thirty people became unemployed. The company is still shipping books into Canada from the United States. Last week one of the senior employees from that company came to see me and asked where he could get a job. They are still unemployed. They are still on unemployment insurance, with a couple of months to go. That is the type of thing this Government is doing. It is destroying companies which want to provide jobs through some of its asinine policies.

Another example: the boss of a company in a neighbouring riding came to me. He naturally had to come to me because his own Member would not see him. He said he had bid on a job for the Federal Government, had answered every spec to the nth degree, but the contract was awarded to an American firm whose bid was $200,000 more. After three weeks of trying to find out what the problem was, they finally said it had something to do with the mechanical aspects, but they never called him once to question his specs or proposals or anything else. He lost the job to an American firm yet the Canadian bid was $200,000 less. That is one example of the type of thing the Government does.

Another example was a program to clean out a reactor in Montreal, which happened to be owned by PetroCan. Two Canadian companies bid on the program and it was awarded to one of them, which then turned around and subcontracted it to an American firm from Houston, Texas, while Canadian equipment and expertise sat idly by. The Government allowed workers to come in from Texas and work on that job. Knowing that PetroCan is ours, I thought I had better call them up and find out what their purchasing policy is. Do they favour Canadians or do they just have no policy at all? I found out, Mr. Speaker, they have no preferential purchasing policy at all. They have no preference for Canadians, yet PetroCan is ours.

Petro-Canada had their logo designed in Bermuda. Their real estate firm is from New York. The first thing they did that was Canadian was buy a Canadair jet so the president could fly back and forth from his home in Ottawa to his office in Calgary.

We heard from the Minister of Finance the other day—and I guess I am a little suspicious when a Liberal stands up and says we are not going to do this now, we might do it later—who backtracked on that infamous budget of November 12. There have been 42 changes from November 12. Then the Deputy Minister disappeared. The Finance Minister who introduced that budget and who stuck by it for a few months is still sitting in the House. He is sitting a little lower in his seat now, kind of peering over the top of the desk; he is not sitting proudly as he did a year ago, and well he should sit that way. I might add that he should not be in the House. If he honoured parliamentary democracy and tradition, he would have left a long time ago.

The Minister of Finance said yesterday the Government is looking at some other changes to the budget. It has not made up its mind yet. Does it know what that is doing to the business community who are sitting there asking what they should do, whether they should invest or should not. We still have employees asking if they are going to be taxed and we cannot answer. We do not know. There is no plan. There is no confidence.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his fireside chats said that we have to trust him, trust each other, trust Canadians. I trust Canadians. I trust them to get us out of the problems we are in, but they have to be encouraged. They have to be shown leadership. This has to be done but it is not being done.

The Prime Minister was the man who stood up and said "Zap, you are frozen" when he talked about wage and price controls. Then he brought them in. "Trust me", is what he said, "I will manage the economy so interest rates will come down". They went up to 20 per cent. "Trust me", he said, "and I will keep your gas prices down". Do Hon. Members remember that promise? How can this man ask for trust? He is the wrong man to be asking for trust. There are a few members over there, very few, I would accept that from, but not him. He has no credibility. He has no right to ask that of the Canadian people after what he has done to them.

I would like to talk now about housing. I was very interested in the speech of the new Minister responsible for CMHC today and his brief 15-minute chat on housing. He also acknowledges that there are problems in the country. Actually, they are making some headway over there. They are finally realizing there is a problem. Whether they will do something about it is another matter. I can remember very vividly the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), while participating in a debate on estimates, saying: "I have the solution, we are going to move up our 15,000-unit program for apartments to 30,000 this year". That was last March. Today, 7,814 units in the Canada Rental Supply Plan have been taken up according to figures from CMHC. I remember asking at that time if that was enough money to make it economically feasible to build apartment units. "Oh, yes", he replied, "they will be gobbled up in no time flat". To date three or four Provinces have not taken any up at all. New Brunswick has taken up eight, Nova Scotia, 107. Ontario leads the way, as it should. These are dismal figures and a long way from the 30,000 rental units which we need in this country.

Then there is the Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan, which has been adjusted and somewhat extended; 63,862 grants have been taken up from the Federal Government, 41,000 for existing housing and 22,495 grants of $3,000 have been taken up in new housing. We asked CMHC how many of those 22,000 were existing new homes already in stock and just sitting there. They did not know. They do not keep those figures.

How many new starts, Mr. Speaker, do you think this generates? Well, we do not know, yet the Minister responsible for housing said today this program created 100,000 jobs. He does not know if it did or not. The idea is to stimulate the construction industry. Housing starts are at the lowest point in years. I can still see my friend standing up there and talking about the starts that are going to take place because of all his wonderful programs, but it just has not happened.

I was interested to hear the Minister responsible for housing say that consumer attitude is causing the uncertainty. I say to the Minister—I am sorry he is not in the House but I am sure someone will pass the word along to him—that the problem is not the downpayment; the problem is the carrying charges. Young people are concerned about whether or not they can afford to carry the house. The carrying charges are just too high. Interest rates are too high. Today we heard the Minister of Finance bragging that interest rates have come down recently, for ten straight weeks or something, and he has taken credit for it. Yet it was not two months ago that the other Minister of Finance was saying that the reason we have high interest rates is because the United States has them. So when they go up, it is the Americans' fault; when they come down, it is all the wonderful work this Government is doing. I really find that kind of amazing.

The Minister responsible for housing also mentioned that the average of home ownership is highest in Canada. That is true, and I want it to stay up there. One of the problems, though, is that it is beginning to fall. We have come down from a high of 65 per cent home ownership to about 60 per cent. I happen to think, Mr. Speaker, that home ownership is probably the cornerstone of a free and democratic society. The right to own property and do with it as you please, within certain guidelines, is probably one of the most important things we have to ensure the protection of democracy. When the system is kicking people out of their homes, people turn on the system. I do not want them to turn on the system. I want them to be well housed, and I am suggesting now that the Minister take a look at his program for rental units, which is not working and not doing the proper thing, and possibly divert some of those funds into co-op housing which we need so desperately today.

In winding up, I do not want to let my friends to the left go unscathed because I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) say Maggie Thatcher is doing the wrong thing over there. Watch what Maggie Thatcher is doing and it is all wrong. Well, Maggie Thatcher has reduced inflation in Britain, and that was her number one goal. If you talk to the British people, they are very happy and very pleased about that. They are going to get Britain back on its feet. They inherited one heck of a mess from those socialists, the Labour Party, when they took over. And we are going to have the same problem when we take over in Canada in trying to clean up this mess that that gang over there has left us with, with the co-operation of the NDP.

I listened to the Leader of the NDP espousing the theme of the Marxist-Leninists in the last federal election: let the rich pay. The whole theme then was let the rich pay, and he was espousing that theme again today. Where did he get that from? Did he get it from the Marxist-Leninists? Probably. Original thinking. It is just terrible.

I want to say to the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is now acknowledging for the first time that there are some problems out there. We happen to think that the approach it is taking to solving some of these problems is not correct. My colleague the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) I think laid out very clearly and succinctly what we would do as a party to turn it around. All I can say is the sooner the better; just give us the chance.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, several months ago ... I see my colleague from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is in the House and I am glad to see him. We are both members of a committee which, I hope, will soon be able to table a report and reform this institution. But to get back to today's subject, I think we can say, and various commentators are indeed saying it, that in his statement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) gave us a clear picture of an economic situation that is far from rosy and of the very real financial and budgetary constraints the government must reckon with. It is of course very tempting when discussing economics to get up there with all the other instant experts. I do not think there is another subject on which so many contradictory opinions, theories and schools exist, namely the causes and effects that form the basis of the science of economics. To some people, the market is basically a concept that cannot operate by itself. Its workings are erratic, and it should be up to the State to regulate the market's functions. This theory was fashionable during the thirties, and it was this concept that Keynes used to develop his famous theory on the regulatory role of the State vis-à-vis the market.

During the last fifteen years or so, our western economies have been experiencing a number of hitherto unknown phenomena such as, for instance, stagflation. Now we have a new theory, namely that the State is basically flawed, that the market must be allowed to find its own equilibrium among the various forces that affect it, and that the State must stop interfering with normal market effects. To my knowledge, neither theory has ever been proven because it is impossible to do so. These are working assumptions, and as such, they help economics develop models and thus acquire a better understanding of what is happening, so that they can advise governments on the directions they should take. In the United States and Great Britain, for instance, this new concept that the State should let the market sort out its own contradictions, has given rise to various theories such as supply side economics, a revival of strict monetarism and other economic theories which all have their followers and foes. Going back to the minister's financial statement, I think that he deserves a word of praise for having called a spade a spade and telling Canadians as objectively as possible what the situation is today in Canada, no matter how painful that may be, and letting them know at the same time what the government has decided to do. Of course, some people would prefer a different approach or different solutions, and that is not surprising, since economics is by definition not an exact science. And it is true that the resulting exchange of view produces a better understanding of economic phenomena.

Regarding the budget, the press release issued by the minister the same day mentioned six elements underlying the budget process: continued restraint on government spending, maintenance of social security programs for those Canadians needing most help, primary reliance on the private sector as the engine of economic growth, support for outward-looking trade policies, promotion of broad consultation in developing economic policies, development of an effective strategy for national recovery and economic development, building on the cooperative spirit of the six and five program.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what the press release tells us. Today, I would like to consider with my colleagues whether the alternatives suggested by our commentators, politicians and economists would, in fact, be valid alternate choices for the government. I shall start with a fact of our economic life which will eliminate some of these alternatives, and here I am about to pay a debt, Mr. Speaker, because a few months before the House adjourned for the summer, I asked the then Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) during question period whether he was considering the possibility of devaluing the Canadian dollar, the purpose being to help bring down interest rates which had reached exorbitant levels at that time. Remember, we were then talking about 18, 19, 20, and 21 per cent. Now the problem has eased somewhat, but there is still some concern.

So, if we accept the fact that Canada is by definition a trading country, where more than 30 per cent of the gross national product—a substantial figure compared with the percentages of our main economic partners—30 per cent of our GNP is derived from our foreign trade, no one can deny that it is extremely difficult for us to isolate ourselves from what is happening elsewhere, to ignore the international economic situation, to act as though the world's economies do not concern us, to expect to go on selling our products anywhere in the world although demand has become generally slack, in short, to act as though we could live off the land.

We are not Japan! It is often said, and it is true, that Japan is a trading nation par excellence, but Japan is far less dependent on its foreign trade for its economic well-being. In Canada, foreign trade represents 30 per cent, while in Japan, it is 11 or 12 per cent of GNP. Our domestic market is not big enough for our economy to grow and prosper without the benefit of foreign trade, no matter what we do to stimulate the economy. It is going to be affected by considerations that are external to our country. So if that is the case and it is if we, for instance, devalue the Canadian dollar, in the short term it is likely that interest rates will be subjected to downward pressures, which might help Canadian businesses that wish to expand, since despite the considerable drop in interest rates we have been experiencing for several months the fact remains that as a result of the present recession and our stagnating economy, these businesses have still been reluctant to consider expanding their facilities.

That being said, since our national economy is dependent on imports as well as exports, devaluating the Canadian dollar would have the immediate and obvious effect of increasing costs for business and for the economy in general, the rate of inflation depending on the extent of the devaluation. If our Canadian dollar is worth 3 or 4 or 5 per cent less than its American counterpart, our imports are going to cost 3 or 4 or 5 per cent more, and that 3 or 4 or 5 per cent will have to be absorbed by the economy, there are no two ways about it. We would thus be fanning inflation and the short-term advantage which our industries might have be being able to sell their products abroad at lower prices would certainly vanish rapidly as a result of the additional costs they would have to pay for their raw materials since the higher value of imports after devaluation would have to be included in those costs. And, of course, I am not saying anything about consumers having to pay more for their oranges, their grapefruits, their citrus fruits, their vegetables and everything else, not to mention petroleum products and all the goods which Canada has to import. Devaluation therefore is not the obvious solution it appears to be and, although it might in the short run relieve some of the upward pressure on interest rates, I am not at all certain that in the long term—and even in the medium term for the economy as a whole—it would be the appropriate solution. Another possible solution, in a different sector this time since it has to do with the very acute unemployment problems we are now experiencing in Canada, would be to overstimulate the Canadian economy, on the one hand, and, on the other, to offer considerably more assistance to unemployed Canadians either through direct job creation programs or through more generous social benefits to help them survive the current economic crisis.

I will get back to the social issues in a moment, but to those who at the same time advocate overstimulation and a higher budget deficit—because that is what it amounts to set up huge job creation programs, I would ask how they could possibly justify an even higher budget deficit for the Canadian government; our deficit is huge enough as it is—and it has been the target of severe criticisms in quite a number of circles, first of all by members opposite—so much so that it inevitably undermines the capacity of money markets to finance investments. We all know why we have such a huge deficit today: first and foremost, the economic stabilizers have pushed it upwards as the recession has worsened. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is a very good thing that we have these stabilizers since they allow the economy generally and Canadians individually to spread out the consequences of difficult times on the one hand, and the benefits of more prosperous times on the other, without being subject to the ups and downs of successive years depending on the inevitable and normal cycles which effect all western economies because of the very nature of supply and demand.

I do not think therefore that these stabilizers are being questioned by anyone, and if not, I do not see how one can bitterly complain about the present deficit. By definition, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) pointed out, a very large part of this deficit is caused by the effect of the stabilizers, and if some want to talk about the deficit, I would tell them to speak mainly about the stabilizers. If they are against these stabilizers, let them say so and we can discuss them. On the other hand, we have to recognize that, according to conventional wisdom, in times of hardship, the government must inject money into the economy. That is the dilemma. How substantially can we increase the deficit if we are to inject money into the economy to overstimulate or stimulate it?

This could lead to a lengthy debate and I noted with interest that the New Democrats settled this question in their own way at their last convention. They believe that we have reached the point of no return. From now on, in order to stimulate the economy, we must no longer increase the deficit even more, but cut back on some programs. I congratulate them because this is what I also believe. However, others believe that the point of no return has not yet been reached and that we must spend even more. I was reading some of the comments made by those who have been complaining, and to show what I mean, Mr. Speaker, I shall disregard the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), who complained for instance that we were asking Canadians to increase their contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Fund, in view of the fact that we shall ourselves put up $1 billion to make up part of the fund's deficit, and who complained that we were thrusting this real burden on Canadians in these hard times, but who did not offer any alternative, which leads me to believe that he would have wanted the Canadian government to finance the unemployment insurance fund next year. Where would he have taken the money? Would he be willing to make the deficit even larger—and then we could draw certain conclusions—or would he have taken the money somewhere else, and in that case, where? I am simply asking the question and explaining the dilemma. I say all this, Mr. Speaker, to point out that, in my opinion, there is now a virtual consensus to the effect that it would be difficult for the government to make the deficit much larger than the suggested figure of about $23 billion. Of course, this is because of the effect of the economic stabilizers which come into play so that the Canadian people do not have to suffer from a rather serious recession.

Therefore, if the deficit is not to grow, the money has to be found somewhere else, and I shall not take up again the point made by the Minister of Finance to show that the government has very little room to manœuvre. Of course, I am the first to admit it and I shall be the first to ask the Minister of Finance to take any possible action. There may still exist redundant, useless or overly costly programs. If such programs exist, and they do, I hope that we shall have the courage and the will to eliminate them as quickly as possible, before the next budget, I hope. However, those who suggest that these programs represent billions of dollars are wrong. Most often, it is a case of a few million dollars wasted here and there, of some forgotten agency in some government building, with a few employees who keep on doing some work which is perhaps less important today that it was originally.

A few million dollars, you might say, is a lot of money, which it is indeed, and that is the reason why I urge again the Minister of Finance to scrutinize all government programs from every angle and eliminate those we can do without. But the amount we hope to recuperate will likely look insignificant compare to our huge deficit, and those tens or hundreds of millions of dollars that he might save would not make a big difference in the job creating effort, if he decided to use the money in this area. I, for one, am sorry that we cannot do more for jobless Canadians, especially those who have run out of UI benefits, and I wish we could have allocated more money to this program, but this would have meant a sharp increase in the current deficit.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would respond to a question dealing with the matter about which he is speaking.

Mr. Lachance: I would be very glad to accommodate the Hon. Member at the end of my remarks.

[Translation]

Therefore, we would have had to increase the current deficit considerably, and under the present circumstances, I think that the minister's modest but significant proposal will enable the most severely affected people to seek government assistance until such time, when the economy is back in full swing and we may be in a position to do more for them.

Canada is a trading nation, something we must not overlook, and in this regard Canadian firms are doing fine. They are holding their own in spite of adverse international circumstances. As of August 31, 1982, Canada had a favourable trade balance to the tune of $11.1 billion. That is $4.4 billion more than at the same time last year. Which is proof that the Canadian economy is broyant and that the Minister of Finance is right in stating that as soon as the world economy starts to recover, signs of which are already being felt in the United States, if Canada is in a position to act and benefit from it, it should be able to solve its current problems fairly quickly. Eventually unemployment would decrease and even if it did not decrease as quickly as we would wish, at least the Government coulld provide better and greater than at present through direct job creation programs. I would now like to refer to social programs, Mr. Speaker, and point out that if there is an area where Canada may be proud of what it has accomplished in recent decades it is in the social area. This is the reason why with some others I was very much concerned by rumours which have been going around during the past weeks while the Minister of Finance was drafting his economic statement, rumours based on statements or excerpts of statements sometimes quoted out of context. However those rumours have disturbed many Canadians and Parliamentarians. Finally, they were put to rest when some ten days ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the end of a meeting held at Meach Lake stated unequivocally that the issue, though important and relevant to the reassessment implied in the drafting of a budgetary paper, would be left as such, that it would not be dealt with, but for the moment cuts would perhaps be made elsewhere, while social programs would remain a security net allowing Canadians to hope and anticipate that in case of any hardships, they could rely on the required help to tide them over.

Also Mr. Speaker, I was quite pleased when the minister himself said the following in his statement:

> Second, we must not abandon the victims of the recession in the mistaken belief that such callous action might speed our recovery. This Government has worked consistenly over several decades to develop a social security system that effectively supports Canadians in need of help. We will not put the axe to that system at the very time when Canadians need it most. More constructively, we will continue to look for ways to improve our social programs and to make them more effective for those who need help.

Some people thought that that matter had been settled. Unfortunately I am again disturbed as a result of some recent statements suggesting that social programs are still under discussion in spite of the Prime Minister's assurance and the statement made by the Minister of Finances and that in these difficult times the Government would consider re-arranging some of its programs. This has led an editor for the newspaper Le Devoir to write this morning that it was urgent to clarify the matter because Canadians cannot remain in such a state of uncertainty. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am the first one to believe that we should review our social programs and try to give those in dire straits more than they get at present. However that appraisal should not be made piecemeal and accompanied by sensational headlines. This study, an analysis, an assessment must be undertaken in a sensible, reasonable and informed manner, and I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that those who are making statements are concerned about the destabilizing factor that those statements may have on the people who are already very worried about general economic conditions and even more so when they hear about the re-organization of programs which they hang on to as safety net just in case of need.

I must therefore thank the Minister of Finance for having put an end as clearly as possible to these discussions and rumors that were circulating, and plead with those who feel obliged to make statements and I beg them to try to keep within the limits of an informed discussion on the various parts of these programs. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that I am happy to see that the Minister of Finance has left our social programs unchanged and has not re-allocated monies towards job creation and other programs but that instead he has resorted to other methods making cuts in other departments, for instance. For I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who believe that when it comes to discussing and improving a system we should first have in hand all relevant data and not proceed via piecemeal fashion. I therefore totally agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he says that these programs are a sort of safety net for the Canadian people and that they should not be changed now in view of the difficult times we living. However, if we are to discuss them it should be by means of a substantive debate with the participation of all interested parties and not by issuing staggering statements.

Mr. Speaker, the minister said that next winter will be a hard one and I must tell Canadians who listening to our debates, in particular my own costituents in Rosemont, that indeed times will really be harsh and to pretend the opposite would be deceiving them; on the other hand, due to the inherent strength and the resilience of our economy we can expect within a few months, when the world economy is back on its feet, that Canadians will be able to take advantage of this recovery and to see to it that our country once again is as flourishing as it should and will be.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has indicated that he would entertain a question.

Mr. Lachance: Agreed!

Mr. Keeper: Thank you. During his remarks, the hon. member stated that he had looked for waste in the federal budget. Here is a case. Some $180 million in the federal budget are earmarked for advertising. Is the hon. member willing to advise the Minister of Finance to cut this portion off the federal budget? Yes or no?

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, allow me first of all to congratulate wholeheartedly the Hon. Member for speaking such fine French, as well as the members of the NDP caucus who, I know, are trying very hard to learn French.

Let me put it this way: in my opinion, it is the responsibility of all Hon. Members to see to it that the taxpayers' money is spent where it will do the most good. Unfortunately, the means presently at their disposal are woefully inadequate. I have the privilege to sit on a very special committee of the House, namely, the Standing Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures, which is trying among other things to provide opportunities for Hon. Members' input and direct contribution whenever some items of government estimates do not receive the priority treatment they feel they deserve. And my colleagues on this committee are aware that I am one of those who feel that financial accountability is one of the most important issues, although it has unfortunately been too often overlooked in the past. I could answer his question and raise a whole series of others. I will simply remind him that before the Summer recess, when the House was called upon to vote on government items, I abstained from voting on the Information Centre on Canadian Unity.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating the giving of permission to the Government to borrow some $4 billion to help finance its economic policy. I want to take this opportunity to comment on the Government's economic policy and say why I think it is so wrong and say why it will not be the answer to the problems facing the country.

• (1510)

The day before yesterday, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in an economic statement which was really a budget speech, whether or not he called it that, went considerably further in the forced retreat march of the Liberal Party away from the battle for social justice. He confirmed even more what I have always believed to be true about the Liberal Party, that it is a fair weather camper when it comes to the cause of equality. It does not have the guts or the inclination to stand up for social justice against the self-interests of the powerful and the big financial and big business sectors of the Canadian society when times become tough and when real sharing and caring, to use a phrase that has been systematically cheapened by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in recent weeks, would require the rich and powerful to sacrifice, to care and to share.

Instead of progress toward greater equality among Canadians, we have seen a series of attacks on the average Canadian. The six and five program, which makes no distinction whatsoever between 6 per cent of $100,000 and 6 per cent of $10,000, is the clearest example of the moral failure of the Liberals, supported by the Conservatives. They don't even bother to pretend that they are interested in equality or in equal sharing of our economic problems? Fortunately for the Government and for the Conservatives who support them, what support there is for the six and five program in the country comes from the willingness of many average Canadians to co-operate and attempt to play their role if it will help the country. They are willing to do their part to help Canada. Wisely, they know by instinct that there is a moral problem at the root of our economic dilemma and not purely a technical or economic problem. That is why they are vulnerable—admirably vulnerable—to arguments about sacrifice and co-operation. They are vulnerable because they, unlike the Liberal Government and the Progressive Conservative Party, have not lost the ability to think in ethical terms, when considering economic matters. Their willingness to consider the common good is to be admired all the more because they also know deep down that the Liberals and the Conservatives who encourage them to sacrifice and co-operate in the interests of the common good really could not care less about the common good, as shown when those Parties' policies are examined.

There is an ethical dimension to our economic problems. And it can best be approached by examining the moral poverty of recent budgets. In November, 1981, certain tax loopholes for the rich were closed. In order to compensate for this, the marginal tax rate for the rich was dropped by 10 per cent, to ensure that closing those loopholes would not really hurt anyone but would look good on paper nevertheless. At the same time the federal Government announced in the same budget a cut of $5.7 billion from its funding of medicare and post-secondary education, programs which benefit all Canadians from coast to coast, regardless of their income.

In the spring of 1982 the Liberals, supported by the Conservatives, arranged to give $6.5 billion to the oil companies through the Petroleum Incentives Program in order to get these so-called free enterprisers off their "derrières" to look for more oil. Despite all the rhetoric about risk and free enterprise, the oil companies have both nostrils in the public trough all the way up to their eyebrows. The Conservatives never object to this. It is public spending for the poor and powerless that they enjoy actively discrediting. Hypocrites that they are, they pretend to be outraged when social programs are cut when it is they who systematically over the years have undermined the credibility of social programs in this country. Yet, they have the nerve to feign outrage when these programs are threatened. The real policy of the Progressive Conservatives, as has been said before, is socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor.

In June of 1982 the Government proceeded with its six and five program. Included in this 6 per cent and 5 per cent limit on future increases is a limit on the increases for old age security payments, family allowances and civil service pensions. The Government is therefore asking once again for average Canadians—pensioned average Canadians and mothers in this case—to carry the burden.

Now, in October of 1982, we must witness the spectacle of the Liberals opening the tax loopholes that they closed in November of 1981. These tax loopholes for the rich have been re-opened yet they have not increased the tax rate for these same people which was lowered in November of 1981. Therefore, this group of Canadians who fall into that higher income bracket will now have the benefit of both loopholes and a lower marginal tax rate. No doubt, this will have its intended effect on the donations to the Liberal Party coffers prior to the next election, for "he who pays the piper has just called the tune" it seems to me.

What about the average working Canadians who are already carrying more of the tax burden while corporations and individual wealthy Canadians pay less and less of their fair share in Canada? What news was there in the Minister's statement on Wednesday for the average working Canadians who, are paying their fair share and, do not mind doing it? The good news was for the wealthy and powerful. The bad news was saved for the lower and middle-income Canadians who will be hit with a 40 per cent—not 6 per cent or 5 per cent—increase in unemployment insurance premiums.

When unemployment insurance was last significantly reformed, I am told that the Minister indicated that the cost incurred by UIC as a result of unemployment higher than 4 per cent should be borne by the public and not by the contributors. The Liberals have clearly abandoned this policy. While they are shamelessly giving in to the blackmail of the corporate community in this country, they have no hesitation in becoming tough with the majority of Canadians by asking them to pay for Liberal mistakes. Perhaps it is time for them to pick on someone their own size.

We also saw in the Minister's statement on Wednesday a renewed reliance on the private sector. This is most interesting. The prodigal son, the Minister of Finance, has retreated from his interventionist binge, mild as it was, a chastened and broken man. No more for him; of the dangers and pitfalls of even talking about Canadian control of the economy or even one sector of the economy. He and the Prime Minister, the prodigal twins, with their tails between their legs can be seen running back into the safe enveloping arms of the private corporate establishment asking forgiveness and trying to show by their latest actions that they will be good boys in the future. The Prime Minister, for his part, has recanted all that he had said in the last election campaign about the need to build an independent Canadian economy and to strenghten the Foreign Investment Review Agency. He was either lying to the publlic then or he is the biggest coward we have seen in a long time. But then to watch the Prime Minister back down when it comes to putting his often noble sentiments into action has become the expected rather than the unusual in this Parliament or, indeed, in other Parliaments.

But who is the angry brother in this story about the prodigal twin? The angry brother is and will be the Progressive Conservative Party in this Parliament for, you see, the Progressive Conservatives never ventured out of the front yard. They were the good sons, the loyal sons of the corporate elite, always obedient, always faithful, never questioning the values and the dictates of Old Man Profit and his buddies Power and Privilege.

Mr. Wilson: You would think we were the Government.

Mr. Blaikie: The Conservatives might as well be the Government. They would be doing exactly the same thing.

Mr. Fennell: No way.

Mr. Blaikie: The Conservatives are the loyal sons of the corporate elite and were critical of the prodigal son, the prodigal twins all along. They knew they were wrong. They said so even as far back as the early seventies.

I listened to the Progressive Conservative finance critic the other day. He went as far back as the Benson tax reforms, at the time when we went ever so slightly in the direction of a fair taxation policy. That was the beginning of the end, in the Conservative view, when we moved slightly toward fairness. That was the root of all evil, as far as the Progressive Conservative Party is concerned, when we tried to have a progressive tax policy in this country. They knew then that the Liberals were straying far from the corporate home. The Carter Commission recommended that for tax purposes all income be treated equally, that the rule for tax policy, as was said at the time, should be "a buck is a buck is a buck". The Benson proposals were only a pale imitation of the Carter proposals. Incidentally, he was not appointed by some left-wing conspiracy, but, rather, was appointed by John George Diefenbaker. Yet yesterday the current Conservative finance critic cited the Benson reforms as a beginning of the policies he and his Progressive Conservative colleagues warned against, leaving one to wonder why they just do not drop the word "Progressive" from their title and be honest about themselves.

The Conservative Party is the faithful brother in the story about the prodigal twin. I predict that the Conservatives will be increasingly unhappy with the way in which the Liberal Party will be welcomed back into the fold which, as I have said, it only strayed away from in the mildest of ways. But such is the pettiness of the corporate elite in this country that it should retaliate for even the least transgression.

Who is the fatted calf? The fatted calf is the Canadian public, and the celebration will no doubt be great in the coming days when Liberals and Conservatives sit down in private, with the blessing and in the company of their corporate father figures, to dine on the lives and expectations of pensioners, mothers, workers, the sick, the unemployed and everyone who, unlike the powerful friends of the Liberals and Conservatives, pay his or her fair share in this country.

We are caught, Mr. Speaker, in the middle of an economic recession which has dimensions going beyond our borders to the very nature of the international economic order which has been in place since World War II. This global recession and the concurrent restructuring of western capitalism, which is both cause and result of the global recession, is difficult enough for all countries, but it has been doubly difficult for those countries like Canada where there have not been governments committed to national economic planning in the public interest. Instead, we have governments and official oppositions, the Conservatives in this case, who would persistently rely on privately made, unaccountable and unco-ordinated corporate investment decisions as the central dynamic of our economy. This, as I have argued, is exactly what the Liberals and Conservatives would have us do. Nothing could be clearer.

Of course, Canada is being triply hurt by the fact that we are not really masters of our own economic house but are an economic colony of the United States, thanks to the Liberal and Conservative sell-out over the years. Therefore, we are not just at the mercy of corporate self-centred decision making, per se; we are also at the mercy of foreign-owned corporate decision making. In this sense, any government which is not actively pursuing real Canadian control, both public and private, over our economy is only fooling itself and the Canadian people when it speaks of having an economic strategy for the country, for without this commitment, the only strategy left is the one which the Liberals have just admitted. They have had it for a while. It is the one which the Conservatives have been asking for, pleading for, all along. It is the strategy of total capitulation to the needs and interests of the investment community, both domestic and international, in the hope that if we are nice enough to them, businesses will still invest in Canada and not go elsewhere. Money, you see Mr. Speaker, knows no borders nor loyalty to community. It is amoral at best and immoral at worst. Those who worship it enough to think of moving out of this country in order to get more of it when they already have lots, whether it be businessmen thinking of relocating in the United States, in New Jersey or wherever, or doctors moving to Texas, are not, in my view, true members of the community, and all I can say is: good riddance. They have cut their ties with home and hearth and made themselves part of that meaningless and morally impoverished pursuit which is the disease of our age.

Yet these are just the values that the Liberals and Conservatives would have us cater to.

The Liberals and Conservatives together regard the investment decisions of the private sector as morally neutral and above criticism, as simply a fact, like the weather, which has to be contended with by the public and by government, who can influence the behaviour of these decisions but must never judge these decisions. Thus, we will hear from the Liberals and the Conservatives criticisms of labour productivity, criticisms of social programs, for instance, but we will never hear them criticize the corporations for investing precious capital, which could have been used to create jobs, in takeovers which promise no new jobs and which only further concentrate power in the hands of a few. We never hear criticism or a judgment of those who took vast amounts of money out of productivity and put it to unproductive rest, collecting high interest rates during the recent extremely high interest rate period. We never heard criticism of that. All we heard and all we still hear is criticism of workers, civil servants, unions, peace activists and environmentalists, but we never even hear a word of criticism about investment decisions and their social usefulness or their productivity.

Mr. Cosgrove: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Hon. Member would permit a question at the conclusion of his remarks on the opinions he just expressed concerning investment.

Mr. Blaikie: At the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to entertain a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Thank you.

Mr. Blaikie: Investors are free to do whatever they want, in the name of freedom, whether to invest in transportation or in trivia, thus corrupting the name of freedom and damaging the future of this country and of the human community. As far as I am concerned, that is not freedom, it is just plain licence.

• (1530)

This Liberal-Conservative view of the world which holds corporate economic decision-making to be sacrosanct, is one which we in the New Democratic Party do tally reject. We call on all hard-working Canadians to reject it as well for the benefit of the country and those who will come after us so that some day Canadians will be able to stand up with appropriate pride and dignity as a society which does not depend for its stability on decisions taken in secret in corporate boardrooms in other countries, but rather as a society which is self-reliant and in control of a national economic destiny that is in harmony with the need for global justice and environmental responsibility for the future and for the planet.

You see, the Conservatives are right in a way. That is often the case with the Conservatives. They have a little pinch of the truth. They argue that if you redistribute wealth without paying any attention to how you generate that wealth, at some point you may have no wealth to distribute, if I understand their argument correctly, and I think I do.

They argue that we have reached that point in Canada. I argue the contrary, that this is only true in the sense that those who own the productive capacity in this country and in other countries are now refusing to share what they have. They have in a sense gone on strike against the welfare state and the kind of society that we have built up in Canada over the last 30 years.

The fact that all studies indicate that the gap between the rich and the poor has not been closed by the welfare state but indeed may have been widened does not bother them. They do not like the truth to interfere with their theories. They maintain we have reached a point where people will no longer have incentives to generate the wealth which then can be redistributed.

During a recession in particular they seem to be of the opinion that the standard of living of the affluent must be preserved at all costs and that the affluent cannot and indeed will not pay more taxes in order to make sure that the less well off are not hurt.

This is called, in the parlance of the Liberal and Conservative Parties, a good investment climate. I call it nothing but sheer, unadulterated selfishness and greed. That is what good investment climate means to me. Providing a good investment climate also means catering to the profit margins of the multinationals and other corporations when it comes to environmental protection, occupational health and safety, and other areas as well.

Thus, it is not only for reasons of social justice, both during a recession and indeed after a recession, that investment decisions affecting our economy must be brought before the bar of the public interest, but also for the reason that we must make economic and technological decisions accountable for the impact that such decisions have on employment, on the environment, on human relations, on the community and on the prospect for global justice. All investment decisions must be brought before the bar of this kind of criteria. At present they are not. They are operating in a moral vacuum where they do whatever the hell they please. That kind of thing has to end. Yet, this is the conceptual and moral leap which neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives are prepared, willing or able to make.

In terms of redistribution of wealth, the Liberals are in an increasingly untenable position. All those many well-intentioned Canadians who supported the Liberals over the years because they believed that the Liberal Party really wanted to redistribute wealth will soon have to choose. They will have to accept the Conservative argument that we have reached the limit of our ability to share while generating, wealth in the traditional way and must, therefore, retreat from the welfare state, or, they have to accept the NDP argument. We argue that because what the Conservatives say is true in a sense, we must go beyond the welfare state and its many inadequacies by using a combination of various forms of public ownership, public control of investment dollars and fair taxation to make our economy serve the common good and to generate the kind of wealth that would be to the benefit of all Canadians, not just materially but socially as well.

That is the choice that will be faced in the eighties, and I am sincere when I say that well-intentioned Canadians who supported the Liberal Party thought we could have it both ways in Canada, that somehow the Liberal Party could go on forever being a party of social reform and at the same time a party that was loyal to the traditional economic system.

That could happen as long as there was lots of money to throw around. Now there is not the money to throw around and the Liberal Party has had to choose which way to go. I say the Liberal Party has already chosen. There are plenty of Members opposite who will not admit that. They do not want to hear the truth. They do not want to know they have died the moral death which they have died over the last few years. Those with something still left in them will realize that. Plenty of voters will realize that. They will realize that, even if the Liberal Party is not willing to realize it. For, as I have said, the Liberals chose to abandon social justice when it came to the crunch.

Now, Mr. Speaker, more than ever is the time for a co-operative Commonwealth that the founders of CCF and NDP dreamed of, in which true human community and real individual freedom would grow together as the competitive self-seeking of individuals, corporations, governments and nations, characteristic of the present order, is replaced with the structures and not just the rhetoric of equality, co-operation, justice and peace.

It will not be easy. We realize that a future in which a just social and economic order that meets the needs of all, within the limits of our responsibility for a healthy environment and to future generations, will be difficult to achieve. Minds and hearts will have to be changed as well as economic structures and material conditions, but there is no other choice. Otherwise, both domestically and internationally we will descend into the slime that the Prime Minister wallowed in on television in his three addresses last week when he was talking about the survival of the fittest, abandoning all pretence of the search for justice and international peace.

Whatever happened to the North-South dialogue? Whatever happened to those noble statements of the Prime Minister? They are gone like the wind. Instead we see him wallowing in the philosophical slime of social and economic Darwinism. Canadians have a destiny to do better than that. Canadians have a destiny to do better than adopt the politics of despair which the Prime Minister practises, despite all the rhetoric about trust. Canadians have a choice, and that choice is to accept the invitation of the New Democratic Party to imagine with us and to work with us for the better world which I believe is still within our grasp, if we reach out for it together. This kind of idealism, Mr. Speaker, is the only realistic option left to us—it is not idealism anymore—it is the only option. The realists and the cynics in the Liberal and Conservative Parties like to scoff at the naivete and idealism of the NDP. They have given up on the human condition and they have given up on Canada. They have given up the vision of a country which could have been an example to other nations. And in the name of being competitive, they would have us slide down the hill which so many Canadians have struggled to climb over the years toward a decent and just society.

We in the NDP intend to make sure that those who went before us did not struggle in vain, Mr. Speaker, and the Government will dismantle their accomplishments over the last 30 years over our dead bodies. Canadians now must go beyond the welfare state and Keynesian economics to the politics and economics of democratic socialism. They must not fall prey to the seductive vision of returning to the days of raw capitalism and the law of the jungle, which is the alternative offered to them by the Conservatives and now, quite clearly, by the Liberal Party of Canada. The choice belongs to the people, Mr. Speaker, and we welcome the debate that must ensue over the quality of our future.

I would like to make a few remarks now about the deficit because you hear a lot of ranting and raving about it. I would just like to make a simple suggestion: when politicians talk about the deficit, they should make the same intelligent distinction that average working Canadians make when they talk about their debts. That is to say that they know there is a difference between what they owe on their monthly grocery bill and what is the outstanding debt on their house amortized over 25 years. If they owe $45,000 on their house, for instance, they do not say at the end of January, my God, our debt for January is $45,000, because they make a distinction between current operating debts and long-term capital debts. Yet, all the discussions about deficits in this country take place without that distinction being made, so that the people are never able to get a handle on what is long-term investment, what may come back to the Canadian people in terms of having laid the groundwork for a more productive future, and what might rightfully be regarded as waste and over-spending.

It seems to me that we do the Canadian people a disservice when we talk about the deficit, whatever our position is on it, without making these kinds of distinctions. We create needless confusion about a topic that needs much more intelligent attention than it often receives in this Chamber, or, for that matter, elsewhere across the country.

I just want to put that concern on the record because it relates to what I was saying earlier about investment and how we need to have the right kinds of investment made in this country by Government and by the private sector in co-operation with Government and with the direction of Government, so we can invest in the kinds of things that will lead to a better Canada. We need to invest in our transportation system, housing, alternative energy, and all the things that need to be invested in in this country, and not have it regarded as needless Government spending.

We need to make a distinction between those two kinds of expenditures, which we do not do now, so we can have the political and conceptual freedom for Governments to spend where they ought to spend in building the needed economic infrastructure.

I mentioned transportation, Mr. Speaker, and in this respect I would like to speak just briefly about the policy of this Government toward railways. I was amused to listen to the Prime Minister during his television address. He said we have to prepare for the recovery. We have to have faith in Canada. We have to show that we trust that we will come out of this. While the recession is on we can do preparatory work, he said. Perhaps it can be explained to me, Mr. Speaker, how in the name of God you can call laying off 1,100 people at the CPR shops in Winnipeg, preparatory, when there is rolling stock galore to be repaired which, if there is going to be a recovery, will be needed?

It seems the CPR does not believe there is going to be a recovery, but if the Prime Minister does, he should call his friends at the CPR and tell them to put those men back to work instead of paying them 80 per cent of their wages to do nothing. If that is the kind of economic policy we get from this Government, then we might as well pack it in. We hear a lot of talk about the piddling job-creation programs which were brought in in the economic statement by the Minister of Finance when for another 20 per cent of their wages he could have all the CPR shops back to work preparing for the recovery which the Prime Minister says is coming.

If the Minister of Finance wants to have any credibility at all, that is the first thing he should do, get those men back to work and guarantee there will be no more lay-offs on either the CPR or CNR, because there is absolutely no excuse for lay-offs, in the railway sector. There is rolling stock all over this country which will be needed when the recovery comes. It is unrepaired now. Three years from now the railways will be whining and snivelling that they do not have the equipment, if, hopefully, there is a recovery. And they will want some money. How much more money do they have to get? They are saving millions of dollars because of the six and five program. Workers had their wages limited to six and five. That was not good enough, they had to have lay-offs as well. In addition, as far as Winnipeg is concerned, we have a transfer of the VIA repair work from Transcona shops to Montreal. This is a repeat of the Air Canada overhaul transfer from Winnipeg to Montreal, about which I will be having more to say in the future, Mr. Speaker, but for now I wanted to highlight the contradictory, nonsensical, insane economic policies of this Government, as they relate to the railway industry in particular. There we find the kind of contradictions that, if we had the time to look, we would find throughout this country as a result of the economic policies of this Government supported by my Progressive Conservative friends, because no one has done more over the years to put the Liberals in that position than the Conservatives.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I had obtained the permission of the last speaker for a short question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I would advise the Hon. Minister that the previous speaker's time has been exhausted and a question can only be put with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, the question was motivated by the emphasis that the Hon. Member placed upon investment and economic nationalism aspects, and my question is, would he, thus, with such emphasis, support the objectives of the two principles of the Government, that of the Foreign Investment Review Agency to promote Canadian jobs, and of course the objective of the national energy policy to obtain Canadianization and control of that sector of investment in Canada?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I was gearing up for a really hard question. Of course we support the general goal of Canadianization and of what the Foreign Investment Review Agency was touted to be at its inception, but the fact of the matter is that the Foreign Investment Review Agency approves almost everything that comes before it, I think something in the neighbourhood of 95 per cent. The National Energy Program was a sort of milquetoast Canadianization, 50 per cent by 1990, and even that was mostly private. So we were not terribly impressed with it.

It seems the government is backing down on even those goals. Indeed, the Prime Minister is known to have asked for the support of the provincial Premiers in wanting to further weaken FIRA, so I am not quite sure why the Hon. Minister gave me this opportunity to say more about the way in which his Party has backed down recently on these kinds of issues.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in listening to the words of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), because I think he put the socialist position as clearly and as forcefully as anyone in this House could put it. I think it is now clear on the record what the left wing of the left wing Party thinks, and it should be very interesting to see what is going to happen when that Party has its convention and people such as the Hon. Member have to stand up and discuss the economic ideas, concepts and programs that his leader put forward the other day. I will speak to that in a moment, but they include some notions and some incentive programs which would fly directly in the face of the socialistic notions that the Hon. Member seems to hold so strongly to his bosom because, Mr. Speaker, the program put forward by the Leader of the New Democratic Party certainly is a long way from the kind of socialist rhetoric we have heard from the Hon. Member here this afternoon. Indeed, it is a 180 degree turn from the kind of socialist rhetoric we have heard from the Hon. Member here this afternoon. It flies right in the fact of the things the NDP has been professing for so long. Hon. Members, if they do not believe it, should read it more closely, and perhaps if they understood what they were talking about they would see that in fact I am correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think we are in the middle of a process which will lead us to a recovery. The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has come forward with his financial statement early on in the resumed session, very admirably so in that he put forward the position of the country economically with regard to the figures and information that Canadians need to understand the specific facts facing us. He put those forward on the very first day the House resumed. I heard a lot about the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau's) statement prior to the resumption of the House, and there was concern by the media and journalists and others that he had not put forward specific recommendations or program policy announcements. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is an over-all plan. I have not been told this by the Prime Minister or others, but it seems to me there is a plan which fits into the following kind of framework: the Prime Minister's message was to lay out, to put forward in the three evenings, to set the stage and provide the framework for the kinds of policies and programs and adjustments to existing programs which were going to be made by the Government during this session and the next session of Parliament. This is to provide us with a clear understanding of the general state of our economic affairs, the need to pull together, if we are going to come out of this in a recovery, and take advantage of the world economic recovery as it certainly will occur.

The fact is that governments cannot pull us out of this situation on their own. It is going to take a co-operative effort from all Canadians with the help of government, which is quite contrary to what we have heard earlier from the socialist member who would tell us that Government alone can do it all and Canadians can just stand aside and watch the Government do it for them. I do not think that can happen, and I would suggest that Canadians do not want that to happen. They certainly do not want the Government in Ottawa, led by whoever, to be completely and totally running their lives and saying: stand aside, we will do it for you.

We have seen the kind of society that has emerged in Sweden, especially the young people there, which is put forward as the great model by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: I never mentioned Sweden.

Mr. Evans: Then I could take any other socialist country he wants and see what the attitude and morale—

Mr. Blaikie: You go to Sweden; I want to build a Canadian socialism.

Mr. Evans: —of the youth is in those socialist countries where Government has said: you take your responsibility some place else because Government knows best. That hon. gentleman down there is so far to the left, Mr. Speaker, that I think he has come almost full circle to the fascist right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: The second part of the over-all program, it seems to me, was after the Prime Minister had set the stage. As soon as we got back to the House, the Minister of Finance put forward his financial statement giving the financial and economic facts of life which we face in this country, in which he proposed to reallocate as much as possible funds from lower priority programs to higher priority programs. Certainly, dealing with the unemployment problem and trying to create new jobs through stimulation of the private sector has to be given the absolute highest priority in these times. What his statement did was to clear the decks, so to speak, with regard to the uncertainty surrounding many other issues outstanding and, in so doing, to alter policies which had been in place or proposed in light of consultation which both the previous and current Ministers of Finance have had with all sectors of the economy. It was necessary to take into consideration the very fine work that was done by my colleagues on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs during the month of September in examining the income tax bills. The Minister of Finance took some very bold decisions to clear the decks and eliminate the uncertainty surrounding those outstanding issues so as to facilitate the resumption of policy-making in a very positive vein.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I see the process continuing with our own party convention next week, continuing consultation with labour unions, with the private sector, with individual Canadians. Hopefully there will be positive input from all Members of this House in debates such as we are having now, all of which will culminate in a Speech from the Throne which will put forward the kinds of policies and broad policy thrusts and the future direction which the Government intends to propose for the country. All of that, Mr. Speaker, is to be put into practice at the time of the Minister's next budget, which he says will be brought down early in the spring. So I see the process in four stages. The Prime Minister led the way with a broad outline, the Minister of Finance with his financial statements, the Speech from the Throne will give new directions, and the budget will implement those new directions. I suggest that is the process we are in now.

GUNDERSON SLOUGH HARBOUR ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING TRANSFER OF CONTROL OVER LANDS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta) moved that Bill C-611, to transfer control over certain lands commonly referred to as Gunderson Slough from the Fraser River Harbour Commission to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans under the Fishing and Recreational Harbours Act, be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it is safe to say that passage of this Bill would not alter the course of the country. I do not see the galleries filling with interested spectators waiting in anticipation to see this Bill passed. I do not see the Chamber filled with expectant Members waiting for the outcome for the country if we pass this Bill.

The Bill may not have national importance but it certainly has a great deal of local importance. It is very important to several hundred fishermen who live in the area of the Gunderson Slough, which is a winter harbour. Not only is it a winter harbour but there is a lot of service work for the fishing industry going on in that harbour.

This Bill is not a radical proposal. It is not trying to strip away from the Government any kind of powers. It is not trying to denounce the Government in any kind of way, or change the course of Government in any kind of way. It is simply asking that the administration of one small industry in Canada be transferred from one Government Department to another Government Department. It is a transfer of responsibility from the Fraser River Harbour Commission, which presently controls and so-called administers the port, to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with the Fraser River Harbour Commission or Mr. Rick Pearce. I think it is operating a good business. It was commissioned to get into transportation and to operate a good port. It is doing that, and each year its balance sheet proves it. Over the period of years it makes millions of dollars. In fact, it is like a breath of fresh air to find a Government operation turning a very tidy profit, and I compliment it for that. That does not mean that in doing what it was established to do, it is performing a valuable service to the people who are an adjunct, at the present time, to that particular port.

As I said, the Commission port was established to carry on commerce; it was not established to carry on a service for fishermen. Therein lies the problem, Mr. Speaker. While it does not want to obstruct the fishing industry, that is not the first concern of the Fraser River Harbour Commission and therefore, because it is not its first concern and it spends 99.99 per cent of its interest on commerce, it really means it is in a conflict of interest. It cannot serve commerce full time and still service the fishing industry at the same time; at least if it can, it certainly is not doing it.

Right now, that fishing harbour is being treated like a fourth-class stepchild by the Fraser River Harbour Commission. I understand why that is so. It is interested in a balance sheet, not in service. It does not work for the fishermen unless it is absolutely cajoled into doing so and then, instead of working for the fishermen, all it does is co-operate with other Government Departments so that some of the mandatory work gets done.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, a year and a half ago, a fisherman called me and told me that as he took his boat into the harbour it bottomed out on one of the sand bars. It got stuck. It had been years since that harbour had been dredged. After several months of negotiation and prodding by me and because of the genuine efforts made by the Department of Public Works, that harbour was dredged, and properly dredged. Everybody is happy with it now. The point is, however, that it was not done until the Commission was absolutely cajoled into doing it.

The fact is that in addition to that, it is making no improvements at all to the wharf. It is doing nothing it is not absolutely required to do. That harbour could probably service four times the moorage it has at the present time, but because there is nothing in it for the Fraser River Harbour Commission, because there is no profit to be made, it has no interest in it.

I understand the Commission—I think I understand it. As I have said several times in the course of these short remarks, I understand that its job is to make money. I do not fault it for that. My concern is that through this Bill we could get rid of a very obvious conflict of interest and let the Fraser River Harbour Commission do what it does best and let the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) take care of the fishermen, because that is his interest. The small craft harbours and the fisheries harbours could look after the interests of the fishermen. That would be no skin off the nose of the Commission. It would do nothing to it, except take from it a small piece of control that is now within its venue.

I do not know if the Commission has any long-range plans to obliterate that harbour. There was a time when the Commission port did not exist. It is made up of a lot of landfill. At one time the harbour was the show piece of the Fraser River; now it is a backwater. The Fraser River Harbour Commission port is built on fill. There is actually an artificial work base for that port facility. I do not know if the Commission at some time would deem that harbour to be an unnecessary nuisance to its operation and would at some time want to fill in that small harbour in order to make it a little bit more convenient to the Commission itself. The fact is that it is responsible for the fishermen; but it is not looking after the fishermen and therefore should divest itself of that responsibility.

There is a secondary problem and that is that in the area surrounding the harbour those vehicles that are used to service the Commission port keep on infringing on the foreshore property that should rightfully belong to the fishermen.

My Bill gives a description of the area that should be removed from the Fraser River Harbour Commission and assigned to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. On the back page of the Bill, Members will find a description of the land that should be taken out of the control of the Fraser River Harbour Commission and assigned to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Let me say in closing that I am not asking for any removal of Government authority or Government power. In fact, I am complimenting the Harbour Commission for doing good work in the area for which it was created. All I am asking is that that piece of property, which should no longer be under the control or so-called management of the Fraser River Harbour Commission, be taken out of its authority and jurisdiction and given to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the rightful manager of that particular industry. Presumably the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans would consider as his first priority the provision of best service possible to fishermen. Right now the Fraser River Harbour Commission is giving the meagrest, poorest and scantiest possible attention to fishermen. Therefore I hope the Government will agree with me. I see only two Government Members here now, one of whom would be prepared to speak on the Bill. Perhaps there is a slight glimmer of hope that the Government might agree in principle with me that this should be done and referred to the relevant Standing Committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all I compliment the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) for taking advantage of every parliamentary vehicle at his disposal to bring the concerns of his constituents to the attention of the House.

The Bill under discussion concerns the transfer of the title of a certain portion of upland and water lots from the Fraser River Harbour Commission to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Before discussing the specifics of this Bill, I think it is important that we have an appreciation of the important port known as the Fraser River Harbour Commission. Therefore I should like to take a few minutes in my introduction briefly to place the Fraser River Harbour Commission in perspective by beginning with a review of the historical development of west coast ports.

The earliest activity in foreign commerce on the Canadian west coast was in the trading of otter and other furs with markets overseas. As the influx of settlers to the west coast increased, other products such as coal and lumber began to move to export markets. However, it was not until the 1860s that the first real growth in international seaborne shipments began.

By 1900 the principal commodities were coal and lumber, which accounted for 900,000 tons and 175,000 tons respectively. The decade to 1910 experienced a decline in international shipping activity. However, this was followed by a revival in shipping activity as a result of the opening of the Panama Canal. A phase of vigorous expansion followed to about 1930, caused by two major developments—the transcontinental railway had become a valuable transportation route for the westward movement of bulk commodities, and shipping technology had replaced sailing clippers by the more business-like steamships. By 1930 exports had increased to eight million tons.

The export movement required an efficient transportation system for realiable delivery and, consequently, the development of ports was of paramount importance. The development of west coast ports began in the middle of the eighteenth century, and their location was affected by the distribution and accessibility of natural resources such as lumber and minerals. These ports, including the one which became known as the Fraser River Harbour Commission, was situated along the south and east coasts of Vancouver Island and the coast of the lower mainland.

In 1929 Vancouver emerged as the premier port on the west coast. Vancouver was followed by New Westminster, as the Commission was known in those days, which handled 0.3 million tons, and its emergence was attributed to the growth of the Fraser River as one of the most important centres of the sawmill industry.

The period of depression in the 1930s greatly influenced world commodity markets and created a highly unfavourable trading environment. The foreign trade of west coast ports dropped sharply until the end of the Second World War. Port development on the West Coast was affected markedly during this period. Vancouver suffered most, mainly because of the loss of the grain trade. The effect on the other ports was less pronounced as they depended upon the relatively stable lumber trade for their commercial prosperity. The Port of New Westminster continued to be the second largest, and in fact narrowed its gap with Vancouver.

After the Second World War the international trade through west coast ports entered a phase of expansion similar to the 1920s. By 1962 ports on the west coast reached a peak of 16.6 million tons. The grain trade was revived and the trade in forest products also increased. An important development was the dramatic post-war economic growth of Japan. As we will see later, trade with the Japanese is a very important part of the present day business conducted by the port we now know as the Fraser River Harbour Commission.

In general, post-war economic growth brought new prosperity to all west coast ports. Several ports, including New Westminster, benefited from expansion in forest product traffic. By 1962 New Westminster was handling over 1.1 million tons of cargo. The foregoing certainly does not do justice to the development of our great system of west coast ports in general, nor to the Fraser River Harbour Commission in particular, but it does adequately set out the scene for a more explicit description of the port with which we are concerned here today, the Fraser River Harbour Commission.

The jurisdictional boundaries of that Commission extend from the mouth of the main arm of the Fraser River at Steveston upstream, along the shores of Delta and Richmond, past New Westminster and Surrey to a boundary where Kanaka Creek enters the Fraser. Also included within the harbour limits are a small section of the north arm of the Fraser near New Westminster and another body of water, the Pitt River, which extends to Pitt Lake. The Commission lies immediately adjacent to two other lower mainland ports—Vancouver and the North Fraser Harbour Commission.

Most terminals of the Fraser River Harbour Commission area are located five to 20 kilometres upstream of the entrance to the Fraser River. Under certain circumstances vessels up to 60,000 deadweight tons have been accommodated on the Fraser River.

The relative importance of coastal traffic is greater for the Commission than it is for the Port of Vancouver. In 1978, coastal cargo tons accounted for 57 per cent of the total tonnage handled by the port. The Commission is served by a combination of multi-purpose and single purpose facilities, and a wide range of services is offered. The principal terminal types fall into seven categories—dry bulk terminals, grain terminals, multi-purpose, general cargo, forest products, rail roll-on/roll-off, auto roll-on/roll-off, and liquid bulk.

In addition there are a number of small operators primarily involved in coastal trade—fish packing companies located at the mouth of the river, forest product operators, and a variety of small industries located primarily on Annacis Island. With the exception of wood chips and sawdust, the Commission is not used in the movement of significant quantities of dry bulk materials. Two terminals on the Fraser are involved in the handling of automobiles, the second most important import on the river. These facilities include large storage areas for the storage and sorting of vehicles and are the largest of their kind in western Canada.

The Bill at hand pertains to certain property now under the administration of the Commission. Therefore, it would be useful at this juncture to delve briefly into the matter of port jurisdiction and administration. The provision of port facilities and services in Canada involves a number of Federal and provincial Government agencies and Crown corporations. The present obligations and responsibilities of these agencies are a product of the evolution and changing functions of port administration since pre-Confederation times. To understand the nature of these obligations and responsibilities requires an understanding of port legislation and administration.

Since their earliest days, Canadian ports have been administered under a wide variety of structures. The earliest port areas were owned and operated by private concerns or municipalities. In 1867 the British North America Act placed navigation and shipping under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal authority.

It was not until 1936 that the first important step in the vital port policy was made. The foundation of that policy was the Gibb Report which investigated three important areas of port development: the efficiency of existing facilities; requirements for new facilities for the next three decades; and the best method of port administration.

When Sir Alexander Gibb began his study, the Port of New Westminster was administered by a municipal commission, operating under the control of municipal representatives.

Several of the recommendations made by Gibb in his report were incorporated into the National Harbours Board Act passed in 1936. The basic purpose of that Act was to bring the existing federal commission ports under the administration of the National Harbours Board.

Although the federal harbour Commissions were disbanded after 1936, the municipal Commissions continued to operate, each one under its own special Act of Parliament. Due largely to the confusing nature of commission structures, which varied from one location to the next, the Harbour Commissions Act was passed in 1964. The Act allowed for the establishment of commission harbours by order in council, and gave commissions equal autonomy with respect to jurisdiction, powers, and authorities. The New Westminster Municipal Commission was reconstituted as the Fraser River Harbour Commission in 1965.

Although Harbour Commissions may not be strictly defined as federal agencies, they play a vital role in the administration of major Canadian ports. Today there are nine Harbour Commissions in Canada, including four on the west coast: the Fraser River, the North Fraser, Port Alberni and Nanaimo.

Under the 1964 Harbour Commissions Act, a majority of the Commissioners are appointed at the federal level, the rest being nominated first at the municipal level. Each commission has the power to pass bylaws dealing which such matters as harbour rates and charges, the movement of traffic, and the security of the harbour. By laws are thus developed on a local level instead of in Ottawa. In order to finance capital expenditures for transportation, infrastructure and other port development, the Commission has the power to ensure its own debentures or borrow funds from commercial sources. Financial assistance by the federal Government is limited to certain capital expenditures decided on a case by case basis.

Harbour Commissions are established where local municipalities bordering on the harbour wish to share in its administration and development. Prior to establishment of this type of harbour there must be evidence of good growth potential for commercial shipping, municipal willingness to contribute its own waterfront property, and sufficient revenue to support the operation without federal subsidy.

Harbour Commissions historically have represented an autonomous form of administration. Representation from local community members and the power of developing bylaws in accordance with regional needs are examples of this autonomy.

This bill proposes that property be transferred to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to be managed under the Fishing and Recreational Harbours Act. This act was passed in 1978, at which time many harbours in British Columbia which were previously under the control of the Ministry of Transport, were transferred to the Small Craft Harbours Branch. This agency is responsible for the collection of wharfage and berthage from vessels making use of the facilities. Facilities administered by the Small Craft Harbours Branch are used primarily for commercial and fishing recreational boat purposes. The commercial fish boat harbour at Steveston in Richmond, which falls within the boundaries of the Fraser River Harbour Commission, is a Small Craft Harbours Branch facility.

I think you will agree that the foregoing very usefully sets the stage for a discussion of the specifics of this particular Bill. You will note that included as a schedule to this bill is a legal description, normally referred to, I believe, as meets and bounds of the area currently under the administration of the Fraser River Harbour Commission, and which is proposed to be transferred to the Small Craft Harbours Branch. You will recall from the foregoing that the Small Craft Harbours Branch administers facilities which are essentially of a commercial fishing or recreational nature. Hon. Members will therefore be very interested to know that the area as described in the schedule to this Bill encompasses approximately the following properties. I think it is a little more extensive than the property defined by the Hon. Member. For example, five acres of a large area leased to Gregory Manufacturing; a ramp and facilities for the Delta and Alaska Trainship valued at more than half a million dollars; the Fraser Surrey docks; ten acres of cargo handling area; five acres occupied by Titan Steel; and certain private lands not under Harbour Commission control, including the Burlington Northern Railroad right-of-way.

I should also add that within the boundaries of the property scheduled to this bill, there is an area used by fishermen comprising approximately 14 leases and 37 permits. I am further pleased to report that according to my information the fishermen are quite happy with the manner in which the Fraser River Harbour Commission is administering their particular property, and prefer the situation as it is at the present time. This agrees with the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member.

I therefore conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Fraser River Harbour Commission has done an adequate job of administering all the property under consideration in this bill. It is the Government's view at this time that the status quo should be preserved and that this bill should not be given second reading.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I initially thought was a fairly innocuous bill, one which was straightforward and one for which I had a tremendous amount of sympathy. Coming from a riding that has two Harbour Commissions, I understand the work of those Harbour Commissions. By and large, the comments made by the mover of this motion under whose name the bill stands are quite accurate when he stated that the real emphasis of Harbour Commissions is commerce, which covers the exports of lumber products in B.C. in particular and the shipping terminals. Harbour commissioners have done an admirable job and, as the previous speaker mentioned, most Harbour Commissions can show a profit. That is what they attempt to do.

When I looked at the bill, I considered the response of the fishermen in my riding of Nanaimo-Port Alberni to the facilities which those Harbour Commissions were providing for fishing enterprises. By and large fishermen in Port Alberni are quite happy with the provision of facilities in Port Alberni. There has been some increase in dock space there administered by the Harbour Commission but funded by the small crafts and harbours branch. There is a sense of co-operation between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Harbour Commission in Port Alberni which has put much emphasis on attracting fishermen to that community because they can appreciate the increase in commerce that brings to Port Alberni.

In Nanaimo we have a Harbour Commission that is quite involved in a major new port facility at Duke Point, and the eventual transfer, we hope, some time in the future from the assembly wharf in the downtown core. Emphasis there has been to commerce in the export industry of lumber products. There is some controversy in Nanaimo among the fishermen as to whether that Harbour Commission is really looking after their interests in the manner which the fishermen would like to see.

I think there is some merit in having some properties transferred over to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in Nanaimo to generate some type of facilities for fishermen and possibly increase the availability of repair facilities in that community for the fishermen who are dependent upon those facilities. Because the mandates are different between the harbour commissions, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, certainly I see a need on the Fraser River for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to take over some properties. Wether it is Gunderson Slough or other areas, there is a need for both fisheries facilities as well as recreational boating facilities. There obviously is a growing need for recreational facilities and moorage in the Lower Mainland. The Fraser River offers tremendous opportunities along those lines.

However, I question the Bill in two areas. First, some Members will be familiar with the recently published Pearse Report on the west coast fishing industry called "Turning the Tide into the Pacific West Coast Fisheries Industry". Dr. Pearse's Report advocates a transition over a period of the next ten years when approximately 4,500 fishing vessels in the industry will be reduced by 50 per cent. I wonder what the fishermen in the Gunderson Slough, Port Alberni, Alert Bay, Tofino, Bamfield and Ucluelet will thing when they realize that half of their fleet will cease to exist within two decades. I wonder if the people in Gunderson Slough will need a fishing boat facility if the Government moves on the Pearce Report. Certainly, this Party is hoping that cooler heads will prevail and that the impact of reducing the fishing fleet will be considered both from the point of view of employment of fishermen and of the communities dependent upon the fishing industry in boat building and repairs. This includes communities such as New Westminster, Victoria and, more important, those coastal communities which have a greater reliance on the fishing industry than the metropolitan and urban areas.

If the Government follows through with the Pearse recommendations, I am somewhat doubtful whether it will make any difference for Gunderson Slough, which is a facility leased from the Harbour Commission and provided by the Harbour Commission, to be in the hands of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. I can offer my basic support for that facility becoming more public, because under the Harbour Commission it really becomes a private reserve to those lease holders of the docking facility, whether it be British Columbia packers or individual fishermen. Under the jurisdiction of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans the Government would still receive rent from that facility in terms of moorage fees. It could upgrade the facility to include repair of vessels and nets as well as possibly installing facilities which could even provide the manufacture of fishing equipment which is so sadly lacking in British Columbia.

The implication to the fishermen is that it will continue to be a Harbour Commission facility with a type of exclusive placement of fishermen to that facility, or it will be a public facility which will perhaps meet the needs of fishermen more adequately. Certainly, fishermen who are not in that lease position now have indicated to me that they are in support of having that facility turned over to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans which, they feel, would respond more positively to any request they have for increased consideration of their industry.

The second area which makes this bill somewhat less innocuous than I had initially believed is the boundary description. On short notice it is difficult to determine how large an area is involved but the previous speaker from the Government side indicated that a fairly large piece of property is involved, some of which may be privately owned. That has been my information as well. After talking to the members of the Fraser River Harbour Commission, who were apparently notified yesterday that this Bill was coming before the House today—they had not done any preparatory work until yesterday, I found that they had indicated that this Bill will include land that is privately owned. When drawing the boundaries prescribed by the Bill on seven different maps, it can be found that each indicates that some private property is included in the boundary description.

I am quite surprised that the Hon. Member who moved this Bill, as well as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who seconded the reference to the committee today, both of them strong advocates of property rights, may in fact be proposing to expropriate private property, take it away from some innocent individuals who are probably themselves not aware of the implications of this Bill.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the Hon. Member who spoke just now is a teacher. His teaching capacity lacks credibility because he has not read the Bill very well. It specifically speaks to those lands that are now controlled by the Harbour Commission. It does not deal at all with private property.

Mr. Miller: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for that interjection. I am not sure that the Hon. Member himself has studied the boundary descriptions. I must admit that my information comes only from the Harbour Commission and I obtained it only today. As I understand it, they do have access to seven different maps of their harbour. In each case they indicate that there is some private property included in this jurisdiction. The previous speaker from the Government side had also indicated that the lands in question take in far more than simply the boat basin and that property.

I am not objecting to the use of any property that is now in the hands of the Harbour Commission being transferred to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Perhaps there is some validity to that. However, if there is private property involved, I think we must look at these property descriptions first to determine if they conform with what is presently under the Fraser River Harbour Commission and if, in fact, there may be some possibility that the Harbour Commission has land in that description that is privately owned and should be excluded from the Harbour Commission.

With the consideration of the long-term aspect of the fishing industry and the question of whether private property rights are affected by this bill, we are quite prepared to consider the possibility of transferring that property to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans because realistically it should be under that Department. If it is serving the fishing community, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has the responsibility to provide the facilities to make that industry an efficient one and to meet the demands of individual fishermen. There is support from the fishing community for this transfer of land. We would be prepared to see a more thorough study of this Bill when it reaches the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. We hope that it will be possible to clarify any misunderstanding about those boundaries and to work out an agreement which would be satisfactory to the fishing community.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would begin by asking the Hon. Member who introduced this Bill to refrain from interjecting about Members' former occupations before coming to the House because I must warn him that I will also be referring to the matter of private property. It could be that in his great wisdom the Hon. Member did make a mistake. If I may quote Robert Burns:

The best laid schemes o' mice an' men—and Tory Members.

Gang aft a-gley;

However, I am opposed to the substance of Bill C-611, an Act to transfer control over certain lands commonly referred to as Gunderson Slough from the Fraser River Harbour Commission to the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans under the Fishing and Recreational Harbours Act. If passed, this Bill would split almost in half the area presently administered by the Fraser River Harbour Commission. This Commission is one of the most successful of all ports, with an economic impact of $5 billion in the Fraser River area. The figure represents one of the major findings of a port study conducted in the summer of 1981. The results were determined from the 1980 fiscal year information provided by 208 of the potential 327 port and port dependent industries. The direct businesses surveyed in the Fraser port study represented 23 different industries, but the final results were aggregated into ten industry sectors which describe the major components of the port impact.

• (1640)

Direct industries dependent on the Fraser Port contributed 13,487 full-time equivalent employment positions to the regional economy. Secondary employment added a further 19,724 jobs, to yield a total impact of 13,211 employment positions. The total payroll impact was estimated at more than three-quarters of a billion dollars. Three hundred million dollars was derived from a direct component, with the remaining $450 million attributed to the secondary component. The two major generators of payroll in the Fraser port study were the wood products industry, which paid out $220 million in payroll, and the transportation industry, which provided approximately half that amount. The $5 billion is the total sum of goods and services of the users of the port at the time this study was completed.

The area to be transferred, if the limits in Schedule 1 attached to the Bill are to be interpreted, includes ten acres of the Fraser-Surrey Dock, which is situated on the south bank of the Fraser River opposite the autoport. This area also includes five acres occupied by Titan Steel, one of the successful developments of the Fraser River Harbour Commission. Private lands are also included in this transfer, which also includes a road owned by the municipality of Delta and the Burlington Northern Railroad right-of-way. The Harbour Commission has 12 to 14 leases covering that area as well as 37 permits of occupation. The Fraser-Surrey Dock was founded in 1928 and its first berth was converted to handle lumber in 1964. The Fraser-Surrey Dock now has six berths plus scow facilities, and handles a heavy volume of steel, wood chips and sawdust among other commodities.

Training walls in the New Westminster area provide self-scouring for the debris which would normally accumulate on the river bottom. This project commenced in 1966, and construction took three years at a cost of $4.5 million. This project resulted in a saving of $1 million annually for dredging. This saving obviously more than justified the original capital outlay.

Today the Fraser River plays a crucial role in the social and economic wellbeing of British Columbia and, indeed, of all Canada. For some 1.25 million people in British Columbia's lower mainland, the river is a major source of employment and recreation. Virtually every type of industry which could be developed in a metropolis has found a place on or around the Lower Fraser River. Economic environmental demands on the river are growing as Canada increases its trade with Pacific Rim countries so that any decision affecting the future of the Fraser River and the Fraser River Harbour Commission would have far-reaching implications.

The waters of the Fraser are used for transporting, storing and sorting logs used by waterfront sawmills. The harbours at its mouth are receiving points for foreign cars and other commodities. They are shipping points for lumber, for steel, sand and gravel, fish products and other Canadian goods. More than 20,000 people are directly involved in the Fraser's shipping industry, and an additional 84,000 are indirectly dependent on port activities. Approximately 13 million tons of cargo are handled annually by Fraser River ports.

The river's mainstream and numerous tributaries accommodate the largest natural salmon runs in the world and produce more than one quarter of all fish caught commercially and recreationally off Canada's west coast. Commercial catches of Fraser River salmon average ten million fish a year, with a value of some $90 million to the industry. There are 14,000 commercial fishermen in British Columbia and 3,000 workers employed in processing and tendering on the Lower Fraser. As many as 300 million young salmon migrate out of the estuary some years and more than ten million spawners return. The transfer of Gunderson Slough together with the upland, included in the annex to the Bill, would encompass ten acres of the Fraser-Surrey Dock and other lands under the administration of the Fraser River Harbour Commission as well as privately-owned properties. The Fraser River has most of these properties under long-term lease and the fishermen in that area are quite content with the administration, to my understanding. The Fraser River Harbour Commission is opposed to this transfer, and I support it in its decision. To split this successful semi-autonomous administration and put the area under a Government Department simply does not make any sense.

For the following reasons it is desirable that the Fraser River Harbour Commission continue to have full control of the area at present under its administration. Hon. Members are all too well aware of the negative impact of splitting the responsibility for administration of any facility or of any organization. As was pointed out earlier, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is primarily concerned with smaller scale facilities. The Fraser River Harbour Commission cannot really be considered as a small scale facility based on the traffic volumes and the diversity of industry in the port which are not related to fishing or recreation, not to mention the size of its holdings. The argument that it would be more advantageous to the fishermen simply does not hold water, if Hon. Members would excuse a play on words, because the fishermen have not expressed any real dissatisfaction with the current arrangements. The division of responsibility would certainly not be sorted out neatly, certainly not overnight, and during the transition period there would be a deterioration in the efficiency and effectiveness of port operations. Fortunately, the Fraser River Harbour Commission is in a fairly solvent financial position. However, given the present economic situation, I do not think that even the Fraser River could afford any loss of revenue.

Another point I would like to raise in defence of retaining the status quo deals directly with port facilities. The Fraser River is a successful port. The land holdings have allowed for diversity of investment and employment opportunities. Transfer of the land to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans would certainly interfere with any considerations of further industrial development and, of course, additional employment and revenue opportunities.

The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) mentioned the issue of dredging. It is my understanding that program responsibility for dredging will be transferred from the Department of Public Works to Transport Canada. Because of the obvious closer relationship between Transport Canada and the Fraser River Harbour Commission, a more co-ordinated approach will be taken on the issue of dredging.

I believe the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) wishes to speak. I have provided what I consider to be valid reasons for retention of this status quo.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I argued in my remarks that this Bill should not receive second reading. But in order to give credibility to the Private Members' Hour, after hearing the arguments of the mover of the motion, the NDP and the two Hon. Members from our side, I would like to suggest that the subject matter of the Bill be moved to the appropriate committee, if this is in agreement with the wishes of the mover of the motion.

• (1650)

Mr. Friesen: I would certainly agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It has been moved by Mr. Flis, seconded by Mrs. Appolloni:

That Bill C-611 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the bill is withdrawn and the subject matter thereof is referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having now expired, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.51 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

REVIEW OF DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the President of the Treasury Board report to the House immediately on his review of departmental expenditures as revealed by the Minister of Finance in his statement last week, setting forth what and where the cuts will take place, their impact on job security in the public service and on temporary and term employees, their pension arrangements, public works programs, and what services to people will be affected and the impact thereof on job creation in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

PURCHASE OF BRITISH PETROLEUM COMPANY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I wish to record a protest under Standing Order 43, in the strongest language possible, against the purchase of British Petroleum by Petro-Canada. Despite assurances to the contrary by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), this $347 million takeover is yet another giant step on the road to socialism. It will create harmful upward pressures on interest rates in the borrowing market. It adds $347 million in a negative way to our international balance of payments and will not result in the creation of one single new job. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That, if the Finance Minister truly believes that the private sector is the engine of growth, he cease and desist his socialist takeovers, and if Petro-Canada has $347 million to play around with, that it use it to retire the billions it owes the Canadian taxpayer in debt and stop meddling in the private sector.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED HOLDING OF NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY CONFERENCE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, whereas since 1978 Canada's productivity performance has decreased at an alarming rate, to the point that now we have the worst record of the western industrialized countries, I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the Government sponsor a "national productivity conference" and, further, to highlight this urgent and grave problem, that a National Productivity Week be designated.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—CONDEMNATION OF KIDNAPPINGS BY SECURITY FORCES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On October 18, 19 and 20, in the capital of El Salvador, 15 moderate trade union and political leaders belonging to the FDR were kidnapped on the street or at their place of work. In view of the Annual Report published last week by Amnesty International citing the fact that the Government of El Salvador was not able to provide even one satisfactory explanation in the 555 cases of persons detained in the last year, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House condemn the use of kidnapping by security forces in El Salvador, and that this House urge the Government of Canada to press the Government of El Salvador to secure the immediate release of the 15 kidnap victims.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

HOSTAGE INCIDENT AT STONY MOUNTAIN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, the recent tragedy at Archambault Penitentiary in which three prison guards lost their lives should have been enough to convince the government that security within federal penitentiaries is inadequate to ensure the safety of all who work in them. The hostage incident now under way at Stony Mountain Penitentiary north of Winnipeg reveals once again the dangers endured by prison staff as the direct result of manpower shortages and serious inmate overcrowding. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That a full and complete investigation be undertaken of the Stony Mountain hostage incident and that every possible action be taken to ensure that the conditions which encourage such incidents will be rectified.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Government through takeovers, excessive taxation, abnormal waste, high deficits, inflationary policies and high interest rates, has caused thousands of businesses, including farms, to go bankrupt with the resulting loss of thousands of jobs, and has caused hundreds to leave the country with their capital and expertise while others have refused to invest while a government riddled with socialistic tendencies was in power. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That it is useless for the Right Hon. Prime Minister to beg free enterprisers now to pull him out of the socialistic abyss in which his Government has placed the country, and he should, therefore, forthwith resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

LAY-OFFS INVOLVING CANADIAN NATIONALS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, with the critically high unemployment in Canada, it comes as a major disappointment to find Canadians being laid off from Atomic Energy of Canada while, at the same time, foreigners here on work visas at that Crown corporation are being kept on. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That this House direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to carry out an investigation into the employment policies of Atomic Energy of Canada with a view to assuring qualified Canadians that they will be given the jobs, and not foreigners in Canada on work visas.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to state that there can be no doubt in the minds of the Members on either side of this House that the issue most nearly affecting the economic and, more important, the moral health of our country is confidence; confidence in our leaders and in their capability, reliability and, to use an unfashionable word, their honour.

In view of the fact that on Thursday, October 21, the Prime Minister spoke to the people of the need to hold the line on costs and used as an example of government restraint that postal rates had not risen—despite the fact that they had gone up some 76 per cent the year before—and that the decision to raise them another two cents had already been made, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House tell the Prime Minister that it regards his word as valueless and his honour non-existent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

CALL FOR TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, over the past year the Minister of Communications has allowed a haphazard, mish-mash of rulings on the reception of satellite TV signals by communications "dishes". Some rulings are discriminatory and are being applied only selectively across the country.

This morning Senator Keith Davey was quoted as predicting that content regulations on Canadian TV might soon be a thing of the past, a statement which further confuses Canadian television consumers, producers and distributors alike.

I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the Minister of Communications enlighten Canadians regarding the future of television reception in Canada by tabling his long awaited White Paper on Communications so that Canadians can see what direction the Government plans to take, and so that people may have some input into future regulations which will determine what Canadians will be permitted to watch on their TV sets.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

DEMAND FOR PUBLICATION OF KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the closure of fish plants in Newfoundland and elsewhere in eastern Canada, illustrated by the closure of plants at Trepassey and Fermeuse in St. John's West, in my district, and in view of the precarious economic situation of the east coast fishing industry upon which depends the sole economic occupation of rural Newfoundland, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Government of Canada make public immediately the report of the Kirby Task Force on the east coast fishery and act immediately to ensure the continuation of a viable east coast inshore and offshore fishery which the Government maintains is within the sole constitutional jurisdiction of the Government of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DISASTERS

"OCEAN RANGER" INQUIRY—BALKING BY AMERICAN CORPORATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that the Canadian inquiry into the tragic incident involving the Ocean Ranger cannot force ODECO, the American owners of the rig, to produce the essential witnesses and information needed for a full investigation, thereby risking future Canadian lives if the inquiry is unable to discover the cause of the accident and make appropriate recommendations, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House condemn this American corporation for not providing full co-operation to a Canadian inquiry and, further, that the Government strengthen legislation regarding expectations of foreign companies before allowing them to operate within our boundaries.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PETRO-CANADA

PURCHASE OF BRITISH PETROLEUM COMPANY SERVICE STATIONS AND REFINERIES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will put my question to the Minister of Finance. It deals with the proposed purchase of British Petroleum service stations and refineries. Given that Canada's No. 1 economic problem is a depression level unemployment rate, and given that last week the Minister of Finance stated that he could only find modest amounts of cash to fight this problem, how does the Minister of Finance, on behalf of the Government, justify spending $350 million of public funds on a purchase which will not generate a single new job? In fact it will cost jobs, because previously BP and Fina were frequently competitors on the same corner and now there will be only one service station and one marketing department. Therefore there will be a net loss of jobs. How does the Minister of Finance justify the expenditure at this point in time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as was announced by Petro-Canada, this purchase will be financed without asking for one cent from the Public Treasury or one cent from the taxpayers of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: It has been taken by Petro-Canada as a business decision that will be totally financed on the market per se, and it will be a self-financing operation. It has been considered by the board of directors of Petro-Canada as a very good business deal. Knowing the support that Petro-Canada has received from Canadian consumers, I am convinced that this will also prove to be an excellent decision in all respects.

USE OF PURCHASE FUNDS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, as the ads say, "it is ours", and its debts are our debts, the same way as the Government's direct debts are our debts. The reality is that we, the people, are in debt an extra $350 million for no good purpose whatsoever. Would the Minister not agree that if there is $350 million worth of public funds available for spending it might be better spent to reduce the $1.7 billion increase in UIC premiums for which he called, to use the money directly for job creation, or to use the money to decrease taxes on petroleum products and therefore fight inflation? In other words, would he not agree that any reasonable person could come up with a priority list of dozens of ways in which this money could be spent to benefit Canadians, particularly those Canadians who are unemployed at this point in time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member does not seem to realize that the meaning of this purchase will be that, instead of shipping dividends and profits abroad forever in the future, the profits from these operations will stay in Canada and will benefit Canadian people. In that sense indeed Petro-Canada is ours, and in that sense it is a very good decision.

As far as the decision of Petro-Canada to finance this purchase out of borrowing by Petro-Canada, not by the Minister of Finance or the Government itself, is concerned, it is borrowing on the markets which will be repaid out of the profits resulting from the operations of BP being carried on in the future by Petro-Canada. It is no charge on the Department of Finance, the Government or the budget of the Minister of Finance. It will be a self-financing operation.

Mr. Andre: The economic knowledge of the Minister of Finance seems to be lacking when he suggests that somehow we save on foreign exchange by sending $350 million out of the country to follow the $1.7 billion that went out on the Fina purchase. Saving money like that will have us in the same state as Argentina in no time at all.

IMPACT OF BORROWING

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, Canadians are presently paying 3.6 cents per gallon in tax to pay for Petro-Canada's purchase of Fina. Would the Minister not agree that if Petro-Canada has the capacity to take on an additional $350 million worth of debt, then this tax on consumers could be removed, thereby helping in the fight against inflation which the Prime Minister said is the Government's No. 1 priority, in his TV serial two weeks ago? Has the Government changed its mind again and it is no longer a priority? If it is, why will he not use that borrowing authority of Petro-Canada to reduce the impact of these silly taxes on the consumers?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first I would like to tell the Hon. Member that he should check his own economics. The impact of this borrowing will be very different, whether the borrowing is done abroad by Petro-Canada or whether it is done in Canada. I suggest that the Hon. Member check with Petro-Canada to find out where its borrowing is going to take place.

Mr. Crosbie: You are an expert in borrowing.

Mr. Andre: And you never have to pay for it?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member will know that if the borrowing is done abroad it will not have the same impact at all as the one he mentioned.

With regard to the second point, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that Petro-Canada will be able to achieve this purpose, even after a significant reduction in its equity investment by the Government of Canada contained in the cuts I announced the other day in the energy envelope. Over $200 million of that will come from capital investment by the Government of Canada in Petro-Canada.

Petro-Canada is supported by the people of Canada. It is doing very well. We are taking steps to ensure that it is running its affairs like a Canadian business corporation that is supported by the people of Canada and will continue to be supported by the people of Canada in spite of the opposition, well known, of the Conservatives.

WORK STOPPAGE AT WEST COAST PORTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It involves another economic question which is having a disastrous impact on Canada, namely, the continued stoppage and plugging of ports in British Columbia. In view of the Prime Minister's commitment on Friday that if this matter was not resolved by Monday night:

—this Government would ensure in some way that the strike would be ended, and that is still our intention.

—could the Minister tell us whether it is the intention of the Government to honour the commitment made by the Prime Minister last Friday to bring in legislation today so that by Monday night legislation could be through this House enabling the Port of Vancouver and the other ports in the West to operate? The parties could then go back to the bargaining table or do whatever they have to do, regardless of the stoppage and the ports would not remain plugged.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the answer is really in the question. My hon. friend referred to the deadline given to the parties by the Prime Minister to resolve this conflict, to be until tonight. If I remember correctly, tonight means until twelve o'clock. If the strike is not resolved before twelve tonight, my hon. friend can expect to have decisions tomorrow.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO END WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, we are talking about Monday night. In view of the very checkered discussions that have been going on between the parties over months, and the very clear statement yesterday by both parties that they have nothing more to talk about, that they were no further ahead when they started to talk than when they were locked out a couple of weeks ago, surely if the Government is going to command the economic reins of this country in something so fundamental to the general economy, let alone western Canada's, the Government could move some time today so that legislation could get into the parliamentary stream today, and come Tuesday the port would be open legally and the parties could return to their talks for as long as they want, as long as the traffic runs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have, of course, been following the transportation aspect of this question very closely. But the labour aspect is in the hands of my friend, the Minister of Labour, who might have something to add in answer to the Hon. Member's question.

FORTHCOMING UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. All Canadians know that we have lost thousands of jobs in the last few months. My question concerns the period between now and Christmas. Will the Minister confirm that his Department has done an estimate of the number of jobs that will be lost between now and Christmas and that the number is 68,000?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

CANADA COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

IMPACT ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like some clarification from the Minister when he says no. Was it no to the part of the question simply concerning an estimate? Was an estimate done? Or was the Minister questioning the figure? I would like the Minister to clarify that. The figure was 68,000 job losses between now and Christmas. I want the Minister to deal with that.

• (1425)

What I would like the Minister to answer now, given that the single new job-creation program that will go into effect this fall, the Canada Community Development Program, will produce 10,000 new jobs at the most between now and Christmas, will he acknowledge that, as a result of the thousands of jobs that will disappear between now and Christmas and the few new jobs that the Government will create, we will have a net loss of thousands of jobs between now and Christmas?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, again, I have to say no to both questions.

QUERY RESPECTING ESTIMATES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, is the Minister then saying to the House—because it is important for him to clarify this—that given the job losses which have been occurring in recent weeks and which are anticipated to continue between now and Christmas as weighed against the limited number of new jobs that the Government will produce—is he telling the people of Canada that there will not be a net loss in jobs by Christmas?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would simply like to point out to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that when it comes to the implementation of the community development projects, the target of jobs between now and Christmas in terms of actually coming on stream is closer to 55,000 and not the 10,000 which he talked about. We hope to have those jobs fully in operation in order to take care of those who are losing their jobs during that period of time.

FINANCE

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO BUSINESS SECTOR

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that there has been an increase in the number of companies that the Government has bailed out during the past few months, such as the Dome Petroleum deal, the Maislin deal, and we now hear of additional moneys going into companies such as Canadair and de Havilland, would the Minister tell the House what is the total budget which the Government has put aside in order to finance these forms of bail-outs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Government has not set aside any particular funds for this particular purpose. The Canadair and de Havilland equity investment has been announced by my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It is $400 million; $200 million to each corporation. This has been announced and made public.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, if the Minister has not set aside any budget for bailouts, would he refer the whole matter of bailouts, of support for companies that are not doing well in the economy today, such as Maislin, Dome Petroleum, Canadair, de Havilland and Massey-Ferguson, to the Standing Committee on Finance? Will he refer this in a special reference to the Finance Committee in order for it to study these implications and why they have happened, as well as what consideration the Government is taking into account when it is establishing the policies for bailouts?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the estimates of all the various departments are being put before parliamentary committees. The parliamentary committees are meeting. If my hon. friend wishes a particular Minister to appear before a particular committee, surely he can arrange that through his own means in the various parliamentary committees that are in place.

FISHERIES

KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Kirby Report been received by the Government and, if so, does it recommend the nationalization of any fishing companies in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the report has been received by the Government. It is currently being examined by the Government and it is likely that the report will be made public at a certain point. Until that occurs, I do not think that I can give him a preview of the contents of the report at this time.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF NON-NATIONALIZATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in view of the Government's inability to run the railroads properly, the Post Office and the National Energy Program, just to name a few of its problems, will the Minister give a guarantee to the House—

Mr. Nowlan: Ironclad.

Mr. Crouse: An ironclad guarantee, as my colleague from Annapolis Valley-Hants says, that the Government will not become involved in the nationalization of any fishing operations, not only in Atlantic Canada but in all of Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not precisely sure what the Hon. Member means by "nationalization of the fishing industry". I do not believe that that is on the mind of the Government at all. But I believe he would accept the notion that there are some present opportunities for the Government to support and to strengthen the Canadian fishing industry, and it is to that role that the Government is directing its attention as a result of the Kirby Task Force. I am sure the Hon. Member would not ask us to take a totally and completely hands-off attitude with respect to the future development of the Canadian fishing industry.

MINES AND MINING

UNION RECOMMENDATIONS ON STOCKPILING

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. The Minister will know how serious is the dilemma facing the thousands of mine workers in her own area, the Sudbury area, because of the virtual collapse of Canada's nickel industry. I would like to ask the Minister how seriously she is taking the recommendations of the major mine workers' unions that the federal Government participate in a major stockpiling program. If such is under consideration, does she envisage that the federal Government might want to take a piece of the equity of INCO or Falconbridge in return for such initiative, which might lead to the nationalizing of Canada's nickel industry? If not, what solutions does she have to offer to the thousands of mine workers in her own constituency who are faced with serious unemployment in the winter?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member was not present this morning when the Task Force on Mining Communities made its report. The Task Force did not recommend the purchase or, indeed, participation in equity in any of these companies for very good reason, because not only is International Nickel in trouble, but so is every other mineral producer, with the exception of gold producers, in similar circumstances, and it would be quite ludicrous even to contemplate the possibility of stockpiling all these metals, which would quickly reach a figure of $15 billion or $20 billion. However, the Government is very concerned about those workers. If the Hon. Member had been present this morning he would have known that we were discussing job-creation projects which will put many of those workers to work in those areas which will increase productivity. I hope that he will encourage those communities in which he is actively involved to participate in these projects.

RESTORATION OF COMPETITIVE ADVANTAGE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade, who will know that the reason Canada's mining industry and other natural resource sectors are in such difficulty is because we have lost our competitive advantage. I want to know what initiatives Canada is taking to ensure that we restore our competitive advantage in face of growing international alternative sources of supply, in order that we can find ways to put those workers back to work in the long term, not merely to put them to work through the winter months with make-work, short-term projects.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will be well aware of the international situation in that the economies of other countries are, in many instances, in far worse condition than ours—

Mr. Clark: Not in Burma, not in India.

Mr. Regan: —with the result that the minerals produced from our mines are not in demand. The Hon. Member will recognize that when $3 of every $10 of our gross national product is accounted for by exports, it has a profound effect on our economy when the economies of other countries sag. What are we trying to do? I suggest that the quality of the Canadian miners is not the problem, nor the quality of our resources but, rather, the economic situations in those countries. What Canada is doing through the six and five policy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: —is to pursue a method of combating inflation, of seeing to it that this country will be in an excellent position to take part in recovery as it occurs across the western world, and that we will then continue to be able to sell our products in competition with any in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT STORE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know, of course, that credit card companies and major department stores, such as Eatons, Sears and The Bay, are charging customers interest rates of 24 per cent to 28.8 per cent on retail credit. Recent reductions in interest rates mean that many of these companies are obtaining money at 12 per cent and lending it out at a cumulative rate of approximately 32 per cent, a 20 per cent interest spread. Would the Minister be prepared to acknowledge that this type of retail loan sharking is inflationary, is contributing to personal bankruptcy, and is not part of Government policy? Would he also be willing to say what action the Government is prepared to take to remove this type of obscenity from our economy?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madame Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is based on a number of assumptions. He knows perfectly well that a consumer who purchases goods and uses a credit card to do so has thirty days to pay his bills. If he pays within the prescribed period, obviously no interest is charged.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, that is a completely disastrous answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: Basically, what we have is a type of policy which will give the rich, those with higher disposable incomes, 50 days of free interest on money they borrow, but that money is paid for by low and middle income Canadians who do not have the option of disposing of their bills on a 30-day basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PLIGHT OF LOW-INCOME CREDIT CARD USERS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, as a supplementary question, would the Minister please pull his head out of the sand and give some consideration to helping Canadians, especially those in low and middle-income brackets, to fight the kind of corporate power that is placed against them in this credit card situation? I urge him to act.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to help middle-income Canadians, he should tell them to check first before deciding where they want to purchase goods. There is a lot of competition in this field, and in addition to department store credit cards, there are also those issued by banks, and rates vary. I would therefore invite the Hon. Member to check first before making this kind of allegation.

INCOME TAX

AVAILABILITY OF CORPORATE TAX FORMS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. On the basis of best information, there are no corporate income tax forms for 1981, or 1982, available at any office of the Department of National Revenue or otherwise in Ontario. Would the Minister make the necessary inquiry and give us an answer now? This is not for a parliamentary secretary. This is a question which should be answered now. Can the Minister further advise whether instructions were given not to print the 1982 returns until the Ways and Means Motion had been brought in and the whole income tax situation clarified?

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member for those forms not being available in Edmonton. I understand that is a very local situation. I would also like to assure the Hon. Member, as Parliamentary Secretary, that I would want to be sure that we have tax forms available for whatever means, and wherever, across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Especially in Edmonton.

SITUATION IN ONTARIO

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): If the Parliamentary Secretary heard properly, he would know I did not refer to Edmonton. I referred to Ontario and the rest of Canada, concerning 1982 forms.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the information I have is that it was a very local situation in Edmonton to which I thought the Hon. Member was speaking, and if he is right we will check and see that those forms are available.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONSTRUCTION OF MUSEUM OF MAN AND OF NATIONAL GALLERY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. I would like to congratulate him on his appointment and ask him whether he has adopted a new policy and demonstrated his great allegiance to royalty by having a Crown corporation, which we could call Canamuse, for example, to construct the Museum of Man and the National Gallery in the Ottawa district. I would like to know why it is that the Minister is not fulfilling his normal functions as Minister of Public Works in drawing up bids, calling for tenders, and organizing it in that way rather than through a Crown corporation.

• (1440)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his good wishes. As he knows, the decision to proceed through a Crown Corporation for the construction of these two museums was made some months ago. It was felt that this would be the most expeditious way to proceed with a very sharp focus on those two institutions. I think the decision speaks for itself.

APPOINTMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION PRESIDENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, this is rather a condemnation of the bureaucracy in his own Department that he should have to go out to a Crown Corporation to have an expeditious performance of the functions assigned to it.

Can the Minister also give me an answer as to why the search committee, Caldwell Partners, which has its headquarters outside this country in the United States, should be the company assigned the role of finding the president of the Crown Corporation? Will he be a Royalist?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it is no reflection on the officials of Public Works. As the Hon. Member knows, for many years it has been the policy, and I think it was briefly the policy of the previous Government, to contract out a great deal of the work which might have been traditionally undertaken by permanent employees of the Public Service. The Hon. Member will know that the number of Public Servants in Public Works has not in fact expanded to fulfil all the duties that would have to be fulfilled. As for the other matter raised by the Hon. Member, I am sure that he will allow me to check the facts and report to him.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

INQUIRY RESPECTING WINNIPEG COMPANY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In his mini-budget of last week he announced a $500 million job creation plan and then set the Minister of Employment and Immigration scurrying across the country to try to get matching dollars from the Provinces. I would like to ask the Minister, in view of the answers he gave to subsequent questions last week that jobs were also to be created in the industrial sector of Canada, how many jobs that program will re-establish or create at Versatile Manufacturing in Winnipeg which made an announcement last week that it is facing a total plant shutdown and lay-offs in February of next year.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Obviously, Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to give a specific answer regarding a specific company which manufactures farm machinery and has a number of problems. I do not think the Minister of Finance can give that kind of answer.

[English]

JOB-CREATION MEASURE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, may I then ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration whether he can give us the answer as to how many jobs will be saved at Versatile Manufacturing in view of the fact that his officials have in fact dealt with the company's Board of Directors? Work sharing was looked at. It was decided that work sharing was not acceptable for the plant operation in Winnipeg. How many jobs has the Minister been able to protect or create at Versatile through the $500 million job-creation project now euphemistically referred to as NEED?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Provencher is mistaken in terms of the objectives of the various programs that we have. The program that was announced last Wednesday is targetted particularly at those who are suffering the worst hardships during this period of time, those who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and have no other alternative.

In the case of Versatile, the people who are being laid off at this time still have recourse to the unemployment insurance fund which will give them security of income during the period when the plant is not in operation. I have had discussions with the President of that plant. We discussed what their potential options will be. What they are simply saying is that they overproduced inventory for the market that is there, and they have to work that inventory off. The workers during that period of time will have the full protection of the unemployment insurance fund and the other alternative they have which my Department is now negotiating with them.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

DATE FOR PROCLAMATION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who in his elevation to that post, which I know he accepted with great pleasure, has also been given responsibility for freedom of information. His predecessor in office indicated it was the intention of the Government to bring Bill C-43, the Government's access to information legislation, into force in January, 1983. Does that remain the intention of the Government?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first I would like to thank my hon. friend for his good wishes. I look forward to his continued constructive input. It is my understanding that my colleague, the Minister of Communications, talked about implementing the freedom of information legislation early in 1983, but did not give a specific date. If I am mistaken, I will certainly amend my response.

I have been looking into the matter, and I find that the earliest one can expect it to be possible to have all the administrative mechanisms in place required to administer the new law properly would certainly not be before April of next year. If it is possible to do it sooner, I will certainly do my utmost to see that that is the case.

APPOINTMENT OF INFORMATION COMMISSIONER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, one of the important considerations with respect to that matter is the appointment of the Information Commissioner. Is that matter now before Cabinet? If so, when will a decision be made on naming the Information Commissioner, and when will the announcement be made?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I hope this will be very soon.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

NECESSITY FOR PHARMACEUTICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Minister will know that in June the Ayerst international company announced that it was going to be closing out it pharmaceutical research laboratories in Montreal and transferring the operation to New Jersey, once again showing up the problem of foreign ownership in some sectors of our economy. The transfer will mean the lay-off of some 300 employees, many of them full-time researchers at the lab. In light of the fact that this is the only fully integrated pharmaceutical company operating in this country and does about 50 per cent of the research, if not more, in the pharmaceutical business, I would like to know from the Minister what action the Government is going to take to make sure we can do this pharmaceutical research in our own country.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the question is a very important one. There are a number of scenarios currently under review. Several possibilities, one of which the Hon. Member may be familiar with, include a proposal made by l'Institut Armand Frappier to incorporate part of the Ayerst team in projects of that internationally and nationally well-known research institution. The Government will be looking at a number of proposals that will be brought forward, I hope in the very near term. My understanding is that the delay is approximately one year. My understanding also is that that means December 31, 1983. I am hopeful, as are my colleagues, that in the very near future we will have something that will enable us to retain this very important expertise in the area of science and technology.

REQUEST THAT INVESTMENT BE MADE MANDATORY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister is no doubt aware that this company has received Government grants and subsidies in the past. I wonder if he would consider, in trying to solve the problem, bringing in legislation similar to what the British and the French have, namely, legislation that would make it mandatory that a foreign-based company operating in this country would invest a fixed percentage from its sales in research and development in Canada. In that way we could save some of the jobs in this country and do as the British and the French have been doing for years.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, if I understand correctly, the company in question has already done considerable research and development in Canada. I shall consider the representations made by Hon. Member in his question.

DISASTERS

"OCEAN RANGER" INQUIRY—U.S. COMPANY'S REFUSAL TO CO-OPERATE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice—sorry, Energy, Mines and Resources. We get mixed up sometimes with all these changes.

The Minister will know that the Ocean Drilling and Exploration Company of New Orleans were the owners of the drilling rig Ocean Ranger which went down last February with the loss of 84 lives. He will also know that they have refused to co-operate with the joint federal-provincial Royal Commission chaired by Chief Justice Hickman. They have refused to provide witnesses who were involved in the construction and specifications for that rig. They have refused to permit the inquiry to investigate the rig where it now lies on the ocean floor. They ignored that and went ahead anyway.

Is the Government of Canada taking any steps to have ODECO, which is located in New Orleans, through the United States government, co-operate with this inquiry, or what steps does the Government plan to take to force this company to comply with Canadian laws and comply fully and completely with this investigation which is so important to the life and safety of people who work in our offshore and on drilling rigs?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the problem but, as you know, we have a Commission that has been established by the two Governments and the matter is in front of the Chairman of the Commission at this time. There have been no requests forwarded to us that the Commission take specific action in this matter. I will certainly keep interested in it and see if we can be helpful to the Commission, but there is no request to that effect so far.

Mr. Crosbie: I suggest to the minister that he should not need a request when an American company drilling in our offshore, which is under the control of the Canadian Government, is defying a Canadian Royal Commission in a situation where 84 lives, practically all of them Canadian, were lost.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Would the Minister, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or whatever is the proper medium, advise ODECO, for example, who have 40 rigs, that none of their rigs will be permitted to drill in Canadian waters, or to operate anywhere where we have Canadian jurisdiction, if they do not co-operate fully with this Royal Commission?

I suggest that he does not have to wait for a request, though. This is an insult to Canadian sovereignty, and an insult to all those who lost their lives, and to their families. Will he take action without waiting for a request? We have been waiting months for this Royal Commission, and the chief operator and owner of the rig is refusing to co-operate. Will he take action?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking us to take some very specific action at this time, and I shall certainly look into these possibilities. I think the Commission is headed by a very competent judge, who will be able to take any legal steps that may be necessary. Naturally, I hope the company will be willing to co-operate with the Commission of Inquiry, because we expect foreign companies who come and work on projects in Canada to respect our autonomy and our laws.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He stated in his speech on October 27 that one of his basic principles of economic management is that, "we must rely primarily on the dynamism and creativity of the private sector as the engine of growth in Canada". I would like to ask the Minister how he reconciles his statement with that of the Prime Minister who said, "we haven't been able to make it work, the free enterprise system. We've ended up with very high unemployment and very high inflation. We can't go back to what it was before . . . that means the Government is going to take a larger role in running institutions." Has the Government really changed its basic economic philosophy, or is it merely engaged in the socialist dance of two steps forward and one step back?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my Hon. colleague seems to be an expert on dancing. All I can say is that the government has always believed in having the private sector play a major role in the Canadian economy, and that as in the past, we shall have a mixed economy. In other words, both the State and the private sector have a role to play, and in this country, since its very beginnings, both parties have learned to work together, and what I emphasized in my policy statement was that it is extremely important for all of us to work together to get the Canadian economy back on the road, and that we are counting on the private sector to play an important role in this respect. However, I also indicated that the government was prepared to provide the leadership that was expected of it.

FORECAST OF NUMBERS EXHAUSTING BENEFITS IN KINGSTON AREA

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since last September I have been requesting the local Manager of the Employment Office in Kingston, then the Regional Manager for Eastern Ontario, and finally the Minister's own Deputy, to provide information which would show the number of people coming off UIC benefits in the weeks and months ahead in the Kingston area. While they have all been very sympathetic to my request, they all tell me there is no way they can get that data out of the computer.

The question I want to pose to the Minister is based on the fact that the Minister of Finance said the other day that he knows of municipalities that have already arranged to get that information. I would like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration why it is that certain municipalities can get that information, but we cannot get it for the community of Kingston.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we did publish a report about a month ago that detailed what we forecast as being the range of exhaustees that would be coming off unemployment insurance, and we broke it down into regional levels. We are trying to detail that further into more precise community level areas so we can use that as a tool in the application of the NEED Program. We do not have the full availibility of that information yet. We are going to be working with the Provinces and the social assistance offices to try to compile the best information available. There is no reason for not giving the information to the Hon. Member. I will personally check to see if in fact the information for her particular area is presently available, and we will be sure to pass it on to her as soon as we have it.

TIMING OF INFORMATION RELEASE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister because that seems to contradict what the Minister of Finance said earlier. What I would like the Minister to know is that we do not expect the Government to resolve this completely. We know the community, through its volunteer efforts will be able to cope with some of the greatest difficulties, but they cannot do that unless they have the basic statistics to work with, and they need those immediately to begin their planning. Can he give me some idea of when that information will be available so we can get on with planning for this winter?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to hear that the Hon. Member is approaching this particular problem in the sense that all the participants in the community must take some responsibility. I think that is the basic thrust of our whole direction in the NEED program, to try to recruit and enlist the municipalities and people in the private sector. I certainly welcome her support of that particular principle.

What we are doing in areas across Canada is sending out notes to those who are within a six-week to eight-week period of exhausting their benefits, asking them to come into our offices for interviews so we can determine what their needs are, whether they have prospects of alternative employment or are developing other forms of income and support. When we have compiled that information we are certainly prepared to pass it along to the members of voluntary agencies or to Members of Parliament. When the information does become available, we will make sure that she and others receive it.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TRANSFER OF REPAIR WORK FROM WINNIPEG TO MONTREAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On September 24, well over a month ago, the Minister of Energy in Manitoba, Wilson Parasiuk, and myself, wrote to the Minister of Transport exdpressing our concern that the VIA repair work which is done in the Transcona shop in Winnipeg is being transferred to Montreal. We have yet to receive an answer from the Minister of Transport about this particular concern. Since then we have learned, from looking at the projected workloads—not the final projection, but the preliminary projections of workload distribution between Montreal and Transcona—that the percentage for 1983 is to be 95 per cent of the work done in Montreal and only 5 per cent in Transcona, where traditionally it is 40 per cent.

Is the Minister going to allow the CN to add insult to the injury of VIA cutbacks of last year by transferring the work down to where only the trains that are running are left, or is he going to tell the CNR not to go ahead with this ignorant, ill-conceived decision that they seem to have made, and tell the CNR to leave that work there in Transcona where it bloody well belongs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there have been a number of rumours during recent weeks with respect to the CN presence in Winnipeg. The President of CN wrote me a letter which I passed on to the interested parties, saying there was no such intent, putting it in black and white on a piece of paper, that the degree of involvement of the CN in Winnipeg would continue and would increase. That is quite clear. The reason I did not say anything on this particular problem is that the work load for VIA for 1983 has not been determined yet. The Hon. Member himself referred to that a moment ago. When this workload is determined, I will report to him and to the House extensively. There is no reason to believe that the work at the Transcona shops will be damaged in relation to the work at the Montreal shops.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct my question to the Government House Leader but he disappeared from the Chamber a few moments ago along with the Speaker. In his absence, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary, in view of the fact that the order of business for this week was set out by the Government House Leader last Thursday, in view of the Prime Minister's answer to questions on Friday that unless the B.C. port strike was settled the matter would be dealt with by tonight, leaving the clear impression that we could expect back-to-work legislation, and in view of our willingness to expedite the House dealing with this matter, can the Parliamentary Secretary inform us whether such legislation is ready and, if so, is it the intention to introduce it tomorrow? If so, can we have copies to study, if it is the Government's intention to deal with it in an expeditious fashion?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Conservative House Leader that in the event a decision is made to alter the order of business for this week as set out by the Government House Leader, that decision will be communicated to the House Leader right away.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, in the interests of co-operation and expediting this kind of legislation, the Government, if it does not already have the legislation prepared, surely has an idea what its intentions are. We on this side must have time to prepare. Surely it is within the bounds of reason to expect copies of that legislation to be made available as soon as possible. Certainly we are entitled at this stage to know whether the order of business tomorrow will be that as declared by the Government House Leader last Thursday.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that some discussions may occur in Vancouver today; I am not up to date on the latest situation. But in the event that a change is made, I am sure it will be communicated directly to the Opposition House Leader. His question I believe is a fair one and I can assure him of our good faith on this side.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would be good enough, again in the interests of expediting the business of the House, to seek out the Government House Leader so that I can have an answer to this question before we reach the end of Routine Proceedings today.

Mr. Smith: I do not know whether that will be possible but I will discuss this concern with him as soon as it is possible.

PETITIONS

MR. ROSE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, some 602 constituents of Mission-Port Moody are so concerned about interest rates, inflation and employment, and they are so unhappy at the failure of the Government to consult them on matters of public policy which affect their well-being, that they humbly pray and urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to call upon the Governor General to dissolve Parliament in order that a general election may be held.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,233, 4,366, 4,428 and 4,462.

[Text]

BLUFFERS PARK, SCARBOROUGH, ONTARIO

Question No. 4,233—Mr. Wilson:

1. Did the Government turn over the administration of the land on which Bluffers Park in Scarborough is situated to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and, if so (a) on what basis (b) does the Government still own the land?

2. Is the Government proposing to sell the land to the Municipality and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) and (b) The Province of Ontario owns the land and water on which Bluffers Park is situated. However, the waterlot and headpoints only will be transferred to the Federal Government.

2. The waterlot and headpoints will then be leased to the Metropolitan Toronto Regional Conservation Authority for a nominal sum.

FLYING OF UNION JACK ON VICTORIA DAY

Question No. 4,366—Mr. Clarke:

1. Has the past practice of the Government been to fly the Union Jack on Victoria Day?

2. Is there a Cabinet Directive which provides that, where possible, the Union Jack will be flown at federal buildings on the date of the official observance of the Queen's birthday?

3. Was the Union Jack flown this year on (a) the Victoria Building, Wellington Street (b) La Promenade Building, Sparks Street (c) the Sir William Logan Building, Booth Street and, if not (i) for what reason was the Directive ignored (ii) what steps will be taken to ensure that this affront to the Sovereign is not repeated?

2. Yes.

3. (a) No. (b) No. (c) No.

A directive was issued on May 11, 1982, drawing the attention of all Public Works Regions in Canada to the regulations, and advising of the action to be taken on May 24, 1982.

Immediately the Department became aware that the Union Jack was not flown on these three buildings on that date, an investigation was carried out. The investigation revealed that there was a lapse in communication.

ALL-STAR BASEBALL GAME RECEPTION

Question No. 4,462—Mr. Reid (St. Catharines):

1. Was a reception hosted by the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch, assisted by the Small Businesses and Tourism Branch, held at the Place des Arts in Montreal on July 12, 1982?

2. Was any other department or agency associated with the hosting of the reception?

3. (a) What was the purpose of the reception (b) what was the itemized cost (c) what categories and number of persons were invited?

4. Were Canadian wines available at the reception and, if not, is it government policy to serve imported wines at receptions of this type?

5. Which Department, Agency or Cabinet Minister authorized the use of public funds for the reception?

6. Was this the first time that a government department hosted a pre-professional All-Star ball game reception?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. (a) To promote Canada through tourism; it was the first time the All-Star game was held outside of the United States and in Canada, and Montreal Expos, the host club, asked the Federal Government to sponsor and host the event. The Montreal club approached the Federal Government for this because traditionally, in the United States, the State Government in which the game is played always has acted as host and the Quebec Government and Montreal City Council each had agreed to sponsor other receptions. The Federal Government saw this event, which was viewed or listened to by 100 million people in 26 countries, as a perfect vehicle in which to promote Canadian tourism and to signify its support for amateur baseball federations from around the world, which were in attendance, in their pursuit of having baseball added as an Olympic sport for 1988.

(b) $105,000.

(c) 1,200 people: baseball All-Star players and their wives; the executives and managers of every major league baseball club; 500 media persons from the United States; the Commissioner of Baseball; a few MPs from Montreal since they were from the host city.

4. Yes.

5. The Hon. G. Regan and the Hon. C. Lapointe.

6. Yes.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may direct, for the umpteenth time, a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council in connection with question No. 4,229 placed on the Order Paper at the request of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) on April 6 last. I am really going to get mad if I get that "we will look into it" answer again. I really wish he would look into it and have an answer to that question on my desk some time this week.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would be even madder if I said I would not look into it. So at the risk of incurring some degree of anger by him, I assure him that I will look into it with holy haste. Seeing that the Minister is in the House and has heard this exchange, I am sure we can expect his co-operation.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—GOVERNMENT ECONOMIC POLICIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its insistence on pursuing oppressive and inhuman policies causing tragically record high unemployment, bringing depression and despair to every region of Canada and deeply eroding the confidence of Canadians in their future.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in preparing some notes today on how I might approach the first speech with respect to the debate on unemployment today, I found myself in the situation where I was thinking less about the statistical material that we normally receive from endless Commissions and special purpose bodies, thinking less about the statements and clash of ideas and philosophies and theories, and really more about many of the people that I saw last week in my office. I am going to spend a little bit of time on those people, Mr. Speaker, because I think they represent not just people in my own riding, but, indeed, people in ridings all across the country and every Member of the House could submit such a list. I do this because, as we proceed in the debate throughout the day, I do not want us to get very far away from these people and their needs and there is a danger that the House will do so.

The first person I saw last Tuesday was a longshoreman. He has been a longshoreman in the City of Toronto for about 25 years. He is in his mid-40s and has three kids. He was born in the lower part of Cabbagetown in the south end of Toronto. This is the only work he has ever known. As anyone who knows anything about the transportation business is aware, the Port of Toronto is in very great difficulty. As far as he could see his own situation, he is not only unemployed now, but is going to be unemployed, at least in the work he has always known, for as long as he, his friends or his bosses could tell.

After he left I saw a 52-year-old salesman. He had never been out of work in all his life. He was originally from Montreal but had been living in Toronto for the last 18 years. He had been divorced, had remarried and now had a second family with a five-year-old and a seven-year-old. At age 52 he had those eyes that tell you he had nowhere to turn. He did not know what he was going to do to feed a young family or bring up a young family at his age.

The third person I saw was a 23-year-old Vietnamese lady who had two children. She was working only two days a week. She wanted to know what I could do to see that she could at least earn some money two or three more days a week so that she would have enough money to look after the two kids. I do not know what her husband did; she was not able to tell me. She had two kids, she was 23, she was a woman, she was Vietnamese and she was working in a restaurant. She had pay for only two days a week and was looking for more work.

Shortly after she left I talked with a 55-year-old man and in a way he was perhaps the saddest case of the bunch. He was a senior executive who lived in the neighbourhood of Rosedale. After he graduated from the University of Toronto he had been with three major advertising companies all his working life. According to his curriculum vitae, his credentials were outstanding. I am sure we would all like to hire him. He was looking for work too. What was particularly tragic about him, I think, was the fact that he had been out of work for eight months but every morning he got up and went down town as he had for the previous 30 years because he did not want his neighbours to know that he did not have a job. He walked around in his three-button suit carrying his bag but he had nowhere to go. He had nowhere to go that told him who he was, how he could make a living and how he could look after his responsibilities.

Finally, I interviewed a woman in her late thirties. She had split with her husband and she had two children. She had not worked since she was 19. She wanted to know where she could get some training in order to get a job so that she could look after her family. As she went out the door she said, "A lot has happened to me in the last 15 years". A lot has happened to this country in the last 15 years, Mr. Speaker, and that is what I want to turn my attention to now. I could have gone to 12 people, Mr. Speaker, or I could probably have reduced the number to three. I think everyone in the House has his or her own list; they are caught with the same problem.

The situation in this country today is that our manufacturing capacity operates at 68 per cent; our primary metals industry is operating at 61 per cent, or is 39 per cent idle; our wood industry is operating at 51 per cent, or 49 per cent of the wood industry is idle; and our electrical industry is operating at 67 per cent or two-thirds of capacity. That is the capacity we are working at. Bankruptcies in business are up by 43 per cent; capital spending, which is investment in new jobs for the future, is down. When it should be up, it is down 7.6 per cent. Our business and consumer confidence is at the lowest level it has been since the war.

Euromoney, a well respected financial journal which measures the economic performance of 81 countries in the world, until 12 months ago placed Canada in fortieth position. In the last 12 months, Canada has fallen from fortieth to fifty-fifth. Fifteen years ago we had a standard of living that was the third best in the world, coming behind Sweden and the United States. In 14 years we have fallen to fourteenth place. We have an industrial productivity with the worst record of all western industrialized nations.

A lot has happened to Mrs. Percy in the last 15 years. She got married, had children and was out of the work force for about 19 years. Now she is trying to get back into the work stream. I think the statistic that would interest most, indeed all the people I saw last Tuesday, is the one that shows that 15 years ago the unemployed level in this country was 4.5 per cent, with 358,000 people out of work; 15 years later, on this day, we have an unemployment rate of 12.2 per cent with 1,343,000 out of work. Those are just the people on record; the actual figure is closer to 1.5 million. That is what has happened to this country in 15 years. While this regime has been in, it has increased the unemployment level by one million people. When we talk about unemployment in this country we must not lose sight of that fact either.

Why is that so, Mr. Speaker? Why is our industry idle? Why are our people out of work? The Government has one simple line on that—it is the world slump. It is the deterioration in world trade. That is the line put out by the Government. All we have to do, says the Government—the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says it, the last Minister of Finance said it and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) says it—is to hunker down and wait until the Americans have a recovery. That is the policy of the Government; in the face of all the economic wreckage, that is the Government's policy: we can do nothing; we have to wait for the Americans to have a recovery.

I think one of the things that people learn very early in life is that you do not know how to find solutions unless you know how to define the problem. No solutions are offered by the Government because it has not seen the problem. It thinks all we have to do is wait. That is not an answer, Mr. Speaker. It is not an answer for me, it is not an answer for the people in my office who are looking for work; nor is it an answer for anyone in the country.

I think I know why we have our current economic problems and massive numbers of unemployed people. First of all, this is the product of 15 years of erosion of our industrial base. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, the plain, clear and unvarnished fact is that over the past 15 years the Government has rendered this country no longer competitive and no longer productive on the world stage.

That is the first reason, Mr. Speaker. Second, this is the product of 15 years of absolute neglect in the field of research and development. In 1967 the magazine The Economist described this country as the world's richest underdeveloped country. At that time it said that if we wanted to take the wave of the future we should increase our participation in research and development from 1.25 per cent of gross national product to 2.1 or 2.4 per cent. The actual ratio is not important; they wanted us to double our investment in research and development.

In 1972 Senator Lamontagne chaired a committee and reiterated the same point. He said that we should move it up from 1.25 per cent to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product; again double it. But the Government did not listen. To this day we still have around 1 per cent of our GNP invested in reasearch and development. We invest less than half the amount in research and development of any other western industrialized nation.

I do not think we should underestimate the significance and importance of all that. Research and development is not something for only universities or industrial laboratories. A few months ago David Johnston, Principal of McGill University, looked at our efforts with respect to research and development and indeed that Government's record for 14 years. He said:

> We are writing a suicide note for our competitive capacities in the 1990s.

He said this because this regime has seen fit to have an environment in which investment in research and development is less than half that of any other industrialized nation.

The consequences of Government policy are not just the things we have experienced in the past; we will experience them in the 1980s. Between 1972 and 1981, the number of Canadians and landed immigrants in graduate programs in chemical engineering in Canadian universities went down 17 per cent. In electrical engineering in the same period up until this year, it dropped 30 per cent. Enrolment in computer science, the wave of the future, declined 21 per cent in 1981. The decline in geology and related subjects in the same period amounted to 26 per cent, and it went down 44 per cent for mining engineering. We are not fooling around; these are serious matters. At a time when these figures should be going up, they are instead going down because the Government has not seen fit in 14 years to do anything about research and development other than to talk about it.

In case the House thinks that this has no economic consequences, I should like to offer one. Mr. Pocock, who advised Senator Lamontagne ten years ago, said a couple of months ago that if Canada had had an investment in research and development of 1.5 in 1978, which was advocated in 1968 and reiterated by Senator Lamontagne in 1972, let alone the 2.5 per cent, "there would have been an additional 10,600 jobs for scientists and engineers, a total of 1.52 million jobs created by new industrial activity and an extra $15.4 billion in exports".

When we are talking about research and development, we are talking about some serious matters. We are talking about whether or not we will become productive and competitive. The consequences throughout the 1970s of this regime saying no to research and development is that we are not now competitive or productive. The consequences for the 1980s are that we will be in worse shape. We are deindustrializing as a consequence of deliberate neglect on the part of the Government.

It is not only a product of no action in research and development. It is a product of 15 years of waste, mismanagement and incompetence in the development of crucial economic skills. Mr. Speaker does not have to take my word for it. An all-party committee of the House came out with a paper entitled "Work for Tomorrow—Employment Opportunities for the '80s" in which the point was made that hundreds of millions of dollars were wasted over 15 years by the Government not taking seriously the significance of programs to develop the economic skills required in a competitive world.

This kind of inaction is something which people who are looking for work, who want to know where they can train or who is responsible, find difficult to understand. I should like to read one quotation from the record itself. Throughout the committee hearings strong criticism was voiced over federal manpower training and retraining programs that, despite a budget of approximately $800 million, were unable to provide qualified skilled labour. This is a waste, an incredible waste.

Also our current situation is a product of the Government's ill-fated National Energy Program. Whatever it did or did not do for the oil industry, it played a key role in knocking out four of the five megaprojects in the west. Perhaps even more important is that in the long term it has just about destroyed investor confidence, both domestic and foreign, in the country. This country has benefited from investment when we have paid attention to the quality of investment in relation to jobs and productivity, not its nationality. It will take a long time to fix up the NEP in terms of its ability to remove the difficulties created by it with respect to investor confidence.

Also the current situation is a product of the fact that the Government itself has mismanaged its own business. How is it possible for people in the country to do business, to plan their lives, to obtain training or to look for jobs in an environment which gave them three budgets in a year? The Government is so unsure of itself now that it does not even know where it is going. It lurches from one budget to another. It has stop policies, go policies, and then it goes back to the stop policies. No one knows where the Government has gone or where it intends to go. When there is no predictability for people, people do not know how to act very well or how to plan. The Government is responsible for providing the required environment. If it does not do so, corporations and individuals do not know how to act or plan. This kind of incompetence has put the country in the kind of situation which the people who come into my office are no longer willing to tolerate.

Finally, our current economic situation is a consequence of a Public Service which has become politicized and demoralized. The country cannot depend upon its Public Service when it gives, for reasons of politics, predictions of a deficit in the order of $10.6 billion and then less than a year later indicates that it is $23.6 billion.

Those are the reasons we are in this difficulty. It is not only because we are in a world-wide slump and our trading patterns are difficult. This country is a trading nation, but we are not the only trading nation. Japan is a trading nation. Japan has far more people and far fewer resources than we have. There are 120 million Japanese with no resources on an island smaller than Newfoundland. Those are problems, Mr. Speaker. But our situation comes from government-made disasters, not natural disasters. This Government, this regime, over 14 years has so mismanaged our affairs that the people who come to my office for help will no longer be able to support it. We will discover that shortly.

I am one of those who think that if you criticize you should have something to offer in return. I do not think there is any secret in this House, or indeed in the country, about what we need. We need to turn around 15 years of neglect, incompetence and mismanagement in this country. That is all it is. That is the truth of the matter and Government members know it in their bones.

This country must become more productive and more competitive. Our productivity is the worst in the western world. Our workers work hard, but because of the policies of this government, they do not have the tools nor have they been taught the skills. Those opportunities were wasted in the late 1960s and 1970s. What we need is some real Government intervention. This is a Government that likes to intervene. I am not talking about ownership. Intervention is not always the same thing. What we really need is for the Government to intervene by establishing a national productivity centre where we can at least monitor and focus the productivity needs in Canada. The Japanese have a productivity centre in which they employ 600 people. The Americans have one employing 90 people and the Germans have one employing 350 people. The purpose of these centres is to monitor productivity programs in industry. We do not have such a centre in Canada. After 14 years this Government has not even thought of having a productivity centre.

Second, we need industry by industry consultation and cooperation with the Government. We need a Government that says: "Hey, we want to help. What do we do about regulations? What do we do about world markets?" That is what we need in a government. We do not need something competitive with industry but something to help industry. For 14 years this government has not been there to help.

Third, we need some national training centres. The Minister may call them by some other name, but what we need are national training centres. Bill C-115 received the unanimous consent of this House, but I can say to the Minister and to all Members of the House that we need to have national training centres related to those industries and those areas in the country through which we can become world competitive. We need them where the economic need is great. We need national training centres where our competitive opportunities will open up. But I say to the Minister: "Move now; do not wait any longer".

Fourth, we need a new national research and development program. As I mentioned, we have been talking about that and asking for it for 15 years. We need skilled people. We need people in this country with world-class skills. The only way to have that is to create the research and development environment by which we will attract the talent to give us the ability and the inventions to make us productive.

Fifth, we need an overhaul of outdated equipment and machinery in Canada. That is why our tax policies still need to change. We need changes in our capital cost allowance and other tax measures so that industries will be able to use machinery and equipment that is good for the 1980s and the 1990s, not the 1950s and the 1960s. The tax policies of the Government right now are inhibiting industry from that kind of overhaul. How can the Government expect our workers to be productive if we have tax policies that inhibit companies and corporations from creating and using new machinery and new equipment that would make them more productive?

Sixthly, we need to restore some investor confidence in this country. It is an easy thing to lose but a difficult thing to get. We took it for granted.

Mr. Evans: "Sixthly"?

Mr. Crombie: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) thinks "sixthly" is a funny word, but this is not a funny subject.

We need some investor confidence. We depended on it, and like good weather we assumed it was around whenever we wanted it, but it went away. It went away because people who were willing to risk their money—corporations, groups or individuals—could no longer count on policies that were predictable. There was one thing about this country; it may not have been exciting for investors, but as sure as heck it was predictable. It is no longer predictable. That is why people no longer invest and that is why people do not have jobs. It is why the people who come into my office do not know where to turn.

I have mentioned six things that we need, but they are not going to come from this Government. There is one reason for that. Governments can be a lot of things. Most individuals are not perfectionists. They do not require perfection. Most people are even willing to put up with the mistakes of politicians. That is why governments are tolerated more often. You wonder why, Mr. Speaker. There is one essential ingredient a government cannot govern without and that is trust. People have to be willing to trust it with the shot. People have to be willing to give trust. Once you break trust, you can never get it back. It is that simple. You can make mistakes; you can even be incompetent. You can correct mistkaes, but you cannot correct mistrust.

What gives very little hope to the people I saw last week in my office is the fact that they know what their own difficulties are and they know about some of the difficulties I have mentioned today. But they also know, as this Government now stands revealed after 15 years, that it is not part of any solution they know. It was clear to them when they saw the Prime Minister on television that here was a man who had nothing to say to them any longer. He dredged up some homilies for the occasion, but they knew that was not a solution for them. They knew that there was nothing there for them that they could ever trust again.

It was also true when Canadians heard the Minister of Finance give his economic statement last week. He did not even have enought guts to call it a budget. Everybody knew it was a budget. People do not trust this Government any more because this Government does not even call things by what they are. All one has to do is look at words in the budget. We find such phrases as "lighten the load", but the Government increases contributions to the UIC fund 40 per cent. The Government says it is going to lighten the load, but it increases the tax budget. I hear my colleague say that is deceitful. The document was certainly deceptive, but it is no more deceptive than the general way in which this government now runs the affairs of this country.

That is why, whatever happens to this motion in this House, even if it fails, we should vote the Government out of office. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that out there in the street and in every constituency office of every Member in this House the people of this country will issue a vote of confidence in this motion tonight.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to participate in this Opposition day debate. Opposition Members are very concerned about the state of the Canadian economy. While one could list the available statistics which attempt to describe the severity of today's situation, I want simply to bypass those statistics for a moment or two and put the problem into a very human perspective by drawing the attention of the House to the City of Kamloops. Kamloops is not atypical of cities and towns across Canada. It is very typical of towns that primarily rely on various forms of resource extracts which are tied very closely to the primary producers in Canada.

The situation which exists in Kamloops today borders on tragic. Thousands of individuals in that City who have known full employment for their entire lives have now exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits which they have collected for the past year. They find themselves knocking on the door of welfare offices only to be turned away because they do not qualify for welfare under the laws of British Columbia. They are unable to qualify for a number of reasons. They may own a modest cottage which they would dearly love to sell if anyone was purchasing property currently. They might own a second car because one spouse had to drive for some distance to a mining camp, logging operation or a mill while the rest of the family needed a modest car as well. As a result, they would be prohibited from receiving welfare.

For a variety of reasons these people fall between the cracks of receiving UI benefits and social assistance. They are forced to go to the churches, to the Salvation Army, or the MPs' offices in some cases, to ask for food hampers so they may put food on the table for their families until they can arrange for a loan from a friend or make some other financial adjustment.

Recent events in Canada during the last two or three weeks have discouraged Canadians more than anything which has occurred in the last number of months. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of the land appeared on television three nights in a row and lifted the hopes of Canadians that he has finally realized the severity of our problems and would announce the appropriate special programs which are required during these times. While he lifted the hopes of those Canadians, he simply dashed them at the end of his three television appearances.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that he was to make a major economic statement in the House of Commons when it reopened after the recess. Again, the hopes of Canadians were lifted. The Minister of Finance, after the Prime Minister had described the seriousness of our problems, which Canadians were well aware of, of course, was surely going to announce the major programs which would launch a serious economic recovery. Once again Canadians sat on the edge of their seats as they listened to the Minister of Finance. Although their hopes and dreams were lifted once again, they were only to be dashed because when the economic statement is closely read one sees that not only will no more jobs be created, but that there may in fact be a net loss in jobs.

Let us assume that the figures of the Minister of Finance were accurate when he said the Government plans to create 60,000 new jobs over the next 18 months. This sounds excellent until one recognizes that this statement was made at a time when there are nearly two million Canadians unemployed. This begs the question: "What will we do with the 94 per cent shortfall?" What does the Minister propose for the 94 per cent of those two million Canadians who will remain unemployed in spite of his job-creation program?

To add insult to injury, when we look at the fine print in the Minister's economic statement, we see that $3.5 billion is to be taken out of the pockets of the average working Canadian as a result of reduced tax indexing to 6 per cent and additional UI contributions to be expected of Canadian workers. That $3.5 billion will be taken out of the pockets of the workers as a result of the budget statements of the former Minister of Finance and the economic statement of the present Minister. We are in a very serious situation.

The Liberals and the Conservatives have formed an alliance over the years designed to offer Canadians a perspective on economic recovery. We saw the first example of that when the Liberals and Conservatives supported the six and five program. We carefully listened to the speeches made by Members on both sides of the House, but when it came time to vote we saw where those Members stood. It was very clear that the Conservatives and the Liberals believed that the six and five program was the vital answer to Canada's current problems. I and the Party for which I am speaking this afternoon do not feel that the six and five program is at all appropriate. We believe that it is a sham and a program which is unjust. It differentiates between one Canadian and another. This becomes evident when one considers that while an individual Canadian who earns $100,000 a year will be restricted to a 6 per cent increase under this program, a Canadian who earns $10,000 a year will also have his or her income restricted to 6 per cent next year. How can any Member in this House who professes to believe in fairness and equity support such an obviously unjust program? However, this is exactly what the Progressive Conservative and the Liberal coalition did when they were put to the test to vote on the six and five program.

The Minister of Finance indicated in his address that we must rely on the private sector as an engine of growth in Canada. In other words, he was stating that we must rely on the private sector to revive us from this economic malaise. That view is supported by the Conservatives every day in the House, that the private sector marketplace will provide the answer which will lead us out of this morass. This theory assumes that what is good for Dome Petroleum is good for Canada and Canadians. It assumes that what is good for Honda is good for Canada and Canadians. It assumes that what is good for the Royal Bank of Canada is obviously good for Canada and Canadians.

I challenge that assumption. I do not believe for one moment, and I speak for my Party when I say this, that the open market system automatically makes the appropriate investment decisions for Canada. I do not accept the premise that higher profits will solve our present economic problems. I do not accept the notion that higher profits will buy us out of this situation. We have seen the success of that program as it is applied in the United States. To this day Americans are still standing and waiting for economic recovery to begin in that country.

In 1981 we saw one of the most successful corporate sectors, the Canadian banks, which ranked second in profitability, become embarrassingly successful and profitable when their profits increased over the previous year by 37 per cent and by as much as 100 per cent for some banks. Canadian banks did extremely well in 1981 while the rest of Canadians suffered. That is why our Party does not enthusiastically endorse the idea that what is good for the Royal Bank of Canada is automatically good for the country.

It is very well known that the decisions being made by the corporate sector over the last number of years were made only for their short-term gain. The "Harvard Business Review" concluded that the critical problem with North American business today is its fixation on short-run profits and its unwillingness to make long-term investments. That view applies equally in the United States of America and Canada. This is what sets us apart from the successes that we have seen in those countries in western Europe and Japan which do not blindly assume that the short-term investment decisions of the corporate sector are necessarily in the best interests of the country and its citizens.

As a westerner, I am particularly concerned about relying on private sector decision-making to get us out of our difficulties today. I have seen how the private sector has moved into northeastern British Columbia to "develop" its coal resource in the best interests of British Columbians and Canadians. What I see is a corporate decision to dig as much coal as quickly as possible, ship it to Japan and allow the Japanese to use that resource in their blast furnaces. When I look closely at what is happening, I find that hundreds of millions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money are subsidizing that operation so as to allow the Japanese to import coal from Canada as cheaply as possible, yet other sources indicate that that coal deposit alone has over 220 byproducts which have the potential to be manufactured and developed in this country for the benefit of Canadians and for Canadian export.

Surely we should not overlook the fact that long-term, permanent manufacturing jobs would be available in this country if we were to use that resource in a more creative and innovative way, a way which is more appropriate for development in the 1980s. But no, we maintain that same simplistic mentality. It is the square timber mentality, the fur trade mentality, the gold rush mentality: dig up those resources or cut them down and export them as quickly as we can. That is the Liberal and Conservative idea of good business and good economic development. We in this Party certainly challenge that idea.

We saw the blind following of that mentality when the Liberals and Conservatives fell over themselves to support the megaprojects, the megabucks. This was to be the economic salvation of the country. The megaprojects required $4.3 million of investment to create a single job. In manufacturing, it costs only $100,000 to create a single job. For every one job created in the megaprojects, 43 jobs could be created in the manufacturing sector. Surely we must question the logic of continuing this mindless pursuit of economic recovery for Canada via the megaprojects and at the expense of a sound manufacturing sector.

The Tory-Liberal preoccupation with these kinds of megaprojects is really nineteenth century economic development, something which is out of step with what we should be doing in the 1980s in preparation for the 1990s. Other nations have been developing sophisticated technologies in the microelectronic area, the microbiology area, in fibre optics, in development of computer software, and one could go on and on. We, in our amateurish way, still feel that exporting raw materials or resources is the way out of our economic calamity. This is a Third World mentality. We do not have to follow that particular option and become vulnerable to international markets by placing all of our eggs in a single basket.

Even a superficial look at energy prices in the world over the last number of years would have clearly foretold that the 10 per cent to 15 per cent increase in the price of oil over the next number of years would not continue. Even a superficial look at energy pricing over the past number of decades would have clearly indicated that fact. But now, as the Minister of Finance has indicated, the answer to our problems is to get money into the hands of businessmen and let them do what they do best, and that is business. The assumption is that business will always act in our best interests, that the German branch plant, the Taiwanese factory, the U.S. drilling rig, the Hong Kong real estate investor and the Kuwaiti farm buyer will all be acting in the best interests of Canada. The Tories lead the cry that we must attract more of this type of investment, more of these kinds of investors from Hong Kong, from Taiwan, from the United Kingdom, West Germany and the United States.

The Liberals have loosened FIRA over the last number of months but the Tories say that we must loosen it even further to allow more foreign penetration of our marketplace. We ask why. The Tories tell us that if we do not loosen up FIRA the investors will go elsewhere. These are economic hookers. Oil companies move south, doctors want to move into Texas, investors want to go down to Georgia and Alabama so as to avoid any form of organized labour. Are those the kinds of investors we want in this country, or are those the kinds of investors who will move their capital to take advantage of a percentage point change in interest rates? Is that speculative capital? I suggest that that is not the kind of investors or investment money that we want in Canada. We want people coming into Canada who are prepared to make commitments to invest here for 20, 30 or 50 years into the future. We want sound economic investment, not those with speculative capital who want to run away to make a quick buck.

The Tory-Liberal worship of the marketplace, the assumption that the corporations only make pure and right decisions, is followed by the same people who always criticize the unions, the workers, civil servants, various social programs, peace activists and so on, but never criticize corporate decision-making. They never criticize decisions which have such a profound influence on Canada's future. In particular, they do not criticize the chartered banks of Canada. In this House we never hear criticism when the banks spend $12 billion on takeovers and mergers which add not a single job in this country nor additional productive capacity. We do not hear any criticism when certain banks in Canada loan out 50 per cent, 80 per cent or 100 per cent of their capital base to a single high-risk borrower. We do not hear any criticism of the billions of dollars in outstanding corporate loans earning no interest, yet the banks are attempting to restructure, refinance and protect those large corporate borrowers. While home owners are being foreclosed, farmers and small businessmen are losing their farms and businesses, the banks attempt to regain lost capital through these large corporate loans.

We do not hear anything about lack of competition in the Canadian banking system. In Canada six chartered banks control 90 per cent of the banking industry compared with the United States, which has 15,000 banks. For all intents and purposes, we have only six banks.

An Hon. Member in the Conservative Party asks, "Shall we open it up to the foreign bankers?"

Mr. McDermid: You know I did not say that at all.

Mr Riis: Of course that is what we heard the Hon. Member say, "Let us open it up to foreign competition", over the last couple of years. The Tory and Liberal alliance decided to allow foreign banks into the country. What they do not tell anyone is that those foreign banks are only able to expand to the extent of 8 per cent of their banking assets in this country. Once they have accumulated 8 per cent, they cannot go on. That is their limit. That is the kind of so-called competition obviously supported by the Progressive Conservatives.

What other major corporate sector is exempt from critical sections in the Combines Investigation Act? We know the toothlessness of the Act as it presently exists, but those critical provisions dealing with mergers and conspiracy exempt the banks. They say: "Well, that is all right; we have covered that in the Bank Act. Mergers and conspiracy come under Sections 255 and 309 of the Bank Act." Those sections are totally inadequate because there is no policing mechanism. If the banks are accused of some conspiracy or inappropriate merger, there is no mechanism with which to deal with it. It is just incredible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair would like to inquire whether the Hon. Member intends to move an amendment in the course of his speech. Otherwise, I have to remind him that the 20 minutes allocated for his speech have now expired. He can continue, of course, if he intends to proceed with the presentation of an amendment.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do intend to move an amendment at this point. I believe I have ten minutes following the introduction of the amendment. I move that the motion be amended by adding the following:

—and that this House also condemns the Government for failure to introduce effective job-creation measures funded by a revised tax system which would impose a surtax on upper-income earners to ensure that they pay their fair share of income tax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair will take the amendment under advisement and render a decision later.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we will be hearing from you in terms of the appropriateness of the wording.

I want to talk for a moment or two about the chartered banks in Canada. Over the weekend I read with interest the publication Euromoney, the June edition. It stated that of the 500 largest banks in the world ranked by their equity base, which is its capital reserves or the funds belonging to their shareholders, last year the Canadian big five ranked in the top 12 per cent of all of the world banks.

When you examine the fastest growing banks in 1981, you find that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal and the Toronto-Dominion Bank ranked high in the top 12 per cent of all the banks of the world. These are very profitable organizations. When you consider the years 1978, 1979 and 1980, to get a cross-section—

Mr. Blenkarn: How about 1982?

Mr. Riis: —you find that the real return after allowing for inflation in the United Kingdom was 2.5 per cent, 3.2 per cent in the United States. 3.2 per cent in West Germany and 3.4 per cent in the Swiss banks. The Canadian banks were 6.8 per cent, again in terms of real return significantly more profitable than their counterparts in western Europe and the United States.

Let us compare them to the ten largest banks in the United States, the ten most profitable out of their 15 largest banks. In 1981 the return on equity in the United States was 12.5 per cent. Canadian banks, our big five, came in at 18.7 per cent, again in terms of profitability; they were incredibly more profitable.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about this year?

Mr. Riis: How about the other sectors of Canada's economy? Based on a Wood, Gundy report, using the years 1972-1981, the banks of Canada ranked eighth out of 34 different sectors. In 1981 they ranked second. Only publishing was more profitable than banks in 1981 out of all the sectors of the Canadian economy. If you were to factor risk into their profitability, Mr. Speaker, you would find that the banks would inevitably rank at the very top of the list. What risk do the banks take?

Mr. Blenkarn: Dome Petroleum.

Mr. Riis: My colleague in the Progressive Conservative Party yells out that Dome Petroleum was a serious risk. The banks of Canada knew full well that if that favourite son of the Liberal party got into serious economic trouble, the Government of Canada would quickly bail it out. There was no risk involved in lending money to Dome Petroleum. The banks also knew that they could count on their Liberal and Conservative friends from the House of Commons and the Senate to come through if it was required. No bank in this country would be allowed to fall based on the membership of this House.

What about small businesses? Let us forget Dome Petroleum for a moment. The banks say that they are anxious to loan money, but they require 300 per cent of the loan in collateral, 400 per cent, or in some cases maybe 500 per cent of the loan in collateral. What risks are the banks taking with 500 per cent of a loan for collateral? They operate in a very privileged environment in this country. I suggest that if you look at the whole range of business dealings with the banks, such as at the tax system, the effective tax rate of the banks in 1981 was 20.9 per cent. That is lower than the lowest paid teller in any bank. That presumably is what the Liberal and Tory alliance suggests is an appropriate tax rate for the banks of Canada.

Canadian banks are among the most unregulated in the world. In theory they are regulated by the Bank of Canada and by the Inspector General of Banks. The Inspector General of Banks has a staff of 30 people to monitor 60 different banks in Canada. If that is the kind of monitoring and checks and balances we have in place to watch over the dealings of Canada's banking institutions, I suspect what we have is a banking system that is totally unregulated for all intents and purposes.

When you consider the role that the banks play in directing the economy of Canada, that their decisions decide what development occurs, when and where, and that we have this totally unregulated system with that incredibly powerful engine making decisions not in the best interests of Canada but in the best interest of their shareholders, we in the New Democratic Party say that that emphasis is misplaced. More public control over our banking system is absolutely necessary before it is allowed to continue with its mindless investment supporting the Domes and the Turbos and so on, again not necessarily in the best interests of Canada and Canadians.

One could go on and on about the loopholes provided by the banks in the privileged environment in which they operate in this country, but it is appropriate that we call upon this Government now to set three priorities in the weeks ahead. Those three priorities should be jobs, jobs and more jobs.

House business ought not to continue under its present plan. We should set aside the weeks ahead to identify solutions to our economic problems before it is too late for critical sectors of our economy to eventually rebound.

We must declare war on unemployment in this country. Members of this House must agree that there is a common enemy and a common threat to our Canadian way of life called unemployment. It is no longer called inflation but unemployment. When you have two million Canadians out of work and the threat of unemployment facing millions more, it is time to start taking extraordinary measures to face this extraordinary crisis.

We in the New Democratic Party would like to see a change to our personal and corporate tax system to make it more equitable and to allow us to generate the hundreds of millions of dollars needed now to create long-term, permanent job stability in this country. We in the New Democratic Party want the Government to act quickly to avoid the human tragedy and suffering that is occurring across this fine land called Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair has considered the amendment presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and finds it acceptable. I will now put the motion to the House. It is moved by Mr. Riis, seconded by Mr. Deans:

> That the motion be amended following the word "future" and the following words added:
> "and that this House also condemns the Government for failure to introduce effective job-creation measures funded by a revised tax system which would impose a surtax on upper-income earners to ensure that they pay their fair share of income tax".

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset, as the two previous speakers this afternoon have indicated, that I am very pleased that we are able to engage in a good, open, honest discussion on the critical issue of employment in this country. I think it is a healthy thing Parliament is now back in session so that Hon. Members of this House can provide the experience and understanding they have developed over the last three or four months in their ridings and constituencies and we can hopefully engage in an honest dialogue about the kinds of solutions that should be provided.

As the two previous speakers from the opposition have indicated, there is no doubt in anyone's mind that the most recurring, consistent and difficult occupation in the minds of those who they talked to in their ridings, in my mind and those of Members of my Caucus, is the question of jobs. There is no family that goes untouched by the terrible trauma of having someone they know, whether nephew, father or cousin, not able to find a job or having been laid off from their present employment.

I do not think we are here to argue about the depth of seriousness of the situation. It is a situation of great and abiding concern to all of us. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Members of the Opposition have failed, in part, to report what I think are other perceptions and understandings on the part of Canadians, and that is, what do we do about it? How do we approach the problem?

I believe Canadians, unlike the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), are no longer interested in finger pointing. They are no longer interested in trying to isolate who is to blame. Canadians are much wiser than that. They might be wiser than some Members of this House who have constantly fallen into the trap of trying to pick out who is the devil in this. The conspiracy theory which is probably part and parcel of debate in this House is no longer relevant in this country. People do not want to point their fingers and say who is to blame for their losing their job. What they want to ask is, how can we come together to find solutions? How can be begin working together to find the right answers? That is what people in this country are concerned about.

There is nothing to be gained from the situation, other than, I suppose, in the calculations of the odd Member of the Opposition, that there might be some political calculus at work; that has been known in the past in the hope of getting some small advantage. But I do not think Canadians want to hear that. I have spent my summer and fall, not only in my own riding but across Canada, talking to unemployed Canadians and to other levels of Government who are trying to deal with the problem, to private business and to unions. They are all coming back with the same response—how can we help, how can we come together? There is no dredging up of past history, saying that the nefarious, Liberal regime for the past 14 years is the cause of all their woes. They know better than that, Mr. Speaker. They read the papers and watch the news, and they understand that the United States is facing the same problem of high unemployment, as is Great Britain, France, Western Germany and Japan. Every single country, regardless of political ideology, must come to grips with the same issue. They also realize it is not something that is always entirely a result of Government action or inaction.

Canadians realize that the fall-off of the commodity market for minerals across the world is not something that can be brought to the doorstep of any one Government. If you look at the commodity records of two weeks ago, nickel prices were just beginning to go up when the Russians dumped 1,000 or one million tonnes of nickel ore and the price fell by ten cents. That had nothing to do with decisions made in Ottawa by this Cabinet or by this caucus. It was a matter of fact. The demand was not there. Consumer demand and investor demand are down right around the world. Housing production in the United States is down 50 per cent. That has nothing to do with the decisions made by the Minister responsible for housing or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I know that we have a lot of good contacts and relations with the American Government, but not to the point where we can dictate their housing policy. So we have heard that particular song before, and the refrain, I think, is no longer welcomed by the Canadian people.

I was asked to talk to the Provinces about their interest in participating in our new job-creation program. I have now visited over half of them. They are forthcoming and willing to talk to us, wanting to know how they can participate, how they can co-operate, how they can become involved and join us in dealing with the very serious problem of UIC benefits running out. It disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, that back here in Ottawa the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) rushes out of the House, not waiting to hear the results, not waiting to hear the details, declaring the program to be a fraud. That is not the kind of response that Canadians want to hear. That is not the kind of action they expect from the Leader of the Opposition, a man given the responsibility of trying to help in a constructive way to find solutions to the problem. He is prepared to stand in this House and say "Why don't you consult?", and when we do consult, he says we are consulting too much, that we should announce the program. He is not prepared to give us the time to engage the Provinces in a full, honest and open exchange, so we can say, "Here is our proposal; what do you have to offer in return so we can amend the program to suit your interests?" We believe this is honest consultation, rather than pre-empting the decision, or making decisions before we have had the chance to engage in honest dialogue.

The Leader of the Opposition is not content with that. He is prepared to block the program and to throw it in the dustbin before it even has a chance to be put forward, to do this while we are still in the midst of doing what he is always preaching we should do, and that is consult with the Provinces. He cannot have it both ways. He cannot have a job-creating program based upon consultations and condemn us for consulting. This makes me suspect it is not his ambition at all to have job-creation programs.

What they really want, Mr. Speaker, and it came through in the speech of the Hon. Member for Rosedale, has nothing to do with more employment, helping people or dealing with the issues. They want to get power back. It has really been burning them these past couple of years that they lost that vote. They did not know how to count. What they really cannot stand is that we are over here making decisions for the Canadian people and they think they should be here. When it really comes down to it, that is what they are talking about.

I do not think the Canadian people are really listening to that message because they want something different these days. They want Governments to talk together. They want them to work as partners. They want Members of the Opposition to present constructive criticism and ideas, not simply to call out: Oh, God, if only it was us, wouldn't things be better?

Let me just address that for a moment because the Hon. Member for Rosedale indicated we have had this period of years in which nothing was done and that is why we are in this terrible situation. When he was talking about some of the things that were done during those past ten or 12 years, I thought of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), who preceded me as Minister of Manpower and Immigration and brought in major changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971, which is now providing the kind of protection for over a million Canadians that they need, providing a foundation of income security for millions of Canadians. The Hon. Member for Rosedale conveniently forgot that particular accomplishment. He also seemed to conveniently forget the major number of investments that we brought in with the Regional Expansion Program to ensure that in Quebec, the Maritimes, northern Canada and parts of the northern and western Provinces, there would be special programs to deal with regional disparities.

He forgot most of all, Mr. Speaker, that it was this Liberal Government, back in the early 1970s, that first introduced the idea of direct employment programs to provide bridging assistance during times of economic downturn. What Government was it that totally disbanded all the direct employment programs when they came into power? Think what would have happened in these times of trouble if we had followed the Tory way. There should not have been direct employment jobs offered to any Canadian anywhere in this country during these times because they got rid of every one of those programs when they came into power.

I think we can say that we were putting in place the kinds of programs that would ensure a security and foundation of support to Canadians at a time when the economic cycle took a downturn. We are proud of those accomplishments and we are prepared to build on them and to improve upon them as we face this very severe recession. That is what we are working on now. And when I read this resolution from the Hon. Member for Rosedale, I am surprised and disappointed that he has fallen prey to that particular distemper that somewhat affects Members of his Party, the total extravagance of saying that the Government is pursuing oppressive and inhumane treatment of Canadians.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Rosedale is generally a moderate man, but I think he has kind of gotten himself wound up into this sort of psychology of ambition where he is saying: If we can only get back into those benches. It is that peevishness and pettiness that so fuels their fury that they cannot be here, and he has forgotten to provide a balanced approach to this program. In particular, I had a feeling of déjà vu in sitting here listening to the Hon. Member saying: Why do we not get a new training program? He read to me from that very good report produced by Parliament two years ago which said we should have new legislation. Well, I scratched my head and said we had just passed a new Bill, that I had just finished signing an agreement with the Province of Ontario for $790 million for a new training program to put in place the very training centres he is talking about. We are now considering the proposals, we have the new training programs in place, and we have signed a $750 million program with Quebec and a $90 million program with B.C. I am saying, where has the Hon. Member for Rosedale been all summer? Has he been in a cocoon, a time warp, a time machine? He has been in France boning up on his leadership French. I do not know what he has been doing, but he sure as heck has not been reading the papers. If he had been, he would know that the very things he was asking for we have been doing. So I guess what we should really do, Mr. Speaker, before we get going is to go through remedial training for the Hon. Member and other Members of the Opposition to bring them up to date on what is going on.

It is simply a matter of information, Mr. Speaker. I think that if we are to have a serious debate in this House, then the starting point should be working at the facts, not going back and repeating history and old reports. We should go to what is present, relevant and new, and looking at what we are trying to do, and see how Members of the Opposition can work with us in their own constituencies to make these programs work. I think the primary ambition of a Member of Parliament these days is to say that we have in place a number of initiatives and we can be working with our provincial and local governments and volunteer agencies to help bring those programs into play.

I was very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I think he described, in an honest and very genuine way, the difficulties faced by people in the Kamloops area. He knows that last summer we in fact allocated over $500,000 to his riding to begin a job-creation program, and have given more support under the special response fund. We recognize, as he does, the serious difficulties faced by the people of his community, and we will work with him and with people in the municipalities of that area to provide assistance. We will do that just as we have worked in the area of southwestern Ontario to provide $1 million for the tobacco workers faced with a freeze-out this summer. We put in special response funds under the Canada Community Development Project to make that kind of program available. We are working with the City of Toronto to develop a Youth Employment Program. This summer we initiated programs to provide a wage subsidy to employers and a special stream of Outreach Programs for young people to provide a youth job core.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of those kinds of programs working out in the field. I appeal to Members of the Opposition to use their good offices and their resources to help us put those programs into place. We believe the kind of initiatives we are taking are critically important and require the full co-operation of all partners in this society. We cannot do it by ourselves. We realize that we need to work in very close consultation and harmony with all Canadians. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was appealing for that sense of co-operation, trying to draw out the best in Canadians at a difficult time by saying: How do we find the means of working together; how do we find those common elements to face a common crisis? That is the offer we are putting on the table. Those are the kinds of initiatives that we want the people to join in with us so that we can find the answers to unemployment.

In terms of initiatives, Mr. Speaker, let me talk for a moment about the NEED Program we brought forward. As I said, the Leader of the Opposition was absolutely falling all over himself in his haste to get out and condemn the program before we even had a chance to put it forward for public discussion and debate, giving us a week to discuss it with the Provinces. Let me tell you what we are trying to do. We realize that there is a serious issue concerning those who will run out of unemployment insurance benefits.

This Government, in an effort to provide an honest debate, published a report describing what the impact of that situation will be, a report which would provide information to other levels of Government so that they can examine the problem. We have now followed up with a $500 million program which will provide the opportunity for those people to go to work. We looked at all the alternatives and realized that to extend unemployment insurance even for a ten-week period would have added perhaps $2 billion or $3 billion of additional costs to the unemployment insurance fund, which is already heavily drawn upon. So we felt the best alternative would be to put a work program in place which could be delivered under the auspices of federal agencies, Departments and Crown corporations, but also through the Provinces, municipalities and the private sector.

We are also presently putting in place a structure in each of the regions which will enable us to involve those other partners in helping to make decisions on that program so we can have the work projects implemented where they are most needed. We are putting that program in place so that we can provide over the next 18 months a continual sequence of good productive work which will help the community, whether restoring older homes, helping to repair and maintain streets and sewers, working in the mines to develop, perhaps, new programs on environmental control, or working with the forestry companies. We have a number of those kinds of programs and discussions going on at the present moment. So that during this downturn in the economy we can put people back to work, valuable and productive work, so as to enhance the over-all capacity of this country for when the economy begins to recover and turn around.

That is our ambition and that is what we are working on. It would be a great help to us to have the full involvement of Members of this House in planning projects, working with people at the local level to bring ideas forward and develop the kind of work activity which will provide opportunities for those people who have exhausted their benefits. That is what we are trying to achieve through the NEED Program. What is particularly important, Mr. Speaker, is that we believe, through the consultation and discussions we are holding over this week, that we will be able to expand the program beyond its original $500 million because we have already received indications from all the provinces I have visited that they are prepared to share in the program and put money into it so that we can expand and broaden its range. That, I think, demonstrates that the approach we have taken is the best. Rather than being like the Leader of the Opposition, sort of rushing to the barricades to go into the diatribe that he always engages in, we are prepared to work in a constructive and positive way with other levels of Government. It is about time we ended that particular practice in this House because it serves no purpose at all.

Let me for just a moment address myself to some of the broader comments made concerning the over-all issue of economic development, Mr. Speaker. Both the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap and the Hon. Member for Rosedale said that we must also put in place the firm foundations of a long-term recovery. That is true, Mr. Speaker, we must.

I think one of the truths revealed to us by this recession is how we must reform our institutions and restructure our economy so that we do not repeat this kind of recession. Then we can address the new world of work of the future and the kind of new, competitive international environment we will be in. We believe we are doing that, and we have started in the June budget and in this latest economic statement to put in place some of those changes. Look, for example, at the major investment this Government is now making in the total reformation of the western transportation and rail system. We put $3.2 billion aside in June, an additional $400 million in this economic statement, to try and bring the railways to a point where they will start that major expansion which would have created something like 350,000 person-years of work over this decade. That is work right across Canada.

Perhaps Members of the House would be interested in knowing that I was in Nova Scotia this morning talking to provincial Government officials and private individuals, and one of the first questions they asked was how quickly we can get that railway expansion underway so that the Sydney steel mill, which produces rails for CNR, can bring its work force up to a higher level. The same question can be asked in London and Toronto and Montreal, in towns in Quebec and Ontario, because they will also benefit from that major rail expansion. We are talking about a $17 billion capital investment program that will create jobs in every single region of the country. We have always relied upon transportation as one of the fundamental development instruments in Canada. Whether it was the CPR one hundred odd years ago, the St. Lawrence Seaway or the Trans-Canada Highway, transportation has been on the leading edge of economic development.

I would appeal to Members of the NDP, who say they are anxious to create work, to forget their opposition, to lay down their swords of battle on this issue and join us so we can get that railway system underway, get that reform in place, get that economic expansion moving and create jobs for hundreds of thousands of Canadians over the years. If they want a program of economic expansion, we have laid it out very clearly and we would like to have their co-operation and support for it. Up to this point we have had nothing but obstruction and opposition from them.

We are asking Canadians to change their tune. If Members of the Opposition can ask us to consider their proposals, then in all fairness I should like to ask them to change theirs and join us in this enterprise. It has enormous potential for workers in British Columbia and every other Province. I would ask the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap to take that message back to his caucus as soon as possible, because this is an important initiative.

We have not stopped there, Mr. Speaker. We hear talk about an industrial strategy and I think that is fair comment. This country does need an industrial strategy and we are working on it.

There has been a great deal of comment about the way in which the National Energy Program has worked to scare capital out of the country. I suggest to Hon. Members of the Opposition, particularly the Hon. Member for Rosedale, that he read the new book by the business editor of The Toronto Star, Mr. Crane, called "Controlling Interest". It is a very interesting study of the NEP. In the book he pointed out that because of the dominance of the multinationals in the energy field, something like $4 billion in capital left the country between 1979 and 1981. It did not come in but left the country because, as prices increased and windfall profits were gained, Canadians did not have the ability to recapture those windfalls and reinvest them in this country. The National Energy Program was directed specifically at the issue of ensuring that as we created higher windfalls through increased energy prices, these sums would be captured for re-investment in this country.

The National Energy Program is now working that way. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) reported, there are strong signs of recovery in the gas fields, in the offshore of the Atlantic Provinces and in the oil fields of the west. The recovery is beginning to take place. The National Energy Program is one of the building blocks in the industrial strategy.

So is the National Training Program, Mr. Speaker. It is now in place and the Hon. Members of the Opposition know this. They know that agreements are being signed, re-training facilities are being planned and new training positions are being opened. That is also part of the way we must restructure our workplace in order to get workers with a higher degree of skills. We cannot have high technology or get into the competitive world of new industry if Canadians do not have the aptitude and ability. The thesis of the National Training Program is to shift the training system from low skill jobs to high skill jobs; to provide new facilities and new equipment across Canada for training in new high tech areas; to provide a system of planning and forecasting so that on an annual basis we can identify where new jobs will be and how we can begin to allocate and rationalize our training system to meet those new job demands. We are putting in place the foundation for the new economy that we want to build, and that, too, is part of the industrial strategy.

In the same way, Mr. Speaker, we have made an investment in the area of electronics and aerospace and are using that particular leading edge of the economy to provide for the application of microchip technology manufacturing areas. We have put $450 million into the whole space development area.

One of the great new products that the country has the opportunity to develop is the videotech machine, the Telidon machine. The National Research Council of Canada, funded by the federal Government, developed Telidon which is providing major new oportunities with high tech jobs right across the country. We have established six microtech centres in six capitals across the country so that we can apply the microchip technology to the manufacturing basis of each of those regions.

In Winnipeg, which has traditionally been the centre of the garment trade, a partnership has been formed between a federal Department, a university and the garment industry totally to modernize the industry so that it may compete internationally. A productivity gain of 30 or 40 per cent is expected. That was achieved through the investment of federal funds to help the industry modernize and at the same time develop the technology suited to it.

Those are decisions that have been taken over the past two years to help the industry grow. The same thing can be seen in the areas of mining, forestry and manufacturing. We recognize that if we are going to deal in a tough world of highly competitive nations where everyone is trying to get a new market, then we must have an economic development program in place. The Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) is working on that kind of strategy in a number of industrial areas. He is doing exactly what the Hon. Member for Rosedale asked for, and that is meeting with separate sectors. All last year, this summer and fall we have been meeting with those same people and coming to the same realizations.

One of the other major ways in which we can create a basis for a new economy is to ensure that workers affected by change are able to adjust and to find alternative forms of employment. Over the past two years we have introduced the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program. This is a $450 million program which is now operating in 13 communities. It provides industrial grants to towns and communities where the traditional industries are on the downturn, so that these towns and communities can attract new companies. At the same time it provides such things as a mobility program, a portable wage subsidy, or a retraining program so that workers can adapt to the new industry. We are not bringing this about through some new form of Government intervention or arbitrariness, but are working with the local government, industry and unionists to help people adjust to the Program.

As well, we introduced the work-sharing program. The Hon. Member for Rosedale says that we are inhumane and oppressive. I would ask him to talk to the 175,000 workers presently engaged in that program to learn what they feel about it. In many cases they realize it has saved their jobs, kept plants operating and has kept their skills active for the long term.

It disturbs me that at times there are people in the country who try to oppose these things. During the weekend I was in my riding where I met a number of people who said that the local union representatives will not allow their locals to take votes on work sharing because they do not want to help the federal Government program. They do not want to allow their workers the democratic right to vote on a program that would save their jobs. Instead, they want to run to Mr. McDermott and wave banners saying "Oppose everything the Feds do".

I would say to the New Democratic Party that if they want to help the country in its time of trial, they should talk to the union leaders and tell them that they do not have to like the program but they should let their workers at least vote on it and not stand in the way.

Mr. Murphy: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think we have a high state of agitation over in the corner. The fact of the matter is—

Mr. Murphy: It's a lie.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: —we are going to have to develop a new spirit of co-operation in this country. We are going to have to encourage union leaders who stand in the way of work sharing, business people who stand in the way of the restraint program and Members of the Opposition who stand in the way of everything, to come on board so that we can find the answers we need in these difficult times. As we open up this debate about what we should be doing to create more jobs and what we can do to help adjust the problems of unemployment, I hope these people will realize that what is needed most in the country is a new spirit in this Parliament that tries to develop proposals and programs through co-operation, not opposition based upon a naked ambition to regain power. Rather we should be saying that we are all in this together and should work together for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has 35 seconds left, I wonder whether he would accept a question.

He indicated that the National Energy Program was brought in to try to recover for Canada some of the windfall profits which the foreign energy industry was taking out of the country between 1979 and 1982. Is it not true that energy prices are regulated by Government agencies and that, therefore, the profit margins they receive are directly approved by those agencies? If the Government was aware that there were windfall profits which should not really be taken out of Canada, why did it not introduce a windfall profits tax?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, time does not allow a full description of the National Energy Program, but he will realize that because of that Program we have made substantial strides forward in the last two years in Canadianizing the industry and ensuring that the capital which is being generated by the National Energy Program and by price increases is remaining in Canada and being invested by Canadians for their future energy needs.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few, strictly objective, comments on today's debate, during which the Official Opposition has an opportunity to censure the government for the present economic situation. I made a few notes . . . I must say the minister's speech has upset me a bit, and I think I should remind the minister that he is a member of the government that has been leading this country for fifteen years.

From the outset, the minister insisted on reminding opposition members that they are more or less obliged to co-operate in order to correct the prevailing situation. I have given very serious thought to this major objective, to the need for greater co-operation among all groups, starting with the opposition parties in the House of Commons. This is an ideal cherished by the minister, and I must congratulate him for his belief that we need co-operation to get the country out of the mess it is in. In fact, the minister is a member of that very same government which put the country in its present disastrous situation.

Normally, I would expect the minister to ask us not to remind Canadians that our present problems are not the government's fault. The minister said: "We must not look to the past but to the future". He confirmed what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on television last week, when in his three fireside chats he stated that the country was bankrupt and that it was divided. The minister acknowledges in his document that the country is divided and that it is in a difficult situation as far as the economy is concerned. The Prime Minister stated again that, and I am putting words in his mouth, all of a sudden, to his great surprise, there were more than 1,500,000 people unemployed in Canada. The minister is aware of this. He mentioned his efforts, and I am not doubting his efforts regarding present programs. He spoke at length about training programs. Of course they are useful, and work-sharing programs are necessary, and we could also mention his policy for workers taking early retirement in certain industrial sectors, something that is also necessary in our present situation. But the minister also knows, or he ought to know, that these programs reflect the fact that the government's policies have been inadequate, and that the government has had to introduce the programs because of its shortsightedness, so that today, the minister is making a superhuman effort to help people who no longer have jobs. So now the government is going to put them on various programs. I am not condemning the minister for suggesting programs today, but what we do condemn, Mr. Speaker, is the absence of adequate measures during the last fifteen years. I know the minister did not have the duties he has now, but in any case, that has put Canada in its present situation. If the minister is appalled at this motion of censure, I think there are members on both sides of the House who realize that the country is in its present state because the same government that has been running the country all these years, with the exception of a few months or perhaps weeks, that same government put the country in its present situation. So before we discuss co-operation, there must be trust, and may I ask the minister and all the ministers in this government and all government members how anyone can mention the words trust or co-operation when we know perfectly well that Canadians as a whole have lost confidence in this government? When I see the Prime Minister of Canada speaking to the Canadian nation and trying to put the blame on this country, saying that Canadians have lost confidence in themselves, that is just not true, Mr. Speaker. The prime minister made a grave mistake. He forgot to make an act of contrition first, and to acknowledge that his government put Canada where it is now, and that if we are now having problems the blame must lie somewhere. Of course, Mr. Speaker, they will say that the United States has a major impact on our economy, and that the world situation does not help matters either. We realize that and we also realize that we are going through a difficult period, but we are also convinced that the poor policy choices made by the government are largely responsible for the situation prevailing today. It is as easy as that, Mr. Speaker.

I am not going to blame the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) today for programs he has been trying to design for two years and for the programs he suggested to the provinces, certainly not. We are just as aware of the problems facing Canadians today, and we realize something must be done. Last week, the Minister of Finance proposed injecting $1 billion and we have no objections. On the contrary, we are very happy we succeeded in forcing the Minister of Finance and the government to take action. But why did they wait for so many years to respond and make the policy choices that were needed? I also remember the prime minister said the other night on television that we had to transcend partisanship and that the time had come to discuss matters very objectively. The minister said a while ago that our arguments reflected a desire to get back into power. I can inform the minister that there are many Canadians, according to the polls and not the polls we ordered, who would like to see the government change hands and who in any case would like a change. These were not our polls, but nevertheless, it seems that Canadians feel like a change, in view of the present situation. And on the subject of partisanship which should not be allowed to exist, perhaps the government of which I was a member should have been given a chance to apply its policy choices and its economic policies. Although we did not get a chance to do so, I am sure we would have managed to get through the recession with far fewer problems than is presently the case, and would have done so on the basis of our policy choices with respect to housing and energy, to name only a few areas. However, the government's refusal to accept our proposals has cost Canadians thousands and thousands of jobs. As far as the housing sector is concerned, if the government had really wanted to help homeowners and home buyers, we would have been able to save thousands of jobs in the housing industry alone. I think that looking at it objectively, the Minister of Employment and Immigration will have to admit this is true. The minister and the government are now coming back with a proposal to stimulate the housing industry, but once more, it is too late. We are not going to turn down this $3,000 grant, but we are convinced it will not have the desired effect, and it is unfortunate, that the situation has been allowed to go from bad to worse, and that all those workers who were earning a living have now joined the ranks of the unemployed.

A moment ago the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) spoke about the unfortunate lack of funds for research and development, and we are all convinced, as are members opposite, that more could have been done in that area so as to avoid the situation in which we now find ourselves. Obviously, more emphasis should have been put on research and development and the necessary expenditures should have been made. At the same time, a very generous and much needed assistance could have provided for industries such as footwear, textiles, furniture and a host of others. So it is up to the minister again today to prove to us that he did indeed launch new programs to help the unemployed. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there is not a shred of evidence that those programs will ensure the creation of permanent jobs, not a shred. We know that those measures will make it possible for unemployment insurance claimants who have exhausted their benefits and now face the prospect of applying for welfare to get some money from the federal government to pull through hard times when the outlook for early economic revival remains bleak.

We have nothing against new programs, but we simply cannot let the government get off scot free, having failed as it did to show greater interest in research and development, as any responsible government would have done, so as to steer clear of the disastrous predicament we are in today. Things have gone from bad to worse, particularly in the last two years. Undoubtedly, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has gone all out to minimize the dire consequences of the lack of appropriate policies in the last 15 years. I will not hold the Minister of Employment and Immigration responsible for what happened in the past 15 years, not in any way. But, Mr. Speaker, this government must be raked over the coals for the course it has given our economy in the last five years.

We are fully aware of the opinions held by the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada, we know full well how much he has influenced the policies advocated by his government and we can only conclude that he is primarily responsible for that monumental failure. Nor can we forget either that the Prime Minister has often taken an aggressive stance towards his provincial counterparts. Today, he is seeking co-operation with the provincial premiers, although this government has a long history of confrontation in its dealings not only with Quebec, but several other provinces as well. Today, it expresses its eagerness to achieve such co-operation with the provinces and with private industry which was driven out of a particular area. It is the same minister who is beseeching the private sector. But confidence is something which must be deserved. So, the question Canadians must answer is this: Does this government still deserve our trust? Thanks to this allotted day, we have the opportunity to tell some Hon. Members and ministers what Canadians feel and think.

We sincerely regret the government's lack of adequate measures and contend that this government no longer deserves our trust because of its failure in specific areas. What matters, of course, is the confirmation by the Prime Minister of Canada that this country is divided, on the brink of bankruptcy, and his government unable to cope with the current situation. And if the Right Hon. Prime Minister wanted credibility when he talked of the challenge the Canadian nation must face, it should be pointed out that it is certainly not the first time this Prime Minister, speaking on behalf of his government, has appeared on the CBC network. I clearly remember some remarks he has made once on the network about wage and price controls: he asked Canadians to reject those controls which as it turned out divided the country six months later, but he betrayed Canadians by claiming as his own the very policy he had previously condemned. And what about the number of times the Right Hon. Prime Minister, on behalf of his government, made Canadians dream of his mega-projects! We are aware of the government's position. We know that it was not in keeping with the remarks the Right Hon. Prime Minister had directed at that time to the Canadian nation.

Under these circumstances, we have the opportunity today to remind this government that it cannot solely rely on the confidence or co-operation of Canadians when it has been so unco-operative for the past 15 years. Of course, Mr. Speaker, such a confidence has to be deserved. Canada's financial situation seriously concerns many Canadians in my province as in others and I for one represent a province which is also experiencing some difficulties of its own and has surely reached its quota of unemployed as you know, Mr. Speaker, as well as the other members. Quebec like the other provinces, Mr. Speaker, needs the co-operation of the federal government and this has not been much in evidence in the past few months. Of course people may say that the Quebec government is not willing to co-operate but last week I thought it necessary to address, the following question to the Minister of Finance: Is this government ready to co-operate any further with all the provinces including Quebec? Of course, I did not expect anything else than a positive answer, but they should be able to prove it. The Minister of Employment and Immigration now says that he is for consultation, but we really have serious misgivings. For instance, if the programs are not ready at this time, it is easy to speak about consultation. Moreover, when the Prime Minister of Canada says on television that he has decided to consult the population, this is not true; he has decided to speak to the people, but consultation does not take place on television. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we understandably have many reasons to be seriously concerned about of the obvious incompetence of this government in all sectors and all areas. Since this government was in a much better position 16 years ago, how could we not tell Canadians that we seriously question their goodwill and their ability? The results prove that this government is unable to govern the country. I believe that we must continue to attack and to blame this government for the present situation.

When the Prime Minister cried on the shoulder of the fisherman and the farmer, Mr. Speaker—and I believe that this was the most appropriate message given in this House today—I took the liberty of saying that this was close to imposture. This word is quite serious, Mr. Speaker, and I want to explain. The Prime Minister cried on the shoulder of the fisherman or the farmer on television, but only two years ago, he was willing to make commercials himself to tell the fisherman that with the 18 cents increase on gasoline proposed by the Conservatives, he would not be able to go where the fishes are and that with these 18 cents, the farmers would not be able to complete their first furrow. If this is not a complete fraud, Mr. Speaker, in view of what happened later on, the fishermen and the farmers certainly know what to think about the 18 cents increase today! When the Prime Minister of Canada complains about the situation in the lumber industry, knowing full well that his own government refused to support our tax credit for homeowners to promote the recovery of the building industry, if this is not hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what it is! Those are the people who supported the proposals of the government. And now we see what has happened in this country. Of course, there will be a non-confidence vote this evening on the failure of this government to meet our expectations and to achieve the objectives set by the Prime Minister of Canada, starting with a just society and including the great dream of Mirabel for 100,000 jobs, the Cacouna project, which was supposed to promote tremendous development in this eastern Quebec area. All this is only in Quebec, but in how many other areas has this government failed to achieve its objectives, starting with its great promise of a special place for Quebec within the constitutional reform, when we know full well that Quebec has been left high and dry and that the Prime Minister said last week that this would be remedied later on.

Mr. Speaker, is that the kind of commitment which will convince Canadians that this government has been fair with them? No! This government cannot today tell Canadians to forget it all and to please co-operate because it intends to do better from now on. How can we co-operate with a government which has been so inefficient? How can we serve the interests of our country and co-operate with a government that is unable to manage our affairs as we deserve it? It is incredible, Mr. Speaker, when they dare say: Forget about the past. However, they are not frank enough to be sorry and recognize that they were mistaken when they made decisions which gave rise to the present problems.

Such being the case, Mr. Speaker, I would like to appeal to the members who acknowledge that fact and who are now embarrassed in their constituency not only in Quebec but throughout the country when they realize that the present situation is due to this government which was unable in a trying period to take the necessary remedial measures to pull through this crisis as well as possible. No, conditions have worsened because of their wrong decisions. Under the circumstances would these members be honest enough to refuse this evening to support a government which has done so much harm and continues to inflict so much pain to Canadians?

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, because the time allotted to me has expired, I hope that the Prime Minister of Canada who speaks of challenges will have enough courage and honesty to take up the challenge by asking for a renewal of his mandate and calling an election. If his 6 and 5 per cent program and his behaviour deserve the support and confidence of Canadians, he should take the risk and ask the population to renew his mandate to govern this country. If he obtains a positive answer, I will respect the decision of the Canadian people. However, at present, the Prime Minister does not dare ask for a mandate or call an election. This is why it is impossible for us to extend the confidence which he requested because in our opinion and in that of millions of Canadians, he does no longer deserve it and this will serve him right.

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in the debate this afternoon, a debate being held at a troubled time in the life of all Canadians, at a time when our economic situation is an extremely difficult one. I thought we would be hearing some concrete suggestions from our colleagues opposite. I listened carefully to the Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and took quite a few notes, because the Hon. Member raised some good points. To summarize his speech, the Hon. Member attributed our recession and all our ills to a lack of productivity—and there I agree—poor administration, not enough funding for research and development, not enough consultation and finally, a lack of confidence on the part of Canadians in their government. Those were the five main points, I believe, that were raised by the Member for Rosedale. Then our friends from the New Democratic Party took the usual interventionist line on correcting the situation. The Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), and I am sorry to see him leave, told us in a lengthy speech that everything the government has been doing for the past fifteen years was wrong. For fifteen years, this government and our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Member for Mount Royal, have succeeded only in deceiving Canadians and leading them down the road to unemployment, welfare and a situation where we have lost all confidence in the future. The Member for Joliette wound up his speech with examples such as the 18 cent excise tax proposed by the Progressive Conservatives, and since I saw him the other day on a program where a friend, Marcel Masse, was one of the participants, I see that all these statements are part of a well-orchestrated plan. They are comparing the 18 cent tax to the 80 cent tax, to show Canadians how much money they would have saved by re-electing the Progressive Conservatives. They mention a housing tax credit which in 1979, when it was proposed, would have cost more than $3 billion, claiming that if they had been re-elected they would have given us that tax credit.

I should not forget what was said by other opposition Members, and especially those who are squawking about the extent of the deficit. They are saying that less than a year ago we were projecting a deficit of $10 billion and less than a year after the November 1981 projection, we now have to live with a deficit of $23 to $24 billion. At this point, it is hard to make sense out of the words of the Member for Joliette who proposed a $3 billion tax credit and at the same time wanted to see this government reduce the deficit. It is not the first time the Official Opposition has been inconsistent.

I would like to go back to what was said by the Member for Rosedale and I must say I found it very interesting. This talk about productivity is true. Mrs. Sylvia Ostry of the OECD said only this morning that Canada had the worst productivity performance of all industrialized countries. She explained that this was due to the fact that since 1972, wages in Canada had increased 15 per cent, compared with other countries, and I think that is a problem to which all Members of this House, the provincial governments, the unions and the private sector, should address themselves immediately. The Member for Rosedale went on to discuss research and development. Mr. Speaker, there is no Member in this House more aware than the Member for Verchères that here in Canada we do not invest enough in research and development. However, there is a problem and a reality we must face, namely that as far as research and development are concerned, the percentage invested by all government levels in Canada compares advantageously with that invested by the governments of the Common Market or elsewhere. The weak spot, however, and at this point I would like some suggestions from the Member for Rosedale, is the investments made by the private sector. Less than 40 per cent of funds invested in research and development in Canada are provided by the private sector, while in other countries, this is more or less the share financed by governments and the rest is financed by the private sector.

What's that? Never mind. I have just come back from a tour during which I consulted experts throughout the world and I am awaiting suggestions from well-meaning members opposite as to what kind of tax system, what environment, what incentive should be provided in order to enable the private sector, that essential partner, to make a larger contribution to research and development. Indeed, this is the only hope for Canada as well for all other industrialized countries. We have no other option. I am aware, like the hon. member for Rosedale, that if we do not do our utmost, we shall be relegated to the position of drawers of water of de-industrialized and even developing countries, because at the time when we were able to export our natural resources, no other developing country could equal us in this regard, but this is no longer true today. Our minerals can be bought now from other developing countries at a lesser cost than from Canada. Thus, it is true that we shall have to make an effort and it is all the more urgent for us to do so as from now on, technological change will take place within the next decade. First, there was the agrarian era, then the industrial era, developments were taking place over hundreds of years, but today, one must think in terms of ten or even five years ahead, lest one is left behind and is never able to catch up with the leaders.

However, we Canadians must bear in mind the fact that our market is limited to 23 million people and, although we are a potentially wealthy nation, we will have to develop closer ties with other countries. We will have to join forces with other countries such as ours, or with other groups such as the European Economic Community or the United States. We will have to co-operate with other nations whose concerns and needs are the same as ours. In that respect, I commend my colleague from Rosedale. I was pleased to hear him devote a major part of his speech this afternoon to this question which is of great concern to me. As for the hon. member for Joliette, who was holding the Prime Minister responsible for every evil, I would remind him gently that since 1974 I have made repeated efforts to convince the federal government to invest more funds in research and development in Quebec. I proudly point out that since 1974 this government has increased the funds allocated to Quebec for the aerospace industry through defence programs, for industrial and commercial programs, and for other creative endeavours. And I think that the cherry on the cake, as we say, was of course the decision made by the federal government, through the National Research Council of Canada, to set up in Quebec an Industrial Materials Research Institute. I hope that is the first of a series of investments in Quebec. I would remind my colleague from Joliette that during the nine months his party was in office we very nearly had a rational decision altered for political considerations in that the Industrial Materials Research Institute came close to being moved to a less favourable riding from an environmental point of view. We had to seek the full support of Quebec's scientific community to make them uphold the rational judgment which led to the original decision. Fortunately, it will now be possible to establish in Quebec, in co-operation with IREQ and the Industrial Materials Research Institute, a significant scientific research foundation in which, I hope, the private sector will eventually participate.

The other issue raised by our friends opposite is that our failure to consult has led to the complete disappearance of the climate of confidence in Canada. And I could hear the member for Joliette tell us again that he is not blaming the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), he probably tried to achieve a few things in the past two years, but to think and talk of consultation is still a fairly new notion in this country. I wonder where the member for Joliette was in 1977-78. Once again, I am coming back to the process of consultation in terms of productivity. Faced with technological changes, and global economic developments and confronted with the realities of our economic and trade situation the government, as early as 1977-78, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, started what I believe to be the best possible round of consultations ever. The government invited representatives from 22 major industries to a round table in order to determine which measures should be taken with a view to helping sectors cope with the future. Twenty-two industries took part in these consultations including representatives from the private sector, unions, provincial and federal governments. Those 22 groups, met over a period of more than a year after which they submitted their recommendations. Thereafter, a 23rd work group was set up for the exclusive study of the issue of productivity in all areas. It was, in a way, an overall review of all the specific studies which had been undertaken. So, if this is not consultation, I wonder to what length the federal government should be going for the hon. member for Joliette to recognize that consultations did take place.

It is said that this trust has disappeared forever in our country. I am sorry but I do consult my constituents. Also, my caucus asked me to consult some specific groups during the summer recess and that is exactly what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the time and myself did. We consulted business organizations in every area of Quebec and found out that this trust is still there. Still there too is the private sector's determination—some of my colleagues visited labour groups—to work in co-operation with the federal government. We were told by the business community that the 5 and 6 program was an excellent idea and if anything that maybe it did not go far enough. The government could have talked about 3 and 4 per cent according to them. But one could feel that these people were determined to put their shoulder to the wheel because they believe in Canada's potential, they believe in our future and they are prepared to invest in it and to rise to the challenge that is facing us. For all these reasons, because we have the necessary drive and resources, the minister of Employment and Immigration has introduced specific programs to help us solve this crisis but we had something to build on. We already had a job creating scheme—I am referring to the community programs worth over $1.4 billion,—which has been in place for several years, but I must say, without partisanship, that one of the first steps which the Progressive Conservative Party had in mind when it came to power was to axe these programs. And we are told today that we do not intervene enough; yet the reason we defeated the Conservative government was that we felt this measure and others did not meet the aspirations of Canadians. Moreover, because of the current crisis, we have just added $1.1 billion to the $1.4 billion, under a sort of emergency budget, including $200 million earmarked directly for the housing industry, an industry which I know very well, and which will continue to provide $3,000 to home-buyers. In my constituency, this program has convinced municipalities to grant tax breaks at the municipal level, and some contractors are already saying: Bernard, because of the reduction in interest rates over the past few months, this federal program has convinced the other two levels of government to do likewise, so that new house starts are increasing. That is an industry we have helped.

In order to help not just the West, but the whole of Canada, we have added $400 million to what we already had allocated to a major CNR capital investment program. I had a conversation recently with Jack Horner, a good friend of several Hon. Members, about the capital investment plans of the CNR out West. They used to laugh at us whenever Prime Minister Trudeau referred to the possible construction of double railway lines in Western Canada. I must say that a number of Progressive Conservative Party Members . . . Because of my duties as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I used to accompany the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, and people would laugh at this idea, although this project would meet the needs of the Prairies, a most productive area indeed. Under this project, the CNR will invest billions of dollars in Western Canada to double the capacity of our railway network, thereby creating jobs in every part of Canada, including my own province of Quebec. Because we are facing a crisis, we have also decided to inject $500 million into a special program which is now being negotiated with the provinces. Members of Parliament have been invited to make suggestions. Communities and municipalities will be asked to co-operate, and we hope that this injection of $500 million for immediate job creation will urge municipalities and other organizations to do their share so that we may finally be able to create not only the 60,000 jobs provided by these $500 million, but double that figure thanks to the essential co-operation of other sectors of our society.

I suggest to the Hon. Members that it is true that the constitutional debate may have somewhat shaken the process of consultation and this climate of co-operation in Canada. We were not always at our best. However, in my opinion, to suggest that, in the last ten or fifteen years, the federal government, the Liberal government of Mr. Trudeau has done away with all consultation is nonsense. I say that a review of our achievements during the last fifteen years shows that without consultation, without a dialogue between the various parties involved, we could never have survived as a nation. Let us remember the situation that prevailed in 1968. As for those fifteen years under a Liberal government, let us look at the major events. Already in 1968, and even before, the then Minister of Justice was speaking about the omnibus bill. It was—

An Hon. Member: Your time has expired!

Mr. Loiselle: I want to finish. We had that bill, we passed the Official Languages Act which created shockwaves at the time and which is now beginning to be better accepted. We unfortunately had to face the October crisis, the oil crisis of 1973 and a period of high inflation, and, of course, we had to take strong action. We then had to adjust to reality with regard to energy; we had no choice, we had to, and even though I am not too much in favour of state corporations, we had to intervene and take position. We had the constitutional debate and we still have before us the reform of our institutions when a dialogue with and the participation of the provinces and other concerned groups will be necessary, and I believe that if we had been as nasty, if we had spoiled so drastically the climate favourable to dialogue and consultation, we could not look forward so positively to the debates which must now be held, after which we shall be able once more to tell the Canadian people that they are living in the best country in the world.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is very appropriate that I am making this, my maiden speech in the House, on the subject of unemployment because it is a matter of great concern to the people of Timiskaming. In many ways, Timiskaming is a microcosm of Canada and, as such, it shares many of the problems found elsewhere in this country, the most urgent one being unemployment.

The riding of Timiskaming extends some 350 miles from Lake Nipissing north along the Quebec border to James Bay. It varies in width from 35 miles at its narrowest point to 115 miles at its widest.

The economy within the 20,000 square mile area of northern Ontario is based on mining, forestry, agriculture and, to a lesser degree, tourism. The geography of the riding varies from the James Bay lowlands to the Canadian Shield to the Little Clay Belt agricultural area. It is an area of great natural beauty and is a hunter's and fisherman's paradise.

The 55,000 people in Timiskaming are of varied cultural backgrounds, reflecting the multicultural nature of our country. About 30 per cent are Francophones and there is also a large native population.

The communities in the riding vary in size, with the largest, Kirkland Lake, having a population of 12,500. Although our communities are scattered throughout such a vast area, the warmth and hospitality of the people is the same in all corners of the riding. The people of Timiskaming have retained the pioneering spirit that was responsible for the development of northern Ontario.

They are a hardworking, energetic and proud people, but like more than 1.4 million Canadians from coast to coast many of them now find themselves unemployed. I have said I believe Timiskaming is a mirror image of Canada and I think this was apparent during the recent byelection.

When the boundaries of the riding were expanded to the north and south in 1978, the people in Field and Verner in the south end and those in Moosonee and Moose Factory in the north end could not relate to the central part of the riding, but all that changed during the recent byelection. People from one end of the riding to the other realized that they did have common problems. They realized those problems are the same in communities across this country. The biggest problem of all is unemployment.

The failing economy and skyrocketing unemployment united the people of Timiskaming during the byelection. This is one case where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can rightfully claim to have promoted unity.

The people of Timiskaming elected me on October 12 to deliver a message to this Government. They are fed up with what is going on in this country and they want to see a change. The unemployment level in my riding is running at almost 17 per cent and there are no signs of improvement. Bankruptcies, shutdowns and business closures have become commonplace. All have been caused by the sorry state of our economy and each time the unemployment rolls swell a little more.

Just last week, 390 iron ore miners were laid off for the second time this year at the Adams Mine in Kirkland Lake. Earlier this year, 450 iron ore miners at the Sherman Mine in Temagami were laid off for 11 weeks. These miners are not being laid off because of any international surpluses. These iron ore miners are being forced to shut down because of the decreased domestic demand for steel due to the state of our economy. When people are not buying cars and manufactured goods, there is no demand for steel. When there is no demand for steel, there is no demand for iron ore.

For similar reasons, a particle board mill in Haileybury has cut back its staff by 25 workers from normal operating levels. The furniture manufacturers that are its major customers are in trouble. No one is buying new furniture these days, so they do not need much particle board. Unless the situation improves quickly, this mill may have to face the prospect of laying off more workers or introducing a reduced work week.

A diamond drilling outfit in Kirkland Lake has laid off 50 workers, more than half its work force. Even though this company operates throughout the country, there is just not enough exploration work to go around because of a lack of incentives, skyrocketing interest rates and shaky investor confidence in the economy. These are not isolated cases; I could stand here and cite examples all day long.

The saddest thing about the situation is that there is tremendous potential for development in Timiskaming if the economy were in a healthy condition. There is potential for the development of a commercial fishing industry and expanded transportation facilities in the Moosonee area.

There is potential for development of private tree nurseries in the Cochrane and Matheson areas, and manufacturing related to the resource base in Kirkland Lake, and a grain elevator and food processing facility in the Englehart, Earlton, and New Liskeard area. There is potential for the development of the tourism industry in Cobalt, Temagami and Martin River areas. There is potential for development of a wood product manufacturing facility in the Field and Verner area.

The future of these potential developments, however, is now even more in doubt with the demise of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. As pointed out in the Senate Committee on National Finance report on Government policy and regional development, there is no longer a Government Department that is solely responsible for the promotion of economic development in the least developed areas of the country. In northern Ontario, this is of great concern to us, but it is hard even to think about future development when times are as bad as they are today. Instead of developing our potential, we are forced to watch our existing industries and businesses suffer from the effects of our depressed economy. The unemployment figures in many communities in Timiskaming, as they have elsewhere in Canada, have almost doubled in the past year. Positive steps must be taken now to turn the economy around and get our people working again. Steps must be taken to encourage job-creating investment, to create a positive and open investment climate. Confidence in the economy of this country must be restored to create long-term employment opportunities. We need a comprehensive economic recovery plan now. We have seen little in the way of positive action on the unemployment problem from the Liberal Government.

The only thing this Government seems to come up with is a program that will allow a small portion of workers whose UIC claims have been exhausted to requalify for benefits. The news that 60,000 temporary jobs will be created does little to ease the worries of the 1.4 million Canadians who are out of work. This stop-gap make-work program is not the cure for the ills of unemployment that plague our country. It is like giving a band-aid to a man who has just cut off his arm. We must look beyond the statistics. These are not just numbers we are talking about; these are human beings, these are people with families and responsibilities and dreams. We cannot turn a cold shoulder to more than one million unemployed Canadians.

Canadians want to work. They want and need the security of a steady job. There are people out there who are on the point of giving up hope. They are desperate and they are losing confidence in themselves and in this country. Even those who are lucky enough to have a job are worried stiff. They wonder if they will be next to join the unemployment line. And it is not only individuals who are affected but entire communities as well. Every time there is another lay-off or shutdown or closure, the shock waves are felt throughout the community.

Small businesses that depended on that payroll are affected, and so are their employees and so are their families. In a small single-industry community, the news of a lay-off hits like a blow to the solar plexus. The quality of life in these communities is bound to suffer as a result of the social problems often associated with long-term unemployment. The social fabric of these communities can be destroyed.

We in northern Ontario are particularly worried about the plight of our young people. For many years our young people have been forced to move to cities in southern Ontario or western Canada to find employment. We have struggled to bring in the developments that would provide employment for them in the north. But now we are fighting against impossible odds. Unemployment amongst our young people is a major problem from coast to coast in this country. Young Canadians now in school are worried whether they will have a job when they graduate. Will they have a career and a secure future? Our young people have goals and ambitions. Will their dreams be shattered? Something must be done to give them the opportunity of having a bright and secure future.

The people of Timiskaming and Canada are a proud and hardworking people. They want to work and they want real jobs. They are tired of empty rhetoric and window dressing make-work programs. They want to see some solid action being taken to create long-term employment in this country. They are frustrated by the lack of opportunities. They are tired of inaction. They are depressed and concerned about their future and the future of their children. This Government has a moral responsibility to act immediately to provide a long-term solution to the unemployment problems that are bringing this country to its knees.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) on his maiden speech. I would like to welcome him to the House of Commons, not only because of the speech he has just given, a task with which he has acquitted himself well, but because he is a native Cape Bretoner. Although we are not of the same political persuasion I know, as a native Cape Bretoner, that regardless of what else he does, his dedication and iron will will lead him to be a force to be reckoned with in the times ahead.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: I would like at this point to discuss a few of the programs of the Federal Government, which I have to say would lead one to believe that, contrary to what the Opposition is saying, the Government in fact has done everything reasonably possible to reduce unemployment in this country, to ease the burden in these times and in effect to lead Canada out of this recession a stronger and more able country to deal with the opportunities that lie ahead. I have listened to previous speakers discuss permanent job opportunities. In a recession such as we find ourselves at the present time very few permanent job opportunities arise. The Government recognizes the unemployment situation and, I feel, it is doing everything it reasonably can to ease the situation. A program which this Government has supported strongly and has modified, fortified and increased in scope to deal with this particular problem, is the Canadian Community Development Program. This is not only a Program which deals with employment, those who are unemployed and who will be losing their unemployment insurance, but deals with communities such as in my own constituency, communities which have had economic difficulties for many years, communities which find their institutions in a position where they are unable to continue to exist because of the deterioration of their buildings and a reduction in membership due to aging and hard economic conditions. The Community Development Program allows those in institutions and organizations to restructure, redevelop, modify, modernize and repair to allow themselves to become viable organizations for the future, not only for the sake of the organization but for the sake of the community which depends on them. The CCDP is Canada's most successful job-creation program. The program will create over 48,000 jobs this fall and winter by supporting to a very large extent the economy of this country.

The Opposition has said on occasion that this program is only going to be a drop in the bucket for the jobs that we need. This is not the point. The point is to develop job opportunities to allow people to feed their families, and for the communities to maintain their tax base, and to continue until such time as the economy improves. This is an extremely valuable program. These jobs will not only benefit the people who are employed, but there are spin-off benefits for the community, in particular the business community, in these regions in which the grants are given. These projects may be funded for 52 weeks, with provision for an additional 26 weeks in some cases. They must be supportive of established national and regional priorities, contribute to, maintain and increase the number of jobs in an area, create jobs in areas for groups suffering from continued high unemployment, and support affirmative action principles. Applications are now being assessed for this third round of Canada Community Development Program grants.

The range of innovative and worth-while proposals submitted by community organizations is impressive. It shows, Mr. Speaker, that the communities are appreciative of this program. And to any group that would denounce this program I would say they have not discussed it with their constituents, which in some cases does not surprise me because the feedback they get is pretty putrid indeed.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, during which the direct job-creation activities have developed, it has become clear that the kinds of employment opportunities and activities presented by this program are virtually endless. Many of the activities are funded in areas of critical national importance. For example, during the second round of activity in this program, funding of $4 million was directed toward energy conservation and alternate energy source projects. Other projects, including construction of wharves, development of tourism and recreation facilities are also very important for our society. Almost $15 million was made available, in co-operation with Fisheries and Oceans, to support the development, expansion and repair of related facilities, including restoration of spawning grounds. Tourism development is another area to which CCDP projects have made a major contribution. More than $12.8 million was committed to such activities during the second round of this program. More than $8.1 million of CCDP funds were committed to housing construction and repair projects for natives and socially disadvantaged peoples. This is the only way, Mr. Speaker, that some of these native groups are able to complete the homes they have started, and without this program the housing problems experienced by our native peoples would be considerably greater.

More than $6 million under this program, during round two, were committed to activities that, in addition to being productive in themselves, were part of longer-term social and rural economic development plans or strategies which are going to aid the communities, when job opportunities return, to attract economic opportunities, not only those that exist at the present time but those that will be presenting themselves in the future. In order to strengthen this aspect of the program the Government announced in July a commitment to maintain job-creation funds over a long term in certain areas where unemployment has been excessive, even in normal times when the economy has recovered. The commitment to maintain the provision of funds over the long term in relation to historic levels is intended to provide a stable funding base for the program. With that kind of base, Mr. Speaker, organizations will be able to do long-range planning and integrate this program with the long-term activities which they are developing in their own right. This change is in line with recommendations of the task force report: "Labour Market Development in the 1980s." This report supports the need for a long-term approach to employment development in areas of high and chronic unemployment.

Another change in the program for the third round of activity is that the special response feature previously used to a limited extent has been substantially expanded. In the third round of CCDP that feature will fund approximately $41 million. It is being used to provide jobs in areas affected by significant employment loss. In such areas employment development officers together with community groups will develop as quickly as possible projects which will employ people on a short-term basis. The flexibility of the social response feature will make the program more responsive to the very different needs of the various regions of our country. It makes the program more effective and creates jobs for people in areas with the greatest need.

Another feature of extreme importance in the third round of this program is the increased emphasis on training and other long-term benefits to participants and to the communities in which they live. The federal contribution to project costs now includes an increased contribution to wages for workers with specific skills to provide training for other unemployed participants. A construction program, for example, with that change, is able to attract an experienced carpenter who can impart some of his skills to other project workers. It is expected that this provision will help to attract a new group of talented people to the CCDP projects and thus improve the employability of project participants.

The third round of activity in the Canada Community Development Program which is now under way has been funded in the amount of $270 million. Some of these people are on the job now, and the total will rise steadily over the winter months, so that the peak of employment under this program will occur in January, February and March when it is most needed.

The CCDP program, Mr. Speaker, has been a popular one. As I mentioned, we are now entering the third round and the program is larger than it has ever been before. In many cases it will enable communities to cope during these winter months with the economic problems which presently exist.

This program, however, is not alone. There are other programs which complement this program extremely well, which further indicates what this Government is doing to meet the economic downturn with which we are faced at the present time. One particular program I would like to mention is the ILAP Program which now has a total funding of $450 million, a program designated for areas of very high unemployment and in particular for industries which were operating there on a very sound basis but which are now experiencing difficulties and will either be closing or laying off substantial numbers of employees. This program allows the industry to expand so that it can hire additional people and modernize, and if it is not able to hire additional people, at least it can maintain the people it would have otherwise laid off. It provides interest-free funding for an extensive period of time and also gives incentives for research and development, and development engineering. However, if by some misfortune or difficulty in that particular region an industry must lay off some of its workers or close, then the workers concerned will receive benefits so that everything possible is done to assist the individual.

There is a mobility grant. There is an allowance for job training at a rate not comparable to any other program offered by the provinces, and there are subsidies and "topping up" for workers who can find jobs in other industries and who are between the ages of 45 and 54. A group which has all too often been targeted with economic and unemployment difficulties is people between ages 54 and 65, and this program offers a very valuable avenue of survival to them. Men and women who are laid off at that age find it extremely difficult, at the best of times, to obtain employment. This program offers a pre-retirement leave possibility to those between ages 54 and 65 who have been laid off. The pre-retirement leave plan continues until the worker reaches the age of 65 and becomes eligible for the old age pension.

It is not only in the realm of job creation of employment programs that the Government is doing so much to ease the economic conditions that face us at this time. It is also doing a great deal to encourage employment through job development, and through incentives to help those industries that are operating and coping with these difficult times to solidify their operations and expand them.

I should like to mention a few of these programs, Mr. Speaker. One is the Small Business Investment Grant Program which provides incentives to small businesses. In August, a $400 million allocation was announced, of which the Federal Government will pay up to 4 percentage points of interest costs for two years on borrowings by small business. The maximum and minimum loans available under the Program are $500,000 and $10,000 respectively. Financial institutions are in receipt of the applications, and the response has been very positive. The Small Business Bond is a measure which was proposed as a tax initiative designated to reduce the cost of borrowing for qualified small business corporations and unincorporated businesses, as well as farmers and fishermen who are experiencing financial difficulties at the present time. There are programs such as the Financial Incentives Act and others being offered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE.

The job-sharing program offered by the Department of Employment and Immigration has been successful and popular. Through this program people who would be laid off can be retained by arrangement with the company and their fellow workers. The original program had a ceiling of $90 million and was due to expire in May, 1982. Due to enormous response, it was extended until May, 1983, with an increased ceiling of $190 million for 1982 and $150 million for 1983. Under this program, workers agree to work from one to three fewer days per week, in order to prevent temporary lay-offs. They receive UI benefits for the days they do not work.

The Government has done everything it can be reasonably expected to do in these difficult times, to aid the country with the problems it faces. Not all avenues have been covered nor all possibilities dealt with, but certainly no one would advocate that the Government commit every cent it possibly can to programs at this time when we do not know what the situation will be.

There must be certain planning and a certain developmental aspect to what we are going to deal with in this Program. Funds will be allocated by different means in the future.

I think the record of the Government is very commendable, Mr. Speaker. To blame the economic conditions that exist at this time on the Government would be a fallacy. As the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) would say, because of international markets the situation in Sudbury is not something over which the Government has control. Nor is the problem in the pulp and paper industry.

In these times we need a reasonable approach and a reasonable frame of mind—even from the Opposition, if that is not asking too much.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), but the Hon. Member may prefer not to be interrupted by the dinner hour. If I receive a signal from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands to seek unanimous consent to call it six o'clock, I will do so.

Miss MacDonald: That is fine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): At eight o'clock the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands will be recognized.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) had just been given the floor.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity that we have had since the House resumed sitting to address the very critical issue of unemployment, the major issue in the country today. It is not only the first opportunity for the Opposition to put forward a motion demanding that the Government take more active steps to try to relieve the immediate and pressing problems of unemployment, but it was the first opportunity for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to be able to respond to this very critical issue. Thus, this afternoon we awaited his comments with some real expectation, but what we saw was a very bizarre performance.

I understand why he said that people do not want to be reminded over and over again of who is to blame for what and when and where. He is right. People do not really need to be reminded of who is to blame for this dreadful mess in which the country finds itself. They know who is to blame. It is the people sitting opposite on the front benches. In fact, I understand why the Minister was taking that position. What he was actually saying to us was, "Let us get on with the debate". That is what I expected him to do, to use his time constructively to address this question very seriously.

In the 30 minutes to which he is limited in the debate, I thought that he would speak to Parliament and indeed to the viewers, many of whom are sitting at home unemployed, and that he would tell them what he had in mind. What did he do with his 30 minutes? He used 14 of his precious minutes of allocated time—and I timed him—to attack, ridicule and blame the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). He reserved only 16 minutes of his time to deal with the critical issue of unemployment. That is all, only 16 minutes out of 30 did he bother to use to address the major issue, and that, I may say, is typical of the Minister. Half his time was spent searching for people to blame, which left him only half of the time to get on with the problems of unemployment, instead of devoting his full time to them.

This is really an emergency debate. It is an emergency because of the frightful spectre of unemployment which pervades every corner of the country, with 1.5 million people unemployed, people without jobs desperately looking for adequate income and really trying to restore their self-respect and self-dignity. It is an emergency because there are hundreds of thousands of other Canadians who live in fear lest they too be added to the unemployment rolls, lest their jobs should suddenly be terminated. These are the characteristics which we now see all around us—fear, anxiety and desperation. These permeate every corner of the country.

Canada is one of the greatest, one of the most fortunate nations on the earth, but today we are going through a trauma which is threatening the social and economic stability of the country. Canadians are becoming introspective. They are really questioning their basic values, doubting the very worth of the political institutions which represent them.

I say to myself, "Am I overstating the case when I make a statement like that?" I really do not think so. I certainly did not think that I was overstating the case when I picked up a recent edition of the Kingston Whig-Standard which had the headline, "Needy Kingston Teens Sleeping in Doorways, Officials Find". I want to tell the House what sparked that headline. It came about as a result of a meeting which was convened by myself and several other individuals because of the increasing number of hardship cases with which we come into contact again and again in our community. I was particularly concerned that this situation would worsen considerably in the months ahead as more and more people run out of unemployment insurance benefits. Then what would happen to them? Job opportunities are non-existent; welfare might or might not be available.

In raising these questions among ourselves we decided that the course to take was to put together a task force which would have two objectives. The first one would be to try to determine the extent of the difficulties that would be generated by the problem of unemployment in the Kingston area this winter. The second objective of the task force was to see if we could mobilize a community volunteer effort which would help alleviate some of the worst difficulties of the situation. That, I may say, was done long before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took to television to give us his sermonettes.

I want to point out some of the things which the task force has already learned. As I said, it has learned that about 250 teenagers have already been thrown out of their homes to sleep in cellars, doorways and the back seats of cars because their parents cannot afford to keep them at home. It was also learned that tough times are thought to be leading to an increase in crime. City crime statistics are up, particularly for home break-ins and armed robberies. It is estimated that they have gone up 25 per cent in those two categories in the last four months alone. It was learned that Kingston Township and the City of Kingston face increases in the cost of welfare payments of probably up to 15 per cent. Kingston may not be as badly hit as other areas, but no one has any reliable figures indicating how hard unemployment will really hit there. The St. Vincent de Paul Society told us that it had already set up a depression style soup kitchen to try to look after people who need meals. One minister indicated that he has donated $3500 to benevolent funds in this particular year.

Local politicians and planners are not talking about the Government's six and five regime; they are talking about the other side of the coin. They are talking about a Kingston community of 85 per cent employed—it is true—but which has a 15 per cent unemployed rate.

The worst problem we face as a volunteer group trying to cope with what we see coming on in the winter months is to get a handle on the magnitude of the problem that will be facing us. Incredible as it may seem, the local employment centre, which is the Minister's local office, cannot give us any indication of the number of jobless who will be running out of their UIC benefits in the coming weeks and months. That information is needed in order to get on with the planning of our volunteer group. The office did its very best. The people in the office went back to the computers and tried to get the data we were asking for, but they told us that the computer simply could not cough up that information. The local manager kindly called in the regional manager. He explained to us the unbelievable complexity of the system. I must say when he was through that none of us could really comprehend all of the various complex arguments that go in to trying to figure out these statistics. Even he was unable to supply a ballpark estimate of any kind as to the number of people who would be exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits.

I went next to the Deputy Minister of the Department of Employment and Immigration. I presented the problem to him. I told him that this was the information we really need. Once again he listened to me sympathetically and once again I was told that the original information had not been programmed into the computer in a way so as to retrieve this very critical data. He did promise to try, but told me that at the moment he was unable to give me any answers. Finally, I raised the question this afternoon with the Minister himself in the House of Commons. I pointed out to him the urgency of getting this information so that volunteer organizations and the social agencies could begin their planning for the winter months. What did the Minister say? The Minister replied, "What we are doing in areas across Canada is sending out notes to those who are within a six-week to eight-week period of exhausting their benefits, asking them to come into our offices for interviews so we can determine what their needs are, whether they have prospects of alternative employment or are developing other forms of income and support. When we have completed that information we are certainly prepared to pass it along to the members of voluntary agencies or to Members of Parliament."

Imagine, after two months of asking for this information the Minister stands up and tells me that his department's sending out notes to individuals whom they expect to exhaust their benefits in six to eight weeks, and they may then be in a position to tell us how many people will be coming off UIC benefits in that period, and that information will be passed on to us! It is not what is going to happen in January, February or March because they have not got that information. The Department does not have the vital information that we need, nor does it seem to be able to get it. I find that incredible.

The social agencies, the volunteer organizations, the groups of people who want to help out in this country are really serious. They want to get on with the job of setting up a community organization that will assist those not as fortunate as themselves. All I ask the Minister to do is to please help us, not hinder us.

There were other matters on which the Minister did not touch this afternoon but which are also very critical. Perhaps his Parliamentary Assistant will enter the debate and provide the information which the Minister did not give us.

Welfare rolls in all communities are increasing sharply, but where is the money to come from to make sure that these people have adequate food, shelter and clothing during the winter months? Just the other day, the Minister's own Assistant Deputy, Mr. David Dodge from the Employment Department, said, "The problem is that the municipalities don't have the money to pay for these people, and that, clearly, is a federal responsibility". That matter was raised with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) the other day. She callously rejected any assistance by the federal government to the beleaguered municipalities which do not have the tax base to raise the additional funds for welfare. "It is not my responsibility", she snapped. It does make you wonder, Sir, whether or not the federal Government will be working actively to get people off the unemployment insurance rolls and onto social assistance, or welfare, because they know that the federal Government only has to pay half of the welfare costs whereas it has to pay the total amount of the UIC benefits. The federal Government is looking to shrug off that responsibility, giving it to the municipalities instead. There are other groups of unemployed whose situations I would have liked to hear the Minister discuss this afternoon. I think all Members have run across instances in their own ridings where a person has exhausted his or her unemployment insurance benefits, cannot find another job but cannot qualify for welfare because he or she has certain fixed assets, for instance, a home or a car. I would ask you, Sir, whether this individual is going to be reduced to getting rid of everything in order to qualify for welfare?

Take another example, that of a person who has worked much of his or her life, who gets laid off for a period of 30 weeks and then gets hired back, or finds another job for a ten-week period only. This time when that individual is laid off, the person does not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits because the individual has not had the necessary number of qualifying weeks. What is that individual going to do? If that person had not gone back to work for those ten weeks, he or she could still have been collecting unemployment insurance. But that person's pride, and the rules dictated that he had to take the ten-week job. That individual ended up the loser.

Is the Minister giving any considerations to situations such as this one? The Minister tells us that he is meeting with his provincial counterparts to discuss job creation. That is well and good. But I wonder whether the Minister has also urged his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to meet with the provincial Ministers of Health and Welfare to see whether something cannot be done about the escalating welfare problem which the country is facing? After all, we are not talking just about cold statistics or the niceties of jurisdictional responsibilities. We are talking about real, live people who find themselves in greater and greater difficulty with every passing day. We are talking about people who have to go home and explain to their families that there is simply not the money to meet the necessary outlay for the most basic needs. What we find in our communities as a result of this is a tremendous increase in social problems. We are seeing a great increase in marital breakups, divorce, alcoholism, battered wives, battered children, delinquency, theft and even suicide. These conditions are being aggravated by the serious economic depression we are in and by the mounting unemployment.

I realize that my time is passing but there is another matter which I want to bring to the attention of the Minister concerning the area where I see a sharp increase in the unemployment in this country, that is, among women who have been employed in the clerical, sales and service occupations. There has been a tremendous increase in the number of women who have been laid off in these categories. It is painfully obvious, and has been for a long time, that the working woman in Canada is a less than equal partner in the labour force. She still is paid less, still has fewer benefits, is still subject to unfair and illegal pressures. Equal pay for work of equal value is still a distant dream. What I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister with respect to the job creation and job training programs which are now under way for those who are unemployed is that there are still very few openings for women. Only 27 per cent of the enrollees in the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program were allocated to women last year. Only 6 per cent in the non-traditional component of those programs were allocated to women. When over 40 per cent of the labour force and 60 per cent of all new entrees into the labour force are women, then figures of 27 per cent and 6 per cent in these training programs are entirely inadequate.

My time is up but these are some of the issues that I wish the Minister had dealt with this afternoon. They are critical issues and ones that people will be facing tomorrow, next week and next month. I wish that the Minister had taken his time to address these issues.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, one of the themes in our debate today has been—or should have been—how we can best reduce inflation in Canada without losing jobs. It is a challenge that faces not only Canada but indeed all industrialized countries.

We have all found that inflation is inconsistent with growth and job creation. Furthermore, once inflation is embedded, it is extremely difficult to remove. This is because, in a practical sense, inflation is much more than a monetary phenomenon. The speed and the cost of price adjustment is related not just to changes in the growth of money and credit but also to people's attitudes. Rapid return to cost and price stability and so to conditions that will permit a resumption of economic growth including the creation of additional jobs depends in large part on the perceptions of all Canadians. Altering the growth in money supply has always been easy. Creating the national will and determination to reduce inflation is not.

The essence of our approach is to try to create that national will. We are convinced that if Canadians understand the benefits to all of reducing inflation, their individual actions will accelerate recovery and put us clearly on the road to job creation. We do not underestimate the difficulty in demonstrating that individual restraint for the common good also accords with self-interest, but that is the challenge we have taken up.

Opinions may differ about the ranking of the principal causes of our serious economic situation, including high unemployment, in which we find ourselves today, but I believe that there is general agreement on certain points, including the following: first, we face a world-wide crisis, not just a domestic one. This adversely affects demand for many of our basic products, it has reduced their prices in many instances and led to substantial lay-offs.

Second, high interest rates in the United States have unfortunately persisted, in spite of the substantial achievement there in recent months in reducing inflation. Our own interest rates cannot deviate very far from U.S. rates without aggravating our own financial situation, pushing our dollar down and creating the very circumstances for more unemployment.

Third, we Canadians unfortunately have one of the poorest records of increases in wages and prices of any industrialized country, with wage settlements and consumer prices running some five to six percentage points above the level in the United States, Japan or Germany. Unless we do better on inflation, it will be difficult for us to bring down our interest rates very far, even if the United States interest rates continue to fall. Our future ability to generate jobs and to compete in world trade will be seriously threatened.

Fourth, the size of our current federal deficit poses further restraint on our ability to use traditional spending solutions to create employment. The impact of the federal deficit is aggravated by provincial deficits which currently aggregate about $10 billion. This tends to keep up our interest rates. But to cut Government spending can mean putting more people out of work or reducing aid to the unemployed. Increased Government deficits mainly reflect the automatic response of our tax and expenditure systems to our recession. These automatic stabilizers must be allowed to operate to avoid making the recession worse.

The problems of unemployment are obviously serious, but there are no magic solutions which we have somehow overlooked, despite the readiness of some to suggest bold new ventures. Most proposals that I have heard have within themselves the seeds of further damage to our over-all position. But there is one area of attack which cannot help but reduce our immediate difficulties in unemployment and improve our longer term prospects for economic growth. I refer to our strategy to bring down inflation. We Canadians must break the vicious cycle by which inflation breeds pay increases based upon it which, in turn, contribute to the next stage of the inflationary spiral, creating yet more unemployment. We cannot afford to continue that process. We must restrain income increases to levels lower than the current rate of inflation. This means, in the short run, a lowering of the real income of Canadians in the interest of renewing growth and restraining inflation and creating jobs.

Our goal on this side of the House is maximum income increases of 6 per cent over the next 12 months, and 5 per cent over the succeeding 12 months. We are asking all Canadians—business, government, labour unions—to accept this as a target. The response has been most encouraging. The momentum is now becoming obvious as provincial Governments, industry, and labour recognize the imperative need for national restraint. That is why we have the six and five program. I am pleased to note that its effect is beginning to be substantial. Price increases are easing, interest rates are coming down and independent observers have noted that the six and five program is responsible for a noticeable change in our economic outlook.

Looking toward 1983, recovery should gradually gather momentum. Real growth of about 3 per cent may be expected next year. Broad adherence to the six and five program should bring the increase in the consumer price index down to an average of about 7.5 per cent in 1983 and to about 6 per cent by the end of the year.

Our trade balance with other countries, which is already substantial, having attained record levels this year, should be even stronger in 1983. Continued strength in our trade, together with the prospect of continuing decline in U.S. interest rates, should make possible a further lowering of interest rates here at home as gains against inflation are consolidated.

The area of greatest concern for 1983, as reflected throughout the debate today, will be the labour market. The unemployment situation remains distressing. This is why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced last week a number of measures to create jobs during the coming months. These will cost the federal Treasury some $1.1 billion additional to the $1.4 billion the Government has already allocated for these immediate purposes during the past year. In his statement, the Minister invited provincial Governments to supplement the federal contributions whenever possible. So far, Ontario and Quebec have made public their intentions to supplement the federal initiative to create jobs. I am confident that other Provinces will also join forces with us.

I should like at this point to put in their proper perspective the changes recently announced by the Minister of Finance regarding unemployment insurance premiums for 1983. What the Minister has in fact done is to ease the burden of these premiums on the private sector. Employee and employer premium rates for 1983 have been set at levels significantly lower than would have been required to balance the unemployment insurance account next year. In effect, the Government has limited the increase in premiums to about one half of what would have been required to balance the operations of that account in 1983.

I am also at a loss to understand the claim by the Official Opposition to the effect that the announced changes in unemployment insurance premiums could result in a loss of about 60,000 jobs. According to our calculations, the net increase to private sector employers that is implied by the rate increases is about $730 million. This increase represents only one half of one per cent of total private sector payrolls. I cannot believe that such an increase will result in the failure of many, if any, businesses.

What the Government has done in effect is to ask those Canadians who have a job to share the increase in the burden of unemployment insurance so as to ensure that adequate benefits can be paid to those most in need.

The world recession has severely weakened our economy and dampened consumer confidence. Recovery will take time and unemployment will certainly not come overnight. However, the measures recently announced by the Minister of Finance will sustain activity and help those hardest hit by the recession until recovery makes it possible for them to find jobs.

Since the introduction of this six and five program last summer, our progress has been clear. We have no doubt that we are on the road to recovery. To change course now would be foolish and irresponsible. If we are to restore consumer confidence in Canada, and our competitive position on world markets, it is essential that we continue to build on the six and five restraint program.

Until such time as we succeed in limiting inflation, we shall be unable to create more jobs or reduce high interest rates. Wage increases in Canada in recent years have consistently run at levels higher than those in most of our major trade competitors. We as a nation are heavily dependent on world trade for our prosperity. Foreign trade amounts to a sizeable 30 per cent of our gross national product, and of that 30 per cent some 70 per cent is trade with the United States.

What has been the recent wage situation in the United States? During 1981, wage settlements there were on average some 4 percentage points lower than in Canada. That has meant a significant competitive advantage for the United States over comparable Canadian industries, which have typically had wage increases at a level of about 12 per cent on average during the past year.

It takes no great expertise in economics to understand that in such a wage situation and in an increasingly competitive trade world, Canada is placing itself at a real disadvantage, creating an environment where jobs cannot be generated by the private sector if wage settlements consistently exceed productivity increases. It is not just that wage restraint is an essential part of our anti-inflationary program. It is also evident that over the longer term Canadian industry will be unable to compete in world markets if our wage levels consistently exceed those of our main competitors.

Unfortunately, in recent years our increases in productivity have been significantly lower than those of our major competitors. Canadian businessmen, although preaching restraint, have often found it simpler to give in to excessive wage demands. In the inflationary environment which developed, it was possible for them until recently to recoup higher wage costs by raising the prices of their products. Productivity, once of highest priority, slipped well down the list of our goals.

Yet, one of the most significant factors that will determine Canada's economic prospects and our possibilities of creating more jobs is the success which we achieve in raising our productivity. Canada's productivity performance has, unfortunately, been poor over the last few years. Our productivity slowdown, quite rightly, has now become a cause of wide-spread comment and concern across Canada. However, one must not neglect the fact that the factors affecting productivity is a highly complex concept not readily understood.

Many factors have contributed to our productivity slowdown in addition to excessive wage settlements, low levels of industrial and managerial skills, inadequate capital investment or distortions arising from wide-spread foreign investment.

All of these factors and many others have played a role in our poor productivity performance. However, it is clear that one of the most significant hindrances in our search for greater productivity and hence more jobs is the lack of effective business, government and labour consulation and co-operation.

Improved productivity is the only fundamental answer to inflation. We should, in my view, establish greater productivity as a national goal, much as we have already established 1.5 per cent of our GNP as the appropriate expenditure on research and development.

Greater productivity and more jobs will result from incentives that channel more private investment into the manufacturing sector, especially if it is matched by better trained management and labour. Such factors are, however, best understood at the industry sector level. Certainly something can be done at a broad national level in terms of tax and other fiscal measures, but yet more frequently can progress be made if problems of productivity are addressed sector by sector. This, to my mind, underlines the urgent need for all three players in our economy—business, Government and labour—to consult and agree among themselves about what needs to be done.

What a leading U.S. economist said recently about the possibilities of success for government economic policies generally is yet more valid for productivity improvement policies. He said:

> —even the most skilful manipulation of taxes and interest rates will not work unless it is accompanied by institutionlized day-to-day co-operation—not simply mutual understanding—among business, labour and Government.

Here in Canada we are not, fortunately, without a useful recent precedent in consultation and co-operation among the major players in our economy. During 1978 and 1979, 23 industry sector committees were established and brought forward, in a co-operative fashion, initiatives that could most readily be taken to improve our productivity. We should renew that process of consultation, and I believe we are renewing it, for out of growing mutual confidence will come the trusted institutions which can underpin our efforts to reduce inflation and to create jobs for all Canadians.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, what should be said today will not take much longer than the 20 minutes we have allotted to us. It is very difficult to analyse the problems of the Canadian economy in the time which is made available in the House of Commons. However, it says something about the commitment on all sides to try to fully understand the impact of what is happening to Canadians. We really ought to set aside a great deal more time to get to the bottom of what is causing the terrible problems that most Canadian families are facing.

I want to begin by saying that we are facing a crisis, but it is one from which we must emerge economically stronger and much more determined never to allow it to happen again. In the course of the next few years we must try to restructure the Canadian economy in such a way as to guarantee the next generation that they will not ever again have to confront the kinds of problems being confronted by the people who are living here now. We are a country which is fraught with ill-advised corporate takeovers, financed by badly-advised banks, and suffering from a branch plant economy which has, at its very root, excessive foreign ownership managed by absentee managers. That say much about what is wrong with the country.

I simply want to take a moment to put the real crisis into perpective. Over the last year we have seen a dramatic increase in unemployment. Although it gives the appearance of having levelled off by something in the order of 12.2 per cent in both August and September of this year, this particular statistic is very deceiving. We have a record of 1.458 million people unemployed. But we must take a look at the situation because the story is not told in percentages. The labour force dramatically shrank between August and September as some 400,000 students went back to school. Therefore, what we are really seeing is the job market continuing its monthly decline. In August and September of this year 20,000 jobs disappeared in Canada.

We have a problem of almost monumental proportion. Almost 30 per cent of Canadians who are now officially listed as unemployed lost their jobs within the last three months. In Ontario the decline in jobs in one month, last month, was 18,000. There were 18,000 fewer jobs in October than in September. We are looking at an unemployment rate in this Province of 11.1 per cent, up from 10.8 per cent in August, with 61.2 per cent more unemployed persons than a year ago. In September there were 45,000 fewer jobs in the manufacturing sector in the Province of Ontario than in August.

In considering individual communities, one cannot help but draw attention to the City of Sudbury. It has the probable distinction, which I am sure it would rather not have, of having the worst recorded rate of unemployment in industrialized cities in this country. It is entirely possible that it might be the worst record in the world. In September the unemployment rate in Sudbury was 32.9 per cent, up from 26.9 per cent in August, and 8 per cent in September of 1981.

I decided to do a breakdown of unemployment by unions, because it is the easiest way in which to come to grips with it. However, in another speech I will refer to a breakdown by city, and in yet another speech, by occupation. Currently, out of a total of about 80,000 members, 25,000 auto workers are on indefinite lay-off and 10,000 more have been permanently laid off. About 60,000 steel workers in Canada are unemployed at the moment, out of a membership of 190,000. Some 14,000 of those workers are currently laid off in Sudbury alone and 4,500 of them are unlikely to return to work at all. Approximately 11,000 machinists are unemployed. The Canadian Paperworkers Union has permanently lost about 5,000 jobs in the last three years, and about 3,700 members are currently laid off. In British Columbia, 2,000 of the 8,000 members of the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers Union have lost their jobs. Some 18,400 members of the International Woodworkers of America have been laid off on the west coast. About 34 per cent of the total work force of 55,000 is unemployed. In northern Quebec the lumber industry workers, comprising a work force last year of 3,800 workers, will be down to 850 employed by Christmas of this year, a decrease of 78 per cent. On the east coast, 22 per cent of construction workers in New Brunswick are unemployed, 23 per cent are unemployed in Nova Scotia and 37 per cent are unemployed in Newfoundland.

We are not discussing some minor disruption in unemployment. We are referring to a major dislocation, a major problem which is confronting workers in every sector of the economy and workers in every community in the country. No matter to which province one goes, one finds workers with families to support who have lost their jobs or who are facing the prospect of losing them. In fact, they are looking toward perhaps the bleakest period in their lives. We should have known about the problem and we did know it was coming. We raised it with the Government over and over again, week after week, for months, over the last two years. The Government now comes forward and says that it is doing its best.

I want to zero in for a moment on the city that I represent. The Steel Company of Canada is now laying off people with up to 20 years of service. People who have never before in their lives been laid off are currently facing unemployment. By Christmas, almost every single employee of the Steel Company of Canada will be laid off. International Harvester in Hamilton was once a strong, viable and vibrant company, but it is on the verge of closing. National Steel Car, which could be producing vehicles for the railroads of Canada, is facing the most difficult time in its history. One of the major department stores right in the heart of the city, the Right House, owned by Watkins, has closed down. For the first time that I can remember in 30 years, Dofasco will close virtually every department at Christmas and will not open again until the new year. It is laying off for the first time in 30 years. There are numerous small companies in the area which have either closed their doors or dramatically cut back. Why? It is because the Government has failed to recognize the serious structural problems of Canada's industry and economy over the course of the last two years. They failed to recognize that high interest rates were eroding the purchasing power of Canadians, making it virtually impossible for companies, large and small, to manage their affairs, making it extremely difficult for commercial enterprises to carry the kinds of inventory so necessary to meet consumer demand, where it did exist. We allowed the banks to reap unconscionable excess profits during that period, without a single move on the part of the Government to correct it.

The Government says, "But things are getting better, the interest rates are coming down, everyone is going to be in great shape pretty soon". I should point out that a year ago the bank rate in Canada was 18.21 per cent. It is true that this week it is down to 11.46 per cent, which is a 6.75 per cent decrease. However, the prime lending rate, which was 20 per cent a year ago, has come down to 13.75 per cent, only a 6.25 per cent decrease. The banks are not reducing at the consumer level at the same rate that the prime rate is being reduced by the Bank of Canada. When you juxtapose that over and against what happens in the United States, you find that a year ago their prime rate was 14.37 per cent and is now at 9.44 per cent, a drop of 4.93 per cent. That is their federal fund rate. That is the same rate we are talking about. But their prime lending rate, which was at 18 per cent last year, has dropped to 12 per cent, a 6 per cent decrease. What we have, then, is in the United States the prime rate level has dropped by a lesser amount than the banks have reduced their interest rates to consumers and to others. This is because they are attempting to put their economy back on the road. Their banks are committed to making their economy better for everyone in the country, while in Canada our banks are still trying to rip us off, and they are doing it successfully with the support of the Government and the Tory Party.

I want to point out that not only did the banks do this, but at the level of savings deposits, a year ago they were paying 16.75 per cent, today they are paying 9.25 per cent, a 7.5 per cent decrease. But what are they charging? The difference is only a 7.5 per cent decrease. In actual fact what they are doing is making sure they make even more money at the deposit and lending end. Yet Rowland Frazee says, "well, we have serious problems in the country. The country isn't going to be the same after we get through all this. He says that the manufacturing sector will be leaner and it will be more efficient, but it will not employ nearly as many people.

Mr. Frazee is dead right, but I ask, where is his commitment to make sure that everything that can be done in this country to create employment is being done? Where is his commitment to make sure that the banks do not take unfair advantage of the current economic situation and attempt to maximize to an even greater extent the already quite lucrative profit they make? Where is his commitment to make sure that consumers are not ripped off by the banking system, either directly through their loan structure or through their credit card structure, an issue which we raised today? Where is the commitment to try to revitalize the economy?

Having said what I see as the problem, I would like to look at what we might do about it. I think we all understand that the short-term problem is costly and that the solution to short-term unemployment is not likely to occur easily, but I want to begin by saying, as I did in the House early last week when we reconvened, that we could begin now the process of identifying those projects that will out of necessity be undertaken some time over the course of the next four or five years, and accelerate the start of those projects in order to begin to reap the benefit in terms of jobs today.

We could take up the offer of Ipsco to provide pipe for the Lake Diefenbaker to Regina water pipeline in order that we could get that under way now and put those workers to work. We could begin to put in place at a much more accelerated rate the east-west pipeline, which we have all spoken of, in order to guarantee, not only for Ipsco but for other companies, the opportunity to produce the pipe, and also to get those jobs in place now. We could begin, if we really wanted to, the new dock development which is so necessary in a number of major ports in this country in order to prepare ourselves for both the export and import movement which will undoubtedly occur in the future. We are going to need these docks desperately and we are going to have to build them anyway, probably with more expensive dollars. We could canvass every municipality, every province, and we could ask them to look at all of those projects which they believe will be necessary, and begin the process now of funding those in order to get the work started when we have this major unemployment. We could begin a special program of low, even no interest rate loans to farmers, so they could replace the farm machinery they require to get the farm machinery workers back to work. We could enter into an arrangement with the auto industry so that we could begin to encourage Canadians, either by reduction in taxes, by reduction in prices or by rebates, to purchase automobiles which they will need today in order to put those unemployed auto workers back to work. We could begin to build housing at a rate that would start to meet the projected needs as established by every single housing expert. For every piece of accommodation we build in Canada today we generate approximately 2.4 jobs. If we built the 100,000 housing units that we need, we could create 240,000 jobs in this country, both on site and in the industry, putting Canadians back to work. We could take action to lower interest rates. We could begin at every level of government a systematic analysis of all the purchases made and make the effort to find in Canada the suppliers that we require. Having done that, we then have to start to restructure the fundamental economy of this country to take advantage of the natural resource potential that we have to build a manufacturing sector in Canada which will put us in the forefront of world developments, which will guarantee that we know what is going on within the new technological environment, and we could then establish in Canada a future for Canadians.

It would not be put in the hands of those who made the mess in the first place, like the executives of the banks, executives of Dome Petroleum, Chrysler and Massey-Ferguson. It would be put into the hands of the people who care about this country, who live in this country and who want to see this country grow. We will put in their hands the opportunity to build for Canada a future that we can be proud of.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to outline some of the steps the Government is taking and has taken to keep Canadians working during these very difficult times. Without a doubt the most successful undertaking to date to prevent temporary layoffs has been the Government's work-sharing program. When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) reactivated the program last December, we really had no idea it would generate the widespread response it has. Today work-sharing agreements are in effect in every province, in virtually every type of industrial enterprise. It has caught on with small firms, large firms and with their workers. It is interesting to note that the number of unionized firms with work-sharing agreements is representative of the ratio of unionized workers in the country as a whole.

The theory behind work-sharing is quite straightforward: it is preferable to keep people working even if they have to accept a reduction in pay, rather than have them added to the unemployment rolls. This calls for a co-operative approach by all concerned so the greatest number of people can benefit from a program which, admittedly, calls on all participants to make some sacrifices. This kind of program could not go forward without the generous spirit of Canadian workers. Many long-time employees whose seniority might have spared them from being laid off have agreed to a work-sharing arrangement in order that more junior workers would not find their wages drastically reduced during the lay-off period. They, Mr. Speaker, have epitomized the term "sharing", not as it applies to sharing of work but rather to the concept of pulling together to get us all through these hard times.

Most workers on a work-sharing arrangement receive about 90 per cent of their regular wages. As Members of this House will know, their employer pays them for their day's work and they receive unemployment insurance benefits for the rest of what would have been their normal work week. The latest figures indicate that 172,000 people sharing work have prevented some 74,000 of their fellow workers from being laid off. I have been pleased to read and hear directly from workers that most of them would accept a work-sharing arrangement again in the future if the necessity arose.

Earlier I made reference in passing, Mr. Speaker, to the widespread support for work-sharing. This is clearly indicated in the Government's budget figures. When the Minister first introduced the program, it had a budget of only $10 million. As Hon. Members will know, the funds for work-sharing come from the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and as applications poured into the Government it was soon apparent that additional funds would be needed, and earlier this year the Government budgeted an extra $20 million, bringing the total to $30 million. It then upped the amount to $90 million, and subsequently to $190 million for the program this year. Next year it is intended to carry on with the program. Indeed, $150 million has been set as a ceiling for the work-sharing program for the next fiscal year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize it must come as very bad news indeed to the Tories that we have prevented the lay-off of 74,000 workers across this country with this work-sharing program. I realize that must come as bad news indeed to Members of the New Democratic Party because they and the Tories have absolute nightmares in technicolour every time a Government program works or even appears to be working. They live in constant fear that the economic situation—

An Hon. Member: That is better.

Mr. Simmons: I just wanted to get the Hon. Member's attention. He is awake, Mr. Speaker.

They live in constant fear that the economic situation will get better. They absolutely dread the thought of more employment opportunities being created because, Mr. Speaker, they are smart enough to know—

Mr. Blenkarn: You are on the way out.

Mr. Simmons: They are in good favour in the polls only as long as everything appears to be going wrong with the economy. Mr. Speaker, what a back-handed compliment. What a way to gain favour in the polls. Their claim to fame is not that they ever had any ideas of their own, not that they stand in this House and promote ideas which would improve the situation.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are never in the House to find out.

Mr. Simmons: I see the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is back. He looks as if he had dined well.

Their claim to fame is not that they have any ideas which they promote for the improvement of the economy. No, no. That is not their concern at all. They fully realize, Mr. Speaker, that to maintain their position in the polls they have to perpetuate in the public mind the notion that everything is wrong with the economy, everything is going wrong. Preaching gloom and doom is their stock in trade, Mr. Speaker. That is what they are good at. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and his merry band of Tories—

Mr. Siddon: Why don't you say something positive.

Mr. Simmons: Now we are hitting nerves, Mr. Speaker. They are now realizing that the jig is up.

The Leader of the Opposition and his merry band of Tories have practised long and hard saying things like this: oh, the job program is a fraud. It is too little, too late. It will result in other lay-offs. And so on and so on, ad nauseam. This is because mischief is their game, and they play it well. They play it despicably well.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about the UIC payments? You want them up again, Roger?

Mr. Simmons: They do so because for them the political stakes are so big. Little they care, Mr. Speaker, that they aggravate the problem by further eroding confidence in the country's ability to come to grips with its problems. Precious little they care that every time they open their mouths they dash the hopes of men and women across this country who desperately need, not more predictions of gloom and doom, but some sign that we as politicians, whatever our political stripe, are prepared to work together to find solutions which will benefit those who ask only for some indication that as a group here, as Parliamentarians representing all political stripes, we are prepared to get our act together, to work together for the common good.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is about time you got your act together.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, we on this side have had our act together for a long time. Now, I am sure the gentleman from Mississauga South will get an opportunity to say what is on his mind, and I am sure it will not take very long.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have the latest concrete initiative taken by this Government called, for simplicity, NEED, the new job-creation program outlined in broad brush form by my good friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). You will hear more details from the Minister of Employment and Immigration in a matter of a few days. Suffice it to say, as you have heard, the Government is putting in something of the order of $500 million to help create jobs around the country. That alone will not solve the problem, or even come close to solving the problem, so we are not just putting in the $500 million but we are asking the provincial Governments to get involved in what is their problem as well. They, too, have been elected to help provide for good economic times for the people of Canada. As you will have seen from the press reports, Mr. Speaker, we have had a good response from many of the provincial leaders in the country. There is an encouraging indication that they are willing to put their money where their mouths are and that they are willing to get involved in the job-creation program.

Unfortunately—and I say this as a Newfoundlander—one of the Premiers, the Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador, has said that he will not co-operate in the program.

Mr. Blenkarn: You cut back his transfer payments, that is why!

Mr. Simmons: I find that very sad, especially in view of the fact that his Province and my Province is the one that has by far the highest rate of unemployment in the country. If one Province in Canada needs some job stimulus more than any other, it is the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. I would have been much more encouraged and reassured if the Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador had said what the problem is.

It is not that he does not want to co-operate, although I am sure he wants to play politics; we all have been known to do that. But aside from that, I am sure it is not that he does not want to co-operate, but, rather, that he cannot find the money to co-operate. Had he been candid in saying that ten and a half years of Tory rule in Newfoundland has brought the Province almost to the doorstep of bankruptcy and that if they borrow another dollar tomorrow, their credit rating will fall even lower when they already have the lowest credit rating in Canada, that would have been one thing. Why could he not have been more candid and have left politics out for once? He could have said to the federal Government, as other Premiers have, "We would like to participate but our particular problem in Newfoundland and Labrador is that we cannot find the matching money". I am sure that the federal Government, which is known for having solutions custom made for problems in particular parts of the country in the past, would tailor a particular solution to address the Newfoundland and Labrador situation.

If the Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador will not co-operate, if he is determined not to become involved in the Program, then I say to him and the people of Newfoundland and Labrador that they will not suffer; they will get their fair share of the Program.

If the Government of Newfoundland is prepared to facilitate its implementation as other provincial Governments are, then the Federal Government will find ways to ensure that a fair share of the $500 million finds its way into the paycheques of the people who are now unemployed. That is what this particular Program is all about.

We will not rest until we have seen to it that the money is distributed fairly and squarely across the country in such a manner as will alleviate unemployment to the greatest possible degree. That is why the money was provided, and mere partisan politics, whether they emanate from someone in this House or a leader at the provincial level, will not prevent us from seeing to it that the people who most desperately need jobs will have an opportunity of getting them, no matter where they live in this country.

I got away from the subject of work sharing as such a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, when I was led into that rather lengthy digression about what the Opposition is up to these days. I suppose I said nothing new on that subject, because the country sees more clearly than we sometimes give them credit for what the Opposition is up to on a continuing basis.

I will return to the good things I was saying about this work-sharing Program that has caught fire across the country. It has grown by leaps and bounds, from an expenditure of $10 million to $30 million to $90 million to $130 million, and next year it will go to something in the order of $150 million, Mr. Speaker. The Government has been quite flexible in setting the limit for the length of this work-sharing arrangement anything from 6 to 26 weeks. It is interesting to note that most of the agreements have been for the maximum 26-week period. That is another indication of the manner in which this Program is being embraced across the country.

When the Program was first introduced there was no suggestion that it ought to be extended. It was originally envisioned as a temporary measure to help workers cope until the economy improved. As we all know, the economy is beginning to turn around, but high unemployment will be with us until the end of 1984. As work sharing has proved, it can be helpful in keeping people off the unemployment rolls. For that reason, because it is having a salutory effect and because it is helpful in doing what it was intended to do, the Government has decided to grant those extensions. They will be increased to 12 weeks. Applicants will also have until May 27 next year to apply for these programs.

As I mentioned earlier, most of the agreements are for 26 weeks. Many of the earlier agreements are about to expire. Unfortunately, a significant number of firms will not be able to return to normal production immediately. By granting extensions, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has made it possible for the some 12,000 workers so affected, to get through the tough winter months ahead without a reduction in their present incomes. They will not have to go on unemployment insurance at this time and, we hope, not in the future.

As I have also indicated, there has been a considerable amount of consultation on the working-sharing program. Last April the Minister convened a conference on work sharing and, as he reported, management and labour representatives provided a great deal of useful input.

Time does not permit me to talk about the many initiatives that the Government continues to take in order to address the desperately high unemployment situation in the country, a situation which is not unique to this country, although that is no excuse for allowing it to continue. We do not intend to allow it to continue to the extent that we can avoid doing so.

By way of example, I would mention two programs. The work-sharing program is a magnificent program and is showing results beyond the wildest dreams of even the Government that contrived and crafted it in the first place.

I have also mentioned NEED, the new job-creation program which you will hear more about and which has had a positive response from the labour community, the business community and the provincial Governments. This program will reach out to help the people who most desperately need it at this time.

These are two examples of what can be done when we put partisanship aside, Mr. Speaker. After all, in reaching out the hand of collaboration to the provincial Governments we were not particularly reaching out to Governments of our Party stripe—anything but—but to NDP, Social Credit, PQ and Tory Governments. In all cases we invited them—

Mr. Crombie: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) has finally got the point. That is what I said a few moments ago, that we are reaching out to anything but Governments of our Party stripe. Our overriding concern is to ensure that people out there without jobs or without a possibility of getting a job, would at least have a glimmer of hope. We as governments have a responsibility to these people, whatever our political stripe or wherever we are located, be it in British Columbia, or Newfoundland or wherever in between. After all, they are not only consitutents of federal Members; they are equally constituents of provincial Members. We reached out because we wanted to ensure that they would have an opportunity. These programs will give them that opportunity. Also I predict that in the days ahead we will hear of other such programs to address what has become a very serious problem, a problem at which we intend to punch away until we have the beginnings of a solution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, no subject could be more urgent than that of the motion we are debating tonight—Canada's current unemployment crisis. Every other issue in the country, however important, pales by comparison. Indeed, the unemployment crisis is a tragic reflection of everything that is wrong with the Canadian economy.

The current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been in office for 14 years now. During that period, he has plunged an essentially strong, vibrant, buoyant economy to the very depths of recession. No other country on earth in modern times has experienced such a sharp fall in its fortunes. In 1968, when the Prime Minister took office, Canada ranked second only to the United States in economic strength among major industrialized democracies. Today we rank second last. During the same 14-year period, unemployment has tripled from 351,000 to 1.3 million, inflation has more than doubled from 4.2 per cent to 10.6 per cent, conventional mortgage rates have nearly doubled from 9.25 per cent to 17.5 per cent, the accumulated national debt has quadrupled from $30.5 billion to $134 billion and is rising, and the dollar has lost something like 13 cents in value relative to the U.S. currency. Even worse, Canadians have lost confidence in their governmental and economic institutions because they know in their heart of hearts that a country with our bountiful resources should be doing a great deal better.

Now the Prime Minister tells Canadians in three nationally televised presentations at prime time, courtesy of the CBC, that everyone else is to blame for Canada's economic mess—the international economy is to blame, other Canadians are to blame, even providence is to blame, but not himself or his Government. No one will deny—and I certainly will not—that Canada's current economic problems, including massive unemployment, are related to the depressed state of the world economy of which Canada is a part. But Canada has contributed more than its share to that situation.

Is the Canadian economy likely to improve in the foreseeable future? On the contrary, the trend is clearly downhill. Our country is fast becoming what the Science Council of Canada has described as "deindustrialized." Traditionally, unemployment has risen because we have not been able to create enough jobs to keep pace with the expanding work force. Today that is true also, but more than that, unemployment is rising because existing jobs are disappearing all over the place at a rapid rate. There has been a net loss of more than half a million jobs in Canada since August of 1981. A quarter million jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector alone. Jobs are being lost in Canada at the rate of 1,900 a day.

In my own region, the Atlantic Provinces—Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland—some 140,000 people are out of work. In my own Province of Prince Edward Island, the work force is in the neighbourhood of 46,000 people, and 7,000 people are currently jobless in that Province with a tiny population. That is 13.4 per cent seasonally adjusted compared with the national average of 12.2 per cent.

Although the Federal Government has mismanaged the economy from the day the current Prime Minister took office in 1968, he and his Government have outdone even themselves these last three years in terms of sheer economic incompetence and mismanagement. The Government has wasted billions of taxpayers' precious dollars to bail out its friends among the corporate giants. It has scared away billions of dollars in both domestic and foreign investment through its National Energy Program, the Foreign Investment Review Agency and other avenues. It has poisoned the atmosphere for Federal-Provincial co-operation by centralizing power in Ottawa, building up a huge bureaucracy insensitive to the real needs and aspirations of Canadians, and by imposing its will on both the Provinces and the private sector. It has stripped Parliament of its powers, once very strong, to scrutinize Government spending and otherwise keep Government accountable. It has utterly failed to develop or to follow any kind of economic strategy, preferring instead to lurch from one disastrous budget to another in the vain hope of shoring up its sagging popularity across the country.

Worst of all, the Government simply does not know what it is doing. Nowhere is that fact more apparent than in its deficit. Less than 12 months ago—11 to be exact—the Government projected a deficit of $10.5 billion. Only seven months later, fewer than it takes to have a baby, it had to admit that the deficit would be twice that much, a whopping $19.6 billion. Now, another four months later, the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in his economic statement in the House of Commons last week, was forced to concede that the deficit will be $23.6 billion, twice the size of the total budget of the Federal Government in the first year of the Prime Minister's stewardship.

Statistics, though important, though scary, though worrisome, do not tell the whole story. They cannot express the human suffering borne by every man and woman across the country who has lost his or her job. In the run of a month, as is the case with other Members I am sure, I speak with dozens of unemployed people in my Province—in my riding office, on the street, in shopping centres, and even in their homes. Nothing in life robs an individual of his or her dignity quite like losing a job. I personally think that we in society, probably we in most countries, tend to place too much stock in what an individual does for a living. We do not try to get to know an individual as he or she is. Instead we ask almost automatically, what does he or she do? When the answer has to be nothing because the worker's job has been wiped out, is it any wonder that the person feels like nothing? Is it any wonder, either, that such an individual then becomes resentful of the very system that has served him or her so poorly?

What is the answer that the NDP proposes, in the amended motion tonight, to address the crucial economic problems of the land, in particular unemployment? It proposes to impose a surtax on so-called upper-income earners, those making over $40,000 a year. We in this Party, in the Progressive Conservative Official Opposition, do not oppose the idea that every Canadian should pay his or her fair share of income tax. But we do not believe, we never have and we never will, in simplistic solutions. We believe that any tax changes should be made on the basis of the principle of a progressive tax system, not by isolating any group in society and hitting them with a discriminatory surcharge.

And what is the Government's response to the unemployment crisis? It allots $500 million for a hodge-podge job-creation program about which it is not able to answer even the most basic, simplest, questions in the House of Commons. That $500 million is scarcely $400 for every unemployed person in the country. Coincidentally, it is the exact amount the Government is prepared to spend to bail out Dome Petroleum. It is $200 million less than the Government has lavished on the whitest of white elephants, Mirabel Airport since 1975.

The Government can find hundreds of millions of dollars for Chrysler, for Massey-Ferguson and for Pratt & Whitney, but it can find only $500 million for the average man and woman trying to put bread on the table in the depths of a recession that is the worst in half a century.

It may be a long while before the Government knows how it is going to allocate the $500 million under its new job-creation program. The Government does not have a clue. It cannot answer questions in the House of Commons about the program. The Government is not even able to reply to the most basic questions about how this program is going to work. But, on the basis of what has already been said, and that has been precious little, I fear that the money will not be of maximum benefit, and probably will be of very little benefit, to Prince Edward Island or to the other Provinces in Atlantic Canada. I have five reasons for saying that.

First, the program is designed primarily to help those whose unemployment insurance benefits have expired. In Prince Edward Island, that is the case of a rapidly increasing number of workers. In 1981, 6,000 people received $52.9 million in UIC benefits on P.E.I. Few of them have been able to find work since then, and their benefits are quickly running out, if they have not already done so. But the federal Government has made it clear that its new job-creation program, called NEED, will not be in place before January. Perhaps it will not be in full swing until April or May or later. I ask you, Sir, what is to happen in the meantime? For many, the only recourse will be social assistance. Therefore, there is a problem of timing.

Second, because the Program is geared to helping UIC exhaustees, as they are called, it will not likely assist those people—for example, the young—who have been unable to find a first job and thus have never been able to qualify for UIC benefits. Nor will this Program assist people re-entering the labour force—women, for example—who also do not qualify for such benefits because they have no recent period of insurable employment. Such restrictions repeat the bias in the way funds are allocated to each riding under the Federal Government's Canada Community Development Projects, a three-year-old job-creation program also administered by the Department of Employment and Immigration. Those are two failings in the $500 million program.

There is a third. The Government has hinted broadly that the Province will be asked to supplement federal funding under the program. We do not know for sure. We do not know what the details are. But there are broad hints that the whole thing will be funded on a cost-shared basis. Canadian Press has conjectured that some sort of matching formula will be imposed. If so, regional disparities will be widened, not narrowed, by this Program because a province like my own, Prince Edward Island and other Provinces in Atlantic Canada, cannot afford, nor will they be able to afford, to match federal funding; they will find it difficult even to participate. Only the stronger Provinces, such as Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, will be able to take maximum advantage of the Program.

I call upon the Government now, whatever may be the details it is working on, to dispel any suggestion that this program will be administered on a cost-shared basis.

Fourth, the Government's new $500 million job-creation program will likely ignore the fact that in provinces like P.E.I., however bad the job situation is now—and it is bad enough at that—unemployment will be a lot worse down the line after the funds have been designated. The largest single employer outside of government in Prince Edward Island, Canada Packers, Inc. has just announced that it will shut down permanently next fall. At one fell swoop 300 jobs will be lost, including 225 union jobs. On the Island, a lay-off of that proportion is equivalent to a shutdown of a plant employing 2,500 or 3,000 people in Quebec or Ontario. An annual payroll of close to $6 million will be taken out of the P.E.I. economy, thereby affecting everyone, not just the employees themselves, but retailers and others. The economy will be devastated because of the withdrawal of that kind of income. Most of the workers concerned have been employed at Canada Packers for 15 to 25 years. Many of them have been there since first starting to work. They have never been laid off before, nor have they worked anywhere else.

Last year, Canada Packers killed and processed something like 135,000 hogs and 7,000 cattle on the Island. Almost all of that livestock was produced in the Province. Consequently, the demise of Canada Packers will devastate the Island's farm community too.

It is absolutely imperative that the federal Government view the Canada Packers shutdown as an emergency. Immediate action is required to keep the plant open or to find ways to retain a major livestock killing facility in the Province, if not under the auspices of Canada Packers, then under some other auspices. I am convinced, Sir—without being unduly partisan—that if the same crisis had occurred in Central Canada, the Government already would have acted, as it has done in many similar situations in Quebec and Ontario. Canada's birthplace, Prince Edward Island, deserves to be treated just as fairly.

I believe I have two or three minutes remaining in my allotted time. In that time I want to stress a fifth problem with the program. The Government intends to supplement its $500 million job-creation program with—and I do not believe this, but we will take the Government at its word—a $400-million rail improvement program in the west where it promises eventually to create 400,000 jobs as a result of railway spending. That policy brings little solace to us in Atlantic Canada, and to us in particular in Prince Edward Island, who have seen the Government steadily chipping away at what little is left of our own rail system.

In the next few days, the Canadian Transport Commission will be conducting hearings on Prince Edward Island on the proposed abandonment of important rail lines throughout the eastern part of the Island. I have inside information that Canadian National has also made a decision to remove the Charlottetown Carload Centre as part of a consolidation of rail services within the region. That measure will render Prince Edward Island the only Province in all Canada without a centre of its own for the administration of heavy freight to, from and within the Province. Obviously Canadian National, with the acquiescence of this Government, is hellbent on stripping the Island of every last railway job in the Province. CN had enough money to splurge on a recent $65,000 advertisement to wish Canadian Pacific Railway happy birthday on the occasion of its one hundredth anniversary. But it does not have enough money, according to the Government, to keep any kind of rail presence in the very Province that initially came into Confederation to save its railway.

May I conclude by saying that the Government could be doing much more than it is to maintain existing jobs. It could be flexible with regard to landing rights so that fish plants in Atlantic Canada could reopen, instead of the Government being so intransigent as it has been in the past. It could create centres of excellence, including making Prince Edward Island a centre for marine and veterinary research and training with the establishment of a veterinary college in Charlottetown which would thereby enable that Province to grow and sustain a measure of self-sufficiency.

The Government should prevent CN and other Crown corporations from slicing large chunks away from the economic base of Canada outside the industrial heartland. Not only has that practice eliminated direct jobs, it has also done away with services that are essential for the maintenance of other jobs.

As long as the country lacks an economic plan and an overall strategy in which even the smallest province has a role to play, we will continue to lurch from one disastrous budget to another in a feigned effort to shore up our economy in the face of absolute and utter devastation.

The Prime Minister is right in saying that there are no magical solutions. But there are some solutions. What we require is the resolve to find them. Over the past 14 years, this Government has been bereft of either the will or the imagination to conduct the needed search.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Government House Leader is in his place. I wonder If I could ask a question with respect to tomorrow's business. In view of the uncertainty that has now arisen in connection with the Prime Minister's remarks last Friday, saying that back-to-work legislation with respect to the B.C. ports would be introduced today—at least, he left us with that impression—can the Government House Leader tell me whether he is going to seek consent to introduce that legislation today? If not, will we be proceeding tomorrow with back-to-work legislation or with the legislation dealing with the interest rebates on farm loans?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to prevent the hon. member from addressing the House during the last seconds remaining, but I would like to point out that if I have a specific announcement to make I will advise my Hon. colleague accordingly. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that if there was no settlement by midnight tonight, the government would not hesitate to take responsible action and to consider the matter in the light of the events that have taken place. So in the circumstances, if any notice is to be given tomorrow, we shall do so in due time. If it is necessary to notify and negotiate with the opposition, we shall of course do so, and if submitting legislation to the opposition would facilitate negotiations, we shall certainly bear such a possibility in mind. For the time being, however, nothing has changed and the order of business for tomorrow is still the same. If there are any changes, I shall notify my colleagues in due time.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—GOVERNMENT ECONOMIC POLICIES

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Crombie:

That this House condemns the Government for its insistence on pursuing oppressive and inhuman policies causing tragically record high unemployment, bringing depression and despair to every region of Canada and deeply eroding the confidence of Canadians in their future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I draw to the attention of the two Hon. Members standing that there is approximately 30 seconds before 9.45 p.m. If it is the wish of Hon. Members, I will recognize one or the other. I have to look to my right, the Liberal side, as the previous speaker was on my left, the Conservative side.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, that was the shortest speech on record and perhaps, given the calibre of debate this evening, one of the wisest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair would like to express its thanks to the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) for certainly making the shortest speech and possibly one of the most effective.

It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the Supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9). The question is now on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Riis) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Crombie) negatived.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) would care to comment on how he could defeat the Government with 24 Members absent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I noted the influence of the Hon. Member in Timiskaming. He asked for a solution to the country's problems. The solution to the country's problems would be for 20 Members of the Liberal Party to offer their resignations. That would force byelections and there would then be a new national Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: It being past ten o'clock, I do now leave the chair, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WORK STOPPAGE AT WEST COAST PORTS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on the most tragic and important issue facing Canada at this moment, about which something could be done. Negotiations broke down completely in the Port of Vancouver work stoppage on Sunday afternoon. The Government should have moved immediately, on Monday morning, with negotiations broken off. It did not, and it has not moved till this time.

This work stoppage is costing Canada thousands of dollars while I stand here talking. This work stoppage means a loss to Canada of $1 million or more an hour; $8 million is being lost in wheat sales every day and more millions in other bulk shipments, as well as the human tragedies of lost work. As of 5.30 this morning, 86 ships were waiting in Vancouver—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the Hon. Member is arguing the question. If he could just put his motion that would be sufficient.

Mr. Cook: Madam Speaker, it is urgent and pressing, but I accept your restraint. How many hours and millions of dollars will the Government continue to waste through inaction? I therefore move, seconded by every Member of this Party, but more particularly by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the House condemn the Government for allowing the continuing hemorrhage of jobs, commodity shipments and economic activity in the Port of Vancouver and other ports in British Columbia.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, despite the Finance Committee report to the Minister, and despite the fact that his officials and his Parliamentary Secretary sat through all the hearings concerning the income tax amendments, the Minister of Finance has still not made up his mind about the further changes he will make to the November 12 budget of nearly a year ago. The delay and uncertainty caused by the Minister's failure to come forward with concrete legislation concerning tax changes are a principal reason militating against new investment in Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the House direct the Minister of Finance to produce forthwith to this House income tax legislation so that the House can consider in detail the proposals so that the business community and the country in general can know where they stand with respect to taxation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WORK STOPPAGE AT WEST COAST PORTS—SUGGESTED DESIGNATION OF ESSENTIAL SERVICES

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, the work stoppage at the major ports on the West Coast has, to date, cost grain producers over $100 million in lost sales. Sales are not being deferred, they are being lost. Our reputation as a reliable grain supplier to international markets is once again in jeopardy. To date the work stoppage has caused over 6,000 Canadians to be out of work.

Since 1972 Parliament has had to intervene in related grain handling and transportation disputes because it was recognized that labour and management difficulties simply do not justify the damage inflicted on the total economy. I move, under the provision of Standing Order 43, seconded by the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That this House consider designating the grain handling and transportation sectors as they affect grain exports, as essential services.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HIGH COST OF FOOD AND DRY GOODS

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of the most urgent and pressing necessity. A recent survey conducted by my office revealed that basic food prices in northern communities were, on average, 80 per cent higher than those in Ottawa. Another survey, just completed, shows that dry goods prices in the Hudson's Bay store in Frobisher Bay are, on average, 28 per cent higher than those same goods in the Bay's Ottawa store, despite a commitment made two years ago by Bay officials that the differential would not exceed 10 per cent. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the House call upon the Government to initiate a task force immediately to investigate all aspects of the cost of living crisis in the Far North.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

IMPLEMENTATION OF MEASURES RECOMMENDED BY YUKON RESIDENTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the economy of Yukon is in a state of collapse because of the widespread unemployment in the Yukon mining industry, and whereas the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has failed to respond to the constructive recommendations advanced one month ago by the Yukon Legislative Assembly, mining unions and employers, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tell the people of Yukon immediately how he proposes to implement the measures they have recommended, in order to stem the mass exodus of northerners from Yukon before the economy of Canada's north is irreversibly destroyed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

ALLEGED THEFT OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has twice recognized in the House that some people are misusing the Canadian Home Insulation Program, that the officials of his Department have been aware of such illegal practice for over six months, that some businesses are taking advantage of the shortcomings in the regulations to swindle the government and since thousands of dollars are fraudulently paid out day in and day out and that contractors and salesmen rather than homeowners are deriving benefit from such grants, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy).

That this House suggest to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that he suspend temporarily the implementation of the Home Insulation Program and order him to issue new regulations that will put an end to fraudulent practices by professional profiteers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ADOPTION OF PROTECTIVE MEASURES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, years of neglect and mismanagement of our economy by Liberal governments have brought on the worst depression since the 1930s and brought our once strong and vibrant auto industry to its knees. A recent study has called for an end to the Government's finger in the dike approach to that industry by recommending that the Government simply let the industry die rather than poke it to death. In view of the fact that one job in five is dependent upon the auto industry, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

That the Government publicly respond to that study and take immediate steps to formulate and implement a strategy for the auto industry that would provide for Canadian content requirements and would protect the industry from artificially low-priced automobile imports.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, there are at least a dozen outstanding areas of serious concern to our aging disabled veteran population and, to date, the Minister has made no announcement to the House on how and when he will deal with these serious problems. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the Minister of Veterans Affairs make a statement on motions to give the details of when he will be presenting the necessary legislation to deal with these outstanding issues of importance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, after last night's appalling lack of support by his own caucus, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) called on 20 Liberal Members for support. This was quite surprising since his previous analysis of what was wrong with our weak economy has been a lack of confidence in Liberals. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House urges the Leader of the Official Opposition to demonstrate his own Party's managerial abilities by providing the House with a clear analysis of his own lack of confidence situation: tell us whether it is a work to rule situation, a wildcat strike or a lockout of a big chunk of his own caucus, and tell us what he is proposing to do to get Conservative Members back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CONGRATULATIONS TO CANADARM DEVELOPERS

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, seven Canadians, Jack Thurston, Garry Lindberg, Karl Doetch, Art Hunter, John MacNaughton, Terry Ussher and Claus Wagner-Bartak, are to be honoured and decorated on Wednesday by the United States National Aeronautics and Space Administration for their outstanding contribution to the space program, in the development of the highly successful remote manipulator system, the Canadarm. As a permanent record of their achievement, and that of their many colleagues, in the Parliament of Canada, I move, seconded par le député D'Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourde) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the Speaker convey to Jack Thurston, Garry Lindberg, Karl Doetch, Art Hunter, John MacNaughton, Terry Ussher and Claus Wagner-Bartak, the esteem and congratulations of this House and the nation, for their outstanding achievement in the development of the highly successful remote manipulator system, the Canadarm, and for the example they have given to their countrymen that, whenever Canadians put their minds and their efforts into the creative areas of science and technology, they are unsurpassed in the world.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WORK STOPPAGE AT WEST COAST PORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the ports dispute on the West Coast. The Prime Minister will recall that he said in the House:

—That if the parties had not settled their dispute through the process of free collective bargaining by Monday night this Government would ensure in some way that the strike would be ended—

That repeated an undertaking given six days ago by the Minister of Finance. Can the Prime Minister tell us when the Government will be acting to open the ports, and what form that action will take?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, I would be happy to answer the question asked by the Right Hon.

Leader of the Opposition, Madam Speaker. We are sorry the process of free collective bargaining has not brought this regretful strike to an end. Today the House Leader will be giving notice of legislation—

Mrs. Mitchell: It's a lockout.

Mr. Trudeau: I beg your pardon, it is a lockout and it is a regrettable one. My point remains that we are sorry the parties have not been able to find a ground on which they could accommodate each other's points of view. Therefore, we will be giving notice today. We hope to be able to get the consent of the House to proceed with the legislation tomorrow. It would be the hope of this Government that there will be co-operation from all Parties to pass the legislation as soon as possible, hopefully dealing with all three stages within a day.

As a first stage the lockout would be ended and work could resume in the ports on the West Coast. Failing that, if the legislation has to be proceeded with, then the Government would intend applying the spirit of the six and five legislation.

REQUEST FOR QUICK LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister would know that this dispute is costing Canada at least $8 million a day. He is talking about introducing something today for action tomorrow. We on this side of the House would be prepared to deal today with legislation brought in today, and to deal with it in all stages.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In that light, will the Prime Minister agree to bring in that legislation today to seek agreement, which I hereby give on behalf of my party, to have it proceeded with today so that we will not waste $8 million and another day? Can we act today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am happy with the spirit of co-operation extended to Parliament by the Leader of the Opposition. I would expect that he would want Members of his own Party and Members of the New Democratic Party at least to know what the content of the legislation is before agreeing to pass it through all stages today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is why I thought it preferable to give a general indication of the content of the legislation which, once again, would entail an immediate return to work and an application of the six and five type of guidelines that were in the June budget, for this particular bargaining group. It is still our hope, in the knowledge that this is the intention of the Government and now of the Official Opposition, to introduce and pass this legislation in all stages, perhaps tomorrow, but I would still hope that this further delay, with the notice of the legislation and its general content, would permit both parties to return to the bargaining table and to reach an agreement by the process of collective bargaining.

• (1420)

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister speaks of what would be preferable. What would be preferable is to act today to resolve the dispute today and stop another $8 million, at least, of loss to the Canadian economy. That is what would be preferable today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING PREPARATION OF LEGISLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister tell the House whether this legislation of which he speaks is ready now, at 20 minutes after two o'clock, to be introduced in the House of Commons? Will he tell the House of Commons whether there are any negotiations proceeding between the Government and any political party in the House respecting the nature of that legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know of no negotiations proceeding at this time but I would hope that the announcement that I made in answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition would incite the parties to return to the bargaining table and to reach an agreement through the process of free collective bargaining.

This Government would rather not legislate. We would want to see the strike end as soon as tomorrow, once again—

An Hon. Member: Lockout.

Mr. Trudeau: The lockout end as soon as tomorrow. It will if we have co-operation from all sides. We are still hopeful, and we find it preferable not—as the Leader of the Opposition suggests—to slam on a piece of legislation that he has not seen, his Party has not seen, that the New Democratic Party has not seen, and that the parties to the dispute have not seen.

I repeat to the Leader of the Opposition that to impose six and five on the bargaining parties is something that we would rather not do, but they are under notice now that we will do it with the obvious enthusiastic support of the Conservative Party if they cannot reach an agreement within a very short period of time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

READINESS OF LEGISLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I do not understand why the Government is stalling. The Minister of Finance gave a clear commitment that there would be action by Monday. The Prime Minister gave a clear commitment there would be action by Monday. Monday has passed. It is now Tuesday. Nothing has been done. The Prime Minister has indicated that he intends to do nothing today. Will the Prime Minister answer the question that I put earlier?

Is the legislation ready to be presented to Parliament today? Is it ready now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, the legislation is ready. I would be happy to know right now from the Leader of the Oppposition if he is prepared to debate this legislation unconditionally, sight unseen. If he is, we will be ready to proceed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GRAIN

MOVEMENT THROUGH CHURCHILL—UPGRADING OF RAILWAY FACILITIES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will address my question to the Prime Minister. I am sure that the grain producers in western Canada are disappointed at the answers he has given to the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister is well aware of the disastrous effect that the tie-up of the west coast ports is having on western agriculture. With low grain prices and losses in sales in the neighbourhood of $8 million a day, as well as the effect the port closure has on our credibility as an exporter, the time has come to examine the expansion of port facilities at Churchill in order to increase our export capacity and to act as a buffer in the event of strikes.

Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether or not the Minister of Transport has discussed the question of upgrading the facilities at Churchill with Canadian National Railways with a view to upgrading the line to handle hopper cars to carry grain and other commodities from western Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as I understand the question, it is not directly related to the question of the lockout. I will take notice of it on behalf of the Minister of Transport.

REQUEST THAT TASK FORCE STUDY FARMERS' LOSSES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He must be aware that whenever there is a tie-up in the ports, either on the West Coast or at Thunder Bay, the farmers who suffer a substantial loss have no recourse to recover any of that loss. I am wondering if the Prime Minister would consider setting up a task force comprised of Members of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider what can be done to ensure that farmers in western Canada will have recourse in order to make up the losses that they suffer from these disastrous strikes.

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of Transport has announced and is presently engaged in the following through of a policy, including these very aspects, which will involve some $3.5 billion spent for transportation in the west, and that policy is in the process of discussion now. If the Hon. Member thinks it could serve the purpose of implementation of that policy to form a further task force or House committee, I will refer the suggestion to the Minister of Finance.

MINES AND MINING

IRON ORE COMPANY CLOSING IN SCHEFFERVILLE, P.Q.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. At the outset I just wanted to say that the recession the people of Canada are facing is bad in general, but it is particularly bad for one industry towns like Faro, like Sudbury, the Minister's home city, like Port Alberni, and like a number of communities which are totally dependent on one firm.

Mr. Paproski: Like Oshawa.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Today, the Iron Ore Company has announced the end of its operations at Schefferville. It is a disaster for that community.

Here is my question to the Minister: what long- and short-term programs has the government worked out for the people of that area?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, this morning I held long discussions with the Iron Ore Company concerning the plight of the workers in Schefferville. I am happy to report that of the 285 workers who will be directly affected, at least 72 of whom will be taking pensions or early retirement, and perhaps more. The remaining workers will be receiving a very generous settlement, including two weeks' pay for every year of service, full vacation and extended vacation. They will be invited to stay on in their homes for the remainder of the winter and every effort will be made to help. We are co-ordinating a committee with the Department of Employment and Immigration to relocate these workers with full maximum use of government grants.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITUATION IN FARO, Y.T.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question concerning another community which has been devasted by a shutdown. This time I refer to Faro in the Yukon. This community is experiencing a lay-off which has continued since June. It will continue on for many more months into the coming year. Men and women are without jobs, and there is a total absence of a financial base for that community. Considering that a number of groups in that community have approached the Minister to ask the Government to take specific action to restore some operations in that mine, is the Government now prepared to take an equity position in the mine's operations? Beyond that, what other programs or set of actions is the Government prepared to undertake to bring some help to that terribly devastated community?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, if I may answer the Leader of the New Democratic Party with regard to Cyprus Anvil, let me just tell him that so far there has been a tripartite approach in an attempt to re-open the operation by this spring, at the latest.

An Hon. Member: A four-way approach.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It involves the United Steelworkers of America, the Yukon Government, ourselves, and the management of Cyprus Anvil. Up to the present time there has been an all-party type of agreement to put forward an action plan which I could take to my colleagues in Cabinet for approval. The action plan involves various elements, but certainly one of them is a commitment by Cyprus Anvil to re-open by a specific date, the sooner the better, and, as well, the union and management have agreed to get under way with serious negotiations in order to get a collective agreement. Therefore, I and everyone else interested in the question will have some cost figures on what is involved, but we cannot have them without some indication of what the final labour agreement will be.

• (1430)

As far as their share is concerned, the unions also agree to contribute undertakings with respect to improved productivity. The Yukon Government has also indicated it is prepared to divy up or inject certain beneficial elements to the pot.

I do not believe the action plan will be ready for at least another week or two, hopefully sooner. While that action plan is being put together, the Government, with the help of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has been making representations in Japan with the desire that the Japanese enter into commitments regarding the purchase of Cyprus Anvil lead and zinc. As Hon. Members know, Madam Speaker, that situation is very tenuous.

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not want us to get out of the marvellous pattern which seems to have been set today. The questions all seem to be relatively short and the answers, therefore, should be short also.

RECOMMENDATION THAT SPECIAL FUND BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a final question for the Minister of State (Mines), but I would hope that the Minister who just replied would elaborate outside the House, perhaps, later, and tell us what action the Government plans to take. Is it prepared to take an equity position in Cyprus Anvil, or is it not? He did not answer that.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of State (Mines). Just yesterday the Government's task force report on one-industry towns came down and it contained a number of recommendations, at least some of which are good. Among these was the suggestion that a special fund be created whereby companies may put a portion of their profits in good years into this fund, so when there is a turndown in the economy the fund may then be used to bring some stability and decency to the communities that are badly hurt during this period.

Considering, for example, that the Iron Ore Company of Canada in the past 11 months paid out a dividend of some $108 million to its shareholders, is the Minister now prepared to announce to the House of Commons and, more important, to the people in these communities, that the Government using federal powers will insist that a fund be created of this kind, and companies like the Iron Ore Company of Canada will be required to put a portion of their profits into that fund to help those people when it is needed?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I am delighted that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has seen fit to read the task force recommendations. I agree, also, they are excellent recommendations. Unfortunately, the latter one to which he referred was just made yesterday and it would be very premature of me to suggest that such a fund be set up immediately. It would also require the co-operation of the Provinces involved.

BROADCASTING

GOVERNMENT REACTION TO APPLEBAUM-HÉBERT REPORT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications and it arises from an October 14 Cabinet document outlining the Government's national broadcasting strategy and which discusses the possibility of having a parliamentary committee struck to look into the particular strategy. How can Parliament take seriously his talk of Parliamentary input in the process when the document also explains that the Minister has suppressed the Applebaum-Hébert report for a month and a half, that he is planning to spend up to $175,000 on a media blitz designed to sell his particular proposals, and that the plans call for giving the information to the Americans before it is made available to Parliament or to the Provinces of Canada?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks in riddles. It is true I have in my hands a copy of the Applebaum-Hébert report. It is an advance copy. It is presently being reviewed in order to be published. I have just come from a meeting with Mr. Applebaum and Mr. Hébert and they inform me they expect to make their report public on November 16. I should also tell the Hon. Member I am still working on the final Cabinet documents outlining the national strategy and I have made changes in it as late as this morning.

DURATION OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, this is interesting timing. The Minister says the Applebaum-Hébert report is to be released on November 16. This document indicates the Minister plans to unveil his proposals at a nationally publicized press conference by satellite, and at the CAB conference in Toronto as well, the day before. Therefore, how can anyone take him seriously when he talks about Applebaum-Hébert?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: May I ask the Minister this question? In view of the fact the CBC remains as the underpinning foundation for the national broadcasting strategy, how can the Minister be taken seriously when he talks about either Applebaum-Hébert or about a Parliamentary inquiry, when the proposal here would have the parliamentary inquiry conduct its hearings and wrap up within three months, and he intends only to have the CBC study itself and have its report after six months, three months after the parliamentary committee has been wrapped up? How can he be taken seriously?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is speaking from a document which I just indicated is certainly not finalized. I instructed my officials to bring some changes to it as late as this morning. The Hon. Member is also out of touch as far as my intentions are concerned regarding the release of a proposed national broadcasting strategy.

While it is true I am indeed addressing the members of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters on November 15 in Toronto, I will not at that stage be revealing the contents of the Government's position on the national broadcasting strategy. I have indicated time and again that I want to benefit from the Applebaum-Hébert report in this respect, as in others. A number of the recommendations of Applebaum-Hébert will, no doubt, be far-reaching, and I am sure that Members of Parliament on all sides of the House will want to have the opportunity of expressing their points of view on those recommendations before the Government takes its final position.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CANCEL PLANNED INTERVIEWS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, the Minister says he has changed the plans he had on October 14 when he knew that Applebaum-Hébert was to report on October 16. He then said he would report on November 15. May I ask him whether other proposals in the earlier documents have also been changed? To wit, will he tell the House today he does not plan, as he indicated in the October 14 document, to give interviews on his broadcast strategy six weeks in advance of the publication of the Applebaum-Hébert report? Will he indicate to the House today that his proposal to Cabinet to spend $100,000 on audio-visual materials "to build a constituency of support for federal proposals" will not be proceeded with? Will he commit himself to not conducting the interviews he proposed to conduct with selected journalists and selected media in advance of the report being made public? Will he today say that the process is important, and abandon this plan to blatantly manipulate the media and the Canadian public?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, obviously the process is important, and when the Government comes to terms with its recommendations for broadcasting strategy, it will want to lay those recommendations before Parliament for due consideration. As to communication plans, as I indicated before, there is no final decision by Cabinet on these matters. Obviously, from time to time, the Minister of Communications, as do other Ministers, does give speeches outlining his vision of how he sees things evolving. I will continue to do so and will be pleased to brief an obviously out of touch Tory caucus on the subject, at their convenience.

TAXATION OF CABLE COMPANIES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I did not use the phrase "communications plan", but it happens to be the title of Appendix C to the Minister's proposal.

The Minister is considering rejecting certain portions of what he earlier proposed to Cabinet. May I ask him, Madam Speaker, a question about the six and five program of which the Government is so proud? The Minister in August proposed an 8 per cent tax on cable companies. In October he proposed a six per cent tax on cable companies, which would put the cable subscriber revenues above the six and five program. May I ask the Minister this question: in a time of restraint why does he propose to increase taxes on Canadians? Why does he propose to use those revenues through a Government-administered program to create Canadian programming? Will he now abandon that proposal and understand that the best way to create Canadian content and Canadian television programming is greater tax incentives for the Canadian private sector which can do a better job, in any event?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, obviously, as far as this Minister is concerned, my position on the six and five program is quite clear. I can think of the Bell Canada rate regulations which were brought into effect in late summer, in the course of limiting increases by cable companies of the rates charged to their clients. Where the Hon. Member is absolutely right is that on this side of the House we are indeed most interested in seeing the private sector participate fully in setting up a viable, dynamic, aggressive Canadian program production industry.

MULTICULTURALISM

REPORT OF FILES ON ETHNIC LEADERS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. In view of the news report in today's Toronto Star that the Government of Quebec keeps secret files on ethnic leaders and groups in the Province of Quebec, will the Minister advise whether he is aware of this, and will he condemn out of hand this very reprehensible practice?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I have just become aware through that newspaper report of this apparent collection of confidential information regarding ethnic leaders in Quebec. Of course I condemn such activity. The federal Government would not do anything like this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: I checked to ensure that there is no such list of ethnic leaders or any compilation of material on their backgrounds or political interests.

Mr. Prud'homme: Ten o'clock.

PIPELINES

PROPOSED WATER PIPELINE FROM LAKE DIEFENBAKER TO REGINA, SASK.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the proposed water pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to the Buffalo Pound pumping station. On October 27 the Prime Minister, in response to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, stated in the House that the federal Government would be anxious to discuss the pipeline with the Province of Saskatchewan if the Province considers the pipeline a priority. This past weekend one of his Ministers met with the Minister of Finance for Saskatchewan. Can the Prime Minister tell the House if the pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker was discussed, if the Saskatchewan Government considers the pipeline a priority, and if we can expect an announcement soon that the project will proceed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I imagine the Hon. Member is referring to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I do know he had very successful meetings with five of his counterparts in the Provinces. As a matter of fact he gave a general report this morning to a committee of Cabinet, indicating a very welcome willingness on the part of those Provinces to join with the federal Government in implementing certain joint projects. He did not give any details that would permit me to answer that particular question right now. I will refer .he matter to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and take notice for him on his behalf.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, it is somewhat dismaying, and in fact the people of Regina are becoming somewhat angry with the procrastinations of both the federal Government and the provincial Government on this issue. Regina and Moose Jaw desperately need good, clean safe water. There is an obvious need for it. In this particular project, both business and the unions are willing to co-operate. The company is willing to sell the steel at cost. The City of Regina is committed to the project. Over 600 jobs will be created in the manufacturing of the pipe. Some 570 new jobs will be created in laying the pipe—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question or does he have other figures to give us?

Mr. de Jong: My question is very simple. Can the Prime Minister give any assurance to those workers in Regina that there will be some prospect of employment before Christmas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just answered the question of the Hon. Member in so far as that particular project is concerned. I told him that many projects had been discussed with five different Provinces and I do not have the answer to that. I undertook to take notice of the question. It seems passing strange that the Hon. Member would make such a case for urgent action in an important provincial capital that does not have clean water when an NDP government held sway in that province for the past eight years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINES AND MINING

RELEASE OF TASK FORCE REPORT ON MINING COMMUNITIES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Mines. Twice in the last two days the Minister of State for Mines has made reference to the task force report on mining communities, of which she released the executive summary and recommendations at a press conference yesterday to which she did not invite Opposition spokesmen in the mining areas. As it is quite probable that the report of the task force on mining communities makes specific reference to the mining industry of northern Quebec, and as it would probably offer much constructive advice in addition to the final recommendations on how the Government might help restore hope for those disappointed people in Schefferville, Quebec, is the Minister now prepared to release the entire report so that all Members of Parliament might study it, deliberate upon the findings of the task force that visited northern Quebec, and determine if in fact the federal Government is fulfilling its duty to meet the serious crisis developing in that area?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker, the entire report will be released shortly.

ASSISTANCE FOR SCHEFFERVILLE MINERS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I suggest that as the Minister has extracted from that report she should table it today, and I hope she will do so. The Minister earlier referred to the positive and very helpful initiatives that the Iron Ore Company is taking to relieve the desperation to be experienced by the several hundred residents of Schefferville who will have to relocate and find alternate employment as a result of the closing of their mine. Indeed, the President of the Iron Ore Company, Mr. Brian Mulroney, has been courteous enough to provide the Leader of this Party and other Members of this House with a detailed outline of the proposals that they are making to minimize the burden on their employees. The interesting thing about this documentation—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will please ask his question right away.

Mr. Siddon: This statement makes specific requests of the federal Government—

Madam Speaker: Order. I have to ask the Hon. Member to put his question right away.

Mr. Siddon: Will the Minister respond to these specific requests advanced by the Iron Ore Company for federal assistance to the ailing mine workers of Schefferville, Quebec?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member was not listening when I first responded to a question in this House. The answer is yes, every federal program will be made available to those workers in the Schefferville area. In fact that area has already been designated an ILAP area, so there are extra measures available to them.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSION RECOMMENDATION MADE BY UNITED VETERANS ORGANIZATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In June of this year the Minister said that he was giving very active consideration to the recommendation made by the United Veterans Organization which would ensure that veterans' pension increases would reflect the greater of the CPI or the average increase given to the five lowest categories of civil servants. When is the Minister going to present the necessary legislative changes to Section 58 of the Pension Act so that veterans will be spared the task of going cap-in-hand to the Governement for their annual increases?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have never considered the question of the veterans' association approaching my Ministry or the Government as cap in hand. As I indicated in June, we are reviewing the recommendation that has been put forward. I might suggest to the Hon. Member that, as a result of the very responsive action by this Government in maintaining the true cost of living adjustments for veterans' pensions over the next couple of years, in fact not only will veterans' pensions keep in line with the five categories of the Public Service but in some cases will surpass them, as is the situation in some cases at the moment. I can also indicate that we still have that matter under consideration and, just as soon as a decision is made, I will be happy to advise him.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, has the Minister had any discussions with the Government House Leader as to when he can fit this veterans' legislation into our schedule for this year? It would be appropriate if we dealt with it this year. It is not a contentious issue. All that is required is one speaker from each Party. Has the Minister had any discussions with the Government House Leader?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The answer is no, Madam Speaker.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DEFINITION OF LETTER—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. The Minister is aware that the definition of "letter" and its amendments has been referred to the Governor in Council for deliberation. He is also aware that some 300 briefs were presented by Canadian business organizations opposed to that definition, and which still oppose it even with the amendments.

• (1450)

In light of the Prime Minister's call for trust and co-operation, is the Minister prepared to trust those 300 business organizations, and is he willing to co-operate with the two Parties on this side of the House, deny that definition, and refer the whole issue to a Committee of all Parties of the House?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the matter is now being considered by Cabinet.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, we on this side are used to getting the answer that the Minister would refer the whole matter to the President of the Corporation for his consideration. I am surprised that we did not get that this time as well.

Surely the Minister is aware of the tremendous cost burden being borne by corporations, small business, municipalities and individuals because of this definition, which definition will cause more bankruptcies and loss of jobs. I fail to see why the Minister cannot refer this matter to a committee, or what he has to lose by doing so.

If the Minister wants to refer to the President of the Corporation, Madam Speaker, I ask whether he is prepared to put his resignation on a piece of paper and refer that to the President of the Corporation for his consideration?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am surprised at the rhetoric being displayed by the hon. critic for the Canada Post Corporation. If he had read the Act, he would realize that all regulations must first be made public through publication in the Canada Gazette, to give the public an opportunity to react to the proposals within sixty days following publication. After representations by the public, the Corporation may amend its proposal before the end of the 60-day period. That is what happened, and now everything has been submitted to cabinet, where the proposal must be either accepted or rejected. This procedure was agreed to unanimously by all members of this House, and since the official critic of the Progressive Conservative Party at the time was strongly in favour of the procedure, I am surprised that the party has now changed its mind. The procedure followed by the Canada Post Corporation is entirely in accordance with the legislation passed by this Parliament.

AGRICULTURE

UNITED STATES BAN ON MEAT IMPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the lower prices for beef cattle this year at fall sales, can the Minister say what action he plans to take in light of the United States ban on Canadian meat imports?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we knew that the U.S. would cut off imports when we reached 121.1 million pounds, and we reached that quicker than we thought. We discussed it with the Canada Meat Packers Council and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. It is because of the heavy imports from Australia and other Oceanic sources that they were going to trigger their meat import law, but through negotiations we were able to raise the limit from 101 million pounds to 121 million pounds.

It will affect some packing firms in Canada, but live cattle are still free to go into the United States. The restriction is on carcass meat and broken beef.

FISHERIES

PEARSE COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION TO REDUCE FLEET

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I would like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. A report entitled "Turning the Tide", into the west coast fishing industry by Dr. Peter Pearse, has proposed that the fishing fleet be reduced by 50 per cent. A reduction of that nature would throw 5,000 fishermen out of work and affect many thousands of others in the industry.

Is it the intention of this Government to create another rationalized industry such as the mining, forest and manufacturing industries, and will the Prime Minister give some guarantee that in order to rationalize this industry we are not again placing the blame on the fishing community itself?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Government of Canada take very seriously their responsibility to rationalize the fishing industry on both the West Coast and the East Coast. As the Hon. Member knows, a major report on both coasts is now before the Government and currently under consideration. I want to assure the Hon. Member, who is very much interested in the fishery on both coasts, as I know from many conversations with him, that before any action resulting in restructuring is taken, as the Hon. Member says—perhaps too dramatic a word at this time—there will be consultation with the Hon. Member, with the public, and this kind of action would have to result in legislation in this House of Commons.

I would just say the Minister is available—

Mr. Crosbie: Where?

Mr. Tobin: —to discuss with Hon. Members opposite the report on both coasts.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, again to the Prime Minister, the office of Minister of Fisheries and Oceans indicated he would be in the House yesterday and today to answer questions. He has not been available in the last two days.

If the recommendations in this report were implemented it would mean the loss of 5,000 jobs in the fishing industry, and perhaps 20,000 or 30,000 associated jobs considering the associated manufacturing, ship repair, shore work, and the well-being of coastal communities such as Alert Bay, Tofino, Bamfield, and Prince Rupert. Is that the kind of proposal we are going to get on the East Coast as well, which would indicate this Government is not concerned with jobs or with coastal communities and the lifestyle they have enjoyed?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I want to assure all Hon. Members opposite that this Government is concerned with preserving the fishery, the way of life and the cultural aspects of the fishery on both the East and the West Coast. I further want to tell the Hon. Member that, rather than a negative attitude, he should remember that to do nothing at this time on the West Coast or the East Coast, that simply to sit back and debate forever with the resulting inaction because of partisan politics on this issue, would be a disaster for our people on both coasts. We intend to act responsibly, Madam Speaker, and we intend to listen, even to the Hon. Member opposite.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF TAX INCENTIVES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As Statistics Canada has just reported that industrial production in Canada has declined by 13 per cent between June, 1981, and August, 1982, by far the most disastrous decline of any of the 16 principal industrialized countries of the world, would the Prime Minister and his Government now at long last give serious consideration to introducing tax incentives to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity and research and development, to lower costs and thereby lower selling prices, and improve quality and design?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member realizes in his ardent search for methods to increase our productivity that tax incentives would mean once again increasing the budget deficit, and that of course is a policy contrary to that adopted by his Party. That is why, at this stage, I would not comment on such a suggestion which involves a fiscal decision properly dealt with in the budget.

However, I would remind the Hon. Member that by adopting the six and five policy the Government has taken a very large step, supported I would think by a great majority of Canadians, to decrease our cost structure and therefore make ourselves more productive and therefore more competitive with OECD countries and others.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not realize that such a program, enabling Canadians to sell a far greater volume of goods and thereby employ a far greater number of people, would do three things? First, it would cut down greatly on unemployment insurance payments; second, more people would be working and paying income tax and, third, cutting down costs would make more profits to tax. This would be a plus for the Government and not a minus.

In light of the Prime Minister's cavalier attitude toward this question of increasing productivity, I would ask him, in view of the fact that the only suggestion he put forward for saving the country was to trust each other, if he believes that Canadians will trust someone who fought a whole election campaign against wage and price controls, remember—"zap . . . you're frozen"—and right after the election brought in those same price and wage controls.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is making a good case, of course, for increasing the deficit in the hope that eventually—

Mr. Hees: No, this is—

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am dealing with the Hon. Member's question. He wants to reduce taxes in certain areas and I am telling him that this would mean increasing the deficit. He will recall the 1979 election campaign, when we heard a great deal about the stimulative deficit. I am sure that is what the Hon. Member has in mind. He would like the Government to consider increasing the deficit even more in the hope that—

Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member shakes his head "no".

Mr. Hees: What I said was that you would reduce the deficit by reducing the number of unemployed, thereby increasing taxes.

Mr. Trudeau: I would like to have the Hon. Member explain how you can cut taxes and not increase the deficit. When he does that I will be prepared to deal with the question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SIDDON—RESPONSE OF MRS. EROLA DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, after the Question Period yesterday I gave notice that I would wish to raise a question of privilege today under the provisions of Standing Order 17, arising out of an answer given to a question I put to the Minister of State (Mines) (Mrs. Erola) at that time.

The question to which I would draw your attention is recorded at page 20232 of Hansard. In reviewing the transcript of the Hon. Minister's response, I think there are two aspects that demand your examination. I should like to lay those out as succintly and briefly as I can.

The first point relates to the response the hon. lady gave to the question whether she was prepared to support the request for subsidy or stock-piling initiatives in order to keep the Inco mine operating. In her reply the Minister stated as follows:

> Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member was not present this morning when the Task Force on Mining Communities made its report.

Further along in her reply the Minister also stated as follows:

> If the Hon. Member had been present this morning he would have known that we were discussing job creation projects—

The implication of those two statements is that I, as a Member of this House, should have been made aware of a meeting at which she was present; indeed, a meeting which the Hon. Minister called of her own volition apparently on Monday morning, about which none of the offices of Opposition spokesmen were made aware. No notice was sent to my office. It was not a meeting that was widely advertised. The implication is—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member tell me what his question of privilege is? I have read his notice very carefully and I see nothing in it that would lead me to feel that he has a question of privilege. He has to tell me right away exactly what constitutes the question of privilege. If it is that he objects to what the Hon. Minister has said, as he knows, that is not a question of privilege. A lot of things are said in the House to which Hon. Members object, but they are not questions of privilege.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I beg your indulgence for a moment. There are two aspects to the question of privilege. I will summarize the first aspect immediately.

The point is the implication in the Minister's reply that I, as an Opposition spokesman in the area of mines, was negligent in not being aware of, or present at, a certain meeting that she called. That implication of negligence reflects adversely on the exercise of my duties and responsibilities in the service of my constituents. In fact, Madam Speaker, it is typical of the way she has been responding to questions in the House. I feel that the Hon. Minister means well, but far too often she is wont to give a flippant and specious response to try to put down the questioner without dealing with the question.

I appreciate that this aspect may not be acceptable to you and I will accept your ruling.

I want to move to the second point in my question of privilege. This relates to the Minister's reference to the Task Force on Mining Communities having made its report. In fact, Madam Speaker, as I probed the Minister earlier during Question Period today, it makes one wonder why there was no report released yesterday but only the executive summary of such a report and a list of recommendations. The important question of privilege is whether the Minister has misled the House into believing that in fact the report was presented, from which she either cited or excerpted certain content in order to support her argument.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid I must interrupt the Hon. Member because I can see that he is going into an argumentation about the satisfaction he has about an answer, the manner in which the Hon. Minister answered him and the kind of implications that were possibly included in the Minister's answer. He might have been insulted or aggrieved by it, but that does not constitute a question of privilege. A question of privilege has to do with the Hon. Member being absolutely unable to perform his functions as a Member as a result of some action that might have taken place. I am afraid that the Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege. I have heard the two points.

Mr. Siddon: You have not heard the second point.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, on that question of privilege, I am the mining critic for the New Democratic Party and I feel that my privilege has been breached as well. If the committee structure is going to work efficiently and properly, we must be notified that these meetings are going to take place.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. That could be a grievance and the Hon. Member is probably right in expressing it, but he cannot do so under the guise of a question of privilege.

PETITIONS

MR. GURBIN—SHIFT IN MANUFACTURERS' SALES TAX

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I would like to present a petition on behalf of residents of Ontario, many of whom reside in my constituency of Bruce-Grey.

At a time when Canadians face serious economic distress, inflation runs rampant and governments' share of the gross national product is approximately 45 per cent—higher than at any time since World War II—it is inappropriate for additional taxation of several billions of dollars to be imposed. Notwithstanding the Minister of Finance's recent deferral and in response to his stated desire for further assessment with possible future imposition, on behalf of Canadian businessmen and consumers this petition requests the Government to cancel the proposal to shift the federal sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level.

MR. RIIS—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege today of presenting to the House a petition signed by nearly 2,000 constituents who are so concerned about the state of the Canadian economy that they are asking Parliament to urge the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) to ask the Governor General for the dissolution of Parliament in order that a general election may be held.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—WEST COAST WORK STOPPAGE—REQUEST PROPOSED LEGISLATION BE TABLED

Madam Speaker: Introduction of Bills.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, under this item of Routine Proceedings may I ask the Government House Leader whether he is prepared to table now the back-to-work legislation which the Prime Minister has just finished telling us is ready. Would he table it now so that Members on this side of the House will have an opportunity to see what it contains? Indeed, the Prime Minister has already partially told us what it contains and this raises the question of whether there is an obligation to table that legislation now.

• (1510)

In any event, we do not want to deal with notice. We would like to see the legislation, and for our part we give the Government whatever consent is necessary to enable it to table the legislation immediately. We are certain that in the same spirit of co-operation the New Democratic Party will also consent to that process.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not think the Government needs consent to do it, but if it wants to table the legislation, I would like to see it.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that we do not intend to table a bill before giving notice. However, the Hon. Member's suggestion seems quite reasonable. I intend to have a meeting with the House leaders within the next few hours, when we could consider the request for tabling the legislation in advance. However, I do not intend to table the bill before giving notice, and notice has not yet been given.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it would appear that the only House leader not agreeing to the immediate tabling of this vital legislation is the Government House Leader. We need no meetings to agree to the immediate tabling of this very urgent and vital legislation: he has that agreement now. Obviously he has it from the NDP House Leader, so why can he not table it now? The Prime Minister says that it is ready.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, draft legislation arising from the last budgets was tabled and submitted to the two House leaders in order to simplify negotiations, and this has had no positive effects whatsoever. In the circumstances, a few hours more or less . . . I informed the Hon. Member that we wish to respect the practice in this House of giving prior notice and subsequently discussing with the House leaders whether there is a case for tabling legislation in advance. I informed him that his suggestion was quite sensible. I am prepared to consider it, and I intend to meet with the House leaders later today. If the Hon. Member is saying that he is not interested in having a meeting, that is something else again, but as far as I am concerned, I shall be inviting him to a meeting later today, some time within the next few hours.

S.O. 26

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a request for a debate under Standing Order 26 from the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer).

WEST COAST WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I seek leave to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), to debate a specific and important matter which I believe all Canadians would agree requires immediate consideration, namely, the work stoppage at the Port of Vancouver and at other ports on the west coast.

Since October 19 this work stoppage has had, and continues to have, a serious and negative effect on the total Canadian economy; it is not simply isolated to the west coast. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said some six days ago that he intended to see that the ports on the west coast were operating today. We now know that the Government—or at least it appears so—does not intend to introduce legislation today. Thus the strike or the work stoppage will continue. Last Friday the Finance Minister said that he would move quickly to see that the work stoppage is concluded.

This truly is a national emergency. Our national institution is Parliament. I urge you, Madam Speaker, to recognize that it is a national emergency and that Parliament be allowed to address this very important issue. I separate Parliament and the Government, in that we be allowed under the provisions of Standing Order 26 to use the parliamentary system to attempt to convince the Government that it should accept its responsibility to all Canadians to ensure that this very unfortunate and foolish work stoppage on the west coast ceases. Both parties, labour and management, are purported to have said that they would accept back-to-work legislation.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, if you find this application for a debate acceptable, I would be very pleased to move the appropriate motion at the appropriate time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Of course, the House will recall that I had a similar request on Thursday, October 28, and that at that time I came to the conclusion that in spite of the obvious importance of the impact of this particular situation on the country, I could not allow an emergency debate under Standing Order 26 because there was an opportunity to discuss this question under the different proceedings taking place in the House.

Those circumstances have not changed. As a matter of fact, they are quite similar. This afternoon we will be discussing the borrowing Bill, and Hon. Members know that yesterday they could have discussed the question in the course of the day reserved for the Opposition. Also there will be on next Friday another supply day set aside so that the Opposition may take the opportunity to discuss that particular question. We all know that some legislation is impending.

Therefore, I cannot escape the conclusion that there was an opportunity yesterday and that there will be an opportunity tomorrow and this afternoon to discuss this particular matter. I remind Hon. Members that the Chair is concerned with the urgency of the debate, not at all with the substance of the matter or the urgency of a settlement in the matter. Only the urgency of the debate concerns the Chair. Obviously Hon. Members will be able to debate the question. I am sorry to say that under the circumstances I cannot allow an emergency debate on this very important matter today.

"O CANADA OUR NATIONAL ANTHEM" CARD

Question No. 4,314—Mr. Neil:

1. Did the Department of the Secretary of State discontinue distribution of the card "O Canada Our National Anthem" because it showed the name of the former rather than the present Secretary of State of Canada and, if so, how many copies remain in stock?

2. What disposition will be made of the copies and, if they are to be destroyed, what will be the cost of such destruction to the taxpayer?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): 1. The Department of the Secretary of State continued to distribute copies of the card entitled "O Canada—Our National Anthem", showing the name of the former minister, for a period of six months following the change of Ministers. This caused some confusion for the general public and resulted in subsequent requests for the card being directed to the office of the Honourable Francis Fox, Minister of Communications.

2. In March, 1982, the remaining stock of 146,590 cards was transferred to the Department of Communications, for use in responding to enquiries directed there.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to look into a question which I placed on the Order Paper a year ago. The question reads:

Did the (a) Minister of Supply and Services (b) Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (c) Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development take a Jetstar flight to Winnipeg for the official opening of General Aluminum Forgings Incorporated—

It seems that a year is ample time in which to research a question such as this one. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secreatry would check into it.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be happy to look into that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he could check the reason for the delay in answering question No. 3,750, which I placed on the Order Paper on February 9, 1982, concerning the Canadian practice of hiring local staff at our embassies in Communist countries. To date I have received no answer. Given the seriousness of the matter for national security and for the well-being of visitors at our embassies in eastern Europe, I was wondering why the Government is not more forthcoming.

At the same time I would also like to know the reason for the delay in answering question No. 4,178 which has been on the Order Paper since March 25, 1982, concerning the RCMP policy for paid informers.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be happy to look into both these matters on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Friday, October 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-128, to provide supplementary borrowing authority (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to resume the debate on the borrowing authority Bill which was introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) at the time of the presentation of his financial statement. Just prior to ending my remarks on Friday, I was indicating that there was a definite procedure and process being followed by the Government in the discussion by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with the people on television, moving to the financial statement of the Minister of Finance to set the stage, give the people the facts and put the information before them.

That would then be followed, of course, by a Speech from the Throne which would set the general policy thrust of the Government over the coming session of Parliament. That would be followed, as the Minister of Finance has already indicated, by a budget very early on in the new year to set forward specific policies implementing the policy thrust set out in the Speech from the Throne.

When I concluded those remarks last Friday I then proceeded to analyse some ideas that were placed before this House during this period of debate on the borrowing authority bill. Specifically, I was very interested in the comments put forward by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). Apart from the issues put forward by the Minister of Finance in his financial statement, they are really the only concrete alternative proposals put forward by the Opposition Parties concerning other policy prescriptions which could be followed by Government and which might provide some relief and respite for the Canadian people. I had intended to discuss these points very briefly in an objective way, trying to be non-partisan in analysing what it was the Leader of the New Democratic Party had put forward. I had intended to look at these from the perspective of their potential to resolve the problems facing the country today.

I will do that now in two ways. First is the proposal that the Government should introduce new job creation to the extent of $2.2 billion, to be financed by raising the taxes of the so-called rich, and also by cutting expenditures in other areas, if I am not mistaken. Some of those areas were laid out by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

In my reading of tax policy and the financial figures over the last several years, the amount of money that it was indicated would be available from a tax on the rich was, I believe, $1.1 billion, if all people earning over $40,000 per year were subjected to a 5 per cent surtax. As the Minister of Finance has pointed out, my analysis of the figures indicates that those figures are quite high. I would think that an order of magnitude of half of that is what is possible, although I would like to see the figures before I make a final judgment.

Mr. Riis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is rising not from his seat and, therefore, cannot be recognized.

Mr. Riis: Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the Hon. Member changed his seat?

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, six months ago I moved to this seat.

My point of order concerns a point which the Hon. Member was making involving a surtax which the New Democratic Party has suggested be placed on individual income earners receiving in excess of $40,000. We suggested that a 2 per cent surtax to be placed on those making $40,000 to $50,000 annually be graduated upwards so that people making $200,000 plus would be paying 9 per cent additional tax. Perhaps the Hon. Member in his calculations has not allowed for this graduated increase and that is why his figures differ somewhat from my leader's.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for the clarification he has just made. I will factor the information into my calculations. Moving up the income scale, the number of people affected obviously declines dramatically as income rises. If, in fact, that balancing of 2 per cent on $40,000 to $50,000, increasing to 9 per cent, is correct, I would expect that rather than increasing the volume of revenue it would actually decrease the volume of revenue. However, I will check into that and talk to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on that point.

Some analysis has been made to the effect that if the Government were to tax every dime of income over $30,000 in this country, in any one year it would amount to somewhere in the range of $400 per man, woman and child. If we are talking about taxing the rich to solve all our problems that, I am afraid, is illusory. I am afraid that kind of policy would cut off incentive and entrepreneurship completely, which would mean that the revenue expected probably could not be realized.

More importantly, even if you impose a 100 per cent surtax on everything over $30,000, the amount you would get is about $400 per man, woman and child. Therefore, there is not that much revenue to be had, contrary to the point put forward and what some would have us believe about the vast wealth, in terms of income flow in any one year, of those who are termed to be rich.

Another interesting point that was raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party concerned a new kind of industrial policy which would be put forward. This concept is quite new for the New Democratic Party; certain firms chosen to be the industries of the future—I think that is putting it fairly—would receive tax breaks. In other words, those firms would pay a lower tax rate than the general corporate citizens in our country and all of those who are not considered to be industries of the future or industries that generate long-term, good jobs for Canadians would be subject to the equivalent of a surtax. Their tax would rise. The rate would go from 36 per cent federal to 46 per cent or 48 per cent federal, and if you factor in both federal and provincial taxes, a tax rate of about 62 per cent or 63 per cent would result on all of those corporations not deemed to be industries of the future; that is not worthly of encouragement.

I can guarantee that many of those firms that we are talking about as those that might not be the big firms or the potential firms of the future are indeed the high labour content firms. They are the pulp and paper firms, the footwear firms, the textile firms, perhaps firms in the automobile industry and firms in some other industries which have a very high labour-to-capital ratio.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party is saying that his party would increase taxes on firms with a very high labour content. As a result of having a high labour content in a country with high wage rates relative to some underdeveloped countries, these firms would be on the decline in Canada. The number of capital intensive firms would be on the rise in Canada and the number of labour intensive firms would tend to be on the decline because of competition from low labour cost firms in low labour cost countries. Therefore, increasing the tax rate on those firms which now employ a large number of people would simply speed up the process of their demise. This would result in a great many people being thrown out of work in order to encourage another group of firms that would probably be more capital intensive in nature. Perhaps not, but at least they would be more capital intensive than the firms being penalized by the higher tax rate. That to me indicates an interesting change of strategy from the point of view of what has traditionally been the position of the New Democratic Party.

There is another point on this particular topic that I would like to discuss. In the past this Party, our Government, has been criticized very strongly for introducing what the Hon. Member for Oshawa has called loopholes, which are nothing more than tax incentives to encourage firms to invest and create jobs in the traditional sense. I think Hon. Members from the Conservative Party are agreeing, nodding their heads, smiling and looking for more.

Mr. Kempling: They are laughing.

• (1530)

Mr. Evans: The point is that the appropriateness of providing selective incentives has been a contentious issue among Members in the House of different Parties. Personally, I do not like selective incentives. I think that it is more appropriate to have lower tax rates than selective incentives. However, we are not discussing that argument at this point.

Let us consider the incentive issue. The New Democratic Party has traditionally been opposed to selective incentives which would reward firms. That has not been a traditional position, as far as I know. However, we now find that their position has changed. Objectively speaking, it appears that there has been a rather dramatic change in policy which effectively proposes that incentives will be given to the firms which have the greatest probability of success in the future.

Incentives given to innovative and creative firms seem to me like reverse welfare. Who will be paying the heavier taxes? It will be those firms on their way out and that do not have a great future. Who will benefit from these incentives? It will be the firms which do have a great future and which have an opportunity to make a great deal of money and generate a great deal of wealth. It seems to me that we are talking about taking form the poor to give to the rich at the corporate level. That is not a policy which has traditionally been held by the New Democratic Party.

Apparently what is being requested is a replacement of those tax incentives which have traditionally been accepted by the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party, when it was in power, by those types of tax incentives which now happen to be in favour with the New Democratic Party. There does not seem to be any great difference in policy or philosophy in this case. It is simply a matter of deciding which firms with the greatest future will be rewarded with tax incentives. That seems to be the thrust of their suggestion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would it be appropriate to clarify a point which the Hon. Member has obviously misstated?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Hon. Member, he will have an opportunity to participate in the debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre should be permitted to continue his speech.

Mr. Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Frankly, if we were to change the rules of the House to allow interchanges such as this, I think it would be a great stride forward for Parliament. While I am giving a speech such as this, I could perhaps speak for 10 or 15 minutes and Hon. Members opposite could then ask questions and I would have an obligation to answer those questions. I would be much more careful about what I said, as more Members in the House would be. It would lead to a much more illuminating debate for those watching on television, or reading—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the procedures of the House and the procedures of Committee of the Whole do allow for that kind of exchange. The Hon. Member must realize that perhaps at a later stage of this bill there will be a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I really was not asking you a question, but I am glad that you decided to enter the debate in any event.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Evans: There is no disrespect intended, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that it is beneficial to debate what is being proposed by other Members in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, put forward some proposals. I have given my reaction to those proposals and I hope that other Members will feel free to give their reaction also, just as they feel free to comment on the proposals and decisions made by the Minister of Finance in his recent financial statement. I hope that some Members of the Conservative Party will introduce some positive proposals that can be analysed and debated in the House in this same manner.

Before I discuss some points which I think are important about the statement by the Minister of Finance, I must first give credit to the previous Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), for the changes which he brought about in the green paper on the budgetary process. He has made this process more open and has provided for consultation on economic policies to a much greater extent than has ever taken place before. This greater consultation has been taking place during his tenure and is being continued very successfully by the current Minister of Finance. I believe that the former Minister of Finance has done a great thing for Parliament and for Government by introducing a much more open process. I suggest that history will thank him for introducing those innovations in the budgetary process and for improving the consultative environment which we have seen taking place. That environment has dramatically improved in the last year, and in recent months in particular.

I was most pleased with the Minister of Finance's introductory remarks on page 3 of his statement which dealt with the basic principles of economic management which he indicated he intended to follow as Minister of Finance. When one reads and understands the six principles laid out by the Minister in his statement, I believe that Canadians and Members of Parliament will be able clearly to understand his intentions, his priorities and what we may expect from him in the future.

I acknowledge that we have a terrible unemployment problem in Canada. While we must give our utmost attention to this extremely serious dilemma, we must acknowledge that some progress is certainly being made on other fronts. For example, declining inflation surely must be a positive sign for the investment climate and for consumer confidence in this country. The annualized year over year rate is 10.4 per cent, which is down considerably from what it was in earlier months. More importantly, when one considers inflation during the last three months, one sees that the annualized rate of inflation for the three-month period of July, August and September in Canada is 6.6 per cent. This downward trend has been continuing for some time now. It represents great progress and I believe it is reason for us to have some confidence that we have, in fact, finally got a grip on the inflation problem. I suggest we will see even greater progress in the future.

The fact that interest rates have dropped dramatically indicates that the market agrees with this assessment. In fact, interest rates have dropped for 11 consecutive weeks and we hope they will continue to drop in the coming weeks. That assessment of the market shows that Government action and market actions generally are in the process of bringing inflation under control in Canada. It must certainly be seen as a very positive sign.

However, that does not let us ignore the fact that we have a very serious unemployment problem and that we must deal with the fundamentals of that problem. Certainly we must make funds available for job creation in the short term in order to help those unemployed during this very difficult transition period. But the ultimate solution to the unemployment problem will result from improvements in the investment climate, the economic structure and world markets. It is fallacious and cruel to suggest to Canadians that Government action alone, whether Liberal, Conservative, NDP or Social Credit, could eradicate the unemployment problem by a simple wave of a magic wand. That will not happen. The unemployment problem will be with us for some time to come. Governments by themselves will not be able to solve the problem. This includes federal, provincial and municipal Governments.

The unemployment problem must be solved through a regeneration of growth and prosperity within the economy generally and a regeneration of growth and prosperity outside of Canada where the markets are for the vast resources that we mine and mill for sale elsewhere. The markets for the forest products industry, the mining industry and the pulp and paper industry are not primarily here in Canada. Those are export products. When our export markets are down, when other countries are not buying our goods, it makes absolutely no sense to follow the suggestion that we subsidize continued production and stockpile, building inventories that cost money. It costs money to produce, the money would have to be borrowed, and the interest charges on the borrowed money would certainly add to the cost burden of government which is shared and carried by the taxpayers. That kind of policy would mean vast stockpiling of produced goods that we could sell abroad, but when the markets do recover the people who were working at that point would not have to work because we would be able to sell from our vast inventories. Stockpiling large quantities of raw materials would simply mean that the kind of employment recovery which comes along with a general economic recovery would not happen because we would have vast inventories from which we could sell to the market for years to come.

It does not seem to be a very innovative or realistic policy because all we would be doing would be easing some of the unemployment burden today and shifting it into the future. Certainly those people who are working in the mines in two or three years from now would have to contend with the existence of these huge inventories. It would be a very dangerous strategy to subsidize miners and forest workers to produce goods, for which there is no current market, in anticipation that such market would appear once again at some time in the future, as suggested by some Hon. Members. It is simply not a strategy which is realistic at this time.

I believe our unemployment problem will be long-term. We will have to contend with it, not so much by trying to keep people at work in existing jobs where there are rising questions as to the future viability of the industries for which they work, but rather, by looking further than that and considering new skills programs, such as that brought forward several months ago by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

We must ask ourselves, "Where is the future for employment in this country? How can we move people from industries where the future simply does not exist for Canada?" It may exist for some southeast Asian country which has very low labour costs, or for a South American country, but it certainly does not exist for a country such as Canada with relatively high labour costs. We must look to those industries and ask ourselves how we can help the people working in those industries to move to other industries which have a comparative advantage for Canada. That will not be done by Government alone. There will not be a situation where the Government can state: "These are the cities of the future; this is where we will put all the money". It does not seem that that proposition would be valid.

I am not being in any way derogatory of my colleagues in the House or my friends who work in the Public Service who have some great insight as to where the future lies. If the Government were to take on the role and responsibility of defining where the prosperous future lies, it would place great risks on the backs of the taxpayers. I think the marketplace has performed that function very well in the past.

Government should act as a catalytic agent to assist the market in moving people from where the jobs are declining to areas where they are increasing. I believe we can do this through labour, management and Government task forces which would give us a better view as to where our skills and training programs should be focused. We could do it that way, but I would be very reluctant to see the Government go it alone and try to define what the future will be. Those governments, whether they be federal, provincial, Canadian or foreign, which have tried that kind of approach in the past have generally wound up in a very dismal state within a few years. They have certainly picked some winners, but over time they have picked many more losers, and those losers have become a great portfolio which the taxpayers must drag along with them into the future. Quite frankly, I do not believe that is the way to go.

Members of Parliament are all very well intentioned and none of us has a corner on virtue or on a desire to help our constituents. Everyone is in the House because they want to help their constituents. They want to see the country grow, one which is better when they depart from public office than the one they inherited when they came into public office. I think all of us feel that way. To a large extent, I think we are doing ourselves a great disservice in the House from time to time because we carry on debate in a fashion which tends to be very partisan and rhetorical in an attempt to score political points. That kind of approach leads to an attitude on the part of our constituents that we are not behaving like adults. I do not believe there is one of us here who has not come back from the summer recess with the knowledge that constituents are asking, "What in the world are you doing in that House of Commons? You are not dealing with the serious problems that are crushing us. We want to see you behave in a diplomatic and statesmanlike fashion and come to grips with the problems in an objective way."

That is what we must do in this House of Commons. It is unrealistic and is misleading Canadians when they view Members who stand up in the House and say they have all the answers, and then provide a pie in the sky solution to the problems with which Canadians are grappling in their own lives, or build up hope that there is some kind of magic fairy godmother called Government which will come along and wave the magic wand and unemployment will disappear overnight.

Some Members say: "If only we were in power, Government would be so much more efficient and the problems would evaporate overnight". I do not mean that in a partisan sense. The fact is that no matter who is in power, the problems with us are real, fundamental and deeply rooted, and we will have to go through a period of very hard work as Parliamentarians and as a country in order to pull oursleves out of this situation.

That is precisely the message the Prime Minister was trying to deliver. He was not trying to put forward specific policy recommendations in his three evening speeches. He was trying to say that if we do not start to co-operate here in the House of Commons and, more generally, across the country, if we do not start to see some co-operation between Government and management, then we will not pull ourselves out of this situation. I would ask Hon. Members in the New Democratic Party, who probably have a much closer relationship with the labour movement than the other two major parties, to sit down with their colleagues at the leadership level of the labour movement to try to establish a more co-operative framework for discussion and dialogue.

We should try to develop the kind of national economic policy consensus whereby we can come together as Canadians, moving forward and taking the very hard, very real decisions which must be taken if we are to move into a period of rising living standards in the future. We should do that co-operatively, without the kind of animosity, anger and vitriol which has characterized discussions between those three centres of power in our country in the past. I would ask that all Members of Parliament join together in the committees and in the House to see if we cannot come together in a more co-operative, non-partisan environment to deal with the fundamental problems of this country on behalf of Canadians, as we were elected to do.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the words of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), I found that in some respects he tried to follow the same line as that taken by his leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), during his television speech some nights ago. He was trying to reassure the Canadian public that if we all work together, pull together, things will be better in the future. The one thing that most Members of Parliament found this summer in their constituencies—and if they do not admit it publicly, I suggest they do privately—is the one universal fact that most people realize that we are in a very serious economic situation, probably the worst recession since the Great Depression in the 1930s, and that there is no way, regardless of what political party is in power at this time, that we could have gotten out of the problem. In fact, Canada would not have escaped for a whole series of reasons, most of them well known to everyone.

However, what grates on most Canadians, certainly those in my constituency in southern Manitoba and, I suggest, in other constituencies as well, is the fact that the problem to an extent is of our own making through basically stupid Government policies over the last number of years, policies that have exacerbated the problem.

This is something, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think people are going to forget. It would be great if we could wipe the slate clean and say that it is all behind us now and we will march off in the sunset together to form a great nation. But people do not think that way and governments and countries do not work that way. I hope in my few short remarks I can demonstrate some of the problems that have brought us into this whole situation. There are some things very dear to many Canadian hearts, like the National Energy Program or the Foreign Investment Review Act. There has been a series of economic moves that have made us far worse off today than we were before.

Just how bad are things in Canada? We have a national unemployment rate that has reached a record 12.2 per cent which reflects the fact that 1,343,000 Canadians are out of work. In additon, 338,000 Canadians are working part-time because they cannot find full-time employment. The unemployment totals do not include the 96,000 people that are classified as discouraged workers, who have given up even looking for work because there are just no jobs available. I think we in the House of Commons are very fortunate to have jobs, although they may not all be that secure. Nevertheless, it is difficult for us to imagine the kind of frustration men and women at all levels of the labour force feel who find themselves out of work, when they have nothing to get up for in the morning, to look forward to. They have to depend on the Government through unemployment insurance to buy necessities; and as we get closer to Christmas, you cannot turn a television on without advertisements to buy newer, better, bigger things. That kind of human misery is incalculable.

In 1981 there were over 8,000 business bankruptcies across the country. Bankruptcies in 1981 were 22 per cent higher than in 1980 and 43 per cent higher than in 1979. We can see the kind of acceleration that is taking place there and it is going to get worse. Rural ridings right across the country are in a critical situation. In my own rural riding in southern Manitoba the agricultural community, which is by far the largest group in my constituency and the largest part of the activity generated in Manitoba, was hit with interest rates which nobody could understand or deal with. That, Mr. Speaker, coupled with the fact that we have agricultural prices generally across the board that in real terms are almost at depression levels, has caused hardships of a kind that I have not seen in southern Manitoba in many, many years. Of course, the communities in the rural parts of Canada are there because agriculture is there. If agriculture suffers, the communities, and the small businessmen who provide the services, suffer even worse.

As an example, corn is grown in large quantities now in Manitoba, parts of Ontario and Quebec. Last year prices were in the neighbourhood of $3.30-$3.40 a bushel. Now the price is $2.10 a bushel. It usually takes $2.50 a bushel to get your investment back. That is the kind of loss that agriculture is facing, and that is reflected throughout the whole food industry. The situation is more serious than it has ever been. That is not necessarily the fault of the Government. It is the fault of a large, world-wide grain crop, certainly in the United States and North America, that has not moved to market at the present time and does not look as if it will in the future. This double slap in the face to this segment of the population, of course, is causing all kinds of problems.

In the second quarter of 1982, Canadian manufacturers were operating at only 68 per cent of total capacity. That means, Mr. Speaker, some 32 per cent of the capacity in this country is sitting idle because of the kind of economic recession which has taken place. No wonder we have over one million Canadians out of work.

The value of building permits, as most people know, were down substantially in July, 1982 by 38 per cent compared to July of 1981. If inflation is taken into account, building activity is down almost 50 per cent over last year. The purchasing power of the 1971 dollar is now 37 cents; consumers, particularly housewives, know that the purchasing power of the dollar is down.

Part of our very serious situation has been brought on because of other economic factors which have taken place around the world, generally overspending by all levels of government in other countries. But that is only a portion of the Canadian problem because we have the situation where we find ourselves with a Liberal Government which has been almost continuously in power over the last decade and which has caused the problem to accelerate.

• (1600)

The Government is asking the country for permission to borrow another $4 billion. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated that total spending this year would be approximately $80 billion, $23.6 billion more than the Government will take in through revenues. He has even admitted that further borrowing authority may be required before the end of the fiscal year.

Let us translate that for ourselves as that is the only way that most Canadians can understand what is happening. It is very difficult to grasp the meaning of a figure as large as that. Eighty billion dollars is a lot of money. We know that if individually we spent more money than we took in, such as through our salary, we would all go broke. That is what appears to be happening. It appears that this country is going broke. We have a situation in which money is being borrowed to pay interest on money borrowed previously. Taken to its logical conclusion, it creates a frightening scenario.

In my opinion, there are at least four definite economic costs of continued deficit financing of the magnitude being pursued by the present Government. First, there is the ever growing interest burden. Interest on the debt this year will amount to $18 billion, the equivalent of about $700 for every man, woman and child in Canada or about $1,700 per taxpayer. That means that about one dollar in every three is being paid to the Government by taxpayers to service the national debt. For a family of four, that amounts to $2,800. That is what our national debt is costing us. It means there has been too much spending, too reckless spending, over a long period of time.

The second cost is a loss of fiscal flexibility. In the past, the Government had the option of undertaking costly and significant fiscal measures to spur the economy. Today there is no room to manoeuvre. We are locked in and can do very little. Literally all that can be done is what the Minister of Finance did the other night. It is the old shell game, moving the money around. It is trying to plug some small hole in the dike. I repeat, there is no room to manoeuvre. Unemployment, and the misery associated with it, will get worse in the coming winter.

The third cost is that productive private sector borrowing is crowded out and, consequently, interest rates rise. In the 1981 calendar year, federal Government borrowing accounted for about 44 per cent of the net new security issues placed in Canada. The figure this year will be higher. If there was less federal Government borrowing, there would be less demand for money and hence interest rates would be lower. Because of the tremendous demand created by federal Government borrowing in competition with other sectors, there is a tendency for interest rates possibly, but hopefully not, to start to rise again in the future. We have never had the magnitude of Government borrowing that we have at the present time.

The fourth cost is that of confidence. Possibly this is the toughest cost to overcome. The investment community do not trust a Government that continues to live so far beyond its means. They do not want to hold a currency that continues to be debased by excessive Government borrowing. As a consequence, the dollar has fallen, driving up the cost of living in Canada. Interest rates remain high as the Government attempts to support the dollar. Job-creating investment has gone elsewhere. Capital investment has gone elsewhere.

These are some of the economic costs of the deficit financing that Canadians are experiencing at the present time. In his recent economic statement, the Minister of Finance proposed to reallocate expenditures of $1.1 billion into several job-creating schemes, an exercise he called very difficult. If the Liberal Government had behaved in a financially responsible way for the last decade—and it has been in power almost continually in that period of time—there would be no need to borrow another $4 billion, no need to announce mere band-aid, job stimulation measures. That is not to say we would not be in a recession, that we would not be in trouble in terms of manufacturing or have the idle plant capacity I talked about, but we would not be in the present situation.

If wasteful Government spending had instead been used to encourage productivity, promote research and development and help place Canada on a more competitive footing with our foreign trading rivals, Canadians would not be suffering as much as they are today from the worst economic climate since the Great Depression. It is because of the billions of dollars wasted by this Government that the Liberals are here today in the House looking for more money. The money wasted could have been used to produce many stimulative and varied proposals. I would like to mention two or three in my remarks.

Early in the fall of 1981, the then Minister of Finance set an interest rate of 19.5 per cent on that year's offering of Canada Savings Bonds. To compound the mistake, he was obliged to offer the same rate to existing bond holders to prevent a wave of conversion from old bonds to new. Obviously the interest rate was very attractive. Soon after the offering was made, it became obvious that interest rates were declining and that the Government could easily have borrowed all it wanted at around 15 per cent.

This absurd blunder left Canadian taxpayers burdened with $25 billion in Savings Bonds debt at 19.5 per cent interest for a full year. The estimated cost of the interest alone was in the area of $4.9 billion. Because of a rash decision by the then Minister of Finance, at least $1 billion was wasted in paying inflationary and unnecessarily high interest rates.

In February, 1981 the federal Government purchased Petrofina for about $1.46 billion, or $120 per share. At the time of the purchase the shares were trading at about $90 per share. In other words, the federal Government paid between $365 million and $486 million more than was necessary.

To date spending by the federal Government on the metric conversion program exceeds some $65 million. Ever since metric conversion was first talked about, many people have felt it was a totally unnecessary expense. The Government has an advertising and information budget to get its programs across to the people of Canada in addition to the advertising being done by the various Departments, which amounts to $235 million, the largest advertising budget in Canada. This money is used to promote its image. That is another expenditure which is considered needless. Nevertheless, some people will say it is only $235 million. The $235 millions all add up, Mr. Speaker, to a substantial amount of money.

It is no wonder that Canadians doubt the Prime Minister and question his sincerity when he goes on television three nights in a row to say, in effect, "Let us forget the past; let us join hands, pull together and move forward". They say: "Where were you the last few years? You have destroyed your credibility. We do not believe you any more." That element so important in politics, that which is probably everything in politics, the element called trust, is not there any more. When you do not have that element of trust it is very difficult to govern, to be a Prime Minister, to be in Opposition, or to be a politician at whatever level.

As to the indecisiveness we are seeing at the present time, I think that can be demonstrated in no better way than by the grain transportation shutdown on the west coast. Everyone in this House agreed that when that took place there should be a certain time limit allowed to see whether the parties could get together. But it has become more than apparent to everyone involved that the whole process was a charade. There have not been any real and meaningful negotiations probably for the last nine months. Why? Because both sides have the safety net of the House of Commons to solve the problem for them and they are going to use it.

As to being decisive, why have we waited so long to solve their problem if in fact we have to? In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we should have dealt with the Bill last Friday afternoon. That was the absolute latest we should have allowed this strike to carry on. The weekend could have been used to get the workers back to work and grain and other very vital exports moving through the Port of Vancouver. Of course, that has not happened. Today is Tuesday and we are going to deal with it, hopefully, on Wednesday. We have not seen the Bill yet, although it may be and probably is drafted and ready to be presented.

It is that kind of indecision which, once again, breeds distrust. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot go on television and ask for the trust of the Canadian people and at the same time be so indecisive and, as an Hon. Member said, break your word on bringing in legislation which affects a very large segment of this country. In fact, this situation is blocking the only major export we have at the present time, the only product where we can compete with anyone anywhere in the world, that of grain and oil seeds moving out of this country.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, the economic recovery will come, but unfortunately I think it is going to be very weak. It is going to have only a very moderate impact on our current fiscal and financial problems and that is going to be too bad. In my opinion, broadly speaking there has to be a meaningful effort by Government—and by that I mean all of us here—to regain the confidence of the Canadian people which we have lost over the last number of years. Until we can do that, we are really going to be just shooting in the dark in terms of any policies we put forth in this House. Because, ultimately, the people have to believe that yes, the politicians are being sincere and honest in what they are trying to do. Until that happens, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that anything the Prime Minister, his cabinet or Government does will be met with the same kind of skepticism that the Prime Minister's speech was met with the other night.

Trust has to be built up and quickly. There have to be some dramatic moves in order to do that, coupled with—and unfortunately this will not take place, in my opinion, for 12 to 18 months—a strong and agressive economic recovery around the world with Canada moving in step with that recovery. The unfortunate reality we are faced with right now is that we as a Government are going to muddle around for the next 12 to 18 months, until the middle of 1984, before things start to get on track. It is going to be tough on Canadians, tough on workers and on business. It will be very tough on politicians and our institutions at all levels. But, Mr. Speaker, if we all work together, possibly we can overcome some of this.

I can say one thing. I know people certainly in my part of the country are looking very longingly at starting to overcome some of these problems at the next federal election. There is no way that the Liberal Party will govern this country again through the middle part of the 1980s. The trust is gone and it will not come back that quickly.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) would entertain a question. He mentioned in his remarks something about getting the workers in the port of Vancouver back to work. I wonder if he would change that comment in view of the fact that it is a lock-out, not a strike, and also that the workers have been ready to go back to work. Indeed, I am not sure the public realizes, in particular that part of the public from his part of Canada, that the employers themselves have not made arrangements to have the grain shipments continue, which the union was willing to do.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I will make the required change. It is a lock-out. The unfortunate problem is that when we do have a lock-out, as we have at the present time in Vancouver, we have a tendency to view it as if the workers were going out on strike and management is, in effect, sitting back with clean hands. Of course, that is not the case.

I will not argue the question of who is to blame in this particular instance because I think that is pointless. However, I would say that as long as Parliament acts as a safety net for both parties to this dispute to fall back into, we are not going to have any kind of meaningful bargaining in the future. So I think we have to come to some kind of decision about whether or not we are going to make some of these areas possibly essential services and do what we have to do to ensure that the stoppage does not continue. In my opinion there has to be a decision made somewhere, Mr. Speaker, otherwise we will find Parliament continuing to be the arbitrator for these disputes. If we could afford the luxury it would be great to leave the whole thing alone until the parties settle their own problems; but Canada cannot afford that luxury. I do not know whether we will get to that at this point in time. I doubt it, because we never do.

• (1620)

Certainly it would not be a bad idea for some body, if not a parliamentary group then some other group in the country, to take a hard look at whether the movement of commodities going through a port like Vancouver—commodities that literally cannot be held up regardless of whether that be by Government, management or labour—should be designated as an essential service to this country that ought not to be interfered with, and whether binding arbitration, back-to-work legislation or some other action is necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate today, particularly in view of the present economic situation in Canada. Since last Wednesday we have heard many comments, much criticism and many suggestions, both in this House and throughout the country, but all in all, the general impression we have received was one of favourable reaction to last week's financial statement by the Minister of Finance. I think all Canadians have understood, and one would wish that was also the case in the House, that the present recession affecting Canada and many other countries—in fact, I could even say most countries cannot be blamed entirely on this government's administration. We all know that the economic problems besetting France, the United States, Great Britain, West Germany and even Japan are also affecting our country. The fact that the American steel industry had to cut production by 40 per cent last year, which was now led to the closing down of the town of Schefferville, as announced today, cannot be blamed solely on the Canadian government. Our steel producers had to go along with what was happening in the United States. However, realizing that the situation was becoming extremely difficult for these people, the government had already taken action well before this shutdown by designating the region, and today, once more, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has taken decisive action and delegated as of this afternoon a number of officials to this particular area in Quebec, to meet with company management and with company employees and see what should be done to deal as quickly as possible with the problems facing these employees in Northwestern Quebec.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the economy is expected to improve in the months to come, and in any case some time next year. Last week, the Conference Board of Canada announced that our gross national product is on the rise, that inflation is expected to go down and has already started to do so and that interest rates are dropping. So of course, all this will have its effect on the country. Granted, the situation is not a pleasant one, and of course we would prefer inflation and interest rates to go down more rapidly, but still, the government had already anticipated the situation and injected $1.4 billion in direct job creation. These projects, including community development programs, are already in place and in January and February, 60,000 jobs will be created in Canada under these programs.

You know, I was listening in the House, yesterday and again today, during question period and during the debate when a number of members were explaining that people in various parts of the country had specific problems. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you that $1.4 billion was injected into the Canadian economy to provide jobs for a large number of workers, part of those funds going to two provinces that have been more severely affected than others, namely Ontario and British Columbia. Last year, for instance, Ontario received $16 million for these job creation programs. However, because of the difficult economic situation, this year funding was increased to $29.5 million, or twice the amount invested last year. And in British Columbia, where last year only $6 million were injected into these programs, this year the department and the Government of Canada are providing $15,5 million to fund these programs. Thus, the government had anticipated the situation and set aside substantial amounts for these provinces, especially in areas where a high unemployment rate was expected as a result of factory shutdowns and where many people would need help. Mr. Speaker, Quebec has also had its share of job creation programs, because we are aware that this province has one of the highest unemployment rates in Canada. Last year, we put $48 million into job creation programs and this year that amount was raised to $72.5 million.

In addition, the Department of Employment and Immigration set aside $41 million for very urgent cases, because we anticipated that some regions, without necessarily knowing which ones, would be faced with very pressing problems. That is why the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) asked his officials in June and July of this year to find out where the number of shutdowns would be highest and where people would be most likely to exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits. The report was published a month ago, and we have started allocating the $41 million fund throughout Canada so that workers who, in another four to five weeks, may be faced with the choice of going on welfare or looking for another job will be able to take advantage of these measures. The department is in the final stages of allocating the funds on the basis of the information it has been given. In the Province of Quebec alone, the department has allocated $9.4 million of the $41 million fund to meet specific needs in certain regions.

In October, I was in Quebec City with some of my colleagues when the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) announced that $1.3 million would be going to that city alone to meet its needs, in addition to the $2.8 million which the same region had received in July. The same applies to the Eastern Townships, which this past summer probably experienced more shutdowns than anywhere else in Quebec, had the largest increase in people drawing unemployment insurance benefits and the largest number of people who in the months to come would exhaust their unemployment benefits. Last week, I was pleased to announce that $2.3 million will be allocated to these ridings in addition to funds already announced in connection with training programs. Mr. Speaker, I think we can say that these funds were available because the government was aware of the situation and had taken steps to provide for the difficult months ahead.

Once more, we have to live within this world economic environment, even if we are not entirely responsible for the economic problems now facing the world, including Canada. Canadians must realize that major changes are going on in the job world. Workers in certain industries will have to look to other career choices as a result of the technological changes occurring in this country today. To respond to these major developments, in July of last year the government passed the National Training Act. This legislation will help many workers to switch occupations and acquire the skills they need to cope with the major changes we are facing today.

Later on I hope to elaborate on this training program, Mr. Speaker. In any case, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) also announced other measures aimed at meeting specific needs. I am thinking here of the funds injected into the construction industry, where many jobs will be available during this period, and also of the funds made available to Canadian National and to a western railway company. All this, however, is an immediate response to present needs. Departmental and government projections also anticipated that this winter would be a very difficult one, and that we would have to be able to respond quickly to the needs that will become apparent during this period. I feel that the $500 million announced for job creation is a very concrete response by the government to these needs.

The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government alone cannot solve all the world's problems or Canada's. As part of the consultations he has been conducting, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is in New Brunswick this afternoon to meet with his provincial counterpart. Yesterday he was in Halifax. Last week, the minister went out West, to Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and also to Quebec City, to discuss with the provincial governments how the provinces and municipal governments could join the federal government in an effort to expand funding for job creation.

We also appealed to the private sector, because it would be asking the impossible to expect a simple level of government to cope with what is expected to be a difficult period. In carrying out these consultations, we hope that all concerned will pull together and work towards the same goals. If we manage to inject another $500 million or more in job creation, people everywhere at the local level will benefit from this funding and be able to obtain the financial resources they need to get through the difficult winter months. Mr. Speaker, these consultations are absolutely necessary, and our colleagues opposite would do well to co-operate with this government and make constructive suggestions to help us focus all job creation programs on the same goal, which is to provide jobs for as many Canadians as possible. When people need jobs, we must set aside all political partisanship.

Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing the need for jobs, and I know what I am talking about. In my area, the unemployment rate goes up to 60 per cent during the winter. People come to my office looking for jobs, and job creation programs are going to help us to provide many families with the financial resources they need to get through this period. Our consultations are therefore absolutely necessary. It is very reassuring to see that the Government of Quebec has changed its approach in this respect and seems to be willing to set aside the political bias which has governed its actions since it came to power, and to respond to the needs of Quebeckers. Last week's meeting in Quebec City was extremely productive, and last Friday, officials at both government levels were looking at job creation programs and at the possibility of reaching an agreement or providing ways of finding jobs for the people who need them.

It is obvious that the municipalities will play an enormous part in this debate. Moreover, we have asked the co-operation of the various agencies, and once again, it is to be hoped that the Quebec Government will allow them, in consultation with the Provincial and Federal Governments, to see if it is possible to find some way to create jobs. Of course, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his talks on television last week appealed to all Canadians because we need their understanding and co-operation.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, some people tell us that the economic problems of Canada are the responsibility of this government. I gave a few examples of this a while ago. It is obviously impossible to attempt to solve all the economic problems in the world by finding solutions to our economic problems in Canada. We want now to deal with a major problem, namely job creation. The Federal Government has made a clear and determined commitment in this regard, as have most Provincial Governments, and the purpose of the consultations now going on and started last week is precisely to obtain the co-operation of as many people as possible, of all levels of Government and the private sector so that everyone in Canada will show the same commitment and create jobs for Canadians this winter.

Mr. Speaker, these consultations did not come about only last week. I believe that there have been other examples. This past year, most Provinces have signed agreements with the Federal Government in many areas. There is for instance work sharing, through which we were able to save tens of thousands of jobs throughout the country. Once more, the workers themselves showed the Canadian people that they were willing to share when faced with hardships. In various plants and industries, all kinds of people have accepted to work shorter hours and shorter days to enable their colleagues, their fellow workers, to keep their jobs. We have benefited from this experience because we have reinforced these various programs within our Department and tried to use them to meet present needs, and we shall certainly continue to do so.

In Quebec for instance, as of October 26, the Work Sharing Program had benefited 1,179 companies and 47,480 employees and avoided the lay-off of 21,900 Quebec workers. This is a clear example of co-operation, and I believe it is concrete evidence that people are able to understand and help each other when facing hardships. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we can multiply these examples of co-operation and consultation throughout the country. Last week, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) gave another example of consultation by appointing economists to a special group with whom he will consult so as to make decisions which are realistic and which will enable us to meet our present needs. Mr. Speaker, I would like to note at this time another important aspect of the present situation as well as the extremely important role played by many workers throughout the country.

Naturally, in my capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I have visited a great many employment centres throughout Canada in the past twelve months and I have met thousands of workers. We often hear members say in the House that they have people coming to their office to tell them about their employment problems and other difficulties. Mr. Speaker, it must be understood that all the people who work in our employment centres in Canada are on the job five days a week, and quite often on Saturdays and Sundays as well, because they are asked to work overtime to handle the large number of applications filed with our centres in the past year. Mr. Speaker, those people are on the front line, yet when we call on the various centres across Canada we never hear them complain and say to us that they simply cannot do everything we ask them to do. Mr. Speaker, they perform their work like professionals, rapidly and with outstanding efficiency.

I have met them, Mr. Speaker, and I have told many of them that they deserve our admiration for performing their duties right where the action is every day. That explains why this government agreed last summer to hire 1,200 additional employees to help the centres cope with the flood of applications. Needless to say, those employees have ready access to the information facilities of the Department so that they can keep applicants well informed, and they are doing their best. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is the odd delay here and there, but our employees are not necessarily responsible for that and more often than not the computers cannot keep up with the applications. There may have been human errors now and then, but it must be said that most of those people are doing an outstanding job.

Another thing worth mentioning, Mr. Speaker, is that our current unemployment insurance program is actually an economic cushion, something which we did not have in Canada during the notorious depression of the thirties, for instance. Last week, in this House, we heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) state that he had considerably increased unemployment insurance premiums, justifiably because our unemployment insurance scheme managed by employers and employees should be self-financed. The Government of Canada had to decide whether premiums would be substantially increased or whether it would make up the deficit, but since this is a self-financed scheme, as I said, the Government has chosen a middle-of-the-road course and granted an increase which will allow the unemployment insurance fund to continue to provide employment through the various above-mentioned programs so that employers and employees will not be seized by the throat and unable to pay.

Once again, the Government has taken the right direction. It has increased the premiums while making sure that employees and employers will be in a position to pay their share, and taking the necessary steps to allow the UI fund to continue to pay benefits because we should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that unemployment insurance is an insurance, that those who pay contributions are entitled to draw benefits and that as many Canadians as possible should benefit from it. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, this fund has also enabled us as in the case of the work sharing program mentioned earlier to set up other programs which have been implemented during the past year. There are programs, for instance, established under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, where unemployed workers can draw additional unemployment insurance benefits while doing work for the benefit of the community.

Under agreements covering the forestry industry which have been signed in British Columbia, Ontario, the Maritimes and Quebec, many forestry workers have been able to remain physically active and continue to work in the same sector. These agreements will also enable them to return quickly to the labour market as soon as the economy recovers. The federal government has approved $220 million for this program for the year 1982-1983. Mr. Speaker, in my area, in Eastern Quebec where forestry and fisheries are the main industries, we have signed similar agreements with thirteen non-profit enterprises, and at the same time we were also able to deal with a major problem, namely the spruce budworm epidemic. Thus we shall be able to safeguard our forests, enable workers to go on working in their own field and help their families to get through the winter.

These programs have all been very well received by the workers. These are some of the possibilities we shall be looking into under our new job creation program. We shall be considering ways of improving or adapting the programs to make them more responsive to the real situation. These are some of the things we shall try to do in the weeks to come.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a few more words about our occupational training program to which I was referring earlier in my speech. This program is of course extremely important, as we are going to invest $1 billion in it this year alone. As I said before, we are going to help many workers in Canada acquire additional skills and help them retrain for jobs available in highly specialized occupations where, unfortunately, there is a shortage of manpower at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, this program offers tremendous potential, since we have established across the country a system for projecting occupations in Canada. We are also going to designate occupations of national importance across the country. The co-operation I referred to earlier already exists within the framework of this legislation. And as for co-operation by all parties in the House, we have tangible proof that such co-operation is possible, because we received it when this legislation was passed. All parties in the House accepted the legislation; all Canadian provinces accepted it, and just last week, the Minister of Employment and Immigration signed an agreement with the Government of Quebec, under which during the next three years, $735 million will be invested in training people in Quebec, a province that is experiencing unprecedented highs in unemployment and where technological changes have been particularly marked. We shall therefore be in a position to train large numbers of people, and especially youth, so as to be able to meet the needs of the future, to respond to technological change and to help these people become integrated in the labour market, something which is very important, especially for young people across Canada.

However, I think, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to this skill projection system and to the skill designation program which we will undertake in co-operation with the provinces, we should add a third element to that training. Now, the Skills Growth Fund is a special $108 million fund covering a two-year period which will allow us to modernize facilities to be used for occupational training. In many cases, Mr Speaker, the courses we give are unfortunately 20 years or over behind the times and do not lead to a sure or permanent job. However that Skills Growth Fund will allow us in all parts of the country, and once again in co-operation with all provincial governments, to meet immediate and future needs.

It is obvious that this is an important change in the Occupational Training Act. Once more allow me, Mr. Speaker, to refer to my own province of Quebec where we have seen during the past year strong opposition to this so-called federal intrusion in a provincial jurisdiction. Again, our government did not see fit to refute such charges. We officials from both levels of government were allowed to negotiate and conclude an agreement. We realize after a year of negotiations what the provincial government was saying a year earlier. They signed the agreement in order to get the funds that were available to them and that were required to meet the needs of the very large Quebec labour force. This is perhaps the reason why, Mr. Speaker, I said earlier, that a new era of co-operation seems to be forthcoming in Quebec. And this is perhaps why the Quebec Minister of Manpower and Security has stated that he had just signed a treaty with the federal government. We do hope that the provincial government has indeed signed a treaty. We also hope that they will give up their political option which is out of place under the present economic circumstances and that they will truly co-operate with the federal government in trying to meet immediate needs. This can be seen in this training act and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that in the negotiations now underway with this province in order to reach agreements about job creation, their representatives will show the same spirit of co-operation and will work in the best interests of those who elected them to the Quebec National Assembly. And, together with the federal government, they will finally succeed in creating jobs so terribly needed in the winter months. That just shows, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government has really taken the matter in hands, and that it is willing to negotiate with all available partners in an effort to find solutions.

If I may be allowed, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention another measure announced yesterday by the federal government, to protect our Canadian workers and to make sure that most available jobs in this country will go to them. The minister announced yesterday that he was setting new immigration quotas throughout the country. Of course, these new levels do not mean that Canada will be closing its door to the world. We shall continue to accept immigrants for humanitarian reasons and adhere to the family reunion concept, both at the basis of our immigration policy. That being said, Mr. Speaker, we must nevertheless face up to the situation and realize that a large number of unemployed Canadians might otherwise have a job. That is the reason why we have lowered our immigration levels and tightened regulations concerning application for work permits in Canada. That is also why we are urging all Canadian employers who want to hire people to check first whether, somewhere in Canada, there are workers available for jobs open to all Canadians. Once again, Mr. Speaker, that is a concrete example of what our government does in the present situation to find work for as many Canadians as possible. We intend to keep this up and to maintain an open line to reach all groups, all individuals and all others who may have constructive suggestions for finding as many jobs as possible.

If we urge all provincial and municipal governments as well as all Canadian employers to support our endeavor to find jobs, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that at the end of this year we will realize that the funds we have set aside last week have enabled us to create 120,000 or 150,000 jobs instead of the 60,000 we had expected in the first place. We must join forces and put aside all political considerations. Now that the Quebec government has indicated—indicated, I repeat—that it is prepared to go along, it would be difficult not to expect all parties in the House and all other governments in Canada to jump on the bandwagon.

I am convinced that the initiative we took in that area last week is worthy of consideration by each and every Canadian. I am convinced as well that, once the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has completed his consultation process, the Canadian government will be in a position to announce a series of programs designed to contend with the current situation and to help those people who will be facing hardships this winter, thus making it a lot easier for a great many Canadians.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that this week we are hearing a lot about co-operation, goodwill and moderation, but earlier this year, a month or so ago, it was all confrontation and the law—nothing remotely identifiable with what the hon. member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold) is talking about today. So much so indeed that he would never have made that speech last year, not in that spirit, and yet the conditions then were the same. Only the blind and the incompetent could not foresee the economic conditions which were facing Canada a year ago at the time of the famous budget of the former finance minister. He was telling us that the deficit would amount to about $10 billion, that the gross national product would decline slightly, and that inflation was just about under control or, if not completely so, that its rate of increase was dropping. It was the budget of an incompetent man or of sheer dishonesty. Never before have Canadians been taken for such a ride. And the scenario was practically the same in June, except that the $10 billion deficit was revised upward to something like $19 billion. What were the economists and the Department of Finance doing? Were they not aware of the plight of our best industries in Western Canada, especially the oil industry which was being torpedoed and ransacked by this government under the National Energy Policy, and then overtaxed, as though the only milk cow in the country were the oil industry? I should like you, hon. members from Quebec and Ontario who supported your party's platform during the 1980 election campaign, and who had been outraged by our proposed 18 cents tax on a gallon of gas—only four and a half cents a litre which would barely pay for a cupful of gas now—to consider the cost of a litre of gas today and the way it is shared. That is what we got, thanks to the great liberal policy! It is because of this great policy that according to Estimates No. 3, we are faced not with a $19 billion, but with a $23.5 billion deficit, for the past 12 months. Mr. Speaker, are there nincompoops around here?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: There are none on this side!

Mr. Lambert: The dear lady, I know, has always the right answer, but as far as the Canadian economy is concerned, she would not know how to get out of a turnstile. No, Mr. Speaker. I clearly recall the time the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went on TV some 14 years ago to talk to the Canadian people. What about? About ways to freeze inflation around the 6 or 7 per cent level.

• (1700)

"We have wrestled inflation to the ground", we heard in 1969 after the efforts announced in the late summer of 1968, as I recall. The Government have been wrestling with themselves, not with inflation. We have seen inflation go up and up as time went on. Thanks to the efforts of other Ministers and the spirit of the speech of the Hon. Member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold) which I have just heard, the purpose of the Government is to take more and more funds and spread them further and further as though the Government were hooked onto or piped into an ever growing money tree. The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is a classic example, advocating programs which take money from here to spend there. Spend, spend is all the Hon. lady wants to do, not knowing, of course, that a dollar does not come out of the end of a fountain pen. That dollar must be produced by industry, but not industry which is overladen with taxes.

Hon. Members talk of the last budget exercise. Does Your Honour know that there is a hefty tax increase included in it? Of course, Hon. Members on the Government side will not tell their supporters that reducing the cap on the inflation factor in determining taxable income means a hefty tax increase. The Government will then come along and cap the indexing of inflation faced by old age pensioners and other pensioners such as public servants. They will face double taxation.

As a result of the budgetary statement of June 28, the elderly people of Canada will be hit by a double tax whammy. First of all, inflation will artificially boost their incomes so that many will be in a higher tax bracket. I do not care whether this bracket is in the lower level, the middle level or possibly in the higher level; there will be a tax increase. Then their old age pensions will be reduced or confined by the six and five formula even though we are experiencing 11 per cent inflation at the present time. Wait until Hon. Members from across the way start explaining that fact to their old age citizens! Then we will see whether their speeches are quite as laudatory of the Government's financial policies.

During the summer recess I spent five or six weeks hearing representations from industries, individuals and professional associations on the budgetary proposals of November 12, 1981. Some of the tax provisions were thrown out of the window by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Others were modified. However, there will be an increase in taxes on corporations and individuals this year amounting to $1.6 billion. Next year that will rise to $2.2 billion. Those are the tax changes which were proposed by the last Finance Minister. That is a residual effect of his stay in office.

In the statement last Wednesday we heard that another $1.1 billion will be taken out of the pockets of employees and employers through an additional levy for the unemployment insurance fund. Unemployment insurance, Mr. Speaker, has to be the greatest fraud ever perpetrated on the Canadian public. There is no longer an insurance program. There is a giant welfare and transfer of revenues fund. To the extent that there is a deficit, the taxpayers of Canada must pay. Where does most of the income tax come from? Distribute that to the areas of greatest unemployment. The fund itself has been deformed from an insurance program. One should simply read the speeches of the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) when he was Minister of Labour back in 1971, before the majority of Hon. Members opposite had even heard of the House of Commons or been elected. That former Minister, who is now a Government front bencher, merely stated that making the program universal would lay the cornerstone of a guaranteed annual income scheme for Canadians.

This was the first level, unemployment insurance. We have seen over the years how bits have been added. Actuarially, it does not make sense. There have been deficits chargeable by law to the Government of Canada because the deficit exceeds a certain figure. I had to laugh the other day when the Minister of Finance said, my goodness, isn't the Government of Canada generous to the people of Canada, the unemployed, because it is providing 60 per cent of the additional benefits that are going to be paid out of the unemployment insurance fund; all the increases shall not come out of the pockets of contributing employees and their employers. But the law says the Government of Canada must do precisely that. It has to meet the deficit and should be meeting the entire deficit. Part of it is fobbed off on employees and employers. For the rest of it we, the taxpayers of Canada, lose a little more hide and give a little more blood to the financial bloodsucker which this administration has become.

As for the Canadian economy, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times it has been repeated that it is now a world recession that is responsible for the problems in Canada. That is public deception. Of course, many of our markets have declined because there have been declines in other economies, but not that much. The United States, faced with the problem of inflation, has dealt with it through interest rates in order to protect the U.S. dollar. The U.S. dollar, however, under the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, is the reserve standard for the International Monetary Fund. Therefore, what are strictly domestic requirements in the United States involving the protection of the U.S. dollar immediately become prime factors affecting world-wide economies. We have seen this all over the world, in Britain and here in Canada although whether it should have been quite so severe in Canada is open to question. I am not going to make myself an instant expert and say the Bank of Canada were right or wrong, but it is possibly a bit of both. That is a matter of judgment.

Let us look at France—and the NDP should look at France. That famous experiment in socialist thinking and socialist spending out of economic stagnation has been the biggest bust since the last Halloween balloon. There is no magical formula. But there are so many ways of damning your economy. Here in Canada the National Energy Program has affected not only the entire west, but the auto and machine industry of Ontario. An ongoing western petroleum industry requires between 30,000 and 40,000 automobiles or trucks per year, most of them coming out of Ontario. The volume of that is now reduced to 25 per cent, maybe even less.

Steel pipe? The whole bit and business has been knocked on the head by these incompetents across the way, and one might also say it was maliciously inspired, because they envied the success of the three western Provinces having petroleum and natural gas. They could not stand it. Unfortunately, the people of Ontario got hit by some degree of jealousy as well. That is not the way to build this country, by knocking down another part of it. But that is what was done.

All those famous projects in the Province of Quebec which were greeted with open arms are not going ahead. The pipelines are not going to be built. They are going to close refineries. That is what is happening. It was blind fools that went tinkering. Then what did they do? They shuffled the Minister, and lo and behold, no longer was the administration responsible. The mandarins who put together the pieces of paper, creating the schemes, which in theory should have worked, disappeared to their just rewards. So we are left with a legacy of thousands upon thousands of unemployed, including formerly highly paid people, productive people, and political unrest. One section of the country is bitterly alienated towards the rest for that reason. The Government Members strain their shoulders patting themselves on the back for the success of their policies. We will be paying $2.50 for a gallon of gasoline over a two year period. That is success?

We have then the famous organization known as FIRA, the "Herb Gray spooks". I know that other countries have screening agencies, but it takes a hearty soul armed with millions and millions of dollars to fight off the attacks on Canadians wanting to invest in the United States. The pot is not entirely black, but at least it is not formalized. In FIRA as presently constituted, it is not the Agency itself that is responsible. Every decision that has been put through the Agency is only a recommendation to a Cabinet committee presided over by the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who dilly-dallied and imposed his own prejudices and views on each application. When you inquired as to an application which had been filed nine months before to cover a sale that had been agreed to and made economic sense, the Minister would not tell you anything. He would not even tell the company that was going to be bought because it was not a participant to the application. His interpretations were nothing but stupid bureaucracy. I have never seen such incompetence in my life.

That is what is chasing foreign investment. It is that image of months and months of dilly-dallying, the automatic, unofficial views that were expressed, such as: "You should change it this way; perhaps if you change it that way, we suggest you reapply but under modified terms". This sort of thing went on and on. That is why we find our friends and trading partners objecting to what is happening to foreign investment of that nature coming into Canada.

Certainly we can take a look, but do not tell us it is going to take a year. Some Provinces putting together a project of development take two years to clear all the agencies, come what may, merely to fit the ego of a lot of bureaucrats and over-swollen Government ranks. If we want to reduce public expenditure, each level of Government, including the Government of Canada, the provincial Governments and the municipal Governments should set a target of first reducing personnel by 10 per cent. I do not mean the lower paid clerks; there are far more semi-employed directors and directors-general in the Public Service of Canada. That is a ridiculous cost.

Right here in our own shop we have fatuous legislation on the books which at the present time is causing the redistribution commissions to increase the number of Members of this House by, I think, 28. We do not have a place to seat them. When one looks at what it costs per Member for staff and other facilities, one sees how silly we can be. We can stand a 10 per cent reduction of Members in this place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Volunteers?

Mr. Lambert: You come with me and I will go. Money is wasted at all Government levels through overblown personnel. In the Government of Canada, four people cannot work without there being a supervisor, who may then have a secretary. I have heard from our own Members of this House that because they have a staff of three in their office, they feel compelled to suggest to the Management and Members' Services Committee that there should be an administrative assistant to oversee the work of the other three. That sort of stuff just breeds. It is like mould, it grows visually.

Honestly, Mr. Speaker, I have had the proposition put to me by Hon. Members that we should increase our staff by a fourth person, to be designated as an office manager or administrative assistant to make things run. The wiring in this building will have to be brought up to date. A lot of work has been done. Imagine lodging another 28 Members. I suppose they will be lodged in the gallery. Will another building be bought for $30 million in order to house them and the people who will be with them? This is how Topsy grew. Talk about controlling expenditures. We could show an example without diminishing the quality of service that can be given. We can certainly improve on the time for debate and the time for Members to participate in debate, but not administration.

It is a good thing that Bill C-128 has a sunset clause and that any moneys unexpended on March 31 next will die. However, there is a joker in this deck. Between the $23.6 billion and the $19 billion borrowing authority achieved by this limited Bill, there will have to be another borrowing authority Bill before March 31. That one will preserve the unexpended portion for the following year. It is always there. It is part of the atmosphere of sleight-of-hand, covering up and putting things off.

The people of Canada do not realize just how bad are the finances of the Government of Canada. Most of that is the responsibility of this administration which did not care a tinker's dam. It spent and spent and spent. A lot of it has been built up in the past ten years. The $10 of expenditure that was authorized ten years ago is now over $20 due to inflation and to Ministers bringing in programs, getting them accepted and then saying; "Where is the money? I must have the money." Instead of saying that only so much money was available for a particular program, the reverse was always the case. The net result is that the Government of Canada goes careening from ditch to ditch with wide open throttle, not knowing how much gasoline is in the tank. It does not know whether it has control of the car and hopes to blazes it will not run into somebody going the other way, because it sure does not know who is on the road.

• (1730)

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the supplementary borrowing authority Bill, Bill C-128, which complements and restores Bill C-125 of July 22 last to the original borrowing amount requested at that time. A world-wide recesion has lowered the demands of other countries for Canadian products such as those drawn from our forests, mines and other industries. International oil prices, which were forecast to climb astronomically, underwent a downturn, which adversely affected our own exploration activities. Uncontrollable circumstances like these, coupled with many other similar factors, caused a weakness in our economy and a short-fall in our estimated revenues.

Simply put, the Government of Canada requires this borrowing authority to give it the financial ability to maintain all the programs that the Canadian people expect to retain as part of their own economic outlook and standard of living. I am pleased that Opposition Members have agreed to limit this debate to three days. Lengthy debate on this Bill would have been damaging to those thousand of Canadians most directly affected by the recession. To those thousands of Canadians, the economic statement recently presented by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has given much to hope for in the coming months. It was a clear indication of the Government's concern for them and the situation they find themselves in as a result of the recession.

In the past few months we have been constantly pressed by the Opposition to bring in programs to help the unemployed and all of those unable to cope with the recession. Although short on solutions, they have demanded action to assist those out of work. They oppose six and five. They generally clamour for an increase in unemployment insurance benefits. They suggest expenditures be increased and taxes reduced. Some might even suggest that the Government should not be obsessed and mesmerized by the huge deficit. They say, spend more, stimulate the economy, and the next day they contradict themselves by deploring the size of the deficit, the rate of inflation, and demand the Government cut back on expenditures.

The present recession has put a tremendous strain on all governments of the western world. Accustomed to prosperity and growth, these countries must now enforce rigid economic policies in an attempt to move out of the recession.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the level of support demanded from the Federal Government during a recession is considerable. No one can escape the present economic situation. Some will be even more at risk because of their particular situation. The Government will have to meet the requirements of those who are most affected by the recession. Canada has one of the best social systems in the world, whether it be our Unemployment Insurance Plan, our social welfare programs or our income security measures. This system was designed to protect Canadians during a recession as well as in more prosperous times. Our Government, and the Liberal Party in fact, has always given the priority in its ideology to our social institutions. The recent statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) reassured Canadians that the Government will protect them throughout the recession. The Unemployment Insurance Plan will remain intact. Moreover, the Government will respond to the appeals of thousands of Canadians now deprived of job opportunities. Maintaining a comprehensive Unemployment Insurance Plan and very generous social programs is a very difficult task, especially when the Government is committed to apply strict fiscal policies. When the Government itself must tighten its belt and keep the deficit at a reasonable level, how is it possible to maintain our Unemployment Insurance Plan and social programs? How can we create jobs for the victims of the recession and give support to the private sector without increasing the deficit even more? That is the dilemma now facing all Western countries. Some of them have chosen to cut their spending for social security programs. Canada has chosen differently. We have been able to find a solution which will not jeopardize those who are hardest hit by the recession. We shall also limit our spending so as to reduce the potential inflationary impact of the deficit on the national economy. This will be done on the basis of an equitable formula without our having to weaken our social institutions. The bill now under consideration is an integral part of the economic and social formula which will put us back on the road to prosperity.

[English]

I would like to review our economic policy with a view to the West, Mr. Speaker. The federal Government is committed to securing Canadians' economic future, and to do so involves addressing the challenges and pursuing the opportunities for economic development which present themselves in the various regions of this country. I intend to focus on the opportunities and constraints facing the western provinces and comment on the federal Government's response to these.

A year ago, in November, 1981, the federal Government issued a major policy document entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s". That document discussed the challenges and strategic opportunities for the national and regional economies, and went on to outline the Government's policies and priorities for national economic development. While it was clearly stated that there were distinct problems and development issues to be addressed in every region, it was also pointed out that unique opportunities for economic growth and development could be identified in every region.

Since that policy document was issued, and even prior to that, the Government has taken action to identify and overcome the constraints to economic development which prevail in the western provinces, and aggressively to pursue those opportunities which exist in the west for economic growth in this decade and beyond. Last Wednesday, in the statement on the economic outlook by the Hon. Minister of Finance, the federal Government reconfirmed its commitment to economic development and renewal across Canada.

Aside from issuing the earlier mentioned document on economic development, this Government introduced a number of measures which, while general in application, would have some impact on the economy of the western provinces. For example, the special farm financial assistance program was reintroduced in an expanded form. This program, which was designed for those farmers who would be unable to stay in business if they had to borrow at the going interest rate, provided subsidized Farm Credit Corporation loans to farmers in distress. A fund of $50 million was set aside for this program.

In the June 28 budget the Government announced a number of new housing measures designed to create new jobs in the construction industry, to improve access to home ownership, to assist those facing mortgage renewal difficulties and to ensure the availability of rental accommodation. An intensive program for the construction of new rental units was introduced to provide an interest free loan of $7,500 or more per rental unit for 30,000 units allocated to tight market areas across the country. I am pleased to add the Minister's announcement on Wednesday to the effect that the $3,000 home ownership stimulation grant will be extended to the end of April, 1983 for new houses. This announcement was certainly welcomed by the western construction industry.

In order to direct federal policies and programs to the strategic opportunities for Canadian economic development, the Government identified five priority areas, namely, industrial development, resource development, transportation capacity, export promotion, and human resources. Under each of these headings objectives were identified and examples of initiatives under way or proposed were given. In many instances the western Provinces figures prominently as major contributors to Canada's economic future or as recipients of federal aid.

In terms of developing industry, the Government is committed to developing policies and programs to ensure, among other things, that innovation becomes a major factor in enhancing the competitiveness and productivity of Canadian industry.

The Government has committed itself to a major increase in the level of research and development activity in Canada and has established research and development targets for the public and private sectors. At the end of 1981 the federal Government had met, and indeed exceeded, the R and D expenditure target it had set for itself. More recent federal initiatives in this area of activity include new funding for the establishment of micro-electronic centres in Vancouver, Edmonton and Winnipeg.

In terms of developing natural resources, the federal Government agreed to undertake new initiatives in key resource based sectors, and the western Provinces, with their vast wealth of resources, will figure prominently in any policies and programs implemented in these areas.

The federal Government undertook to continue consultation with the Provinces concerning measures to enhance the longer-term performance of the forest-based industries and to continue to play a strong role in encouraging research and development in the mining industry.

I want to digress from the economic strategy in the eighties for a moment to reflect on a side issue, Mr. Speaker. We hear people say, with a great deal of hindsight, that the Canadian Government underestimated the severity of the current recession and did not adopt timely measures to turn it around.

In the area of rail transportation, we must recognize the fact that our railway system was not overburdened this year. Record grain movements were established, partly because our other commodities did not compete as strongly with grain movements as in prior years for cars, for track time on rail lines, for engines and for railway crews, at the same time that grain was being transported to ports.

Canadians do not want to rely on hindsight when our economy takes a turn for the better. We must be prepared to seize our opportunities. For this reason, I am sure that all parties are in agreement and acknowledge that the leading opportunity for Canadian economic renewal lies in the development of Canada's rich bounty of natural resources. However, capturing the benefits of a resource-based expansion will place heavy demands on the transportation system. Unless major investments are made in the near future, the capacity constraints in the western transportation system will be evident by the mid-eighties.

Under economic development in the eighties, transportation was identified as a development priority. On February 8, 1982 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) announced the Government of Canada's policy on western rail transportation. The statement recognized that the western Canadian economy is rapidly growing and diversifying, and will continue to do so throughout the 1980s. The resource sector is the source of much of this western growth, and western resources have been and will continue to be moved predominantly by rail. Consequently, the Government decided that a major initiative was required if the economic expansion under way was to continue, and that a comprehensive approach should be implemented to ensure that the west had adequate rail capacity.

The Minister of Transport appointed Dr. Clay Gilson of the University of Manitoba as the federal representative on western grain transportation, to lead discussions with western farm organizations and the railways on how the Government's policy statement should be translated into specific measures. After months of consultations with representatives of nine major western farm organizations and the two national railways, Dr. Gilson submitted his report on consultations and recommendations regarding western grain transportation to the Minister of Transport.

In August, the Minister announced that the Government would establish special task forces to continue and conclude work on the recommendations contained in the Gilson Report on western grain transportation.

Mr. Pepin also tabled in Parliament a Government policy response stating that the Government had decided to accept in principle the main thrust of the Gilson Report now, subject to later decisions about the financial considerations and the reports of the task forces concerning the implementation aspects of a central co-ordinating agency for grain transportation, a new freight rate structure and new legislation for grain transportation.

In addressing the issue of assuring the nation that the west had adequate rail capacity, the Government stressed the major potential benefits of this initiative for western Canada and the country as a whole, including large-scale railway investments, improvements in the grain transportation system, increased resource development and economic diversification.

To help achieve these benefits, the Government committed itself to contributing some $3.2 billion over the four-year period of 1982-83 through 1985-86 for western transportation needs and to the introduction of new transportation legislation. Such a statutory framework would incorporate a commitment by the Government to pay the Crow benefit in perpetuity and to demand performance and service guarantees from the railways in return for adequate compensation for current grain transportation losses.

Railway investments amounting to some $11.8 billion, in 1982 dollars, are planned over the decade to 1991 and will generate substantial economic activity, not only in the west but in virtually every region of the country. In addition to major construction activity and sourcing of materials in the western provinces, the railways' requirements for steel rail, locomotives, rolling stock and electronic equipment will provide a major stimulus over the period, to the manufacturing sector, in all of Canada.

This brings us to the very recent announcement made by the Minister of Finance. As the Minister pointed out, the Government is earmarking up to $400 million more to provide some additional flexibility toward the satisfactory Crow rate resolution and to provide for initiatives such as the extension of special capital cost allowances which, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with the Minister of Transport, would speed up expansion and modernization of western rail capacity. As the Minister noted, the Government is determined to meet the challenge of railway capacity with its comprehensive approach to expand the western rail transportation system and to modernize the freight rate regime for grain.

Early action will ensure that railways will be in a position to increase rail capacity, as required, to move the substantially higher volumes of export commodities projected from the middle of the decade onward. Expansion of western rail capacity is critical to Canada's economic development in the 1980s. It will pave the way for marketing of additional coal, potash and sulphur resources as well as increased exports of grain. The over-all plan will also stimulate western agricultural development and facilitate economic diversification. As a result of direct railway and Government expenditures, it is estimated that some 400,000 person-years of employment will ultimately be generated across the country.

In addition to the commitment to expand the western rail transportation system and modernize the freight rate regime for grain, the federal Government has undertaken other initiatives in the transportation field which will help us promote our exports. The Government has committed $27 million to develop the infrastructure for a new grain terminal at Prince Rupert and another $4 million for the road access to it. To improve Canada's capacity to ship coal, particularly to new Pacific Rim markets, the capacity of the Roberts Bank terminal at Vancouver will be quadrupled, and new harbour and rail facilities will be constructed at Prince Rupert in connection with northeast British Columbia coal deposits. Legislation was recently passed providing for greater autonomy at the local level for National Harbours Board ports.

Returning to the development priorities and specifically the need to develop human resources, the Government is taking measures to identify the manpower needs of various industrial sectors and to direct strategies to match skills with these needs. Particular attention is being given to disadvantaged Canadians and, as was mentioned earlier, $345 million has been allocated in the period 1985-86 to support new economic development initiatives directed toward increased job opportunities for native peoples.

The federal Government's contribution to the economic development of western provinces arises not only from new programs and initiatives but also from existing and ongoing programs. For example, DREE expenditures during 1980-81 in the western region, including Yukon and the Northwest Territories, exceeded $200 million. Of this sum, approximately $72.6 million was for subsidiary agreements, $20.5 million for industrial incentives, $82.3 million for Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration Programs, and the remainder for activities such as special ARDA agreements under the Agricultural and Rural Development Act. Special ARDA agreements involve special programs to ensure that rural residents, particularly those of native descent, are able to benefit from rural development programs in terms of increased employment and income and better living conditions. Such agreements exist with Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, the Northwest Territories and Yukon. They are administered in each area by a committee comprised of representatives of the provincial or territorial Government, the federal Government and native residents of the communities involved.

They also support the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration Program which was started years ago in drought areas to ensure that municipalities and other areas would have sufficient water supply. This Program is active, and there are agreements with the Province of Manitoba and other Provinces to make sure that they have adequate water facilities to supply the needs of their citizens.

Earlier this year the federal Government implemented a major policy and administrative reorganization, the main thrust of which was to provide a government-wide focus on regional development. A Cabinet Committee on Economic and Regional Development was established, as well as a new Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development, the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the regional fund to be used for special regional economic development initiatives. Federal economic development co-ordinators, the most senior economic development officials in each of the regions, have been named for all the Provinces, and work is under way to devise over-all economic strategies for each of the Provinces. Clearly, while the actors involved in regional development may change somewhat and certain aid delivery vehicles may be identified by a different name, the federal Government has reaffirmed, if not expanded upon, its commitment to balanced regional development.

As a final point it is worth noting that the Canadian Grain Commission recently reduced their proposed increases in maximum tariffs of 8 per cent to 10 per cent or higher, as well as the fees charged for services to the grain industry, to conform with the 6 per cent restraint policy for this year. Harnessing the resources of the Canadian economy is a national enterprise which includes but extends beyond the interests of particular regions or sectors. The Government of Canada must and has assumed a leadership role in the field of economic development, as evidenced by the recent transportation initiatives in the west and other activities across the country. However, it has done so bearing in mind and being sensitive to the local context in which each Canadian works, lives and invests. This borrowing authority Bill is an integral part of the economic proposals that will set us off on the road to recovery. I urge all Members of the House to support Bill C-128.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening, at which time the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) will be recognized.

At 5.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) had been recognized.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a few moments this evening to contribute to this semi budget debate we are having. The point has been made that the economic statement delivered by the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) last Wednesday was much closer to a budget than many of the budgets we have had. Although I am not sure that is completely accurate. In a lot of ways it resembled an "unbudget" because most of the important statements in the document were undoing the provisions of the November 12, 1981 budget, which slowly and surely over the course of a year has been totally undone.

The Bill we are discussing is the borrowing authority Bill to give the Governor in Council the authority to borrow another $4 billion. That is an astronomical amount of money, except in comparison to this year's deficit, which is $23.6 billion. What an unbelievable state of affairs. We are asking future taxpayers to pay for one-third of our expenditures today, piling on top of existing debt another $23.6 billion in a deficit this year on a public accounts basis. I said a public accounts basis because on a national accounts basis, that is on a more accurate basis, the deficit is a lot higher than $23.6 billion. The picture is in fact a whole lot worse than the incredibly bad picture which the Minister of Finance gave us last Wednesday. This $23.6 billion is not the total deficit because the Government engages in book cooking, the kind of book cooking that would get a private company or an individual engaged in the same kind of exercise in trouble.

Is that a statement made by a partisan Member of the Opposition using hyperbole, Mr. Speaker? I would refer Hon. Members of the House to the Auditor General's Report. The public accounts were tabled last Friday. Carried in the public accounts of Canada, the accounts of the Government of Canada, is $16 billion in non-existing assets. In other words, there is $16 billion of spending on assets which the Auditor General says do not exist. If a company did that, it would be delisted from the stock exchange. The executives and directors of such a company would be in great trouble with regulatory authorities. Lawsuits may be launched. There could be all manner of retribution levied against an organization that would have the audacity, the gall or the fraudulent intent to put forward accounts so obviously in error. Yet here we have the Government of Canada, our government, putting out a set of books which the Auditor General says are in error by $16 billion. The Government gets away with this because the amount of money is so colossal that no one can get his mind around it. It is almost beyond comprehension. It is as Adolf Hitler knew so well, that if the distortion is big enough, it just escapes people. There is no way they can handle it. That is what we have from this Government.

Not included in the horrendous deficit figure is Crown Corporation borrowing. Crown Corporations are, in the jargon, "Agents of Her Majesty", which means nothing more than that the debts of a Crown Corporation are the same as the direct debts of the Government. Whether it is the Minister of Finance who borrows money from the Government of Canada or Jack Horner who borrows on behalf of the CNR, the effect is the same. You and I are responsible for paying back the borrowings.

The borrowings of the Minister of Finance show up in the public accounts. Jack Horner's borrowings do not, nor do the borrowings of Bill Hopper or Nick Ebiger, nor do the borrowings of any one of these other people in this parallel civil service operating out there on their own who are indebting you and me and future generations.

None of the deficits being run up in these organizations, none of the borrowing, none of the spending show up in the accounts of Canada. Yet, in terms of their impact, they are every bit the same as if they were spent directly by the Government. That is why when the Minister lays out projections for spending and revenues this year, it is only a fool who takes what he lays before us at face value. They are most certainly not an accurate portrayal of what is happening.

I want to deal with one particular debt of a Crown Corporation of which we have become aware recently, interestingly enough on Saturday afternoon. Clearly it is amazing to observe this Government in operation and to see the gall and hypocrisy with which it operates. I believe it was Thursday evening when Senator Keith Davey was lecturing from a podium about how terrible the media in this country is. He said that the Government cannot trust the media to carry its message and that the media cannot be trusted. Two days later, we saw the most blatant example of how the Government manipulates news, manipulates the media and manipulates public opinion. When is the time to make an embarrassing announcement, Mr. Speaker? It is on Saturday afternoon when you know that most people have the weekend off and very few journalists are working. Is it not interesting that on the "Sunday Morning" CBC program Bill Hopper was answering a bunch of creampuff questions from a CBC reporter. That program was in the can on Friday but, somehow, the announcement did not come out until Saturday. Yet there was Bill Hopper with all the perfect answers to the creampuff questions being put to him. There was not one single, reasonable or appropriate question asked by that reporter.

That shows skill, Mr. Speaker, and I admit that Bill Hopper is an amazingly effective politician, news manager, manipulator of public opinion. While he is not an oil man, he is all these other things, and very good at it. I have the bruises to prove it. But for goodness' sakes, do not insult my intelligence and the intelligence of all Canadians by turning Senator Keith Davey loose to say, "It is terrible that we cannot trust the media to take our fair and reasonable message around the country". What hypocricy!

On Saturday we were told that Petro-Canada was going to buy the downstream assets of BP Canada for $347.5 million. That is a colossal amount of money, given that not one job will be created out of that purchase or one barrel of oil added. Now we find out that that statement about the $347.5 million was false. In fact, the total purchase cost is closer to $600 million, as we discovered in today's Globe and Mail. Long after it is settled in everyone's mind that the purchase price is $350 million—that is the figure publicized and which is contained in most files—we find that the real figure is $600 million because, in addition to the $347.5 million for the steel and real estate, there is $180 million for inventory and a $70 million debt that Petro-Canada is picking up for BP. Therefore, the figure is $600 million and not $347 million. I offer you again one further example for the observation of the Auditor General that you cannot trust the Government because it lies about its figures. It is further evidence of why anyone who takes what is said by that group of people and their underlings at face value is a fool to accept it. It seldom bears any resemblance to the truth.

Petro-Canada is spending $600 million, and the Minister, Bill Hopper and Joel Bell say that it will not cost the taxpayers a cent. But the advertisement says, that Petro-Canada is ours. Therefore, if its assets are our assets, its debts are our debts. That $600 million is our debt in the same manner as the Minister of Finance's debts are our debts.

That $600 million is being spent to purchase existing, in-place assets without a single new job being created. In fact, jobs will be lost because throughout Quebec and parts of Ontario, Fina—which is now Petro-Canada—and BP were frequently competitors on the same corner. BP and Petro-Canada are next door neighbours in my neighbourhood in Ottawa. While there were previously two marketing departments, there will now be one marketing department because one of those service stations will close down. As a result, there will be fewer jobs if Petro-Canada rationalizes its employees.

The Government is spending $600 million of our money, decreasing the number of jobs and not gaining one extra piece of hardware, real estate, barrell of oil or anything else for Canada. Of course, that $600 million does not form part of the $23.6 billion deficit. It is not included in the Government's figures. It is not covered by this borrowing authority Bill because, in this perverse system which we have, the Minister of Finance is required to have borrowing authority while Bill Hopper does not. This Parliament has the right to vote on the authority of the Minister of Finance to borrow money. Bill Hopper, Jack Horner and the other 400 Crown corporation presidents and chairmen can borrow what they desire. Canadians are obliged to pay it, but as the elected representatives of the people we do not have the right to say yea or nay. That is parliamentary democracy for you. It the Government has $600 million to spend, why did it not reduce the unemployment insurance premium entries? There is a $1.7 billion increase in premiums which will cost perhaps 60,000 jobs because it is making it more difficult for small and new businesses to hire new employees. Why did the Government not reduce that expenditure if it has $600 million to spend?

Why not reduce the taxes on gasoline and make a half baked attempt to honour the election promises that were made by the Liberal Party, those promises of "Vote Liberal and you will not have to pay high prices for gasoline." Do you remember those advertisements, Mr. Speaker? If the Government now has $600 million extra, why does it not reduce the taxes on gasoline and make a half hearted attempt to honour that election promise?

Why not spend the money on job creation if the Government does have $600 million to spend? Why does the Government not try something new and just not spend it?

If some of the geniuses who advise that pack over there feel that it is appropriate for Petro-Canada to spend another $600 million, let me suggest a way in which Petro-Canada could spend that money and, in fact, contribute something to Canada in the process. First, let us suppose that the Minister of Finance was correct when he said, in answer to questions I raised yesterday, that Petro-Canada was not going to borrow money in Canada but was going to borrow it offshore, even though Joel Bell, Vice-President of Finance, said they had not made that decision as yet. However, let us assume that the Minister of Finance was right and Petro-Canada will borrow the money offshore. Now, let us suppose that Petro-Canada took that $600 million and invested it in exploration for new oil in Canada. The rough industry average indicates that for every $50,000 of expenditure, one can expect oil production of a barrel of oil per day. Assuming that Petro-Canada is as good as the average oil company—which is a major concession because I do not believe that fact and the figures do not back it up—this means that Petro-Canada would be able to produce 12,000 barrels of oil per day from that expenditure of $600 million for exploration. We would produce 12,000 barrels of oil per day in Canada and eliminate the need to import that oil from Mexico, Saudi Arabia and Venezuela. That would save us $220 million a year in foreign exchange. In other words, in two years and nine months we would be able to pay off the foreign source from which we borrowed the $600 million. We would still have 12,000 barrels of oil in production and maintain the income of $220 million a year for the benefit of Canada.

A rough rule of thumb in regard to capital expenditures is that for every $50,000 of capital expenditure there is a new job created. If the government spent that $600 million in Canada on capital expenditures, namely exploration and development, it would generate 12,000 jobs. Half of all the money spent in this country—that is, the gross national product—ends up in the Government coffers as taxes of one sort or another. Half of that amount goes to the federal Government and the other half goes to the Provinces and municipal Governments. Therefore, the total government revenue from that $600 million would be $300 million. The federal Government would receive $150 million. In addition, those 12,000 people would not be collecting unemployment insurance. There would be a saving of $120 million.

Let us consider this in summary. If, instead of buying an existing refinery and a bunch of existing service stations and contributing nothing new, in fact costing jobs to Canada, Petro-Canada had used that money for oil exploration here in Canada, the federal Government would receive $150 million in extra revenue. There would be a reduced call on unemployment insurance premiums of $120 million, meaning that the net expenditures of the Government and therefore the deficit would be reduced by $270 million, and provincial and municipal Governments would receive another $150 million. There would be a decrease in our current account deficit with the rest of the world of $220 million a year in today's dollars, with a resulting reduction of pressure on interest rates and the value of the dollar. There would be 12,000 Canadians employed rather than unemployed as the case is now. Therefore, instead of $600 million spent, with no benefit whatsoever to Canada, the Government could have spent it that way with some benefit to Canada.

What have we gained from this purchase, this increased indebtedness of $600 million? Will it help to create jobs? No. Will it help to fight inflation? No. Will it help old age pensioners? No. Will it help miners, forestry workers, fishermen or farmers? No, no, no and no. Why, then? Has the private sector failed us? Does the private sector not know how to peddle gasoline? Does anyone in this country have difficulty buying gasoline from a private operator? Is the private sector in this country so terrible in that it does not know how to run service stations that Big Brother must get into the business of running service stations and filling up our tanks? Is that why? Why, for goodness' sake, is the Government of Canada, with all its responsibilities and with all the problems facing this country, in the business of peddling gasoline? It makes one wonder. If the Government is interested in the Canagrex Bill, one can surely predict that it will soon be running McDonald's hamburger stands, because if it makes sense for Petro-Canada to pump gas, it makes sense for Canagrex to sell hamburgers.

Mr. Taylor: It will be selling baloney, too.

Mr. Andre: Why, then, is Petro-Canada buying out these service stations? Why is the Government of Canada in the business of peddling gasoline? The reasons are twofold. The first one relates to political propaganda. The reason is the same reason that Goodyear has blimps. There are some Petro-Canada signs around with the Maple Leaf on them, and Goodyear has blimps with "Goodyear" printed on them. It is pure and simple propaganda the Government has in mind. Certainly, it will not result in cheaper gasoline. It is more expensive gasoline. We must pay for the Government's extravagances. However, the related reason is that it is very good for the employees of Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada has become a very large corporation. Its chief executive officer should have his own jet, should he not? Of course, big corporations have private jets. Bill Hopper has a nice new Canadair Challenger. It is so fast that he did not even have to move his family to Calgary. His officer is there, but he lives here. What the heck! He can come home to supper in one of these Canadair jets. It only costs $5,000 or $10,000 an hour to operate. That is peanuts to a high roller like Bill Hopper. He has his own executive jet. He is just having himself a whale of a time. The Marketing Vice-President of Petro-Canada now has, 1,600 more stations to run. What a thrill when he comes into his office in the morning and looks at a map with little pins all over it. He says, "Those are all mine. I run those. Those guys are all mine. I run them all". It is a real thrill for the employees of Petro-Canada. They are having a ball at our expense.

There is a second reason which is that the decision was made as a result of faulty business judgment. The refining and marketing of gasoline has been profitable for two out of the last 20 years. Those two years were 1978 and 1979. In 1978 Petro-Canada went out and bought an oil company, Pacific Petroleum, which happened to own a refinery and some service stations. Petro-Canada bought it at exactly the time when refining and marketing was profitable. Bill Hopper thought he had found the money pump, the money tree. He could not believe it! The refinery and service stations were as lucrative as all getout. The money was rolling in. He said, "Holy moly, have I got a way to finance my Canadair jet and the rest of my growth in the future." That is why Petro-Canada bought Fina. It thought it had found the money pump. It opened up the Fina station, cleaned it up, paved it, polished it up, put on new plastic and new signs. People came in to buy gas and Petro-Canada said, "We really have it. We could sell as much gas as we want. All we have to do is put up stations, put on signs with the Maple Leaf, and business rolls in".

The problem is that there is something in marketing called the "new station phenomenon". As one is driving down the street, suddenly before one's eyes there appears a brand new station with new fresh asphalt, the pumps are new and shining, the windows are clear and it looks nice, not like a dirty old service station, so one drives in. There is a tendency to do that. It does not make any difference how one's car operates, but somehow everything looks nice. However, in a month or two the station starts to get as dirty as the station of the guy a little closer to home, so one stops there and goes back to one's old patterns, and that little blip in sales is just that, a blip in sales.

That is precisely what is happening to Petro-Canada in western Canada. It is being blamed, of course, on anti-Ottawa feelings out there and so forth. But in fact it is just that the stations out there are no longer new. That is all. When they were new, traffic came in. They are no longer new. Some of the Fina stations are now running into the same problem. So what we have here is an executive of a company who may believe, at least partially, that this was a good business decision. In fact, it was a lousy business decision because refining and marketing do not make money. Oh, they will get market shares initially. Oh, yes, when Petro-Canada spends $10,000 or $20,000 to renovate each station, that, by the way, is in addition to the $600 million I have discussed. When some tens of millions of dollars are spent to renovate all the stations, there will be a little blip in traffic, but it will not be enough to make the money to pay the interest on the loan. We, the taxpayers, will have to come up with more money again to keep that operation going.

I have listened to some Hon. Members opposite defending this $4 billion in extra borrowing authority. In essence, they have been standing up and saying to the people of Canada, "Trust us, we have your futures in mind; we are doing good things. As trustees of your money, we are doing a good job". Only a fool would believe any of that tripe. Ed Clarke certainly does not believe it on his $200,000 sabbatical in Paris. Certainly, no one who knows anything about this Petro-Canada purchase will believe it. How can we end Canada's disastrous economic performance when we are twenty-third in productivity out of 23 OECD nations and when our standard of living is fourteenth as opposed to second as it was two years ago? We are going to end all that if, and only if, we return to honesty, decency and a modicum of intelligence about how we spend the taxpayers' money. If the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) had simply done some back-of-the-envelope calculations, he would have quickly realized that another $600 million just to change the logo on some gas pumps is not a good expenditure for Canada. If that money is available, spending it on exploration would employ 12,000 Canadians, would generate $270 million for the Treasury, and would provide Canadians with 12,000 barrels of oil a day which they would not have to import from other parts of the world. You do not have to be a genius to figure that out, Mr. Speaker, Apparently, no one over there has thought beyond how nice it would be to have a Maple Leaf service station in every constituency in the country, so it costs the taxpayer a few hundred million dollars. Who can understand those figures? Who knows how much $24 billion is? It is quite beyond the capabilities of anyone to grasp the significance of it, and because of that failing of the human mind, we keep getting ripped off by that crew over there. I hope soon, Mr. Speaker, those who sit over there who have a modicum of shame, or sense of responsibility, will recognize what is happening and join the rest of us to put an end to it.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight I speak for my Party on Bill C-128 which is a Bill to borrow $4 billion. I remember when I was about six years old. It was in 1937, in the wintertime. That was the worst year of the Depression in Saskatchewan. One day my father and a neighbor drove in sleighs with teams of horses to a village about 15 miles away to get some relief straw. The straw was to be used to feed starving cattle. Neither my father nor the neighbor had a single nickel, dime or quarter to rub against each other, not a single coin. They had made this trip several times.

On the neighbor's farm they made their own butter, and each time the neighbor would take a pound of homemade butter with him when he went to the village and he would trade it to the man who ran the restaurant for two cups of coffee, worth five cents each. He would take lunch with him and would go to the little restaurant after loading the straw, eat his lunch, drink his coffee and go home. On that particular day he started off for the village in a blizzard. Taking the pound of butter, he went to the restaurant and asked for the trade. The man who ran the restaurant said the butter is only worth five cents today. The neighbor walked to the door and threw it out into the blizzard because he could not buy two cups of coffee. My father told me that story many times, and I remember the day it happened.

My father had one great fear in his life which could be expressed in a four-letter word, debt. He is dead now, God rest him, but if he knew that tonight I was speaking about a Bill that will put our country $4 billion more into debt, he would simply roll over in his grave, glad that he died.

I tell that story, because, to begin with, I do believe that we have come to a different time in history. I believe that the way to handle social and economic problems that was possible 20, 30, 40 years ago, even ten years ago, is not possible any more. Every one of the Hon. Members in this House of Commons has knocked on a lot of doors. That is part and parcel of what politicians have to do. I knocked on a lot of doors this summer in my constituency and also in other parts of Canada for other people as well. This is always a new experience because behind each door there is another person, another family, another story. I personally like to knock on doors, meet people and hear what they have to say, even when many times they tell me about most serious problems. This summer, though, I found there was a different response because people in Canada, not only in my constituency, have great difficulty in understanding what is going on. It is impossible to explain to a person who is out of work, or a family unit that has broken down because unemployment has become a new stress. It goes beyond the ordinary stresses with which a family can cope. The stress of unemployment is such that it comes as the last straw.

Many people address the question to me that I would like to speak about tonight. The question is: "What are you people doing in Parliament? Do you not realize how serious the problem is? We see you people on television calling each other names, standing up and shouting. You make a point or you do not, but what is that doing to help our problem?" I can explain that the House of Commons is an old tradition which is set up with two sides far enough apart so they cannot hit each other with a sword. These things can be explained, but that does not say very much to a person who is unemployed or whose marriage is under some kind of stress, or a pensioner who is afraid his pension will be cut back, because those people have lost faith in those they believed were able to solve their problems.

I would like to speak a little about the credibility or believability of myself and every other Member in this House of Commons. Since I came to Ottawa about three years ago I have not met anyone here who is not serious. I cannot honestly say I have met anyone in any of the three parties who is not serious. Anyone who gets elected to the House of Commons has to be serious. Why is it that once we get here we lose credibility? I would like to share my ideas as to what I think is happening. Credibility is very close to what we understand as the truth. For me, however, I would like to say, there is truth around me, in this room, in the people here, in the things I would like to know, the things that I can learn. I can learn this truth and it becomes part of me, is me, in the sense I can get that truth from my experience. The best way to get it is from a good teacher. I believe that political people have the responsibility to be good teachers. Political people have to understand the truth and, as far as possible, express that truth so that it becomes part and parcel of another person so that they understand the truth. The responsibility of understanding the truth today is a grave responsibility. It is not an easy responsibility. It is a difficult responsibility because the truth is so complicated.

On top of that, however, the truth has to be expressed in such a way that the other people will have no difficulty in believing it, because the person who gives the truth and who speaks the truth, whatever that happens to be, is credible so there is the reality of the truth and the reality of the credibility that I or whoever else is speaking must have.

I understand a teacher to be a person who is able somehow or other to clean off my mind or my intellect in such a way that I can see what is out there. An old teacher that I had when I was studying in the seminary, using an old scholastic idea, talked about the reality of the truth around me. It was as if there were a dirty window between me and the truth. A good teacher is able to clean the window in such a way that I suddenly see what is right, what is true.

Several weeks ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in a series of talks over television, indicated to the country what he understood and believed to be the truth. I have no reason to doubt that he was attempting to explain to us what he believed to be the truth. I would have to say in all honesty that I felt some of the points the Prime Minister was making were just as I saw them.

He spoke about the fact that Canada really has to be part and parcel of the modern world, that Canada can no longer expect to have a special status just because it is Canada, that in the world of competition today we cannot expect to have preference just simply because you are Canada. That is the truth. However, as I visited and knocked on the doors of people, they did not believe it. The Prime Minister was not credible.

At a time like that, and this is my suggestion only, a person who has that kind of grave responsibility has to really think seriously about his or her future. In that very serious role as a national leader, if a person has lost credibility, what does he do? That is something the Prime Minister will have to think about seriously, because most Canadians feel he has lost credibility. That is too bad because when a person has lost credibility and is still speaking the reality or the truth, everybody suffers. They will finally say, "That is not true because you said it". It gets to the point where a person is, as I and everybody here is, being tested on his credibility all the time. That is the same as saying two and two are four and the person hearing it says it is not true. Why is it not true? "Because you said it". That is an extremely serious thing at this time in history.

I believe there is another way that truth comes. It is the way that truth has come in the tradition of the Judaic Christian background of which I come. It is the truth that comes through the voice of prophets. This is the more difficult kind of truth.

There are definitely fewer prophets than there are teachers. At a time like this, it is important to look at people around the world, here or wherever, who somehow are indicating to us truths. I am going to speak later about what I believe to be an extremely important truth that is never mentioned in the economic debates that we have in this House, the truth that one of the equations that is missing is the build-up of arms around the world and the taking away from people of the world the basic things to keep them alive. I will fill out that point as I go along.

A prophet is a person who is able to say the truth as it exists now. A prophet is one who is able, in the history of our Judaic Christian background, to speak the truth now. He is a very difficult person to have around because people know that is the truth and do not want to accept it.

There are certain qualities about the prophet, at least in the Judaic Christian religion, that make him or her special. The quality that is most important is for the prophet to be a person who is not seeking power. A prophet is a person who is on the side of the poor. A prophet is a person who, very probably, himself lives poorly.

There have been prophets in the political world. Sometimes different groups are more prone to think that they are prophets than others. I would say that in general my colleagues have a little bit of that problem at times, but it is proper to criticize ourselves in that respect because we do have within our Party that tradition.

I believe the founder of this Party, J. S. Woodsworth, was looked upon by the people in this Parliament as a prophet. I like to think that today, because he is here with us, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has been respected in these chambers and across the land as a person who is in that category. He obviously did not come here to be powerful but came here to speak the truth about the situation that affected the poor.

I believe this House respects him. I think people looked upon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as a person who was speaking the truth with no intention of gaining power for himself. That is an important distinction that we have to be aware of today as I continue in my remarks.

Truth as it relates to people around us can come to us from our experience, from a good teacher or through the person who is a prophet.

I believe we are in times that are very different. I believe that right today Canada is in a world situation that has never really existed before. It is important that we all look at some of the factors that are bringing it about. Through the course of history there have been different sectors of society that have had a special powerful voice. I would say that sometimes it was the kings. The kings were the ones who spoke, and everybody said that is the truth. At other times I would say there were ecclesiastical societies. The priests or bishops would speak, and everybody would say that is the truth. During the last 25, 30 or 50 years the scientists would say certain things, and everybody would say that is the truth.

As we went through each of those different levels or sectors of history, it was difficult to see that all those groups had the truth. Today, however, I think the people who seem to be trying to tell us that they have the truth are basically the economists, yet we get so much different input, different facts and different stories from the group which call themselves economists. I realize that the science of economics is a very complicated science. I realize that if one looks at all the forces which go to make up the science of economics, no matter where it happens to be or who it happens to affect, it is a very complicated subject. To me the science of economics is not unlike the science of meteorology, the science of the weather. How does a person forecast the weather? Well, once in a while the weather person is able to take all the different components that make up weather such as wind, heat, ocean currents and others, and put them together in such a way that they can say that tomorrow it will be sunny with a chance of showers, or something like that. Quite often they are right. Then again, sometimes they are wrong. Economics, on the other hand, has to do with markets, production, interest rates, all these different forces which come together into what we call the economic situation at a given moment. One person will say interest rates go up because we have to stop inflation. It is interesting that I am talking on the very day that the Congressional elections are being held in the U.S. Interest rates go up when a President is elected in the United States, a President who is surrounded by millionnaire advisers, because it has never been a better time to be a millionnaire in the U.S. than in the last two years, and interest rates go down prior to an election. We have watched that happen just in the last two months.

In any event, when it comes to the whole question of the current economic picture, I believe there are two huge hurricanes which have not been taken account of in putting together this economic package. If I could go back to the notion of how weather is predicted and how economics are predicted, there are, as I said, two huge hurricane-type storms taking place within our particular economic weather picture, and they are not being taken seriously by most of the economists who are telling us which way to go. One of those storms is the linkage we now have with the developing world, a group of countries that not so very long ago were powerless to compete with North America, Europe and so on. This great economic storm centre is moving into our economic weather pattern, and it is not being taken seriously enough. Another huge economic storm centre, one which has been using up world resources at an unprecedented rate, is that of the armaments race. Yet, interestingly enough, when we come into the House of Commons rarely do we hear about those two factors which have such a great influence on things taking place in this country, and which in part are responsible for the man in North Battleford, Saskatchewan or Windsor, Ontario, having to pay 20 per cent interest to buy a house. It is because of these two factors in the economic world, and the influence they are having, that one economist told me last week, a man whom I greatly appreciate for his understanding, that he does not know what is happening. He does not know where we are going. That is a problem the world community must face. I think what is important is that we look seriously at these factors as something which will change the traditional way in which our economies have worked.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the question of linkage between countries around the world, I would say we are in a situation not unlike the situation which took place in the Montreal forum ten years ago when the Russian national hockey team came to Canada to play the Canadian national hockey team. Canadians knew that Canada could beat the U.S.S.R. We would just go down and laugh at them as they lost. If anyone remembers the first game and the kind of feeling we had inside after the game ended, you knew that the simplistic idea that Canada was the best hockey country in the world was over. Now we can go back and make up new theories about why it happened, but the fact was that Canada's national hockey team had been beaten in Canada by another country's national hockey team. I can remember the shock that was felt by every Canadian that week as we struggled through that very interesting hockey series. What is happening now in our economic world in Canada is not unlike what we lived in, in the hockey world, prior to that game.

I do not believe, for instance, that the automobile industry in North America, which was so solidly implanted here, will ever be quite the same as it was before the Japanese became the world's automobile maker. The auto industry may blossom again here, but it will never really be the same. There has been an economic hurricane, Mr. Speaker, which has changed forever our way of looking at the economic picture. In the report of the parliamentary task force on North-South relations, on which I worked a few years ago, there is a recommendation contained in the last section under trade which is extremely important for Canada today. We recommended that the Government launch immediately a major public inquiry into the industrial sectors which are likely to be at a long-term competitive disadvantage in relationship to developing countries, with a view to developing effective adjustment measures. These adjustment measures are hard to accept because it means that the old way is over and a new way has begun.

The other economic storm, the armaments race, costs $600 billion a year. We are talking about $4 billion here tonight, and that is an impossible number to imagine, but $600 billion is what the world is spending on arms today. The two major powers are, in a sense, causing their economies to break down because of this race. The armaments race itself will lead to nothing except the destruction of the world. As we face the reality of the economics of the family down the street, of friends or neighbours, I think it is important that we understand where a great part of the problem comes from. I am going to make a few points about the amount of money that is taken out of the common pool and put into this area. I am no economist, that is obvious to everybody, but I know a few rules about what makes some things work. I think one market rule is that if you are short of a commodity, the price goes up, so if you are short of money, the interest goes up; it costs more to get money when there is not a lot available, and it costs less when there is money available.

One of the areas where money is being sucked up, we might say, at an incredible rate without any responsibility for what is happening to it, is in the arms race. The Pentagon is the centre of the arms race on this side of the world, but the same would be true on the other side of the world. The War Department, the patron of nuclear war, is the most powerful institution in history. As I understand it, there has never been an institution with as much physical power as the Pentagon. It has been estimated that the Pentagon has $1.5 trillion in assets. That is more than the total of all corporation stocks on the New York Stock Exchange. That is a shocking statistic, Mr. Speaker. It has 3,970 installations, an average of 80 for every State in the Union; it owns 25,000,000 acres of land; controls 400 major bases and 300 lesser bases in nearly every country in the world; it has 350 bases bordering the U.S.S.R.; it has 1.5 million military personnel in 116 nations; it is the largest consumer of capital and technology in the world; more than 60 per cent of all research and development funds in the United States go to the Pentagon or to the military; and more than one-third of the engineering personnel and scientists graduating from the universities go to the military.

These funds, taken from the economies of the world today, flow right into the life of every person. This affects me, it affects you, Mr. Speaker, and it affects everyone else because it makes money hard to get. At the same time, it deprives us of development funds that could be used for the good of the world.

I spoke about teachers, I spoke about prophets and I spoke about truth in the world situation today as I see it, Mr. Speaker. I believe that, as the prophet would say, it is extremely important that somehow or other we Canadians convert; that we become converts; that we change what we are doing. I refer to change in our understanding of what is taking place. We must realize that we are part of a world drama, a part of changes that affect every place in the world. We must also realize that the way things were will not be the way they will be in the future. The things that in the past guaranteed a way of life will not be easy, or perhaps not even possible, in the future. I believe that is one area in which my conversion and that of everyone else has to take place.

Another conversion that is necessary is the realization that the war game does nothing except destroy the economic base of the world and the possibility of peace in the future.

I feel that bad as the situation is in many homes in Canada, bad as the situation is behind many of those doors at which we knocked in our ridings, bad as the situation is in every little town and village, we must be conscious of the fact that Canada is still in relatively good shape compared to the rest of the world.

It is difficult to say that to someone who is unemployed. I know it sounds cruel and cold to that person, but I speak from some experience. There are countries today that have 150 per cent inflation, or that have 60, 70, 80 per cent unemployment. There are countries that had hope for the future but a natural disaster has destroyed their crops. At the moment, there is a disastrous situation in India because of crop damage. This week the newspapers carried the story of disaster in Indonesia which has resulted in crop damage. I think it is important that we be very conscious that we live in a part of the world that is still blessed.

I realize that my riding of Saskatoon East is a special place. Saskatchewan has been fortunate compared to the rest of Canada because it has the lowest unemployment rate of any province. Nevertheless, I speak for those people who are unemployed; I speak for those people who are suffering from want, and in no way do I take away from the gravity of their difficulties but I think it is also important to realise that we are still among the fortunate few compared to the whole world picture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have been listening to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) with some attention. The Bill before us is the borrowing authority. The Chair has some difficulty relating the Hon. Member's remarks to the Bill that is before the House.

Mr. Ogle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I am glad you brought this to my attention. The reason I was following this line of thought is that, as far as I know, for a government to ask for $4 billion on top of $23 billion is something that has not happened in this country before. I have not been here all my life but I feel that we are in different times now. I was trying to indicate that I believe there are certain quotients that are not being brought out which would indicate why there is this kind of debt. The Member who spoke before me talked about the energy industry, about buying this or not buying that; I appreciate that is how part of the money is spent. I was trying to speak to the credibility of the House of Commons. Why has it allowed this kind of thing to take place? I do not think any of us came to this House with the idea of bankrupting the country. It is true tha has happened during the time the Party opposite has been in power, but I have not heard any better ideas from the Party to my right that wants to come to power. In this Party, we have proposed solutions. Even so, I do not think the whole question of why times are different now has been addressed.

Even though Your Honour may feel that my remarks are out of order, it is for the reasons I have mentioned that I believe them to be in order. I believe that it is necessary to look in directions that have not yet been examined seriously, to see why the country is going down the drain. I could point to different Members of the Government and blame them, but I do not know if that sort of thing helps. The people behind the doors we knock upon wonder why we have lost credibility.

I do not claim that my explanation is the only true one, Mr. Speaker. I spoke about truth at the beginning, but the reality and the truth is so complicated that even the specialists do not know what is going on. We must look for other explanations than the one that is generally given—that it is the other Party's fault. I do not think that is the kind of solution Canadians are looking for today. To return to the question of credibility—and I am not saying that I have credibility or that I have the truth—I believe it is important that the House of Commons and the people in it who were sent here from all over the country look at other reasons for what has happened. I do not believe that what I am saying is that far out of line. I really believe in what George Ignatieff, the former Canadian Ambassador to the United Nations, said in his letter this past week to The Globe and Mail in which he talked about things not unlike what I have just been speaking about. He talked about the fact that we have come to a time in which new problems have reached such a climactic stage that the old solutions are not working. But he gave a solution in his letter to that newspaper to which I would like to refer. In it he asked why Canada does not celebrate the thirty-seventh anniversary of our signature at the United Nations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, again the rule of relevance has to be brought to his attention. I have great difficulty in relating these remarks to the borrowing authority Bill.

An Hon. Member: It has to do with the national debt.

Mr. Ogle: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I think I could certainly address the Bill in the way that it is ordinarily addressed in the House of Commons. I would be glad to do that, but what I was trying to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) with a great degree of interest and with sincere attention because I think he was asking some agonizing questions, asking for answers. I must say that all of us who give this House the importance it deserves must ask ourselves questions at times. I was interested in his remarks about economists. Economists in this and every country have a very definite role to play and exert tremendous influence on the policies governments adopt. It is significant in the United States that two recent Pulitzer Prize winners in the field of economics were on the opposite side of the question—one opposing Reaganomics and the other supporting it.

I think the Hon. Member suggested that economics is a science. I would suggest that it is not; it is an opinion. The only time I am very optimistic about the future of the country is when all the economists of the Conference Board, the Economic Council of Canada, the small business community and the Department of Finance tell me that things are all doom and gloom. Inevitably things work out for the better.

In light of the remarks of the Hon. Member, I hesitate to refer to a newspaper which I was reading on the weekend. It was the Wall Street Journal, and I read it because, like most Canadians, I was interested in the outcome of the elections in the United States today. I am interested because those elections could have an impact on whether or not interest rates turn around and go up or continue downward. I clipped no less than half a dozen important articles for my economic knowledge of the future. The editorial in Monday's edition of the Wall Street Journal was headed, "Election Eve Economics". It was a long article, but I would like to read into the record perhaps just one paragraph which dealt with spending and was quite relevant. It read:

> When Ronald Reagan took office 21 months ago, the overriding economic priority was bringing an end to the inflation that had been building for a decade or more. Inflation was a cancer eating away at the heart of the economy—rewarding recklessness, punishing thrift, destroying productive investment, allowing infrastructure to decay. This cycle was eroding the economy's productive capacity, giving us the new phenomenon of stagflation, combining the worlds of soaring prices and stagnant production. And as economic historians knew and ordinary citizens sensed, if the cycle were allowed to rage unchecked its end would be an all-consuming hyperinflation and/or a deadening crash. There simply was no choice but to curb inflation before it was too late.

That seemed to be the policy and philosophy of all industrialized nations over the last decade. It is one which I endorse and espouse. It reflects the priority the Government has placed on inflation over the last decade, particularly since 1975 when the Government made an intentional effort to reduce spending. Those who are interested in statistics would know that we were successful.

The article in the Wall Street Journal stated the obvious when it went on to say:

> We are now in a serious recession. This is the price of our success against inflation.

Clearly economists everywhere would want to ponder over that statement. The price of success in controlling inflation was to put the United States of America into a serious recession. It goes without saying that the price we are paying in Canada in our efforts to control and reduce inflation is that we too find ourselves in a deep recession.

It is food for thought that when the ten industrial nations of the world met in Versailles just a short period ago, they were faced with the recognition that unless they could get their act together and work collectively worldwide, inevitably one country after another would find itself in a recession. In retrospect it is tragic and sad that the United States and Great Britain insisted that they must continue on a tight monetary policy and a high interest rate policy to the detriment of their trading partners; in our case to our particular detriment because the Americans are our best friends and our biggest—

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the interest rate policy—

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has to address the rule of relevancy.

Mr. Mackasey: I heard an Hon. Member opposite say "nonsense" when I said that the Americans were our best friends. He may disagree with me and think that they are not, but that is another issue.

I would like to emphasize the distinction between recession and unemployment. There is a distinction. We tend to forget it. I will not read the whole editorial—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is making some general observations on monetary and fiscal policies of other countries. Now, the relevance to the borrowing authority Bill before the House is a matter which I must call to the attention of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Mackasey: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was obvious and self-evident to anyone listening that the borrowing Bill before us is a request by the Government to increase its deficit by approximately $4 million to be spent—

Mrs. Mitchell: It is $4 billion, not $4 million.

Mr. Mackasey: —to improve or, to put it another way, to reflect the economic policy which I have just spent two minutes stating. I apologize for not stating the conclusion at the beginning and the beginning at the end. The fact remains that in our fight against recession our high interest rates have resulted in a growth in our deficit. That deficit must be covered by borrowing, hence the reason for this debate.

We would not need that $4 billion if the policies dictated to us by our industrial partners and by ourselves, had not been so successful. That is according to the Wall Street Journal. Its success is reflected in the fact that we now have a recession almost world-wide. Because we have that recession, we have to borrow that $4 billion.

There is a distinction between a recession and unemployment. One of the things that worries and upsets me a little is when I find myself becoming engrossed in statistics evaluating recession, depression and prosperity statistically. There are no statistics that can graphically depict the anger, the frustration and the sorrow of a Canadian who is out of work through no fault of his or her own. That is why I was pleased when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) rose in his seat last week and in his statement of policy, his review of financial problems, clearly spelled out that he was not bowing to the temptation of freeing up more money by cutting back on certain social programs, which have been the cornerstone of Liberal policy. In his document he clearly stated that universality would continue to be the prevalent characteristic of the family allowance, of the old age pension and of UIC. Second, what went virtually unnoticed in the press, despite the clamour a month ago, was the mention or treatment, if you like, of the deficit.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, the last time we were talking about the main borrowing bill many people, in good faith, expressed concern that the deficit somehow represented a catastrophe, a load that we could not bear, and that when it came time to borrowing money we would compete with private enterprise, driving up interest rates, making it impossible for free enterprise to expand. According to a columnist to whom I relate, Lester Thoreau, in the 25 years of research that he had done on that subject he had yet to find a single incident in the United States where that type of competition resulted either in government or private enterprise being denied the funds necessary. Despite the clamour in some quarters, the Minister has made it very clear that the deficit, increased as it is by approximately $5 billion, and undesirable as that may be, presents no particular problem. There is something else here that is important and significant. The Minister says that the financing of that $22 billion is less onerous now than the financing of the $17 billion last June because the borrowing last June had to be financed at 19 per cent. The borrowing for Canadians, incidentally is now at 12 per cent or 12.5 per cent, or whatever the new bond rate is. That represents a saving from last June of $900 million.

Mr. Friesen: Who saved?

Mr. Mackasey: That is almost $1 billion that has been freed up by virtue of the fact that interest rates have come down substantially in this country. This indicates that we are on the right track, despite the impact it has on unemployment. The recession is coming to an end. It is turning around. Interest rates are dropping rapidly in the United States and in the right direction in this country.

On page 7 of the Minister's statement, he said:

> Total outlays are now expected to be almost $80 billion, about $1.1 billion higher than projected in June. Interest charges are now forecast to be more than $900 million lower than in June.

This is despite the increased deficit. The Minister went on to say:

> This has been more than offset, however, by major increases in the costs of statutory programs, such as the government share of unemployment insurance, the Canada Assistance Program, Equalization, and Railway Act payments, which are related in substantial part to the depressed levels of economic activity. The net increases in statutory program costs total some $1.5 billion.

This is a complex subject and it is easy to go down the wrong paths.

I want to say a few words, if I may, about unemployment insurance. As Lester Thoreau points out to us, the applications of economics is limited, if you like, by political reality. Can you always do what is right if politically it is not necessarily right? If the recession is on the wane, and I like to think it is, I have here some headlines or notations from the Wall Street Journal and The Globe and Mail—not on page 1, of course, but buried away. I found an interesting article by the oil industry which recorded that the oil industry indicates an upturn in its profits. I think that is fair. The hon. gentleman over there agrees, and he is an honourable man. We read that bank presidents are cautiously indicating some increase in the GNP. That is a headline in one of our papers. Another one which is nice and terse reads, "Inflation is coming down." I found one from this morning's newspaper which reported that the food industry predicts single figure inflation for the next decade in its industry. The New York Times reported that the stock market reflects to a great degree confidence in the future. The Wall Street Journal, on the appropriate page reported, "Commodity prices are firming up." One analyst wrote that the hard pressed automobile industry is showing signs of recovery. Then we find this comment: "Interest rates continue the downward trend". Here is one I like. It reads, "Economists are revising their predictions upwards".

I think it is obvious to all of us that the recession is coming to an end. It would be wrong of me or of anyone else to leave the mistaken impression that we do not have some very difficult months ahead of us. All of us are aware of the fact that, for the initial stage of any recovery, although industry is slow in normal times, it is slower still in recession times to rehire, to start a second shift, to expand and to spend. Therefore, unemployment lingers long after recovery begins. If this Government like other governments around the world is doing some real, deep thinking on where to spend its input to help private industry along the road, it may be said that that money should be going into high technology. That is where it should go if we are looking down the road to an increased GNP, a strong economic base to support our universal programs, our medicare, family allowance, pension plans, transfer payments and our free education.

Politically, however, there is a legitimate demand in the country for the creation of jobs. Governments rarely have the privilege or the funds to do both. I do not know which way the Government will proceed. I know that it is a political decision that is not easy to make. That is why the Wall Street Journal, when talking about the deficit and the need to finance it, asked what lessons we have learned from the recession. I think that it is a little too early for Canadians to begin determining what lessons should be learned since we are at least six months behind the United States, but I remember the lessons which we learned from the last Depression. I was young in those days but old enough to remember. In my home I had a particular job which I recall doing. It was to run down to the bank at noon on every Friday to change $5 into nickels and dimes. My mother would hand that out with a sandwich, apple or orange to some unfortunate person who would knock on the door and say "charité". I remember that expression from some cold nights when we would invite these people in to dine.

I am not proud of the fact that we would sometimes ride our bicycles to Val Cartier camp to see for ourselves the thousands, or five or ten thousand people living in tents because they were destitute and without any income. Their families were back home, split up and living with other relatives. If you think that I am exaggerating, read "The Ten Lost Years" or, better still, as I recall, the book review by the late Hugh Garner in Saturday Night when that magnificent book came out.

We learned lessons in that Depression and certain basic programs evolved from those lessons. Those people who read anything about Mackenzie King would see that the over-riding philosophy behind family allowance, as seen by Mackenzie King, was that it was a legitimate way of stimulating the economy. He realized the impact of a recession or a depression. Unemployment insurance, a concept that we stole from another Party, was brought under federal jurisdiction in 1943 or 1944. Old age pensions came in in the 1940s. Canadians learned the lesson that they did not want to have to go to war the next time in order to bring an end to a depression or a recession.

That is why I was somewhat upset last week when Members actually stood in the House of Commons and questioned the tremendous increase in unemployment insurance premiums. Thank God if you are one of the lucky ones that has a job and you are called upon to pay the maximum of $2 a week, which is what it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: It is $2 a week. If you still resent your $2 a week, take some consolation from the fact that it is tax deductible and will probably cost you about $1.50 a week. That $1.50 a week means that the Government can continue to respect the integrity of unemployment insurance.

An Hon. Member: You put a ceiling on it.

Mr. Mackasey: I would like to get into specifics, if I may. There is a ceiling, but the hon. gentleman was wrong in his figures. If you are over that figure, you still pay at the $29,000 or $30,000 rate. If you are so unlucky to be out of work, you draw accordingly, as if your income was $30,000. Therefore, you pay over that ceiling in any event. Ninety seven point eight per cent of Canadians, including teachers, clergymen, the army and the Public Service, are covered by unemployment insurance—all new categories prior to 1972. No one gets a free ride.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East reminded us that it is important, when exercising our vocation as politicians, that we somehow do not harm those innocent people who are not here to defend themselves. I find it mind-boggling when I read newspaper reports about views expressed in the House reflecting the opinion of one business organization that 60,000 jobs in this country would somehow disappear because the work force was asked to donate $1.50 a week after taxes.

One questions the research of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) when he stands up in the House to suggest that unemployment insurance contributions, which are increased by a maximum $2 a week, will somehow put 60,000 Canadians out of work. The bulk of that money is coming from employees and their employers. It was self-appointed spokesmen for small business who are saying that it will bankrupt us. I can remember in 1972 when those same people complained to me as Minister of Manpower or Minister of Labour, when times were fairly buoyant, about how to keep their trained employees. They asked, "How do I keep my pressman whom I have trained for 13 years when he can go down the street and work for the same pay but with maternity or sickness benefits included, because I as a small businessman cannot afford to pay the cost of a private maternity plan or sickness and accident plan?" Private enterprise was not particularly anxious at that time to provide that type of coverage, and we therefore included it in unemployment insurance. We made the big industry divide that obligation as well as everyone else.

When we talk about unemployment insurance, we are talking about Canadians who are out of work through no fault of their own. They are out of work because our economic system and free enterprise system is not perfect and cannot always provide the number of jobs that are needed. That does not absolve those of us who believe in free entreprise or private enterprise of our moral obligation to the less fortunate. As someone said to me on the phone today, one of the reasons that we are not in a depression, but rather in a recession, is that, through the $8 billion we have redistributed to the economy through unemployment insurance, we have made it possible for many communities to remain prosperous, solvent and at least viable. One thing we have accomplished is to eliminate the violence that we might see in the streets of Canada if one million people were totally divorced or cut off from benefits were we to stand up in the House to say that we cannot afford $2 a week more for unemployment insurance benefits.

I apologize, Mr. Speaker, if I have tested your good will. In a few moments we will be called upon to give the Government permission to borrow $4 million or $5 million that it needs. I want to repeat that if that deficit were to be financed by printing money or by borrowing it from outside of the country we would have a worry because it would be inflationary and a strain on our exchange. That money is being borrowed in this country from Canadians—Canadians who will take some of the savings which they have put away for a rainy day into Canada Savings Bonds. The Government, in turn, will take that money and put it into the economy to provide some of the stimulus which we will need if we want our recession to fade behind us and if we want to recover soon.

These are difficult days. I suppose that under certain circumstances I, too, may be as insensitive as some of the people I have heard speak in the House. I wonder and worry whether economists we hear on the radio and television and whose writing we read in the newspapers have perhaps not fallen into the trap of regarding people not as human beings but, rather, as cold-blooded statistics, failing to appreciate the sadness and despair of a person who is unemployed, perhaps for the first time in his life, at age 51. Unemployment is cutting right across traditional boundaries. It is no longer limited to youngsters between the ages of 18 and 24; it is no longer limited to blue collar workers or labourers. It is reaching into the managerial category. It is reaching into skilled labour. Wasted efforts could somehow be put to use in building homes, providing new growth, shelters and all the things we need in this great country of ours. We will be coming out of the recession. We will have a very difficult winter. It would be a little easier if we were to take the Prime Minister's message to heart and consider ourselves as our brother's keeper, as the Hon. Member from the NDP tried to point out to us. A little charity and understanding would go a long way over the next few months.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of speaking in the last three minutes allotted to the borrowing authority debate as to whether the Government will be allowed to borrow another $4 billion. I have been listening with some impatience to the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) who spoke with grandiose condescension about the days when he was a boy going to look at the labour camps and seeing the thousands of unemployed in Quebec. I want him to know that we were some of those people he was gawking at with his opulence. I do not appreciate the condescension that he displayed tonight at all, that grandiose, saccharine condescension he displayed when referring to the unemployed and impoverished of this land. He said that we learned some things during that Depression. We sure did. We learned that one saves for a rainy day. What has this Government taught us? It has taught us not to worry about a rainy day because the Government will look after us on a rainy day and the taxpayers of the country will pay for it. That is why the government is asking to borrow $4 billion tonight. In the Depression we learned that hard times do not break us. They simply reveal what we have made of ourselves during the easy times. This man had the gall to say that the Government is doing everything for us. The government is borrowing $4 billion tonight, but the man from Lincoln says that we are saving $900 million because we did not borrow it all in June. He did not say why we saved $900 million. It was because the Tories refused to let the Government borrow $11 billion in June.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: We split that Bill and saved $4 billion of the borrowing authority for this session, and saved the Government $900 million. He did not mention that fact. These social scientists, these social engineers, want to be such humanitarians and democrats, but they are not saying that by borrowing another $4 billion we are mortgaging the futures of our children. They want to be democratic. How many of their grandchildren or great grandchildren have a choice in the debt we are imposing on them tonight?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 9.45 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 72A adopted on Thursday, July 22, 1982, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the Bill now before the House.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: The vote is on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Deputy Chairman: Call in the members.

• (2215)

And the division bells having been rung:

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the clock now reads 18 minutes past ten o'clock. The question was put and the vote was called at 9.45 p.m. The Standing Order of the House of Commons says that there is to be a 15 minute bell. We have now gone almost a half hour past that time, and I think the question should be put forthwith.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's remarks, but I want to remind Hon. Members that if I could not take the vote during the bell incident I cannot take it now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: During the bell incident I waited until the Whips were in their seats and signalled to me that I could take the vote. I am still waiting for that.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, you will recall that, not too long ago, the Progressive Conservative Party decided, when the bells were supposed to ring—

Madam Speaker, I do not want to raise my voice because I have a sore throat, and if I am not allowed to speak, I shall take my time. You will recall that, not too long ago, when the bells were supposed to ring only for about 15 minutes, the Progressive Conservative Party decided to retire to another floor of this building and hold a caucus to decide how you should apply the rules. This evening, we did not have a caucus, neither on the third floor nor on the fourth floor, and we are here, but it is a long-standing practice that the Whip must take his seat before we can—

I thank the Hon. Members opposite. I never thought I was so popular, Madam Speaker, but we would certainly not want to delay the vote unduly, and if the members opposite would simply give me enough time to reply to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I believe that this would speed up the process and we could proceed with the vote within a reasonable period. The point I was making, Madam Speaker, is that we have a tradition with which you are familiar according to which the bells ring for about 15 minutes. The bells have now stopped ringing and I believe that the rules have therefore been complied with. The other tradition is that before proceeding with the vote, even if the bells are no longer ringing, the whips of both parties must take their seat. However, I note that the Whip of the Progressive Conservative Party is still standing, Madam Speaker—

An Hon. Member: He has just sat down!

Mr. Pinard: Since the whip of the Progressive Conservative Party has just sat down, Madam Speaker, I shall ask our own whip to do the same, and we are ready for the vote to be taken.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, on a point of order concerning the business of the House. I announced last week that tomorrow we would undertake consideration of a bill arising from the last budget and providing for a reduction in interest rates for farmers. It will remain on the Orders of the Day while we wait for the consent of the opposition parties in connection with my proposal to begin tomorrow consideration of a special bill ordering the West coast longshoremen back to work. I delivered copies of the bill to the two House leaders and I hope that in due course we shall obtain their consent not only to introduce the said bill tomorrow but also, I hope, to discuss and pass it at all stages. Before obtaining that unanimous consent, I wish to confirm to the House that if we do not obtain it, the Orders of the Day will be as indicated last Thursday in reply to the usual question.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, on behalf of our party, I am prepared to grant unanimous consent to the introduction of the Bill now so that it can be printed and distributed.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to have the special bill introduced at this point?

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on behalf of my caucus, I would be prepared to give unanimous consent to having the Bill printed.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not good enough.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I can assure my colleagues opposite that before noon tomorrow I will try to send copies of the Bill to the two Opposition spokesmen responsible for the business of the House. I will do my best to give them as many copies as possible to make it easier for them to consult their respective caucus. But we do intend to introduce the Bill immediately after the Question Period tomorrow but, for all practical purposes, that will not change anything.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, obviously the Government is asking for consent to introduce the Bill now. As far as the Official Opposition is concerned, it has now received that consent from us. The House leader for the New Democratic Party seems to be waffling and giving consent to having it printed only. Surely we can assume that they are consenting to having it introduced now because the normal consequence of introduction is that the Bill is printed. Can we not have their consent to have it introduced now?

• (2235)

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Madam Speaker, I was not asked for that consent by the Government House leader. If he would like to ask for that consent, I would be delighted to give it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we are prepared to introduce the Bill at any time, if only my colleagues across the aisle could agree with each other. In any event, even if we cannot reach an agreement this evening, desirable though it may be, I am saying that tomorrow morning I will make arrangements so that the parties opposite will have as many copies as required for consultation purposes and that, if we do have unanimous consent, we will be able to introduce the Bill, debate it and pass it at all stages tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, now it seems to be the Government that is waffling. We have had unanimous consent from the House leader of the New Democratic Party, and unanimous consent from this Party, that the Bill be introduced now. Why does the Government not introduce it now?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member opposite is making an excellent suggestion. If we obtain the consent of both sides of the House, there are no problems; I hope, however, that the NDP will be a little more straightforward and unequivocally declare that it is ready to accept the introduction of this bill tonight, but this is not what I have understood so far.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thought that is what I said before. If the Government House leader wants unanimous consent to introduce the Bill now, I am prepared on behalf of my caucus to give that consent.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Therefore, there is unanimous consent of the House for this special bill to be introduced now.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Canadians have already suffered through 14 years of economic mismanagement, uncontrolled Government spending, spiralling unemployment and record bankruptcies, resulting in a wave of insurmountable social pressures, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That this House be given the opportunity of restoring the trust the Canadian people no longer have in the present Government, and that the Prime Minister follow the excellent example of his right-hand man, Michael Pitfield, Clerk of the Privy Council, and consider tendering his resignation before the Annual Liberal Party Convention this weekend.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

MINISTER'S ABSENCES DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the fishing industry on both coasts is facing its greatest challenge economically in its history, the House regrets the reluctance of the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to appear in the Chamber to answer questions and to outline the Government's policy with respect to the fisheries crisis, as is evidenced by his refusal to attend the Question Period on Monday and Tuesday of this week despite his presence in the House on both evenings. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House directs the Minister to acquire sufficient interest and backbone to carry out his obligations to this House and to the fishermen of Canada by attending the sessions at least during Question Period.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

ENERGY EXCISE TAX BURDEN ON FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, a comprehensive study by Jensen Engineering of Olds, Alberta, indicates that the agricultural sector of the Alberta economy is saddled with federal excise taxes in excess of $130 million for gas, diesel fuel and natural gas. I do not have the figures for all of Canada, but one could safely triple this amount for the three Prairie Provinces—almost $400 million a year in excise taxes for energy. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That oppressive and unrealistic federal excise taxes on energy used in food production are an unfair burden for farmers and, in the long run, result in excessively high food costs to consumers, and that the Finance Minister move to correct this situation in his promised 1983 budget or sooner, if possible.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

CLOSURE OF EXHIBIT AT RIDEAU FALLS, ONT.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, one of the Government's Halloween tricks on the Canadian public last week was to close down the Renewable Energy Exhibit at Rideau Falls, Ontario. This four-year project attracted more than 50,000 people last year at a cost of $36,000, or less than $1 per person, yet the Government is willing to preserve the Canadian nuclear industry at the staggering cost of $3.5 billion spent since 1979, and last week cut $660 million, from the budget, particularly from the conservation sector. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That, for the sake of the Canadian conservation effort, the Renewable Energy Exhibit at Rideau Falls, be reinstated.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Special Parliamentary Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped in its all-party unanimous "Obstacles Report" strongly recommended and urged that a minister responsible for the disabled be designated, whose sole responsibility would be to represent in cabinet the needs and concerns of disabled persons, to act as a political advocate and to formulate new Government policies and programs on behalf of all disabled persons. I hope I may have the support of all sides of the House in moving, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That the Prime Minister, at the earliest opportunity, appoint a minister responsible for disabled persons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY POLICIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the squabble between the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who proposes high surtaxes on workers' earnings as a solution to our economic problems, and Dennis McDermott, the real leader of the New Democratic Party, who insists, on the other hand, on increasing the $23 billion Liberal deficit, must pain all true socialists such as the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) or the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde). Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That, if the New Democratic Party insists on public self-destruction, then at least it have the common decency to crawl away and die quietly.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer).

• (1410)

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REDUCTIONS IN RURAL SERVICE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Canada Post is attempting to cut expenses and decrease its over-all deficit by reducing many customer services. Rural residents are being asked to accept reduced service on rural routes and shorter operating hours of local post offices. This has had the effect of some residents being without mail delivery for as long as four days. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Post Office be instructed to have its officials confer with local residents and business people before any changes in postal service are made, in an effort to provide an equitable distribution of mail in rural areas.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MINES AND MINING

USE OF IRON ORE COMPANY PROFITS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Brian Mulroney, President of the Iron Ore Company, announced yesterday that the company's mine in Schefferville, Quebec, would be shutting down, throwing 285 people out of work and all but destroying the community. He gave as one reason for this the ore being produced in foreign countries and subsidized by foreign governments.

It has since come to my attention that the Iron Ore Company is connected to one of these foreign companies in Brazil, through the Hanna Mining Corporation, an American company which also owns part of the Iron Ore Company. In view of the large profits made recently by the Iron Ore Company which may have left the country to develop iron deposits in places such as Brazil, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the Government investigate the possibility that Canadian miners are producing profits for Iron Ore and other companies and that these profits are then being used to destroy the jobs of Canadians miners.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

COMMONWEALTH GAMES

REQUEST THAT HOUSE RECOGNIZE EXCELLENT CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, the XXII Commonwealth Games were held in Brisbane, Australia, this year from September 30 to October 10. More than 250 athletes from all parts of Canada took part in the games and some members of the Canadian team set Commonwealth records and also several world records.

Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the members for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That the House acknowledge and express its admiration for the courage, discipline and efforts displayed by Canadian athletes during the XXII Commonwealth Games, and that the members of this House congratulate them and wish them all every success in their pursuit of excellence.

Madam Speaker: The House may wish to show its appreciation with some applause.

HOUSING

APPLICATION OF CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM TO NORTHERN REGIONS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last Wednesday the Finance Minister announced that the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program would be extended four months to April 30, 1983, in order to stimulate the construction of new homes in Canada. In my riding in northern Ontario and in all the northern portions of this country, however, it is impossible to begin construction of a new home between November 15 and May 15 because the frost in the ground prevents excavation and pouring of foundations. Northern residents will, therefore, not be able to take full advantage of this program, and its intention of stimulating the housing industry will not be achieved to the fullest potential. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House urge the Government to extend the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program a further month to allow northern residents the opportunity to take advantage of the program and to stimulate the housing industry to the fullest possible extent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

PURCHASES MADE ON MONTHLY SAVING PLAN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a most important and urgent problem. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to rescind his directive of October 7 restricting certain persons from purchasing Canada Savings Bonds on the monthly saving plan for bond purchases of less than $1,000.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

IMPROVEMENT OF PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is widely recognized that improved productivity is the means to improved efficiency, increased jobs, lower inflation, and a better competitive position, which obviously will lead to increased exports. Why did the Minister not direct any Government resources toward improving productivity in the country, in his recent budgetary statement?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I made an economic statement last week. I indicated that I was taking steps to improve the situation in the business sector in particular by not proceeding with a number of taxes and by removing certain administrative burdens from the private sector so they could proceed with all the energy they have to improve economic conditions in Canada at the present time. I think that will lead to increased productivity.

Unfortunately, firms have had to lay off many people in the current circumstances. As the Hon. Member also knows, they are in a difficult financial situation, and the first effort of business as the recovery comes along will indeed be concentrated on improving productivity.

As far as further medium and long term measures are concerned, I said that I was going to consult extensively with labour and management. I indicated that an increase in productivity was a major issue for the future of Canada. I certainly intend to address this issue in my consultations over the next few weeks with business and labour.

Mr. Wilson: We have heard these sorts of words from previous Ministers for some time now. The Minister surely knows that Canada's productivity record is the worst of any industrialized country in the world. He must agree that the statements he has made previously about putting all the emphasis on the six and five program are not enough—it deals with part of the problem—and that a key part of the problem is improving output in the country.

STEPS TO IMPROVE WORKER OUTPUT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. What has the Government done since the 1980 election to improve the output per worker? That is obviously the key to productivity.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, indeed our level of productivity is a source of concern. I would remind the Hon. Member, however, that between 1970 and 1980 the Canadian record compared reasonably well to those of its competitors in terms of productivity.

We have had a serious problem in the last short while, and my approach is to attempt to leave room again for the business sector to invest in more efficient machinery, to improve the efficiency of plants, as well as trying to encourage labour and management to sit down together and hopefully arrive at better labour-management relations in this country than we have known in the past.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I cannot let what the Minister said go without making a comment that—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wilson: —the productivity problem in this country began back in the mid-1970s, not in the last couple of years.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PRODUCTIVITY CENTRES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, in 1961 the Diefenbaker Government formed the National Productivity Council which was to increase the awareness of the importance of productivity and to develop ways to improve productivity. A subsequent Liberal Government rolled that into the Economic Council in which it has assumed a very minor role. Would the Minister of Finance consider initiating a well-funded program to support national productivity centres across the country, involving Government, labour and the corporate sector, that would increase the awareness and the need for productivity, develop better information programs on how we can improve productivity, and advise the federal Government and other Governments on their roles in increasing the productivity of the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I thank the Hon. Member for his suggestion to increase federal Government expenditures. I will look at his proposal. I recall this particular arrangement that had been set up around 1960. The scheme was abandoned because it proved to be a very inefficient operation. Frankly it ended up being more like a make-believe operation than a real contributor to increasing productivity. I do not want to repeat the same mistake, but I am certainly ready to discuss and consider, with our economic partners, the advantages of any continuing institutional changes which might improve productivity. If the establishment of such centres were to be of great benefit, it would obviously be foolish for us to refuse to consider such a proposal. However, I submit to the Hon. Member that it is not necessarily by adding to institutions and to federal Government expenditures that we will succeed in improving productivity in our country.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF BIOTECHNOLOGY CENTRE

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister knows that the United Nations has been seeking the establishment of a biotechnology centre, a major one in the world, and preferably in a country which is eminently suited to receiving it and operating it. Such a country, of course, is Canada, with its high education levels, with its small but highly intelligent population, and with its other resources in computers and agricultural development which would sustain it. Is the Minister giving active consideration to the establishment of such a centre, and has he taken steps to advise the United Nations that Canada wants it badly and will handle it well?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am sure that if the centre comes to Canada, it will indeed be handled very well. There is a great deal of interest in the centre. The City of Montreal, like some other areas of Canada, has expressed particular interests.

We really need further analysis of this particular project. As Hon. Members know, it is primarily directed toward biotechnological research for Third World countries and for the training of Third World scientists in Canada, a very interesting project indeed.

We will be sending some representatives to a conference in Belgrade around mid-December, I believe, to ask some further questions with respect to the costs, and also to ascertain what other countries might be interested in contributing to the costs if such a centre were to be established in Canada. It is estimated at the present time, as I recall, that the initial capital costs will amount to something in the neighbourhood of $50 million and that the operating costs in turn over the first five years would be approximately the same amount. Therefore, it clearly must be subjected to a cost-benefit analysis. It is under active consideration and we are very interested indeed.

Mr. Gilchrist: Madam Speaker, that is a very sensible answer concerning a cost-benefit analysis, and I compliment the Minister.

REQUEST THAT TORONTO AREA BE CONSIDERED AS POSSIBLE SITE

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that it would likely require an annual input of $35 million from other nations to sustain such a centre. He mentioned Montreal, and I am sure he did not mention it because he comes from that area. However, he also knows that the University of Waterloo, which is now pre-eminent in computer science, in fact surpassing Stanford and other such notable institutions; the University of Guelph, which has always been pre-eminent in agriculture, and the Allelix project, sponsored by the CDC, the Ontario Government and the Labatt Company, are all centred around west Toronto and would form the core of a critical mass, no pun intended, to create such a viable institution. I wonder if he is giving consideration to that aggregation and why he has not yet made application when other countries have already made known their intentions of applying for the project. I would hate to see it lost due to indifference.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, as I mentioned in my first answer, I know that a number of areas in Canada are interested in this particular project. The Hon. Member, coming from Ontario, understandably refers to the interests of that particular region. I understand there is also interest in the maritime provinces as well. Of course, this is something which would have to be taken into consideration after we have received further information of the kind that I mentioned.

With respect to the application, I understand that it is being handled by the Department of External Affairs. I see the Minister is not here today. However, my understanding is that we are not in the position of having lost this project by any means. We would like to have more information with respect to it, and that is why we are sending a delegation to Belgrade in December.

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSAL ASPECT OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Government is currently creating a lot of confusion and anxiety amongst Canadian families concerning its policy on the universality of social programs. Ten days ago a spokesperson for the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that family allowances would remain unchanged. Yesterday the Minister of Finance, in contrast, suggested just the opposite, that the universal aspect of family allowances may have to be discarded.

Will the Prime Minister take this opportunity to state unequivocally that family allowances will remain a right for every Canadian family?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to state quite clearly to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that I am not considering abandoning the principle of universality. In 1974, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, I sponsored a tripling of family allowances, plus their full indexation, so my record is pretty safe in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The Leader of the NDP should know, therefore, my favourite option. However, there is a greater readiness in the population to ensure that Government expenditures are better targeted to those most in need. I have received representations in that regard and my statement is aimed at making sure that representations I receive in the future will be based on a well-informed consideration of the situation, of the pros and cons, and that the suggestions coming from the Leader of the NDP as well as those from others will take place in a context where we will have a rational discussion and careful examination of the issues rather than a knee-jerk reaction as I have seen from some.

UNIVERSAL RIGHT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, that certainly clarifies the situation. I do not know if we were given an ironclad guarantee or not by the Minister on that issue. However, I would like to try for an ironclad guarantee.

Is the Minister saying to the House, and more important is he saying to every working family across this land, that family allowances will remain a universal right to which every family in this country is entitled?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I indicated that this certainly was my favourite option. As far as the working families of this country are concerned, I want to ensure indeed that they would get the largest possible benefits in the form of family allowances. That is certainly my objective and the one I will be fighting for.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I will try again with what I presume is the real Prime Minister, and maybe he will not switch to his surrogate but will answer the question this time.

The Prime Minister's good friend, the Minister of Finance, just said that maintaining universal family allowances is his "favourite option". Now, a specialist in logic, as I know the Prime Minister is, will have inferred from that that it is a favourite option but it may be the one that he will not choose. Therefore, I ask the Prime Minister quite seriously, will he, as head of the Government, finally clarify the situation and tell the people of Canada that every family in this country will remain entitled to a family allowance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am used to hearing arguments from various sides of this House, and even in Cabinet there are sometimes arguments, on both sides of the question. But in this particular case the Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that it is the favourite option—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: NDP.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, let us say the Leader of the Opposition which brings out its Members when a vote comes on a non-confidence issue.

Mr. Clark: On time.

• (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: He knows that the Minister of National Health and Welfare also has universality as her favourite option, so I will be very highly influenced by these options.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a brief supplementary for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister of Finance said that he would like to see Members of the House have a rational discussion of this matter. I would ask the Minister if, in the interest of having that rational discussion, she would consider making a reference to the Standing Committee on Health, Wealth and Social Affairs of the total income security programs because of the fact that we are literally spending billions of dollars on these programs and yet, at the same time, there are 2.8 million Canadians living below the poverty line. Obviously something is not working correctly. I wonder if, in light of those facts, she would consider making that reference to the Committee.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The fact is, Madam Speaker, that our objective, and I think my two colleagues have explained this quite clearly, is to achieve redistribution within our social programs. Actually, we cannot isolate family allowances since they are part of a package which may not be as familiar to hon. members and which, for instance, includes a tax exemption for dependent children which goes to the parents, and also the child tax credit, and so forth, and the same applies to the pension component. So the main objective, let us say for the time being and in the years to come for any minister of National Health and Welfare will be that there will be no new funding from other sources, and therefore the problem is one of achieving redistribution within these programs in a way that is socially just.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—IMPORTANCE OF RELATED BENEFITS TO QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence, and I think it may also be of interest to the Minister of Supply and Services. The minister is aware that there are all kinds of speculations going the rounds in Quebec regarding the economic spin-offs of the F-18 purchase. Since the member for Longueuil has said publicly that there was a cabinet commitment that $1.5 billion should go to the province of Quebec, which represents 48 per cent of the spin-offs as initially projected, can the minister give us the assurance today that Quebec will derive all the economic benefits from the purchase, namely the $1.5 billion, and that at the same time, the 48 per cent of total spin-offs is maintained?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think the F-18 and its industrial and economic spin-offs will provide ample opportunity for discussion for a number of years yet, in fact, until 1995, when all aspects of the project will be finalized. However, Madam Speaker, I can assure you that along with the member for Joliette, the entire Quebec caucus on this side of the House and all the ministers concerned have a keen interest in this matter. However, I wish to point out with respect to what the member for Joliette has just said about certain allegations made by the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce, that the Minister may not have received all the information he should have had from the Minister of Supply and Services. Quebecers should know that as of September 1982, Quebec has already obtained nearly $1 billion in industrial spin-offs, and I can assure you that I have never had any doubts as to the forecast and guarantees given Quebecers in 1980 when the contract was signed, namely that they would have their fair share of these economic spin-offs, and I am convinced that this part of the project will be a success just as the aircraft itself, as we saw a week or so ago. I am sure that the industrial spin-offs and the aircraft itself will be equally successful.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Supply and Services, and I hope he will also acknowledge the very important statement made by the member for Longueuil, namely that the cabinet has made a commitment to redistribute 48 per cent of the economic spin-offs. Considering his responsibilities, can the Minister give the House the assurance that he will see to it that Quebec is given the share that corresponds to the cabinet commitment, namely, a minimum of $1.5 billion, and that if the economic spin-offs should exceed the initial forecast, Quebec will receive 48 per cent of these spin-offs? That was my question.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the member for Joliette listened very carefully to the answer given by the Minister of National Defence, and I am satisfied that he obtained the desired information. I simply wish to add that when the contract was awarded, we had identified the economic spin-offs and the strong likelihood that these would represent $1.5 billion for the province of Quebec. In fact, we have met 63 per cent of the forecast, although we are now only at the 24 per cent mark of the total economic spin-off period. So, as the Minister indicated quite clearly, we only need $600 million to meet our objective, and I am sure that by 1995, economic spin-offs will, we hope, have exceeded the target we had set, and I am also sure that the member for Joliette, in this new spirit of co-operation being shown by the opposition, will give us the benefit of this imaginative proposals so that we can meet this objective.

AIRPORTS

RECOMMENDED CLOSURE OF TOWERS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, it is perhaps appropriate that my question to the Minister of Transport will bring us back to earth, although the question really has something to do with between earth and the sky. I know the Minister has many matters pending on his legislative platter from Chairmen of the CTC, the Harbours Board, VIA Rail, and on domestic air policy. I want to ask him specifically about a report that I understand is on his desk recommending closure of ten of the 60 airport towers across the country. If so, what are the criteria that are to be used for the closure of those ten towers? Are the criteria going to be made public, and when is the decision going to be made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my Department tries to be as productive as possible, to follow up on a previous question. We are constantly on the alert to see whether savings can be made here or there without neglecting safety. The possibility of closing air control towers in some airports of Canada is one that is being studied now. The events in the United States a few months ago respecting air control have indicated to the world that there are savings to be made in that particular area of air transportation. We are looking at it in that light, but I want to assure my hon. friend that safety will not be compromised.

PROPOSED CLOSURE LOCATIONS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, we all know there is quite a difference between this country and the United States. We all know, and the Minister appreciates, that in the Dubin Report it was clearly set out that any airport which handles jets should have a tower, to avoid the unfortunate accident that occurred in Cranbrook.

In view of the onset of winter, and the fact this matter has been sitting on the Minister's desk for sometime, could the Minister tell this House and the country—to help shed some light on this problem and to show the difference between here and the United States—that some of the airports being considered for closing are Penticton, Charlottetown, Val d'Or, and the fact that a decision has not been made is because Mirabel is also involved because of the lack of aircraft at that airport?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the question changed at the last moment. The first question was on closure of towers. Now it is a question on closing of airports, but I think the Hon. Member meant towers.

I can confirm, and I say it quite simply, that we are looking at the possibility of making savings in order to pay for other services that are needed more than the ones to which the Hon. Member referred. In some cases it has to do with a possible closing of towers; in other cases it has to do with the elimination of the nightshift in some particular airports, simply because the airports are not being used at night. There are other ways to land aircraft which do not necessitate the presence of air controllers in towers.

We are trying to be efficient. Everybody, every day, talks about productivity. We had a question a moment ago on that subject. But whenever a Minister makes a move to bring about productivity in his department, he is chastised by somebody in the Opposition. So, I am trying to be efficient, and efficiency demands that in order to build adequate air services in Canada, in the instances where savings can be made, we should move and make those savings, but, I repeat, without endangering the safety of anyone.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I am glad to hear the Government so concerned about efficiency, because I want to ask a question of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Over the past few months hundreds of unemployed forestry workers in B.C. alone have been cut off regular UIC benefits. As they enter into the Employment Bridging Assistance Program, they wait without any income for up to six to eight weeks, or more, for the money they have earned. These victims are the latest to be added to the thousands of jobless in B.C., Alberta, Ontario and elsewhere, who have been forced to go on welfare while waiting week upon week to collect their first regular UIC benefits, and the delays go on and on. This is often their only income, apart from family allowances for the families of those breadwinners.

Will the Minister explain to this House just why he has allowed this inexcusable foul-up to go on and on and on within his Department, month after month, to the point where at least one class action lawsuit has had to be launched by the unemployed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin with, I am glad the Hon. Member recognizes the fact we had introduced a number of alternative job programs for the forestry workers to provide assistance for them during this period of time. But he is very sadly mistaken when he indicates that no action has been taken to ensure that they are receiving payment, for in those areas we have added substantial numbers of people to the unemployment insurance offices to deal with the very large number of applications for assistance, which he knows have increased in his own province by something like 40 per cent or 50 per cent. We have also assigned a substantial number of overtime hours for our own employees who are now working an average of six to seven days a week to deal with the UIC backlogs and get the cheques out. I can assure the Hon. Member that the staff of the Department are working as hard as they can to provide both the regular UIC backup as well as the money for the new bridging program.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

EFFECT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, as a supplementary, in many areas the waiting period gets longer and longer, and it is not the fault of the employees. It is not just a matter of time. One male construction worker in Vancouver recently—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot allow the Hon. Member to argue in this way. I would like him to ask the supplementary question.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, there are a number of particular cases. A hardworking E.B.A.P. employee in the Nelson area was fired—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I have just signalled to the Hon. Member that he must go directly to his question.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, why is it that B.C. employees under E.B.A.P. were removed by Order in Council 81 of the Province of British Columbia from any protection under the Employment Standards Act of that Province? Why do they suffer without first aid facilities? And is that the same case in Ontario, Alberta, and elsewhere, as well, and, if that is the case, how can the Minister justify it, and what is he going to do about it, if he will not justify it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if I understand the Hon. Member's question, it is a question more properly addressed to the Government of the Province of British Columbia.

PORTS

CLOSURE OF GRAIN ELEVATOR NO. 1 AT PORT OF MONTREAL

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given the very real possibility that grain elevator No. 1 in the Port of Montreal will be closed down permanently on December 31, 1982, could the minister delay demolition until the federal government reinstates its farm subsidy program for the construction of co-operative silos, in order to meet the need for storage of surplus grain, particularly this year with the very good crop we had in the East, since prices will drop dramatically if we do not have alternate storage facilities?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the decision to close down elevator No. 1 in the Port of Montreal was made for several reasons. First of all, the elevator is very old and represents a safety hazard. Second, room must be made for new facilities in the old Port of Montreal. So that is why the decision was made.

Madam Speaker, I may add that Trois-Rivières, Sorel, Quebec City and other places have grain elevators where grain can be brought in by truck. Therefore, grain producers can go to those facilities.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

FUTURE OF NOVA SCOTIA HEAVY WATER PLANTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as the Minister responsible for Atomic Energy of Canada. It concerns the future of the two heavy water plants in Nova Scotia. The failure to sell Candu reactors may well result in cutbacks in heavy water production and possible closure of the two plants. Parts of Cape Breton already have unemployment twice the national average and this plant closure could result in the loss of a further 3,000 jobs, directly and indirectly.

Is the Minister reviewing this massive problem, and what solution does he propose? Has he received any help from his Parliamentary Secretary, or from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who represents the workers affected by these possible plant closures?

An Hon. Member: Wake up, Jean.

An Hon. Member: You are now the Minister of Energy, Jean.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I was in profound meditation.

POLICY ON SALES TO INDIA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I can try it one more time, but I think the people of Cape Breton know the interest the Minister has in their plant closure problems.

I will ask the Prime Minister this question. The workers at the Strait of Canso plant have made a request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to help in the sale of heavy water to India. The Prime Minister knows this affects an important Government policy with respect to the sale of nuclear materials to certain countries. What I should like to ask the Prime Minister, on behalf of plant workers in the Strait of Canso, is whether, in view of the massive unemployment problem that would be caused by the plant closure, the Government is willing to reconsider its policy with respect to the sale of nuclear materials to India and to modify that policy so that a sale of heavy water could take place and this plant, in the constituency of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could be saved.

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it was my understanding that the question was put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and therefore I was also in meditation when the Hon. Member put the question.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I should like to answer the question. I think there is a problem with the production of heavy water in Canada. It is a very difficult problem, and it is not a new one. It is related to the problem of selling Candu reactors around the world. We need reactors in order to use the heavy water. It is a problem that I am working on, but it is a very difficult one at this time. No final decision has been made. On the question of selling reactors, even if we had a buyer tomorrow, it would not mean that we would need the production of heavy water for many, many more years. It is a difficult problem and no final decision has been made on it as yet.

INCOME TAX

QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my questions are directed to the Minister of Finance. He will recall that on October 28, in reply to questions concerning his budget, he said, as reported at page 20122 of Hansard:

—I left out a number if issues that are still to be considered in terms of the amendments to the Income Tax Act—

Nearly a year has gone by since the egg-laying budget of November 12. There has been massive uncertainty within the country, with the result that people cannot open new businesses because they are afraid to get involved and are afraid to employ people. That uncertainty is the problem. When is the Minister going to give the House of Commons and the people of Canada the final version of the Income Tax Act so that we can understand what we are paying taxes on in this country, so that business can get going again, and so that we can have some growth and development in the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if my hon. colleague had read the rest of my statement, he would have noticed that I said we intended to introduce a definitive bill at the beginning of December. However, I hope that when the bill is introduced, we can count on the Hon. Member and his opposition colleagues to expedite this legislation in the House so that we will be able to provide business with a substantial degree of certainty as to the specific manner in which the Income Tax Act will apply to corporate income in the years to come.

[English]

DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that his Parliamentary Secretary and his officials have the full benefit of public hearings that his Department insisted be completed by September 30. He has met with business people and labour people across the country. By December 1 this matter will have gone on for well over a year. Can the Minister give the House an undertaking that no later then December 1 the final version of this income tax mess the Government has created will be presented to Parliament?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member seems to complain about the readiness of the Government to be flexible and to listen to representations from people outside, as well as from parliamentarians. At the end of September I received the report from the Parliamentary Committee, and I thank them for it. I have also had extensive discussions with various groups and organizations during the month of October, covering some of the same subjects. I have reached a conclusion on most of the items that were still under consideration and, in my statement last week, I announced my decision on a large number of them.

We are in the process of drafting the bill. I should like to be able to introduce it before December 1 if that can be done. However, I cannot tell the Hon. Member that if it is not ready by December 1 the roof will fall in, but we will try to produce it for December 2 or December 3; I said it would be introduced for sure in early December. I am doing my very best to ensure that it will be ready even before then, so that the Parliamentary Committee can have the full time to examine it. I hope that, with co-operation, we can pass the bill before Christmas.

PIPELINES

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF WATER PIPELINE FROM DIEFENBAKER LAKE TO REGINA, SASK.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the proposed water pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to the Buffalo Pound pumping station. The Prime Minister has indicated in the House that the federal Government would be anxious to discuss this project with the Province of Saskatchewan if the Province considers it a priority. Last weekend the Minister met with the Minister of Finance for Saskatchewan. Can the Minister inform us if the pipeline was discussed, if the Saskatchewan Government considers the pipeline to be a priority, and if we can expect an announcement soon that the project will proceed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it appears that Members of the New Democratic caucus are asking questions this afternoon that have a very strong provincial overtone.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I met with Members of the Saskatchewan Government on the weekend to talk about the job creation program, the NEED program, in which we are enlisting their co-operation. They raised the matter of the Regina pipeline, which I think is a very important project for the Province. They indicated to me that they have a task force which is examining the feasibility of that but which will not report until mid or late November. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, has indicated to them that the federal Government is prepared to sit down and discuss the matter with them as soon as the report is available. I am sure we would like to follow through on that matter. That is where things stand at the present time.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, that answer is most encouraging. The pipeline and the project are something that community leaders and political leaders in Regina are behind.

An Hon. Member: And Moose Jaw.

Mr. de Jong: And in Moose Jaw as well, Madam Speaker. Can the Minister give us the assurance that he will convey to the provincial Government the fact that the federal Government is prepared to co-operate in every way possible and to offer reasonable financial assistance for the completion of this most important project?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think we demonstrate every day that we are prepared to co-operate with the provincial governments.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister could explain this bill introduced yesterday in the Senate, which would prohibit provincial governments from acquiring more than a 10 per cent ownership in any company engaged in interprovincial and international transportation by energy pipelines, railways, airlines, shipping, trucking, bus lines and commodity pipelines. Would the Prime Minister tell us why the Government has taken this sudden action?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think it is quite clear the government's intention was to introduce draft legislation in order to reaffirm its authority and jurisdiction in areas that are absolutely vital to the economy and unity of this country.

[English]

REASONS FOR INTRODUCTION IN SENATE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister, first, was this legislation discussed in the spirit of co-operation and of trusting a Canadian? Was this legislation discussed with provincial governments before it was introduced in the Senate? Second, why was it snuck into the Senate instead of being introduced in the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, there are two very good reasons why the bill was introduced. First of all, in doing so the government will avoid many problems in its dealings with the provinces—an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. In this case, Madam Speaker, the provinces can hardly blame the Canadian government for wanting to safeguard its jurisdiction. This measure is not aimed against the provinces. It is a Canadian measure for the benefit of the government of Canada. However, I am hardly surprised to see the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party take this stand, since he is rather fond of dismantling federal responsibility for the sake of the provinces.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have another question for the minister—

[English]

—but, I should prefer to get an answer from the Prime Minister—if the Prime Minister knows anything about this.

Will the Prime Minister tell us why this measure was introduced in the Senate—was snuck in rather than brought in here publicly, to the House of Commons?

Why is the Government of Canada, just weeks after it has spoken about the need to establish a climate of confidence and trust, sneaking around in this way, trying to limit the capacity of provincial governments to act? Why is it doing that without any kind of consultation? Why do its actions always put the lie to its language?

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I felt it was important to introduce this bill after the closing of the market. And besides, our Parliament has two Houses, and I am therefore surprised at the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and his lack of appreciation of the Senate. In any event, once the draft legislation tabled in the Senate has been considered there, it will be considered later on in the House of Commons. Furthermore, the opposition knows perfectly well that seventeen bills are being considered in Parliament at the present time, and that we shall have to proceed with these before considering any new legislation. I may add that there was no attempt to do this in a surreptitious or sneaky manner. Tabling draft legislation in the Senate, which is after all a public place, is part of the business of Parliament, and I find the attitude of the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party very strange.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LACK OF PENSIONS FOR SINGLE WOMEN AGED SIXTY TO SIXTY-FIVE YEARS

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to address one of my questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As a matter of fact, some of us feel very strongly about the way the Minister over the years has endorsed legislation for social development. However, there is one fact of law that is wrong and must be corrected, and I call on the Minister to do it. I refer to the fact that women between the ages of 60 and 65 who have no marital connection, and no income, are denied any pension at all. I ask the Minister to get the law corrected so that provision can be made for these women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, even if it is not in the tradition of Question Period, I do not think Hon. Members would mind if I recall to all of us that it was about 13 months ago, today or tomorrow, that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre went through a very serious health problem which many other Canadians share with him. Obviously we are pleased that he has recovered and is with us today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: It is worth giving him our best wishes. He is an example of hope for many Canadians that they too can recover.

Of course the serious problem the Hon. Member has defined in his question is a priority. However, it is not the first priority. The Government's first priority is to target assistance whenever possible to those single pensioners, mostly women, who are 65 years of age and older and who are still below the poverty line. In that respect the other problem becomes a second priority.

INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED CLOSING OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Canada Packers, Inc., Prince Edward Island's largest private sector employer, has just announced that it will close its doors next fall, thereby throwing hundreds of people out of work. In view of the fact that on P.E.I. such a plant closure is equivalent to a lay-off of some 2,000 or 3,000 workers in Quebec or Ontario, is the Government open to the idea of exploring with the owners of the plant, with the provincial Government, with the union and with other interested parties, every possible option for keeping the plant open and maintaining those jobs?

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. As soon as the company has informed the government of its intentions regarding shutdowns and lay-offs, at that time we shall do what is now being done for other eastern regions and Ontario and Quebec, namely, we shall meet with the union, the company and government officials in order to decide what programs to implement so as to provide direct aid for workers who may be laid off.

[English]

ALLOCATION OF NEED PROGRAM FUNDS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, if I may have his attention. He has indicated that he does not yet know how the Government will allocate funds to the various provinces under its new job creation program, NEED. If the Canada Packers plant cannot be kept open with the help of the federal Government, the Province and others, in any allocation of funds for Prince Edward Island will the Government consider not only current unemployment statistics on P.E.I., which God knows are bad enough, but also the fact that within a few months' time P.E.I. may well be facing the worst employment crisis in its history?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should like to tell the Hon. Member that we are just about finished meeting with different provincial governments to discuss how we can put in place the final details of that Program. I hope to be in a position to bring those details forward in a matter of about a week's time. Also I indicate to him that we take into account regional differences in looking at the allocations, and that is one reason we have spent so much time talking in different regions to determine the best form of allocation. As well, I would remind him that there are other forms of assistance which we could provide to communities particularly hard hit by closures or lay-offs. I would be very glad to sit down with him or to have people from my Department do that, so that we could outline the range of options which might be helpful in this particular case.

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-137

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a number of agreements that have been reached concerning Bill C-137 which we are to consider later today. There are four agreements. The first one concerns a change in the motion for second reading so as to provide for referral of the bill to a committee of the whole as opposed to a standing committee, so that the bill will remain before the House a little later today. The second agreement is on the time limit for speeches. With the exception of the first spokesman for each party, both on second and third reading, speeches will be limited to a maximum of twenty minutes each. A third agreement was reached on extending today's sitting beyond the usual time of adjournment, if necessary, in order to finish third reading of the bill later today. Finally, the fourth agreement concerns suspending the sitting of the House after third reading to wait for royal assent to the bill later today. Those, Madam speaker, were basically the four agreements that were reached. We shall not necessarily have to sit past six o'clock, but there is a possibility, and if we do, the other agreements I just mentioned will take effect.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Madam Speaker, that reflects accurately the agreement which was reached. It should be clear for the record, however, that our agreement to send the matter to Committee of the Whole will occur after second reading.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we also agree that those are the terms that we set down, discussed and agreed upon earlier today.

Madam Speaker: Therefore, does the House agree to the proposals of the Hon. President of the Privy Council?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OBSERVANCE OF REMEMBRANCE DAY—TWO-DAY ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as next week's Remembrance Day is most important—and this year it falls on a Thursday—and since many Members will want to leave to be in their constituencies on Thursday, we have discussed and agreed that we will not sit next Friday, provided the time will be recouped. Therefore, I think there is unanimous consent for the following motion:

That on Monday, November 8, 1982 and Tuesday, November 9, 1982, the provisions of Standing Order 6(1) shall be suspended; and

That when the House adjourns on Wednesday, November 10, 1982, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, November 15, 1982.

The effect of the motion is obvious. The House will sit between six and eight o'clock next Monday and Tuesday evenings, but it will not be sitting next Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that accurately reflects our agreement.

Madam Speaker: Therefore, it is agreed and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

CHALLENGER AIRCRAFT

Question No. 4,171—Mr. MacKay:

1. Did Mr. Fred Kearns, President of Canadair, confirm in February, 1982 that some 50 Challenger aircraft were sold for about $4.5 million each as mentioned in the Montreal Gazette dated February 6, 1982 and did the Supplementary Estimates (E) for the year ending March 31, 1982 contain an item of $13.56 million for the purchase by the Department of Transport "of a 'Challenger' aircraft and assorted parts" and, if so, in detail, what accounts for this difference in price?

2. For what purpose is the $13.56 million "Challenger" aircraft going to be used?

3. What kind of oxygen system was originally specified for the $13.56 million "Challenger"?

4. Was the oxygen system which was eventually installed in the $13.56 million "Challenger" a system requiring obsolete oxygen bottles and the use of surgical masks or an up-to-date system used in modern passenger aircraft?

5. Did the Government commit itself to purchasing two Dash-7 aircraft at a cost of some $20 million and, if not, has the Government any plans to do so?

6. Has the Government any further plans to be "the purchaser of last resort" for aircraft produced by de Havilland of Canada and, if so, what are the funding plans?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Yes. Mr. Kearns, President of Canadair, did confirm that Challenger aircraft were sold for about $4.5 million each as mentioned in the Montreal Gazette dated February 6, 1982.

It was originally intended that the first 50 aircraft be sold at a fixed price of $4.375 million to initiate the sale of the Challenger aircraft at an attractive but competitive price. In fact, only 26 aircraft were sold at $4.375 million, 15 of which were in Canadian dollars and the remainder in U.S. dollars. The aircraft has subsequently been sold at prices ranging from $4.975 million fixed price (March, 1977) to U.S. $8.5 million plus escalation (July, 1981) for the CL-600 (Lycoming) Challenger and U.S. $9.5 million plus escalation for the CL-601 (GE) Challenger. The prices quoted are for aircraft without finished interior (protective zinc chromate (green) finish on bare structure only). It is the customer's responsibility to arrange for interior completion. Most of the price increase has been inflationary and consistent with similar price increases for competitive aircraft.

The "$13.56 million Challenger" purchased by the Department of Transport was purchased on resale from Canadair, fully equipped with executive interior, for $10.8 million Canadian dollars plus $972,000 tax for a total of $11,772,000. Under separate contract $750,000 worth of spares were purchased and additional costs were incurred to modify the aircraft to Department of Transport's commercial airliner standards (flight data recorder procurement and installation, etc.).

2. The aircraft is to be used in executive flight operations as a replacement for the now antiquated Jetstar I aircraft.

3. An airline standard oxygen system was originally specified for the Challenger. The present system is superior to airline standards.

4. The system installed in the Challenger includes the standard airline oxygen system (automatic drop-down face masks) good for 15 minutes, auxiliary stowed two passenger, walk around cannister packs good for 30 minutes and portable theraputic oxygen unit with surgical mask good for 30 minutes for on-board medical emergencies. Crew oxygen with quick access masks is good for 7½ hours.

5. The Department of National Defence purchased 2 Dash-7 in January, 1979 for $8.573 million, each.

6. No. The Government only procures aircraft when there is a clearly defined need for them.

AMOUNT OWED GOVERNMENT BY FOREIGN NATIONS

Question No. 4,300—Mr. Patterson:

What amount is owing to the Government by foreign nations and which, if any, of the loans are forgivable?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Canadian International Development Agency is concerned: The total amount owing to the Government by foreign countries as of December 31, 1981 is $2,313,170,151.68. All the loan agreements with foreign countries include repayment clauses.

In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned: EDC makes loans to foreign customers to finance export sales of goods and services by Canadian exporters. Such loans may be made to sovereign and commercial borrowers. As of December 31, 1981, the amount of loans receivable due to EDC from borrowers abroad, net of participation by other lenders, was Can. $3.66 billion. None of those loans are forgivable.

In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: The Department of Finance is responsible for government loans to foreign nations totalling $792,572,283 as of March 31, 1981. These loans are recorded in detail on page 6-28 of Volume I of the Public Accounts of Canada 1980-81. It is not the Government's policy to forgive loans to foreign nations, though from time to time it has renegotiated their terms.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF MARIN COMMISSION

Question No. 4,309—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

Since the Report of the Commission of Inquiry Relating to Public Complaints, Internal Discipline and Grievance Procedures Within the RCMP, otherwise known as the Marin Commission, was published in 1976 (a) how many and which of its recommendations were accepted by the Government (b) of the recommendations accepted, how many were implemented (c) on what date will the other acceptable recommendations be implemented (d) how many recommendations were rejected and for what reasons?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) All but 14 recommendations have been accepted. Thirty-seven were accepted without reservations and 84 were accepted with modifications.

(b) Eighty-five of the 121 recommendations accepted have been implemented through policy.

(c) The remaining acceptable recommendations will be implemented following enactment of Bill C-69.

(d) Fourteen recommendations were rejected:

COMP 24	Implementation would result in duplicate investigations and an unnecessary inconvenience to witnesses.
COMP 25	Judged to be impractical.
DIS 3	The familiar expressions of counselling, cautionings and warnings are to be retained.
DIS 7(1)	Judged to lack significant meaning and application.
DIS 9, 10, 11	Considered inappropriate in personnel administration.
DIS 13	Members will be required to answer questions relating to the matter under investigation if the member is alleged to have contravened the Code of Conduct. Answers given will not be admissible in any criminal proceeding or disciplinary hearing except to prove a false statement.
DIS 23	Not applicable—tribunal is one officer.
GRIEV 2	Considered inappropriate in personnel administration.
GRIEV 7	Redundant—by reason of provision in GRIEV 4, which has been implemented through policy and is proposed for Bill C-69. Sub-Section 31(5).
GRIEV 10	If a grievor chooses another member for assistance, then no cost attaches. If he chooses counsel, then it will be at his cost.
GRIEV 18	Division Staff Relations Representatives (DSRR) are elected by the membership of the Force, and the presence of the DSRR on all Boards will ensure that the interests of the grievor are always protected.
GRIEV 30	The present DSRR system is felt by the RCMP to be a suitable vehicle for bringing collective concerns to the attention of the Commissioner.

2. What is the total distribution?

3. How long has the game been available?

WEST COAST PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1982

MEASURE PROVIDING FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING SERVICES AT WEST COAST PORTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-137, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

He said: Madam Speaker, in entering this debate I would like to say first that the role of Minister of Labour is one which holds many challenges and rewards in a country as economically and geographically diverse as Canada. On this particular occasion, I am faced with a situation which evokes mixed feelings on my part. On the one hand, I regret the necessity of having to introduce legislation to restore longshoring operations at Canada's west coast ports. On the other hand, I accept my responsibility to bring about a conclusion to a work stoppage which has brought the export of western grain to a virtual standstill and has caused hardship to the business community and its employees dependent upon water transportation for shipment of their goods and resources. It is a situation in which the parties to the dispute are able to inflict more damage on others than on themselves.

As well as conferring rights upon the parties to bargain collectively and arrive at acceptable terms and conditions of employment for the employees, the industrial relations framework, set out under Part V of the Canada Labour Code, clearly places the responsibility for resolving any labour-management disputes on the parties themselves. Unfortunately, there are occasions where the Government, as custodian of the economic and public interests of Canadians, must assume the responsibility entrusted to it and act in a firm and responsible manner to ensure that the interests of all those parties affected by a particular work stoppage are protected.

The contract negotiations to which this particular piece of legislation apply concern the renewal of a collective agreement involving the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, Canadian Area, which expired on December 31, 1981.

The notice of dispute was filed by the union, representing some 4,000 regular and casual longshoremen in ports on the Canadian west coast, on January 7, 1982. Prior to this, the parties had been meeting in direct negotiations over a three-month period without reaching agreement on a new contract. A conciliation officer was appointed on January 19 of this year but was unable to assist the parties in resolving their outstanding differences. Following receipt of the report of the conciliation officer, I subsequently appointed Mr. H. Allan Hope, Q.C., of Prince George, British Columbia as Conciliation Commissioner in the dispute on March 3, 1982.

Following his appointment, Mr. Hope arranged conciliation meetings with the parties towards the latter part of March. In the course of these meetings, the Conciliation Commissioner convinced the parties of the merits of returning to direct negotiations, and in this regard the parties met in direct bargaining several times during the month of April and the first half of the month of May. Mr. Hope again entered the talks on May 20 and held a series of meetings with the parties throughout the month of June. Again, at the Conciliation Commissioner's urging, the parties returned to the process of direct bargaining on several occasions during July. With negotiations deadlocked and no prospect for a settlement in the dispute, the Commissioner filed his final report with me and it was subsequently released to the parties on August 13, 1982.

In his report, Mr. Hope made recommendations dealing not only with wage increases but also several contentious issues, such as container handling, shift differential premiums, training of casual longshoremen and the employer's right to institute continuous operations. The Conciliation Commissioner recommended a three-year agreement with wage increases of 12.4 per cent in the first year, 10.6 per cent in year two and a wage reopener in the third year of the contract. The current hourly base wage rate for west coast longshoremen is $12.55.

In the area of container handling, Mr. Hope recommended that there be a one-year moratorium on the application of the container handling provision in the collective agreement with an automatic reinstatement of the provision at the end of that time.

The Maritime Employers Association has maintained that the container handling clause, which provides the union with jurisdiction over the staffing and destaffing of consolidated cargo containers which are destined or come from any point within the Vancouver local area or the Prince Rupert port area, placed the Canadian ports at a competitive disadvantage with other major ports such as Seattle.

The employer felt that the removal of the limitations provided within the clause would sharply increase the amount of traffic and the amount of skilled work available to the union. From its point of view, the union has viewed the employers' claim with skepticism and is concerned that if the forecast of increased traffic predicted by the Employers Association is wrong, the union will then have surrendered jurisdiction over a substantial part of its present work with no hope of retrieving it.

Conciliation Commissioner Hope proposed recommendations to deal with the problems experienced in adequately manning the Monday to Friday day shifts in the port. In an attempt to make the day shift more attractive for the longshoremen, Mr. Hope recommended a reduction in shift differential premiums for both the night and graveyard shifts. The report recommended a reduction in the night shift differential from time and a half the base rate to time and a quarter the base rate over the first two years of the new agreement. The report also suggested that the graveyard shift premium be reduced from two times the base rate to one and three-quarters times the base rate over the same two-year period.

As an additional measure to deal with the problem of insufficient manpower during the regular weekday shift, the Conciliation Commissioner recommended that the employer have an unfettered right to train casual employees in all categories in numbers sufficient to meet the many needs of the ports as assessed by the employer. After carefully weighing the requirements and concerns of both parties on the issue, the Conciliation Commissioner recommended that a provision be incorporated in the collective agreement permitting the employers, through their association or an individual basis, to institute continuous operations after full consultation with the union and the institution of rules that would protect against the potential abuse of inadequate relief for the employees. The recommendation also provides that the parties would have the right to submit any dispute in this area to arbitration under the existing provisions of the collective agreement. In addition to increases in the skill differential premiums, the report also called for increases in the employers' contributions to the pension, welfare and supplementary unemployment benefit plans.

The Employers Association indicated a willingness to accept the report of Mr. Hope as terms of settlement for the contract dispute but the union rejected the total report as an unacceptable package, indicating some willingness to negotiate further on those items where it was not prepared to accept the recommendations put forward by the Conciliation Commissioner.

The parties acquired legal rights to strike or lockout on August 21, 1982. Over the next six weeks, the parties met several times in direct negotiations with little in the way of progress being made toward the final settlement of the dispute. The union held a series of one-day port closures to inform their members as to the progress of negotiations. In addition, it instituted what it termed a work monitoring program which effectively slowed the loading of ships to the point where several major shipping consortia began diverting their vessels to the Port of Seattle.

On October 18, the Employers Association advised the union that unless the work slowdown was brought to a conclusion, it would stop the dispatch of labour to all terminals except for grain, effective at twelve noon on October 19. On the following day, when the union did not meet the employer's demand, the employer instituted a lockout at all west coast ports with the exception of the grain operations. However, the union then refused to allow its men to report to the grain loading operations, thereby closing down all longshoring operations on the west coast.

On October 25 I sent the following telegram to the Presidents of the Employers Association and the union:

> Once again all commerce through West Coast ports has been halted as a result of a labour dispute between the BCMEA and the ILWU. The history of labour relations between your organizations over the last thirteen years and resultant work stoppages is a dismal record to those who advocate and defend free collective bargaining. The BCMEA and the ILWU have always expressed a distaste for government intervention yet seem incapable of resolving their disputes without such intervention. The record indicates that not once in the past thirteen years, except during the A.I.B. regime, have you been able to arrive at a collective agreement short of intervention of high-level mediation from Ottawa or Parliament itself. The punishment inflicted on other Canadians and the economy generally is a matter of urgent concern in the best of times but in today's grave economic circumstances such action is intolerable. Grain export, an economic life-line of this country, is strangled and already massive layoffs of railway workers has taken place. I am a firm believer in collective bargaining and rights established by the Canada Labour Code. However, I feel compelled to say that such rights do not establish our West Coast ports, which belong to all Canadians, as the private poaching ground of any employer's Association or union. You have exhausted, as usual, conciliation provisions of the Canada Labour Code and now with all shipping from and to the West Coast halted apparently remain aloof not talking to each other. I strongly advise you to immediately resume negotiations. Failing an early settlement of this dispute the government will accept its responsibility repugnant though it might be to bring about resumption of vital shipping operations.

That is the end of the telex, Mr. Speaker.

Following receipt of the telegram, the parties did initiate direct negotiations on October 27. Despite these efforts on the part of the two sides, Mr. Speaker, negotiations have once again failed to result in a settlement of the differences between the parties, and I therefore stand before you today to introduce this legislation which translates this strongly worded message in my telegram into action.

Again, I must reiterate that, as Minister of Labour, I do not relish the idea of interference of this nature in the bargaining process, but I have only to weigh the economic and social consequences of this cessation of longshoring activity on the west coast to justify the action taken here today.

• (1530)

An official of the Port of Vancouver indicated that as of October 28 70 ships were waiting at British Columbia ports for loading or unloading purposes. Over 2,000 workers in other industries which rely on port operations have been laid off. CN and CP Rail, with a normal schedule of some 36 trains a day into the B.C. docks, have laid off over 1,800 workers between them. Grain companies which handle a million metric tons of export grain a month are also facing the prospect of laying off upwards of 300 workers. Mining and lumber companies, already facing depressed markets because of the current economic situation, are talking of even further lay-offs and shutdowns.

Perhaps the most important consequence, however, is the long-term damage being done to the reputation of Canada's west coast ports and the ability of Canada as a major world trading partner to meet its export commitments. As I indicated earlier, prior to the lockout of union members by the Employers' Association, twelve major shipping consortia had already begun to divert general cargo carriers to the Port of Seattle, Vancouver's major competitor for Pacific container traffic.

I do not think any Hon. Member will deny that a critical and urgent situation exists in western Canada as a direct result of this cessation of longshoring operations in the west coast ports. Damage to the economy of Canada is readily evident and will mount at an increasing rate the longer the ports are closed.

The Bill before Hon. Members today, namely the West Coast Ports Operations Act, 1982, orders the immediate resumption of longshoring and related operations in the west coast ports and further provides that, if a settlement is not achieved through direct negotiations between the parties, the employees covered by the bargaining relationship will be brought under the provisions of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act. I emphasize that the first order of business contained in this legislation is to bring about an immediate resumption of the vital shipping operations on Canada's west coast, and this will come about upon the coming into force of this piece of legislation. The inclusion of the west coast longshoremen under the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act is to come about on a day to be fixed by proclamation, and as I have suggested, the Government is prepared to allow the parties one final opportunity, over the next five days, to exhibit the faith which they place in the free collective bargaining process and in doing so remove the need for the Government to proclaim Section 4 of this particular Bill.

I am sure that there are some Hon. Members of this House who would consider this piece of legislation currently before them as a Draconian measure. However, I suggest to those Hon. Members who possess such sentiments that neither they nor the parties to the dispute should be surprised by the action now being taken by the Government. It is not without warning.

In his report, the Conciliation Commissioner made the following observation:

> I consider that the existence of high unemployment and low national productivity has generated a public mood that would find a disruption of our ports intolerable. I consider it likely that national policy would reflect that mood and that intervention would be swift in any dispute that tied up the waterfront.

Mr. Hope further warned the parties:

> I pointed out in particular that national policy now anticipates a diminished expectation in wage negotiations with guidelines recommending increases limited to six per cent and five per cent over the next two years.
>
> I have recommended wage increases that exceed those guidelines. I made those recommendations in response to the move by the Employers to achieve significant concessions from the Union in terms of working conditions and job jurisdiction. I speak particularly of the training of casual employees, the expansion of container traffic, the introduction of continuous operations, the control of regular work force rotation and telephone dispatch. The Union has made considerable concessions in those areas but only in the expectation of acceptance of its wage package and the introduction of a day shift premium. I consider it essential that those concessions be recognized in my recommendation as to wages. The Union proposal is beyond reasonable expectations in the current climate but significant recognition must be given to what the Union is being asked to accept in other aspects of the Agreement.
>
> In addressing the issue of intervention I emphasized the possibility, if not the probability, that the guidelines would be imposed to the detriment of the self-interest of both parties. In the application of the guidelines one would anticipate maintenance of the status quo on all issues except wages with wages limited to six per cent and five per cent for the guideline period.
> I repeat, I did not purport to speak on behalf of the Government, simply to point out the obvious, that the restraint program of six per cent and five per cent with no change in other terms and conditions was a possible result of any imposed settlement. My purpose was to urge the parties to continue to negotiate a settlement within the industrial relations milieu as the surest means of achieving their goals in some form of acceptable compromise.

This government has faced up to its responsibility by introducing this legislation which will bring about an immediate resumption of longshoring activities in Canada's west coast ports. The parties now have until midnight, November 8, again to reflect on the wisdom of the Commissioner's report and demonstrate, through action rather than rhetoric, that collective bargaining does work and, if left to their own devices, they can reach a collective agreement.

In closing, I ask Hon. Members for an early and speedy passage of the legislation, to bring about resumption of shipping operations and prod the parties to get on with the negotiation of a new collective agreement.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, despite the long and very detailed presentation of the Minister with respect to the background to this Bill, it might be useful if I pointed out at the outset that the Bill is a fairly simple one in terms of what it intends this House to do.

I think the two important principles involved are easily understood. The first principle or issue concerns whether or not the Government should intervene to restore confidence on the west coast. That is the first issue, the first question.

Since Parliament opened a week ago, our party has been pleading with the Government to bring in a bill to do just that. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker; getting the work going again on the west coast is of fundamental importance to the whole of the country, not merely the west coast. It impacts on farmers, railways workers, on the whole of the general economy. Indeed, it seems to us that this should have been done long before today, so we support this Bill in relation to ending the work stoppage and getting the port back to work by the end of today.

• (1540)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, there is a second issue. The first is whether or not the Government should intervene. We want the Government to intervene. The second is the method and mode, the way in which the Government has chosen to intervene. That we have some considerable quarrel with.

First of all, I think it is fair for me to say that we find the Government's method of intervention both weak on the one hand and dangerous on the other. I want to explain both of those words because I think they are worth listening to. First of all, this legislation will do absolutely nothing to deal with the fundamental problems which have been festering on the west coast now for 13 years. The Minister himself felt it necessary to articulate all the problems because after 13 years the Government has not been able to solve any of them. The Minister went through the whole Commission report, but it is worth pointing out, Mr. Speaker, that the specific issues which have to be faced are not going to be solved by this legislation. The Government has not created an environment by which those very specific matters can be dealt with.

We had the problems in 1969-70. We had them later on in the mid-1970s, 1975, problems such as premium shift differentials, training of casual workers, destuffing container clauses. Those things are fundamental to a long-term solution not only to the west coast situation, but indeed the whole western Canadian economy. And the Government, be it noted, after 13 years is still simply articulating the problems. That is why it is weak. This intervention will not solve any of those long-standing problems.

What is also dangerous, Mr. Speaker, is the specific way in which the Government chooses to intervene. This is not the first time in the history of this country that the federal Government has had to intervene to bring about industrial peace because a dispute affected the general economy of the country. Because the Bill was just brought in last night, I had only a short time to look at some of the debates in the past 30 years, in 1950 and in 1960, throughout the whole period since World War II, where the Government has on a number of occasions had to intervene to bring about industrial peace. If you look at those debates, they involve expressions of opinion from the then CCF Party, the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party, some Members of which represented a variety of interests and walks of life. They agreed on two things when it came to federal Government intervention. First of all, I was proud to read from all sides of the House in those old debates that people were interested, while they were intervening, in protecting the rights of all people involved in the dispute. There was a lot of articulation about the rights of people. I have not heard anything about the rights of people so far today from the Government.

Secondly, there was direct Government intervention to get the work going again, but then they appointed arbitrators. They adopted the principle of arbitration. There were two reasons for that, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it allows an opportunity for some of the specific problems to be dealt with. Secondly, it disallows the politicization of the process. This Government is now going to intervene directly in terms of a solution, in terms of all of those matters, and is going to politicize the process.

The mechanism the Government is going to use, Mr. Speaker, is the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act. That Act was not meant for this purpose. That Act was meant for the Public Service. It was meant to be used for the purpose of financial restraint. It was not to be an instrument by which the Government now directly controls the traditional rights of the private sector, both workers and management.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: That is why it is dangerous. Make no mistake about that danger.

I think I have to make a plea to the Minister because I am going to be moving an amendment and I want him to consider that amendment in a moment. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, in the heat of the needs of the time, when we have to do something unusual, whether in time of war or apprehended insurrections or in times of economic and social stress when the Government has to act, in the rush to act great harm can be done and people's rights and freedoms can be trampled on. Losing rights is easy to do. Gaining rights and keeping rights is very, very difficult.

The reason that using this Act is dangerous is that we have nothing less than the unilateral imposition of the Government's will on individuals and groups. If the Government, Mr. Speaker, can impose unilaterally and by direct action its will on individuals and groups such as the workers in this industry, why not workers in any industry? Indeed, if it can do it in this industry and to workers in any industry, why just workers? What holds the Government back? What holds this Parliament back from unilaterally imposing its will on individuals and groups?

That is why, Mr. Speaker, the tradition we have respected in this country has been the tradition of arbitration. It allows third party intervention and allows for some opportunity to deal with the root problems. More importantly, it does not politicize the process. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am going to be proposing a series of amendments in committee, and I am going to be proposing that we adopt those amendments so that we can begin the arbitration process.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, our position is this: we must support the Bill in order to get commerce moving on the west coast today. Secondly, we want the process of arbitration to begin so that the final solution and settlement between the parties will be determined by the traditions of this country and not by the unilateral imposition by this Government of its will on rights and freedoms which the traditions of this country have always upheld.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate this afternoon. I would like to first of all comment on the Minister's remarks with regard to what has taken place and the necessity for this legislation. I want to reaffirm to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) that we pinpointed this very, very serious flaw that the Government was following with the introduction of Bill C-124, and the process of the Canada Labour Code and his involvement. We tried to have him appear before the committee to discuss those very serious problems, but we were unable to do so.

Now, this is a prime example of what has happened with regard to labour relations in Canada. And then he stands in this House and has the gall to tell us that he believes in free collective bargaining. I want to ask the Minister of Labour, why in goodness name did it take from January until November for the Government to come forward with some constructive proposals with regard to this dispute? Where, may I ask the Minister of Labour, was the process of mediation? Mediation did not play any part in this dispute solely because the employer decided it was to his advantage to sit back and wait. This was at the expense of the farmers, business people, railway workers and others in western Canada. The port employers decided to lock out the workers. It is important that we identify the fact that those workers were not on strike but were locked out by their employer.

It is unfortunate that we did not go through the mediation process whereby the port management would have called for a mediation officer and the workers would have called for a mediation officer. Those discussions and negotiations would have carried on without any interruption until such time as the mediation officer helped to resolve that dispute. I criticize the Government very strongly on the attitude it has displayed here.

There is another area of very deep concern. I want the western farmers, the railway workers and those in the port areas to recognize that, while this dispute is going on, the port at Roberts Bank with its coal facilities is carrying on uninterrupted. There is a long-term agreement whereby the workers, port management and railways work together to facilitate the movement of commodities.

There have been years of confrontation with the federal Government. There has not been a strong feeling of understanding between the workers, grain growers and railway workers. There should be a proposal that management and labour come forward with programs protecting the rights of everyone. Our ports could carry on in a strong and efficient manner in co-operation with everyone concerned.

It is sad today that the Government has chosen to bring in legislation that will send the workers back to work. We agree the port facilities must be opened and work must resume. However, we all recognize the need to protect the rights of all those concerned rather than bring in this kind of legislation. This legislation does not deal specifically with the dispute. What it does is order the workers and management to reopen the port under their existing agreement. If an agreement is not reached by Monday next, the Government will arbitrarily bring in the provisions of Bill C-124, the six and five program. If the workers do not co-operate and carry out their duties in a responsible way, they will be subjected to jail sentences. We in this House of Commons have a responsibility to see that everyone is treated in a fair and equitable manner. The farmers of western Canada do not want to see the workers legislated back to work.

I want to talk for one moment about 50 railroaders in Revelstoke, B.C. who were ordered back to work because of a slowdown. This legislation will respond to the question of a slowdown. A slowdown will be considered an illegal strike. Who will determine whether there is a slowdown if products do not move in a smooth and efficient way? The company will call upon the Government and the Government will appoint a judge to hear both sides. This is what happened in the dispute at Revelstoke where 50 railroaders were find $500 and ordered back.

If we believe in free collective bargaining and co-operation, especially during these tough economic times, and in moving our commodities in a swift and efficient way, we must work together, not in a spirit of confrontation but co-operation. We should discuss bringing forward not just short-term but long-term proposals to protect the interests of everyone.

In his remarks the Conservative Member advocated arbitrary compulsion. That is what he suggested. The Government should look at a more positive way of dealing with the situation. The problems in the Great Lakes dispute were resolved through the normal negotiating process and productivity increased by 15 per cent. That should be a lesson to show us that there is a way. The workers on the west coast are just as concerned about the movement of goods and productivity.

We have a serious problem. The Labour Code is not serving us because of legislation being brought in by this Government. The Minister referred to his telegram of October 25. This was sent while negotiations were taking place. The Minister of Labour knows full well that when negotiations are taking place it is a very vital time and he knows the importance of the two sides dealing in good faith. I want to quote a portion of his telegram because it shows the antagonism this Government has created:

> The history of labour relations between your organizations over the last 13 years and resultant work stoppages is a dismal record to those who advocate and defend free collective bargaining. The BCMEA and the ILWU have always expressed a distaste for government intervention yet seem incapable of resolving their disputes without such intervention. The record indicates that not once in the past 13 years, except during the AIB regime, have you been able to arrive at a collective agreement short of intervention of high-level mediation from Ottawa or Parliament itself.

Surely that is a message that the Minister of Labour has failed dismally in trying to bring about the positive approaches to the problems on the west coast. I urge the Minister to meet with representatives of all parties in this House so that we can dedicate our time and efforts, meeting with labour, management and the grain growers, in an attempt to resolve this very serious problem so that people can live decently. This legislation will seriously set back labour relations on the west coast. Government, the grain growers and everyone else concerned should get together to deal with this problem in a responsible and orderly manner.

I wish to point out another area where the Conservatives were also brave. They are pretty brave when it comes to threatening other governments with grain produced by our farmers. When they were in Government, the first thing they did was bring in their grain embargo on the wheat we produced. Their External Affairs critic now wants to do the same thing. I notice there is no talk of embargoing anything produced by their pals in big business. Perhaps the saddest thing is to see how easily the members of the Liberal and Conservative Parties are willing to give up basic human rights and basic rights of workers. I know we are in difficult economic times, but the vicious attack on workers by the Liberals and Conservatives are destroying rights it took 100 years to build.

• (1600)

The saddest fact is that even in simple economic terms, these kinds of actions were unnecessary and just plain stupid. What does the Government think is going to happen if it legislates those workers back with a bad contract? What do you think those workers will do when they see the companies making giant profits and they know none is being passed on to them?

The Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Clark) was so anxious to see the workers legislated back that he stood up in this House and unequivocally stated: "Get the bill on and we will pass it through in a hurry without even seeing the legislation". That is the kind of concern the Conservative Party has for the working people and grain growers of Canada.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spent three nights on national television whining about how everybody was responsible for our problems and talked a lot about productivity. I can show him an example of productivity, Mr. Speaker. Last year there was a two-week labour dispute in the grain facilities in Thunder Bay. The two sides in that labour dispute settled their differences. They were permitted to do so without the Government stepping in on the side of the employers. There was, of course, some loss of shipping because of the dispute. At the end of the seventh week of the shipping season last year, only about 24,000 cars had been unloaded in Thunder Bay, compared to about 44,000 the year before. This is a lot of grain. But by the end of the 20th week the 20-car unloading shortfall had been made up. By the end of the year the port had moved 17.1 million tonnes as compared to 15.0 million tonnes the year before. That shows that with co-operation between labour and management, they can and will do the job, and will meet the needs of all of us across Canada.

My party, Mr. Speaker, is opposing this legislation not because we do not want the grain to move at the docks; we oppose it because it is stupid legislation that in the long run will only make sure that labour relations on the west coast docks continue to fester. We oppose it because it is another patchwork solution to a problem that requires a long-term solution. Most of all, we oppose it because it is another vicious attack on working Canadians by people who cannot understand there is a difference between power and leadership.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) rising to contribute to the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker. I find it very interesting that the bill was introduced less than an hour ago, I am the second speaker for our party, and we hear from Hon. Members to my right that this is a filibuster. We have before us a House order saying that this Bill will be passed before we adjourn. For them to now say that we cannot speak shows what they think of democracy in this country. Yesterday in this House the Leader of that party got up and said: "We'll pass the legislation. We don't have to see the legislation; we will pass it today. We don't care what the Government presents, we will pass it."

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that one of the Members of the Conservative Party does not believe that is what the Hon. Leader said. Perhaps he was one of those 24 Conservatives who were not in the House the night before, and he was not here yesterday as well. I quote the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who said as reported at page 20280 of Hansard:

> We on this side of the House would be prepared to deal today with legislation brought in today, and to deal with it in all stages.

This is important legislation. As somebody who represents Churchill with its port facilities, as somebody who comes from a Province which depends very much on the economic contribution of agricultural regions, I recognize the importance of this legislation. But I do not want to see this House railroaded by either the Government or the Official Opposition into passing legislation that is a mistake. The previous speaker, our labour critic, pointed out the very real danger that exists if we pass this legislation now. He pointed out we are creating trouble for ourselves and for people who will depend upon the grain handling facilities in this country in the future.

This Government, through a bill which is supposed to be introducing back-to-work legislation, is sneaking in its six and five régime. We are not asked just to order people back to work; we are being asked to again approve an extension of the Government's six and five program.

Normally, what happens in a dispute of this nature is that the Government will look at the conciliator's Report and will use it as the basis of any imposed settlement. It may not take the exact pay scale or the exact items that are listed in that report, but will use it as the basis of any imposed settlement because the conciliator was there to hear from both sides, to study the economic situation of the company, the situation of the workers and the comparable contracts of people working in similar jobs. So that a conciliation report, at least in some respects, is a realistic report. It is a report which may not be liked by either party, but it is probably much closer to what is really needed to ensure that we have peace in the future.

The Government, through its dogmatic insistence on imposing the six and five regime, is asking for trouble in the future, not only in terms of grain handling, but with respect to workers doing similar work in other parts of Canada.

There is another aspect to this legislation, this sneaking in of the six and five, which must be considered. That is that every employer or group of employers subject to federal legislation, now know that if they can stall negotiations, if they can refuse to come to an agreement with their workers and there is public outcry as a result, the Government will step in and impose a six and five solution. What in God's name is going to make employers in this country come to a reasonable agreement in negotiations? The Government has now told them, through this legislation, that they do not have to negotiate as it will impose six and five. That means the whole collective bargaining process is being destroyed.

Last June, July and August we sat in this House and were told by the Government that six and five was only going to be enforced against employees in the Public Service, employees of Crown corporations, employees of CP and other rail lines. Now there is legislation before us imposing six and five on the longshoremen. Who is next?

I do not trust the Government. This Party will not give a blank cheque to the Government. Unlike the action of the Leader of the Official Opposition yesterday, this Party will not give the Government a blank cheque. That Party calls itself the Opposition Party but its members act like members of the Supreme Soviet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: The actions of the Polish Government toward the Solidarity union are much better than the actions of the Conservative Party in its dogmatic subservience to the Liberal Government.

An Hon. Member: Tell that to the farmers.

Mr. Murphy: As I mentioned earlier, I represent a western rural riding. I am very concerned about the movement of grain in this country and what we do to make sure of increased grain shipments. That is why, as the Member for Churchill, I have often talked about increasing the export of grain through that Port, unlike the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) who has called the Port of Churchill a luxury that we cannot afford, and unlike the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) who has said we should close the Port of Churchill. I understand, and western Members in this Party and in the Conservative Party understand, that the amount of grain shipped through all ports must be increased. I am concerned about the shipment of grain. I am concerned that what the Government has done and is doing today is not going to help that process.

What should happen is what Members of this Party asked for last week when it became obvious that the two parties in this dispute could not come to an agreement. At that time we should have sent a senior officer of the Department of Labour—or even the Minister if he felt competent—to meet with management and labour and to sit with them until they came to an agreement acceptable to both parties. That is the role of the Department of Labour; it is not the role of the Department of Labour to hide when there is conflict.

This whole issue raises some questions, Mr. Speaker. It raises the question of the competence of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia). It also raises the question of whether the employers knew or expected the Government to impose the six and five regime, and for that reason did not want a settlement of the dispute and therefore locked out the workers. It also raises the question of how the Government can expect trust and co-operation from longshoremen and other union members, not only for the six and five regime but in increasing the productivity of all sectors of the economy.

In his three-part soap opera of a couple of weeks ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said we should be ready when the economic upturn finally comes. But that readiness is going to depend on the co-operation of management, farm groups and labour. I would say that the action the Government has taken today not only in ordering people back to work but in sneaking in the six and five régime as part of the imposed package will only ensure that there is no trust in the Government by the various sectors of the economy.

Despite the trust the Conservatives have for the Liberals, other sectors of the country do not trust the Government. Until that trust exists, whether as a result of another election or whether the Government can improve its image now and show that it is concerned about the plight of ordinary Canadians, then legislation of this sort is only going to create more and more division in the country.

In its attempt to pit farmer against worker, worker against farmer, port handler against grain handler and so on, legislation of this kind is going to destroy any unity or any spirit of willingness to solve the problems we face. That is why we cannot support the legislation. In the past this Party, with great reluctance, has supported back-to-work legislation. We did so with reluctance but we cannot do it today.

In the past, much to the chagrin of some people, the Conservative Party has voted against putting grain handlers back to work. I wonder why that was? I suspect that in 1974 they thought the salary increase was too much and would hurt the employers. We did not hear any speeches from Conservative Members at that time about the plight of the farmers. These great defenders of the western plains did not shout that the workers must be ordered back to work. They voted against it because they were after the workers, not the employers. They forgot all about the plight of the ordinary farmer.

It is with some regret that we cannot support the legislation before us. I do not like supporting back-to-work legislation. In this case we certainly could not support it because it is going to destroy the Canadian economy and the willingness of Canadians to work together.

What we have said ever since Parliament convened in April, 1980 is that we need real trust, real co-operation, if we are to make the country work, if we are to have Canadians working together and if we are to avoid the divisive forces that the Liberals and Conservatives are creating.

• (1620)

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I represent a British Columbia riding in which one-third of the Port of Vancouver is located. I talk to a great many people in that port constantly. I am delighted to speak on behalf of my Party as a representative of British Columbia and someone who is most concerned with the particular dispute and labour injustice which is taking place.

Why is it that even when the Liberal Government does something right, it does it so wrong? That is exactly what this legislation is. Don Garcia, head of the longshoremen's union on the west coast, stated yesterday that he thought this piece of legislation was the worst since 1800. With the greatest respect, he is wrong; this legislation is probably the worst since the Roman empire. The Government's settlement as proposed could lead to wildcat strikes, slowdowns in productivity, and even possible civil disobedience on the docks of the ports of the west coast. As one labour official said yesterday, "Six and five per cent means six and five production." Free men should not be legislated into a straightjacket, which is what the legislation proposes.

The Hope report suggested a raise of $1.55 in the first year and 23 per cent over two years. The British Columbia Maritime Employers Association offered 18 per cent over two years. Now the Government proposes to legislate 11 per cent for these people over the same period of time. There is one fact which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) seems to have overlooked. Because of a potential settlement of the strike and retroactive pay back to the first of January, maritime employers have been building up a fund to meet that retroactive pay. It now amounts to between $4 million and $5 million. This legislation does not indicate what it will do to that fund whatsoever.

The bludgeon and blackmail in the Bill makes it the most disastrous labour legislation as far as the ports on the west coast are concerned. The docks must operate, but the Bill only preserves and enhances the lingering cancers of the west coast dock situation.

For 13 years—in 1969-1970, 1975 and 1979—we have had the same issues and problems and there have been no solutions from anywhere. Why? I think there are some answers for what can be done and must be done on the west coast.

On the one side we have the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association. It is comprised of 64 employer companies and was formed in 1966, and we have not had peace on the waterfront since. There are two basic groups involved. We have the shippers who can move away, and many of them have. Then we have the port users and terminal operators who cannot move away. Destuffing of container cargo has been a major issue on the west coast for many years. It does not affect bulk loaders at all, outside of the fact that they are shut down, which is one of the major issues in the dispute. The British Columbia Maritime Employers Association had better re-examine itself because built within it are dilemmas and conflicts of interest among the 64 companies in regard to the usage of the port. Westshore Terminals is not part of the British Columbia Association at all; it has its own contract. As a result it has a permanent work force. It has not had any strikes and is doing quite fine. It is not part of the management group which bargains on behalf of far too many users of the port with different interests.

Let us look at the union side of it—the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union. The contract is binding on locals 500, 502, 503, 505, 506 and 508 of the ILWU. It affects Vancouver, Prince Rupert, New Westminster and Vancouver Island. It affects only longshoremen. It does not include, I might add, ILWU foremen who will be bargaining very shortly. I hope the Minister of Labour keeps that in mind with this proposed settlement.

Also the Employers' Association must deal with the Canadian area, not the locals of the union. What does this mean? It means that any settlement must be approved by a 19 member executive, many of whom have different ideas and different desires about the settlement of the labour dispute. With that type of thing going on, is it any wonder that in 13 years we have not had labour peace on the west coast and that we have not had settlement of these long outstanding issues? An overwhelmingly large employer group with conflicts of interest and a union organization with an executive of 19 members must all be involved in any decisions made. This is one of the major problems.

How do we address it? Well, we get the destuffing clause, this business of breaking up the containers on the dock or stacking them there. Union representatives say that if they give that up it will reduce work on the docks. Management representatives say that the ports are losing business to Seattle as a result of it. I rather favour management's view on that because a typical example is that the Government of British Columbia brings in all its liquor supplies and spirits through the Port of Seattle. Why? It is $200,000 in terms of charges, but at least it does not walk off the docks. The Alberta Liquor Board brings in its stocks through Texas as a result of the difficulties on the waterfront in Vancouver. Department stores import something like 170,000 tonnes a year from the Far East. Approximately 60 per cent of it was going through Seattle three years ago; today 75 per cent is going through there. Western Assembly Ltd. of Vancouver has told me that the reason for this is again the question of breaking up containers on the docks.

I am not suggesting that the union is wrong or that management is right. I am asking why one or the other of them has not done marketing surveys to examine the exact facts. If it means more work on the docks as management claims, then the union should be glad to give it up. If it means less work, management has a different problem for which it must compensate in some other way. It is something that can be determined as a fact.

Turning to the questions of full crews and the training of casuals, the situation on the docks is that full crews for the day shift are not available on many occasions. Longshoremen would sooner work afternoons at time and a half or the midnight run at two times. I do not blame them; I would too. But there must be more casuals or more people to fill those gaps so that the ports operate efficiently. Work scheduling, shift differentials, coffee breaks and money are other issues, but there are two unwieldy groups attempting to bargain with each other and not once in 13 years have they been able to do it.

The port must operate. I have to vote for the port to operate. It is a hemorrhage to all Canada, particularly the west coast. Clause 4 of the new Bill suggests 6 and 5 per cent. As one outstanding maritime operator on the west coast told me on the telephone this morning, "If the Government brings this in, it will lead to open warfare on the west coast". And it will.

The National Harbours Board has a great deal to answer for in this regard. There are three container cranes in Vancouver and 24 in the Puget Sound area and long decision time from Ottawa, sending cargos elsewhere on the west coast. We hope the new Canada Ports Act will give Vancouver a chance to compete and a chance to have a great many more jobs for longshoremen on the west coast. Is there a solution? Yes, there is one and it is quite simple. It is to allow collective bargaining to continue after the port is open.

• (1630)

An Hon. Member: Vote that way.

Mr. Cook: Let us have an industrial inquiry commission set up on the west coast. This should have been done years ago. This is absolutely necessary in order to determine the facts, to look at the management group, its bargaining tactics, whether it can really bargain properly in the best interests of the west coast and in its own best interests. As well, this type of commission should have a look at the union. Why should the Port of Vancouver not be dealing with Local 500 rather than the whole of the Canadian section of the union? Those are factual matters which an industrial inquiry commission could determine.

I say to this Liberal Government that we must have back-to-work legislation for the good of all Canada. We must have collective bargaining. We can have arbitration if absolutely necessary but we should have very definitely and as soon as possible an industrial inquiry commission set up with terms broad enough so that the facts can be brought out and we can have an end to 13 years of labour unrest in all of British Columbia's ports.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook). I feel much as they do. I suspect that Members on all sides of the House feel similarly that this is a very difficult occasion and a very difficult thing for Members of Parliament to do. It is difficult for a government to legislate workers back to work. It always has been. Governments of every political stripe, both federally and provincially, have had to bring in this kind of legislation. It does not matter whether it is a Liberal, a Conservative, an NDP, a CCF, Social Credit, or whatever kind of government. A move such as this has always been done with restraint and forbearance in the hope that collective bargaining would succeed.

I want to point out to my colleagues on all sides of the House that since July, 1972, this is the twelfth occasion when we have been faced with back-to-work legislation. On five of those occasions, the legislation passed with all-party support. There were six times when my party supported back-to-work legislation and there were six times when we opposed back-to-work legislation, trying as best we could to judge each one of these instances on the basis of the merits and the demerits of the particular case.

There was an occasion, and I felt for them, when my good friends in the Official Opposition opposed back-to-work legislation while the Liberal Government and the New Democratic Party supported it. It was a tough time for the Conservatives. They had to agonize and struggle. I am referring to the grainhandlers' dispute in 1974.

Of these 12 occasions, this is the fifth time we have had to deal with longshoremen and the ports. That has to tell you something about the situation in our ports from coast to coast. We legislated the longshoremen back to work regarding the St. Lawrence ports dispute in 1972. We legislated the longshoremen and the grain handlers on the west coast back to work in 1972, once in July and again in August. We legislated the ports dispute in Quebec in April, 1975. We legislated the port of Halifax dispute in October, 1976. We legislated the resumption and continuation of shipping services on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway in 1978. Now we are dealing again with the longshoremen on the west coast.

As I recall the debates on other occasions when we dealt with ports disputes involving port employers and longshoremen, Members from all sides of the House repeatedly asked the Government—as my colleague, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby has just done—to set in process by whatever method an inquiry or a Royal commission to bring about a resolution to the problems that face us every time these contracts are up for renewal.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale and the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby both made, I thought, good speeches and gave some good reasons for voting against the legislation. I appreciate this matter is not easy for them. They are going to vote for it. I understand that, because excellent arguments can be made on either side. Something that all Hon. Members in this place strive for, and I believe we succeed most if not all of the time is the achievement of sincerity, consistency and integrity.

The six and five proposal was fought tooth and nail by my colleagues and I. It caused Members of this House to sit extra time in the summer. We continue to oppose and fight the six and five kind of law. I believe even though my colleagues in the other parties disagreed with us, they at least respected us for the position we took. I believe also that we would be the worse off, either in my Party or any other, if we were to cease or deviate from the whole matter of consistency or integrity whether or not our constituents, the public, or for that matter the press, agree or disagree with us.

We also agreed that this debate should be expedited. It will serve no purpose to drag it out for days. It will not help the farmers, the railroaders or the small-businessmen. It will not help the workers directly affected because the law is retroactive. That is why we agreed to expedite this legislation.

I hope the Minister will have paid attention to what was said by the two speakers from the Official Opposition and my two colleagues and I when he is dealing with the Bill in Committee of the Whole. I hope the Minister will recognize what the Hon. Member for Rosedale talked about when he referred to hitting at the rights of individuals and groups and the unilateral imposition of something that is patently inequitable and unfair. I hope the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) and his colleagues will recognize that and will make appropriate amendments or support appropriate amendments which may or may not come from this side of the House. Let me illustrate what is probably the most glaringly inequitable and unfair imposition.

The National Harbours Board approved and awarded to the Maritime Employers Association on the west coast a 14 per cent increase in their rates in handling containers effective last January 1. I see nothing in this bill that would roll back that increase. This was done with the understanding and knowledge of the National Harbours Board and the Employers' Association that the employers would propose a 10 per cent increase in wages for the longshoremen. That was the main reason for the 14 per cent increase for the employers on their rates for the handling of containers. Now the Bill proposes that if there is no agreement reached between the two sides by next Monday, the employees are subject to six and five. What about the employers being subject to six and five on the 14 per cent increase they received? As the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby pointed out, it is just another example of contributing to continued strife and industrial relation wars in our ports.

The Minister's Bill deals with slowdowns. It will be interesting to see who will interpret what is and what is not a slowdown and when and how a slowdown is initiated. When a company has a good, conscientious employee who works to and obeys all the rules laid down by his employer, and the Government has the nerve to call it a slowdown, I suggest that the Government and the employees are admitting that there is something wrong with the rules. I find it passing strange to criticize an employee because he works according to the rules of his employment. That logic escapes me completely. Both the employer and the employee can work to rule. This occurs on occasion because it is sometimes the only mechanism that one or the other has to convey its position to the other.

I suggest as well that the record will show that my colleagues and I, my friends in the Official Opposition and on the Government side, are fighting and working for workers, farmers, pensioners and all average Canadians. That is on the record and cannot be denied. I know better than most and as much as the remaining Members in this place that no matter what any single Member of Parliament or Party in this place says about a measure such as this, someone will be hurt. Surely it is incumbent upon all legislators who believe in trying to meet the best test of sincerity, integrity and consistency, to practise fairness and equality with regard to both sides affected by this legislation. When we are faced with a situation such as this for the twelfth time in ten years, we must go to extraordinary lengths to ensure equity. Without that equal measure of fairness and equity, we are defeating the objective of every Hon. Member.

We want the ports to be in operation but we do not want the employees to be handed a six and five situation at the bargaining table by a third party—namely the Government of Canada—when, in fact, the employer offered 10 per cent and 8 per cent, the employees wanted 13 per cent and 10 per cent and the conciliator recommended 12 per cent and 9 per cent. I do not believe there is much argument over monetary matters.

The intervention of the third party—the Government of Canada—was also faced by the grain handlers, and I was about to say that we may be back in the House dealing with this same situation concerning the grain handlers who have been in a position to strike for the last month or two. However, I have just received word that they signed an agreement last night. Hon. Members can breathe a sigh of relief that we will not face that situation in a couple of weeks. We have seen that collective bargaining does work. However, one of the reasons that it took so long for the grain elevator operators and the grain handlers to reach an agreement was that when the conciliator's offer was accepted by the union, the companies were faced with a 6 per cent regime on their handling, elevation and storage charges. While the companies agreed to a 10 per cent pay raise in the second year of the contract which the companies insisted on having, the intervention of the third party at the bargaining table, namely the Government, with its six and five program put the employers in an impossible position in terms of what they were willing to accept as pay raises for the grain handlers.

Surely this situation applies to the matter we are concerned with today. The employers offered 10 per cent, the conciliator recommends 12 per cent and the union wants 13 per cent. In comes the third party and messes it up.

Back to work legislation, as distasteful as it is to all Members of the House, to all parties and to all Governments, is less distasteful if it is fair and equitable and treats each side equally. If this does not happen, you can mark my words, Mr. Speaker, that one or two years down the road we will once again be dealing with a longshoremen's port shutdown, if not on the west coast, then on the St. Lawrence River or the east coast. As sure as we are sitting here, it will happen again.

The time to seriously deal with problems faced in our ports must begin tomorrow so that we will not have to face today's situation once again. I can call it nothing more than incompetence or indifference on the part of the Government. It has known of these problems and has been faced with them time and time again, year in and year out. However, it will not deal with these problems.

I agree with the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby when he says that the employers are not 100 per cent right and the employees are not 100 per cent right. I have yet to meet anyone who is 100 per cent right. The Government must get together with both sides to deal with matters such as containers and shift differentials. This should be done either through a Royal Commission, judicial inquiry, conciliation or mediation.

These problems cannot be dealt with unless job security is also dealt with. Do not ask a worker in any occupation in this country to agree to more job insecurity because he will then be all the harder to bargain with. Who can blame them? All of us would act in the same manner. No one in this place can stand up and point fingers with any kind of a holier than thou attitude except concerning what I just said about the failure to act on what has been causing these difficulties. This has happened for the fifth time in ten years over our ports. It must be dealt with and it can be dealt with. No one says it will be easy. However, if none of us want to face this kind of situation again, and I include the Minister of Labour, if he lasts long enough in his portfolio, then he is the one who must take the lead. He and this Government must take the lead, and I am sure they would have the blessing of Hon. Members on this side of the House if they were to get together with the longshoremen, employers and harbour authorities to arrive at an equitable solution to the difficulties which arise whenever contracts are up for renewal, no matter how long it takes, whether six months or a year.

• (1650)

I do not want to oppose the legislation, but because of what is in it and, more particularly, what is not in it, and because of my desire of myself and that of my colleagues and, I am confident, that of Hon. Members in the other two parties, we should continue to strive not only for sincerity but also for consistency and integrity, for our previous actions mean that we must vote against the legislation. I hope my remaining colleagues will understand because they have also been in the same position at one time or another and we will probably be there again on another occasion over another dispute. Who knows? But that is what we are facing. I cannot support the legislation. Much as I would like to get the ports operating again and elevator agents, railroaders and farmers going again, the legislation flies in the face of what we said and did over six and five, and also hits co-operatives and wheat pools, which are already under the six and five regime on the handling charges for country elevator systems, in the face of rising costs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I must inform the Hon. Member that the time allocated for his speech is now exhausted. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long but I think it is important to put some thoughts on the record with regard to what we have before us today. What we are seeing from the Government is another example of the way in which it approaches the economy of Canada. Over the past number of years and, in particular, over the last two years, the Government has shown that it is a government of crisis management, that it never does any advance work, that it never considers the long-term implications of its actions, that it never involves itself in problems as they arise in an effort to avoid their reaching the crisis level, that it is constantly trying to patch together the results of its own lack of understanding, the problems resulting from its own lack of understanding of many of the conflicts which have arisen across the country.

I want to say to the Government that some eight or ten days ago it was suggested to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) that he should go to Vancouver to sit down with the parties involved in the dispute and that he should make a personal effort to bring them together. I want to suggest that that is not out of character with what other ministers of Labour have done in the past. However, this Minister of Labour chose not to do it. I wonder why he did not choose to go. Was it because he felt that he was incompetent or perhaps did not have the knowledge or expertise in the field of labour relations to be of any particular value? Was it because he felt that the parties involved in the dispute would perhaps not take kindly to a minister who really had no background in the field forcing himself into the dispute, or was there a reason which was even worse? Did he fail to go to Vancouver because those in the Cabinet and Government thought in the back of their minds that they wanted to impose the six and five regime? Did he fail to make the effort when it might well have resulted in success because the Government carefully considered the possible implications and came to the conclusion that, if it did not take part in finding a solution, it would be able to impose on this part of the private sector that which it was imposing on the public sector? I do not want to try to guess what was in the Minister's mind, but it is not unreasonable to think that that may well have been in the minds of some of the members of the Cabinet.

I can recall that last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stood in his place and was putting his financial statement before the House of Commons. In the middle of it he stopped and inserted certain paragraphs which were not contained in the original document. Those paragraphs directly related to the labour dispute which was going on in the Port of Vancouver. On Wednesday, the House resumed sitting, he said that if this dispute were not resolved "by Monday midnight next, the Government will move in and solve it". I know that your own experience in labour relations, Mr. Speaker, will allow you to understand that if one were somewhat reluctantly sitting at the negotiating table and either management or oneself were having some considerable difficulty in arriving at an agreement—and at the point in time when the Minister made his statement the Government was in fact at the negotiating table—if one were unable to see exactly where the negotiations were leading, it would not be an incentive for an outside party to say, "Do not worry about it. If you do not get it solved, we will impose something which will be far less than you have already offered". Would that be an incentive to continue with negotiations and find a satisfactory resolution to the dispute at the bargaining table? I am sure that Hon. Members opposite can see the rationale. They can understand what was in my mind as I listened to the Minister. As I heard him speak, I thought to myself, "That is the end of negotiations in Vancouver. He signalled to the company that it is all right, the Government will fix it all up at six and five on Monday next". Of course, I was absolutely right. That is exactly what happened. From the moment the Minister of Finance made it clear that the Government's intention was to impose six and five, in whatever form, and to settle the dispute on their behalf, negotiations ceased to all intents and purposes. This is what makes this Bill so odious and unacceptable. The fact is that the Government did not attempt to resolve the dispute nor find a way to bring the parties together. It did not go into that last minute, long-term operation, that overnight tough bargaining which brings about a resolution of a dispute in the final moments.

This Government decided a week before that it was going to impose six and five, it was not going to allow the settlement to occur. Therefore, for that reason if for no other, it would be impossible for me to bring myself to support the Government's action in this regard. It would be impossible for me to lend my support to this scheme cooked up in the back rooms of the Cabinet offices to further inflict the six and five regime on the public and private sector after having imposed it in the public sector. That makes it for me a relatively simple decision on the face of it.

There are, however, many other considerations, one of which is of course the one raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), who made it quite clear that there were conflicting problems here. The Government should have seen that there were problems other than simply the longshoreman and their employers. The Government should have understood that this was having a widespread effect on the economy of western Canada. It should have understood that the farmers were under severe distress as a result of the negligence of this Government. The Government should have been involved weeks ago in trying to find a way to solve the problems in order to move the grain, open the ports and force the employers to accept their employees in their place of work and allow them to do the job they had been willing to do all along. But, no, no, no. The Government had made a decision. You see, it made a decision that it was going to allow this to reach that crisis level and then it was going to intervene, and intervene it did. That is why we on this side of the House find this kind of measure so unacceptable.

It happens over and over and over again. What we are seeing today being supported, I suspect very willingly, by all the Liberal backbenchers and with obscene haste by the Conservatives is only the thin edge of the wedge. It is going to be gradually imposed, little by little, all across the country in ways similar to this. Not openly, not above board, but slowly imposed in every sector little by little. The end result of that would be to undermine severely the collective bargaining system.

Mr. McDermid: Exactly what David said.

Mr. Deans: I want to say that the collective bargaining system in this country, notwithstanding those who speak out against it, has worked extremely well. It has worked from any perspective you want to take. It has provided a satisfactory means of resolving 90 per cent or more of the disputes between management and labour, without any work stoppage and without any confrontation. So the difficulty now is that as Government begins to use the instrument of back-to-work legislation to impose its economic policy, we can see the gradual erosion of the collective bargaining system as it has applied across the country.

What will be the end result? It will not be labour peace. Because if you take employees and employers who have outstanding issues which they know they must resolve, and if you force them by law to go back to work with those issues still unresolved, there is an accumulation of problems which ultimately will result in a blow-up and serious problems in the workplace. Therefore, if you did not believe in collective bargaining even as a safety valve, it has provided such a measure of opportunity to resolve problems which otherwise may well have totally destroyed the manufacturing sector and the employee-employer relations of this country. So I really do worry about the way in which this has been approached. I worry about the way the Government has, in my judgment, abused, its power. I worry about the way the Government moves in a heavy-handed and uncompromising way to settle things that it knows little about, that it has paid little attention to and that it has made no effort to resolve in any other way. I worry, too, when I hear the Tories talk of their desire to return to free enterprise. They want to get Government out of business, but the first time there is a problem between management and labour they are prepared to intervene on behalf of management every time. Every time!

It interests me, Mr. Speaker, that when companies open and subsequently close the Tories and Liberals tell me that this is management's prerogative. A company can set up a plant, sometimes with Government grants, operate the plant for a time and then close it down. It can destroy an entire community in the process, but that is seen by both Liberal and Conservative Party Members as management's prerogative. They can disrupt and ruin the futures of families, but they do not see a responsibility on the part of Government to move in and try to rationalize those situations and act on behalf of the community and the people in the community, the employees who have worked there and who may have put in many, many years of service. When a company decides, as the Iron Ore Company of Canada did, to take all the profits that it has made, all the benefits it has received from Canada, and move it away to another part of the world and set up a new operation, when the President of that company finally makes his decision to close it down and disrupt an entire community and throw people out of work—a President, incidentally, who may well be a leadership candidate for the Tory Party—when he decides to do those kinds of things, I do not hear screams and shouts from the backbenches of the Conservative Party demanding equity and fairness for the employees, demanding that the company be forced to live up to its obligations to Canada and to its employees. When International Nickel rapes an entire community for years and takes money off to South America and other places, money made in Canada, and then cuts the prices which normally would be received by the Canadian operation, and then gradually reduces the work force by 25 per cent, 30 per cent, 35 per cent and 40 per cent over time to the point where it will shut down totally, I do not hear the Tories or the Liberals standing up and saying: "By God, we expect that company to live up to its obligations and provide employment for those people and safeguard those communities." But when some employees, acting in their own best interests, decide that they must withdraw their services, the economic consequences of which they are prepared to accept, then, by God, the Government and the Tories together are quick on their feet to send them back to work.

I say to the labour critic for the Conservative Party that I would like to see where the Tory Party policies are which say that companies have no right to shut down plants and throw people out of work. I would like to see them talking about the obligation those people who have taken from this country have to put something back into it. I would like to see where the Tory Party's obligation is concerning a guarantee that there will be no dislocation of employment as a result of management decisions taken in the best interests of a few to relocate in another part of the country or the world, this without any concern for the interests of the workers or their communities. No, all I can see is the obscene haste on the part of both these Parties to pick on the working people of Canada constantly as though somehow or other they were there simply to be picked on. I see both of these Parties failing to put in place the proper procedures to encourage collective bargaining, failing to provide the necessary support, which is absolutely fundamental to good collective bargaining. I fail to see the position of the Government and the Conservative Party with regard to the fact that if employers are going to have the right to lay people off, shut things off and close things down in their economic interest, employees concurrently should have the right in their economic interest to decide to withhold their service until they are able to find a reasonable and satisfactory resolution to their dispute. This has not happened.

● (1710)

I truthfully cannot blame the Tories for not intervening in this dispute in western Canada, but I worry about the haste with which they want to pass the legislation. It is the Government that set up the scenario. The Government decided to impose the six and five regime. The Government made the decision that collective bargaining should not work. The Government decided it would say to the employers, "Don't bargain, you do not have to, we will solve it for you", and that is why we reject it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the chair.

● (1750)

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-137, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I believe that the Government has an amendment. I am not too sure whether it applies to Clause 2 or a later clause.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have a motion to propose to amend Clause 6 of the Bill.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the Minister for advising the Chair of his proposed motion. I had understood that possibly other amendments may be coming shortly.

Shall Clause 3 carry?

On Clause 3—Resumption of operations and work.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to Clause 3 carrying, but we do have an amendment to Subclause (2), paragraph (b) which is consequential on an amendment that we have to Clause 4. I would ask the indulgence of the Committee to stand Clause 3(2)(b) until after the Committee has dealt with our substantive amendment to Clause 4.

● (1800)

The Deputy Chairman: If the House is agreeable, we will stand Clause 3 until consideration of the amendment under Clause 4. That will achieve the same effect as the Hon. Member suggested.

Clause 3 stood.

On Clause 4—

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, in Clause 4 I have a motion to propose which would involve, as my friend says, a consequential amendment to Clause 3 and perhaps to Clause 5 as well. The amendment I propose with respect to Clause 4 reads as follows:

That Bill C-137, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada, be amended by deleting Clause 4 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

4 (1) The Minister of Labour shall, after the coming into force of the Act,

(a) within 14 days appoint an arbitration board consisting of three members, of which Business, Labour and Government would each nominate one member, and refer to that Board the further extension of the term of the collective agreement to which this Act applies to include the period referred to in subsection 2(a) and all the matters relating to the amendment of the collective agreement that in the opinion of the arbitration board, at the time of its appointment, are in dispute between the employers association and the union; and

(b) provide for the form in which the decision of the arbitration board in respect of all matters referred to it shall be set forth.

(2) The arbitration board has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, all the powers and duties of an arbitrator under Section 157 of the Canada Labour Code.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of the Act or of the Canada Labour Code, the arbitration board shall be required to decide all matters referred to it under this Act within sixty days of its appointment.

Mr. Chairman, that is the amendment to Clause 4. I would like to now explain what the purpose of that amendment would be. In my remarks with respect to second reading of this bill I indicated that it was far more favourable, in our view, for all sides and, indeed, for precedents with respect to industrial disputes that we stick with the tried and true, traditional Canadian way of settling disputes through the process of arbitration. That should be the form that the intervention takes. We feel that it would hurt all sides and precedents for the future of industrial peace in the country to have this direct, unilateral intervention by the Government.

The specific wording that I have used comes directly from an intervention made by the Government in 1978 in the dispute under the Shipping Continuation Act in October, 1978. During a strike with respect to Great Lakes shipping, the Government decided that what it would do is not resort to this direct kind of unilateral intervention but indeed use the traditional arbitration process. That measure was brought in by the Liberal Government to deal with the strike on the Great Lakes in 1978. I have used exactly the same wording that the Government used in 1978.

I might say that it is worth while looking at the remarks of Government Members at that time to see whether or not it was preferable to use the arbitration procedure rather than this novel departure from our traditions. It was better to have arbitration as the way to solve our disputes rather than unilateral Government intervention.

The Government Minister of Transport of the day, Mr. Otto Lang, said this when dealing with that particular legislation:

We have presented to the House a bill which proposes a system for the ending of this strike immediately, and a manner of developing the collective bargaining agreement, the final agreement, between the parties. I urge members to support that bill.

The Minister of the day, Mr. Lang, was confronted with exactly the same situation on the Great Lakes that the Government today now has on the west coast. The Government of that day decided that it would stick with the traditions of this country that allow for the protection of all parties to the dispute, that they would go back to work and a final settlement would be decided by arbitration and not by direct Government intervention.

Indeed, the principles stated by the Minister at the time are certainly worthy of the consideration of Governemnt Members. He said this:

It is not with gladness that we ever ask parliament in this way to end a strike, but with the feeling that the public interest will be served, recognizing the harm that might befall the economy if this strike continues—and some members will say too much harm has already befallen it—and recognizing also the importance of the collective bargaining vehicle and the need generally to have people in our society accepting that the law is moving when it ought to move and in a manner in which it ought to move.

I believe that restraint in the collective bargaining process is necessary.

We know that in the face of another situation which demonstrates that, although people may all too easily think that the law can be a mechanism for causing certain things to happen, the law has its own limitations based upon our constant desire to respect—

And I underline this.

—the liberties of individuals and to assure that we move in a careful and guarded manner.

Mr. Chairman, this mechanism of reaching a final settlement between the parties does not deal with the root causes, as many people indicated earlier, of a 13-year long dispute. It was weak in that way and it is dangerous to substitute the traditional Canadian practice of having our disputes settled by arbitration and substituting in its stead direct unilateral Government intervention.

There is more at stake here than only the current problem. We have to get the people back to work. We will do that, but in our rush to do that we should not give up what Canadians have depended upon for generations when it comes to this kind of Government intervention in industrial disputes. That is why I hope the Minister and the Government will recognize the wisdom, at least, of their own move four years ago when Otto Lang brought in, in exactly the same circumstances, this legislation that I am proposing today.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has a procedural problem. The Hon. Member for Rosedale or other Members may wish to address themselves to this.

The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale essentially deletes Clause 4 of Bill C-137. There is some question in the minds of the authorities as to whether or not the entire deletion of a clause can be considered an amendment or whether the proposal which interests the Hon. Member for Rosedale ought to be presented after a vote has been taken on Clause 4.

The Chair would be pleased to have suggestions from any Hon. Member who may wish to pursue that matter. However, the indications so far would indicate that the authorities would oppose the submission of an amendment that deletes a complete clause.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would like the Chair to indicate more specifically what authorities the chair has in mind to support the contention that amendments cannot be moved for the purpose of deleting a Clause and substituting the wording that, in this case, has been substituted. In order to guide us in intelligently discussing the question that the Chair has raised, we should at least have the benefit of the basis for the Chair raising the question at all.

With respect to the second point made by the Chair, that the Committee should first deal with Clause 4 and then consider an amendment, I would respectfully suggest to the Chair that the authorities are quite abundant in prohibiting an amendment to a Clause which has already been adopted by the Committee. Once Clause 4 is adopted there is no way that the Chair can properly entertain an amendment to that Clause. If the Chair would indicate specifically the authorities it has in mind, perhaps I might answer his reservations more fully.

• (1810)

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has been referred to two copies of the House of Commons Debates which have been placed before me. The first reference is to page 5385 of the Debates for December 3, 1963, and I will read the relevant sentence only in order to guide Hon. Members. The second reference is to page 4219 of the Debates for October 31, 1963. In both cases, just to summarize the matter, the issue was whether or not the amendment was relevant to the Clause which it proposes to amend. Clause 4 of the Bill before us proposes to establish the control of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, and the Hon. Member's amendment proposes to delete that Clause altogether and to provide for arbitration proceedings. There does not necessarily seem to be a relation between them.

I refer the Hon. Member for Yukon to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition at page 233, wherein Citation 773(1) states:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived.

I would also refer to Erskine May's Nineteenth Edition at page 521, wherein subparagraph (1) states:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter (d) or beyond the scope of the bill (e), or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter (f) or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration (g).

The issue is whether or not the amendment goes beyond the scope of consideration under Clause 4, which relates to the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for enlightening me as to the reasons for the reservations of the Chair. I thought that they would be far more serious. My submission is that the rule as to relevance really is not applicable in this instance at all. That rule certainly does not apply to these circumstances.

What we are dealing with here is a Bill, the principle of which is to put the ports of British Columbia back to work. The manner in which those ports are put back to work is something else again. Clause 4, in its present form, deals with the manner in which the Government intends to put those ports back to work. We are dealing with that matter in a different form, indeed a radically different form, which would preserve the rights and freedoms of the workers of this country, which the Government seems to want to destroy in one fell swoop while at the same time intruding on the private sector through the six and five program.

I have a much deeper reservation with respect to Clause 4, one which I will certainly not raise here as a means of knocking it out, one which I draw to the Chair's attention in the form of a caveat.

The question is whether or not the words of Clause 4 in the form they are used are intra vires the process at all. It raises the question as to whether the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act itself must be amended by an amending section to that Act rather than through an attempt to smuggle it in through an amendment in a brand new Bill in Parliament. I simply raise the caveat, but I do not raise it as an objection at this stage.

I do suggest that the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale is in order under Citation 425, which will be found at page 153 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. It states:

> The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original which must, however, be relevant to the subject of the questions.

I would therefore submit that this amendment falls squarely within the meaning of Citation 425, it being the objective of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Rosedale to modify the question in such a way as to increase its acceptability, certainly to all Hon. Members on this side of the House. And, more strongly, the amendment indeed modifies the Clause in such a way as to present to the House, to use Beauchesne's words, "a different proposition as an alternative to the original". In my respectful submission, that does not mean that the amendment must be relevant to the proposition set forth in the existing Clause 4. Indeed, Beauchesne goes on to use those words. One can make a proposition quite different from the one we find in Clause 4. Beauchesne states "but it must be relevant".

If the Chair interprets that phraseology in Beauchesne to mean that a different proposition is only acceptable if it conforms to the wording of the existing Clause 4 of the Bill, then those words in Beauchesne have no meaning at all. The relevance is relevance to the Bill and not to the Clause. I see some doubt expressed on your face, Mr. Chairman. Consider those words and I think the Chair will agree that an amendment can put forward an entirely "different proposition as an alternative to the original". The original proposition here is that the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act will apply to the workers going back to work in the ports.

What the Hon. Member for Rosedale is doing in his wording is putting forth an entirely different proposition, as Beauchesne sets forth. Beauchesne goes on to say that the proposition must "be relevant to the subject of the questions". The subject of the questions, I submit, is not the subject of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act. It is the subject, the question, the principle, of the Bill itself.

This amendment does not negate Clause 4 whatsoever. It proposes a different method of dealing with the bargaining process. The Government wants to treat it in a mandatory, unilateral way and impose a wage ceiling upon the workers. We want to treat it in a different way, one which will give the collective bargaining process a chance to work and, failing that, after 14 days to implement arbitration proceedings.

The Chair made one other point when citing Beauchesne and Erskine May. I believe the phrase used by the Chair was that "no amendment had been negatived yet". That is not a necessary precondition of the Chair's acceptance of this amendment. One must not negative an amendment before it finds acceptability by the Chair. I presume the reason that citation was mentioned by the Chair was in support of the proposition that perhaps we should pass Clause 4 before dealing with our amendment. But I respectfully suggest to the Chair that the authorities are quite abundant—if the Chair is not prepared to concede that point I will turn them up for him—that it is improper to entertain an amendment to a Clause once it has passed. For those reasons, Sir, knowing that we are all here to vote on the matter, I would suggest if the Government is not prepared to accept the amendment, we should vote on the matter now.

I would add my encouragement to the Government and urge the Minister to accept that approach. It was an approach adopted by a predecessor Liberal Government in office. The wording the Hon. Member for Rosedale has put in his amendment is, word for word, verbatim, the wording that the Government of that day put forward in order to end the Great Lakes shipping strike. I seldom commend any Liberal Government, but certainly the Government of that day was to be commended for the efforts it made to preserve the collective bargaining process which will be utterly and completely destroyed if the House accepts the approach of the Government unilaterally to impose a settlement, which it has given a clear indication it intends to do next Monday unless a collective bargaining agreement is reached between the parties.

What the Government is doing is using this device as a club over the heads of the workers. It is saying to the workers in British Columbia: you guys get back to the bargaining table. If you do not, and if you do not reach an agreement by next Monday night, we are going to impose a ceiling of 6 per cent on you, far less than the last offer by management. It seems to me that is a very iron-fisted approach, and the Government would not want to take that approach in view of the destruction which would be caused to the process of collective bargaining in this country.

Failing Government acceptance of that very reasonable proposal, Mr. Chairman, I urge you to find the amendment in order for the reasons expressed.

The Deputy Chairman: I see the Hon. President of the Privy Council rising to contribute to the point of order. I wonder if I can reduce the amount of time spent on the issue by pointing out some options available to Hon. Members and the House as to how to proceed.

Quite obviously the amendment presented by the Hon. Member for Rosedale seems to have the support of a considerable number of Members, and presumably his party. Nothing prohibits the Hon. Member from attempting to amend the Bill with the contents of that motion, and I would refer again to Ersking May, Seventeenth Edition, Page 549, which says that amendments which are irrelevant to the clause under consideration should, as a general rule, if they are within the scope of the Bill, be moved as new clauses.

So having offered that as one option on which the Hon. Member and others may wish to proceed, the Chair still has some difficulty, despite the arguments of the Hon. Member for Yukon, as to whether this proposed amendment may or may not be in order.

The Chair would be pleased to listen to other contributions on the subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I just want to refer you to citations 426 and 428, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition. Citation 426 emphasizes that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Citation 428 explains the amendment procedure, and it certainly does not provide for removing an entire clause. The citation is as follows:

428. (1) A motion may be amended—

—either by—

—(a) leaving out certain words—

—certain words and not every single word—

(b) leaving out certain words in order to insert other words;—

—or by—

(c) inserting or adding other words.

That is the amendment procedure.

There is also citation 436 which I think is quite relevant and which reads as follows:

436. (1) An amendment proposing a direct negative,—

I submit that is the case we have here.

—though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order.

Therefore I submit that the verbiage indulged in by the opposition is being used to camouflage a direct negation of a clause of the bill, and we fully agree with the Chair when it says that the correct procedure is not to request removal of one clause in order to substitute an entirely new proposal, something which is against the Rules of the House and against parliamentary procedure, and that the Chair should be asked to rule whether it is appropriate to add a clause to this bill.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, we all know that you can prove anything with figures and you can get almost any argument you want out of Beauchesne to prove a point. But surely, Mr. Chairman, using your own words and trying to reduce this to basic common sense so we can get on and vote on the issue without getting tied down in the paralysis of procedure, as I understood it, the Chair mentioned that there could not be anything irrelevant to the Clause. Surely, as I read this Bill, the amendment being attempted amends Clause 4, which adopts by reference, in effect, the compensation which is going to be paid under the imposition of this Bill. The title of the compensation itself in effect refers to Section 3 of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act. It is by reference to that Bill that you come to the compensation which is the other part of this Bill. One is to put them back to work; how do they go back to work? This is one of the conditions.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the Hon. Member for Rosedale is most relevant, again to use your word, because the amendment does not refer to the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, adopting that by reference; it is adopting, admittedly, another procedure. It is adopting the arbitration procedure, which is relevant because instead of having the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act adopted as a condition to these people having to go back to work under this law, we are trying to substitute and use the age-old words "deleting and substituting therefore", which is quite acceptable, and I must say I was surprised when the Chair wondered why the amendment was even being made.

Again, to try to simplify this, because of the hurried way the Bill was drawn up, surely if the Hon. Member for Rosedale does not succeed at this stage, then perhaps we should go right back to Clause 3. Again, in talking about terms and conditions, of going back to work, which are in Clause 3, in effect the same amendment could be, for all practical purposes and under the rule of common sense—not the bureaucracy of Beauchesne—adopted in Clause 3 to put the same amendment as to the conditions. You either have a collective agreement under paragraph (a) or you have the amendment put by my friend, the Hon. Member for Rosedale, paragraph (b). Then, again to use the words of the Chair, voting on that amendment would thereby negative the existing paragraph (b), so you would not have to worry about Clause 4.

Now, surely with common sense you can do it either through the front door or you can do it through the back door. Surely there must be some procedure whereby we can have a mechanism of arbitration to substitute, without getting perjorative as to what I might think about the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, for the six and five procedure.

So I certainly lay that on the Table. You cannot do it now because of some of the hurdles from Beauchesne which you have raised, and we have not passed Clause 3, which clearly states the terms and conditions—one term is the collective agreement, which we all know became impossible once the Government disclosed it is going to impose six and five. So the next term is paragraph (b). Subclause (4) refers to Clause 4. Our amendment there could refer to the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Rosedale which is not Clause 4, that is, the public restraint bill six and five. It is the artibration procedure which must be, I submit, most acceptable to the Chair.

• (1830)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I am following this debate with great interest. Just so that we might have it more clearly before us what the issue is, I wonder if maybe the Official Opposition could provide us with a copy of the amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: There are other Members to my left who may wish to rise, but may I repeat a point, particularly in view of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants. I quote again the reference in Erskine May. It reads:

> Amendments which are irrelevant to the clause under consideration should, as a general rule, if they are within the scope of the bill be moved as new clauses.

It seems to me that the Chair has provided an opportunity, particularly to the Hon. Member for Rosedale and the Hon. Member for Yukon to consider whether that might be a convenient way of dealing with the matter. The advice the Chair has received from the Table is consistently that the amendment is not consistent with the Clause that is out of order. I have to recognize other Hon. Members for a few moments.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Chairman, I just have one small point to make. It is that if the amendment is moved as a separate clause, I submit it will by implication amend Clause 4 of the Bill. The Bill before us does not seek to amend the Public Services Restraint Act. Clause 4 seeks, instead, to incorporate some provisions of that Act by direct reference. They are the monetary provisions.

I submit that the relevance of the amendment is that it too deals with remuneration by setting out a formula, and that we are not here looking at an amendment to the Public Service Restrain Act. We are looking at a brand new act which simply by reference sets out the formula in part of this Act, the six and five formula.

What our amendment does is to deal directly with that formula in this Act only. It does not come in conflict with the Public Service Restraint Act. Whether we deal with this amendment by proposing to wipe-out Clause 4 and substitute it or whether we propose it as a separate clause is not really relevant. If we propose it as a separate clause, we will by implication also amend Clause 4. I submit we are looking at a distinction without a difference.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I was ready for the observation that you made, that an amendment is possible in another way. I had that process all ready for you but I considered this to be the simplest method of approach because it is in precisely the same words that the Government used in its legislation in the Great Lakes shipping strike.

Logically, there has to be a follow-up on the amendment which we propose to Clause 4 by moving an amendment to Clause 5. Once the arbitration process has been concluded, what does the arbitrator do? What happens to the collective bargaining agreement? My friend from Rosedale has a copy of our proposed amendment to Clause 5, and will provide it immediately to the Government.

Those words are exactly the same as the words that are used in the Act which ended the Great Lakes shipping problem which was assented to on October 24, 1978 and which are to be found in the Revised Statutes of Canada for that year, commencing at page seven. The words that are used in our amendment to Clauses 4 and 5 commence on page 9 under the heading "Arbitration", Clause 6 in that legislation and going on to page 7, Clause 7 of that legislation. The words are exactly the same, the proposal is quite different.

It would, in my submission, be much simpler for the Government to reject, as is their wont, the amendments that we propose now that they have had a full explanation of them. Indeed, they were the authors of those very two sections.

I suggest it would be much simpler to accept the amendments in their present form, vote on them and get them out of the way. The Chair in its wisdom does not propose to do that. As I indicated, I am ready to propose an appropriate amendment which would probably give rise to more procedural arguments and delays. We could dispose of these very quickly and simply, if the Government does not accept their own principles of 1978.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I listened with considerable interest to your suggestions about the addition of entirely new paragraphs that conceivably might have the same effect. Let me draw your attention, if I may, to the kind of process that would be involved.

What we would do is suggest that Clause 3(2) be amended by adding a further subparagraph which would be (c). Subparagraph 3(2)(c) would provide for the full provisions of the amendments that have been added by the Hon. Member for Rosedale. We would then provide under a new clause, which would be Clause 6, a provision which would say that the provisions of Clause 3(2)(c) shall be immediately imposed by the Government prior to the proclamation of Clause 4. If I may analyse mechanically what that would do, it is this. Having regard to the fact that Clause 3(2)(c) would now provide that of three provisions, the first one that applies should be the one that governs. Those would now be, if I may suggest it, a revised collective agreement as the Clause now provides, the proclamation in force of Clause 4 or, adding the new amendment, the establishment of binding arbitration.

We would have provided that the Government must indeed establish the binding arbitration mechanism before it proclaims Clause 4, which has the effect of bringing within the ambit of this entire Bill the provisions of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act.

Let me suggest that, upon reflection, what we have here is not a negatived provision. We do not have an irrelevant provision. If we analyse what the Bill intends to achieve, it is surely one thing, the establishment of peace on the waterfront in the western ports.

The issue as to compensation is but ancillary to the main purpose of the Bill. If I may take you through an analysis, Mr. Chairman, if the Government were to invoke the provisions of Clause 4, for someone who was earning currently $30,000 a year, the effect would be an $1,800 increase. If the provisions of the amendment are brought into effect, what this amendment does is to replace that sum with a sum to be determined. Accordingly, a mechanism of determining that sum is but ancillary to the main purpose of the Bill and, accordingly, should not be regarded as being irrelevant or negative to the main purposes of the Bill.

• (1840)

Mr. Caccia: I do not speak on a point of order, I speak on the substance of the amendment, whether or not you are accepting it.

The Deputy Chairman: The subject matter on the floor of the House at the moment is the question of whether or not the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale is in order. I have to dispose of that issue before we can have debate on another matter. I do not see any other Hon. Members seeking the floor.

I want to indicate that the Chair has obviously listened to the argument of several members. The advice the Chair has received, as I indicated earlier, is consistent. It seems to me, I am faced with the proposition that the Hon. Member for Rosedale would like to see the proposals contained within his amendment brought before the House, given consideration and possibly voted upon. I have offered Hon. Members an option by which that might be done; that is, rather than by way of amendment of Clause 4, a new clause could be brought in on a motion by the Hon. Member, or by some other Hon. Member.

I am concerned that the Hon. Member and his supporters not be deprived of the opportunity to bring the matter to a vote, but I am satisfied that he can bring the matter to a vote, so I will proceed.

I have already listed Citations of Beauchesne and Erskine May. I do not think it will benefit the House by taking up any further time. Accordingly, the motion to amend Clause 4 of the bill as proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale is ruled out of order.

Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Yukon on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, in the hope that we can save some time, and in order that the issues which the Member for Rosedale wants to be placed before the committee can be discussed, I am going to propose that the committee accept the procedure of discussing the substance of the amendments to be proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale to Clause 4 and Clause 5, which are going to be combined in one new Clause, Clause 6, with existing Clauses 6 and 7 renumbered 7 and 8. The amendments dealing with the creation of an arbitration board, and the function of that board after it has performed its function, will be dealt with together. That will be done by submitting an amendment to existing Clause 5 of the Bill, making Clause 5 subject to the operation of the new Clause 6.

The wording of that amendment would be that Clause 5 be deleted, for the sake of expediency, and new Clause 5 substituted, subject to renumbered Clause 6 of the amended Bill. Clause 4 of the measure shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation. In other words, what the whole process is concerned with is that Clause 5, the power to proclaim Clause 4, will not operate until after the arbitration process has been exhausted. What I am asking for now is the consent of the committee to proceed in that way; otherwise, we would have to let Clause 4 and Clause 5 pass before we could get to our amendments.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Vancouver East on the same point of order.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, it was on Clause 4, but my colleague has a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is becoming extremely confusing. We are dealing with Clause 4 of the bill. I would ask, if you would not mind, that you allow us to deal with Clause 4 of the bill. If the Hon. Member for Yukon then wants to subsequently move another amendment, he may do so. But, surely, we can deal with Clause 4 which is now before us.

Mr. Nielsen: If that were to be done the operative amendment could not be considered. I would suggest that in order to ease the confusion, we stand Clause 4 and then get right into Clause 5. We will then move the amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the House agree to stand Clause 4? The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mrs. Mitchell: I wish to speak to Clause 4, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I have to ensure that the Hon. Member's rights are not diminished in any way. The Chair sought the consent of the House to stand Clause 4. That consent would have to be unanimous and it is clear that there is not unanimity. Accordingly, the Chair will have to recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver East on Clause 4.

Mrs. Mitchell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This party strongly opposes the application of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act which is proposed in Clause 4. We strongly oppose the six and five settlement because we feel, of course, this is no way to settle disputes. In fact, it will exacerbate problems on the waterfront.

I would like to make two or three points, Mr. Chairman, related to this. We all know this is a very serious situation in the Port of Vancouver, and as a member representing a good portion of the riding containing that port I think I can speak about this firsthand. It is a problem that concerns every sector of our economy. Not only are the longshoremen and their families very concerned about settling this dispute and getting the port open, we know that farmers, railway workers, grain handlers and people in almost every sector in society are equally concerned. There is no question but that we want the lockout in the Port of Vancouver settled. We want an end to it, and get our port operating again. This is essential to the economy of the West Coast.

Having said that, I want to spend a moment talking about the victims of this six and five cutback proposal being imposed by the Government. The longshoremen in Vancouver and, indeed, all people who support collective bargaining and the rights of trade unionists, seriously resent the kind of union bashing that has been going on. I think it is very important that people like the Prime Minister know enough to refer to this in the correct term as a "lockout" rather than a strike. It would be very helpful also if our Central Canada media did the same.

We know, if we look back into the history of this dispute, that longshoremen did not want this lockout. They have had no settlement since the beginning of January. They work in very difficult situations. I think it is important for Members of the House to know this. It may seem they receive a fairly good hourly rate, but I think most Hon. Members should realize that many longshoremen spend three hours of unpaid time travelling to and from the hiring hall and the dock where they work. They also work in very bad weather, on nightshifts and on weekends, and safety on the docks is a major concern.

The union has been very adamant that there must be no changes in the basic contract, particularly regarding shift differentials and container destuffing.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think it is extremely important to look at the Government's role in this dispute. We know the Government could have intervened earlier in a positive way. The Minister himself could have been much more constructive in his approach, instead of sending a very insulting and, in fact, a very intimidating kind of telegram which called both parties in this dispute dismal failures. What a way for a new Minister of Labour to start his career. The Government could also have moved in earlier, before Parliament came back, having a Government official try to settle the dispute. I am inclined to agree with union members who feel very strongly that the timing of the lockout was very convenient for employers, being just one week before Parliament resumed.

• (1850)

Finally, Mr. Chairman, if the Government had to intervene in the interests of the total economy, surely we could have had an end to the lockout and a resumption of negotiations without the six and five rollback. We oppose the six and five because we think it is grossly unfair to the public sector, and particularly unfair in the longshoremen's dispute. This is private sector employment. Bill C-152 was drafted for the public sector but now a precedent is being set by its application to the private sector.

I should like to point out that I have documents to prove that employers in Vancouver, supported by the head of the National Harbours Board, have charged 14 per cent tariffs to all customers using the Port since last January. This action was based on the anticipation of a 14 per cent increase in wages. The employers have been pocketing a 14 per cent profit all this time. How must a longshoreman feel who has been told by the Government that he is not going to receive any increase between January and July, while the employers have been charging an extra 14 per cent to cover that increase and then, after that, that he is only going to have a pay increase of 6 per cent? What is going to happen to those profits? What kind of equity and fairness is that?

We oppose this Bill very strongly, Mr. Speaker. We also oppose the blackmail tactic implicit in the timing of this and the way it is being imposed. To delay several days, saying, "Okay fellows, you can finish your negotiations and we will not impose it" is ridiculous. It is intimidating. It is saying, "All right, employers, you don't have to worry. We are going to give you a drastic decrease in wage increases and you can keep the difference between that and the 14 per cent." It is saying to the unions, "You are supporting the employers on those basic contract clauses, the container clause and the shift policies." These are absolutely not negotiable from the point of view of the workers. They have been there since the docks were opened on a 24-hour basis. They are there to protect their jobs. If the clause is changed, the union estimates that close to 300 jobs will be lost.

There is no way we will support the imposition of a six and five wage increase. We believe that this Bill symbolizes the unwillingness of the Government to support free collective bargaining. It is obvious that the Government is moving in favour of intimidating, police state tactics.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman I should like to speak briefly on this matter and then ask a question of the Minister. I represent a British Columbia riding of working people, in Vancouver-Kingsway. Many of these people are unionized. There are some longshoremen in my riding and there are also retired farmers from Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba.

I have tried in this House to find a national point of view. I know that Canada is a very difficult country to govern. This Bill and this problem indicate how difficult it is to govern. I have tried to take a national point of view. Any Member who says there are not competing interests in this Bill is kidding himself or herself. This problem is difficult to resolve, but the Bill itself is not difficult to deal with.

I do not want to spend my limited time attacking other Members, although I will have one comment to make later about the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby. I will point out some inconsistencies in his view.

It seems to me there are two competing principles at work here, and one is the right to free collective bargaining. One of the reasons for our opposition to the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act was that this clause we are now discussing interferes with and takes away collective bargaining. Many Canadians who are watching this debate on television tonight may ask why we are so much in favour of collective bargaining. Mr. Chairman, we are in favour of it because it is what has kept our country working and what has kept our country free.

People in Poland are prepared to give up their very lives for the right to collective bargaining. I think every Canadian can understand that. When Pope John Paul or Lech Walesa speak about Poland, they are speaking of free collective bargaining. This principle is at stake here.

Another principle that is at stake is the common good of getting an industry going, specifically the grain industry. It is probably the only industry in the country today that is working to capacity. My colleagues from the prairies have been explaining the situation to me. They tell me that farmers can lose up to $8 million per day and that they will not get it back.

There are two competing principles here, Mr. Chairman, that of free collective bargaining and the Government not interfering with that, and the principle of legislating for the common good of the country. I sometimes wish we could put the farmers in the same room with the unions and employers, but I know that is difficult in a country as large as this. I say that apropos the position I was prepared to take, to keep an open mind on this legislation.

The Hon. Member for Regina West in a very careful, articulate and good speech, set this out clearly when he said that this Party has not been hung up on the rigid proposition that because this Bill legislates people back to work we automatically must say we are against it. That is not the case at all. I think the Hon. Member said that we are prepared to consider each problem on a case-by-case basis.

The public must understand, and I think it will, that what has happened is that the Government has thrown in a kicker in Clause 4. It has said that the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act will apply; in other words, the six and five will apply. They sneaked the six and five into the Bill. It would have been better not to have done that, but to treat this Bill as bills have been treated in the past. In that case, this Party might have been able to look at this in a different way.

I should like to turn to some remarks made by the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby. I agree with him when he said that this legislation is the worst labour legislation since the time of the Roman Empire. I am not familiar with the legislation that existed in the days of the Roman Empire but I gather he meant it was bad. Why is he voting for the legislation if it is the worst since legislation of the Roman Empire? I see the Hon. Member in the House. He is my good friend and comes from the same area of the country. If this legislation is so bad, and I agree with him,—Clause 4 shows that—why does he vote for it?

He went on to say that free men should not be legislated into a straightjacket. I agree with that, Mr. Chairman. Free women ought not to be legislated into a straightjacket either. The Hon. Member said that, and then he voted for the Bill. I think we must be consistent here. It seems to me that the Hon. Member might be trying to have his cake and eat it too.

• (1900)

I want to conclude by making two points on this particular Clause; one is a comment and one is a question. Some of my constituents might ask, "If you are opposed to this Bill, why are you letting it go through today?" I want to answer that question. It seems to me that some bills should be delayed. There are reasons for delaying bills, but I do not see the sense of it in this case for a very practical reason. The reason is that I understand the unfair wage provisions in the Bill are retroactive. If we dragged the Bill out for two or three days, which I was quite prepared to do, where would it get us? It would still get us into a position where we would have unfair wage provisions being retroactively enacted, and the workers would be in the same position.

We fought the six and five for six weeks. We have fought the fight on that and I think the people of the country know it. I say to my constituents as well as to Hon. Members of the House that with respect to the six and five one of the reasons I was elected to the House of Commons was that working people in my riding did not like wage and price controls because they saw them only as wage controls. I say to the working people of Canada that again Clause 4 applies the six and five, but this time to the private sector. It may be longshoremen today, but it will be other workers tomorrow. We will get into a situation where the wages of all workers are controlled, but not prices or profits.

Ordinary Canadians have a gut feeling for justice. They are prepared to co-operate and sacrifice for the country because they all love the country. It is a great country, but the problem is that they see the sacrifices being made by the wrong people. They do not see these sacrifices as being just or across the board. The Government is sneaking in the six and five with this Clause.

I am not sure whether I am permitted to ask the Minister of Labour a question at this point, but I will ask one. If I am not permitted to do so, then it can be considered a rhetorical question. If I am permitted to do so, perhaps he could answer it.

Why should the employers settle before next Monday? In fact, why should these employers return to the bargaining table if the Government has already said that it will be six and five? That is a good deal for employers. Why should they return to the bargaining table and deal with the conciliator's report which suggested about 12 per cent? Why would they go back with this Clause in the Bill? The Minister does not want them to go back; that is the answer. He wants to slip in the back way the Government's six and five program to make some political points for what Keith Davey read in the public opinion poll instead of bringing in a bill—and I agree with the Conservative Party on this—that would at least face the issue squarely so that we could decide the issue on its merits and decide the dispute on its merits.

This is why people from the Prairies, people from my Party and people from all over Canada are against the Bill. The Government sneaks in other unfair clauses. I echo the words of the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby, that free men should not be legislated into a straightjacket. Indeed, it is the worst legislation we have seen in a very, very long time. If I am permitted to ask that question, I should like the Minister to respond to it.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, not being an employer it is difficult to answer on behalf of one. If I were an employer with a concern for the long-term competitiveness of my harbour, and looking south of the border with increasing competition coming from Seattle, I would be very keen to come to a settlement which would improve the productivity and the competitiveness of my harbour. Therefore, I would be very anxious for a settlement in the dispute.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. When we discussed and passed Bill C-124 last summer, the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, many of us supported it. I supported it because it was based on the understanding that the wage and price controls in that Act were to apply only to the public sector and that voluntary collective bargaining was still the process to be used in the private sector. That Act, C-124, is being applied selectively to a new piece of legislation dealing with the private sector, and I wonder about the legality of such a practice. Because that legislation, C-124, is strictly limited to the public sector, I wonder about the legality of applying it to the private sector in such a selective manner.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking to this issue at the moment because my riding of Vancouver Centre embraces much of the Port of Vancouver and I want to emphasize the dangerous precedent which this legislation, as proposed by the Government, would create.

I would like to tell the Minister, who is justifying the imposition of six and five on the basis that it would encourage employers to improve productivity versus the Port of Seattle, that I was told in Vancouver this week that if they impose the six and five on employees, they are likely to get six and five productivity. It does not solve the basic problem of the port, and it works against the traditional Canadian method of dealing with these kinds of disputes. The basis of our amendment is to send people back to work tonight and then send the issue to arbitration.

In particular, I would like to point out the danger of imposing this kind of program in the most unionized province in the country, British Columbia. At the moment that Province is suffering enormously from the impacts of recession, the lack of jobs in the resource sector and the effects of the Liberal Government policy. There is an element of fear, concern and worry about the whole status of collective bargaining in the Province throughout all resource industries. The imposition of this band-aid measure and the imposition of an Act which was never designed for such a situation could be very, very dangerous. I would like the Minister to tell us why he does not feel he could support our proposal—send the longshoremen back to work tonight, get the grain moving tonight, get the ships moving tonight, get the docks working tonight, and send the issue back to arbitration.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have consulted with certain Members and I was wondering whether it is required that we notify the restaurant that we will be sitting later, because I know a number of Members are hoping to eat at some point.

Mr. Thacker: That is an important point of order!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I do not care. I was not going to eat anyway.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Chairman, I felt I should rise for one moment only. I was asked by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who agreed with me on some matters, why I am voting for the Bill. I will tell him why I am voting for it. It is for the very reason that all of us are here tonight—to get this ruddy Bill through and, in the interests of Canada, to get the ports open.

Some Hon. Members: Let's go, let's go!

Mr. Cook: I only hope we could stop having long speeches by Members of the New Democratic Party which are delaying consideration in Committee of the Whole and delaying the entire procedure of getting the ports open in the best interests of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Chairman, in spite of those provocations, which I do not take very seriously, I want to ask the Minister a very simple question but one which goes to the essence of the problem facing us.

I think Hon. Members on all sides of the House would agree that the principles at stake—not just money, time and jobs—are important ones. If we are to be asked to consider a piece of legislation which transgresses on certain fundamental freedoms that are held very closely by many people, we should know exactly what it is we are considering and what we are either voting for or voting against. I do not think that is too much to ask. Therefore, I ask the Minister—his officials are here and other Members of the Government are present—are we dealing with legislation that will put into place 6 per cent and 5 per cent increases, or are we dealing here with legislation which will provide a 9 per cent increase for the first six months and then the six and five formula will apply, or what is it we are dealing with?

• (1910)

I would like a clear answer to that question. It is the Government's law. The Government is asking us to transgress on certain people's rights. I think we have a right and a responsibility not only to ask that question but to get an answer to it. If we cannot have a very clear answer, then I think the Government has absolutely unmitigated gall to place such a proposition before us.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Before the Minister answers the question put by the Hon. Member for Kootenay West, could he answer my question, which is: Why can he not support the traditional methods of dealing with this kind of problem through arbitration rather than the imposition of a Bill which is not designed to cover labour-management disputes in the private sector?

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. Members will realize that is not an effective point of order, but I do think there is a courtesy in that it may be recalled that the Hon. Member had a question earlier.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, as to the first question asked by the Hon. Member for Kootenay West, the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act will prevail. He will recall that for agreements expiring before June 28, 1982 increases of 9 per cent, 6 per cent and 5 per cent will apply. As I understand it, a 9 per cent increase will apply for the portion of this year which precedes June 28.

As to the question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, and I am sorry I did not sense she had a question in her intervention earlier, otherwise I would have replied, but I think she is posing the substance of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Rosedale. I would be glad to deal with it but it is not before us. I was waiting for the Chairman to rule at which point we would be dealing with it. For the sake of saving the time of the House, I was waiting for that matter to be before us so we can debate it. I will deal with it when the matter is before us.

Mr. Taylor: Do it now.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Kootenay West is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Kristiansen: No, not on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am rising on a point of clarification.

The Deputy Chairman: Then I will have to recognize other Hon. Members who have not yet spoken.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister. However, first I want to make a couple of points with respect to the particular Clause that is before us. In my view, this Clause and the imposition of the six and five formula on the private sector and on these particular employers and employees constitutes the most serious assault on free collective bargaining that we have seen in this country for many, many years.

We have heard from representatives of the Official Opposition and we have heard from my colleague, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby, that this action is a mistake. Yet what utter hypocrisy! On the one hand, the Official Opposition support the six and five formula for the public sector, yet when that formula is being applied to the private sector suddenly we hear the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, for example, suggesting that this action will reduce productivity. What hypocrisy! If such a formula is good enough in the minds of the Official Opposition for the public sector, presumably it is good enough for the private sector as well.

What does this legislation do to the principle of free collective bargaining and to the freedom of association, which supposedly this Government and this Parliament guaranteed in the Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms? What we are saying is that people have the right to free collective bargaining until such a time as our economic interests are jeopardized and then they will be sent back to work.

I have a number of constituents in my riding of Burnaby who are being ordered back to work as a result of the provisions of this bill. They are being told that if they do not work or if they engage in any form of work slowdown, the work to rule, for example, that is referred to in Clause 2, the federal Government may bring an application before the Federal Court for contempt of court. The implications that over 3,000 working men and women in the Province of British Columbia will be thrown into jail if they demand that this Government respect their fundamental freedom of association and not ram a settlement of six and five down their throats.

Is the Minister seriously asking this Parliament to pass legislation which tells these 3,000 men and women that unless they go back to work and work to full capacity they will be thrown in jail? It was pointed out earlier by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway that this principle of free collective bargaining and the right to withdraw their labour, which through the provisions of Standing Order 43 we stand up and demand on behalf of trade unionists in Poland, should not be jeopardized. Yes, we are very free to speak up for trade unionists in Poland. But when it comes to trade unionists in the Province of British Columbia, they are being told to take a real cut in their standard of living.

At the same time the employer has been banking significant amounts of money each month on the assumption that an increase would be made which would keep up with the cost of living. A government conciliator has recommended an increase well beyond the so-called six and five formula. Is the Minister telling my constituents that they will go to jail if they tell him they are not prepared to accept this assault on their freedom of association?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, I have every confidence that the men involved in this dispute will obey the law of the land as passed by this Parliament. As to the question raised by the Hon. Member that the men are being forced to go back to work, may I draw to his attention that we are dealing here with a lockout and not a strike.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Mr. Deans: On division.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Could I at this stage say that we do not intend to put up any further speakers on this Clause. We do feel that the Committee should divide on the principle which the Hon. Member for Rosedale wants to put forward. He cannot put that amendment forward if Clause 4 is passed because the amendment is in direct conflict with Clause 4 as passed. The rule is quite clear that one cannot amend if that be the result.

I ask for the indulgence of the Committee to stand Clause 4 until my friend from Rosedale has the opportunity to put his amendment which would add a Clause containing the collective bargaining agreement and amend Clause 5 to make the operation of Clause 4 subject to the intended new Clause 6.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has no difficulty with what the Hon. Member proposes. I did think another Hon. Member must be recognized, however.

• (1920)

Mr. Kristiansen: I have a very short supplementary question to the Minister about his earlier answer. In answer to that question as to whether Clause 4 meant six and five, or nine and six and five, the Minister said—I think I am quoting him relatively accurately—that it is his understanding that it will be 9 per cent to June 29 of 1982 then 6 per cent and 5 per cent for the appropriate periods after that. I believe the Minister is a good man, an honest and understanding man. However, I want more information, before I decide on a question like this, as to whether it is simply his understanding. Do I understand that it is a commitment of the Minister and the Government that what the Bill before us means is 9 per cent to June 29, 1982, then 6 per cent, then 5 per cent? Is that a commitment or an understanding?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the question by the Hon. Member. As I understand the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, the answer is that it would be 9 per cent in the first year and 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the two subsequent years.

Mr. Kristiansen: Is that what it means? Never mind the understanding. Is that a commitment; will you back that up with your office?

Mr. Caccia: It is my understanding of what the Act means, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: It is moved by the Hon. Member for Yukon that Clause 4 be stood. Is that the agreement of the House?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to stand Clause 4?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I am really surprised that the NDP would adopt that position—

Mr. Deans: What is the point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: —when we, as well as the Government, have already given the assurance that we have no intention of having any other Members speak on this side. We merely want to enjoy the democratic right of dividing on a principle. All that we want to do is have a vote. We cannot have a vote on the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale if we accept Clause 4 at this stage. All that we are doing is asking to stand it so that we can put our amendment and then vote on it. Then we would get back to vote on Clause 4.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, it is also our intention to attempt to divide on a principle. The principle which we want to divide on is the principle of the six and five regime being imposed on the workers on the docks of Vancouver. We want to do that now.

Mr. Nielsen: Once again, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members of the NDP. They will have the opportunity to divide, as we already have on second reading, on that principle. We will be dividing at the report stage. We will be dividing at third reading.

Unless they consent to allow us to put the principle of arbitration before this Committee, we will never divide on that principle. All that we are asking the NDP is to allow us to divide on the principle that arbitration is far more acceptable than the imposition of the six and five. It is that simple.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the concern expressed by the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition. However, there is quite clearly a way that the Official Opposition can, in fact, test its theory with regard to compulsory arbitration. It can, if it is able to get sufficient support to defeat the six and five proposal by the Government, replace that with what it proposes. We would like to vote on the six and five proposal in Clause 4.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, I think it was about an hour and a half ago that I first moved the motion which was intended to amend Clause 4. At that time I put forward the principle that was involved behind the motion. I clearly understood the views of the Government, at least as stated by previous speakers. I had not yet heard from the spokesman from the NDP on the question.

I would like to make a comment before you make your final decision, Mr. Chairman. My difficulty is that I am now dealing with a procedure which was totally in order four years ago. Exactly the same words came from the Government. The words I have used are exactly the same words that the Government put in order to solve the same problem on the Great Lakes that is occurring on the west coast. It is exactly the same but because of the arguments made by Members of the Government to the Chair, I found that I could not put, or was having difficulty putting, that motion in form.

At least as a matter of courtesy by the Members of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deans: Do not talk to me about courtesy.

Mr. Crombie: I would like to have the opportunity to have the House deal at least with what I consider to be an important principle.

Mr. Waddell: Talk to your House Leader.

Mr. Crombie: They had the opportunity during second reading to divide—and I agree with them on the question of principle that the House should divide. They had that opportunity in second reading. They will have the opportunity to vote at third reading. They will have the opportunity to vote on Clause 4. That is three opportunities to vote on their principle. They will not give me or anyone in the House the courtesy to deal solely and clearly with the question of arbitration. That is despicable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Get yourself a new House Leader.

Mr. Crombie: All that is being asked is for the right of Members to have a vote on the question of compulsory arbitration. I think that it is not a difficult matter in terms of democratic process. Some Members may want to divide and not support that principle but I, and I am sure others, will certainly remember for a long time what the NDP has done. I, myself, have displayed that courtesy to all those Members during the Constitutional debate. I gave them opportunities when they asked me. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I now understand. The next time they ask me, it had better be important.

All that I want is the right of this House to be able to choose whether or not the west coast people involved in this dispute have the right to decide whether they will have compulsory arbitration or unilateral intervention by the Government, which will have consequences for industrial peace for a long time to come. They have denied it with their own phony politics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Worthy of a Shakespearian award, Mr. Chairman.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I want to make our position quite clear. Clause 4 of the Bill is before us. It is a clause that we are opposed to. We have already stood in the House and voted against Clause 4. The Conservatives, of course, joined with the Liberals and voted for it. They voted for the six and five regime when they voted on the principle of the Bill.

I am now unprepared to stand in my place again, together with my colleagues, and vote against Clause 4. If Clause 4 is defeated, as I hope it will be and as the Hon. Member for Rosedale hopes it will be, as I understand him, he can then introduce his amendment. His amendment can then be voted upon. If Clause 4 is not defeated, then the proposal before us in this Bill which contains the six and five regime is open to a further vote. If the Conservatives are opposed to six and five as contained in Clause 4, let them rise and vote with us against the Government.

Mr. Nielsen: One last effort, Mr. Chairman. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain obviously does not understand the effects of what will happen. I can tell him that if he insists on withholding, as he is doing, unreasonably, consent to allow us to divide on the question of arbitration in preference to unilateral imposition of a wage ceiling, we will be voting against Clause 4 ourselves. The Government has a majority. It will win the vote. Therefore, our amendment will be precluded from future proceedings and we will be denied the opportunity—

• (1930)

Mr. Clark: And the workers.

Mr. Nielsen: —and the workers will be denied, through their Members, of choosing whether they would prefer a ceiling imposed on their wages by the Government or whether they would prefer the process of arbitration. In fact, what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is saying on behalf of his Party is that his Party is against the principle of arbitration because that will be the result of their conduct. In effect, by their conduct they deny the principle of arbitration, a principle well rooted in our treatment of the workers of this country as one of their fundamental rights and freedoms. They not only deny the workers that right, but they also state that there is a preference that the Government impose six and five on the workers. That is the result of their conduct. Why are they so frightened of dividing on the principle of arbitration? The Government has already indicated its willingness to allow us to do that. We want to do it. The only hold-outs are those Hon. Members down there in the corner. The only conclusion that can be reached by the workers of this country, particularly in B.C., is that they are against the principle of arbitration and want the Government to impose six and five. That is their preference.

The Deputy Chairman: I think it would be reasonable for the Chair to suggest that while a point of order was possibly involved—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: —somewhere in this matter, the Committee may wish to consider that the contributions to the subject have been made.

Mr. Deans: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I will not engage in silly talk with the Hon. Member for Yukon. It is quite clear where the Tory party stands on six and five.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: We all understand the indecent haste with which the Tories supported the Government in the attempt to impose it in the first place. We understand that they are prepared to impose it on all the workers of Canada. We understand those things and so do the workers of Canada. We do not have to tell them. The problem is that Clause 4 would impose the six and five regime upon those workers. We want to vote in opposition to it now.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Clause 4 agreed to: Yeas, 98; nays 89.

On Clause 5—Coming into force.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the following amendment to Clause 5:

That Bill C-137 be amended by deleting Clause 5 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"Subject to Section 6 of this Act, Section 4 of the Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation".

It would be my intention to move a further motion which would essentially combine my original Motions Nos. 4 and 5. I am trying to follow what I took to be the instructions of the Chair that I should find a way in which to add a clause. I am trying to do that. Therefore, following the motion concerning the deletion of Clause 5 and the addition of fixed proclamation, I would further move:

That Bill C-137, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related corporations and ports on the West Coast of Canada, be amended by adding the following clause as clause 6 and renumbering clauses 6 and 7 of the said Act as clauses 7 and 8 respectively:

6. The Minister of Labour shall, after the coming into force of the Act (a) within 14 days, appoint an arbitration board consisting of three members, of which business—

Would you like me to dispense with reading it, Mr. Chairman? The point, of course, is to add what was originally part of an amendment to Clause 5 dealing with what would happen to the decisions of the arbitration board once they had been made. Therefore, I am taking the original parts of Motions Nos. 4 and 5. That is my amendment to Motion No. 5, which will allow me to deal with the principle of arbitration.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, as I have tried to follow your own instruction, or suggestion, that that is in order, because if it is not—I am getting smarter—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: —if not on the procedure, of course the principle has always been clear, and that is that the working people of this country like to have free collective bargaining and when the Government must intervene, they like to have the traditional rights which they have known for many generations. Many people, including the parents of many people in this chamber, have worked very hard to ensure that when the government intervenes, it does so through the imposition of arbitration procedures which protect the rights of people. That is the principle. It is not complicated. It is clear and obvious to everyone.

• (1940)

I know when I look across at the Government benches, when I look at those eyes, that those people know what I am saying and they agree. In the past 13 years this Government has used exactly this motion each time. Do not forget that. These words are not mine. They belong to Otto Lang who brought them into the House at a time when we had the same kind of industrial strife on the Great Lakes.

I hear a Member saying: well, it did not have the six and five. That is precisely the point. We did not have the six and five and it was never meant to be used here. I am glad to hear the Hon. Member raise it again because there is great danger that Members opposite are forgetting. That Act was never meant to be a vehicle to solve industrial peace. And you are going to create havoc for years to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: It is always easy when you think that the heat of the moment requires that you act, but I am telling you there are rights people have had that are going to be interrupted by the fact that the Government, and the New Democratic Party—unbelievable—are now saying no to arbitration and yes to six and five, with all the loss of collective bargaining rights which they talked about not only on this Bill, but—on Bill C-124.

Mr. Clark: Shameful betrayal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, the Government is doing this for political reasons, trying to breathe life into six and five in the private sector, and it is going to create great problems. People know them because they live in the world of expediency. The Members of the New Democratic Party, when they go home tonight and recognize that what they have done is oppose the arbitration process and supported, indirectly, unilateral Government intervention on individuals, and groups of working people in this country, they will wonder about their own leadership, I can tell you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: I have to ascertain with a little more certainty precisely what is the motion being put forward by the Hon. Member for Rosedale. Obviously the Hon. Member is deleting Clause 5 and putting in the words he proposes, which makes Clause 5 subject to Clause 6. My problem then is in relation to what happens to currently numbered Clauses 6, 7 and 8. I presume they are renumbered seriatim and the new Clause 6 is the motion made by the Hon. Member. I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to replace one bad procedure with another.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: No doubt you will do your best.

Mr. Deans: The problem with what is being proposed, and I think with all good intentions, by the Hon. Member for Rosedale is this: arbitration was available to both parties all the time. Arbitration is even yet today available to both parties if they want arbitration. The parties have said quite clearly they do not want arbitration. We are therefore not prepared to impose on them the arbitration they have said they do not want.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I say to the Hon. Member for Rosedale that I think in his naiveté with regard to matters relating to collective bargaining he believes that to put that in place, the compulsory arbitration process, is somehow protecting collective bargaining. It is in fact not protecting collective bargaining. I suggest to the Conservatives that they consider this and consider it carefully.

As Hon. Members know, we in this party have steadfastly stood against the six and five regime because we believe it to be unfair. They also know that we have steadfastly stood up on behalf of the collective bargaining process because we believe it works almost all of the time to the advantage of the country as a whole. We have paid particular attention to the parties involved in this dispute and we have attempted to seek out whether or not the parties involved in the dispute are desirous of having arbitration available to them. They have said no. We are not, therefore, prepared to impose it upon them.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: The amendment is in my view out of order for all of the reasons we discussed earlier. Clause 4 carried and the motion is a clear negation of Clause 4. I also think that it would be useful for all members to look at Citation 773(9), Beauchesne, 5th Edition, which indicates that in the circumstances, the hon. member may not substitute a new clause for Clause 5, as he is doing now. So for all these reasons, it seems to me that in the circumstances he cannot try to repair, as I believe he said himself, the damage caused by the refusal of the New Democratic Party to give unanimous consent a few moments ago.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I think I can deal with that very quickly and very easily, Mr. Chairman. We are not at all attempting to substitute a new Clause. It was simply for the purpose of neatness that we took the Clause out and reworded it. We could just as well have amended the Clause by adding a proviso: provided that no such proclamation shall be fixed until Clause 6 has been complied with. We could have done it that way. I can do it that way now if the committee wants to be delayed. The Government House leader very graciously agreed with the process of allowing us to put our amendment. The NDP did not. Surely for the sake of allowing us to divide on the principle of arbitration he could agree to accept this amendment in that spirit of co-operation his Prime Minister and Cabinet Ministers—indeed all Members on that side—have been requesting of us since this session resumed. We now ask for the same co-operation and grace which he evidenced a few moments ago when we were seeking ways and means of causing division on this principle of arbitration.

In that sense, and in order that the matter might be better understood, perhaps I could get agreement at this stage to stand Clause 5 so that we can amend, by adding Clause 6, renumbering existing Clauses 6 and 7 to become 7 and 8, and have the divison on the principle of arbitration which we have been so desperately seeking to obtain.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: A while ago we were prepared to agree to a procedure that was regular and in order. The member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had presented a motion to stand consideration of the clause, which was entirely according to the rules, and we said yes, we agree with this motion. But if we are subsequently asked to agree to some irregular procedure or something that is not in accordance with the rules, that is not the same thing. The Hon. Member will remember that when he reacted earlier to the refusal of the New Democratic Party to stand Clause 4 before proceeding with a division, he said that it was no longer possible for his party to propose an amendment for compulsory arbitration as opposed to applying the 6 and 5 policy. So now he is trying to present an amendment which, as he said earlier, could no longer be presented. He knows perfectly well that we cannot agree to an irregular procedure, and that is why the situation is entirely different from the one we had earlier, when we were ready to agree with a motion that was in order.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, obviously, in the words of the Chair, the Chair does not share that view. Hence, I do not propose to deal with it. I am proposing something that is very simple and is in order. I am proposing at this stage that we stand Clause 5.

Mr. Pinard: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: I will take it that the previous motion made by the Hon. Member for Rosedale has been withdrawn. Is that correct?

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member for Rosedale will withdraw that proposal and stand Clause 5.

The Deputy Chairman: We will assure there is consent to the withdrawal of the motion to Clause 5. The question now before the Committee, put by the Hon. Member for Yukon, is, shall Clause 5 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: I have to put the question once more because I require unanimous consent in order to stand the clause. Shall Clause 5 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: The question has been put three times. I am certain that I heard "no" to that proposition.

Mr. Nielsen: There appears to be unanimity, Mr. Chairman. I will make the motion formal, that we stand Clause 5—

The Deputy Chairman: I think the Hon. Member may have misunderstood. I put exactly that question three times, and on each occasion I heard "no".

Mr. Nielsen: I move:

That Clause 5 stand.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Yukon has put a motion that Clause 5 stand. In my view, we require unanimous consent in order to stand Clause 5, under Standing Order 75(1). The Standing Orders require that we proceed with each clause in its proper order. In order to deviate from that process of proceeding with each clause in its proper order, I have been seeking unanimous consent to stand the clause. If my recollection is correct, we stood Clause 3 by unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, with no disrespect to the table, I often think of advisers in relation to my recollections of investigations by the police into forged handwriting. They always start with the premise that they have to find a valid comparison and proceed from that base. I say that without intending any reflection.

Either we are allowed to divide on that question, or we will be put to the trouble of adding an amendment by way of a proviso to Clause 5, providing that Clause 5 be allowed to stand or providing that Clause 5 be not now voted upon, but be stood until a later time in the consideration of this Bill.

The Deputy Chairman: As is obvious to Hon. Members that the Chair has taken the opportunity to consult with officers of the table. For reference, Members may wish to see Section 775 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. The motion that Clause 5 stand has been put on the floor. The Chair declared a moment ago that it was deemed that the motion put by the Hon. Member for Rosedale had been withdrawn and the Committee indicated its acceptance of that. The motion by the Hon. Member for Yukon that Clause 5 stand is deemed by the Chair to be in order. Debate may follow. Shall I put the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 5 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare Clause 5 stood.

On Clause 6—Definition.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Clause 6 of Bill C-137 be amended by striking out lines 17 to 22 on page 4 and substituting the following:

"employee organization"	"and who is a member of a union;
"employer"	"employee organization" means a union;
	"employer" means a company."

● (2000)

This amendment is of a technical nature, Mr. Chairman, and has the effect of removing the words"—within the meaning of Part I" from each of the definitions in that Clause. Those words are not necessary in the definitions as the expression "union" and "company" in the definitions are defined in Clause 2 for the purpose of the whole Bill, not only for Part I.

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment proposed by the Minister of Supply and Services is deemed to be in order by the Table.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we should not, before dealing with that amendment, deal with the new proposed Clause 6, and the renumbering of Clause 6 and 7, and divide on that?

The Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the amendment proposed by the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services. Shall the amendment be carried?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. Blais) agreed to.

Clause 6, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move:

That Bill C-137, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada, be amended by adding the following Clause 6 and renumbering Clause 6 and 7 of the said Act as Clauses 7 and 8 respectively, and Clause 8 as Clause 9. Clause 6(1) would read:

"6 (1) The Minister of Labour shall, after the coming into force of the Act,

(a) within 14 days appoint an arbitration board consisting of three members, of which Business, Labour and Government would each nominate one member, and refer to that Board the further extension of the term of the collective agreement to which this Act applies to include the period referred to in subsection 2(a) and all the matters relating to the amendment of the collective agreement that in the opinion of the arbitration board, at the time of its appointment, are in dispute between the employers association and the union; and

(b) provide for the form in which the decision of the arbitration board in respect of all matters referred to it shall be set forth.

6 (2) The arbitration board has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, all the powers and duties of an arbitrator under section 157 of the Canada Labour Code.

6 (3) Notwithstanding any other provision of the Act or of the Canada Labour Code, the arbitration board shall be required to decide all matters referred to it under this Act within sixty days of its appointment.

6 (4) When the arbitration board decides all matters referred to it, the collective agreement to which this Act applies is deemed to be amended by the incorporation therein of such decision and by the incorporation therein of such other amendments as may have been agreed to by the parties thereto prior to the decision of the arbitrator, and the collective agreement, as so amended, constitutes a new collective agreement that shall be deemed to have effect on and from the date of that decision.

6 (5) Nothing in subsection (1) shall be deemed to limit or restrict the rights of the parties to the collective agreement to which this Act applies to agree to vary or amend any of the provisions of the collective agreement as amended by or pursuant to this Act other than a provision relating to the term of the collective agreement and to give effect thereto."

That is the whole of the amendment, Mr. Chairman. It combines the two motions which I originally moved some two or three hours ago. I hope this time the Chair and the House will see fit to accept it so we can have a vote on the matter.

The Deputy Chairman: Since Hon. Members do not appear to find any issue they wish to raise as to the procedural acceptability of the proposed amendment, the Chair will proceed to put the question on the amendment. Shall Clause 6, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

The Deputy Chairman: That is what I was inquiring about. Is it a new Clause 7?

Mr. Nielsen: Clause 6, with existing Clauses 6, 7 and 8, being renumbered 7, 8 and 9.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the Hon. Member.

Shall new Clause 6 as proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale carry? Those in favour, please say, yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those opposed will please say, nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Crombie) negatived: Yeas, 72; nays, 126.

● (2010)

On Clause 7—Order to comply.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister of Labour with respect to Clause 7. If this Clause should pass, can the Minister tell us whether the Government may, by a subsequent amendment, such as Clause 4, make Bill C-124, which is an Act dealing with the public sector of Canada, applicable to all of the private sector which falls within the jurisdiction of the federal Government? If that is the case and we pass Clause 7, would all private agreements such as this one not then be subject to contempt proceedings?

Mr. Caccia: The answer is definitely no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Kilgour: I appreciate that the Minister of Labour is not a lawyer, but I see the Minister of Justice is here. Would somebody on that side who knows something about administrative law reply to the question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the Hon. Member that each case would be dealt with separately.

Mr. Kilgour: I should like to submit to the House and to the Minister that tomorrow the Government could bring in a new Clause 4 and make it applicable to every agreement in the private sector that falls within federal jurisdiction. If it is made a matter of contempt of court, then any group in the private sector in banking, the railways or whatever would be subject to contempt proceedings for breaching it.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I take it from what has happened tonight that when we have another dispute which is not settled effectively by the parties and Parliament has to intervene, this will be the pattern of legislation. Can the imposition of six and five be expected in such disputes?

Would the Minister of Labour answer that question, please? Is this Bill a precedent? Is the Minister going to be bound by this? What are the signals the Minister is giving to the public, to labour, to management, where disputes fall within federal jurisdiction, as a result of what is being done tonight?

Mr. Caccia: If the Hon. Member wants a frank answer, the signal to the world outside is that it is much better to settle things by themselves.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief question for the Minister concerning the drafting of Clauses 7 and 8 and the interpretations in Clause 6. In Clause 6 there is a definition of "employee organization" which is precisely the same as the definition of "union" in Clause 2. Similarly, the term "employer" is used and it means exactly the same as the term "company", which is defined in Clause 2. Why has this been changed half way through the Act?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is dealing with an amendment that has already been adopted.

Mr. Nickerson: These terms are referred to and defined in Clause 6, which has been dealt with very quickly and without any explanation, except to say that these were technical terms. The first opportunity we have to find out why the changes were made is in considering Clause 7, which is the first time the terms are actually used.

Mr. Caccia: I will give the Hon. Member a more comprehensive answer than the one that was given when the amendment was moved. This is an amendment of a technical nature. I have difficulty understanding the substance of the Hon. Member's question. That Clause is not before us at the present time. The main point is that we made an amendment of a technical nature which is required for clarity of the Bill.

Mr. Nickerson: The technical amendment was made in Clause 6. Why is the term "employer" used in Clause 7 when it means precisely the same thing as "company," which is defined in Clause 2 and is used substantially in Clauses 3 and 4? Why has that been done?

Mr. Caccia: It is because the definition of "employer" in Clause 7 is compatible with the definition in Clause 6 as amended.

Mr. Nickerson: I should like to point out that the Minister of Labour is not making any sense whatsoever, Mr. Chairman. He has obviously not considered this matter. I do not know about my colleagues, but it would satisfy me if I could get an explanation of this fuzzy drafting. It appears to be a cut and paste job, as if some sections were taken from one Act and some sections from another, and then put together. If the people responsible for drafting the Bill wish to make an explanation to me privately, I would be satisfied; that is, if the Minister cannot do better.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I should like to put a question to the Minister, Mr. Chairman. Can the Minister clarify for Members who do not have a legal background precisely what is meant by "punished by the court as for other contempts of court". Would the Minister tell us precisely what the punishment is for such a contempt of court? Will he confirm that any employee or any officer of a trade union who does not give notice under Clause 3(3)(a) to the members of a union that they are to return to work, or any individual person ordinarily employed in longshoring who does not forthwith return to work, will be thrown in jail if an application is brought by the federal Government? Will the Minister explain to the House, very clearly, what is intended as the ultimate sanction for violation of this legislation?

Mr. Caccia: This Clause refers to "employer or employee organization". I understand that the court sets its own punishment. In other words, there is no specific punishment involved in this Clause. The court sets its own punishment.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Would the Minister indicate to the House what the maximum punishment is which the court can set for violation of this Clause?

• (2020)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Minister did not hear the question. Would he indicate and confirm to the House, if I could have his attention, that working men and women are subject to terms of imprisonment under the Clause which is presently being debated? Is that the intent of the Minister?

Mr. Caccia: I do not think it is the Minister's role to interpret the law. The Bill is before the House. Once passed, it will then be for the court to implement it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The constituents we represent are entitled to know, in dealing with this legislation, precisely what are the sanctions contained in it. This is a very serious question because if one looks at the provisions of the Bill under Clause 2, for example, any slowdown in work, any failure on the part of the union to forthwith notify and any failure to comply with an order or request made pursuant to the collective agreement, leaves the individuals in question open to punishment for contempt of court.

What precisely does the Minister of Labour intend by this provision? Does he intend to give the courts of the country the power to throw those individuals who have violated these sections in jail? If not, he should make that clear. If that is his intention, the people of the country, and particularly Hon. Members of Parliament, have a right to know it. What is the Minister's intention? Is imprisonment intended to be one of the sanctions which will be imposed for contempt of court?

Mr. Caccia: Again, the court has the power to set its own penalties for employer and employee organizations in cases of contempt.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I ask the Minister to answer a very simple question. Under the powers accorded to the court, is it the Minister's intention that those powers should include the power of sentence to a term of imprisonment, either definite or indefinite?

Mr. Caccia: In some cases this would be within the discretion of the court.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Clause 7 agreed to, on division.

On Clause 8—Order against employer.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. He will recognize that the words "agent of the employer" appear in Clause 8(1) on three occasions. Also he will know that it is not defined in the Bill and, accordingly, we are thrust back on the general law of the agency in determining who these people are. Also I suspect that he will know that this liability concept is not new to federal statutes, but it is new to the extent that it applies to agents rather than to officers and directors of corporations.

What troubles me—and I wonder whether the Minister has directed his attention to this issue—is that an employer may be liable where an offence apparently has been committed and where the employer has failed or refused to comply with the provisions of the Act, whether or not the director, officer or agent is identified. While it is quite permissible not to identify the officer or director, surely the employer should be entitled to know the identity of the agent who is neither an officer nor a director of the employer. The one defence which surely must be available to the employer is the defence of "he was not my agent". How can the employer say, "he was not my agent" when under the terms of Clause 8 the Crown need not identify the name of the alleged agent?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, the advice that I am receiving is that this would not be imposed on a person who could not be established to be the agent of the employer. This would not be a question of identifying the person by name, if I understand correctly, but of identifying the function of that individual.

Mr. Gamble: This is a serious matter because of the penalties involved. It does not say that he is not to be identified by function. It says whether or not the officer, director or agent is identified. Having regard to the process of the issuing of a summons or an indictment, the person allegedly acting as an officer, director or in this case agent, is generally named in the instrument which gives rise to the commencement of the court proceedings. I quite understand, as I have indicated, how it is possible to leave out the name of the officer and director and specify the office that the person may hold or the fact that the person may be a director, but how can the Minister simply say that an agent of the employer failed to do something? The obvious defence in all these cases is surely—"he was not my agent". But very clearly, if one has regard to the particulars of the defence, the Crown need never identify him. Surely if it is the intention of the Government to identify at least the name, then let it be spelled out where the word "identify" is placed in the section. The Clause should read that the function of the agent need not be identified but the agent must be identified by name, because that is what the Minister is telling the House.

I pause to comment about the fact that this is an extension of the general provisions of liability imposed upon corporate entities by the Crown where the actions of the directors or the actions of the officers become the responsibility of the employer corporation, but here we are starting on a new path of vicarious liability without giving to the accused so much as an opportunity to say, "that was not my agent", a defence which, quite frankly, is very common in civil matters.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, may I defer to the most distinguished legal adviser available in the Chamber tonight.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to rise after that introduction, but it seems to me that when we look at the words closely, " . . . to show that an officer, director or agent of the employer," it is clear that the fact that he is in that relationship with the employer would have to be proved if this were a matter of dispute at trial. What does not have to be proved is his name. He does not have to be pointed out as a particular individual, but the fact that he is related to the employer could surely be challenged and could surely be a matter for proof at the hearing.

Mr. Gamble: I wonder if the learned legal counsel relied upon by the Minister of Labour could point out one other single federal statute which imposes this kind of liability upon corporations as a consequence of there being an act undertaken by an agent in the fashion of this Bill.

• (2030)

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position so to indicate. I think the important point here is that these events may be taking place in fast-moving circumstances in which it is not easy to identify a particular person involved. But it may, nevertheless, be clear that the person is acting on behalf of the employer.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, in the light of what I conceive to be serious and substantial departures from the practice of drafting statutes imposing liability upon corporations through these words, and in light of the fact the Minister of Justice has been unable to confirm to this House that there has been another single case of a federal statute of which he knows drafted in this fashion, accordingly I move:

That the word "'agent" as it appears in the seventeenth, nineteenth and twenty-first line of Clause 8(1) be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Gamble) negatived.

Shall Clause 8 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 8 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: May I now put Clause 3 before the House? Clause 3 had been stood earlier. Shall Clause 3 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Schedules I and II agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the Bill as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deans: No.

Bill as amended agreed to on division.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am advised by the Clerk that the procedure will be to suspend the House to the call of the Chair because I understand the Senate is considering the same Bill. Accordingly, this House stands suspended to the call of the Chair.

At 8.38 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 12.10 a.m.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I should like to raise a few issues tonight that concern me about the debate, particularly the conduct of the NDP as it relates to this matter. I would have thought there would be some Members of the New Democratic Party in the House. They get a lot of their support from the western part of the country, the areas that are most affected by this debate. My concern is that some of these Members should be present tonight, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I think the Hon. Member is debating something. He does not have a point of order.

Mr. Mayer: I am rising on a point of order if I may, Madam Speaker. I understand that is in order. What I want to talk about is the conduct of the NDP and, as far as I can determine, that is in order. I think it is deplorable. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) is not here. He comes from an area that is affected by this strike, so it is unfortunate that he is not here this evening to see the Bill through, and signed. It affects an area of the economy about which he should be most concerned and which is going to be looked after as a result of this legislation. I should like to know where he is and why he is not here this evening.

There are Members of this party present who come from the Maritimes, from Ontario and from the west. This party is well represented and I think I can say the same for the Government Party. It is unfortunate that Members of the NDP did not see fit to show up.

Madam Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Member realizes that there is nothing before the House. The session has been suspended and I am just waiting for a message from the Senate. There is nothing before the House, so the Hon. Member cannot have a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, with great respect, this situation arises very rarely, but having arisen I believe the Hon. Member is in order as was the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in a similar situation. He rose on a similar point of order which raised a grievance, and that is exactly what the Hon. Member is doing now. I suggest he is perfectly in order. The precedent has been set and I know the Chair always follows precedent and did so as occupant of the Chair, in recognizing the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton when he was doing precisely the same thing as the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette is doing now. I suggest it was quite in order for him to continue.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I have to answer the Hon. Member for Yukon. The sitting has been suspended. We are just waiting for a message and, therefore, this is not the same situation as to the one to which the Hon. Member referred, when the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton took advantage of a situation which was not similar to this one. He raised a grievance, and that was in order. We have a different situation now, where we have suspended the sitting.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, to make intelligent use of the time, I seek unanimous consent so that we may adopt without debate all the bills pending on the Order Paper.

Madam Speaker: I think it is time for the Speaker to be productive. I have a few things to read to the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-137, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall
Ottawa
Government House

November 3, 1982

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today,, the 4th day of November, at 12.15 a.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient Servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

• (0020)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a further point of order. I suggest that the Chair was premature in reading both those notices to Members since the House is not seized of the legislation referred to in either notice. The Senate has not yet reported, through Black Rod. I suggest that while it is perfectly proper to cut corners within the rules, it is not when we do not have the Bill reported back from the Senate.

With respect to the analogy between the situations, I certainly agree that the session was suspended. As soon as you, Madam Speaker, took the Chair that ended the suspension of the session, however, and we were once more properly formed. We have a solid precedent where Your Honour recognized the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton once you had returned to the Chair. Now the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette is doing exactly the same thing.

I would suggest that if we are following precedent in this place, he should be recognized and allowed to continue, until Black Rod arrives.

Madam Speaker: To begin with, it was not premature because I had the message and the confirmation of the message in this letter. So I did not act prematurely. I had the message and it was my duty to read it to the House.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, on the point made by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), since the House is sitting and is not adjourned, I think under Standing Order 18(2) it is up to the Government to choose the order of business. I have just sought the consent of the House to deal with pending legislation, in order that we be productive and show good faith. I should like to have the reaction of the Hon. Member for Yukon to that suggestion.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, certainly the Government House Leader tried exactly the same ploy in the circumstances that gave rise to the situation that obtained with respect to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. At that time the Chair said it was out of order for the Government House Leader to intervene at that stage, because the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton had the floor. He was allowed to continue until Black Rod came in.

Madam Speaker: I want to make it clear to the Hon. Member that I could hear the Hon. Member for Portage-

Marquette on this particular point now. It would be proper now for me to recognize him. Before this time we were not sitting and I could not recognize him because there was nothing before the House.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to take a moment, since there is a moment available to us, to raise another matter—

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour, the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bill:

Bill C-137, An Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada—Chapter No. 126.

It being 12.30 a.m., the House stands adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 12.29 a.m., the House adjourned, pursuant to Standing Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOVIET AUTHORITIES URGED TO FREE ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The harassment and imprisonment of Anatoly Shcharansky have been the subject of previous emergency motions in this House. Mr. Shcharansky, a leading Soviet refusenik and internationally renowned scholar, has been on a hunger strike for several weeks, as a means to obtaining his freedom. His rapidly deteriorating health now places his life in very grave danger. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House urge Soviet authorities to immediately grant Anatoly Shcharansky the freedom for which he is so valiantly struggling, thus ending his hunger strike and the grave threat to his life. The Soviet authorities should do this, both for humanitarian reasons, and in accordance with the terms of the Helsinki Final Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

PRESERVATION OF AGRICULTURAL LANDS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since there is one acre of agricultural land for every citizen on earth, and whereas we in Canada enjoy the luxury of three acres of agricultural land for every Canadian, but because we are destroying our food producing lands at a rate whereby we will be left with only three-quarters of an acre of farm land per Canadian citizen by the year 2005, and since Canada has no co-ordinated effort toward preservation of agricultural lands, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for London-Middlessex (Mr. Bloomfield) and the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That this Parliament encourage the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of the Environment to cause appropriate consultation with provincial governments and Canadian soil scientists, bearing in mind the provincial nature of this issue, and seek their co-operation to establish an umbrella agency whose objective is to preserve and improve agricultural lands in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

AMBASSADORIAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the deplorable practice of this Liberal Government of naming unemployed and unemployable ex-Cabinet Ministers to ambassadorial posts abroad, as illustrated by the appointments of one ex-Minister, Mr. Edgar Benson, to the bucolic charms of Éire, and of another, Mr. Don Jamieson, to the hallowed halls of Great Britain, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House regrets the dismantling of the merit system in the Department of External Affairs and the elbowing aside of professional diplomats in such appointments in the interests of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

REFUGEES

PROVISION OF WORK PERMITS FOR SALVADORAN REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity occasioned by the news in the media that over 600 refugees in Canada, many of them from El Salvador, have recently been cut off from receiving any public assistance. This underlines the fact that the Government normally takes a year or a year and a half to process their applications. Very many of them have been refused effective permission to work to maintain themselves and their families, and the Government has failed to acquaint its own staff fully with special provisions for Salvadoran refugees. Therefore I move seconded by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly):

That the Government instruct all of its staff fully on the special provisions for Salvadoran refugees, give them temporary permission to work while they await the Government's decision on their fate, and add the necessary staff to the Refugee Status Advisory Committee to speed up the processing beyond the present timing of a year and a half.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

REASONS FOR INTRODUCTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. One of the serious impediments to confidence and job creation in our country has been the continual war between the provinces and the federal Government. Yesterday in the Senate, the Government introduced a Bill which once again escalates this distrust and lack of confidence. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Prime Minister immediately on Motions following the Question Period today explain fully to the people of Canada and to the House the reason why this piece of legislation was introduced without discussion with provincial governments and exactly what is the danger to the peace, order and good government of Canada that this Bill attempts to prevent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DISQUALIFICATION OF UNEMPLOYED BRITISH COLUMBIA CARPENTERS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity affecting some 120 unemployed carpenters in Richmond, British Columbia. These carpenters, who were formerly employed by Citation Cabinets, have been disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits although they were laid off after the plant re-opened following the strike.

Whereas these employees have paid into the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and whereas they are now having to turn to provincial welfare benefits to sustain their families, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration be directed to approve the immediate payment of unemployment insurance benefits to the 120 unemployed carpenters recently laid off in Richmond, B.C.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

IMPACT OF CHANGE—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, in light of yesterday's release of the Report of the special federal Government Task Force on Micro-electronics and Employment with its farreaching recommendations on the implications for workers of advanced technology, and in light of the effect that advanced technology is having and will continue to have in areas like trade, jobs, industrial relations and economic development, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—and I appeal to all three parties to support this motion:

That this House establish a special House of Commons Committee on the social and economic impact of technological change in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETRO-CANADA

LEASING OF EUROPEAN OIL RIGS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, every time that we buy a gallon of gasoline at a gasoline service station we are making a donation to Petro-Canada. It is our dollars that it uses to build or lease offshore rigs and vessels. Showing its usual insensitivity to the difficulties being faced by the Canadian shipbuilding industry and to Canada's staggering record unemployment, Petro-Canada recently announced that it will use more of our dollars to lease European oil rigs rather than do business with Canadians. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources remind Petro-Canada of its own high priced ads and urge that company to take a chance on Canadians by doing business with its owners.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Quietly, subtly, inch by inch, the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada and his Liberal hierarchy are getting control of every segment of Canadian life: through NEP and Bill C-48, energy; through the CRTC, telecommunications; through the taxpayers money, the arts; through Canagrex, the food industry; through bills like Bill C-137, the workers; through definition of a letter, the mail; and on it goes. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House urges every organization and all individuals in Canada who value their freedom and their liberties to rise up and demand the resignation of this dictatorial Government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDEMNATION OF VIOLATIONS BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to speak on a matter of continuing concern. The abysmal record of the Soviet regime in respect of basic human rights, as per the United Nations Charter and the 1975 Helsinki Accords, continues unabated. The world demands and expects nations to respect the conventions of documents they have signed; deeds, not words, are the hallmark of international trust, justice and fair play.

Given the imprisonment or forced emigration of virtually all members of the Helsinki Watch Group in the Soviet Union, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) and the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

• (1415)

That this House condemn the continued abuse of human rights and violations of the Helsinki Final Act in the Soviet Union in contravention of recognized international obligation.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

INQUIRY RESPECTING CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my questions to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as a follow-up to questions directed by my Leader yesterday to the same Minister. The Minister will recall that in yesterday's exchange he was asked why Bill S-31 was presented to the Senate and not to the House of Commons, and whether that matter could be discussed.

In view of the consternation the Bill is creating among the people whom it will directly affect, namely, the people of the provinces of Canada, I would like to ask the Minister whether there was any consultation with regard to the nature and spirit of Bill S-31 prior to its presentation in the Senate. Additionally, in view of the consternation which has developed with regard to Bill S-31, could he tell us whether he has held any consultation with the provinces subsequent to the time it was introduced in the Senate, and whether he could report on such consultation, if it took place?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not know what consternation the Hon. Member is referring to. In fact, I believe this bill has been well received by all business circles across Canada. I also think that has been the case among the provinces, which clearly recognize the primacy of the Canadian Government in the transportation sector covered in this bill.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I do not think the Minister would really want to follow up by saying that it was well received by business, or that he would want to leave the impression that the provinces are in agreement with Bill S-31, nor is anyone arguing about primacy. What a person is arguing about here concerns the co-operative federalism which the Prime Minister once declared dead and tried to resurrect two weeks ago, and which now the Minister, by his actions, is saying is of little consequence in practical terms for the Government. That is the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPLICATION TO HYDROELECTRIC LINES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I would like to ask the same Minister a supplementary question with regard to the legislation which goes into the transportation aspects and what he calls the federal primacy, and no one is arguing that point. For example, hydroelectric lines are not directly mentioned in the Bill and are not dealt with as being pipelines. However, the Minister has referred to Part III of the National Energy Act which in fact includes hydroelectric lines. Are hydro lines included under the provisions of the Bill? Are hydro lines which are to be used for the purpose of exporting electrical energy to another country, included in the Bill as they are in Part III of the National Energy Act?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I may remind the hon. member that our reasons for introducing this legislation were to prevent any future conflicts with the provinces. We thought it was vital to act now, in order to prevent any erroneous interpretations or being obliged to correct situations that might arise later on. To my knowledge, we have had no reactions to the bill, except for one from a minister. Only one provincial minister has commented to date on the bill and that was the Minister of Transport from Quebec. I do not know whether the hon. member has received instructions from the Parti Québécois to ask questions in the House today, but as far as I know, that is the only government that has reacted to the bill until now.

We do not want any fights with the provinces. That is certainly not our intent. The bill clearly establishes the rules for the future and safeguards the primacy of the federal government in this area in clear and carefully defined terms. The hon. member asked a specific question regarding power transmission lines. I may point out that if he reads the bill carefully, he will find that these lines are not affected by the bill. If he wants us to add an amendment, this will be considered at the appropriate time.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSULT PROVINCES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister, whose defence is personal attack. He can do that, but if it is the level to which he has to resort, it is, of course, just the voice of the desperate. We will leave it at that.

The Minister says he wants no fight with the provinces and that he wants to avoid any future difficulty. He knows that the legislation can be made retroactive through court action, however. The Minister knows that, so what is he trying to prevent? He says it is not directed at the provinces, but it is, whether one wants to talk about Northlands Rail, about B.C. Rail, or about the transportation system in the potash industry—the list goes on and on.

When will the Minister sit down with the provinces to look at these specific issues, if he says he does not want any fight and wants co-operative federalism? He knows very well that what he has embarked upon is the very fight that he claims to want to prevent.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member could ask this question a dozen times. In his first question he indicated that there was consternation; there is none, Madam Speaker. Only one statement has been made by a single provincial Minister thus far. I have received no indication from those who have read this law and understand what it is—

Mr. Broadbent: Did you ask the others?

Mr. Ouellet: I have received no indication, at all, of major objections to it.

QUEBEC INVESTMENT IN CANADIAN PACIFIC LTD.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on the same subject. If this Bill is passed into law, can he tell us whether it will prevent the Caisse de Dépot et Placement du Québec from expanding their investment in Canadian Pacific Ltd?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The answer is yes, Madam Speaker.

POWER CORPORATION INVESTMENT IN CANADIAN PACIFIC LTD.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Has he personally, or indirectly through his Department, received any indication from Mr. Paul Desmarais and Power Corporation that they wish to expand their investment and ultimately control Canadian Pacific Ltd.?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The answer is no, Madam Speaker.

REASONS FOR NOT ACTING AGAINST PRIVATE COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister. As the Minister well knows, the federal Government already has constitutional authority to regulate firms engaged in interprovincial transportation activity. Why is the Government now introducing a measure that would restrict provincial governments from ownership in such sectors when it has taken no steps at all to stop private companies from becoming as large as they want in the same sectors?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that we have here a very important interpretation and basic philosophy. The free movement of goods and services in Canada and the primacy of the private sector have always been protected. This has always been to the advantage of Canadians, and we believe in maintaining this approach.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the insensitivity of this Government to the provinces and to other ways of doing things, is truly remarkable.

TREATMENT OF MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister why he thinks it is appropriate to trust the Exxon Corporation, which is owned and controlled outside Canada and which happens to control Imperial Oil which, in turn, controls Interprovincial Pipelines. Why is it more appropriate to trust this multinational with our national interests than the provincial governments of Canada which are elected by Canadians?

• (1425)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Government can, of course, act far more readily to control private enterprise in certain cases. We can pass appropriate regulations applying to private enterprise. If, however, we must introduce regulations to counter action taken by provincial governments, we then have a federal-provincial conflict on our hands. That is why today, while there is no conflict, while the situation is relatively calm and it is easier to intervene since there are no structures to dismantle, that is why we want to establish a set of very clear regulations marking the primacy of the Canadian Government, in order to avoid future conflicts with the provinces.

[English]

PROPOSED MERGER OF QUEBECAIR AND NORDAIR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister was wrong in principle in his earlier answer. He is wrong in fact in the one he has just given.

Will he confirm that he received from the Minister of Transport in the Province of Quebec a request which was made jointly by the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to move to rationalize their air transportation system by merging Quebecair and Nordair, I repeat a request which came as early as August from two provincial governments to take appropriate action to rationalize their airway systems? Did the Government receive such a request in August? If so, will the Government explain what is so wrong in this country about two provincial governments getting control of airlines that will in a regional way benefit their own people?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I might answer this question. Indeed a couple of months ago I received such a suggestion. What was mentioned at the time was not that the Government of Ontario and the Government of Quebec were going to take over whatever would be the result of this operation. It was, as a principle, private sector entities that were supposed to come in, so in that case the present bill would not apply. My friend, the Minister of Transport for Quebec, suffers from a persecution complex. Everything I do seems to hurt him. On the Quebecair situation, a number of months ago the Government of Quebec moved in and acquired shares in a new company which acquired Quebecair.

Mr. Broadbent: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Pepin: There is nothing wrong with that. As a matter of fact, this was approved by the CTC, and the present law is not retroactive, so this acquisition can be considered to be acceptable. Should something develop in terms of a regional carrier that would involve the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario, either alone or with private sector entities, there is a possibility under this law to make an exception and pass an order in council to approve that. As the Minister said, I do not think my friends on the other side should get overly nervous about this matter.

WELFARE

FINANCIAL BURDEN OF MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. With the increase in the number of people seeking social assistance, municipalities such as Metropolitan Toronto may have difficulty coping with the added financial burden. Can the Minister indicate to the House any efforts she has under way to deal with the problem of individuals having to turn to welfare?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am sorry, Madam Speaker, the microphone did not seem to be working well. I understood the beginning of the question to deal with the welfare burden on the municipalities. I would like to reiterate that each time a province puts money into welfare through the municipalities, we automatically reimburse the province by a like amount. If it puts more into the municipalities to ease their burden, we will reimburse the province immediately by exactly the same amount of money. This, of course, increased both last year and this year.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PROVISION OF LOANS AT REASONABLE INTEREST RATES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture and, I suppose, he will have the same feelings as we do on this side of the House regarding the most recent budget. It is clear that the influence of the Minister of Agriculture on the new Minister of Finance is the same as the influence he had on the former Minister of Finance, which is absolutely zero.

The Minister of Agriculture announced on October 1 that the Farm Credit Corporation interest rates for the next six months would be 15¾ per cent. The Bank of Canada rate is now 11½ per cent. I would like to ask the Minister if he has done anything specific to keep his promise to consider implementing the Conservative Party's AgriBond concept, or to provide low interest outside capital to the Farm Credit Corporation so that farmers can have interest at reasonable rates for long-term financing?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member said something about "zero". The calculations he has done, I am sure, have amounted to zero because, if he had looked at the figures, he would have found out how much money we have loaned at subsidized interest rates. The former Minister of Finance allowed us to subsidize interest rates to the tune of 5 per cent, which will cost $5.4 million in interest rates. This will mean that we are going to be loaning farmers—and you will hear more about it later today—about $700 million. We will be recouping our position in long-term mortgages from some 20 per cent to 40 per cent of all mortgages just in one year. So, when he says we have no influence on the Minister of Finance, either the previous one or the present one, he is not stating the real facts to this House. The Hon. Member's question was so long I have forgotten what it was.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gurbin: We are used to that kind of response from the Minister of Agriculture. For the Minister's information, if he will look at the figures that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has produced, he will find that interest rate subsidy program he is talking about, which is not long-term financing at reasonable rates for agriculture, stands to help approximately 500 farmers when, really, 10 per cent of the agricultural population, or 20,000 farmers, are in serious financial difficulty.

AGRICULTURE

RED MEAT STRATEGY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): My supplementary question is as follows. The Minister of Agriculture has, every three weeks now for the last year, promised to produce a red meat strategy. Today, in Regina, Ministers of Agriculture from nine provinces, national farm organizations, and national producer organizations, are meeting to co-operate in coming up with some programs that will assist agriculture. They understand the need to co-operate.

Madam Speaker: That is not reasonable. The Hon. Member announces his question and then goes to another preamble. Question, please.

Mr. Gurbin: In the absence of an answer to this first question, Madam Speaker, I will now put my supplementary. Where is the Minister's red meat strategy, and will he co-operate with the provincial ministers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I now remember his first question. It was about the AgriBond policy. That policy has been suggested by farm organizations, by Members of this Party, and by Members of his own Party. Anyone who can claim to be the originator of it has got to be pretty fantastic, Madam Speaker, as far as I am concerned, because that was suggested by many people, many years ago, and it is still under consideration.

In reply to the second speech he made about whether we were going to have some kind of program for the red meat industry, I do not know if he was in the House earlier when one of his colleagues said he did not want any more Government interference or regulations whatsoever, calling it dictatorial. The Hon. Member is now asking me to interfere with the red meat industry. Maybe I should not be doing anything. The provinces are certainly getting ready to interfere with the red meat industry, if they are going to come up with something in that meeting in Regina. I proposed something to them four years ago that is pretty much the same as they are proposing at the present time, and they took over four years to say no to it. Now they are talking about accepting it. If they do, boy, will I say hurrah, Madam Speaker.

PAYMENTS UNDER WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which pertains to the low incomes of farmers at this present time. According to a release from the United Grain Growers today, farm income will be down 28 per cent due to lower wheat prices and increased costs of production. The Minister knows that in the recent budget there was absolutely nothing for the western farmer, and that takes into consideration the $400 million that it will cost them for the loss of the Crow rate.

With regard to the Western Grain Stabilization Program, under which there is $451 million of the farmers' money in that account, is his Government going to make a payment to the farmers now when it is so needed, how much will it be, and when will it be?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, if the legislation triggered the payment, because of low commodity prices, the Hon. Member knows full well, there would be a payment, when it is all tabulated and has gone through the system. But when he talks about how bad off they are, is he suggesting we interfere in the private grain trade and do something about world commodity prices? I have a letter from the head of the United Grain Growers. He used to be an adviser on the Agriculture Stabilization Board and I know him very well. In his letter he states it is mostly blamed on low world commodity prices. Is the Hon. Member suggesting we interfere in that area again?

REQUEST THAT FARMERS BE ALLOWED TO OPT OUT OF PROGRAM

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): The Minister knows that was not the question I asked him. I asked him whether there was going to be a payment.

Farmers, first of all, paid a levy of $500 per producer. Then it was increased to $900 for each producer. Now, I understand, it is going to be increased to $1,200 to the producer. Will the Government consider allowing farmers to opt out of the program if the farmers are not going to see it is a reasonable program? Many of them, had they invested their money in the bank at today's interest rates, would have a lifetime savings policy.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that farmers joined that plan voluntarily. The vast majority of grain farmers in Western Canada still belong to that plan, and will belong to that plan. He wants them to be opting in and out of it. There can be no kind of a program if, one day, they decide to be in it and the next day out of it. What kind of plan, Madam Speaker, would that be? There has to be some stability to it.

The Hon. Member knows that it is one of the best plans any grain growing group has in the whole world. The United States does not have anything that good for its grain farmers, plus the fact they do not have a crop insurance plan. We have such a plan in Canada. We put into his province about $80 million last year in federal funding to pay half of the crop insurance premiums. We spent more in his province, Madam Speaker, than the Province of Saskatchewan did last year, by about some $50 million. The Hon. Member says we do not care about western agriculture. Let the figures show the facts.

IMPACT OF GILSON COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question also is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and concerns a study made public recently by the Chase Econometrics Institute in the United States. It was a study concerning the impact on Canadian agriculture of implementing the Crow changes that Gilson recommended. Since the Chase Econometrics Study shows that the changes in the Crow rate proposed by Gilson will negatively affect all of eastern Canadian agriculture, British Columbia agriculture, and most of the prairie agriculture with the exception of a few highly specialized feeding operations, will the Minister tell the House what his position is on the Crow change that it appears to impact negatively on virtually every sector of Canadian agriculture?

• (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has not changed his opinion from the time when changing the Crowsnest Pass rate was first talked about. What he says about it having a negative impact on every sector of agriculture is just not so, and he knows it. There must be a change in the rate if agriculture is going to develop not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada. The vast majority of farmers recognize that a change must take place for the over-all good of Canadian agriculture.

We have held very, very intense meetings with many, many provincial representatives in eastern Canada who are concerned about the effect the changes will have on them. Our findings are being put together at the present time, and next week we should have a very firm presentation on the Gilson Report and its over-all effect on agriculture.

FUTURE OF LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, since most of the economic studies previously done by the Minister's department and by the Minister of Transport indicate that the main advantage to a change in the Crow rate in based on an understanding that the livestock industry will expand in Canada—some studies indicate as much as 25 per cent—and since we are now faced with a decline in livestock product prices and we no longer have access to the U.S. market for meat, where are we going to go with this increased production? Where is the advantage in producing goods which have declined in price and which do not have access to a market?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about the beef quota which the United States of America has imposed on Canada. That is true for carcass meat and broken beef, but no other meat is affected at this time and live cattle can still be shipped to the U.S. as we have been freely able to do for many, many years.

When the Hon. Member talks about where the production is going to go, again you do not have to be a great mathematician to know that the world population today is 4.3 billion people, and over the next 17 years it will increase to over six billion. In light of that, we think some of these prices are temporary.

Also, the Hon. Member knows full well that those farmers who have looked after themselves in some kind of a marketing organization are not suffering at this time. The ones who have not looked after themselves through some kind of supply management system are the ones really suffering in the present economic downturn. The others may not be doing as well as they did before, but they are not going bankrupt, and the Hon. Member knows that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CANADA-UNITED STATES ECONOMIC TALKS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I am going to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In 1977 the Prime Minister spoke very effectively to a joint session of the U.S. Congress. Recently the Prime Minister met with business leaders from the United States. Also, the U.S. Secretary of State Schultz visited Ottawa recently, and meetings four times annually are planned. Shortly the Prime Minister will be going to meet with the leaders of Europe.

Since the Canadian economy is massively interwoven with that of the U.S. in regard to interest rates, foreign investment, trade, tourism, communications and so on, and since the U.S. elections may signal significant changes to U.S. fiscal and economic policy, may I ask the Minister the following question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: Is the Prime Minister planning, or does he consider it advisable, to have a meeting with President Reagan in the very near future, on economic direction and recovery, and/or is he perhaps planning to speak to the U.S. Congress on Canadian-U.S. economic irritants and direction?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Prime Minister and the other leaders of the western industrialized world met to discuss the world economy earlier this year. The Summit in Versailles addressed global economic questions.

With respect to the United States, Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has highlighted the importance of our relationship with the U.S. and the interrelationship between our two economies. I certainly attach a very high importance to maintaining good relations with the United States. In that respect, the United States Secretary of State visited Canada for very extended discussions, and it is my intention to maintain the continuity of that communication which we began a very short time ago.

FISHERIES

EUROPEAN ACTION AGAINST SEAL HUNT PRODUCTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Given the recent uninformed statements by some members of the European Economic Community in regard to the Canadian seal hunt, would the Minister inform the House today what action both the Government and he personally are taking to defend the all important Canadian seal hunt?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as Minister for the region where the seal hunt is a traditional activity I can make the following report to the Hon. Member.

First, I have personally met with Members of Parliament of each country of western Europe to sensitize them about it. I have met personally with the President of the Common Market, Gaston Thorne. I have met with officials both in Canada and in Europe. I have met with our ambassador to the European Community in Brussells. I have issued the strongest statement ever on that question, explaining why Europe's attitude on this question is irresponsible and hypocritical. I have met with journalists both in Canada and in Europe. I am working closely with the Minister of State for International Trade who is also from that region.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I have personally offered to establish a joint commission with the Common Market to study every single aspect of the seal hunt. As I was saying last week personally to an official of the Common Market, it is the height of hypocrisy to establish, as they have done, a commission to study the question of the seal population, which is going to make a report next month—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: A supplementary, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halton.

Mr. Crosbie: A supplementary, Madam Speaker. There must be more, Madam Speaker.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

PROPOSED UNITED STATES CONTENT LEGISLATION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, that was an excellent off-the-cuff answer by the Minister of Fisheries.

In the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade, I would like to put my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Sales of Soviet-built Lada cars in Canada have increased by over 1,200 per cent in the last three years because of artificially low prices. The total of our off-shore automotive imports, as the Minister knows, continues to increase, and their share of the market is now 36.7 per cent. The re-introduction of the so-called Ottinger Bill in the U.S. Congress in imminent, a Bill which calls for 90 per cent U.S. content regulations.

In view of these facts, Madam Speaker, which are contributing to the deterioration of our automotive industry, I ask the Minister whether he is specifically aware of these facts and what does he plan to do to try to correct them, and when?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to the first part of the Hon. Member's question concerning the dumping of Lada cars in Canada, that comes under the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. However, I am not aware that any particular company has lodged a claim with the Anti-Dumping Tribunal or the Minister of National Revenue with respect to the dumping of Lada cars.

With respect to the second question, we have already made representations here in Ottawa, and in Washington, to Members of Congress. My colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, was in Washington yesterday talking to his counterpart, Secretary Block, with respect to the content legislation proposed in Congress. If the Hon. Member had read the transcription of the hearing before Congress, he would have seen that Ambassador Brock and Secretary Baldrige, the United States Secretary of Commerce, both indicated that they did not agree with the Congressional position with respect to content.

• (1450)

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, ironically there are two Ladas for sale in the Government's surplus sale today; they are Russian-built cars.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Second, the Minister knows that the Ottinger bill had support in Congress from over 200 Congressmen.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, last week the Canadian Institute for Economic Policy released a study which concluded that, unless new specific steps are taken, "the Canadian automobile industry is in such bad shape that the federal Government should wind up the industry". Therefore, could the Minister tell the House whether he agrees with the conclusion in that report and will indeed allow the industry to disappear from Canada, or is he now prepared to stand up in the House and introduce, forthwith, Canadian content regulations, as most other countries are doing, in order to save the industry, to save jobs and indeed to create more Canadian jobs? Is he prepared to take that step today?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, obviously the Government does not agree with the report produced last week. We think the automobile industry is one of the most important sectors in Canada. As late as yesterday afternoon I had a meeting with the principals in the automobile industry, the UAW, and the autoparts industry, with respect to putting together an industrial strategy for this very important sector in Canada.

SHIPBUILDING

WITHDRAWAL OF PETRO-CANADA FROM NEW BRUNSWICK DEAL

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am holding in my hands letters which I have received from current and laid-off workers of the Saint John Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. As the Minister will know, it is one of the finest and best facilities in the world. The workers who work there, who would like to work there, or who would like to return to work there, are among the finest tradesmen in the world as well.

These men, and I, would like to know why the federal Government can spend $350 million to purchase British Petroleum, a move which will not create a single job; bail out Dome Petroleum to the tune of millions of dollars, a company that purchases its ships from Japan; order a $150 million semi-submersible rig from Korea; then allow its champion of Canadianization, Petro-Canada, to pull out of a multi-million dollar deal with the Saint John Shipbuilding Company which has resulted in the loss of some 2,000 man-years. This was done despite the fact that the private company which the Government was operating in conjunction with wanted to go ahead with the deal. Will the Minister tell the House why this was done? What does he intend to do to protect the jobs in Saint John and to get these laid-off workers back to work?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the question is a rather long one. The Hon. Member referred to the purchase of BP. I should like to say to him that it is a commercial transaction. It does not involve any funds from the Government and, in fact, it is a profit-making decision by Petro-Canada.

As far as the problems of shipbuilding in Canada and the competitive position of any company that wants to have facilities made in Canada are concerned, of course it is a question of competition with other available facilities either in Canada or sometimes elsewhere. I am not aware of the specific problem which the Hon. Member mentioned, but I can tell him that a lot of work has been done in Saint John at the initiative of the Government. We are quite proud of our record in terms of the work which we have been able to provide to Saint John over the years.

Madam Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to return to asking short questions. I am becoming increasingly disappointed. When we returned to the Chamber, all Hon. Members were ery good at asking short questions and giving short answers. I was sitting here feeling very generous that I could recognize so many Members. Please return to that very good discipline; it is marvellous for the House.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, as far as the laid-off workers of Saint John are concerned, the Minister might as well continue his seance of meditation.

POLICY REVIEW

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For several years the federal Government has been boasting a shipbuilding policy review. The review has been completed, passed by Cabinet, and yet the Government continues to sit on policies which should protect not only the Canadian shipbuilding industry but workers' jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Corbett: Does the Minister have any intention of releasing this review and, if so, would he please give the House and the laid-off workers of the nation, those Canadians whose livelihoods depend on this industry, a firm date and a commitment?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be very well informed about what goes on in Cabinet. However, I should like to inform him, as a Member from New Brunswick in his Party caucus, that my colleague from Saint John has already made substantial representations for the shipbuilding industry in Saint John. The Export Development Corporation, for example, was very instrumental in obtaining a $100 million contract for semi-submersible rigs in Saint John, one of the first ones ever built in Canada, so the Government has already taken positive action.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

WESTERN BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENT HEARINGS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As the Minister knows, the Canadian Transport Commission continues to hold abandonment hearings on hundreds of miles of railway branch lines in western Canada. Decisions on abandonment centre on whether railways will receive sufficient revenues to maintain the branch lines. That is the principal test of whether the lines and the communities on them will live or die. Can the Minister tell the House why abandonment hearings and decisions are continuing, given the Government's intent to change the Crow rate and the fact that it has no idea how much railways will receive through the operation of branch lines?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, indeed I have deeply meditated, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would say, on that particular subject. I decided not to instruct the CTC to abandon the procedure for the abandonment of branch lines for essentially three reasons. The first one was that the concept of viability, to which my friend made reference, would apply here in a very special way. When the Hon. Member talked about branch lines being viable, he means viable after a branch line subsidy of $250 million a year, after a branch line rehabilitation program of $700 million over a period of ten years, and so on and so forth. I thought that was not a particularly defensible concept of profitability.

Second, there were a number of branch lines which remained to be assessed by the CTC. Most of them, if not all, have already been rejected by Hall and by PRAC; some have already been ruled out by the CTC.

Third, rates are not the only factor in branch line abandonment. Volume and the situation of the rail, for example, have to be taken into consideration as well. I thought that, for all these reasons, and some others, the CTC procedure should go on.

Mr. Hovdebo: That was a very good answer, except the Minister did not take into account the fourth point, that there was no indication of how much they would receive for operations.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INTERIM PAYMENTS TO RAILWAYS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the Gilson report on which the Minister bases so many hopes is not law. The Deputy Minister of Transport right now is stating that he is engaged in preliminary negotiations for "interim payments" for the Crow benefit which railways will receive. Where did the Minister find the authority or authorization for spending to make such interim payments in advance of any kind of legislation referring to these payments?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is a difference between studying and spending. No interim payments are being made now on the basis of the future policy in this regard. If there should be interim payments paid to railways, they will be part of the package which the Government will bring forward to the House at the time the bill is introduced.

INDUSTRY

INDUSTRIAL AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM—INQUIRY WHETHER ADDITIONAL FUNDS WILL BE GRANTED AND NEW ZONES DESIGNATED

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, in his capacity of Chairman of the Cabinet committee responsible for the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program. Can the Minister inform the House whether the Government still intends to maintain the Program and to commit additional funds, and also whether the Government will be announcing new designated areas in the new future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that the Government intends to maintain the Program in question. As far as additional funds are concerned, that is a matter I shall be looking into when preparing the estimates for fiscal year 1983-84. Finally, I can inform the hon. member that our committee is, in fact, proceeding with consideration of a number of applications from various areas for this program, to see whether they comply with program criteria.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Government House Leader a question concerning House business. Last Thursday he laid out the House business for the remainder of this week. It included Bill C-134, the interest rebates on farm loans on which we will commence debate today. Tomorrow is to be an Opposition day. That is as far as we got. The Government House Leader also said that debate on Bill C-136 will follow Bill C-134 and following Bill C-136 we will debate Bill C-135. Will that be the order of business followed next week? If so, what comes after Bill C-135?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it is correct to say that today we will commence second reading of Bill C-134 concerning rebates of interest on farm loans. This will be followed by Bill C-136 which concerns grants respecting interest for small business and Bill C-135 concerning grants to home owners. Tomorrow is an Opposition day. That confirms the business for the rest of this week.

[Translation]

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, on Monday and Tuesday we shall continue debate on Bill C-134, respecting rebates of interest on farm loans, Bill C-136 which is aimed at assisting small businesses with interest payments, and finally, Bill C-135, which provides assistance for home owners. Thus, next Monday and Tuesday, depending on this week's progress with consideration of these bills, we shall continue consideration of the bills in the order mentioned. Next Wednesday, again depending on our progress with Bill C-134, Bill C-136 and Bill C-135, we may decide to consider two bills which, for technical reasons and also because of Canada's international commitments, are extremely urgent, and I am referring to Bill C-129 regarding the Bretton Woods Agreements and Bill C-130, which concerns continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions. Thus, at the end of the day on Monday or Tuesday, I shall be in a better position to inform Opposition Members whether we are going to consider Bill C-129 and Bill C-130 or continue debate on the bills arising from the budget to which I referred earlier.

Madam Speaker, I also wish to remind the House that we will not be sitting on either Friday or Thursday—Remembrance Day—next week, and that Monday and Tuesday we shall be sitting from six to eight to make up the time that will be lost next week Friday.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,120, 4,402, 4,403, 4,426, 4,436, 4,469 and 4,470.

[Text]

CABINET MINISTER'S EXEMPT STAFF

Question No. 4,120—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. For each Cabinet Minister, what are the names of executive assistants and other members of exempt staff who are receiving income from sources other than from funds allotted to ministerial budgets?

2. What are the names of those who receive income, favours, loans or other benefits of value from sources other than those permitted by the conflict of interest guidelines for Cabinet Ministers and former Cabinet Ministers?

3. Did the Prime Minister supply every Cabinet Minister, every executive assistant and all members of the exempt staff with copies of the "Code of Ethics" produced by the late Prime Minister Pearson and with a copy of the conflict of interest guidelines for Cabinet Ministers and former Cabinet Ministers?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Exempt staff who have been designated by Ministers as being subject to the conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers must make public disclosures of gifts or other benefits of a value exceeding $200 received from any source. These disclosures are available in the Public Registry maintained by the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. Those members of the exempt staff that Ministers have not deemed to be subject to the conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers are subject to the guidelines for public servants. In both cases, it is impossible for the Government to know of income that is not required to be declared, other than through confidential declarations under the Income Tax Act. For instance, some exempt staff could be receiving income from blind trusts set up in accordance with the guidelines, family allowance cheques, or interest on bonds that bears no relationship to their present employment.

In addition, an individual can be seconded to a Minister's office on an interchange assignment from the private or public sector. The salary of such an individual remains the responsibility of and is paid by the organization the person is seconded from, and the Minister reimburses the organization from his approved budget an amount equal to the salary of the position to which the individual is assigned.

Mr. Michael Phelps, was employed as Executive Assistant to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, under an interchange assignment from June 16, 1980 to June 22, 1982. His salary was paid by Petro-Canada and the Minister reimbursed Petro-Canada an amount equal to the salary of the position to which Mr. Phelps is assigned.

2. The Government is not aware of any exempt staff who are receiving income, favours, loans or other benefits of value from sources other than those permitted by the conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers.

3. All Cabinet Ministers, their Executive Assistants and designated members of their exempt staffs have received copies of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines for Ministers of the Crown and the Post-Employment Guidelines. A copy of the Prime Minister's letter of April 30, 1980 to all Ministers concerning the conflict of interest requirements applicable to Ministers' exempt staff members, other related correspondence, and the Guidelines were tabled in the House of Commons on May 1, 1980.

TERM EMPLOYEES

Question No. 4,402—Mr. Gauthier:

Were term employees informed of the termination of their employment following the Budget of the Minister of Finance and, if so, how many in each government (a) Department (b) Agency?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Prior to accepting a position for a specified period (term) within the Department of Finance, a person is advised through the letter of offer of the termination date of his/her employment. This is a requirement under Public Service Employment Regulations. This process was not affected by the Budget of the Minister of Finance.

STUDY OF IMPACT OF FUEL TAXES IN CANADA

Question No. 4,403—Mr. Mazankowski:

Did the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources hire Dr. D. Brean of the University of Toronto to study the impact of taxation on fuel use in Canada and, if so (a) at what cost (b) what was the rationale behind the study (c) what conclusions or recommendations did the study advance?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: EM&R awarded a contract to the University of Toronto Institute for Policy Analysis on March 9, 1982 to study the impact of the tax system on fuel use in Canada. (a) $24,209. (b) The purpose of the study is to determine the impact of fuel taxes imposed by the different levels of Government on fuel consumption and to determine their incidence effects as well as their contribution to energy conservation. (c) The study will not be completed until the late fall of 1982 and because it is analytical in nature, no recommendations will be provided by the consultant.

OFF-OIL PROGRAM

Question No. 4,426—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982, how many applications were received for assistance under the Off-Oil Program and how many rebate cheques were issued?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

No. of applications received—213,379
No. of applications processed—192,161

CBC—FILM STARRING HARRY BELAFONTE

Question No. 4,436—Mr. Stewart:

1. Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation produce a documentary film for television about Cuba and Jamaica starring Harry Belafonte and the ex-Premier of Jamaica, Mr. Michael Manley?

2. Was the film released and, if not, for what reason?

3. What was the total cost of the production and for what purpose was the film made?

4. What were the names of all other prominent persons shown in the film?

5. Does the CBC plan to broadcast the film on television some time in the future and, if not, for what reason?

6. How many CBC employees were involved in the production and, in each case, what was (a) his/her name (b) the cost for travel and miscellaneous expenses?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. No. The CBC is, however, producing a light entertainment musical program for television about the music and people of the Caribbean which will feature Harry Belafonte as the star performer. Mr. Michael Manley is not mentioned and does not appear in the program.

2. The program is scheduled for telecast in two segments in the 1982-83 series of Supershows which will be seen on Sunday nights from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. The original videotaping of the portions of the program which featured the live concerts in the Caribbean took place in 1980, but because the taping was done in less than optimum conditions, some of the sound material was not of sufficiently good quality for broadcast. To rectify this, CBC officers felt it prudent management to wait until the Belafonte world tour was in Canada earlier this year at which time it would be possible to employ CBC's studio facilities to re-record the defective voice and music tracks.

3. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the costs involved in individual program projects. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975. The program was produced as light entertainment under a co-production arrangement with the Belafonte Company.

4. Harry Belafonte is the only prominent person shown in the program. Other people who appear in the program are all professional performers.

5. Answered in 2 above.

6. Twenty-eight CBC employees were involved in the production. With regard to employee names and the costs for their travel and miscellaneous expenses, it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530 answered November 6, 1975.

2. (a) In what form was the debt (b) what were the interest rates paid by the Government on the debt (c) what were the total interest payments made by the Government (d) what new foreign debt was issued and at what rates?

2. (a) SFr 700 million, 2¾ per cent bonds, 3-year term

FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO REDUCE INTEREST RATE

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-134, respecting rebates of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Madam Speaker, Bill C-134 is an Act respecting rebate of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act and is a piece of legislation which is extremely important to the farm community and to all Canadians.

Hon. Members will recall that in the June 28, 1982 budget speech, the then Minister of Finance announced a special loans program to assist farmers in financial distress. Contrary to what some Members say here, the Minister had a program that was quite significant and farmers who have benefited from it think it is quite significant. Under the special Farm Financial Assistance Program, the then Minister of Finance had allocated a total of $100 million for loans in fiscal years 1982-1983 and 1983-1984 and for interest rebates on these loans for a total of $200 million. Because of the pressing demand for assistance this year, this allocation has now changed to $130 million for 1982-1983 and $70 million for 1983-1984.

The funding from the then Minister of Finance, combined with that from other FCC sources, will result in loan approvals of $200 million, on which a subsidy of four percentage points will be paid for two years. This measure will help to assure the survival of many Canadian farmers who are presently facing serious financial difficulties. The Farm Credit Corporation credit advisers will assist farmers in the development of farm plans which will provide for greater financial stability at the end of the two-year rebate program.

The Farm Loans Interest Rebate Act is required in order to provide the statutory authority for the appropriation of an amount of $16 million, not zero but $16 million, for the payment of the interest rebate of four percentage points of the principal amount of farm loans made under this special program.

The Farm Credit Act does not provide the Farm Credit Corporation with the authority to rebate any portion of the interest charged under the Act, nor is there other appropriation legislation through which the subsidy could be paid. Thus, after a review of all other options, the proposed legislation was deemed to be the most acceptable method by which to pay the subsidy.

• (1510)

Under the special Farm Financial Assistance Program, loans will be made at the regular Farm Credit lending rate which on June 29, 1982 was 16.5 per cent and on October 1, 1982 was set at 15 and ¾ per cent. The rebate of four percentage points over two years to date reduces the farmers' effective interest rate cost to 11 and ¾ per cent. FCC customary lending criteria will apply. For example, a loan ceiling of $300,000 for individuals and $500,000 for more than one qualifying applicant will apply and a maximum amortization period of up to 30 years is still in effect.

This is what most Members must keep in mind. No one is willing to loan long-term money now, at least hardly anyone we could find. We were offered some Canadian money for up to 10 years, I believe it was around $50 million, with an interest rate of 14 per cent. We refused that because we are confident that interest rates will go down even further and we will be able to obtain long-term money, using the agribond principle that was not originally thought up by those opposite, Mr. Speaker, but was thought up and talked about by people for many years, probably even before the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) thought of coming to the House of Commons. I can remember when it was first thought of and talked about by farm organizations and politicians several years ago.

We must still have long-term money in agriculture. At the present time, the demand for money is not as great as it was at one time because there are not as many farm transfers taking place in 1982. Any farmer in financial distress may apply for this special loan under this Program. The farmer is required to prepare an acceptable plan of recovery in consultation with the Farm Credit Corporation. In addition, he or she must demonstrate that the farm operation will be able to generate sufficient income after two years to meet anticipated commitments.

From the time the special Program was announced on June 28, 1982, up to October 26, 1982, 554 loans had been approved, totalling $80.1 million. Including applications in process, the total loan commitment to October 26, 1982, under this special Program is estimated at $105 million, which indicates the demand from farmers in financial distress for these special loans. This is contrary to the figures that the Hon. Member used when quoting, I believe, from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. We say that with that Program we will probably help approximately 2,000 farmers.

When we break down the numbers of those who received loans into regions, it is interesting to see where those farmers are. The number of farmers in British Columbia who received these loans was 23. The amount of the loans was $5.3 million. I am surprised that there would be farmers in Alberta applying for a Farm Credit Corporation loan.

Mr. Paproski: Why?

Mr. Whelan: I thought they had many different programs there. They have about five different programs in Alberta that provide funds for farmers. Most of the other Provinces cannot even afford to have one of those programs. There were 42 farmers in Alberta who borrowed $9.3 million. In Saskatchewan 72 farmers borrowed $11.4 million. In Manitoba 50 farmers borrowed $6.7 million. In Ontario 237 farmers borrowed $32.5 million. In Quebec 105 farmers borrowed $12.3 million. In the Atlantic region, including all four Provinces, 25 farmers borrowed $2.7 million. The money which has been loaned does not include pending applications.

The breakdown according to enterprise type indicates that on a national basis beef and swine producers have received the biggest share of the funds available. It is that area which is probably the most disorganized of all agriculture in Canada because those producers depend on someone to pay them a fair price for the product that they deliver to the marketplace. Sometimes they wait as long as two weeks to see what they will receive for their product, especially when marketing beef.

We can see what the United States is doing at the present time because of the scare they have over the amount of beef being exported to their country. This meat is being exported mainly by Australia because it had an extra slaughter-kill due to the heavy droughts in that country. That great free marketing system to the south decided to impose a meat import law to stop bringing that slaughter-carcass, broken beef into their country. We were not over our quota but Australia was. The United States decided it would treat all countries in the same fashion, but we were able to negotiate and instead of the quota we would have been given if we were treated similarly to Australia and other countries, with a quota of 101 million pounds, we were allowed to export 120.1 million pounds of beef to the United States. If we had not been able to negotiate that quota we would have been stopped from exporting beef to the United States some time in July or early August, I believe.

So when anyone says that the North American market belongs to us, tell them that they are kidding themselves, because that is what they are doing. The United States is becoming one of the most protected nations in the world. There are approximately 25 bills before Congress presently in the form of protective legislation to attempt to protect their producers of every kind of product imaginable. This is happening in that great, free trading nation to the south, which so many people think it is.

A Bill of this nature is not new. In the November 12, 1981 budget the then Minister of Finance announced a similar special program to assist farmers in financial distress. It provided a five percentage point rebate. Similar legislation to this Bill came into force in April, 1982 for the November 12, 1982 special program which terminated on March 31, 1982. There was strong demand for the program, as the statistics indicate. From November 12, 1981, to March 31, 1982, 382 loans totalling $45,417 million were approved. Interest rebates on these loans over a two-year period will total about $4.6 million. The total in the two-year period is approximately $16 million in interest rebates.

I urge Hon. Members to support this Bill which will be instrumental in assisting so many Canadian farmers through these difficult times. Most agriculture producers are at the mercy of the marketplace for their incomes. The price received for their production does not correspond with their costs, and in recent times costs have outstripped earnings for a significant number of our farmers. I firmly believe that most of these producers can survive and contribute to the economy if they are given a chance to recover. This interest subsidy for a two-year period provides that breathing room. Agriculture is essential for a healthy economy, and if our economy is to strengthen, so must agriculture.

I want to conclude by pointing out that the number of accounts with the FCC total 75,770 Canadian farmers out of 320,000 farmers. The total number of farmers in default at the present time is approximately 11 per cent. The total amount of loans to all farmers in Canada is close to $4 billion. The amount of money issued under regular loans this year is $252.3 million to date. As I indicated earlier, about $85 million is under the special Farm Financial Assistance Program. We estimate that we will have loaned about $700 million by the time this fiscal year ends. We have made plans and have received applications already, and while we have had several offers, we have not accepted them because we do not think the rates are what we should receive on the American money market. There has been a tender form for approximately $129 million. I am going by memory as to what that figure is.

Average assets of borrowers this year increased by about $368,000. The average loan this year under the regular loans program amounted to $92,400. The average loan issued under the special loans program was $135,000.

Those are just some of the figures that we are using, but we hope that we can use the system to which the Hon. Member referred and which we have discussed, the agribond system. We are still working on it; it has not come through as quickly as I would like to see it. Some of the financial institutions have very strong reservations about it, including the credit unions who say that we would take too much money from their operations. They have expressed strong concern about our proposal for a special system which would allow people to invest with a smaller return on interest by paying no tax on it, and that type of thing. I still think the principle is good. Other countries are using it. We are still presenting other new proposals to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I do not know whether the proposal will be ready this year or not, but offers are still regularly coming in, as I said, for long-term money. We do not know what the result of that will be.

As I said earlier in my speech, we had refused the proposal of long-term money for a ten-year period, I believe, at 14 per cent interest in Canadian money, which I thought was too high. I am still optimistic that the interest rates will come down and that maybe by Christmas or shortly thereafter the interest rates will be single digit. I am very much of an optimist. That will put us in a better position to arrange for long-term money. We are in the best position to arrange long-term money for over two years; but I again stress to the House, through Your Honour, that very rarely can one find any institution which will lend long-term money.

As Minister of Agriculture, after listening to what the farm organizations have said to me, I very strongly feel that it is a must that we have long-term financing for farmers. From what we see today on the world commodity markets, the great fluctuations in prices mean that they must have that kind of long-term financing with reasonable rates of interest. This applies to somewhere betwen 35 per cent and 45 per cent of all farmers. Over 50 per cent of our farmers are not in that bracket at all. Farmers in certain age groups do not owe any money, and that takes in nearly 50 per cent of all farmers in Canada. A mixture of grain producers, livestock producers, dairy producers and poultry producers are in that bracket. Some of them have even said to me, "Some of your programs, Mr. Whelan, are too rich because we are paying too much income tax at the present time." Well, it is hard in an agricultural community to provide the kind of equity we want. However, if a farmer is paying income tax, that is as it should be, because successful business people pay taxes, and farmers are successful business people. If they are paying taxes, that means they are running very successful, efficient businesses. It is when farmers or business people are not paying taxes that we should worry more about them.

We recently received a visitor to Canada. We showed him the agricultural production entities from Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the different kinds of farm operations that he wanted to see. I know he was very impressed with what he saw. The productive system in our country is so different from the one in his country. He was the minister of agriculture of the Soviet Union, which is our largest purchaser of agricultural products. He wanted to see dry land farming. I was delighted to show him our family type farm operations, from small and medium to the large type operations which have several thousand acres under cultivation. He also saw livestock and grain operations. No other country in the world has a system such as ours.

In reference to the plight of producers in the United States of America, the potato producers of that country requested hearings because they said that they could not compete with the programs available to Canadian producers. Little Canada was putting the producers out of business in the main potato producing areas of the United States. Hearings were held in Boise, Idaho, and Bangor, Maine. Transcripts of the proceedings are available for anyone to see. However, their main argument was that Canada's programs are so superior to theirs that they cannot compete with us.

Once again I ask for speedy passage of the Bill. I have given a brief report on what we are doing to raise extra funds for the Fram Credit Corporation, but we are being a little bit cautious about arranging long-term money at high rates of interest because we do not want to tie too many farmers into a high rate of interest. I think that no matter who may hold the office of Minister of Agriculture over the next few years, he will have to review mortgages which farmers have taken at 16 per cent or 16.5 per cent interest because the average rate of mortgages is now around 10 per cent on the nearly $4 billion we have out on loan. However, some farmers are paying less than 10 per cent and others are paying 6.5 per cent more than 10 per cent. When they were obtaining those mortgages they were still borrowing money at a rate about five points lower than the regular market rate at that time and they could not obtain long-term mortgages even if they were willing to pay 20 per cent, 21 per cent or 22 per cent interest. That cost us several millions of dollars. However, we think money spent on agriculture is money well spent.

The record of the Farm Credit Corporation and its cost of operation is one of which we are very proud. It is an organization which knows and understands Canadian agriculture, which is one thing the private lending institutions have proven to us they do not understand. By the way, they lent money to the rural community of Canada, but in many cases they did not understand just what was going on. If most of the farmers who are in financial trouble had borrowed long-term money four, five or six years ago from the financial institutions, most of them would not be in such difficulty. We appeal to the private lending institutions to start lending long-term money to the rural community. I can honestly say that I did not realize what they were doing until I became really involved during the last 18 months. Farmers have sent me copies of agreements they have signed with lending institutions. I was amazed, appalled, and in some cases just downright disgusted to find that they had become involved with financial lending institutions which would put them into such difficult positions.

I know that other Hon. Members would like to contribute to the debate, but again I ask for speedy passage of the Bill.

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take a great deal of my time to respond to the Minister's opening remarks except to say that I am somewhat surprised that his comments were directed to some of my colleagues and farmer friends in the Province of Alberta. There is certainly no question that farmers who carry on business in Alberta are obviously Canadian farmers, and if there were any doubt in anyone's mind, I simply draw attention to the overwhelming manner in which they voted in the recent provincial election. We find that the Premier was able to gather some 75 out of 79 seats and the WCC was completely wiped out of the Legislature.

He also made a reference to the worthiness of the agribond concept. I was certainly encouraged to hear the Minister respond favourably with respect to it because I really think it is the only way to go, the only route which would provide sufficient financing at the lowest possible cost to Government. Losses to the Consolidated Revenue Fund would be minimized and it would supply sufficient funds to assist the farmers who find themselves in severe financial difficulties.

There has been some debate as to who should claim credit for the agribond concept. I am sure the Minister has tried to lay claim to it, as did my colleague earlier today. As I understand the situation from my reading of history, that concept was born out of a farm meeting held by a group of farmers in the Province of Saskatchewan and was brought to our caucus by the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton). Rather than the Minister or myself taking credit for it, I think we should give credit where it is due. As with most good agricultural programs, this one had its origin at the grass roots level.

I welcome this opportunity to comment on Bill C-134, Mr. Speaker. As Members of the Government will understand, it is not traditional for critics to be overly complimentary but I want to indicate that I am somewhat encouraged by the priority given this Bill by the Government House Leader. Of the three agricultural Bills among the 18 or 19 on the Government's list, the choice of Bill C-134 for debate today is quite proper and a step in the right direction.

While the concept is a good one because it recognizes the problem, the amount of money made available to tackle a problem of this magnitude falls far short of what is needed to do the job properly. The Government knows that when legislation that will assist the agricultural community is introduced, it can expect to receive our co-operation and support. There are many examples of our co-operation on legislation of this type.

Having made those comments honestly and sincerely, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to leave the impression that this rather limited measure will do a great deal to resolve these problems that have plagued the economics of the agricultural industry, particularly during the last 24 months. Throughout this debate, my colleagues and I will demonstrate, by fact and example, that the agricultural industry in Canada is experiencing the worst economic crisis in four decades. Indeed, some knowledgeable people will recognize that the current dilemma in the agricultural industry is probably the worst since Confederation.

Last fall I was invited by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture to serve as a member of a small task force organized to deal with this emergency in agriculture. I accepted the invitation for a number of reasons. I was aware of, and concerned about, the serious financial conditions that were beginning to develop in the industry in the early part of 1981. Last fall, the most seriously affected people were young farmers with sizeable debt loans and those in the red meat industry. Some improvement had taken place in the red meat industry by this fall, but unfortunately it could be short-lived. Certain actions taken by the U.S. Government will exert a downward pressure on beef prices. The increasing number of hogs being produce in Canada means that there will be a greater number on the market within six or eight months, and that will have a depressing effect.

This year, the financial crisis has spread to the cash crop farmers. Three factors have combined to create this impossible situation. First, high interest rates; second, increased input costs; and third, declining market prices. If one examines the history of agriculture it will be seen that one of these factors can usually be found at any time, but when all these factors are combined for an extended period of time, it creates an impossible situation.

It will be recognized that interest rates have declined but, given the traditional and historic profit margins associated with the primary sector of the agricultural industry and our current economic conditions, they remain too high. There has been a dramatic increase in the amount of total Canadian farm debt. In 1960 it was $1.6 billion; ten years later, in 1970, it had increased to $4.2 billion; 9 years later, in 1979, it had increased to $13 billion; in 1981 it was $16 billion; and this year it could go as high as $18 to 20 billion.

Servicing this debt at an interest rate of 8 or 10 per cent, with improved market conditions, could be possible; however, the cost of servicing the debt at today's interest rates is impossible for a large number of Canadian farmers to meet. In 1981, farmers paid out $2.2 billion in interest payments alone. This is almost $600 million more than was paid in 1980. Farm input costs have risen to the extent that net farm income will decline this year by at least 17 per cent and a further decline is projected for 1983.

Statistics Canada estimates that the 25 per cent increase in energy costs will be the major factor in the decline of net farm income. We have to recognize that energy is vital to Canadian food production, Mr. Speaker. In Ontario, about one-third of the total cost of operation of a cash crop farm is taken up by energy. In the greenhouse industry, energy takes about 22 per cent; in the dairy industry it accounts for about 14 per cent, and in the production of beef it accounts for about 7 per cent of the cost.

Some examples of declining market prices include the price of corn. I am sure the Minister is aware that this year corn has been a reasonable crop, selling at about $2.50 per bushel. One has to apply drying charges, of course, which are extremely high. The cost of producing a bushel of corn is not $2.50 nor $3.50, but is closer to $5.50. Large crops of soybeans are produced in Essex County in the Minister's riding, so he should know that soybeans are selling for something in the neighborhood of $6 per bushel when the cost is closer to $8 or $10 per bushel. Other examples could be cited for Ontario grains and for grains grown in western Canada.

The Government has never really given the agriculture industry much priority. We have seen a number of legislative updates but we have not seen any real measures directed to the agrifood industry in the last 10 or 15 years. Regardless of this Government's indifference, the agrifood industry is the most basic and vital industry in this country. It is an industry on which all life and all sectors depend. Canadians, and indeed civilization throughout the world, can do without just about everything except one thing, and that is food.

Some of my urban friends may wonder why we are taking the time we are today to debate agricultural legislation. Some of our urban friends might ask what is their place and their involvement in the agricultural industry. The very simple answer is that if you eat, you are involved in agriculture.

In Canada there are about 300,000 farmers. That number continues to diminish. Those 300,000 farmers provide direct employment for nearly 500,000 people. That is a tremendous number of jobs. There are about 1.5 million Canadians out of work, so it represents a significant contribution toward employment opportunities and job creation which is not being fully utilized. There are approximately 4,000 food and beverage establishments in Canada and they employ over 200,000. That is more jobs. In fact, this sector is the country's largest single employer. Quite often we think of the automobile industry as the largest sector in our economy as far as job creation is concerned. That obviously is not the case.

It is recognized that the agrifood industry constitutes about 40 per cent of Canada's economy and employs about 25 per cent of all Canadians. In 1980 we exported $8 billion worth of food products and imported about $5 billion. This gave Canada a trade surplus of about $3 billion. However, approximately $3.5 billion of the $5 billion worth of imported food could have been replaced by Canadian-grown produce. Consequently, the lack of any real import replacement program has resulted in a loss of economic activity to Canada and a loss of jobs in Canada during a time when we need them most.

The cost squeeze has decreased farm incomes. This in turn has substantially reduced the farmer's buying power. This has forced farmers to reduce their purchases, increase their borrowing, sell off their assets and has caused a bankruptcy rate of 65 per cent, comparing September of this year over September of last year. Many have been forced out of business. Others have simply left their businesses. In fact, in the first nine months of 1982 there were some 316 bankruptcies.

If the present rate continues, this year bankruptcies in the agricultural industry could well reach 500. This sharp decline in net farm income is having a drastic effect on business activities in the downtown areas in every city, town and village across this country. Just talk to the downtown merchants, the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, for verification of this loss of business, Mr. Speaker.

This decline is taking its toll as well in the farm supply sector. Sharp declines are expected in fertilizer and chemical sales and in the supply sector of the industry in 1983. Farm tractor sales are down some 35 per cent; combine sales are down 56 per cent. Dealers are filing bankruptcies and our major farm machinery manufacturers are fighting for survival. Why? Because net farm income is dropping. Profit margins are diminishing. Interest rates remain too high. Market prices for a number of commodities are below the cost of production. Consequently, farmers are not buying machinery because they simply cannot afford to buy. The ripple effect is lost income, lost business activities and lost economic opportunities for thousands of Canadians.

I said earlier that this Bill goes in the right direction. However, in view of the magnitude of the problem, it will simply not do the job. What we need is, first, a moratorium of short duration on farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and powers of sale. The Minister recognizes this to be a problem; a number of his colleagues do as well. They have spoken in support of this moratorium. However, nothing has been delivered.

We need a greater infusion of capital into the Farm Credit Corporation. I have not said exactly how much money would be required. I know it is more difficult to secure funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund at a time when you have a $23.6 billion deficit. It is much more difficult than if you had a $10 billion deficit, there is no question about that. The CFA has indicated on a number of occasions that it would require at least $1 billion.

We need an interest rate subsidy greater than what we have provided in Bill C-134, applied on a selective basis for the consolidation of debt. As I look at this Bill, my calculation indicates that there are $216 million in the program, $116 million of which is a reshuffle. If you apply that under the normal lending formula of the 4 per cent interest rate, if the funds are fully lent and the 4 per cent rate is applied, the interest rate subsidy would be about $16 million. We are suggesting a more adequate amount would be in the neighbourhood of $300 million.

How do we reach that figure? It is fairly straightforward. We have approximately $17.6 billion or $18 billion in total farm debt. It is estimated that about one-third of that would be at unmanageable interest rates. When it requires $50 million to lower the interest rate by five percentage points on a billion dollars worht of debt, the final calculation indicates it would require about $300 million to provide adequate funds to reduce that interest rate by five percentages points on that $6 billion.

I talked earlier about the agribond concept. I am encouraged to the extent that the Minister is still talking favourably about it. However, if he takes his direction from the blue chip committee or the Lortie Commission, they brought down a ruling recommending against a policy of this kind. The Minister should remind his colleague the Minister of Finance that the membership of the Lortie Commission does not include one farmer.

We need rationalization and stabilization. As the Minister indicated, the provincial Ministers are meeting at this very moment in Regina. If the Minister could deliver on that promise and deliver those dollars in 1978, I do not know why he cannot do the same thing today. He will have to answer to the provincial Ministers. I am certain they will be here in Ottawa within two or three weeks.

The Minister should look carefully at the recommendations of the task force to which I referred earlier and at the recommendations which were put forth by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. When the report of the meeting of the provincial Ministers meeting in Regina is made, I am sure he will see some similarity between the decision they reach today and the income market insurance program put forward by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture.

Changes are required in the area of capital gains. I challenge the Minister simply to match the provisions contained in the Crosbie budget in 1979. We want to restore the income-averaging provision and the capital gains reserve. Both of these provisions were removed in the November budget, which was probably the worst budget for industry and the most damaging budget ever to Canadian agriculture.

The other area the Minister should be looking at is an energy tax credit or rebate. Forty per cent of the cost of farm fuels, as the Minister will realize, is in direct federal taxation, and that tax represents about 40 cents a gallon on diesel fuel, and some 60 cents a gallon on gasoline. The CFA have had an opportunity to look at this Bill and their bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that they have determined the money provided in the Bill is totally and wholly inadequate. They estimate about 10 per cent, or some 20,000 farmers, desperately need the assistance of this rebate. The CFA indicate that only some 500 farmers will actually be assisted under this program.

• (1550)

The CFA have also indicated that we should remind the Minister, particularly the Minister of Finance, that although the small business bond provision has been extended, the banks are using this provision in the same way as they have been using the Farm Improvement Loans Act over a number of years. Although they have the legal authority to lend money under this program and under the small business bond, very few banks are participating to any great extent. It is interesting, as well, Mr. Speaker, to look at some of the comments and further recommendations made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Quoting from some correspondence that I have had from the Federation of Agriculture:

> The Government must give authority, and quickly, to the FCC to borrow short-term—three to five years—by the issue of financial instruments, on which interest is tax free, for farmers requiring money at lower interest rates not only for debt consolidation but for essential investment and working capital.
> Such lending, though necessarily selective, could be much more generously available than the present subsidized FCC lending, because the interest paid by the producer could not be expensed. This makes it a self-policing policy since borrowing on this basis would not be attractive to farmers whose operations indeed were, or could become, profitable.
> This policy can be put into place quickly and effectively under present legislation, as we understand it. It is one that comes with a price tag to Government in forgoing some tax revenues, of course, but it is a small price to pay for sustaining the productivity and the family farm structure of an industry of such fundamental long and short-term importance to the Canadian economy.

I acknowledged earlier that interest rates have fallen. I acknowledged as well that this legislation is going in the right direction. But the fall in interest rates is not sufficient and, for many, that reduction in interest rates comes too late. Those who will benefit by this Bill will be far too few. This Government must decide whether they want a strong, viable agricultural industry or whether they want to continue on the road to disaster, a road of loss of productivity, lost employment opportunities, lost economic activities, becoming more dependent on potentially unreliable, more expensive, poorer quality, food imports.

We believe Canada should be striving for the former, but time is running out. The primary sector of the agrifood industry must receive, and receive now, a more positive, meaningful response from this Government. I am certain that the agricultural industry is not asking for the impossible, because if this Government has money for Dome, Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, and money to purchase B.P. which obviously is a liability on the treasury of Canada, then we say that it should get its priorities in order and should assist the agricultural industry.

Canadian farmers need action from this Government now and they need it in a form of a temporary, short-term moratorium, increased FCC funding, Agribonds, updating of stabilization. They need capital gains changes, and an energy tax rebate. The results of such measures can and will remove this crisis. These measures will turn this current economic crisis into an opportunity. Canadian farmers have the resources, capacity, desire and the determination to meet this challenge. Action now will ensure the preservation of a strong and prosperous agriculture industry.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that when this Government, or any Government, has the agrifood industry back on the road to recovery, then they will also have this nation back on the road to recovery.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on a Bill which will reduce the interest on farm credit loans by 4 per cent for a period of two years. I think this is a necessary short-term move. I am not so certain that it is an adequate response to the need. However, it is an indication of an attempt to address the problem.

The problem is one that I would like to dwell on for just a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, because I think that if we do not go back and look at how we got into this credit difficulty, we cannot properly address the real reasons for bankruptcies, why people are behind in their payments, and why people are selling out because they can no longer survive in agriculture.

I submit that Canadian agriculture, probably since the Second World War but certainly in the last decade and a half, has been under some very severe strains and pressures. These are different strains and pressures from those of the post-war years when the objective was simply to become more efficient and a great many people opted out of agriculture. To some extent they were pulled out of agriculture because there were jobs in the industrial urban centres that were growing rapidly. But in the last 15 years or so we have seen some moves, partly by Government, both federal and provincial, and partly as a response to those policy moves by Government, which have brought a rapid escalation of agricultural production.

I think that in looking back at our agricultural history we tend to see moves that create a situation where types of farming are made obsolete by deliberate policy moves. To some extent that started off with a clutch of policy changes which included the Farm Credit Corporation being deliberately pulled out of the long-term interest rate and medium-term interest farm loan field.

Farm Credit Corporation had been supplying most of the long-term needs of the farm community, and a good portion of the short-term and intermediate financial requirements of farm communities up until the late 60s. Land prices were relatively stable, production capabilities were pretty well regionalized, people knew where they were on the farm front.

The late sixties and early seventies brought some terrific changes, Mr. Speaker. The federal Government began to ease back on the amount of lending by the Farm Credit Corporation. It proposed to allow the banks into the farm credit field. Along with that there was a drastic change in the federal grain policy. Prior to that most feed grains had been marketed across the country, outside of the Prairies, under the auspices of the Canadian Wheat Board. Therefore, prices were relatively stable and the competitive capability of the different regions was kept more or less equal. But the combination of going to the so-called open market and allowing the large grain merchants and feed mills back into the grain market on an across the country basis, along with allowing the banks into the farm credit field, created a climate which may have looked good to the economists behind the Government front benches because it created the illusion of growth in agriculture, but was in fact a switch in production from some regions of the country to others, financed largely with borrowed money.

• (1600)

As well, provincial Governments got into the act by providing subsidies to encourage those shifts. Sometimes it was straight subsidy, at other times it was subsidized credit. In short, by the end of the 1970s there was a quite visible move of much of the hog production out of the Prairie region into Ontario and the Maritimes to some extent, but largely into Quebec. These two or three policy shifts also encouraged a move to feeding cattle outside of the Prairie region where most of the livestock originates.

There were, Mr. Speaker, some very important economic side effects resulting from these shifts. Luckily there was a sudden surge in demand for grains in that period of time which happened to coincide with the increase in oil prices in about 1973 or 1974. That surge in grain prices and agricultural commodities generally tended to carry the farm community through the last decade. As the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) outlined quite well, they were able to do it while watching farm prices decline, costs increase and farm debt increase at a dramatic pace. That has been outlined today. In 1970 accumulated farm debt was $4.2 billion; in 1979 it was up to $13 billion; in 1981 it was $16 billion.

This has put great pressure on financing in this country. Interest rates rose because other sectors of the economy were doing the same thing, growing at a rapid pace, making large demands on the finances of this country and thereby bidding up interest rates. Consequently, by the end of the decade and into the 1980s, we see that the highest farm expense is interest costs. At the beginning of the 1970s the cost of money was about number eight or number ten in priority, and then suddenly it shot to the fore. Following that is the cost of energy, which had not been a tremendously big farm cost. So farmers were very much in a squeeze situation. Long-term credit at fixed rates was becoming less and less available. The Farm Credit Corporation was supplying a smaller and smaller amount of the requirements for farm credit.

Finally, we got into the 1980s when the new, large and intensified livestock production units were beginning to flounder. There was overbuilding, or alleged overbuilding. The units which has been the traditional sources of supply in other parts of the country had been declared obsolete and had shut down. We had, in effect, an overbuilding of the agricultural industry and we were and are carrying costs which farmers have no way of avoiding.

Banks have been willing and able to supply credit needs up until recently because along with this decade of growth came high inflation in the value of farm land. So every time a banker went to review an individual farmer's account he could usually conclude that, because of the rapid increase in real estate values, the assets still exceeded the liabilities of the individual farmer. But in the last three or four years that picture has changed for a great many operators. Liabilities began to exceed assets.

As the banks foreclosed on some of those operations it created a new situation where the price of farm land is no longer escalating 12 per cent, 15 per cent, or 18 per cent a year. We are now in a situation where there have been foreclosures and bankruptcies and offers to sell on the part of farmers who think they can no longer survive in the industry, and therefore land prices are falling in many corners of the country and are not rising. That is setting the whole industry on a path which could lead to disaster. The banks, because of their past practices, now have to be a little more careful about forcing some operators into bankruptcy. They are now beginning to realize—if they do not, they should—that the more bankruptcies they cause, the lower will go the price of real estate. The more loans they will have to call because more and more accounts will find themselves in the position of having greater liabilities than assets, since the banks are putting pressure on the real estate market and pushing down the value of those assets.

So what we have before us here is a very feeble attempt to deal with this very grave problem, a problem which I do not think the Minister fully realizes he is faced with. In fact, he even seems to be prepared to create another kind of massive adjustment of agriculture resources by his apparent support for abolishing the Crow rate, which will, in effect, reverse some of the changes we went through in the last decade. This will increase the already high bankruptcy rate in Quebec, the Maritimes and Ontario, just so that a few highly intensive feeding operations in western Canada may get an advantage. I do not think the industry will appreciate that kind of disruption yet again, and that is one of the reasons we have been asking that everybody involved in the process take a second look at it. It will have violent repercussions across the country and in all agricultural sectors of Canada.

The proposal before us is one which has been described as being able to handle a few hundred farmers who are on the line between bankruptcy and survival and to whom a 4 per cent reduction in interest rates for two years might make the difference between survival and collapse.

I think this is important because the bankruptcy rate has been growing by leaps and bounds. In 1979 there were 82 farm bankruptcies in Canada. In 1980 they had doubled to 164. They rose again in 1981 to 191, and so far in 1982—and we are only three-quarters of the way through the year—there have been 316 bankruptcies.

The outlook is not particularly good this year. At the beginning of the year Agriculture Canada predicted that net farm incomes would be down again, the second or third year in a row. Indeed, when we go back as far as 1974 we find that net farm incomes have varied only a little from about $3.5 billion. This year they will be below that figure. If we relate that to 1974 dollars, we can conclude that net farm incomes are less than half at the present time. This is the real reason there is a farm credit crunch. It stems from a disruption of the industry. Large investments have been made in some parts of the country and investments in other parts of the country had to be abandoned. Also it stems from an increase in the demand for funds which has caused interest rates to go sky high and has left farmers with virtually no options.

The Farm Credit Corporation has attempted to increase its finances by going to foreign markets. To date my information is that no funds have been raised in that manner. This coming winter we will probably see great demands for long-term, fixed interest rate loans through agencies such as the FCC. Basically it is the only agency available to farmers which offers long-term, fixed interest rate loans. Interest rates are now going down, but FCC rates are locked into a formula used by FCC which comes down very slowly. The formula was just revised at 15.75 per cent, but farmers can walk into their local credit union or bank and obtain money at lower interest rates because they are still reaping the benefits, if we can call them benefits, of the high interest rates which have gone before.

If the FCC succeeds in obtaining funds from foreign sources at much lower rates than 15.75 per cent, those sums could not be re-lent to farmers at less than that rate until the new formula comes out next spring. Farmers are locked into the situation. The response has been multitudinous. Some Provinces have responded by getting into the farm loan field in which most of them have been involved in some form or another. The demand has increased the intervention of provincial Governments through the offering of sometimes greatly subsidized farm loans to farmers.

If we are to have any stability in the Canadian agricultural community, it is imperative for the Farm Credit Corporation to be enlarged again to provide the long-term, fixed rate credit required by farmers in a volume which will service all requirements across the country. Failure to do so continues the instability in agriculture, instability created when one Province lends money at 5 per cent, another Province lends money at 8 per cent and the going rate on the market is 15 per cent. This creates a tendency for production to shift from regions of comparative advantage to other regions.

I would be remiss if I did not point out that there is a great need for money to finance intergenerational transfers. This is where a good chunk of farm credit funding goes at the present time. Some of it still goes to improving physical plant, but most of it is for transferring land and property from one generation to the next. This amount has been shrinking through FCC and, consequently, other methods have been proposed. The agribond proposal has been around for approximately five or six years. It was discussed in the House and in the Standing Committee on Agriculture several times since I have been here.

Some experiments with turning over land from one generation to another have been tried in various Provinces. There are land banks and land assembly systems in some Provinces which make it possible for the older generation to turn over land under very reasonable terms to the younger generation without their being placed under a debt load which they cannot handle and enabling them to produce under current market conditions.

Such programs should be reviewed and looked at objectively, but I think we should come to the conclusion that the FCC must be expanded if Canadian agriculture is to have an equal chance right across the country. If we are to have an agrifood policy which takes advantage of what is on the farms now and makes it possible for production units to produce in a market that provides some stability, farmers will increase production and help the country out of the current economic chaos. If stabilization programs are available on a federal basis, and if marketing systems are in place which provide some equity across the nation, then farmers will have some assurance that by producing they will be able to get back their costs of production plus decent standards of living for their families.

The proposal before us today is a very short-term one to help a few hundred farmers. I have no objection to that, but I should like to point out that there are thousands and thousands more who will need equal consideration. This proposal, while of assistance to a few hundred, is only a drop in the bucket in terms of meeting the total need.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) mentioned earlier, the federal Farm Financial Assistance Program was established in order to alleviate the distressing situation created by high interest rates and lower returns on farm products. Canadian farmers who are facing serious financial difficulties can obtain an interest rebate of four percentage points on their loans for two years, which reduces the effective interest cost to 11¾ per cent during the first two years of the loan. The Program has already saved several hundred farmers from bankruptcy, and will probably save several hundred more before it expires.

The Farm Credit Corporation has always done its utmost to help its clients through difficult periods. Its recovery plans, for instance, are among the most flexible known. FCC credit advisers encourage farmers to discuss their financial difficulties as soon as they become apparent, so that they can then reconsider repayment schedules and take appropriate action. In some cases, rescheduling of the loan may be necessary. In others, postponement of one or two payments may be sufficient. It is reassuring to note, however, that the FCC is sufficiently concerned about the problems facing its clients to take this kind of action, and that this agency, which represents the Government, has not forgotten the human factor in its business relations with Canadian farmers. In addition to its flexible recovery plans and the special loans being granted since June 1982 under the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program, the FCC offers its borrowers every opportunity to resolve their financial problems through its Advisory Services Program.

Generally speaking, all FCC loan applicants may benefit from preliminary counselling, including advice on how to organize and develop their farm operations. The service is available to any FCC borrower who asks for it. However, the service is compulsory in the case of borrowers under the special program, since it is one of the conditions of the loan. If we look at the components of this Program, it is easy to understand why the service is compulsory for borrowers who are in financial difficulty and are anxious to improve their situation. First of all, the goal of the Advisory Services Program is to help the farmer manage his farm finances more effectively. The credit adviser will therefore help the farmer to select the accounting system that is best adapted to his needs and help him get acquainted with the system. With his financial training and experience, the credit adviser is also in a position to help the farmer interpret and analyze the financial data provided by his accounting system. He can also provide a comparative analysis of financial factors and farm production in similar operations. Finally, if the farmer requires another adviser, the credit adviser can tell him where to obtain the information or the help he needs. Thus, this service is an adjunct to provincial educational programs.

As a result of the follow-up provided through the Advisory Services Program, the farmer has a better chance of successfully implementing his recovery plan. Thus, Mr. Speaker, the FCC is doing everything in its power to help borrowers through the difficult times we are experiencing today. By supporting Bill C-134, my hon. colleagues will enable the FCC to continue its good work. Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that Canadian agriculture is represented by a very large percentage of family farms, and I would like to quote a few figures here to underline the importance and growth of Canadian agriculture. According to the 1981 census, there were 366,000 farms in 1971 and there were only 318,000 in 1981. However, although the number of farms has dropped significantly, there has been, conversely, an increase in production.

Last week, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) made his speech in the House, he mentioned the high productivity of our farmers and was happy to see that this group had continued to progress and to provide the Canadian consumer with products at very reasonable cost. I cannot agree more with the words of the Minister of Finance, and here I would like to underline the importance of Canadian agriculture and its productivity.

I want to give a few statistics on the assets of our agricultural sector and thus illustrate the need for the measures being proposed in Bill C-134. I am sure that honourable members will realize that many farmers need financial assistance and some are facing more difficult conditions at a time when the economy is deteriorating in certain sectors, and also that it is absolutely necessary to help farmers cope with these temporary problems. Thus, in 1971, the average farm was worth $65,800; in 1981, average farm assets had risen to $409,300. On the basis of these figures, you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer's financial requirements are increasing steadily. Of course, the debt rate has also followed this trend. In 1971, the average farm debt was $12,600, and in 1981, it was $58,000. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer needs more support, because while in 1971, our agriculture was worth $4,500 billion, by 1981, this figure had increased to $18 billion, which represents an annual increase of 15.1 per cent. Also, farmers are playing a very important role in our economy, since we are exporting increasing amounts of farm products to world markets, which is an invaluable asset to our trade balance. Mr. Speaker, I do not think Bill C-134 needs further justification, and once again I hope that the bill will pass all stages in the House and that we will then be able to help farmers in financial difficulty by providing an interest rebate.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I am among those today who speak with reservation in favour of Bill C-134. This Bill does not receive my wholehearted endorsement. Like so many measures emanating from this beleaguered Government, it is a half measure. It is part of a half-baked and ill-conceived range of policies, in this particular instance dealing with agriculture financing, a subject that has been an issue in this country for as long as I can remember.

For many years I was a practising veterinarian in the beef cattle country of central British Columbia. In this, and in other capacities I have been in continual contact with cattle producers and have become very familiar with their problems.

A subject that is continually raised is financing; how to finance the purchase of property, livestock and equipment. Of course, the pros and cons of the Farm Credit Corporation are often discussed. The most common complaint that we hear in my part of the world is that a person is lucky if he can get a Farm Credit Corporation loan because usually the Corporation is out of money. In B.C., farmers and ranchers have pretty well given up looking to Ottawa for financial assistance. I do not expect that attitude to be changed very much as a result of this Bill, legislation that will affect perhaps only 500 farmers in Canada and maybe 25 or 30 in British Columbia. The agricultural community in my province looks mainly to the provincial Government for help when needed.

Mr. Whelan: We pay twice as much in B.C. to agriculture as they do. Where are they getting their help? They are getting it from us.

Mr. Greenaway: The Province of British Columbia has had an interest rebate plan in place for many years and has assisted a good many producers of agricultural commodities. Last year there were 5,700 applicants for this Program. The B.C. Government also provides guarantees for agricultural loans. If you ask any farmer or rancher what is needed most in Canadian agriculture today, I will wager that nine out of ten will say: "Just give us some long-term money at a reasonable, fixed rate of interest and then leave us alone." Of course, today this cry issues forth from all sectors of the economy, but I venture to say that farmers have been saying it for the longest time.

Further, the question of finance and credit is a vital issue to young people trying to take their rightful place in Canadian agriculture. The average age of Canadian farmers today is 49, and obviously young people must be encouraged to take the place of those who retire. It is almost impossible these days for them to do this unless they are fortunate enough to inherit a farm or ranch. Even if this does happen, there is no guarantee that the operation will remain viable.

There is no doubt that there is a real need for reasonable credit, and there is no doubt that the Farm Credit Corporation requires a larger pool of capital. Presently there is a plan afoot to raise $100 million in the United States by selling notes on U.S. exchanges. We are assured that U.S. insurance companies, both fire and general, and pension fund agents will eagerly line up to purchase Canadian securities in the form of Farm Credit Corporation notes. It is my understanding that this offering will be forthcoming when brokers feel that conditions are stable and top prices can be obtained for the issue. Perhaps now that the United States mid-term elections are behind us, we will soon see these notes on U.S. markets. Naturally, foreign exchange and interest rates are vital considerations in this scheme. At present, Canada's dollar, at 82.5 cents U.S., will add a full 2 per cent to the 12 per cent cost of this money, 12 per cent being the approximate U.S. interest rate.

In order to protect itself from foreign exchange risk, the U.S. money raised and returned to Canada will have to be hedged. This will likely add a further cost of about 2 per cent, and allowing 1 per cent for Farm Credit Corporation administration, the money would finally reach the borrower at a cost of 17 per cent—not what I or anyone else would call cheap money. Is this, then, the purpose of Bill C-134, to reduce the interest rate and thus the flak that the Corporation and the Government would have to bear for procuring expensive foreign money?

As I understand it, the plan is to lend this money to Canadian farmers at a fixed rate of interest over a ten-year period. An obvious risk to the Farm Credit Corporation could occur in the event that loans are prepaid before full term, when the Corporation could be left with some pretty expensive money on its hands. Farmers have expressed concern over the Farm Credit Corporation venturing into foreign currency markets, worried that the plan might fail and make loans even more expensive. Many have rightfully asked, "Why not raise the needed funds at home in Canada?"

It seems to me that Canadians would be most interested in supporting Canadian agriculture through purchasing Canadian agricultural bonds. Our Party has long advocated the establishment of an agribond, as was mentioned earlier this afternoon by my colleague the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise).

For years and years this Government has neglected to address the serious problem of adequately financing Canadian agriculture. The Farm Credit Corporation over these years has been literally stangled by lack of sufficient capital to lend. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Government know full well how the lack of capital at a reasonable rate, especially for long-term credit, has throttled Canadian agriculture. Why has the Minister not made this problem his top priority instead of such things as threatening beef producers with his ridiculous and destructive plan for a beef marketing board? Why is he spending so much energy flogging the abomination called Canagrex? He and his colleagues might saddle Canada with Canagrex, but if they cannot properly finance our farmers, young and old, then it will not be very long until there is little, if anything, to export to other countries.

Over the years I have had many opportunities to discuss agricultural financing with American ranchers who have moved to Canada. I cannot remember one who was not completely dismayed by the evident lack of credit options available to Canadian farmers. Many told me of a very popular institution in the United States called Production Credit Associations. They could not understand why Canada did not provide a similar option. I am indebted to the Canadian Cattlemen's Association for providing me with information on Production Credit Associations.

The PCAs originated under the Federal Farm Loan Act of 1916 in the United States. In 1933, PCAs became retail outlets for credit available at wholesale from the federal intermediate credit banks. At first, their equity base was supplied by Government funding. Later, as the Government money was paid off, the equity base was supplied by Association members. Equity is in the form of class A and class B shares. All borrowers must be shareholders. When obtaining a loan the borrower has to invest 5 per cent to 10 per cent in class B stocks. No interest or dividends are paid on this class B stock. Once the loan is repaid, the borrower can allow his equity to remain in the PCA to provide a fund base for future loans. If the member does not borrow for two years his class B shares are converted to class A and a dividend is paid.

PCAs use their equity base to borrow from the federal intermediate credit banks of which there are 12 in the United States. They raise their funds through the sale of securities to investors in the nation's money markets. PCAs pay state and federal taxes. Their structure is basically that of a farmer-owned co-operative with a board of directors made up of active member borrowers. The administrative cost of loans is one-half of 1 per cent and interest on loans is usually 2 per cent to 4 per cent below commercial bank prime rates in the United States.

I have a brochure provided to me by the Production Credit Association and I would like to quote some of the significant points mentioned:

Are PCAs Providing Government Loans to Farmers?

No, all government funds originally in PCAs were completely paid back. The PCAs are now all farmer owned.

Who Operates Local Associations?

Only farmers who borrow money from PCA are permitted to become members and owners. Only these members have the power to elect members to serve on the board of directors.

What Prompted the Organization of PCA?

Necessity! Prior to its founding, farmers often found themselves without an adequate source of credit that was dependable. Also, the terms and conditions of the credit did not work to the best advantage of the farmer. PCA, by providing a reliable, permanent source of funds, has eliminated most of these credit problems for farmers and ranchers.

What Additional Advantages Does PCA Offer?

It is operated for farmers by farmers—who understand the needs and problems involved in farming as well as farm credit. In addition, through the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, PCA has ready access to funds from the nation's money markets.

More Specifically, For What Purposes Can Loans Be Made?

For feed, seed, fertilizer, labor, harvesting expenses, fencing and other improvements, chemical sprays, spraying equipment, farm and home supplies; money to buy livestock, poultry, machinery processing equipment, storage facilities—

In short, practically anything the farmer needs to produce food.

How Much Can Be Borrowed From PCA?

Practically any amount. Loans are based on the amount needed to do the job; how much can be used profitably; the amount of dependable income from the operation for which the loan is made.

How Much Time Does it Take to Get a Loan?

The time varies from a few minutes for established members to perhaps up to 1 week for a new member.

Who Passes on Loan Applications?

The member-elected board of directors names two of its members to serve with the association's manager on a loan committee. These two members and the manager review the applications.

Besides PCAs there are several other options available in the U.S., such as the federal land banks, local banks and the Bankers Acceptance Corporation, just to mention three. Original sources of credit similar to what I have just outlined are desperately required by Canadian agriculture. If Canadian farmers were ever presented with a brochure similar to the one I have just been quoting from, I am certain their first reaction would be one of the total disbelief. Fighting to get financed in Canadian agriculture has become a way of life.

• (1640)

Canada is light years behind in the financing of its agricultural sector. The Farm Credit Corporation does the best it can under the terms imposed upon it by Liberal politicians who continue to fail to come to grips with this very serious problem.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-134, which will provide a measure of relief to Farm Credit Corporation borrowers at a time when interest rates in that Corporation are higher than the return most commodities sold by farmers will justify. I was also pleased to note today that the Bank of Canada rate fell again by approximately a quarter of 1 per cent. This is the twelfth consecutive week that there has been a drop in interest rates. I am pleased with the legislation before us today because it will assist those farmers who have taken out loans in the last few months, and will be requiring funds in the next few months to continue their operations and follow the plans which they have set out.

While the Hon. Member opposite was mentioning some of the things happening in the United States, I think it only fair that we should point out that approximately 50 per cent of loans under the main loan program in the United States are in default. Compare that with Canada, where the rate of default is approximately 10 per cent of loans to farmers.

To break that down a bit further, arrears in the cash crop sector, including grain farmers, amount to slightly over 13 per cent. In the fluid milk sector, 6.16 per cent of the producers are in arrears. In the industrial milk or cream sector, arrears amount to 8.4 per cent. Arrears amount to 15 per cent in the beef sector, to 19.8 per cent in the hog sector, to 8.9 per cent in the poultry sector, and so on down the line. However, it is interesting to note that the average interest rate charged to those in deepest trouble is approximately 9 per cent, which would indicate that they have been in production for a long time or they would not be paying that rate of interest.

No doubt the fluctuations in interest rates among countries in the western world had an adverse effect upon their cash flow projections and created part of the hardship. However, rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation have indeed been very reasonable until the last year and a half. I want to pay tribute to this organization for having done a thorough job of administration and of advising farmers how to chart the proper course, and plan their operations.

I could not help but comment on an article in The Globe and Mail of August 26, 1982, which reported that Mr. Gracie of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association had indicated that mark-ups on beef are much lower in the United States than they are in Canada, a mark-up of 45 cents a pound above what United States stores get. This in turn has no doubt created much hardship to the beef industry in Canada. This is one area the Cattlemen's Association should be investigating to ensure that there are not abnormal mark-ups by the beef industry.

I would also like to point to the stabilization programs. I am a beef producer, a cow-calf producer, and previously belonged to a stabilization program.

Mr. Mayer: It is a lower mark-up?

Mr. Ferguson: As a matter of fact there is a lower retail mark-up in the United States than in Canada. I hear comments from the other side so I will reiterate that Mr. Gracie, as reported in a story in The Globe and Mail on August 26, 1982, indicated that Ontario and Quebec supermarkets are taking a beef mark-up, as much as 45 cents a pound above what United States stores get. The beef industry in Canada could certainly do well with some of that mark-up.

However, returning to the stabilization program, I belonged to such a program in the cow-calf industry a number of years back. I paid into it for four years of a five-year program. I received a payback for three years and paid my premium on the fourth year because I considered it as insurance against the lean years which would come in the future. When I subsequently went to pay in the fifth year, I was advised that the program was being discontinued because the balance of the farmers had not sent in their premiums for the fourth year when they realized there would not be a payout. I was one among the less than 10 per cent who paid in that fourth year.

Mr. Gurbin: It must be a national program.

Mr. Ferguson: If we are to have a stabilization program of any kind, I want to ensure that it is mandatory as far as contributions from farmers and the provincial and federal Governments are concerned. If it ever develops, it must be mandatory. It must be administered by a central body to ensure that all Provinces are paying in at the same level so that we do not have add-ons in the various Provinces, such as we had a year ago last May in the pork industry, when some provinces were paying over $11 a hog while others were paying only $3.50. These things must be taken into consideration and be worked out in detail so that there is a total harmonization across Canada, as suggested by the Minister in 1977.

I believe that under current conditions in Canada there must be some better mechanism for price discovery than we have had over the past few years. At the time I planted my crops last spring, I could not help but consider what was happening in the Chicago futures market. In spite of the fact that there was a crisis in the Falkland Islands, a consequent embargo against Argentina, and the plantings in two of the major American producing states were late because of a cold, wet spring, the projected carry-over in the oilseed sector was approximately half of what was expected, yet that market was in a downward trend because, as was explained by some of the experts, people were exercising their investment options. That was not done because of the law of supply and demand but because they were exercising their option to invest in gold, high interest bonds or other areas.

• (1650)

It is very difficult for farmers to project a cash flow with accuracy when this type of thing takes place. They cannot use the futures market because supply and demand no longer applies. Last spring the futures market was on a downward trend and yet all signals pointed the other way. There must be a better system for providing stability for farmers than the Government assistance provided in the Bill before us today or the interest-free loans of approximately $500 million that will be given to farmers this year for crops in storage. I am distressed that not all commodity sectors have chosen this route, Mr. Speaker, because the assistance is needed this season. Ontario is the largest corn producing Province in the country, yet it has no organization which could administer the program. I believe there are such organizations in Manitoba and one in Quebec.

I hear a comment from an Hon. Member opposite to the effect that we have a solution for all the problems, Mr. Speaker. I have 30 years' experience in the farming sector and I have taken a few hard knocks. I know the sectors of my operation that are paying their way and the ones that are not. My beef herd is acting as scavengers on scrub land in order to pasture hillsides that cannot be cropped in other ways.

I would remind Hon. Members that the figures compiled from Farm Credit Corporation statistics show that the largest percentage of loans in arrears in relation to various commodities are not for those commodities for which there is a system of planned production and which can set their own prices, based on a reasonable cost of production. This is a subject we must examine very closely if we hope to be able to provide the stability that is required by young people in the industry.

In the last ten years a tremendous number of young people in the industry have been affected. Perhaps they have over extended in some areas. I have always maintained that a farmer cannot borrow his way out of trouble, but rather, must adjust to the price structure. We must ensure that market mechanisms are in place that will provide a standard of living for farmers commensurate with that of the rest of society.

In spite of the fact that there has been a large number of bankruptcies in the farming sector in the last year, slightly over 300, the percentage has not been as great as that in other areas sectors of the economy. Many commodities have their own marketing systems and in that way can plan the production necessary to satisfy the domestic and export markets.

I believe this Bill is needed at the present time, Mr. Speaker, in order to assist farmers who have had to borrow money during the last summer and who will be borrowing in the months ahead, until the rates change at the end of the fiscal year. The Bill ensures that they will know what their interest charges will be and so will be able to project their costs. We need to go further in planning the financing of our farm organizations, Mr. Speaker, so that the farmer will be confident that he will not be forced off his land because of a temporary cash shortage.

I speak on this aspect as a private Member but I intend to raise the matter with the Ministers involved. I believe that some simple amendments could be made that would assist the cash crop farmer or the beef farmer through a tough winter, until the prices pick up. We cannot afford to let them go out of business. Any turnaround in our economy will be based on the natural resource industries meeting the requirements of the Third World.

I am delighted to report that in the last month I have been contacted by people from offshore who want to buy our commodities. They have asked when the legislation before the House will be in place, because they want to be sure of a steady and stable source of supply.

I should like to conclude by commending the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) not only for including this provision in the budget, but also on the twelfth consecutive week of declining interest rates. As a farmer, I have to be optimistic. Farmers must be optimistic if they are to plan their crops. We hope that Mother Nature will bless us with the bountiful supply of food that we have always had in Canada and that we will continue to have the ability to help provide for a hungry world.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is an important Bill, not only because it deals with agriculture but also the most important problem facing Canadian agriculture today, and that is interest rates. That is what determines whether a farmer will survive this year and be around next year.

Before I call it five o'clock, I should like to comment on some of the points covered by the previous speaker. It is unfortunate but true that the Canadian retailing system takes a larger mark-up on beef that does the American retailing system. I hope the Hon. Member will make a recommendation to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to bring in anti-combine legislation. The Government has been fooling around with that kind of legislation for the last 10 or 12 years but as yet we do not have it on the books.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a poi.it of order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order please. Pursuant to Standing Order 40, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright)—The Economy—Government policy on private sector; the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Grain—(a) Levels of advance payments. (b) Possible benefits to western communities; the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz)—International Joint Commission—Delay in appointing Canadian commissioner.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members's business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

All items preceding No. 87 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

CARGILL GRAIN LIMITED—APPLICATION FOR DREE GRANT

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Korchinski:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence and communications, including telephone submissions, regarding the application by Cargill Grain Limited for a grant from DREE towards construction of an Oil Seed Crushing Plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, after a few weeks in our constituencies where we were able to determine the needs of our constituents, listen to them and discuss the economic future of our regions and our own ridings, I am glad to be back in the House with my colleagues to deal with the issues raised by various Members. First of all, we now have before us a motion introduced by a Member, and I believe it is one of the most important aspects of our democracy that, regardless of their political party, private Members can express their opinions by introducing bills and defend the views of their constituents, as the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) is now doing.

For my part, I have already spoken on the matter under consideration for about ten minutes. During our first discussion, I explained that it is extremely important, when a government, such as the Government of Canada, negotiates with a company, whether Cargill or any other, that these negotiations remain confidential. Because of the competition between the various companies in all economic sectors throughout the country, such companies cannot afford to make public their financial statements or economic situation simply because they are negotiating with the Canadian Government to obtain certain grants. It would not be normal for such information to be made public and for the competitors of these companies to learn about their financial situation. The important thing for the Canadian taxpayer is that his tax dollars be redistributed equitably among the various regions, that everything be done legally and that after the money is redistributed and the grant is promised, the people be informed of the reasons for the grant, namely to create so many jobs or to promote the economic development of such a sector or such an area. This is a far cry from divulging all the figures requested by the Hon. Member. To quote from motion No. 87, he asks that telephone costs, communications and the correspondence between the company and DREE be made public. In all my three years as assistant to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and my two years as executive assistant, Mr. Speaker, I have never known such information to be made public because, as I was saying, it is extremely important for the companies involved that if they have developed, for instance, specific working procedures or development plans for their company, these not be made public only because they had to provide them to the Government to establish the profitability of their business. That is why I have to remind the Hon. Member for Mackenzie that, while I find it extremely laudable on his part to defend the views of his constituents and to work for the welfare of his riding, the company involved in this matter took certain steps because it wanted to improve its facilities, but in the belief that the Canadian Government would keep in mind that its assets, its development program and its financial statement are its own business and that of its shareholders and not something that should be made available to the public tomorrow morning. I want to make myself clear, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I am repeating myself. If the Canadian Government gives even one penny to someone, it is normal that the Canadian people know where this penny went and why. That I admit. But I stronghy object to all information submitted by Canadian citizens or Canadian companies being made public simply because the latter are dealing with the government. I think that is going a bit too far. Besides, the purpose of the whole exercise is definitely not to open the books of those companies for public viewing, but rather to help them prosper so that people in general will be better off in the end. Such is the purpose of regional development legislation and, I would suggest, of current negotiations between the company and the Department. Some people may say that the Department expects too much but I for one am glad that it does so. Being aware of the very high number of grants awarded by the Department, and of the substantial amounts involved in certain cases, I would rather not see all those funds redistributed haphazardly to the various areas of the country. It is quite normal for the Department to insist on profitability and, in that respect, the rate of failure among companies which were given assistance by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is very low, even lower than the rate where banks are involved. This is important because that happens to be the taxpayers money. It pays the Government to help a company with public funds, provided that company is operational and creates jobs which will generate income for the state as well as for the people living close to the company plant.

Mr. Speaker, our regional economic development legislation has been extremely useful over the past 15 years because it has played a major role, particularly in a riding such as mine, in the development of various industries, whether small, medium or large. The presence of the Department has been quite evident, particularly in areas where economic development was lagging. In these trying times, a number of companies which had been given assistance by DREE are now the only economic mainstay of certain regions now experiencing very serious difficulties.

That is why I urge the Hon. Member for Mackenzie to keep in mind the spirit and the principle of that legislation which was designed to help certain companies in certain regions, not everywhere, because those regions do need an economic stimulus. Even so, those companies must indeed be assured that their operations and their economic standing will not be the object of public scrutiny.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make on this subject, Mr. Speaker. I hope they will enlighten my colleagues, at least so they will know what DREE is all about and why discretion is the order of the day. Personally, I hope the Department will keep up the good work.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a few moments discussing this motion to make public papers regarding a DREE grant, or lack of a DREE grant, to the Cargill Grain Company to build an oil seed crushing plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

What seems to be have been involved was an application by the Cargill Company for a $2 million DREE grant for a plant to be built costing in the neighbourhood of $25 million. Apparently the grant was not forthcoming and therefore the plant was not built.

I would like to spend some time discussing the circumstances behind the rapeseed industry. First, I want to comment on the freedom of information argument made by the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) in the debate last May. He suggested this was a clear-cut case for a freedom of information Bill and that such a Bill would be useful in the circumstance. There are some laudable uses for a freedom of information Bill.

I am certain that regardless of what Government implemented a Freedom of Information Act or provided the House with such a Bill, a certain amount of information would still not be made public for a number of reasons. I can see that agencies of Governments engaging in business in competition with other corporations around the world would be very loth to produce all information of how they arrived at a certain price, or how they achieved a certain business agreement. I think specifically of the Canadian Wheat Board. A great many Prairie farmers would be hurt badly if the Canadian Wheat Board was forced to provide all relevant information regarding business dealings because their competitors are not forced, in any jurisdiction around the world, to make that same kind of information public.

• (1710)

I doubt any Government or Party would be absolutely free and forthcoming with information. For example, I simply point to the Official Opposition, whose Party has been loudly in the forefront asking for freedom of information legislation and has been a champion of this legislation for some years. This is the same Party that refuses to make its platform public. They say this will happen when the time for an election comes. Until then it is top secret information. I can understand that, and so can a lot of businesses and Government agencies, but the Progressive Conservative Party has imposed definite limits to its freedom of information when it comes to its political plans, even though it is the kind of information that most voters in Canada would be interested in since it is part of the full and efficient functioning of any democracy.

On the question of rapeseed crushing plants in the Melfort area, the question of building more crushing capacity several years ago seemed to be a fairly good business decision. In retrospect, we can see and understand why Cargill did not proceed, since they were going to be putting up over 90 per cent of the capital, in any case. We can understand why they did not when we see what the industry is faced with. I know that Cargill has one of the best market divisions in the world. It is probably the largest grain handling and grain marketing and processing institution in the world at this time. In the intervening two or three years, we have seen that we do not need more crushing capacity, given current market conditions. There is a surplus of crushing capacity in western Canada now, given the price of oil. There are, I suppose, two and a half plants in Saskatchewan, at Nipawin, at Saskatoon and one at Lloydminster balanced on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border.

We are now in a position in that part of the country where most of the crushers are crying that they have not been generating great profits. There were some profitable years, but those have gone. In fact, crushers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan are now crying foul because of a move by the Province of Alberta which has offered the industry $40 per tonne of rapeseed crushed, up to 90 per cent of last year's crushing volume, in order to keep the industry in Alberta growing and in an effort to concentrate more of the industry in that Province. As well there are subsidies in Alberta, tank car leases, which have increased from the old subsidy rate of 70 per cent of cost to what will now become 90 per cent of cost in the coming year.

So we begin to see some of the problems that have developed in the rapeseed crushing industry since this application first began. The production of rapeseed has not been increasing and there are a number of reasons for that; one is world conditions. The world oil seed output has been reduced, but prices are still under much pressure, again, in part, because of interference by various government. The European Economic Community is offering what to Canadian farmers seems like massive subsidies in order to export rapeseed to countries like Japan, which is our main buyer of raw seed.

Internally, our marketing system has been undergoing some turmoil. As many members in the House will know, rapeseed is marketed through the open market with the Winnipeg Grain Exchange selling and buying futures. A great many small and medium-sized operators in the market are handling the rapeseed and providing a brokerage function between the farmer and the final user.

There has been some change to the Cinderella crop in the last three or four years in the domestic market as well. It is not just the problem of selling the oil and doing the crushing, but there have been internal marketing problems as well. The market was being dominated by a growing number of small grain buyers, and producer confidence in those buyers has been severely shaken over the last three or four years by a number of dramatic and very well publicized bankruptcies, which have left farmers holding the bag for the costs. Farmers have lost on each of these bankruptcies anywhere from a few million to quite a few million dollars because of the method used in handling farmer rapeseed.

These companies are fairly numerous. Anyone who reads the grain news in western Canada knows about the Memco bankruptcy, the Econ Consulting bankruptcy and Diversified. Others that created a problem were Consolidated Seed Exports, and Gibb Farms Limited at Elm Creek also took down quite a few farm dollars with it when it went down, and Trans-Canada Marketing Service in Manitoba took with it a lot of farmers' money as well. There is some hesitancy, therefore, by farmers to produce rapeseed because of the uncertainty in the market and the kinds of operators that have been coming forward.

The disintegration and multiplicity of the market has created some problems for the buyers also. There are only a few large companies buying out of Japan. When they try to purchase it is sometimes difficult to assemble a full shipload. In order to do that, there are often fairly high premiums paid on carload lots of rapeseed waiting on track in Vancouver. Sometimes it is impossible for any one broker to provide buyers with the quantity of products which they need. For this reason there has been some continuing agitation on the part of farmers to have the whole question of marketing of rapeseed handled through the Canadian Wheat Board so that there is one agency amassing the grain and forwarding it, in order to deal adequately with the few large buyers of rapeseed and the Japanese Food Commission which, as I said before, is our biggest customer.

• (1720)

So the Cinderella crop has got to the point where, even though we had developed the crop with very sophisticated research, we were world leaders in genetic selection of rapeseed, world leaders in providing, manufacturing and developing the kind of equipment which would test the genetic potential of the varieties produced; and even though we were also at the leading edge of developing varieties which would provide very specific oil qualities required by the trade with very specific types of protein and amino-acids in the meal which went with the rapeseed, we have been having some difficulty finding markets. I think this is in part because, while the industry has done a good job of concentrating its research and production abilities, it has neglected the marketing end which I think is probably the area which needs full attention at this point in time.

I realize that in backing the introduction of one more crushing plant in western Canada, the Hon. Member for Mackenzie realizes what an advantage a crushing plant would be to the largest centre in his riding and is aware of the economic advantages which would spin off from that. But I think we must also recognize the over-all problems the industry is facing which have caused a major company like Cargill to avoid building a plant, given those economic conditions.

We have no objection to the papers being made public if there is anything to be made public. I think though, in retrospect, several years having passed since this application was begun, most of us can see the economic situation—that probably the marketing people in Cargill had foreseen, which was probably far more important to that company than the availability or not of less than 10 per cent of the total cost by way of a DREE grant. We would be prepared to see the papers produced, but I think we understand the economics behind the program not going forward.

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member is anxious to clarify a situation which seems ambiguous at first. However, the important thing at this stage is to find out exactly why the department decided, for the time being, to reject the application by Cargill Grain Limited to build a plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan. The motion by the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) is quite clear. The request made in the motion is simply, and I quote:

> That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence and communications, including telephone submissions, regarding the application by Cargill Grain Limited for a grant from DREE towards construction of an oil seed crushing plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

So what the motion is asking is that the documents be made public. Now, the Hon. Member ought to know that in this case, the free competition ethic of international and even national trade forbids production of documents when public funds have not been granted to the company in question. If the Hon. Member wishes to obtain specific information on Cargill Grain's plans in this area, its projected capital investment, its applications to the department and the answers given by the department to the company, he knows perfectly that his request should be addressed directly to the company, because at the present time, no public funds have been granted the company by the Canadian government.

The matter is now being discussed by officers of Cargill Grain Limited and departmental officials, but the department was very clear when requested that Cargill Grain Limited produce new facts if the company wanted to have its case reviewed. Now, in the present case, the minister responsible for DREE at the time, the Hon. Member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), wrote to the Hon. Member, giving him a very specific answer regarding the refusal of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, which was DREE at the time, and this letter, which is dated November 2, 1981, is very clear. It says very explicitly, and I quote:

> After an exhaustive review of the case, I feel confident that Cargill can, and will, proceed with the project without assistance from DREE. The company is financially strong and the project appears to be a wise one from the company's point of view.

That was written in this letter, which also said that in view of the fact that Cargill Grain Limited could afford to carry out its project without Government funds there seemed to be no reason to grant money to a corporation which can manage on its own. Besides Cargill Grain Ltd applied under the special regional development legislation which quite clearly states that the department may grant funds only to such corporations which really need financial assistance. So far,—and here opinions may differ—experts in this area have felt that Cargill Grain Limited can afford to build its own plant without help. On receiving an application, Department officials investigate thoroughly to make sure the need is genuine. In this case, the Hon. Member is aware that Departmental officials had several meetings with Cargill's representatives to find out what could be done under the current development legislation. The hon. member is also aware that the Minister must abide by the law just as any other Parlimentarian or citizen. Even if the Minister had wanted to grant the funds requested by Cargill he could not have on the basis of the financial statements, which show a satisfactory balance sheet and also on account of the fact that the available funds can only be used on a short-term basis. If the Minister had done otherwise, he would have acted illegally.

The documents and the reply enclosed in the letter which was given to the hon. members are quite clear. I suggest that this motion is much more dilatory than real. Perhaps the Hon.

Member should use a different procedure to bring it up or choose another course of action for instance, he could get from Cargill the documents he is seeking from the Department, because the Department is not authorized to reveal the financial interests of private corporations. And I think that any Member of this House would recognize the legitimacy of this principle. Cargill has never agreed to allow the Government to release its financial statements or the nature of its application or its financial requirements. Such a request has never been made by Cargill, and if the Hon. Member ever wanted to know more about this matter, the best way for him would be to prevail upon Cargill to make this information available to him.

• (1730)

When the Hon. Member met the authorities of the Department—I mean the Minister in charge and all the officials—on March 23 last, he made some comparisons with the Province of Quebec where Cargill could have received some grants for the building of a warehouse in Quebec City. The Minister once again replied to the Hon. Member specifying that the Cargill case in Quebec City was entirely different from the Cargill project in Melfort, Saskatchewan. He has a chance then to discuss these matters with the authorities of the Department. I think that the Minister's explanations with respect to the Regional Development Incentives Act were quite clear. This is what the Hon. Member should keep in mind and he should not think that the Department is denying grants at whim on the grounds that they would be unreasonable. However, the Department cannot provide a grant because the application does not meet the criteria set forth in the legislation. And this is the fact on which is based the Department's decision. We would be the first to be blamed if the Department were to start distributing funds to companies or corporations which definitely do not need them. And it would be a waste of public funds if we proceeded gropingly in the distribution of public funds to responsible companies showing quite healthy financial statements and which are in a position to carry out such a plan on their own.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order! Pursuant to Standing Order 48(2), the hour provided for the consideration of this motion has now expired.

[English]

The Chair would like to point out that the Standing Order also permits at this time a further five-minute participation in the debate by a Minister of the Crown and an additional five minutes by the mover of the motion, after which the Chair is bound to put the question.

Hon. Ed. Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to enter into the debate. Unfortunately I only have five minutes. I would have very much liked to inform Hon. Members of a number of items which the Government of Canada has done for the oil seed crushing industry, but because of the time limitation I will stick to the specific motion of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

I am somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member would request an order which would violate the basic business and trade ethics of providing information on a transaction with a company when public funds have not been granted. I want to make my position clear that it is not possible or proper to agree to the request of the Hon. Member for making confidential documents public. I am unaware of a time where information of a confidential commercial nature was disclosed to Parliament prior to the file either being processed or a positive decision being reached. I will elaborate on this further. However, I want to respond first to what I believe is the concern which precipitated the request of the Hon. Member, that of the Department's processing of the Cargill application for an RDIA grant.

The matter of the Cargill application has received considerable attention and analysis by officials within my Department. I am well aware of the extensive media coverage and the representations which have been made to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), former ministers of DREE, and their officials on behalf of the proposed Cargill project at Melfort.

With respect to the proposed project, I appreciate the importance of enhancing value-added processing in Saskatchewan and recognize that support of the agricultural processing industry in Saskatchewan would have a significant impact upon the provincial economy. It is appreciated that if the Cargill oil seed crushing plant were to proceed, there would be the potential for benefits in the long-term benefits to Canada, benefits to the Province of Saskatchewan, to agricultural producers and to the City of Melfort.

The Government's support and recognition of a strong, stable oil seed crushing industry in Canada is evidenced by the favourable ruling of the Federal Investment Review Agency which approved Cargill's proposal to establish an oil seed crushing facility in Melfort, Saskatchewan.

As was indicated to the Hon. Member on May 27, 1982, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Maltais), the original decision not to provide a DREE grant to Cargill was based on the judgment that Cargill was financially strong and the belief that the project would proceed without assistance from DREE. I believe it is worthwhile at this time to review the facts as outlined to the House on May 27. The Parliamentary Secretary quoted from a letter sent to the Hon. Member from the then minister of DREE, the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Again because I feel it is important, I should like to quote from that letter dated November 2, 1982. In part it read:

> After an exhaustive review of the case, I feel confident that Cargill can, and will, proceed with the project without assistance from DREE. The company is financially strong and the project appears to be a wise one from the company's point of view.

The letter went on to indicate that since Cargill Grain Limited had the financial resources to carry out its project without Government funding, it would perhaps be inappropriate on the part of the Government to provide funds to a company which already had the means to carry out its project independently.

The legislation regarding the Regional Development Incentives Act is clear. It authorizes the Department to grant funds to a company, provided it can demonstrate a real need. At the time the analysis of the application took place, the firm conclusion was that Cargill Grain Limited was capable of building its plant without a DREE grant and would do so. Thus the Minister, on the evidence submitted, was not authorized to grant funds to Cargill.

At stated in the House previously and repeatedly, the Department is prepared to consider another application from Cargill for the Melfort project at any time. A favourable response to any such application would of course require, in part, that Cargill present a convincing and reasonably attractive projection for the late 1980s and the 1990s for canola crushers as well as demonstrate its need for public assistance on the project. Let me repeat that those specific conditions as well as others are required under the RDIA legislation now, as in the past.

I have attempted in my comments here to provide information which is informative and at the same time respectful of the confidential nature of the transactions that have occurred between Cargill and the Government of Canada.

The provision of copies of correspondence, communications and other documents relating to Cargill's application for RDIA assistance would be contrary to acceptable procedures in Canada and in the international community because of the need to ensure commercial confidentiality. Publishing of this information would be seriously damaging to any future communication between the public and private sectors and is, accordingly, to be resisted. The Department is not allowed to make public statements on private financial interests, and I am sure Members of the House will agree that this is a sound and essential principle.

I wish to reiterate that to divulge such information could be detrimental to the company, to future RDIA applicants, and to all business and Government transactions based upon the trust in confidentiality. Therefore, I ask that my hon. colleague reconsider and withdraw his motion for these papers.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his intervention at this particular time. This now makes it official that the Government is not prepared to proceed with any type of assistance. The Minister told me that Cargill's position was so sound that it did not require any assistance. Would he explain why a warehouse in the Province of Quebec was given a grant by the Government? It was the same company, Cargill, witht he same financial statement. If it is satisfactory in Quebec but not in Melfort, it does not seem fair. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) told us that the marketing facilities of Cargill were some of the best in the world. The oil seed crushing industry is in dire straits at the moment, and Cargill has the marketing facilities. If it were given the grant, it could be moving forward and utilizing its facilities. Either we want industry or we do not want industry.

The Minister told me that it was not proper to provide information. At one time I indicated that I was not interested in the financial position of the company. I know what the capital costs will be. Cargill was quite prepared to put in $25 million. They only asked for $2 million in the form of a grant from the Government, a grant which was paid to CSP.

The oil seed crushing industry went to the Government of Alberta for assistance, and it obtained assistance. The oil seed crushing CSP in Saskatchewan went to that provincial Government for $12 million. It is the same taxpayers' money. If Cargill had received $2 million it would have established the plant. For the Minister to stand here trying to defend the position that he is not to divulge any information based on the fact that the decision was not made is incredible.

• (1740)

I am not interested in financial positions. I have already indicated that in response to an earlier inquiry. I want to know why the decision was made in the way it was made. I am quite convinced that it was for purely political reasons. First, with regard to FIRA, it made a very thorough study of the company. FIRA was quite satisfied that the company would be a good corporate entity in this country. FIRA felt the company would be an asset to this country. The company was examined. I do not know how many times I tried to call the office of the former Minister of DREE, but I could never get any response. The new Minister took over and he, in turn, promised me that he would look into the matter. There are over 1,300,000 people unemployed. What is wrong with the Government? It cannot find $2 million, yet it found $700 million for the Mirabel airport, that white elephant. The Government then poured in $400 million to find an airplane for it. Why can the Government not find $2 million for an industry right in the heartland of an oil seed producing area, one of the best in western Canada? I cannot understand what the reasoning is, other than pure politics.

I want to know who is behind this and who it is that influences this Government. Is it simply a pool Cottery? I have no argument. I have the CSP in my area. I am not arguing against their position. I am interested in providing facilities for my producers and at the same time an opportunity for employment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: My area deserves the same type of attention as does the area of the Minister from Windsor. He provided for a hotel or convention facilities costing $70 million, I understand.

Mr. Kempling: Liberal pork-barrelling again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Dree Grant

Mr. Korchinski: If the Government can find money for a convention centre—maybe the Liberal Party is going to hold a convention in Windsor at some time in the future—surely to goodness the Government could give the same kinds of incentives to other areas. Certainly I would not come to the Government at this time if Cargill Grain Limited said that it was in dire straits, I would not defend that kind of a position. But I wanted to get something started in an area which should have been given the same type of incentive as others. In Harrowby, Saskatchewan, CSP got a grant of $5.8 million from the provincial and the federal Governments between them. All that Cargill was asking for was $2 million. Is that too much? Why is it too much?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair will now put the question to the House.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Korchinski) negatived.

Madam Speaker: The hour provided for consideration of private Members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6.15 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

House sitting resumed at 8 o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO REDUCE INTEREST RATE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-134, respecting rebates of interest on farm loans under the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) had the floor.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the consideration of the Chief Government Whip. We are namesakes and we enjoy some camaraderie across the floor. I enjoy having him in the Chamber this evening. I hope he will enjoy what I am going to say about some of the things his Government has been doing. As I started to say before five o'clock, this is a very important piece of legislation we are dealing with, first of all because it deals with what I believe to be the most basic industry that Canada has, agriculture, and, second, because it deals with a part of the industry which I believe is fundamental to the agricultural industry maintaining its productivity, and that is the financial end of agriculture. Many years ago, you did not need to have all the financing and sophisticated tools which Canadian agriculture needs today to be productive, but what has happened over the years is that Canadian agriculture has become very capital-intensive. Now, according to figures I have seen recently, it takes more dollars invested in agriculture to create a job than invested in the manufacturing industry in this country. That, by way of explanation, is why the financial problems which Canadian agriculture faces, are so basic to the fundamental problems of the whole Canadian economy. Without a productive agriculture, we are going to find it very difficult to maintain the standard of living we are accustomed to. When we get to a situation where the consumer at large has to spend a larger percentage of his disposable dollars on food, there are less consumer dollars to be spent on other items. That is not a healthy situation to be in. It means that other manufacturing areas of the economy will suffer because there simply would not be as many dollars to be spent on commodities other than food.

• (2010)

The financial end of agriculture, then, becomes very important to the total economic picture, not only for domestic reasons, but also because of what agriculture does on the export market. Agriculture is a major earner of export dollars for the Canadian economy. We all hear a lot about the deficit which we have in our balance of payments. That simply means that we as a country buy or import more than we sell, but the one bright spot in that picture is agriculture. We enjoy a very high standard of living in Canada as a result of an efficient agricultural industry. Not only are we productive enough to do that at home, but we are also productive enough to export a lot of Canadian agricultural products that earn us foreign dollars. We export in the neighbourhood of $7 million to $8 million worth of agricultural products.

We all know that we cannot grow oranges or bananas in this country. It means, therefore, that we must import a lot of fresh fruit and vegetables that are out of season from the southern United States and other countries around the world. There is a big minus, then as far as the agricultural side of our balance of payments is concerned. So if we subtract that from all the things we export and sell to other countries, it still means we have a net surplus as far as agricultural products are concerned to the tune of $3 billion or $4 billion. The agricultural side of our economy is very important, therefore, in terms of having a healthy balance of payments. It is a healthier situation in which to find ourselves when we can sell things to earn foreign dollars rather than simply to raise interest rates in order to attract borrowed dollars into the country. That should be obvious to everyone, in the sense that if you sell things, you earn that money which you do not have to replay; whereas if you borrow money, not only do you have to repay it, but you have to pay interest on it until the debt is finally cleared.

Agriculture is very important to Canada as a trading nation, and we are very much of a trading nation. We have a small country in terms of population but a very large one geographically, and a rich country in terms of natural resources. Having said that, I must point out that agriculture is facing some very serious problems in Canada today as a result of what is commonly referred to as the cost-price squeeze. That simply means that our costs in agriculture have been going up drastically. We see increases in energy prices. We see increases in the cost of fertilizer, herbicides and insecticides. We see increases in machinery costs and repairs and virtually everything that goes into a modern farm operation. As I said, a modern farm operation today is different from what it was in the days of my father. For instance, farming has become very capital-intensive and as those costs go up, the farmers have to borrow more money to operate. It then becomes very important in any farmer's budget what kind of interest costs he is going to incur. We are hit in agriculture, Mr. Speaker, with a double whammy effect when our costs go up, because not only do direct costs go up but, in terms of the way farmers finance today, the cost of borrowing money when interest rates go up, and that is what this bill seeks to address at least partly, this evening.

To be fair about it, I think the Government has recognized the fact that there are some problems in the agricultural industry and it has attempted to address some of them in Bill C-134 but this bill addresses a very small sector of the agricultural economy. It is designed to lower interest rates by as much as 4 per cent to those people who have financial problems, in conjunction with a Farm Credit Corpoation loan. And though we give the Government credit for recognizing that there are some problems in agriculture, you have to really question the total understanding of the Government as it relates to the very large problem which the agricultural industry finds itself in as a result of the high interest rates, and the cost-price squeeze.

Let me refer now to the price side. We have seen major declines in world grain prices and world grain prices of rapeseed, for instance, which has come to be known as canola. We have seen major declines in barley and wheat prices. So at the same time that we are experiencing in agriculture very large increases in costs, we are also experiencing a large drop in grain prices. We can talk all we want, as the Parliamentary Secretary did prior to five o'clock, as to how important it is to have supply management and those kinds of things in place that help the farmer to obtain a better price for his product, but I do not know how he is going to address that problem when it gets to the major earner of export dollars in this country as far as agriculture is concerned, that is, the grain industry. Canada consumes about 20 per cent to 25 per cent of the wheat it grows. Therefore, it has to export the remaining three-quarters, and it would be virtually impossible for Canada to do very much about the world grain price. We know they are very low. Having said that it would be very difficult for the Government to do a lot. I have to point out that there are some things it could be doing that it is not doing. In the last year I had the opportunity to visit with American legislators and to talk with them specifically about what our two grain exporting countries can do to bring about some kind of working arrangement on steadying world grain prices production. We have reported our findings to the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board in the other place. I have had discussions with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), and nothing has happened.

• (2020)

We know from our discussions with the American Legislators that they are having the same problems expressed to them as are being expressed to those of us here who were elected from agricultural areas of the country. There is a communality of interest there. The American administration is of a slightly different opinion; it is more inclined to go along with the world market situation and not try to interfere in terms of helping to influence prices in the right way. However, I see no reason why the Canadian Government does not see fit to carry on those discussions between the two legislative bodies on both sides of the border. If the Parliamentary Secretary who spoke just before five is really serious in what he said, I hope he will use his influence on the Cabinet Members to see that some discussions take place on which might bring about some of the things he has spoken of. The Opposition is sometimes accused of doing nothing else but talk, but when you are in Government and you have a chance to do something, it seems to me you should do something more than just get up and talk. And I have given the Hon. Member an example.

There are other things I think the Government could be doing to bring about solutions to the farm income problem which is at the root of the Bill we have in front of us this everning, Mr. Speaker. We have heard this afternoon references made to some of the things we as a Party have advocated, such as the agribond concept. The Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) referred to some specific things which the Americans are doing, such as the establishment to production credit associations, bankers acceptance financing and the setting up of local banks having to do specifically with agriculture and of some federal land banks. These four specific programs are in effect in the U.S., some of them since the 1930s, specifically to aid agriculture in order that American farmers can have access to lower than the going rate of interest.

We on this side are not saying this is going to bring about an immediate solution and solve all our problems, but we are saying there are some things we can be looking at with an eye to solving some of those problems down the road. I have asked questions in this House of the former minister of Finance and of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I wrote letters to them suggesting that they look at some of the things the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin mentioned this afternoon, but we have been absolutely stonewalled as far as answers are concerned. We are not saying that we think these programs can be simply transferred from one side of the border to the other, that they would work as well here as they apparently have in the U.S. They have worked there, and I will tell you why. There is evidence that the American farmer has access to financing as much as 3 per cent or 4 per cent below that available to Canadian farmers. That to me is evidence that some of those programs have worked, and they have worked over a long period of time. We will never have a chance to see how those programs work here if we do not make some kind of effort at least to try some of them.

We talk about the agribond concept, Mr. Speaker. The former distinguished minister of Agriculture from my party spoke this afternoon about the Lortie Commission and lamented the fact that the so-called blue chip committee set up to look at financing as far as the housing industry is concerned, did not contain—and I think he was accurate—one single person with very much expertise in or exposure to the agricultural side of our economy. However, they came back and recommended that the Government in fact not proceed with some of the financial assistance it was planning for the housing industry.

Even if we cannot do some of those things with respect to the agribond concept, it seems to me that the least it could do is to see that when the Farm Credit Corporation goes to the market it at least gives Canadians a chance to invest in their own country. About two months ago we saw the Farm Credit Corporation going to the American market to raise $100 million to finance Canadian farmers. Now, statistics tell us the Canadian consumer is saving at roughly twice the rate of the American consumer. So I fail to understand why the Government does not have the courage or the courtesy to give Canadians a chance to invest in the most basic industry Canada has, namely, agriculture. I think it is absolutely deplorable that the Farm Credit Corporation, set up by this Government and this Parliament, should go outside the country to raise funds to finance Canadian farmers when we in fact have a tremendous pool of capital here available for investment. So when we talk about investing outside the country, I think this Government should have its knuckles rapped severely for not giving Canadians a chance to invest in Canada. I do not think there can be much of an excuse for that deplorable situation.

I would like to talk now, Mr. Speaker, about some of the additional steps this Government could take doing to assist farmers in terms of income. I happen to have been here at 12.30 this morning, Mr. Speaker, when Royal Assent was given to the Bill to end the work stoppage on the west coast. For every day that strike went on, the Canadian farming community alone lost—by "lost" I mean it cannot be regained—something like $8 million in export sales every day. We knew from the outset that the parties involved were probably not going to come back unless they were legislated back. So on that basis I find it deplorable that this Government waited so long to act. If the Government was serious in its concern, not only about the farming community in this country but about the total economy, I fail to see why it did not act much sooner.

In addition to that, several Members on this side have suggested that the Government take a very hard look at the amount of tax it collects on energy used by Canadian farmers in order to stay in production. I have a table in front of me which gives a breakdown of the pump price of gasoline right across the country. Speaking of my own Province of Manitoba, the Federal Government collects roughly 60 cents a gallon in tax. That is the federal charge on each gallon of gasoline consumed in Manitoba, whether it goes into agriculture, recreation or industry. What we have suggested is that the federal Government look at removing part of the 60 cent per gallon tax levied in 1975 and subsequently changed. Removing that tax would immediately have the effect of lowering some of the input costs of Canadian agriculture. This applies not only to farm fuels, because it would have a spin-off effect. We know that a very large component of fertilizer, of insecticides and pesticides, many of the things farmers need to be productive today, cost more as a result of that 1.5 cent a litre tax. The Government has refused to look at that. Well, even if it does not want to look at it, surely it should be willing to change the way it is administered. What the Government does in the case of agriculture is to collect that 1.5 cents a litre and then refund it under certain circumstances. In the case of the farming community, it is refunded if it is used on the farm for agricultural production. The farmer has to pay the tax and then apply for a refund. We all know that, theoretically, it should not make any difference; if you pay something one day and you get it back the next, it should not make a lot of difference. But what happens in many cases is that the farmer pays the tax, and it takes anywhere from two months to two years before the farmer gets aroung to doing his book work and applies for the refund. In the case of Manitoba it is actually illegal to use fuel on a farm other than the fuel eligible for the tax refund.

So I have suggested in Committee, and to several of the Ministers opposite, that they consider not even collecting the tax. That would at least give the farmer a break in his immediate cash outlay, and that does not seem to me to be unreasonable. It would also save some administration costs. It seems ludicrous to me that the Government should have to incur the administration costs that it does to collect the tax and then turn around and refund it when there is a way, as there is in Manitoba with which I am very familiar, of not collecting the tax in the first place. Now, there is something very simple and straightforward which would simplify the paper work, that is, get rid of some of the bureaucracy of which we all think we have too much. And yet this Government does not even want to look at it. That is another example of some of the things the Government could do.

Another thing it could do to help farmers get by without borrowing any more money than they have to is to sit down and talk with the banks to see if the banks would be willing to go along with some fixed term financing for specific projects. The farmer could go into the bank in the spring and know he was going to pay a fixed rate of interest rather than a floating rate over the production period, whether it be for feeding cattle for six months or growing a crop which may take six or eight months from the time it is sown. If the farmer knew that the financing he was obtaining for a specific enterprise was going to be fixed over a period of time, it would mean he could do a much better job of budgeting. It works both ways. Two or three years ago that looked great because prices of everything went up over the production period. If you borrowed money in the spring of 1980 at 11 per cent or 12 per cent, in the fall you paid 3 per cent or 4 per cent more. As was pointed out again by the Parliamentary Secretary earlier today, over the last 12 or 13 weeks interest rates have come down, and we all welcome that. But it means that in this particular year the person who borrowed at a fixed rate will be caught. Fixed term financing at least would eliminate one of the variables as far as production costs for that particular farming enterprise is concerned. This is something at which they could look. It has been suggested many times to the Government.

• (2030)

Let me talk about the general taxation level in the country, but first let me indicate how this topic relates to the Bill at hand. One of the reasons farmers borrow money is to buy land. We all know that one of the big costs associated with purchasing land is the additional costs which farmers incur because they have to pay capital gains taxes. If there were some recognition of the problem this was causing, it would mean that the farming community would get by with less borrowing. It could transfer land from one generation to the other, from father to son, while borrowing less money.

We moved on that when we were the Government. We included a basic exemption for capital gains and a commitment in the budget, which was defeated in December, 1979, to look at the entire question of capital gains. The Liberal Party, at its convention in the early summer of 1980, promised to look at it, but it has not happened.

As agriculture becomes more and more capital intensive, this will become a major factor in the ability of Canadian agriculture to be as productive and as competitive with agricultural sectors in other countries around the world. Let me indicate why. As I said at the opening of my remarks, agriculture is a very productive industry. It is productive because it has become very capital intensive, but I submit that it is the only major industry in Canada which has to regenerate its capital, pay for itself and pay for the land every time there is a new generation of farmers on the land. We know the stock market has been rising astronomically to record levels in the last two or three days. This does not mean that the people operating Union Carbide or Canadian Pacific have to put up more money when stocks rise in order to stay in business. They do not own the stocks. Their ownership is divided widely across the country. Anyone can purchase shares in these companies, if they have the money. The equity in these companies is shared widely across the entire base of the Canadian economy or the American economy, but when we turn to agriculture, that is not the case.

Every farmer tries—and so far has been reasonably successful—to pay for and own their farms. A major issue which I believe will have to be dealt with very quickly is the fact that every time a new generation goes on to another piece of land, it means that the land has to earn enough money for the farmer to pay for it over his lifetime. If a farmer, as was the case in the past, thinks of the ownership of his land and a retirement fund so that he can live out his golden years or his retirement years in some kind of dignity, it means that he must sell the land to someone else to obtain his retirement income. If he sells a parcel of land and obtains some money, he has to pay a big chunk of it in capital gains. This means that the person buying the land is required to pay more than he would without these very onerous rates of capital gains.

Unless we address this issue, we will find that the only people owning land in the country, very shortly, will be the Government. I find this fact very disturbing, especially when the country was settled not more than two or three generations ago by people who came here with the prospect of owning their land.

In not much more than a hundred years that prospect has been taken away. Young people who are starting to farm now—and I know this for a fact; I can cite various examples from across the Prairies and I suspect the same is true in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes—have to rent land and do not have the prospect of ever owning their land as did their fathers. If we get into a situation where we do not have family farms, which are the basis of Canadian agricultural productivity, we will not be as productive agriculturally and the entire country will suffer.

The Government should address the problem of capital gains if it is serious about doing something for agriculture. I do not want to belabour the point any more than I have to, but I find it absolutely incredible that the Minister of Agriculture, who has been in his job for something like ten years, can rise—and I have read most of his speeches—and talk about the problems in agriculture but not offer a solution except for the bill before us. He travels and delivers as many speeches as any Member of Cabinet.

As I have said, we are pleased that the Government has recognized the problems. There are something in the order of 150,000 grain farmers in the three western Provinces, yet this Bill provides only $16 million for interest rebates. This amounts to $10 per farmer, if that amount is divided among only the grain farmers of western Canada.

The other side of the equation is that we in Canadian agriculture are not looking for handouts. We want to pay our way. We are proud. We have always done it in the past and we will do it again if we are given a chance, but we need some Government support. We need Government support when we go to GATT. We need a government to go to bat for us, so that when members of the Canadian agricultural community go to sell to other countries around the world they do so on a fair basis.

I could cite several examples. We have the most eminent authority on the Canadian beef industry present in the Chamber this evening, the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). He could literally speak for hours on the failings of the Government, how it has not properly represented the beef industry and has not given it a fair chance to trade with other countries around the world. These are some of the things which we should legitimately expect from the federal Government, if it cared about what I believe to be the most basic industry in Canada.

Let me conclude on a note of optimism. I believe farmers are the most resourceful and productive members of the Canadian economy. I may sound as if I were blowing my own horn, since I represent an agricultural constituency and I have farmed all my life. I am proud to be a farmer; I am a farmer by choice. It will take more than the present Government and more than the Minister of Agriculture to run Canadian agriculture into the ground. Canadian farmers have more land per capita than any other farmer in the world. We have some of the most productive land in the world. We will succeed. If we have a change of Government, we will have a federal minister of Agriculture who will understand the basic problems. In that event things will be done for farmers. We will not have to pass Mickey Mouse bills in the House, such as the one before us this evening. Again the industry will be able to finance itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope the House will forgive me for rising at this time, but I know Hon. Members would not want to miss the opportunity to hear that our former colleague, Bob Rae, was elected this evening to the Ontario Legislature.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, of course, the point of order just raised by my colleague for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is not a point of order at all, but simply a way of making a comment. In any event, Mr. Speaker, we are considering this evening Bill C-134 which follows from the budget brought down on June 28, 1982, by the then Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

It gives me great pleasure to speak about this bill this evening, especially since some of my colleagues and I accompanied today the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to the International Agricultural Fair in Montreal which will go on until November 7. When we look at the farming community and agricultural organizations and realize that many people are becoming more and more involved in this industry, it is gratifying to note that Canadian agriculture has become much more sophisticated, and diversified, and I can speak from experience, Mr. Speaker, since I come from a rural municipality where my father is still a farmer. I can tell this House that, as far as Canadian agriculture is concerned, unlike the previous speaker who advocates a change of Government and of Minister, the Canadian farmers must admit today that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who has held his portfolio for ten years, had done more than any of his predecessors for Canadian agriculture. He has made it progressive, competitive and productive, so that agricultural producers now own small, medium-size and even large businesses. However, what I want to say about this bill this evening after my visit this morning with the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, and my colleagues, the Hon. Members for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) and for Beauce (Mr. Lapointe), to the International Fair, is that, in my opinion, because of the present economic situation, while the farmers work very hard to succeed in their business like any other businessman in Canada, it is quite obvious that they have had to face higher interest rates, which has thrown their budget out of balance, even though interest rates are now going down. We all hope that this downward trend will continue, but we have to face the facts and realize that the figures show that we now have in Canada and in Quebec a great many middle-aged farmers, farmers over 40 years old or perhaps as young as 35, who have had to invest in their farms for several years.

Farmers who, like many businesses, are long established, have raised loans at lower interest rates than the prevailing rates and can face the competition and cope with present conditions much more easily. However, we now have young farmers or farmers who, even if they cannot necessarily be called young, have only been established on a farm for a few years, and they have had to make huge investments, not only on a monetary level, but also on the human level and for equipment, and they have what could be described as relatively large debts. Consequently, to maintain their productivity and their financial position, they have to work increasingly hard to make both ends meet. They are not the only ones in that situation, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that many Canadians in most of our businesses must now reassess their productivity and financial position and try to work differently and to be perhaps more conscientious. However, in addition to the situation of farmers and of businessmen who must reassess their productivity and financial position, there were many farmers who were only starting in agriculture or who had only a few years behind them and who have had to borrow money quite recently, but the interest rates offered by the Farm Credit Corporation at that time and the increases they had to face have caused them hardship. Many farmers from Quebec and other parts of Canada attending the International Farm Exhibition in Montreal had the opportunity today to meet their elected representatives. Referring to my own province, the Hon. Members for Quebec, made representations concerning the Farm Credit Corporation's high interest rates claiming in these hard times they could not cope with the financial burden they had assumed in borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation or would have to assume now if they borrowed from the Corporation. Consequently the Quebec Members have appealed to the Government, the Cabinet and more specifically the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the hope he would pursue the efforts he has been making ever since he was appointed minister a decade ago, to help farmers survive this temporary high interest rate situation. On the basis of these recommendations, on June 28 1982, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) came up with this section in the budget documents:

Special Farm Financial Assistance Program

And I quote from the first two paragraphs on page 25, Mr. Speaker:

The government is introducing a new assistance program for farmers to be delivered through the Farm Credit Corporation.

Over the next two years loans totalling $200 million will be made under the program to farmers in financial distress. The loans will be made at the regular FCC interest rate——which was at the time, in June, 16½ per cent, and is now 15¾ per cent—

—but a rebate of 4 percentage points will be provided for the first two years of the loan. The Government is allocating $100 million to the program ($84 million as a special contribution to the FCC for lending to farmers and $16 million to pay for the interest rebates) and the FCC will divert $116 million to the program from its regular lending fund.

The program was to be implemented immediately, but it had to be completely by an act to amend the provisions of the Farm Credit Act. The important point is that many Canadians interested in agriculture are asking themselves important questions the investments and purchases farmers make and at times wonder how they can balance their budgets. But I suggest that although agriculture is still agriculture, it can aptly be referred to as industrial agriculture while and farmers may be regarded as manufacturers. They have certainly something in common: investments. A manufacturer may invest his money into a plant 200 x 200 which together with its buildings and machinery, appears less impressive to the eye than a farm with its buildings, machinery and appliances which, because of the very nature of the various crops, may be used only a few months, weeks, or even days each year.

But the situation is not the same for a farmer during the haying season: he must have the implements required for that kind of work even though they will remain idle once the work is completed. Things are different in the manufacturing sector; if you have a press—I see that my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) agrees with me—to do some printing or if you are in the furniture-making industry, your equipment can be used all year round, and as my colleague from Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) points out—I see that my colleague from Verdun-Saint-Paul (Mr. Savard), the new Government deputy whip is also in agreement—the farmer uses his implements for a few days only whereas people in the industrial sector use theirs all year long. With respect to depreciation, some of those investments must be taken into consideration and, when it comes to the investments which farmers have to make, they can sometimes be looked upon from a different perspective. I could give a number of examples of machinery which is used only periodically but which may very well cost as much if not more than equipment found in manufacturing plants.

As to whether or not they should share that depreciation, they must indeed do it on their own or pay it off in a different way. So, once this special financial assistance program was announced by the Canadian Government on June 28, it was imperative that we should be able to tell Canadians in our ridings just how important the agricultural sector is. It is important to keep in mind the fact that all the food we find on our tables is produced by the agricultural sector and that if the farmers who grow our food can indeed produce and compete, consumers will be better off. That is why we have to challenge those who keep saying that farmers get a lot more help than other organizations or other businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I think we may have been misled by people who make such statements, because any commercial or manufacturing business can benefit from tax exemptions or lower interest rates, or again get help through grants, but the situation is not necessarily the same in agriculture. All things considered in light of this Bill, the Canadian Government was quite justified in launching that program. I should mention as well the program for small businesses and fishermen described on page 10 of the June budget.

Perhaps we could look at the situation covered by Bill C-134. At this point, Mr. Speaker, if we consider investment and the amount of money farmers must invest, it would be useful to know the maximum amount now available under the Farm Credit Act. Since the legislation has been adapted to the economic, industrial and social requirements of agriculture today, loans to up to $300,000 per qualified applicant and as high as $500,000 for a group. The interest rate is calculated in terms of the return on Government treasury bills, plus 1 per cent, over a period of from five to ten years.

Mr. Speaker, the Farm Credit Corporation, through the Farm Credit Act, provides opportunities for financial assistance of up to $300,000 per individual and $500,000 per group, because the Canadian government realizes that our agriculture has made constant progress, and that even if they have a certain amount of money in the bank, farmers should have the same loan facilities as manufacturers and businessmen. Twenty years ago, Mr. Speaker, we had a situation where manufacturers could borrow on the equity in their companies, while the farm situation was quite different from today, when we see that farm capital has increased at an astonishing rate during the last few years, unlike the more gradual progression in the manufacturing sector, so that there have been considerable changes in the agricultural sector. Therefore, the Farm Credit Act has been an excellent instrument for showing Canadians and Canadian farmers that governments were well aware of the progress and productivity on our farms, and that it was necessary to find mechanisms and funding to meet their requirements. And this is what happened under the Farm Credit Act when loan ceilings were raised.

However, if we consider Bill C-134, to continue what I was saying at the beginning, namely that recently, people had borrowed at interest rates which normally would have allowed them to function, we had to realize that the sharp rise in interest rates was upsetting the financial forecasts made by FCC advisers and agronomists who are increasingly involved in counselling farmers, and in fact they have always done so, but let us say that the process is now so refined that every young farmer or farm producer has access to professional help, as in many other organizations, and it was normal that that should be case in farming.

As I was saying, since projections had been made, it became necessary following representations that had been made to deal with the matter and this was done through the Bill now under consideration which is providing a 4 per cent rebate on a two-year basis for interest rates. Of course, the Opposition will suggest that it is not enough. I think Mr. Speaker, when substantial funds of $100 million are allotted to the Corporation, it means that the Government of Canada recognizes the importance of agriculture in this country. It is essential through those budgets to make Canadians realize that the production of food is quite important and that the funds allotted to farming should be directly proportionate to productivity, to the farmer's holdings and fixed assets. I think that it is a rather important matter. This 4 per cent rebate has been granted following projections made by various farming experts of the Farm Credit Corporation, by personal counsellors or by other agricultural accounting advisers. The anticipated increase of interest rates having unbalanced their budget such a relevant legislation was necessary because for several months now, the inflation rate having decreased both in Canada and in the United States, interest rates have been dropping.

I think this is the result of the policy put forward by the Government in his fight against inflation and even recently when the new Minister of Finance delivered his financial statement, inflation being momentarily reduced, we saw the Government of Canada extend for a 2 year period that 4 per cent rebate hoping, and being increasingly convinced that since the inflation rate as well as interest rates are considerably lower this will allow farmers to do some planning but if indeed interest rates are really different in months or years ahead the Farm Credit Corporation will readjust them as it did some time ago when it brought its interest rates down from 16.5 to 15.75 per cent. We needed some sort of a mechanism to respond adequately to those well-justified representations and this is why we are dealing with this Bill. I heard the previous speaker say that it was a fine Bill but of course he would never admit that it is an excellent one. I hope that we will soon refer the whole matter to the Standing Committee on Agriculture if not to the committee of the House for immediate consideration through all stages to speed up the process because a larger number of questions directed to the Minister of Agriculture before June 28, 1982 actually had to do with interest rates.

• (2100)

I trust that my colleagues opposite will pass this legislation without delay because they were asking the Minister of Agriculture many questions requesting a reduction in interest rates or some interest related assistance. I do hope that after listening to the previous speaker, who says he is closely involved with the farmers, and I know that for a fact his colleagues will be convinced to pass this legislation without delay. I think it is important as well, to read Clause 3 of the bill and in particular subclause 3(4), and I quote:

> Where an amount may be paid to an eligible farmer pursuant to subsection (1) in relation to a loan payment period, the Minister shall, where it is practicable to do so, make such payment in the loan payment period to which the payment relates.

And subclause 3 states as well and I quote:

> Where, in or before any loan payment period in relation to which an eligible farmer may be paid pursuant to subsection (1), the eligible farmer
> (a) ceases to be a farmer, or
> (b) ceases to follow the plan of farming operations submitted by him to the Corporation,
> before he has been paid pursuant to subsection (1), no payments shall be made to him pursuant to that subsection in relation to that or any following loan payment period.

How should this provision be interpreted? What is important, is to tell the Canadian people that if at any given time, representations were made to the effect that we were helping farmers too much and that after getting a loan or some financial assistance, farmers would quit their operation, and that therefore the Canadian government would have invested money unduly. Well, we have now a provision stating that in such cases no payment will be made or the loan will be called and the operator will lose all his rights in this regard. I think such a provision was important to avoid useless loans or assistance being given out as has happened in the past in the manufacturing sector or other similar industries.

It is often said that unfortunately, when a business asks for a government loan or any kind of government assistance it will have less difficulty getting it because you deal with the government, which is less careful about it. I think that governments and . . . this Government in particular have nevertheless made sure that farmers who do receive a loan will use it for the right purposes, as would any lending institution do, whether a bank or a "caisse populaire."

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the situation of the young Canadian farmers in particular we can readily see that it was important to tell them they would get assistance if they really wanted to remain in agriculture, whether as a dairy farmer or a livestock operator. I think this message was very important and was well understood from this side of the House, given the representations that were made to Hon. Members, as far as the Province of Quebec is concerned, by organizations such as the UPA, the Coopérative fédérée as well as millers, who were asking for financial assistance so that this economic sector may operate according to acceptable standards consistent with those that may exist in other industrial or business areas. And I believe they were representations. Farmers did not ask for charity, all they wanted given the present situation, is to be allowed to continue their operations so that our Canadian agro-food industry may successfully compete and production be maintained at the level we have known for several years. I think it was a very impotant message and the response, that is Bill C-134, is equally important. When a farmer is temporarily in dire straits, I believe we must take action, and this has been well understood, as I was saying a moment ago, on this side of the House. So, Mr. Speaker, given this situation—

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): They are not all in dire straits.

Mr. Dubois: As my colleague from Chicoutimi has just said, farmers are obviously not all in dire straits. I explained how young farmers were perhaps the most hard hit. However, the important thing is that we could not disregard this portion of the rural population, those farmers who had to meet financial obligations that were different from what had been predicted by their advisor in the first place, and that is why we have responded with this legislation. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from the other side will pass this act quickly so that we may respond adequately to this need, and hopefully this legislation which I would like to come into force soon will not be stuck here. If it is possible to have it passed without it being deferred to the agricultural committee—not that I would not like to have it dealt with at the committee, but since this legislation is accepted on both sides . . . They will complain that it is not enough; well, one has to draw the line somewhere, Mr. Speaker. However, since this seems to be acceptable on both sides, we will be able to have it passed quickly.

[English]

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in participating in the debate on Bill C-134, an Act to amend the Farm Credit Act in Canada. I would just like to make a few comments. We do take pleasure in participating in the debate but, as the Hon. Member on the Government side pointed out just a few moments ago, the budget which brought this Bill forward was announced on June 28, some four months ago. The Hon. Member on the Government side is now urging us to pass it immediately. As a matter of fact he is in such a rush that he took about 40 minutes to urge us to pass it immediately.

Those of us on this side have a few things to say about the Bill. We all recognize the problems which are prevalent in agriculture. Sometimes I think that those of us on this side may be a little more aware of the problems than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is sometimes, and some though not all the Hon. Members of his Party. That would even include the Parliamentary Secretary who may occasionally be a little more aware than the Minister.

This Bill applies only to farmers who are in financial distress. It is designed for farmers who find themselves in need of refinancing. It does not meet many of the needs of the agricultural sector in Canada, and it definitely does not meet too many of the needs of the agricultural sector in the part of the country that I come from. This is not the first time we have seen this Program, Mr. Speaker. The November budget announced a $50 million Program for Special Financial Farm Assistance loans. That $50 million helped 382 farmers in Canada—not in one Province, not in one country, but in the whole of the country. An additional $100 million was provided for special farm financing in the June budget, but $116 million was taken away from Farm Credit general funds and applied to this Program. That meant that someone who had the ability and wished to farm was probably going to be denied the opportunity because there was insufficient funding. This $116 million was not additional money. The Government used the jiggery-pockery it indulges in quite often. It took the $116 million and said, "Now we have a $216 million Program". Things do not work out quite like, that, Mr. Speaker.

Even though the cost of money is coming down, financing is a leading input cost in the farming sector in Canada. It accounts for about 20 per cent of the total cost of production. The future is not that bright for farmers at the moment, Mr. Speaker. There are projections of a 20 per cent decline in net farm income. It is expected that farmers will receive about $3.4 billion less for their production in 1982 than they did in 1981.

Even those Members who do not have the privilege of representing an agricultural area recognize the importance of agriculture to our economy. One-sixth of all economic activity in Canada is generated in the agrifood business, and a large amount of our balance of trade can be directly attributed to the agriculture industry.

In 1981 we exported $8.8 billion worth of agricultural products and imported $5.6 billion worth of food products. Canada has the ability to bring that figure down to zero. If the programs were in place, the farm population, with its ability, intelligence and skills, would ensure that we do not import farm products at any time.

In the last year, western farmers produced 42 million tonnes of grain. That includes 24 million tonnes of wheat. Canada is the second largest exporter of grain in the world. This year, our grain export business will be worth $6.4 billion.

Last evening we went through a very difficult exercise, passing a Bill to ensure that the strike at the ports which shut down the whole west coast of Canada could be resolved and the grain worth $6.4 billion could be shipped and bring badly needed money into the country.

People engaged in agriculture need programs that will help them and allow them to use their abilities and their skills—their raw, gut, "stick-to-itiveness" and toughness. If such programs were in place, we would not need a 4 per cent reduction in the cost of money. If the Government removed some of the stumbling blocks that hinder the agricultural community, we would not even have to consider this Bill.

The strike of the last 16 days has cost $8 million per day in lost grain exports. Those exports were lost, Mr. Speaker, and not deferred as the assistant to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in the other place has said. He claimed that those sales were deferred; Mr. Speaker, the sales were lost. Over $120 million was lost to the Canadian economy because of the work stoppage on the west coast. If it were the case that we were going to stop growing or exporting grain on July 31, then it could be claimed that the sales were deferred. But we are going to continue growing grain and continue stretching our rail transportation system and continue exporting forever. So that $8 million per day was lost, Mr. Speaker.

I cannot understand the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Before the session was resumed on October 27 he was claiming that one of the first orders of business would be to use the force of Parliament to resolve the work stoppage on the west coast. Action was delayed until the Monday following resumption, then until Tuesday and finally till Wednesday; a delay of seven days.

Earlier in the House I heard the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) speak about the great concern that Members of the New Democratic Party have for the grain producers and farmers. He spoke of what that Party would like to do for the farmers. But last night every Member of that Party who was present voted against the resolution of the work stoppage. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) voted against it, although it caused him a great deal of anguish—and that is not a play on words. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky), the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), all those who were present, voted for continuation of the work stoppage.

I do not understand that, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I should. Even though the people of western Canada sent the majority of the Members of the New Democratic Party to this House, control of those Members has passed from the people in that part of Canada. It has been placed in the hands of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) or the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Not a Member from the rural areas of Saskatchewan or Manitoba spoke for his constituents in the House last night. That was evident in the way they voted. There is something to be said for those Members who were absent. The Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) spoke in my part of Canada saying that we have to get the grain moving, because that is important. He was not in the House yesterday, however. Perhaps if he had been, he would have suffered the torment that some of the other Members of that Party did when obeying the Party line. So he was absent.

When we looked at the Government's attempt, through an amendment, we asked them to have a second look and, take six and five out. It was meant for the Public Service, but now it will be applied in all likelihood to the private sector, the private economy of Canada. That is something I am sure the Members of the Government and the New Democratic Party will not be allowed to forget.

Looking at priorities, I mentioned earlier that if the Government would remove some of the stumbling blocks, the huge obstacles they place in front of the agricultural community, we would not need a 4 per cent reduction in interest. As my learned colleague, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out earlier, the men and women of the farming community of Canada do not want a handout, they do not ask for a subsidy. What they ask for is a fair chance to produce. They want to use their God-given skills and the soil they have been given to feed a hungry world. They do not want subsidies, unless Government programs make it necessary for them to ask for assistance. That is the only time you hear their cry.

A prime example is the fuel tax on agriculture. When I went back to the farm in 1965, my fuel costs were negligible. They were less then for a whole season's operation than they are now for one month. If the Government tax on agricultural fuel were removed, the producers of agricultural products in Canada would be much better off. We hear there will be another $4 per barrel increase in the spring, a furthur tax on the production of food to be used to feed a hungry world.

As the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) and the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) mentioned, if capital gains were removed, the need for a farmer to ask for a larger sum of money for his land would be reduced. The capital required would be reduced and there would be more Farm Credit funds.

I know you understand, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister is well aware that the farmer may pass his land to his or her children. That is understandable. It is as it should be. However, I have seen two examples in the last three months in my office involving a son who had inherited his father's land while his mother was still living, and the son having died tragically, left the land to his mother. Capital gains applied to the transfer of that land. I cannot understand a Minister of Finance or a Government being so hungry for money, so greedy that when a son or daughter dies and leaves the land to a mother or father they want to tax it. It does not make sense. It is another obstacle in the way of production, another roadblock for the agricultural producers of this country. If that were removed, we would not have to talk about a 4 per cent rebate over two years. In the farming community, two years is not considered a long-term program. I have here a pamphlet from the 1979 election wherein the Minister of Agriculture promised to bring the valuation day of farmland up to 1974. Also, I have a copy of a speech he made where he stated that if the Liberal Party was re-elected, the tax on agricultural fuel would be removed. We have not seen that.

When questioned in the House by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister said that was not policy, it was a promise made in the heat of debate. He was saying, "We will put it down. We will make statements in a handout that is distributed door to door, but it is in the heat of debate, don't expect it folks, don't really believe what I tell you." He does not have to say that because a lot of people in Canada are beginning to think that way without prompting.

We have had some bills, proposals through Farm Credit and a few other things from this Minister of Agriculture to which I would like to draw attention. They are programs which relate so supply management not requested by the agricultural community. If the agricultural community as a whole requests a board and is represented on or controls that board, there is nothing wrong with that. However, let me very quickly compare North America to the U.S.S.R.

In 1970, both the United States and the U.S.S.R. exported grain. The United States exported 38 million tonnes and the Russians exported eight million tonnes. In 1981 the Americans were exporting 115 million tonnes and the Russians were importing 43 million tonnes.

We all use seed on our farms. In Russia they take 16 per cent of their harvest for seed. In North America we take 2 per cent of our harvest to put back in the ground. It is a funny thing. The latest thing on Government controls, Government intervention in the marketplace and in the agricultural community is in Russia. Right now, in November 1982, they know how much fertilizer they are going to put in the ground in the spring of 1984 because it is in the 1981-1985 five-year plan. On my farm and on those of my colleagues, that decision will be made in the spring of 1984 after we have the soil tested, looked at the weather and checked the markets. That is when we will make the decision about the fertilizer.

One of the reasons why the U.S.S.R. is now one of the world's largest importers, not only of grains but of meat, is Government intervention. Even the Minister of Agriculture recognizes that. In western Canada the Minister stated that we should be thankful that the U.S.S.R. is Communist, because if they were not, we would not be able to sell them the food we grow. In other words, they would grow enough themselves if they changed their system of government.

I would like to speak for a moment on the cost to producers. The Government's program regarding the statutory movement of grain will cost the producers a lot of money. I say to people in any part of Canada who are concerned and think there may be some hope in the 74 members of the Liberal Government Party voting against that measure that that will be the frosty Friday. I have yet to see Members of the Government Party, let alone Cabinet Ministers, vote against a Government bill. If there is hope in western Canada that the Liberal Party will help to stop the change or somehow modify the change in the Crow rate or have any input directed to that, I say to my friends in the west that that will not happen.

In conclusion I want to say a few words about the economy of Canada. We heard of megaprojects which were cancelled by this Government, Alsands, Cold Lake, all of them put on hold. In my Province alone, Mr. Speaker, there is a megaproject every spring, and that project is worth a billion dollars to the men and women in the agricultural community. Every spring there is a renewable megaproject. A billion dollars goes into the ground. That is a megaproject, Mr. Speaker, to which this Government should pay a little more attention, not a megaproject of $2 billion for only a year. This is $1 billion. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister agreeing. That is a megaproject, a billion dollars a year put in by the men and women in my Province who are involved in the agricultural community. That project would be much better served if the policies of the Government opposite were directed more toward allowing the men and women to function, to go ahead without the interference, without the capital gains, without the farm fuel tax, without these things that get in the way. We need bills that give us a 4 per cent rebate over two years for farmers in financial distress, and that probably would involve less than 700 farms in all of Canada involved in this Program.

As many faults as I can find with the Program, Mr. Speaker, it appears to be the best this Government can put forward, and I will support it because I cannot expect any more.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would my colleague on the other side allow a question?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Member accept a question?

Mr. McKnight: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my colleague opposite stated earlier that Russia lives via state controlled economy. On the other hand, he said that in this country every spring, there is a huge megaproject, a renewable project which consists of millions and millions of grain seeds going into the ground to ensure a good crop. He was also asking for the State to play a larger role in these megaprojects. I cannot understand how the hon. member opposite can sometimes ask for government intervention and at other times oppose it. I did not quite get the meaning of his question.

[English]

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, what I was referring to was assistance which the agricultural producers of this country need, not direct Government intervention, not programs imposed by the Government on the agricultural community which are not acceptable to it, and not agricultural programs which take funds away from that community to be placed in the tax budget of this Government, which we have found has wasted some $24 billion in the last year.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I have another question. I wonder if one can attribute the same meaning to the words, assistance and control, when in fact those words are quite different.

[English]

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I come from a different part of Canada than my colleague, but I know there is definitely the same feeling over assistance, because even this Government gives assistance to some areas of the economy without insisting upon control of that part of the economy.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-134, an Act respecting rebates of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act. I would like to start off my remarks by stating we feel it is another band-aid solution to a very important, vital question in Canada with regard to one of our major industries, the farming industry, across Canada.

I want to refer, if I may, to the remarks made by the Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). The Parliamentary Secretary indicated he had been in the farming industry for 45 years, but he seemed to brush over the fact of these farm bankruptcies in Canada. They were not really that significant and we did not have too much to worry about. I want to say to that Hon. Member that in the farming industry, farmers do not come about just by one or two days' experience. They come up through generations, through family tradition, and their experience whether it is that of one farmer or several farmers, is something we cannot afford to lose. We are losing the expertise, the professional people in those areas. I travelled on the Transport Committee of 1980 across the prairies. The groups that came to us, the farmers' unions, the grain elevator people, time and time again stressed the problem of the abandonment of rail lines, which this Government has allowed to happen. They are not asking for handouts. They are asking this Government to recognize the fact that when it allows the abandonment of rail lines it is creating an extra hardship for those people who have to bring their grain farther distances to the grain elevators, the ports, or to their transportation system. On top of that, this Government has brought in legislation that adds to that cost. Not only have they lost the rail lines, but now they are paying out additional costs for energy. This Government has to recognize the fact that it is creating hardships that cannot be sustained. These farmers reach out and try to develop or plan, but this kind of help is not going to meet their requirements. I do not think the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex fully understands the kind of problems that this has brought about, even though he may have 45 years of experience and may have developed a plan over that period of time.

Here is what we heard from a group representing a large area, the Peace River area. They talk about the age of farm operators, and the potential for further expansion of farming activities is indicated by a relatively large number of young farmers in the district. They give the average age of farm operators: under 25 years of age, 3.53 per cent; 25 to 44 years of age, almost 46 per cent; 45 to 59 years of age, 36.47 per cent; 60 to 69 years of age, 11.24 per cent, and over 70 years, 2.88. What I am trying convey is that we have a lot of young, experienced farmers who are trying to take over from their parents and operate the farms, and they need that financial help. They need a long-term support program so that they can plan ahead. If that money were made available, it would stimulate our manufacturing sectors because they would be able to plan some kind of development.

There is a fertilizer plant in my riding in British Columbia, and this summer the walls were bulging with fertilizer, and everyone knows there is no requirement for fertilizer in June or July. So there were lay-offs at that plant. But would it not make sense to have long-range financing for farmers so that they could purchase their fertilizer in the summer and have it available first thing in the spring? Not only would we be accommodating the farming sector, but this fertilizer plant in British Columbia, and others, would be functioning in an orderly manner as well. That is the kind of economic planning needed, and this Government has to recognize that fact and meet those requirements.

I want to speak for a moment about CP Rail or the railway system and its abandonments, because I think it is vital to this question. I have not heard the Conservative Party speak too much about the Crow rate or the abandonment of rail lines even though it is vital to what we are talking about. While we see the Government speak about how railways must make a profit, where was the Government when CP Rail was dividing their corporation? Where was the Government when CP separated its real estate portion into Marathon Realty? What about CP investments? CP Rail has built an empire in this country on the backs of the Canadian people, and this government supports that kind of program. Every time Ian Sinclair comes before the Government, the programs are presented to the House of Commons and in most cases supported by the Liberals and Conservatives. And the farmers and people across Canada have to suffer the consequences.

I want to speak for a moment about a comment made by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). He outlined a problem with capital gains tax in his riding. He spoke of a father turning a property over to his son, and the son to his mother because of a death, and she had to pay capital gains tax. I want to ask the Members of the Conservative Party of Canada where they were when they were in Government? They were in Government for nine months, and why was that legislation not changed if they feel so strongly about it today? Why, in those nine months when you were in Government, did you not look at this legislation that you are so concerned about and bring it before the House and have it changed? No, they were too busy with other things. In fact, they were elected in late February and did not call the House in for a sitting until October, so that is the kind of concern that that Party had for that kind of legislation.

I would also like to refer to another problem in my riding, the beautiful area of the Creston Valley, a grain and fruit growing area. These people are faced with the closure of the grain elevators. I can understand why they had to make that decision in light of the costs they had been burdened with. Naturally they have to look at running an efficient business, and when the Government creates that kind of burden, who is going to suffer? What happens? They close their grain elevators down. What happens to the expertise of the farmers in those areas? Can you imagine the problems which will be created with regard to storing and shipping their products in an orderly manner?
