> They present a new and powerful form of political patronage and potential for corrupting abuses. They raise expectations among community organizations, where perhaps none should exist, with respect to assistance from the public purse. They lull politicians and the public away from the task of analysis, the setting of priorities, and the making of commitments, which are indispensable for the ordering of social life. They are indeed the modern version of 'bread and circuses' that distract away from basic concerns.

This is the negative comment on charities themselves:

> There is already evidence that some charities have become lazy in their responsibility for fund raising because of their dependence on government lottery handouts and other charities which refuse to accept lottery money on ethical grounds are penalized.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to interrupt the Hon. Member, but if it is possible I would like to ask him a few questions. I hope he might leave some time at the end of his remarks so I would have that opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Epp: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has made a legitimate request. I am not trying to dodge the question but my problem is that I understand the Bill is to be divided on shortly and there is another Member who wishes to speak. I cannot take that time. Possibly we can have that exchange when the Bill goes to Committee.

I would much rather see the Government review its expenditures, reduce those which it finds unnecessary and then return to us with legitimate programs. I suggest to the Minister that I know that this is a better route to take.

I am not alone in speaking against lotteries. While some provincial Governments do not share the partisan position that I hold, quite frankly there are a number of provincial Governments that are seriously questioning the continued existence of lotteries even at the provincial level. I suggest to the Minister that he seriously consider setting up an all-party Committee to study the subject of lotteries and what they mean to the Canadian public, both in the immediate and long term, before this Bill is passed. I believe the Minister should seriously consider that suggestion because of the moneys involved and the large expenditures which might be made by Canadians. I am concerned that during economic hard times we are making it easier to justify another means of raising revenue.

Not only do I believe that raising revenue through gambling by the Government is wrong, but it removes a certain moral basis of operation from the Government. When Governments lose their moral obligation to instil a sense of responsibility in their citizens not only to obey the laws but contribute to their society, something is lost in our society. That is the danger of this Bill. I am not trying to be personal with the Minister but I suggest to him and his Government that it is wrong for us, at the federal level, once again to enter the field of gaming which we happily left in 1979.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Regan (for the Secretary of State) that Bill C-95, An Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to take up too much time in this debate. Many of the things that the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), who is well versed on the entire area of lotteries and fitness and amateur sport, has said in his excellent comments about this Bill echo my feelings. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has also echoed my thoughts about this Bill.

However, I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister that in August of 1979, when we made an agreement with the Provinces, the federal Government was receiving $24 million which was connected to the consumer price index. What I am really surprised about is the fact that on November 18, when there are 1.3 million people unemployed, when the country is going down the drain, we are talking about games of chance and lotteries. This does not make any sense to me. Having spent 14 and one-half years in the House, I cannot believe that today we have to deal with a Bill like this. It is most annoying.

I thought the Minister was a sport, but apparently he has been sold a real bill of goods. I find it unbelievable that a rower from the Canadian Olympic Association will suddenly tell him how to run his own Department. Now I know why the Hon. Member from the other place is taking over from him. This man has been a disaster. We had $24 million connected to the CPI which the Minister was receiving from the provincial Governments. There was nothing to do but stay there and collect the money. They have had $60 million in the kitty in the last three years, split up between culture and sports. Have Hon. Members heard the people from the sporting department making any complaints about the funding in the last three years?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Paproski: You have, have you? Well, you assured them that you haven't got a piece of the action. Don't give me that stuff.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Paproski: I heard an echo but I am sorry that I got off the point. Since the present President of the Liberal Party, Iona Campagnolo, was Minister, and previous to that when John Munro was Minister, we had committed ourselves, in Fitness and Amateur Sport, to national and international sports amounting to one third of capital costs. There is no way that you can get out of it now, I say through you, Mr. Speaker. This minister knows that. There is a deal with the municipalities, the provincial Governments and the Federal Government. They are each responsible for a one-third slice. The Minister could have received something else from the provincial Governments if he had that close federal-provincial co-operation that we had in the short period we were in government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Because with us it was all in the family. We dealt with provincial colleagues. We did not have that problem. You have another problem, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that there is no Liberal Government out there any more that can deal with it, unfortunately—or fortunately—and that is where the problem is. The Liberals could have held two or three draws annually if they had sat down with the provincial Governments and said: "Gentlemen, we want two or three draws annually for Olympics, for university games and for international sport". The Minister said that the money is for the Canadian and the Calgary Olympics. My God, Mr. Speaker, they will not be around here in 1988. They will not have to worry about that.

An Hon. Member: You won't.

Mr. Paproski: I will be around. Don't you worry about me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Don't you worry about me, Daddy, I'll be here. They will not be around in time to really appreciate the Calgary Olympics, but we will look after them. We do not mind. We are pretty easy with our provincial colleagues. We do not care what stripe they are. We do not play the kind of political games that you gentlemen do.

Do Hon. Members know why these people want to get back into the lottery business? Let me tell them. There were 6,000 Grits—Liberals, excuse me—

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Paproski: —who automatically lost their little kiosks which were making only $30,000 or $35,000 annually. When one asked them whether they were making any money, they replied: "No, we are not making any money". Do Hon. Members know what they were doing? They were writing off the $10 tickets into the $1 and $5 package. How much money were they giving back to the federal Government? A big zero. And anything they could write off on the $10 ticket, they were writing off.

An Hon. Member: What about the Grey Cup?

Mr. Paproski: I will take up the Grey Cup matter in a couple of minutes. Another 120 distributors were making anywhere from $200,000 to $300,000 annually. I would not say they were all Grits, but 95 per cent of them were.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: I think this is ridiculous and I think it is getting into something which is wrong. I say through Your Honour that the Minister has been sold a bill of goods. He will have to use the machinery that the provincial Governments will be using in order to crank out these little tickets, whenever they are selling them; so if there is $60 million in there, it will take them a year and a half to get back into the business. It will cost them $60 million to get into the business and by that time we will have another election and the Government will be finished. So there you are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner: That's what you said the last time.

Mr. Paproski: I will not say any more, but good luck to you in the next federal election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division!

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Some Hon. Members: Five o'clock!

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

All items preceding No. 94 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and other communications during the last year between the Minister of Communications and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that deal with the balance or bias of reporting.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that we will be discussing the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation this afternoon in view of the publication this week of the report of the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee, commonly known as the Applebaum-Hébert report, but before I get into the subject of the motion, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I would like to make a brief comment on the motion for papers.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states that in 1973 the Government tabled in the House of Commons its views on the general principles governing notices of motions for production of papers. The following item states that the purpose is "to enable Members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of Government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible".

I now realize that these motions for production of papers have become a farce. On more than one occasion the Government has agreed to produce for me, but on one occasion I had in my possession papers produced by the Government which I found to be totally inadequate and incomplete. I complained to the Speaker and was informed that that was too bad, but that there were no powers in the House to enforce the production of the documents. As recently as this week, an Hon. Member of the Official Opposition also received a ruling from Madam Speaker that, once again, it was too bad whether he did or did not get the papers which were to be produced by the Government according to the motion and there was nothing further that could be done.

Thus, as a Member of the Committee studying the Standing Orders of the House, I have suggested that we abolish this process in its entirety, that we recognize that it is entirely up to the Government to make up its mind whether it will or will not produce documents, the extent to which it will produce documents, that we request these documents via a question on the Order Paper, and then keep our fingers crossed that maybe we will be lucky. I am not at all enchanted with this procedure because we have just passed a freedom of information Bill and I feel it is too bad that we cannot get documents which are essential in order to do our work as competently as possible.

I would like to refer to the essential subject, which is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and the suggestion that there may be some bias in its reporting. In a moment I will illustrate. I have spoken on this subject many times over the years. In looking at some of the questions I have placed on the Order Paper, I did notice that to questions I asked concerning radio and the average percentage of listeners in peak listening times on those CBC radio stations in Montreal and Toronto, the answer was that at peak listening time in Toronto, Station CBL has approximately 7 per cent of the total listening audience. I am quoting only from Canadian Broadcasting Corporation figures provided to me. In Montreal the corresponding figure for Station CBM is approximately 2 per cent, and for Station CBF approximately 8 per cent.

Just to complete the radio picture, in another question I was advised that across the country the CBC English and French owned and operated stations, together with CBC affiliated radio stations, had a total audience of 8.9 per cent. I have never suggested that that is not an important segment of the population of this country. Nevertheless, let us keep things in perspective.

As far as television is concerned, also in answer to a question on the Order Paper, again using Canadian Broadcasting Corporation figures, we find that, as far as English television programming is concerned, the CBC-owned and operated stations, together with the private stations that are affiliated with the CBC, are unable to attract the same viewing audience as the private networks. Furthermore the number of viewers tuned in to stations south of the border is almost as great as those watching CBC.

In the case of the French language stations, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Radio-Canada, does attract a somewhat larger viewing audience than the private network, and I think this is to be expected. Unfortunately, those watching the stations south of the border are not divided into English and French speaking viewers, although I assume they are all watching English television.

It amuses me when I watch American programming south of the border to see the number of advertisers from the Montreal area that spend their money advertising on American programs, despite the fact that they lose the benefit of the deductibility. Apparently, they find it more profitable to advertise south of the border, realizing that many Canadians are tuned in to those American stations.

I have discussed with the spokesmen for the Opposition parties that we should give as much opportunity as possible to Members to participate in this debate this afternoon, but since I made reference to the Applebaum-Hébert report I would like to put a few quotes on the record.

One of the important points that the report brings out is that the contribution of CBC television to Canadian cultural expression has been meagre. That is the word they used. The CBC has not been responsible to Canadian artists and has failed to promote them. The report suggests that CBC TV should produce only news shows with its own staff, and all other programming should be purchased from private producers. It is the hope of the Committee that by commissioning programs from independent producers rather than maintaining the present scale of in-house production, the CBC would tap a source of fresh program ideas.

The Applebaum-Hébert Cultural Policy Review Committee was exasperated with the CBC's bureaucratic arrogance and lack of verve. Its solution is to limit the CBC's own production to national news and current affairs, and have the Corporation buy other Canadian programs from private producers. It says that, unlike CBC Radio, television lacks creative initiative and intellectual leadership, and that in fighting to retain a position of power within the Canadian broadcasting system the CBC has developed a tradition of secretiveness which extends to virtually every arm of its activities.

It is on that note of secretiveness that I want to go back to an action of mine in May of 1973 when the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts were talking about the difficulty that we were experiencing as Members of Parliament in obtaining information. As a result, and I suppose one might term it a fit of anger, I proposed a motion that the estimates for the Secretary of State for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974 as they related to vote 50, payment to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, be reduced by $1,000 from $232,797,000 to $232,796,000. Mr. Speaker, when the question was put on the motion, it was agreed to on the following division: Yeas, 6; Nays, 5; and that motion stood.

We have never opposed the principle of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the need to provide services in remote parts of this country and the need to provide alternative programming and to promote Canadian culture. I have just read into the record that in 1973 the CBC's budget was $233 million in round figures. Today the figure is over three-quarters of a billion dollars. I feel that the public has the right to ask questions of its Members of Parliament about the manner in which these moneys are spent, and I deplore the secrecy in both Crown corporations, particularly the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that seems not to want to provide the public with the information it desires.

I wrote to the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on October 22. I was angry. The previous evening I had watched a program immediately following the Prime Minister's third speech in which they put on a satire on the news broadcast, "The Journal". I said: "If this is supposed to be an example of Canadian culture, then some of us would be less proud to be Canadians". I suggest there are better ways to spend three-quarters of a billion dollars than supporting the "independent", non-journalistic, untalented, overstaffed employees of the CBC.

Why was I angry? First of all, I thought that the program was out of place. I do not mind satire; I do not mind fun. For example, Radio-Canada puts on a program of satire at the end of the year and certainly they are going to take a poke at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That is all in its right place. One of the CBC's senior officials named William Morgan apparently stated publically that the network did not want to confuse viewers by mixing the network's journalistic responsibilities with its institutional role of conveying Government messages. If that is not biased, I do not know what is.

I was angry, and I say in all honesty I would have been equally angry if such a satire had been put on after the commentary by the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) or after the remarks made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I considered it completely out of place. Despite the fact that I have had response from a Minister, my letter of November 22 to the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is unanswered.

I have also put another question to him, probably too recent to have a response. I question, for example, why the private networks would spend a lot of time covering what is in Montreal an extremely interesting subject, the fact that the Chateauguay School Board is teaching its French language students the English language in grades one, two and three. Obviously, in Quebec this is an extremely important subject. I have maintained all along that Bill 101 is discriminatory as far as the French language citizens of Quebec are concerned, that it is putting French language, unilingual Quebecers in a ghetto. The School Board of Chateauguay is fighting the Government's insistence that it discontinue this language training and the issue will go to the courts on December 2. The private networks have handled the item. I wonder why the CBC on the French network has not given at least equal time to a subject which I frankly feel the French-speaking people in the Province of Quebec should be fully informed about.

I have given two examples. I have many in my files, but I have probably taken up enough time. The first example is what I consider the bias in what the CBC does, and second, what I consider a rather reverse form of bias, the omission of reporting on important items.

We asked these questions. I am still a Member of the Communications and Culture Committee. If the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation wants us to support their budget of three-quarters of a billion dollars for this current year, I believe we are at least entitled in return to free and factual information.

I have been unsuccessful. I tried in 1973. Eight years later I am still trying. The CBC should come forward and give us the answers. Let us better understand, rather than take the attitude that this is a so-called independent corporation that does not have to answer to the elected members of the public.

Once again, I am making a plea through my few short remarks this afternoon to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to help us if they expect us to help them.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the fact that the Hon. Member has presumably been debating his motion for the production of papers with regard to bias in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and communications about that bias between themselves and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), and yet never mentioned that item in his speech.

I suppose, given the Member's practice on occasions of notices of motions for papers, private members' motions and so forth, one should not be surprised. The Member will know of the concern the House now has about this particular Member's intentions when he introduces a motion. I do not yet know whether this was one of those he introduced in a fit of anger, as one of the others was, as he indicated. I assume from the fact that the Member spoke on this one, and I mean this in kindness, that he was not supporting it since he has developed a tradition in the last year of not speaking only on those he does support.

We had a peculiar circumstance earlier this year in connection with the Member's motion with regard to Dominion Day. His decision in support of his motion was never to make a statement, not to say a word in the House of Commons. He was quoted in the press on that matter as saying:

> I said to myself, Herbert, keep your mouth shut. The best thing you can do is not to open your mouth.

It is difficult now to know whether he meant his remarks today in support of his proposal to be taken seriously. I support his proposal and want to say so to him. My dilemma is that I want to know whether in fact he means, having opened the debate, that he does not want it to pass. Perhaps after I sit down he might privately indicate what he prefers.

Second, I made careful note of some matters that he raised in his short discourse on which I want to comment. The Member is absolutely correct—and this is not to comment on the Speaker's ruling—that it was surprising to discover that even when the House of Commons has ordered that papers be produced, the Government nevertheless has the right to refuse those papers.

That is worrisome, at least to me. I understood that the obligation of the Government if it wished papers not to be produced was to present its case here for not having papers produced and so convincing the House or making some argument about national security, or some such thing under their claim with regard to their interest in freedom of information, rather than, after the House has decided that something should be produced, hide behind their admitted right not to produce papers. It calls into question the whole matter of freedom of information.

The motion which the Hon. Member put on the Order Paper and that he did not debate is an important one. There is always a concern about whether the public corporation does show bias. In fairness to the Hon. Member, it is partly his interest in this area and certainly the interest expressed by Members on our side in Committee which led to the publication in July of this year of a fascinating book by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The book is called "Journalistic Policy". It is the new bible on how journalists are to behave within the Corporation and what their rights and professional responsibilities are. It is a very interesting book. In fairness, I should say that the origin of this book arose from concerns in Parliament and in the Corporation about this question.

Interestingly enough, the Hon. Member did make reference to the satire which was mounted on the Corporation after the address of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said he would have felt just as upset if it would have been made after the other speakers. However, he did not indicate, which I found surprising, any concern with the origin of the reason why there was no journalistic comment after any of those speeches, that being the Government's request.

He appears not to be concerned by the quote that he gave with regard to the obligation of the Corporation. I made quick notes. I do not have the direct quote, but I think I can correctly paraphrase what he said. The quote said that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has an institutional role of conveying Government messages. I would have thought that very statement alone implied bias, and one should be concerned about that question.

I note in the book "Journalistic Policy" that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation outlines matters which it regards as broadcasts of national importance. Nowhere in that list is included a message by the Prime Minister of Canada. It is not in the policy of the CBC that those messages are of national importance. There are major addresses, major parliamentary debates, policy conventions, First Ministers' conferences, state occasions and Royal visits, but nowhere in the middle of the heat of this issue when this document was being prepared, and it was prepared before the request, was that issue addressed. Therefore, it was legitimate for journalists to question at the time whether in fact an accession to a request by the Prime Minister under terms to be set by the Prime Minister was a fair request to the public broadcasting corporation.

I make that point because elsewhere and throughout this document the CBC makes the point that it must remain independent of all influence if it is to be able to achieve non-biased programming. We had two examples last year of circumstances where the Corporation had clearly shown something beyond bias. Members will recall the two cases in which the CBC was involved in which they were accused of libel, slander and defamation of character. One was lost in court in British Columbia. The Corporation was ordered by the court to pay the secondest highest libel award ever made in Canada because of the defamation of character involved. Second, Members might recall the out of court settlement involving the then and current Premier of Alberta.

The whole question of bias and the way the CBC deals with bias is an important issue if one believes in the protection and preservation of the CBC. Therefore, the letters between the CBC and the Minister of Communication (Mr. Fox) at approximately the same time as the libel suits were being discussed are important issues and should be important to Parliamentarians as showing what the CBC was saying to the Minister and what the Minister was saying to the CBC. I hope the House will find it within its power to approve the motion, notwithstanding the fact that the Government may yet decide, even if the motion is approved, not to produce the papers under cover.

It was not my intention to speak at length. However, I want to make a couple of other points with regard to the book "Journalistic Policy" which I urge all Members to read because it does relate to this issue. It is not my intention to speak here today about the Applebaum-Hébert Commission. That is for another day.

One of the issues that relates to the question of balance and bias in broadcasting, as Hon. Members will know, is protected for Canadians by the Broadcasting Act and applied by the CRTC on licences of television broadcasters, notably when their renewals come up. One of those issues is that the CBC is, in effect, exempt from that policy.

• (1720)

It is therefore disturbing to find the CBC in journalistic policy documents make this statement under its open section on journalistic policy, and in the section called "Balance":

> Balance is not to be confused with the concept of "right of reply". The CBC must itself accept the responsibility for determining when a significant imbalance has occurred, and what remedial action must be taken.

Clearly, the CBC does not believe that it should be subject to the same provisions with respect to the protection of Canadians which the CRTC is empowered to provide with regard to other television stations. The CBC believes it is their role to make that determination internally. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, that only strengthens the argument for producing papers passing between the Corporation and the Minister on this question. Surely it is in the interests of the House to do so.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to make reference to one other definition, or one other policy statement which is in this book, with regard to current and public affairs programming. I believe most Canadians tend to believe, rightly or wrongly, when they have observed bias in the CBC, that it is in the current and public affairs programming or in the news broadcasting. The CBC, therefore, defines its role, and I think this is important on the question of bias, as follows:

> The role of the CBC, then, in its current and public affairs programming, is to inform Canadians about the issues they confront as they decide upon their future through the democratic process. The exercise of this responsibility calls for identifying and exploring the issues confronting Canadians fairly and thoroughly, comprehensively and accurately, and for reflecting differing views about these issues, fully and fairly, and in a balanced manner, taking into account the weight of opinion which holds those views.

There are two things that should be noted from that. First, the CBC itself will decide in its view what are the important issues today. Second, it has introduced into its own journalistic creed the issue of the weight of public opinion. One is therefore interested, because this document was prepared in response to these concerns last year, as to what the communications between the Minister and the CBC on journalistic bias were.

In protection of the CBC, and in protection of the freedom of information issue, when we have a Corporation which has exclusive privilege under the Broadcasting Act, which has protection separate from private broadcasting, which has large amounts of public money, surely in that circumstance, if not in any other, communications between the Minister, who is supposed to be in an arm's length relationship with the Corporation, and the Corporation's concerns on those issues, deserve to be brought to the House of Commons. If bias is to be rooted out of the public Corporation, the House of Commons has an interest, I believe a serious and deep interest, in ensuring that it knows what the CBC and the Minister were talking about when they were discussing that issue.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my contribution to this debate. I will perhaps be a little more general than the two other Members who preceded me. I think it is essential that the CBC, as our primary cultural agency, be open to public scrutiny. I do not think anyone can deny that is important. I have heard all kinds of stories over the years of real and imagined biases within the CBC. Some of my friends in the Tory Party have on occasion approached me in the House at about nine o'clock and asked me whether I had had time yet to write the ten o'clock news. I know that some Members of my Party sometimes think that the ten o'clock news is written by the Government. Certainly, the Quebecois Liberals on the other side are sure that the CBC is dominated by separatists. Some people even insist that the political party who runs the CBC is the Rhinocerous Party. I am sure that all those things cannot be true. I guess it depends on which story you are looking at and at which time.

I will not go over the examples cited by the previous speaker, but I was here in the October crisis in 1970, and I know there was a directive that went out at that time from the President of the CBC, George Davidson, to all his newsmen to refrain from commenting on the imposition of the War Measures Act. The CBC was not entirely free, therefore, at that time of some sort of political pressure, though where it came from originally, I do not know. I do know that the CBC has a tradition of having for its Presidents rather highly placed civil servants, and I would like to say they are not always established at arm's length relationship with the Government; but it is hard to believe that after association throughout all those years they can suddenly forget their old friends, even though they might do their best to do so.

I believe all of us were concerned about the recent example of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appearing in his mini-series. Why that was done, I have no idea. I objected to it strenuously because while the Prime Minister has every right as the Leader of our country to speak to the nation, I did not think he was entitled to a serial. He spoke for three 15-minute shots rather than one 45-minute shot. I do not know whether that was because he felt he could not hold his audience for 45 minutes or what. That might have been part of it. Actually, what he could have done, had he wanted to, was to decide that a five-minute daily shot would be enough, and have nine of them. That might have been even better. He would have become almost as familiar as the test pattern. Nevertheless, I do not really want to talk about that at the moment.

I agree with the mover of the motion that the CBC spends a great deal of money. I do not think it spends too much money per capita. It provides more services than other state-owned and operated broadcasting systems. With two radio services, a far North service, an international service and two television services, I think we Canadians get very good value for our money.

The Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) claimed that the CBC had tripled its budget since 1973. I invite the Hon. Member to look back at the total federal spending since 1973. It has gone from $19 billion to roughly $70 billion. So the CBC on that point is not out of line. But it does not give the CBC a better excuse to deny this legitimate information. So I agree with the Hon. Member on that point.

The CBC has a tremendous mandate, and because of that it cannot be compared to the private broadcasting system, either in this country or in any other. In 1968 the mandate in the broadcast act was to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of the country. That is quite a mouthful. Also it was to serve the special needs of geographic regions, to contribute to the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment, as well as contribute to the development of national unity. It might be arguable whether it actually succeeds at that, but that is in its mandate. That is a pretty big mandate for any corporation.

No one can question the fact that sometimes it falls short of achieving some of its mandate, but I do not think anyone in this room or any other room can deny that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has been a major tool in achieving many of these rather lofty goals. The CBC is the main cultural institution in Canada. It seems to me that it is the most pervasive and most powerful. While it would be nice if more people went to concerts, listened to chamber music, recitals and lectures, the fact is that most people spend most of their leisure time watching television or going to the movies.

An Hon. Member: Or watching the House of Commons?

Mr. Rose: No, they are not watching the House of Commons, unfortunately.

Why do we have the CBC in the first place? It began under the Bennett Conservative Government. There was a feeling abroad that we would be inundated by American programming, and if we were going to develop our own cultural identity we had to have, in those days, one or two radio networks across Canada. Is this not also true today? That is why I could not really accept much of what the report of the Applebaum cultural commission recommended relating to the CBC. We established public broadcasting then, because it was either a choice of support by the state or domination by the United States. The same thing is true today, probably in spades.

• (1730)

We must ask if we need the CBC today. Does our cultural integrity, our social and economic fabric, need safeguarding, enriching, strengthening? Will private sector industries work toward these goals on their own, without the CBC? I doubt if that can be done. We have had the CRTC, and its content regulations and other protection but they have not worked out very well. The private sector has not produced much Canadian programming either, and I do not blame it. Private television networks such as CTV and Global have been forced, through economics, to use drama programs imported from the United States. Incidentally, as the Applebert Report points out, imported at a higher cost than these programs are sold to England. The fact that three networks are bidding for the same programs puts the price up.

With the best will in the world and despite promises made when they received their licences, private broadcasters cannot spend the money that is required to produce attractive Canadian programs. They are in an economic bind. The alternative is the popular U.S. imports. The only network with money to spend on programming is the CBC. I could elaborate on that point, Mr. Speaker, but I do not have the time today.

Some people claim that CBC should not be publisher and author at the same time, in other words, it should not be involved in hardware and in software at the same time, and that it is a conflict of rules for it to be a publisher before it has been an author. A lot of people argue that the CBC should not get into production but should concern itself with hardware, news, sports, weather and public affairs, and leave entertainment and drama to private enterprise. It is held that the CBC should buy entertainment from private production companies.

That is the Applebert solution, Mr. Speaker, but I do not buy it. I agree that private programmer must have more access to the CBC. The people who criticize the lack of more access to the CBC are right on point. I do not think anyone can defend the proposition that the CBC should not be more open. But there are a lot of competing interests to consider. Many of the creative people whose jobs depend on the CBC are concerned about the situation. It has been said that if all the variety and entertainment programming were taken away from CBC, as Applebert has recommended, approximately 6,000 jobs would be lost. Of course, some of those jobs might be picked up by the private networks, but I doubt it. Despite the content regulations and other efforts, however, the money has yet to be found to create a viable production industry in this country.

With the best will in the world, I do not think that the private sector can produce high quality Canadian programs. The market is simply too small. If programs are produced only for export, how can they truly reflect Canada? I think there must be a judicious mix of private and public programming and more money must be provided for this purpose. I believe that Canadians are entitled to the best domestic and foreign material available, regardless of the delivery system—whether it comes in by dish, by satellite, by wire or by cable. We must find a solution to that problem, otherwise the goal of national unity with which the CBC is charged will be lost in the squabble over who can watch what and the kind of censorship which is applied to what.

If that sounds like a departure from this Party's policy, Mr. Speaker, I do not apologize for it. As far back as 1968 or 1969 I asked the then Chairman of the CRTC why people in Mission or Vancouver were less impervious to cultural domination than people who lived in Edmonton? In my constituency viewers could pick up all kinds of U.S. signals in the air and it did not change our loyalty as Canadians. People in Edmonton did not receive those signals, however, and were denied the TV choices available to me. There was no way they could steal signals from the Americans because they did not have the cable companies and they certainly did not have the dish.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: What would the Hon. Member call it?

Mr. Bosley: Receiving.

Mr. Rose: I am sure the Hon. Member is a master of euphemisms.

The CBC must continue to produce programs and to broadcast those programs. I do not think there is any conflict in the publisher-author role at all, but I think we need other alternatives to an entirely monolithic public production system. This country is a living example of the mix of private and public enterprise that has worked very well up to now.

I should like to refer now to a very famous journalist who writes for that radical sheet, the Globe and Mail. In today's column Michael Valpy asks:

> What makes MASH affordable to the CBC is that the cost of the series is spread around the big American networks—

In an earlier paragraph in the article he wrote:

> Applebert assumes that once CBC television gets out of production, private production houses will be there to do the job.

I do not think that will be the case, and niether does Valpy, Mr. Speaker, unless they can get the money.

It is a truism to say that CBC costs too much, that it wastes too much money and that it is top heavy with bureaucracy. That is the conventional wisdom, and perhaps it is true in some cases. All these things could be said about some of the operations of any large corporation. But the CBC does not operate solely for money; its mandate precludes it from being in business only the nickels and dimes. It has a mandate which gives it many responsibilities. We should not look only to the balance sheet of the CBC. We gripe about its secrecy, its lack of flexibility, its repudiation of much private production, and make real criticisms in those areas, but I do not think we can judge it in the same way that a private network can be judged.

A study of the CBC carried out by McKinsey and Company compared it to the national networks of France, Great Britain, Japan, Australia and Sweden, in 1978. It showed that the CBC produces at least twice as many hours of programming per employee as the other networks, and that it produces between three and ten times more hours of programming per $1,000 than those networks. That is not a bad record, Mr. Speaker. It does not sound as if it is squandering money.

I tend to support the CBC because since 1932 my Party has supported the concept of public broadcasting. We do not think that private broadcasting should not exist but we believe that public broadcasting is crucial. Even that left wing sheet, known as the Toronto Sun, ran an editorial today which said, referring to the CBC, the Applebert Report goes one better than throwing the baby out with the bath water; it wants to throw out the baby and keep the bath water. In other words, it wants to throw out the programming aspect of CBC and just keep the hardware.

I think we have spent far too much money on hardware in this country, already Mr. Speaker, whether on radio transmitters or cable. Now, if we are not careful, each homeowner in the country will be asked to buy a satellite dish. We have all kinds of money for hardware, it seems, but not enough for software. That is why we do not have programs of the quality many people want.

There is just one other thing I should like to comment on before I sit down, Mr. Speaker. An elderly pundit with the Southam chain wrote a little column about me the other day in which he called me pathetic.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: He went on at great length.

An Hon. Member: Charles Lynch.

Mr. Rose: I am too kind to name him. He went on at great length and wrote, "But where has Rose been for the last dozen years?" This is the first time I have ever had a column dedicated to me, Mr. Speaker I am flattered. He asked where the NDP is when it is needed. He asked where I have been all these years. I would like to tell him. Obviously he does not do his homework. I read his articles occasionally, so I know that he very seldom does much research. He cannot really do much because he has to play his harmonica and do various other frivolous things such as talk on the CBC for a fee and run around playing with the Press Club band. Few of the Press Club band are reporters. I once asked a trumpet player how he got into the Press Club band, and he said, "Well, I bought a want ad once". In any event, the band and Charles are found over at the Press Club a good deal. I thought I would like to let him know that it is not a new interest that the NDP has expressed in the CBC and its problems and concerns. I looked back into committee proceedings for the past two years and discovered that I raised questions concerning the CBC and Canadian content 11 times. According to the indexing branch, those references take up 35 pages of text in the transcript.

• (1740)

An Hon. Member: Incredible.

Mr. Rose: Take that, Charlie, and put it in your harmonica.

Dealing with the CRTC, I have intervened in favour of expanded CBC and CBC II. I called for the CRTC to protect the programming base of CBC by restricting Canadian Pay TV to program types which are not presently being displayed for nothing. Also I intervened before the CRTC to support CBC II, an extension of television service with the CBC as the cornerstone, and to extend the package to northern rural areas. Also I have asked questions 12 times already in this session in the House of Commons.

My colleagues and I keep up our interest in public broadcasting. It goes back to 1932. We will not stand by and let Applebaum or any other highbrow suggest that the CBC be emasculated and the whole thing privatized, because privatization of the CBC is not the Canadian way at all. It is based entirely on the American model. We do not think it is suitable for Canada for two reasons, first, because Canadians need and want the CBC; second, because we do not have the market to support a private production industry such as the one existing in the United States, without destroying the very nature of the thing we are trying to enhance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ron Irwin (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I thought it would be much more serious than it is. What has happened, as usual, is that the poor CBC and the poor Canada Post, the two major institutions which bind our country together, have become the public's common ache.

I came here to discuss the Applebaum-Hébert report because I think it is one of the most profound reports we have received in several years.

An Hon. Member: What kind of a report?

Mr. Irwin: Hon. Members of the NDP should just quieten down and perhaps they will learn something.

I think a wide discussion, as requested by the authors of the report, is needed. I do not think we can be partisan about culture in the country.

As a result of what has been said, I feel that we should not be going the Cabinet route. I do not think the report should be transferred to Senator Austin, who has quite a wide-ranging knowledge. No doubt he will come up with very wise recommendations which may not fly in the House of Commons because, like everything that goes this route, it may become partisan. Like obstacles, the acid rain report, or the reform of the House, something like this should go to a parliamentary or a special committee.

As I look around the House, I see expertise in the Opposition and in the Government backbenches on every field relating to the report, except the record industry. We have authors, publishers and former media people. In fact, we have people who are publishing now, and I myself was on the CRTC for three years. I think it is a shame to take something like this and have it end up, after having spent $3 million and several years of study, as a bucket of ashes; just a parliamentary report which may get a week to a week and a half of media hype and then is forgotten.

I think this matter is important, but because my time is limited I want to make those comments first. My conclusion in terms of this report is that it should go through some kind of committee of the House of Commons. We should go through it and look, not just at the CBC, which is only part of the report, but at the entire area. I think the media has failed miserably in that it highlighted the electronic media and forgot the private media completely. It has turned into a CBC critique, and I do not think that was the intention of the report.

I understand from some of the members of the committee that they are not happy—and these people come from all fields—with what has happened to the report. The only discussion we hear is about the CBC. In any event, at this point I should like to discuss the CBC, but first I want to make it clear that it is only part of our culture.

An Hon. Member: A big part.

Mr. Irwin: A big part but not the most important one. The most important part of our culture is the regions which, in the words of Northrop Frye, "throw up their talents to major centres". If the CBC part of this report is important, it is only because the authors clearly pointed out that the CBC completely ignored regional talent and the out-house talent in Canada; it is now struck, in the words of the authors, with in-house hardening of the arteries.

Most of the things indicated in the report have been said by other Members of the House and by other committees. We have been saying it for so long that I think it is about time to start getting down to implementing many of the suggestions.

In reviewing this matter, I got carried away and went back to 1949 when we first invented the CBC. On March 28, 1949 the Government said that the CBC would be set up, that we would lend it $4 million and that that was the last Canadian taxpayers would have to pay for it. It indicated that the money to keep the CBC going would come from permits for which people would pay when they purchased television sets. Almost immediately, in 1950, it went to $4.5 million, and now, as has been indicated by other speakers, it is three-quarters of a billion dollars.

The mandate has not been followed by the CBC. I should like to refer to a very important statement in the report which read as follows:

> Too many Canadians are beginning to question the very need for a public broadcaster such as the CBC.

For the benefit of the NDP Member who defended the CBC, I should like to indicate that the Minister gives it only lukewarm support. Fewer and fewer people are supporting it and its television. That is bad. We do not see this happening with CBC Radio. There is a very small loyal and articulate group which says that it is good and that it should be protected, but more and more we find fewer and fewer people supporting the concept of the CBC. This bodes badly for what is happening to CBC television.

The report dealt with many things which we know, such as the fact that broadcasting is risky and that because of dishes we will soon be tiering programs. For example, if I want to watch a show on carpentry, on French or on Spanish, it will be available. There will be shows on many channels geared to individuals interests. Also, the report dealt with fragmentation of audience and reach.

Reach is very important. This is the problem with the CBC. It is more involved with reach than it is with its original mandate. Reach is this—how many people do I reach? Then that number is taken to the people to whom the Corporation sells advertising and they pay X number of dollars; it increases in direct proportion to the reach. The more people it reaches, the more it gets for its advertising. Thus, what does it do? It goes to the most popular American programs. It is crazy to use taxpayers' money so that the CBC can get involved in production of advertising, which nobody really watches. It pays $11 million a year to affiliates so they can show the advertising and show the so-called Canadian programming, which reaches the greatest audience which means American programming shown by affiliates. Therefore, on top of everything else, $11 million is paid by the CBC to its affiliates so that we can show more American programming. That is the main problem with the CBC.

I had high hopes when Pierre Juneau went to the CBC. No matter how partisan we are with regard to Pierre Juneau, he was the best original thinker on the CRTC. His FM policy, the Canadian content policy and others, all were his original thinking. There has not been much new since 1968. Most of the things I dealt with when I was at the CRTC were things Pierre Juneau initiated. I think he may become overwhelmed by the CBC octopus. I think the job is too big for Pierre Juneau. I think that a parliamentary committee should go in and say, "This is what we want." I think the CBC is so big that Pierre Juneau's talents will be wasted at the CBC unless we support him. That means that as well as criticizing the CBC we should adopt things that have been suggested in the report. We should remove the advertising and get back the Canadian content, get back to having Canadian actors, writers and performers in place, and say that we will give support if it costs a few extra dollars.

Mr. Rose: It is $150 million.

Mr. Irwin: At the same time, we could go to private broadcasters, whom most Members in this House are too timid to attack. We are very good at attacking the CBC but we do not attack the private broadcasters because we may need them. We should say to them that $100 million has come out of the CBC budget—I disagree with the report, they will not get $100 million because their reach will still be the same, but they will get a good portion of that $100 million—and ask, what have you done lately to employ Canadian actors and writers who are fleeing to the United States? We must be doing something right. We have produced them. But they are off to Florida, California and New York, and we do not see them again. Broadcasters are making $1 billion in revenue each year. TV, radio and the private sector make $1 billion in revenue in advertising, minus costs. I was almost sick when I had to ask, as a person from the region, to go to the CRTC, and while I had the privilege of seeing these financial statements, which the taxpayer did not, I had to sit there and talk about community channelling and what that person was not doing to hire Canadians to do the work, only to hear them reply that they could not afford it. I was not able to rebut because the figures were confidential.

That is not the case in the United States. Most of what is done in the United States I disagree with. But any broadcaster who has a licence in the United States has to make those figures public. We have protected monopolies. They are protected in the sense that they are given the privilege of a licence. If anyone else tries to use the frequency, or in the case of cable, the area involved, we lay criminal charges and send in the police. But for the privilege of a licence in the United States, figures have to be made public. In Canada we have to rely once a year on Statistics Canada. How can any individual broadcaster, say, from Saskatchewan or from the Hon. Member's area say, that a certain number of dollars are needed to hire local people? That is virtually an impossible thing to do unless the public has access to those figures. Parliamentarians have access to those figures and act on them.

No one knocks the CBC in the sense that it is not producing quality. The question is, are we getting $792.6 million worth of quality per year from the CBC? Are we getting the biggest bang from the bucks we are putting into the CBC? After three years of administering the CBC and other groups in the CRTC, I say no. A lot of money is being squandered unnecessarily. I do not think the CBC has the same group with the same concept it initially had. I think the death of the CBC came when it cancelled the program "This Hour has Seven Days." I think that was the downturn of the CBC. That program was too good.

Mr. Rose: Who cancelled that program?

An Hon. Member: The Liberal Government cancelled it.

Mr. Irwin: An Hon. Member asks who did it. I sat with one of the producers who eventually became a CRTC commissioner—

Mr. Blaikie: Which Government cancelled that program?

Mr. Irwin: That is a discussion I would like to get into with the Hon. Member at some point, confidentially. But I think the cancellation of that program was the downturn of the CBC. It became less adventurous. The CBC refused to do new things. Each time Hon. Members go out to the airport, they should look at the huge building housing the CBC. That is the CBC today. The bucks are not being put in the production end. You have very "funny" people doing production at the far end—people who produce the culture in this country do not sit in the CBC building. This building houses the middle and high management personnel for CBC who may destroy the CBC. There are more people shuffling ideas around so that the money is just not getting to the place where we want it. Production is where the money should go. That is the bottom line.

You cannot force people to watch Canadian programming just because it is Canadian, as I told the Hon. Member. Canadian programming has to be good. We put money out for productions such as the program on Louis Riel. That program cost $24 million, but it was good and people watched it. The program was sellable. I do not think Canadians would begrudge programs on, say, Fraser, the Plains of Abraham, or MacKenzie, or any number of things in our history. We have such a rich historical culture. Canadian historical culture is much richer than American, yet my children know more about Howdy Doody, Wild Bill Hickock and Jesse James than they do about Cartier, Champlain or Fraser. If the CBC took this money and spent it wisely—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2) be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us tonight is one of several measures brought before the House in the budget of June 28. As part of its over-all strategy to reduce inflation, the Government is asking as many groups as possible—taxpayers, public servants, mothers receiving family allowances and pensioners—to help set the course toward achieving this goal. We ask these Canadians to accept a cap on the indexation of their income taxes and benefits over the next two years. But we do so in the fervent hope that all others, acknowledging this sacrifice, will voluntarily agree to commit themselves to similar programs of restraint.

Asking some Canadians to accept now what we can only hope for on the part of others was, I must say, one of the most difficult actions that we as Government have had to take. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made that point very clear in his recent talks. After all, we know that we cannot give any guarantees to pensioners that others will join them in the fight against inflation but, at the same time, we are optimistic and believe in the willingness of all Canadians to participate in this critical national challenge.

The purpose of Bill C-131 is twofold. First, it proposes to limit indexation of the basic Old Age Security pension, known as OAS, to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent the year after. The basic pension, as all Hon. Members are aware, is payable to all persons at age 65 who meet certain Canadian residence requirements.

The second purpose, which I stress because of its importance, is that the Bill proposes that the full value of the two pensions paid to low income pensioners be maintained during this period. Thus, pensioners with low incomes who are eligible to receive what is called the Guaranteed Income Supplement, or GIS, or spouses' allowance benefits, will not be affected adversely by the proposal to limit indexation of the basic pension. In other words, these benefits will be doubly increased, that is, they will be increased fully, in accordance with the changes in the Consumer Price Index, and increased by an additional amount to offset the loss associated with the limited indexation of the basic pension. In other words, more than half of the Canadian pensioners—this is the key point of this Bill—will not be affected at all by this legislation, and all pensioners will receive more in 1983 or in 1984 than in this current year, 1982.

This second proposal testifies, if it is necessary to do so, to this Government's long held commitment to assist the most vulnerable members of Canadian society, especially in times of economic difficulty.

[Translation]

The Government has always done its utmost to adjust its Old Age Security program to the economic realities facing all Canadians. Especially in recent years, which have inflicted the hardship of high inflation, the program's structure, and in this it is unique among all our government programs, has helped the aged to cope with the rising cost of living, and it has done so every three months and not just once a year.

Today, all Canadians are struggling with a new economic reality. By implementing radical, and I do mean radical, measures to reduce inflation, we shall be able to surmount our problems. Canadians at all levels of society must adjust to this situation, difficult though it may be, in order to avoid increasing hardship in the future.

[English]

Responding to this reality is what Bill C-131 and similar measures before the House are all about. Effective for 1983, that is toward the end of January, 1983, we propose that indexing of the basic pension be limited to 1.5 per cent of the current old age pension every three months, to reach an exact increase of 6 per cent for the full year. In 1984, similarly every three months, the pension cheques will be increased by 1.25 per cent, to reach an annual total of 5 per cent for the complete year.

No doubt, Members opposite will argue that this proposal departs from the Government's policy to protect the elderly against inflation. But I reject such charges at the outset. We certainly are not proposing to eliminate indexing of the basic pension. We are saying that pensions should continue to be indexed and will be, but for a limited time this indexation will be at a somewhat lower rate than the actual rate of inflation. For example, pensioners now receive basic monthly benefits of close to $247, or $246.92 to be exact. With full indexation, such pensioners would see their benefits rise next January to $251.12. Instead, we are asking them to accept $250.62, which is a reduction of 50 cents each month in the period between January and March, 1983. Over this two-year period of a special national solidarity campaign, pensioners would receive about $29 less in 1983 and about $52 less in 1984 than they would have received if no limit were placed on indexation.

Naturally, we hope that by working together we can bring inflation down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in those years. A year ago last November inflation was running at 12.7 per cent. It went as high as 13 per cent in July. It is now down to 10 per cent, the lowest rate since May of 1980. If we manage to achieve our objective, Bill C-131 will have only a limited effect on pensioners, perhaps negative compared to the expectations in the short run but very beneficial for the future. Of the more than 2.3 million persons who receive the basic Old Age Security, slightly less than one half receive that pension and do not need any supplement, any GIS. These pensioners, the elderly who have some other sources of income on which to rely, and I recognize that often it is modest but it is more than what the vast majority of seniors have, are the ones who will see smaller increases in their monthly pensions.

In describing the provisions of Bill C-131 I have tried to describe frankly its impact on pensioners and the impact we hope it will have on influencing the attitudes of all Canadians.

We are asking 1.1 million old age pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation. I am very conscious of the sacrifice we are asking of them. Their pensions will continue to be indexed, but at a lower rate than might otherwise be necessary perhaps fully to keep pace with changes in the consumer price index. I have to stress that it is not without reluctance that we make this request. We do so with the knowledge that these pensioners who are relatively better off, will be able to adjust accordingly.

[Translation]

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, I am very aware of the feelings of uncertainty that exist among pensioners generally, about the future of the Old Age Security pension. Everyone knows about recent rumours to the effect that the universality of this pension was threatened. I think it is high time these rumours should be laid to rest.

The Government has no intention of telling Canadians who have worked and paid taxes all their lives that the pension they earned, as it were, through their contribution to Canadian society, a pension they have been counting on, has suddenly disappeared.

Mr. Speaker, the Old Age Security pension is universal, and as such it is the basis of the Canadian system of income security for the aged. If we analyze this system, we see that whatever a person's income, there is a social contract, as it were, that guarantees a basic pension for everyone. This universal old age pension which is paid to all Canadians who are sixty-five or over, provides a starting point, and represents approximately 15 per cent of the average wage, that is, of the ideal pension. Now, does the fact that we are going through difficult times mean that we are not going to get our Old Age Security pension? I hope I have just made it clear that we are, but does it mean that there is no other way to reform the system? Of course not. I think there is room for change both inside and outside the system. I shall outline these changes quickly, although I am aware that it will take time to implement them. First of all, there will have to be a reform of private pension plans, which means updating existing plans with respect to indexation, survivor's benefits and portability, as well as providing that majority of full-time and part-time workers who do not have access to a company pension plan with a proper pension fund. However, this evening I am not going to dwell on a subject on which public debate is to begin very shortly. I would prefer to indicate the salient points of future internal changes I feel are both possible and desirable. On several occasions recently, I have tried to make Canadians aware of the new world-wide economic situation and its consequences. For instance, in our capacity as national health and welfare Ministers, my predecessors and I have always tried over the years to convince out Cabinet colleagues to regularly approve considerable increases which were paid out of the public treasury and were added to our regular program budget. In 1979, for example, I told Canadians there would be an extra $20 a month per household for the spouse's supplement and allowance. That was an additional $290 million added to the program practically overnight, not to mention cost of living indexation. In 1980, I received parliamentary approval—easily, I must say—to raise the spouse's supplement and allowance by $35 a month for couples or single people. That was another increase of $500 million added permanently to our programs.

The significant aspect in all this, it seems to me, is that the current or forthcoming economic situation makes it imperative that we take a second look at the options open to us. I have come to the conclusion that we must be very careful before considering the possibility of allocating new funds to meet our social objectives, because the amounts involved in my area are always quite considerable, and I am fully aware that tonight is the first time I put it in so many terms before the House. A higher supplement for single persons in need, the political reality of the current economic situation and, above all, fairness in most cases, all those factors prompt us to consider the possibility of re-allocations within our programs and of tax exemptions for the elderly. This is what I mean. People generally think that we have only two programs, namely the basic old age security pension and the supplement which is paid to approximately 55 per cent of our senior citizens.

But we do have at least two other programs besides those but we seldom hear about them: the $2,200 annual tax exemption for people over 65, and the $1,000 tax exemption for those who receive what we call a retirement income or an income from private pension plans. If we could use a diagram to illustrate this and I often regret that it cannot be done in our proceedings, the overall distribution of these four programs would show that middle and higher income groups profit more from the age exemption and the retirement income deduction. The richer one is, the bigger the benefit from these tax exemptions. For instance, the value of old age pension, age exemption and retirement income deduction is the same whether a retired couple gets $10,000 or $50,000 from additional revenues. This raises questions. Under our present system, it is doubtful whether our intended goal can be achieved through indiscrimating programs that afford the same benefits to lower and higher income groups. One thing is certain, lower income pensioners, in other words those who are eligible for the G.I.S. do not get any tax exemption at all because their income is not high enough to qualify. This is why we say that tax exemptions as such are socially regressive. Therefore, this will eventually have to be reviewed from a practical standpoint, bearing in mind that most pensioners live on a fixed income, the real value of which they can no longer negotiate. What are the possible changes? The question is two-fold: First how can current tax inequities be corrected and second what incentive can be given to Canadians who managed to put money aside during their working life to provide for their old age?

So let us review rapidly the overall value of these programs. Roughly, old age pension expenditures account for $7 billion, some $300 million of which are recouped by the Treasury as taxes. But the supplement is not taxable, if I am not mistaken, it totals $2.5 billion. The basic tax exemption, the $2,220 a year and the exemption applicable to pension income, $1,000 a year, mean an indirect government expenditure of a few hundred millions in tax losses. Any discussion involving change and reform, must consider the overall budget, which means, a total amount of some $9.5 billion, before introducing any changes that would meet our intended goals. For instance, if it is agreed that an increase of, say, $250 million in the supplement of single or widowed recipients, 75 per cent of whom are women, is really necessary, the question is where to find such an amount in times of economic difficulty. Tax revenues have dropped; the cutbacks in the various departments have been used for job creation, which is clearly a national priority, and high interest rates still make any increase in the deficit unthinkable. I emphasize this last point because, in spite of the position taken recently by the New Democratic Party, there are people in this House and throughout Canada who believe that we can simply increase the deficit by a few hundred million dollars to achieve our pressing objectives. However, beyond a certain point, the interests payable on the deficit become intolerable because, from the point of view of a minister of social affairs, it is a waste of money. We must be realistic and avoid seemingly easy answers which would only prolong the economic crisis and exert even more pressure on all future social budgets.

So, we would have to find about $250 million, for instance, to increase the supplement of the 725,000 single or widowed recipients, most of whom are women, as I mentioned earlier, and living under the poverty line, while keeping in mind that it is impossible to find this money elsewhere in any foreseeable future. It therefore seems to me that wisdom dictates that we should analyze, apart from the first objective which is clearly related to social justice, the tax incentives to encourage savings with a view to improving them in the case of senior citizens. Is it not fair to reward those who have saved all their lives by increasing if possible—and I am simply asking the question—the exemption on investment income or by taking any other fair and appropriate tax measure?

Such matters could be the subject of any future discussion with a view to improving the financial programs for our senior citizens. Having said this, I hope that I have made it clear that we intend to maintain old age pensions at their present level, and I have also dealt with two other aspects of our programs for senior citizens.

[English]

In conclusion, our senior citizens who are on fixed incomes suffer more than others from the effects of uncontrolled inflation. It is my conviction, therefore, that we must work toward a future world of six and five and later of even less inflation.

There is not a lot of room in which to manoeuvre, and I believe that all Canadians should support the measures of the Government to bring this problem under control. What it means in the long run is that all seniors will be better off. The fight against inflation must be our top priority.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of care to what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had to say about this Bill to amend the Old Age Security Act. I did so because I had to listen very carefully. I know the Minister is suffering from a bad bout of laryngitis. I can sympathize with her because I know that is about the worst affliction any politician can suffer. Having said that, I can also tell her that is the last word of sympathy she is going to get from me tonight.

I am shocked that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would bring in a Bill like this. I listened to what she had to say. It was a rather subdued speech, I may say. All the time she was speaking, I wondered what kind of battle really went on in Cabinet over this Bill. I wondered what she had to say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when this proposal came up. Did she have anything to say to the Minister of Finance that would have stopped this mean, wretched measure?

Seldom has a bill come before this House so ill-conceived, so ad hoc in its approach, so mean in its impact or so disturbing in its implications. It is a Bill which exposes this Government's distorted sense of priorities as well as its gross mismanagement of the economy. Indeed, the Bill should never have come before this House. If Members opposite had any backbone, they would join with us in seeing that this Bill never passes this House.

When the Minister of Finance brought in the six and five program as the centrepiece of the June budget, he applied it to our two major income security programs, old age security and the family allowance. He told us that, beginning in January, 1983, old age pensions and family allowances would no longer be indexed to the actual rate of inflation as measured by the consumer price index, but instead would be limited to an increase of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984.

At the same time, the Minister of Finance told us that those senior citizens who receive the guaranteed income supplement or the spouse's allowance, either in full or in part, would be protected against the partial de-indexing. Not only would the guaranted income supplement and the spouse's allowance continue to be fully indexed to the actual rate of inflation, but they would be increased to compensate for any loss in the basic old age pension.

He went on to say, with regard to the other income security program, that mothers eligible for the income-tested child tax credit receive up to an extra $50 per child for the 1982 tax year. We learned that the child tax credit benefits and family income thresholds for receiving the child tax credit would continue to be fully indexed to inflation.

I review all of this because it is important to understand two things. First, it is important to understand how shabbily a large number of our senior citizens are being treated under this legislation. Second, it is important to understand how unfavourably their treatment compares to that of Canadians who receive benefits under other income security programs.

This legislation is directed against the 1.2 million senior citizens who do not qualify for either full or partial guaranteed income supplement. What does this legislation do to these 1.2 million people? Assuming that inflation stays at its current rate of 10 per cent, each one of those 1.2 million senior citizens will lose $290 in the next two years, just over $70 next year and a further $220 in 1984. They will lose $290. Who are these 1.2 million Canadians who are being asked to make this sacrifice? Some of them, it is true, are probably well off, but I would say to the Minister, a great many of those 1.2 million Canadians are not. Some of those people are single elderly people with incomes just over $8,900 a year. That is where the cutoff comes for those who receive the full guaranteed income supplement. Those receiving more than $8,900 a year, whose incomes are just in excess of that figure, are the ones this legislation hits hardest. People who receive an income of $8,900 a year, or a bit more, if they happen to live in one of our major urban centres like Quebec City, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Calgary or Vancouver, already live below the poverty line. Their total income, Mr. Speaker, is $25 a day. This legislation will cost these single elderly people $290 over the next two years. To put it another way, it will cost them 12 days' income at $25 a day. That is why this Bill is so mean and ill-conceived.

This Bill also zeros in on another group, the elderly married couples with incomes of just over $15,000. They suffer a loss in income over the next two years of $580. That is what they are going to lose. That comes to about two months' rent for people in that category, and they will have to find that two months' rent somewhere else. Almost 25,000 single elderly people have incomes between $9,000 and $10,000, and another 25,000 seniors living as married couples, have incomes between $15,000 and $16,000. That is 50,000 elderly, Mr. Speaker, who are going to be hardest hit by the Government's six and five legislation. The Minister said tonight, these are the ones who are to lead the way in the fight against inflation, the elderly Canadians. Fifty thousand elderly Canadians will be the hardest hit, single people with incomes between $9,000 and $10,000 or married people with incomes between $15,000 and $16,000. Those incomes are hardly riches or largesse. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they are hardly enough to live on in Canada in this winter of 1982.

Twenty-five dollars a day is what these people are getting to pay the rent or the property taxes, to pay the upkeep of a home, perhaps even a car; or to pay for transport to and from supermarkets, the doctor, the pharmacy, the library; to pay for food, hydro, heating, oil, gas. That is where the $25 a day has to go, to pay for the telephone, perhaps the luxury of a daily newspaper or cable television. It is really not very much, $9,000 or $10,000 a year in Canada in the winter of 1982. There is no great margin for extravagance. Indeed, there is no margin at all. Yet the Government is effectively cutting the income of these elderly Canadians. It is penalizing them for having the virtue of living just beyond the threshold of the guaranteed income supplement. They cannot expect to have the loss which they will sustain in the basic old age pension made up in the guaranteed income supplement. Truly, it is these people who are being required to bear the burden of the six and five legislation.

There is such a pettiness, such a meanness in this Bill, a meanness beyond justification, indeed, beyond comprehension. How much, I would ask, can the Government hope to save from these 50,000 senior citizens who are the first level to be hit? How much is it going to save by applying this six and five measure against that first group? Is it going to save $15 million or $20 million? That is a trifling sum to a Government, to this Government particularly, the biggest spenders of all time. But $15 million or $20 million to these 50,000 senior citizens is no trifle, sir. Even if it is split amongst the 50,000, it still is very meaningful. The $12 a month that it represents to every one of these senior citizens can make a big difference, the difference of having or not having a telephone, keeping the thermostat a degree warmer, or of eating nutritious food, fresh fruit and vegetables, even the difference of having $12 a month for the little luxury of spirit and soul, a frivility above the bare bones of existence.

This miserly measure is doubly hard to understand because of the double standard the Government imposes. These 50,000 senior citizens whom I have identified as the first level will be denied the full indexing of their old age security, they will be denied that $12 or so per month. But at the same time, a senior public servant is allowed to enjoy an expensive sabbatical in Paris, subsidized by the taxpayers. That sabbatical, Mr. Speaker, of that public servant would, in dollar terms, be enough to pay for the indexing cutback of some 1,000 of these 50,000 senior citizens. That is what it would pay for.

Ebenezer Scrooge was a miser, but at least he was an honest one. He denied himself as much as he did his employees and his victims, but the same cannot be said for the front benchers opposite. They simply do not comprehend what it is like to live on $9,000 or $10,000 a year, one-tenth of their ministerial salaries. If they did, they would never proceed with this Bill. Perhaps, if they were more in touch with the people in this income bracket, they might begin to appreciate the impact of this Bill.

I do not know whether the Minister has had much mail on this subject, but I can tell her I have received a lot. I would like to quote from one such letter because it refers to the Minister's statement earlier this year when she told the senior citizens who were to accept this six and five limitation that they would have to learn to live with it. And this lady said, referring to the Minister, that she may be able to live with it, "but I am very much afraid I may not. I am finding that living through my second Canadian depression is much more worrying than my first." The next page of the letter reads as follows:

• (2040)

I have an income of approximately $8000, alimony, OAP and CPP. I am not eligible for any extra Federal assistance because I sold an RRSP last year. I live in a one room apartment, in an older building which is now out of rent controls, thanks to yearly 'legal' raises. I have a 15 year old Ford I can no longer afford to drive. Two years ago, I put every extra cent I had into a small house, 50 miles out of the city, considering it a wise investment. It is rented because I cannot afford to live in it. I can't sell it at any price, because of the financial situation, and can't ask enough rent to cover the increased mortgage payments, let alone utility and fire insurance.

Every ongoing, basic living expense has gone up this year: food, medical premiums, automobile insurance, light and telephone bills, property tax—everything!

I haven't dared to see my automobile mechanic or my dentist. I can't buy clothes, eat in a restaurant, go to a theatre, or think of a holiday anywhere, ever. And this is my Golden Age in the wonderful country of my birth?

That, Sir, is indicative of the response of many elderly Canadians to this six and five measure and to the cutbacks that they will have to sustain.

I would like you to contrast that with the treatment that young families with children received in the June budget. Again, assuming 10 per cent inflation, families with children will get $54 less per child over the next two years as a result of the proposed Bill C-132; $17.76 less in 1983, and $36.60 less in 1984. However, in 1983 when they file their income tax returns, if their family income is $27,000 or less, they will receive $50 per child more in child tax credit benefits. So families with two children and incomes of less than $27,000 will actually come out ahead in 1983, and will lose about $50 over the whole two year period.

Let me underscore what this will mean, Mr. Speaker. It will mean that single pensioners with incomes of $9,000 will lose $290 in this two-year period, but families with two children and incomes of $27,000 will lose less than $50 over the life of the program. That is the inequity, Mr. Speaker.

I would ask the Minister where she considers the equity to be in the proposals she is putting forward. Does the Minister seriously argue that a single, elderly widow with a $9,000 per year income should be sacrificing six times as much as a family with a $27,000 income? Does she also argue that such people should have the base for their future pension entitlement permanently lowered by these two years of arbitrary indexing at six and five? Why are they being asked to do this? The Government claims it is because of restraint and to free the money for job creation.

A study of the figures in the budget papers will show that they make a mockery of the claim. The budget papers reveal that the amount the Government will save from the changes to the old age pension, the family allowance and the child tax credit amount to $10 million. That is all that is saved out of the great six and five program for seniors.

Mr. Deans: Dammit, you voted for it. What are you talking about?

Miss MacDonald: But at the same time, the Government has found money to pay out $300 million in $3,000 cash grants to first-time home buyers and to any buyer of a newly built home costing up to $100,000. That means that the Government is giving $3,000 to people who can afford a $10,000 downpayment and monthly mortgage payments requiring an annual income of $40,000.

Less than a month ago we learned that interest charges on the public debt would be $990 million less than was forecast last June. That is money the Government suddenly found; it was a windfall. Is any of that $990 million being diverted to job creation? Not a nickel, Mr. Speaker. We have not heard a word about anything of that nature. We have to take the $290 from the old age pensioners with incomes of $9,000 per year to make up for the job-creation program. That is what the Minister proposes. But the Government does not propose to touch the $990 million that it suddenly found.

When I consider the kind of priorities that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance have sought to bring in through these various measures, I ask myself how they can stand there and defend them. How can anybody on that side of the House defend them? But after listening to the Minister of National Health and Welfare tonight, I conclude that she has no difficulty in defending any measure like this. She does not even seem to know what she is proposing.

On November 4 on "Canada AM", referring to the universality question, the Minister said:

> All social programs, that means in particular pensions and all benefits for children, will remain the way they are. People are in the middle of an economic crisis and they need stability.

Well, they sure do—especially with incomes of less than $10,000 a year.

So why would she make such a statement when she had Bills on the Order Paper—Bill C-131 and Bill C-132—making very significant changes in the old age security and family allowance programs? One can only hope that she meant no further changes, but if not, her capacity for self-deception is truly remarkable.

There are only two logical explanations for this Bill, Mr. Speaker. One is simple incompetence. The Government simply did not know what it was doing. The second is that the Government decided to move away from universality in stages.

First, they would de-index the universal income security payments, such as the basic old age pension and the family allowance. This was to be followed in October by income-testing family allowance itself. If that was successful, they would then look at income testing the old age pension. There is considerable evidence to support that interpretation.

Much has been written in the past few weeks to the effect that the Minister of Finance wanted to cease making the family allowance universal. When caucus opposition made that impossible, he did an end run around the caucus and went public with the idea. The changes he suggests would be a radical departure from what Canadians have come to expect and accept.

Much of the retirement planning in this country has presumed the existence of universal old age pension. The $26.91 mothers receive each month to help them raise their children is seen as recognition of the important social role those who care for our future generations perform. Moreover, up to 30 per cent of the benefits flowing to those with the above average incomes, flows back to the Government in taxes.

If the Government really wants to bring some order out of the confusion of our income security system, there are much better ways to proceed than with this Bill. There is much that can be done through the tax system and otherwise to see that the funds available for income security programs are targeted much more equitably according to need. For instance, the tax expenditures represented by the exemption for dependent children might be used instead to enrich the refundable child tax credit. The age exemption might be converted into an income tested refundable tax credit for the elderly. Methods could be devised to pay out such credits monthly, so that eligible recipients would have a steady cash flow. We should in fact examine with the Provinces—and I have asked the Minister about this before—the whole system of taxation and transfer payments. This could be done with a view to making graduated levels of payment based on income and this, in turn, would strengthen incentives for people to earn more, as opposed to the present system with its arbitrary cut-off lines which encourages dependency. These are some examples of how the Government might better approach this whole question.

What we should avoid at all costs is what Bill C-131 and Bill C-132 set out to do, that is, to approach this important and sensitive area of public policy with ad hoc solutions designed to deal with short-term problems. The result of such an approach is inequity. Indeed, it produces results which are at cross purposes with the goals stated. Worst of all, the present inequities and the anomalies in our income security and retirement income systems are compounded, and a comprehensive solution is made more difficult.

It is no accident or coincidence that the Government which has given birth to this mean-spirited Bill is the Government which has dragged its feet for a year in bringing in its Green Paper on pension reform. How often have I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare say that she will be bringing in that Green Paper on pension reform next week or next month? I have heard it dozens of times. That Green Paper must be grey with age by now, and we still have not seen it.

The population in Canada of 65 years and over has risen more than 600,000 in the last ten years alone. That age group is growing at an annual rate of 3 per cent. This means that without any increase in real benefits, the economy will have to grow 3 per cent each year just to provide the revenue necessary to support pensions for these people. We must comprehend fully what that means. It means that the larger the population which reaches age 65, with little or no Canada Pension Plan, private pension income or private savings, the greater the public burden will be, since these people will have to be supported by the guaranteed income supplement. If we do not move on pension reform, we will find ourselves encouraging a greater and greater public debt. Even for the most selfish motivations we must act with urgency to see that Canadians now moving toward retirement have the maximum opportunity to make provision for their retirement income.

This means broadening the number of people covered by the Canada Pension Plan and reforms to see that it is adequately funded. It means making private pension plans and personal savings instruments such as RRSPs more accessible to people who have to move from one job to another, or work part-time, or drop out of the labour force to raise children. It means making it possible for women who work in the home to build up pension entitlements in their own right. It means early vesting in private pension plans and a change in attitudes so that people are encouraged to begin planning for their retirement from the moment they enter the labour force. It means all this and more.

We do have enough time, barely enough, to begin making these adjustments. The population from infancy to age 17 years, on whose behalf family allowance and the child tax credit are paid, is declining. There are about 850,000 fewer people in that age group today than there were ten years ago, and that decline is accelerating. This means that family allowances and the child tax credit will be less of a burden on the public purse over the next few years than they have been in the past. Also it means that an increasing portion of our population is of working age, contributing to the economy. If we use this period wisely to assist people in providing for their retirement, and if the economy resumes moderate economic growth with moderate rates of inflation, we can adequately support those who will be retiring in the next two decades.

Every year we let slip by without action makes it more and more difficult to avoid real crisis when the elderly becomes the largest single age group in the population. If we fail to prepare for it, we will have no excuse because the warning has already been given in the age group statistics of the 1981 census.

With a challenge such as this, with exciting new ideas proliferating daily on ways to make our major income support programs more rational and more humane, the fact that we are debating here tonight, a Bill such as this, is to me a source of anger and frustration to the Minister and her colleagues it should be a source of shame.

Perhaps there is a single virtue to this mean-spirited and ill-conceived Bill, a Bill which attempts to bail out the Government from the consequences of its economic and fiscal mismanagement on the backs of the elderly, near poor. Nothing could demonstrate more clearly than this Bill the urgent need for a comprehensive reform of both our income security and retirement income systems. The bankruptcy of an ad hoc policy of muddling through is nakedly exposed in this Bill. My hope is that it may provide the impetus for policies that will make it possible for those systems to fulfil better their original purposes, that is, helping those in need and ensuring a life of dignity for the elderly. That possibility, that hope, is no argument in favour of voting for this Bill. Instead my Party will vote to defend the lot of hundreds of thousands of senior citizens, elderly citizens whose existence will be made much more difficult because the Government singles them out as their primary target in the effort to correct its own economic mismanagement. My Party will be voting against this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). As I listened to her, I thought back to the time about two or three weeks ago when my little guy was getting underfoot at home and to keep him busy and out of his mother's way, I said, "Hey, son, go into the den and look up in the dictionary to see if you can find for me a name that would properly describe something or someone who would be capable of swallowing himself." He did that. An hour later he came back and said, "I have found it. It is a Tory." he said. After listening to the previous speaker, I can fully understand what he said. That Party several weeks ago waxed eloquent in support of the Liberal's six and five program. In fact, in this very House the Tories voted in favour of a component of that program.

• (2100)

We know in this House that when the previous Conservative Government was elected they were going to do exactly the same thing the Liberals are trying to do in this Bill. We know, and the people of Canada know, that if the Tories were ever elected again they would be as bad as the Liberals. I do not have to say that. The previous Minister of Finance for the Tory Government, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), is reported in the Sunday Star for November 14 as saying this:

> When you ask somebody how you would go about cutting spending and that somebody is not in the Government, you're not likely to get clear answers because nobody wants to enunciate unpopular action until they're in the Government.

I do not see that particular Party as being any different from the gang over there. In fact, that Party would probably dismantle more programs in their hurry to reduce deficits and save their corporate friends from unnecessary tax increases.

We in the New Democratic Party unequivocally state our opposition to this Bill. As far as we are concerned, we will not be happy until the Government withdraws that Bill.

This Bill is an offensive piece of legislation and it should not be allowed to pass through this House. If this Government is allowed to get away with punishing the elderly in Canada, it will be to the shame of every Member in this House, Liberal Members included. In fact, after all of the things the Minister has said over the years in expressing her concern for the elderly, the poor and the disadvantaged in this country, for her to come out an hour ago and openly support what this Government is doing is unacceptable. I say that if she has any self-respect at all she would resign in protest against what the Government is doing to the elderly poor in this country.

We will have no part of this Bill at all in this corner of the House. What this Government wants to do is place a limit on the only protection that seniors have against the erosion of their purchasing power as a result of inflation. The Government wants that limit to be 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. In addition, the Minister has said that those who only qualify for the Old Age Security are being asked to take a reduction of $55 per person in 1983. Our research shows a much different figure from that. Our research shows that the loss in 1983 is much closer to $77 per person per year in the first year only. In 1984 we estimate a further loss of $218.93. That is nearly $300 over the next two years.

According to our calculations the Minister is either missing or ignoring a couple of important factors. One is the smaller base on which the percentage increase is calculated during each quarter in 1983 and the compounding effect this will have during 1984. The other thing that has to be remembered, contrary to what the Minister is trying to convince elderly Canadians about, is that her facts are not the facts.

This is not simply a two-year one-deal shot. If or when the Government restores full inflation protection in 1985, it will be on a base figure that is much less than that used today, nearly $300 per person per year over the two-year period less of a base, in fact. What we are talking about here is a permanent reduction in pension income for retired Canadians and for future retired Canadians. It just does not last for two years. Because it is compounding and because we are talking about percentage increases and because we are talking about a much smaller base at the end of the period, pensioners will never regain that money. That money will be lost to them. The base will be less and they will continue to lose money year after year after 1985.

Over the next two years some 1.2 million Canadians will feel the bite of this Bill. The Minister responsible for the Status of Women will know that half of that number happen to be women. In a press statement on June 29, 1982, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) attempted to place the best possible light on her decision. She tried, Mr. Speaker, but in my view, she did not quite make it. This is what the Minister stated in her press release:

> In keeping with our Liberal traditions in the area of social policy, the budget of June 28, 1982, fully protects the lowest-income Canadians and the working poor. However the budget takes as a given that Canadians who are not in need are entirely prepared to share in the serious sacrifices which are required to bring our country out of the economic crisis.

Then she said, and I still cannot believe that our Minister of National Health and Welfare would even say such a thing, the following:

> The sacrifice of pensioners who are not in need of the supplement to help the country get out of the economic crisis by creating permanent jobs will come to $55 per person for the entire year 1983. This is a considerable amount.

If the Minister does not believe that today's seniors make a sacrifice every day of their lives, then I do not think there is any hope for that particular Minister. The seniors who talk to me every day and those who come into my constituency office every weekend tell me an entirely different story. There is not a single senior citizen who relies on OAS alone, never mind the OAS and the GIS, who is not having a tough time every day in meeting the basic costs of food, shelter, clothing and transportation, not one. Wherever has the Minister got this idea that no one is suffering out there. As I said the other day, I don't know what she has been smoking.

The Government wants to wax eloquent about its six and five program. I have a letter here from a constituent of mine, a Mr. Marc Zwelling. The letter is dated November 2, 1982. Mr. Zwelling writes:

> Have you noticed what's happened to milk prices in our neighbourhood? I wonder if it's a national phenomenon.
> At the IGA the 2-litre size of homogenized milk was $1.67 last month—now it's $1.88. At the Mina-Mart (owned by Dominions Stores, I believe) it was $1.75, now $1.87. At the Red and White it was $1.75 and now $1.90.
> I believe milk prices went up earlier this year, too, but not so much. We're talking about 12 per cent hikes. Whatever happened to "6 and 5"?

I would like to ask that question, too.

While this Government wants to control the incomes of the average Canadian, including the elderly poor, it is doing absolutely nothing about the real causes and effects of inflation, which is price gouging such as that. I would be much more impressed if the Government were to tell Canadians that it wants them to lower their expectations but that it will make sure that the producers, businesses and corporations of the country will do their fair share while the Government controls their profits and prices. Even under previous attempts to control wages and prices, nothing was done about prices at all. Incomes were effectively controlled while profits were not. We know this to be true.

In an attempt to understand the number of people who will be affected by this legislation, I suggest that the Minister should perhaps read what the National Council of Welfare said in their analysis of the Government's budget. To save the Hon. Minister some reading time, I could read what the Council said after the budget came down. The National Council on Welfare in June 1982 said:

> At first glance these measures may seem equitable. The large number of low-income elderly persons who get the Guaranteed Income Supplement—close to 1.2 million, or half of the aged population—will receive the same total amount of Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement payments as they would have without the budget. The better-off half of elderly Canadians who do not qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement will give up $77 each in Old Age Security benefits in 1983 and an estimated total of $291 by the end of the restraint period. Persumably they can afford the sacrifice.

However a closer look shows that in fact many elderly men and women who live at or just above the poverty line will be hurt by the budget. In its present form the Guaranteed Income Supplement is directed to those with very low incomes and is not available to many poor and near-poor senior citizens. When the limits on indexation come into effect next January, a single person's eligibility for the Guaranteed Income Supplement will end once his income from earnings-related pension plans, savings and investments reaches $6,123. This means that a single pensioner with a total income (including Old Age Security) of as low as $9,200—more that $500 below the poverty line for larger cities—will pay the same $55 sacrifice in Old Age Security payments as someone living on a moderate or affluent income. Over 100,000 poor and near-poor elderly Canadians will see their incomes reduced by this feature of the budget.

That is 100,000 poor and nearly-poor Canadians who, through what this Government is proposing will be driven even deeper into poverty. The Government has estimated that it will save $105 million as a result of this cutback. I am using the word "save" as the Government's word because it is not what we call it. That $105 million is being lifted from the pockets of over one million pensioners, and it is $105 million that those Canadians cannot afford to lose. They are people who have worked hard for our country over the years and have made life much easier for future generations. They have rightfully earned the right to a secure and comfortable retirement. They have paid for it, and now the Government is proposing to deny them that right.

This Government is making no bones about what it is doing. It is saying to the elderly in Canada, "Through our incompetence our country is in an economic mess, and we are making you pay for it". After you discard all the fancy words and phrases, that is exactly what the Government is saying it will do. For once I wish the Government would deal honestly with the people of this country.

For about the last 30 months the Minister and a number of her colleagues have been travelling across the country promising great reforms to the pension system. Is this the kind of reform the Government is talking about? Is this the kind of pension reform the Government is really considering? In fact, during all this time the Minister has clearly said in every public statement that the Government saw the need to improve the pension system. There was not even a hint that it intended to dismantle the improvements made to the pension system over the years.

As recently as April of this year, just two months before the June budget, the Minister assured Canadians that the Government had no intention of changing the rules of the game. In fact, in a speech to the Conference on Industrial Relations on April 20, 1982, the Minister said this:

The Government believes that, with the exception of a major increase still to come in Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits for single persons, the public pension system has served Canadians well.

Just listen to this:

We have no intention of changing the 'rules of the game'. We want to maintain indexing of the Old Age Security Pension and the Supplement every three months, and to retain the universality of the basic OAS pension.

Two months later, the Government changed the rules dramatically when it introduced its June budget. Indexing of the OAS is now capped at about 50 per cent of the Government's own forecast rate of inflation over the next 18 months. By placing an even greater emphasis on the income tested guaranteed income supplement, the very principle of the universality of the OAS is being threatened.

In the same speech to which I just referred, the Minister explained the Government's further concern about those seniors who receive the GIS and are still living below the poverty line. This is what she said in that same speech in which she said had no intention of changing the rules of the game:

Additional expenditures of $730 million per year will be needed to raise a single person above the poverty line; the federal Government is committed to do this as soon as possible. This reform is of great urgency and will be undertaken on a priority basis as soon as funds are available or can be released from some other area.

In contrast to this expression of concern, I find the statements which the Minister made earlier to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to be somewhat more than interesting. The Minister appeared before that committee on April 2 of this year and responded to a question about why the $730 million needed to increase the guaranteed income supplement could not be taken from the money the Government had saved in its November, 1981 budget. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Government estimated that it would save $915 million in 1982-83 and $1 billion in 1984 by reducing transfers under the Established Programs Funding Act. Here is what the Minister said on that occasion about her concern for those individuals who rely on the GIS to at least lift them out of the depth of poverty:

The way I looked at that, as the Minister responsible directly for social policies and, of course, social justice in Canada, is, what will benefit most the huge clientele of whom I am the voice in Cabinet and for which we have these billions of dollars? And I subscribed—I must say without too much difficulty—to the hypothesis on which the budget has been developed that if we continue to have to pay large sums of money in interest on federal borrowings and deficits, that will be more harmful to my clienteles and the big budgets I need to protect and continue to see indexed every year than any other approach.

Then she said—no wonder she left, she is ashamed:

—therefore gave my full support to the budget, a budget which is aimed at reducing, not in a harsh way but in a reasonable way, year after year, the deficit of the Government. That was the basic choice that we had to make.

No wonder the Minister has left the House. If I were a Minister I would not want to sit and listen to my own words coming back to haunt me either.

So the Minister on the one hand seems to recognize that our elderly poor are living in poverty and that this is an unacceptable condition. She also says that when the money becomes available both she and the Government will take action to end this state of affairs. So what does she do when the money does become available? She and the Government and the Cabinet decide that what they want to do is to throw the money in to stave off interest rates as a result of deficits that this Government has accumulated. In fact, what they are doing to people on OAS benefits now they decided to do last November to people who are in GIS benefits, who are drastically below the poverty line and who desperately need help.

The Minister said that she had no difficulty in doing so. After going over the Minister's statements on what this Government has said over the last 30 months since we had the much-touted National Pensions Conference, I really wonder whether they have actually any credibility left in this country. They have certainly lost it in this House, and with this Bill they have certainly lost it with every senior citizen in this country. They say their intention is clear about what they intend to do about the OAS in the future in terms of whether or not it is to remain a useful universal program. I do not trust them one little bit, and I am quite sure that the average Canadian, at least from the responses I have been getting recently, would agree with that sentiment.

The Minister also said that nothing has changed for those seniors who now receive both the OAS and the GIS, and I suppose in some respects she is absolutely right. Those individuals will continue to have incomes far below the poverty line. On the other hand, she is absolutely dead wrong because things have changed and they will change over the next two years because the population of seniors at the end of two years who will receive OAS and GIS will be much greater than now and every one of them is going to have $300 less per year of pension income as a result of what this Government is trying to do today.

Again, that is not exactly my idea of pension reform. I always thought that to reform something meant to improve matters for the better, not to make a bad condition worse. That is what this Government and what this Minister have managed to do. Rather than opting to remove the weaknesses in our pension system, they have done the opposite. In so doing they have broken faith with Canadians once again. They have spent the last 30 months raising hopes and expectations across the country that real pension reform was on the way at last. Today, with this Bill and the June budget, those hopes are destroyed, Mr. Speaker.

I am sure all Members in this House get letters from constituents and from senior citizens in groups from time to time. Many of those letters are from people who tell me of the inadequacies of the pensions they get and how it is often difficult to make ends meet. Others make no bones about the fact that discussions on pension reform have gone on long enough, and it is time they get some action. I know some other Members received a copy of an open letter on pension reform from the Council of Pension Reform for Singles some time ago. Those who did I know will be interested in a few of the things they had to say.

They start out by saying:

> This discussion will be different, inasmuch as it is written by single pensioners who have banded together to form their own Council on Pension Reform for single women/men and is probably the first such paper ever written.

They say:

> The majority of women, single, now in their eighties and up, many of whom were in the labour force through two wars and a depression, up to fifty years, who merely because they were born too soon also have no "personal protection under the Canada Pension Plan" . . . Is it being taken for granted that they are all tucked away in public wards in nursing homes, senile and unable to care for themselves? We can assure anyone interested that there are not enough nursing homes in Canada to hold them, but no matter where they are living they still need to pay living costs which increase by the minute.

They go on to say:

> We are the same segment of Canadians who did not qualify for Canada Pension, are the same Canadians who, when they retired at sixty-five years of age had to live for five years on their small wartime savings until they received their Old Age Security at seventy years of age. It must also be remembered that for women of that day private pension plans were practically unknown. These are also the same seniors who are ignored by pension reformists, seniors organizations and Government alike. All reformists have to suggest is an increase in Old Age Security on a means test.
> It is an acknowledged fact that singles have been, and are today, $800 and up below the poverty line in Old Age Security. Couples are slightly above the poverty line. This has been true year after year and nothing has been done for singles. Singles who through wartime and depression sacrificed in order to make some preparation for retirement are now being penalized by means tests. There were no trips to Europe in their day and few luxuries, nor are there now. Their standard of living is slipping and they have no relief.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, they say this and they make more sense than anything I have heard in this place tonight. They say:

> We believe it is time to combine Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement as one Old Age Security Pension without a means test. The present two plans are expensive to administer and are causing so much division, cheating and bitterness against the Government amongst pensioners who made some provision for their retirement and who are being penalized for having done so, that it would appear that everyone, including the Government would in the long run be better off both financially and in good-will, by combining the two pensions.

Most if not all the seniors that I know who are forced to apply for the GIS feel exactly the same way. They deeply resent the welfare stigma attached to the plan through the requirement that they have to prove their poverty before they can receive the GIS. Our personal pride in being able to hold our head up to friends and neighbours is valuable to all of us. It is even more so to elderly people, and it is unconscionable that this Government wants to make life for thousands of older individuals even more difficult than it already is.

The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation has also noted to the Government that literally hundreds of thousands of seniors are receiving $85 a month less than that required to provide the absolute minimum of food, clothing and shelter.

A number of seniors have told me that they are confused by the complexity of pension programs or, indeed, what may be available to them from time to time. It is no wonder when you look at this mish-mash that serves as a pension system. In Canada we have private plans that cover only 50 per cent of the male work force and one-third of the female work force. Even at that, employer-sponsored plans only account for less than 10 per cent of the over-all income of present senior citizens. At the federal level we have the old age security pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the Canada-Quebec Pension Plan. In addition to that, because of the inadequacies of these programs, the richer Provinces have introduced their own supplementary programs. Ontario has its Guaranteed Annual Income System, GAINS. Alberta has the Alberta Assured Income Plan. Both of these are means tested.

It is no wonder that people are confused. The fact that all those bits and pieces are in place is a clear indication that something is out of place here. Why should individuals have to rely on a whole number of programs in order to receive an income on retirement?

Surely an adequate pension is a right and not a privilege. Surely every Canadian should have available a decent and adequate pension, regardless of sex, marital status, income class and previous employment history. Surely it is reasonable to expect on retirement that individuals will have an income that is above the poverty line and that the income will grow with the standard of living.

Pensions must be viewed as inter-generational transfers. They must connect the living standards of pensioners to the general standard of living. There is no question that public pensions must be expanded immediately to guarantee a poverty-free and secure standard of living for Canada's two million seniors.

It is only the federal and the provincial Governments that are in a position to ensure that this is done. In the public debate over the past 30 months, a consensus has emerged, at least from the majority, that some basic improvements must be made quickly. In fact, the Minister has publicly said there is a need to increase pensions immediately by $25 a month. She said that less than three weeks ago, I believe.

Even the corporation of William M. Mercer, hardly a socialist organization, has said that pensions should be increased now because it is necessary by a minimum of $100 a month. It is obvious to Members of this Party that the Old Age Security must be increased and the Canada Pension Plan expanded.

In conclusion I will say that if this Bill is not withdrawn by the Government it is the view of this Party that it cannot be allowed to be rammed through the parliamentary process. If and when it is referred to committee, individuals and organizations wishing to have input into this measure must have an opportunity to do so. The consequences of this legislation on the incomes of the elderly in Canada makes it imperative that this be done. Finally, if this Government is serious, which is questionable, about redistributing income in this country by directing the available funds to those most in need, I can think of a better place to start rather than attacking Canada's elderly population, that is, to overhaul the tax structure in this country. That is where the unfairness lies, and it is high time the Government made it equitable to all Canadians.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to say a few words on Bill C-131 to amend the Old Age Security Act. Before doing so, I would like to point out that the last speaker for the New Democratic Party said that in supporting the six and five program we in this Party imply that we support as well the principles of Bill C-131 to reduce the old age pension. The Hon. Member knows very well that we supported the six and five program as it applied to civil servants. It had nothing to do with old age pensioners.

It is common knowledge in this House and across the country that the NDP can say anything irresponsibly, promise anything, knowing full well and sighing with relief at the same time that they will never be in a position of national power to put their money where their mouth is or to take their feet out of their mouth. As a veterinarian, I am more than willing to offer my services for medical assistance, surgery or otherwise—

An Hon. Member: For foot and mouth disease.

Mr. Mitges: Yes, for foot and mouth disease. Most of them in the NDP are in dire need of it. I am sure I can call on my hon. friend from Guelph, a colleague and classmate of mine, to give assistance if I require it. I do not think I need any assistance, Jim.

To get into the substance, if this Bill is passed into law, it would limit the incease in the basic old age pension to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. In other words, old age pensioners are being told that, like it or not, they will have to take a cut in their meagre pensions to conform with the six and five policy of restraint.

I believe that the six and five program is a small step in the right direction, but I believe that the Government in its deliberation on this matter, should have considered the exemption of old age security recipients from this legislation. Many senior citizens have a bad enough time as it is without having to cope with a decrease in their pension.

When one considers a 10 per cent inflation rate in the country coupled with a 6 per cent decrease in the pension, one must realize that this will have a devastating effect on the seniors of our country, many of whom are barely managing now to cover the cost of only the bare essentials of life such as food, clothing, higher and higher rents and escalating drug costs.

This is a terrible slap in the face to our seniors. When one reflects on the hardships and devastations they experienced and lived through, two world wars and a devastating depression of the 1930s, one must conclude that this is one heck of a way to express our gratitude and thanks, by cutting back on their pensions. This is a terrible injustice and should not be allowed to take place.

I do not want to leave the impression that I am not in favour of restraint. I believe restraint in government spending is adamant, and when I say government I mean all three levels, federal, provincial and municipal. However, surely common sense should tell us, and common sense should prevail, that restraint should not be imposed on those citizens who can least afford it, our senior citizens. Equity and fariness must be exercised in this case. However, if Bill C-131 is passed, it will be throwing equity and fairness out the window.

Simply put, it is not fair riding out the recession on the backs of our senior citizens. Seeking restraint from those who can afford it, I can go along with, but seeking restraint from those who in no earthly way can afford it is unthinkable to say the least.

The effects of inflation on the elderly are devastating. Today, 20 per cent or some 600,000 of them live in poverty.

We know as well that senior citizens are forming an ever-increasing section of our population.

That is why I believe the time has come, and I think it is long overdue, to take a serious look at all our pension needs, public and private, to ensure that at the time of retirement, one should be able to live our's declining years without fear of deprivation and without the worry of having enough funds to live on.

I know that over the years there has been a lot of discussion and a lot of studies regarding pensions. As worthwhile as they have been, I think the time has come to take the bull by the horns and come forth with action. I firmly believe that all Canadians are now more ready than ever to make the necessary contribution from their salaries and paycheques to ensure security in their old age. All I can say is, let's get on with it.

I believe all Members of this House would give speedy passage to any bill brought forth to make this a reality. It is important to understand that we must get away from the stereotype idea that pension funds are not part of an obligation on each and every one of us, that we only put money away if we can spare it. I believe that pensions should be looked at, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said, as a deferred income that we will draw upon once we leave the workplace. We must make sure as well that all pensions in force should not be drained of funds by being over-extended in the form of loans to the Provinces or otherwise. There should be sufficient funds, wisely invested, to ensure the presence of actual money there, not just a paper figure, but actual money to take care of any crisis or emergency. This is one area where bankruptcy would be a terrible disaster.

It is a sad state of affairs, Mr. Speaker, that in this so-called enlightened age, only 28 per cent of women in the labour force today are covered by some sort of a pension plan, and over half of that 28 per cent are in some level of Government. Another thing to remember is that our present pension system is not geared to the problems and situations faced by women. For example, what if a woman drops out of the labour force to have children? No allowance is made at all for this. Benefits are not adjusted for the period she is away because her pension is based on total earning and working life, which in this case is smaller and shorter. But her need for pension coverage is no less necessary after her most productive years are over .

A housewife who finds herself widowed is in a very similar position. Her career was as a housewife, for which she received no pension because most pensions collected by a husband are non-transferable. She cannot collect on that pension even though she contributed so many years as a housewife. She is left with what amounts to poverty line pension, unless otherwise provided for.

What can be done to rectify some of the problems I have mentioned? There have been a number of proposals offered to help women overcome these handicaps. One suggestion which has been talked about for a while is to allow housewives to contribute to CPP. The question of whether contributions should be voluntary or not is central to whether the plan would work. Some housewives simply cannot afford to pay into the system, but their need is no less obvious. Another proposal is to allow more housewives to collect contributions from private pension plans of deceased spouses. Survivor's benefits, to my mind, are important if women are to maintain their independence. Another idea put forward to help women out in the case of a marriage breakdown, was to make it mandatory that pension credits in a private pension plan held by the husband be split 50-50 on divorce.

Another proposal is to have fully portable indexed pensions. Few pension plans today are portable, except for Government employees. When you change jobs, you cannot take credits with you, so you loose your contributions. These are some of the solutions offered. It goes without saying they do not solve all the problems, but they are a start. Right now, we are anxiously awaiting the Government's so-called Green Paper on pension reform. We have been told it will be out soon. Hopefully, the report will lead to some meaningful and substantial reforms which are so rightly deserved by the majority of the Canadian population.

Another related matter concerning senior citizens and pensions, Mr. Speaker, is the subject of old age. You may ask the question, how old is old? That is a question which has puzzled physicians, economists, business leaders, labour, government officials and every man and woman in our country. Two thousand years ago, the average life expectancy was only 22 years. Seventy-five years ago, in Canada, the life expectancy for the male was 48 years and for the female, 51 years. However, the average life expectancy today for a male is somewhere around 74 years, and for a female between 76 and 78 years. Today's 65-year old man or woman probably has greater vigour, greater stamina and better health than the 50-year old man or woman in the 1900s. There is no question that the lifespan of man will continue to increase. Perhaps within the lifespan of many Canadians alive today, one-tenth of our population will live to be 100 or older. Soon, perhaps within a generation, active, vigorous men and women of 85 years or more will make up a substantial group in every community.

However, because of the longer lifespan of people today, there is another area of importance which will have to be looked into, that is, the impact this will have on our national economy. I think the time has come when we must review the retirement practices in industry. In the very near future we may find it desirable to go in the direction of voluntary retirement, depending upon the health of each worker. It may even be desirable to defer retirement in many cases from age 65 to 70 or 75. Regardless of what may happen, however, the human values of forced retirement at age 65 cannot be overlooked. What happens to the person at age 65 who is told that his usefulness in the labour force is over? He is no longer allowed to contribute. He is suddenly cut off from his working companions of many years. Just because he turned 65 years of age he is supposed to stop functioning. How can you equate this kind of treatment when today these very same people have the most active seniors' and senior citizens' organizations in the history of our country. In view of this, how can labour say with any conviction that seniors are no longer able to contribute to the labour force? I do not think there is anything magical or sacred about the age of 65. Retirement at age 65 has been arbitrarily adopted and blindly accepted. Chronological age is not a barometer which necessarily indicates the physical age of a person. A person forced to retire due to the age formula loses more than just an income. In many cases, and I have seen some, as I imagine other Members of the House have, a person is faced with emotional problems every bit as serious as economic ones.

In our society, work has come to mean recognition as well as a feeling of being a useful member of the community. Some retirees, through an inward feeling of uselessness and insecurity, become melancholy and unhappy, and at times quite ill, which can only be overcome by work. During World War II, many elderly people went back to work in Canada. I think there were some 250,000 of them. Their employers learned to respect their steady and reliable performance. Recently in the U.S., the National Association of Manufacturers polled a group of business leaders on their attitudes toward elderly workers. Significantly, the president of one of the companies stated: "We choose and select when we hire people and I see no reason why we cannot do the same when we retire them." There are those and there will be those tomorrow who will want to retire. There are those today and there will be those tomorrow who will need to retire because of ill health or inability to do their job. Retirement is not a bad thing, but forced retirement of a man or a woman who is healthy, who wants to work, is bad both for the man and the woman and for our country as a whole.

Older citizens of Canada have a treasury of skills and experience that could be used in so many ways in every community. Seniors want to be constructive and productive. Our society has to find ways to keep them working if they so wish. To accomplish this, we must stop using one myth after another to justify age discrimination in employment. We must stop believing the myth that a young labour force guarantees greater production and less overhead. That may be true in the case of a man operating a jackhammer, but there are all kinds of occupations where the elderly are just as productive as their juniors.

We must also stop believing the myth of the heavy cost burden involved in hiring the elderly. Department of Labour statistics show that putting an older person on the payroll, including all the fringe benefits, costs only a few pennies an hour more than it would to hire a younger person. We must stop believing the myth that older persons are absent from their jobs more than younger persons. The very opposite is true. The notion that older persons are ready to be put on the shelf, is about the silliest form of prejudice which still exists. It is simply incredible that we have permitted our society to become so youth oriented that the job market starts to close after a person reaches 40.

What is needed in Canada, today, Mr. Speaker, is a drastic change of attitude. We have to get away from the notion that elderly people have done their part and should be put on the shelf. Our attitudes must change so that retirement from active, productive living should be by choice and not by compulsion because of age. Many seniors have no desire to stop work. Many seniors are able to work and want to work, but modern methods of business and industry deny them the opportunity to do so. The performance of Government in recent years for the betterment of senior citizens permits a small amount of pride. The challenges of today must give us even greater energy, greater dedication and a greater commitment to get on with the job, not only of creating a better Canada, but a better deal for all senior citizens. If we succeed in changing the popular conception of age and return those seniors who wish once more to the role of national productivity, I think we will then meet our two greatest needs. These are the need for a chance to make a living, and the great emotional satisfaction that comes from being useful, from being respected for one's productivity rather than being respected just for being elderly.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the saying that we should never judge anyone until we have walked a mile in his moccasins is an excellent dictum. Tonight, I wonder if any of us is prepared to walk in the moccasins of those who are entirely dependent on a pension.

I remember when there was a pension of $20 per month for those aged 70 and over. In those days, though, you could buy five pounds of hamburger for 15 cents, so $20 went a long way. Through the years the pension has increased in accordance with the requirements of providing food, clothing and shelter for the human body. Eventually, the pension reached a reasonable amount; then inflation came along. That made quite a difference.

The Government made wonderful speeches to the effect that the pensioner could not live on that amount when the cost of living was so high, and so the pension would be indexed. The whole purpose of indexing was that food, shelter and clothing for the human body could still be supplied.

How many times have I heard Ministers and backbenchers opposite, and even Members on this side of the House, remark on what an excellent thing indexing is. The former minister of finance was asked how pensioners were going to continue to live on their pensions when the cost of energy and almost everything else was going up. He answered that the pension was being indexed so that they could live on it. The amount indexing brought in never equalled the amount of increase in the price of energy, however, but it helped. The whole purpose of indexing, as put forward by the Government and, I suppose, by Members on this side of the House, was to enable people to continue to enjoy a reasonable standard of living.

I remember being on a platform in the beautiful City of Drumheller, which is nestled in the canyon of the Red Deer River, when 200 or 300 people had turned out for an auction at a church. One question that was put to each candidate was about the stand they would take on indexing. One candidate said, "I am against indexing; it costs too much money and we cannot afford it". Another candidate said, "I am not in favour of indexing, even though I am getting an indexed pension myself." When it came my turn I simply asked the people, "If you do not have indexing, how are the aged going to live?" That is the only purpose for it, Mr. Speaker. It is not a gift, a gratuity or a Christmas present; it is essential if a person is to be able to pay for food, clothing and shelter.

I have been in the homes of senior citizens and pensioners who receive the full basic pension and the guaranteed income supplement and their assured income from the Province. Some are still having a rough time making ends meet. I am sure you realize, Mr. Speaker, that energy costs have gone up by 15 to 30 per cent. I went into the home of a pensioner in Edmonton last winter. He was wearing a big, woolly sweater and his wife was wearing a night robe of some kind. It was only eight o'clock at night. I asked him why he was wearing his sweater, but I soon found out why. The house was cold. He said that the Government had asked the people to co-operate, to keep costs down and not to use too much energy. He said that he wanted to co-operate with the Government, so there he was, shivering. I shivered too and I kept my overcoat on. It is still chilly in that home, Mr. Speaker, but they wear woollies in order to co-operate.

If this Bill passes, the aged will co-operate, but there will be some cold ones amongst them and there will be some hungry ones. They will have diseases and they will die sooner because they will not be able to afford the things that they should have.

Do we want history to record that we did not look after our senior citizens properly—those who have served this country? People who are now aged 65 were born in 1917. They went through a few good years after the first World War, and then came the depression. People who have not lived through the depression will never know what it was like, but people who did live through it, those who are 65 years of age today, still suffer because of the malnutrition, lack of food and heat that they experienced. If they had to cut their own food or haul their own coal in order to keep warm, that is what they did. And all through the years of World War II they co-operated.

I knew a miner who was 83 years of age when World War II started. After the first World War miners were lucky if they got three months of work a year. But we needed coal for the war effort, and so he got his carbide lamp and his old mining clothes and went back into the mine to help his country, in World War II. It took a few years off his life, but he co-operated.

Senior citizens have already paid the price and we should not ask them to pay more. They should have the right to live well now.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MINES AND MININGS—COURIER SERVICE EXPENSE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, tonight we will discuss one example of utter waste of the taxpayer's money which the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) blatantly defended as being in the national interest, saying, "The cost of distribution is completely justified in the national interest." Five hundred and seventy-six packages containing three maps, a photo of the Minister of State for Mines with the Governor General and a press release for use on Dominion Day, were sent by courier service on June 30 at a cost of $5,935. Even Santa Claus and his reindeer starting on June 30 could not get the packages throughout Canada by the next day, which was a holiday in any event. Certainly it would not be possible for any courier to do it, but they still spent $5,935.

If they had to be sent, why were they not sent by Canada Post? They arrived late anyway, so wasting $5,935 is inexcusable. No private company or business could stay in business if it wasted money in that manner.

Then comes the question, why were they sent at all? The weekly newspapers certainly did not ask for them, nor could they use such large maps in their weeklies. It appears that the photograph was really the important item. If it were used, it would enhance the Minister's vanity at the taxpayers' expense, of course, but it would do nothing else. What was this worth? Was it worth $3,000 of taxpayers' money?

There is another aspect to the answer of the Hon. Minister to the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) regarding the cost of producing the package. The return tabled in the House of Commons indicated that the production cost was $1,783.08. On Monday night the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin stated that representatives of Energy, Mines and Resources told him that the price of the three maps was $5.95 and that no reduction was given. Therefore, the cost of the three maps is 576 times $5.95 or $3,427.20. Also last Monday the Parliamentary Secretary when replying to the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin stated:

> The approximate cost of this was $3,000.

This was $3,000 for the photograph, approximately. Adding the cost of $3,000 for the photograph, to the $3,427.20 for the maps and the $1,783.08 for whatever the Minister included, the total is $8,210.28. But the Minister's return indicated that the production cost of the package was only $1,783.08. Does the total production cost not include the cost of the maps, the cost of the photograph, the cost of the fancy envelope, the cost of the two-page press release, etc.? Of course it does.

The tradition throughout British Parliaments is that Ministers must answer questions accurately. If such were not the case, there would be no use in Members of Parliament asking questions. I am asking the Government to investigate fully the answer which was tabled in the House by the Minister. If it was inaccurate—and I believe it was—the Minister should be asked for her resignation pronto. Otherwise it will be a mockery of Parliament. Parliament cannot operate unless truthful answers containing the whole truth are given by Ministers.

Also on Monday night the Parliamentary Secretary told how wonderful the maps were and are. No one is or was questioning the value of the maps. Of course they are splendid maps. We are questioning the extravagance of the Minister in a time of restraint and the inaccuracies contained in the reply tabled in the House. If the Minister wanted to be Santa Claus with the people's money and send out presents, she could have sent the maps to the weeklies via Canada Post, free; she could have sent them to the schools of Canada which would be far more sensible, free; or she could have sent them to the libraries of Canada, free, where they would have been used.

The total cost of the package plus the courier service appears to be in the vicinity of $10,000. It is almost a complete waste of money. No wonder the editor, a very knowledgeable lady, of the Cochrane Times, a weekly newspaper in Alberta, wrote a story which appeared on the front page on July 14, which ended with the question, "This is restraint?"

If the Minister had X dollars which she just had to spend, rather than waste it on this silly exercise that benefited largely only the courier, she could have spent it in a number of other ways. Here are a few suggested ways the Minister could have spent the money. She could have helped the unemployed in her own constituency and elsewhere who have used up their unemployment insurance benefits. They could stand a few cents to help them out. She could have given the money to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) so that he would not have to cut the indexing of the pensions of the superannuates, including retired RCMP and Armed Forces personnel and retired civil servants who actually paid for the indexing. What about the old age pensioners about whom we were talking tonight? The Minister could have given the money to the Salvation Army or to the Catholic Women's League to help them feed and clothe the poor and the unfortunate who tonight are cold, and many hungry. The Minister could have used the money to reduce the deficit or to lower the myriad of taxes which this money-hungry Government is imposing on the people, etc. etc. But, instead the Minister hired a courier at a cost to the taxpayer of $5,935 and sent out 576 photographs of herself at a cost of $3,000, as her parliamentary secretary revealed, to say nothing of the other costs.

Then to cinch the ridiculous, the Minister blatantly told the House:

The cost of distribution is completely justified in the national interest.

This is a proper case for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to investigate fully, and to make the findings public.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the question asked by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) concerning the distribution of maps illustrating our country's growth to Canadian community newspapers so they would be able to use them during Canada Week. I am convinced that the public funds used for that purpose were a justifiable expenditure at a time when all Canadians were celebrating the achievements of their nation. The maps and the literature were sent to the newspapers in smaller communities so as to enable them to use those documents during Canada Week. In answer to a similar question earlier this week, it was clearly stated that those maps which depict the territorial evolution of Canada had a very particular meaning after we adopted our Constitution.

Because we wanted to have those maps widely known to the public, we decided to inform smaller towns and villages to the same extent as the larger urban communities which are already well served by the information networks. We had to use courier services to distribute the maps along with a photograph commemorating their presentation to His Excellency the Governor General so that Canadian Community Newspaper Association members would receive them before Canada Week, if at all possible. Originally, Canada Post was to look after the distribution of the maps, but unforeseen difficulties cropped up during the preparation, printing and wrapping of the maps and therefore they were not ready for distribution until late in June. Thanks to a courier service, it was however possible to deliver the material in time to allow its recipients to use it and give it the attention it deserved during Canada Week. Of course, as stated by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) a certain number of newspapers may not have received the material before Canada Day, July 1. However, I am pleased to know that thanks to the efforts which were made, they were able to use it as reference in the preparation of their forthcoming issues.

The printing of the maps did cost $1,783,08, as previously mentioned. The Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin said that the maps had cost $3,427.00 but he was referring to the retail price of the kit. However this amount also included storing, handling and distribution costs as well as some other overhead charges normally included in retail prices. However, the latter charges were not incurred because the 576 parcels were sent directly by the Printing Bureau through a courier service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately I have to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but the time allowed to her has expired.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PENSION RECOMMENDATION MADE BY UNITED VETERANS ORGANIZATION. (B) INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): On November 2, 1982, I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) the following question:

In June of this year the Minister said that he was giving very active consideration to the recommendation made by the United Veterans Organization which would ensure that veterans' pension increases would reflect the greater of the C.P.I. or the average increase given to the five lowest categories of civil servants. When is the Minister going to present the necessary legislative changes to Section 58 of the Pension Act so that veterans will be spared the task of going cap-in-hand to the Government for their annual increases?

The Minister was totally non-committal in his answer.

I also asked:

—has the Minister had any discussions with the Government House Leader as to when he can fit this veterans' legislation into our schedule for this year? It would be appropriate if we dealt with it this year. It is not a contentious issue. All that is required is one speaker from each Party. Has the Minister had any discussions with the Government House Leader?

The answer I received was no.

This question was preceded by a query respecting the method of calculating and making pension payments to veterans. Here again, I received a non-committal answer indicating the Government is not willing to bring in much needed legislation.

Legislation should be introduced before this session expires. The problem areas are numerous and, contrary to the Minister's belief that everything is operating smoothly, there are many recommendations made by veterans' organizations and the Official Opposition which have yet to be acted upon. Let me outline just a few to refresh our memories: A complete review of those recommendations made by the Woods Committee that have not yet been implemented; A complete review of all those recommendations made by the Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science Report entitled "They Serve, We care", which have not been implemented.

In this case special attention should be given to the apparent inequity of the way in which pension increases do not reflect the principle of parity with the average wage of five unskilled categories of public servants, or the increase in the consumer price index, whichever is greater, and that this principle is not entrenched in the Pension Act; the apparent inequity of the way in which veterans are compensated for periods spent as prisoners of war; and the increasing of the annual exemption for income derived from bank deposits, bonds and dividends to a minimum of $500. As well, there are recommendations aimed at having the Canada Pension Commission, the Entitlement Board and the Pension Review Board establish specific deadlines for each stage of the veterans pension application process. Finally, there are ways and means of increasing the use of the aging veterans' programs so that more veterans could take advantage of the system.

There are ongoing problems with the aging veterans' programs, even though the Minister has so much praise for it. The details of the program are still not clear to local councillors, both in the application and implementation process.

There should be a review of current benefit payments for medical expenses in order to determine the feasibility of extending medical requirements currently provided for WVA-CWA recipients to spouses and eligible dependent children. Attention should be given to problems which the Indian War Veterans across Canada face in their attempt to receive their due benefits. The ongoing announcements concerning benefits to "new theatre of war" veterans should be formalized in legislation. Also, the question arising from the treatment of Hong Kong veterans and others with strongyloides should be intensified and increased in proficiency with the addition of mandatory tropical disease courses and training.

These are but a few of the main problem areas which must be addressed either through formal legislation or through programs debated and approved by the Veterans Affairs Committee. When the Veterans Affairs Committee met last June I presented a non-political motion calling on the Committee to work together constructively. Solutions could have been suggested by the elected representatives who are paid to work toward solutions in the first place. Had my motion passed, the Committee could have met regularly to receive progress reports from the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the many issues facing Canadian veterans. Unfortunately, the Liberal majority on the Committee voted down my motion, even though many like it have been passed by other committees in the past. This is truly a shame, since the committee will not meet again until the 1983-84 estimates are ready for study.

I was not expressing in my motion a lack of confidence in the Department's ability to solve problems. I was expressing my desire to have the elected representatives, who are supposed to be interested in helping formulate solutions to problems, work toward that goal in a non-partisan way. Unfortunately, the Liberal Members on the Committee did not envisage their role as elected representatives in the same way as I did.

When asked about upcoming legislation the Minister had no answers. When asked if he had even discussed the legislative timetable with the Government House Leader, the answer was no. Veterans do not deserve an irresponsible attitude such as this in light of the many areas of concern that still exist.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member's question. He referred to recommendations made in June of this year by the United Veterans Organizations, that the basic rate of pension be tied permanently to the greater of the composite average income of the five selected categories of public servants, or the Consumer Price Index. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) assured the Veterans Associations and this House that the recommendation is presently under consideration.

In 1972, this Government proposed and Parliament approved that there be an annual automatic adjustment in accordance with Consumer Price Index changes. That this has worked to the great benefit of these pensioners goes without saying.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, as a result of a study presided over by the Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission, in which there was full and active participation of the veterans organizations, a new basis of establishing the basic rate of pension was arrived at. As a result, the basic rate of pension was substantially increased in 1973.

The formula which was introduced at that time related the pension paid to a 100 per cent disability pensioner, who was unmarried, to the composite average income of five selected categories of unskilled public servants, after income tax is paid at the rate in effect in the Province with the lowest rate. As you know, income tax is not payable on these pensions.

The single 100 per cent pensioner was better off than his composite counterpart in the Public Service until April 1, 1982, when several of the selected categories of public servants had wage adjustments. The basic rate will again be in favour of the 100 per cent unmarried pensioner after January 1, 1983, when the basic rate of pension is increased in accordance with the formula contained in the Pension Act. Eighty per cent of the disability pensioners are married and, therefore, most pensioners at present receive substantially more than the composite public servant who receives nothing extra for being married. Each year, all those in receipt of benefits under the Pension Act are compensated for any increases in the cost of living.

As Hon. Members are aware, the salaries of the selected categories of public servants have already been limited by legislation to increases of 6 per cent and 5 per cent within the next two years. Pensioners, on the other hand, will receive the full benefit of changes in the Consumer Price Index. This should result in a comparatively higher monthly rate. It is obvious that the yearly indexation as presently provided for by the Pension Act is more beneficial than trying to maintain parity with a selected group of public servants.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—TIMING OF FUND EXPENDITURES. (B) EXPENDITURES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, on November 16 of this year I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) a question in this House with regard to the new employment expansion and development Program, the centrepiece of the employment program and the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I found the Minister's response at that time totally inadequate. That is why I am rising again tonight to put the question; to make it clear so the Government can understand just what the question was. I would hope for a better response this evening.

The reason I rose to ask the question with regard to the NEED program is that in the Minister of Finance's economic statement he had claimed that this Program would operate over a period of 18 months, and in that period of 18 months it would create some 60,000 jobs.

We already knew that that description of the Program was an exaggeration, because labour analysts have indicated that as a rule of thumb, with $500 million you can create some 25,000 full-time jobs. When the Government says it will create 60,000 jobs for $500 million, obviously it is not talking about fulltime, full-year jobs, but part-time employment.

Our suspicions with regard to the NEED program were confirmed when the Minister held a press conference. In response to specific questions from the press, he had to admit he was talking about jobs that average between 20 and 30 weeks, which make them short-term jobs. Therefore, the program was being oversold.

I rose the other day because we on this side had learned from the provinces that the Minister was meeting with the provincial ministers of employment, indicating to them that this money was going to be spread over three fiscal years rather than over 18 months. I asked the Minister to confirm this. Whether the program lasts for a year and a half, two and a half years or three years is important, as it relates to the number of people who will get jobs and the amount of need this program will fill.

The Minister in a complicated way confirmed that the NEED program will run over three fiscal years and last some two and a half years. Therefore, we are talking about 30 months rather than the 18 months which the Minister of Finance indicated in his economic statement.

The Minister failed to acknowledge or give significance to the fact that the program would last much longer than announced by the Minister of Finance. It is important to acknowledge that if the program runs for 30 rather than 18 months, we will require more than $500 million to accomplish the purposes the Minister said would be accomplished; that is, to provide jobs for people who exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits. The Minister failed to recognize that. Therefore, he has failed in terms of taking greater action to meet the needs of those who run out of unemployment insurance benefits.

In my supplementary question I asked the Minister to acknowledge that under the program some $10 million would be spent in the Province of Quebec which has 23 per cent of its population on welfare or on unemployment insurance. The Minister failed to acknowledge this. He spoke about other figures, diverted attention, but did not deal with the seriousness of the unemployment situation in Quebec and the inadequacy of the Government's employment program as announced by the Minister of Finance.

I am very disappointed with the response of the Minister. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will deal more adequately tonight with the fact that rather than the program lasting for 18 months, it will in fact go for two and a half years. How does he expect a program that is already stretched to its limits to serve people for two and a half years rather than a year and a half? Does he expect people to believe that it will meet the needs of those who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits? The same amount of money that was originally announced for a year and a half will now be spent over two and a half years. Why is there this discrepancy between what was said in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance and what is actually happening?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to use the few minutes available to me to explain in clear terms the situation concerning job-creation programs. I believe that one must make a very clear distinction between existing job-creation programs under what we call the Community Development Program and the new job-creation program which we have called NEED. We now have in operation a Community Development Program through which unemployed workers can find a job anywhere in the country. These jobs will be created immediately under the existing program until the spring of 1983. This program will create approximately 25,000 jobs throughout the country.

As far as the NEED Program is concerned, one must make a very clear distinction and know what it is all about. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) were indeed right to speak of an 18-month program, and if we think of three fiscal years and use a little arithmetic, we indeed come to a figure of 18 months. Obviously, those are temporary jobs to meet the very difficult situation which now exists in Canada. We shall provide temporary jobs for Canadians who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits or who will have completed their last 13 weeks.

We are speaking about $500 million to create 60,000 jobs. Obviously, if we were speaking about creating jobs for a one-year period, we would create fewer jobs, but if we provide employment for 12, 20 or 25 weeks, there will be more jobs. In quoting his figures, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) stated that labour experts were predicting the creation of fewer jobs, but let us look at the program announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and at the criteria given to us. The figure of 18 months has been mentioned and people are trying to say that the program will extend over two and a half years, but let us look at the figures, Mr. Speaker. We say 18 months and the program will come into effect on January 1, 1983. Therefore, there will be three months during the fiscal year 1982-83, then 12 months in the fiscal year 1983-84 and three months in 1984-85. This gives a total of 18 months for three fiscal years. Whatever way you look at it or add it up, the answer is the same and this money will help create jobs. In Quebec, we shall actually spend $10 million during the first three months, but over the 18-month period, we shall be spending $170 million. I hope this explanation will clarify the situation. What we want to do is to create 60,000 jobs throughout the country during the next 18 months.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDEMNATION OF TREATMENT OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter which deeply concerns me. In light of the fact that Soviet dissident, Anatoly Shcharansky, is currently being force-fed to end his hunger strike over the legitimate complaint that he is no longer allowed to receive mail or visits from relatives, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That this Government condemn the actions of the Soviets in the case of Anatoly Shcharansky, and that it urge that steps be taken to put an immediate end to this flagrant violation of human rights, which is in direct contravention of the Helsinki Accord.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the case raised by my colleague is one of the most tragic violations of human rights the world has seen. Anatoly Shcharansky, a computer scientist, has been imprisoned in the Soviet Union because of his desire to leave that country. He has asked for simple release from the Soviet Union to rejoin his family.

In the light of this motion, and as we have a Canadian delegation in Moscow at the present time, a delegation which is seeking to restore scientific exchanges between Canada and the U.S.S.R., I would make a plea that one of the basic things this delegation can do is to bring the case of Anatoly Shcharansky before the Soviet authorities, that they make these exchanges conditional upon the release of Anatoly Shcharansky before any are carried out. I would extend that plea further to include the Andrei Sakharovs of this world and to the many other scientists, people of international repute, who are being held in prison in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, very briefly, I want to join with the mover and the seconder of the motion in urging Soviet officials and representatives of the Government of Canada to meet to discuss the problem of refusniks in Russia in general and, in particular, the specific problem of Anatoly Shcharansky. I think it is quite clear to everyone that the lack of human rights within the Soviet Union is a matter of grave concern.

In the attempt by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to establish a more cordial and better relationship with the Government of Russia, one of the things that ought to be considered is the human rights record of the Soviet Union. Pressure must be brought to bear to bring about the release of people who would like to leave the Soviet Union, and who, under the Soviet Constitution, legally should be able to leave but who are suffering as a result of their attempt to exercise that freedom.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): We support this motion because as so many Canadians—I would even say the vast majority of Canadians—we are very concerned about this fundamental negation of the most elementary human rights in the case of Anatoly Shcharansky. Madam Speaker, as you know, the Government of Canada has interceded on behalf of Mr. Shcharansky several times in recent years, including our intervention at the Madrid Conference on European Security and Co-operation. More recently, that is, on October 22, we informed the Embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Canada of our strong opposition to this intolerable negation of human rights in the case of Anatoly Shcharansky. I therefore join my colleague from Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the House Leader for the New Democratic Party (Mr. Deans) in asking that the Soviet Union allow Anatoly Shcharansky to leave and also to receive visits from members of his family.

[English]

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would also like to indicate my support for this motion. Members may be aware that in September the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), and myself, had the opportunity to go to the Soviet Union to speak to a number of Soviet officials in order to impress upon them the importance that Canadians attach to this issue. This is an issue that we do not view in a partisan way; we view it in a non-partisan way. It is an issue of human rights and an issue about which Canadians care.

I think the message we want the Soviet officials to understand is that we look forward to the possibility of an improved climate in East-West relations, but in order to do this, this is one issue that must be addressed and is one about which we, as parliamentarians, feel very strongly.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S POSITION ON PUBLIC SERVICE PENSIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, while this Party stood alone in the humid days of last August in opposition to the restraint Bill, the sanctimonious Tories to my right voted with the Government to impose six and five, knowing full well that it could apply to Public Service benefits as well as Public Service wages. They are now scrambling around, obscenely saying that they oppose this six and five capping of Public Service pensions. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That someone provide a daily road map to those who are confused by all of this about-facing so that we will know when the Tories are on the north, south, east or west side of the fence, or perched on the top like mugwumps.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR "THE INDIAN VOICE" NEWSPAPER

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, after 13 years of continuous publication, the widely read and excellent publication, The Indian Voice newspaper, is faced with imminent closure because of the withdrawal of funding by the Secretary of State. Because this paper is a project of the Indian Homemakers Association, the Secretary of State and the Indian Affairs and Northern Development officials, who obviously do not bother to read the paper, have taken the position that it only represents the views of native women. This reasoning is absolute rubbish. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Secretary of State refrain from playing games with a very valuable instrument of communication and continue to fund this newspaper.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, a tragic civil war continues in El Salvador, with assassinations, disappearances and murders. Last week, El Salvadoran Church officials reported 4,400 documented cases of victims of this violence in the first ten months of 1982. Bishop Arturo Rivera Y Damas and El Salvadoran Protestant Church leaders have called for a dialogue on how the reign of terror might be ended and urgent attention given to the needs of nearly one million refugees, mostly women and children. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Government of Canada join with concerned regional Governments, such as Mexico and Venezuela, and international humanitarian institutions, in establishing an international commission to consult with all parties in the conflict. This commission would report to the Secretary General of the United Nations with practical procedures for a dialogue to end the war and measures to address the deep social and economic problems of El Salvador.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF GREAT LAKES AND NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that negotiations with the United States over the clean-up of the toxic and radioactive dumps along the Niagara have failed to produce a solution, and in view of the fact that the EPA and the Reagan administration have sided with Hooker to stall effective clean-up provisions, demonstrated by the inadequate procedures ordered for Hyde Park, and even less adequate studies and proposals for the Love Canal, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House send a 100-Member delegation to Washington to meet with Congress and the Senate to make it clear that there must be full use made of the super fund to clean up, not cover up, at Hyde Park, Love Canal, "S" area, 102nd Street, the radioactive dumps and all other dumps leaching into the Niagara System; further, that this House unanimously endorse the hard work done by Canadian and U.S. public interest groups to clean up the Niagara and the Great Lakes at a time when the Government of Canada has proven to be incapable of influencing the Reagan administration to protect public health.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL PARKS

PERMIT FOR HOUSING PROJECT AT BANFF

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That this House abhors the decision of the Minister of the Environment who, without a public tender and in defiance of the recommendations of his own staff and of the wishes of the vast majority of the people of Banff, has granted a permit to a former Liberal Cabinet Minister and company to build a unit high density complex that will destroy a unique park with its paths, benches and foot bridges over natural streams which were constructed over the last ten years costing thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money, and that this House urges the Minister and/or the Prime Minister and his cabinet to rescind this decree by the Minister of the Environment as it is completely out of tune with the environment and common sense.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

MEASURES TO ASSIST PRIVATE SECTOR IN CREATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, who knows only too well that 539,000 jobs, 289,000 in the manufacturing sector alone, have been lost in this country since August last year. In view of the fact that the Minister has been in office with his new portfolios for almost seven weeks now, would he tell the House what new steps he has taken to ensure that the private sector, once again, will start creating jobs instead of cutting employment which is falling so heavily on all Canadians, but especially on the youth of this land, where we find, nationally, that 20 per cent of the youth are out of work?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member for York-Peel has been. There have been a series of announcements by the Government on a regular basis. Perhaps one of the most significant, in terms of direct job creation, was the NEED Program announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration just a short time ago.

I do not think this is the time and place for me to recite at length all the Programs, whether they be in the research and development sector or whether they be in the industrial development sector under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, concerning the regional efforts which have been made. I will be quite happy to take the time of the House to go through all these matters if the House wishes, and call upon the Ministers of each Department, on this side of the House, to explain in more detail some of the specific initiatives which have been taken, but the whole thrust of economic development under this Government has been to provide job-creation, but job-creation in areas which will be of long term benefit to the economy of the country and not simply direct job-creation which does not make that contribution. That has been the thrust, is the thrust now, and will continue to be the thrust.

INVESTMENT BY PENSION FUNDS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, who must know, notwithstanding the efforts his Government may have made, that the unemployment figure is up by 500,000 today compared to only last year. Would the Minister specifically indicate if he has given any consideration to encouraging or stimulating the pension funds of this country, in the private or public sector, by putting more equity money into business in order to help create some of these jobs that are being lost at the present time? If he has given some consideration to this approach, would he indicate to the House what the response from the pension fund people has been?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows full well that the pension fund investments in this country comprise, of course, one of the greatest sources of capital in equity markets. The Hon. Member may be referring to the fact that the pension funds are limited by legislation with respect to the kind of investments they can make, that is to say, that pension funds are limited to a specific purpose, to provide security for people who are retired from the work force. The pension legislation, whether at the provincial or federal level, tries to balance the security issue of pension investments with that part of the fund which may be used for other purposes, more specifically, funds going to companies in certain sectors which do not have an earnings record, a dividend payment record which would justify, if you like, investment for pension purposes per se, but that matter has been considered for many years.

If the Hon. Member has specific representations to make with respect to whether the present amount designated provincially or federally is inadequate for investments other than those that are stipulated in the legislation in question in each province, and federally, then I suggest that he put those representations into writing and submit them to the Government, and to the Governments of the Province if he feels that progress could be made on that front. I think it is an area worth considering, but I do think it is very important that that balance be maintained. That balance was established with very specific purposes in mind.

MINISTER'S VIEWS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Again I direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development, who will recall a "Government and Business" personal perspective that he wrote in March of this year, which was circulated at the Liberal convention. In the perspective, or viewpoint, the Minister stated:

> I do not recall a period when the relationships between Government and business were as poor as they are today.

Would the Minister indicate what steps he has taken to improve those relationships and, specifically, how does he reconcile the $200 million that is being asked for in the form of equity in Canadair, when he stated in the same paper on page 5, referring to Canadair:

> When we do not have sufficient public capital available to satisfy pressing social needs . . . it is painful to see scarce capital deployed in a manufacturing concern best left to private enterprise.

Could the Minister explain why, if in truth those are his views, he is not taking some corrective steps today to correct both problems that he cited?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, a number of points should be noted. The first one, I suppose, is that the Hon. Member seems to have upgraded his reading.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: The second is that I am sorry that we missed him at the Liberal Policy Convention.

An Hon. Member: You might have learned something.

Mr. Johnston: Be that as it may, the Hon. Member says, as I stated, that relationships were poor between the private sector and Government. That was written in March and I would say that that particular relationship has improved dramatically through a number of measures, perhaps the most important being the consultative process which was led off by the former Minister of Finance and other Ministers on this side of the House. That has continued. I think the investment climate and the relationships between business and Government have improved dramatically. We have seen how the business sector got on board and supported the six and five program. Every day the list grows of those in this country who have expressed support in a very concrete way for that program.

The importance of controlling inflation has been recognized throughout the business community, and I think we probably are seeing a co-operative thrust, the likes of which we have not seen for many, many years, perhaps since the war.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What a fraud.

Mr. Johnston: With respect to the investment in Canadair, it falls very much within the criteria which I outlined in that paper. I think the statement was made that some investments are best left to the private sector.

I would just like to close by saying that if the Hon. Member is prepared to produce some investors who are prepared to put $200 million into Canadair—

Madam Speaker: Order!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He still thinks he is at the Liberal convention.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT OF TAXES ON ALBERTA PETROCHEMICAL COMPANY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question, too, is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. One of the sectors which could provide the long-term jobs which the Minister is referring to is the petrochemical industry which has been crippled as a result of the heavy, up-front taxes imposed under the National Energy Program. One of those companies is Alberta Gas Chemicals Limited which has stated the Company can survive the world-wide recession and the legislated increases in the price of natural gas, but not both of these plus the federal Government taxes on natural gas. This is a wholly owned Canadian company which employs some 170 people and exports about 85 per cent of its product to the international marketplace. Because of the heavy taxes imposed by the federal Government, the Company has been forced into a position to join with a New Zealand company in a joint venture to develop a new methanol plant in New Zealand. Is the Minister aware of this, and what steps is he taking to avert that transition?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I suppose this question should have been directed to me. I do not have the particulars of this case. I will look into them and report to the Hon. Member.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of State for Economic Development. In 1978 there was a sector task force on the petrochemical industry. Might I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of State for Economic Development if that task force recommendation is being studied, and if they will pay heed to the fact that the Government should reduce its take to allow feedstock to be priced competitively with the U.S. Gulf Coast prices? Is the Minister aware of that recommendation, and what action has he taken to employ that recommendation in the difficulties in which the petrochemical industry now finds itself?

• (1125)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, told the Hon. Member this week, we are having internal discussions at this time. There is a problem in the petrochemical industry in Canada. The feedstock price is part of the problem. Those in the East with oil feedstock pay about 80 per cent of the world market price for their oil. Of course, the price is going up because there has been no increase in the international price—the Canadian price will increase next year and, therefore, there will be more of a squeeze at that time. We are looking into the problem. We hope to find a solution acceptable to the industry. At the same time we have to compete in the world market, and there is a squeeze in the petrochemical world market at this time. That is a very important factor.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO CAP PENSION INDEXING—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Government House Leader. We learned yesterday that four Liberal backbenchers and one member of the Conservative Party, all of whom supported the six and five legislation, have now indicated that they intend to vote against Bill C-133. Considering that this Bill is totally unfair and denies pension benefits to thousands who have already paid for them, will the Government now come to its senses and withdraw this Bill?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Right Hon. Prime Minister had a chance to explain to this House that one must look at the spirit of the legislation. Obviously it is not well understood by the New Democratic Party. With regard to the four or five Members that the Hon. Member is talking about, I am not worried at this time. Taking into consideration the answer given yesterday by the NDP House Leader, it appears that the NDP have so many speakers on this Bill that it is unlikely the vote will be taken tomorrow.

Mr. Broadbent: If not tomorrow, Madam Speaker, it is still going to come, I say to the House Leader.

REQUEST THAT DECISION ON LEGISLATION BE TREATED AS VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I will switch to the Deputy Prime Minister. Considering that we not only have on record the names of four Liberal backbenchers, but there is reputedly at least a dozen who have screwed up their courage and indicated they are going to oppose this measure, will the Deputy Prime Minister agree that this Bill involving finances, connected directly to the Government's six and five program, is in fact a matter of confidence and, if the Government loses this Bill, it will be forced to resign?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows from experience which we both shared that a Government never indicates exactly its attitude to a Bill until the moment arrives.

PENSIONS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW BILL C-131

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the master of systematic ambiguity strikes again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Now that the Deputy Prime Minister has cast fog over that issue, will he deal with another pension matter, this one affecting every pensioner in Canada, namely, Bill C-131? Considering this Bill is going to rob virtually every pensioner in the country, will the Government come to its senses on this Bill and tell the people of Canada, in particular the pensioners, that they will not be in the front line of the battle to implement six and five? Will the Government withdraw that Bill?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, apart from thanking the Hon. Member for his flattery, or acknowledging his flattery, I wanted to remind him that, on the substance of the question, the purpose of the six and five program is to reduce inflation to 6 per cent. There have already been signs that that program is succeeding. If we do, as I expect, make a substantial decrease in the inflationary rate next year, to that extent pensioners will be protected. If we achieve a 6 per cent inflation rate, the pensioners in all categories will be totally protected by the 6 per cent provided for in the legislation. If the Hon. Member got behind the six and five program, that would be the best way to protect the pensioners about whom he is speaking.

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY MEMBERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the revolt in the Liberal ranks regarding the retrograde measure which the Government proposes to take in limiting the indexing of pensions for superannuated civil servants. Have these same Liberal stalwarts come forward to condemn an equally retrograde measure, that is, the proposal she is putting before the House to limit the indexing on senior citizens of Canada, some of whom have incomes of between only $9,000 to $10,000?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member refers to people who are earning $9,000 or $10,000, that income is in addition to their Old Age Security pension, I want to be quite clear on that. Yesterday, the figures given by the Hon. Member in her speech were not always very accurate, I am sorry to say. I repeat that in Bill C-131, we are in effect asking Canadians who do not need the supplement to give up part of the indexing and agree to 6 per cent instead of 10 per cent. In fact, all Canadians, are being asked to accept a reduction in income for the purpose of bringing down inflation, which itself would be far more damaging in the long run.

POSITION OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Prime Minister, is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it has to do with the announcement of the appointment by the Prime Minister of the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada, chaired by the Hon. Donald Stovel Macdonald. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, having discussed this matter with the Prime Minister again, if he is in a position to report to the House on the Government's attitude with respect to the propriety of Mr. Macdonald heading this far-reaching Commission, having regard to his aspirations to leadership of the Liberal Party, where he will be attempting to seek support amongst Liberal Members of Parliament and Liberal supporters across the country, and particularly where Mr. Macdonald, having been a Minister of Finance, is the author of certain initiatives and present-day economic circumstances which he should be able to criticize independently?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows more about Mr. Macdonald's intentions than I do. To my knowledge, he has absolutely no intention, and has declared no intention, to seek the leadership of the Liberal Party. I would ask the Hon. Member to concentrate on his own Party and forget about ours, because we will handle that effectively on our own.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I know the Deputy Prime Minister at one time had leadership ambitions of his own, which are no longer present. I know that for a fact, because Jim Coutts told me so.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CHAIRMAN'S DIRECTORSHIPS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, who is a super minister in this group with respect to the economic union and future of our country. Mr. Macdonald will be looking at such things as the banking system in our country, the forestry situation, the chemical industry, the insurance and aerospace industries, about which the Minister is very concerned. Can the Minister tell us whether or not he has now been able to prevail upon the Prime Minister to ask Mr. Macdonald to resign from his directorships in a number of multinational corporations, including Du Pont Canada Inc., Boise Cascade Canada Ltd., and Manufacturers Life Insurance Company? The commitment was made by the Minister of Finance the other day that this matter would be taken up. Has the Minister of State for Economic Development now asked Mr. Macdonald to resign these directorships?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member suggests, he asked the question of the Minister of Finance the other day, and now he is asking me whether the Minister of Finance has talked to the Prime Minister, and that I do not know.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Has he done anything about it? You are in charge.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STUDY OF INCOME LEVEL APPLICABLE TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. On July 15 I asked the Minister if there was a possibility of raising the casual earning exemptions for recipients of war veterans allowances, presently set at $3,100 for married veterans and $2,100 for single veterans. In his reply the Minister stated that indeed a study was being conducted in this regard. Could the Minister now inform this House as to the present status of that study?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The question of casual earning levels was last reviewed and adjusted in July 1980. In reply to the Hon. Member's earlier question, I indicated to him that the matter was under study. I have asked the Chairman of the War Veterans Allowance Board to review the total area of casual earnings and to bring forward a report. I anticipate receiving that report very shortly, and I can assure all Hon. Members that when the report is received it will be responded to very quickly.

REQUEST THAT ADJUSTMENTS BE MADE RETROACTIVE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, since it looks as though 1982 will have come and gone without any solution to this problem, I would like to ask the Minister for some assurance that, if legislation is brought forth after 1982 has gone by, it will refer back and include 1982.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not want to prejudge the recommendations of the War Veterans Allowance Board, but I would just enlighten the Hon. Member to the fact that legislative changes are not required. We can make the adjustments as recommended by the War Veterans Allowance Board, by regulation. I would also draw to the Hon. Member's attention that, in the interim, war veterans allowance benefits continue to be fully indexed and are adjusted on a quarterly basis, responding to veterans' growing costs, as is the case with all other Canadians.

FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. While we know of the important programs which have been succeeding in conservation, and the other major exploration projects in the Atlantic area, could the Minister inform the house as to the status of, and position of the Government with respect to that important proposal regarding the harnessing of the tides, the Fundy tidal power project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as the House knows, there is an experimental project which has been put in place in the Annapolis Valley. I visited that site, even when I was not the Minister of Energy. Now it is in operation, and from this experimental project we will know better about both the physical and economic possibilities of using that source of power. We are having some discussion at this time regarding these matters with the Government of Nova Scotia, and we are making progress, but there is no final decision to be made at this time. However, there is a possibility that it will be studied further.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE TO RESOLVE NORDAIR DISPUTE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. The Minister is aware, I am sure, that it is now apparent to everyone who is concerned that Nordair has no interest in resolving its dispute with its employees. Rather than sit down and attempt to find a solution, officials even went as far as to ask the Labour Board to decertify the employees union in order that a union which they themselves were attempting to set up, might take over. That was refused. I ask the Minister of Labour, given the length of time involved, given that the company does not appear to want to find a solution voluntarily, will the Minister call both parties to Ottawa? Will he involve himself personally? Will he sit down with them and attempt to find a way to resolve this longstanding dispute?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the synthetic rage expressed by the Hon. Member is not matched by the realities of the world outside. I hope the Hon. Member knows that mediator Waller met with the parties on November 15 and they were unable to come to any settlement. The mediation services are available at any time as soon as the parties indicate they are willing to negotiate in a serious manner.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I put to the Minister there is no synthetic rage. I was simply stating the facts as they are available to anyone. Perhaps the Minister could take a moment and become aware of what is going on in the labour relations field.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONVENE MEETING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question had nothing to do with appointing a mediator. I am asking the Minister to make himself aware, for the first time in his life, of the circumstances surrounding the operations of the company and its attempts to eliminate the union as the bargaining agent for the employees, and to become personally involved and ask each of the parties to come to Ottawa to sit down with the Minister and discuss ways and means of resolving this outstanding dispute.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, if I were to believe that my personal involvement would resolve the question, I would have already done so. However, this is a matter which cannot be resolved by political intervention as easily as the Hon. Member may seem to think.

Mr. Deans: Have you tried?

Mr. Caccia: I repeat that, if the parties are willing to negotiate seriously, we have been, we are, and we will be available to mediate at any time.

CRIMINAL CODE

MONETARY PROFITS EARNED BY MURDERERS OF QUEBEC MINISTER, PIERRE LAPORTE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice what he intends to do about the repugnant spectacle of the so-called "sincere" killers of Pierre Laporte who will be making a profit on their murder?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member may know, this whole question of proceeds, in that sense, from writing about crime has been referred to a committee for a report to us. It is not a question with an easy solution because it involves the possibility of interference with the rights of free speech—

Mr. Clark: Laporte's rights have been interfered with.

Mr. MacGuigan: —and it is also a matter, from the viewpoint of the system of justice and sentencing, which I have asked to have studied with respect to the criminal law review.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO PREVENT PROFITS ACCRUING TO MURDERERS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, certainly the Minister of Justice has to be concerned with civil rights, but there is also a collective sense of decency in a community—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —which often takes primacy and priority over individual civil rights. On that basis, as in the situation of the macabre Olson murders several months ago, would the Minister, out of a sense of collective decency, talk to the House leaders and see if, during this weekend, there could be an amendment to the Criminal Code brought in with the cooperation of all parts of this House so that no Canadian can make a profit from the murder of anyone, let alone of a man of the character of Pierre Laporte?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, it would be interesting if, instead of emoting about the problem, as we can all do because we are all concerned about such events, the Hon. Member had a suggestion to make as to what kind of amendments could be proposed.

Miss MacDonald: He just did.

Mr. Lawrence: Listen to the question.

Mr. MacGuigan: If he made an amendment, I am not aware of it, or in what form he has made it.

In any event, Madam Speaker, this is a subject which is very much under review because it is one that very much concerns us.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

SEVERITY OF PENALTY IMPOSED ON AIR B.C.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I would draw the attention of the Minister of Transport to a letter from the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce which I am sure he has received by now, dated November 8, outlining a Draconian penalty against Air B.C., consisting of the cutting of service between Victoria and Vancouver and other points in the Province, because of an April Fool's prank of offering cut-rate fares between Victoria and Vancouver on April Fool's Day. It is the travelling public—

Mr. Rossi: Question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —which is being asked to suffer.

Will the Minister intervene with the Canadian Transport Commission—I am not even sure the CTC has the right to penalize air traffic in this way—to make sure that this Draconian measure is withdrawn?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, for those who do not know what the joke was, it might be a good idea to say what it was. This airline decided, for April Fool's Day, to carry people between the two locations indicated at a ridiculous price of 99 cents, or something of this kind.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Well, why not?

Mr. Pepin: Well, there are rules to be followed in these matters.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): For one day?

Mr. Pepin: One of the rules is against predatory prices, for example.

Be that as it may, I have been in touch with the CTC and asked them to review this situation, and I will provide an answer as soon as I can.

COMMISSION'S POWERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, can the Minister provide us with the actual statutory or regulatory authorization which the CTC might have, to impose Draconian penalties like this against any airline?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not insensitive to the argument brought up by my hon. friend. Indeed, in this matter it is the travelling public which suffers from the eccentricities of an airline.

Mr. Fraser: The whole thing is so stupid, why don't you fix it up?

Mr. Pepin: Well, who was stupid in the first place is the question, too,—is a relevant question to ask.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a point of order, that is not a stupid question.

Madam Speaker: There is no such thing as a point of order during question period.

Mr. Pepin: I said, in terms of stupidity, the question could be raised as to who was stupid in the first place, the company that offered this rate as an April Fool's Day bargain, or the CTC which made the decision to punish the company for having done that. I suggest that the CTC was following the rules.

Anyway, I say again that I brought the point to the attention of the CTC and I will be in touch with them as soon as I can and report to the House.

ROLE OF COMMISSION VIS-À-VIS AIR B.C. AND VIA RAIL SERVICE ABANDONMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Transport explain to the House why the CTC has the authority to act against Air B.C. but does not have the authority to conduct public hearings on the abandonment of 20 per cent of the VIA Rail service in the country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is a very easy answer to give. The CTC had explored and investigated ad nauseam the question of railway transportation in Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: What was their decision?

Mr. Pepin: All the routes I cut last year about this time had been investigated by the CTC on a one-by-one basis. I wish my hon. friend had a better memory because I explained that profusely at the time. I have said that the investigation by the CTC of each of these railway routes, single line, would not have given up an over-all policy. I suggested that at the time I invoked Section 64 of the National Transportation Act which gives the Minister the power to do that, to take an over-all approach. That is what is meant by the law and that is what I did.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Minister well knows that the CTC's hearings recommended a continuation of the lines which the Minister, acting in ignorance of the CTC and the public's right to public hearings, unilaterally cut out. He knows he turned his back on democracy, just as he turned his back on the Pepin-Robarts Commission.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ORIGIN OF COMMISSION'S INVOLVEMENT IN AIRLINE CASE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, concerning Air B.C., did the CTC receive a complaint from the public, and will the Government table in this House any complaint received from the public and any other information which reveals to this Parliament how the CTC became seized of this issue?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know how the CTC became aware or was seized of the Air B.C. case, the April Fool's special. I do not know, but I will find out.

On the other matter, I want to re-emphasize, in trying to reach my hon. friend through a certain wall which seems to be between the two of us at this time, that the CTC can make decisions on single routes, Moncton to Edmundston, or Saskatoon to Regina. They can do that. But that does not give us an over-all plan. The way to get an over-all plan is to take an over-all view, and Section 64 of the National Transportation Act gives the Minister the power to act, even against the decisions of the CTC in implementing conclusions. That is what I have tried to do, and I suggest that many people who might have regretted the cuts I brought about a year or so ago now realize that they were necessary, particularly in light of VIA's growing deficit.

VIA RAIL

FEDERAL COURT DECISION ON MINISTER'S ACTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport will know that this is the last day for the Department of Transport to decide whether it will appeal the decision of the Federal Court of Canada, giving Transport 2000 and the City of Melville, Saskatchewan, joined I believe by Jasper, Alberta, the legal right to question the legality of the Minister's unilateral action in wiping out VIA Rail service. Is the Minister going to appeal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, a number of cases have been brought to court against the decision which I made approximately a year and a half ago. In all cases of which I am aware, those who went to court lost. Therefore I feel that the right of the Government and the Minister of Transport to use Section 64 of the National Transportation Act has been reconfirmed four or five times; I do not think there is any doubt about it.

PETRO-CANADA

OPERATION OF CASING YARD IN MULGRAVE, N.S.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I have before me a copy of a letter written by J. B. MacPhail, Drilling Superintendent of Petro-Canada on the East Coast, to Eastern Offshore Services Ltd., a servicing company. I want to quote one line of it which reads:

> We, Petro-Canada, want to adopt the same policy as two other major oil companies that are presently operating in the Halifax area . . . This policy is such that it enables Petro-Canada to operate their casing yard as a non-union yard.

Has the Minister discussed with longshoremen the proposed move of the casing yard by Petro-Canada from Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, to Auld Cove, Nova Scotia? Can he report that he will not allow this employer—and it happens to be Petro-Canada—to close its operations to avoid a collective agreement?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the situation which emerged in the last few days. Labour Canada is investigating this matter, and I will be able to report to the Hon. Member very shortly.

Mr. Waddell: I look forward to that report.

LEASING OF OIL RIG

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would return to his seat, I would direct my supplementary question to him. The Minister always says that he is a supporter of the little guy. I wonder whether he is aware of a letter from some possible little guys, that is, some of the shipbuilding workers on the East Coast, in Saint John, New Brunswick, who have complained that Petro-Canada, instead of building an oil rig there, is leasing one.

In view of my previous question to the Minister of Labour, does the Minister really believe that Petro-Canada is ours and therefore has to help the workers of Canada, and not engage in anti-union activities but support Canadian shipbuilding? Is the Minister now in a position to tell the House and the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of Canada of Saint John, New Brunswick, that indeed Petro-Canada will build a rig there and provide jobs for Canadian workers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the problem. Of course the situation in the rig business is not the same as it was before. Some years ago there were prospects that there would be a large need for the construction of new rigs, but at this present time there is a surplus of rigs in world markets. Any corporation has to make a choice based on the best economic decision, and if there are rigs available which are much cheaper than new ones, it is a common-sense decision in business to go the least expensive way possible. This is exactly what Petro-Canada has done.

INQUIRY RESPECTING FORMER ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE CORPORAL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. "Long Knife", the code name for the RCMP security service corporal who allegedly received $3,500 from the Soviet KGB for betraying a double agent in Montreal, has now been identified in the Winnipeg Free Press as an ex-RCMP corporal by the name of James Morrison. Well over a week ago, even though the Government has been aware of these facts for five years, the Solicitor General referred the question of whether or not there would be a prosecution to the Minister of Justice. Surely the Minister of Justice has made up his mind. Will there be a prosecution, will there not be a prosecution, and, if he has not made up his mind, why not? When will we hear whether or not there will be a prosecution?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, since receiving the request from the Solicitor General, I have directed that an inquiry be made. I do not know when the results will come to me for a decision, but I can assure the Hon. Member that when the recommendation comes forward I will act on it very quickly.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, in this and other allied cases, the impression is left with a number of us that simply because a matter is referred to the Minister of Justice or to the Department of Justice somehow or other we should all shut up and be quiet about it. This is a matter which very directly concerns many people in the country, and it is a matter on which there should have been a governmental statement regardless of whether or not the Minister has made up his mind. Surely he can put some oil underneath his departmental advisers to come up with a decision, now that they have been aware of the matter for some time, and surely the House deserves to have a full statement on this and other allied matters where there have been no prosecutions of Canadian traitors. Will the Minister make a statement as soon as possible, regardless of whether or not he has decided on a prosecution?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman's position in the House leaves him the freedom to be irresponsible, just as my job requires me to be responsible.

AIRPORTS

PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF CHARLOTTETOWN AIRPORT, P.E.I.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the 1940s the antiquated Charlottetown airport has been patched and filled and extended to the point where it is now a disgrace, not only to Prince Edward Island but also to the Minister's Department and indeed to the entire country. Every year since 1977 the federal Government has made glorious announcements about design plans and tenders for a new airport terminal building at Charlottetown and for a new east-west runway. Each time Islanders have been sadly disappointed. Will the Minister tell the House what are the most current plans for the airport, and will he assure the House that those plans will not be set back yet again?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am almost as unhappy about what happened at Charlottetown before I became the Minister and since, as is my hon. friend. The design works on the air terminal are some six or seven months late now. If everything goes well—and I hope it will—tenders will be called in the fall of 1983. That is the present situation with respect to the air terminal.

In case my hon. friends are interested in knowing why this has taken place, I might say that one of the rules of the implementation of the democratic process in the Department of Transport is that, before going on with the construction of air terminal, we ask the carriers if they would look at and agree to the costs which will be incurred by them as renters of the terminal. It is quite easy to imagine that those costs are always too high in the carrier's view. Thus we are lead to prolonged negotiation and delays. This was one of the reasons for delays at the Charlottetown airport. Finally, conclusions have been reached in discussions on rentals with the carriers, and this is why we can move now. But we are six or seven months behind mostly because of procrastinated negotiations.

Mr. McMillan: The plans for the new Charlottetown airport are not six or seven months behind; they are seven years behind.

CONTROL TOWER OPERATIONS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. There has been a lot of talk of late about proposals to eliminate or decommission control towers at various airports across the country, including Charlottetown's. In view of the fact that Prince Edward Island has distinct safety requirements because of terrain, climate, weather, and so much else, will the Minister now put to an end any suggestion that air traffic over P.E.I. will be orchestrated by some instruments in a remote tower in some other part of the country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, let us isolate these problems. First in regard to the construction of the control tower itself, the design work on it is going ahead. As a matter of fact I understand that it has been completed to the 60 per cent level.

• (1200)

On the subject of the reduction of air controls at different Canadian airports, I had a question recently on that subject. In answer I said that indeed we are looking at ways in which money can be saved in this particular area, and I suggest that Canadians would approve of that. If some work can be done in a certain way less expensive than another, we Ministers have the responsibility to try to reach that objective. However, I want to guarantee to my hon. friend and to the population at large that air safety will not be compromised. If there is a reduction of working hours for controllers at airports, it will be because safety can be ensured otherwise.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY RESPECTING USE OF $170 MILLION GRANTED TO QUEBEC

Mr. René Gingras (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In an interview with one of the Quebec newspapers, the Parti Québécois minister, Pierre Marois, said that he had discovered that the New Employment Expansion and Development Program announced last week would be spread over a period of twenty-seven months instead of eighteen. Perhaps the Minister could give the House some clarification in connection with the $170 million that are to be allocated to job creation in Quebec.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to set the record straight on this employment program, which was announced recently by the Minister of Finance, and by the same token I would like to inform the Member for Winnipeg-St. James that he too may have been mistaken about this program. The Minister of Finance announced the program would last eighteen months, and now people are trying to prove the program will in fact run for twenty-seven months because it covers three fiscal years. Now, the program is to start on January 1 of next year, and if we count the number of months in this fiscal year, next year and the three months of fiscal year 1984-85, it all adds up to eighteen months, Madam Speaker. I should also hope that the Quebec Minister for Income Security will shortly inform us what his intentions are as to participating in the program, and that he will do what he told the press about a week ago, namely, concentrate on employment issues in Canada instead of talking about independence.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, November 18, 1982, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—RESPONSE OF MR. PEPIN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker, if I heard correctly, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) decided to categorize my question as stupid.

Mr. Pepin: I did not.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would like to check the wording in Hansard because I really do not think it is the role of Ministers to decide—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member also has opinions on other statements that are made in the House. It is quite customary to express opinions on statements made by other members. If the Hon. Member wants to check Hansard, he may do that; but I just want to remind him that he did not have a question of privilege, but rather a point of order.

PETITIONS

MR. KING—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present a petition to this House on behalf of 3,140 citizens of Okanagan-Similkameen, British Columbia. An attached letter over the signature of Lelannd Haver of Westbank, B.C., states in part:

We the members of "Metric Won't Do" wish to bring to your attention a matter of paramount importance at this time, that being the whole question of metrication—

The nature of the petition is to pray and beseech this House to re-evaluate the Government's decision to implement metric and stop the onslaught of worthless and excessive expenditures for a measurement that is less than perfect, with due respect for truth and freedom of choice.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that you will find their petition in order and that through their efforts, with the co-operation of the Members of this House, the citizens of Canada may be spared the further imposition of forced metric and the forced abandonment of Imperial measure, which they say was established from practical and spiritual origins.

MR. LEWYCKY—SCLATER, MAN.—CALL FOR RESTORATION OF POSTAL FACILITIES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for Dauphin, Manitoba, it is my duty to present before this House a petition representing residents of Sclater, Manitoba and its surrounding community.

The postal services of Sclater were, and remain, withdrawn following the destruction by fire of the postal facilities there. Given the fact that the former post office was located in a general store and, as such, constituted an important focal point of the community, and that residents must now travel in excess of 50 kilometres in order to obtain their mail, the petitioners therefore request that this House ask the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation to instruct the President and Chief Executive Officer to restore in full the postal facilities and services formerly enjoyed by the community of Sclater, Manitoba.

MR. REID (ST. CATHARINES)—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I am privileged, as the Member of Parliament for St. Catharines, to present a petition on behalf of 180 students at Brock University. These students wish to present a petition to affirm and express their commitment to peace and disarmament, and express their opposition to the continuing nuclear arms build-up, and more particularly the role of the Government of Canada in the testing of the Cruise missile. These petitioners humbly pray that Canada will terminate its agreement to test the Cruise missile on Canadian soil.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,458 and 4,523.

[Text]

FUEL CONSUMED BY FARMERS

Question No. 4,458—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. For (a) 1980 (b) 1981, what were the total amounts and average volumes per farm of (i) gasoline (ii) diesel fuel (iii) oil (iv) natural gas used by agricultural producers in Canada?

2. What were the average prices to producers of those fuels and how much of the prices comprised federal excise taxes?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Department of National Revenue as follows:

1. At present there is no comprehensive source of information on amounts of average volumes per farm of gasoline, diesel fuel, oil or natural gas used by agricultural producers in Canada. In Provinces that have farm gasoline tax rebate programs or marked gasoline or diesel fuel (market for off-road use such as farming, mining, logging, fishing, emergency generators) some rough estimates have been made of farm consumption. These estimates are only available for a few provinces and the information is not consistent among Provinces.

The most reliable indicator of gasoline and diesel fuel use on farms in the fuel, oil and lubricant expenditure estimate made by the Agriculture Statistics Division of Statistics Canada which in 1980 was estimated at $721.6 million and in 1981 at $954.5 million. For stove and furnace oil, natural gas and propane used for heating and crop drying the best indicator is the same Division's estimate of heating fuel expenditure which were estimated at $155.7 million in 1980 and $221.4 million in 1981.

Though there is a lack of data at the moment, Statistics Canada's Farm Energy Use Survey conducted in July, 1982 will provide estimates of farm gasoline, diesel fuel, oil and natural gas quantities used by Canadian agricultural producers in 1981. The survey will also provide a basis for the monitoring of consumption during the next few years. The results of the July survey will be available in early 1983.

See also question No. 4,112 answered July 16, 1982.

2. Gasoline. This fuel is subject to federal sales tax of 9 per cent on the manufacturer's sale price if domestically produced or on the duty paid value if imported, under section 27(1) of the Excise Tax Act. In addition to the sales tax, gasoline is also subject to an excise tax of 1.5 cents per litre under Section 12 of Schedule I of the Act.

Diesel Fuel. Diesel fuel is subject to federal sales tax of 9 per cent on the manufacturer's sale price if domestically produced or on the duty paid value if imported. However, diesel fuels are exempt from sales tax if used for lighting or heating purposes or in the generation of electricity, except where such electricity is used primarily in the operation of a vehicle.

Oils other than Diesel Fuel Oil. These oils are subject to the 9 per cent federal sales tax only.

Natural Gas. Natural gas and gas liquids are taxed under Sections 25.13 and 25.14 of the Excise Tax Act at specific rates. A schedule of these rates of tax follows:

Schedule of Rates of Tax

Product	Feb. 1/82
Marketable Pipeline Gas (per gigajoule)
Rate of tax	$ 0.63
Canadian ownership Increase*	0.14*
Total	$ 0.77
Ethane (per cubic meter)
Rate of tax	$11.65
Canadian ownership Increase*	2.60*
Total	$14.25
Propane (per cubic meter)
Rate of tax	$16.00
Canadian ownership Increase*	3.55*
Total	$19.55
Butanes (per cubic meter)
Rate of tax	$17.85
Canadian ownership Increase*	3.95*
Total	$21.80

Mixtures of natural gas liquids. Rate of tax and Canadian ownership increase vary according to the proportion of ethane, propane and butanes contained in the mixture.

* Canadian ownership increase. Changes in the amount may be prescribed by Governor in Council.

N.B. Since February 1, 1982, changes in the amount of the natural gas and gas liquids tax may be prescribed by Governor in Council.

PAMPHLET OUTLINING CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Question No. 4,523—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the cost to the Government for the production of the information package recently distributed by the Canadian Unity Information Office, which included a pamphlet outlining the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a poster of the Charter and a 1982-83 calendar?

2. How many copies of each item are being printed?

3. What is the cost of (a) producing (b) distributing the information package?

4. Will there be any charge to students or schools receiving the package and, if so, what will the selling price be?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice):

1. Production costs:	Pamphlet	$ 5,000
	Calendar	$122,000
2. Number of Copies:	Pamphlet	100,000

3. (a) Cost of producing, as stated above (1). (b) Cost of distributing the package: $10,000. CUIO does not know how many requests, for how many copies and where they will be shipped across Canada. Therefore, the mailing cost is not available at the moment.

4. No.

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE REPEAL ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-119, An Act to repeal certain Statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to move second reading of Bill C-119, the miscellaneous statutes repeal Bill. This Bill, together with Bill C-118, the records retention amendment Bill, which was enacted earlier this session, forms an important legislative component of the Government's current regulatory reform program.

[Translation]

This program was launched by the Federal Government in the fall of 1980, in response to rising concern in the private sector and among consumers about the potential effects of unnecessary or obsolete regualtions on Canadians. Hon. Members may recall that in the fall of 1979, at the First Ministers' Conference on the Economy, these problems were discussed at length, and it was agreed that the Economic Council of Canada would be asked to give careful scrutiny to the regulatory process in Canada. The Council made a thorough study of the subject and submitted a preliminary report in November 1979, followed by its final report in July 1981. In the meantime, Members of the Senate and the House of Commons also made a careful study of these issues. Hon. Members are aware of the excellent work done by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulatory and Other Statutory Instruments. In July 1980, the Committee presented a major report on various aspects of the regulatory process and of parliamentary reform. A special committee of the House had been established to study regulatory reform, and it too submitted a report, in December of the same year.

• (1210)

[English]

The Government's regulatory reform program, of which this Bill is a component, is directly responsive not only to the concerns expressed but also to the recommendations for reform that have been made by all the various groups and participants from both Parliament and private sector. The program reflects a growing awareness that there can be unintended negative effects on the efficiency of Government and industry resulting from the way regulations are implemented and administered. Therefore, the Government must make every effort to ensure both that the objectives of Government regulations are met as efficiently as possible and that unnecessary costs or other negative effects associated with regulations are reduced to a minimum.

The Government will then assess the progress that has been made and consider proposals with a view to taking further measures in the future. In establishing its regulatory reform program, the Government had two major objectives in mind: to improve public administration by reforming the federal regulatory process and to remove undue regulatory pressures on the Canadian economy.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) entrusted co-ordination of the program to the President of the Treasury Board.

[English]

I want to recognize the very good work of my distinguished predecessor, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), in this very key area of regulatory reform. Our approach to reform is essentially one of improving the management of the federal regulatory process. We will strive to manage the regulatory process in such a way that the proposed regulation is scrutinized to ensure that it is effective. Existing regulations will be reviewed and assessed to ensure that it still meets their goals at acceptable cost.

We believe that the existing regulatory activities of Government, particularly in the area of economic regulations, should be reassessed to ensure that they are consistent with the Government's economic and social policy objectives. We believe that the continuing flow of new regulatory proposals should be subject to an analysis of the potential impacts.

Before being asked to make decisions, Ministers must be provided with better information on the cost and benefits of regulatory proposals, on alternatives to regulatory intervention, on the effects that the proposals might have on the distribution of wealth and income. We believe that there is room for further improvement in the federal regulatory process and its administration. This process and administration should ensure more effective consultation with the private sector during the various steps and stages of regulatory decision-making, as well as an improvement where necessary of the accountability of federal regulators.

Our continuing regulatory reform program encompasses a variety of projects, each aimed at furthering the underlying objectives established by the Government. The Bill before us is the product of one of these projects which called on federal regulatory departments to review their statutes and regulations and to weed out obsolete, unnecessary or duplicative provisions.

[Translation]

The Miscellaneous Statute Repeal Act would provide for repeal of the 124 acts which have been found to be obsolete to date. Many of these acts have not been enforced for some time, and most are not concerned with regulation. This bill is basically a housekeeping measure, and its main concern is with the primary objective of the regulatory reform program, which is to improve public administration. In fact, it is the initial result, when we speak of repeal legislation, of a very wide-ranging study carried out by federal ministers with a view to ridding our legislation of all unnecessary elements and updating it as much as possible.

[English]

To sum up, this miscellaneous statute reform Bill is an integral part of the Government's over-all regulatory reform program and represents an important first step in tackling the job of legislative housekeeping. I believe it represents an important measure, among several, that we are pursuing to improve public administration and over-all management of federal regulations. I believe that the introduction of the bill and the cosideration now being given to it by Parliament should give an important message to both the public and private sectors. Members of Parliament through the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform and through the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments have stressed the need for a concerted effort toward regulatory reform. This Government is in agreement that reform is needed. We are committed to take action through our regulatory reform program.

We cannot do everything at one time. Some of our objectives may be difficult to achieve. However, no one should make the mistake that our commitment is in doubt because we may not be tackling a particular problem at a particular point in time or because it is taking some time to see change. We do have a strong commitment to regulatory reform. Our commitment should be judged on the basis of whether we deliver the reforms that are identified as targets in our work program. We promise to weed out obsolete, unnecessary and unenforceable federal statutes. We are delivering on that promise by presenting this Bill before Parliament.

I want to repeat that it represents some very important work done by my distinguished predecessor as President of the Treasury Board, who is now Minister of State for Economic Development.

In its recent submission to the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, the Canadian Bar Association commented that Parliament had not done well in handling certain types of legislation. They commented on our inability to deal effectively and quickly with routine bills that did not involve contentious policy issues and that should not give rise to partisan differences.

I hope that Members of the House will all agree that this Bill before us now should be viewed as such an item and that collectively we will be able to give it prompt attention. For our part, the Government will be providing to Members who examine the Bill in Committee stage a copy of a discussion paper which sets out a brief justification for proceeding with the repeal of each of the 124 statutes listed.

Therefore, I ask Hon. Members of all Parties to support this Bill, and consistent with Parliament's responsibility to carefully scrutinize legislation, to enact the Bill as expeditiously as possible. By doing so, Parliament will be reaffirming its interests in, and commitment to, regulatory reform. It is a message that I think Parliament should send to the Canadian public.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like the House to note that this is the first piece of legislation which has been introduced by the Hon. Minister in his renewed capacity as President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). Therefore, it is the first opportunity that I have had, at least in this function, to express my good wishes to him in the fulfillment of the responsibility of his portfolio. I also note that the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), who was in the House and will be back shortly, is the new Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board.

This means that with respect to the business of regulatory reform, the repeal of miscellaneous statutes, and items such as Bill C-133 with respect to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, we have two completely new and uncluttered minds to direct to these problems. I know that this will be of some importance to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Hon. Members in the House of Commons as we consider these problems. I sincerely say to the Minister, through Your Honour, that I wish him well. The process is a good one and we should consider the statutes from time to time.

The full process of regulatory reform is important to the country. I think Hon. Members would be interested in knowing that there are 11 statutes from the Department of Agriculture, one from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, five from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, three from the Department of the Environment, 11 from the Department of Finance, four from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, three from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, two from the Department of Insurance, 11 from the Department of Labour, two from the Department of National Health and Welfare, three from the Department of National Revenue, three from the Department of Public Works, four from the Department of the Secretary of State, one from the Department of Supply and Services, 59 from the Department of Transport and one from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The list of bills is there. Therefore, I am pleased to hear the hon. gentleman say that he will supply the members of the Committee with a discussion paper and it will be a large one, I imagine, with respect to all those Bills, and it will be of immense help to the Committee.

From the point of view of the Official Opposition, I want to say to the Minister that it is our intention to expedite this matter. Certainly, we must do other things to reform the regulatory system. We must take a critical look at the institution of the Comptroller General to see where it can be strengthened. The late Robert Andras was the President of the Treasury Board who finally brought the Bill involving the Comptroller General before the House of Commons. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the distinguished gentleman consulted and presented that Bill so well the matter went through very quickly. He was moved to take decision to Cabinet which ultimately approved it as a result of the work of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who pressed hard in the House of Commons for the Comptroller General.

We must consider whether or not that system is appropriate and whether it can be strengthened. Indeed, I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the President of the Treasury Board that one of the witnesses before the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, the parliamentary reform committee is going to be the Comptroller General of Canada. We will also be calling witnesses from the Treasury Board, which we think is important as we enter into the new part of the work of the Committee with respect to accountability, closing the loop spoken of by Mr. Lambert in his report and, so eloquently, by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Minister's colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), who have filed a very interesting report which I commend to the Minister.

We ought not to lose sight of two other legislative aspects in reforming the system—because that is what we are talking about, reforming the system. One is the process of sunset legislation whereby, with respect to each agency of Government, there is a provision that every five or perhaps seven years is a review by Parliament to see whether or not the circumstances causing the creation of an agency still exist or whether they have changed. If an agency's circumstances should change, there is a determination whether its programs are relevant or whether the Canadian public is getting the best for its tax dollar with respect to the services of Government. I must remind the Minister that an important part of the changes in machinery, for which I understand he is responsible, involves the entire question of the accountability and control by Parliament of Crown corporations, which are proliferating. One could make a very partisan speech about the proliferation which has occurred over the years. I do not intend to do that this Friday afternoon, but it is a fact, concerning which there has been a promise of action by the Government. The Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) did bring forward a piece of legislation which was all-encompassing. There is presently a piece of legislation brought forward by the Government which does not go nearly as far and is not nearly as comprehensive; but that is something which has been done to bring this administration under control.

The Minister devoted a great part of his speech to the question of regulatory reform which has been given lip service in Parliament and devotion by certain Members of Parliament. Unfortunately, it has not been a priority of the Government, which is far behind concerning the necessary regulatory reform in the country. It is necessary if we are to make Government relevant, if we are to manage with less in a time of restraint, if we are to make the process understandable to the business sector and have the business sector appropriately relate to Government. There is a wide gulf of misunderstanding between the private sector and the public sector. I believe reforms in that area can bridge that gulf, because if this country is to prosper, all its elements must come together. The federal Government, the Provinces, the private and public sectors, the private sector including managers, owners, small business and labour, must all come together and the regulatory reform process is of vital concern. It has been addressed by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which is co-chaired by a Liberal Senator and a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament.

I have in my hand the Order Paper, and I am not sure of the number, but I believe there are at least six or eight reports, maybe more, involving regulatory reform which have not been addressed by this Parliament or the Government. I want to tell the Minister that the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure is concerned about it, and the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has indicated to the Special Committee that it wants to come forward to discuss the matter, to link the regulatory reform process with parliamentary reform, because that is indeed what it involves. This institution must have the tools to make the accountability process work. I commend the report to the Minister's attention.

There is another important aspect. I am now referring to the very successful Special Committee on Regulatory Reform which was chaired by the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) and co-chaired by the distinguished Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) and the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook). The Committee produced a benchmark report. Because we are not opposing the Bill, we must be assured today or on other occasions that the report on regulatory reform does not gather dust, but rather gathers interest, and that the labour of the members of that Special Committee, the Hon. Member for the Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), was not in vain. It is one thing for Members of Parliament to work on these matters, but what is more important is that there be a discernible response from the Government to such reports, which is what the process of parliamentary reform is all about. That is why there is a provision in the third report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, the parliamentary reform committee, that the Government respond in a comprehensive way, not in a piecemeal way. The Committee can request that. I think it is extremely important that that be done. I do not want to see this work lie fallow, because a lot of hard work by these Members whose names I have mentioned and other Members of the House of Commons and the Senate will go by the board if it is allowed to slip.

What about some of their recommendations? I am not going to read them all. I suspected that the Minister might make the speech that he did and I have the recommendations in broad terms. There are some 29 of them which I commend to the Minister. There has not been a statement in the House with respect to these regulations since that report has been filed.

I am going to highlight some of them. They say this is part of a reform process. They recommend that Departments and agencies pre-publish regulations whenever that is appropriate. Why? Because those regulations affect the public; they affect business; they affect labour; they affect fishermen; they affect primary producers of all kinds; they affect small and large businesses. They have an impact. How many times has that Committee on Statutory Instruments heard from what I call the aggrieved public as a result of the imposition of regulations? These were not passed in bad faith, I have to say, but with bad judgment, I must say, on some occasions.

It would be better if there was a notification and comment process where, if regulations were to be dealt with, they would be prepared, filed and available at the time of second reading, if that were possible. Before a Bill in this House receives third reading, those regulations would be open to the public which is concerned.

There is a suggestion by the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments that perhaps when a statute is sent to Committee to study the merits of a proposal, the regulatory power contained in that statute should be referred to the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments. At that time the extent of the regulatory power, the question as to whether the Government really needs that power to carry out the intention of the statute, could be dealt with.

I am alarmed about the developing process of producing skeletal legislation and leaving so much of it to regulation. That explains partly why in the United Kingdom there were 800 regulations in one particular period of time, and in Canada there were 3,500 regulations in the same period of time. That is a change of policy I commend to the hon. gentleman.

The Committee also said that there should be an impact assessment of these regulations. How will those regulations impact on the sectors that they are meant to govern, because they are legislative in nature?

There was the recommendation by the Committee that each Department and agency review immediately its regulatory statutes and regulations to identify unnecessary and outdated regulatory statutes and regulations. They should set a schedule so that we and the public will know that the process is going on, a process that would lead to more detailed review and further action.

There was also the recommendation that Departments and agencies ensure that all their regulatory activities are evaluated periodically under the program evaluation system administered by the office of the Comptroller General. The Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure has recommended that the annual reports of Departments and agencies be referred automatically to that Committee. I think that is again a benchmark recognition that will do so much for private Members of the House of Commons and for the process of Parliament to hold Government accountable. The Committee dealt with that. They say that in those annual reports of Departments and agencies that would come to Committees automatically, there should be a summary of the progress each year that has been made in regulatory reform, including the reduction of paper burden, initiation of better service to the public and expansion of the notice and consultation procedures. There should be a summary for the Committees of this House of Commons each year of major regulatory initiatives undertaken in the past year; an identification of major regulatory initiatives contemplated and of program evaluations contemplated in the past year; and a schedule of future program evaluations.

A number of sound recommendations from the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform impact quite heavily on the work of the Committee of Standing Orders and Procedures. I am not surprised because there is a general feeling in the community that Parliament and our processes here by which we hold Government accountable are in a state of disrepair, and that the time has come for some significant changes.

There is an interesting recommendation which I want to bring specifically to the attention of the Minister, if I may do so. That was recommendation No. 12. It says that there should be certain procedural requirements for appeals to the Cabinet from the decisions of regulatory agencies. I recommend that the Minister consider that very carefully with his colleagues. The ones that come to mind are the appeals that come from the CRTC with respect to Bell Canada rates. There is a great deal of concern and worry about Bell Canada rates both from the point of view of the consumer and Bell Canada. I have always been concerned that there is not full disclosure to the sides involved of the cases of each other.

I recommend that this Government study the processes that are in place in the Government of Ontario. When I was practising at the Bar and I was appealing decisions of regulatory agencies, such as the Ontario Municipal Board or the Ontario Highway Transport Board, I as an appellant had to disclose my case on appeal to the other side. The issues were there, clearly defined, and there was at least some certainty that all of the issues would be before the Cabinet. The Cabinet would be judged, and they are ultimately accountable—on the basis of how they dealt with those issues. Under the present system nobody knows what the cases are. We can guess, but nobody really does know.

It is interesting, too, that preceding the reference which appointed 20 Members of this House of Commons to the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, which I call parliamentary reform, the Committee on Regulatory Reform had acted as an advance guard with respect to the necessity of changing the system in the House. They talked in their report about parliamentary reforms, that the House of Commons be authorized to perform certain functions on their own initiative without reference from the House of Commons, by the way, which is the gist of the Committee processes in the report that is now standing on the Order Paper, having been tabled by my hon. friend from Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), who is the chairman of the Parliamentary Reform Committee. It calls for monitoring of the process; a review of the subject matter of new, subordinate legislation; a review of specifically regulatory activities of each federal Department on its own. It goes on and on. It is an important Bill. It is housekeeping, but a very important part of housekeeping, a very important change in the process.

As the Minister is beginning his sojourn in office, I pray that he will not let grass grow under his feet with respect to regulatory reform. I pray he will not do that because subordinate legislation, Orders in Council, regulations, is a growth industry in Canada. It will be commitment by the Government that will take the lead, supported by an equally strong commitment from all political parties in this House of Commons, that can improve the process of considering that aspect of the accountability of Government.

I dare say that if the Minister or his successor is successful, whether that successor for the purpose of this debate comes from this side or that side of the House—and I think it will be from this side—it will tend to do a great deal to bridge the gap of misunderstanding that now exists between the public sector, the Public Service and the broad Canadian public. I think that effort is worthwhile and that is the spirit with which we approach this Bill.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will be extremely brief. We welcome the move by the Government to eliminate from the statute books legislation which is no longer applicable. The majority of Canadians find it difficult enough to deal with the laws that still apply without having to make their way through laws which are not applicable.

I want to suggest to the Minister a simple process that would make it much easier for all of us to do our work. In the future when we are faced with Bills such as this to repeal certain statutes—and I certainly hope we will be—I suggest as a matter of reform that the Bill read exactly the same in French as in English. That is one of the difficulties with this Bill; I am sure the Minister is aware of it. Although the French Bill and the English Bill are the same, they appear in a different order.

Anyone trying to make sure that what was repealed in English was indeed repealed in French must do far more work than is absolutely necessary. The example I would give is quite clear. The section dealing with the Ministry of Veterans Affairs appears as the second paragraph of the French text and is No. 3. The same section in English appears in the final part of the English text and is No. 124.

We should try to simplify things. That means eliminating obsolete statutes and wiping from the books obsolete regulations. It also means making it possible for people concerned and interested to be able to do so as easily and readily as possible. I do not pretend for a moment that it is a major concern. Neither do I expect the Minister to respond other than to note it for ease of handling.

In the process of determining the obsolete legislation in the future, in order to ease the process and to answer those who are concerned about such matters, in addition to the Bill there could be an explanation given at the time the Bill is tabled for first reading, listing the various statutes and the reason why, whether they have been superseded, outlived their usefulness or have in one way or another become redundant.

If that explanation could be provided by the Ministries involved, there would be no question in anyone's mind as to the appropriateness of the action being taken either by the Minister in charge or the House of Commons. I would hate to agree to repeal and Act only to discover down the road some obscure reason why we ought not to have done so. I do not suggest that every piece of legislation that appears here need take a great deal of time and discussion as to whether it is still useful. It would ease the process for lawyers when Bills are repealed to know the substantive reason. That kind of information should be readily available at the time of first reading of a Bill. It would be available to them and other jurisdictions for their quick perusal and comment.

I hope this is the first in a long series of similar kinds of legislation. I hope we cull out legislation that no longer need be on the books. I am confident that we carry laws that years ago ought to have been done away with.

It may well be that we require, as the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) quite correctly said, to devote some time looking at the recommendations contained in the Committee's report to see whether there is some ongoing work that could be done which would enable the House of Commons to reduce the number of laws presently in force in this country that no longer have evident applicability.

Beyond that, I would be delighted to pass this bill and get on to dealing with other matters that have much more significance and importance.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise in the House today to speak on what is really the first step in our Government's long-term commitment to the process of regulatory reform. The step we are taking today is significant not because it is repealing a number of obsolete statutes which are on the books, but because it is the first step in what many of us feel has been too slow a process in bringing about the necessary regulatory reforms in order that we can efficiently operate as a Government, as a House and as a Parliament. Even more important, we can reduce the burden of regulation on the private sector.

I am particularly grateful to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) for his very generous comments about the work of the Committee on Regulatory Reform. He is a Member of this House who for many years, in a very non-partisan way, has sought to change the procedures by which we work so that we can all do a more effective job for the electorate.

If I could just go back to some of the fundamentals, many Members from all sides of the House have requested, in terms of our reporting on regulatory reform, that two basic objectives be pursued. One is to increase the opportunity for the private sector to participate in the decision-making process before regulations are brought forward by the Government. This requires notice of what the Government's regulatory intentions might be. The second is to give the private sector the opportunity to comment, consult, be heard and come up with alternative suggestions to achieve the most cost-effective way of accomplishing the necessary public goals that are necessary.

In terms of this major part of our recommendations, and we have many specifics dealing with it, I believe we have made some progress, but not sufficient. A number of Departments and agencies have already implemented this process of notice and consultation on a very effective basis. Based on our recommendations and based, I believe, just on good amendment practices, others have started to implement these types of notice and consultation procedures.

I would like to make special reference here to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), and particularly to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), who has published a book on new consultative procedures in dealing with the Department of the Environment. He has also introduced funding for people who want to come to Ottawa to make their views known on particular regulatory measures. I would like to see every Department and agency adopt that type of outward-looking process, and I commend the Minister of the Environment on taking the initiative.

I also commend the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the efforts he has made regarding the increase in funding which is going to public interest groups. Too often, as Hon. Members are aware, it is only the very well heeled, the very rich, who have the staff and the funds available to keep track of what is happening in provincial capitals and our National Capital. They can afford to send the experts, either hired or on staff, to Ottawa to make their views known and to work with our officials in a co-operative effort.

The regulatory process and the making of regulations is adversarial, at least in nature. Sometimes there are winners and sometimes there are losers. On one side it could be business. On the other side it could be consumers. We are concerned about worker health and safety, which costs money. We are concerned about rate increases which are going to have impact upon people who use our telephones, our railways, or whatever.

People who are not well organized and might not have the funds to come forward and make their views known must have that opportunity. We must aid the various methods which we have outlined to provide the public interest groups throughout our society, concerned citizens, people who do have the interest and knowledge, who do have a very important impact to make, the means of participating in this very important process of consultation. We look forward in the days ahead to seeing these notice and consultation procedures expanded to every Department and agency which have not already adopted them.

The second major thrust of our report was that you cannot have effective regulation-making process, one which involves notice and consultation, unless you also have a certain degree of accountability. We looked at the question of accountability and felt that this House, under its present procedures, would be helpless, that it would be hopeless to attempt to take on added responsibilities. We heard testimony to the effect that some Departments have been waiting for four years to make even simple changes to our legislation. Because we are bogged down and have not yet come to grips with how we can expedite the work of this House, we felt the proper way to proceed would be to look at the Committee system of Parliament to see if the expertise on those Committees could be utilized in a constructive way to help in the regulation-making process. We therefore suggested that for a brief period of time a Special Committee would oversee the implementation of regulatory reform in Canada at the federal level. Then, on an ongoing basis, the existing Standing Committees would have the responsibility of ensuring that Departments and agencies were introducing the regulatory reforms, and in certain cases they would even have the opportunity to look into the substance of regulations which have come forward.

I am sorry to say that to date we have not yet seen that type of role evolve in our Committees. But I am heartened, Mr. Speaker, by the fact that the report of the Committee looking into parliamentary reform, which was published some two weeks ago, goes a long way in dealing with this particular issue. We have waited a long time, but it is a good report because it gives added power to the Committees. It has adopted many of the recommendations which were set forth in Chapter 6 and every one of the most important ones. The Committees will be smaller, will have limited substitution, and will have the ability to develop the expertise to look at all aspects of the regulations. These Committees will have people on them who are committed to dealing with the matter. They will have the tools as well as the research people, and they will have the ability to travel.

The question we still have to examine is whether the automatic reference of an annual report of Departments and agencies is going to be adequate to allow the subject matter with which we are concerned to be discussed on what I believe will be a very non-partisan and highly constructive basis. I think the example with respect to the working of these Committees in the future is set by the task forces. They were small, and although they included Members from all sides of this House, there was very seldom disagreement. They worked in a very non-partisan way. I speak for many people who are backbenchers on this side of the House when I say they feel their great talents and expertise can be far better utilized in the Committee system if they have these reforms. Their input would be constructive and meaningful.

We look forward very much to the implementation of this plan. I hope for the support of all sides of this House for a new process by which the Committee system becomes a very integral part. In fact the front arm of the legislative branch, dealing with representations of private sector groups, not only from business but from labour, consumers' interests groups, people concerned with the environment and with worker health and safety.

I applaud the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) who has brought forward this measure today. He has under his jurisdiction the responsibility of the office of the co-ordinator of regulatory reform, continuing along the steps which have been commenced. It is very frustrating, Mr. Speaker, perhaps because I am a relatively new Member of this House of Commons, to see the slowness with which the tortoise of change moves along the road. I would be better reconciled to its slowness, Mr. Speaker, if in the future I could be assured that its course will be steadfast—that the path taken by the President of the Treasury Board, which is supported enthusiastically by my Minister, the Hon. Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), will be supported and encouraged by all Members on both sides of this House.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, except for the parts where he was praising the Ministry, I agreed with the comments of the Hon. Member opposite regarding the need for change. I, indeed, enthusiastically support any Bill that repeals existing laws. In fact, if he would like to add a whole bunch more, I would enthusiastically support that. If you look at the two extremes of repealing none and repealing all the laws, you would err less if you repealed them all.

On the question of regulatory reform, which certainly is supported, I have a question. Just how seriously is the Government committed to this process? Four or five years ago, Mr. Speaker, I saw an estimate of the cost of regulation in Canada. It was estimated at that time that the cost of regulation to the Canadian economy was something like $15 billion per year, and it was a terrible burden then on the Canadian economy. Since that time it has certainly not gone down. If no new regulations or interventions have been added, it would amount to about $25 billion in today's dollars, which is terribly costly.

I see you are getting ready to stand, Mr. Speaker. I have two or three minutes left and I will pick up my remarks at two o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) had the floor.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, just before one o'clock I indicated that both I and my party did not disagree—in fact we enthusiastically agree—with the idea that obsolete, unused, archaic and useless statutes on the law books of Canada should be repealed. Nobody can disagree with that. But in listening to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) describing this Government's motivation for introducing this Bill, I had to question his contention that somehow introduction of this Bill represents a significant or sincere move in the area of deregulation which is supposedly a policy of this Government.

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, some years ago an independent consulting group, I think it was called the resource group, did a study of regulation in Canada and concluded that Government regulation cost the Canadian economy $15 billion a year. Now, just taking into account inflation and neglecting the fact that we have had scads of regulation since then, the cost today would be $25 billion spent on regulation. Almost every economist, Mr. Speaker, who has looked at the Canadian economy—indeed, the Government itself—has concluded that one of the severe problems this country faces is lack of productivity. We are simply not as productive as the Japanese or the Americans. Indeed, according to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development we are twenty-third on a list of 23 countries when it comes to productivity.

Now, what does that mean? Does it mean that Canadian workers do not work as hard as workers in other countries? Certainly not. What it means is that we do a heck of a lot of things in this country which produce nothing. One of those things is dealing with Government regulations. Three years ago I was in Japan, Mr. Speaker. It was a real eye opener for me. It is an amazing country; a pile of rock, they cannot feed themselves, they have virtually no arable land, no natural resources, but they have tremendous growth and prosperity. Their productivity performance is incredible.

I asked the Canadian Ambassador, who had been there for a number of years, what the Japanese have that we do not have. How are they able to do this? Well, he said, for one thing they have only 10,000 lawyers in the whole country. He said that only half in jest. The fact is that in this country the two growth industries or professions are law and accounting, because we do nothing in this place but make work for those professions.

In a similar vein, I was reading a story in The Atlantic Review about the deindustrialization of the American economy. The author of the article asked someone what had happened, when did the United States start losing competition to the Japanese. The man drew two lines on a graph, one going from the lower left to the upper right representing the number of graduate lawyers each year; the other one went from the upper left to the lower right representing the number of electrical engineers graduating each year. The two lines crossed in 1970, which is precisely the time at which the Japanese started outperforming the Americans very significantly. That, Mr. Speaker, is the problem in the United States.

The problem here is twice that. It amazes me how we sit around and think about productivity and what we are going to do about it. We gnash our teeth and wring our hands over our inability to compete, and our answer is to hire a lawyer to head a Royal Commission and make more work for lawyers. Our answer to every problem is to create more paper work and burden the country with more regulation.

The difficulty I have, in its most fundamental sense, and the most severe criticism that I can make of the Government opposite, is the frequency with which its actions are contrary to its policy statements. In this area of regulatory reform there is no better example. The Minister said proudly that in the Treasury Board there was the regulatory reform commission which had been working for a number of years. What did it produce? It produced this list of laws which should be abolished or repealed, laws such as the White Phosphorous Matches Act. I know there are dozens of lawyers out there looking at this Act daily to be guided in their actions! Then there is The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916. Thank goodness we do not have to worry about that any more! Thank goodness that burden of regulation is being lifted from the Canadian economy, because it will give such a spurt! When we look down the list we see they are all like that. Sure, they should be abolished, but to claim that it is deregulation is to stretch the truth beyond reason.

In the last four or five years the stated policy of the Liberal Party has been deregulation. We had the introduction of the National Energy Program which, among other things, created three new Government agencies—one dealing with COR, one dealing with PIP, and one dealing with offshore Canadian oil and gas land administration.

Incidentally, I could have mentioned the Canadian Benefits Committee, that joint interdepartmental Committee, and others, but I should like to deal with these three. So far the agency dealing with PIP has 100 employees and the COR Agency has 400 employees. The regulations put out by these three organizations measure in inches, not in centimeters. There is a pile of regulations which has been put out by these three newly-created agencies. The cost to the private sector created by these brand-new agencies of Government is in the tens of millions, in the form of new lawyers, accountants and paper shufflers of various sorts hired to deal with them.

Historically in oil companies—and I am talking about the upstream end of the business where they are drilling for oil and gas—for every three geologists they needed one paper shuffler. The geologists are the people who go out and look for oil and tell the companies where to drill. As a result of the Government's actions, that ratio is reversed. For every geologist, companies now need three paper shufflers to handle the regulations, application forms, etc. This is a totally non-productive, bureaucratic, regulatory burden.

This is also one of the reasons Canada is twenty-third on a list of 23 countries when it comes to productivity. It is offensive to decency and common sense to listen to the President of the Treasury Board say that the Government is committed to deregulation, that it is working on it, and that this is an example of the fine work which is being done. Yet on the other side of the coin we have the creation of bureaucratic red tape and monstrous regulatory burden by another Department of Government, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The fact is that the left hand does not know what the other left hand is doing. It is hypocrisy at best. One wonders what it will require to force the executive and the bureaucrats to follow the policy statements of the Government. Why is there such a divergence between promise and performance? Why are there always statements of policies here and actions there?

The closest literary reference to that kind of behaviour which I could find was in George Orwell's "1984", the double-speak or the mispeak activities of government as a way of controlling the masses, to ensure that everyone pays due respect to and has fear of the government. This is exactly what we have here. They are for deregulation, but on the other hand they create three new agencies with six inches of regulation for people who want to be in business in Canada. If this continues, instead of being in twenty-third place we will be the fortieth out of 40 countries; we will continue to deteriorate and be unable to compete with Japan, the United States and European countries. Also we will continue to see a drop in the standard of living and high unemployment. In other words, we will continue in the economic mess and doldrums in which we have been for far too long.

Instead of appointing Royal Commissions, new advisory committees or hiring new advisers, the Government should fire the 3,500-odd policy analysts in the Public Service who spend their time looking for problems and solutions to them. The Government should do what is promised, namely, cut back on excessive regulatory burdens. If the Government did what it promised, it would give the economy a boost and give the 1.5 million unemployed people some real hope for the first time in many years.

We have no objections to the Bill except to the extent that it is probably not long enough in terms of the list of laws which should be repealed. There are many other laws which should be added to the list. Perhaps we will have some worth-while suggestions for the Minister in Committee. If the bureaucrats will allow him to listen to suggestions from mere elected people, perhaps there will be some further improvement.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to echo the sentiments expressed by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), but also I should like to indicate that I am entering this debate in a rather disappointed fashion. While the redundant legislation which is being repealed is certainly a step in the right direction, the Minister described at length the progress made in the area of regulatory reform. Certainly the track record of the Government is disappointing, to say the least and to be charitable.

In these times of economic difficulty we should get serious about regulatory reform. It is quite clear that regulatory reform has not been a priority of the Government. It is time for action, rather than further talk and examination. It probably goes beyond the stage of simply requesting regulatory reform. We are looking for regulatory house cleaning. This will clearly require joint action by the two levels of Government, and perhaps even the municipalities which are involved as well.

In these times it is necessary to exercise restraint, to reduce business and Government overhead, to enhance producitvity, to be more innovative, more creative and more competitive. These are all crucial elements on the road to recovery. I firmly believe that excessive regulation which exists in the country at all levels has stymied the creative and innovative spirit of Canadians. It has caused our products to be too expensive in terms of penetrating international markets. It has resulted in Canada having a system of Government and control that is far too expensive commensurate with our level of economic growth and wealth in this country.

It seems to me that if we are going to improve our over-all economic performance, we have to grapple with this issue on an emergency basis. We all know that in this country industry has been forced to scale down its operation. Roy Phillips, President of the CMA, has said:

—while Canada's manufacturing sector, which employs about 20 per cent of the work force, has lost about 255,000 jobs in the last year, bureaucracies have grown. While Manufacturing jobs fell to under 2 million—with similar losses in associated sectors which supply manufacturing—the three levels of government hired another 25,000 more people—

Those salaries are really part and parcel of the overhead burden in our country.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton made reference to the recommendations of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform. There are some 29 of them in total. These are very good recommendations and they represent a lot of hard work, commitment and dedication by Members of this House. But really nothing has happened. The document containing the recommendations sits there and basically gathers dust.

The Economic Council of Canada, that permanent Royal Commission, did an extensive examination of the regulatory process in this country. It produced a document entitled "Reforming Regulation in 1981". That report advanced some 66 specific recommendations. I happen to be interested in it because it deals at length with the regulatory burden in transportation. Twenty-five of those recommendations had to do with the transportation sector. In a general way, this Economic Council of Canada report concluded that Canadians are overregulated. This overregulation results in inefficiency, waste and higher prices. The report further recommended that the economy be stripped of wasteful, damaging regulations and that incentives, rather than punishment, be used to respond to social concerns. Unfortunately, I know of no recommendation advanced in this particular document that has been put into effect. The report merely gathers dust.

When we have an announcement, as we did this past week, of a Royal Commission on the economy, I really wonder what it does to undercut and undermine the status of the Economic Council of Canada, which is an ongoing Royal Commission charged with the responsibility of providing economic advice to the Government and, indeed, to Parliament.

Here we have an institution that is funded by the taxpayers of Canada. It is independent. It does excellent work, but nobody pays any attention to it. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, talked about the costs of the regulatory burden in Canada. He mentioned a figure in the order of $20 billion to $25 billion. We know that it runs to the billions of dollars, but it is rather difficult to identify with any degree of accuracy. But on the basis of learned assumptions it would seem that figure of $20 billion to $25 billion is not inaccurate.

I had an opportunity to do some research in this particular field. Some companies and industries have, in fact, assessed the regulatory burden in their own operation. Bell Canada assessed its costs of the regulatory burden imposed upon it to range in the order of $35 million to $50 million annually, all of which I might add is passed on to the consumer. Dow Chemical in 1978 monitored its regulatory burden and arrived at a figure of some $20 million. Again, I remind Hon. Members that this $20 million is a cost of doing business and is imposed upon the consumer.

This report dealt rather extensively with the trucking industry. The Economic Council of Canada stated that the licensing process in the trucking industry alone—just the licensing process—costs the industry some $40 million annually. That amount is in addition to huge indirect costs associated with the regulations regarding back haul, load limits, the right to haul to certain destinations and the right not to haul to certain destinations. These restrictions create grave inefficiencies in the system and result in the freight rate being exorbitantly high.

I am told on good authority that when the United States deregulated its trucking industry the fleet capacity increased by 50 per cent without adding one new vehicle to the fleet. It was found under the regime of regulations in place that essentially the trucks were running with a 50 per cent load factor at all times. With the scaling down or removal of regulation, the trucks were able to haul from point A to point B and from point B to point A. As a result, with the back hauls and the rationalization that occurred, it has had the effect of bringing down freight rates in the United States.

Yes, there has been some rationalization in the trucking industry. Some trucking companies went out of business. But if we are really serious about maximizing our efficiency and getting the best bang for the buck, we will have to take a look at that. Some industries have become excessively fat as a result of hiding behind the burden of regulation. That ripples right across the North American continent.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, talked about the impact of the National Energy Program. It has been suggested that the result of the imposition of these new regulatory agencies and the administration of the National Energy Program will result in some $1.5 billion spent in supervising and regulating the oil industry over the next eight years. Here again there is a direct cost which has to be paid for by someone. That someone is usually the consumer or the taxpayer, in both cases the same person, the one faced with paying the shot.

Let us take a look at direct administrative costs. Taking five rather high profile industries in existence at the present time, the CTC, the National Energy Board, the CRTC, the Atomic Energy Control Board and FIRA, their administrative costs run to approximately $100 million a year. The CTC alone costs about $30 million in administrative costs. These costs are increasing. They have increased anywhere from 25 per cent to 40 per cent over the last three years.

These regulatory industries are supposed to protect the consumer as far as prices are concerned. We now know that really quite the opposite has happened. The recent Statistics Canada report which was leaked—I am not sure if it has been officially published—indicated that those prices which are regulated by agencies on a year-to-year basis have increased, from April to April, at a rate of 17 per cent to 18 per cent over the last year. At the same time, however, prices which are not regulated have increased by roughly 9 per cent. What is the reason for that? The unregulated prices are subject to the vagaries of the marketplace in which they must compete.

It is interesting to note that the consumer price index component of regulated prices amounts to aproximately 25 per cent. Therefore, 25 per cent of the CPI is composed of prices that are regulated by some agency, either federal or provincial. We can only conclude that these agencies are in fact largely contributing to the inflationary pressures that we are trying to deal with and this is certainly not in the best interests of the consumer.

Another matter of concern is the fact that political decisions are being imposed upon the regulatory agencies with increasing frequency. This has the result of usurping, ignoring or upstaging the role of the decision-making bodies and, in many cases, many of these regulatory agencies have become agencies of convenience used as a vehicle to delay a decision, find out information or leave the impression that the public is being heard. The entire exercise is becoming somewhat of a farce.

I am glad the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is in the House because a clear example of this is the case of the VIA Rail cut-backs. In that instance, Canadian rail passenger service was cut back by 20 per cent with the simple stroke of a ministerial pen. That action reversed an earlier CTC decision which was made after two years of extensive study and consultation with the public. After much public input, a decision on a route structure was made which seemed to be in the best interests of the travelling public and, indeed, in the best interests of Canada. A year later the Minister simply usurped that decision with the stroke of a pen. So the CTC process was essentially useless. A lot of money, time and effort was spent when, ultimately, the Minister ended up making a decision by decree.

Mr. Pepin: We proved that it would not work that way.

Mr. Mazankowski: I hope the Minister becomes involved in the debate. I would like to hear him challenge that particular observation.

Another example of political decisions being imposed upon regulatory agencies concerns the Bell Canada rate. The rate-setting process of the CRTC was abruptly circumvented when the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) announced back in August that the Bell rate would be limited to a 6 per cent and 5 per cent level. Again, the regulatory process was circumvented.

Another example deals with branch lines. The predecessor to the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Otto Lang, circumvented the CTC process in 1975. On this occasion, I think it was done to the advantage of individual farmers, He unilaterally decided that he would insert particular branch lines into the permanent railway network. He proceeded with this decision without the advice of the CTC. Once again, the CTC was circumvented. It played an insignificant role in that decision.

A more recent example concerns the STOL service between Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. On August 10, 1982 the current Minister of Transport reversed an earlier CTC decision allowing STOL service. After three years of hearings and intensive public discussions, the CTC found that the applicants failed satisfactorily to meet the criterion of public convenience and necessity. The Cabinet decided, however, that there were compelling reasons and benefits that would make the project desirable and thereby approved it. Again, so much for the regulatory process.

There are many examples to demonstrate the fact that the regulatory agencies are really being used in a manner which makes the whole process something of a farce. I suggest that we should perhaps consider those agencies in that light. It becomes quite clear that the best laid plans and regulations are being transcended by political decisions with increased frequency.

Another observation that one must make is that the utopian ideal that everything we do can be planned and regulated to perfection has clearly been discredited. As well, we must realize that regulatory agencies go through a natural process of decay. I believe they become too cumbersome and that the administrative overload becomes very costly. In that deteriorating process the agencies themselves, in many cases, become ineffective and unresponsive to the decisions that they are supposed to make. In some cases they end up lacking in independence.

An interesting illustration of that concerns the airlines and the question of deep discount fares. This is a classic example of the agency being captured by the industry it was regulating. The airlines themselves asked the CTC to intervene and disallow the deep discount fares because they were taking a heavy toll on their balance sheet. In this case the agency is being captured by the industry that it was intended to regulate.

I suggest it is time for us to stop kidding ourselves. It is time for a major regulatory house cleaning in this country. I believe that many of the regulations and the agencies have outlived their usefulness. Some should be eliminated or at least scaled down or restructured. There is no question that when we are experiencing these very difficult economic times we can clearly identify a number of areas where the regulatory burden, and the burden of government itself, is having very negative effect upon business and commerce in this country without protecting the consumers' needs.

In conclusion, I would like to make some suggestions to the Minister. First, he should consider the recommendation made by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association which has called for a two-year moratorium on new regulations which would do nothing to contribute to the economic growth of this country. Second, I believe he should give serious consideration, since the regulatory issue is one which must be tackled at both the federal and provincial levels of Government, to establishing something similar to a federal-provincial deregulation commission. A commission such as that could be charged with the task of untangling the bureaucratic web across the country, reducing duplication and bringing about greater uniformity. Its basic goal would be to remove those barriers which stifle competition, innovation and efficiency and strangle commerical enterprise in this country. This suggestion warrants his careful consideration because much groundwork has already been done. However, it will clearly require the co-operation of both levels of Government, and the provincial Governments are just as guilty of this as the federal Government. If we are to attack some of the structural problems in our economy, it would be a good idea to start demonstrating that the two levels of Government can co-operate in the best interests of commerce and enterprise in this country.

I would like to refer to my third recommendation. When I am speaking about scaling down regulation, I am not advocating total deregulation. However, in the course of this review, this rationalization, we must always ensure that provisions are made to protect consumers and to ensure that the public has meaningful access by which it may make its case. The public must have the opportunity to be heard so that its interest may be protected, particularly as they relate to safety matters. This is particularly true where there is a monopolistic or captive situation. There must be a clear opportunity for the consumer and the public at large to have a say in this process.

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton alluded to what would be my fourth recommendation. I believe that all regulations and all regulatory agencies should carry a sunset provision calling for a periodic review. This is really the first piece of legislation brought here during the 14 years I have been in the House which has repealed a significant number of Bills or laws. That is clearly a step in the right direction. We should have the sunset provisions in our regulations with respect to the agencies administering those regulations. We have a habit of churning out legislation, creating new bureaucracies and new regulations, but we very rarely get to the task of scaling down those bureaucracies, laws and regulations. Therefore, I feel that any new agencies which are established or any new regulations brought in should carry with them a sunset provision.

I think my fifth recommendation is where federal leadership comes into play, because the federal Government has the overall responsibility for the economic fortunes or misfortunes of the country. It is important for the federal Government to take a leadership role and to make a clear commitment, in concert with its provincial counterparts, to reducing economic regulation, to removing the barriers to commerce rather than creating new obstacles. If that were to happen, there would be a tremendous loosening of the entrepreneurial spirit of Canadians. Today entrepreneurs who want to do business are frustrated by myriad regulations from Government level to Government level, from Province to Province. It is a very frustrating exercise and I think that sooner or later we will have to bite the bullet.

I welcome this opportunity to put some of my firm beliefs on the record. I know that perhaps in some instances the case may be somewhat overstated, but I cannot too strongly state the need, from my point of view, for a significant and drastic scaling down of the regulatory burden in this country.

I could go on and speak about the tax system as well, because that is another area which must be simplified and scaled down so that people can understand it and comply with it without the aid of expensive tax accountants and lawyers. I agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, that the growth industry in this country has been the administrative sector which is largely composed of lawyers, tax accountants and those people who are charged with the responsibility of advising their clients how they should comply with the myriad laws, regulations and burdens thrust upon them by eager Governments which want to regulate us to death. I think they do it in good faith, attempting to regulate us into perfection, but really the opposite is true.

I therefore look forward to the passage of the Bill. I simply want to reiterate the genuine need for positive action on deregulation in the country, and I have given the Minister a couple of suggestions which I hope he will seriously consider because I think they have merit. If the federal Government can demonstrate leadership, I believe he will find co-operation in all corners of the country.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I say "thank you" to you, a Speaker who comes from British Columbia. I have just a few comments to make and then I suppose my friend, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), will take the floor. I noted the remarks of the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), who said that this Bill is the first stage in the Government's long-term commitment to regulatory reform. I have read the Bill and if this is the first stage, it is like waiting in a restaurant for a meal. At the first stage one is served hors d'oeuvres, a few pieces of celery to nibble on, and then one waits a long time for the next course. It is too bad we do not have the next course here because this celery is not very much indeed.

I say to Hon. Members that I would welcome the Government getting on with the implementation of some of the reports of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I note that the Hon. Member for Willowdale said that the provisions with respect to notice, consultation and accountability of regulations and regulatory bodies are all-important. I think there is all-party agreement that we should get going with that. Unfortunately, we are not the Government, not yet—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —and we do not have control of bringing in the second course.

Mr. Huntington: Everything you want, you'll get.

Mr. Waddell: It is amazing to see how one can wake up Hon. Members on a Friday afternoon by suggesting that there is the imminent prospect of a New Democratic Party Government.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say something about the word "deregulation" and some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) and the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I caution Hon. Members and the public to be careful of the word "deregulation". It is a buzz word, a word which means, to certain elements in the country, specifically to very Conservative, right-wing elements, to get the Government totally out of people's lives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I hear some Hon. Members to my right saying "Hear, hear". Deregulation means to get the Government totally out of people's lives and to allow its friends, the big corporations, to make money. I am speaking of the big corporations with respect to the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, the oil companies and other companies with respect to other Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Vegreville quoted, with approval, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, those small businessmen.

Mr. Huntington: The big employers.

Mr. Waddell: Those big people in Canada.

Mr. Huntington: The people who create jobs.

Mr. Waddell: It is like giving them a clear go-ahead to make as much money as they can and to do anything they want.

Let me give examples of good regulation and bad regulation. Suncor operates a tar sands plant in northern Alberta which I visited a few weeks ago, and there must be some sort of regulation there. I am not one of the socialists who perhaps believes that everything must be nationalized or taken over. Certain things must be run under public ownership and I believe in things like Petro-Canada. Hon. Members will note that I was not above rising in the House today to ask a question about making Petro-Canada more accountable and a better organization. I raised the matter about its labour relations on the East Coast.

There is room for growth in all sorts of areas in Canada and there will continue to be private enterprise and a mixed economy. We have a mixed economy, let's face it. We will not retreat to the nineteenth century, so let us make it the best mixed economy that we can, one which is applicable to the Canadian situation, culture and needs.

Getting back to the tar sands plant, that has to be regulated in many ways. We have to have health and safety standards. We have to have standards for environment. That particular Suncor tar sands plant had a problem with some spills. They know, if the regulations are there, that they will try and live up to the regulations. If the regulations are not there, there is not that much pressure on them. There are price regulations, with respect to the tar sands plant, governing the price they can charge the Canadian public for the oil. Most of them, after they adjust to it, realize that that has to happen.

We have a regulated economy and we have good regulations; we also have some bad regulations. The Member from Calgary Centre spoke about this. That is one of the few things about which I agree with him. The fact is that some of the regulations for the PIP grant, the Petroleum Incentives Program grant, that vast Government give-away to the poor oil companies in Canada of $8.6 billion, are bad regulations. I agree that business needs certainty and that we have to have fair regulations and fast regulatory processes. But I point out that we should be careful about calling for deregulation. Instead, we should call for better regulation: more efficient regulation and fair regulation.

Since the Minister is in the House and he raised the point about regulation, I want to say something about regulatory bodies in Canada. I hate to mention his name and perhaps I will see some faces brighten up on the opposite benches, but there was a Member of this House called John Turner who, when he was Minister of Justice, did one very good thing, and that was to upgrade the whole aspect of judicial appointments in Canada to get better qualified judges. We have made real progress in the last ten years or so in making some excellent judicial appointments, in consultation with Bar Associations. We are not really radical. We do not elect our judges. Our judges are still by and large Liberal lawyers, but at least they are better.

An Hon. Member: You are slandering the judiciary.

Mr. Waddell: I am not slandering the judiciary; I am pointing out that we have got better judges. The Liberal Member says I am slandering the judiciary because I call them former Liberal lawyers! On the contrary, I am praising the judiciary, and I am praising the Government, for once. I am saying that the Government has had a conscientious policy under a number of Ministers of Justice to appoint very good people to the Bench and to consult with the Bar. I think that is progress.

I make this point because we have not done that in our appointments to regulatory boards. These are very important boards, almost more important than the judiciary in many ways. They decide for my constituents the price they pay for their telephone, the price they pay for their cable system, the price they pay for their oil and gas and whether they are going to have any oil and gas in the future. These are real bread and butter issues. These are not esoteric issues. These regulatory boards that deal with many of the regulations passed by the Government that are sloughed off to the regulatory boards are very important.

By and large, we find a lot of political patronage in the boards. We find a lot of dead wood; a lot of people that work for one political party in the country are put on these boards. There are problems getting good people to go on these boards. On any of the regulatory boards that have to do with environment, energy, or any such area, we do not have anybody who has been part of the environmental movement of this country, which is a movement almost 20 years old.

Some of us who are having birthdays this week associated with these movements when we were young. They are not young movements any more. You do not see any of those people on the boards, yet they are people who would be excellent, say, on the National Energy Board. We do not have any native people on that Board.

This is getting a long way away from this Bill and regulation, but I point that out to the Government that we want to have good regulations. Forget about deregulation. That is what the Conservatives want. They want to get rid of the Government. The Member from Calgary Centre wants to get rid of Petro-Canada, What we want to do is make it better and more accountable. We want to make Government regulations certain, fair and fast. I think that is what the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform is basically saying, and that is why I supported it.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, as one of my colleagues from Prince Albert suggested to me, that when we deal with a Bill like this that repeals such Acts as the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation Act, 1927—

Mr. Pepin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: You can sleep easier tonight, Mr. Speaker! That Bill is being repealed. An Act to revive and amend The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916. We can sleep easier this weekend! That Bill is gone.

These Bills should have died by their own accord. There should in fact be some sunset provisions, by which these Bills only last for so many years and then die. I am glad that the Government has seen fit to bring in a Bill, however, to eliminate these old fossils that are around here. I am not referring to any Members or any Senators; I am referring to Acts that were passed many years ago. It is about time we did bring them to an end.

I note that some of the recommendations have been made by groups such as the Vancouver People's Law School, which again has a long history of providing legal education courses to ordinary people. Various spokesmen for that group have advocated many times that we have laws that are very simple and easy to read, that we need a procedure that is very simple, that allows some of these laws to expire of their own accord, to die a natural death, rather than having to pass an Act to end them.

It is too bad that we do not have a Stephen Leacock in the House, or maybe the Member from Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) could do it, but this Bill is so juicy with some great Acts that we are repealing. I am sorry to see them go. I note this one:

> An Act respecting the Construction of a line of railway in the Province of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near Bartibog in a westerly direction to the Tomogonops River in the vicinity of Little River Lakes.

I apologize to the people of New Brunswick. I do not know the particular area. It seems a sad occasion, in many ways, to be putting that poor Act out of existence. I see the Minister of Transport nodding.

Mr. Pepin: I am moved to tears.

Mr. Waddell: There is another Act in the Schedule. It is called:

> An Act respecting the Construction of a line of railway forming part of the Canadian National Railways between Turtleford and a point in Township 48, Range 12, West of the Third Meridian, in the Province of Saskatchewan.

An Hon. Member: That has been abandoned.

Mr. Waddell: My colleague says it has already been abandoned anyway. The Minister has already abandoned it. Now he is passing an Act to get rid of the original Act.

Mr. Pepin: We will restore it tomorrow.

Mr. Waddell: He is going to restore it. But the point is that it is rather an archaic piece of legislation. Some of the Acts obviously represent a very interesting period of Canadian history.

I want to conclude by saying that we are in favour of this Bill going through—and I will sit down and let it go through in a minute—but the Minister did raise the whole matter of regulation. There should be a fast regulatory process, a better regulatory process. There should be better regulators.

• (1500)

I cannot go into this in detail as it is sub judice because of the pipeline lawsuit that I am bringing against the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the entire Cabinet. One of the reasons behind it is the growing Government practice of passing regulations that, in my view, have very little to do with the act that Parliament passed in the first place, in other words, going way outside the scope of the act. It is very tempting to have Government by Order in Council, Government by regulation, but we must have Government by Parliament.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I could not help but rise and speak for a few moments on this Bill which has been brought in by the new President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) because I heard the Minister's remarks that this is the first step in deregulation in this country. I think all those who have reviewed the Bill would agree that this is a straight misrepresentation. To suggest that Bill C-119 is in some way ushering in a new era of deregulation in Canada is simply untrue.

Before I get to the body of my remarks, I would like to ask Hon. Members to put this Bill into perspective. Here in Canada we are faced with a situation where our current inflation in 1982 is estimated to be at 11 per cent compared to 4.6 per cent in 1969. We have an estimated real growth this year of minus, and I emphasize that, 5.2 per cent compared to the real positive growth in 1969 of 5.3 per cent. We in Canada today have an unemployment rate of 10.9 per cent compared to 4.4 per cent for 1969. We have a total number of people unemployed of 1,297,000 compared to 362,000 in 1969. We have spending at the federal level of $79 billion compared to $13.6 billion in 1969. Above all, we have a deficit this year of an estimated $23,550 million compared to a surplus of $493 million in 1969.

Our gross debt has jumped from $33 billion in that year, which was the debt that was run up during the two World Wars and a great depression, to today's $155 billion. I use 1969 because that is perhaps the first year that, in fairness, we can credit or discredit to the Government now in power under our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

In that context surely Hon. Members will agree this country has some very serious problems to be dealt with. Can we believe that a government would set its sense of priorities so that the first item we are considering today is Bill C-119, which deals first of all with the repeal of the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair Act of 1926-27, Chapter 9? This incisive, almost dramatic action on the part of the President of the Treasury Board is his first action in the form of introducing legislation in this House.

Think of it. In October the unemployment rate was 12.7 per cent, 1,388,000 Canadians were out of work. In addition, Statistics Canada reports that 369,000 Canadians worked part-time because they could not find full-time employment. At this time the Government feels that the top priority we should be dealing with on Friday, November 19, 1982, is not how to create jobs for those people, but it would like us to agree to the repealing of the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908. Imagine, at a time when we are being told that 539,000 jobs have been lost in this country, the best that the President of the Treasury Board, one of the senior economic Ministers in the present Cabinet, can offer to us is a Bill which proposes to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act, 1908 by simply repealing the basic act.

I say this because I sense that in the name of deregulating, this Government is introducing in the form of Bill C-119 a Bill that is really an affront to the people of Canada, an affront to those out of work and attempting to cope with the high inflation in this country. The priorities of this Government are a disgrace as far as its governing and legislative program are concerned.

It is not just that. Consider the plight of the youth in this country, that is, people between the ages of 15 and 24 who are now unemployed. This figure has reached 21 per cent in Canada. In Quebec, 43 per cent of the youth below the age of 24 years are out of work.

What is the apparent solution of the President of the Treasury Board as of today, Friday, to their plight? He is suggesting that we should repeal the Demobilization Appropriation Act. Imagine, this is the new President of the Treasury Board in action. That is his sense of priorities.

Let me go further. At a time when unemployment insurance in the first eight months of this year totalled $5.4 billion on an estimated basis and will probably result in a total pay-out of $8 billion—and bear in mind that that is more than the projected total spending of the four Atlantic Provinces together—the best this economic Minister can do is to propose that the House agree to the repealing of the West Indies Trade Agreement Act of 1926. He goes even further. He is very bold here. Not only does he suggest that that Act be repealed, but that, to boot, the War Risk Insurance Act of 1942, also be repealed.

Is that Government worthy of having the continued confidence of this House and the confidence of the people of Canada? Using precious House time, it finds nothing better to do than to propose that certain Acts be repealed, Acts that most people in this country have never heard of. In fact, even librarians would find it a hard job determining where they exist at the present time.

The Minister is vividly demonstrating how absolutely void this Government is of ideas of a constructive nature to start rebuilding this country. It is looking for fillers. It is essentially looking for ways to give the appearance that it is doing something of an effective nature to start reviving the Canadian economy when, in fact, by bringing in this type of Bill it is demonstrating its total lack of any credible programs to relieve the dire situation at the present time in Canada.

It is not just a question of national unemployment, because there is no such thing. It is unemployment in a regional, provincial and local sense. That is the tragedy of Canada today. Newfoundland lives with an unemployment level of 19.2 per cent today; Prince Edward Island, 12.7 per cent; Nova Scotia, 13.5 per cent; New Brunswick, 14.8 per cent; Quebec, 15.4 per cent; Ontario, 11.7 per cent; and even British Columbia, 14.2 per cent.

What is the Government's answer through the key economic spokesperson in the House at the present moment? It is to repeal the Business Profits, War Tax Act of 1916. He is doing a little housekeeping, and not even with respect to the last war, or the Korean war, but with respect to the First World War. This Act was passed initially in 1916 and now, for some reason, this very intense "grey eminence", who now heads the Treasury Board in this country, has sought it out and decided it should once and for all be killed and repealed. That is his answer, and I would suggest it is a great affront to this House because it is done under the pretext that it is a deregulation, a first phase. Let that Minister or any other Minister, bring in a meaningful program to deregulate some of the overregulated situations in Canada, and I can assure him that he will get the support of the Official Opposition. But I do not think he can expect this House, without comment, to approve Bills such as Bill C-119, when they attempt to represent that the Bill in effect is a meaningful step along the road to deregulation in Canada.

Let me simply say that it is not only a question of people being out of work, it is also a question of business bankruptcies, which must be coped with in this country. Business bankruptcies in Canada, for example, in the first ten months of 1982, totalled 8,963, for a total indebtedness involved of $1,878 million. What a tragedy when that number of enterprises, once providing employment and contributing to the wealth of the nation, have found they cannot continue any longer. They are bankrupt. They are defunct. And what is the answer from this Minister to this type of situation? He is asking us to consider the repeal of the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation Act of 1926-27. Not only would he like us, presumably, to help the economy in some way by repealing that Act, but he would also like us to consider the repeal of an Act of 1912 which authorized the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Co., Ltd.

How can the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker, in any conceivable way have faith or trust in a Government that is almost frivolous with the time of the House of Commons? How can we go back to the Canadian public and tell them that we either supported or helped legislation which was designed to get people back to work in Canada, by considering, for example, a 1924 statute which was an Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway line from the end of the China Clay Branch to St. Remi d'Amherst in the Province of Quebec? That was almost 60 years ago. Perhaps before Bill C-119 passes we should read all those Acts just to see their true import. But this is what this intensive, efficient, effective President of the Treasury Board believes is the top priority for Canada. That Act must be repealed because somehow or other he came across it and believes it should be stricken from our statutes.

I know that one of the great cop-outs of this Government is to say, "Oh, well, you know, maybe you can fault us for not running the economy as effectively as many would like, but it is a world situation. Don't blame us too much." What a misrepresentation! What a fallacy! At a time when we have unemployment of 12.7 per cent, is it not interesting to note that that unemployment level is virtually the highest of any of the major industrialized nations in the Western world? It compares at 12.7 per cent with an unemployment level in Japan of 2.4 per cent, in Italy of 4.5 per cent, in West Germany of 6.6 per cent, in France of 8.7 per cent, and I could continue.

Mr. Lang: What about the United States?

Mr. Stevens: I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question because United States unemployment was at 20 per cent, on a percentage basis, below unemployment in this country. I thank the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) for pointing out that this country, Canada, has a Government, which he supports, which is running an unemployment level, on a percentage basis, 20 per cent higher than that of the United States. Despite that comparatively shameful performance on the part of this Government with respect to unemployment in Canada, what do we find is the main concern of this Minister? He would like us to consider, if we would, the repeal of the Ferries Act, of 1970. Apparently that Act did not go down too well with the President of the Treasury Board and he has decided that it must go. I would like him, if he is permitted a little more time before this debate is over, perhaps to tell the House this; if we do agree to the repeal of the Ferries Act of 1970, is that going to help alleviate unemployment in Canada? To what degree does he believe it is going to curb spending at the federal Government level, which has now reached the point where we are spending almost 45 per cent more than the revenue we are taking in? In what way would the repeal of that Ferries Act help the economic condition in which we find ourselves in this country?

On the question of inflation, the Government may feel it can shrug its shoulders and say, "Sure, we have got inflation, but so have so many other countries". Again, that is not true. My hon. friend from Kitchener asked about the United States. At a time when the United States has 4.9 per cent inflation, we have 10 per cent inflation. We have twice as much inflation in this country as they have in the United States. In West Germany, inflation is at 5 per cent, Japan is at 3 per cent, the United Kingdom is at 6.8 per cent. In short, Mr. Speaker, on average we not only have comparatively high unemployment as compared to all the other Western Industrialized nations, but we have one of the worst inflation levels of any of those nations. If we put a misery rate together by adding inflation and the unemployment level, we find that we are at least number one in one thing among the major industrial Western nations, we are number one in our misery rate.

Today Canada has a misery rate of 22.7 per cent. That compares, say, with Japan at 5.4 per cent; West Germany, 11.6 per cent; the United States, 15.3 per cent. But what is the President of the Treasury Board's answer? He says: if you pass my Bill C-119, I can, first of all, tell you that this is the first stage of my deregulation program. Presumably he is suggesting that this misery rate will be improved if we agree to repeal the Freight Rates Reduction Act of 1959, or the Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage Act, or the Air Traffic Control Services Continuation Act of 1976-77. All these I take it are, in the mind of the President of the Treasury Board, very effective steps toward getting this economy rolling once again.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is an affront to the Parliament of Canada. Whatever the Minister is doing in this Bill, it could better be handled as a footnote to an Act going through this Parliament, which would hopefully have brought in some meaningful legislation to start genuinely deregulating industry in this country, and give the private sector entrepreneurs an opportunity to start producing those jobs we have been talking about. In any event, the Government could stop pretending that meaningful actions are being taken when in reality all that is happening is that a lot of housecleaning measures are being given a priority they do not deserve before the Parliament of Canada today when we are faced with the most serious economic plight this nation has had to face certainly since the 1930s.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has made most of the points I wanted to make. I only wanted to make three quick points because, as one who believes in deregulation, I looked forward to the Bill and was somewhat surprised to find out what it contained. It should be made clear that what is at issue here is more parliamentary reform than deregulation. It ought to be a matter of parliamentary reform, that this Parliament has to deal with the repeal of matters which date back that far. I hope that some day we will see the wisdom of referring these kinds of matters to an all-party committee so that the time of the House is not taken up with this kind of matter. Secondly, I had the privilege of spending some time this past weekend with the Conference Board of Canada. When you deal with individuals who are directly involved in the regulation by Government of their affairs, that is perhaps the most direct way to discover what is the problem of regulatory reform which the Government has yet to deal with.

There is a new phrase in the industrial world, Mr. Speaker, which is "the six inch rule." It is a scary rule. According to those who are in the practice of appearing before the regulatory bodies of Government, if your supporting documentation is not at least six inches thick, your issue and your concern will not even be dealt with. It will be sloughed off by the regulatory agencies of Canada because if it is not six inches thick, it obviously does not say anything valuable. That is how far we have gone in making life difficult for business, and that is a shame.

The reason I enter this debate is to add one point to what the Hon. Member for York-Peel said. Yesterday the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) was asked in this House by our leader whether the Throne Speech was ready and whether the Government has its new economic measures ready. The Prime Minister of Canada said:

> We had envisaged the possibility of having the Throne Speech read at the end of the month of October.

The reason for delaying those measures, Mr. Speaker, was:

> —the very important legislation which was already before the House—

Further on in the day the Prime Minister reiterated that point when he said:

> —we did not begin the session with the Throne Speech, but, rather, postponed it, as I say, until we deal with this legislative backlog—

Apparently what the Government proposes to do, Mr. Speaker, is not to bring in a Throne Speech, not to bring in a budget, but to defer all economic measures for three years to the Royal Commission for study. Three years, Mr. Speaker, so this Government will never have to explain to Canadians what it proposes to do until after the next election. In fact, if that is to be taken seriously, then one is entitled to ask: are the people of Canada seriously expected to believe that Bill C-119, an Act to repeal certain statutes that have ceased to be in force, has a legislative priority in the mind of the Government greater than economic recovery? It makes the whole statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister of Canada unbelievable.

I need not go on at length because the Hon. Member for York-Peel has outlined many of the matters of concern, but I hope someone on the other side explains to the 1.5 million Canadians who are out of work why measures to help them should be delayed while we deal with the Bounty on Hemp Act of 1923.

One can go on, but it seems to me that all Canadians have the right to look to what Parliament is dealing with today, which, in the words of the Prime Minister of Canada, are more important than a Throne Speech, a new budget, or new economic measures. If you simply look at what the Government of Canada proposes the House should deal with today, while action to help Canadians is deferred, then Canadians will get the clearest picture of exactly why this Government and this country are in the difficulty they are in.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I looked through this Bill this morning and noticed that it was to repeal statutes which have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary, and I thought it would simply be a routine bill. In the Province of Alberta, for example, every five years the Government brings in a similar Bill to prevent laws from becoming redundant and to repeal those which are no longer in use or have gone by the boards and are no longer enforced. So we looked upon it as a simple housekeeping Bill. But when I heard Members from the other side of the House this morning saying that this was the start of a great parliamentary reform, I took another look at the Bill. I wish the Hon. Minister, when he is speaking to the Bill, would tell me how this is part of the great reform Parliament. I just cannot see it and I do not understand it. If that is so, the Government of Alberta has been carrying out reforms for the last 40 years, to my knowledge.

When this Bill is passed, Mr. Speaker, it will not make one iota of difference to any Canadian. The Acts are not in force now, they are redundant. As a matter of fact, one of them goes back to 1908. I am amazed that it took the Government 74 years to find out that the Act was redundant.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a housekeeping exercise which every Government should undertake at least every seven or eight years, and preferably every five years. So I cannot understand how this is a big deal. I would get quite excited about this if the Bill were going to repeal the Excise Tax Act, because it is doing so much damage to the country. It puts a tax on gasoline which farmers have to use to distribute fertilizers, which increases the cost of food to everybody, which in turn increases inflation, and then we try to fight inflation. Why not repeal an Act like that? Then I could get excited about parliamentary reform. Or we should repeal the Metric Conversion Act, or Bill C-48, or the capital gains tax measure which was brought in in the November budget, along with several other things. If you want to start parliamentary reform, let us repeal some of those Acts. Let us not make people think they are going to have something different tomorrow when this Bill is passed, when it is simply a housekeeping act which should have been carried out at least every five years since Confederation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should call the attention of the House to the fact that if the Minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I had intended to begin my closing remarks by thanking all Hon. Members for their contributions to the debate, but I would be less than sincere if I extended those thanks in equal measure to each and every person on the opposition side of the House who spoke, in particular the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who, I thought, spoke on behalf of the Official Opposition, rose and said that he and his Party welcomed the Bill. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) rose and said that he and his Party welcome the Bill. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) rose and said that he and his Party welcomed the Bill, that it was worthwhile legislation and that they intended to support it. But then the Hon. Member for York-Peel came in and said that the Bill was an affront. If it is an affront, it must be an affront to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, to the Hon. Member for Vegreville and to the Official Opposition for whom they speak. As I understood the position of the Official Opposition, it was that it was a worthwhile and constructive Bill which it supported.

This is just another example of how the Official Opposition is unable to get its act together. It could be that the speech of the Hon. Member for York-Peel was the opening salvo of his campaign for the leadership of the Conservative Party, something he wants to carry forward to the convention next January. After all, the former minister of finance from Newfoundland made a remarkable statement about the leadership of his Party not too long ago, so I suppose the Hon. Member for York-Peel in his own way should have an opportunity to give a signal, perhaps a more subtle signal—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, I call to the Minister's attention the Bill before the House.

Mr. Gray: I simply point out that the Bill is supported by spokesmen for the Official Opposition. I am sure they regret very much that their efforts are being sabotaged by the Hon. Member for York-Peel.

It may be that the Hon. Member for York-Peel was absent since October 27 when the House resumed, because we did not begin our efforts in the House with this Bill. We began with the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which gave high priority to the economy, to the creation of jobs and to the reallocation of $1.5 billion. It was an economic statement which I support and for which I share the responsibility.

I would presume that we are dealing with the Bill this afternoon, at least in part, because of a discussion between our House Leader and the House Leader of the Official Opposition. It is clear from the fact that we began the resumed session with the economic statement of the Minister of Finance that we are giving priority to maintaining and creating jobs in the private sector, to building and strengthening the efficiency and productivity of the private sector. As part of this we must also give a signal that we are interested in strengthening the efficiency and productivity of the Government. The Bill is intended to be a contribution to this.

It was first introduced in June by my distinguished predecessor. We are carrying forward the Bill at this time to clear away the legislative backlog about which Hon. Members opposite spoke. It is one component of our over-all commitment to legislative or regulative or regulatory reform. Yes, it is legislative housekeeping, but it is one element of a more efficient and productive government apparatus.

It is strange that the Hon. Member from Alberta in the back row opposite, again in his own way, contradicted the Hon. Member for York-Peel. He is a distinguished former member of the Alberta legislature who, I am sure, made a contribution to his own Province. He complained that we had not dealt with this matter sooner, but the Hon. Member for York-Peel said that we should not be dealing with it at all, that we should be dealing with it later. That is still another contradiction.

In conclusion, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) inaccurately suggested that our objective was not to say what we were doing with respect to the economy until after the next election. Certainly this is not our position. We have already begun putting forward our program to deal with the current serious economic situation in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. What the Hon. Member for Don Valley West accused us of certainly seems to be the position of the Conservative Party, because the former minister of finance from Newfoundland, when asked what his Party would do if it were in office, said, "We don't intend to tell anybody what we are going to do until we get back in". Then he said, "You'll find out".

Looking back at what happened in 1979-80 when he was minister of Finance, I am sure Canadians are very worried that if they make the mistake of voting for them they will find—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, with all due respect to the Hon. Minister, I call his attention to the rule of relevance in the debate.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I accept your admonition. I am simply trying to stay within the parameters of the debate created by the Hon. Member for York-Peel and other Members opposite.

I want to conclude by saying that I thank Hon. Members of the House, where they deserve it, for their constructive comments. I look forward to pursuing all the suggestions made when the Bill is in committee.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) would accept a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Minister accept a question?

Mr. Gray: If it is relevant, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is twofold. Before we deal with the Bill, would the Minister indicate how many jobs are likely to be created as a result of its passage or, alternatively, how much money the Treasury will save as a result of the passage of Bill C-119?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I do not expect that the Bill will create jobs, but I certainly think that it will help save some money in terms of over-all Government administration, and I am sorry my hon. friend seems to oppose that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-96, to amend the Financial Administration Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading today of Bill C-96, the purpose of which is to amend the Financial Administration Act in order to enable Treasury Board further to improve financial control and accountability in departments and agencies of the Government of Canada.

The last major revision to the Financial Administration Act was undertaken in the late 1960s. Since that time a number of important recommendations and agreements concerning financial administration matters have been made requiring further legislative change. These amendments are included in the Bill. They stem from reports by successive Auditors General recommending specific improvements in a number of aspects of financial administration. Also they stem from the 1975 study of the Accounts of Canada which recommended change to certain budgetary, accounting and reporting practices which for a long time have caused concern about their effect on parliamentary control of expenditures, and from a variety of proposals for making amendments to clarify the intent of the legislation where difficulties in its application have been experienced.

There has also been a request from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to include several items dealing with government banking and borrowing.

In addition to these externally generated initiatives for change, the Office of the Comptroller General has identified other areas where legislative change is needed. While the majority of items in this Bill are administrative and technical improvements, there are a number of amendments which I should like to mention today because of the important improvements they will enable us to implement.

The first significant amendment concerns the proposals for the future treatment of uncollectible debts due to the Crown. As Members may know, Section 18 of the Act at present authorizes the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Treasury Board to make regulations authorizing deletions from the accounts of obligations due to Her Majesty not exceeding $5,000. Deletion of debts over $5,000 requires parliamentary approval.

Section 18 was last changed in 1969. An analysis of the submissions for deletion for a recent one-year period revealed 1,528 cases between $2,000 and $5,000, for a total of $4.8 million, and an additional 1,344 cases over $5,000, for a total of $28.8 million. Although statistics suggest that an increase in the limit from $5,000 to $100,000 would eliminate much of the administrative burden associated with parliamentary approval, and it was recommended that the limit should be removed from the Act and put in regulations where it could be subject to periodic revision.

While it is true that the existing law reserves for Parliament the authority to write off debts, it should be understood that this change is intended to deal administratively rather than legislatively with a variety of relatively small amounts which have proved to be uncollectible. Generally speaking, these include taxes receivable, accounts receivable, accountable advances and a variety of minor items for various purposes. As this type of debt is actually unrealized revenue, it is recorded on a memorandum basis only in the records of a Department, and deletion has no effect on the expenditures of government.

Where an item was initially authorized by Parliament through estimates, such as a loan or investment, and that item is on the Statement of Assets and Liabilities of Canada, any amount written off, no matter how large or small, will continue to require legislative approval prior to making an adjustment. Large dollar value items are usually in this category.

I should like to remind the House that any debt which is to be written off under the proposed regulations would be required by law to be reported in the Public Accounts.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the changes to Section 18 will reinforce the Government's continuing efforts to collect vigorously all revenues and debts due the Crown.

Another amendment concerns loan guarantees. The requirement to provide loan guarantees has arisen on occasion, and the authority to provide these guarantees was obtained through the estimates process because it was considered to be a financial matter and it would not have been realistic to amend program legislation.

If program legislation had a clause authorizing loan guarantees, there would be no need to bring specific items before Parliament. The process now used provides Members of Parliament with an opportunity to review each specific item in committee and to register their concerns, their points of view, and their support if they wish to do so.

Because it is desirable to continue to have Parliament approve requests for loan guarantees, an amendment to Section 22 will allow for the continued use of estimates, that is, appropriation acts, to obtain such authority.

There is an amendment to Section 25 concerning the existing statutory requirement for the certification and recording of financial commitments, which was legislated some time ago. This requirement was met with the Comptroller of the Treasury as the central point for the control of disbursements of public money. As a result of the recommendations of the Glassco Commission in 1962, the position of the Comptroller of the Treasury was abolished and responsibility for, among other things, commitment certification and accounting was given to Departments.

Over the past several years commitment accounting practices in Departments have been addressed in several government-wide studies. There was the Report of the Auditor General of Canada on Financial Management of Canada. There was the Report on the Study of the Accounts of Canada, a study carried out interdepartmentally on the various purposes served by those accounts.

In 1980 the Government announced the creation of the Policy and Expenditure Management System. This system recognizes that policy and program decisions must be taken in the context of, and with the responsibility for, costs and expenditure limitations. The creation of resource envelopes and long-term plans that will provide Departments with a context within which they can examine future costs of ongoing programs and new initiatives is central to the new system. It follows, therefore, that multi-year financial arrangements must not only be considered in terms of the budget year operational plan but also within the limits set out in the multi-year operational plans.

These facts, plus the introduction of the Policy and Expenditure Management System, suggested the need for a specific and detailed review of Section 25. Therefore, the office of the Comptroller General of Canada launched an extensive review of commitment certification and accounting practices. This review revealed that there are three major problems which create inefficiencies and weaken control over financial obligations entered into on behalf of the Government of Canada. It was found that present Section 25 is not relevant to statutory appropriations. It was found also that the section does not require control over multi-year arrangements and it requires unnecessary costly procedures to control small-value commitments.

In summary, these three problems can be traced to the present legislation, which is the underlying cause of most of the shortcomings identified in previous government-wide studies. Therefore, it has been concluded that the method of controlling commitments should not be in the legislative wording of the Act. The proposed amendment will, however, continue the requirement for control over commitments, but the methods by which that control will be kept will be the subject of Treasury Board policy direction rather than law. I believe the new policy direction will strengthen control over financial commitments while at the same time effecting economies in administrative overhead. It will do so by emphasizing, for statutory appropriations, the need for determination of eligibility prior to payment rather than commitment certification as to fund availability. It will also relate commitment control to the reference levels approved for departmental multi-year operational plans for future fiscal years as well as the current fiscal year.

Section 30 of the Act is being amended to provide better disclosure and improved accountability on the use of budgetary and non-budgetary appropriations on which Parliament has imposed annual ceilings. In general, the amendment would require debts incurred prior to the end of the fiscal year for work performed, goods received, services rendered or debts resulting from contractual arrangements to be recorded as charges to appropriations, even if the inclusion of such charges would result in total charges exceeding the appropriation.

The Section is being amended in conformity with a recommendation of the Study of the Accounts of Canada, which recommendation, as you may recall, was endorsed by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This amendment, in addition, addresses the concerns of successive Auditors General respecting the non-reporting of the over-utilization of appropriations.

Although Section 30 is proposed to be amended to permit the recording of charges in excess of appropriations, I want to stress that the amendment is essentially a recording and reporting mechanism; the requirement of the Government to respect the annual ceiling of appropriation authority granted by Parliament is by no means relaxed. Accordingly, charges in excess of an appropriation will only be discharged if parliamentary authority to do so exists.

I want to mention, by way of conclusion, that since Bill C-96 was tabled for first reading last March, the Government has received a number of comments and suggestions. We have studied all of these very carefully, and in several cases we are agreeing to the suggestions and therefore intend to make appropriate recommendations for changes at the committee stage. These changes include the deletion of Section 20.1 dealing with net voting; Section 101 dealing with interdepartmental charging; and Section 102 dealing with the charging and paying of interest. As well, there will be a number of technical amendments to wording. For the most part we are accepting these changes on the basis of legal advice that they do not in any way undermine our important policy objectives for improved financial control which can be attained within existing legislation.

These are the main issues contained in this Bill, and because of the great interest shown by Members of the House in tightening the whole area of financial accountability and in response to recommendations of the Auditors General over the years and of the Public Accounts Committee, I ask Members of the House to support this Bill for second reading and reference to the committee.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-96 is a Bill which comes before the House from time to time and seems rather technical in nature but one which is routine and which perhaps should slip through the parliamentary process without undue examination or consideration.

However, a closer examination of the details of this Bill shows that it is, in fact, much more than routine. The manner in which Parliament examines and controls Government spending through the estimates and through the appropriation Act, Acts that come in at the end of a supply period, changed very profoundly in 1969 with the introduction of new rules to the House, by closure I might add. A provision was introduced to our Standing Orders which dictated that when estimates are brought in—after the money has already been spent in many cases—there is a certain period of time in which the estimates could be examined. At the end of that time they are deemed to be reported to the House, and on that last day a bill is introduced to appropriate the funds for those expenditures. That Bill is passed without debate or consideration. There is no provision for debate or amendment to any part of the Appropriation Act. In fact, it is an automatic rubber stamp and it is a farce to call the Appropriation Act an Act of Parliament in the same sense as other Acts of Parliament are passed.

Prior to that time it was the habit of Governments to use the Appropriation Act's mechanism as a method of making minor adjustments and changes in law via what we call dollar items. When there was an opportunity to discuss and amend the Appropriation Act, perhaps this was not an undesirable or extreme situation as long as it was not done to excess, because it would then involve omnibus legislation. But if debate served as an administrative aid, it was proper.

Once rule changes were brought in by closure which denied the opportunity for debate and amendment to the Appropriation Act, it became most inappropriate for the Government and its bureaucrats to use that vehicle to introduce new legislation and ideas. When that change was introduced, the bureaucrats continued to use that vehicle to bring in those laws it wished. Various Members of the House objected to that procedure. They did so formally on March 10, 1971, on December 10, 1973, on March 6, 1974, on June 22, 1976, on March 22, 1977, on June 7, 1977, and several times since then. They raised objections to the Speaker by indicating that this type of procedure was improper and in violation of what parliamentary authority is all about.

Various Speakers, including Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, Mr. Speaker Jerome and, most recently, Madam Speaker Sauvé, acknowledged that this was not proper. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux expressed concern about that procedure on several occasions. That did not stop the Treasury Board or the bureaucrats from continuing to use it. They just proceeded, ignoring the clear expression of concern from the House.

Mr. Speaker Jerome underlined and emphasized those concerns and said, "Please do not abuse the House and continue to use that technique to circumvent Parliament and the legislative process." That did not faze the Treasury Board or the bureaucrats at all. They continued to do so.

Finally last June, after compiling this support which had gone back over a decade, argument was presented to Madam Speaker Sauvé. She agreed that it had gone on for too long. All of her warnings and those of her predecessors had been ignored for too long. It was time to act and declare that mechanism out of order and unacceptable. She struck down many of the votes in the estimates and potential items in the Appropriation Act that had been put forward by the Treasury Board and the bureaucrats who were trying to abuse the House as they constantly do.

On Wednesday afternoon the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) praised me in the House for the effort at that time and the decision of the Chair with respect to what happened. He said that it was the only proper decision to make. But does that faze those people, the bureaucrats, who really run the country? Does it faze the young Liberals, those manipulators, those people hired by Michael Pitfield to tell us what to do? It does not faze them one bit. They simply wrote another bill, Bill C-96, which proposes to force a law through Parliament to let them do what Parliament has been saying for the last ten years was improper.

That is exactly the purpose of this Bill. What must we do to restore parliamentary democracy to this country? How frequently will those nameless, faceless manipulators continue doing this? When will the House say no? We are the elected representatives. Perhaps that does not make us as important as those who are appointed, but it should, if you believe in democracy.

If one believes in democracy, those who are elected should be the most important because they are the ones whom the citizens can get at through the ballot box. It is not these appointed bureaucrats who keep abusing our system with measures such as this.

I am shocked and ashamed of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) who has allowed himself to be manipulated in this way. Let met say in his defence, however, that this Bill was tabled during the tenure of his predecessor, and he is simply being an errand boy for what the bureaucrats had decided upon earlier.

I suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that this is his opportunity to stand up and demonstrate that he is his own man, that he does have a backbone and has respect for the House and our institutions. This is his opportunity to show that he will not allow the House to be abused by saying that he will not push the Bill through. If he does that he will receive a great deal of respect from me. Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT ACT

MEASURE TO IMPOSE THE DEATH PENALTY

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East) moved that Bill C-308, to amend the Criminal Code (punishment for murder), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to reflect not only my own feeling but also the feeling shared by many Canadians that the Government has lost sight of its purpose. I would like to cite a few examples.

Did the Canadian people ask to have capital punishment abolished? Did the Canadian people ask for the metric system to come into being? Of course not. Did the Canadian people ask for bilingualism in the present form? I must say that I personally can speak five languages. I have nothing against the French language. I think French is beautiful. I really do.

Mr. Prud'homme: So is Black!

Mr. Kushner: But I want to say this—

Mr. Prud'homme: Black is beautiful!

Mr. Kushner: Yes, it is. Black is beautiful. However, I want to say there is more to Canada than just the French and the English. there are the Italians—

Mr. Prud'homme: And the Polish.

Mr. Kushner: —and the Poles, and the Croatians and the Germans. May I ask, did the Canadian people ask that we play around with the Constitution at the time the country was in need of some direction and leadership in the economy? We probably would never have been in the mess we are in today had the Government given that leadership. However, the Constitution was just used as a smokescreen. Did the Canadian people really ask for high inflation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) assured us he would wrestle to the ground? Of course not. Did the Canadian people ask for the high interest rates which have destroyed so many small businesses, big businesses and individuals? It will be next to impossible for the country to be restored to the position enjoyed before, and to even come close will take a long time. As a matter of fact, without question, the country has floated so far down the river that we no longer have any control as far as interest rates are concerned. Did the Government ask Canadians if it should be buying oil companies when it could not even run the Post Office? The Government threw up its hands and turned the Post Office over to a Crown corporation, which has doubled the rates and cost us much more than it did before, and now we are in a worse mess than ever.

Did Canadians from right across the country, from coast to coast, send petitions in every possible form and delegations to request a return to capital punishment? As many as 80 per cent of the Canadian people today have requested that. We tell ourselves that we are democratic, but our democracy is slowly slipping away. Without question, the Canadian people have lost confidence even in their Members of Parliament because we no longer reflect their wishes as Canadians. They no longer respect us. The Government is now interfering with the free enterprise system. Instead of signing an agreement with Alberta, it signed an agreement with Mexico. That is why Canadians are so disenchanted and why they have lost respect for Parliament, which is slowly drifting away into a dictatorial system.

Speaking of safety and security for the Canadian people, even the Prime Minister has more than doubled his personal security over the last six months because he, too, fears for his safety. In this so-called permissive society, he does fear. One can see that in seven years or less murderers are back out on the streets with the likelihood that they will repeat their offences. I do not want to refer to the Olsons and other horror stories that we hear about every day through the media. As it happens, the victims are often either related to or have known the perpetrators of the crime. We are coming to the point where law and order is being made on the streets. Again, I must say that the main team, the Government, has lost sight of its purpose. The Government should be keeping well on track as far as making laws to run this country is concerned, rather than interfering with our enterprise system and destroying it.

It is hard for me to comprehend the poll results we have been hearing. The latest shows that the Conservatives are leading, with about 46 per cent to the Liberals' 30 per cent and the NDPs' 21 per cent. One would almost think that the results were manufactured because, considering the state the country is in, it is hard for me to believe the Liberals still rate that high.

Returning to the matter of security and stability that we once knew, at one time children, the elderly and even people going to and from work, felt safe. However, now people who return home late from work cause alarm to those at home because it is feared that something may have happened to them. Such fear was unheard of not too long ago. Today, we are advocating not only that we lock our doors, but also bolt them and perhaps even bar our windows to give us a feeling of safety. Because we have lost control and respect for law and order, many Canadians feel that capital punishment is a deterrent to crime. I do believe that it is a deterrent, and many other Canadians do as well.

When we consider the type of society that we are building under fear, one would almost think we are living in the days of the Roman Empire, days in which the society destroyed itself from within. The Canadian people are losing much confidence in law makers. We are even destroying the practice of the shaking of the hand, which was probably a much better form of agreement reached between two people than that type of agreement made with lawyers. Even though agreements are carefully written, they are not as effective as the ones which were confirmed by a shake of the hand not so long ago.

As sophisticated, educated and experienced as we are, and with the knowledge gained from communications with other countries, we know full well that capital punishment is a deterrent. I have nothing against those who feel that capital punishment is not a deterrent. I think they have that right. I do believe in the democratic process, but I do not believe that the Government today is responding to the needs of the people. The Government is not listening. No wonder we are in the mess in this country that we are. We are in a mess economically, which is alarming. We are deteriorating slowly and creeping into a dictatorial system by which we have encouraged, by design or otherwise, the highjackings that are taking place, the hostage takings, and the sit-ins. It is shameful that we have allowed ourselves to drift slowly into such disrespect for law and order in this so-called permissive society. In comparison with the 1940s, there has been a ten to one increase in murder crimes. If this is a so-called Just Society where we very strongly favour the criminal rather than the victim and their families, it is about time that we started looking at ourselves, because we are encouraging more and more poeple to take law and order into their own hands and encouraging them to the degree where they will be forced to carry guns.

I do not believe that it is too late to change around. We slowly got ourselves into this mess by ignoring the situation and thinking that the problem would go away. It must be almost impossible to be a member of a police force because of the procedural things and accounting that they have to do in order to be able to do the kind of job that is required today. They too have strongly advocated capital punishment across this nation.

It only goes to show that we have had a Government that has been in power too long and is no longer listening or responding to the needs of the people, and it is time for a change. Without question we must have hope. It is hard for me to believe that the Liberals were returned to power in the last election, especially in view of the errors they have made. The only way we have in this democratic system of bringing back some democracy to this Parliament and making our country a safe and better place to live in, is to have new direction under a new Government. The only alternative we have today is the Conservative Government, and I know that if the Conservative Government had remained, we would have had a free vote on a return to capital punishment in this country.

What has happened is unfortunate. I do not think that the Liberal Government will ever be back in power in this country. I feel that they have destroyed hope for Canadians. I believe that we will return in this country to a two Party Government which will be made up of the Conservative and the NDP. This is my prediction, and I feel this is the way it is going to happen. It cannot be anything else. Certainly there is not hope in returning to a Liberal Government, no hope at all.

An Hon. Member: We are here.

Mr. Kushner: You are here more by coincidence than by good management. The Canadian people are paying very dearly and very heavily to the extent that it will take us many years to overcome this, and to pay for the mistakes that the Liberals have made.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): I thank the Hon. Member from Calgary East (Mr. Kushner) for again giving me the opportunity to express my views in this House on the question of capital punishment. I also thank him for giving us some interesting insights into the Tory platform for the next election. Many of us have been asking ourselves, what do the Tories stand for, because up to now we have heard what the Tories are against.

The Hon. Member for Calgary East has told us exactly what will happen if the Conservatives ever get to power again. The only thing that we are sure will happen is that people will hang. I am not sure that the Canadian people on the whole would vote for a Party just to make sure that people hang. However, time will tell.

I had hoped that as in the past any debate on capital punishment would be concentrated on the issue, and not so much on partisan politics, because what we are talking about is, in essence, human life. What we are talking about is the protection of society, and what we are talking about is the need, if there is one, to protect society from the wrongdoings.

I think it would be more appropriate not to mention only, as the Hon. Member has just done, many of the ills of society. I think it would be more appropriate to ask ourselves what is the cause of those ills, to ask ourselves to take a look at people who are now in prison and who are now convicted of murders—shall we limit our discussion just to murderers—and have a look at their lives and ask ourselves on what torturous route did those people bring themselves to commit murder.

We could also ask ourselves how many of the most ghastly kind of murders have been committed by people unknown. Who are they, these unknown murderers who have escaped? I can tell you that many of them were probably in organized crime, and those murderers will never be hanged. They will not be hanged even if the Conservatives do get back to power. They will never hang because they have enough money to defend themselves, and usually they have the intelligence to defend themselves. History in every single country of this world has proven—

Mr. Kushner: You can buy justice under a Liberal Government.

An Hon. Member: Come on.

• (1620)

Mrs. Appolloni: I would hope the Hon. Member would pay me the courtesy I extended to him of allowing me to speak without intervention.

As I was saying, the history of every country in this world is replete with the histories of poor, downtrodden, uneducated people who have gone to their death by state execution. It is also replete with the unknowns who have escaped because they had the money to "buy" a good lawyer. I am not going to be the one to put the noose around anyone's neck because they do not have the money to be properly defended. That is one of the points.

The previous speaker began his remarks by asking the question, "Who asked for abolition?" I think I am quoting him correctly, but obviously I do not have the "blues" in front of me. As a result of the Hon. Member's beginning his speech with so many questions, I now ask myself whether he wants Government by Gallup poll. Is that what he wants? Does he think that Government should be a leader of public opinion or a follower?

That will be a big question in the next election. The people of Canada want their MPs to govern, not just follow. We could have another total debate on the Gallup poll. If I had more time, I would quote what Edmund Burke thought elected representatives should do, but I will leave that to my colleagues who want to enter this debate.

This Bill is different from any others which preceded it in that it specifies the type of capital punishment. Instead of hanging, I gather the Bill speaks about some kind of lethal injection. At first sight that might mean that the proposed execution would be more humane than in the past. However, I want to quote from an article published by Amnesty International on this very topic. It reads:

> —it is a contradiction in terms to consider making the death penalty more humane—by, for instance, administering lethal drugs. Quite apart from the question of a doctor having to defame the Hippocratic Oath and the recent Tokyo Declaration of the World Medical Association, such a discussion avoids the true hell of the death penalty. According to evidence from the United States, prisoners under sentence of death mutilate themselves, cover themselves in their own excrement, commit suicide or try to, and go insane—waiting, waiting to die. As Albert Camus wrote in his famous essay, Reflections on the Guillotine, in 1960: An execution, he wrote "is not simply death. It is just as different . . .as a concentration camp is from prison . . . . It adds to death a rule, a public premeditation known to the future victim . . . for there to be an equivalence, the death penalty would have to punish a criminal who had warned the victim of the date at which he would inflict a horrible death on him and who, from that moment onward, had confined him at his mercy for months. Such a monster is not encountered in private life.

In other words, the method of execution is not that important. The inhumanity of a premeditated execution remains the same.

In 1976 Parliament debated at length the whole subject of capital punishment. At that time I voted freely for the abolition of capital punishment. I believe I said at that time that I had not always been an abolitionist.

When I was about 17 years of age, living in England, there was a tremendous series of murders. The police arrested a man by the name of John Evans. He was accused and eventually convicted of those horrible murders. In the public frenzy whipped up by the popular press at that time, I as a 16 or 17 year old was quite impressed. I thought "that guy deserves to die, he has to die." Then they killed him. He was executed. I had one little problem in the back of my mind. I repeat, I was an impressionable 16 or 17 years old. When reading the public accounts of the court proceedings, there was a problem that nagged me. It was that the man was illiterate. I thought to myself, how could an illiterate man understand the complexities of those proceedings. I had qualms. However, like most of the British population at that time, I welcomed his death sentence.

A few years after the man was dead and buried in whatever grave they buried criminals of that day, it became quite apparent that the man had been totally innocent. The man who was subsequently convicted of the crime was his landlord, a person by the name of Christie.

That incident was enough to change my view on capital punishment. It convinced me that for the rest of my life I would have to be extremely careful, not only in condemning people, but in destroying their ability to ever prove their innocence. Obviously there is nothing quicker than death to terminate one's possibilities of defending oneself.

Having turned into an abolitionist, frankly I do not believe that killing is always sinful. Sometimes it is absolutely necessary to protect your life or the lives of other people, such as in war. Then it can be necessary. However, I would do all that I could in my power to prevent the outbreak of war. That is my personal opinion.

Does the state have the moral right in its responsibility to kill in order to protect its people? Perhaps that is the fundamental question raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary East. In the absence of any other way, probably yes, and probably if the death of the aggressor were to be a deterrent. However, when we are speaking of the termination of human life, I cannot in honesty, intellect and conscience, accept the word "probably".

I do not need tremendous evidence, but certainly a preponderance of evidence, that the death penalty would be a deterrent. We do not have that evidence in Canada or throughout the world. I wish to quote the former solicitor general speaking in 1979 as follows:

—existing data indicates that there has been no disproportionate increase in the number of violent crimes.

I can also quote Statistics Canada "Law Enforcement Statistics Section 1981 Preliminary Homicide Data", which I just received today. It reads:

Homicide and its constituent categories have generally been on the decline since 1977.

That is since the death penalty was abolished.

While homicide and murder rates for 1981 increased for the first time in four years, these rates still remain below those of 1977 and 1978.

• (1630)

To return again to the words of the former solicitor general, the Hon. Warren Allmand, he said:

—evidence shows that capital punishment does not effectively lower murder rates. In fact, the lowest murder rates in the world are found in those countries and those states where capital punishment has been abolished for a long time, as an example, Sweden, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Rhode Island, Maine. Conversely, those that have retained capital punishment over a long period have the highest murder rate, as an example, France, Spain, Florida, South Carolina, Louisiana and Georgia.

No one has been able to prove that capital punishment is a deterrent and even if there were evidence to support that theory, only a preponderance of that evidence will convince. I will come back again to Amnesty International. Speaking at the Conference on the Abolition of the Death Penalty, Declaration of Stockholm, December 11, 1977, this Conference on the abolition of the death penalty, composed of more than 200 delegates and participants from Africa, Asia, Europe, the Middle East, North and South America and the Caribbean region, recalled that the death penalty is the ultimate cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment and violates the right to life. The Declaration says, among other things, that execution is an act of violence, and violence tends to provoke violence; the death penalty has never been shown to have a special deterrent effect; execution is irrevocable and can be inflicted on the innocent.

I have already cited a case in point which happened in England during the time I was living there. There was another case, the name of which escapes me now, but it was quite recent. It took place, I believe, in the eastern part of Canada, where a man was proven innocent after many years of imprisonment. These cases do happen, and in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, we cannot, as a society, afford to condone even one case of the innocent being punished.

Finally, the Hon. Member spoke of the social ills of our time. I felt he spoke with some nostalgia for the past, but nostalgia, like many other things, is not always too accurate. He spoke of the "good old days". He spoke of the Roman Empire. I can think of little less brutality than that which was shown to the world at the time of the Roman Empire. He spoke of prostitution. Is that something new? He spoke of other crimes, but he did not speak of the undercurrent, the underlying reasons for the rise in social crimes, and there are many, not least of which, perhaps, is the unequal distribution of wealth and opportunity for Canadians. But we can rectify that, and this Government does intend to rectify it. However, you do not create a better society by killing half its members.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner) for introducing this Bill today. He is speaking up on behalf of the Canadian people. He understands the role of a Member of Parliament and that of a politician, and he made his point very well. We are the servants of the people, but there are so many in this House who have reversed that over the last few years. Now it is the people who are the servants, and somehow the Liberals think they are the masters and they will keep the people in line.

I believe that capital punishment should be in our Criminal Code. It should be there when needed. It is not necessary, in my opinion, that we have capital punishment for every type of murder, but it should be there. The United States is returning to capital punishment in many of its States.

The former speaker from the Liberal Party mentioned the problems of society today, but it is the Liberals who have introduced the permissive society into this country, easy bail and weekend passes, and what have you, and if we did return to the "good old days", as the Hon. Member from Calgary mentioned, we could bring back the paddle and the strap and have some discipline. That is what the criminals fear. We would not have so much crime today if criminals knew they were going to be faced with these punishments.

The group who really understands crime and murderers, Mr. Speaker, is the police. The Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police have made their point repeatedly in calling for the return of capital punishment, and they are far better judges than we are in respect of whether or not capital punishment should be returned. Police are not irresponsible people, they have experience in dealing with crime and criminals and we should be listening to their advice, but we completely ignore it. We will not back them up, and this is a serious mistake we have been making.

The criminal element, the underworld, does not want capital punishment brought back. We saw a recent example of that in St. Calixte, Quebec. This is a story out of the Winnipeg Free Press dated November 18, 1982, where threats and shots failed to halt a capital punishment crusade, and I quote:

Undaunted by threatening phone calls and an apparent attempt on his life last week, the head of a group lobbying for the return of capital punishment says he will press on with his campaign.

Fernand Pellerin, president and director general of the Citizens Committee of Canada, said he was driving near this town 40 kilometres north of Montreal last Thursday when a man in a car travelling in the opposite direction fired two shotgun blasts at him.

The first blast blew out the windshield, the second, the rear window. This man established the Citizens' Committee last December, Mr. Speaker, and the committee is currently organizing across Canada to demand a referendum on capital punishment. It would seem that the underworld will go to any limits to deal with anyone who is organizing to this extent.

There was a very sad case earlier this year that touched me very deeply. During the Archambault prison riot last spring or early summer, a prison guard was knifed to death, murdered, and left to die in a pool of his own blood. In some dark hall in the prison, I suppose. The prison guard was knifed to death by a convicted murderer, and the sad thing here, Mr. Speaker, is he had only one hour to go on his shift, and not only did he have one hour to go on his shift, but he was to retire in one hour. He was 60 years of age and he was knifed to death in a prison by convicted murderers. That was his fate because we will not re-introduce capital punishment.

The Liberal Member who spoke prior to me mentioned that some innocent people have been put away. That has happened in some cases and that is most unfortunate, but there are many cases where a murderer has murdered twice. In Winnipeg, where I come from, there have been cases where an individual has murdered twice. I recall one case where a murderer was imprisoned for eight years, he was released, and within a short period of time murdered again. He murdered a young girl at the same hotel where he had committed his first murder. This should prove that there are a lot of advantages in having capital punishment.

The Hon. Member for Calgary East mentioned the lastest opinion poll where five out of every six Canadians favour the suggestion that a referendum be held. I have no objection to having a referendum. I would like to see the next Conservative Government have a legitimate free vote again, a proper debate on capital punishment, referring the subject matter to committee, because the type of capital punishment we use has been mentioned. We can discuss the rope and other ways that capital punishment can be implemented. We could also have police officers as witnesses, or anyone else. I am not afraid to have a proper debate on capital punishment. We would certainly be acting on behalf of the majority.

We continually read, Mr. Speaker, of the horror stories. There is the recent case of a man admitting in court that he killed 30 people. He was not mentally disturbed, he was a hit man and had murdered 30 people. Then down in Atlanta, Georgia, there was the slaying of 38 women, described as Atlanta's hidden tragedy. Think of the 38 families and the suffering they have gone through. I hear repeatedly these arguments from the Liberals, but they never mention anything about the families or the victims, they are always so concerned about the murderer. They would not want anything to happen to the murderer. There is never a word at all about the mother or the father or the daughter or anyone else. Another horror story is that of a nun who was raped and robbed. A lot of the murderers are not just satisfied with murdering an individual, they want to rape and murder them. Heaven only knows what else happens before the final thrust, Mr. Speaker. A colleague of mine, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), recently distributed a questionnaire on capital punishment, and 2,223 of the people responding indicated they favour capital punishment, with 112 favoring abolition. So in some areas of the country 90 per cent of Canadians want the return of capital punishment.

I remember a very sad case in Toronto a couple of years ago of three grown up men sexually attacking a 14 year old shoeshine boy who had been working on Yonge Street. They picked him up and took him away to some deserted building and sexually tortured him before they killed him. Heaven only knows what that 14 year old lad went through at the hands of those three men. As I remember, some of them, when they were convicted, said they would sooner receive capital punishment than be sent to jail. Then there is another case in Chicago of one man murdering 36 people, and he was not mentally unbalanced. On and on it goes, Mr. Speaker.

I feel it is about time we started listening to the Canadian people. It would not be a bad idea for this Bill to be referred to committee. The Liberal Member who spoke prior to me made some excellent suggestions, and the place to discuss them is in committee with witnesses. Because this Bill is sent to committee does not mean that we would immediately start hanging people. Perhaps when we have finished our deliberations we would find that we would not have to implement capital punishment but that there might have to be some changes made in the law.

I do not want to be the one who is going to come anywhere close to talking out this Bill, and I hope the next Liberal to speak on this Bill will consider allowing it to go to committee.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, since four o'clock I have listened to this debate with some interest, particularly to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine ((Mr. McKenzie). As I listened to the Hon. Member for Calgary East and heard him go through a litany of what was wrong with this country, such as bilingualism, the metric system, the Post Office, highjackings and hostage takings, and heard him try to put the issue of capital punishment in that context, I could not help but think he is a man who yearns for simple answers to complex problems. He is a man who thinks that the good old days, where questions and answers were simple, where everyone knew what was right and what was wrong and where appropriate punishments were always applicable, is an age that he would like to return to. I suggest that that time never existed, and certainly to return to it in respect of capital punishment would be a regressive and barbaric move. I can understand his emotions. We all share in the anguish of the victims of violent crime.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine mentioned the tragic incidents at Archambeault Penitentiary. The guard that he referred to is a constituent of mine, and it was and is a tragic situation. The Hon. Member also spoke of victims of crime, that somehow those of us who are abolitionists have no feelings for them. That, I suggest, is foolishness. Does the Hon. Member suggest for one minute that somehow capital punishment will recompense the victims of crime, the families of those who are murdered? That is not going to bring them back from the dead.

We live in a complex society today, Mr. Speaker, and there are always those who think we can return to simpler times. I refer to a debate in this House on June 11, 1981, when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), made the following remarks:

> People feel that the moral order has been transgressed, as it has, and that something must be done to show that these are not mundane events but rather events which, if permitted or regarded lightly, would eventually call into question the very basis of civilized society. They are morally outraged that such things can happen. It is moral outrage we are dealing with when we talk about the call for a return to capital punishment, moral outrage and powerlessness.

That is a very human emotion. When we have this call for a return to capital punishment it gives us a sense that we are restoring the balance, making things equal. It satisfies an emotional need; an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. But at what price, Mr. Speaker?

My colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni), referred to the Evans-Christie case of a number of years ago in Great Britain, where an innocent man was hanged. She also made passing reference to a case in Nova Scotia recently, that of Donald Marshall, who at the ripe old age of 17 was sentenced to life imprisonment for murder. Now it apears, Mr. Speaker, that Donald Marshall is innocent. Suppose he had been hanged by the neck until dead? What would we do today? Would we somehow restore him to life and say, sorry, young man, we made a mistake? The Hon. Member for York South-Weston made reference to the fact that justice is not always done in these matters. The case of Donald Marshall is a case in point. I should like to refer to a story which appeared in The Globe and Mail with reference to the atmosphere at his trial. The headline read, "Racial tensions, fear gripped Micmac's trial". Of course, Marshall is a Micmac Indian, and in that atmosphere of racial tension and fear, he was convicted on the flimsiest of circumstantial evidence.

Apropos of such cases, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine said that it was most unfortunate that an innocent man or woman spent 11 years of his or her life in jail or was executed. Indeed it is very unfortunate, especially if one is dead.

Is our system of justice equal? I suggest that Hon. Members opposite should check the figures for American prisons to see how many Blacks are in American jails in proportion to their presence in the American population. How many are in jail? Far in excess of the ratio in Canada. How many native people are in Canadian prisons in proportion to their presence in the population? How many poor people are in Canadian prisons, people without power, money or connections? Who gets convicted in the end? Does the system of justice in Canada apply fairly? Can we guarantee that the innocent will not be executed?

There are some interesting figures and comments made with regard to capital punishment by those who have been involved in it. I refer the House to some remarks made by Albert Pierrepoint who, for over 25 years, was the British hangman. He officiated at several hundred hangings. In 1974, years after his retirement, he wrote his discreet memoirs. The memoirs include the following passage:

> Executions solve nothing and are only an antiquated relic of a primitive desire for revenge which takes the easy way out and hands the responsibility for revenge to other people . . . It is said to be a deterrent. I cannot agree. There have been murders since the beginning of time and we shall go on looking for deterrents until the end of time. If death were a deterrent, I might be expected to know. It is I who faced them last, young lads and girls, working men and grandmothers, I have been amazed to see the courage with which they take that walk into the unknown . . . All the men and women whom I have faced at that final moment convince me that in what I have done I have not prevented a single murder.

There are some interesting statistics. In the 1950s a Canadian joint parliamentary committee caused a tabulation to be made on the only matter on which full data was available—persons sentenced to death in Canada from Confederation onward. That tabulation was carried forward in "Capital Punishment" published by the Department of Justice in 1965. It indicates that from Confederation in 1867 to 1962, 1,487 people were sentenced to death in Canada. Of this number only 47.7 per cent were executed, 38.4 per cent had their sentences commuted, and 13.9 per cent were otherwise dealt with by courts of appeal. Thus, for the 95 years that we had the death penalty in Canada, if the police solved the case, and the murderer was convicted, that murderer still had a better than even chance of not being executed. It is striking that the British figures for commutation in this century are quite similar to the Canadian experience. Even if all the proper procedures are followed, there is no certainty.

As far as Gallup polls or other polls are concerned as to what Canadian people or people in general want, there have been suggestions that those of us who are abolitionists are not following the will of the people. I would say two things. First, polls are an imperfect instrument of measurement. I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Calgary East, the sponsor of the Bill, that the Harris poll taken in the United States in June 1973 began by asking respondents whether or not they believed in capital punishment. Three out of five said yes, but then the poll went on to ask a more complex set of follow-up questions, suggesting capital punishment as a penalty for a specific list of crimes. For none of those specific crimes did more than 41 per cent favour the death penalty; a drop of 20 per cent when one moved from the general and abstract to the specific and concrete. Certainly when one asks a general question one gets a general answer, but when one zeros in on more specific questions, the picture changes—the polls change and the response is different.

If, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine suggested, we are not doing our duty as Members of Parliament and reflecting the will of the people on this issue, is that our job? Sure it is, partially, but it is also our job to think. It is also our job to look at the facts dispassionately and render a decision based upon the facts. It is also our job to be compassionate and progressive.

I remind the Hon. Member for Calgary East of Edmund Burke in his now classic 1774 "Address to the Electors of Bristol" who said that a representative owed his constituents:

—his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience . . . Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

If we were only to be robots reflecting the opinions of the electorate, then we are not needed because the opinions of the electorate in this technological age can be simply transmitted by pushing a button.

THE LATE HON. WALTER DINSDALE, P.C.

TRIBUTES TO FORMER DEAN OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is with great sadness that we in this Party pay tribute to the memory of a man who has been a symbol of dedicated service and continuing achievement in the House of Commons for more than three decades.

Walter Dinsdale was, indeed, the Dean of the House of Commons, not just in terms of years but also in the manner in which he revered the daily life of this Chamber and its potential for serving Canadians. We remember him as a soft-spoken and reasonable man, but those quiet ways concealed a fierce determination to see even the toughest challenge through to a practical conclusion.

Walter Dinsdale's life was the epitome of public service. In World War II his courage earned him the Distinguished Flying Cross. In peacetime his efforts were channelled into social service work through his beloved Salvation Army and a personal crusade on behalf of a better future for the handicapped.

In political life these sensitivities led the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker to single out Mr. Dinsdale, first for assistance as a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and then as Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In that portfolio he completely immersed himself in a dream for a better life, more fair and more productive, for those Canadians and, indeed, those resources which were located "north of 60", as he put it. The task continues, but many of the improvements which he sought in 1960 have moved forward in subsequent years.

More recently this House associates Walter Dinsdale with the remarkable work which has been done in the field of the handicapped. It was a cause which he pursued relentlessly and, in 1979, during the Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), he became Chairman of a Special Committee on the Mentally and Physically Handicapped.

That was certainly one achievement which this Government was eager to continue, and the background and experience of Mr. Dinsdale as the Vice-Chairman of the Special Parliamentary Task Force on the Disabled were a key element in the success that that group of Members has had in seeing the implementation of a majority of the recommendations of the "Obstacles Report".

All of these qualities were clearly evident to the people of Brandon-Souris when they elected him first in 1951 and sent him back with enthusiasm in each election since. We on this side express our condolences to his constituents who will miss the tradition he had established and, more particularly, we offer our sympathy to his wife, Lenore, and their children, to whom he was so devoted. May he rest in peace.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to join the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in speaking of the Hon. Walter Dinsdale whose death, on Saturday, ended a courageous recent struggle against illness, and ended a life of passionate, selfless, principled service.

All of us knew Walter Dinsdale as the Member whose continuous service was the longest in this House. As the Prime Minister said, he won a by-election in June of 1951 and was re-elected repeatedly in 11 subsequent elections. He served, with distinction, in almost every office the House of Commons offers—as a private Member, as a Committee Chairman, as a Parliamentary Secretary, a Cabinet Minister, and as a front bench spokesman in the Opposition. Those were the categories of his public service. But the quality of his service—the quality of the man—was even more remarkable.

He was a man of profound and genuine religious faith, who believed deeply in brotherhood and in peace. Yet, when he was called upon to defend his country in a world war, he served willingly as a night-fighter pilot with the 410 Mosquito Squadron, and displayed the courage under fire that won him the Distinguished Flying Cross.

He was a strong man, born to good health and an active family. Yet he displayed throughout his life a sensitivity, a compassion toward those in need. No Member of this House, and few citizens of this country, did more to assist the disabled and the handicapped than Walter Dinsdale. In Parliament, in the United Nations, in literally thousands of meetings and conversations across the country and around the world, this strong man, born to good fortune, worked to help and to encourage the disabled. It is relatively easy to espouse principles. Walter Dinsdale acted on them, and he brought help and priceless hope to thousands of his fellow humans.

As a Minister in the Diefenbaker Government he brought that same concern for people to his work. The residents of the National Parks remember him as a Minister who reached beyond the bureaucracy to deal directly with their real concerns. In the North, he gave personal face and force to the Conservative Government's commitment to northern development, and it was he who turned the sod to begin construction on the great Pine Point Railway. In Montreal, he chaired the historic Resources for Tomorrow Conference which, apart from its important concrete results, was a model of the way federal and provincial Governments should work together in a federal state.

In addition to his formal responsibilities, Walter Dinsdale, as a Minister, took it upon himself to be the Member of the Government to whom younger people turned. I first met him then, and so did many Members of my caucus and my Party. He was a Minister who saw it as a part of his job to keep the Party and the Government young and open.

His list of accomplishments is long. He founded the National Prayer Breakfast. He was a director of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. He received honours across the country and around the world, and he served his neighbours and his constituency with such care that they elected him 12 times.

He was a steady man, quiet and reserved in his public conduct. But there was a force and a fire in Walter Dinsdale. He showed it in that first by-election when, campaigning in his Salvation Army uniform, he upset a distinguished opponent, later the Lt. Governor of my Province, Grant MacEwan, whom the then government was grooming to be a future Minister of Agriculture. He showed it in his commitment to his faith, his family, his constituency and, most particularly, in his extraordinary care for people in need.

Walter Dinsdale was born in Brandon, a prairie town, a relatively new town in his youth, but he was born to a tradition of service imparted by his parents, and it was a society so new that everyone was equal and every person was worthy of respect. That tradition formed the man of service who was a friend, an adviser, an example to so many of us, and whose death we all mourn today.

I know I speak for all Members of this House in our sincere condolence to Lenore—and to Gunnar, Gregory, Elizabeth, Eric and Rolf. His life was full, and we are thankful for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, all of us in the House are sad at the loss of Walter Dinsdale, particularly in view of the nature of the illness which befell him a short while ago and which brought about his death.

I welcome the tributes which have been paid both by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) when they talked about the kinds of things Walter Dinsdale worked on. He was one who did a great job for all kinds of people, especially children and other who needed his help. He worked for veterans and for others groups. He was recognized in this country and in other parts of the world for the work he did, and it is truly remarkable he did so much work in the 31 years that he was a Member of the House of Commons from the Province of Manitoba.

I confess that a bit of my personal grief concerning the loss caused by his death last week comes from the fact that, when his illness in Brandon resulted in his being brought to hospital here in Ottawa, I immediately found that he was put into the very bed in the very room where I had spent several months. I soon discovered that he was being attended by the same kind of people who worked for me. It was my hope that the kinds of things they could do for him would give him a chance to live a longer and more healthy life. I enjoyed my conversation with him. Of course, as we know, he could hardly do any talking at all, but he seemed to enjoy the efforts that some were making to try to help him and to give him a chance of recovery. Most of us felt that, as a result of the treatment that he was undergoing here in the hospital, he could recover. We are now sorry at the turn of events in the last few days, and we regret his departure.

I join with the Leader of the Opposition in expressing condolences to Walter Dinsdale's wife and five children. If I may add a personal word, not only did he stay in the same hospital as I did, and not only did we both come from Manitoba, but I also had the privilege, as Chancellor of the University in Brandon, of giving degrees of one kind or another to Walter himself, and to three or four of his children. It is a connection which means something to all of us. I am very sorry at his departure, and I speak on behalf of all of us, particularly those from Manitoba and those of us in this Party, in praising him for the work he has done, and we remember him most kindly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, it is an honour to associate myself with the words which have been spoken in memory of our friend and colleague, the late Hon. Walter Dinsdale.

Walter Dinsdale's model for a life of service was his father, who served Brandon as Alderman, Mayor, and Conservative MLA for Brandon. Walter learned the responsibility of service at his father's elbow—a responsibility he carried out faithfully until his death.

• (1415)

Service was the hallmark of the Dinsdale family and is best expressed in the words that Walter so often used in the 12 successful federal elections in Brandon-Souris. Those words were, "Has served, is serving, will serve." His actions of 31 years gave meaning to that motto.

It was Walter who served as a model for those of us who entered this House of Commons from the Province of Manitoba. It was a word of encouragement, it was a helpful hand that was always given.

As one who served in the portfolio of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I constantly met Canadians living "north of 60" who would request information about their friend, Walter. He leaves an indelible imprint on that vast part of our country, an imprint made strong by the vision he shared with the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, of a Canada "From sea to sea, To northern sea".

He threw himself into the cause of the handicapped. The dream of these Canadians to take their rightful place in Canadian society is possibly best expressed in the opening quotation he used in an article which appeared in the The United Nations Association in Canada Bulletin, marking the International Year of the Disabled Person. It was from the Old Testament prophet, Isaiah:

> Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing—

Today, we express our sympathy to Lenore and the children, Gunnar, Gregory, Elizabeth, Eric and Rolf.

While our hearts are saddened, it was Lenore's desire that this be a day of thanksgiving—thanks for a life that was expended for good.

To a group of us on the Hill and across the country, Walter's leadership will best be remembered for his deep, religious faith. He lived his faith daily. It was this faith which led him to start the Prayer Fellowship—a group from all sides of the House and Senate that meet weekly for prayer and fellowship. It was this faith that has encouraged thousands of Canadians to pray for our country and for its leaders.

Walter's reward was not an earthly one but one that had eternal value.

The life we are honouring today is best expressed by the words of his Saviour as recorded in the Gospel of Matthew:

> Well done thou good and faithful servant: Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I too wish to say a few words on this occasion. I think that when we look at an individual we know that every single person in life communicates a message to us. Such was the case with the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). His life communicated a message to many of us.

Within his own family he had to live the experience of having someone who was disabled, and he was able to formulate, through his own life experience, a message and a concern for others.

When I was working with the Society for Crippled Children and Adults in Manitoba, for three years as the supervisor of group programs, Walter was one of the Parliamentarians whom we could quite often turn to when we needed assistance, whether it was technology or machines, to assist those who were disabled.

He was a man who was able to rise above partisan politics. He was a statesman. Reference has been made to his role in the Parliamentary Prayer Breakfast. Many of us appreciated being able to see, beyond what happens in the House here, some of the spiritual depth that individuals such as Walter had. When I came onto the Hill and to the Parliamentary Prayer Breakfast group, Walter was one of the first people to welcome me. Also, he was instrumental in seeing that in western Manitoba we would have a leadership prayer breakfast as well.

He was one who lived his faith and took seriously the admonition that our faith should be accompanied with works, and he was one who practised what the Salvation Army preached. He was deeply involved in making sure that his works backed up his faith.

• (1420)

He will long be remembered. He will be sorely missed by all Manitobans. To his family I offer my sympathy at this time and, has been expressed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), also on behalf of our Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, having spent a great part of my professional life as a surgeon working with the handicapped, I feel that I too must pay tribute to Walter Dinsdale.

Those of us who have been in that field treating the disabled realize the importance of rehabilitation. When the definitive surgical work has been completed and the medical attention has been given, the individual is left to fend for himself in the world. Walter Dinsdale realized the importance of rehabilitating the injured and the sick to face the exigencies of life.

One of his major contributions was to co-ordinate the work of many voluntary organizations across Canada. Very often these organizations duplicate services; they very often fail to cover some aspect of the work. Walter Dinsdale helped to found the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled. He served on its board of directors, and later as chairman of the CRCD technical aid Committee.

In the technical field he was able to harness the advances of electronics to aid those people unable to use their extremities. He set up an information system whereby these technical aids were made available to people with critical disabilities. In my contact with him in the Year of the Disabled, he showed what it was to be compassionate and understanding. He was singularly able to focus the attention of the Committee on the special needs of the disabled.

I respect him for the work he has done with the National Prayer Group, and particularly for the respect he has shown for life, and for his work in the field of championing human rights. I also respect him for his war record during which he scored three victories in the air. He also worked closely with the Polish fighters who contributed so much to the Battle of Britain, and with whom he also associated himself in the years following the war.

I join other Members of the House in paying respect to Walter Dinsdale as a war hero, a humanitarian, and an able parliamentarian. He will be sorrowfully missed.

Tributes to Former Dean of the House

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

[Translation]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, it was said in the House today that our late colleague, Walter Dinsdale, was the Dean of the House of Commons, and I think it is appropriate at this time for me, as the dean of those Members who have had heart surgery, to inform the House that last week I had the privilege of meeting Mr. Dinsdale's family at the hospital where I myself was a patient. I must say that when I got to know Mr. Dinsdale after his heart operation, I realized that he was a great man. Last week, I met his family, and I therefore wish to offer Mrs. Dinsdale and her children our sincere condolences, and make it clear that while the House of Commons has lost an honoured colleague, Canada has lost a great Canadian.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I join all of you in expressing my sorrow at the passing away of the Hon. Walter Dinsdale, and in expressing my deepest-felt sympathy to his wife and his children. May I ask you all to stand and observe a minute of silence in the memory of our colleague.

(Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.)

Madam Speaker: Have we all agreed that the sitting of the House will be suspended until eight o'clock this evening?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): As you have just indicated, Madam Speaker, since many Members wish to attend the memorial service here in Ottawa this afternoon for the late Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), I understand there is the agreement you referred to, and I move:

That the sitting be suspended until eight o'clock p.m. this day at which time the House will proceed to Orders of the Day and that proceedings under Standing Order 40 be suspended.

I am moving this motion in order to specify the order of business this evening.

Madam Speaker: The House agrees to the motion. This House stands suspended until eight o'clock this evening.

At 2.27 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC WORKS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, May 21, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc that Bill C-91, An Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-91 is an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act, and I am appalled at the horrendous power which this Bill seeks to transfer to the Minister of Public Works. For example, in Clause 1(3) we see these words:

The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor-in-Council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to

(a) properties belonging to Canada of which he does not have the management, charge or direction; or

(b) properties not belonging to Canada.

What a colossal fraud this Bill hopes to perpetrate on the people of Canada. The Government is now seeking authority to sell or lease any property, whether or not the Government owns it, whether or not it is required for public purposes. In the past, Mr. Speaker, when the Government wanted to sell or lease public lands required for public purposes, it could obtain the authority to do so through a $1 vote in the Estimates. As a consequence of last June's ruling by Madam Speaker, the Government may no longer follow this route. As such, the Government is now seeking authority in Clause 1(3) of Bill C-91 to sell or lease any property regardless of whether or not it is required for public purposes. My own concern is not so much with lease-backs per se, as with the blanket authority granted in Bill C-91 to sell any lands. While the horror story scenario of selling all the Government's property to foreign investors and then renting it back is unlikely to occur, there remains the need for parliamentary control.

The main objection to having legislative items in the Estimates is that they reduce parliamentary control over the executive. It is almost ironical that, having lost the ability to make specific exemptions through Estimates, the Government must now remove whatever parliamentary control exists in order to allow lease-back arrangements in the future. We are just eroding parliamentary control, and that is why we are in such a disgraceful economic mess in this country today. The complete loss of any control over expenditures is highlighted in the Auditor General's reports year after year.

Now, Section 33 of the Adjustment of Accounts Act, passed in 1980, permits amendments to certain clauses of that Act through an appropriation act. If we are willing to permit the Government to lease or sell lands required for public purposes on an ad hoc basis, we should consider a similar provision for Bill C-91.

To give you an example of why we need proper parliamentary control over federal public works, Mr. Speaker, Petro-

Canada has been paying rent of about $18,000 a day for eight months on a vacant 24-storey office building in the heart of downtown Calgary. If the company agreed to pay only $24 a square foot under the absolute net system, which means the company is likely paying another 20 per cent of the annual rent for utilities, taxes and other expenses, the actual cost of the building is likely to be $6.68 million a year, $556,000 a month, or about $18,000 a day. Meanwhile, one block away, construction crews are working on two other high-rise buildings that will house Petro-Canada offices. The smaller tower will be 32 storeys, the adjacent tower will be 54 storeys when completed, and it will be the tallest building in Calgary. While the national oil company has been busy erecting Petro-Canada signs on newly acquired service stations in eastern Canada, no sign marks the high-rise building on the corner of Centre Street and Sixth Avenue South-West. Petro-Canada signed a 20 year lease on the property more than a year ago and has been paying rent on the empty building since April. That, Mr. Speaker, points out why we need parliamentary control and why we should not leave it in the Minister's hands.

Petro-Canada also rents more than a dozen other premises in Calgary for offices, research facilities and laboratories, including nine floors at its head office location, known locally as Red Square. Of course, this highlights why we do not have cheap gas today, because we are renting empty office space and building more and more buildings for Petro-Canada. Surely the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, with over 300 branches, divisions and agencies, and some 4,000 employees—the Department occupies 11 pages in the Government telephone directory—could handle much of the work currently being done by the 2,000 employees of Petro-Canada. We have approximately 6,000 civil servants in the oil and energy business, and we wonder what they are all doing. Also, we have 700 oil companies operating in Canada. So we have mass duplication here, and I have a list of all the different departments in Energy, Mines and Resources; surely to goodness they could be handling a lot of the work that Petro-Canada is doing without building skyscrapers and renting empty office space.

To give you other examples of the horror stories in Public Works, there is the cost over-run at the Place du Portage. The four phases of the Place du Portage office complex in Hull were estimated in the early 1970s to have cost $124.5 million. By the time of completion in March, 1979, costs had risen to $217.5 million; $93 million or 75 per cent over the original budget. That is why we need some control in these Chambers, Mr. Speaker, and should not leave it in the hands of an irresponsible Liberal Cabinet Minister.

There was a cost over-run at the C.D. Howe Building. Treasury Board approved the construction of that building in Ottawa at an estimated cost of $57 million. It was completed in 1978. Instead of paying the full purchase price immediately, the Government is making payments of $6.1 million per year to the developer for 35 years. Land and construction costs paid directly by the Government were estimated at $102 million. Based on its original estimates, if the Department itself had let construction contracts, the building would have cost approximately $90 million on a present value basis, or $12 million less than the alternative selected. The total estimated cost of the building as shown in the estimates was $34 million, while the capital cost calculated on a present value basis was $102 million. The difference between the approved $57 million and the final $102 million capital cost is $45 million.

Another example is the cost over-run at the Montreal major postal plant. Treasury Board approved the construction by Public Works of a major postal facility in Montreal similar to Toronto's Gateway. The original projection of the final cost was $212.1 million. On completion in June, 1979 the final cost was $273.6 million, a cost over-run of $61.5 million, or 29 per cent. On and on it goes, a clear indication that there is no proper supervision or control over anything in Public Works, Mr. Speaker.

Another example is cited in the 1977-78 Report of the Auditor General which pointed out that the Department of Public Works, which leases expropriated buildings in Ottawa, was not billing tenants for their share of increasing operating and maintenance costs even though such escalation clauses are contained in the leases. It subsequently billed tenants $267,000 for 1966 and 1977 but had to write off 1975. That is one of the best examples of blatant mismanagement and, probably, of porkbarreling.

Another example was cited in an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on July 16, 1980, headed "Grit Restaurant Shortchanges Taxpayers $500,000", and which had this to say:

> In 1973, an untendered contract was awarded to business associates of Cabinet Minister John Munro to supply liquor and food in the Place du Portage for a period of twenty years. They were evicted by the Department of Public Works in 1980 after they failed to make rental payments totalling $490,543 for their three commercial operations in the building.

The Senate has spent a lot of time examining the activities of the Department of Public Works and has pointed out that the Government "took a bath" on an office deal. An article by Don Sellar of Southam News Services on September 28, 1978 began as follows:

> The federal government took a bad beating on four lease-purchase deals it negotiated for offices in Ottawa-Hull, a Senate committee charged today.
> In a searing report, the Senate Committee on National Finance said the transactions were so "questionable" they have damaged the public works department's management credibility.

If the Department does not have management credibility, Mr. Speaker, then we should not pass bills like the one we are debating tonight. The article continued as follows:

> " . . . These agreements," the Liberal-dominated committee declared, "have committed public works to paying rates for this space well beyond the prevailing private sector level."
> The senators found that in June, 1977, the market rate for newly-built offices in Ottawa was between $1 and $4 per square foot less than the government paid for its new accommodations.
> The committee conceded Ottawa was short of building funds and badly squeezed for office space when it made the "understandable" decision in 1974 to adopt a lease-purchase policy for some public buildings.

The Senate Committee also pointed out that the Government should pay for the cost of accommodation and other services provided by the Department of Public Works. It suggested that if its recommendations were followed, this would lead to the construction of less-costly buildings by the federal Government to accommodate its departments. If the Minister had to come before the House or before the Standing Committee, then there would be more scrutiny of the operations of his Department.

I have revealed the monstrous blunder by the Department of Public Works which occurred in Winnipeg a few years ago when the new Tax Data Centre was established there. Rather than accelerating plans for the construction of a new building for the Tax Data Centre at an estimated cost of $15 million, the Department planned to lease the CAE building for three years but also planned to spend an additional $1,700,000 in renovating it. It was estimated that there would be an additional cost of from $4 to $5 million incurred by the Government in not locating in a new leased building, but rather moving into temporary rented quarters.

When the Bill was introduced last May, a colleague from Ontario introduced an amendment which we hope will be adopted by the Committee. It reads as follows:

1. Section 9—That clause 1 of Bill C-91 be amended by striking out line 15 on page 1 and substituting the following.

(4) No service or work may be performed in relation to properties not belonging to Canada without the consent of the owner thereof."

2. Section 39—line 27 page 1

That clause 2 of Bill C-91 be amended by adding to line 27 page 1 the following words..

"and be referred to the Committee on Public Works."

3. Section 4(1)(a)

That Bill C-91 be amended by adding to line 8 page 2 the following words . . .

"that it be referred to Committee of Public Works

That means it is not to be administered by the Minister of Public Works or any of these mischevious Orders in Council, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Government will accept those amendments when we reach Committee. We cannot continue with these horror stories and blunders that are occurring in the Department today.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my colleague from Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has outlined the main provisions of Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. I want to deal specifically with a very dangerous provision in the Bill which essentially grants to the federal Government, and to the incumbent Minister of Public Works in particular, the right to erect or construct any federal structure they may choose, on privately-owned land. This is a very dangerous predecent.

It is bad enough that in this country the Government refused to allow a provision to be included in the Constitution of Canada which would have guaranteed the right of all Canadians to own and enjoy property. Now we are being told that even if we do own and enjoy property, it may be only an illusory thing because the Government can have an airport, a bridge, a PetroCan station, a waterfront port facility or anything else, erected on privately-owned land if the Bill remains in its present open-ended form.

There is an old saying that possession is nine-tenths of the law, Mr. Speaker. I submit that what we have before us tonight is the other one-tenth of the law. It does not seem to matter to the architects of this legislation whether or not Canadians, individually, own property. The Government can move in and do anything it pleases with it. Clause 1 of the Bill provides as follows:

"(3) The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to

(a) properties belonging to Canada of which he does not have the management, charge or direction; or

The implications of that are pretty broad, Mr. Speaker. The Clause says quite clearly, without any qualification, that the Government and the Minister of Public Works may decide that certain private property stands in the way of an important federal project and that a road or a building or pilings should be erected on it. That is a dangerous precedent, Mr. Speaker. I can assure Hon. Members opposite that this Party will have no difficulty in voting against the legislation if a substantial amendment is made to that Clause.

When the former Minister of Public Works introduced the legislation on May 21, the last time it appeared before the House, he said that Members should not worry about Clause 1(3)(b) which provided that the Minister might build structures on privately-held property because, as is reported at page 17696 of Hansard, he said:

It goes without saying, of course, that such work would have to be with the consent of persons involved.

"It goes without saying", the Minister has told us, that such work would have to be with the consent of the persons involved. If it goes without saying, then why is it so difficult to put it in the legislation? Why could the legislation not be amended to make it quite clear that under no circumstances would the Government of Canada intrude upon privately-held property and proceed to design and erect some major federal structure, unless the permission of the owner was granted?

• (2020)

Getting back to the problem we had a year and a half ago when this Party tried to introduce an amendment to the Constitution of Canada, which would have respected the right of all Canadians to that very important right, to own and enjoy property, one has to wonder now where this country is headed. Not only did Government Members, with the support of their friends in the New Democratic Party, deny the opportunity to have that provision inserted in the Constitution—which was clearly incorporated in the Canadian Bill of Rights—but now the Government wants to have the power to bring in bulldozers to knock down my home and knock down my colleague's motel or business and build whatever it wishes.

I want to illustrate with a few situations from within my own riding the extent to which this Government has frustrated the due process of law, even with the provision of expropriation powers. It is frightening enough to realize how mistreated Canadians have been, particularly with regard to airport developments in many parts of this country, with due process being provided for expropriation, but what do we see? Now we see legislation which says that it does not matter any more because the Government does not even have to take title to your property by expropriation, purchase or any other means; it can just move in and do as it wishes.

I wonder why the Government was afraid to incorporate one of the basic fundamental rights of a free democratic society in the Constitution of Canada, the right of the individual, as stated in the Canadian Bill of Rights, to enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof, except—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) permit a question?

Mr. Siddon: At the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I think there is a degree of sensitivity on my left to this issue. While some people like to pay lip service to the important freedoms we are privileged to enjoy in this country, the freedoms that brought our ancestors and own pioneers to Canada to take a piece of land and put some pride into developing and producing something of value out of that asset and then getting a piece of paper to say that land was theirs, there is a tremendous anxiety on the part of the NDP with respect to their concept of private ownership. The NDP will tell us, as the Hon. Member for Burnaby would probably like to say, that it was the provinces that made it difficult for the federal Government to incorporate the right to own and enjoy property in our Canadian Constitution. I say balderdash to that, Mr. Speaker. There is a notwithstanding provision clearly written into the Canadian Bill of Rights, although under Section 92 of the British North America Act, provinces have the right to deed and administer the ownership of land. That does not prevent the provision of a legal means of expropriation when it is deemed to be in the public interest that certain lands be acquired for public purposes. They cannot have that kind of simple way out. The remedy could clearly have been introduced into the legislation were it not for the fact that—if we recall what happened a year ago last April—the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), on a Friday, accepted the Progressive Conservative amendment to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which would have provided all Canadians with the right to own and enjoy property. Over the weekend somehow the illustrious Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) got to the then minister of justice, who on Monday morning said, "no deal". Somehow the Leader of the NDP then got together with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the then minister of justice. They decided that Canadians should not be entitled to the right to ownership and enjoyment of property even with a notwithstanding provision because it is repugnant to their concept of state ownership. That is why there is only one Party in this House—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My name has been used by the Hon. Member. He made a series of allegations concerning the time when I was minister of justice which are not based on the truth. He would like to say exactly what happened. He would like the House to know that it was very evident at that time that the provincial Governments did not want that provision. In the negotiations I had, the problems were left with the Hon. Member on the left over there. Then, for example, the Premier of Prince Edward Island and the Ministers of the other Provinces, of course, including the Minister from Saskatchewan, because they were afraid to put it in the Constitution—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the Minister, I must give the floor to the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I have not only struck a sensitive spot with Members of my left, but also with the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien).

Some Hon. Members: He is on your left, too.

Mr. Siddon: The former minister of justice prides himself on having been a very capable negotiator and, to my knowledge, he is deemed to be a reasonably good lawyer. Therefore, I cannot for the life of me understand how it is that he did not sit down with the Premiers to work out an arrangement whereby it could be ensured that people could not stand in the way of important progress that was beneficial to the whole of the community. The Hon. Minister could have worked out appropriate legal means of doing that because the whole concept of expropriation is provided for in the various municipal Acts of the Provinces of Canada as delegated to those Municipalities by the provincial Governments in light of their responsibilities as set out in Section 92 of the British North America Act.

One wonders why it is that if it is not the ultimate objective of the Government to take away the right to own property, the Government would not agree to amend this legislation along the lines I suggested a little earlier, as was reflected by the former minister of public works when he introduced the Bill requiring consent of the owner before the federal Government moves in with its bulldozers and construction equipment. Why would Clause 1, Sub-Clause 3(b) not be amended to provide that only if the consent of the owners was gained could such activity be carried on on private property. I for one cannot agree to support this legislation until such an amendment is allowed.

One of the features that is so very dangerous about this legislation is that it could well be used as a bludgeon to get people to sell property to the federal Government without it going the route of expropriation, as presently provided for in the law. Bill C-91, if it is adopted, will enable a federal land agent to come to a private person and say, "We are building a new bridge abutting on or overpassing your property. We really do not want to go through that messy expropriation procedure. We propose to offer you 75 cents on the dollar",—which is usually the way privately held land is evaluated—"We will not offer you what its trading value is on the real estate market, but we will offer you 75 cents on the dollar. Take it or leave it. If you do not take it, we can wave this little piece of legislation in your face that says it does not matter whether you want to accept our offer or not because we will build whatever we want without your consent." This legislation would make that possible.

I think the implications here are very dangerous because they would lead to a subversion of the entire process of expropriation.

I want to spend a few moments, if I might, talking about just how corrupted that process of expropriation has become with regard to certain kinds of public works development over the years in this country. I will give specific reference to the expropriation of lands at Sea Island on the Lower Mainland of British Columbia. These were privately held lands which were expropriated for the purpose of expanding runways and building a larger airport. This subject will sound familiar. I am pleased to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is in the House this evening. He knows that similar types of abuses of the private right to ownership and enjoyment of property have occurred with respect to the acquisition of properties around the Pickering Airport. That is an airport that never came to pass because it was ill-conceived from the beginning. Another example is Mirabel, which was ultimately built but has proven to be a tremendously costly burden to all Canadians.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is called a white elephant.

Mr. Siddon: It has become so trite these days to refer to it as the white elephant. The Government has recognized the mess that it has created to such an extent that it is now contemplating the possibility—with a lot of pressure from this side—of returning much of that important agricultural land to the people who originally owned it.

There are several hundred acres on Sea Island in British Columbia which have been assembled since 1954 for the purposes of airport expansion. One of the groups which first became involved in assembling this land was connected with a well known former Cabinet minister in the House, Senator Arthur Laing, who had owned large tracts of land on Sea Island. He and certain other parties on that island were able to sell their land to a firm called Web and Nap at approximately $5,000 an acre, whereas certain other property owners who were not highly favoured by the Government, perhaps because they subscribed to a different political philosophy or perhaps because of family connections in support of a different political Party, had their property expropriated and were offered $1,700 an acre for some 46 acres of land. That offer, which was made after the first expropriation notice was served in 1954, still stands. To this day, the matter involving that particular family has never been resolved. They were offered $70,000 for 46 acres of prime farm land in the Lower Fraser Valley, and not one nickel was offered for buildings with the exception of one house for which $28,000 was offered, later increased to $40,000.

This particular family has refused to move. It has refused to accept $1,700 an acre since 1954. They were not particularly opposed to an airport development but rather to the fact that the property was being acquired in order to give it to de Havilland Aircraft of Canada. This is the type of tricky dealings that some people associated with the Party opposite were involved in many years ago. I trust this has not happened in more recent times.

In fact, de Havilland had 100 acres on Sea Island at the very spot where the new runway was proposed to be built but which has not been built to this date. The Department of Transport wanted that 100 acres for the runway and it arranged to expropriate privately held farmland from this particular family, which I gather happened to be of the wrong political stripe. They were offered one-third as much as that offered the other well connected family of Senator Laing. Something is rather corrupt when a family can be faced with expropriation proceedings for a period of almost 30 years without having the matter settled.

As a matter of fact, it has been 18 months since the most recent appeal, and a decision has not yet been brought down.

The point I am making is that the rights of people in this country are being abused today, even with the legal and due process being provided for within the law. The Bill before us tonight would strip away that need to follow that due process of law.

Another matter dealing with this particular family involves the construction of a bridge which connected south Vancouver to Sea Island to link with the new airport terminal. That bridge is called the Arthur Lang bridge. It flies virtually over the top of this family's property. In fact, it missed the actual boundary by one foot. When this bridge was being constructed the aggrieved party was trying to operate a store directly beneath the new overpass that was being built. The federal Government of this country never settled for the loss of goodwill and the loss of business to that store. It never settled for the dust, noise and aggravation which was caused from 1971 to 1973 when that bridge was being constructed.

This Government makes a mockery of the right to freedom of choice and the right to live our lives without the great hand of Government bearing down upon us. We hear much from the Government about our free country but it does not reflect its attitude in the way it conducts its affairs. Even with the due process of law which is provided, people's property can be tied up, frozen, zoned down and developed without their permission merely by the execution of an extradition order. The Government can keep the poor, ordinary free Canadian frustrated for as long as 28 years.

I realize that it is not appropriate to comment directly in this Chamber on the court system, but one gets the impression that the system can be used in order to wait until someone dies so that the Government can then have its way. That is a travesty of democracy.

This Bill is a provision to allow the Government to move on to anyone's property and construct anything it wishes without having to get the consent of the owner. What we are witnessing is a move toward a system of Government which believes in the control of land and advocates the control and manipulation of the media, as we have seen in its attempts to implement the provisions of the Kent Commission Report. We see a Government which clearly advocates control of the means of production in this country. For example, we have heard talks about the nationalization of INCO. Clearly, the Government has taken great steps to nationalize the oil industry of Canada. Before too long it will be in the tractor business as well. The Government, through its attempts to bail out certain sectors of the mining and automotive industry, is moving toward more control.

I am pleased that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is in the House tonight because the greatest concern of those who value their rights in a free society is when the Government attempts to control the food supply. There is a piece of legislation before the House which will rapidly move us in the direction of federal domination of the buying and selling of grains, livestock, and agricultural and poultry products. That is very dangerous indeed.

1292;-1 I believe that it is improper and unacceptable for land agents to coerce people by showing them this piece of legislation and saying, "If you do not sell us this land we will not expropriate, we will just move in. If you do not want to sell at our price, then you do not have a right to be heard in this country."

I suggest that there is a conflict of interest involved when agents from the Department of Public Works moved to acquire properties which they want for public purposes, because they can make the appraisals as well as serve the notices. They are acting both as agent of the proponent of the acquisition and the appraisers. That represents a tremendous conflict of interest.

Another puzzling measure is the second important provision of this Bill, which is the amendment under Clause 2 to the Public Works Act and a subsequent amendment to the Public Lands Grants Act which eliminates the requirement to show that properties are being held by the Crown because of their public need. This Bill, Bill C-91, proposes to dispense with a requirement which has been a tradition in our parliamentary and legislative framework. Traditionally, in order to dispose of Crown-owned property, the Government would normally have to come before a parliamentary committee, or follow the due process if that property was deemed to have been acquired for some public purpose. This Bill proposes to dispense with the requirement that properties that are up for disposition not be required for public purposes. That opens the door to a horrendous scale of abuses, where the Government could sell property to some well-connected friend. I noticed that the former minister of public works when he introduced this legislation spoke much about his friends in the real estate business and about what a great business that was. I think we know some people in the real estate business who have done very well because of their friendship with the Government opposite. A former minister, who has now taken his seat, made it quite evident that he enjoyed working with the real estate industry. It makes one wonder why, if a piece of property owned by the Crown is needed for some public purpose, the Crown would then want to lease it to someone else unless there was some friendship or implied favour in return.

Mr. Cosgrove: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Hon. Member, speaking in reference to myself and acquaintances, would include the former President of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Matthews, who headed the study on housing for the former government of the Right Joseph Clark.

Mr. Harquail: He has named everybody else.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would like to remind the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) that the usual reference to Hon. Members of the House is by constituency or function.

Mr. Siddon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not name the specific gentleman referred to by the former Minister, but I did not name Robert Campeau, principals of the Power Corporation and a number of other real estate companies in this country which have done fairly well because of their relationship with certain individuals in the Government. However, that is not my point. The point I am making is that if properties are owned by the federal Government, and they are deemed to be required for public purposes, then it makes no sense to allow the Government to dispose of those properties on a lease-back basis to some people when there is no absolute and clear-cut provision that such disposition should be done through the normal public process of tendering or auction. This legislation makes it quite clear, if these amendments are accepted, that properties required for public purposes may be disposed of, not necessarily at auction or by public tender but, rather, when authorized by the Governor in Council, without regard for public posting. Perhaps we are striking a few sore spots here tonight, but it makes one wonder why the Government would want to introduce important amendments to the Public Works Act and the Public Land Grants Act which would essentially strip Canadians of all the privileges and rights of private ownership and property. Second, it would leave the door wide open to corruption, abuse and favouritism if properties which were acquired or have always been retained by the Government because they were deemed to be in the public interest were then handed over to some friends so that they could build some nice, big Government buildings, lease the offices back for 99 years, and earn a pretty substantial profit over all those years because those friends happen to have the right connections. I say that it is shameful.

I submit that the Government must bring in amendments and restore a sense of decency, that it must get on with respecting the expropriation processes that are presently established, and that its land agents must not coerce people to sell their properties while these agents are entrusted with carrying out the evaluations of those properties. Certainly, we must not pass a piece of legislation which would allow a land agent to say to a private citizen, "Well, do not worry about the Government expropriating your property because we do not have to do this any more".

I think it is important that the Bill be rejected, and that Hon. Members of this House do something of a constructive nature by way of amendments to ensure that the Government is allowed to develop on property it does not own only with the expressed permission of the owner, and that would solve many of the problems.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to participate in the debate on second reading of Bill C-91, I would first like to make a brief reference to a remark of the Hon. Member who last spoke, one to which I took exception. I can certainly also state for the record that I disagree with about 99.9 per cent of what he had to say. I was disturbed when he made reference to the late Arthur Laing. I did not think that that was very becoming or that it enhanced the procedures followed by the House. We often talk about not naming people who are not present in the House to defend themselves, but when someone raises the name of a former member of the Cabinet who is deceased, I find that is just a little bit low.

I do not want to go much further in my own remarks this evening without making a brief reference to the loss of a very dear colleague. The House adjourned for his funeral this afternoon, which I attended. He was a very special individual, and was the dean of the House. Certainly, his actions and his way of going about his daily life provided an example for all of us to follow. I say this on behalf of Hon. Members on all sides of the House. That is all I will say on this subject word because the eulogies were most eloquent and adequate. I did not feel it would be proper for me to make a speech today, which is a special day, his day, without making some reference to this great Canadian.

As I look at the changes made by the Bill and examin closely its raison d'être, I am fully convinced that those changes, however minor, are important to the well-being of the relationship between the Department of Public Works, other levels of Government and the private sector. That well-being will, of course, benefit the population and country as a whole. The complexities of present-day realty operations are such that every economy of management, every flexibility in operations and every element which leads to understanding and co-operation also leads to savings of time and money. At the same time, they lead to a product which is consistent with the environment of the area in question.

The amendments which are being debated, while minor in nature, are major in erasing any ambiguity from the Act which will hinder the Department of Public Works from reaching a proper potential in dealing with other agencies and the private sector. Public Works has had more than a century of experience in many fields of responsible endeavour. This is very apparent in the Atlantic Provinces. When one considers the results of federal initiatives, federal co-operation with other levels of Government and federal co-operation with the private sector, it becomes very evident.

The vast scope of the work being carried out in the Atlantic Provinces is brought home when the projects are examined more closely. Dredging of harbours, construction of federal buildings and post offices, renovation or renewal of heritage and older buildings and construction of security institutions all have a tremendous impact on the region, both economically and in the creation of physical assets. This is certainly true in my own riding in northern New Brunswick where we have deep water ports and have need of this flexibility I was mentioning earlier in moving these projects forward, not only because of the necessity for these projects, but also, indeed, because of the much-needed employment opportunities which they create.

Co-operation with other agencies and other levels of Government is highly visible in my own home Province of New Brunswick. Their successes bear out my contention that the amendment to Section 9 of the Public Works Act should be supported. This amendment, of course, gives clear authority to the Department of Public Works to contribute to work on non-federal property for the over-all benefit of the community. It has always been implied that the Department has authority to make such contributions to achieve worth-while objectives. As an example, I use the building of a seawall, a retainer wall in Saint John, New Brunswick. This city is one of the oldest in our great country and, as in many of our older cities, the core had become run down and was in very poor condition. Planning was carried out for the revitalization of this area which would contain a marketplace, a hotel, a trade and industrial centre, a regional library, retail space and a very large parking structuring centre. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation acted as the chief agent of the federal Government for this project. Public Works acted as the technical adviser to CMHC and other Government Departments and agencies involved.

Much of the success of the plan hinged on the construction of this seawall which would prevent further decay and erosion of the seafront and thus make viable the whole project. Part of the land upon which the wall was to be built was the property of the National Harbours Board. Another part was owned by the city of Saint John. Major elements of the wall were to be built on land which was acquired and cleared over the past decade by a federal-provincial-municipal partnership. This was a prime example of what can be achieved by this type of co-operation.

Here we have three levels of Government working in harmony toward a common goal. This was done, and the city of Saint John was paid a grant by Public Works. The city became the construction agent for the project. Public Works' participation in this highly successful project provided 300 person-years of employment in an area that desperately needed this help and work. Public Works portion of the cost was $5.4 million, with the total cost, excluding that grant, being $64 million. The federal share was listed in the Supplementary Estimates as contributions to a capital project.

Another valuable project that falls into the same category was in the northern area of New Brunswick in the City of Bathurst, where the federal Government, through Public Works, constructed a building for the Department of Employment and Immigration. Construction of this building was carried out over a period of three years and was completed at a cost of $25 million, and was a great benefit to the area that falls within that northern sector. I was quite pleased to see the success of this project as it provides a tremendous job opportunity to many of the citizens residing in my constituency of Restigouche.

The town planners felt that it would be of great value to the citizens of the area as well as to the merchants if a covered access could be built which would link the federal building located on the adjacent street to the main business thoroughfare and to a shopping mall. In an excellent example of Public Works dealing with another level of Government and the private sector, the planning for the covered walkway was completed.

A grant of $300,000 was made to the city, and the city became the prime contractor. The shopping mall developer assumed responsibility for another $75,000 of the cost. I submit that this is another example of the need to make more explicit the manner in which Public Works can deal with "properties not belonging to Canada."

We have heard today several speakers who have dealt with the realty function of lease/purchase and the clarification of Section 39 of the Public Works Act and Section 4(1A) of the Public Lands Grants Act which would enable Public Works to carry out this modern method of providing accommodation.

One of the facets of contemporary realty life is a technique called lease/purchase. We have heard several examples of the use of this highly regarded realty tool, but I would like to go over a few of the points once again and then give an example of its usage.

Lease/purchase in the care of Public Works is a method whereby the Crown grants a piece of land or realty to a developer on a long term lease basis. The developer, at the same time, undertakes to provide a finished building on the site which would be leased back to the Crown at a tendered yearly rent. At the end of the lease the land and building revert to the Crown.

In a period of capital restraint it is a particularly attractive method of supplying needed accommodation. Not only is it attractive from the financial point of view in that the capital costs become the responsibility of the developer, but there are many other spin-offs that are worth repeating.

It guarantees a building suitable to the needs of the tenant. At the same time it guarantees a tenant to the developer. As the developer is in the private sector, it enhances the relationship between the public and private sector; an interchange that is much to be desired. It enables the private sector to take part in large-scale, long-term projects, adding to its initiatives for further developing. At a time when the federal Government may not engage capital funds, it creates and maintains employment in the areas where these forms of projects are undertaken. This tends to stabilize and to add to the local and regional economy. I can vouch once again that that is true in the projects that I have referred to with respect to the Province of New Brunswick.

It gives confidence in a society to see Government and the private citizen working together. This form of business arrangment also gives private individuals value for their tax-dollars. I believe that is most important—value for tax-dollars.

I would like to refer to an example of this form of melding and fusing of the Government's accommodation goals and the private sector's production. One example that is very good is that of the Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald Building in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

This building is to be the headquarters of the Department of Veterans Affairs. It will accommodate not only the Department's headquarters, but the War Veterans Allowance Board, The Canadian Pension Commission, The Bureau of Pension Advocates and the Pension Review Board.

This building is of the utmost importance to Prince Edward Island as a major element of the Island's construction program and will accommodate all the important jobs that will be created there at the same time. The building is one of a very limited number of projects of such magnitude in that Province in the foreseeable future. Once again, in reference to my remarks at the beginning of my speech, we would want also to remind the House of our very good friend and colleague, the former minister of veterans affairs, the Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald. Everyone has agreed to the naming of that building in his memory.

When it was decided to build this headquarters, different methods of supplying accommodation were considered. After a great deal of very close and in-depth study the lease purchase method was deemed best for all concerned, that is, Public Works, Veterans Affairs, local and regional residents, so as to bring the building on line in the shortest time, at the best price. It was then decided that Public Works would build the foundation and the superstructure and would lease this part of the construction to a developer, who would in turn complete the building; and who would then be responsible for the management and administration of the building. The superstructure has now been completed by a construction company from the region.

The building will be seen and recognized as the federal presence in Charlottetown. This recognition will be visually expressed by an integration into its surroundings which will give the feeling of belonging to the community and being a part of it. There was the challenge of fitting a building of about 15,000 square metres on a restricted site, while ensuring that it appeared to belong there. The building could not dominate nor be dominated by adjacent and neighbouring buildings. One facet was to be a memorial in concept, while the other facet was to be commercial. The building design reflects these concerns, and it will appear comfortable in its setting and consistent with the existing but contrasting environment.

I am extremely proud of the way in which the project is being carried out. With all of that, it also allows the Government to occupy the building at a reasonable price and to maintain the federal presence. It is an excellent example of building Canada together.

What Public Works has done to this date is to provide from 100 to 150 person-years of employment, while the second phase, costing approximately $14 million, will create another 400 plus person-years of employment. I am quite safe in saying that every Canadian supports and applauds this type of job-creation effort.

I foresee many projects such as this one in Charlottetown being brought onstream or, perhaps I should say, being made possible by this form of business arrangement. These are some of the direct, positive benefits that will accrue from the amendments in Bill C-91.

From the examples I have given, it is easy to see why I favour the amendment as presented in Bill C-91. I firmly believe that the phrase "not required for public purpose" has become a hindrance in the light of contemporary business practices and should be removed from the two Acts mentioned in the Bill.

I am certain that the amendments reflect the new dimensions and fiscal realities and challenges of our modern-day business world. Real estate development, and indeed the whole realty field, is dynamic, and I believe wholeheartedly that, in the interest of proper accommodation planning, Public Works will benefit by these changes.

Under its present Act, Public Works has accomplished a great deal and added immeasurably to the well-being of our country. No one can dispute that fact. It is appreciated that, given proper direction and authority by the changes in the Act as outlined in today's Bill, the Department will also be able to contribute greatly to the socio-economic development of our country at all levels.

In conclusion, I want to acknowledge the work of the former minister of public works, who is in the Chamber this evening. I also want to take this opportunity, as it is my first such opportunity in public, to congratulate my colleague from my Province, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc). I wish him well and I wish him great success in the responsibilities he has both as Minister of Public Works and Minister responsible for Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation.

In light of all that I have said, I would call upon all Members to give their approval to the amendments in Bill C-91.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to discuss the proposed amendments to the Public Works Act and to the Public Lands Grants Act. The main thrust of my remarks will deal with the increasing encroachment into the private sector by the long and hungry arm of Government, and with the continuing efforts of the few to take power from the many.

Bill C-91, when viewed critically, is just another Canagrex, another National Energy Program, even another War Measures Act. In other words, there are clauses in this Bill which give Government powers it should not have. It is also evident from the amendments this Bill proposes that once again the elected representatives of this country are losing their grip on the reins of power. Let me expand on these points.

The Minister opened his remarks on May 21 of this year by stating that the amendments which he proposes are simply housekeeping measures and that they relate more to parliamentary procedures than to the actual policies and practices of the Department.

What the former Minister has openly admitted then, and it has been duly recorded in the pages of Hansard for the eyes of posterity, is that his Department has been indulging in practices for which there has been no legislative authority, and that he has been putting the cart before the horse, for who knows how long. Bill C-91, as we in the Opposition have suspected, is just putting into writing what is already happening out in the field. I condemn such a practice. I resent being told that measures which we are debating in this House are already implemented and that we are acting as little tin soldiers applying our rubber stamps to the policies of the Public Works Department.

This is just another blatant example of the continuing decline of Parliament in recent times. It is evident to all but the most insensitive among us that the power of Parliament has been usurped and denigrated by the Liberal Government. Not only is the major decision-making no longer in the hands of those who have been chosen by the people, but our role has been reduced to yes men, or should I say yes Members who are gathered together to pronounce the benediction on pieces of legislation which are sneaked in the back door, sheepishly asking for permission to do things which are already being done.

When the Minister states publicly that the amendments "provide a general authority in a statutory way for departmental procedures which have been in use by the Department from time to time over recent years", I feel a little chill run down my spine.

What measures has the Department of Public Works been taking in respect of which he now guiltily admits he has no statutory authority? That documentation somehow has not found its way on to my desk. Perhaps the Minister should explain to this House how these procedures were carried out. When he says in Hansard of May 21 that "they were formerly executed under the authority of individual vote word changes as each case arose", I want to know what these cases were and how they were dealt with.

I allude now to the first amendment of Bill C-91 which will permit the Department of Public Works to perform work for other Government agencies, including those which have statutory management of their own properties. I could see this as being a logical change to bring about in current legislation were it evident that Public Works was an efficient and tightly run organization, capable of managing in an acceptable way the property of others. However, in the light of current statistics related to the administration of the Department of Public Works, it would appear that they are barely able to take care of their own show let alone tell others how to run theirs.

Take, for example, the cost overrun at Place du Portage. The four phases of the Place du Portage office complex in Hull were estimated in the early 1970s to cost $124.5 million. By the time of completion, in March 1979, the costs had risen to $217.5 million, or 75 per cent over the original budget. I take it the Minister wants to transfer this efficiency to Canada Post Corporation. At this rate, if Public Works manages the real estate belonging to Canada Post, a stamp will cost $2 by 1990.

In a memo circulated on October 21, 1982, the Public Works Commission stated several urgent reasons for the immediate passage of Bill C-91. I am glad that the Government considers the amendments to the Public Works Act to be an urgent issue. With unimportant problems such as unemployment and a dragging economy lurking in the background, it is crucial that we draft legislation allowing Public Works to manage the affairs of the Post Office. Although I was being intentionally facetious in the last statement, I am very serious when I state to our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he needs to get his priorities straight. We have a country which is confronted with major problems. This winter there may have to be soup kitchens opening in the major cities just to keep men from starving. Mortgages are being foreclosed. Old age pensioners are barely making ends meet and are being told by the Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that this Government just cannot afford to pay them an extra $25 a month. And the party in power is about to give carte blanche to the Public Works Commission, with its undeniably extravagant administrative philosophy, to manage the real estate of the Post Office and other such enterprises.

I sympathize deeply with Canada Post, which, as mentioned in the memo of October 21, is currently fully occupied with upgrading postal delivery. I have no argument with Canada Post endeavouring to improve its delivery record, but to say that it is "fully occupied" at improving its efficiency borders on the ridiculous. Ask the man on the street about that. Most ridiculous of all, however, is to make such a statement as grounds for allowing Public Works to continue its empire building.

Quoting from the same memo I mentioned previously, Canada Post—:

—is currently fully occupied with upgrading postal delivery, and it would place a major burden on it to assume the management of its 2,000 buildings and 800 leases at this time. Moreover, this would be totally unnecessary since Public Works, as the long-time manager of these properties, already has in place realty management capability and organization.

We in the Opposition question the validity of any statement insinuating that there exists "management capability and organization" in Public Works, given the abysmal track record of that Department. Perhaps if they continue to manage the Canada Post real estate, they will rent out some post offices at $4,000 a month so they can recupe some of the money which is currently being squandered on that apartment in Vancouver for the Commissioner General of Transpo '86.

The second amendment contained in Bill C-91 will permit the Department to perform work on all properties adjacent to properties which are the subject of attention by the Department and other ministries of the Government of Canada. This, of course, is with the due approval of the Governor in Council. I would like to make two comments on this amendment: first, the terms of this Clause are too general. What does the word "work" mean? Does it mean bulldozing houses, building fences, stripping topsoil, constructing unwanted buildings? I think it is just an expression meaning, "we'll come in and do what we please with your property in order to facilitate access to Government land, and this could include paving your fields and building an overpass beside your barn." There is an old fashioned word, "expropriation" which seems to sum up the philosophy of this amendment.

Secondly, if the approval for such measures need only come from the Governor in Council, then we are simply nailing another spike in the coffin of parliamentary democracy and its notions of accountability to the people. Implementing the policies mentioned in these amendments will surely involve expenditures of gigantic sums of money, if past activities of the Department are any harbinger of future spending sprees.

The point I want to emphasize is that the Department of Public Works must be held accountable to Parliament for every dime it spends. I regret to state to this House that even now this is no longer the case. Taxpayers' dollars are not now being spent with due regard to the labour involved in earning them. It is always mildly amusing, although somewhat disheartening as well, to watch the internal revenue service pursue the tax evader to the ends of the earth while the Public Works Department and its army of free-spending bureaucrats continue to shell out huge sums of money to dubious causes.

We rarely stop to consider the great sacrifices made by the Canadian citizen to provide the money which is so gleefully squandered by this Government. Are we, the elected Members of this Parliament, going to stand by and consent to the passing of yet another Bill which will permit the spending of money and the approval of projects without our express permission? Effective control of the public purse is passing from the many to the few. Parliamentary control over the executive was once the pride and joy of this country. We are passing from a representative democracy to an unrepentant oligarchy.

Despite the recommendations of the Lambert Report, the Auditor General's Report, the 1977 Standing Committee Report on Procedure and Organization, as well as our own proposals which were tabled by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in the Thirty-first Parliament when we formed the Government, we are seeing yet another blatant example of Liberal Government insensitivity to the true wishes and aspirations of the Canadian people. They are callously disregarding the wishes of the elected officials of this country and turning decisions affecting hundreds of millions of dollars into the hands of hidden bureaucrats who will have no qualms about employing these funds for whatever misbegotten projects please them. In the meantime we continue to have tours of the House of Commons with the guide telling legions of students, "Here, major decisions affecting the lives of millions of Canadians are made every day." Hogwash! Those decisions which are vital and which hit us in the pocketbook are being made in the Liberal Caucus boardrooms. The intent of this Bill is to continue in that same noble tradition.

I would like to comment briefly on the third amendment involved in Bill C-91 which permits the Department to dispose of property which may still be required for public purposes under a lease-purchase arrangement. I have two major concerns about this change in policy. Perhaps I should not say "change in policy" because we are all fully aware that this practice is common already and we are here today to give our retroactive consent. However, I object to the blanket authority which is granted in C-91 to sell any lands. Who decides which lands should be sold? Who decides at what price, and to whom? Although chances are slim, perhaps we will be selling the Parliament Buildings to the Russians and renting them back at the rate of 2,000 rubles per month. The fact remains that Parliament must have some control over such sales and we are losing it by giving assent to this Bill.

The second drawback to lease-purchase arrangements is that they involved a linking of hands of Government and big business. The minister recognizes this fact and is demonstrably proud of it. I quote from Hansard of May 21, 1982 at page 17696 which reads:

> Also important is the fact that lease-purchase is a means by which the Department can harness the skills of the strongest real estate development firms in the country—Canadian firms, Mr. Speaker. They are recognized internationally as the best in the business, and we need them to assist us with part, but an important part, of the evolving program of accommodation plans by Public Works.

I would not use the words "political payoff", but is there any special reason why these real estate companies are prospering so well? Consider the enormous potential for profit making which lies within the lease-purchase arrangement. Yes, I fully believe that leasebacks are building up the private sector, as the Minister continually emphasizes, and some are laughing all the way to the bank as Government space is leased out at ridiculously low prices.

One major publication in this city is leasing office space from Government at $4 a square foot in an area where the average rental is $12 per square foot. On the other side of the coin, the Government is leasing from the private sector and paying incredible rents for stylish offices which really are not required. Take, for example, the Canada Manpower Centre located in L'Esplanade Laurier. That is probably the classiest area in this city. Is there any need for this unwarranted expenditure? Surely there is no such need when people are walking into my office, as one man did last week, who are so hungry that they turn to their Member of Parliament for a meal. Yet this Government is seeking the passage of a Bill which signifies further entrenchment of policies which lead to profit-making at the expense of the electorate.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I applaud the intent of Bill C-91, which ostensibly is to increase efficiency and expedite proceedings which are normally hampered by the red tape involved in having routine procedures approved by Parliament. If there were a way to do this without losing accountability to the people, then my colleagues and I could hardly object. However, as I see it—and I believe the above arguments substantiate to a satisfactory degree my sentiments—Bill C-91 is, in a sense, an attempt to pull the wool over the eyes of this House and the people of Canada. We cannot give consent to a Bill which provides the Government with powers beyond its constitutional mandate. We cannot permit vaguely worded amendments which can be interpreted in many ways by clever lawyers to make what is wrong seem right. As the Opposition it is our duty to protect the average citizen from legislation which could affect his property rights, and, even more importantly, could take away his right to determine where public moneys are spent. There has to be more accountability in this Government, not less. And I assure you that the trend in Bill C-91 is certainly not toward "more".

As the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker once said, "I have always been a House of Commons man". I appeal to Members of this House to be House of Commons men and Members, and keep the power of this Government under control by adamantly opposing the threatening policies of this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, tonight I want to deal with the concern of the average citizen of this country, the men and women who are having a difficult time being heard, men and women who believe in a democracy in which government should reflect the thinking of the people. How frustrated these people are becoming.

There are two extreme forms of Government, if you want to call them extreme. One is democracy, which endeavours to reflect the thinking of the people. The other is when the Government thinks it knows all, has omnipotent wisdom and tells the citizen what is good for him. More and more we are getting away from the Government to which any citizen may appeal, make representations and feel that his voice is heard. Tonight I want to give some definite illustrations of what I am trying to say.

The first clause of this Bill defines properties as belonging to Canada or properties not belonging to Canada. That covers just about everything. Then it says:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act or in any other Act, any public work may be sold or leased, under the authority of the Governor in Council, and the proceeds of such sale or lease shall be accounted for as public moneys—

You see, some things are good. When things are sold I think they should be accounted for. But then it says any public work may be sold or leased, and that is something that concerns me.

Then there is a semi colon and it is modified to some degree. It says:

—but such public work shall be sold or leased by tender or at auction after public advertisement—

That is splendid. If we are going to sell something, it should be done by tender and after the people have been advised by public advertisement. It should not be suddenly thrust upon the people. Again, that something that is good. Then there is another modification:

—unless—

I felt good until I saw the word "unless". It says:

—unless it is otherwise authorized by the Governor in Council.

In other words, the Governor-in-Council can sell it without public auction, without public tender and without public advertising. Surely the Minister does not agree with that type of thing. In other words, the Governor in Council has dictatorial powers; any land can be sold, public or private. The Government can deal with any public works under any Act in the Statutes of Canada, and it can do so without public tender, advertisement, and even without public knowledge. I wonder what we are coming to. That concerns me, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the Minister must be concerned with the generality of that kind of power. That is not appropriate with a Government which should reflect the thinking of the people whatever the stripe of the Government.

I want now to deal with a specific instance which I think is relevant, although it actually comes under the National Parks Act. However, Bill C-91 deals with any other act. Before doing so, I want to refer to an excellent document which the Government issued on December 20, 1973, a guide to the federal environmental assessment and review process. I commend the Government for this brochure which explains Canada's environmental assessment and review process for federal projects. The document says:

The Process is based on a Cabinet decision of December 20, 1973, that directs federal departments and agencies to assess the environmental effects of projects they initiate or sponsor.

Let me emphasize that. It does not request, it does not ask; it directs federal departments and agencies to assess the environmental effects of projects they initiate or sponsor. It goes on:

The Environmental Assessment Panel was established on April 1, 1974, in response to this Cabinet decision, to act as a formal reviewing agency for those federal projects considered by the initiating departments to have potentially significant environmental impacts. One of the Panel's prime responsibilities is to advise the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment on the acceptability of such projects.

In other words, this initiating process must be done before any decision is made. That fits right in with democracy. It considers the recommendations and thinking of the people down at the grass roots, the citizen who thinks that his voice can be heard. This document gives him some hope. Then I go on to the first page, a brief history, and I read one sentence:

The federal Cabinet in June 1972, accepted a departmental proposal that all new projects initiated by the federal Government be screened for this purpose, and directed that those requiring further assessment be referred to the Department of the Environment.

That is a splendid thing, Mr. Speaker, but let us see what is happening now. About the middle of November the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) issued a permit to a company called Meteor Developments Ltd. I will not deal with the principals of that Company although that may come up later. A permit was issued to the Company to build an apartment building for staff in an excellent park within the town site of Banff, near Marmot and Cougar Streets. The park was started about 1970 when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Excellent housing was built around that area and about 4.2 acres was kept as a park. Much to the delight of the people concerned, the Department started to improve the park. In a letter dated June 4, 1971, the Minister wrote to the President of the Banff Advisory Council as follows:

The design of the attached housing units will be co-ordinated within the overall scheme for the area and any modification to the original design will be controlled. Thus, I assure you that the design stipulations for the individual residential lots will not be unduly affected by any possible revisions to the design for the attached housing units.

People were assured that if they spent several thousands of dollars building a home, they would always enjoy the area and nothing would be done that was not in conformity with the environment. I commend the Minister for taking that stand.

For ten years the Department developed the park, providing benches and building bridges over streams. Animals were welcomed and one summer there was a bull moose in the area. There are deer there today so it is a beautiful place. People from all over Canada enjoyed walking over the foot bridges and looking at the trees, some that are 100 years old.

Then in the middle of November the Minister of the Environment issued a permit to Meteor to build an apartment for staff in the park. I have nothing against that because we need staff accommodation in Banff, Mr. Speaker, but not in the middle of a park. I do not know how many letters I have sent to the Minister advising him of a situation that already existed at the co-operative Mountain View Estates. Staff housing was built close to single family dwellings and there has been nothing but trouble ever since.

The single men and women in the staff housing are young and they play loud music all hours of the day and night. The families want to sleep at night. They want to enjoy a quiet atmosphere rather than the noise of a rousing party. The police are called to the area three or four times a week to try to quell the chaos. The single people and the families each have their rights. I do not deny the younger people their right to have fun and loud music but it should not interfere with families with little babies and growing boys and girls.

In spite of this example in Banff, the Minister has issued a permit to build an apartment building for staff in the middle of this park. That has been done without an environmental study. I wrote to the Minister complaining that there had been no environmental study and no impact study. How can a permit be issued for a building in a national park without an environmental study being done? If the Department of the Environment is not going to protect our national parks, who is? There are towns and villages all across the nation where the people would love to have parks. They are spending their money on such projects, yet here is a town site with a park already within its boundaries, and an apartment building is being erected in it.

In spite of the guideline that that people must be advised and that there must be public tender for such a contract, the Minister issued the permit without public tender and without the benefit of an environmental study.

There is a stream in the park that runs open all winter long. This project will interfere with the natural flow of that water and the result may well be that the homes will have their basements flooded. I spent a number of years involved with the construction of highways, Mr. Speaker, and early in the game I learned to beware of changing natural streams, because such an action can affect the water supply.

One assessment has indicated that the project would involve increased traffic flow to the site which could result in traffic congestion, and that the alteration of Whiskey Creek by channel realignment, filling or dredging, would have an adverse effect on residents and visitors viewing the watercourse and the walking trails. It pointed out that alterations could very well interfere with the natural flow of that water. That is a very serious thing. It went on to suggest that the construction impact on the watercourse could be significant. Of course, if everything was done properly and nothing went wrong, things could turn out all right. But the whole project should be studied and we should not take a chance on flooding basements, Mr. Speaker. Yet the Minister has proposed to do the very things that should not be done. It said that the matter would be referred to a Panel.

In 1977 there was a proposal to appoint outsiders to the Panel, and more than 1,200 people sent letters and cards to the Minister about the project. There was no call for public tender. The people claimed they had no advance notice of it. This amounts to the destruction of a beautiful park that should be there 100 years from now for the enjoyment of the people of Canada. An apartment of all things should not be put in a beautiful park.

I have asked the Minister to put a hold on this project until the water problem has been studied. But the Minister has said no because Department lawyers have told him he does not have the authority. I question that, and I have advised the Minister. I had the authority over the building of highways for 20 years in Alberta. Earlier on we made a mistake. A contract was issued that was not in the public interest. When I went to the site and saw that a highway was being built on an inadequate base, I said to the Deputy Minister that we could not go on with it. I told him it was ridiculous and it was a waste of public money. I told him to tell the contractor that we were cancelling the contract. The Deputy Minister said he did not think we could do that. I said to him, "Do it."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I told the Deputy Minister to tell the contractor that this was using public money, and to come to Peace River to talk about it. The contractor flew to Peace River. I told the contractor that we could not put an expensive coating of blacktop on top of an inadequate base. He said to me "I know we can't. I do not like the contract. We do not like building roads that way and I am glad you have cancelled the contract." We put the project out again for tender and we had a proper contract that looked after the base. I say to Hon. Members "Don't tell me a Minister does not have the authority to cancel a contract." If a Minister has the authority to issue a permit, he has the authority to cancel a permit.

The Public Works people in Banff informed me—and the Minister asked me who it was, but I am not telling him—that they would stop the work if the Minister sent a wire asking them to do that and the RCMP would enforce it. The Minister has refused to do that.

I like the part of this Bill that says these things have to be done by public tender. I do not like the part which gives the Minister authority regarding any public works in Canada. Any public works, Government or otherwise, encompasses a vast host of things and I will not begin to enumerate them. I like the part that states that any public works will have to be contracted, sold or leased by tender or at auction after public advertisement. But I do not like the way the Banff Park project was carried on.

I have appealed to the Prime Minister, and I appeal to all Ministers and all Members of this House to realize that it would be criminal if we permit that park to be destroyed. Already a number of trees that took 100 years to grow have been cut down. This situation can still be remedied if this project is topped now.

Let the Government show its intentions by stopping that work. There are other places in Banff where apartment buildings can be constructed. Let us not destroy our park.

I want to deal now with expropriation. This Bill alarms me in this regard. I know a little bit about expropriation from experience. Most governments, municipal and provincial, endeavour to compensate when they have to take land, from a farmer or from an owner of land, because that action interferes with an individual's rights. In the provincial Government we always went to the person to try to get an agreement. Occasionally we had to expropriate land. But when we had to expropriate land there were certain procedures we had to follow by law. I was one of the people who had something to do with putting the procedures in place. Even though it slowed us up, it gave the individual who owned the land some rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: That is what we have to recognize in this country. Rights are being taken away from individuals. People have come to me about the expropriation of land. The individual does not have a say. I have appealed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) about these things. They expect sympathy, but they have not been prepared to do what I think they should.

For instance, if I own a farm and the Department of Highways or the municipality wants the area, perhaps a 20-foot strip belonging to me, they have the authority to take it if certain procedures are followed. If they expropriate the land, that means the owner is an unwilling seller. That happens in such a case? The owner has to pay capital gains on the expropriated land. First, he is an unwilling seller. Second, capital gains are applied against him. That is completely wrong. If capital gains have to be imposed, let the authority doing the expropriation pay those capital gains. It will make the authorities stop and think about whether the expropriation is really necessary. Capital gains should not be imposed upon the poor land owner who is losing his land; having to pay gains on something he did not want to sell. That is common sense, and I think every Minister over there would agree if they looked at the situation.

Mr. Thacker: But they don't understand over there.

Mr. Taylor: In some cases whole farms are expropriated. The law says if the farm land is replaced somewhere else, no capital gain is involved. When a man and a woman has spent, 50, 40 or 30 years building a farm, they cannot always replace it somewhere else. People get to an age when they do not want to start all over again, homesteading and working from the beginning. Many do not have the strength to start all over again.

What happens when expropriation procedures take place? The Government tells the owners how much they will get for the land. Then these people are stuck for the tax on capital gains. But these people were unwilling sellers. They wanted to spend their lives on their land. I ask Hon. Members of this House why they cannot put themselves in other people's moccasins and realize how they feel when the roots are pulled from under them, having to pay capital gains which amounts to a big chunk of the money received? This Bill will encourage this type of thing and I do not like that at all. Surely, we cannot permit it to continue.

We pride ourselves in the ownership of land. We say that a man's home is his castle. We say that nobody has the right to come into someone's home unless he gets a warrant, and that nobody has the right to trespass on someone's land. We put value on our property, but a federal body, the Canadian Transport Commission, is forgetting about that. It is not abiding by the rules set out by the Cabinet in 1933 and amended in 1977. This is an excellent document.

I want to cite just one case reported in the Calgary Herald. The article was written by the agricultural reporter, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows him. He is an excellent agricultural reporter. His name is John Schmidt. He wrote this in the Calgary Herald:

—CTC was asked by CP Rail to authorize construction of an 18-kilometre branch line from Elk Island on the Willingdon subdivision to the Fort Saskatchewan petrochemical-industrial basin.

The CTC allowed the railway to bisect the farm of Wilfred Naundorf of Fort Saskatchewan. Mr. Schmidt's article continued:

Despite the fact the project will cost nearly $20 million, the CTC accepted the argument by CP's stable of three lawyers that an alternate route suggested by Naundorf to bypass his arable land would impoverish the railway.

In other words, the CTC ruled in favour of the railway in spite of the fact that there was an alternate route. The owner of the land said he was not trying to stop the railway. He wanted to see the proposed line or lines aligned on the eastern side of his property, which was not quite so arable, running alongside a property owned by Shell Canada Limited. The CTC said no. This land owner not only faces interference with his farming operations, but this line will gobble up 10 per cent of his arable land. Trains would soon be travelling within 100 yards of his house. The CP Rail lawyers argued that it would require three times as much land for the railway route as it would to bisect his land. I say: so what? I say that does not matter if we value the ownership of land in this country.

I have talked with many provincial Ministers of Highways in this country. I remember discussing a case with the late Jack Douglas, who was not of my political affiliation but who was nevertheless an excellent member of the CCF Government. He recognized the rights of individuals, and I respected him for that. It was the opposite situation in this case. This man said that there was an alternate route, but the CTC said no. What did the LC lawyers say? They said that the landowner can take this case to court by hiring a lawyer at $100 an hour and proceeding to ask for compensation under the Railway Act. How can an individual fight the Government railway?

The CTC indicated that it will put the railway through his arable land, in spite of the fact that there is an alternate route. They said that the line will be built in the public interest.

I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) why a public tender was not called for on this land in Banff? He indicated to me in a letter that normally these things are done by public tender but that in this case he had the authority under the Act, in the national interest or in the interests of the park, to do it by ministerial order. He might have the authority, but I question the morality of his actions.

With respect to acting in the public interest, the situation in Banff does not take into account public interest, nationally, locally or municipally. Just ask the hundreds of citizens there who are so concerned about this matter that they parked their cars around the area in order to save the trees. But what happened? The workers walked in with chainsaws this morning and started to saw down 100-year old trees. It makes your heart bleed to see this happen.

I believe it is time to reconsider what is done in the public interest. What happened in the case I just mentioned was not really in the public interest at all. This farmer would be plowed under in the public interest and his food-producing ability would be diminished in the public interest. Surely public interest takes into account the individual as well as the national, provincial or municipal interest.

Let me proceed with this example to show how sad this situation really is. The entire petro-chemical industrial complex at Fort Saskatchewan is served by the Canadian National Railways. They already have a rail line there. It is not necessary for CP Rail to put a line into the area, in the opinion of a CN witness. It was brought out in evidence by J. B. Bromley, Vice-President of CP Rail for the Pacific Region, that CP had tried to renegotiate running rights over the CN line to Fort Saskatchewan from Edmonton in return for giving CN running rights over CP Rail to the Carseland petro-chemical basin from Calgary. But CN apparently said no.

The CTC could very well have said to CN and CP that those two corporations should get together and arrange to use those lines which already exist. That would be the sensible thing to do. I am familiar with the area. Those lines are only used a quarter of the time, but nevertheless a farmer's land is going to be used instead of those lines which already exist. The CTC was not so kind when the town of Canmore wanted an industrial site for future development and therefore wanted to retain the railway that was already there. The CTC denied that request because it did not have the industrial site in place, even though it had set aside the land for it. So it ordered the abandonment of the railway. However, in this case the CTC has no reservation about going headlong over the rights of an individual when there is an alternative route in existence.

While this Bill does have some good measures, there are some very poor ones in it as well. This is what concerns me.

If the Government wants to show the people that it wants to take positive steps through this Bill, it will show its good will by ordering that the project in Banff be stopped immediately.

Mr. Peterson: Nonsense!

Mr. Taylor: The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) shakes his head. I am ashamed to see him shake his head. He wants to ruin a park. He does not care about the people there. His first concern should be the will of those people.

There are several other examples that I could cite, but I will conclude by saying that giving the Government the authority to take anyone's land, either publicly or privately owned, through an Order in Council without the benefit of public tender or advertising is going too far. It smacks of totalitarianism. We want democracy in this country, not totalitarianism.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, here we are again with another Bill before the House during the debate of which the Liberal majority will sit quietly and then stand up when called upon to vote to pass it through the House. It is another Bill which will be oppressive to ordinary Canadians across the land who are trying to earn their living and pay their fair share of taxes. In order to do that they must have access to capital, land and property. That majority will deny that access, and the NDP will stand up with them again because this is another Bill that concentrates too much power in too few hands. That is what this debate is really about.

How many jobs will this legislation create? It will not create one, but it will continue to concentrate too much power in too few hands.

This simple Bill, which consists of two or three sections, does have some good provisions in the sense that it gives the Government the power to lease out land and then sell it or lease it back. However, this is accomplished by Order in Council. This just adds to the approximate 3,600 Orders in Council which are passed by the Government each year, as compared to the less than 600 in the United Kingdom which has twice our population. This makes it evident that we are really powerless here. The reason that we have no power is that successive numbers of backbenchers on the other side, aided and abetted by the NDP to our left, have continued to concentrate that power and intend to continue doing so. They will continue to do this until Canadians realize what is happening, as they are now realizing. Canadians are becoming aware that this continuing wave of socialism and concentration of power has not made the individual any richer but has continued to be a drain on their purse.

The latest example of this is Petro-Canada. When all the oil companies in the country, even the dummies, were making money and paying taxes hand over first, Petro-Canada was not. We all have had to pay $2 billion in capital so far, as well as paying a tax of four cents a litre. This money was to cover the purchase of Petro-Canada. But are they worth-while assets? No, they are secondhand service stations of no value and almost all of them are on the wrong corner of the street. This will continue. It is happening as a result of a group of Liberal backbenchers not standing up to their Cabinet and saying they will not permit this to go any further.

I see it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It being 10 o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PROVISION OF GRANTS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is said that a man is known by the company he keeps. I think the same is true of Governments. Canadians want desperately to think of themselves as winners. We need to, if we are to alter the public psychology which has been created by the economic policies of this Government. In view of this, a glance at the list of "winners" upon whom this Government has been bestowing our money is revealing—Chrysler, Dome, Maislin, Massey-Ferguson, and the list goes on. Indeed, the only contact that this Government has with the real winners in our corporate society is either to drive them out of the country or to sell them party memberships. Therefore, I wish to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Prime Minister and the Government reverse its thinking and attempt to reward success rather than failure as has been the case up to the present time.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

LICENSING REGULATIONS AFFECTING INTERPROVINCIAL BUS SERVICES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, a regulation was recently introduced by the Ontario Transport Board requiring that all bus charters obtain a licence to drive through Ontario. Legan Bus Lines, a motor coach company from Edmonton, Alberta, has had its licence application blocked by Greyhound Lines of Calgary, thereby forcing them to travel through the U.S.A. on their way to the Maritime Provinces. The additional cost in travelling through the States could adversely affect the future of this tour. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Minister of Transport intervene in this matter in order to protect the interests of Legan Bus Lines and also the tourism industry in the Maritime Provinces.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SCHOOL CONDITIONS ON ALBERTA RESERVE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, at the primary school on the Blackfoot Reserve near Gleichen, Alberta, children are crowded into classrooms in the school's basement, kitchen, and the principal's office. There are problems with lighting, heating and sanitation, and the fire marshal has expressed his concern. For years the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has known of the need for more classroom space. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House condemn the Government for its indifference to the educational needs of Indian children and instruct the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development to ensure that portable classrooms are in operation by December 1 of this year, and to provide funds to start construction of new classrooms by next spring.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

REQUEST THAT MADAME ANNE HÉBERT BE CONGRATULATED ON RECEIVING THE PRIX FEMINA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I wish to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Previously, the Prix Femina was awarded to Gabrielle Roy, born in Manitoba, and the Prix Goncourt to Antonine Maillet, born in New Brunswick, and today, I move, and I am honoured to do so, seconded by the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House extend its warmest congratulations to Anne Hébert, born in Sainte-Catherine de Fossambault, who has just been awarded the Prix Femina for her outstanding novel "Les Fous de Bassan".

Madam Speaker: I am sure the House would like to express its appreciation by applauding this achievement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

OIL DISCOVERY AT RUMSEY, ALTA.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, Gulf Oil has made a very significant oil discovery at the community of Rumsey in east central Alberta where, reportedly, there is a production potential of many thousands of barrels of oil per day, and speculation has it that the potential of the oilfield discovered is as large as that of the Pembina Oilfield. Since this new supply of pumped oil should reduce our dependency on imported oil, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House commend the fact that this new oilfield has been discovered, and further commend the Government of Canada for the infrastructure that is presently in place and encourage that these facilities be retained in place so that the communities can prosper and new industries can be developed to their potential and to the advantage of all Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

INTERRUPTION OF SYDNEY STEEL BUSINESS PLAN

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the interruption of the Sydney Steel Business Plan, to which the Government agreed, and which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) solemnly signed, has affected not only the steel industry in our region but also coal miners in Cape Breton and the viability of the Hawker-Siddeley plant in Trenton, Nova Scotia. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on motions, explain why, despite success in maintaining employment, adjusting to lower volumes and producing a high quality product in this time of economic recession, he is discriminating against Sydney Steel, when hundreds of millions of dollars are being distributed to industries in Central Canada, and also to reconcile the public confrontation he had with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys in Nova Scotia this past weekend over this issue, and finally to inform the House whether reports that Algoma Steel, which may be put on the auction block by its owner, CP Limited, is a factor in his decision. Is the welfare of Sydney, Nova Scotia, to be sacrificed to protect Algoma, its only Canadian competitor in making steel rails?

LEVEL OF WAGES PAID TO CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and honest public importance. The Citibank of New York recently released a study on international wage comparisons showing that Canadian workers have received lower wage increases over the last decade than nine of the ten countries surveyed, namely, Belgium, Britain, Denmark, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Sweden, and further showing that Canadians have fallen from being the second highest to the second lowest paid amongst major industrial economies in that period. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

• (1410)

That this House recognize that Canadian wage earners are not the cause of our current inflationary spiral.

EXTERNAL AID

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF AID TO TANZANIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that, on Saturday, Tanzania banned visits by Canadian journalists following a television documentary on that country's severe economic and development problems, thus suggesting that Tanzania does not want any independent scrutiny of Canada's $25 million annual aid program to that country; and in view of the fact that this ban was imposed against the wishes of both CIDA and Canada's Department of External Affairs, and despite the fact that the journalist in question had already been issued a valid visitor's permit, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That, because Canadian Government sources already believe that Tanzania fears further criticism might jeopardize already controversial aid projects, this Government suspend all foreign aid until such time as Tanzania is prepared to revoke its decision.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILLS C-131 AND C-133

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the opposition from all sides of the House, and Canadians generally, to the Government's attack on retirement incomes for Canada's elderly during 1983 and 1984 under its six and five per cent program, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House demands that the Government withdraw Bill C-131 and Bill C-133 from the Order Paper immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

CALL FOR REDUCTION OF WASTE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, this Liberal Government is moving in a heavy-handed way to penalize Canada's senior citizens by imposing on them a cutback in the indexing of their old age security. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, rather than taking up the fight on behalf of those pensioners, has bluntly told them that they must "lead the fight in the battle against inflation." Given this punitive action against the very people who have contributed so greatly to the building of this great nation of ours, I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare demand of her colleagues that they lead the fight against inflation by reducing waste and unnecessary duplication in their respective Departments rather than unjustly laying this burden on the shoulders of Canada's elderly.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MEDICAL CARE

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare recently told me in the House of Commons that she only intends to inform and involve Members of Parliament in formation of the new Canada Health Act after negotiations with the Provinces have been, in her words, "finalized", and in view of the fact that the President of the Canadian Medical Association is going around the country making certain claims about a so-called draft, and trying to exploit constitutional tensions instead of arguing from a medical standpoint, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare table whatever proposals she has made to the Provinces so that Members of Parliament who care about Medicare can respond to the hysteria of the CMA in a more informed and less speculative way than is now possible, and also so that MP's who care about Medicare can make sure that the Minister's proposals represent a strengthening of Medicare and not a capitulation to Conservative provincial Governments.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CULTURAL AND SCIENTIFIC CONTACTS WITH SOVIET UNION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My question, Madam Speaker, is for the Prime Minister. Canada has just had a high-level delegation at Moscow conducting negotiations that we are told are aimed at resuming cultural and scientific contacts that began under the Friendship Treaty of the Prime Minister with the U.S.S.R. in 1971. These exchanges were halted after the Afghanistan invasion in December 1979. We are told that the Government hopes to have a full range of exchanges with the Soviet Union before the end of 1983.

• (1415)

Has the Government made it a condition, as it should, that before Canada agrees to any improvement in its relations with the U.S.S.R., first the U.S.S.R. has to observe the Helsinki Accord, permit emigration to those who wish to emigrate, and treat properly people such as Mr. Shcharansky who are now suffering from inhumane imprisonment? Is it also a condition that the Soviet authorities withdraw their armed forces from Afghanistan and, finally, that they should encourage Poland to revoke martial law and release those who are now in prison for supporting Solidarity? Are these conditions for any improvement in relations on our part?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the detailed mandate given to the high-level committee that went to Moscow. I cannot say if all or some of these conditions are included in its negotiating mandate.

INSTRUCTIONS TO DELEGATION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is the head of the Government and some seem to think the fount of its wisdom, such as it is. Is the Prime Minister telling the House that he did not instruct or have his Secretary of State for External Affairs instruct this high-level delegation that the three conditions I mentioned, and I will not repeat them, are essential to be met by the U.S.S.R. before we can resume a warmer relationship with them? Did he not inform them of that.

Does he know that the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs who headed the delegation is reported as having said in this morning's testimony that, "essentially there have been no visible signs of change in the Soviet attitudes in any of those three matters"? That being the case, will the Prime Minister inform the House whether we are going to proceed with this opening toward greater exchanges and the like, if there are no visible signs of any change in their position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking me whether I have seen the detailed mandate given to the delegation, the answer is I have not. As to the success or otherwise of the meeting that was held between officials in Moscow, I have no report on that. I imagine I will receive one as soon as the delegation returns.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, surely the delegation did not proceed to the U.S.S.R. without instructions from the Prime Minister's Government as to what they were to seek to achieve, and what Canadian conditions are before we can have an improved relationship with the U.S.S.R.? Surely the Prime Minister cannot expect us to accept that?

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT IN MUNICH

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister is this. According to the Deputy Minister we had no prior consultation with the United States or our NATO allies in this matter, nor did the Soviets initiate this rapprochement. In Munich, on his recent trip, the Prime Minister said that because of the death of Mr. Brezhnev it was a good chance, and I quote the Prime Minister, "to try and turn a new leaf with the Soviet Union". Why is the Prime Minister suggesting that we, and not the Soviet Union, should turn a new leaf? Is it the fault of the West that they invaded Afghanistan, that the Polish martial law tragedy has occurred, or that there are human rights violations in Russia? Why should we be turning the new leaf and not the U.S.S.R.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member misunderstood my previous answer. I did not say that the committee had no mandate. I said that I had not given it any specific mandate. I had not seen that mandate before it left. Obviously I discussed the matter with the Minister in general terms. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is at this moment chairing a ministerial meeting of the GATT in Geneva. I am sure he could answer these questions. I am telling the Hon. Member that I was not involved in the specifying of that particular mandate.

As to consultation with our allies, there probably has been some. I do not know. I do know that our allies do not consult us every time they want to make even the slightest gesture. I know there is a constant stream of American businessmen going to Moscow. There is a constant stream of Congressional and Senatorial delegations in Moscow, and they have not consulted me on that. I just want to make it clear that Canada should not be the only country that does not have any kind of relations with the Soviet Union. When something like 150 United States businessmen are in Moscow this week to do business, I do not think Canadians should forever renounce the possibility of having commercial transactions for the benefit of Canada in that country.

Mr. Crosbie: This was a high-level delegation of the Government of Canada, not of Canadian businessmen who are quite free to go to the U.S.S.R. just as are American businessmen. This was a Government delegation trying an apparent new initiative in the East-West over-all relationship.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR INITIATIVE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Will the Prime Minister deal with the question of who should turn the new leaf? Is it our responsibility to turn a new leaf with respect to the Soviet Union, or is it their responsibility, in view of their actions in Afghanistan, in Poland, with Mr. Shcharansky, with émigrés, with all of the other brutal, tyrannical acts they have been practising for the last several years? On whom is the onus to improve this relationship?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the Soviet Union should turn a new leaf.

TANZANIA—ENTRY DENIED TO CANADIAN JOURNALIST

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I hope that he will not plead ignorance of this matter as he has pleaded ignorance of the instructions to the delegation to the Soviet Union. I refer to the incident in Tanzania, one of Canada's favourite recipients of aid, some $300 million worth over the last 20 years. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister has been made aware of the refusal of Tanzania to accept a Canadian correspondent who was accompanying a CIDA official, to visit CIDA projects, and if he is aware, what action has he taken about it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I was not aware. If I had been, I do not think I would have taken any action.

NECESSITY FOR INFORMATION ON CIDA OPERATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should have thought the Prime Minister would have been anxious to make sure that his friend, Julius Nyerere—I see he is passing the question on to someone else, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Ask your question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would have thought that the Prime Minister would have been anxious to intervene, if only to keep in the eyes of Canada the good name of his friend, Julius Nyerere, and Tanzania, so they would lift this ban against Canadian newspapermen and so that Canada might know what does go on with CIDA's operations in Tanzania.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Mr. Speaker, we are aware that Mr. Travers was unable to obtain permission to enter Tanzania with CIDA officers when the latest experts meeting on Canadian aid for Tanzania was held. We intend to express our disapproval and regret in this respect to the Tanzanian authorities. In most cases where we have aid programs, they must be reassessed regularly to consider any problems that may arise, and that is why a meeting of experts is being held in Tanzania to examine all aspects of our aid program in that country.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

UNITED STATES DECISION TO DEPLOY MX MISSILES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last week he stressed the importance of what he said was the need for "curbing the arms race and affecting disarmament". Many military experts as well as politicians in the United States, as well as Members of this House who issued a report on the subject, contend that there exists rough parity in nuclear strength between the two great super powers. Considering that yesterday President Reagan took a significant and dangerous step toward escalating the armaments race in the nuclear field by the deployment of 100 MX missiles, will the Prime Minister take the opportunity to support his expression of concern by concrete action in attempting to persuade President Reagan to reverse this potentially very dangerous decision?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, in President Reagan's statement to all Americans last night, there were some encouraging signs when, for instance, he mentioned a wide range of cases where advance notice would be given of nuclear tests and all governments with nuclear arms would be notified of potential accidents and also of how the missiles would be deployed. So these are encouraging signs if we want to achieve a balanced reduction of nuclear arms throughout the world, and that is something Canada hopes will happen as soon as possible. As far as deploying the missiles is concerned, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is aware that President Reagan has decided to concentrate these new intercontinental ballistic missiles in a location where antinuclear missiles already exist, and I believe the matter will be brought before Congress, although the plan would not become operational before the end of 1985 or 1986, and then only if Congress gives its approval.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ACT ON ISSUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and I hope he will have respect for the House to answer it.

The Prime Minister goes around the world portraying himself as a man committed to disarmament and peace. I think his understanding is, if he would declare it openly to the House, that we now have a concrete example of one superpower significantly escalating the nuclear arms race.

Some Hon. Members: Russia.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like the Prime Minister to state on behalf of his Government that he will take public action opposing such action by the United States, just as he would—I say to my Conservative friends on the right—oppose the Soviet Union if they did the same thing?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He would not oppose.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I think that as far as the question of nuclear parity between the super powers is concerned, since we ourselves have no nuclear arms on our territory and have always supported negotiations aimed at a mutual and balanced reduction of nuclear arms, perhaps the Hon. Member's sources have informed him that nuclear parity has now been achieved. President Reagan has other sources of information, as he showed last night on television, if the Hon. Member was watching. The Hon. Member is asking us to make a value judgment which we are not ready to give at this time.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, a former U.S. Secretary of Defense; George F. Kennen, a former senior U.S. diplomatic official; Senator Kennedy, as well as over 200 members of the U.S. House of Representatives take the same position that this party does, namely, that there is already in existence rough nuclear parity, and anyone who wants to show leadership in the world should be trying to de-escalate, not escalate, the arms race.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in that context I would like to ask the Prime Minister, since more than 20 municipalities in the Province of British Columbia have followed other municipal voters all across the country by voting in excess of 75 per cent in favour of calling for Canadian leadership in the disarmament movement, will the Prime Minister—I repeat for the third time—take this occasion, and not rely on another minister, to follow up on public statements he has made outside this House calling for disarmament, by getting out front here in the House of Commons and saying he will appeal directly to President Reagan to reverse this important decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Crosbie: The shrinking violet comes to his feet.

Mr. Trudeau: Not for you, my friend.

Mr. Crosbie: Do it for the people instead.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. Well, if you let me talk, maybe the people will hear my answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is expressing a valid concern, one which has been expressed by this Party and by myself repeatedly. I have made speeches to the United Nations at the Special Session on Disarmament to that effect; I have made speeches in the United States and other forums. I want him to know that the Government has spoken in NATO as a member fo that Alliance and in favour of the two tracks; first, to make sure that there was reasonable parity on both sides and, second, to make sure that both sides were earnestly engaged in de-escalation or in reduction of nuclear arms. That has been the position of the Government, and it remains our position. That is the message I conveyed to the leaders in Moscow last week, and that is the message I have conveyed to our American friends when I have had occasion to raise the point.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: What about this occasion?

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member is referring to a speech made last night. I have not seen that speech. It seemed to me that the Minister responsible for External Affairs was very conversant with the speech that had been made, and he dealt with the questions. I preferred to let a man who knew what the President said deal with the subject. That is why I asked him to answer, not in any way because our policy is one of which we are ashamed. On the contrary, I think the position of the Canadian Government has been one of leadership.

The Hon. Member quotes these various American politicians and, indeed, some of the referenda. Basically I think when they talk of "freeze" they really mean that they want a de-escalation by both sides. They are not saying that automatically, today, the Soviet Union or the United States should stop building arms. They say they want both sides to negotiate seriously toward a reduction of those arms. That is their position, and that is also our position.

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—REQUEST THAT HOUSING PERMIT BE CANCELLED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. How does the Minister justify swapping a beautiful park in Banff valued at $1,368,000, on which Judd Buchanan, a former Liberal Minister, wants to build an apartment building, for four residential lots located in the Cave and Basin residential area, with a maximum total value of $600,000 or lower, without public tender, without an environmental or impact study, thereby denying public input until about the time the permit was issued? Will the Minister, even at this late date, cancel the permit so that people can save what is left of this beautiful park?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, a variety of subjects are contained in the Hon. Member's question and I shall try to reply to all of them. He may wish to ask a supplementary question if I pass over one of them.

Several of the facts cited by the Hon. Member are not accurate. An environmental assessment of the proposal was made. Tender arrangements were not suitable for this particular situation because the proposal being made was for an exchange of terrain that was already in possession of the group concerned. The initiative for this exchange came from Parks Canada officials because they believed the original proposal on the site then considered would carry with it more difficulties and drawbacks from the point of view of Parks Canada and of the people of Banff, than the exchange which was suggested.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, as the development officer said when he resigned yesterday, the deal smells to high Heaven. The Minister's words do not make it smell any sweeter.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Given that the Minister ignored and did not follow the environmental assessment and review process set out by Cabinet, and given that the negotiations between Judd Buchanan, the former Liberal Cabinet Minister, and company, and the Minister and Parks Canada were kept secret for two years until a leak brought the matter to the attention of the people, and then a permit was issued within three weeks, when it usually takes three months, and given that the departmental officer, a man with 35 years experience, resigned yesterday because he could not be part of the destruction of a beautiful park and could not stomach the Liberal patronage, and for several other reasons, will the Prime Minister ask the Minister of the Environment for his resignation? Otherwise he is going to be a lame duck Minister.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the same answer is appropriate to the second question of the Hon. Member as to the first. The allegations he makes are not, in fact, true. The proper environmental processes were followed. There has been consultation with the public as far back as 1972—

Mr. Taylor: They came out on November 16.

Mr. Roberts: —and again in 1980. The environmental review was completed in 1981. The allegations which the Hon. Member makes are unfounded. He says such things as there is a smell surrounding the affair. If he has some concrete allegations to make about any impropriety, let him do so. There is no impropriety in this situation.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the involvement of a former Member of the Government and the apparent precipitous haste with which these arrangements were made to turn over valuable Government property to what appears to be a rather favoured company, Meteor Developments Ltd., in which Mr. Buchanan holds a significant interest, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister is custodian of conflict of interest guidelines and the adherence to those guidelines by Ministers and former Ministers, would he cause this matter to be referred to an appropriate committee of this House as quickly as possible, in order that there might be a complete, thorough, and truthful examination of all the facts surrounding this transaction with Meteor Developments Ltd.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member for Yukon. He does not usually have to read his questions. He can generally ask them without referring to a prepared text. If that had been the case now, he would have been able to listen to the answers given by the Minister and then he would not have had to read the question. If there is nothing irregular, why should we set up a committee?

REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY BANFF RESIDENTS—OFFICIALS' STATEMENTS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Press reports indicate that the Minister received 1,200 letters or representations from the population of Banff, which numbers in total under 4,000. I should like to ask the Minister if he received those representations and, if so, why he did not act on them, given the fact that for some time now, as he knows, there have been constant requests and demands by residents of the Banff townsite for an increasing share in self-government.

The other question I would put to the Minister—in view of the resignation yesterday of a senior official and in view of the conflicting statements by officials, including the park superintendent—is just who is running Parks Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I think there are at least three different questions there. In answer to the first question, I would tell the Hon. Member that there was public consultation about the zoning of this property as far back as 1972. At that time the public was consulted and there was no indication of any objection to the zoning which took place at that time.

Mr. Taylor: Tell the whole story.

Mr. Roberts: In 1980 the public of the area was again consulted about the zoning of that particular property and, once again, there was no objection to the zoning.

Mr. Taylor: Tell the whole story.

Mr. Roberts: Subsequent to that, the Chamber of Commerce in the area sent telegrams supporting the proposal to the Government.

There has been a flow of a variety of coupons—I do not know the exact number, but certainly a large number—which have expressed concern about this transaction on environmental grounds. I have already indicated in past answers to the House that there was an environmental review which found that there was no significant environmental detriment from the project.

The Hon. Member's second question concerns the self-government status of Banff as a park site. I can inform him that in that regard, in conjunction with the Province of Alberta, I was prepared to put to the residents of the area the question of whether they wished to have Banff incorporated as an appropriate townsite under the municipal legislation of Alberta. The decision of the committee of the town which considered that suggestion was that it did not wish to proceed with the matter as a referendum to the people of the area.

I am afraid by the time I reached the end of the second answer, I forgot what the Hon. Member's third question was. I will respond, if he asks it again.

Oral Questions

AUTHORITY FOR ACTION—OFFICIAL'S RESIGNATION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, perhaps I can help the Minister. My last question was, who is running Parks Canada, and perhaps the Minister will answer that in a moment.

In view of the fact that 1,200 people objected recently, as I understand it, how can the Minister say that because there was no objection to this a decade ago, somehow or other it is all right? People suddenly realized what was going to happen. In view of all the development that has taken place over the last ten years, why did the Minister just go ahead and do this? Surely, when there is such a significant amount of opposition, the Minister has the responsibility to consult with his officials and, if necessary, go to the site and discuss the matter with the people concerned?

My last question ties in with the others. How does the Minister explain one of his officials being so dismayed at what has gone on that he has resigned, making very vituperative comments about the way the whole thing was done?

I come back to the last question again; just who is running the situation?

• (1440)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear clearly or fully the response I gave earlier, that is, that not only was there consultation which took place ten years ago in 1972, but again the population of the area was consulted in 1980 over the zoning of that spot. Thus it is not a consultation which simply took place ten years ago. There has been consultation at a much more recent date than that.

Again I refer the Hon. Member to the telegram which we received indicating the support of the Chamber of Commerce for the proposal. The point the hon. gentleman raised about the resignation of an official is one which I am afraid I cannot answer because I am not aware of his resignation, nor am I aware, as the Hon. Member seems to be, of a statement which was made at that time. Of course I will look into it now that he has drawn it to my attention.

The answer to his third question is still as it was when he was minister, that the Minister responsible for Parks Canada is the Minister of the Environment.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

STUDY OF TORONTO APARTMENT SALES DEAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last week the Minister indicated that he would take whatever steps he could to determine the real owners in the recent apartment building transaction which occurred in Metropolitan Toronto, and that he would, if possible, have FIRA review it to determine whether there was any aspect of it that would yield significant benefit to Canada. It has now become apparent that this is not the only transaction being undertaken by foreign purchasers of apartment buildings across the country. Has the Minister conducted his review? Will he have FIRA review, it and, if so, when will the review begin?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my officials talked to the solicitors of the various parties involved in the transactions last week. There is another meeting which will be held tomorrow. At the present time the case is still under study by the Agency.

Mr. Deans: We all know the Minister's reluctance to support FIRA in the first place, shared incidentally by the Conservatives.

AGENCY'S MANDATE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am curious to know what is it that takes so long. What is it that requires a week and a half of study to determine, first, whether or not there indeed are foreign investors taking over apartment buildings in Canada and thereby forcing higher rents on Canadians? Second, is it within FIRA's mandate to investigate it and, if so, why has it not started?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to the premise of the Hon. Member's question, on the contrary, I fully support FIRA. Despite the fact that I am one who supports the free enterprise system and one who supports that "profit" is not a dirty word, if the transactions as alleged in this case are indeed correct, I think the free market system is substantially undermined by transactions of this nature. However, the fact of the matter is that with respect to this case, it has not yet been decided as to whether it is reviewable under FIRA. We must abide by the law.

Mr. Deans: What is taking so long?

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA TELEPHONE INSTALLATION CHARGES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It concerns Bell Canada's proposed credit-screening system under which new subscribers may be required to pay substantial amounts to Bell Canada before having telephones installed. In view of the fact that this proposal will primarily affect lower income Canadians, including families with young children, single parents, and senior citizens for whom the telephone is a very vital communications link, would the Minister tell the House whether he has had any discussion with Bell Canada regarding modifications to the proposal which, in its present form, will deny telephone service to those who need it most?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me notice of her question earlier today. Indeed I would be very pleased to raise the matter with Bell Canada. However, I would point out that there is a problem which the company must face, in that in the last year some 180,000 residential customers were disconnected for non-payment, and some 7,700 of these disconnections were permanent. Be that as it may, I will raise the issue with the management of Bell Canada in view of the very real importance of the question raised by the Hon. Member.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC LIBERALS SUPPORT MINISTER'S DECISION ON QUEBECAIR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Considering his decision regarding Quebecair, I would like to recall, Madam Speaker, that the Minister's attitude and proposal have aroused the consternation if not the disgust of thousands of Quebecers. Considering the fact that the Minister has achieved one goal, which is to kill Quebecair, could the minister inform us whether he has the unanimous support of the Liberal Members from Quebec for a decision that has put an end to Quebecair's activities? I would also like to ask the minister whether he is proud of the dirty work he accomplished yesterday.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised at my hon. friend's consternation. In fact, this is not at all the impression I received this morning, especially from the press. If we really wanted to kill Quebecair, we are certainly going about it in a very clumsy way, by asking Air Canada to help reorganize that airline. Therefore, I think that my hon. friend is merely stating his own personal opinion.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT ENSURE VIABILITY OF QUEBECAIR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, since during the past year alone, this government has helped various companies that were in financial difficulty, and since the minister, even in his new proposal, mentioned that he wants to rationalize air services, I would like to know why the minister has not offered Quebecair enough routes to ensure its profitability and viability? In the circumstances, I have the impression that the minister has no wish to ensure Quebecair's survival and is making a proposal which is my view is obscene, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I could not care less what the Hon. Member's impressions are of this proposal. As for reorganizing routes, if the Hon. Member would read the text I released to the press yesterday, he would see that it is an essential element of our present proposal. At my press conference I also said that Air Canada's routes were the first to be open to negotiation. If that is not a way to help Quebecair achieve its objectives, I wonder what is.

Mr. La Salle: What about Quebecair 1? What is the difference?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, well, what about Quebecair 1? One of the issues that is probably troubling my hon. friend is that yesterday, I refused, on behalf of the government, to take up all the commitments, debts and contracts Quebecair had made in the past. Why we did that? If we had not, thereby taking on the entire past history of Quebecair, we would have sabotaged any chance of success we might have. That is why we have refused to take over Quebecair's debts.

Madam Speaker, we are really trying to do a good job here. In general, reactions from the Quebec side are favourable. There are further details, and I am willing to discuss these if the Hon. Member is prepared to ask me some specific questions.

[English]

FUTURE OF NORDAIR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will he now tell the House what the future holds for Nordair? What is the status of the Minister's desire to merge Nordair with Quebecair, or will he now do it under the aegis of Air Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the big project that we had in mind, the merger of Nordair and Quebecair, involved the presence of Air Canada. The reason for this is not simply the liking I have for the company or the fact that I am responsible to the House for it. Most people realize that Air Canada has an important role to play in the rationalization of air transportation in the central part of the country. Most people accept that, and this is why I have always thought that Air Canada should play the role of catalyst. What is the future of Nordair following the announcement I made yesterday? There is no change with respect to Nordair; it will continue as it is now.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I think that answer will be interpreted to mean that a merger between Nordair and Quebecair will be taking place. This is one of the underlying worries on the part of Nordair employees which is contributing to the length of the Nordair strike.

DURATION OF NORDAIR STRIKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Labour. How much longer does the Government intend to let the Nordair strike drag on? Will those airplanes be back in the skies on the East-West passenger routes before Christmas, or could the strike drag on until next April or May, as I have heard speculated?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, this strike, which of course is of great concern to the Government, could be ended in a very short period of time if both parties were willing to sit at the bargaining table and seriously mediate their dispute. The latest attempt took place on November 15. Unfortunately the meeting broke off within a matter of a few minutes, if not hours.

As I said last Friday, we are standing by to offer mediation services at any time or moment, as soon as the two parties indicate to us that they are seriously committed to resuming negotiations.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

ORIGIN OF BILL S-31

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the sponsor of Bill S-31. Last Friday, the President of the Montreal Stock Exchange, Mr. Pierre Lortie, stated that a bill similar to Bill S-31 had been introduced at a meeting of representatives of Canadian stock exchanges. Is this proposal really behind Bill S-31?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Madam Speaker.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT IMPLEMENT BUSINESS REQUESTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my second question is for the same minister. According to Mr. Lortie, a few months ago, the minister refused to act on the requests of the business community in this area. Why has he changed his mind since then? Have other pressures been exerted? If so, by whom?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me the opportunity to say that these are two different matters. In fact, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been considering for some time the possibility of introducing a bill on securities. This has been very badly received by provincial authorities that have traditionally held this field of jurisdiction for many years, while it could very well be held by the Canadian government. I have said that we would like investment corporations coming under provincial jurisdiction to abide by the laws of the market. One provincial corporation in particular, the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec, does not follow the rules for securities, which has caused problems with securities in Ontario and has prompted my department to ask the Superior Court for an injunction to force it to make its intentions known. The Hon. Members will know that this matter is still before the courts since we have appealed a first ruling of the Court of first instance. On the other hand, in order to protect the interests of the Canadian Government as concerns interprovincial and international transport, we have introduced Bill S-31 which requires that all provincial financial institutions coming under provincial jurisdiction follow certain rules and prevents them from purchasing more than 10 per cent of the shares in interprovincial and international transport companies.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE MERGER OF NORDAIR AND QUEBECAIR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. The Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth implied that the Minister's answer suggested a merger between Nordair and Quebecair. I understood exactly the opposite. Would the Minister clarify the situation so that both the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth and I will know who is either deaf or obtuse?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is exactly it. My hon. colleague speaks with the wisdom that he is well known to possess. The way to interpret it is that the Government is taking the Quebecair only approach. This should be the understanding. I thank my hon. colleague for expressing the common sense of the population in this matter.

FINANCE

CONCEPT OF TAXING IMPUTED RENTAL INCOME—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As reported in Hansard on March 19, 1982, his predecessor stated in reply to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West in regard to imputing an income to a home owner:

I have attempted to allay the concern by stating categorically that the Government never had any intention, does not presently entertain any intention, nor will it entertain an intention in the future to tax imputed rent. That is the end of the matter as far as I am concerned.

Has there been a change in the direction of Government policy as a result of the change in Ministers, or is that still the publicly stated policy of the Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is both the publicly stated policy and the policy which has not been stated publicly. The issue raised by the Hon. Member was raised as a scare tactic previously by, I believe, an irresponsible insurance company in particular, and it had no foundation at that time and no foundation ever since.

ASSESSMENT IN CASE OF SASKATCHEWAN FARMER

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I am not sure about any irresponsible insurance company, but I think the Minister is being irresponsible in his answer to the question because, right now, in my constituency, there is an incorporated farmer who has been assessed $9,000 imputed income from rental on a $75,000 home. Why is the Minister standing in the House to say that the Government does not intend to impute rent or impute income to Canadians who wish to shelter themselves and provide housing? Why is the Minister not coming clean and telling us that the Government will raise funds by imputing rent and income to individual Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I suspect that the Hon. Member does not adequately or appropriately represent the individual case to which he refers. If he wishes to bring the details to my attention, or to the attention of the Department of National Revenue, I am sure they will be very happy to look into it.

The role of the Department of National Revenue is to apply the law as passed by this Parliament. The laws are in the books for everyone to see. That is what the Department of National Revenue is called upon to apply. I suggest to my hon. friend that if he has a specific income tax case that he is concerned about, either he or his constituent can raise it with the Minister of National Revenue. It will be examined and dealt with appropriately under the laws of the land.

AIRPORTS

ADMINISTRATION OF DUTY-FREE SHOPS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, some months ago the Minister of Transport told the House, on the important matter of duty-free administration, that the Government had learned something from the Sky Shops fiasco. In view of the recent mess caused by Sky Shops' successors, Thomcor, at Mirabel and Dorval, where they left the Canadian taxpayers or his Department holding the bag with about $6 million in bad debts plus a few hundred thousand dollars worth of missing liquor, and in view of the terrible mess in Toronto which the Minister is aware of, where administrative neglect at the La Belle Creole duty-free shop has cost the taxpayers at least $10 million more, when will the Minister get his act together to administer this potentially lucrative business properly? I ask him, very respectfully, if he will be good enough to tell the House what improvements he will make to remedy this situation which has cost the Canadian taxpayers nearly $20 million in these two instances alone.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my Department is human. Occasionally, mistakes are made. Occasionally, the people who operate these facilities in the airports encounter difficulties that were not anticipated. For example, the economic situation at this particular moment is creating problems for many. I agree that there are, indeed, problems, and we do our best to correct them.

Mr. MacKay: I say to the Minister, very respectfully, that perhaps the problem is that the Minister is not following his own financial criteria in administering duty-free concessions.

APPLICATION OF TENDERING POLICY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the Minister must know that the tendering process traditionally calls for both percentage and minimum guarantees. He now appears to be fixing the percentages and allowing the minimum guarantees to float, contrary to his own policy. Had he followed the policy of his predecessor, the Hon. Member for Vegreville, and awarded that franchise in Toronto to the highest bidder, as should have been done, the Canadian taxpayers would have been $10 million ahead of the game.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we do practise the double standard with the minimum guarantee and—

An Hon. Member: A double standard?

• (1500)

Mr. Pepin: It may be a bad expression on my part, but two criteria are used for payment of concessionaires, that is, a percentage of the net revenue and a minimum guarantee. The two apply, and the Department gets whichever one is the highest, which is not a bad idea, is it?

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT FINANCIAL GAIN FROM CRIME

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-664, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (profits of crime).

He said: Madam Speaker, this legislation is timely, although it was in preparation for some time, because it fits precisely within the framework of the comments recently made by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) in that any criminal who is charged would not be able to profit from crime. The legislation also takes into consideration the concerns raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) who asked a question about freedom of speech, because it would still allow people to speak, to write and to publish. The Bill provides simply that all profits from any materials would be taxed 100 per cent and would go to a trust fund for victims of crime.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,671, 4,078, 4,079 and 4,494.

[Text]

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INC.

Question No. 3,671—Mr. Stevens:

What is the total financial assistance that the Government has given to Consolidated Computer Inc. in terms of (a) loans (b) loan guarantees (c) grants (d) letters of comfort and what does the Government anticipate it will be able to salvage out of the sale of CCI to Nabu Manufacturing Corporation?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As of January 25, 1982, the reply for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is as follows:

(a) Total loans extended were $12.9 million. Of this amount $.5 million was repaid and the balance was converted into common shares of the company.

(b) Total loan guarantees authorized amounted to $150.7 million. Of this amount the Crown was required to disburse a net amount of $96 million.

(c) Total contributions were $10.4 million.

(d) No letters of comfort have been issued.

Based on the business plan presented by Nabu Manufacturing Corporation, the Government anticipates a recovery of approximately $7.6 million during the five years following the sale of the Company.

FINANCECO

Question No. 4,078—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Did the Government place Mr. Harold Melanson as a Director of Financeco and allow him at the same time to be a Director and Officer of Consolidated Computers Inc. and, if so, for what reason?

2. Did Mr. Melanson instruct Coopers and Lybrand, Chartered Accountants in Toronto, as auditors of Financeco at the same time as he instructed Coopers and Lybrand, as auditors of Consolidated Computers?

3. Did Financeco at any time have any employees to do any of its own bookkeeping or accounting or did it rely solely on the work done by Thorne Riddell and Company, through the partners assigned to the company to act as directors of the company, those being Messrs. Wright and Taylor?

4. What were the fees paid to Thorne Riddell for acting on behalf of Financeco in the year (a) 1976 (b) 1977 (c) 1978 (d) 1979 (e) 1980 (f) 1981?

5. Did Consolidated Computers Incorporated use its personnel to handle all the receipts of rents and the deposits of money for and on behalf of Financeco Limited and Finecomp Incorporated and to act as bookkeepers and agents for both companies?

6. What undertakings did the officers of Consolidated Computers Inc. give to Messrs. Cooper and Lybrand to indicate that Consolidated Computers Inc. had no financial interest in Financeco and Finecomp?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As of February 25, 1982, the reply for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is as follows:

1. No. Mr. Melanson was a director of Financeco until July, 1980. He resigned when he was appointed Executive Vice-President of Consolidated Computer.

2. No. By the time Mr. Melanson was appointed Executive Vice-President of Consolidated Computer, Coopers and Lybrand were no longer that company's auditors.

3. Financeco relied solely on the services of Thorne Riddell for its accounting needs.

4. Fees paid to Thorne Riddell for administration, accounting and preparation of tax returns:

Year

5. Consolidated Computer collected lease revenue on behalf of Financeco and Finecomp which was immediately turned over to the respective companies. Consolidated Computer did not act as bookkeeper or agent for either company.

6. No undertakings were provided beyond the normal letter of representations provided by management to external auditors. From 1976 to mid-1979 Coopers and Lybrand were auditors of all three companies and were able to verify that Consolidated Computer had no financial interest in Financeco and Finecomp.

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INC.

Question No. 4,079—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. What percentage of the shares of Consolidated Computer Incorporated were held by the public and not by the Government, the Government of Ontario or Fujitsu of Japan in the year (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 (d) 1977 (e) 1978 (f) 1979 (q) 1980 (h) 1981 (i) 1982 to January 30?

2. In accordance with the agreement between Her Majesty the Queen and Nabu Manufacturing Corporation and others with the Government, did the Government agree to pay off the total bank indebtedness owed by Financeco and its subsidiary Finecomp leaving those companies with all of their assets but with none of their outstanding liabilities?

3. On January 30, 1982, what were the net assets of Financeco and Finecomp after payment of the outstanding amount to banks and bankers who had invested in Financeco by notes and debentures?

4. Does the Government have and will it supply an audited financial statement of Financeco and Finecomp for the period ending January 30, 1982 or, if this is not available, for the period ending December 31, 1981?

5. Did someone on behalf of the Government or did the Government through the Enterprise Development Board prepare an estimated cash flow coming to Financeco and Finecomp from outstanding lease obligations owed to those companies?

6. Is there a Declaration of Trust wherein the National Trust Company declared it held the one share in Financeco Limited on behalf of the Sick Children's Hospital of Toronto, the Mount Sinai Hospital in Toronto and St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto and, if so, will the Government produce a copy of the Declaration?

7. Did the hospitals understand that they were the beneficial owners of Financeco Limited and its subsidiaries in 1976 and, if so, on what date did the hospitals realize this?

8. Did the Government pay a certain amount to the hospitals to have them divest of the beneficial ownership of Financeco Limited in order to effect the agreement between Her Majesty the Queen and Nabu Manufacturing Corporation and others dated November 26, 1981 and, if so, what was the amount?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As of February 25, 1982, the reply for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is as follows:

Order Paper Questions

1. Percentages of issued shares of CCI held by the public:

As at	Per Cent
December 31, 1974	57.2
December 31, 1975	57.2
December 31, 1976	12.4
December 31, 1977	12.4
December 31, 1978	12.4
December 31, 1979	12.1
December 31, 1980	12.1
December 31, 1981	12.1
January 30, 1982	12.1

2. No. The Government of Canada purchased the total bank's indebtedness owed by both Financeco and Finecomp from the lenders to the two companies for a total of about $43.2 million. Of that amount, the Crown is now owed about $20.4 million by Financeco plus about $8.2 million by Finecomp, and is to be partially repaid out of future cash flow of the two companies over the five years ending December 31, 1986.

3 and 4. January 30, 1982 financial statements of Financeco and Finecomp will not be prepared. Unaudited December 31, 1981 financial statement reveal that Financeco had consolidated negative net assets of nearly $28 million at that date.

5. Estimates of cash flow coming to Financeco and Finecomp from their outstanding leases were prepared on behalf of the Enterprise Development Board, (or its predecessor, the General Adjustment Assistance Board), at various times over the past several years.

6. The only issued share of Financeco was held (until late in 1981), by National Trust Company Limited. Both Financeco and Finecomp were set up in such a manner that all foreseen cash flow would be used to repay loans insured by the Enterprise Development Board, with any residual funds accruing to Consolidated Computer in the form of agreed collection fees. Because there existed a remote possibility that excess cash flow could be generated, the General Adjustment Assistance Board (GAAB) concluded that any such windfall benefits should accrue to charitable organizations and an agreement was entered into on June 15, 1976 to establish this arrangement.

7. Because no excess flow was generated by Financeco, there was never any distribution of funds to the charitable organizations. It is unlikely that they realized they might have benefited as a result of the June 15, 1976 agreement.

8. The Government of Canada paid $600 to National Trust Company, Limited to acquire the single share of Financeco.

CANADA SERVICE BUREAU

Question No. 4,494—Mr. Siddon:

1. What is the total annual budget for the Department of Supply and Services' "Canada Service Bureau" office in Vancouver?

2. What portion of the budget is for (a) staff salaries and benefits (b) office rental (c) advertising and promotion?

3. How many "Canada Service Bureau" offices does the Department operate in Canada?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. $97,546 ('82-'83).

2. (a) $89,546. (b) Space rental is a DPW responsibility and that Department reports the total cost at $30,706.40. (c) There is no regional breakdown of advertising costs available. The national program for all initiatives was $400,000 for 1982-83.

3. There are Service Bureaux in 14 major Canadian cities and eight mobile or itinerant services serving an additional 75 cities and towns.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for answering question No. 4,494 which I placed on the Order Paper on October 27. Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell me what has happened to question No. 4,053 which I placed on the Order Paper nine months ago? It deals with the shipment of Canadian uranium through the Soviet Union for reprocessing, and possible security aspects arising from the possibility that some by-products of this uranimum could be used for nuclear weapons. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary might give an undertaking to answer that question at the most immediate opportunity.

Mr. Peterson: I would be very pleased to give an undertaking to have this question answered at the very earliest opportunity. Within this context, I think it is important to point out to the House, however, that to date—

Mr. Nielsen: We heard that yesterday.

Mr. Peterson: —we have answered 3,788 questions during this session, which is 83.1 per cent of all of the questions asked by Hon. Members opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: I am very proud of the record on this side of the House.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk) moved:

That this House, recognizing the importance of providing efficient, affordable, equitable mail service to all Canadians, and recognizing that Canada Post has reduced service while increasing its rates, condemns the Government for its failure to enforce the provisions of the Canada Post Corporation Act which require Canada Post to provide Canadians with adequate service at a reasonable cost.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I found it necessary to move such a motion and to speak to it because of the great concern felt by Hon. Members in my party and, I am sure, by those to our left for individual Canadians, Canadian charitable organizations, businesses and major corporations. Contrary to the beliefs of some Hon. Members opposite, we even have concern for the Canada Post Corporation. What is happening to the mail service in Canada is of great concern to those of us in the Progressive Conservative Party.

Let us look at the history of the Canada Post Corporation so that we will know where it came from. It was established in this House through the committee process to provide an adequate service at a reasonable cost. Its goal, to quote Mr. Warren and some of his executives, was to improve the postal service in this country. The Act which went through the House forming the Canada Post Corporation was agreed to by all parties of this House. All parties felt the need to remove this monster from the Department and the Government, and the need to form a new Crown corporation to handle the postal service in this country. We stand by our agreement today.

The definition of the term "letter" was not defined in the Act. It was also agreed by all parties in the House that that power would be given to the Canada Post Corporation to define what was mailable matter, what was not mailable matter, and what was a letter. The process agreed upon was that this definition would be arrived at by the Corporation. It would be placed in the Canada Gazette for an acceptable period and letters of representation from Canadians, organizations and businesses would be considered for a reasonable time so that amendments could be made and then referred to Governor in Council, and a final definition approved.

The rates for postal matters in Canada were also dealt with under the same format. It would be within the power of the Canada Post Corporation to determine what it felt was a reasonable rate in order to maintain the services of the post office in Canada. The procedure was the same. The rates would be gazetted, there would be a reasonable time in which to make representation and make amendments if necessary, and then a final decision would be reached by the Governor in Council.

That seems to be where the agreement between those of us on this side of the House and those on the opposite side ends. Certainly it is now a Crown corporation and it is being run as a business. However, the Government of Canada must accept its responsibility as far as the post office and the country is concerned.

I do not think I must remind too many Hon. Members opposite that the sum of $660 million of taxpayers' money is going to the Crown corporation this year to assist it in its operation. It is not attaining its goal to provide adequate service at reasonable cost.

What has happened to the Corporation this year, in which it has been a fledgling? First, the rates were increased some 76 per cent to 30 cents for first-class mail, which was totally unacceptable after such a devastating strike just prior to the increase, devastating not only to individuals and organizations but most certainly to small businesses in this country, sounding the death-knell for many of them.

The definition of "letter" was brought forth, and it was an unbelievable definition. Saturday rural mail has been stopped in all but Prince Edward Island, where the question is now being studied. Christmas card rates were brought up to the first-class rate of 30 cents, devastating to the card manufacturers and to people who send cards, but with a promise that the situation may change next year. If the promise that it may change next year is there, why not this year? Then there is our final rate increase, an additional 6 per cent, in line with the six and five program, to 32 cents. That represents an increase in the past year or so of some 82 per cent in postal rates. What private enterprise has been allowed to increase their rates some 82 per cent?

What is next for our Corporation? There is discussion of Saturday wicket closings in the post offices. There is talk about lay-offs of post office staff and there is discussion about reducing letter carrier routes and even the closure of some small post offices throughout the country.

What we have, Mr. Speaker, is less service at more cost. That is not acceptable to this Party. We have called for review of the Canada Post Corporation many times. We have called for it in the House of Commons, in the press and in letters. I have asked the Minister responsible for the Corporation about it in the House; I have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and I have even asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, trying to get someone to give an indication that this question would be referred to a Committee of the House to be discussed and considered, but to no avail.

I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister and perhaps I could read it into the record. I did not make it public and I did not release it to the Press. Because of the Prime Minister's concern and request for co-operation within the Parties, I felt that a letter directly to him with copies to the Minister and the President of the Corporation would be of some assistance and possibly get something done for us. I wrote as follows:

The Right Hon. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau, P.C., M.P.

Sir:

You may recall that on July 30th, 1982 I requested a study of the problems facing the Canada Post Corporation by a Committee of the House.

Mr. Warren has stated that the Corporation will be staying within the six and five per cent guidelines as far as an increase in rates is concerned. I feel this is a very commendable and responsible stand. However, since only wage costs are controlled under the six and five per cent guidelines, major costs of vehicles, vehicle maintenance, fuel, building maintenance, etc. will undoubtedly exceed 6 per cent, resulting in costs which surpass income.

This situation will most certainly place considerable stress on Mr. Warren and his attempts to streamline the Corporation and improve efficiency. As well, he has the responsibility of reducing the post office deficit by some $260 million in a limited period of time. It would appear to me that when costs outstrip income, at a time when it is mandatory to decrease a huge deficit, there is no alternative but to reduce service. Reductions in service as initiated by the Corporation in recent weeks, and which will no doubt continue in the months to come, can only be accomplished at the expense of the customers.

Possibly we are asking too much to expect Mr. Warren to reduce his deficit so greatly during such difficult economic times. Perhaps consideration could be given to allowing an extension of the time table for the reduction of the deficit.

I am very concerned that in order to meet his deadline Mr. Warren will be forced to cause irreparable damage to the operation of the system, and also create hardships to customers and workers alike.

I would greatly appreciate it if serious consideration could be given to this matter.

I received a response and I would like to read that into the record:

Dr. T.A. Bradley, M.P.

Dear Dr. Bradley:

On behalf of the Prime Minister, I am writing to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 13.

Please be assured that it will be brought to Mr. Trudeau's attention.

I would have thought that a letter on a serious note to the Prime Minister of this country would have warranted a serious reply.

What has happened to this postal service and why has it happened? The deadline given to Mr. Warren when he took the job was that he was to reduce the deficit from some $660 million a year to zero within a time span of some four years, a totally impossible task. How many other Crown corporations are required to become self-sufficient in four years, or at all, of the some hundreds of Crown corporations owned by the Government of Canada? Could we consider the CNR or Air Canada or the CBC? If we look at each of those in turn, they are set up and established, as the post office was, to supply a service to all of the country, possibly subsidized if sufficient funds were not available. The CNR provides service to the north, to the east and to the west, with small branch lines throughout the Prairies, usually at a loss and usually subsidized. Air Canada provides service to the north, east and west and to the small strips, and quite often is subsidized. The CBC offers good programming and good listening to the areas of the north and all reaches of Canada, and it is certainly subsidized. Why not Canada Post?

It is the obligation of this Government to provide good postal service to Yukon, to Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan, to Corner Brook, Newfoundland. It is a responsibility and if it needs to be subsidized it should be subsidized. That is what Canada is about. That is what federalism is about. This is a great country, we should ensure that we work together with the Provinces in all areas to provide adequate service at reasonable cost.

If this $660 million reduction were to be removed from our national debt and it could be shown that it was removed from the debt, possibly the argument would not be so strong. Possibly Canadians could accept the extra cost, knowing that they are helping; but this is not going to happen. The Government would squander the money somewhere else, possibly buying licorice cigarettes for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

What position has Mr. Warren been placed in in this fiscal year? He has a necessary reduction of some $260 million from his deficit; that amount must be trimmed this year. He has now been placed under six and five, in a very difficult economic time, where he has income of 6 per cent and most certainly expenses far in excess of the 6 per cent, possibly in the 12 per cent range.

What can he do, or, better than that, what must he do? What is he forced to do? He is forced to increase the rates, first to 30 cents, then to 32 cents. Why? Very obviously, to bring in money to reduce that deficit, to try to maintain the service that the Corporation has been providing. He has had to bring in a definition of a letter that is so tight, giving the Corporation such strict control over the volume of mail. Why? It was to bring in money and to improve the mail volume that has dropped off since the last mail strike and since the 30-cent stamp was brought in. He has had to reduce and in fact cut out Saturday rural delivery in order to cut the contracts of the rural carriers and save money. He has put Christmas cards at the first-class rate of 30 cents in order to glean an extra 10 or 15 cents a card to try to bail himself out of the pit. He is now looking at Saturday wicket closures, lay-offs, a reduction in letter carrier routes and the closure of small post offices in order to save wages, overtime and rental.

He is forced to do this in order to reach a goal that was set unrealistically by the Government in accordance with the Act passed by all parties in this House, but not with acceptance of that goal by all parties. It is being done with a reduction in service to the user of the post office. The rate increase was opposed by tens of thousands of individuals and businesses. That rate increase was soon after a postal strike which was devastating.

The definition of a letter is opposed by municipalities across this country such as Kitchener. Municipalities are being forced to deliver their municipal bills by Canada Post because of legislation by Order in Council.

Are we right? Are we as a Parliament right in telling the municipality which sends out municipal bills to municipal residents within the boundaries of that municipality for municipal goods provided by municipal staff that they must send those municipal bills to their municipal residents for municipal goods through Canada Post? We should take a long look at that because we are in the situation of forcing municipalities to increase their taxes to pay the extra cost for something they are being forced to do. The definition is being protested by charitable and non-profit organizations. First they opposed the stamp and then the definition.

Today I received two letters which are an example of that opposition. One was from Capreol dated November 16. I suppose seven days for delivery of these is acceptable. I quote from the letter:

Dear Sir:

The proposed postal legislation, as described in The Citizen, November 6, 1982, page 21, will cause great financial hardship to the charitable organization to which I volunteer my time, La Leche League. We depend on being able to group various pieces of correspondence into one packet of first-class mail in order to carry on many aspects of our activities.

I feel sure that other non-profit organizations, such as La Leche League, will also be hurt, and that administrators in these organizations simply are not aware of the implications of the proposed legislation for them.

I have expressed my concern to the Hon. André Ouellet and to my own Member of Parliament. I appeal now to you, as the Post Office critic for the Progressive Conservative Party, to use any influence you can to make the situation known to the public who will be affected through the volunteer organizations which they support, and to have the legislation withdrawn because of its unfairness.

Thank you for any help you can give.

Yours truly,

Patricia Fraser.

I was handed another letter by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). I quote:

Dear Sir:

I am strongly opposed to the new Canada Post definition of a letter. I hope you can dissuade them from putting this definition into effect.

Sincerely,

Rose Ryan.

Those are but two examples of hundreds of letters received from individuals, charitable organizations, businesses and companies throughout this country. There are over 300 businesses and corporations that oppose this definition. I wish to bring a couple to the attention of the House. In its letter to the Minister, The Canadian Bankers' Association said in part:

In our opinion, the task of properly defining the term "letter" and the scope of the Corporation's monopoly are of sufficient importance to justify careful consideration on the part of the Canadian public and corporate communities. We request that the Government consider the development of a special task force, or parliamentary committee to study the regulations, and the responses of interested parties, in order to satisfy the concerns that we feel and that we understand have been expressed by other interested persons concerning the effect that these regulations will have upon business and public interests in Canada.

I wish to quote from an article headed "Definition of letter held threat to small couriers":

General Motors Co. of Canada Ltd., Oshawa, Ont., uses private courier companies to move inter-office correspondence. The company has estimated that if the new definition becomes law, it would cost $3 million more a year to finance the system GM now has in place—

That $3 million is what it would cost General Motors to provide the same service being done internally. The couriers now carrying out this work would be unemployed. The money would not go to Canada Post because it does not have the facilities to provide the service required by General Motors. This would not only put men working in the courier system out of work, but would be absorbed internally by General Motors. Canada Post would not receive any part of the $3 million.

These definitions were brought in in a package. Some amendments were then added. We now understand there are going to be more amendments, one to cover General Motors and one to cover security clearance. Still, an ad hoc committee has been formed to opppose this; these amendments are being opposed. Some of the members of the ad hoc committee which was formed on October 18 are as follows: the Consumers' Association of Canada, Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Depository for Securities Limited, the Retail Council of Canada, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Bankers' Association, Conseil du Patronat du Quebec, the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the financial Executives Institute of Canada, the Insurance Bureau of Canada, the Association of Canadian Financial Corporations, the Direct Sellers Association, the Toronto Stock Exchange and the Automobile Parts Manufacturers' Association. I quote in part from their brief. They——request that the Governor in Council refuse to approve the proposed "letter" regulation and submit it to the Privy Council, in order to allow a constructive dialogue among interested consumer and business organizations, the Post Corporation and the Government.

These are not small organizations. They oppose the definition. The definition of "letter" is like the Liberal budget brought down on June 28 by the Minister from Cape Breton Island. You throw as much into the boat as you can, shove it out in the water and check the waves. If the waves come over the gunwales, you throw some back. If more waves come over the gunwales, you throw more back. When the waves stop coming over the gunwales, you let it float. That is similar to what we have had happen with the definition of "letter".

We are told, Mr. Speaker, that this definition will not come into effect until April, 1983 so that business can adapt to the regulations that it sets out. If this is being put forward to April, 1983 so that business can adapt, obviously the Minister and the Corporation are aware of the problems this will bring to small business. That alone is sufficient reason to refer this definition to a special committee of this House so that we can hear from small business and these other organizations, and from individuals and charitable groups.

Taking away the facilities of Saturday rural delivery is opposed, Mr. Speaker. The Christmas card rate is opposed, not only by the card manufacturers of Canada and North America, but also by the individuals who send those cards to friends. Saturday wicket closing will be opposed. Rural people who work their farms come in to town on Saturdays to do their shopping and to pick up registered letters and parcels, notification of which they received during the week. There are the individuals who work in a large community and live in a small one, who are not in their community during the day and who need the Saturday wicket service to pick up their letters and parcels. People working in one part of a major centre such as Toronto or Montreal but living in another part utilize Saturdays to pick up their registered letters and parcels.

Lay-offs will be opposed, as well as the reduction of letter carrier routes and the closure of some small post offices; and if one needs reinforcement of that, one could ask Mr. McGarry or Mr. Parrot as to the extent of the opposition to such a reduction of service. We on this side of the House are not saying that if we were still the Government we would not have given the same power and approved the same definition or thought the same rates to be necessary as this Government has, Mr. Speaker. But we feel that we would have had the foresight and the courage to say that possibly these things should be reconsidered and referred to a special committee of the House.

We applaud the task attempted by Mr. Warren, his Corporation and its workers. We applaud the honest effort, the realistic organization which has now been set up and the improved labour relations which have been initiated. We want to see that continued, Mr. Speaker, but it cannot under this Government's guidelines. It cannot carry on. We do not want to change Mr. Warren's direction. We just want it to be realistic.

This Government's policy towards the post office is off track and needs to be put back on the rails, headed in the proper direction. It is nice to be able to say it is a Crown Corporation now. It is independent of the Government. But that will not wash. It is not independent of the Government. The Government of Canada and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) are responsible for the Crown Corporation and for the taxpayers' money. They are responsible to make sure we have adequate postal service in this country at reasonable cost.

We are, therefore, calling on the Government to refuse the definition as proposed to it by the Canada Post Corporation and to refer the whole post office situation, after a year now of its operation, to a special committee of this House for review to see where we can go and what we can do to help it. We can then re-establish the parliamentary input by elected officials of this country to get the post office back on track. We could establish reasonable deficit reduction guidelines and Government response. We could maybe slide the deficit laterally for a year or two. We could maybe allow a longer period for it to be paid off. We could maybe authorize a permanent subsidy program, if necessary, we could also come up with a reasonable rate which is fair to business and to the Corporation. We could come up with a reasonable definition of "letter", after discussions with individuals, corporations, organizations, charitable groups and small businesses. This would be a defintion, Mr. Speaker, acceptable not only to business but to the Corporation.

We on this side of the House support the concept of the Canada Post Corporation, its management and its workers, but we want—no, we demand—an adequate level of service at reasonable cost to Canadians. This Government is preventing that from happening.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak to the proposal submitted by the postal critic of the Official Opposition. What struck me in the Hon. Member's speech is, that it is very easy for someone in the opposition to indulge in wishful thinking, without having to make difficult decisions. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative Party really has no solution to suggest, and that in fact, there are times when the Hon. Member is for the Canada Post Corporation and against the Government.

However, when the Corporation makes proposals under the Act that was passed here in Parliament and received the unanimous approval of this House, the Hon. Member no longer sides with the Corporation but with the businessmen and associations that have made representations to protest postal rate increases, just as he no longer sides with the Corporation but with those who objected to its definition of the term "letter". Clearly, the Hon. Member does not have the unanimous support of his own party, since what he is suggesting is that we increase the deficit and that Canadian taxpayers shoulder a greater share of the responsibility by taking on the deficit of the Canada Post Corporation. This is obviously not well received by his colleagues, the Members for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who are not in the House today, because if they were, they would object to what the Hon. Member has just told the House. And that is the beauty of being in the Opposition, the beauty of the Progressive Conservative Party, which is not in power and can afford to side with all parties at the same time, without having the responsibility for making important decisions.

Speaking of important decisions, I would like to announce that this morning, the Government of Canada made an important decision with regard to the definition of the term "letter". The House is aware, Mr. Speaker, that for several months the Government has been considering the draft definition of the term "letter" submitted by the Canada Post Corporation. To prepare this draft, the Corporation has been conducting consultations since last July with both individuals and a number of interested organizations. In the last few weeks, both the Corporation and the Government of Canada have received some excellent suggestions for amending the draft definition, especially in connection with bulk mail rates, handling of securities and the use of new technology in mail handling.

Since neither the Corporation nor the Governor in Council may amend the Act at this stage in order to incorporate the changes contemplated by the Corporation itself, and, of course, supported by the Government, it seems that now there is a preference for submitting a new draft definition that includes the desired amendments. That is what my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) told me in recent weeks on behalf of many associations and small businesses that wanted a more precise definition of the term "letter". I got the same message from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who has received representations from many associations which were mentioned earlier by the Hon. Member. The same stand was taken by the Consumers Association, which made some interesting representations on amendments that would be desirable. So, since the Corporation is agreeable to amendments, and since the government is in favour, this morning Cabinet decided not to approve the wording of the draft regulation.

However, I wish to point out that the Government continues to support the concept of exclusive privilege for the Corporation, as well as the need to establish a precise definition of the term "letter" that will enable the Corporation to exercise that privilege. This is very important for the Corporation, because it must be able to provide a universal postal service throughout the country for all Canadians. This exclusive right is, in fact, the basis of all postal services throughout the world. It is not uniquely Canadian. The same exclusive right is shared by all postal administrations throughout the world. It is also one of the basic characteristics of public transit and public utilities. Thus, the Government is asking the Corporation to submit, as soon as possible, within the next few weeks, a revised draft regulation that could become effective on the same date as the first proposal was to take effect, that is, on April 1, 1983.

We hope that consultations will continue with major national associations, which have made known their views and submitted some excellent suggestions. As for the Hon. Member's proposal to refer the matter to a parliamentary committee, I may remind the Hon. Member that no such mechanism is provided under the Act. Besides, when we were discussing the issue during consideration of Bill C-42 to establish the Canada Post Corporation, I appeared before two parliamentary committees to talk about this. At one committee meeting, I heard the position taken by one of the Hon. Member's colleagues, the Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). At the other committee's meeting, I heard another of the Hon. Member's colleagues, the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), who had a different view of the definition of the term "letter". In fact, after many discussions with both committees, it proved impossible to reconcile the views of all opposition Members, and especially those of the Progressive Conservative Members. And I do not think that if tomorrow we were to appear before a parliamentary committee, we would get a consensus on a definition of the term "letter" from the ranks of the Progressive Conservative Party.

I think that Parliament in its wisdom, by creating the Canada Post Corporation under Bill C-42, acknowledged that it was up to the Corporation to exercise its responsibilities, to take the initiative and to define what a letter should be. The Government is supporting the Corporation in this matter, and it is open to recommendations and suggestions from the business world and the general public. It is in that spirit that we ask the Corporation once more to apply itself ingrudgingly to the job of finding a new definition that can be implemented in April 1983.

It would be appropriate in my view, at the beginning of this discussion, of the motion, to recall that Parliament attempted with Bill C-42 to create a social and economic base as much as a business entity when establishing the Canada Post Corporation. It must be remembered that the aim and duties assigned to the Corporation are complex, important and difficult. We should not underestimate the importance of this newly created corporation. Canada Post Corporation is the sixth largest employer in Canada, with some 60,000 employees, It operates 30 major establishments across the land and some 8,500 offices from sea to sea. Only one other Canadian company operates more trucks than Post Canada. The Corporation deals with no less that 20 unions and employee associations. Its turnover makes it the twentieth biggest business corporation in Canada. Therefore, Parliament established a highly important corporation when enacting Bill C-42 a few months ago.

It is much too soon in my view for the honourable member to take that corporation to task in this House. He is displaying a lack of tolerance and goodwill for the new corporation's directorship. Let us give them the time to prove themselves and then, if need be, we can criticize them. But for the time being, they are still entitled to the benefit of the doubt and should be helped over the next few months to reach the goals they set themselves.

[English]

I will say at the outset that I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) that the Canada Post Corporation has blatantly reduced its services and raised its rates without full appreciation of the needs of Canadians. Indeed, the Government has not failed to enforce the Canada Post Corporation Act. The Government, Mr. Speaker, has observed the Corporation to be following a consistent, deliberate course of action to improve its service levels since proclamation day in October, 1981. It has also made considerable progress in reducing its expenditures base.

I would like to return to the remark I made in October, 1980 in this House, when I was speaking on second reading of Bill C-42. I said at the time that all the postal unions had been fully consulted in the development of Bill C-42. It was with very complete agreement that we proceeded with the transformation of the Post Office Department to Crown corporation status. I acknowledged in 1980 that we had managed through a decade of conflict in the Post Office Department, and that we were now hopefully entering a decade of harmony.

Things have not always been simple in the past year, but the management-labour relationships in the Corporation have improved substantially. The Corporation has consulted with the unions on every major policy decision. That consultation has been constructive and to good effect. I would remind the Hon. Member who just spoke that the President of the Corporation, Mr. Warren, has pointed out on a number of occasions that successive quarters since October of 1981 have shown the lowest number of days lost to work disruptions of any time in the unionized history of the post office. That is progress; that must be recognized by the Members on both sides of this House.

Bill C-42 was developed with the extensive participation of Conservative Members as well. Allow me to quote a comment made in this House by the late Hon. Walter Dinsdale, a former Conservative critic of the post office. In passing, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay my respects to this great Parliamentarian, a friend of the postal workers, and to offer my deepest sympathy to his family. He said:

> I have looked carefully through the information that is available in the Bill and it seems to me that it includes most of the recommendations this Party has made through the years, as well as the recommendations that were included in all the major studies done through the years.

Bill C-42 does provide a good framework of enabling legislation. It does not, however, nor was it ever intended to, spell out, prescribe, or detail exactly how the Corporation would carry out its day-to-day business. It provided the framework for the Canada Post Corporation Board of Directors and management to establish the service base required to maintain good, dependable postal service in Canada.

We asked the Corporation to maintain basic postal service, while improving and extending its products and services. Canada Post is also supposed to consider the role of its employees in reaching its goals to ensure commitment and dedication to the job at hand and to ensure labour stability. All this is to be done while rates are kept competitive and while a three-quarters of a billion dollar deficit is eliminated.

In its mandate, the Corporation's new management team is faced with competing objectives which will require time, co-operation, understanding and good management.

This "bashing exercise" which is in vogue today is not useful. I regret very much that the Conservatives have chosen to use this Opposition day to blame the Corporation for bad service and for increased postal rates. It is too easy to blame the post office and to refuse to see the progress that has been made. It is easy to espouse the popular habit of downgrading the post office. I would have hoped for a more responsible attitude on the part of the Official Opposition.

With the establishment of Canada Post as a Crown Corporation, the new management team was able to mould its legislative mandate into the first real business plan that the post office has ever had. The top three priorities which emerged from this business plan are easily stated. They are: to improve service; to promote and maintain better human relations within the Corporation; and to work toward financial self-sufficiency.

How has the Corporation performed on the first priority, to improve service? I would be the first to suggest that the Corporation must improve its service. There is no doubt about that and I am sure every Canadian wants to see an improvement in the service. It is important, however, to make sure that this is a priority of the Corporation—and it is. Canada Post has made a commitment to its customers that they are of paramount importance.

The Corporation has set up a national service improvement group that is responsible for managing some of its most immediate service projects. One of its initiatives deals specifically with large-volume mailers and accords second-class mail a higher priority than it has ever had before. The service improvement group is also directing a variety of other project teams working on areas like new and better transportation networks. Another team is working toward the implementation of a program called the national integrated forward sort and dispatch system, and that, the President of the Corporation has assured me, is an imposing name for a national routine to move the mail from origin to destination in a way that is more reliable, efficient and economical. The Corporation has turned the spotlight on critical points in its network of processing plants and has added a substantially strengthened team of quality control experts to ensure that new service quality plans are properly applied.

If Canada Post is to become again a reliable and efficient organization capable of meeting all of the requirements in the field of communications throughout our country, it must obviously implement an extensive improvement program. That is what I am saying, Mr. Speaker, improvements are already being implemented. In that respect, the President and Chief Executive Director said recently in Winnipeg, and I quote:

> We have made organizational changes which have led to better mail service and lower expenditures through a more efficient use of our national network. We are in the process of developing and improving a system designed to better organize mail handling operations in all our major post offices with a view to beefing up co-ordination between staff, equipment and type of mail.

The Official Opposition is talking about reduced services. How can they say that service has deteriorated? Just what evidence do they have to make such a statement? They ought to know that Canada Post has a service quality control system on which it regularly reports to the public. I would remind the Hon. Member that our performance for first class mail delivered on time has reached 88 per cent last April as compared with approximately 80 per cent a year earlier. If we take a closer look, the results reveal that the April 1982 output with respect to first class local mail, that is letters posted in a city and bearing an address in the same city, is up to 94 per cent against 91.7 per cent the previous year. When it comes to first class mail sent to another city, commonly called forward mail, the performance rate has been 81 per cent for Canada as a whole, a significant improvement over the 66 per cent rate of the previous year.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, since it was created on October 16, 1981, the Canada Post Corporation has made every effort to provide a better service to its clients. Changes in mail handling procedures, new transportation routes and improved controls over the national networks are just a few of the service initiatives that have been and are being applied. Consider the results of these initiatives. For August, 1982, on time delivery of first class mail was 88.7 per cent. This represents the highest monthly average that Canada Post has attained since 1976. The figures quoted fully demonstrate that Canada Post is working very hard to improve its services and that it has succeeded so far, no matter what the Member of the Official Opposition who spoke before me may think.

[English]

Let me turn now to a concrete example of improved service, Mr. Speaker. By the way, this improved service was made possible through the improving labour-management relationship that I spoke of earlier. Hon. Members will recall that the last major expansion of mail delivery service undertaken by the old Post Office Department occurred during the fiscal year 1978-79.

Mr. Orlikow: Just before the election.

Mr. Ouellet: On February 25, 1982 the Corporation announced that some 74,751 new homes and businesses would be served by some 170 additional letter carriers, beginning in April, 1982. These service improvements were made possible in large part by the increased postal rates which came into effect last January and by the introduction of productivity bargaining features in the 1982 contract reached with the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada. New letter carrier routes have been serviced in a number of cities across Canada.

• (1600)

It is worth taking a moment to recount the additional person-years which have been made available during a time of restraint. The union and management agreed to a number of productivity improvement measures, such as route restructuring and computerization of label redirection cards. The cost savings achieved from these and other productivity gains have provided some of the resources to meet service needs in other communities.

I take this major investment in improved delivery service as an early and concrete indication of the Corporation's commitment to its mandate and to its primary business objective, which is better postal service for all Canadians.

The Hon. Member briefly talked about Saturday rural delivery. He alluded to the question of the reduction of counter hours and espoused the idea that post offices will be closed. I do not know what he had in mind when he said this. Perhaps he was trying to scare people. One thing for sure is that the new Crown Corporation has a mandate to continue to give Canadians the type of services to which they have become accustomed. Not only will it continue this service but it will improve on it. This is what the Corporation is doing.

We will not involve ourselves in the day-to-day activities of the Corporation. I suppose the Hon. Member who saw his Party voting in favour of the creation of the Crown Corporation would like to forget that this Corporation was given a mandate to administer in its best interests. We have ways to review and look at decisions taken by the Corporation. I have no hesitation in saying that in relation to Saturday services in small post offices, where there has been a tradition of providing counter services, nothing will be done in this regard without proper consultations taking place in the communities involved.

Also I assure the House that the Corporation does not intend to proceed with the plan described by the speaker who preceded me. Indeed, the Corporation is looking at many ways to improve services and to continue to give the level of service to which Canadians across the country have become accustomed.

I would like to turn now to another aspect of the motion which is before the House. It concerns the financial responsibility of the Corporation. The post office has been accustomed to deficits for many years. In 1982 we allowed a substantial postal rate increase. In fact, if that rate had not been approved, its deficit would have approached the $1 billion mark.

I understand that my time has almost expired. I should like to conclude my remarks with the indulgence of the House because the point I want to make is an important one. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet: The President of the Corporation indicated that instead of the deficit being around $1 billion without the 1982 rate increase, its deficit was now around $660 million. For the fiscal year 1982-83, the Corporation is committed to bringing that amount down to the $400 million range. This was made public in the statement of the former Minister of Finance when he discussed the plans of the Post Office Corporation. This is a substantial reduction with which the Corporation is prepared to live. The reduction of pressure upon taxpayers is in the range of 35 per cent to 40 per cent.

I am sure that some of the colleagues of the Hon. Member would be pleased to know that it is a relief on taxpayers, such as the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who always talks about deficits, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Surely they will welcome this initiative. We have to admit that it is a large reduction by anyone's standards. In fact, it is good news for Canadians who want to see their post office firmly on the road to lasting improvements.

I find it difficult to swallow the figures of the Hon. Member who spoke before me. He talked about 82 per cent increases in postal rates. It is misleading to relate the February 15, 1983 postal increase to the January 1, 1982 rate revision, as he did, without also bearing in mind the inordinately long period of time from 1979 to 1982 during which postal rates were not modified.

In reality, by February 15, 1983, when the proposed 32 cent rate will take effect, it will have been more than 13 months since the last postal rate revision, and it will have taken nearly four years for the price of a first-class letter to move from 17 cents to 32 cents. In this context, and considering the rise in the cost of such items as gasoline by more than 100 per cent and transportation by more than 60 per cent since 1979, the over-all increase in the cost of postage has not been excessive.

The framework for postal activities provided by Bill C-42 is a good one, but by the very nature of the business it operates, Canada Post is faced with a massive challenge. As I said earlier, it must improve its service performance and its human relations; it must attain financial self-sufficiency. I have no doubt that in due course they will be attained.

The Hon. Member suggested that perhaps the period in which to attain these goals should be a little longer. We will see as we go through the years. We know that the chairman and chief executive officer of the Corporation is ready to live with the objective of $400 million, the objective at which we are looking. I think there is no problem for the Government or for the Corporation to live within this objective. In the future we will see; we will cross the bridge when we arrive at the river. We are not yet there.

If the Opposition wants to be constructive, it can best do so with some tolerance vis-à-vis the Corporation, with the visible support of Hon. Members on all sides of the House, and with approval of and support for the worthwhile and needed initiatives taken by the new Corporation.

Every Member of the House recognizes the importance of providing efficient, affordable and equitable mail service to Canadians. But we must also recognize that a particular initiative can be criticized or condemned if one forgets the complexity of the challenge facing the Canada Post Corporation.

The Government has taken the most important first step in creating a renewed and vigorous Canadian postal system. It has created a postal Corporation and accorded it the legislative framework and mandate for it to do its job. We have appointed a representative, responsible and interested Board of Directors. We have watched as a very sound management team has taken over one of the country's largest businesses.

I am certain the Corporation will be able to stand on its own record of performance in the years to come. We must give it the chance to do so and Parliamentarians would be better to let it do its job. These people have been appointed to do the job. Give them the chance to do it and leave the politicking out of it.

I am sure that we all will be pleased to see the results when, in a few years time, this Corporation will again be a very proud organization serving the people of Canada well and being very appreciated by all the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the efforts made so far by the Canada Post Corporation have brought results. The proposed objectives, I must admit, have not been reached, but I feel optimistic because of the measures which have been implemented by the officials. The Canada Post Corporation is well on its way to achieving the goals for which it was established. Therefore I feel that not only should we give it our support but also the time necessary to fulfill its mission.

[English]

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on today's motion which reads:

That this House, recognizing the importance of providing efficient, affordable, equitable mail service to all Canadians, and recognizing that Canada Post has reduced service while increasing its rates, condemns the Government for its failure to enforce the provisions of the Canada Post Corporation Act which require Canada Post to provide Canadians with adequate service at a reasonable cost.

This is a motion which I, and I believe the people of Canada, welcome.

I would first like to say to the Minister, in particular, that my colleagues and I in this Party will be responsible. In being responsible, we will not attack the Canada Post Corporation nor the new management of that Corporation. Unlike the irresponsibility shown by Liberals and Conservatives in the House and across the country, irresponsibility which they have shown in numerable occasions, we will not attack the employees of the Corporation, whether they be inside workers or outside workers. We in the NDP want the Government, the Official Opposition and especially the Minister also to be responsible. In this respect I could not help but think that he sounded like the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) who, during a recent debate in the House, appeared so sensitive to attacks on his poor administration that he tried to pretend that Opposition Members, whether Tories or from the NDP, were attacking the employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission instead of the policies of the Minister. Similarly, this Minister's policy towards the post office has left it with little alternative but to do the damage that is being done.

The result of the entire administration of Canada Post today has been some improvement to urban services, while there is a reduction in service, poorer service and I would suggest almost a sabotage of service in rural Canada. The effect the Government has had on the Canada Post Corporation as a result of the Minister's policies is typical of what happens when you give any city slicker lawyer the responsibility for essential services to rural Canada.

This is similar to the problem which was faced by VIA Rail after its services were separated. It was given an impossible mandate, starved of funds and resources and the passenger service was separated from the freight service which financially carried it. This same situation is happening to the post office, whereby the Government will likely eventually decide that the service to rural Canada has become uneconomic. It will build up a large public blacklash, especially from some of the private sector, which will then demand to be allowed to cream off those portions of the postal service which are profitable and then leave the remaining Canadians, particularly those in the hinterland areas of Canada, with no service or with service at excessive cost which they cannot honestly be expected to bear.

I admit from the outset that there have been improvements in the Canada Post Corporation. One of these improvements has been an increase in mail delivered "on time" from approximately 80 per cent to 89 per cent during the last year. That is a significant improvement over a relatively short period. That is one of very few improvements. We have also seen many other basic services threatened.

I want to express my consternation and surprise at the Conservative Party for proposing a motion such as this. It takes a lot of nerve and even more hypocrisy for them to do this. The Conservatives have given their support to, and in fact called for many of the policies that the Government has agreed to follow—since the Government is acting like Tories so often—and that are causing the problems that exist within the Canadian postal service. I am amazed at the gall shown by those who proposed this motion when I consider what they have done previously.

Only a year ago we in the NDP, along with most Members from all Parties and certainly the vast majority of Canadians, were at least hopeful, if not optimistic, that the birth of the Canada Post Corporation, which had been demanded by so many for so long, could be a genuine rebirth of a once proud and efficient servant of the Canadian people. I say "hopefull" and not "optimistic" because we had some grave doubts due to what we believed to be the straitjacket of the unrealistic timetable of total and early self-imposed restraint and financial self-sufficiency which was demanded by the Government and supported by the Conservatives. The Government and those Members of the Official Opposition who sponsored the Government's policy were not satisfied with shackling this infant Corporation with the impossible demand of short-term self-sufficiency. They proceeded to starve it and batter it with the six and five program while hypocritically demanding that this infant Corporation rush to premature maturity and provide proper service to Canadians.

Let us examine what exactly was done. Michael Warren, President of Canada Post Corporation, has continually spelled out the three primary goals of the Corporation, as provided for under the Canada Post Corporation Act. The first goal is improved service; the second is improved human relations; the third is financial self-sufficiency. In the budget of November 12, 1981, a couple of budgets and one economic statement ago, the then Minister of Finance very clearly laid out the Government's expectations for financial self-sufficiency. From 1981-82, the Government expects the Canada Post Corporation to reduce its deficit of $620 million to zero by the year 1985-86. That is quite a demand at a time when the Government, the Official Opposition and this party are also apparently and hopefully committed to at least providing efficient and improved service across the country.

The Minister, in speaking during consideration of the Canada Post Corporation Act on October 24, 1980, laid out his own objectives. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to explain the legislation in great detail here this afternoon. However, I wish to mention a few points. First, I should like to speak about the mandate of the new corporation as described in clause 5 of the act, and I quote:
> 5. (1) The objects of the corporation are to establish and operate a postal service . . . within Canada—

That is nice. I agree with that. He went on:

> (2) While maintaining basic customary postal service, the corporation, in carrying out its objects, shall have a regard to:

—four other factors. And this sentence, Mr. Speaker, is essential to make hon. members of the House and particularly the Canadian public understand that the creation of a Crown corporation does not mean a reduction of services usually assured to the public. We wanted to write down this guarantee in the act so that Canadians, particularly in remote areas of the country and rural sectors which are often affected by decisions made by large Canadian corporations, would not be penalized by the creation of a Canada Post corporation which would operate in the Canadian capital and that would become insensitive to the aspirations of those Canadians, particularly in the rural and remote areas of the country. So I say that clause 5 guarantees that the same level of essential services will be maintained and this is one of the objectives of the legislation for which the new corporation will be responsible.

That is not what has happened. A few moments ago the Minister outlined the fact that in some areas of urban and western Canada, and particularly in the City of Calgary, people have finally been given the household delivery routes to which they have long been entitled and for which they have waited a long time. That is good. As I also said earlier, and as did the Minister, there has been an improvement in the time it takes to receive delivery of first-class mail.

However, in the meantime what are some of the drastic reductions in services that we have seen? There have been the closings of small rural post offices when single operators are unable to work and threatened Saturday closures of many rural post offices; the discontinuance of Saturday delivery to areas in rural Canada; and the current attempt by Canada Post to cancel carrier delivery on residential routes whenever a letter carrier is ill, which matter is now before arbitration. Even if a carrier who reports sick is a carrier on a business route, a carrier will be taken off a residential route to fill his place, which means that people in residential homes across Canada will not get the service to which they are entitled. In order to do this, the management of Canada Post is being forced, by the financial straitjacket imposed by the Government and the Official Opposition, arising from the six and five provision and the Canada Post Corporation Act, to abrogate many sections of its collective agreement. Again, there are several key arbitration cases presently pending on that matter. That is a sure-fire way of recreating exactly the kind of nightmare in industrial relations within the postal service which is one of the things that I believed all of us in the House were trying to get over. And you guys are wrecking it.

Mr. Nielsen: Honourable guys.

Mr. Kristiansen: Those honourable guys are wrecking it. I sometimes wonder.

The suggestion has been made in a number of quarters that these moves not to replace carriers who are sick and to deny people the residential route services and delivery to which they are entitled is simply testing the waters for what is called "alternate day delivery". That would mean that one would get one's mail only every second day, except on the weekends, when one would not get it at all. At one time we had six-day delivery in this country, but will it now be reduced to delivery every two and a half or three days?

What is the design? City slicker lawyers are in charge of rural services again. There is also a current attempt to eliminate 1,500 jobs as a budgetary cutback and that will not do much for service, either. If it is found that those employees are redundant, not necessary in order to carry on the legitimate functions of the post office, that is something that everyone can realize, and one can sit down and negotiate that problem with people. However, there should not be a speeded up, forced cutback in the way that the Government's policies and those of the Official Opposition are forcing the management of the Post Corporation to do. At the same time, we are seeing a constant, stubborn refusal to initiate carrier service in many other new communities which are being forced to resort to group boxes instead. Of course, while all of this has been going on, the cost of this reduction in service has been going up and up, both for group boxes and post boxes in the various post offices across the country—that is, when people can get into them, because some of the rural post offices are being closed on Saturday, too.

There has been an increase of 82 per cent or 92 per cent in the cost of a postage stamp to mail a letter over a period of just the last year. First, the cost was raised from 17 cents to 30 cents and now, by another 2 cents, to 32 cents. That is the present end of what has been an increasingly sad story for the past many years. Some 20 years ago I worked in this city in another capacity and had to do a fair amount of mailing from an office here in Ottawa to reach people out on the West Coast, amongst other locations. At that time I could pretty well count on the fact that if I dropped a letter in the mailbox prior to two or three o'clock in the afternoon, someone in downtown Vancouver, even someone receiving residential mail, not just business mail, would get it the next day. There was about an 80 per cent chance. Certainly, if that person did not receive it the next day, he would receive it the day after that. However, now we hear the Minister bragging because the amount of delivery time has been reduced and that, on average, mail will cover that same span of territory, with all the increases in technology and science, in four or five days. That is called a great improvement.

In the last 20 years what has happened? Even more recently, in 1968, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, we had 6-cent delivery. It was raised to 7 cents, then to 8 cents, 10 cents, 12 cents, 14 cents, 17 cents, 30 cents and now 32 cents. There has been a 540 per cent increase since the Prime Minister took office. Instead of getting delivery across the country in one day or, at the most, two days, the Government brags about the fact that we will get it in four or five days. Certainly the imposed financial restrictions, the demand for unrealistic and early financial self-sufficiency which was demanded and implemented, and is still being implemented by the Government, creates an unrealistic pair of handcuffs for a post office management which is desperately trying to come to grips with the problems it has inherited in its attempt to provide better and improved service.

Next we had Bill C-124 and the six and five solution, another heavy-handed attempt to find scapegoats for the problems that that bunch over there created, and again the Government was supported by the Official Opposition, the Conservative Party, which has the gall to put this motion before us today. In the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which was studying submissions on Bill C-124, the six and five Bill, one of the Directors of Canada Post Corporation, Mr. Ron Lang, gave testimony. I asked him specifically what the likely impact of Bill C-124 would be on the post office, and I want to quote from Mr. Lang's response:

Let me be quite frank with you. Since this Bill has come down, it has not only thrown into question all the objectives of Canada Post Corporation, because the five-year plan which had been drawn up and the financial targets which are to be met are now all thrown into jeopardy, both on the receipt side and on the expenditure side—it is very, very doubtful whether the Crown corporation, if the Government pursues its Bill C-124, particularly on the price increase side but also on the labour relations side, is going to be able to meet its financial commitments or the financial stringencies this Government has placed on it. In other words, if it cannot meet them, what it is going to mean, in my opinion, as a director, is that the Crown corporation is going to have a larger deficit, and that is going to have to come out of general revenue.

So the Government puts it in handcuffs and then starts to kick it around. Then it complains about us, over here, being irresponsible because we say that it is not providing the service, that those city slicker lawyers over there do not care about what is happening to postal service in rural Canada. You call us irresponsible? That is really a laugh!

Again, these Members to my right are every bit as culpable because they set in place many of the backlashes and demands for early restraint, particularly the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) in his crusade that has made this Government act like Conservatives and do what they are doing.

I would just say that the Government must have an evil design, which they are masquerading or they are fools. It is their choice and they now have a chance to show their real hand once and for all. I and my Party urge them now to change course, to be flexible, to remove the impossible early target of total financial self-sufficiency and to urge Canada Post to extend the principle of industrial democracy in the management of that Postal Service in order that it be given room to act and deliver the goods on time, and at reasonable cost to the people of Canada whom we serve.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—CANADA POST CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bradley:

That this House, recognizing the importance of providing efficient, affordable, equitable mail service to all Canadians, and recognizing that Canada Post has reduced service while increasing its rates, condemns the Government for its failure to enforce the provisions of the Canada Post Corporation Act which require Canada Post to provide Canadians with adequate service at a reasonable cost.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to enter into this debate on the motion that has been filed by my colleague the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfold (Mr. Bradley), a motion that a number of us have wanted to have a chance to discuss. We have certainly wanted to have a chance to look at the postal facilities in Canada.

Today I want to look at basically three areas that are of concern to people in my riding. The first would be the monopoly aspects of the postal Corporation; the second would be the reduction of services that we are experiencing; and the third would be the lack of adequate facilities in many parts of my riding.

Dealing first with the monopoly aspects of the Corporation, we know that in the past there was a historical justification for this monopoly, simply because no one wanted to deliver the mail. Today there is no longer that justification. Private firms can provide the service, and there have been changes in technology that open all sorts of horizons for the delivery of mail.

In the past that monopoly was not strictly enforced, because it could not be. There was really no legal definition of a letter that allowed them to enforce that monopoly. That situation existed from the beginning of the postal service in Canada up until today.

Suddenly we are finding that private firms and other Governments can be competitive with the postal service in both price and service. The result of that is that the post office is now feeling a little threatened, so rather than look to improvements in service and competitiveness it has moved to expand its monopoly. How did it do that? It was in the area of redefining a letter. I understand that as of this morning it has decided to pull back that definition and reconsider. I am glad to see that, but certainly it is a little coincidental that it happens to be on the same day that we are going to debate that very issue. That definition was designed to close out competition and to guarantee the postal Corporation's market share, regardless of its competency or its efficiency.

If we look at the definition that had been proposed, I think we will see why. It is this:

> Mailable matter in any form, the mass of which does not exceed 500 grams, whether or not enclosed in an envelope, that is intended for transmission to any destination.

That definition was obviously very broad and very sweeping. We know that there were to be some exceptions to it, but they were few. What we found with that definition was that anything that could be sent was classified as mail. One of the aspects that caused me so much concern about that and about the monopolistic attitudes of the Corporation is that those powers can be defended and implemented simply by regulation, that is by Order in Council and so on. They do not have to come before the House of Commons.

This Crown Corporation can and is, and certainly was, in the terms of that past definition, willing to show its willingness to manipulate the marketplace to its own advantage, instead of really honing itself or working to improve its competition or to improve its efficiency, and essentially to create a better opportunity for itself in the marketplace. Instead of becoming the preferred route to the preferred option, it was gambling on closing the doors and forcing out its competition. What we saw in fact was that electronic mail would come under the jurisdiction of the post office. We found that courier service charges could go up and would be at a rate three times that of first-class mail. Couriers would have to charge triple that rate. We found that hand-delivered bills, whether by a municipality or by a corporation, would become illegal. They would now have to be delivered through the post office. All of this was brought about simply by publication in The Canada Gazette, and that was considered significant notice of change. That is how that definition was brought in.

Just to get an example of how that works, I think we should take a closer look at the definition process and how it came about. The information that that definition must be changed was placed in The Canada Gazette which, I am informed, has a circulation of approximately 2,700 people in Canada out of a total of 20 million who would use the postal facilities.

The only other thing that I understand was done was that a kit was sent to the media describing these changes. There was no kit sent to industry or to major users of the postal service. In fact, what happened is that opposition to that definition came about almost by accident. It was almost by word of mouth. It almost slipped by because there was not any great amount of publicity about it.

It would seem from that and from the previous definition that what we were going to see was that Canadians would be expected to pay inflationary prices simply to guarantee the profitability of Canada Post. We know that those cost increases are going to contribute to inflation, whether by adding costs to municipalities, to utility companies or to other corporations, because they cannot hand deliver their mail. All those things are reflected back into the spiral.

Something else that would have been affected by that definition would be the fact that we would have been looking at increased courier costs simply because there would no longer be the option of using bulk mail. They would charge for every individual envelope rather than using the bulk mail rate. Also there was to be charges on electric mail.

The defence for that definition was that Canada Post would never use the extreme power it had or the full, broad range of the definition. My question is, why in the world would they want to put it in? My question now is what kind of definition are we going to be looking at? Will it be significantly improved or will there be a bit of juggling and have much the same comeback?

These broad powers seem to be more and more a bad habit of this Government. We saw that reflected in Bill C-48 and in the National Energy Program. We see it also in Bill C-10. All the time we see the Government reaching out for power over large areas of territories and saying they will never use it. My theory is, if you don't need it, don't put it in; and if you do put it in, you are dealing with bad legislation.

The last concern I have with the monopoly approach to postal service is what it does toward eliminating competition. What happens here is very simple. If we end up in a strike situation in this country, as we have in the past, Canadians will be left in a very vulnerable position. Had the definition we had previously tabled gone through, much of that competition would have disappeared. Municipalities would not have been able to deliver their own mail. Therefore, we are left in a very vulnerable position.

I want to emphasize that I essentially grew up in the postal service in a lot of ways. My father worked in the post office virtually all his life. I know that the vast majority in the postal service are competent, efficient and hard-working. My question is, why does not Canada Post try to capitalize on those natural assets rather than try to protect its inefficiencies by going for a monopoly, increasing its territory and cutting out its competition? It should be capitalizing on what it has going for it. I believe it has a great deal going for it.

I want to move to the second area of concern, reduction of service. I relate that to rural Canada because in rural Canada the post office has historically had and today has a very special significance. It has become a vehicle for virtually everything, including shopping, regular mail, magazines and so on. It has become a very large part of rural life. However, there has been a steady deterioration of service in rural Canada. Now that service will be reduced even more.

This time it is going to be reduced with a double-edged sword. The first edge of that sword is no Saturday delivery. The second is that no postal stations will be open on Saturday. That may not be particularly significant in downtown Toronto, but it is in rural Peace River, rural Grande Prairie, Valleyview, Debolt and so on. Saturday is a very significant day for our farmers. It has long been the traditional marketing day, the day when farmers come to town to purchase their parts, get their groceries and, of course, pick up their mail. Suddenly we find that generations of tradition will come to an end, all this after rural customers have been suffering delivery problems in the past. Many have been driving five, ten, 15 or 20 miles or more to pick up their mail. Now there will be no Saturday delivery and the offices will not be open on Saturday.

The third area I want to touch on is facilities. That certainly is a very big concern in my part of the country. Not only do we have areas without delivery, which complicates things because it creates long waiting times in post offices simply because there are no boxes, but people are forced to pick up their mail in general delivery. That again complicates the process and again there are long lines. On top of that we find that many postal stations are in a poor state of repair with little room, poor light and heat, a shortage of staff, no parking space and so on. All of this is being provided by a Crown Corporation that wants to guarantee "that all Canadians have access to a basic level of service".

I want to give a few illustrations of that. In the City of Grande Prairie the post office is 20 years out of date. There is a shortage of boxes, both in the physical building and in the neighbourhood surrounding the town. There have been long delays for mail because of the huge line-ups for the general delivery service and lack of facilities. That City was promised a new post office building, with construction to begin in 1982-83. I met with senior officials of the Crown Corporation to discuss that. I now find that it has been delayed. How long, I do not know. I do not yet have any answers. It could be next year or the year after. There are no specifics. That area desperately needs new postal facilities.

McLellan has a post office facility which was built as a house in 1940. It is expected there will be considerable growth in that town next year with two major industries moving in. The postal facilities are already out of date for the existing population. In the Town of Grimshaw the post office is approximately one-half the size that is required. Again improved facilities have been promised, going back three years, but still no results.

In the small community of Debolt the postal facilities are so bad that they cannot even lock the door. It does not fit. It is propped shut by cans, garbage and so on. We have a lot of promises but very little tangible action in terms of providing facilities in rural Peace River where these facilities are so desperately needed.

Coupled with this we are now going to have a reduction in delivery service. That will cause even further delays, longer line-ups, more unsorted mail and more angry customers. Still the postal service remains intent on protecting its monopoly, protecting itself and cutting off competition. However, the problems will continue because the basic problems we are faced with are not being solved.

In his speech today the Minister gave a couple of definitions of the Crown Corporation. One was with regard to price increases. He said we have to be fair, that the price of a stamp has only gone from 17 cents to 32 cents over four years. That is still more than a 25 per cent a year increase. That is the justification of a Government which so loudly and provocatively talks about the six and five regime; it says 25 per cent is not bad.

The Minister spent a great deal of time saying that the post office is making improvements and a lot of progress. I say to him that the bottom line in improvements never comes from the manager or management, it has to come from the customer. Recently a survey was done among small businesses with regard to postal service in Canada. I understand it involved about 9,000 people. Approximately 67 per cent said there was no change in service; around 24 per cent said it was worse. Only 2 per cent said it was improved. Therefore, there is still a lot of work to do, certainly in terms of service and facilities.

We should continue to press for those improvements. I know they very much affect the riding of Peace River. It is something that I still get more mail on than almost any other issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have this opportunity of expressing my views on this motion. When we hear Hon. Members of the Opposition criticize alleged reductions in postal service, it soon becomes clear that the real target of their criticism is the Government. However, in this case, they missed their target. In fact, the legislation passed by the House on April 14, 1981 was approved by all parties, and no one can deny that. Thanks to this legislation under which the Canada Post Corporation was created, Canadians have enjoyed vastly improved, more consistent and faster postal services, a better job environment and all without increasing the deficit and the burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

It would be useful to recall the objects of this Crown corporation. The reason for entrusting a corporation rather than a department with responsibility for establishing and operating a postal service is that this was an opportunity for renewing the Canadian postal system and making it a source of pride for all Canadians.

So what has Parliament asked the new corporation to do? While maintaining basic postal service, the Corporation shall improve and extend its products and services, it shall provide a standard of service that will meet the needs of Canadians and that is similar, and I emphasize this, with respect to communities of the same size, and it shall utilize the human resources of the Corporation in a manner that will both attain the objects of the Corporation and ensure the commitment and dedication of its employees to the attainment of those objects. But that is not all. There is also the requirement to do all of this while maintaining rates that are both competitive and sufficient to help reduce a very substantial deficit.

At first glance, these objects seem to be so many constraints and by the same token, impossible to achieve, but nevertheless, if we take a careful look at the Corporation's first year of existence, it is clear that Canadian postal services have already made tremendous progress. The Corporation's management is to be praised for having translated the objects defined by Parliament into a management plan. I may add that the unions were also involved in this process as well as many of those who in the past have tried to introduce changes in our postal administration. Concentrating on three main elements: service, human relations and financial self-sufficiency, this management plan, which some people are anxious to criticize—I am sure I do not know why—has throughout 1982 given us a level of postal service we have not experienced for some time. I realize that much remains to be done, but the fact is that the Corporation is off to a head start and has a very good chance of being a winner.

The Canada Post Corporation has made service its number one priority. Service has not been interrupted. In fact, we have consistently had better and better quality service. There seems to be an atmosphere of openness in contacts between the Corporation and the unions representing its employees. Here again, Mr. Speaker, the Corporation has become more reliable as an enterprise, and less susceptible to work stoppages whenever there is a difference of opinion between parties in the collective bargaining process. The Corporation has managed to cut spending substantially without resorting to massive lay-offs that would have raised an already high unemployment rate during our present economic recession. The Corporation's objectives have all been met, and it is surprising to hear people talking about reductions in service, while the opposite is true. Keeping a steady course while at the same time keeping all three objectives in line is no mean feat, and it should be recognized that both directors and employees of the Corporation are doing an excellent job.

The question is, where was the Corporation to get the money it needed to improve services, while it had to reduce its deficit of $200 million or $300 million? How could it maintain industrial peace when it had to change many of its procedures, which would inevitably result in major changes as far as the employees were concerned? The objects that formed the basis for this new Crown Corporation were and still are essential to the renewal of our postal service. A start has been made, and it is a fact that the infant is in pretty good health, Mr. Speaker.

If Canada's postal service is to maintain the course set out for it by the Members of this House, the Corporation's directors must have the authority to make adjustments to the manner in which, services are provided. The Corporation must be given the tools it requires to carry out its mission. The Corporation's board of directors has specific powers with a view to managing Canadian postal services. Although, as in other areas, Parliament must maintain a healthy vigilance, it would be unfortunate and contrary to the spirit in which the legislation was passed to make this debate some sort of trial based on incomplete and biased evidence.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that thanks to the provisions of our legislation, the objectives of the Corporation and the professionalism of its directors and its employees, Canadians will be provided with a better postal service. We have already witnessed a promising initial step. This is a start, it should be encouraged, and Members on both sides of the House should be prepared to do so.

[English]

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be able to take part in the debate on this motion by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), which states:

> That this House, recognizing the importance of providing efficient, affordable, equitable mail service to all Canadians, and recognizing that Canada Post has reduced service while increasing its rates, condemns the Government for its failure to enforce the provisions of the Canada Post Corporation Act which require Canada Post to provide Canadians with adequate service at a reasonable cost.

I have had the privilege of serving as a Member of our Party's post office committee for a number of years, Mr. Speaker. I also had the distinct privilege of serving under the former post office critic, the Hon. Walter Dinsdale, who, as we are all aware, is being buried this afternoon in his home town of Brandon. Walter had a special and wonderful way of communicating with those with whom we had considerable differences.

As we are aware, the post office had, I believe, 28 unions and it was hoped that with this new Canada Post Corporation that number would be reduced, thereby reducing the possibility of strikes. I recall when we were meeting with the unions, in particular with CUPW, we had to deal with that flamboyant Scotsman, Joe Davidson, and Walter was able to reason with him, and then later on with Jean-Claude Parrot. I see the former Postmaster General smiling. Mr. Parrot was not as easy to deal with, nor as flamboyant, as the great Joe Davidson but he was a pretty tough nut, too. I also recall the many meetings we had with the Letter Carriers' Union and Bob McGarry and Bill Finley. Certainly that union has been a very reasonable one. Let us hope that both unions are now well aware of the serious situation with which the Canada Post Corporation is faced, although I think all Members would agree that CUPW is still not the most popular union on the ratings scale across Canada.

Now, we on this side of the House had long urged the conversion of the then post office to a Crown Corporation. We were moving in that direction in 1979. I can only say, therefore, what a crushing disappointment it has been to us all to see the direction which the new Corporation, launched with such hope so short a while ago, has now taken. Years ago the Royal Mail moved swiftly, surely, efficiently and cheaply. It operated as a virtual monopoly because it did its job so well that it was unchallenged. People trusted the post office. They had such confidence in it that they paid it the ultimate compliment; they took it for granted. They did not even consider the possibility that articles in its care might be lost, delayed or damaged, things that we assume will happen today and do happen today.

I do not want to suggest that we felt its conversion to Crown corporation status would magically bring back the good old days; far from it. But we felt by providing a corporate framework, semi-autonomous from the cold hand of the cabinet, with a thrust into the icy waters of the competitive world of private enterprise, that we were giving it the best chance to work out its own salvation. So far it has not worked, for a number of reasons.

In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, the root cause of the Corporation's difficulties is the mandate with which this Government cast it adrift in the first place. Specifically, what other Crown corporation has ever been created and then told, concurrent with efforts to get its feet firmly planted in a new environment, to eradicate a massive operating deficit? It had been saddled with that deficit, I might add, by policies of the very Government that was wishing it bon voyage. So as the direct result of an insane repayment schedule the Government sends it off with a little christening gift of a 76 per cent increase in postal rates.

Everyone in the country, it seemed, was highly upset but the duplicity had worked; they were not upset at the Government, who had not only authorized the new rates but by its policies had made them necessary. No, they were upset at the new postal corporation. What a parting gift from its loving parent!

As a result of the framework within which it was forced to act from the very beginning, the Corporation was forced to take some very hard and unpleasant decisions. The most unsavoury of these is its quest for a monopoly in its area of operations. The very idea is repugnant in a society which likes to think of itself as still retaining some semblance of free enterprise orientation. This organization has been declared to be a genuine corporation, just like in the private sector. It has been sent out into the world with an utterly unconscionable price increase, the likes of which no private sector entity would ever be able to impose. Then, to prevent the public from registering its disapproval in the time-honoured free enterprise way, its competition is forced to charge three times whatever Canada Post charges, whether or not it is necessary from a business standpoint. Whatever Canada Post chooses to charge, the competition is forced to price itself out of the market. It is breath-taking. It is what Karl Marx warned us about, only he thought it would be the private sector that tried taking the ordinary people to the cleaners.

Mr. Ouellet: You were at the committee and voted for it.

Mr. Darling: Most certainly I was at the committee, and we felt anything would be an improvement. Certainly I voted for it along with other members of the committee, but we felt the Corporation would be an improvement and we were guaranteed by the Postmaster General that it would solve a great many of the problems. I would like the Hon. Minister to refute that.

When the rest of the business community, Mr. Speaker, must compete for the patronage of the public by offering better service and greater value for money paid, I find it offensive that a Crown corporation can effectively legislate its competition out of business. The Minister, when queried in committee about couriers, sort of sidestepped the issue a bit and then finally said that, well, couriers would be tolerated. Of course, we now know they are being tolerated but this is certainly going to change, I understand. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that in today's Toronto Sun there is a heading which says: "McGill Prof Says Feds Show: Anti-combines Flaw". It goes on to mention the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, and then finishes off with this:

> The Government is one of the biggest offenders in competition, he adds. "Canada Post (run by Michael Warren) is a case in point. In mail delivery, would-be competitors are warned off by the prospect of fines and jail sentences."

We are well aware that a good many municipalities are feeling the pinch because of the great demands on their services and, of course, municipal taxes have been increasing drastically. Some municipalities are endeavouring to save money by having their water or hydro bills, and even their tax bills, delivered by members of their staff. In my village of Burks Falls a good many bills are delivered along the main street within a few minutes, just by handing them to the people concerned. Canada Post Corporation is trying to take this matter to court because it wants to extract its pound of flesh and its 30 cents for every bill. I hope something can be worked out so that the municipalities can continue to save money in this way.

There is no problem with the small rural post offices because anything within their radius of operations is delivered within 24 hours and sometimes even less. It is when monstrosities such as the Gateway or South Central termini and the huge sorting depots in other metropolitan areas are involved that the problems begin.

I find it rather threatening that the Government sees nothing wrong in permitting this kind of competition, and I find it frustrating that by deliberate actions it has made it necessary for the municipalities to take such steps. Years ago there was no thought of such a thing. Bills went to the post office and were delivered at nominal cost.

There is another aspect to this matter of monopoly which I find worrisome, Mr. Speaker, and that is that in the event of a postal strike, the monopoly is not lifted. That gives not only the Canada Post Corporation but the postal unions a stranglehold on the Canadian economy. Is that what the House wants? It is not what I want and it certainly is not what the businessmen and citizens of Parry Sound-Muskoka want. We are all aware of the tragic strikes that have taken place in the past. One lasted 48 days, bankrupted a good many firms and imposed a great financial burden on others.

The Post Office Corporation has announced that rates are to be increased by two cents on February 15. To add contempt to the offence, the press releases announcing this increase were actually being distributed while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was using postal rates as an example of Government restraint, in one of his famous fireside chats. If governments were elected on the basis of gall instead of competence, the present one would be all but unbeatable. On the other hand, if they were elected on the basis of competence instead of smoke and mirrors, it would long since have gone the way of the United Reform Party, the Bloc Populaire and the Liberal Progressives.

Counting the 13 cent baby bonus with which it was launched then, that means that the Canadian public will have been asked to pay postal rate increases of over 88 per cent in less than a 16-month period.

Six and five is a big laugh, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian public is not blind. It knows full well that in times of inflation, prices will rise. All it asks is a little something in return. It asks for increased productivity.

To put it even more bluntly, it asks for better service. Canada Post Corporation officials trot out all kinds of statistics to show that, indeed, the service is getting better. They tell us that 88 per cent of mail, or whatever the current figure is, is delivered on time. Of course, no one has ever defined what "on time" really means. From the standpoint of the businessmen in my area in particular, it is easy to suspect that the definition of "on time" is being adjusted, rather than the service being improved. What we see from Huntsville, or from Burks Falls, is an average 11-day delivery time for a newspaper from there to Ottawa. We see the cancellation of rural Saturday deliveries and a bare-faced attempt to do away with Saturday wicket service as well. We now have a five-day rural mail delivery service. As has been mentioned by my colleagues, a great many farmers make it a point to go to town on Saturday and may want to register a letter or buy a money order. If the wicket service is reduced to five days, it will mean a hardship on them.

I hope that the Postmaster General will look at this aspect of postal service again. He should tell his colleague, Michael Warren, to keep his cotton-picking paws off closing small-town post offices on Saturday. He has done enough damage already by taking away Saturday delivery.

It is also worth mentioning that when the Prime Minister assumed office, the first-class postal rate was six cents. By the standards the Government has set in its management of the rest of the economy, I suppose a 553 per cent increase in rates in 15 years is not out of the way; but it is by the standards of every other Canadian Government in history. In return we have a service that, if it did not affect the profitability of every other business in the country, would be a joke.

By profession I am a real estate broker and insurance agent. In all truth, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that today no one would expect an offer to purchase to be put in the mail and delivered within a reasonable time. They are all sent by special courier. My sons, who now operate the business as I no longer participate in it, have their salesmen drive 100 or 200 miles to deliver an offer. All across the country insurance offices no longer depend on the post office but use a regular insurance courier. The mail is picked up at the offices and delivered to Toronto within 24 hours. If it were sent through the post office, who knows how long it would take?

These are the things that worry a great many people, Mr. Speaker. Of all the Departments of Government, this is the one about which Members receive most complaints. Weekly newspapers carry advertisements complaining about the post office. When I found out that it took 11 days for delivery of the newspapers, I wrote to one paper asking it to make sure the papers were mailed on the date which appeared on the masthead. Most newspapers are sent out on a Wednesday. I checked with the post office and found that they are sent out in bags on the Wednesday but take 11 days to travel 250 miles.

I have received letters and petitions from groups of senior citizens who are incensed by the proposed two-cent increase in the cost of mailing a letter. Many other constituents have written about delays in delivery and damaged letters.

We expect much better service than this, but it does not seem that we are getting it. The motion presented today by my hon. colleague should induce the Government to pay attention to this very important service. We hope that the Canada Post Corporation will try to do a better job in the future than it has in the past.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it gives me some pleasure to join briefly in this debate today, a debate which was instituted by the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) and just entered into by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). I should like to refer to some of the comments of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka because I think they invited comment. I am sure he would be surprised if I did not respond, at least in some way, to some of his comments.

I, like he, have been contacted over the last weeks by a number of utility commissions, small-town services and municipalities which have considered over the last few months the possibility of direct delivery of their utility bills, tax notices and so on. I think every Hon. Member of the House has been subjected to some kind of lobby with respect to this sort of delivery, because obviously municipalities are concerned about costs and whether or not the extra two cents or indeed the current 30 cents will create problems for them.

By the same token, it seems to me that Hon. Members opposite are suggesting that a decision has been taken to reject all submissions made by municipalities and all those made by utility companies. I do not believe that could be further from truth. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka must know that indeed discussions were entered into which would permit some flexibility and would in fact understand, recognize and permit a mechanism whereby the delivery of such mail could take place in a preferred way. Indeed, I believe an announcement was made just this day in response to the request for an amendment of the definition of "letter" to deal with, among other things, bulk rates, bulk mail, the movement of securities and the use of new technology. This has been responded to, in that the new bulk rates will be payable based upon the number of letters contained in containers or given to couriers, and upon their pre-sort before delivery to Canada Post.

In addition, provisions have been made for special rates with respect to the movement of securities.

Finally—and this is of particular interest to me—organizations such as Union Gas and Consumers Gas, which have been working very closely with Canada Post, are very concerned about the new technology. I am sure the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk must be aware of the new teleprinter technology which would allow a gas meter operator to go from home to home delivering a bill to the occupant. In recognition of this, an agreement has been reached with the postal Corporation to provide for the use of this new technology. To suggest today that there is total inflexibility, that in fact a monopoly is being sought, and that there is no possibility for relief from additional pressures of added cost, quite frankly is not correct. I am sure my hon. friends would want me to put those comments on the record, particularly if they were not aware of them.

Whether these comments take a bit of the sting out of what they attempted to say today or whether it changes the complexion of what the Hon. Member is trying to do with his motion, I do not know, but there is no question that these comments had to be put on the record. I, for one, am particularly pleased to have been able to respond to constituents such as the Union Gas Company that have written to me and entered into negotiations directly with the postal Corporation. They are finding that it is not a great monolith, unprepared to listen to them, but is prepared to respond to the recommendations of private entrepreneurs. In fact, they are finding that the Government and the Corporation can meet their demands and concerns.

I should like to spend a few moments looking at the motion before the House, specifically as it deals with service improvement or the lack thereof, according to the Hon. Member. If the world were perfect and we had all things, I suppose all of us could have voted to have the new postal Corporation somehow wipe out all its debt, to continue to deliver mail at the rate which created the debt, to improve its service and profile as well as the reliance upon the Corporation which people should have. I suppose we could have indicated that if it proved itself we would give it an increased rate, but this is not the kind of world in which we live. The House voted to send the postal Corporation its mandate. The time not to do it was when we had the vote. It is too late today to say that we voted to do it but we really did not want to, that we were kind of forced to and thought things would be better. I cannot accept such reasoning. We all voted as reasoning persons. We recognized that indeed we were imposing a great difficulty upon the postal Corporation, but we asked it to deal with its debt. It seems to me that Canada Post is dealing with it reasonably and that it is continuing to try to provide a service. Also it seems to me that we are not asking for the payment of that service by very difficult and expensive methods or in a disproportionate way.

If we asked people in the remote areas of Canada to pay the true cost of the delivery service, which I agree they have the right to expect, would they use it or be able to pay for it? Does it not seem reasonable that if we are to demand a service in remote areas, the beneficiaries of mail delivery elsewhere should somehow be required to pay for a portion of the cost of remote distance delivery?

In addition, I ask Hon. Members whether they truly believe that there has not been an improvement in service. After only a few months of officially gaining its status as a Crown Corporation, a status which permits Canada Post to operate as a business and without the trammels imposed by several Government Departments, it announced that 74,751 new homes and businesses across Canada would be served by some 170 additional letter carriers. Many of these calls became operational by April 1 of this year. This increased service represented the first major expansion of mail delivery service since the Government tightened financial controls in 1978-79. The improvement in mail delivery represented a $5.5 million investment in the provision of faster and more accessible mail services.

I and many Members of the House argued with some validity that there were many areas in our constituencies that by any criteria deserved increased service. At the same time we argued that somehow it had to be found within the confines of restraints. This was done. To argue today that this is not an increase in service, which should be lauded as having been accomplished by the postal Corporation, is not to acknowledge what has truthfully taken place.

The expansion of mail delivery took place right across Canada. It was not isolated to only one or two communities. Also it took place with due regard for the public purse, and the financial bottom line is a key to further progress in the mails. Canada Post's No. 1 priority is to improve service; I think the chairman of the Corporation indicated that. Its aim is to provide a service second to none in the mails.

Accordingly, one of the first things it did once it became a Corporation was to set up six action programs called "quick starts". It staffed teams with some of its best managers and told them to attack immediately six critical areas where Canada Post had to intervene quickly in straightening out operations and moving the mails more expeditiously. These quick starts have paid off handsomely in boosting over-all performance.

I should like to offer Hon. Members some evidence as to where they have started to pay off. A user's guide for large volume mailers was produced and distributed. By working more closely on pre-sort and make-up requirements, Canada Post now saves time and money, which is reflected throughout the system. A turnaround team dealing with mis-sorts and mis-sends has been auditing 371 mechanized plants and postal stations. Quality control teams are checking very carefully to ensure that these miscues are corrected as quickly as possible.

Several new transportation routes have been set up to move the mail faster between high density centres. If the mail movement between my constituency and Ottawa, for example, is any test of whether or not this is working, then I have to suggest that it is.

These initiatives and others are all directed by a special body called the Service Improvement Group. It has taken over the implementation of the quick start programs and it has been charged with the responsibility of seeing that the work continues on schedule.

Canada Post also set up another group that combines senior executives from both marketing and operations to tap the ideas of first-line supervisors and managers. Canada Post was swamped with letters and memos from its own employees who really want to contribute to service improvements. They are sending in their ideas, and management is acting on many of them.

Let me cite a few specific examples of changes that are now taking place. In Calgary, a special project team is improving delivery times for processing mail from large volume mailers. In Vancouver, Canada Post adjusted the times when letter boxes are cleared to provide earlier processing at the plant. Parcel delivery in Edmonton has been reorganized, improving service by about 25 per cent. In Quebec, Canada Post redesigned some of its special delivery routes. It is beginning to improve performance in mail going to the western part of that Province. In the Atlantic postal region, sales territories have been redrawn to ensure maximum sales initiatives at minimum cost.

All of these initiatives, the quick starts, the longer term projects and the response they have generated from managers, have given the Corporation a good beginning. Canada Post is moving on a wide front, and its success so far is due to many people working a little harder or a little more smartly to improve service. Canada Post will not become a success overnight, which I do not think any Member expected, but I believe that the turnaround has begun. I suggest that the evidence is there for all of us to see.

During the past year, Canada Post has also decided to take on its most formidable competitors in the courier business. Exploiting its great advantage of having more outlets than most, 8,000 across the country, Canada Post expanded Priority Post, its premier courier service, in major cities across Canada. Businesses are learning that important mail can and will be delivered on time and reliably. Canada Post takes pride in the growing success that this premium courier service is enjoying.

Incidentally, I might just tell the House that only last week, one of my constituents who was leaving the country and required his passport very quickly, requested—not because he particularly distrusted Canada Post but because he wanted to ensure quick delivery—that a specific courier, whom he named, be used to have his passport delivered from my constituency office. The fact is that the courier service on which everyone relied lost the passport, and we were required to do special duty in order to obtain another passport for him.

This just proves that notwithstanding the fact that far fewer pieces are sorted and delivered by that courier service, they also have miscues, misdirections and misdeliveries. It is unreasonable to expect that there will not be these misadventures.

When one looks at the number of pieces that Canada Post has to deal with each year versus the number of pieces that, in fact, do get misdirected, I do not think that any reasonable person can do anything but suggest that Canada Post is doing a very good job. I want to stand here and compliment them for what they do right, while recognizing that they are also there to receive my complaints when they do something wrong and, better still, are prepared to correct it.

Let us examine the performance of the less esoteric types of mail that almost every Canadian receives or sends out. Since becoming a Crown Corporation in October of 1981, Canada Post has focused most of its efforts on its top priority, which is to improve postal service to its customers. Changes in mail handling procedures, new transportation routes and improved controls over the national networks are just a few of the service initiatives that have been and are being applied. Consider the results of these initiatives. For August, 1982, on time delivery of first class mail was 88.7 per cent, compared with 80.4 per cent in the same period in 1980. This represents the highest monthly average that Canada Post has attained since 1976. It is true that we would like to see figures of 95 per cent or 98 per cent, but the fact is that there has been some improvement. I suggest that this proves my point that the suggestion in today's motion that there has been no improvement in services does not reflect what in fact has been happening.

Local first class mail, letters mailed within a city for delivery within the same area, had a success rate of 94.6 per cent. Forward first class mail, letters mailed for delivery in a different city, improved by 13 points. In most of the other areas sampled, mail service showed a substantial improvement over the levels of the previous year. I wonder whether, if other private sector corporations had shown that type of improvement in productivity and delivery of their goods or service, they would not just be a little proud of that and also somewhat concerned about critics still saying that they are doing it wrong.

Indisputably, Canada Post's performance has improved, is improving and shows every sign of continuing to improve. Improvement means change, and this is not brought about by the fainthearted. Daring and refreshing changes are taking place in Canada Post, which accounts for the mails being moved more expeditiously and with greater dispatch.

The new mail handling techniques are not the only explanation for improved mail delivery. Not only has Canada Post taken a fresh look at how to improve service and productivity, but smoother and more cordial labour relations are leading to a new pride among the 60,000 employees. They are beginning to realize that they belong to a class organization that is vital to the economic well-being of the nation and vital to the strength of its social fabric. A renewed pride and spirit is not the least of Canada Post's achievements and performance over the past year.

Let me reassure you, Mr. Speaker, that despite progress and achievement, Canada Post has not become smug. It fully realizes that innumerable challenges lie ahead, that only unstinting daily efforts by both management and labour can bring about a truly superlative mail service. That is the aim of the Corporation, to provide a truly superlative mail service that does not rely on the public purse. Even though the results still fall short of the standards set by the Corporation, it is clear that the revitalizing of this essential national service is well under way.

Canada Post has also made a commitment to the public and to the House. It will continue to release reports on mail service, such as the one I cited above, on a regular basis regardless of the results. I think that reflects a lot of confidence in the future by this Corporation.

The survival of Canada Post as a business is not just a concern about daily operational realities. Canada Post, while it has entered the space age, still has to look at the mails of the future. It is well aware that this is the age of the microchip and electronic wizardry that is revolutionizing communications everywhere. Canada Post recently established a business development division which is keeping the Corporation attuned to the latest developments in technology.

Canada Post is also well aware of the fact that it has to reposition its parcel services and to explore all the avenues opening up in electronic mail. It realizes that it has to find new ways to better use its more than 8,000 branch offices if it is to increase revenues substantially.

Canada Post is examining the introduction of a proof of delivery feature to telepost messages. Incidentally, telepost is that electronic mail service operated jointly with CN and CP Telecommunications. This proof of delivery feature would provide accurate records without sacrificing efficiency. The Corporation is also studying ways of providing a two to three hour delivery service across Canada to the approximately 50 communities where telepost facilies exist.

I must refer to Canada Post's approach in expanding its business and improving its performance. It has adopted the attitude that it must aggressively compete in the marketplace for more business and revenue. This attitude that it must be aggressive and competitive underlies the record of increasing success that I have mentioned before. While some Members may hark back to the golden age of perfection in the mails, Canada Post knows full well that in terms of superior performance it cannot go forward unless it adopts the methods and attitudes of its most formidable competitors.

In conclusion I might suggest that some of my questions are addressed to that stance. I think much of what is at stake here is a continuation of the universal mail service in Canada. Such universal mail service is jealously guarded by governments of all countries, and it gives one pause to wonder just a bit why, in fact, this particular Government and this particular country should be different.

Canada Post has often been criticized with the same adjectives that are used to criticize business. I consider that to be a sign that the mails are now operating as a business, and I welcome it. Such criticism augurs well for the future of improved mail performance in Canada.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in support of this motion brought forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Bradley). It is also very nice to see just what an impact he had on the Government today when it had to bring in amended regulations today so that we could get another shot at the Government and so that we would not have such a terrible definition of a "letter".

Mr. Ouellet: It was done before.

Mr. Stewart: It does not say that. It says November 23. I think the Minister must have suffered a little trepidation when the notice came out today.

Mr. Kristiansen: You buccaneers have had your chance again.

Mr. Stewart: In today's press release Mr. Warren stated: "In the preparation of most government regulations, there is no requirement for a process of public consultation". The press release went on to state:

> This will require that the revised regulation be regazetted early in December 1982. "This way, a minimum of sixty days will be available to obtain any further public reaction to the revised regulation", the President of Canada Post said.

I wonder if the government would seriously consider changing the regulation so that it makes some sense. The Oxford Dictionary tells us that the definition of a letter is, "A written or printed message addressed to a person, or persons, usually sent by post or messenger, and fairly long". The definition of a letter, which we hope will be withdrawn, states that it is "any mailable matter, in any form, whose weight does not exceed 500 grams, whether or not enclosed in an envelope, and intended for transmission to any destination or delivery to any addressee in Canada".

Mr. Malone: Don't send a note across the House.

Mr. Stewart: I had prepared a long dissertation in opposition to exactly what that definition said, but, hopefully, it will not be required. We have all heard the little, old adage:

A tisket, a tasket
A brown and yellow basket,
I sent a letter to my love
But on the way the post office lost it—
And it cost me 30 cents.

We have all experienced this on a regular basis. In my offices, both here and in my riding, I personally get more mail with regard to the faulty post office service than with regard to any other item which crosses my desk.

In October of last year, when the Canada Post Corporation came into being, the president of the new corporation, Michael Warren, listed three goals for the following five years. The first was the aim of having the mail delivered on time. I am sure he said that with tongue in cheek. Second was the plan to place the Corporation in a financial break-even position. That was the first time I had ever heard of anyone who wanted to run a corporation and just make it break even. That is not the way the free enterprise system works, in my view. I just received a letter the other day which stated:

Dear Ron:

Here's another little s-disturber for you. I certainly wouldn't mind paying the postage in Canada if we had the service. The last letter I received from Bruce took three weeks. It used to take a week. We get one down here in five days.

That letter came from Florida with a U.S. postage stamp. Mr. Warren said that the second plan was to break even. I might add that the clipping which was attached to the letter came from a Florida newspaper, the Sun-Sentinel, dated November 3, 1982 and the by-line is Los Angeles. It states:

The U.S. Postal Service made money in fiscal 1982 and a postal rate increase projected for late 1983 will be put off until 1984, Postmaster General William Bolger said.

Letters in the United States require only a 20 cent stamp, yet the U.S. post office makes a profit. That is a little different from what we are asked to accept here by Mr. Warren. Third, he hoped to establish a closer relationship with the Corporation's eight unions. I am sure that every person in Canada wishes him well and, as has been pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), both with CUPE and some of the others, he has his work cut out for him, but we do wish him well. These goals of efficiency and self-sufficiency were admirable, but right from the beginning it was recognized that the attainment of these aims would result in internal upheaval and in additional financial burden on the users of the postal service, because when costs outrun revenues by that much, then things do not run on time and service must suffer. Thus, the fact that both these problems have surfaced should come as no surprise to any of us.

What has been a surprise, a most unwelcome surprise, I might add, and an unwarranted one at that, is that the factors contributing to the creation of these problems led to a reduction and not an expansion of the existing services as was expected. We are now paying more for something and getting less. We are paying First World price for service, but we are getting Third World class in service.

Mr. Ouellet: That's not your quote.

Mr. Stewart: Mail delivery on Saturday, in rural areas, which is considered an important and vital service to those involved, has been eliminated. Despite official claims that on time delivery of first class mail has improved, senders and receivers right across the country, and everyone who spoke here have a litany of horror stories. We all know better than to think that service has been expanded. News stories of mail taking days to reach its destination in the same city remain frequent and have led to public frustration, and the continuing annoyance and anger of the public is not without substance. Proof of this attitude can be found in the Corporation's own figures which reveal that the usage of the service has dropped noticeably. Canadians who had expected improvements and should have seen improvements, have now had their hopes dashed again and, in disgust, have turned to alternative services where possible.

What has been the Corporation's response to those defections? It chose to legislate rather than to entice. It sought to expand upon its monopoly rather than to improve its service. I hope this announcement will give the Corporation its second sober thought that we hear so much about. It has sought to expand its monopolies rather than improve its services, and then it redefined "a letter" which we have already gone through.

That redefinition of "a letter" upsets so many Canadians that it actually alienated them even further, and the response to this arbitrary definition was predictable. Strong and angry opposition was heard from the financial community, from business, consumer groups, the municipalities and the public in general. The Minister responsible for Canada Post, who is seated across the aisle, has received over 300 representations since the last I heard, and I would bet there are many more by today, concerning the complete matter. Therefore, there could have been no doubt in the minds of Government Members opposite when this was brought to their attention today that they had better do something about it, and do it quickly.

The first intimation that the Corporation was looking to grab extra bucks where it could, came when the proposed definition of "a letter" was published in the Canada Gazette on July 3. The public was given 60 days to respond, as we are aware, and will now have 60 more days. This is the first time since the issue came to public attention in over four months that the Government has had the decency to respond, prompted, I presume, by today's opposition. Only today, when forced to speak to the issue because the Official Opposition selected the topic for debate, did the Minister responsible for the Corporation finally get around to ending the form and climate of uncertainty which has existed since the definition was announced. It has taken the Government four months to come to its senses and agree not to support this disastrous definition. I wish it had done the same with regard to metric.

For this tardy yet welcome response, we can be grateful. However, the Minister has stated that the Government itself will be bringing forward its own regulations on the issue some time in the spring. Knowing the Government's penchant for dipping into people's pockets on even the barest pretext, I am not so sure that the Government's own definition of "regulations governing the Corporation's mandate" will not result in an equally odious proposal. Let us hope not.

It is to be hoped that the Government will take serious note of the obligations raised over the definition of "a letter" when it begins to form its own rules. It should pay attention to the fact that the business community has taken strong exception to any further penalties being placed on it in connection with the use of courier services. In the case of my own business, I would have had to break the law to continue to deliver my statements of account to my customers. The business community is absolutely beleaguered by a chaotic economic climate, and it relies on rapid transit of its transactions to remain current and solvent. There seems to have been no consideration of that fact taken into account. In the absence of reliable public postal service, many businesses have turned to private couriers for this vital asset of their operations. The Government, when creating the Corporation, was aware that if it banned couriers or made their use prohibitive, it would face an absolutely embarrassing revolt by business. All the letters we have received have affirmed that. Therefore, couriers were permitted to operate, but it was stipulated that the fee involved had to be at least three times the cost of sending a letter by mail, which has been pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. The fact that thousands of Canadian businesses chose to accept this exhorbitant rate, rather than use the mail, attests to their lack of confidence in the postal service. The Corporation, with its back to the financial wall, instead of improving service to entice such users back into its fold, sought to further penalize those who out of necessity turned to other services.

Now we come to the matter of electronic transmission, which I am sure must come up again. While electronic mail is exempt during transmission, the proposed definition which we had before us appeared to mean that once a paper copy of the transmission had been made, the paper copy was then considered a letter, and postage had to be paid. Absolutely idiotic. Anyone could realize instantly just what was happening, and what a financial nightmare this would become, for businesses to have to pay for services that were not rendered. One wonders about the mentality responsible for this type of thinking. It reminds me of the metric issue. The Government was right finally to refuse to accept such a dumb definition of a letter. I wish that they could reconsider the metric question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: The refusal was appropriate on many counts, not the least of which was the regulation involving punishment for non-compliance. Mandatory definition of a letter at this point, mandatory use of metric, and the threat to Canadians of something not debated properly in the House of Commons, not gone to committees, is the threat of imprisonment. That is something we have to keep in our minds, that by Order in Council it is legal now in the wonderful country of Canada to have internment camps.

There was a provision which stated that any violator could be prosecuted by indictment or summary conviction and given anything from a fine to five years in prison. Is that not really something for us to believe in that in this country of Canada you could actually get a prison sentence for violating such a simple thing as a letter. It is interesting to note that any time the Government or its agencies introduce new legislation it seems, lately, there is always inserted that threat of imprisonment. This is quite possibly one of the reasons why the Government laid the groundwork for the establishment of internment camps under the Emergency Measures Order, as it was passed by Order in Council.

This Government is becoming famous, or infamous, as the case may be, for threatening to put Canadians in jail if they do not do what the Government orders. Mandatory imposition has become the rule, not the exception. Canadians do not deserve to be behind bars. The people who consider that they had to use that threat maybe should take their place.

The very fact that the regulation was proposed in the first place should indicate to the Government that something is terribly wrong with the direction being implemented by senior officials of Canada Post. The goals I first reiterated are commendable. The methods being used to obtain those goals are not.

There was a time when mail delivery in Canada was the envy of other nations around the world. The words, "Royal Mail", on trucks, street boxes, uniforms and buildings seemed to signify a type of treatment being given the transmission and delivery of letters and parcels. For a few pennies at most, our mail was delivered swiftly and intact. The post office then had a well-deserved reputation. I worked as a postman at Christmastime, as a youth in high school, and as a summer job, and I know how important that oath was to all of us and how we would scamper all over that post office when we could not ascertain where a letter should be delivered, to make sure that it got to its rightful owner. The "Royal Mail" was given "royal" attention. Why do we then find ourselves in the mess we are in today?

It is perhaps no coincidence that our sorry lapse into the present state of affairs began when this Government, in an effort to stamp out all references to the word "royal", included the Post Office in its fevered and foolish rush to establish a hyphenated Canada as the questionable mark of our national and independent identity. Small wonder, then, that the Government exhibits no alarm over the arrogance of Canada Post officials. When you abandon tradition, you also turn your back on the values such tradition engenders. These values, and the result of attempts to live up to such values, provided the nation with services in many areas which were second to none. The handling of our "royal" mail was a prime example. When the Government eliminated the word "royal" it seemed to signal an abandonment of the type of service implicit in the word.

Thrust into the void, Canada Post has created new types of service, priority post, intelpost and telepost, all designed simply to generate more money for the Corporation—not better service, only more money.

The price increase in stamps is the next thing I would like to look at for a moment. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to office stamps were 6 cents. At the end of 1981 the price rose to 30 cents a stamp, up from 17 cents, an increase of 88 per cent. We did not get a corresponding increase in the quality of service. Another increase, to 32 cents, is set to take place this coming February 15. We have four more years to go before the goal of self-sufficiency is achieved. You don't have to be a mathematician to realize how much higher the price of postage stamps will have to go before this goal is realized. The President of Canada Post has said that the next increase would have been much higher, but he was forced to remain within the Government's six and five guidelines. In the meantime I understand Great Britain's post office is running at a profit, and you have just heard that the United States is actually postponing a price increase.

Two years down the road the President of Canada Post will undoubtedly find a way to make up for the loss resulting from the period of imposed restraint. By that time the five or six people left using the service will be faced with a postage stamp worth more than the dollar it costs to buy it. Mr. Warren is not worried, why should he be? No single person, in my view, is worth a salary of between $100,000 and $150,000, who does not generate productivity. I would suggest that if Mr. Warren wants to be a winner he should set aside his personal goal and give his undivided attention to the manner in which he pursues the three goals which he stated for the Corporation.

In Hansard on July 19, 1982, at page 19439, under Standing Order 43, I was referring to the difficulty of mail delivery to one of my constituents. The suggestion I made then was that the cost of each registered letter not delivered within 48 hours be deducted from the salary of the President of Canada Post, and perhaps he would recognize the plight of Canadians with regard to their postal service. That still stands.

Relations between Canada Post employees and management have deteriorated to a point of almost constant confrontation, and the public has borne the brunt and the cost of this conflict. To dwell on the labour-management issue at this point would serve no purpose. The issues of contention are well documented and widely known. What we are looking for are answers and improvements.

By implementing policies which would create confidence in the service, by delivering the mail on time and intact, the management of Canada Post and its employees would certainly earn the respect of Canadians. To ask this Government to appreciate the necessity of public respect is perhaps asking too much. The Post Office, on the other hand, was once a respected institution. I would suggest to officials that too much time and effort has been wrongly directed to the definition of a letter, and that in the ensuing time that we have, when this goes back for a change, that it be struck from their minds.

I would further suggest that they study very carefully the dictionary definition of "service". The Oxford Dictionary tells us that service is the work done to meet a need. The need exists. I defy any Member of this House to go out on the street tonight and ask 20 Canadians what they think about their post office, and to tabulate the answers and bring them back to the House.

Someone must ensure that the work to meet this need is done. That someone is this Government. Because this Government has failed miserably in its effort to provide this service, I wholeheartedly support the motion before us today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

[English]

I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows: "Dear Mr. Blaker: Amongst birthday greetings headed your way, may ours add its bit towards a wonderful day. Hoping that your birthday joys will last the whole year through". It is signed by several Members.

I have to indicate that Hon. Members who have not taken the trouble to sign these greetings, such as the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) or the Hon. Member from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) or the Hon. Member from Bow River (Mr. Taylor), will of course not be recognized for the purpose of debate until the year 1983.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I want you to know that I mailed your greeting a year ago, on your birthday, for this year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was expected to have the floor and does now have the floor for 20 minutes.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when in 1980 the Post Office was changed—

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I recall, prior to the adjournment of the House this afternoon, a Member of the Official Opposition was speaking. Earlier this afternoon I was speaking to the Deputy Speaker—I am not sure whether it was the Deputy or the Assistant Deputy Speaker. He said that after the first round, the order was to go back and forth between the Opposition and the Government. We are of the understanding that after the Official Opposition it is to be a Member of our Party who is to speak first this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is quite correct. At six o'clock I did not in fact recognize the next Hon. Member to speak, although I expressed every intention in that regard because the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North was on his feet. At that time the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) was not in the Chamber. While it is not the regular order of speakers, I do not have a choice but to accept the fact that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North stood in his place at that time, and in good faith I have to recognize him. After him I will be recognizing the Hon. Member for Welland.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, when in 1980 the Government finally brought in legislation which turned the Post Office from a Government Department into a Crown corporation, that proposal had almost unanimous approval from all Members of this House. That consensus came about because the experience of a dozen or more years with the Post Office being run as a Department of Government was so bad that the public and Members of Parliament recognized that a very drastic and fundamental change would have to be made.

What were the reasons of the decline of the popularity of the Post Office? There was, of course, a tremendous increase in the amount of mail which the Post Office was called upon to move. The Government decided on the advice of some so-called experts that the way to handle this tremendous increase was to mechanize and computerize the system. Instead of trying the new system in a smaller city to find out whether and how it worked, the Government installed the new system in the Toronto area where 40 per cent of all mail originates.

It was several years after the computerized system was installed before all the bugs were found and the difficulties eliminated. Indeed, they may not have been eliminated until now. For a long time we had a situation where Toronto mail was shipped by truck to Peterborough to be sorted by hand, brought back to Toronto and then sent on to its destination. People became very angry. One could not blame them. They were justified in their anger, but they vented it on the wrong people. They assumed that the difficulties and failures were somehow due to the Post Office workers, when in fact they were the responsibility of management which had made such fundamental errors.

Besides that we had management backed by a Government which simply refused to deal with its employees in a twentieth century way in face-to-face discussion, looking for solutions to the difficulties and differences which arose. Over the years there were a number of strikes, some legal and some not.

A number of studies were commissioned by the Government. Judge Montpetit, Stewart Martin and several others all reported that the difficulties were as a result of bad management practices in the Department. Then, Mr. Speaker, there was the added difficulty that the Post Office Department, and its Minister, could not negotiate with the unions. That job was given to the Treasury Board, which was always concerned about how a particular improvement or concession would affect other people. After many years it was decided that the Post Office should be transformed into a Crown corporation, and, as I said earlier, that decision was endorsed by virtually all the Members of Parliament. Our Party supported that change because we believed then, and we believe now, that it was a change which was needed. We believe that the people of Canada want and have a right to expect an efficient, affordable and equitable mail service. We consider the post office should be a national public utility supported by the people of Canada. We are dealing with the deficit by constantly increasing the price of mailing letters or magazines and newspapers. This is wrong in principle. One might as well say, Mr. Speaker, that if the people of the cities or the rural areas cannot afford to pay for health services directly, they should not have health services, and if the people of an isolated community, for example, in northern Manitoba, cannot afford to pay for the cost of teachers in their schools, they should not have schools. The delivery of mail, letters, magazines, books, newspapers, is a right of all Canadians and the cost should be borne equitably by all Canadians. The price for delivery of a letter within the City of Winnipeg should not be any higher than the price for delivering a letter to the Northwest Territories, a difference of thousands of miles, nor should the price be lower.

We recognize that as a part of the improvement in service an increase in rates was necessary, but we feel the amount of the increase since the change-over to the Crown Corporation has been unfair and violates the Corporation's duty to provide good service to all sectors of Canadian society at reasonable rates. I point out that the cost of mailing a first-class letter in Canada has risen in two years from 17 cent to 32 cents. That is an increase, Mr. Speaker, of almost 90 per cent. At the same time service to individuals has been reduced.

We have heard mention of closing some rural post offices on Saturdays, and there are rumours about a three-day service instead of five-day service, and I could go on and on. We know, for example, that letter carriers have been cut back on overtime, which means, of course, that service to individual homes is reduced. We are told it has been recommended in the post office that no substitutes be provided for sick or otherwise indisposed letter carriers. This recommendation is widely believed to be the first step toward ending the five-day delivery service and a consideration of an every-other-day delivery service.

We know that the average family who may send and receive only a few letters per week pays the highest rate as first-class mail costs go up, but the level of their service is gradually being reduced. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the Canada

Post Corporation is bending over backwards to encourage corporate mailing by offering more services and proportionately passing on lower rate increases for first-class service. If it were not against the rules of the House, I would bring into the House the mail which comes to my office, and which comes to every Member of this House of Commons every day. It would take a very large cardboard carton. And I know, as well as the Minister, that 95 per cent of the mail which we get goes into the garbage.

Mr. Deans: Because half of it comes from that Minister.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), says that half of it comes from that Minister. I will not blame him for that much, but there is a great deal of junk mail received, and not only by Members of Parliament. Every household in Canada receives advertising, flyers and catalogues which they do not ask for. All this junk mail received by Canadian citizens is largely financed by the taxpayer, involuntarily through subsidization given by the Canada Post Corporation, with the approval of the Government and the Minister, while the cost of first-class mail, which is so important to the ordinary citizen, has been increased by almost 100 per cent.

The people who work for the Canada Post Corporation, or for any Government Department or agency, have been asked to accept wage increases well below the cost of living. The postal workers have been directed by the Government, through passage of a Bill supported by Hon. Members of the Conservative Official Opposition, as well as the Liberals to accept a 6 per cent maximum increase in their wages this year and 5 per cent in the next year, while the cost of living is still rising by 10 per cent. It is not likely that the cost of living will come down below 9 per cent in the next four of five months, therefore, the workers in the post office have been ordered to accept a reduction in their real take-home pay. At the same time as they have had imposed on them a maximum 6 per cent increase in their wages, first-class mail rates have increased by over 75 per cent. Point out that first-class mail represented losses of just 23 per cent on the cost of providing service at the same time as business bulk mailing represented losses of 42 per cent for third-class mail and 130 per cent for fourth-class mail.

I would like the Minister at some time, if not today, to explain to Members of this House and the Canadian public why they should be forced to pay an increase of almost 100 per cent. I suppose within the next year we will reach or exceed the magic number of 100 per cent. At the same time, business mail, most of which is unsolicited and most of which I classify as junk mail, is showing the kind of losses and getting the kind of subsidies from the Government and the people of Canada which it does.

Mr. Deans: All written off against taxes.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the current period the Canada Post Corporation is announcing a set of rates for corporations. Our position is that more attention should be focused on the need of individual Canadians and small businessmen. What is a more efficient postal service? Our response would be a service which provides a basic customary postal service to the greatest possible number of Canadians, whether they live on the prairies or the far North, or an individual in northern Manitoba.

Let me digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to deal very briefly with some of the arguments advanced during this debate and earlier in committee when we were passing the legislation to establish the Crown Corporation.

We have the argument that the Government and the post office were being too restrictive in their definition of a letter. The argument was advanced that we should not restrict the definition of a letter; we need more competition. Those people who say that, Mr. Speaker, are doing a great disservice to Canadians, particularly to Canadians who live in the bigger cities of this country. If you got the so-called competition which some of the banks and other commercial organizations want, Mr. Speaker, you would have those organizations skimming off the easy and cheap to deliver mail in the big cities. What would be left for the post office? All the difficult mail, all the rural and isolated areas where the cost to deliver mail is very expensive. Then you would get the argument that the Postal Corporation could not afford to provide the kind of service it has been providing until now. You would get further cutbacks in service in the rural and isolated areas, as we have had cutbacks in VIA rail service. So we say that we want the post office to be efficient and able to deliver mail quickly, without the mistakes which have happened before.

However, Mr. Speaker, we do not believe that efficiency means subsidizing corporate business structure, which is interested in selling its goods by getting a subsidy from the people of Canada. We believe that a step in the right direction for the kind of program I have talked about would be a clear definition of what basic customary postal service really means. I say to the Minister that it means, in the cities and suburbs of Canada, door-to-door delivery. It does not mean delivery to letter boxes in suburban areas which may be a mile or more from where people live. We had that situation right into the 1979 election. The fact that an election was looming is what got the Government to agree to the hiring of more letter carriers. I do not know whether it is going to need another election, but we need to get the kind of door-to-door service to the suburbs that the cities have had for many years. If we do, then we would have a much better basis for judging proposed cuts in delivery service, the refusal to provide home delivery in certain areas, the closing of post offices in smaller centres and outlying areas, and the increasingly inflated costs for first-class service.

That is the kind of approach we need, Mr. Speaker. What we need is for the Government and Parliament of Canada to give that kind of directive or objective to the Crown Corporation, to let them know what we expect from them. What we expect is that they meet the needs of ordinary citizens and their right to mail and receive ordinary letters quickly, efficiently, and at a reasonable cost, rather than the staggering increases we have had in recent years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to a few statements made earlier in the debate by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) who sits across the aisle. He said that this Government will be tabling a definition of "a letter" in the very near future. The fact is that it is the Corporation which will be tabling this definition. Not only that, there will be 60 days for the public to respond. If they have any problems with the definition, then there is still time for change at that time.

The Hon. Member also said that the Cabinet is probably making a decision about the definition because of the debate taking place today. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not so. The Cabinet has been having extensive consultations across Canada, and this is the latest possible time Cabinet could make the decision in order to hear all possible views and get all possible input from all the people across Canada. I would suggest in turn that it is quite possible that the Members of the Conservative Party probably chose this topic to coincide with the decision taken by Cabinet. That is a possibility, in fact even a probability.

It was also mentioned by the Hon. Member that the post office lacked flexibility. Well, Mr. Speaker, the post office has been negotiating with industry's bulk mailers, and I would like to read a quotation from Friday's wire services which says:

> Manitoba Hydro will save about $100,000 a year because of new Canada Post Corp., rates for bulk mail, Hydro spokesman Verne Prior said Friday.

Another one from Toronto says that:

> Proposed rates for bulk mailing recently approved by Canada Post Corp. could save utilities in Ontario about $2 million next year—

That is right, $2 million. You shake your head in wonderment, Mr. Speaker, and no wonder indeed because $2 million is surely nothing to be sneezed at. Charlie Macaluso, a research officer with the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association says:

> I think we've developed probably one of the better understandings and co-operative arrangements with the post office ever.

That Association, Mr. Speaker, represents more than 300 of Ontario's 324 municipal utilities. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, we had people who were in times past greatly affected by the mail strikes of the post office. But now we see that the Canada Post Corporation and the greeting card industry have undertaken a joint study to look at an appropriate rate for Christmas cards for next Christmas. This recommendation will be brought forward by January, 1983 to assist the greeting card industry.

So quite contrary to what the Hon. Member was saying earlier about the inflexibility of the Post Office, I suggest to you that the Post Office indeed is adjusting to the problems of the times. It is not only giving better service for the money but is also taking greater care to ensure that the mail is being delivered on time.

I should like to address myself to the improved labour relations at Canada Post Corporation and the improved reliability of delivery of mail. The Opposition motion states that there is no proof that service has improved since the post office became a Crown corporation a year ago. I beg to differ. There is one very tangible way in which service has improved over 1980 and 1981.

In 1980, the Post Office suffered a two-month strike which not only crippled our Canadian postal system and sent business scurrying for emergency arrangements to move mail, but which cost the Department a loss of more than 660,000 person days. In 1981, work disruptions of various kinds, short of a general strike, cost more than 14,000 person days. In 1982, I am happy to report, there have been less than 100 person days lost through work disruptions to date.

Now, Mr. Speaker, no single factor contributes more to service deterioration than work disruptions or strikes. Therefore, we can certainly say that it is with service improvement in mind—or more precisely, with an improvement in the reliability of service—that management at Canada Post, with the support of the Government, has pursued a very creative approach to union-management relations. The purpose is to improve those relations, and the dramatic drop in person days lost through either a strike or work disruptions certainly points to the efficiency of the approach.

These improved results are not the product of a fluke. The Corporation's management set out to balance its three basic objectives of improved service, improved human relations and the achievement of self-sufficiency in such a way as to avoid situations which could escalate into work disruptions. When we consider the climate under which the Corporation is operating these days, with volume drops from the recession, wage guidelines and stressed labour relations all around, we can appreciate the delicate balancing act which is required.

The extensive cost-cutting and savings operations which Canada Post has had to pursue in order to meet its mandate which calls for a reduction of its deficit, have added a great deal of stress to the working environment. And yet, the Corporation is ending its first year of operations with a loss of less than 100 person days. I think this is a phenomenal achievement, when compared to the 660,000 person days lost in 1980.

The present situation is that about 97 per cent of employees at Canada Post are unionized, and this includes most supervisors and managers. In the last decade, the post office was the scene of some intense union-management discord. The result is that there is now a public perception that this counterproductive environment is standard operating procedure. One of the toughest jobs at Canada Post, therefore, is to follow a program which addresses the problems honestly and which works towards changing attitudes and practices. It is these attitudes and practices which must be attacked. There must be a change in the way employees and employers work, so that efficient mail delivery can be achieved.

Why the situation developed in the first place is not an easy question to answer. However, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Canada Post Act, which all Members in this House supported, was meant to change past practices dramatically. I stress that virtually every Member voted in favour of establishing the Canada Post Corporation.

Until October 16, 1981, there were three employers dealing with the unions in the negotiating process at the post office. The Department of Finance, which set fiscal policy for the country and had the over-all financial mandate for negotiations; the Treasury Board, which did the bargaining and was, in law, the employer; and, finally, the post office which ran the business from day to day. Each of these three employers had different objectives and the process was, to put it mildly, awkward.

Moreover, the bargaining process was extremely formal; it was almost quasi-judicial in nature. Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the normal conciliation services designed to facilitate freely negotiated settlements in the private sector were not available to the post office. In their place came imposed settlements, made by arbitrators, Parliament and even the courts. Even after some of these imposed agreements, the issues often remained as points to be squabbled over within the organization.

The Corporation now can negotiate directly with labour representatives. This new climate has already affected the spirit at Canada Post. The Corporation has begun to cast off some of the counter-productive emotional baggage of previous negotiations, such as removing or brushing away the long-standing problems of cumbersome grievance procedures, salary inequities, lack of co-ordination in safety programs and other things.

The Canada Post Act gave the post office a new lease on life. It would seem that the fresh start provided by Crown status is showing some results. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there are still a lot of problems to be resolved, but at least they are being discussed without the acrimony which leads to work disruptions and strikes.

Another example of the new atmosphere which is beginning to develop at Canada Post is that a letter of understanding was signed in January 1982 with representatives of the nearly 23,000 members of the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada.

That understanding is particularly noteworthy because under a new, more streamlined bargaining process, both parties accepted their responsibilities to settle differences together, without resorting to a third party to make the tough decisions. The understanding was reached without undue delay, because both sides recognized the implications for customers and consumers of the 1980 strike. This particular set of negotiations led to the successful introduction of productivity bargaining, a system whereby people work a little harder to get more pay.

Canada Post worked with the union to identify a variety of cost savings associated with the delivery of mail. Both parties then negotiated a sharing of these savings between the union and the Corporation. The union directed its share to financing additional wages and benefits for its members, of course, while the Corporation directed its share to reducing the over-all cost of the settlement and helping to finance future letter delivery service improvements.

These service improvements took place, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of new homes have benefited from service where there was none before.

Productivity bargaining is a key to this and it has helped the Corporation to identify, in just this one agreement, many millions of dollars in savings that can be made over the next few years. it is therefore ironic, Mr. Speaker, that news of the best efforts of the Corporation and the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada did not reach the public. It certainly did not reach Members opposite.

Another change in the working environment which has been brought about by a creative approach to human relations is reflected in the interest employees are taking in improving service. The Corporation has already published two reports which clearly show a steady 10 per cent improvement in service for first class mail across the country over the year. Large customers have, through their own survey, confirmed this trend, as have independent businessmen. This shows that the employees at Canada Post, to use a popular phrase, are being "turned on again". They are taking pride in their work, and we in Canada are also taking pride in their work and in our postal service. Otherwise they would not have ensured the success of the Corporation's program called "quick starts", which were designed to bring about steady service improvements.

The old structure when the post office was a department was not favourable to good human relations; neither were the internal procedures in such areas as job classification and grievances. These were frustrating and merely increased the feeling of despair among employees. When the Crown Corporation was created, the new management found that two-thirds of the huge backlog of grievances should never have left the shop floor, that is, they could have been settled by first-line supervisors and not made their way into the huge vat of stale grievances to be left to fester.

These problems are being addressed today in a whole new way. Canada Post's business plan, its first ever, lists improving human relations as a top priority. It ranks second after service, but this does not mean that it is dealt with after service has improved enough to allow management to turn its attention to it. No, both these goals along with self-sufficiency have to be addressed without faltering. Some of the rules Canada Post is using in an effort to improve the working environment are the same for any business. They boil down to dealing with people with respect, so that they, the workers, enjoy self-respect.

The Corporation is leaving behind the days when union members or leaders could think they had a right to disrupt a business for questionable goals, but it is also leaving behind practices which disregarded employees as people and treated them merely as bodies to shift, names on a chart or merely in statistics. The stewardship of the Corporation rests with management. It cannot shirk its responsibilities, and it does not want to do so. There is also a very important ongoing dialogue with the unions, as well as a sharing of decisions with labour. This is why Canada Post Corporation has two labour leaders on its board of directors. They share in the decision-making and they serve to communicate to management what motivates the unionized work force.

These board members can pass on to membership in the unions the message that real job security can only come from a thriving competitive business. No business can be competitive, let alone efficient, if its life is constantly interrupted by work disruptions or by strikes. There is no job security no matter what iron-clad contracts exist if the business, that is the employer, goes under.

In conclusion, Canada Post's first business plan was prepared in consultation with all the unions. They are all aware of the Corporation's priorities. The participation of unions on the board of directors does not ensure lethargy on the part of the unions. Of course it does not, but some people tend to confuse good labour relations and the absence of strike with complete sweetness and light. This is not the case. The reality is quite different. It must be remembered that unions are political organizations as well, and that they must often be perceived by their membership as being in conflict with management to ensure their survival, in some instances. Therefore, successful bargaining is a skill. It is not something a person is born with; however, it can be learned and improved.

The real essence of the exercise is practising the art of the possible, and this is what the management of Canada Post has been doing with success, as we can see from the resulting low work stoppage figures for 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, thank you for looking to that side of the House when you recognized me. We intend to be there soon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: I will not dwell too long on the comments of the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent). He told us that there was a dramatic improvement in shifting from the post office department to the Crown Corporation. If that is the case, it is the same as the situation where a person trades in his or her car for an Edsel. I submit that the improvement is not there, and I will give some facts to back it up. Also the Hon. Member for Welland gave a great litany of all the wonderful things happening in Canada Post. I challenge him to insert his speech in his householder to his constituency. If he is of the view that there is a great revelation, a turnaround, and that everyone is happy, I would tell him there is one person, John Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, to convince. He surveyed thousands of small-business people and discovered that 64 per cent thought there was no improvement with the new Crown Corporation, 34 per cent thought that the situation was worse, and 2 per cent thought it was better.

In early 1980 a person in Canada said, "Here come the eighties; welcome to Canada". I would like to tell the House about Canada. It is the land where the stamps lick the people rather than the other way around. We are into a situation where our mail delivery is so undependable and inconsistent—and I emphasize the word "inconsistent"—in terms of regularity of service that it simply means in some cases a cost to business at the gain of Canada Post. If this Crown Corporation were running the pony express, it would probably issue riders with sawhorses on the basis that they were efficient and that mail delivery would be as fast as it is at present.

I accept the challenge of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) this afternoon. He said that we should recognize the challenge facing Canada Post. He and others in the Government should recognize the challenge facing the Canadian business community. Approximately 30 years ago delegations from other nations came to Canada to study our postal system. They are not coming any more. Interestingly enough, by contrast, in Switzerland today any letter mailed at night is in the addressee's mailbox the next morning. People will ask, how crazy can we be to use such a comparison, recognizing that Switzerland is a small country. Anyone who knows the mountain terrain and the separation of communities in that country knows that despite its smallness, the delivery of mail up and down the mountainside is every bit as difficult if not more so than in Canada. Yet Switzerland has dependable and assured overnight delivery.

There is a six and five slogan in the country. This program applies to Canada Post as well—six days for delivery of first-class mail, on the average, and five days if one is lucky. We simply do not have an adequate, dependable system. Let us look at a number of examples. One I should like to put forward is that of a Rotary Club in my constituency which passed a motion that it should send out a little reminder notice the day before its meeting indicating that the meeting will be the next day and the name of the guest speaker. The Rotary meetings were held at noon on Tuesdays. Therefore, they wanted to depend on receiving a notice on Monday that would remind them of their Tuesday meeting. When these notices were mailed on Monday, of course they did not arrive on time. That is acceptable. They decided to back up to Friday. Again, they found that on many occasions the message did not arrive until after the meeting. Therefore they backed up once again to Thursday, only to discover that there were cases of notices not being received until the meeting was over. They decided to back up one more day, to Wednesday, but sure enough, on a regular basis there were cases of some people getting the notice the next day, on Thursday. In other words, what good is a notice on Thursday for a meeting to be held the next Tuesday?

I have given this example to explain one of the problems in the post office. Sometimes you receive brilliant service and at other times you do not. There is no consistency in Canada Post.

Canada Post must take into consideration the fact that the success of many businesses depends upon the predictability of delivery. The situation as it concerns newspapers in the country is appalling. I had occasion to visit one of my constituents. He had a bundle of Edmonton journals on his table, and I asked him why he did not receive the newspapers. He proceeded to give me a speech about Canada Post. He said that he had not received one newspaper for a whole week and then received six newspapers in one day. What can any household do with a bundle of old newspapers after the $75 a year subscription has been paid? I suggest you would have an information overload if you were to attempt to read those newspapers.

The post office cannot simply make excuses for delays such as this. The fact of the matter is that the service is inadequate. That example gives us an idea of what is happening with daily newspaper delivery. This happens regularly in rural areas where subscribers do not receive papers for several days and then receive a flood of them on one day.

The same situation is true of the delivery of weekly newspapers in this country. It may take as long as ten days for a weekly paper to be delivered through the postal system. Of course this means that the newspaper is of no value as far as its announcements for the coming weekend are concerned. People in rural communities want to know when the next bingo is, and they expect to receive that information in the newspaper for which they have paid a subscription. This delay means the newspaper will only be delivered after the events have taken place.

I challenge any Member to dispute the fact that there are many publishers and editors of weekly newspapers who are complaining that they are losing subscriptions from those people who have moved away from their rural community but want to keep in contact with their home town because their papers are arriving 14 days after being mailed. That is the situation which exists with weekly newspapers being sent through our mailing system.

I would like to talk about the costs being incurred as a result of the late deliveries in the postal system. Again, I will single out publishers. There are 22 weekly newspapers in my riding. The publishers of those newspapers are saying that they are losing advertising dollars because the advertisements arrive for printing only after the paper has been published. I am sure Hon. Members can appreciate that some of those advertisements are time-sensitive. The initial result of this delay is a loss to the advertiser. As well, there is the loss of revenue to the newspaper because it does not receive the advertising dollars, and finally there is the loss of opportunity to the person who may have wanted to take advantage of the goods and services being advertised. But what about the post office? Canada Post gets paid for its postage stamp for the mailing even though the service to the customer was nil. It gets its money while the rest in the chain end up paying. That is unacceptable.

Newspapers in the community of Provost, Alberta, leave at 4.30 p.m. for delivery in Edmonton. They arrive by bus in Edmonton at midnight on the same night. Interestingly enough, it takes approximately five days from then for delivery to homes in Edmonton to the former residents of the community of Provost. The publisher complains to the Edmonton Post Office and the answer he receives is that this is normal service. That is not acceptable service, normal or otherwise.

If we examine the whole question of what is happening in rural Canada, I submit that rural Canada is rapidly coming to the conclusion that it will no longer tolerate the condition of having to negotiate sales of $100,000 combines over party line telephones while our neighbours in the cities can have private lines for the same price. We will no longer tolerate the fact that people in the cities have cable television while television programs are beamed into the rural villages that deal only with issues in those small towns and villages, and the farmers receive the same inadequate service. Rural Canadians will no longer tolerate the fact that there is door-to-door free postal delivery in the cores of our major cities while farmers have the privilege of renting a mailbox for $12 a year so that they might have the services of Canada Post. Discrimination between rural and urban communities is unacceptable in this country on national services such as television, communications and the post office.

Even in some of our smaller communities it takes as much as 10 or 11 days for the circulation of mail. I have examples of this as well. There is no other description for the Calgary central Post Office located in my Alberta constituency but that it is outlandishly horrible. The Edmonton Post Office ranks slightly above that. I can quote one newspaper editor who recently said to me, "I can no longer rely on postal service for time-related messages." He sent for a sign in Calgary. After waiting for one month he phoned to find out where his sign was. The company manager told him that they did not have an order for a sign. Therefore, he stayed on long distance telephone and ordered his sign that way. This shows that the post office still gets paid for its stamp when the service is inadequate while that individual has to pay more and suffer the delay as well. Again, this is unacceptable.

We now have a situation where the post office tells us that we have to bag our own mail for weekly newspapers. That is not necessarily a bad idea, and most of the publishers are not opposed to it. The exception is that they even have to bag one newspaper that is to be delivered to a single subscriber in another community. The offices of these weekly newspapers are cluttered with mailbags, a situation which legitimately makes them angry. To add to this frustration, they find when, they carry these bags to the post office, that they are faced with the audacity of the postmaster saying, "We like this bag in that corner and this bag in that corner." These private entrepreneurs are in the post office doing postal work. I submit that this is an absolutely intolerable situation. There is something vitally wrong if this Crown Corporation, with the subsidies which it receives, is still calling upon people to do its work while making a profit on its unacceptable service.

I have just touched on something that I would like to express with an example. I said that they are making a profit on their unacceptable service, and here is the example. On October 21 of this year, a professor at Camrose College, in Camrose, Alberta, wanted a book. He ordered the book from Toronto, a great and lovely city here in central Canada. The book did not come. So, as recently as November 18, a few days ago, he phoned Toronto long distance from central Alberta, wanting to know where the book was. He was told by the company that it did not know where it was. He was told that it was shipped the same day as they received his order. He said, "I must have the book". The company said, "We will send you another one by first class special delivery". Yesterday he got both books. The agreement is that he will send one of the books back.

Let us consider what has happened in that situation. There should have been a deal whereby he sent the book back and paid the postage, or else the company sent the book and paid the postage and the post office received its money. What did happen was that the post office got its money, plus it got paid when it sent the book by special delivery, first class, at a higher price, and then it got paid again when the book was returned, plus the customer had to pay the cost of the long distance telephone call. So there has been damage to the publisher and to the person who has had to pay the postage more than three times. What happened to the post office as a result of its poor service? It got paid more than triple the amount it should have been paid, and I say to Hon. Members that that is absolutely unacceptable service.

Mr. Darling: That is nice work, if you can get it.

Mr. Malone: All I say is that if the Canada Post Corporation ran the nation's maternity wards, then we, too, would soon be having every other day delivery.

We have the notion that this group dealing with the business community will give us some kind of service. In fact, the post office makes a profit on its poor service, while costing more and more and causing losses to people in small businesses through time-related problems. An example is a company in my constituency which receives very lovely printed wedding invitations. It is a local printing company which does its own printing, but they get high quality ones from Stratford here in Ontario. The fact is that once it used to tell couples planning to marry that they would have their invitations within two weeks. However, now it takes anywhere from three to four weeks, and occasionally longer. Young couples are getting very nervous when their wedding invitations are not arriving on time for their planned wedding date. Out of panic, they are saying to the local company, "Print us up some wedding invitations". About the time they come off the press, here come the nice ones out of the nice Ontario printing plants. Now they have two sets of weddding invitations. The post office is not out of any money, but the people in communities are certainly out of money because someone has to pay for an extra set of printed invitations, and people will not get married twice, nor does anyone give old wedding invitations to another couple and say, "Here, use my wedding invitations for your wedding". The post office says, "We wash our hands of all of that. We have been paid our money." Sometimes they get paid twice, but the people get poor service. What other company in the country can get double pay on the basis of poor service? I simply say that this is a pack of nonsense.

There is another situation I would like to consider with respect to cost. Some people try to give us the impression that the increased cost of a postage stamp does not hurt very many people that much. A small college in my constituency, Camrose College, has only 600 students, but because it is a private college, it totally depends on donations for its operating budget. This is what it mails out in a year. Two times a year it has mail-outs to 600 students; six times a year it has mail-outs to 6,000 alumni; four times a year it has mail-outs to 2,000 parents; two times a year it has mail-outs to 2,000 corporations; and one time a year it has mail-outs to 2,000 foundations. When the postal rate went up from 17 cents to 30 cents it meant an increase from about $5,500 to $11,000 in just the postal budget of that college. This small college took almost a 45 per cent increase in costs just to get money in order to run its institution. The costs involved in such a situation are obviously prohibitive when we have no service such as that in the United States. I refer to the bulk mail service. Surely, institutions such as that, especially charitable organizations, should be able to profit from bulk mail rates, those which have such a large amount of mail to send out.

In another community called Hanna, there is a newspaper called the Hanna Herald. On a Wednesday the mail would go to communities about 40 miles away. Only a couple of years ago, they would get it the next day, on a Thursday. Finally, it ended up that those people did not get it on a Thursday any longer but, rather, on a Friday. I checked with the editor this morning and found out they are now getting their weekly newspaper on the following Monday. The newspaper is printed on a Wednesday but does not arrive in homes until Monday of the following week, even though it must be delivered a distance of only 40 miles. I say to any people connected with the post office that that is a speed of less than eight miles per day. Mr. Speaker, I can walk eight miles an hour. In other words, I could deliver that newspaper in four hours. However, the post office takes five days to go 40 miles.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are giving me the signal that my time is up. I want Your Honour to know that it is my time that has expired, not the issues about the post office, and that I will mail those to you, Sir. If they are not in Hansard tomorrow, we can presume that it is the post office again that is so inefficient that you have not got them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely overwhelmed by some of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). He tells us he is capable of walking eight miles an hour. My goodness! Our speedy colleague from Crowfoot! Before I came into the House this evening, I was with another of my colleagues. I was honoured by an invitation to a reception held by His Excellency the American Ambassador. I mention this not only because it was pleasant, but because it was also informative and brought home to me, from the various topics that we discussed, one of the fundamental differences between Americans and Canadians. I envy Americans because they have an absolute gift for being able to be positive about themselves and even show pride in their institutions, however, fallible those institutions may be. Canadians, on the other hand, have an absolute penchant for negativism and absolutely destructive self-criticism. We have a reluctance to acknowledge improvements, and yet there have been vast improvements in postal service in Canada. We have an honest, congenital inability to feel pride in any of our institutions.

Let us compare the difference between American and Canadian approaches to the post office system. When I came back from that reception I did a little research in the Library and found out that the American post office system also has its problems. It has had a tremendous amount of labour problems and a growing deficit for years and years. Congress is constantly faced with the problem of how to tackle the deficit. But do the Americans sit and gripe constantly about their mail service? No, they do not. Obviously they have some legitimate complaints, which they voice through the proper channels.

Now, although the post office department did not have an official motto, it put an inscription over several of its buildings throughout the United States. It became so well known that many people felt it was the motto of the mail carriers. It says:

Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds.

This quotation comes from the Greek historian, Herodotus.

How do we treat our mail carriers? Certainly we do not write any poetry on our mail buildings and, frankly, I believe that most of us even forget to thank our mail carriers when they do their jobs extremely well indeed.

The Hon. Member across the way, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, mentioned that sometimes the postal service is splendid or brilliant. I wonder if he has taken the trouble to tell the officials that it was splendid or even brilliant. We are so very anxious to criticize.

In my life I have managed to spend several years living in four different countries. Perhaps that gives me a very different perspective on many things from that of my other colleagues in the House. I can tell you, from my experience in four countries, that the Canadian postal service is by far superior to any of the other three.

An Hon. Member: Even in England?

Mrs. Appolloni: Even that. I would like to take this opportunity, if I may, to place on the record my own personal appreciation of the present officials of Canada Post for the courtesy and tremendous efficiency with which they deal with complaints or inquiries. On occasion I have voiced a complaint on the part of my constituent, and the post office itself sent investigators right to the scene. I do not think you can quarrel with that kind of service. I think it behooves all of us to admit that there are a lot of good things going on right now in the postal service. Certainly it can be improved, and I think it will be.

If I can continue now to speak about the post office of the future, let me say that when Canada Post became a Crown corporation on October 16 of last year, it began an important job that will affect all Canadians: to improve the efficiency of the post office and to make it behave as a business, with a corresponding emphasis on cost-cutting and efficiency. That is a tall order and it cannot be completed overnight. Years of deterioration and unrealistic procedures have left a legacy of disappointment and unpredictability. But the job of remaking this national processing and distribution giant into a responsive and worth-while organization has already begun. And Canada Post Corporation is now attacking a host of problems with enthusiasm and commitment, and for that I believe we should all applaud them.

One of the distinct differences between the status of Canada Post as a Crown corporation and its previous role as a Department of Government is its business orientation. Canada Post is the twentieth largest business in the country, but to survive and grow it must be increasingly relevant to the communications and goods movement industries. That means planning for the future as well as the present, and it is one of the objectives of the Corporation that were set out in the Canada Post Corporation Act.

The Corporation has established a business development division that will give it the entrepreneurial drive that it needs to maintain that commitment. One of the projects this division is investigating relates to the more than 8,000 branch offices, more than all of the chartered banks combined. The Corporation has post offices in more than 2,000 communities where there are no banks. But the breadth of transactions taking place in those offices is not large enough in relation to their capital costs. Canada Post could well provide any number of services that would benefit from a widespread retail network—perhaps an indirect banking role for the chartered banks on a "fee for service" basis. It could also have a part to play in the catalogue sales business, or in travel or maybe insurance.

The Corporation has a service called Priority Post that is the fastest-growing courier business in the country. Recently Canada Post announced substantial improvements to this operation that will give it even more flexibility and responsiveness. These changes will offer Canadians a new capability that is specially tailored to the changing marketplace.

Canada Post's two electronic mail services, Intelpost and Telepost, currently move about a million and a half messages a year. But the Corporation is looking much further ahead to position itself aggressively in this growing business. Other countries are experimenting with electronic mail, and Canada Post wants to work with them to open vast new possibilities for its customers to communicate electronically both here and abroad. The Corporation wants to build on an already useful service, to make it that much better and that much more accessible to its customers.

Carving out a segment of the high technology business is one of Canada Post's strategies for achieving higher productivity in the future. Canada has a tremendous economic potential, partly as a result of our natural resources. Our proximity to the large and potentially lucrative U.S. market can also be used to advantage. The Corporation is determined to work harder and smarter to make these potential assets bankable.

New technology also provides a challenge and a solution to the productivity struggle. Doing things smarter also means taking advantage of new technological advancements which are increasing all the time. And this need not mean a threat to job security. It simply means that Canada Post can replace low-productivity jobs with more rewarding and productive ones.

I believe that Canadian managers, including those at Canada Post Corporation, must learn to use new technology much more competitively. And though our traditional expenditures on research and development have been low, that situation appears to be improving.

We have to increase public awareness of the value of technology as a competitive weapon. Canada Post marketing and production people are already pointing the way. Employees in general have also learned that they have a stake in technological change. Doing things smarter through better use of new technology can bring more meaningful and more rewarding jobs. People understand what such programs can mean to their quality of life as well as to productivity.

It has taken some time for some employees to relate to Canada Post's new structure and business emphasis, but most of them have now begun to feel a personal sense of pride and achievement in the operation. They have started to make their own decisions and to realize that they will rise or fall on their own judgment and on their own initiative.

They realize that survival as a business is not just a day-to-day concern, that the post office must look to the future, and that they are an indispensible part of that future. It may be difficult to envisage today, but Canada Post can become a leader in communications in the 1990s providing customers with a combination of some traditional services and some very new ones. It has that potential.

The future of the business will not be decided in Ottawa in isolation. It will take continuing dialogue between Canada Post's employees and management, the unions, the customers and the shareholder, which is the Government of Canada. This dialogue must be backed up by a commitment to strive for excellence.

Canada Post Corporation has made a good start, and I believe that it will sustain it through the post office of the future. Meanwhile let us remember that we have a lot of good things now in Canada Post. I, for one, am grateful for them.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak regarding the Canadian postal system and to be able to communicate to the Minister a number of concerns that have been brought to my attention over the last number of weeks.

I think it is fair to say as a Member of Parliament that if you were to walk along the main streets of any small village, town, urban area or rural area of Canada and ask people what was on their mind about the federal Government, what kind of a message they would like one to take back to Ottawa, you can be assured that the topic of the post office would come up sometime during that discussion. People will recall that for many years the service provided by the Canadian postal service was nothing less than first class. Canadians were proud of the postal system. As a number of speakers have indicated, Canada was often held up as the model for postal systems which other countries could initiate. They came to Canada looking for guidance.

Unfortunately, that has changed somewhat over the years, unquestionably for the worst. It is interesting to identify some of the reasons why that has taken place. I will come to that eventually.

I want first to look at the mandate of the Corporation and identify two or three areas of that mandate which deserve some comment tonight. One of the areas taken on by the Crown Corporation was to improve postal service in Canada. There are a number of areas where it has done just that. Recently we have seen a new postal code for sending letters to Santa Claus. For the first time one can identify that in our postal history as a major step forward.

Seriously, the delivery time of the postal corporation has increased for first class mail. Over the last number of months it has improved from 80 per cent to 89 per cent in terms of meeting on-time targets. There has been an expansion in some of the urban areas of Canada. Some of the newly emerging landscapes of Canada now receive door-to-door mail service as they find themselves contiguous to existing urban areas. Service is being applied to those areas that certainly ought to qualify.

People still criticize the line-ups in the post office. They are concerned about the level of service. Those people might recall visiting one of the most sacred corporations in this country which is often held up as the best example of corporate efficiency, namely, the Canadian banking system. Notice the long line-ups forming there as you patiently wait to get to a teller or wait at the counter to be served. Before criticizing the services given today by employees in the postal service, let us look at it in comparison with other services being provided.

When looking at the reduced services being experienced in the Canadian postal service over the last number of years, there is one group we ought not to blame. That group is the workers who carry the mail, provide the essential services at the counter and run the thousands of small postal operations across the country.

These people are dedicated to their task. I see them time after time throughout all seasons bring the mail to my door in a courteous and serious way. When I visit the small post offices in the rural parts of my constituency, I see dedicated workers. They provide a very positive and useful service to those small communities and rural areas.

Look at the services provided by the people who deliver along the routes in rural Canada. They do more than simply deliver the mail. Their contribution is quite outstanding, particularly in the season we are now approaching.

When we talk about the reduced or decreased services of our postal system, it is important to identify the true cause of that reduction in service. Like any other organization, it has to come from the top. The reason for the difficulties today is that the management of the postal system leaves a great deal to be desired, including both the Conservatives and Liberals which provided the general mandate and down through the senior levels of the post office. Therein lies the critical problems which face us. I will have more to say on that in a moment.

I now want to deal with the human relations that make up another mandate in the postal Corporation. When you look at the record, you find that time lost due to industrial disputes has decreased over the last number of weeks and months. The reason for that is that the whole process of free collective bargaining has been removed from the postal system. As a result of the imposition of the six and five program by the Liberals and Conservatives, free collective bargaining, which is certainly the very basis of labour-management relations in a free country, has been removed from those who work in the postal system. On looking at the whole realm of improved human relations in the postal system, one realizes that a great deal of improvement is possible there. Hopefully, we will see improvements in this area over the next couple of months.

I want to concentrate tonight on the self-sufficiency aspect of the mandate. This is the component which the Liberals and Conservatives feel very strongly about, that the postal system in Canada should break even. In fact, some speakers from the Progressive Conservative Party have indicated that it should make a profit. I wonder whether those same persons feel that the armed services, universities, elementary schools and hospitals in Canada should also make a profit.

There is a certain amount of hypocrisy when individuals in this House demonstrate that they are able to talk out of both sides of their mouth at exactly the same time, on one hand saying that the postal system should make a profit or break even and on the other hand that it should improve the level of service. This blind acceptance by the Government and the Progressive Conservatives that the deficit must be reduced at all costs has resulted in some of the following problems in the postal system of Canada.

Let us look at the increased rates that we have experienced. In 1968 the cost of a first class postage stamp went up to 6 cents, in 1971 to 7 cents, in 1972 to 8 cents, in 1976 to 10 cents, in 1977 to 12 cents, in 1978 to 14 cents, in 1979 to 17 cents, in 1982 to 30 cents, and soon it will go up to 32 cents.

If we look at the increases we find that since the postal service was turned into a Crown corporation, the number of letters mailed increased by 88.2 per cent. If we look at the period since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to power in 1968, we see an increase of 540 per cent. During a time of restraint, an increase of 88 per cent in a two-year period is something we should question, especially when we consider the impact this has on certain groups in society. I refer in particular to our senior citizens. Most of the mail I receive about the cost of postage originates with this group. These people look forward to writing letters and sending parcels to their family and kin across this vast country. They count on the mail. At 32 cents a letter, that will create a very serious hardship for many senior citizens in this country, particularly when we consider that most senior citizens live below the poverty level.

We will also want to recognize that in the attempt to reduce the deficit of the postal service, certain merchants have been subsidized. Bulk mail, which has often been referred to as "junk mail", is subsidized by those people paying 32 cents a letter. In other words, we are saying to the senior citizens of our country, or to the rank and file citizenship across Canada, that we want to increase the cost of their letters in order to enable bulk mail to be delivered at lower rates. Somehow that situation has to be recognized and certainly criticized, that once again the taxpayers of Canada, the rank and file citizens of Canada, are being asked to subsidize the corporate operations of the country.

We have heard a great deal about Saturday closing of wickets in the rural areas of Canada. I suspect that for most Canadians who live in urban centres that does not cause much concern. There is little sensitivity, I suspect, among the people making those decisions, of what it is like to live in small communities or in the rural parts of this country. In my own constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap, for the cattlemen, farmers, miners, loggers or tradesmen who are forced to work out of town, Saturday is often really the only day when they are able to get to the wicket to do their postal business. Saturday, closure, Mr. Speaker, is problematical for these people, indeed.

Also we see the closure of the small rural post office when the single operator is ill. Again, this is a reduction in service. We see the discontinuance of Saturday delivery in the rural areas of Canada. We see that if a carrier is ill no service is going to be provided for that area, and if that carrier who is ill has a business route, someone from a residential route will be taken off, and not replaced, in order to enable that business mail to be delivered. Again this is an obvious reduction in service for Canadians.

We also note that consideration is now being given to alternating daily delivery service. That service will not continue on a Monday through Friday basis in Canada but will likely find itself moving to mail delivery on alternate days only. We hear a great deal about the threat of cutting 1,500 jobs from the postal system. We hear that consideration is being given now to eliminating carrier service to new communities, asking people to rely on the boxes at the end of the street. We notice that since the six and five program has come in, the rates for mail boxes have gone up substantially more than 6 per cent and 5 per cent, Mr. Speaker. This betrays the true commitment to the six and five program by the Government, resulting in increased costs, and in many cases reduced service to Canadians as a result of its commitment to reduce this deficit.

I think if the situation is described accurately, Mr. Speaker, we will find that the postal system is being curtailed in an effort to reduce the deficit to zero by 1985. When we consider the difference in service that rural Canadians face in terms of their cable television, power lines, availability of fuels, telephone service, radio service, or most recently the cutbacks in VIA Rail service, we realize that we must guard against any further cutbacks, particularly now as the Government attempts to rationalize the postal Corporation.

Back in October, 1980 we listened very carefully when the Minister responsible for postal services in Canada promised Canadians from the floor of the House of Commons that the Government would ensure that existing levels of service would be maintained. That is not taking place today. We are seeing services curtailed in a full variety of areas. What I would ask the Minister responsible to consider this evening is whether we should not attempt to phase this deficit reduction attempt over a longer period of time. Our rush to make the Crown Corporation a break-even operation, or preferably, as someone said, a make-money operation, results in reduction in services, which is something that Canadians ought not to accept. In a country as vast as Canada where the effort to overcome distance and to increase communication between people ought to be receiving much greater attention from Members of this House, exactly the opposite is taking place. We are making it more difficult for Canadians to communicate and to overcome the distances of our vast country.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Government give some attention, in this commitment to have the deficit reduced, to maintaining the level of potential service that Canadians once knew and would certainly like to see once again.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, just for a few brief moments tonight I would like to make some comments on the Canada Post Corporation which came into effect October 16, 1982, following debate and agreement in the House of Commons, supported by all three parties of the House. I believe that, by and large, we have a very dedicated group of people in Canada Post. I am speaking of the people in the local post offices and the rural mail carriers, and those carriers who do the letter walks in the community in all kinds of weather. I believe there has been a tremendous improvement in some sectors over the years, but as Canada grew, there were changes which developed, and the system was not able to keep pace with changes, not only in our society and in our business within Canada, but changes in automation, in methods of handling mail, in transportation within Canada.

I believe there are areas where we can cut the costs and improve the service. If we reflect back a few years, perhaps some of the deterioration of the present service came at the same time that the mail cars in which we used to sort the mail between cities and towns, were removed from the trains. I believe this is why some of the problems started. If we look at the volume of mail delivered each day between Toronto and Montreal; for example, this mail is loaded on vans, taken to the railway station, loaded on the trains, up to six carloads at a time. You can imagine the number of letters that are there to sort. You have six carloads of mail arriving at the destination at once in these huge postal terminals.

In spite of the automation we have in place, I believe perhaps the time has come to look back to that old system where the mail was loaded in mail cars and the employees sorted the mail between cities so that it arrived at its destination ready to go out to the district offices. Those employees knew when they left that a certain volume of work had to be completed. It was a good system. There were many instances of letters mailed in Toronto in the evening and delivered in Montreal the next morning. As it is now, particularly for some of the smaller communities, the post office trailers are held up longer than they should be, waiting for their load to arrive, waiting to be filled, and consequently we are faced with delay.

At the time the railway service was discontinued we built the huge postal terminals, and perhaps this is when the service started to deteriorate. Not because of the workers or automation but because of the sheer volume which had to be handled out of those areas of concentration. Now in areas such as the Quebec-Windsor Corridor, where we have a large number of passenger trains such as the LRCs, the working conditions on those trains are much better than in years past.

Another area I want to touch on very briefly, Mr. Speaker, is that of small towns and villages, and our rural mail delivery. I believe the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) touched on that matter briefly when he pointed out how important the mail service was to farmers and small-businessmen who come into the small communities on Saturdays to do their business. Although we are trying to cut costs and we have reverted to the five-day per week delivery in many areas of Canada, I would like to suggest that perhaps we should look at this again. We have very little business conducted in the business community on either Saturday or Sunday. As a result, the mail load on Monday is very light. Therefore, I would suggest we examine the feasibility of reinstating Saturday mail delivery in the rural areas and discontinuing the Monday delivery. Not only is there a lighter load of mail on Mondays as it is on the week's news which is carried in the Saturday papers. Most rural mail carriers deliver Saturday's paper which provides the weekend reading for families, and it is sorely missed in communities across Canada.

I believe if we were to re-examine this situation from the standpoint of discontinuing delivery on Monday rather than on Saturday, it would be a very positive step. The cost-cutting concept is accepted, but it is unfortunate that we did not do more research into that particular sector before we made the decision.

I would also like to comment on the determination of rural mail carriers who go out in all types of weather conditions in their dedication to serving the people along their routes. Many of them have a second source of income because quite often the contracts for those rural mail routes do not provide them with an adequate living. Consequently we find many older people delivering mail in rural areas, and while I do not want to see them deprived of a long weekend, most of them do finish their routes by approximately 10.30 in the morning, or at noon at the latest. So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we could look at these two areas, it would be a very positive step which would be welcomed by a majority of the people of Canada.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to join in this debate tonight on the important matter of good postal service. I am pleased the Minister has seen fit to withdraw the definition of a letter, even if that may only be temporary. I hope it will not. I do not want to re-state many of the well presented arguments by my colleagues and others on such things as cutbacks in service or the many examples of poor postal service, but I would like to refer to the Minister's mid-1982 letter in which he declared that the new regulations provide clarification of our social responsibility to ensure that all Canadians have access to a basic level of postal service at a standard cost. I want to deal with these two points, particularly the basic level.

Historically, Mr. Speaker, the basic level of postal service has included the ability of one person to transmit a simple message to another elsewhere in Canada, or in the world for that matter, in time frames consistent with the technology of the day. As technology advanced, packet ships were replaced by coal steamers and stage coaches were replaced by trains. Later those trains and ships were replaced by planes for long distance transportation, and trucks for short-haul. Delivery time frames shrank but costs remained low as volume increased. But always the transmitted article was the same, a simple message, personal, and secure, if desired, in an envelope. Although the speed of mail increased, it was for average or regular mail, and few reasonable people would disagree with that. However, for items requiring extraordinary consideration because of speed or shape, fragility or bulk, or for any other reason, other methods had to be devised. Wherever such special considerations entered into the mail service, trouble followed. It was because of special considerations that special delivery was devised where people could pay extra for extra service.

Couriers, of course, came into being to provide faster, specialized delivery for parcels and letters. It was because of the special considerations of bulk, size, weight or speed that the instrusion of these considerations became a cause of postal decline. Although postal codes and highspeed letter processing machines were designed and installed, volume and special requirements continued to break down the system. The efforts of the post office to handle and improve the system were laudable. No doubt Canada Post will continue to work on solutions to provide a basic level of postal service at standard cost.

While it worked on special techniques in the past, this at no time precluded the provision of such special services by private, competing companies which could do the job better. These companies bought high-speed planes, special delivery vehicles, special wire services and now, even satellite and optical message transmission services.

Not many years ago when the post office was approached by Canadian banks to develop a high-speed means of handling interbank transactions so that bank customers could be given much better banking services, consistent with the modern age, the post office declined to provide such service and the banks had to proceed on their own.

Now that EFT, electronic funds transfer, and other highspeed banking services have become established techniques, the Government wishes to pirate this private and efficient system. It wants to attempt to superimpose it or fit it into the basic level of postal service, with the obvious consequence of reducing efficiency and further complicating an already overloaded and inefficient system where specialty services are concerned. A bank transaction is not a letter, be it 500 grams or not. A bank withdrawal made in Calgary from an account in Vancouver is not a letter, even if a paper printout is made. Similarly, a recapitulation of all the day's transactions, when processed electronically, is not a letter or a number of letters.

Would Canada Post plan to charge 30 cents per line for the number of transactions in a day? If so, we can think of what such costs would add to bank charges.

If the monopoly enjoyed by Canada Post is to be used to pirate this service, reduce its efficiency and raise its cost, then clearly such monopoly must be opposed. The continuing preoccupation of the Government with state, bureaucratic, noncompetitive services will surely retard the development of modern communication services compared to those of other countries.

The dictionary defines a letter as a "written or printed message addressed to a person or persons, usually sent by post or messenger and fairly long". But then, any reasonable person knows what a letter is. What is the new definition of a letter which the Minister is promoting? It states that it is "mailable matter in any form, the mass of which, if any . . . ". Clearly, a letter is no longer a letter. The world can call a letter a letter, but Canada Post and the Government know better. They can ignore reality and extend bureaucratic monopoly to the homes and offices of the nation.

What is this "massless" communication, and when will it come into being? It is here now, Mr. Speaker, It is not a thing of the future. It is simply the sending of a message from one point to another without it ever having been transcribed on solid material. In other words, it was entirely energy from start to finish—not mass or substance.

An example of such communication would be sending a message by computer, through electrical or optical means, to a receiving computer which would not print it out on paper but would, rather, display it on a CRT, a television screen.

What jurisdiction or control should Canada Post, which the Minister says is mandated to provide a basic level of postal service, have over such privately sent, privately funded, privately designed and never "posted" communications?

The exclusive privilege granted Canada Post was intended to allow it to provide basic services for simple "letters" so that private business would not skim off the lucrative trade between such cities as Toronto and Montreal while leaving costly, small rural communities unserviced.

The definition of a letter—which has been withdrawn—described it as "mailable matter in any form, the mass of which, if any . . . whether or not enclosed in an envelope . . ." leaves the power-hungry Government and bureaucratically obsessed Minister with all the latitude necessary to eliminate private, confidential, speedy, modern, world-class communication in Canada.

Also, when the absolute monopoly has been established and all the competition eliminated, we will have "Communi-Can", the PetroCan of communications, where the taxpayer will pay far too much for letters, just as he now pays far too much for gasoline.

I hope that the Minister has now really taken to heart the seriousness of the myriad representations made by responsible, non-partisan, greatly involved organizations and companies such as the Retail Council of Canada, General Motors of Canada, Canadian Tire Corporation and over 300 others, which have different motives from the Government. Their motive is to reduce the cost to taxpayers, not to increase it. They have clearly outlined the unacceptability of a definition which includes "massless" excludes the privacy of envelopes, and indicates no limit to the horrendous cost of Government intervention and possible censorship.

At a time when Canada is actively promoting Telidon, the world's best videotech system which will, one day, include electronic mail to every home that has an outlet, we have one bureaucratic, antediluvian Minister erecting roadblocks in the way of another who is trying to "sell the future" and develop Canada's skills in high technology.

If we had a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who understood the complexities and opportunities offered by advanced thinking instead of revelling in stultified, restrictionist ideology, such retrograde legislation would never have been introduced in the first place.

Canada has been suffocated in research and advance-job creation by the neglect of creative thinkers and the elevation of its socialist dinosaurs to positions of power.

While I would encourage Canada Post to get on with its attempts to generate efficiency in the basic postal system for handling regular, everyday dictionary definition letters, I totally oppose its dabbling in areas which are far beyond its competence, particularly when it has not yet solved the basic problems that lie within its simple mandate.

The plundering of productive businesses, large and small, to subsidize inefficiency; the use of deficit taxpayers' dollars to expand into unneeded areas of electronic communications which are already well handled; those specialized courier services, and the restriction on the freedom of a person or tradesperson to drop a note at the door of a friend or to leave an invoice at a customer's door, on penalty of a fine, are the reasons that Canada is falling back in its standard of living while other nations move ahead. That is why the people of Canada have lost faith in the backward-facing policies of this head-in-the-sand Government.

This is why I intend to support this motion of censure against the Government which has raised postal rates 500 per cent in the Prime Minister's term of office. Now that he has wrestled inflation and employment to the ground perhaps he can start on postal rates.

Canada's postal service and its employees operate at a high level of efficiency. They would do even better if a letter were defined as being perhaps 50 grams' weight enclosed in a standardized envelope.

I look forward to the day when regular mail at low cost will provide the nonspecialized service that is needed right across the country. I urge the Government to let Canada Post get on with its principal task of serving the nation with a basic level of postal service at a standard low cost.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—AUDITOR GENERAL'S CERTIFICATE. (B) GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago when the Public Accounts for Canada ending March 31, 1982 were tabled, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) about the accounting practices of the Government and its agencies.

In his certificate, the Auditor General said that he believed the "stated accounting policies are not appropriate for a fair presentation of the assets and liabilities and revenues and expenditures of the Government of Canada." He went on to say that they were inadequate in two very specific areas. First, significant departmental activities were reported in separate financial statements or accounts that are not combined in the Government's financial statements. Separate financial statements or accounts are presented in other sections of the Public Accounts in such areas as the Exchange Fund Account, the Canada Pension Plan Account, the Unemployment Insurance Account, the Canadian Ownership Account and other similar Accounts.

Second, the Auditor General stated that investments to Crown-owned corporations and agencies as of March 31, 1982 amounted to approximately $25 billion or 63 per cent of the Government's net recorded assets. The assets, liabilities, revenues and expenditures of these entities are not consolidated in the accompanying financial statements.

This points to very real abuses or misconceptions which the Government puts forth in presenting its financial statements. I would not dare to say that the Government is trying to hide anything because in some areas it understates its assets and in other areas it actually overstates them. An example of the Government overstating its accounts could be found where there are excess amounts advanced over asset value received that confers a benefit and constitutes expenditure in respect of international development assistance, which should be recorded and reported as such on the Statement of Revenue and Expenditure.

The Auditor General also estimated that if international development assistance loans and subscriptions were reported in this manner, reported assets would decrease and accumulated deficit would increase by approximately $3.9 billion as at March 31, 1982.

A second example of where the Government is in error in overstating its assets is that financial obligations are not recorded in respect of amounts payable under statutory appropriations, earned and unpaid annual vacation leave, employee termination benefits and actuarial liabilities arising from the indexing provisions of employee pension plans. Also in the view of the Auditor General, all these financial obligations should be appropriately recorded and reported in the financial statements to provide a more complete disclosure of Government liabilities. He estimated that if these obligations were recorded, the reported liabilities and accumulated deficit would be increased by at least another $14.5 billion as at March 31, 1982.

An example of the Government being in error in underestimating its assets is in the area of revenue for the year from oil export charges, a federal Government tax. It excluded receipts of some $445 million which are included in the "specified purpose" liability account. Its failure to include this amount in revenue is inadequate in the opinion of the Auditor General and not in accordance with accounting policies. There should be another $445 million in revenue.

This leaves the books of the Government of Canada in a position where its actual assets are overstated by some $17.6 billion. I think the Government should address itself to improving the bookkeeping practices, administrative policies and accounting principles it uses.

• (2205)

Right now, I think most people are aware that the private sector uses generally accepted accounting principles. Within the Government of Canada there are no generally accepted accounting principles. I would urge the Government to address this problem and rectify it so that all accounts of the Government of Canada, anywhere Canadian taxes are spent, have a standard form by which the Government accounts for that.

The second proposal which would significantly help reporting the Government's accounts fairly would be to incorporate Crown corporation legislation.

In conclusion, as it stands now, if any company or any individual submitted a tax return to the Department of National Revenue based on financial statements similar to the way the Government of Canada draws them up, they would certainly be prosecuted for income tax evasion.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in rendering his opinion of the Government's 1981-82 financial statement, the Auditor General expressed four basic concerns. First, the Auditor General concluded that loans to developing countries, because of their concessionary terms, should be reported on the books of Canada at a value that discounts for the benefits conferred on the recipient. This is in fact inflation accounting which yet has to receive broad application in either the private or public sector.

It is generally acknowledged, however, that while inflation accounting would tend to reduce the value of financial assets such as developing loans, it would have an offsetting impact on financial liabilities such as outstanding debt.

The Auditor General expressed the view that financial obligations arising from statutory appropriations not now reported have the effect of understating liabilities. The exclusion of certain liabilities as well as assets resulting from the current stated accounting policies, accounting policies designed to comply with enabling legislation, is fully recognized in the notes accompanying the financial statements. The current method of accounting for the Supplementary Retirement Benefit Accounts, with which the Attorney General takes exception, results from a simple compliance with enabling legislation, legislation passed by this House.

Third, the Attorney General feels that consideration should be given to extending the definition of the Government as an accounting entity. The Comptroller General has made an undertaking before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts to once again review the appropriateness of the financial statements in satisfying the needs of the users.

Finally, the Attorney General concludes that the Government has understated the budgetary revenues as a direct consequence of reporting the provincial share of the Oil Export Charge as a financial liability. The method of reporting was both consistent with the Government's undertaking in the October budget, the National Energy Program, the agreement reached with the Provinces and the accounting option advocated by the Auditor General himself.

On a personal note, apart from this technical answer, the Hon. Member said in his comments and question, "I may be a young Member of Parliament but I am certainly not stupid." I agree with that.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—SEVERITY OF PENALTY IMPOSED ON AIR B.C. (B) COMMISSION'S POWERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I had occasion to draw the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to a letter he had received from the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce relating to a penalty which had been imposed upon Air B.C. for having offered on the first of April, 1982, a special fare to travel between Victoria and Vancouver. This special fare, by way of a prank, if you like, or a promotional operation, was considered for a number of months by the Canadian Transport Commission before it decided what it should do. I will leave to one side for a moment what the Minister said with regard to the stupidity of the question, because that is quite another matter.

In order to deal with this question properly I think we have to bear in mind some rules which govern the decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission. The Minister reminded me of one of them. He said that one of the rules is against predatory prices. This was not a predatory price for all time. This was a price for one occasion. However, the fundamental rule to which the Canadian Transport Commission is committed is that any regulation should be determined on the basis of "public convenience" and necessity.

I speak, with the prompting of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, on behalf of the travelling public. An editorial this morning in the Colonist Times was brought to me by a friend who travels from Victoria. It states that the Canadian Transport Commission is "grounding people" because the penalty, which was eventually levied against Air B.C., was that on December 21 that flight of Air B.C. should be grounded. That is draconian. This decision, however, was not rendered until October 18. It took from April 1 until October to end the shillying and shallying this way and that and to decide what would be done. Then, on October 18, a penalty was levied that there would be no flights on that particular route on December 21.

I suppose one could say that the airline did breach some regulation for one day in a lighthearted way. However, to inflict a penalty of that sort, to that extent, at that season, is quite unacceptable. The travelling public will be grounded on that particular date. Air B.C. came in to fill some gaps between Air Canada and CP Air connecting the mainland and the island. Air B.C. fills those gaps, and to eliminate that particular service so close to Christmas time when families are coming together is a shocking approach to this particular matter, to my way of thinking.

I want to stress that I am not speaking on behalf of Air B.C. It was the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce which had written a letter to the Minister and I received a copy of it. For very obvious reasons Air B.C. must keep its head down; it must deal with the Canadian Transport Commission. I understand it has made some suggestion regarding some other days when it might be prepared to be shutdown. However, it seems to be quite beyond the merits of the case to have it shut down right in the middle of the Christmas season. There must be some other way of dealing with it. It might be appropriate for the penalty to be imposed some other time in January, after the Christmas season, for example. I remind Hon. Members that the governing and guiding principle of the Canadian Transport Commission is "public convenience and necessity". I ask, how the public convenience and public necessity are to be served by prohibiting these flights on December 21?

I received a letter from the Minister which he must have written Friday afternoon because I received it on Monday morning. I am not disclosing anything which has not already been disclosed by the press because he did make his letter public, but he admitted with regret, and I give him honour for it, that the answer he gave me was "somewhat misleading". He said in the House he had asked the CTC to review this particular decision. In fact, he admitted in the letter, as reported in that paragraph, "I have not asked for a review because I am not empowered to do so on my own intiative". He could have asked, through Cabinet, that there be a Cabinet decision to rescind or alter that particular decision, but he stepped back from that because, as he said, it was to be word only in situations of national importance. It may not be nationally important in the eyes of the Minister, the matter of communications between Vancouver Island and the Mainland. It is of great importance, however, and I hope the Minister learns this one day, to those who live on the mainland or on the island, particularly at Christmastime, that those facilities of air transport be available.

I do hope that one way or another, possibly with just a little nudge by the Minister, the CTC can be a little more reasonable, a little more charitable; remembering that the Christmas spirit is there, and that it should not act like Scrooge, as it is about to by insisting on that particular penalty. Perhaps, it could be just a little more charitable at that season of the year. I hope it will allow Air B.C. to fly on December 21 and to take its penalty, whatever it may be, at another season.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Hon. Member acknowledged receipt of the explanatory letter he received from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). In that letter there is an important note, and I would be happy to table this letter if you require it, Mr. Speaker. I do not know the procedure here. I do not have a translation, I only have an English edition, but we would like the letter to be public.

I would point out that the Hon. Member asked the Cabinet to rescind the decision made by the CTC. But the Hon. Member failed to point out what the Minister says, namely, and I quote here:

—I have been chastised so much for using it that I hesitate to do so.

In fact, the Hon. Member opposite is one of those Members who has risen periodically to chastise the Minister of Transport for the decisions he has made respecting other transport modes, and now he wants us to continue a practice that he has otherwise found distasteful.

I think it is important as well, Mr. Speaker, to point out that Air B.C. knew the rules. It did not go blindly into a situation. People in this industry are respected professionals. They understand that they operate in heavily regulated circumstances. Air B.C. chose to ignore the regulations. Not only did Air B.C. ignore the regulations in the first instance it also ignored its opportunity to appeal the penalty. Should we turn to a process that has been scorned by the Opposition in order to give relief to an airline that does not itself obey the rules or use the proper methods of appeal.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That was explained fully.

Mr. Fisher: To what extent does the Hon. Member want us to run that airline's business, I wonder.

THE ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT POLICY SPENDING AFFECTING PRIVATE SECTOR. (B) INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on October 27 I had occasion to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) questions with respect to the principles on which the financial affairs of the country are being managed. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, in the Minister's address to this House the Minister stated that as one of the basic principles of economic management we must continue to rely primarily on the dynamism and the creativity of the private sector as engines of growth in Canada. He went on to say that the Government will be seeking areas where it can act in close co-operation with business and labour to improve the financial help of the private sector as well as its ability to expand and prosper.

I asked the Minister really what had he done for the private sector. I pointed out to the Minister that the effect of his Budget was to put $400 million into Canadair and de Haviland, both losers as far as profitability is concerned, and both Crown corporations. I pointed out to the Minister that within a day or so after the Budget we learned that Petro Canada had purchased certain gas stations owned by British Petroleum at a cost in excess of $600 million. I pointed out that in the budget the Minister increased unemployment insurance premiums by $1.7 billion. That is a further tax on employment. It increases the wage wedge to $5.52 per $100 for wages paid.

The Minister replied that he was a good fellow, that he had spent $1.2 billion in make-work programs to increase employment. The fact is the budget only talked about $500 million. I do not know where the other money came from. Perhaps the Minister was looking at his budgetary figures. His budget increased the amount to offset unemployment by $500 million. He went on to say something about $400 million going to the railways and that this was important. One of the major railways is a Crown corporation. The other is a corporation run by Mr. Sinclair, a friend of the Government.

Perhaps it will accomplish something, but I do not see anywhere in the budget the dynamism and creativity of the private sector being encouraged or the financial health of the private sector being able to expand and prosper. The Minister knows that. The Government only pays lip service to private enterprise, lip service to dynamism in the private sector. In fact, it really does not care about the private sector, particularly in terms of employment.

A tax on employing people was levied in this budget to the extent of $1.7 billion. That tax will increase unemployment in this country by approximately 46,700 people during the next year. The Minister may ask how I figure that out. The answer is simple; the same way the Minister figured out that by spending $500 million he would create 60,000 jobs for a total of 18 months or between 17,000 and 18,000 person-years of work.

As a rule of thumb, a 1 per cent increase in real gross national product yields a 1 per cent increase in employment. If you take the 1971 base calculations as determined by the Conference Board and relate the present GNP to 1971, this year we would have about $130.4 billion in GNP. The effect of the $1.7 billion charge has to be a detriment to the GNP of .0447. If you do the mathematics, you will find if you multiply by the current number of people unemployed that you will have lost 46,700 person-years of work.

The effect of the budget presented by the Government will be that it costs jobs in Canada, costs the private sector, hurts the Canadian economy and is a total detriment. It will boost the public sector, boost Crown corporations, create more Government in our lives and work in exact opposition to the principles the Minister enunciated, principles that we could go along with, but principles he clearly does not believe in.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to engage in a debate with my colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I ask him only to turn to Mississauga to find some of the answers to the very honest questions he has raised.

May I point out to him that help on the interest rate front has assisted a variety of individual firms and companies in Mississauga over the past year, companies like DAF Indal, which manufactures helicopters, Control Data, which makes computers, Northern Telecom, which makes telephones, Ontario Bus Industries, with its bus export program and, in his own riding, the Admiral Corporation, which received help under the ILAP Program to continue in the business of manufacturing appliances.

In the housing area we have seen great market action as a result of the $3,000 grants. Because it reduces interest rates, the $3,000 grant to existing home owners, reduces the impact of high mortgage rates. We have also seen the increase to 27,500 non-profit units in the June budget. On the small business front, thanks to the hard work of the finance committee and the sensitivity of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), we saw in the October statement clarification of the 12.5 per cent corporate dividend distribution tax. This provides additional relief. We saw the continuation of the small business bond and the introduction of the 4 per cent interest reduction program in the June budget.

To some degree, my hon. friend from Mississauga South reminds me of a quotation I saw in The Globe and Mail. As you know, that venerable newspaper has been complaining about the impact of high interest rates for sometime now and has been raising distressing stories about the impact of such rates. Just last week I saw a classic headline that said, "Lower interest rates inflict damage on savers." I wonder if the Hon. Member is not falling into that school of thought as well.

SUGGESTED USE OF SATELLITE EARTH STATIONS BY NORTHWEST TEL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the policy of the Department of Communications is to permit common carriers to own and operate satellite earth stations only in the 12/14 Ghz band. This policy may make sense in southern Canada but makes no sense in the Far North where, for technical reasons, it is necessary to use the 4/6 Ghz band. Hence Northwest Tel, the federal Crown corporation providing telecommunications in the North, is obliged to pay exorbitant rents, far in excess of the true value, to Telsat Canada for the use of its facilities. These excessive costs are then passed on to Northwest Tel's subscribers. Therefore, in order to avoid this discrimination against Northern telephone subscribers, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That Northwest Tel Incorporated be permitted to own and operate satellite earth stations in the 4/6 Ghz band.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MAILING OF CARE PARCELS TO POLAND

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, a number of countries have made it possible to send CARE parcels to Poland postage free, to help relieve the situation that exists there. I move, therefore, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That the House indicate to the Government and Canada Post that a policy whereby Canadians would be able to send CARE parcels postage free to friends and relatives should be implemented as soon as possible to last as long as this dreadful situation lasts.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

DISARMAMENT

RECOMMENDED ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE INSTITUTE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the escalation of military spending in the world, and in view of Canada's international image as a moderate and peaceful country, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House urge the Canadian Government, as a symbolic step, to buy one less F-18 fighter bomber and, instead, use the money to help establish a peace institute in Canada and fund university chairs and foundations which would study the causes of war and underdevelopment, and how we could maintain peace.

REQUEST FOR CHAIRMAN'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, due to the recent evidence uncovered yesterday by this Party at the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, which established that the purchase of B.P. Canada's gas stations by Petro-Canada, originally thought to cost the taxpayers $347 million, will actually cost $577 million, and because the management has further stated that the return on this investment would be 15 per cent compared to a national average of 5 per cent for all other oil marketers over the past ten years, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre):

That this House request the resignation of Mr. William Hopper, Chairman of Petro-Canada, for misleading the public and providing incomplete and unsubstantiated facts.

SUGGESTION NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY URGE NEED FOR DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, all political parties and the majority of Canadians want to work toward global nuclear disarmament. The New Democratic Party is in a position to play an important role in assisting toward the unification of the parties to achieve this end. In light of their close relations with the Communist Party, evidenced by the New Democratic Party Members' participation in May Day celebrations in Peking and Toronto, as well as the regular attendance of the Member for Spadina at celebrations held at Communist Party headquarters in Toronto, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble):

That this House call on the New Democratic Party to communicate with their Russian comrades in order to impress upon them the need to arrange a conference with President Reagan and President Andropov to discuss the topic of nuclear disarmament.

DESTRUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in light of the Solicitor General's statement of yesterday that he will soon be announcing a policy for the destruction of some RCMP documents, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson):

That no document be destroyed that might assist any RCMP officer who may be subject to prosecution where such document, to be determined by defence counsel, would be essential to a full answer and defence.

PENSIONS

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILLS C-131 AND C-133

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, in view of the Government's doctrinaire determination to force elderly Canadians to pay for the Government's incompetent management of our economy by proposing to limit pension increases to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent in 1984 and in view of the fact that senior citizens simply cannot afford to have their purchasing power further eroded by the actions by this Government, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

• (1410)

That this House calls on the Government to withdraw Bill C-131 and Bill C-133 from the Order Paper immediately and that it bring before this House proposals to bring true reform to this country's pension system.

That this House congratulate the Canadian Labour Congress and Dennis McDermott for finally understanding what the problem is in this country, for finally seeing the light and understanding that the Liberal Party and its management of this country have caused massive unemployment, massive economic distress and have generally managed the country to the verge of bankruptcy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR SUMMIT MEETING BETWEEN U.S. PRESIDENT AND U.S.S.R. CHAIRMAN

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, on May 16, 1982, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), while speaking at Notre Dame University, said, "I welcome the prospect of a summit meeting between the Presidents of the United States of America and the U.S.S.R.". He also stated, "Let us accept the challenge to take bold initiatives". Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and I am sure by every Member of this House:

That this House unanimously support the Prime Minister in calling publicly for a summit meeting during the next 18 months between President Reagan and Chairman Andropov to strengthen nuclear detente and initiate the process for nuclear arms stabilization and eventual reduction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

COST OF ACQUISITION OF BRITISH PETROLEUM

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas the original announcement of Petro-Canada's acquisition of British Petroleum Limited has turned out to be most misleading in light of the revelations of Chairman Bill Hopper in committee yesterday, and whereas it turns out that the actual cost of this questionable deal is fully two-thirds more than the Minister stated in this House of Commons last month, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt):

That this House condemn the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for allowing Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation for which he is responsible, to mislead the Canadian public and Hon. Members of this House.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED TAX CREDIT FOR CHARITABLE DONATIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact it is desirable that Canadians in general be encouraged to participate in voluntary organizations; since the voluntary organizations of Canada have an exemplary record for their contribution to excellence and are noteworthy in their efficiency, and since some taxpayers now are able to receive $100 deductions for charitable donations when in fact they have never made a charitable donation, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this Parliament encourage the Minister of Finance to give consideration to the concept of allowing a 50 per cent tax credit for all donations to charitable organizations and that, if he finds this proposal advantageous and workable, this Parliament encourage him to introduce such a concept in the next federal budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DISARMAMENT

DEMAND THAT CANADA BE DECLARED NUCLEAR FREE ZONE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, yesterday in this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once again abdicated leadership on disarmament when he professed complete ignorance on the question of the MX missile, a clear threat to our very survival. In view of the strong leadership shown by Malaspina College in Nanaimo, British Columbia, in declaring itself a nuclear free zone, in a referendum which was approved by 95 per cent of students, staff and faculty, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House instruct the Prime Minister to follow the leadership of Malaspina College and declare all of Canada a nuclear free zone.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—ROLE OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. Yesterday the Hon. Minister said in the House that he had received telegrams from the Lake Louise-Banff Chamber of Commerce supporting the project. Note that he said "telegrams".

I hold in my hand a copy of the telex that was sent to the Hon. Minister on October 5. The gist of it reads, "We urge your Department to expedite the approval process for this project." The Minister was well aware yesterday that this telex was sent by two men only, one of whom is John Morrison, who is a friend of Judd Buchanan. The other man is President of the Chamber of Commerce and also the solicitor for Judd Buchanan's company. No one else in the Chamber of Commerce knew that this telex was sent until approximately a month later. As soon as the members of the Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce found out about the said telex, another one was sent to the Minister on November 4, some 12 days before the permit.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Taylor: The telex reads:

—we would now like to respectfully retract—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question, or is he giving us a full history of the matter? Please ask the question now.

Mr. Taylor: In light of that second telegram, why did the Minister tell the House yesterday that the Lake Louise-Banff Chamber of Commerce supported the project when he knew that it did not?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, there are two aspects which I would like to comment on—

Mr. Clark: Do not comment, answer.

Mr. Roberts: —in answer to that question posed by the Hon. Member. First, I want to make it clear that both the telegram and the representations to which we referred yesterday came to us in October, as he indicated, when the decision on the land transfer had taken place a month earlier. That is to say, these representations, whatever their validity, were a month after the decision for the project had taken place. A decision had been made and, to that degree, they were too late.

The second comment I would like to make is that I know that the hon. gentleman would not want deliberately to mislead the House. He has referred to the telegram as containing the signatures of the people whom he has mentioned. Therefore, I think I should read the telegram, which is quite short, in its entirety. It says:

Attn Hon. John Roberts, Minister of the Environment

Re: Block 63, Banff, Alberta T0l 0C0

We understand that there have been negotiations regarding a rental accommodation development for Banff. Due to the extreme shortage of employee housing, we urge your Department to expedite the approval process for this project.

Regards

Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce

That is the telegram in its entirety.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister has been told a number of times who sent that telegram. He knows very well. He is the one who is misleading the House. The second telegram is signed the same way. In the second place, he said "telegrams". He only received one that was favourable—from two men—which the Chamber of Commerce knew nothing about. He said "telegrams" yesterday. Who is trying to mislead the House?

REASON FOR REQUESTING DELAY IN DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. If the Minister says that everything was above board and there was no difficulty, why did he have officials of his Department phone Buchanan last Friday requesting a hold on the development? Why?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I thought I clearly heard the Hon. Member say in his first question that the telegram was signed by those two individuals. If I misunderstood, I am sorry. That is what I thought he said. If he did say that, it is obviously contrary to the fact.

The Hon. Member asked in his second question why I asked for a delay in the project. The answer to that is quite clear—because there was an intervention on the part of a politician asking for that delay. That politician was the hon. gentleman from Bow River.

Mr. Taylor: What I said was that the telex was sent by two men. The Hon. Minister's hearing is as bad as his memory.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT BULLDOZERS BE REMOVED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister crossed the floor twice last week to tell me he was asking his officials to find out if he had authority to cancel that permit, and he knows it. If he denies that—

Madam Speaker: Is that the object of the Hon. Member's question? Question, please.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the bulldozers are now in that park. There has never been any information given that the park was going to be desecrated. Zoning was never questioned. We want to know now if the Minister will save that park, leave the trees that are still there, get the bulldozers out of that park, and build the apartment someplace else?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Again, Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman asserts that the telegram was sent by two men. The text clearly indicates that, so far as the recipient knew, it was sent by the Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce. There are no two names attached to this telegram. That is the name.

Mr. Taylor: You were told; don't lie about it.

Mr. Roberts: To answer the hon. gentleman's second question, I did indeed, when I spoke to him last week, say that I would see if it was possible legally to delay the project so that the kind of concern he expressed was one I could look into thoroughly. Indeed, I followed up on that intervention request and made inquiries, or rather had officials make inquiries, to see if some delay was possible, to satisfy the Hon. Member's request.

As to the third part of the Hon. Member's question, as I indicated in the House yesterday and in public statements, I have looked into the matter and I believe all the proprieties have been pursued and it is the firm conviction of Parks Canada that this arrangement is a beneficial one so far as Parks Canada and Banff are concerned. I do not believe at the moment it is either legally possible to turn back the clock, much as the Hon. Member might like to do so, without encouraging the risk of very grave damages which would not be, in my view, wise to suggest to the House we should do.

Mr. Clark: Judd Buchanan might sue for reneging on patronage.

APPLICATION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who will know that his former colleague in Cabinet, the Hon. Judd Buchanan, and his partners, have been actively pursuing this project involving the transfer of Government lands over the course of well over two years. The Prime Minister will also know that the post-employment conflict of interest guidelines demand that former Ministers not be involved with a commercial corporation in connection with any specific proceeding or transaction in which the Government of Canada is a party for two years following their exit from the Ministry. Mr. Buchanan was Minister of Public Works until mid-1979.

Is the Prime Minister going to look into enforcing the conflict of interest guidelines, at least in this instance, with respect to the activities of Mr. Buchanan, a former Minister of his Cabinet?

Mr. Nielsen: He is going to redraft them.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in phrasing his question the Hon. Member said that the Prime Minister "will know that for two years", and so on. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the first I heard of this transaction was a few days ago when it was raised in the House. Since then I have heard the Minister of the Environment answer various questions. It seems to me, insofar as I remember the conflict of interest guidelines—I believe they were accurately read by the Hon. Member—they apply to a Minister who leaves a Department and then who would use his knowledge or acquaintance with that Department, or familiarity with people in that Department, to enter into some commercial transaction. If my recollection is right, Mr. Buchanan left the Department responsible for Parks Canada somewhere around 1975 or 1976, so he was well within the guidelines if his initiative was taken about two years ago.

Mr. Clark: He was a member of the Ministry.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, that was a weasely avoidance of the spirit of the conflict of interest guidelines, and the Prime Minister knows it.

SPIRIT OF GUIDELINES—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, it seems that every month we have another Arthur Erikson situation in the Chamber here with respect to the Prime Minister's friends. Another one of his friends, Mr. John Gow, is a partner in this transaction. The Prime Minister will know that the conflict of interest guidelines say that Ministers will not, and I quote:

> —accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends or to organizations in which their relatives or friends have an interest.

• (1425)

The Prime Minister cannot avoid this matter simply by saying that the Minister of the Environment is responsible. It is the collective responsibility of Cabinet as well as a ministerial responsibility. I want to know what the Prime Minister is going to do about this.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe there are at least two aspects to the question asked by the Hon. Member. He referred to the spirit of the guidelines. I also heard the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition indicate that somehow we had flouted the spirit of the guidelines.

Mr. Nielsen: The letter of the guidelines.

Mr. Trudeau: If I am incorrect, then I hope the Leader of the Opposition will correct me. My recollection of the guidelines is that they prevent a Minister from using the knowledge he acquired in that Department, or his acquaintance with the—

Mr. Nielsen: In Cabinet.

Mr. Trudeau: I believe the letter and the spirit of the guidelines are quite specific. It is not that any Minister should do nothing for two years. I do not believe that even Members of the Opposition who entered private life after resigning from the Ministry would be expected to do nothing. Perhaps that is the maximum of their possible performance, but in terms of the guidelines, the intention was not to prevent former Members of the Ministry from doing anything for two years.

Mr. Broadbent: You are doing nothing now.

Mr. Trudeau: It was to do nothing related to their particular Department.

Mr. Nielsen: Related to the Cabinet.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Member and the Leader of the Opposition are serious about this I would ask them to refer to the guidelines and indicate to me in what way they think Mr. Buchanan flouted the spirit of the guidelines.

As far as Mr. Gow is concerned, it is true that he is a friend, Madam Speaker. I had never heard of this transaction before. He never talked to me about it. There is no way in which I could assure him preferential treatment, because I did not know there was going to be any treatment at all.

The question is whether he was a friend of anyone else and if he got preferential treatment. It would seem to me that the Hon. Minister of the Environment made it quite clear that there was no preferential treatment. A recommendation was passed, as I understand it, by the City Council, by the Environmental Advisory Board, and by the officials of Parks Canada. The Minister made it quite clear in his answer that he has not extended any preferential treatment to either of these gentlemen.

JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR OLDER WOMEN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. An NDP Task Force on Older Women has been holding hearings in every Province. It has been told repeatedly that women who spend their whole lives raising Canada's children, experience extreme poverty, isolation, and loneliness in their middle and later years. On behalf of these women I would like to ask the Minister what plans he has or what he will do to develop job opportunities for mature women. In particular, will he allocate some of the funds available for job-creation programs to target the needs of this age group, these women who really need an opportunity to work and pay into a pension plan?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member raises a very legitimate and very important concern. I should like to point out to her that in the past year we have taken a number of initiatives to respond directly to that particular problem. In something like 12 centres across Canada we have opened special women's employment centres to provide counselling and placement services as well as special help in the transfer from home to the first-time job.

In addition, we have substantially increased the Outreach budget so that community based organizations can also provide that kind of employment base service to them. As well, the Canada Community Service Employment Program is particularly targetted to this group. Almost 80 per cent of the people working in the Program have worked in child care, in social services programs, or are women coming into the work force for the first time and they are closer to their clientele.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, it is important to have counselling support services but there is no point having them if there are no jobs at the end.

SKILLS TESTING PROGRAM

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I have a supplementary question, Madam Speaker. In connection with the services of the Canada Employment Centres we often find that homemakers are handicapped because they do not have job experience and so do not have a job reference. It has been proposed by some women that we have heard from, that there could be a testing program carried out at Canada Employment Centres. As a result of this a certificate could be awarded which would recognize the skills of women in human relations and management, and the other skills that they have acquired in a lifetime of experience could also be recognized. Will the Minister implement this in Employment Centres as a means of giving older women a chance for a good resumé and then a good chance at a job?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, obviously if we established that particular program it would be to give us information and ideas about how we could more broadly expand those initiatives. We would be prepared to look at such a program and see how we could apply it on a national level.

I would point out again that I know of one project in my own city, an employment counselling service which is an Outreach Program. In the last two or three months it has had something like a 70 per cent success rate, enabling older women entering the work place to find their first jobs. It is a very specific example of how a good counselling placement service, working individually with women, can provide them with both the opportunity to choose how they can upgrade their skills and also get their first job opportunities. This is what we really want to concentrate on, that is, providing individualized service where it is needed most in terms of making that major transition from home to work.

INCOME TAX

USE OF SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS BY GOVERNMENT BOND HOLDERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Would he confirm that those ordinary Canadians who invest in Canada Savings Bonds or regular Government bonds are required to pay income tax on the interest or the income they receive from the bonds, and that, in the case of coupon bonds, social security numbers have to be given to the bank or whoever cashes the coupons to ensure that the interest income is monitored and to ensure that that income is taxed?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with the practice, with the check-off of social security numbers which the Hon. Member raised. I will find out if there is a common practice, common through all financial institutions, and advise him.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am surprised the Minister is not prepared to confirm that people receiving bond income are not required to pay income tax, or there is no follow-up on that.

Some Hon. Members: They are.

POSITION OF TREASURY BILL INVESTORS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in light of the problem would the Minister explain why, for sophisticated investors who buy Government of Canada Treasury Bills, there is no follow-up on the bills as to the income they receive on the discount of the bills, why there is no co-ordination of that income to the Income Tax Department so that the income can be taxed, and why sophisticated investors, people who buy Treasury Bills, in many cases are able to escape the payment of income tax when ordinary Canadians who buy Canada Savings Bonds and the like are stuck with paying the tax?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, of course one of the difficulties that the question poses and that the Minister of Finance hit upon recently in answer to questions dealing with the tax system is in coming up with a system which is uncomplicated, unsophisticated and meets, for example, the submissions of the Canadian Tax Foundation that the tax system and its implementation should be uncomplicated.

Apart from the fact that the system which the Hon. Member encourages us to adopt would be very complicated and very sophisticated, there is the question of whether the cost of putting such a system in place is worth the revenues which would be received in the circumstances. I am sure this matter is one that the Department and the Minister of Finance are concerned about, and he is undertaking, as he indicated in his speech in Metropolitan Toronto last evening, a review of the system with the objective that it be simplified and not complicated, as the Hon. Member would encourage.

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—SECOND TELEGRAM SENT BY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It is supplementary to those already raised today on the Judd Buchanan apartment complex in Banff National Park. The Minister told the House yesterday that he had telegrams from the Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce supporting the Judd Buchanan apartment complex being built at Banff. Yet on November 4 he received a telegram which read:

> Further to our telex dated Tuesday, October 5, 1982, please be advised that although the Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce recognizes the need for additional staff housing in Banff, we would now like to respectfully retract our October 5 telex as it does not reflect the views of the majority of the Board.
> Sincerely,
> Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce

My question to the Minister is this: why in the House yesterday, on the public record, did he tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada, through the Parliament of Canada, that the Chamber of Commerce supported the apartment complex being built when he possessed a communication in his pocket that made it very clear that the opposite was the truth?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, as I indicated yesterday to the House, I had received the earlier telegram to which the Hon. Member referred, and outside the House I indicated that I had also received the second telegram to which he referred.

Mr. Nielsen: Outside the House.

Mr. Roberts: The really relevant point in relation to both telegrams is that the decisions about which Hon. Members are concerned was taken a month or six weeks before either of those telegrams was received.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, to the Minister of the Environment, the only relevant point in this whole debate is whether the Minister of the Crown is telling the truth or whether he is misleading the House. My question to the Minister, in light of that, is this: Yesterday on the floor of the House of Commons he said:

> Subsequent to that, the Chamber of Commerce in the area sent telegrams supporting the proposal to the Government.

He said, "telegrams", two telegrams. The implication was that both telegrams supported the action that is being taken in this instance. I repeat my question to the Minister. When he possessed a telegram in his pocket disavowing the first telegram, why did he say to the House of Commons that he had received telegrams verifying that the Judd Buchanan complex being built in Banff had the full endorsement of the Chamber of Commerce in question and the people that the Chamber represented? Why did he make that statement?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is really a nit picking nits. If it will make him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: If it will make him much happier, I would be quite happy to drop the "s" off "telegrams", if indeed I said telegrams rather than telegram.

The essential point that was raised yesterday in the House was the question of when the decision was taken what kind of indications did we have of public opinion on the site, and what kind of consultations had taken place. As I indicated yesterday, there have been continuing public consultations going back ten years, reviewed in 1980. As the Hon. Member for

Bow River has stated himself, reviews took place again. The project was discussed again in December, 1981, with the town council. It was a discussion of what was likely to take place, and opportunities were presented for comments then. That was the point that was being made yesterday.

If the Hon. Member really would feel much happier if the Hansard record yesterday read "telegram" instead of "telegrams", I would be quite happy to have that correction made.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CHANGE DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if I could have the attention of the Minister for patronage in the parks—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —the Minister of the Environment knows that the hearings to which he refers ten years ago related to zoning practices generally, not to the application of his former colleague. The Minister has told us that it is too late to change the decision. The decision has been opposed by the Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce, by some 1,200 people, and it has caused the resignation of the public servant who says he was forced to sign the authority. Why, since the decision was based on false information, and since the decision was—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I hear from several Liberals who are potential applicants for permits to developing Banff, Jasper, and other national parks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: Why will the Minister not change a decision that was based on false information?

• (1440)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, since a question has been raised, perhaps I should refer Hon. Members of the House to yesterday's Hansard, page 20,882, in which, in reply to a question by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, I said, in the second paragraph:

> Again I refer the Hon. Member to the telegram—

That is in the singular. My sentence continued—

> —which we received indicating the support of the Chamber of Commerce for the proposal.

If I inadvertently misled Hon. Members opposite by referring to telegrams in my earlier response, I clearly indicated in my second response that we were talking about a telegram.

Second, perhaps I should indicate, since clearly it is a question of concern about the opportunity of people in the area to know what is being considered, that the Hon. Member for Bow River himself said:

> December 7, 1981: Banff Community Council, (town council) meeting hears a presentation from Parks Canada's townsite manager, Dan Mullaly, proposing that additional staff housing be constructed to facilitate needs of community and gives various indications to a Marmot/Cougar project. The Banff Community Council approves the need for additional staff housing but does not approve any specific sites for such.

Note that extract does not say "objects to the proposal". According to the Hon. Member's own statement, that took place in December, 1981—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: —so that well over a year—for almost a year at least—the nature of the project was known and was available for members of the public in the Banff area and elsewhere and, indeed, for the Hon. Member to comment upon.

REASONS FOR NOT REVERSING DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister overlooked my question. Why will he not reverse his decision? Is the Minister afraid that Judd Buchanan will sue him for breach for patronage?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, maybe the Leader of the Opposition believes it is proper for governments willy-nilly to break legal arrangements and solid agreements—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: —and that a Minister of the Crown should be heedless of the legal consequences of so doing, or damages which could legitimately arise from so doing. I do not think that is a proper attitude for a Minister to take. Clearly with the appropriate procedures under the Parks Canada Act a proper decision was taken following authorities which had been laid down.

Mr. Crosbie: Hold your nose and vote.

Mr. Roberts: An agreement was made and it did not appear to me to be in the public interest to open the Government to damages which could arise from rescinding, overcoming, or overturning an agreement which had been legitimately arrived at.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, this Government had no hesitation in breaching contracts with Syncrude, with Alsands and in a number of energy agreements. The only contracts it respects are the patronage contracts it has with its own former colleagues.

OFFICIAL'S RESIGNATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Parks Canada official, Mr. Lee Racine, who was—in the past tense—the development—

An Hon. Member: Why are you shaking?

Mr. Clark: What is shaking is the Liberal Government, the rotten, corrupt Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Lee Racine, the development and construction officer in Banff National Park, resigned. He is the man who signed the building permit. He resigned because he signed it under pressure from Ottawa, under coercion from the Minister's Department, the Minister's officials and perhaps the Minister himself. For those reasons he resigned. Will the Minister tell the House of Commons why it was that Mr. Racine was ordered to rush approval of this particular transaction? Will the Minister tell why he was forced to do something that in retrospect Mr. Racine found so odious that he was forced to resign?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition refers to patronage and to interventions. I should make it absolutely clear to him and absolutely clear to the House that in no aspect in this situation did I overrule, direct, transform or supplant recommendations or decisions taken by Parks Canada's officials. If the Hon. Member wishes to make specific allegations rather than simply indulge in character assassinations and smears, he should make specific, concrete allegations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: The second point I would make is that it is true there was a resignation of a Parks Canada official who had been working with Parks Canada for the past six months. He resigned because he did not agree with the decision taken by his Parks Canada superior. If we are to have an investigation or a scrutiny every time some officer does not agree with the actions of his superiors—

Mr. Crosbie: There will be a lot of investigations.

Mr. Roberts: —the country will be flooded with inquiries. If there are to be inquiries every time one of the Hon. Member's followers does not agree with one of the decisions he has taken, then the Conservative Party would be racked with perpetual investigations and recriminations.

An Hon. Member: As they are.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but I am five minutes late in recognizing the turn for the New Democratic Party. I will come back to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition later.

Mr. Nielsen: The heat is off; relax over there.

LABOUR RELATIONS

POLICY FOLLOWED BY CHRYSLER CORPORATION IN DISPUTE WITH WORKERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will put my question to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday we learned that the Chrysler Corporation, in spite of continuing obligations under the Canada-U.S. Automotive Agreement, is busy transferring work that was normally done by Canadian workers on this side of the border to the American side of the border and to plants in that country. Today we have learned the names of two specific companies involved.

Considering that the Chrysler Corporation has received millions of dollars in assistance from Canadian taxpayers, does the Government value this kind of anti-Canadian labour policy on the part of that Corporation as appropriate, or does the Government not think that Corporation has an obligation to sit down and negotiate seriously with its Canadian workers?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, without going into the very serious developments that have taken place in the last few days on this particular issue, I would like to remind the hon. gentlemen of the New Democratic Party that this labour relations dispute could be resolved, or at least come squarely under the jurisdiction of the Ontario Government, and that that matter rests squarely for a resolution with the Ontario Government.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I remind the Minister that it is the Government of Canada that signed an international agreement with the United States of America and not the Government of the Province of Ontario.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE IN DISPUTE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Labour. Considering that the Chrysler workers have not received any increase in their pay for three years while, in the meantime, the cost of living has gone up more than 37 per cent, and that Chrysler Corporation for the first nine months of this year has had a profit in excess of $266 million, does the Minister, in terms of showing some leadership in Canada, not think it appropriate to tell that Corporation that, instead of taking anti-labour positions with its workers, it should sit down and make a reasonable wage offer?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I advise the Hon. Member to run for a seat in the Ontario Legislature.

CORPORATION'S OBLIGATION TO NEGOTIATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Labour. I would like to remind the Minister it was this Government that provided Chrysler Corporation with Canadian taxpayers' money, coming in the main from ordinary workers all across the land. Is the Minister prepared to stand up and say to the Chrysler Corporation, "You have received this money. You have made a profit in the first nine months of this year. You have an obligation to negotiate seriously with Canadian workers who have some entitlement to some reasonable increase for the work they are doing"? Is the Minister prepared to stand up and say that, or is he just going to pass the buck out of this House entirely?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, it seems as if the Hon. Member does not realize that he is raising an economic question with the Minister of Labour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: I will be glad to answer questions that have to do with federal jurisdiction in labour matters.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

ROLE OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on this matter of Liberal patronage. Will the Prime Minister confirm that the shares of Eldorado, Canadair, de Havilland and other companies will be transferred to the Canada Development Investment Corporation, that Mr. Joel Bell will be the new President of that Corporation, and that Mr. Maurice Strong will be the new Chairman?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not see the relevance between that and patronage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The innocent abroad.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister answer the question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Will the Leader of the Opposition indicate what patronage he has in mind when he asks the question?

APPOINTMENT OF CORPORATION PRESIDENT AND CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister confirm that the former Liberal candidate in Scarborough, Maurice Strong, and that the former Liberal henchman in Petro-Canada and in the Minister's office, under the Prime Minister's office, Joel Bell, will be respectively, Chairman and President of the Canada Development Investment Corporation and that there will be an announcement this afternoon that transferred to that Corporation will be shares of Eldorado, Canadair, de Havilland and other companies? Is that simple enough? Can the Prime Minister understand that? Can he answer that question?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that no henchmen of the Liberal Party will be appointed to those posts, but I do believe that two hon. gentlemen, competent in the field, will be appointed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The land of Strong! For whom the bell tolls!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UNITED STATES DECISION TO DEPLOY MX MISSILES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. On Monday night President Reagan announced his intention to proceed with the development of the MX missile, using a dense-pack basing plan. Would the Minister tell the House if he was advised or briefed on this decision by Washington or by his own staff prior to this announcement, and could he tell us what Canada's position is concerning the feasibility of the proposed dense-pack plan?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think the communication between Washington and this Government is normally very fluent. I think the Department of External Affairs was aware of the deliberations of the President concerning the MX missiles and also about some of the issues he would address in his speech. I think it is only normal that we in the Department of National Defence, through our contacts with the Department of External Affairs know what is going on between our American friends and ourselves. As far as the issue of the MX missile is conerned, I think it is part of the two-track decision which was taken by NATO to try to create a credible deterrent in order to avoid war and preserve the peace. Actually, that is the basis of all actions taken by the United States within the NATO area.

NECESSITY FOR ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE SITE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I am asking the Minister of National Defence these questions because he, of all people in the House, is supposedly an expert on the feasibility of the equipment and the siting. Most experts are nearly unanimous in their belief that, for the dense-pack system to be viable, an anti-ballistic missile site will have to be set up nearby. Has the Minister been briefed or informed on this matter, and can he inform the House whether such an ABM siting would be considered to be a breach of the ABM Treaty of 1972?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as far as being an expert is concerned, I am humble enough to know that I am not an expert in all defence matters. I think that the Hon. Member, being an ex-Minister of Defence, can understand that also. As far as the MX missile issue is concerned, I think we are now dealing with a particular issue related to American defence, which has nothing to do, in a way, with Canada as far as our defence issues are concerned. We do, of course, have a feeling that everything the United States does as far as defence is concerned is of concern to us, but not necessarily to Canadian defence. I am going to Brussels next week to attend the Nuclear Planning Group and Defence Planning Committee meeting. I am sure that at some point Mr. Weinberger, the U.S. Secretary for Defence, will have much information to give to his NATO colleagues as far as the American defence decision on MX missiles is concerned.

WITHHOLDING OF CANCELLED CHARTER FARES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Canadian travellers are being bilked millions of dollars by major Canadian air charter carriers, including Air Canada, which are, in fact, breaking federal laws and confiscating up to 100 per cent of fares on cancelled advanced booking charters. In fact I have in my hand a confidential CTC memo which states that "the general public is getting cheated" by this scam. Will the Minister now confirm that CTC's legal branch has ruled that this practice is, in fact, completely illegal, and will he now order all charter carriers involved to refund fully, with interest, the moneys illegally withheld? Will he further order them, particularly during the holiday season, to obey the law immediately and stop fleecing thousands of Canadian travellers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the law and the facts are not exactly as stated; far from it. The regulations under the Aeronautics Act state that to purchase an ABC or advance booking charter ticket, a deposit of not less than 10 per cent must be made, and that amount of money is not refundable. It appears that tour operators are charging more than 10 per cent and stating that that amount is not refundable, either. That is clearly being done. People can read the conditions. This practice has existed in Canada since 1972. It may be that it is not clear enough. The CTC itself is willing to consider the matter again, which is being done now, and the CTC will decide if a change must be made, if an amendment is needed, and if more interpretation is required. That is where the question lies at the moment.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRICE CHARGED BY OIL COMPANIES FOR UNLEADED GASOLINE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is a supplementary one, but it is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—a rather gentle one—not the Minister, the question. It relates to people who are being hosed at the pumps.

According to press reports, a Government study on gasoline costs has shown that Canadian consumers are being gouged by something like 12 cents a gallon too much for unleaded gas, a fact that I pointed out to the Minister some six months ago. The Minister said in a letter that the high cost of unleaded gas was probably due to the fact that only the prices for regular gasoline were posted at the pumps and, therefore, there really was not any competition.

I received a wire from Shell Canada blaming the Government for increasing the taxes on unleaded gasoline and stating that that was the reason, rather than the sort of grasping by the oil industry, which caused the differential in prices by up to 145 per cent. Therefore I would like to ask the Minister, who is really responsible for this absolutely ridiculous price difference, to quote Allen Gullon of Environment Canada? Now that the Minister has had a year and a half to study the matter, what does he intend to do to bring this environmentally preferable kind of fuel back down to earth?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that the answer to one of the questions put by the Hon. Member, namely, who is responsible for these price increases, is, of course, the companies that set the prices. What my department can do? When the Hon. Member asked me the question several weeks ago, I answered him in the House that my department did not have the power to regulate or control prices, and that in any case, under the Combines Investigation Act, the Director of Investigation could check whether there had been any price fixing or collusion by companies in setting these prices. The Director of Investigation did, in fact, look into the matter after the subject was raised in the House, and regarding the article that appeared this morning, he informed me that he had looked into the situation, that he had checked and saw no reason to conclude that the difference in price between regular and unleaded gas could raise questions under the Combines Investigation Act.

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—ORIGINAL PROPOSAL

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of the Environment a supplementary question concerning the Banff proposal. On December 23 his Deputy Minister wrote to the Hon. Member for Bow River about this land transaction and the letter stated it was indeed under discussion and was reviewed by Parks Canada and the Treasury Board and, on the basis of that analysis, the proposed land exchange was not approved. My question to the Minister is, did he know that? Is that the same land that we are talking about, and why, after having given the Hon. Member for Bow River the information that nothing further was going to be done, was all of the negotiation for this project conducted secretly until finally someone found out about it?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, there was an original proposal, on which, as the Hon. Member indicated, the views of the Treasury Board were sought. It was felt that that proposal would not adequately protect the public interest if it were accepted. Therefore Parks Canada went back and negotiated a very different proposal with the developers.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): This is a point of order, Madam Speaker, in connection with a deliberate change in the record of our debates which apparently occurred yesterday. This refers to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) answer to a question in the House yesterday, at page 20878 of Hansard. I was questioning the Prime Minister as to who should turn a new leaf in East-West relations, whether it should be us, as the Prime Minister indicates, or the U.S.S.R. The Prime Minister gave this answer as recorded in Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, I think the Soviet Union should turn a new leaf.

I happen to have been sent the "blues" yesterday, as I am entitled to be sent them, and that is not the answer that was recorded yesterday as being given by the Prime Minister. He was obviously reluctant to say that anybody thought Canada and the West should turn a new leaf, and he is recorded in the "blues" as saying, "Madam Speaker, I think that several humans should turn a new leaf." Now, "several humans" and "Soviet Union" are not the same expression. There is a complete change, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, order! The Hon. Member, I am sure, knows that only the Member who made the statement may correct his statement. That Member is totally responsible for the statement he makes in the House and no other Member can force that Member to correct his statement. The statement has to be, in my view, as it stands and as approved by the person who did make the statement.

Mr. Crosbie: I refer you to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Madam Speaker, at page 48 where it says this:

> The debates of the House of Commons are reported verbatim . . . Slight verbal alterations are allowed to be made by a Member in order to make his meaning more precise and accurate; however, he may not, by the insertion of words or phrases, effect material changes in the meaning of what he actually said in the House.

Now, Madam Speaker, inserting the words "Soviet Union" is a complete change to what the Prime Minister said in this House. He in no way wanted to infer that the Soviet Union was under any—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

I am sure that the Hon. Member is not the one who knows exactly what that statement was. That statement was made by another Hon. Member and that Hon. Member is the only one who can correct his own statement.

As far as the Hon. Member is concerned, the quote he made from the "blues" as against what is inscribed in Hansard indicates to me that those two sounds are quite similar. We will check that. We not only have the "blues" but we also have tapes, and we can check all of that. But it is not up to the Hon. Member to correct another Hon. Member's statement.

Mr. Nielsen: On that point, as I understand it—

Madam Speaker: Order, please; I am sorry, was the Right Hon. Prime Minister rising to ask for the floor? I will let him intervene now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I may be able to help you clear up what seems to be a discussion on a point of order. I can assure the House and the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), that I had nothing to do with the "blues". I know of no change being made in the "blues", certainly not on my instructions, and I doubt whether they were made by anyone in my office.

I recollect that when I gave that answer there was, as often happens, a lot of noise coming from the Tory Party, and it is probably true that the stenographer may have written "several humans", but it would seem to me, that if that was the case, the Editor must have used his common sense, as I enjoin the Hon. Member to use his, and said that what must have been said was the "Soviet Union".

I can assure the Hon. Member that what I did say in fact was the "Soviet Union". I must say that I meant that in part to humour the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I am instructed by the Hansard office, where I checked this morning, that the Prime Minister's office corrected these "blues". Perhaps they do not have to get his consent to do whatever they like, but there is a proper procedure. You rise in the House, according to Beauchesne, if you want to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Crosbie: He has had a conversion since yesterday, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I think the Hon. Member realizes that whatever he alleges to be a statement by a member of Hansard cannot be accepted in lieu of a statement made by an Hon. Member in the House, and especially by a Right Hon. Member.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In an issue of this nature, Madam Speaker, I see no distinction between one Hon. Member of this House and any other Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The correction has been made and I am satisfied with that. It has been made where it should have been made, in the House of Commons.

There is a residual matter here, and I trust I heard the Chair wrongly, in the inference that I drew from the remarks of the Chair when dealing with the point raised by the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), namely, that it is not only the right but the obligation of Members of the House of Commons when they notice a deliberate or a blatant change in the official record of this House of Commons to bring that matter to the attention of the Chair.

I do not quarrel at all with the fact, as the Chair has ruled, that the only individual who has the right to make a change in the official record with respect to what he or she says is that Member himself or herself, but I would take strong exception if your ruling was intended to include a prohibition in any way on Members to rise and draw attention to the fact that the official record of the House of Commons had been altered in any substantial way. That has always been our right, and I would not want to see any ruling of the Chair cast any doubt on that whatsoever.

Madam Speaker: I did not make any such ruling. I just reminded Hon. Members of the rule. Members of the House can raise absolutely anything they want in this House, but it is the responsibility of the Hon. Member who made the statement to determine whether he is going to correct the statement or not.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I may be able to elucidate the matter further, because I received a note from my office. Before reading it I must indicate my astonishment that even the Member for St. John's West would not want me to have said the Soviet Union, because then I would be agreeing with him.

Mr. Crosbie: I am very pleased that you had a conversion—I am delighted.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member for St. John's West says that he is delighted and that I had a conversion. I think if he looks at the record he will see no conversion, but that I agree with him seems to displease him because he would want—

Mr. Crosbie: I am happy, I am happy, but do it right.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Member is happy, why is he insisting that I did not say the Soviet Union? Why is he saying that, if he is happy?

Mr. Crosbie: Because the "blues" said it.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think Hon. Members are now debating the question. It seems to me that the question is closed and the correction is accepted. It has been made and it has been accepted as the statement made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it does involve the Editor of Hansard, and that is why I thought it my duty to draw it to your attention. The note comes from Miss Ruth Derrick of my office, who says:

> The blues did reflect "several humans" but I thought I heard you say "Soviet Union" so I made a note on the blues to the Editor of Hansard asking that he listen to the tapes in order to check that out to verify it one way or the other.

She did not change the "blues"; she asked the Editor of Hansard to check out what he heard—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the note concludes:

> I assume he did—

This is the Editor of Hansard.

> —and it is printed as "Soviet Union" in today's Hansard.

The matter rests.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. TAYLOR—REMARK OF MR. ROBERTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I believe I heard the Hon. Minister of the Environment say today that I had misled the House. I want to check the "blues" carefully. I am giving notice that if that is so, I will want the right to raise a question of privilege.

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member can do that without giving notice. If he is now saying that the fact that someone might have said he misled the House is unparliamentary, I remind the Hon. Member that in the "blues" the words must read "deliberately misled". Unless the word "deliberate" was used, it would not be unparliamentary.

PETITIONS

MR. KILGOUR—IMPOSITION OF SIX AND FIVE TO FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVANTS' PENSIONS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to file a petition on behalf of approximately 100 members of the Southeast Edmonton Seniors' Association protesting the Government's intention to apply six and five to federal public service pensions. They object to the imposition of six and five on several bases, including the question of breach of good faith, breach of contract and misrepresentation to employees in order to get them to retire early. They cite a quotation from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1978 wherein he said he would maintain the purchasing power of federal public servants, and a pledge in 1981 by the then president of the treasury board that he would protect public servants' pensions from inflation.

MR. HALLIDAY—CANCELLATION OF SATURDAY MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise in my place today to table a petition from 80 residents of the constituency of Oxford who wish to register their objection to the cancellation of Saturday mail delivery to rural routes and wish it known that they would prefer mail delivery six days a week.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-665, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I seek the co-operation of the House this afternoon to introduce this Bill to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. In brief, this Bill would amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act so as to increase the basic coverage from $20,000 to $100,000, a move which is indeed necessary in order to more adequately reflect present day economic realities. This long overdue increase will assure investors that there is the protection and security to which they are entitled under the Act. In addition, provision would be made for premiums assessed against financial institutions toward a deposit insurance fund to be increased accordingly.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN AID TO THE U.S.S.R.

Question No. 4,115—Mr. Domm:

Since May, 1971, did the Government extend financial aid in any form to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the purpose of partially financing construction of oil and gas pipelines, or for drilling and exploratory well development, or for any other purpose relating to energy extraction, development and supply and, if so, what was the precise nature and level of the financing?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian Government has not extended any foreign aid to the Government of the U.S.S.R. since 1971. Foreign aid is offered only by the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) to developing countries and the U.S.S.R. is not such a country. This having been said, however, official credits in support of Canadian exporters have been provided to the U.S.S.R. by the Export Development Corporation (EDC). In this respect since 1971, the Export Development Corporation provided financing for a total of $253,849,570 to support sixteen different sales of Canadian goods and services to the U.S.S.R. Thirteen of these transactions amounting to $215,224,991 were related to the energy sector. Twelve of them were financed under the Financial Protocol Agreement between EDC and the Ministry of Foreign Trade of the U.S.S.R. dated May 5, 1975 and one was financed under a separate loan agreement in 1974, prior to the signing of the Protocol. In respect of each contract, EDC financing covered 85 per cent of the sale price of the Canadian goods and services. Details of these energy-related financing agreements, as published in EDC's annual reports, are the following: (see appendix which follows.)

FRANCOPHONE SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 4,174—Mr. Corbett:

What percentage of the persons who would be included under Measures VII to XI of the Official Languages Program in the Public Service that act in the role of managers and supervisory personnel have French as their first language?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Assuming that reference is made to measures mentioned in the press release of November 10, 1981, it is noted that the question has five elements and that all seek estimates of complex impacts of changes introduced into the Official Languages Program.

1. There are 947 occupied positions currently in the Executive Group which will, after December 31, 1982, be affected by Measure VII. Although no accurate prediction can be given on the impact that this measure will have on future francophone appointees, using fiscal year 1981-82 statistical data as a model, of 329 appointments made, only three anglophones and no francophones would have been affected. (Measure VII)

2. There are approximately 2,500 occupied positions involving supervisory functions for which the language requirements will be raised to the "B" level of proficiency when they are re-staffed. Although no accurate prediction can be given on the impact that Measure VIII will have on future francophone appointees, using fiscal year 1981-82 statistical data as a model, of the 4,112 appointments made to supervisory positions, francophones accounted for 48.3 per cent. (Measure VIII)

3. No information. (Measure IX)

4. No information. (Measure X)

5. No information. (Measure XI)

CANADIAN MEDIA CORPORATION—BASIC MONTHLY RETAINER FEE

Question No. 4,479—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the Canadian Media Corporation's basic monthly retainer fee?

2. Does CMC's basic monthly retainer fee include (a) travel expenses (b) an Ottawa office (c) any management functions other than being the Agency of Record for the Government?

3. What are the criteria used by the Government for assessing an appropriate planning fee structure for advertising programs of the various Government Departments?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. DSS is currently paying CMC, Canadian Media Corporation, a monthly fee of $136,555.

2. (a) No, however for the period of January 1, 1981 to March 31, 1983, a provision, not to exceed $40,834 of travel and living expenses based on approved travel at cost, was made in the initial 27 month contract; (b) No, CMC, Canadian Media Corporation does not have an Ottawa office; (c) No.

3. The planning fee structure paid to creative/planning agencies is based on the advertising industry standard commission paid to agencies for planning/creative services when an agency of record is employed to centralize media placements.

FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO REDUCE INTEREST RATE

Hon. Pierre De Bané (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-134, respecting rebates of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. De Bané (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, in my view, Bill C-134, an Act respecting rebates of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act, is essential to the implementation of special measures reintroduced by the Government in its budget last June. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) mentioned earlier, the federal Farm Financial Assistance Program was established in order to alleviate the distressing situation created by high interest rates and lower returns on farm products. Canadian farmers who are facing serious financial difficulties can obtain an interest rebate of four percentage points on their loans for two years, which reduces the effective interest cost to 11¾ per cent during the first two years of the loan. The program has already saved several hundred farmers from bankruptcy, and will probably save several hundred more before it expires.

The Farm Credit Corporation has always done its utmost to help its clients through difficult periods. Its recovery plans, for instance, are among the most flexible known. FCC credit advisers encourage farmers to discuss their financial difficulties as soon as they become apparent, so that they can then reconsider repayment schedules and take appropriate action. In some cases, rescheduling of the loan may be necessary. In others, postponement of one or two payments may be sufficient. It is reassuring to note, however, that the FCC is sufficiently concerned about the problems facing its clients to take this kind of action, and that this agency, which represents the government, has not forgotten the human factor in its business relations with Canadian farmers.

In addition to its flexible recovery plans and the special loans being granted since June 1982 under the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program, the FCC offers its borrowers every opportunity to resolve their financial problems through its Advisory Services Program.

Generally speaking, all FCC loan applicants may benefit from preliminary counselling, including advice on how to organize and develop their farm operations. The service is available to any FCC borrower who asks for it. However, the service is compulsory in the case of borrowers under the special program, since it is one of the conditions of the loan. If we look at the components of this program, it is easy to understand why the service is compulsory for borrowers who are in financial difficulty and are anxious to improve their situation. First of all, the goal of the Advisory Services Program is to help the farmer manage his farm finances more effectively. The credit adviser will therefore help the farmer to select the accounting system that is best adapted to his needs and help him get acquainted with the system.

With his financial training and experience, the credit adviser is also in a position to help the farmer interpret and analyze the financial data provided by his accounting system. He can also provide a comparative analysis of financial factors and farm production in similar operations. Finally, if the farmer requires additional counselling, the credit adviser can tell him where to obtain the information or the help he needs. Thus, this service is an adjunct to provincial educational programs. As a result of the follow-up provided through the Advisory Services Program, the farmer has a better chance of successfully implementing his recovery plan.

Mr. Speaker—

—a Bill of this nature is not new. In the November 12, 1981 budget speech the then minister of finance announced a similar special program to assist farmers in financial distress. It provided a 5 percentage point rebate. Similar legislation to this Bill came into force in April, 1982 for the November 12, 1981 special program, which terminated on March 31, 1981. There was strong demand for the program, as the statistics indicate. From November 12, 1981 to March 31, 1982, 382 loans totalling $45.417 million were approved. Interest rebates on these loans over a two-year period will total about $4.6 million.

I urge Hon. Members to support this Bill which will be instrumental in assisting so many Canadian farmers through these difficult times. Most agricultural producers are at the mercy of the marketplace for their incomes. The price received for their production does not correspond with their costs, and in recent times costs have outstripped earnings for a significant number of them. I firmly believe that most of these producers can survive and contribute to the economy if they are given a chance to recover. This interest subsidy for a two-year period provides that breathing room. Agriculture is essential for a healthy economy. If our economy is to strengthen, so must agriculture.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the FCC is doing everything in its power to help borrowers through the difficult times we are experiencing today. By supporting Bill C-134, my hon. colleagues will enable us to continue its good work.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the debate will be short and that on both sides of the House, Hon. Members will act quickly so that our farmers will be able to take advantage of the benefits of Bill C-134 as soon as possible.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments before we conclude the debate on Bill C-134, a piece of legislation that is indeed important to farmers who, like so many other sectors, are facing tremendous problems because of a bankrupt economy. We are being asked to expedite this bill. Well, I shall be fairly brief, but nevertheless, I would like to remind the Government that the fact we are obliged to consider this kind of legislation, namely Bill C-34, today, means that things are not as they should be in this country, and perhaps the Government should recognize this. As usual, it seems the Government is once again introducing corrective measures at the last minute to save people who are in dire straits because of a lack of economic foresight and probably also because of a lack of adequate economic provisions. Not long ago, we had an interesting debate on the importance of research and development, and considering the significance of agriculture to our economy, I believe that more substantial allocation of funds to more thorough research would have enabled the agricultural sector, which I consider extremely important, to benefit as well from certain legal provisions that in all cases would have helped to alleviate the problems with which farmers are now faced.

In my riding, as is the case in Quebec generally, agriculture ranks fairly high, and it is particularly important because this sector is responsible for 25 per cent of our economy. Therefore, I need not dwell further on the importance of the agricultural sector. On many occasions, Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) talk about the excellent position our farmers are in today. We all know that farm operations have increased tremendously in value. We also know there has also been a tremendous decrease in the number of farmers, while farm production has increased enormously, thanks to modern technology and research. Many people often get the impression that our farmers are now out of the woods. However, we have found that farmers, too, have been affected by the present economic situation.

In Quebec, which in 1951 had 134,000 farms, there are now 48,144 farms. There has therefore been a significant drop in the number of farmers. I agree that we have all these new measures and all these modern techniques and that the Farm Credit Corporation has made it easier for farmers to take advantage of these by facilitating loans, but I still think that farmers are facing a serious problem today. Especially during the last two years, there was a rise in interest rates which hurt them quite badly, and increased production costs. Here are some statistics to illustrate the significance of agriculture. For instance, farm debt increased from $1.6 billion in 1960 to $16 billion in 1981. In 1982, net farm incomes have dropped by 17 per cent. I think that these are some of the basic reasons why production costs have increased.

More specifically, it is known that energy costs represent 25 per cent of a farm's operating costs, and today, that is a lot of money. It is certainly a substantial increase, when we realize that the purchase of oil products alone represents 25 per cent of operating costs in the agricultural sector. In greenhouse operations, for instance, energy costs represent 22 per cent of operating costs, while this is only 14 per cent in dairy operations. I am therefore quite aware that things have changed in the farming sector. We must also recognize that if we have 300,000 farmers in Canada, that represents 500,000 jobs, since we have 4,000 businesses producing food and beverages, which provides employment for another 200,000 Canadians. The agro-food sector represents 40 per cent of our economy and employs 25 per cent of the labour force. Finally, it is also a well-known fact that in 1980, exports of farm products were worth $8 billion compared to $5 billion for imports, meaning an excess trade balance of $3.5 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I think that although this bill will enable farmers to take advantage of a rebate of 4 percentage points, reducing the regular rate of 15¾ per cent to 11¾ per cent, the fact remains that it is not enough to ensure continuity and encourage young people to take up farming. I agree that the government is offering very substantial assistance today. I am sorry that no further provision was made other than this last minute measure to cope with an urgent problem, and this comment could apply to many other sectors as well. The fact remains that if we are discussing the survival and expansion of agriculture, we must first take a close look at capital gains policies. This year, we made proposals in this respect, which, if implemented, would have helped farmers. There is no doubt about that. Today, there is increasing talk of a tax credit for energy costs in the agricultural sector, which could help reduce this aspect of production costs. I think we should take a serious look at suggestions made by colleagues here in the House, and I would like to take a few minutes to talk more specifically about our young people, Mr. Speaker.

Times have changed, and increasingly, the family farm is being taken over by strangers or foreigners. The fact remains that the tradition of the family farm has undergone some very profound changes as a result of the increase in value of farming operations. As we all know, some 30, 40 or 50 years ago, it was not unusual for a father to leave the farm to his son, provided he kept it until he died. Today, however, things have changed, and if we consider the value of a farm operation and our present interest rates, how can a young man under 30 purchase a family farm that is worth $300,000, $500,000 and even $1 million in some cases? If special measures are not taken very soon to help young people who want to go into farming, there is very real danger that the number of farmers will continue to drop as it has during the past 10 or 20 years. I am saying this in all objectivity. I have the clear impression, Mr. Speaker, that we need some very specific policies to provide special assistance to young farmers who want to own their own farm operation and make this sector of our economy a prosperous one.

In the circumstances, I wonder whether we will not have to give serious consideration to a special interest rate, and I do mean special, at the risk of appearing to discriminate against other groups, and I wonder, in fact, how we can ensure that these young people will have a future if we do not introduce special measures such as a rate of interest that would appear to discriminate, and I repeat this, against other groups, a privileged interest rate for Canadians under 30 or perhaps 35, but in any case, this is what I would like to suggest today, and I would invite the Government to give careful consideration to a policy that would encourage young people to start their own operation and not only enable them to purchase, but also to keep, their own farm. The Government is going to answer: We have increased the FCC budget for a number of years, and every time we try to allocate more funds for loans.

Mr. Speaker, I recall having informed the minister in the House on several occasions: You are doing a tremendous job on facilitating loans, but the future of our agriculture does not depend on the availability of loans but on the farmer's profits, and all my hon. colleagues agree with me on this point. Of course, loans are necessary for investment and expansion purposes, and we all understand this. I repeat that if the Government has no policy in the short term for privileged rates for young people some time it will have to set a certain age limit to ensure continuity in this sector. Conditions have changed and times have changed, and young people are no longer able to purchase the family farm and save it for posterity. And that is so important to us in Quebec and to people throughout Canada.

I therefore support the measure presented in the House today. It is at least an attempt to do something. It may be too little, too late, but it had to be done. The house is on fire and we have to call out the fire brigade. The Government is manning the fire engines, but we cannot be choosy when there is a fire. The fact remains that these are stopgap measures, and that we must consider, in the long term, how we can improve agriculture and ensure its survival, how we can give young people a chance, and there are many who are interested, Mr. Speaker. Many representations are made to me in my constituency. In my view, this is a serious concern among the young who need assistance, and within the current context, we have to provide some relief to ensure the survival of farming in Canada.

It is my hope that these brief comments, Mr. Speaker, will be taken very seriously, as I am making them in earnest. We will support this legislation, but feel the government should go further and perhaps fund more advanced research in agriculture so that reliance on emergency measures is no longer necessary. Hopefully this will offer farmers easier access to borrowing, and better opportunities to make a living without requiring the support of the Farm Credit Corporation. It is a good thing they can depend on the Corporation for help but even better if they can do without. I will conclude on this, Mr. Speaker, and let other members make their comments. My feeling is that we will see this legislation through today without further delay.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate briefly in this debate. It is not my intention to hold up passage of the Bill because I support the principle and agree with the premise of the Bill which sets out to reduce the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate up to 4 per cent over a period of two years in circumstances where farmers find themselves in difficulty. I understand that roughly one half of the $200 million has been allocated, and there are roughly 550 farmers who have qualified. That really means that it will be useful to approximately 1,000 farmers and to that extent it is welcome and, of course, is supported by Members in all corners of the House. But really, it is an example of a half-baked measure being offered to assist a very troubled industry. I think it is designed more to serve the Government as a public relations exercise or as flim-flammery than as an offer of genuine help to the industry. For instance, it does not compare to the magnitude of a Maislin, a Chrysler, a Canadair or a Dome bailout. It relegates agriculture to a second or third rate position, and I take exception to that.

• (1540)

In the last couple of years the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has travelled the country addressing the issue of high interest rates. He has talked a brave line, attacking the banks by suggesting that they are less than fair in their dealings with producers. That may be true in certain circumstances. Many farmers have found themselves locked into extremely high interest rates, and at the mercy of the banks. In order to consolidate previous debts, some of them assumed huge loans at interest rates of 19 or 20 per cent and, of course, have difficulty meeting the payments.

A measure such as this would be useful if it allowed the farmers to pay off their loans over a longer period of time at a more reasonable rate of interest. But the measure will not assist in that respect, Mr. Speaker, as it will probably only affect 1,000 farmers in the whole country. We should be dealing with a measure to help about 20,000 farmers. Available records indicate that the industry is in very serious difficulty, largely as a result of high interest rates, high input cost and depressed prices.

In the period January to October 1982, 344 farm bankruptcies were recorded, an increase of 50 per cent over 1981 and an increase of 87 per cent over 1980. I think we all recognize that this does not tell the whole story. It does not take into account those farmers who have abandoned their enterprise, liquidated their assets and moved on to other activities. It has been suggested that for every farmer who declares bankruptcy, ten others voluntarily leave the industry. If that is so, it is in very serious trouble.

Farmers have been caught in what I would call a devastating squeeze between high input costs and low product prices. The interest rate is but one component of the problem.

I have to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this is an insignificant, half-baked measure which will not solve the problem. It is but a superficial remedy. It is unfortunate that the 344 farmers who declared bankruptcy and the thousands of others who left the industry voluntarily, will probably never go back to farming. Many who were caught in the squeeze of borrowing money at high interest rates in order to consolidate their debts are now getting the runaround from the Farm Credit Corporation because of the limitation of this program which is being applied very strictly. Farm Credit Corporation officials have a firm set of guidelines and regulations to which they must adhere. They cannot extend help to borderline cases and, as a result, there is despair and frustration in the industry.

My colleague who spoke earlier mentioned the impact of all these things on young farmers and those just starting out. They could not have foreseen that interest rates would double within 12 months, and so, in good faith, they invested in equipment, stock and land. Based on a 10 per cent interest rate, their cash flow projections showed that they could have made a living from their enterprise, but now they are threatened. We have not been able to address their problems nor does this Bill address them adequately.

The vast majority of farmers who find themselves in trouble today will not qualify for help under this measure. I am sure that Hon. Members who represent rural ridings will have had the experience, day in and day out, of farmers coming to the constituency office for help with their problems.

Just the other day a farmer came into my office. He had an existing Farm Credit Corporation loan and was quite laudatory about the way the Corporation had dealt with him. Now, however, because he got sucked in to taking out a high interest loan at the bank, he needs to have his debts consolidated as he is barely making ends meet. This legislation is designed to give such farmers a breathing space, but unfortunately he does not qualify. This is a tragic situation, Mr. Speaker. All sorts of phony excuses are being given for the fact that he does not qualify. One is that he does not have enough experience. Mr. Speaker, he is a second or third generation farmer. His father homesteaded and his brothers are presently farming in the area. This young man needs a break to allow him to turn the operation into a viable enterprise.

While this legislation is a start, I would implore Hon. Members opposite to put pressure on the Minister of Agriculture and on the Cabinet to give more help to people who find themselves in difficult circumstances. While this Bill offers a measure of relief on interest rates it does not offer any help on prices.

I have said that this is a half-baked measure and that it is a sort of flim-flam, Mr. Speaker. I think the same thing could be said of the Small Business Incentives Program. Many businessmen have come to my office asking if the Program is in effect. They have been to the bank to inquire, but no application forms are available. There has been a lot of publicity to the effect that farmers and small-businessmen were going to get a break on interest rates, but this has not occured, Mr. Speaker. Under this measure, only 500 farmers will get any relief. I do not know how many people qualify under the Small Business Incentives Program but it is a drop in the bucket compared to the magnitude of the problem.

This Bill is a gesture, Mr. Speaker, but it certainly does not offer any genuine help to an industry in extreme need. We know that prices for agricultural products have been depressed while food prices have gone up by 8 per cent. Farmers are getting as much as 20 per cent less for their produce. I should like to refer to a headline which appeared in a newspaper in Vermilion, The Standard. It indicated that Prairie farm incomes would drop by 28 per cent, according to an assertion made by the United Grain Growers at their annual meeting. A 28 per cent drop in farm income in the current desperate economic situation does not augur well. Agriculture is one of the basic and fundamental industries which needs support, not all the time but to get over the rough spots.

Wheat and feed grain prices are at a level where they provide roughly one-half of the purchasing power they provided in 1973-74 or roughly one-third of what they provided in 1970. There is not much that we can do in terms of market prices, in that much of our agricultural produce is sold on the export market. We are grateful that we have an export penetration of roughly $9 billion, but there is not much we can do because we have to compete with the subsidies and treasuries of other companies on international markets.

We must be efficient and productive. We must address the input side of the equation. This is something that can be done by Government because, in my view, Government is the biggest culprit in driving up farm input costs. The Government can do something about it. There is a raging debate about the freight rate situation, and I am very disturbed. Generally farmers recognize that they will probably have to pay more to move their grain to market positions. How much more is really the question. I should like to refer to an interview with the Chairman of the CNR which was reported in the November 18 edition of The Western Producer, wherein it was indicated:

—farmers should assume they will have to pay all freight cost increases above the annual Crow benefit payment guaranteed by the Government—

I think this will really cause alarm in the farming community. As it now stands, the CNR Chairman is suggesting that farmers should not expect the Gilson formula to apply and that the Government of the day will meet the Crow gap, which is something in the order of $612 million or $644 million, depending upon the figure one wants to use. Also he is suggesting that producers will have to pick up the total of anything above that, but Gilson did not ask for that. The newspaper article went on to indicate:

He said he is skeptical of any Government assurances about obligations to future cost increases.

If the producers of Canada have to foot the bill for all additional increases of a freight rate structure with open-ended escalation, it will be a further drain upon them because they will not be able to pass that additional cost on to the consumers who purchase their grain. I am not sure whether the Chairman of the CNR was speaking on behalf of the Government or whether this is another manifestation of his rather dramatic conversion. At one time he was on the farmers' side of the issue; now he seems to be on the side of the railways. The Government of the day has some control and some ways and means to check that development.

Another area in which the Government could clearly act is the area of energy. The Government of Canada could do something rather significant in terms of ameliorating the situation with respect to energy. It is very clear that the federal Government is involved in a massive revenue grab in terms of the taxes it imposes upon all forms of energy, particularly fuel. Fuel and natural gas are major components of the production of food in the country. The Minister of Agriculture goes about the country saying that the federal tax only accounts for roughly 20 percent of fuel costs, but I submit that that is grossly inaccurate and is another manifestation of the fraud and the flim-flam emanating from that side of the House.

I should like to refer to some of the per gallon components. I still use the term "gallon" because it is the one farmers use for comparison purposes. I see the minister who used to be responsible for things like metrication in the House this afternoon. He knows of what I speak and that the metric system in the farm community is not very popular. Bearing that in mind, I will use the term "gallon". When we look at the price of fuel in Canada at $1.56 per gallon, we find that 69 cents of it consists of federal tax. In the case of diesel fuel, for example, the 7 cent excise tax is not applicable, so that reduces it to 62 cents. If the Minister is talking simply about the federal sales tax, then he may be right, but I remind him that there is more than simply the federal sales tax. The excise tax on a per gallon basis is 7 cents. There is a 9 per cent federal sales tax which accounts for 15 cents per gallon. Then there is the petroleum compensation charge of 18 cents per gallon and the Canadian ownership charge—to buy Fina and British Petroleum which is also used to support the activities of Petro-Canada in Tanzania, Bangladesh, Jamaica and all over the world—which amounts to 4 cents per gallon. Also there is the petroleum and gas revenue tax, another federal tax which amounts to 7 cents per gallon, and when we look at the corporate tax of 24 per cent of $24.75, it works out to 18 cents per gallon, for a total of 69 cents per gallon. In the case of farm diesel fuel, it is reduced by some 7 cents.

In the last election campaign, the Minister of Agriculture promised special consideration for farmers so that they would not have the burden of huge federal sales taxes. There has been no relief at all for Canadian producers.

The situation is the same in terms of natural gas. This happens in the Minister's own backyard. The fact of the matter is that greenhouse operators are crippled by an exorbitant, devastating, confiscatory tax.

A good friend of the Minister, Nick Ingratta of Nick Ingratta Farms Ltd., 504 Seacliffe Drive West, Leamington, Ontario, said that in the early 1970s it was estimated that fuel costs were approximately 20 to 25 per cent of gross operational costs. Also he indicated that today this figure is approximately 50 per cent of his costs, or $40,000 per acre for fuel costs for spring and fall cropping. Then he went on to point out the natural gas liquids tax of 68 cents per MCF and the Canadian ownership tax of 15 cents per MCF. But he overlooked another tax which works its way into the price, the petroleum and gas revenue tax of roughly 24 cents, for a total of $1.05 per MCF.

Of a total purchase of natural gas worth $75,000 in 1981, Mr. Ingratta's payment of the federal tax applicable was in excess of $20,000. This destroys the competitive edge. What is really ridiculous is that we are trying to promote and encourage the use of natural gas because it is in great supply in western Canada and it reduces our reliance upon imported products. Simply, we have nothing more than a massive federal tax grab.

I will continue by referring to the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops. It is made up of 77 members, county-owned utilities and other private gas utilities in the Province of Alberta. They provide services to 140,000 rural people. A brief was presented to Members of Parliament. In this brief we find:

● (1600)

The Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops objects to the Federal Natural Gas Excise Tax and will advise its members to pay this Tax under strong protest.

I think that summarizes the disaster that is inflicted not only upon farming industry but indeed on every industry. The brief continues:

The Natural Gas Excise Tax will:

(a) impose a great deal of hardship on the less affluent members of our society and those who can least afford it;

(b) place a substantial increased financial burden on the Canadian farmer at a time he can ill afford it;

(c) add significantly to inflation;

(d) increase our dependence on expensive imported oil;

(e) weaken the manufacturing sector of our economy;

(f) add to the rate of unemployment, and;

(g) generally adversely affect the Canadian economy.

This brief goes on to state that the natural gas excise tax must be repealed, and in the interval, pending its repeal, an extension of time for paying the tax must be granted. I think that summarizes the situation very well.

According to the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association's calculations, the tax on fuel oil and the tax component used for the manufacture of fertilizer works out to about $10 an acre. If you are farming a 1,500 acre farm, each farmer farming a farm that size is paying $15,000 into the federal Government coffers. There is certainly something which this Government could do about that. That is nothing more than a producer rip-off. The Minister comes along and attempts to placate the producers of Canada with this Bill. In my view, this Bill is only a gesture. It provides some aid and some temporary relief to 1,000 producers in Canada, but we should be dealing with something that will provide relief to more like 20,000 producers. What does the Minister do? He tries to sell us Canagrex. He tries to sell the producers Canagrex so that the Government of the day can put its thumb on the pulse of all the farmers in this country.

This Minister supported a devastating budget, the one introduced last November, 1981. This budget proved to be disastrous, not only to the agricultural community but, indeed, to all sectors of Canadian society. The Minister of Agriculture could help producers now by prevailing on his Cabinet colleagues to reduce the federal Government take on energy, costs, on fertilizer and on all the components used by farmers in terms of energy and fertilizer. The Minister could certainly take action to remove those taxes which to me amount to outright confiscation.

I see we have a new Speaker in the chair. He is a colleague from Alberta. I might be prompted to carry on just a little longer now that he is there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister could be proposing some very fundamental changes in farm financing in Canada. What about the agri-bond concept? That is a concept we advanced as a Party. I noticed from the Minister's remarks that he picked up on the idea and suggested the Government is looking into it. The agri-bond concept would have some validity. Perhaps we could have something along those lines, perhaps an industrial development bond?

Canada's second-quarter figures indicated that there is roughly $30 billion in personal savings. Much of that money belongs to people who have been in the agriculture industry—perhaps retired farmers—who want to see the agricultural industry grow, thrive and survive. I am sure there is a tremendous opportunity to tap that pool of capital. That money could be transformed and used very effectively, particularly by the young farmers of Canada.

The Minister could be advancing some changes relating to capital gains tax. The capital gains tax does nothing more than drive up the cost of land, deflating the bona fide farmers' retirement income. It really is a disincentive in the creation of a pool of wealth. It is a disincentive to those who want to engage in farming or in small business. I am referring to a farmer or a businessman who works for a pittance but plows all his profit and energy back into his business or farm so that he can live in dignity, stability and security in his retirement. Changing the rules on capital gains tax would loosen up a fair amount of capital.

The Minister could be prevailing upon his Cabinet colleagues to reinstate the provisions of the Income Averaging Annuity Contract. The Minister could give the producers of this country some reasonable stability and security in terms of their retirement, again providing for the opportunity to tap these pools of capital for the further industrialization of this country and the further development and expansion of agriculture. These funds could be re-invested for the benefit of Canada and for the benefit of agriculture.

There is so much that could be done which needs to be done. But this Government has failed to act. This Government has failed to address the fundamental and critical problems of this country. This Minister has failed to attack fundamentally the critical problems facing the agricultural industry today.

This Government has lost the will to govern. Its sole motivation today is simply the motivation to survive.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on Bill C-134, respecting rebates on interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act. The legislation here today, the amendment to the Farm Credit Act, is to authorize the Farm Credit Corporation to offer some $200 million in loans, with the interest rate to be reduced by 4 per cent for two years. I support the intent of this Bill. It is something that has perhaps come too little too late. There is much more the federal Government has to do in the area of agricultural financing. But I do support the intent of the legislation that we are dealing with today.

I want to talk about some of the problems I see in farm financing. I would like to make some suggestions that we in the New Democratic Party call improvements over what we have at the present time.

The problem for the Farm Credit Corporation is the formula which sets the rates for loans for a six-month period. These interest rates are locked in at present to 15.75 per cent. But money is available from other sources at 14 per cent or less. Having a discrepancy in interest charged on loans causes some problems. Farmers do not need any increase in their burden by way of higher interest rates from an institution that is supposed to be helping them.

I believe the Farm Credit Corporation sets its rates each year on October 1 and April 1. However, if a farmer borrows money from the Farm Credit Corporation he is locked into an interest rate for the entire term of the loan even if the interest rate six months down the road is significantly less on the market. For instance, if the rate is set at 15.75 per cent and the term for the loan is 20 years, that interest rate must be paid no matter whether the rate is reduced six months down the road by the FCC.

The Farm Credit Corporation has introduced a penalty, something that concerns me. If a loan is closed out before the end of a term, a penalty of three months' interest is charged. There are a few exceptions. On a loan of $100,000, a three-month penalty would cost a person about $4,000 to terminate the mortgage or the borrower's agreement with the FCC.

It is shameful of the federal Government to bring in that type of a penalty against farmers who are faced with very serious economic times at the present. It is ironic to find that a few months ago we were calling on the federal Government to put more money into the Farm Credit Corporation so that it would be able to expand the lending capacity of the Corporation, yet we find now that the situation exists where there are not very many farmers to whom loans are being given, and certainly no new loans. Farmers who wish to expand their operations or those who wish to start into farming do not want to go to the Farm Credit Corporation because money is so much cheaper through the private markets than it would be through the Corporation. Even if there were increased money in the Farm Credit Corporation right now, it would still be sitting there because the farmers do not want to borrow it and be penalized for dealing with a federal Crown corporation which was initially set up to be in the best interests of farmers themselves.

We are heading into a period of lower and lower net farm incomes as grain prices continue to decline on the world market and, meanwhile, costs such as those for energy, fertilizer and interest charges continue to increase for people involved in the agricultural sector, in farming operations. In 1979 there were some 82 farm bankruptcies in Canada, and then, one year later, that number had doubled to 164 farm bankruptcies. In 1981, farm bankruptcies again increased to 191, and it is even worse this year. At this point in time we cannot know how many farm bankruptcies there will be over the entire year, but we do know that in the first three quarters of this year, some 316 family farms went into bankruptcy and that number could be much higher by the end of the year.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who spoke just before me, pointed out that this does not really give a true indication of the economic hardship which many family farms are going through right now, because there are some people who choose either to sell off their farming operations to farmers with larger operations in the area or, sometimes, to rent out their land and go out and find jobs on other farms so that they can subsidize their income in order that their families can have a decent level of income. Total farm incomes have changed very little from the 1974 level. In 1974, total farm incomes came to some $3.5 billion. In fact, this year total farm incomes will be less than the 1974 level. When we take inflation into account, it is fair to say that they would possibly be about one half of what they were in 1974.

The real problem of farm credit is not simply the problem of inadequate credit, which I have already tried to point out. There is more than enough credit available right now. It is not the right type of credit and it is not something which will help the farmers and those involved in farming in the long run. It is actually a problem of net incomes being too low to pay the bills and upgrade their operations in order to maintain viable farms. Farmers have actually borrowed increasing amounts. The borrowing rate has increased quite significantly. If we look back to 1970, we find that the accumulated farm debt in Canada was approximately $4.2 billion, and it had risen last year by almost four times to $16 billion, that being the total amount of debt farmers had gone into here in Canada.

Also, many Hon. Members have spoken in the House about some alternatives to what we have right now in the area of financing farming operations or putting together the necessary capital which farmers must have in order to continue. It is imperative that farmers have a line of relatively cheap or at least competitive credit that they can count on as being stable. One of the problems we find with the interst rates right now involves the insanity of the monetarist policies of allowing interest rates to fluctuate so wildly. When a farmer is going to put in his seed in the spring and he wants to borrow some money to continue his farming operation through until fall, it makes it very difficult for him, as it is for small business people and others who must rely on credit, to capitalize on his operation during the year and it is very difficlt for him to plan his budget on the farm. When the farmer does not know whether the interest rate will be 10 per cent or 25 per cent at the end of the year, it makes it very difficult for him to plan his year.

When we consider some of the other constructive suggestions which have been made and which should be followed, we should also consider the agri-bond concept which has been mentioned by other Hon. Members in the House. The agri-bond concept is a good idea because it would provide a real pension plan for those farmers who do not usually contribute to a pension plan, many of them not at all. Many of the farmers in my own constituency whom I know personally rely upon the sale of their farms and farm assets at the end of their term of farming. Quite often they wish to turn their farms over to family members. They may sell to neighbours or to someone else, but over their lifetime they have really relied on building up their farming operations to provide for a dignified and decent retirement. Many farmers have sacrificed all their lives so that they can look forward to their retirement and a standard of living to which they have been accustomed. When a farmer sells his farm upon retirement now, he is quite often hit with a very heavy capital gains tax, and if there is one area in which the tax is unfair, I believe it is when it affects those who are involved in farming, those who have invested in their farms as their retirement package.

The agri-bond concept would be good if the Government were to see fit to put legislation into place which would allow farmers who have sold their farms for their retirement years to invest their money in a fund set up by the Farm Credit Corporation so that they could get relief and not pay capital gains on that amount. They would be returned an interest rate which might possibly be somewhat lower than the private market rate at that time. However, the rate that they would get on the capital gains for the bulk of the capital they had invested in the Farm Credit Corporation fund would certainly offset the lower interest rate they would be getting.

I think many farmers would be happy if they were able to invest in an agri-bond system set up through the Farm Credit Corporation, In turn, this would possibly provide the Farm Credit Corporation with a cheaper source of monay than its present source in the private market. I understand that the Corporation is thinking of floating $100 million in bonds on the United States market. The Corporation is in somewhat of a quandary right now because it is waiting until the interest rates reach the lowest possible point to try to pass that benefit on to the farming population of Canada, which wishes to take advantage of the Farm Credit Corporation loans, and we hope the rates will be coming down in the near future.

When farmers invest money in the Farm Credit Corporation it benefits them when they retire. It also benefits new farmers who are getting into farming and farmers already involved in the farming operation, because it gives them a supply of capital that they need to continue their farming operation, at a preferred rate.

One thing that I would like to touch on before I close off my remarks is the fact that an increasing number of farmers are feeling that they are being driven off their farms. This is true. It is indicated in the number of farm bankruptcies that we have had increasing very dramatically over the years, but it is also indicated in the hidden areas, such as when people have either rented their farms out or they have almost turned into hobby farmers. They have sometimes sold off at a loss just to get out of the farming operation. This brings me to the area where I have real concern, that of people earning off-farm income. I can see why they earn off-farm income because many farmers, especially those on a smaller scale with a quarter section or possibly up to a section of land need that money to increase their family income to a large enough extent that they can keep on farming and keep some sort of decent lifestyle. I think that when farmers have to do this, the farming operation itself suffers. They are not spending the time that they should be.

We have to look at ways of stabilizing prices for farm products that will allow those involved in farming to plan over a longer period of time. The New Democratic Party over many years, and the CCF before them, have advocated orderly marketing. I agree with the orderly marketing concept. I believe it should be expanded in many areas of agriculture, but if there was another way, Mr. Speaker, that prices could be stabilized for people involved in farming throughout this country, whether it is potatoes in Prince Edward Island, fruit in British Columbia or wheat in Saskatchewan, I would agree with that, because farmers need a stable price for their products so they do not have to go off the farm and earn this extra income.

I am quite upset with Revenue Canada. They are connected with off-farm income as well. I have had several complaints recently from constituents whom I represent about Revenue Canada doing an audit on many farmers. I do not know whether they picked out one section of Saskatchewan or one section of Canada, but they have been doing several audits on people who have declared off-farm incomes. They have seen fit in many of these instances not to allow some of the regular farm deductions that would have normally been allowed in the past, and still should be allowed today because, although these are bona fide farmers and are in a full-time farming operation, they need the off-farm income to keep their operation going. I think it is a sad state of affairs when we find that we have farmers who have to neglect their business and then are punished even futher by the federal Government's not allowing them the deductions that they should have available to them as bona fide farmers.

I support the intent of Bill C-134 in that it does in fact give a two-year break to farmers who are getting money from the Farm Credit Corporation. It is lowering the amount for two years from 15.75 per cent to 11.75 per cent.

I have another reservation that I would like to bring out and that is that at the end of the two years the farmers who take advantage of the money from the Farm Credit Corporation under this new piece of legislation will find themselves locked in at 15.75 per cent when at that time the market rate may be much, much lower.

I would urge the federal Government to look at stabilizing farm prices for farm products. I would also ask them to be a little more sympathetic. I refer to the Departments and agencies of the federal Government that do in fact deal with our farming population. In Saskatchewan and many other areas of Canada agriculture is the number one industry. The prosperity of many regions in Canada depends on agriculture. I think if we continue to treat people of our farming communities in the way we have until now, we will find ourselves in the position where we are not producing sufficient food to fill our own requirements. We do not do that now in some areas, but it will get even worse in years to come.

I would also urge the federal Government and all Members of the Opposition to keep in mind that agriculture and transportation are vitally intertwined together. One cannot succeed very well without the other, especially in some of the landlocked Provinces where we have to go to more expensive methods of transporting agricultural products. We need the benefit of good transportation policies to get our products to the people who need them in other parts of Canada, and in other parts of the world.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Members who have spoken before on the very important issue of farm credit, credit and financial assistance to farmers. It is most important at this time as farmers this year will be facing some 17 per cent less in total income than they had last year.

We find that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) over the years has been amending the farm credit Bill a number of times to bring it up to date or to attempt to allow it to meet certain circumstances. We recognize now that farmers are in financial crisis. The statistics have been put on the record. When we look at what has happened in the last year we find that the Farm Credit Bill has been amended once, which will assist approximately 900 farmers, and we are now attempting to amend it again to assist perhaps 300 or 400 farmers—maybe 500. In all, we are assisting, in the legislation that we have passed, the Farm Credit Bill, only about 1,250 or 1,300 farmers out of the 315,000 or 318,000 that are resident and operating in Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: A mere pittance.

Mr. Schellenberger: As my colleague from Vegreville says, it is a mere pittance, and he described that very well in his remarks on this legislation, and I know that all Members of this House were listening very carefully.

The Minister, in the years that he has been Minister of Agriculture—and I have been here all those years—has done really very little for Canadian agriculture. The one thing that he has done and probably is doing today is that he has been the Minister of Agriculture who has travelled more than any other Minister in this country. He is constantly in the air, putting out fires here and there, instead of coming into this House with legislation to assist farmers and to allow them to operate and produce food not only for Canada but for many other countries in the world that need it. He is the PR man for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and for agriculture. He is not presenting to this House the kind of legislation or the kinds of ideas that are necessary to assist a most important industry in this country.

Let us just look at what he has done in the last ten years. He has presented 13 bills to this House that have passed. Three of those bills have been in farm credit. Another bill has been in the farm improvement loans area. Most of the other bills, excepting one, have only been bills to update legislation that had been passed in the previous Parliaments. The only bill that is new has been the Bill for the Meat Import Act, an Act that was almost forced upon the Minister because of surpluses in other countries of the world coming into this nation. He has brought forward futuristic legislation to assist the farmers, something being proposed by Hon. Members in this House today. Why have we not seen legislation to reduce the farm fuel tax? That is very important legislation that could be passed quickly. It would greatly assist the farmers right across this country. It was earlier put on record that every farmer who farms in the neighbourhood of 1,000 acres is adding $1,500 to the federal coffers. Most western grain farms average 700 to 1,000 acres, as the previous speaker mentioned, and more and more farmers are being forced to rent their land. As a result, practising farmers are being offered so much land they cannot handle it. They are stretching their assets.

For the first time in many years farmers have to borrow from the banks the working capital in order to put in their crops. They cannot save enough money to put in a crop. If in some way their crop should fail, they have no other choice than to sell their assets or go bankrupt. That is the serious problem being faced not only by young farmers or those starting up but by established farmers as well.

Why has the Minister not talked to the western grain stabilization people with regard to getting the payment out early this year? Farmers are in desperate need of that money. There will be a payment this year and it ought to go out quickly. Members of this House and agricultural organizations across Canada have proposed that the advance payment be increased to $30,000, and $45,000 for corporate farms, from the present $15,000. For the average farm of 700 to 1,000 acres, $15,000 will not even pay the fertilizer bill. Therefore, that amount ought to be increased quickly. This is not new; it is an idea that people have been talking about.

The Minister of Agriculture should bring together his provincial counterparts. He should ask for their ideas with regard to stabilizing farm income. Every time the ministers attempt to get together, the Minister of Agriculture goes back to his old favourite, the marketing board. If it does not involve a marketing board, the Minister will not talk about stabilization. He favours the supply management marketing board. Most farmers do not want such an order from the Minister. They would rather talk about a program that does not involve such a board.

Many Members have said the Minister should look at new credit ideas. The agri-bond concept has been put forward by both opposition Parties and looked upon favourably by many people as a way of getting Canadians to invest in a Canadian industry rather than outside the country. It could be done very easily with that concept.

There has been talk about the capital gains tax. Not only is it tough to pay the capital gains tax when selling out to retire, which few farmers can afford to do, but when a farmer is forced to sell his assets, not only must he meet his debts, but the Government is there with its hand out looking for a capital gains tax.

An excellent proposal was put forward by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). He is suggesting that those farmers who would have to pay capital gains tax when selling their assets be allowed to put that money into the Farm Credit Corporation at a low rate of interest. If the money is left in for a period of more than five years, when they receive that money back it would not be subject to capital gains tax. If this idea were adopted, loans could be made to farmers in desperate straits at lower interest rates. It would not only help 900 or 1,200 farmers, but it would help the 20,000 who are now in financial difficulty. This could be put into place immediately.

A previous speaker referred to off-farm income. Many farmers are forced to work outside their farms in order to get enough money to support their families. Their farm income is only enough to pay the debt. A lot of their income is invested in the farm in order to better it. The Government will not respond to the suggestion that we raise the $2,500 deduction as well as the additional $5,000 of which 50 per cent can be written off. This should be brought up to date. It has now been in place for ten years. Because many farmers are now forced into the off-farm income position, this amount should be increased.

For the past ten years this Minister has only been updating legislation. He should be putting into our embassies and trade commissions those who are knowledgeable in agriculture to assist us in our trade. For years we have been making that recommendation. Instead we get a Canagrex Bill with powers of extraordinary magnitude. This makes every farmer in the country shake in his boots. We should now have people in the trade houses looking for export markets for our farmers.

We need leadership to respond to situations such as that in the United States where there is a huge surplus of grain and oilseeds. With its large treasury, it has now put in place export credit packages. Because of these interest-forgiving packages, they will be capable of stealing our traditional markets.

A similar type of assistance could be given through our Canadian Commercial Corporation. It may not be necessary to do that in the same volume, but with the present recession many of our traditional customers require that kind of assistance. We ought to be there to ensure that these markets are not lost.

The largest portion of our imports are fruits and vegetables. We have the capacity in Canada to produce those vegetables and some fruits in our greenhouses. We not only have the capacity to produce, but this is a labour-intensive industry. At this time of high unemployment, we ought to foster our greenhouse industry in every way possible.

We have a surplus of natural gas. However, the onerous tax on the natural gas is driving many greenhouse operations out of business. Farm credit will not assist them. It will not provide the loans they require to stay in business when the cost of fuel to heat the greenhouse has in some cases increased by 100 per cent per year. This creates an impossible situation.

The federal Government ought to assist in providing alternative systems of heat for greenhouses. Pumping stations all across the Prairies are emitting heat into a 20 below atmosphere. Heat is going up the stack of our thermo-coal generating plants. Huge amounts of heat are being wasted from our nuclear plants in Ontario. That wasted heat could be funnelled into the greenhouse industry at almost no cost. In addition to a tremendous amount of vegetables being produced, it would create thousands of jobs.

These are the types of ideas that we should be hearing from the Minister of Agriculture. Instead, we see amendments to a Farm Credit Bill that will only help 200 or 300 farmers. We are seeing amendments to bring up to date old pieces of legislation that were brought in by other Governments. When will the Minister of Agriculture bring forward some positive policies which we can pass in the House to assist our farmers quickly in their desperate need?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in this debate on the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act. Each day when Members stand to speak in the House, we hear time and again of the mills that are laying off shifts, of factories that are forced to close their doors and of small businesses that have been pushed into receivership. That causes us all a great deal of concern. I suspect that we on the opposition side are more concerned because one gets the distinct impression that the Government still does not recognize that there is a serious problem in the industrial sector of this country. One gets this impression based on the Government's actions and its proposed solutions. It is our hope that the Members on the Government side will realize how serious are the problems facing that sector and the fact that we are on the edge of an industrial collapse unless the Government takes some action. Let us hope and pray on a daily basis that the Government will see the challenge before it and take it up.

While we are all concerned about the demise of small businesses, medium businesses and the large corporations in our country, we begin to become very concerned when the agricultural sector faces real difficulties. Cattlemen, farmers, orchardists and so many others participating in food production in Canada are finding themselves in greater difficulty each day. Some very definite trends have been emerging which I consider to be dangerous. For example, the small family farm is falling by the wayside while the large corporate sector—the agri-business—is taking over the impetus in food production in Canada. Families who have lived on their land for many generations are being forced to move because they cannot meet the high interest costs the Government has placed upon them. As well, farmers, cattlemen and others who have been on their land for generations are now forced to rent their properties to others because of the difficulty they have in marketing their goods.

A few months ago I had the good fortune to co-chair a task force on the economy which toured virtually every sector of each province. Farmers and food producers appeared before that task force to offer distinct solutions to their problems. They indicated that if they were given the opportunity and provided some encouragement by the federal Government, and the Provinces in some cases, they could double and perhaps triple or quadruple the amount of food they were producing. As was suggested by another Hon. Member who spoke recently, we are still importing fruits, vegetables and beef when the opposite could be true for many of these products.

We are faced with a grave situation. I would like to give some statistics which attempt in an objective, non-political and non-partisan way to describe accurately the situation as it relates to Canada's food production. In 1979 there were 82 farm bankruptcies in Canada. That number doubled one year later to 164 farm bankruptcies. In 1982 farm bankruptcies increased again to 191. The situation this year is even worse. While we only have the number of farm bankruptcies for the first three-quarters of this year, there already have been 316 family farms which have gone bankrupt. In the last nine months, 316 farmers could no longer make ends meet and were forced to shut down their operations. This situation should be considered totally unacceptable by Members in the House when we consider the vast agricultural resources and the potential capital and human resources which exist in our country. It is an outrageous situation.

I would like to speak for a moment about the farm situation in my Province of British Columbia. When one examines the struggle farmers in that Province are having, it presents a very bleak picture. The statistics on net farm income in British Columbia show that there was $136,458 million in terms of farm income in 1978. In 1979, that amount changed to $178,578 million. In 1980 that income began to decrease. In that year the net income for farm operations in British Columbia was $166,759 million. In 1981 it was reduced to $90,674 million. That represents a very serious decrease in income.

Let us consider the interest on indebtedness on British Columbia's farms. This statistic is something which all of us have become only too used to, that is, the matter of personal, business, corporate and farm indebtedness. In 1978, interest on indebtedness for B.C. farms totalled $62,524 million. In 1979 that had increased to $93,137 million. In 1980 it increased again to $116,437 million. In 1981 that figure skyrocketed to $189,873 million. These figures illustrate the drastic increase in interest on indebtedness for B.C. farms in the last three years.

When one considers the outstanding farm debt in British Columbia, the statistics paint an even bleaker picture. In 1978 the outstanding farm debt was $956,079 million. This increased in 1979 to $1,163,093 million. In 1980 it had increased to $1,312,480 million. Unfortunately, the statistics for 1981 are not available but by all indications the outstanding farm debt will be well over $1,500,000 million. No matter what statistic one wishes to consider when trying to understand what is happening to farm incomes in Canada, it points to a very definite downward trend.

I would like to discuss the question of fertilizer costs and energy costs. These two areas are of special importance because these costs are beginning to skyrocket rather than decline.

• (1650)

For this example, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to the great grain producing Province of Saskatchewan where energy and fertilizer costs are perhaps more important than in other areas. Over the last four-year period energy costs, including petroleum products, have risen substantially. In 1978 it was $171 million. In 1979 it had increased to $189 million. In 1980 it went up again to $215 million. In 1981 the figure had nearly reached $285 million.

So one can see, just by looking at these raw statistics, the incredible costs food producers are forced to bear as a result of increased fuel and energy costs. The tragedy, Mr. Speaker, is that these increases are the direct result of this Government's energy policies. It is a very sad day for the food producers of this country when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) week after week refuses to recognize the skyrocketing costs, and fails to take any action to ease the burden.

Let us turn for a moment to another area of cost which is perhaps even more important than energy, that of fertilizers. The fertilizer industry, because of its great dependence on energy, has seen fantastic increases in the cost of its product. That, of course, is directly related to the cost of food production. Again, let us objectively examine the increase in fertilizer costs over just the last four or five years. In 1978 the cost of fertilizer application in Saskatchewan was $101 million. In 1979 it had increased to $143 million. In 1980 it had gone up to $166 million. Then came the big jump in 1981 up to $205 million, and in 1982 to nearly $250 million.

On the one hand, Mr. Speaker, we see these increases in these two critical areas of energy and fertilizer, and on the other, the cost of seeds, barbed wire, building materials and equipment is increasing as a result of the inflationary problem we find ourselves in, and that is attributed directly to present Government policies. At the same time as these costs are increasing so dramatically, farm income in many cases has actually decreased. Looking at the price per pound that beef producers in central British Colombia receive, it has largely levelled out for the last number of years. In no way does it begin to match the rising costs of raising beef. If it were not for the beef stabilization plan in British Columbia, more accurately described as the Farm Income Assurance Plan, the small beef producers in British Columbia would not be in operation today. We can thank the New Democratic Party for the plan. When they were in power in British Columbia they recognized the value of keeping the small family ranch in place and introduced that measure to preserve this very traditional part of the British Columbia and western Canadian landscape.

Over the last five years, Mr. Speaker, the cost to food producers of energy and fertilizer has increased by just under 80 per cent. Is it any wonder that people who are very knowledgeable about the food producers of Canada and the problems they face stand up and declare that many in this sector are on the edge of financial collapse? When you consider these few figures which I have just put before the House this afternoon, is it any wonder? Consider the most recent amendments to the legislation dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation, such as the one a few months ago which resulted in assistance to approximately 900 farm operators in Canada. Assuming that this Bill we are dealing with now is passed soon, it will provide relief to somewhere between 300 and 500 farmers. But we are just beginning to touch the surface of the problem, Mr. Speaker. The Government is not addressing the serious problems facing the food producers of this country.

There is a crisis in the grain industry, in the oil seeds industry, and a crisis in the beef industry in Canada. Nothing short of calling it a crisis would be appropriate, Mr. Speaker. Yet what is the Minister of Agriculture doing? Oh, we see him almost on a daily basis wearing his green hat and western boots. He likes to travel around the country visiting every single fair and every little agricultural meeting that he possibly can, telling everyone how hard he is working. Yet we in this House wait day after day to see a Bill which is going to provide assistance to food producers in Canada. The Minister reminds me of a snake oil salesman. He is a great showman with a lot of rhetoric, but unfortunately no action. The patience of food producers in Canada is beginning to wear a little thin. They like this man, they got the impression over the years that he has worked very hard for the farmers of this country. To pay respect where it is due, in many areas he has done a number of things to assist the food producers. But we are in a crisis today and it requires imagination, courage and a sense of creativity, which this present Minister of Agriculture simply does not have.

Mr. Blais: Yes, he does.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the hog producers in Canada are struggling this very day to survive. They see little light on the horizon in the way of help coming their way. What does the Minister do? He brings in an amendment to the Farm Credit Corporation which is going to provide a 4 per cent decrease in interest rates. He does not address the serious problem which faces the Corporation. Here is a Corporation which is intended to assist the farm community and which sets its rates every six months, I believe on April 1 and on October 1, and at the moment that Corporation has its rates locked in at 15.75 per cent. The interesting thing is that I can remember not many weeks ago when Members of the Opposition were having to stand up and literally plead and beg the Minister to increase the cash available to the FCC in order to meet the needs of the food producers in Canada. Now, Mr. Speaker, you cannot give that money away. Because of a recent amendment to the FCC, that Corporation is now able to go out into the private money market, but to date no bond issue has been quoted because they have no need for the money. Interest rates are coming down so that now rather than borrowing from the FCC at 15.75 per cent, you can go out to the open private market and pick up money for 14 per cent, in some cases even less. What becomes abundantly clear is that the present interest rate formula of the Farm Credit Corporation is not working, particularly during the present unstable period.

The Government seems quite prepared to let the interest rate roller coaster go up one Thursday and go down the next Thursday, until it has become like a game. People wait until Thursday to see what the interest rate will be before making an investment. How can a food producer attempt to plan his operations when he has no idea what the interest rate will be in the days ahead? Any individual or businessman has a difficult time planning for the future when the interest rate can vary on a weekly basis.

Surely the Government could have done a favour to every business and individual by attempting to stabilize interest rates for at least six months. That is what it did with the Farm Credit Corporation. It said, "Despite the volatility in interest rates we will lock the Farm Credit Corporation rate for six months." That is of some assistance to food producers while interest rates increase. But if they drop below the six-month rate, then people working for the Farm Credit Corporation will have a long, leisurely winter, waiting for business which is going to the banks, the credit unions or other funding agencies.

The situation is a tragic one, Mr. Speaker. Yet the Minister of Agriculture masquerades as a snake oil salesman, travelling the country in an attempt to convince people that everything is all right.

Last weekend I had the sad experience of sitting down with a cattle producer who has a small, 200 head, operation in my constituency. He is now in his mid-30s and had grown up on a cattle ranch in central British Columbia, as had his father and his father before him. Raising cattle is the only thing this young man understands, and he is good at it. His wife and two children help him with the operation. He had difficulty obtaining much money from the Farm Credit Corporation so he borrowed $90,000 from the bank in order to get through the year. His interest payment is in excess of $15,000. He works full time, his wife works full time and his two teenage children work after school and on weekends. He is a man of strong character and he and his family have worked for the last four or five years to make this operation viable. Interest rates have made it imposible for him to continue, however. He and his family will have to walk away, after selling the ranch at a fire-sale price to a Swiss investor.

The implications of this case are tragic for Canada, Mr. Speaker. This man has lost faith in the country. He has long since lost faith in the Government and in its agricultural policy. He has lost hope because of the way the Government has allowed the banks, in particular, to run roughshod over the food producers. Now he will have to try to find employment in the forest or mining industry in British Columbia, both of which are on their knees. It is a story of failure, after three generations in the livestock business in western Canada. He is no longer able to continue because of the policies of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): If you have nothing to say, sit down.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest as a voice from the Liberal benches called out that if I do not have anything good to say about the food industry, I should sit down. I will not sit down, Mr. Speaker. I will draw attention to the Government's lack of leadership and its inability to deal effectively with the lending institutions in the country in the last two years. There is no chance that I will just sit down and keep quiet and let the Government continue in this way.

The agricultural policies of the Government are at the root of the increasing number of farm bankruptcies in the country. Until the late sixties most of the long term credit needed by Canadian farmers was supplied by the Farm Credit Corporation, as well as much of the short-term and intermediate term financing needed by farmers. Then the Government began restraining the amount of credit the Corporation could provide to food producers. Chartered banks were invited into the farm credit market. In 1975, 72 per cent of all long-term credit taken out by farmers came from the Farm Credit Corporation. That made sense; it was designed to provide long-term funding to food producers. By 1979 only 35 per cent of farmers were able to meet their long-term credit needs with the fixed interest loans provided by the Corporation.

The Government, with its tight purse strings, has hamstrung the Farm Credit Corporation. It has prevented it from keeping up with the increasing demand for farm credit. In effect, it offered the banks, with their floating interest rates, a bigger piece of the farm credit action on a silver platter.

At the same time that it was knocking the props out from under the Farm Credit Corporation, the Government introduced drastic changes in its grain policy. Prior to the so-called open market, most feed grains had been marketed outside the Prairies under the auspices of the Canadian Wheat Board. Prices were relatively stable at that time, and the competitive capabilities of different regions of the country were more or less equal. But the Government's decision to move to the open market and to allow large grain merchants and feed mills back into the grain market on a nation-wide basis, upset the apple cart. The result was the transfer of some sectors of agricultural activity to different regions of the country. To aid that transfer, some provincial Governments got into the act with subsidized credit or out-and-out subsidies. By the end of the decade, much of the hog population had moved out of the Prairies into Ontario, Quebec and, to a lesser extent, the Maritimes. To a greater extent, cattle which originated in the Prairies were being fed in eastern feed lots where the price of feed grain gave the producers a competitive advantage.

This must have looked very appealing to the Government economists because, with all the activity, it looked as though agriculture was booming. But, as I said, what was really happening was that production was shifting from one region of the country to the other, largely financed with borrowed money. It was fortunate that while this was happening there was a surge in grain prices that carried most farmers through to the end of the last decade. But with accumulated farm debt around $16 billion, and farm income now falling, as my earlier statistics demonstrated, the results of the shift in the Government's agri-food policy is becoming evident. Large investments were made in some parts of the country and abandoned in others. Farmers were forced to borrow greater amounts when interest rates were increasing at unprecedented levels. The total was $1.7 billion in 1981. In the early 1970s, credit costs ranked about eight or ten in the production costs of farmers. Now the cost of credit is the highest one facing Canadian farmers. While farmers were borrowing in greater amounts, the Farm Credit Corporation was prevented by the Government from keeping up with the demand for farm credit. Long-term credit at fixed rates was becoming less and less available.

• (1710)

Agriculture in Canada is in desperate straits today. With the Government's record of destabilizing policy changes and the reduction of farm credit interest rates by 4 per cent, it can only be considered a rather feeble attempt to deal with a very grave problem.

In the West things are done in more traditional ways when it comes to production. The people of western Canada have come to depend upon the institutions which provide security for the maintenance of those traditions, institutions such as the Crow rate and the Farm Credit Corporation.

The Farm Credit Corporation is the only agency which offers long-term fixed interest loans to farmers. FCC loans can now be obtained at 15.75 per cent interest, but the floating rate available from banks or credit unions is for the time being lower than 15.75 per cent. Unless the formula now used to set FCC interest rates is changed, permitting the Corporation to lend at less than 15.75 per cent and to obtain funds at a lower rate, much of its fixed interest credit may go unused this year as farmers cash in on the temporary reduction in interest rate from commercial lending institutions. Already the Provinces are being pressured to move into the subsidization of farm credit. We could soon see a patchwork of subsidization programs which again stimulate production shifts from one region of the country to another, giving the illusion of a productive, vibrant farm industry, when in fact nothing could be further from the truth.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has recommended time and time again the introduction of an agri-bond program similar to the small business bond. Under this proposal the Government would give FCC authority to borrow short-term, three to five years, by the issue of financial instruments on which the interest is tax free. This money would then be lent to farmers requiring money at lower interest rates, not only for debt consolidation but also for essential investment and, more important, working capital. This is a proposal which could and should be introduced quickly. I would submit that it is a more rational and long-term solution to the farm credit crisis than the 4 per cent interest rate reduction which will be granted as a result of this Bill to benefit at best not more than a few hundred farmers.

If we are to have any stability in the Canadian agriculture industry, the Farm Credit Corporation must be expanded to provide enough long-term credit to service the bulk of farm credit needs across Canada. It needs to be expanded as well to provide short and medium-term credit in special cases. I am thinking of special cases where FCC credit can help a new farmer or new cattleman get started. But simply expanding the FCC is not enough to bring needed stability back to Canadian agriculture and to stimulate increased production. We in this Party have long supported the concept of stabilization programs. If stabilization programs are provided on a federal basis, and if marketing systems are in place which provide some equity across the country, Canadian farmers would be more confident that they will be able to get their costs of production, plus a decent standard of living off their land.

Bill C-134, to provide a 4 per cent interest rate relief, will provide only a very short-term solution to a serious problem. As I said earlier, it will help a few hundred farmers in grave financial difficulty who are crying out for relief from high interest rates. This proposal just begins to scratch the service of the farm credit crisis in Canada.

The FCC would be playing much more of a leadership role in terms of supporting the cutting edge of a thoughtful and dynamic industrial strategy for the food producing sector of Canada, if one were in place. The time has come for the Government of Canada to look at this critical industry, and industry which is critical in virtually every region of Canada; to identify those areas which need to be nurtured, encouraged and supported by the senior levels of Government, and to take steps to see that that is done. Canada is still required to import vast amounts of fresh vegetables, mutton, lamb and beef. This is totally unnecessary in a country such as ours with its vast potential.

The Government should take the leadership. We on this side of the House would be pleased to rally around and embrace a strategy in agriculture which makes sense and encourages Canadians to recognize the need to support a strong agricultural component in our economy. We should say to Canadians that perhaps for one morning a week they should drink apple juice rather than orange or grapefruit juice. That would mean 24 million people lifting glasses of apple juice. Think of what it would do for the orchards in British Columbia, central Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Suddenly there would be an instant demand for tens and perhaps even hundreds of new apple orchards overnight. If we could convince every person in the country to drink an extra glass of Canadian wine, think of what it would do to the vineyard industry. We could go on and on; just by modifying our dietary and purchasing habits, we could provide a much needed stimulus and instant demand for many Canadian food producers. But, no, we live glibly on in a sort of continentalist mentality which has virtually become the catch word of the Liberal Government of Canada. One almost gets the impression that it does not want to encourage this critical sector or the family operation on the land.

It would appear by this Government's policy that corporate agriculture is the route to go. I am not suggesting that in selected areas it is not the route to go; in some cases corporate agriculture makes sense. But in many areas much more could be done to assist the family operation. Think of what it would do to the mood in the country if every Canadian was convinced that the food producing strategy of the Government would make sense in all regions. The people of Canada would rally around it and provide the necessary support.

I come from a part of Canada in central British Columbia which is not famous for its agricultural production, but to this day a number of people are still able to manage as food producers. I remember as a youngster, not many years ago, coming to that area and seeing vast acreages of potatoes, asparagus and tomatoes, vast areas of crabapple orchards, huge flocks of sheep, 5,000 ewes in a single flock, and herds of cattle in the neighbourhood of two or three thousand head. Now that is virtually all gone. They thrived in that particular environment for decades. Obviously the basis of the industry is there, but because of the lack of marketing procedures and credit opportunities, the farm and ranch industry has virtually deteriorated over the last two or three decades into at best a marginal industry today.

It is important for Members of the House, especially Hon. Members opposite, to know that this potential exists in Canada today. That opportunity is still in place. With the availability of energy in terms of coal, natural gas and geothermal energy, and with the waste heat of many large factories and mills, we could be producing much more.

In closing, let me say the opportunities are there. What we need now is a Government with the strategy to put the agricultural community back on the rails and to provide the support and encouragement to get that vital component of our economy going once again.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, today we are discussing third reading of Bill C-134. This is an important Bill. It deals with the farming community and the most important aspect of the farming community, which is finance. Finance is important today because we know that agriculture is no different than any other business in this country and that many businesses are experiencing financial difficulty.

Before I get to my main remarks on the Bill, I would like to pay tribute to my colleague, the late Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris who passed away last week and whose funeral I attended in Brandon yesterday. I did not have the chance to know the Honourable Mr. Dinsdale for a great number of years, but it was a privilege for me to sit with him in the House and be able to refer to him as a colleague. He was a great help to me as a new Member. I know he has been a great help to many others in this House. Mr. Dinsdale was the kind of man who, in my opinion, was an example of what a Canadian should be. He was a man of high principle, of high morals, and displayed it without a lot of flamboyance. Unfortunately, many of us do not realize what a Canadian is. In many ways Mr. Dinsdale exemplified what my idea of a Canadian should be. We will all sorely miss him, particularly those of us from Manitoba. It is true that you do not know how much you miss somebody until they are gone. That is the case with Mr. Dinsdale. I know some tributes were paid to Mr. Dinsdale in the House on Monday. Unfortunately, I was unable to be here because I was in my riding. I did, however, attend his funeral in Brandon yesterday. I just wanted to say a few words today about our dear colleague from Brandon-Souris.

The Bill before us is very important. Agriculture, like many other businesses, is in a considerable amount of trouble. We know there are something like 320,000 or 330,000 farms in Ontario. I have seen estimates that place the number of farms in trouble as high as 32,000 or 33,000, or ten per cent of the total. That is a large percentage; the number is large in terms of absolute numbers. These are farmers who have financial problems which could put them out of business.

This situation has serious implications for consumers. If farmers are forced out of business we know that one or two years, down the road less food will be produced, which means the cost will go up, causing rising inflation. It is in everybody's interest to keep as many farmers in production in this country. Not only is the farming community interested, everybody else has a large stake in it, too.

This Bill proposes to spend an additional $100 million. The $200 million mentioned in the bill is arrived at by taking $100 million out of the normal allocation that the Farm Credit Corporation has. The extra $100 million is made up of $16 million, which the Government has found to pay in direct interest assistance to lower interest rates for farmers, plus an additional $84 million in loans. When one talks about the $200 million figure, one has to bear in mind how the Government got to this $200 million. It is $100 million of old money and $100 million of new money.

We have to give the Government credit for that because it recognized the problem and it did find some additional money with which to address it. Our concern is not so much that the Government recognizes the problem, but that the Government waited so long and has been delinquent in acting. In many ways the Government has been contributing to the problem by allowing it to develop.

The $16 million that will be available in direct grants to farmers to lower interst rates works out to an average of about $50 per farmer in this country. We know that is not a lot of money when you put it in perspective. We are not saying we are ungrateful for the $16 million, nor are we saying it will not be well used. I simply want to point our that $16 million spread among approximately 320,000 farmers works out to an average of $50 per farmer.

One must take into account that in many areas of the country it costs a farmer $100 to $200 to fill up the fuel tank on his tractor enabling him to work in the field for a day, that is twice or three times the $50. If a farmer buys a tonne of phosphorous fertilizer, it will cost him something like $300. That gives Hon. Members an idea of just how much assistance this $50 will be to him. Fifty dollars will not even buy a tonne of phosphate fertilizer. It will not go very far in terms of helping a farmer put his crop in, even as far as fuel expenses are concerned.

Because the amount of money available is so small, the total number of applicants will exceed by far the amount of money the Bill will make available for farmers. By taking $100 million out of the normal allocation of funds which the Farm Credit Corporation has, it will mean there will be $100 million less available to be loaned under the normal operations of the Farm Credit Corporation. That is of concern to us.

I want to talk specifically about interest rates. We know that the Farm Credit Corporation sets interest rates every six months. We also know that the rate set now is 15.75 per cent. Most people know that the prime rate is considerably lower than that today. Therefore, farmers who are locked into a Farm Credit Corporation loan are paying 15.75 per cent interest, a higher rate than if they were to go now and apply for a loan at a bank. I am not suggesting that farmers should be able to have it both ways; that is, a cheaper rate of interest when prime rates go up. In other words, farmers should not be able to get loans of 15.75 per cent interest when the interest rate at the bank is either at 17 per cent or 18 per cent. When the bank rate drops those people with Farm Credit Corporation loans should not immediately be released from those loans to go to the bank to receive a cheaper rate of interest for their loans, but I suggest that the Government and the Farm Credit Corporation give serious consideration in respect of those producers who have some problems paying the 15.75 per cent interest. That high rate of interest relative to today's prime is causing farmers financial problems. I know of one such instance in my own constituency about which I had some discussion this afternoon. In this particular case, if the producer were able to go to the bank and get a loan at the lower rate offered by the bank today it would make a significant difference, enabling him to stay in business.

I would suggest the Minister and the officials in the Farm Credit Corporation give serious consideration regarding those farmers who are in trouble as a result of paying the 15.75 per cent interest rate. I would suggest the Minister and the officials consider releasing those farmers from that interest rate. I do not think that is asking a lot.

I understand the Government is considering changing the setting of the rates under the Farm Credit Corporation from every six months to perhaps every three or four months. There is nothing wrong with that. After all, when we are in fluctuating capital markets with interest rates going up and down quite quickly, I do not think there is anything wrong with the Government considering adjusting interest rates sooner than every six months, which is what has been done up until now.

All of us have another concern which has been expressed by Members of the New Democratic Party and those of us in the Official Opposition. This Bill is a manifestation of the lack of leadership which this Government and, in particular, which this Minister have shown in the agricultural field over the past ten years. I understand the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will, within the next week or ten days, be celebrating his tenth anniversary of being appointed the Minister of Agriculture. I am not sure that the farmers will want to celebrate when they think about this Minister having been at the helm of Canadian agriculture for ten years.

I submit that the agricultural industry is a very proud industry, and would much rather earn its own way than have to go to the Government for handouts and subsidies. However, if one considers the ten years that the present Minister has been in this position, one finds a very sad, lamentable and actually terrible testimony to what he has been able to accomplish. He has really taken a once proud industry and reduced it to an industry which is fighting amongst itself. It is looking inward for markets instead of being outward-looking—instead of looking to markets outside our country which would earn foreign exchange for our country and help us fight a lower Canadian dollar and hold down interest rates. Instead of doing that, he refers to marketing boards, saying to close the border and produce for a small market at home.

The Hon. Member from British Columbia who just spoke talked about producing all kinds of fruits and vegetables in this country, including some of the off-season fruits. I suggest that he must carefully consider the matter because,for instance, it would be very difficult to produce bananas and pineapples in this country. A certain amount of peanuts are grown in southern Ontario. However, we should be considering what we grow best; that is, whether we grow grain, beef, or pork best. If we are good at producing these products, and are capable of being competitive, we should be exchanging them for some of those others. I would rather see that kind of industry than one which looks to the Government for subsidies. That would be a much healthier situation for the farming community and for the total Canadian economy.

I would briefly like to refer to some of the things the federal Government and the Minister could and should be doing. These are not new, but have been mentioned in the House by other Hon. Members. In the past two or three years I have had the opportunity to mention them, but nothing seems to have happened. What we should first do in terms of western agriculture is to consider the Western Grains Stabilization Fund. First, we do not know whether there will be a payment this year. If there is to be a payment, we do not know how much it will be. I would submit that there is no reason that the level of payment, if any, could not be immediately announced to the farming community. I am not suggesting that the payment be made, although that would be even better, but if the farmers at least knew that they would be getting something and when it would come, it would help them to budget and handle their cash flow. However, as it is, we know that we contribute one dollar for every $2 contributed by the federal Government. We think that is great, but we do not know when and if there will be a payment, or how much it will be. That is a very simple matter which would not take much extra organization or expertise on behalf of the Government, yet it would greatly assist farmers in terms of their cash flow.

We have suggested another item which could be considered, the second item, if you will. There should be an increase in the Advance Payments Act, which I believe has been in place since 1957. It was mentioned in this debate by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). It is an excellent suggestion. We have offered the Government that if it were to bring forth the amendment we would put it through very quickly.

This Program has been in operation since 1957 and has worked very well. It is simply a provision whereby the Government advances money to producers against the delivery of their own grain. Then, when the producer sells the grain, he pays a portion back to the Government and the Government picks up the interest. Admittedly, there would be a small additional cost to the federal treasury, but I submit that if one considers the additional money which would be gained from taxation, in many cases the additional cost would be offset against the quicker generation of revenue as a result of the additional money put in the hands of the producer. It is not a Government handout. It is simply an advance against some of the farmers' own money. This Program has worked well. It is outdated now because the limits are too low. An increase must be considered.

The third suggestion, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), is that we need to consider the tax on farm fuel collected by the federal Government. I have in my hand a chart, and I will refer to my own Province of Manitoba. On a gallon of gasoline, the federal Government charges approximately 65 cents. It seems to me that in the interest of keeping farmers in business and food costs down, the Government could consider increasing the 7 cent a gallon excise tax rebate which is presently returned to farmers. That is another bone of contention. Rather than the Government collecting it all and then refunding it, there should be a provision in place whereby the producer should not have to pay it in the first place. This should apply not only to farmers but to the business community as well. As it is now, one pays it and then applies for a refund every six months, or whenever the amount of refund exceeds $200. I see no reason for the extra paperwork required of the business and farming community, as well as the Government, in simply collecting the money and then refunding it. If it is to be refunded, why not stop the practice of collecting it in the first place? That makes sense. Unfortunately, many suggestions we make in the House do make sense, but they are never listened to or acted upon.

Another item we could discuss ad infinitum involves capital gains. We should allow farmers to earn their way and generate money so they do not have to depend on Bill C-134 for a few Mickey Mouse handouts—a few dollars here and there.

We should also be able to expect a federal Minister of Agriculture to be truly a federal Minister. He should be willing and able to show some initiative in working with his provincial counterparts. The present Minister has done exactly the opposite. I know of a meeting which took place in Regina last spring attended by the representatives of provincial ministers of agriculture who sat down to discuss national stabilization programs for beef and pork. I know that the Minister responsible for DREE in this House had a more senior representative at that meeting than did the Minister of Agriculture. That is a disgrace. Surely, when we have a federal Minister of Agriculture, he should have enough common sense to act like a federal Minister and show some initiative, rather than being a hindrance, if anything.

We also know that approximately two weeks ago there was another meeting of provincial Ministers of Agriculture who, in principle, agreed on a national stabilization program for beef. It included all three parties and, by that, I mean the federal Government, the provincial Government and the producers. Our federal Minister of Agriculture was not there. I should not say "our", because I do not want to claim him as mine. However, the Minister of Agriculture who represents Canadian agriculture was not there. Again, to my mind, that is a disgrace.

Instead of having Canadian producers united, working together and being competitive with producers in other countries, like the United States, the European Economic Community, Argentina and Australia, so that Canadian agriculture can be competitive with them, what we end up with is a bunch of provinces stepping in, because of the lack of initiative by the federal Government, stabilizing their own red meat industries, causing provinces to bid against provinces. In effect, the result is Canadian farmers fighting amongst themselves for a share of the market, instead of being shown some leadership by a federal Minister so that they could all unite and be more competitive on the world scene. That has been the result of the Minister's ten years in office. It is sad testimony to what he has done in that ministry.

Another example of what we could do if we had some support from a federal Minister of Agriculture who had some brains, or who cared, is deal with the Americans; the American legislators, Congressmen and Senators, who are more than willing and are looking for us. It is our turn to sit down and discuss the world grain trade. We are not necessarily referring to a cartel. We should simply get together to hold some discussions on where world grain prices are going so that we can better understand the positions of the Americans, and they can understand ours. Simply put, it means that we would have legislators, elected people on both sides of the border, sitting down and holding discussions.

There was such a meeting a year ago in Washington. It is now Canada's turn to host a meeting this year, but to date we have had no real support from the Cabinet, which is where we need it. We have had no support from the Cabinet because, again, it is our turn to host those meetings. Not much may come of them, but if we could at least have the chance to sit down on a formal basis and carry on discussions with the Americans, I think we would realize that we both have the same problems, and we may reach some common ground from which we could go forward to firm up grain prices. We all know that some grain prices are $1 a bushel lower than a year ago, even though our cost of production is continually rising.

Another example of how the Government and the Minister have failed to help farmers generate income can be found by considering what has happened with the levy under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. It was terminated approximately ten years ago, at which time there was almost $10 million in the fund. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) has presented a Private Members' Bill which has been approved by the House in principle, proposing that money be used to finance a research organization. The Government has not seen fit to do that. What is really criminal, actually almost insane about it, is that that money has been sitting there. It is farmers' money, collected as a levy when they delivered grain and it has been sitting there, not earning interest. So even if the interest had been used—

An Hon. Member: It is scandalous.

Mr. Mayer: It is scandalous. It is just incredible that that kind of thing would happen, that you could have that kind of money static for a period of almost ten years when it could have more than earned that principal over again. Instead of $9 million or $9.2 million we probably could have had $20 million. Instead of that, we have the original sum and no indication that this Government is going to make use of that money for anything, to benefit agriculture or benefit somebody. That is an example of what this Minister has been able to do in ten years.

An Hon. Member: It could have been doubled.

Mr. Mayer: A good point, it more than could have doubled; it probably could have tripled. We want some support from this Government. We do not necessarily want handouts. We want some support so we can earn our way and get ourselves in a position where we do not have to borrow money and come back to the Government and look for these kind of Mickey Mouse programs, to adjust a program or adjust a Bill and give a few dollars to this farmer and a few to that.

Another area on the international sphere that I feel very strongly about is that Canada has been very badly represented at any of the international negotiations that go on with regard to tariffs. There are negotiations going on currently in Geneva concerning some of the problems of the GATT agreement. We know that the European Economic Community has managed so far to keep most of their agricultural products out of the jurisdiction of the GATT. I think that is totally wrong. If we had a Minister and had a Government that really understood some of the things that the agricultural industry is capable of doing for this country and this economy they would take those negotiations more seriously and see that Canadian agriculture is given a fair chance to compete on some of the world markets. That goes for Japan as well. We are not asking for favoured treatment but we are asking for at least a chance to compete fairly for those markets. If any of those people are watching or listening to me, they will know that in many cases the European Economic Community and Japan are not necessarily fair players when it comes to agricultural commodities. They are very good at keeping our products out, with both tariff and non-tariff barriers.

Let me say a little bit about how I think we differ from the NDP and what their policies would be. The farming community in this country is in many cases very young. In western Canada it is not much older than 100 years, and in some cases it is less than that. It has got to be where it is, I know it has been very successful and in many cases it has been very prosperous, because it has relied on individual initiative to create that wealth, and it has rewarded the individual for doing that.

The NDP, I believe, having listened to some of their speeches and followed some of their programs, think that everything should be run from the centre and that largely Government programs should control everything, and we know what that means. It means administering programs from the centre and not giving the incentive and reward to the individual producer who takes the risk. That is how we differ. If you look at history you will realize that this country was settled by individual homesteaders who took some initiative on their own. It was not settled by a horde of bureaucrats from Ottawa going out and saying, "You chop down a tree and you work after supper and you sacrifice on behalf of your family so that you can have a better piece of farmland". That is exactly the wrong way to create wealth in this country, and that is exactly the kind of policies that the NDP are advocating by supporting these measures that the Minister of Agriculture has brought forward, like Bill C-134. That is exactly the kind of thing this present Government is supporting.

I would suggest there is no reason why we should not support the Bill. It seems to me that if we do not support the Bill we would be a lot more irresponsible than the present Minister, and Lord only knows how irresponsible he is toward Canadian agriculture. I would suggest that Canadian agriculture would be a lot better served by programs that could be developed by a Government and a Minister that understood agriculture, cared about it and saw that it was productive so it could pay its own way, not have to borrow as much money and, therefore, have to rely on Mickey Mouse Bills like Bill C-134.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to speak for a few moments on Bill C-134, a Bill to provide rebates under the Farm Credit Corporation Act.

When the farms do well in this country, as in other countries in the world, then the whole country does well. That has been an accepted fact with most Governments across the world, and most Governments take into consideration that if you help the farmer to be secure, to be able to make a living, to make enough from his production to stay alive, to help his family, then your whole country can be prosperous.

The basis of the affluence of Canada is the agricultural industry, and it is very important that we keep that industry able to provide the kind of continued direction that it has had in the past.

The speaker just before me suggested that our Party's position was not based on the farmers doing what they can to produce and continue to produce food for the world, but no farming industry can be built on the kind of policies that have been put forward by this Government. Those have led to continued bankruptcies or farmers having to sell out and leaving the industry to the consolidation, to the extent where the industry is becoming weaker and weaker.

If we believe that the agricultural industry is a basic industry in this country then we in this House should be doing something about it. We should be doing all we possibly can to make the industry secure. This Bill is a very small attempt to do something to keep the farmer afloat. What we should be doing is making the industry secure.

The agricultural industry in Canada at the present time has a $22 billion debt. About $2 billion per year is being taken out of that industry to finance that debt. This is the highest level of debt that the industry has ever had, even if you take into consideration the inflation of the dollar. That is a very interesting statistic because what we are really saying is that there is something so badly wrong with this industry that the debt is increasing as we go along. Instead of an industry which pays off its debt and allows the people involved in it to be affluent and to make a living to pay for the production of their goods, we are getting further and further into debt.

The reason for this is fairly obvious. Last year the income of the agricultural industry across Canada was reduced by about 17 per cent. The predicted reduction in the income of the industry this year may be as high as 20 per cent. The return for the farmer is gradually getting closer and closer to zero. What we need to do here is not, as the previous speaker suggested, to have a Mickey Mouse Bill which helps a few farmers out who are in dire need. We need to look at the basic industry and change it so that it is a continuing industry with a return that is acceptable. We need to establish a base that is stable.

Over the years the Department of Agriculture has shepherded the industry. Since we are getting into such bad shape, we must recognize that that Department has not provided the country with stable marketing and income programs which make sense. This very important industry is quickly approaching a debt position where the value of the capital is being very quickly eaten up by the debt.

For years our Party has said that if we had a stable income from farm markets, we would not need the Farm Credit Corporation, or its use could be limited to the development of new farm areas or new industries within the farming context. Our Party feels very strongly that this sector of the economy should be self-sufficient in terms of its refinancing. If we are to continue to have a strong agricultural industry, its profits must be large enough to finance itself through generations. That is not happening.

As I pointed out, a continuous infusion of capital is required to keep this industry going. Over the past eight years, farm debt has been increasing at a very rapid rate. In 1947, payments on interest amounted to $473 million. In 1980 this reached $1.6 billion. That is just the interest to service the debt developed by this industry. The industry should be self-sufficient. However, a large portion of the productivity goes toward servicing the debt.

Maybe this industry is no worse off than the country. The same management which brought this country to the point where it has a $30 billion deficit this year and acumulative deficit of $150 billion has allowed the important agricultural industry to get to the position where it requires a continuous infusion of capital to keep going.

If farm income had increased to the point where the farmer could be assured of a return on production, there would be a little extra for each generation to have the security that is necessary. Instead the Government brings forward a Bill, which I agree is necessary, that only takes care of a very small group of farmers.

Before resuming my seat, I want to point out that although we will support this Bill, we admonish the Government to look at the total agricultural industry and do all that is necessary to put it on the basis where our children and our children's children can depend on a secure farm industry in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

FINANCING OF COUNTRY-WIDE PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, last night on "The Journal" television program the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that a portion of the Western Development Fund would be used to finance housing for Indians living in western Canada. On November 3, 1982, Senator Jack Austin confirmed in the Senate that this expenditure was in fact national in scope. Like the payment of funds to farmers for losses as a result of the Soviet grain embargo, this is another example of how the federal Government is trying to delude the people of western Canada into believing that a fund for western development actually exists. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House asks the Minister of Finance to get his facts straight concerning the Western Development Fund and that he admit that money from this Fund will be spent across Canada, not just in the West as promised.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

GROWTH OF ACTIVITIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the Canada Development Investment Corporation yesterday added to its portfolio of losers not only doubtful investments such as Massey-Ferguson, but also equally doubtful personages such as that well-known Grit who made a million dollars out of the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet):

That this House deplores the octopus-like growth of the CDIC with its tentacles of Liberal patronage extending into every aspect of the Canadian economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

CANADIAN AND SOUTH AFRICAN PARTICIPATION IN VETERAN ATHLETES CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. The Canadian Masters Athletic Association has decided to allow its members to enter the 1983 World Association of Veteran Athletes Championship in Puerto Rico despite South African participation. Since the Canadian Government signed the Gleneagles Agreement on Apartheid in Sports, which commits the Government to combat apartheid by withholding support for any form of, and taking every practical step to discourage, contact or competition between Canadian and South African athletes, and since the CMAA receives funds from Fitness and Amateur Sports, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the Government endorse its policy against sporting links with South Africa and prevail upon the Canadian Masters Athletic Association to reverse its position which permits competition with South African athletes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

SERVICE IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of urgent and pressing necessity. Recently an independent owner/operator, a Petro-Canada franchise dealer, informed me that as of the new year Petro-Canada is eliminating his franchise as his location did not suit Petro-Canada's image. In view of the fact that this franchise has existed over a decade and Petro-Canada has spent thousands of dollars renovating its own stations, and also in view of the fact that this station is an independent dealer located in a rural area, the only Petro-Canada station for a 60 mile radius, and that this move will greatly inconvenience residents, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House request the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to investigate the reduction of service by Petro-Canada in rural areas and instruct the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, to re-examine its relationship with small business so as not to add to Canada's unacceptable high unemployment rate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

INDEPENDENT BUSINESS FEDERATION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in his various wanderings about the country keeps repeating to business audiences that we must rely on the dynamism and creativity of the private sector. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Minister of Finance show good faith by accepting the suggestions of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and, in particular, reinstate general averaging, reinstate full capital cost allowances, abolish the 12.5 per cent tax on small business dividends, and abolish the capital gains tax.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

POSITION OF LIBERAL MEMBERS ON PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House present the Weathervane Award to the Hon. Members for Ottawa-Vanier and Vaudreuil for having already changed their minds twice on legislation which will reduce the pensions of retired Public Servants before the bill is even debated in this House, and as well present them with the Abraham Lincoln Award for devotion to principles for telling an audience of over 1,000 retired Public Servants that they would fight to protect their purchasing power but then changing their minds when the audience had gone home, and further that this House hold two more awards ready for the Hon. Members for Ottawa Centre and Ottawa West when they receive their marching orders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAYMENT SOUGHT FOR THIRTY YEARS OF WORK

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, in 1953 Simon Akpaliapiak was hired by the Government to help in a resettlement project on Ellesmere Island and has to date never been paid. He wishes now to be paid as his contract was never terminated. He feels his work is complete and would like to return home to Pond Inlet. One problem is that he cannot afford to do so. Another is that two federal Departments, the RCMP and the Department of Indian Affairs, cannot determine which is responsible. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

• (1410)

That these two Departments search their records, assume their responsibility, pay this individual for work done, and see that he can return to the home he left 30 years ago on government business.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

RESTRICTION AGAINST POLLOCK EXPORTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given that West Coast draggers are presently harvesting hundreds of thousands of pounds of pollock which cannot be sold through Canadian fish plants because of a restriction against pollock exports, imposed by British Columbia Fisheries Regulations No. 7.1, and whereas this regulation is denying income to many fishermen and shore workers at a time of unprecedented unemployment and financial hardship, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That British Columbia General Regulation 7.1, which prohibits the export of pollock fish in the round, be suspended immediately so that West Coast fishermen can earn much needed income from the abundant stocks of this valuable food resource.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PARLIAMENTARY TACTICS OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, Dennis McDermott, President of the CLC, and some say extra-parliamentary leader of the New Democratic Party, has called on two million union members to join a political crusade to destroy the Liberal Party. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Parliament, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, co-ordinate his parliamentary tactics with the pronouncements of Mr. McDermott in order to achieve this worthy objective; since for years, as the House knows, NDP Members of Parliament have been propping up, aiding and abetting in every respect, the Liberal Party's grip on power.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

REFUGEES

PROTECTION OF SALVADORAN REFUGEES IN HONDURAS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In spite of urgent pleas by Canadian churches and the Canadian Government, the UN High Commission for Refugees has refused to send more representatives to Honduras, where Honduran troops have stepped up their attacks on Salvadoran refugees, and their invasions of El Salvador to attack the Salvadorans who resist El Salvador's police state. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs request the UN High Commission for Refugees to reverse its decision and send more representatives to protect the Salvadoran refugees, and to observe the border activities of the Honduran army; and that the Minister also urge the Government of Honduras, which receives generous aid from Canada, to sign the UN Convention on Refugees.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. In view of the takeover by the CDIC of Crown corporations and ailing private-sector companies, which was announced yesterday, to be led by the men who gave us the Canadian ownership charge of 4.5 cents per gallon imposed to permit Petro-Canada to purchase Petrofina from the Belgians, now to save Dome from itself, and next to float the sinking subsidiaries of CDIC, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House conclude that
With Austin, Strong and Bell
The public sector is going to hell;
With deals that startle by smell
The country is clearly not well;
Canadians now toil for Joel Bell,
Their land is Strong's—it's time to rebel.

EDUCATION

SUPPORT FOR POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the presidents of Canadian universities have expressed dismay and deep concern at continuing federal-provincial disagreement over the funding of post-secondary education and the definition of objectives for higher learning. The future of Canada's universities and colleagues is in jeopardy as a result of restraint programs and governmental neglect. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House direct the Government of Canada to honour the public commitments made by the former Secretary of State to maintain the vitality and strength of post-secondary institutions in Canada, and to protect the educational future of Canadian university students.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

USE OF PROFITS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. It is in connection with the expansion of the role of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. The Government has created a "Bail-Can" here, a group of companies some of which are profitable and some of which are stretcher cases. I direct my question to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. Is it the objective of the Government, in creating CDIC, to apply the profits of companies such as CDC and Teleglobe to the losses of companies such as Canadair and Massey-Ferguson, and in so doing avoid the painful exercise of coming to Parliament for money to bail out the great mistakes of these corporations?

• (1415)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, in his question, the Hon. Member has shown that he is a little confused about the Government's objective in giving this mandate to its new holding company. The Hon. Member wondered whether the purpose was to transfer funds from certain corporations that are making a profit to others that are less profitable. The Government's objective is, first of all, to provide for stricter management of shares held by the Canadian government in the Canada Development Corporation, and also to provide for stricter management of other commercial corporations that are wholly owned by the Government of Canada. The Government also intends to offer opportunities to private companies that might be interested in a joint venture with the government, both with respect to ownership and management. Thus, by diversifying ownership of companies and by increasing management control through the expertise that will be provided by the people heading this new corporation, we will improve the financial well-being of corporations that may be experiencing difficulties, and we will be giving the private sector an opportunity to obtain an interest in corporations that are financially more attractive.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I do not quite understand where the Minister of National Revenue comes in on this particular topic.

PRIVATIZATION OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the former President of the Treasury Board, in the first speech he made after he became the Minister, said that he was going to follow the policies proposed by the Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to privatize Crown corporations. Since then nothing has happened, even though there have been many opportunities.

Can the Prime Minister give any assurances, such as giving specific deadlines of when companies will be privatized, or is this CDIC just another example of the same old Liberal shell game of shuffling mistakes around to make it appear things are being done, but in fact the whole process is simply one of hiding gross errors?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member and explain why I rose in the House just now. The reason is that the minister responsible for this corporation sits in the Senate, and thus the Prime Minister asked me to answer in the House on behalf of this new corporation, namely, the Canada Development Investment Corporation. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in view of his experience in business and the capital markets, he ought to know that it would not necessarily be very wise from the financial point to set definite dates for the partial or total privatization of a company that is owned by the Government of Canada. He knows perfectly well that where diversification of ownership or privatization of a company is concerned, the government must try to get the best possible return on these assets, and that in such cases, it must consider market conditions and wait until those conditions and any offers made have been assessed in terms of the resulting return on the investment made by all Canadians in these corporations.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I think the translation of that is yes, it is the same old Liberal shell game.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the three men who are most involved in this Corporation are Senator Austin, Maurice Strong, and Joel Bell. Over the past few years these men have been characterized as socialist entrepreneurs who have been closely associated with increasing the role of Government and involvement of the state in industry, and increasing the socialist approach to Government. Can the Minister tell the House if there is any possible reason why the CDIC should be in the hands of the Minister of State for Social Development apart from advancing the known philosophical objectives of these three men of increasing Government involvement and the role of the state?

• (1420)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is mistaken in his assessment of these people. Management has always been their strong point, as well as their ability to put into practice the policies formulated by the Government. In this particular case, the Government's policy is to provide for stricter management of its commercial corporations and of shares held by the Government, and these individuals, who are top management people, have the ability to bring to this new corporation the essence of the strict management practices they have demonstrated in the past. In addition, the Government also wishes to attract participation by private companies in these commercial corporations, and I am sure that since the people involved have an excellent reputation in the business world, they will be able to attract capable management executives and to interest the private sector in the Government's diversification policy.

TERMS OF CHAIRMAN'S EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. We all know the excellence in management that we have had from these particular people. Let us deal with Mr. Maurice Strong who obtained a $1 million fee for negotiating the purchase of Petrofina at twice its market value. That is excellent management. Could the Minister advise us if part of Mr. Strong's employment contract is that he move back to Canada, and bring his Geneva bank account back to Canada?

Will the Minister advise if Mr. Strong, in his part-time capacity, will be able to continue to negotiate on behalf of Canada or otherwise for his usual $1 million fee schedule in buying and selling Crown corporations?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the question put by the Hon. Member has demonstrated that he is not really serious in his approach to issues that are of vital concern to all Canadians. The people who have been responsible for operating, managing and directing the new corporation, as I indicated earlier, are very high calibre management executives, who in the past have demonstrated their ability to carry out the mandates entrusted to them by the Government of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Let us get off Mr. Strong for a moment. He is the fellow who cost us money twice for Petrofina.

TERMS OF PRESIDENT'S EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I should like to talk about Joel Bell now. He is the person who has absolutely no experience in the private enterprise field. I wonder if the Minister could confirm that Mr. Bell has insisted on a ten-year no-cut contract to take over this Corporation on the basis that he is afraid there will be a change in Government. Would the Minister advise Mr. Bell right now that, no matter what his contract says, he will not be receiving any fancy separation allowances just because of his political connections?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware that the terms of remuneration of employees and people working under contract in such areas are confidential, and he will understand why I shall not comment on his question.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. As the Minister knows, in the past 12 months we have lost more than 500,000 jobs in the Canadian economy. Yesterday the Conference Board predicted that we will continue to have massive lay-offs this winter and throughout the coming year. Instead of waiting for the paltry new programs the Government announced for job creation, which come into effect in January, is the Minister prepared to show some urgency by announcing some new Government job creation programs to give Canadians hope before Christmas that they can get jobs?

• (1425)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member's conversion to not wanting a greater deficit was not so recent, I might have forgotten it. The fact is that I see no possibility of starting Public Works projects without substantially increasing the deficit.

There is one technique which we suggested in Bill C-91, that is, to go through the lease/purchase option which would in fact allow us to create considerable activities in certain parts of the country. Perhaps the Hon. Member will want to convince the people on his right, those in the Official Opposition, that if they can forget their hang-ups about some of the construction in Hull and look at this Bill on its merits, they might want to pass it.

Mr. Broadbent: Indeed, I suggested to the Government, within its accepted fiscal framework, a proposal for creating new jobs.

SUGGESTED MUNICIPAL CAPITAL WORKS PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that a short time ago the Minister received a letter from me outlining a proposal for a $400 million municipal capital works project, and that in another context I have made a specific suggestion about where the Government could obtain revenue to finance it, will the Minister indicate to the House whether he is prepared to embark upon such an imaginative program which would provide pay cheques for people who are working, rather than unemployment cheques for people who are doing nothing? Will the Government take some kind of new initiative?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, when the figures are published on the take-up of the home owning grants, I believe the Hon. Member will realize that our efforts to stimulate that sector have been more successful than I suspect we even dared hope.

On the question of public works projects, the Hon. Member should know that if we had the money in the budget of Public Works we would be ready to put development plans into effect very, very quickly.

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that the Government's annouced NEED Program will provide only 20,000 jobs over the next six months for people who are coming off unemployment insurance benefits, and will not provide a single job for the more than 1.5 million Canadians who remain unemployed and would like to have an opportunity to work, and considering that the municipalities have indicated that there is a need well beyond what the Government has recognized in terms of its funding, and that Canadians would like to have jobs now, will the Government, before the new year, bring in a municipal capital works project of significant proportions to provide jobs for Canadians who want them?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as Minister responsible for public works and housing, I have asked my people to prepare for the eventuality when infrastructure money or other programs could be put into effect. We are doing that. If the financial situation were such that money is made available to us, we would be in a position to spend it very quickly.

TRADE

GATT CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, the 88 Trade Ministers are now meeting in Geneva for the first time in nine years under the terms of the GATT Agreement, and the meeting is chaired by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, our fugitive from Finance. That Minister said at Geneva, and I quote him, "Protectionist policies, by obstructing internaional trade, are accumulatively destructive of employment," meaning jobs, "and, by undermining efficiency exacerbate inflation," meaning increased inflation. Is this the Government's policy and belief? If so, will the Government now eliminate its own protective policy which it has adopted and that we have seen evidence of in recent months?

• (1430)

Did the Government, in preparing for this very important meeting consult, with the U.S. Government? Have we developed a joint strategy with the United States, and are we working with the U.S. in that Government's attempt to liberalize world trade?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in terms of consultation, this subject has come up at least at the two most recent Summits which Canadian representatives attended, first at Versailles and then in Montebello. On both of those occasions Canada was one of the strongest voices in fighting against any tendency toward protectionism. We all know the evils that the beggar-my-neighbour policies caused in the 1930s, and I think it is fair to say that the industrialized countries, particularly the Summit Seven, are very concerned about the possibility of a return to that type of protectionism. That is the role the Secretary of State for External Affairs is taking as Chairman of the Conference, but that is more particularly the role which the Minister responsible for international trade will be playing as head of the Canadian delegation in the Geneva meetings.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said that we have been a strong voice for the elimination of protectionism, and for free trade. Is our Government going to act, in addition to having a strong voice, because if the Government acts differently than it says, then that is hypocrisy and it does not persuade anyone? In the future is this to be the guiding principle and will it be acted on by the Government?

JOINT STRATEGY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer my query as to whether we have developed a joint strategy with the United States. If not, are we trying to develop a joint strategy with the European Economic Community with whom he has a contractual arrangement? Is that contractual arrangement worth anything, because today people are taking a very protective attitude at Geneva? Are we co-ordinating and do we have a joint strategy with the United States? If not, do we have a joint strategy with the European Economic Community? Will the Prime Minister tell us whether we are going to act to eliminate protectionism and help free trade, in addition to voicing that principle which is so often not observed and breached?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in terms of a joint strategy I thought I had indicated in my reply that the Seven Summit countries and, indeed, the European Economic Community representatives, tried to establish such a strategy, and that Canada was part of it. Naturally within that over-all strategy of fighting collectively against protectionist trends, Canada's strategy is mainly to protect itself. I discussed these matters with the European leaders whom I met last week, the German Chancellor, the French President and Prime Minister. We are aware of some general willingness to act together in this, but I would not say that the strategy will be the same in all cases for everyone.

In so far as lowering our protectionist barriers is concerned, I would be the first to admit that there are some protectionist barriers erected by Canada in the case of some very soft industries, like textiles, the leather industry, and the clothing industry. This is true, I believe, for just about every industrialized country. Certainly it is true in the case of textiles for the U.S. to a much more massive degree than for Canada. We are all sensitive to this reality and that is why Canada, in particular, is trying to phase out even those protectionist measures. We hope we will be successful, but I will not pretend that we can overnight withdraw all protection to these particular industries and still indicate our concern for the Canadian economy.

I do not believe seriously that Hon. Members opposite would propose that all quotas be lifted immediately in those particular areas. If such is their policy, I would challenge them to make it clear. If such is not their policy, they are just as protectionist as I am, which is to say not very much.

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister responsible for International Trade. The United States International Trade Commission has found that imported Canadian lumber may be injurious to the U.S. lumber industry. Will Canada oppose any American move to block Canadian lumber exports, and what does the Minister intend to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, as far as this question is concerned, the Government of Canada, in co-operation with the provincial governments and especially with industry, has already notified the American authorities that we do not agree with the preliminary finding which alleges that a subsidy was attached to provincial royalties with respect to logging operations. A joint representation has been made to the American authorities. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has mentioned the matter directly to the U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. Schultz. Last week, when the Minister of State for International Trade was visiting Washington, he, too, mentioned this to the American Secretary of State for Trade, and we are continuing our joint lobby with the provinces and industry to prevent this preliminary finding regarding a possible subsidy from going any further, but in any case, the U.S. Administration will not be making a decision much earlier than March or April.

[English]

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for his encouraging report. I am sure the Minister is as aware as I am of the very serious effect that this major export market has on the Canadian lumber industry, particularly in the Atlantic provinces and in British Columbia.

UNITED STATES RESPONSE TO REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Acting Minister responsible for International Trade. In addition to the representations he has made, can the Minister indicate to us what the American response has been, and will the matter be raised at the GATT meetings that are now going on in Geneva?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the U.S. Administration's response has been to show some degree of concern with respect to a large number of protectionist measures the U.S. Congress seems to be about to propose at the present time. Their response was not much more detailed than that. We have already advised the GATT committee in charge of complaints that this could become a problem in relations between Canada and the U.S., and that if the U.S. Administration found that there was a subsidy in royalties for logging operations in Canada, the entire question would be brought before GATT. We have advised GATT that we do not agree with this allegation.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION TO AMEND LIFE INSURANCE TAXATION

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of representations by the life insurance industry, can the Minister confirm whether draft legislation containing proposed income tax amendments affecting taxation of insurance will be tabled in the House of Commons in the near future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I indicated in a previous answer that my intention was to table a draft bill on this particular subject for consideration and discussion. However, pursuant to meetings which the Minister of State for Finance, my Parliamentary Secretary, and I have had with representatives of the industry, along with representations made to the parliamentary committee and to my caucus, as well as representations made by the Hon. Members for Kitchener, London West and London East, we have made such good progress that I will be able to table amendments to the Income Tax Act in early December, together with the Ways and Means Motion, which will include the various amendments to the life insurance proposal.

Mr. Crosbie: Retreat No. 43.

Mr. Lalonde: I hope they will be satisfactory to all Members of the House, particularly to those Members on the Government side who have done such good work on the subject.

HEALTH

STUDY OF PERSONS EXPOSED TO ATOMIC RADIATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It relates to Canadian atomic veterans and civilians who have petitioned and appealed to the Government to undertake a comprehensive medical study to attempt to determine whether the health problems they are experiencing relate to their exposure to radiation. The Government made a commitment last June to fund the study and that it would be released wihtin six months.

It now appears that the study has not been approved and, in the event it is approved, it will not go forward until January. It seems that restraint has drastically cut the proposed study to the point where it is useless in terms of providing new information on the subject, and useless in terms of providing assistance to the veterans and civilians who are now applying for pensions before the Workmen's Compensation Board. These people are moving but their cases are being turned down out of hand because they do not have the supporting information.

Could the Minister explain to the House how the Government's commitment went sour, and what she intends to do to ensure, through her Department, that adequate funding is put forward to make this comprehensive medical study a reality and assist those veterans and civilians who have served the country?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the information I have received is to the effect that in recent months, since the spring, we have had discussions with the interested parties. We reiterated several times that the NHRDP, which is a program of applied health research in my Department, might be the best funding agency for a proposal answering the question put by the Member. Unfortunately, the doctors who were supposed to apply and put forward a proposal did not do so under that particular branch of my Department.

However, my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, has commissioned a study to look into that matter. He is not in the House today so I cannot give more details to the Hon. Member, but I will accept questions with pleasure and look for information.

Mr. Skelly: I think the basic problem with the approach is that this is a serious health problem not only affecting veterans but civilians who have approached the Workmen's Compensation Board on the same grounds. They are waiting for appeals to proceed and cannot do so without it. The Minister said that the commitment was made—it was made six months ago.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Will the Minister give us a commitment that it is not the restraint within her Department that is holding this study back, and say that the Government failed to consult with the veterans, with the result that we have a study, which is now in its format stage, that will be absolutely useless? Will the Minister give us a commitment that adequate funds will be put up to do the job, and that there will be detailed consultations with the veterans so they will know that the study will relate to their applications for pensions? Can she give us those hard commitments as far as the responsibility relates to her Department?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I can answer that the study will be useful and that there has been no restraint whatsoever in any of my medical research programs on this particular proposal.

The other points are simply not even accurate and not of any interest as far as I am concerned. The only point on which I do not have an answer and on which I will have to consult my colleagues is the question concerning past consultation with veterans. I am not sure, and I will check that point.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

B.C. HYDRO PROJECT TO STORE POLYCHLORINATED BIPHENYLS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure the Minister is aware that B.C. Hydro plans to establish a storage dump for very toxic PCBs at the site of the Peace Canyon Dam at Hudson Hope, British Columbia. Has the Minister given his approval to B.C. Hydro for the site and, if so, does he not think that a storage dump for PCBs on the banks of a river in a major watershed is a ridiculous place for a storage dump? Does he not realize that 8,000 to 10,000 containers of PCBs stored in an old warehouse, on the banks of a major river, with the resulting dangers of rust and leakage, threaten to contaminate not only the Peace River but the Athabasca Delta which is one of the largest freshwater deltas in the world?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, of course the management of PCBs and the problem that the PCBs pose to us are a matter of great concern to us. This is a matter not only of national concern but international concern.

The Hon. Member has cited a particular case. I am glad that he has brought it to my attention. I do not have a specific reply at my fingertips but I will look into the matter as quickly as I can and give him as many details as possible.

Mr. Shields: For the Minister's information, apparently the dumps in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia are full, and therefore B.C. Hydro is going to establish a dump on the banks of the Peace River.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIAL ATTEND CITIZENS' MEETING

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, there will be a meeting in the community hall at Hudson Hope at 7.30 p.m. on November 30. It is an information meeting for the citizens of Hudson Hope. Will the Minister be sending a senior representative from his Department to that meeting?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am certainly tempted to say yes, but I would like to verify some more details before I make a decision.

WELFARE

LEVEL OF PAYMENTS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I, and other Members of Parliament, are informed daily of cases where welfare is refusing to assist even those in dire straits. Will the Minister consider, if not increasing the federal Government's share of the welfare payments, immediately negotiating with the Provinces and municipalities to increase the over-all level of payments? Something must be done to tide people over until NEED and other programs take effect?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I have heard, without any examples, rumours to that effect. That is why I published an insert with all of the Family Allowance cheques to Canadians in September which explained their right to welfare and the mechanism to which they must apply if welfare is ever refused. I cannot act directly on it myself, but if any case which is known to Members is reported to me, I will direct them to the proper provincial Minister of Welfare to make absolutely sure the basic rights of people are covered.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSULT COLLEAGUE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare discuss with her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, how they can, together, be of some assistance to those who cannot wait for a cheque in the few months ahead, so they can put food on the table for their children?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is not at all aware of how the welfare system functions. That mechanism is already in existence. It is called welfare. It is a provincial program, and there is assistance for people in emergency situations, or "un système de dépannage" which is part of regular welfare to help do exactly that. I automatically reimburse 50 per cent of these costs. That mechanism does exist.

Since the Member began with an accusation which is quite serious, if he has any cases of people who have been denied welfare, please report them. It is the right of the poorest in our society, and we will protect them.

ENERGY

MANAGEMENT OF RESOURCES OFF NEWFOUNDLAND SHORE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On November 23 the Prime Minister wrote a letter to a St. John's newspaper and indicated that the federal Government was reassessing its position on the offshore question. In the interest of resuming negotiations, is the Government of Canada prepared to soften its position, since it has taken a very hard position on the question of joint management?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, did the Hon. Member read that I said I was reassessing my position?

POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said this in the letter:

> Since the Supreme Court hearing has been set back to February 22, I believe that we have yet another chance to review our positions.

This indicates, of course, that the Government of Canada was doing just that in the next sentence, reviewing its position. In reviewing the position of the Government of Canada, is the Prime Minister prepared, in the interest of resuming negotiations and settling this dispute, to soften the position of the federal Government on joint management? Is he prepared to enter into a position with the Government of Newfoundland where there will be real joint management in which no side will control the management board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not propose to negotiate this matter with the Hon. Member, respected as he is in the House. I have met Mr. Peckford. This letter says that I am prepared to meet him again. Since he is the one who called for greater delay from the Supreme Court, other than procrastination, which I do not suspect him of, it must be that he has something more to say. Therefore, I would suggest that when I said "review our positions"—it is the famous "s" that we discussed yesterday—I think if he is prepared to review his position I would be prepared to review mine. He is the one who asked for this delay, I suppose because he thinks he wants to make another proposal.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. A large number of applications are being made by Canadians to the Government's housing assistance programs as exemplified in the Homebuyers Grant Program and the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. There is now a large backlog of applications, partly due to a shortage of staff in Canada Mortgage and Housing, and partly because the funds will be exhausted with the success of the Programs. Given these facts, would the Minister take action to eliminate the staff shortages at CMHC so it can deal with the applications more expeditiously, and would he consider increasing the funds available for these kinds of programs so that Canadians who want to use them can have their applications considered?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on the two issues, as to the question of backlog, yes, I recognize that the volume of applications is putting a heavy load on our CMHC staff. I was speaking to one regional group earlier in the week and some of the employees were coming in in the evening, even though they were not being paid for that time. I recognize that, and to their credit they have tried to deal very quickly and effectively with the problem. In some cases they have taken on additional persons. As the Hon. Member knows it is not easy to bring somebody in on a short contract basis to make judgment on some of these rather complicated forms.

On the second item, the Hon. Member knows that the Minister of Finance announced a prolongation of the program for existing and new houses until the end of the present calendar year, and for new houses only until the end of April, 1983, and I will stand by his statement.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, given the fact that we have a million and a half unemployed, and given the fact that we have close to 200,000 construction workers who could be working and producing and paying taxes rather than drawing unemployment insurance, would not the Minister at least urge his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to increase the amount of money and extend the time under which these programs are to operate, so we can begin to make an appreciable reduction in the exorbitantly high number of unemployed we have at the present time?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am afraid that the level of take-up of the programs is in fact creating some problem of backlog. The figures that have been granted to the two programs mentioned by the Hon. Member, appear to be quite adequate, if one judges by the number of applications that are coming to us.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF BILL S-31 ON QUEBEC COMPANIES

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns an article that appeared in the newspaper La Presse and refers to a statement made by the Quebec Minister of Finance with respect to Bill S-31. The article appeared under the heading: After twenty years, efforts of Quebec government threatened, and quotes Minister Parizeau. The article also mentions several Quebec companies. I wonder if the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs could inform the House whether the allegations of the Quebec minister have any basis in fact.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that Bill S-31 does not prevent the Government of Quebec from helping a Quebec company. In fact, it can do so in many ways. Mr. Parizeau's opposition to Bill S-31 appears to be based on false premises. I fail to understand why Mr. Parizeau insists on becoming co-owner of a Quebec company in order to help it. We, that is, the Government of Canada, recently gave Bombardier some very special assistance, without, however, demanding a seat on the board of directors or shares in the company in return.

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—NATURE OF GOVERNMENT'S OBLIGATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister responsible for Parks Canada and responsible for the deal for Judd Buchanan and his friends. The Minister has said that the decision on the land transfer was taken in September. However, the building permit was not issued until November 16, issued by an official who has resigned because he was acting under coercion, and issued 12 days after the Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce had expressed their objection.

The Minister has said there are legal obligations that the Government must honour.

Will the Minister tell the House, what is the exact nature of that legal obligation and does that obligation arise from the decision respecting the land transfers, or does it arise from the issuance of the permit?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am not sure, not being a lawyer, that I could give the Right Hon. Gentleman a legal opinion, even if that were a proper thing for me to do. What I can do is report to him that I did ask my officials to look into the legal possibilities, and I was told that by virtue of the agreement that had been made in mid-September it was not possible to undertake the revision or the rescission of that decision without risking the kind of legal consequences which I have already described to the House yesterday.

REASON FOR DECISION TO MAKE LAND TRANSFER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The reply of the Minister is a little more vague than yesterday. He talks about legal risks. There may well not be a legal liability. He says he does not know or, if he knows, he is not telling us. But whatever there is apparently relates to the decision regarding the transfer of land.

Will the Minister tell the House of Commons why that decision was taken, and will he give us an immediate undertaking now to publish all representations and all other information, including records of telephone calls between Mr. Buchanan and himself, or between Mr. Buchanan or Mr. Buchanan's agents and anyone in the Department that affected that decision?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, as I have already I think clearly indicated to the Right hon. gentleman and to the House, the reason why the decision to make the swap was made was because Parks Canada officials and experts believed that that exchange was in the best interests of Parks Canada and the Banff townsite.

I do not propose to undertake the kind of fishing expedition that the Right hon. gentleman has described. If the Right hon. gentleman has any reason to believe that there is a specific and verifiable wrongdoing by any individual in this case, let him make that allegation. Let him make it now. If he is not prepared to do so, let him cease attacks which are nothing more than smear and innuendo, not simply against me but against Privy Councillors who are not in this House to defend themselves, and which relate to private citizens as well.

AUTHORITY FOR ISSUING BUILDING PERMIT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister first blames his officials. He says it was their decision, and he is not going to inquire into it.

Secondly, he refuses to make available to the House of Commons the information, including records of telephone calls, between himself and Judd Buchanan or other interested parties, which would allow the House of Commons, which is the ultimate body to make these decisions, to know exactly what went on.

I repeat my question to the Minister. Will he table all of those documents? If not, why will he not table them?

While I am on my feet, let me ask him another question. He will know that Mr. Tom Ross, the Acting Superintendent of Banff National Park, and Mr. Lee Racine, the official who resigned because he felt he had been coerced to make a bad decision, both of those gentlemen said they took the decision because they were instructed to do so by the Calgary office. The Director of the Calgary office, Mr. Lightfoot, said "We do not recommend issuance of building permits. I don't have that right." So he did not issue the order. He did not apply the coercion. Who applied the coercion, and why?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman, clearly, having been asked if he had any specific and verifiable allegation of wrongdoing to make, has not done so. What he has done again is smeared officials of my Department. His conduct I consider to be irresponsible, dishonourable, and contemptible.

In terms of the specific questions which he posed, I have at no time blamed any of my officials for an action which they took in relation to this issue, nor is there, to the best of my knowledge, any telephone call from Mr. Buchanan nor indeed from anybody else on this subject. It may be the practice of the Right Hon. Member to record and take notes on calls that are made to him by private citizens, but it is not my practice to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: As far, Madam Speaker, as the decision on the issuance of the permit, it was made by the Parks Canada officials who are responsible for so doing. It was not an instruction which came from me; it was not an instruction which came from my office. It was a decision which was taken by the Parks Canada officials who are responsible for those decisions. If he believes specifically otherwise, let him say so specifically—

Mr. Taylor: I say so, now.

Mr. Roberts: —and let him do it in a way which is verifiable.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPRESENTATIONS RECEIVED PRIOR TO DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister well knows that public servants cannot be questioned in this House. Ministers can be. The decision was taken by a Department for which this Minister replies in this House. He cannot evade that responsibility by saying he has not asked the questions. He has an obligation to ask questions, and this House has an obligation to know what exactly led to a decision which was opposed by people in the Park, and which was imposed by coercion upon officials in the Park. Therefore I repeat my question to the Minister. If he has nothing to hide, if this is a normal transaction, will he make an undertaking now to publish all information, including records of calls or records of representations that led to that decision, and if not, will he tell us what it is that he is trying to hide?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, there is nothing to hide. I have been in this House for three days answering as fully as I can, and as directly as I can, all of the questions which Hon. Members have put to me. I am prepared to continue to do so if they wish to pose more questions. It appears to me contrary to the public interest. If there is any specific fact, or if there is any specific question which they wish to ask that they feel I have not replied to, I will be happy to receive it in the House or in writing, but I am not going to accept that we should engage in some wild fishing expedition when I get the kind of wild, unsubstantiated, smearing statements which come from the hon. gentlemen opposite.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader. He was good enough to inform me this morning that today we would be proceeding with Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, and the legislation which would follow if that were disposed of. I wonder if he would be kind enough to outline the business that the House will be dealing with tomorrow and for as far into next week as he can.

While he is doing that, would he also inform the House when he intends to call the motion standing in his name, commencing at page 3 and going over to page 4 of today's Order Paper, dealing with the third report of the special committee dealing with parliamentary reform. I ask him that because I anticipate that the House will want to express its views on the very excellent work that was done by committee Members from all sides of the House in producing that third report, and I assure him at the same time that we will be supporting the motion to concur in that report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: We will be supporting the motion. We have no intention of requiring any division.

Mr. Pinard: How long will it be debated?

Mr. Nielsen: I will get to that in a moment. We want to see it adopted before Christmas so that we can commence the experimental period that has been recommended by the special committee. We believe, however, that the House will want to express its views on the very excellent work done by that committee and to express our understanding of the intent of the committee and its report with respect to the implementation of that experimental period.

I do not foresee a lengthy debate on the matter. In fact, I would not even describe it as a debate, but rather a discussion. I suggest that the Government House Leader might set it down for a short day, either a Wednesday or a Friday, with the assurance that we do not intend to require a division and that we intend to support the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I welcome the openmindedness expressed by the Hon. Member. I thank him and his colleagues for having expressed support for the unanimous report of the special committee on parliamentary reform. As he well knows, we on this side very much support that experiment. We would like to know as early as possible when the whole House will approve this motion so that we can prepare the work necessary to implement the experiment on time. Some work will have to be done within the coming days and weeks in order to prepare the new committee size, and so on. Therefore, the sooner the motion is adopted, the better.

I welcome the offer made by the Hon. Member. I conclude from his remarks that this motion will be brought forward and adopted within a day. He even mentioned a short day. I will be generous with him. If he agrees to a House Order that this motion be adopted at the end of a day, as he said, I will call that motion on Monday so that as many Members as possible have an opportunity to speak on the motion, and by ten o'clock on Monday night this reform will be accepted by Parliament and the experiment will commence December 22. If he confirms that, it will help me to establish the order of business for the coming days.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, we have no problem with that suggestion by the Government House Leader. Indeed, we see no reason for there being a House Order. I am stating to the Government House Leader as House Leader for the Opposition in the House that he has the undertaking of the Opposition that Monday will be quite satisfactory for a full day's debate. As a matter of fact, it is a generous offer by the Government House Leader. We will come to a conclusion.

Having said that, I think there is ground for a useful discussion with respect to implementation. We missed our House Leaders' meeting this morning. Otherwise, I would have raised it at that time. Perhaps we can meet later today or tomorrow to discuss one problem, more by way of explanation, with regard to the implementation contained in his motion, his motion differing from the recommendation of the committee. There is just that explanation I will seek from him. It is a technical matter. I am sure it could be clarified very quickly if he would agree to a House Leaders' meeting later on today or tomorrow.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to listen to the exchange between the House Leader for the Government and the House Leader for the Official Opposition. I know that the House Leader for the Official Opposition did not intend to leave the impression that only his consent was required. I just want to make it unanimous that we in this Party, whose consent is also required, and I assume the Hon. Member who sits as an independent Member will also give his consent, agree to allowing either a House Order to be put before the House or, for that matter, just simply agree that on Monday next we will have a discussion on this matter and have it disposed of by the end of the sitting day.

As a Member of the committee, I am particularly pleased to say on behalf of myself and my colleague for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, who also served on the committee, that the work of the committee was of such a nature that the experiment cannot help but work. The commitment of Hon. Members from all Parties, making sure that the experiment which was promoted and proposed was one that could serve the best interests of the House of Commons in general, was a commitment which I found very impressive.

Therefore, I am looking forward to seeing these new rules in place at the beginning of the new year so that we can make for a better House of Commons and not have the public wrath descending upon us as frequently as it has in the past.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. To clarify the situation, yes, we will call that motion on Monday; yes, I am willing to meet with House Leaders later this afternoon to look at the technical problems. I gather that if we fail to agree on the technical matters, it will not jeopardize the whole project and the motion will be considered on Monday. We will meet at five o'clock for that purpose. We are openminded and are acting in good faith. We want the experiment to work. We want Parliament to become more modern, more efficient and more human, and that is what we had in mind.

In so far as House business for today, is concerned, Madam Speaker, I confirm to the Hon. Member that we will be dealing with C-131 and C-132; but the first item will be under Standing Order 60(10) to concur in Ways and Means Motion No. 47. The first item of business tomorrow will be Bill C-98, followed by C-12 and if need be Bill C-85. We will be dealing with the motion relating to parliamentary reform on Monday. On Tuesday and for the rest of the week up to and including Thursday evening, we will be dealing with Bill C-136, report stage and third reading, hopefully, which will be followed by Bill C-131, if we have not concluded debate today, and Bill C-132.

TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL APPOINTING COMMISSIONERS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table copies in both official languages of the Orders in Council appointing persons to serve as Commissioners on the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) why he did not choose to make a statement on Motions with regard to the finalization of the composition of this Royal Commission? If it is, indeed, as important to the future of the country and to the plans of the Government as he pretends, that is the sort of thing that a Government having respect for Parliament would introduce in Parliament by way of a statement on Motions, allowing debate. Why did he not show that respect for Parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, if there was any lack of respect, it seems to me it came from his own Party when a Member on this side asked me a question about the proposed Royal Commission in early November and about a rumour reported in the press that this Commission was being set up. I assured the House at that time, and I assured the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), that it had not been my intention to make an announcement by way of an answer to a question, but in view of the leak it was inevitable that I proceed in that way. I apologized at the time to the House for the undue haste which was an inconvenience not only, I am sure, to the Opposition, but to the Chairman of the Commission and to Members of the Cabinet. But the deed was done, as it were, and I indicated then that I was prepared to answer other questions. My suggestion was met with nothing but applause from the other side.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,733, 2,734, 4,369 and 4,405.

[Text]

INSPECTION OF MAIL BY RCMP

Question No. 2,733—Mr. Cossitt:

1. At any time in the past ten years, did the RCMP enter the premises of the post offices in the Parliament buildings for the purpose of inspecting mail or of making any inquiries whatsoever about mail and, if so, in each case (a) what were the details and who authorized the entry (b) what was the reason for the inspection?

2. During the same period, did the RCMP on any occasion open mail either addressed to a Member of Parliament or being sent by a Member of Parliament and, if so, in each case, what were the details?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. RCMP technical services were set up in 1971, at PCO request, to examine mail received under cover and parcels addressed to the Prime Minister and his family. The service has always been available to Members of both Houses of Parliament, directly, or through their post office services. It would be in this context that the RCMP x-ray technician would have entered the Parliament Buildings to pick up and return mail submitted for x-ray inspection.

2. Yes, at the addressee's request and with his/her authority. If a piece of mail or parcel submitted for x-ray inspection is found suspect after such examination, the addressee is informed and asked for direction regarding disposal.

Question No. 2,734—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the RCMP inspect on three occasions in 1981 a copy of the Legion magazine published by the Royal Canadian Legion and addressed to an individual in the Privy Council Office and, if so (a) for what reason and why was it done three times (b) does the Government consider the Legion magazine subversive literature (c) what is the name of the highest-ranking RCMP officer or government official authorizing the inspection?

2. Did the magazine wrapping have the House of Commons postmark on it?

3. Are members of the RCMP authorized to inspect mail in the House of Commons and, if so, by whom?

4. Did the RCMP make the inspection in a House of Commons Post Office and, if so, which one?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Not knowingly. (a) As mail is examined in bulk, it is possible that the magazine was examined on three occasions. (b) No. (c) The Commissioner, RCMP. The service is provided under the operational authority of the Commanding Officer, "A" Division, at PCO request.

2. Impossible to determine.

3. Since the inauguration of the service, inspection has been carried out in the East Block, which, until 1976, housed the Privy Council Office and the Prime Minister's Office.

4. No.

RENTAL SPACE FOR LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 4,369—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Did the Treasury Board, on behalf of the Library of Parliament, discuss with the Royal Bank the possible rental of office space in the Royal Bank Tower on Sparks Street for use by the Library and, if so, how much space would be rented and at what cost per square foot?

2. Were other less costly locations investigated and, if so, what would be the cost of alternative accommodation?

3. Is the Royal Bank insisting that its own lease forms be used and, if so, would this contravene Treasury Board policy?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Treasury Board and Public Works Canada as follows:

1. No. Public Works Canada, on behalf of the Library of Parliament, entered into lease negotiations with Globe Realty, a subsidiary of the Royal Bank of Canada for 3,217.5 m^2 of office space in the Royal Bank Centre at Sparks Street, Ottawa, Ontario. The resulting offer to lease had an annual rental rate of $174.40/m^2, and a total occupancy cost (first year) of $293.99/m^2.

2. No available leased premises of sufficient size existed within the geographical area demanded by Library of Parliament.

3. The Globe Realty's offer to lease which was subsequently rejected by Treasury Board was conditional on the use of their lease document which is different from the type of lease form employed by Public Works Canada. The use of an owner's lease form is not in contravention of Treasury Board policy.

POSTING OF GASOLINE PRICES

Question No. 4,405—Mr. Mitges:

Will the Government be introducing legislation calling on all service stations across Canada to post clearly and in a prominent place the current price of all grades of gasoline, not just lead-free gasoline as is presently the case, and, if so, on what date?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): This issue was raised in February of this year by the Consumers' Association of Canada during the petroleum inquiry hearings before the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. At that time several major oil companies publicly announced that they would post prices of all grades of gasoline. Since that time these companies have proceeded to advertise prices at outlets under their control and many other gasoline marketers have followed suit. As this trend appears to be continuing, the Government does not see the necessity for introducing mandatory legislation.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

WAYS AND MEANS

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, laid upon the Table on Wednesday, November 17, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 18, consideration of the Motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I spoke on this Bill for about ten minutes on November 18 and I am certainly very happy to have the opportunity to say a few more words.

I started to review the purpose of indexing. Indexing was brought in in order to enable people on fixed incomes to meet rising costs due to the increasing cost of essential food, clothing and shelter, and general inflation. They both have an effect on those on fixed incomes. Therefore, in order to permit a person at least to maintain a reasonable standard of living, indexing was invoked and made law in the country. If the purpose of indexing in the first place was to make sure that those on fixed incomes were going to be able to continue to live, warm their houses and provide clothes for themselves and their dependants, then I would like the Hon. Minister to tell me how these people are going to meet their needs if it is not continued.

I recall some time ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stating that all these people had to do was change their priorities. People who have large incomes, or inheritances, such as the Prime Minister himself, or those receiving other pensions, are quite able to change priorities. But I want to say that a large number of pensioners, just about half of them according to the Minister's own statement, are in a class where they will be affected by this deindexing, and out of that group I suppose there is no more than 10 per cent who are in the heavy financial areas.

There are a lot of Canadians past the age of 65 who are still working and have not accepted the old age pension in spite of its universality or the CPP, even though they have paid into it for several years. When you consider the number who are not pensioners at all, then that increases the number of pensioners who really need indexing.

Now, I am not arguing in favour of those who do not need indexing to have a reasonable standard of living. Not at all; they should bear their share of the costs of running the country. But to place the mass of old age pensioners in that group is not fair at all. I suppose every Hon. Member in this House who has helped pensioners fill in forms or look after their problems knows that a very large number of those pensioners are just on the edge of getting GIS. Every time there is an increase in the indexation, it brings in a few more people because the amount they are allowed to earn goes up. Now that amount will go up at a slower rate than it did before. Consequently, there will still be that group which is left to live entirely off the basic pension, many of them with practically no other income. If they are not getting GIS, they must have other income.

Those who have any experience with this at all know that the GIS Is based on the income of a year ago, not the current year. People may have secured money from relatives or other sources a year ago, but many of these people are now having a tough time; they no longer have any other sources of income, and they are now going to have to stay in that group for another two years because the pension they receive is not going to rise and their income is going to go down. As the basic income is cut, those who are on basic pension are going to receive less money.

A program put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare shows that the amount of money coming from this source in 1983 will be $90 million. In other words, $90 million is taken out of the income of pensioners in this country. Many of them cannot afford it; they need that money themselves. In 1984 it will amount to $150 million. That amount of money will remain in Government coffers and will not go into the marketplace. Pensioners spend their money, and over the two years that is $240 million which is not going to get into the pockets of pensioners and out into the economy. Many of them can ill afford to have this happen.

I was interested to hear a few moments ago the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) say that the Government wanted to be more human in the reform of Parliament. Well, fine, Mr. Speaker; but I want the Government to be more human with regard to its treatment of the senior citizens of this country and those who are in need. If the Government is going to be more human it can show it by withdrawing Bill C-131 and Bill C-133. Bill C-131 alone will deny the $240 million which rightfully, under present legislation, would go into the pockets of the pensioners of this country, and from there into the stores where it would help those who are trying to stay in business. The $240 million over the years 1983 and 1984 comes under Bill C-131, not Bill C-133 which deals with supplementary retirement benefits and is almost a companion Bill to Bill C-131. It is hard to discuss one without discussing the other.

In looking at Bill C-131, Mr. Speaker, the first two words are very revealing, particularly with regard to the actions of this Government. The bill starts out by saying in Clause 1(5):

Notwithstanding anything—

That is how this Government operates. Notwithstanding anything, if the Government wants to do something, it does not matter whether it is human or right or wrong; it does not matter who is going to pay the bill or suffer because of it. Notwithstanding anything, the Government is going to do it, as Hon. Members opposite now say they are determined to pass this Bill notwithstanding anything—notwithstanding the fact that some of their own Members have publicly said that they cannot support this Bill. I admire them for that, but I will admire them more if they will stand up and tell the world when the vote is being taken that they cannot support this Bill. That will be the proof of the pudding, because talk is easy and talk is cheap.

Mr. Breau: Well, shut your mouth.

Mr. Taylor: Well, you should stand up and express your views. At least I am not afraid to say what I think and what my constituents think.

Notwithstanding anything, this Government will be doing a lot of things, including desecrating and destroying a beautiful park in Banff. Notwithstanding anything, whether it is right or wrong, the Government is quite prepared to do that. I still question the Government's authority to reduce indexation under Bill C-133, because that money was paid by the participants themselves into a separate fund. The Government has a contract with the senior citizens of this country but it does not have any hesitation about breaking that contract. Yet the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) said he could not break a contract. Why he ever made such a ridiculous contract involving parkland is more than I will ever know. Why did he not check into it before he signed the contract, before permitting the permit to be issued, before allowing the land to be transferred? That is what a proper Minister would properly have done.

When I asked the former minister of finance a few months ago what authority he had to stop indexing the pensions of superannuates, he said, "Well, we will get the authority; we may not have it but we will get it". And there is the Bill that is going to do it. The Government simply changed the contract in mid-stream.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough in a country like Canada. If we are going to break contracts with senior citizens, those who cannot defend themselves, and then refuse to break contracts with favourite sons, well, it is a pretty bad situation. It tells the people what is going on in this country.

Dealing for a minute or so with why this Bill should not be passed, inflation is now 10.4 per cent. Senior citizens have nothing to do with inflation but the Government has. The Government's wild expenditures over the last few years have been a major cause of inflation. The Government kept telling the people to tighten their belts but kept increasing its own expenditures. Even this year it is increasing the deficit. The Government asks everyone to cut back to what it calls six and five, but is the Government cutting back? Why does it not cut out the waste in Government before it starts taking $240 million out of the pockets of senior citizens who are on the basic pension? Many of these people are having a difficult time making ends meet. Even the increase in pension through indexing does not meet the increase in their costs, many of which are directly due to the policies of the Government.

In 1982 the average increase in the cost of energy all over the country was 16.4 per cent. That did not come about through any action taken by senior citizens, or anyone else for that matter; it came about because the Government was money hungry. Every petroleum tax possible was increased and so was the tax on heating oil. In Alberta alone, in one case $1.85 of the $2 increase in the cost of energy went to the federal Government in taxes.

The Government now calls on people to help it fight inflation but, Mr. Speaker, the Government aggravated inflation and added to it. Senior citizens had no say in that but now the Government is asking them to cut back or go without. Why does it not appeal to the group of senior citizens who can get by without Old Age Security and the Canada Pension? The Government knows the income of every person who applies for the old age pension and Canada Pension. It now claims that the Canada Pension is not affected by this measure because citizens have contributed to it. Well, Mr. Speaker, the superannuates contributed as well under a different type of arrangement, but the Government is not hesitating to say it will cut off some of the money in that fund. It is not going to touch the Canada Pension—and I do not think it should—but neither should it touch the indexing of the superannuates. How is someone who does not qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement going to meet the increase in the cost of energy, for instance? The Prime Minister has told them to change their priorities, to turn down the heat and not use so much light. A lot of them are doing their utmost to comply, but it is not easy.

The last time I spoke on this subject in the House, Mr. Speaker, I spoke about a senior citizen and his wife whom I visited. He was wearing a heavy sweater and she was wearing a heavy kimono. For the thirty minutes I was in the home I left my overcoat on and I can tell you I was cold, but they were trying to co-operate with the Government. They do not receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement because their income is just above the qualifying line. In effect, the Government is now going to take the money that should go into their pockets while telling them to change their priorities.

The 16.4 per cent increase in the cost of energy is largely due to the actions of the Government and its hunger for money. The price of clothing has increased by 4.9 per cent. Now that we are approaching winter people must have warm clothes, but how are they going to get them? As the Prime Minister says, they will have to change their priorities—perhaps go without food. Sometimes a male senior citizen is unable to get around so his wife has to go out and do their business. She must have warm clothes or she will freeze to death in our cold winters. But how is she going to get them?

I am speaking of people on fixed incomes, many of whom are barely getting by. Some people have to apply for welfare because they just cannot get by on the basic pension. That is a great tribute to this country with its tremendous wealth, I must say! People who have spent a lifetime building the country are being told that the indexing is to be removed from their pension but that they can apply for welfare. That is the only way many of them would be able to change their priorities, as the Prime Minister has suggested. Of course, he can change his priorities any time he likes, but people who have worked and laboured throughout the years cannot all do that. The price of food has increased and, of course, people have to eat. Does the Prime Minister want them to change that priority as well? Perhaps they will have to live on pork and beans entirely, but even the price of pork and beans has increased.

Statistics show that in 1982 the price of energy increased by 16.4 per cent, clothes by 4.9 per cent and food by 6.5 per cent. That is almost 27 per cent in total, Mr. Speaker, Now the Government proposes to cut the indexing of pensions and wants pensioners to get by on that. They might get by, but it will be pretty tough and it is a disgrace to the country.

Some historian said that we evaluate a country by the way it treats its disabled, its handicapped and its senior citizens. Our senior citizens have spent a lifetime building the country and in many cases have contributed to other causes to the point that they have little left for themselves. Those aged 65 and over came through the Depression and now the Government is threatening to cut more off their incomes, as if they did not contribute enough in the hungry thirties.

A good motto for the Government to use in the next election would be "Notwithstanding anything, we will do what we like if we have a majority. We will not listen to what the Opposition says."

As a matter of interest, Mr. Speaker, there is not one Minister in the House. I suppose I might just as well be talking out in the backwoods for all the good it does in this place. Ministers do not remain to hear what the Opposition has to say although they often complain that the Opposition has nothing to offer. I do not know of a provincial Government in the country in the last 20 years where the Minister responsible for legislation did not remain in the House to listen to debate on his or her Bill. I know a lot of Provinces where the Premier and Ministers spend a good deal of time in the House and stay there all the time when something concerning their Department is being discussed. After question period here, however, it often happens that there is no Minister present, or sometimes only one or two. There is a handful of faithfuls opposite who are there pretty nearly all the time. People are rapidly catching on. This will not go on forever.

The Minister says that the Government needs the money, that it needs $240 million. First it should cut out some of its needless waste. There is no need for the Government to send a public servant to Paris to study for a year. If anyone else in the country wants to go to Paris to study, he or she has to pay for it. I would imagine that it is a wonderful place to study. I would like to go there myself; I would have liked to go there a few years ago but I could never afford it.

Mr. Nielsen: It is possible on Ed Clark's salary.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. If one gets into the right Department and gets to know the Prime Minister and the Minister, he can do it, notwithstanding anything. Whoever wrote this Bill sure knew what he was writing—"nothwithstanding anything". The Government sent this man Clark to study in Paris, I suppose at the Sorbonne. I do not know how much it will cost. He is getting his wages and enough to live handsomely on in Paris. That could have gone quite a way toward reducing the deficit or eliminating the need for $240 million being taken out of the pockets of the senior citizens of the country.

Notwithstanding anything, if a person is the right one, he can go to the Riviera, of all places, for a year at Government expense. If she wanted to learn French, why did she not learn it in Quebec? There are excellent teachers there; it was not necessary to go to the Riviera. In fact, she could learn it right here in Ottawa as many other public servants are doing, at their own expense. In many cases the Government pays the cost of the instruction; in many cases it does not. Some people are paying for their own instruction, but the Government can send one person, the favourite daughter, the favourite of the Prime Minister, to the Riviera.

There must be $100,000 spent per year on these two people in terms of wages, subsistence, air fare and everything else in the Riviera and in Paris. If that is not waste, I do not know what waste is. Then the Government takes $240 million out of the pockets of senior citizens. It takes money out of the pockets of superannuates, people who have spent part of their lives improving the country, or R.C.M.P. being shot at. What about members of the Armed Forces who spent part of their lives on the battlefields of the world, or public servants who spent countless hours trying to work out the best policies for Canada? We will break the contract with them if we pass Bill C-133.

If this is the type of policy the country is going to have, we need a new government. It is almost the last straw when the Government starts picking on people who cannot defend themselves.

Telephone bills are up. Some people ask what right they have to have telephones. "They are senior citizens living on the basic pension and they are not supposed to have telephones", one chap said to me. "Why do they want telephones?" They want telephones because they are human beings. For many of them it is the only way they can talk to other people. Because their health will not permit them to go out, they have to phone for their groceries and everything. I could take you, Mr. Speaker, into some of the homes of people in that category. Telephone costs have risen. How will senior citizens be able to meet this increased cost, especially when the Government starts cutting down their pensions by cutting their indexing?

Water rates have risen. They have to have water. I suppose some smart public servants, speaking on behalf of the Government, maybe those who prepared this legislation, may say, "They do not need to take baths; let them have their cup of water a day but they do not need to take baths." Some of them are now only taking baths once or twice a month simply because they cannot afford the water bills. I know pensioners who wanted to water their gardens last summer but did not dare do it because they could not afford it.

Sales taxes are up, and the Government introduces a Bill which puts an excise tax on gas, making the price of food go up. It is one of the most terrible things the Government has ever done because it affects almost all the people of Canada, not only farmers. It adversely affects farmers because some of them cannot afford fertilizer. What will that do to the land? In time it will hurt the land and hurt production. The other day a knowledgeable farmer in Alberta said that many farmers this year could not afford fertilizer because of the excise tax. The Government is putting everything out of reach, and we wonder how people will live.

Another point in connection with this Bill is the overpayments. I wish the Government could understand the agony created in the hearts of our senior citizens when it sends them cheques and then discovers six months later it has sent them too much. The pensioners have spent the money but still have not met all their needs, and then they receive letters which frighten them because they are told that they have to pay back the money. From where will they get it? It was the Government's mistake in sending the money out. If someone deliberately tries to defraud the Government, then let him take his punishment. In many of these cases it is the Government's bookkeeping, computer and calculations that were wrong. When the pensioners received the money, they had every right to expect that it was theirs.

I see the Speaker rising because my time is up, but I want to say that the Bill should be defeated roundly. When we defeat it, I hope we also defeat the Government.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-131. First I want to say what good things may be said about the Bill, and then I shall come to the "but". I am afraid it will not take very long to come to the "but".

The ostensible purpose of the measure is to assist in getting our economic house in order. It is pretty hard to find fault with this laudable aim. Surely it is and must be our most immediate and pressing task, as well as our highest priority. Mr. Speaker will find no disagreement with that role on this side of the House; indeed, we have been pressing the same on the Government for some time now.

This was the aim of the budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) of December, 1979, two and a half years before the Party opposite noticed that there was a problem. Or at least, to give it the benefit of every doubt, before it acknowledged publicly that the world would be unfolding better than it seemed to be at the moment.

How much of the time of the House is taken up with piecemeal band-aid attempts to remedy the earlier sins of omission and commission of that gaggle of happy fumblers opposite. Nevertheless, an awareness of the fact that all is not well in the land has penetrated the consciousness across the aisle. Good. They have decided to do something about it; also good.

This is not the time to address its program per se. However, it really cannot be avoided entirely because, as I see it, the only reason the Bill before us now has been presented to the House is to support that forlorn, desperate six and five program. This Party supported that program, but we did so as a by no means ideal method of addressing the problem at issue, the malfunctioning economy, which had been brought to its present disastrous state by the policies of the Party in power, the Party that now wants the collusion of this House in making its makeshift repairs.

Secondly, we did so, as has already been made abundantly clear, with the intention of limiting its effects on the working population of this country. It is not the intention of my Party to ride out this depression or recession—Mr. Speaker, let us call a spade a spade—on the backs of the poor and it is certainly not our intention to do so on the backs of the elderly. Surely we have enough resources to hand in this blessed nation of ours that we need not set our so-called golden-agers adrift on an economic ice floe, an ice floe marked six and five.

Let me reiterate. The only justification for this unjust and unnecessary Bill is that it supports the program of six and five. Six and five has, in fact, become more than a program. It has become more than a slogan. It has sort of become a golden calf. "Bow down to the golden calf marked six and five, and if enough people do, we can be re-elected."

Like Kilroy of World War II fame, who scribbled his name on everything movable and immovable on the continent of Europe, this Government has to scrawl its "Kilroy was here" on all within its ever-reaching grasp, only it is not "Kilroy was here," it is six and five.

What about public sector wages? They are under the six and five umbrella. I would point out to the Liberal Party on the other side and those to my left that when we voted for the original six and five we voted for restraint on our own salaries as well. Yes, the public goes for it. Then private sector firms with Government contracts sell six and five across the country. It has spread the word of six and five. Everything, you name it, is six and five, with one exception, and that exception is the Government's own spending and Government-administered prices. The Government does not need to conform to six and five. No, not the Liberals.

What about Old Age Security? It is six and five for Old Age Security, you want to believe it. What a cheap shot. What a low blow. The generation which now comprises our senior citizens, the generation to which I am proud to belong, is one which has paid its dues. Many of us have lived, struggled and survived through two wars and a depression. This is a record of survival to which this Government seems determined to add a second depression. These people have scraped and sacrificed to bring to maturity the generations who form the work force of today. They do not owe us anything. We owe them. This is a pretty measly way of paying the debt. It is not as though this measure would have a significant effect on the deficit, or on any other aspect of the Government's fiscal or monetary stance. If it did, I, as a representative of the affected generation, would be prepared by all means to accept it as a part of the over-all package. But it does not. The amount by which Government pay-outs are reduced by the changes to the old age pension, the child tax credit and the family allowance comes to about $10 million. That is peanuts. It is literally peanuts compared to the amounts blown, for example, on bail-outs for corporate friends of the Party across the aisle, or perhaps it is a still grosser insult to our collective intelligence and integrity compared to the amount by which the public purse was looted to buy out the competition for our so-called "window on the oil industry."

It bespeaks a strange ordering of priorities that we see there across the aisle, and a strange, a very strange, ranking of values. I am aware that the Liberals propose to increase the Guaranteed Income Supplement by an amount sufficient to offset the reduction in basic Old Age Security in the hands of those who receive it, and for this gesture, at least, I commend them. But as a matter of principle, I favour simplicity, be it in legislation itself or in the administrative procedures which support that legislation.

Those of our elderly citizens who do not need Old Age Security and would be relatively unaffected by its not being fully indexed would return the difference in their income tax payable under the tax legislation already in force. In short, the measures we have before us here will serve only to complicate the administrative procedures already in place. In fact, this legislation serves no useful purpose whatsoever. It renders more complex an already complex procedure. It does not greatly affect the Government's fiscal or monetary stance. It does one thing and one thing only. It provides one more surface upon which the Government can stretch six and five. That, effectively, is all that it does. As the sole reason for deindexing an entire generation, and this generation above all, it is reprehensible.

I want here to re-emphasize a point made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Elderly, single pensioners with incomes of $9,000 will lose $290 in this two-year period. But a couple with two children and an income of $27,000 will lose less than $50 during the same time frame. Is this what the Government intends? As I see it, there can be only two reasons for this inequity. Either this is the Government's intention, this is the effect it really wants to create, or—and this conclusion would seem inescapable—it really has no idea what it is doing at all.

The Government wanted to appear to have a program. Above all, it wanted to have one more thing upon which to hang the slogan of six and five, and so, with no more consideration of its downstream effects than that, it has hatched the Bill that sits before us now. I do not want to believe this. I do not want to believe what the Lord knows. But on the basis of what we see before us and how this Government has operated in the past, I must conclude that this is very possible.

There is yet another matter which should be looked at, and that is the question of the demographics of our population. There is a hump which is passing along the demographic chart, a hump representing the post-World War II baby boom. This hump is at present well within the work force age group, but at some stage in the not too distant future that hump is going to pass into the category of senior citizen. Some time fairly soon the proportion of our population 65 years of age or over will radically increase. If we approach that time with the same set of assumptions in place as now exist, we are going to have a very serious set of problems on our hands. This is not news; we are all aware of it. But we have not yet done anything to anticipate the adjustments that will have to be made.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that this presents a most opportune time to do so. It is a time of crisis when the Government insists that certain changes must be made in the Old Age Security legislation. Perhaps it is the time when we should examine all the parameters of our Old Age Security system and decide just what we want of it, what we want it to do and how we want it to be structured to meet the conditions of the present day, 20 years from now and beyond, even into the twenty-first century. I want to suggest that this should be a time for thoughtful building and of far-reaching decisions well reasoned out.

The role that Old Age Security has played and has been expected to play in our society has changed and developed through the years. The legislation must be expected to face some dramatically altered conditions over the next several years. I suggest that if we are to tamper with it now, then that tampering should be done in order that it may better meet the requirements we and the Canadian people shall demand of it in the years to come.

It is not the time to take a heedless measure such as this one before us now which hurts many, benefits no one, including the Government's deficit position, except in a very minor way, and is introduced for no reason except to further impress the stamp of six and five.

There was an item in The Globe and Mail on November 23 concerning Bill C-131. It is headed "Old fighters" and reads:

> Health Minister Monique Bégin suggests old-age pensioners should be at the forefront in the fight against inflation. Quite right. So many of them were at the front during two world wars and at least one depression—why should they be allowed to rest on their laurels?

It would seem that this is what the Minister and the Government wish to portray.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would just like to make absolutely sure that the Hon. Member understands that I never said that. I do not think he wants to mislead the House. I would appreciate a correction.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that I was simply reading an aritcle in The Globe and Mail of November 23. I certainly am not quoting that and the Minister has refuted it. The article was written by R. C. Gaschen of Toronto. I suggest that the Minister write to him and tell him that she has been incorrectly quoted.

An Hon. Member: Tell her to withdraw the Bill.

Mr. Darling: That would be one solution which would certainly please Mr. Gaschen and I suspect most people in Canada.

As I said, this Bill will cause the greatest hardship to many of our old age pensioners who receive the basic old age pension, possibly a few savings, some Government bonds or a very small private pension and are just above the poverty line. They are the ones who will feel the pinch.

I might suggest to the Minister or those who control the purse strings that they consider the possibility of establishing a base which exempts old age pensioners who have incomes of less than $18,000 from the restrictions of six and five. I am sure the Minister realizes that there are many senior citizens who are drawing very large pensions. They certainly should be paying their share of the money which the Government wants to save.

As was mentioned by an Hon. Member, I can also recall many years ago when the first old age pension of $20 a month was introduced. I remember my grandmother, who was a widow raising six girls, finally being able to receive that pension of $20 a month. I was involved in getting it for her. She was very proud when she received that pension because it was her own money. She was proud to take that money rather than accept money from her daughters, even though she took excellent care of the household.

Of course, pensions have risen dramatically since then. In those days one had to undergo a means test before receiving a pension. You had to prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that you had nothing. Today, the old age pension is a right to which all senior citizens are entitled. There is no stigma attached to it at all. The stigma attached to old age pensioners today is the fact that they are having to cut corners in their everyday lives because of inflation and the high cost of many goods and services today. Our old age pensioners are finding it difficult to get along.

The cost of clothing has been mentioned. I suppose we should be thankful that senior citizens do not have to buy as many new clothes as those who are in the work force or younger people. While old age pensioners require certain services and need to provide for the necessities of life, they are entitled to a few luxuries as well. I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare is certainly very sympathetic. I see some of my hon. friends looking at me with surprise when I say that. However, while the Minister wishes to help the senior citizens, I believe that she is having a very hard time trying to talk to some of those hard-nosed Members on the treasury bench.

I will not mention names but there are some very concerned Members on the Government side, including some who sit in places of high authority presently, who share our concerns. Let us hope that they can convey that message to their caucus and, more importantly, to the Cabinet so that this Bill will be withdrawn.

Bill C-133 will come before the House shortly. This represents another instance when the Government will renege on a signed contract which gave the Armed Forces pensioners and Government pensioners an indexed pension. This legislation will now reverse that decision and break the contract unless some Members on that side of the House put pressure on the Government. Even if ten of them say, "We will nail your hides to the mast," I am quite sure that the Government will have a repentant feeling and introduce a more acceptable Bill.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in this debate. I consider it to be an important one in view of the press reports I have been reading regarding the splits which appear to be happening within the Liberal caucus. Perhaps there is some hope that this legislation will not be passed by the House. It is certainly the intention of this Party to fight with all our energy and might against this legislation.

I enjoyed hearing the remarks of my Conservative colleague. However, I was somewhat disappointed since the Conservative Party supported the six and five program last August. If they had fought it, as we did, this legislation would not be before the House today and senior citizens would not be faced with the threat of having money taken from their pockets. This sham of a Government policy would not be before us. Therefore, I question and doubt the intention of the Conservatives.

Mr. Darling: We voted to reduce our salaries; you did not.

Mr. Keeper: You should vote to reduce your salaries, particularly since it is your actions which have contributed to taking money away from pensioners.

I would like to put my comments on the record with regard to this legislation, Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. The purpose of this Bill is to limit the indexation of Old Age Security to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. In essence, this is an application of the Government's six and five policy to the pension system.

The six and five policy is the Government's so-called economic strategy. I say "so-called" because it really is a sham. Inflation has been decreasing in spite of the program. It is not surprising that inflation has been coming down, given the depth of the recession that we are in today and even the predictions made by the Conference Board of Canada that the recession will last longer than was foreseen. While inflation has been coming down, wages have been trailing inflation.

Why did the Government come up with the six and five program? It is my judgment that the Government has no economic policy but could not appear before the Canadian people to reveal that fact. It had to put up some sort of a front and the front was the six and five. It decided that it would "attack inflation". Then as inflation comes down due to the depth of the recession, it can claim credit for having done something about inflation and for having an effective economic policy. This is not economic policy; this is political strategy of the worst kind.

The other day The Globe and Mail quoted a study on wages by Citibank of New York and it demonstrated that wages in Canada have in fact been trailing those of most other western industrialized countries. The notion that the Government has been putting forward that somehow unjustified wage demands are the cause of our weakness in the international market today just does not stand up when examined and analysed, and it certainly was refuted by the Citibank study.

You have to ask, Mr. Speaker, if wages are not the cause of our problems in the international market, why has the Government focused its attention on wages, through six and five and the pension system? It is my conclusion that the Government simply wanted to put up a good front. It wants to be able to say to people that it is doing something, when in fact it is not. This is political strategy, not economic strategy.

I want to turn to the application of the six and five principle to pensions specifically. The Government claims that it will be saving some $31 million by this measure. Some of the calculations that we have done have indicated that it will be taking even more than that from the pockets of pensioners. But even if we accept the Government's figures that it is going to be reducing expenditures in the area of pensions by some $31 million, we really have to ask the question as to what real impact can a reduction of $31 million from pension expenditures have on a Government deficit of $23.6 billion. Clearly, it is not going to have any real impact on the deficit.

Even if it took this $31 million that it claims to be taking from pensioners and applied it to job creation, to employment, which is the most severe problem the country faces today, what real impact could it hope to have with regard to the level of unemployment? There are some two million people unemployed in this country. How could the Government take $31 million and put those people back to work? It is not going to have any real impact, Mr. Speaker.

The reason I point that out is that there are other places where the Government could find federal dollars for job creation, if it so chose. I will give a few examples. These are examples that have been given by my Leader previously and suggestions that we have made as to where the Government might find some money for job creation, rather than taking it out of the pockets of elderly citizens.

We could reduce the level of money that the Government is allocating to advertising. This budget runs in the neighbourhood of $180 million a year. That budget could be reduced significantly and some real dollars for employment creation could be found. The minister could do away with the Canadian Unity Office, which is simply a propaganda arm of the Government, and freeze for the moment the construction of embassies abroad.

These three measures alone would save $400 million which could be applied to job creation and dwarf the amount of money that the Government is going to be getting from the pension system by limiting the indexation of the pension system. The Government claims that it will be getting $31 million. Rather than taking this amount of money from pensioners, why not take $400 million from these three aspects of the federal Government's budget that this Party has suggested, create significantly more jobs and leave the money that pensioners need in the pocket of the pensioners? I think this would be a more rational and more humane approach.

Other examples of where the federal Government might find money, I suggest, are—

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Hon. Member through you to give us the details of that $400 million he is talking about that we could save?

Mr. Keeper: I would be glad, Mr. Speaker, to entertain any questions at the end of my speech, but I have just given you the details of where that $400 million is going to come from. One, from the federal advertising budget; two, by freezing the construction of embassies abroad—

Mr. Tousignant: How many embassies? Which ones?

Mr. Keeper: —three, from the Canadian Unity Office. These are three measures that the Government could take to stop wasting money, and could apply that money to job creation rather than taking money away from pensioners.

Another place the Government could take money from would be to stop bailing out their political friends. I think of the Maislin Trucking Company. Why, in a nation this size, is one trucking company given millions of dollars to bail them out? There are other people in this country who are having economic difficulties. Rather than wasting money like that and rather than robbing pensioners, take it from a place that makes sense, and do something that is reasonable. I hope that gives a little information to the Member. Perhaps he will give it some reflection. If he has further questions I would be glad to answer them at the end of my address.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would not like to give misinformation to the House, but I think he would like the record corrected in that the help that the Government gave to Maislin was simply a loan guarantee. No money has yet been given to that company. I know the Hon. Member would like to see that corrected.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, surely there is an economic impact from giving somebody a loan guarantee, a significant loan guarantee. That still does not explain why one trucking company is bailed out while many others are having a difficult time. This money should be used properly.

I will give another example, Mr. Speaker, if somebody else would like to get up and ask a question and stimulate me a little further here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, I call to his attention the Bill before us and its subject matter. He appears to be straying from the Bill before us.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that the matter I am speaking to is the fact that the Government is taking away money from pensioners. I am suggesting that there are other places where the Government could get money, and that is why I am giving those four examples.

The Government has given some $8.7 billion in incentives to the petroleum industry. Why not take that $8.7 billion which will have some real impact on the economy in terms of job creation or reducing the deficit, rather than robbing pensioners? That is the relevance of these figures to the pension legislation, Mr. Speaker. I would be glad to entertain any other questions that come from that side.

Mr. Kempling: He has all the answers.

Mr. Keeper: It is possible that the Government's estimates with regard to how much money it is going to get from limiting the indexation of pensions is wrong. It is possible that it is going to be taking more money away from pensioners than the $31 million. If that in fact is the case, that would indeed be cruel and insensitive and inhumane.

It is also possible that it may have erred the other way, that it may not get $31 million by limiting the indexation of pensions, that the amount of money gathered may in fact be less than that. If that were the case, then this move makes even less sense in terms of the expenditures of the Government, in terms of any possible economic impact, which is simply to say that the move is a public relations move, is a sham and has no economic rationale behind it. It certainly has no social policy rationale behind it.

One of the arguments which the Government uses in terms of applying six and five to pensions is that we must all share the cost of the recession. The Government is in effect appealing to our sense of community, our willingness to sacrifice for our community. However, a pensioner living on $9,000 a year who is limited to a 6 per cent increase will only receive an additional $540. An executive with a $100,000 income with the same 6 per cent increase if he is in the Public Service, and with no limit if he is in the private sector, will receive an increase of $6,000. Is it just to increase the income of the pensioner by $540 while increasing the income of the executive by $6,000? Where is the justice?

Clearly that is unfair, particularly in light of the fact that a previous budget document indicated that a number of people in this country, I believe the figure was 705, earn $100,000 a year or more and pay no income tax. They do not make any contribution to the over-all cost of running the community. Therefore, the application of six and five to pensioners is unfair. It is an abuse of some very strong and shared values we have of the community and our willingness to sacrifice for the community. Therefore, I say this is a misdirected appeal and an abuse of those values.

Six and five attacks a number of pension principles of which I would like to take note. The first is that limiting the rise in pension to 6 per cent rather than the cost of living increase sets an arbitrary level; pensions are not related to the cost of living. That attacks the notion that pensions are to give every citizen upon retirement an adequate and secure income. The basic purpose of pensions is being affected by this legislation.

This legislation places greater emphasis on that portion of the pension system which is subject to a needs test, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, rather than Old Age Security which is universal. In introducing this legislation, the Government is attacking the important principle of legislation, universality, the principle that every citizen of this country is entitled to an adequate and decent income in retirement years. This legislation is a direct attack on that principle because it makes the GIS a greater portion—

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope the Hon. Member will not mislead the House for a second time. He is saying that the old age pension is no longer universal. I ask him to correct that statement, to tell the truth, that it remains fully universal. Nothing is more dangerous to the pensioners of Canada than to hear inaccuracies in the debates of the House of Commons.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to restate the argument and make it clear to the Minister so that she can understand the implications of the legislation. I am glad that I am stimulating some reaction from that side of the House. What I am saying must be getting under their skin. Somebody has to do that in order to convince them to withdraw this legislation.

Miss Bégin: Tell the truth.

Mr. Keeper: The truth is that this legislation is a direct attack upon the principle of universality.

Miss Bégin: Prove it.

Mr. Keeper: I will prove it. It goes like this. It limits the indexation in OAS and GIS. The GIS is income-tested. Therefore, the GIS will become a greater portion of the overall pension income rather than the OAS, which is the universal aspect. It places a greater emphasis upon the income-tested portion rather than the universal aspect, the OAS. That is a direct attack upon the principle of universality of pensions, a principle which this Party respects. It is necessary if we are ever going to have fair pensions in this country. It is a shame that the Government has brought forward this legislation and does not now have the courage to withdraw it.

Rather than taking money out of the pockets of pensioners, this and every other Government should be working on reforming the pension system. There are many Canadians who live below the poverty line. Canadians who have worked all their lives should receive an adequate pension. We should be moving in the direction of pension reform rather than taking money away from the pensioners.

The pension problem affects women more than men. There are more women as a proportion of the population who receive inadequate pensions. There should be equality among the sexes. The pension system should be reformed in such a way that it provides an adequate income on retirement for all people. Both men and women should receive adequate income on retirement.

In the past many women were deprived of an adequate income because they stayed home to raise their children. That should be corrected. There should be an opt-out clause for those women who stay home to raise children so that they do not lose benefits as a result of time lost in the job market. The provision should apply equally to men and women. If it is the man who stays home to look after the children, it should apply to them as well.

In addition to those women who stay home, women in a career position often receive lower income than the average man, roughly 60 per cent. Although they pay into the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, their income would be significantly lower than that of a man. Therefore, the inequities that exist throughout their adult life continue in their retirement years.

The application of six and five to pensions is wrong on two counts. It is wrong as economic policy and wrong as social policy. We need a real economic policy for this country and reform of the pension system so that everyone will have a secure and adequate income on retirement. Rather than the sham of six and five, we need an industrial strategy and a manufacturing base which will permit us to compete in international markets. We must have the base to compete in international markets rather than laying a heavy trip on workers and taking money away from pensioners.

Rather than applying six and five to the pension system today, Mr. Speaker, rather than taking the $31 million, out of the pockets of pensioners, what we should be doing is moving towards pension reform. We would be capable of doing that if we had an adequate economic policy in this country. We have to start by having a real economic policy, and then some humane pension reform.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, normally I receive a great deal of pleasure in speaking to the various Bills which come into this House, but this afternoon I speak to Bill-131 with a certain degree of sadness and regret. Because in this Bill I see the destruction of what I think is a fairly good pension system for Canada.

Our pension system rests on four tiers. We have the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, which give a basic amount of money to people who retire, we have the Canada Pension Plan which supplements that amount of money for those people in the working force, and we have private pension plans, which are many and varied. Finally, of course, we have personal savings, which include our house and mortgage and RRSPs. This system provides a fairly good pension system in this country.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) I am happy to see is in the House this afternoon, because it must take a great deal of courage to come in and support this Bill which I know in her heart of hearts she does not support. The Hon. Minister travelled throughout Europe and examined the pension systems there. On her return she said the two systems which provide the best Government support are in Sweden and in Canada. I agree with the Minister, but my question is, why then Bill C-131? This Bill portends the destruction of our basic pension system.

It is not often that I agree with the Hon. Members on the far left side of this House, but I do agree with the statement made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) that this Bill cancels out the universality of OAS. The Minister became very upset when the Hon. Member made that statement, but I can tell you why it is true. First of all, this Bill allows for indexing only to the extent of 6 per cent for OAS this year and 5 per cent next year. At the moment our inflation rate is well over 10 per cent. If it stays that way, gradually more importance will be placed on GIS and there will be fewer and fewer people relying on OAS. Eventually, we will have a system where most of the money for that basic pension system is under GIS. We will not have a universal system then because GIS is income-tested, and if most of those poor over 65 years of age are getting their basic money from GIS, how can we say we have a universal system?

I suggest that the Minister agrees with me, and I would like to quote from the National Pension Conference where she said:

> Consider another key issue; pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find they have more serious financial problems the older they become.

Of course. That is exactly what is going to happen. It should be recognized by the people of Canada that Bill C-131 marks the beginning of the end for our universality in the OAS system, which was at one time the pride of this country.

I would like to quote from the Minister again, and if I am wrong, I hope she corrects me. On September 26, 1981, in an article in the Vernon Daily News which stated 54 per cent of pensioners receive GIS, the Minister said: "That's scandalous; there's something wrong in the system." I agree with the Minister. The Guaranteed Income Supplement was originally put into the system only to support those few people who did not quite reach the poverty level with the moneys they were getting from their retirement schemes. It is scandalous that instead of covering just a few people it now covers a great majority, and it will have to cover more people in the future because of this Bill which the Government has placed before this House. Certainly Bill C-131 represents, I think it is fair to say, the kind of double-talk, double-thinking and double-cross which has gone on with this Government over the past two and a half years. Its action certainly does not follow its words.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at a national press conference said: "We are determined to bring about substantial pension reforms during our present mandate." Is Bill C-131 pension reform? It is taking money away from pensioners who are at or about the poverty line and bringing many more pensioners down close to it. Surely everyone knows what the poverty line is. It is an "Alice in Wonderland" figure, because if you happen to live in a city where expenses are high it is different than if you live in the country and own your own home.

This Bill is from a Government whose Minister of National Health and Welfare at the time the Government first brought in this particular Act, the Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh, stated on November 9, 1964 and I quote from Hansard at page 9899:

> —that all future old age security pensions will be pegged to the cost of living index and will increase automatically if living costs increase.
> SOME HON. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Of course, the Hon. Members would say "Hear, hear". It was a good idea then and it is a better idea now because of high inflation. She went on to say, and I again quote from Hansard at page 9899 of that date:

> This is a new departure in old age security. It is in response to the oft heard cry of those in receipt of pensions that they are unable to keep up with their own expenses if the cost of living rises—

These are the words of a Minister who paid attention to the "oft heard cry" of poor pensioners. I ask this Minister, what has she done in this respect? I am quite prepared to agree that pension payments are a very large problem in this country. They take a large part of our gross national product. Last year it totalled somewhere around $7.5 billion, which was 3 per cent of the gross national product. That has doubled since 1966 when old age pensions only took about 2 per cent of the gross national product. It is estimated that in 1990 old age pensions will take 12 per cent of the gross national product, and in the year 2025 will take 18 per cent of the gross national product. There is no doubt that it is an area that should concern this House and deserves a lot of time and study, because we can rest assured that in the future we are going to have great difficulty in this particular area.

• (1640)

That is why I find it so difficult to understand. Instead of building, as it promised to do, instead of helping pensioners, this Government continues to destroy them. It is not that the Government does not recognize the problems. The Canadian Government report on aging, a briefing book used by this Government, says that inflation has had a serious effect on the real value of pensions and annuities. There is an emerging consensus that corrective action must be taken.

Now, why, I ask you, when this is the kind of thing the Government puts out in books, do we have an Act like this which reduces the indexing of our basic pension scheme? The OAS is the pedestal upon which everything is built. It is no answer to say, "Well, we are going to increase GIS so no one will fall below the poverty line." It is that group of people just above the poverty line who will lose money. They will not be affected by the GIS because they will not qualify, and we will be taking money from the poor. I think it is a national scandal that we should have that kind of legislation and expect the people of this country to sit idly by.

Earlier someone mentioned the demographic problem we are having. It is very true that from 1946 to 1966 there was a large increase in the number of births in Canada. I think the biggest result is, and everyone should be well aware of it, that at the moment there are seven workers supporting one pensioner. In the year 2025 when that population bulge reaches retirement age there will be two, or three at the most, workers supporting every pensioner.

So the question we have to ask ourselves now is, will those workers continue to pay the kind of taxes necessary to support those pensioners? We have already seen the experience of Sweden where there was a tax revolt among the workers. They refused to pay taxes because too much was being taken from them.

Not long ago I had the opportunity, along with some other Members of this House, to go to Vienna for a conference on aging. I would like to thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare for giving me that opportunity. My only regret is that she was not able to accompany us. At that conference some 1,200 people from some 100 countries talked about the same kind of problem we have here, the problem of an aging population with the number of aged growing dramatically in the next couple of decades. During the two weeks we spent there a great deal of work was done by the delegates preparing a plan of action which would later go to the United Nations, presumably to be adopted by the UN and then given to all countries. It was really a plan of action for guidance as to how to handle the problem of the aged and the aging in all societies. Canada is not alone in this, and many countries, even some Third World countries, will face far more serious problems than we in this regard.

In any event, they came to many conclusions, of course. One was that you cannot deal simply with the question of pensions; you have to deal with the whole problem of aging. You have to deal with health problems because the aged generally have more health problems, therefore requiring more government expenditures. You have to deal with housing for senior citizens. How do you involve senior citizens in this whole process? Because, as we all know, senior citizens are healthier and more active than they have ever been and want to get involved.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, that conference in Vienna came up with a plan of action, well over 100 recommendations. The Canadian Government was there, ably represented, and we did very well, I thought, in terms of making a great contribution. I presume the Canadian Government adopted and signed this plan of action; at least, that was its purpose. I would just like to read recommendation No. 28, Subsection (b), which says that we must ensure that the minimum benefits will be enough to meet the essential needs of the elderly and guarantee their independence. Social security payments should be adjusted taking into account previous income. Efforts should be made to maintain their purchasing power. Ways should be explored to protect the savings of the elderly against the effects of inflation.

Here we have a Bill which this Government has put before us, Bill C-131, which reduces indexation for old age pensioners to well below the inflation rate. This is the Government which worked on and signed this document. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how can Liberal backbenchers sit there and not protest? Not one of them has spoken on this Bill. Not one. If they think so much of it, why do we not hear a few words as to why it is a good thing? Because they know it is not a good thing, they know it is a very bad thing. I do not think we can long survive if we do not pay more attention to the needs of our elderly.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is imposing six and five on our pensioners, yet it never seems to go the other step and index its own expenditures and requirements. I would like to refer to a Supply and Services memo which I hold in my hand dated August, 1982. This memo indicates that pensioners at level one, with family coverage, face a 32.38 per cent increase in their premium rate for group surgical and medical insurance. Now, what kind of justice is that? The Government limits the pensioners to 6 per cent and then increases their costs 32 per cent. No wonder that no member of the Government is prepared to get up and talk on this particular Bill.

Mr. Nielsen: They have been told to keep quiet.

Mr. Dantzer: That can be the only reason.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, the first Throne Speech that I heard. In that speech the Governor General said that the House of Commons will be asked to consider a program of action designed to respond to individual needs by promoting greater security for the elderly. Now, what has happened? Surely Bill C-131 does not promote greater income security for the elderly. Yet here we are two and a half years later fulfilling the program of this Government. If that is not double-talk and double-think and double-cross, I really do not know what is.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot about Bill C-133 and the large amount of opposition coming from a few Government members. They are saying they will not vote for any Bill which limits to six and five the indexing of civil servants' retirement benefits. They say it is the breaking of a contract, and I agree with them. But it is kind of interesting that most of that talk is coming from Members in Ottawa who have large numbers of civil servants as constituents. There is nothing wrong with that, but have they forgotten all about the other elderly people who receive OAS? Where is some word of support from the backbenches of the Government for all those other elderly poor? It is very, very strange. One would almost think that they only vote this way when it is to their political advantage to do so. Why are they prepared to defend organized lobby groups but are not prepared to speak out on behalf of the unorganized elderly? It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that those Members who have said they will put their seat on the line for the superannuates should do the same thing for the hundreds of thousands of elderly poor who will be affected by this legislation.

• (1650)

Hon. Members opposite should realize that a lot of the people in their constituencies whose OAS will be reduced by six and five have sons and daughters. If we have an election within the next two years, I suspect that a lot of those elderly people and their sons and daughters and grandchildren will remember what is happening today when they go to vote. On average, this Bill will directly affect the pocketbooks of 13.5 per cent of eligible voters in the country, and in some ridings the percentage will be higher.

Until recently the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), who is not in the House, has been very vocal about the effect this legislation will have. I wonder if he realizes that 14.9 per cent of eligible voters in his riding receive OAS? I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) is not present today, because 17.7 per cent of his constituents receive OAS and they will be affected by this legislation. I am told that in the constituency of the Minister of National Health and Welfare only 8.2 per cent of constituents receive OAS. Perhaps the Prime Minister is not worried if he is not going to run again, but over 19 per cent of his constituents receive OAS and they will be affected by the legislation.

The Government should reconsider this legislation and the effect it will have upon the elderly. According to what it claims, its intentions are of the best. Certainly the Minister of National Health and Welfare has gone across the country talking about the problems of the pension system and about the 500,000 elderly men and women who live under the poverty line. She has promised that her first priority is to help them. I understand some of the difficulties she faces because the Government changes the Finance Minister almost as often as the Prime Minister changes the flower in his lapel. I suppose this makes it difficult for her to communicate.

For about two years we have heard about the green paper on pensions which the Government is going to bring forth. I plead with the Minister to expedite this. Speaker after speaker has said that we face a horrendous cost in the financing of pensions for the elderly in the years ahead. We know that if the Canada Pension Plan fund is not increased it will soon be without money, and that by the year 2001 there will be a net outgo. We also know that private pension plans have to be improved. There will need to be more coverage and earlier vesting.

The country is prepared to discuss these things, but that cannot take place until the Government offers an over-all plan. Experts hold that an average employer who contributes $100 today will have to contribute $350 in the future to pay for the improvements to private pension plans. Surely the country deserves the opportunity to discuss these things.

The Canadian Labour Congress has spoken about increasing the amount of the CPP contribution from 25 per cent to 50 per cent. That would impose a tremendous cost on both employer and employee, but it is something that should be discussed. There are people who favour an increase in the Canada Pension Plan generally to overcome some inequities, particularly those suffered by women. That is another matter that we should discuss. There are other alternatives. The public is entitled to enter the discussion and to be presented with the facts. I plead with the Minister to bring the green paper forward so that we can get on with improving the security of old age pensions, as the Government promised.

I am sure we all know that we live in what is called a "zero sum" society—that you do not get anything out unless someone else puts something in. We all know that our capacity and ability to provide social services, such as pensions and health care, depends on productivity. We all know as well—except perhaps some Members to my left who do not seem to understand it—that there is no such thing as a free lunch. With all this talk about improving pensions, we must also talk about improving productivity. The job cannot be done by Members of the Opposition, however; it has to be done by the Government. Why has the Government waited so long, Mr. Speaker?

This Party will fight tooth and nail against the legislation as it stands, because it is bad legislation. It affects virtually every senior citizen in the country.

Someone has said the measure will bring the Government $31 million. The Government has already spent $100 million on advertising and $25 million for a monument in darkest Africa. It is a shame that it does not look after the people of the country better.

Again, I plead with the Government to withdraw this legislation which will be a hardship on the elderly poor of the nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper).

Mr. Cooper: May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it agreed that we call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any agreement signed between the Enterprise Development Board and General Aluminum Forging Ltd. of Hamilton, Ontario, including copies of all communications and minutes of meetings between the two parties prior to the signing of the agreement.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise with some measure of sadness this afternoon, recognizing that we are coming to the end of this Thursday afternoon "Hal Herbert Happy Hour". The changes in the rules which we hope will go into effect at the end of December will mean that this, I was going to say "ridiculous" but I guess I should not call it a ridiculous procedure, but a procedure which is rather ineffectual, will be terminated.

I must admit that I was a Member of the committee that made the recommendation to the House that has been accepted—and I fully support it—to change the rules to eliminate this procedure which we go through regularly on a Thursday afternoon. It is a procedure which has come about simply because the session has gone on so long that we find ourselves looking for something to fill up the hour between five o'clock and six o'clock on a Thursday.

In an attempt to pick a subject of interest I chose this motion, which incidentally goes back quite a way. In fact, it originated with a news release in December of 1980 when the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced:

—that the Enterprise Development Board has agreed to provide support to General Aluminum Forgings Ltd. of Winnipeg, Manitoba in the form of a guarantee of 90 per cent of $3.1 million loan to be raised by the company, a subsidiary to Sterlake Enterprises Ltd. of Hamilton, Ontario. The company is establishing a new facility at Winnipeg to manufacture precision aluminum forgings.

Total cost of the facility will be in the region of $7.1 million.

Construction of the new plant has already started and it is anticipated that the plant will be ready by the fall of 1981. The plant is expected to provide employment for about 52.

The release went on to say that the Minister and his officers:

—have been in touch with the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation which has offered to place contracts with the new firm as part of the industrial benefits accruing from the CF18 new fighter aircraft.

I know nothing of the company referred to in the news release. I do not want to say that I am not interested in the company; I am interested in any company which is operating in an efficient fashion, but the primary motivation of the motion is not the company itself. Immediately following the release, I wrote to the Minister in December, 1980 in which I put this simple question to him:

—what does the Government receive, if anything, in return for its guarantee?

Being unaware of the way the system worked, I asked:

Is there any DREE money in this project?

My letter was dated December 11, 1980. As so often is the case—and I have spoken about this many times before—I waited patiently and nothing was forthcoming—no response, no acknowledgement. On April 3, 1981, I put a motion on the Order Paper, the one that is up for discussion today.

On May 6, 1981 I received a response to my letter of December, 1980. I want to read the relevant parts of it and I emphasize once again that this discussion does not centre particularly upon the company named in the motion but upon the procedures and support programs of the Government. In his letter the Minister said:

—EDP structures financial packages and insures loans for companies, particularly smaller and medium-sized operations, who encounter difficulties in obtaining financial backing because of the risk factors in relation to the size of the operation involved. All loan insurance is on a last resort basis, that is, when financing is not available on reasonable terms without the insurance.

In the particular case of General Aluminum Forgings Inc., it was the judgment of the Enterprise Development Board that a loan guarantee was necessary to enable the principals to secure the financing needed to establish the plant.

Then the Minister went on to say:

To answer your question, the Government itself does not materially receive anything in return for its guarantee, with the exception of a recoverable 1 per cent insurance fee, but rather achieves some success for the event which, in turn, contributes to job creation and industrial development. In this particular case, the loan guarantee contributed directly to the creation of 52 jobs—

The Minister also told me in his letter:

DREE will also participate in the project and has made a grant offer of $1.265 million based on estimated eligible capital costs of $4.02 million. Both the EDP loan insurance and the DREE grant are contingent upon a company contribution or investment of $1.5 million.

Those are the details. What I was looking for was, of course, the general Government approach to assistance to industry. As I said, the motion was placed on the Order Paper in April, 1981. With nothing forthcoming in the way of documents, the motion was transferred for debate on December 16, 1981. Even after a motion is transferred for debate—in other words, the motion for the production of papers is no longer there for the Government to act upon—there is no reason the Government should not produce documents at that particular point in time. Alternatively, it might contact the Member—and whether it is a Government Member or an Opposition Member is irrelevant—and discuss the information which the Member is seeking. Surely the purpose is to ensure that Members are as well informed as possible.

In my own case my interest was not in the company named in the motion but in the operation of the program. Obviously because I represent an area with a large industrial base, I was interested in ensuring that the companies in my own riding would have full knowledge of the program and would be able to take advantage of any of its benefits.

Enterprise Development Board

I should put on the record the little I learned about the Enterprise Development Program. Apparently it was introduced in April of 1977 by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It was to replace the Automotive Adjustment Assistance Program, the Program for Advancement of Industrial Technology, the General Adjustment Assistance Program, the Pharmaceutical Industry Development Assistance Program, the Industrial Design Assistance Program, the Program to Enhance Productivity, and the Footwear and Tanning Industry Adjustment Program. Those fancy-sounding names are all represented by initials. I am now led to believe that two of them, PAIT and IDAP, no longer exist. Also it was introduced because:

Responding to messages from Canadian businessmen to make programs more widely know and more easily understood, IT and C formulated EDP to subsume these programs. The forms of support that were available under the old programs are available under EDP.

I was trying to make the Program more widely known in my own riding and for the benefit of all businessmen. If documents are lodged on the floor of the House, then they are in the public domain and available to everyone. The forms of assistance under the Program were loans or loan insurance for adjustment projects, grants for innovation projects, grants for product design, grants to study productivity improvement projects, grants to identify new products, and so on. These were all very well described.

I should like to refer to a private publication, a publication of Price, Waterhouse entitled "Government Financial Assistance Programs in Canada," which indicated under the heading "Objective":

The program is designed to provide financial support, by means of grants and/or loan assistance, to Canadian businesses involved in high risk and innovative projects or adjustment projects designed to increase efficiency and competitiveness—

Surely today we need to increase efficiency and competitiveness. I continue:

• (1710)

—that can be expected to yield attractive rates of return on the total investment and/or provide economic benefit to Canada through an increase in, or sustaining of, exports and/or employment.

What could be more worthy?

Before coming into the House I wanted to refer to the latest annual report of the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In my files I have the 1980-1981 report. I asked for the 1981-1982 report, which would be for the year ending March 31, 1982. I am sorry to report that the 1981-1982 annual report of the Department has failed to be produced. I am sorry because, of course, I can only then look at what was happening a couple of years ago as shown in the 1980-1981 report. I read in the report of that year the following:

The Enterprise Development Program (EDP) provides assistance to manufacturing and processing firms to improve their viability and international competitiveness.

During 1980-1981, 151 adjustment assistance loan guarantees valued at $231 million were authorized. In addition, $98.2 million in contributions were authorized towards the cost of 549 innovation and product development projects in such industries as machinery electronics, chemicals, ship components, automotive vehicles, building components and textiles.

Under the program, insurance of $111.5 million was authorized for 142 loans made by private lenders to manufacturing firms.

I had a secondary interest in pursuing this particular motion on this subject. Ever since I came here I have taken an interest in the Estimates which are tabled every year. I have studied them. It took me many years before I had any idea of how I could either read these Estimates or make any sense out of them. I must admit I am still much confused, even after being here ten years. I find it sometimes very difficult to obtain answers that I would accept as satisfactory.

My question to the Minister contained in the motion obviously deals with any benefits occurring to the Government to compensate it for its risks. I was told about the 1 per cent, which is the insurance charge.

In the Estimates for 1981-1982, one can read under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the insurance payments under the Enterprise Development Program show expenditures for 1979-1980 at zero. One can read that the Estimates for 1980-1981 are also indicated as zero. The Estimates for 1981-1982 are listed as $6.2 million. In that same book of Estimates one can also read under the heading "Industry Development":

Contributions to promote the establishment, improvement, growth, efficiency or international competitiveness of manufacturing, processing and service industries in Canada, including contributions under the Enterprise Development Program.

The forecast expenditures for 1980-1981 are shown as $60.673 million. The Estimates for 1981-1982 are shown as $76.638 million. I read these figures to show how one can be confused, because I then turned to the Estimates for 1982-1983. Under the same item for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the heading "Trade-Industrial Program" we see:

Statutory—Insurance Payments under the Enterprise Development Program.

We find that the expenditures for 1980-1981 are $8.402 million. Remember, I just read the Estimates for the previous year and they were zero. The Estimates for 1982-1983, the year in which we are at present, are $7.2 million. That is the expense that is shown in the Estimates for the Department.

Reading also from the 1982-1983 Estimates, in the same line as I read previously for 1981-1982, under the heading "Industry Development", I now see forecast expenditures for 1981-1982 of $142 million. Remember I read the Estimates for 1981-1982 and they were $76 million. From Estimates of $76 million, the figure has climbed to forecast expenditures of $142 million. The Estimates on that same page for the current year are shown as something over $124 million.

Thus, there are two motivations in bringing this particular motion to the House. I repeat, I do so not in any way to make any difficulties for the company concerned or to inquire into the business of the company that is mentioned in the motion. This motion is to inquire about the way the program operates. It is an attempt to publicize the work that is being done by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the industrial sector. It is also to inquire into the funds that are being used, the risks, the amount involved, the money we may lose as a result of our guarantees and the amount that comes back into the treasury, presumably into general revenues, since I cannot find this item in the Estimates.

You will see, Mr. Speaker, there are a multitude of questions on my mind even after all these years. I plead once again, because it appears we will not have this opportunity to discuss the subject much longer, that the Government try to help Hon. Members who are, in turn, trying to help the Government in being just a little freer in the way it provides information to us, to try to answer our questions and to try to provide us with the ammunition we need in order to sell Government programs.

As I said at the beginning, we may be near the end of this particular period on a Thursday afternoon when we can discuss motions for the production of papers. I wonder if anything has been accomplished over the years of trying to change the system. I can only hope in the new year when the new rules of the House take effect and the new procedures are put into place that we will more effectively be able to encourage the Government to improve communications between Government Departments and Members of Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for his presentation on his motion. I believe that, like all motions, it is significant, and the right answers and the right solutions must be found if issues raised by Hon. Members are to be given satisfactory clarification. There is a problem, however, and that is how to answer all questions simultaneously, and how to be very specific in a case where there is still a confidential aspect to be reckoned with.

Therefore, I understand the Member for Vaudreuil who has been waiting for a long time to get information on this company, namely, General Aluminum Forging Ltd. This case was of particular interest to Manitoba, because of the company's job creation potential, which is directly related to the aerospace industry. To get to the subject of the motion itself, I would like to explain to the Hon. Member that when the plant was opened on October 30, 1981, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) gave all the facts on the kind of subsidies, the exact amounts of those subsidies and what programs had been used to give direct assistance to the company in establishing its facilities.

But before going any further, I would like to explain for the benefit of the House, that at the Department of Industry and Commerce, we have one basic tenet, and that is the confidentiality of certain documents. Failure to observe this rule would jeopardize the industrial strategies of certain companies vis-à-vis their competitors, and therefore, when examining a particular case, it would be unthinkable to publish all elements of our negotiations with the company, because then we would get to the point where we would no longer be able to guarantee confidentiality to a company that has put its trust in the department. The department must ensure that its programs are known to the public and clear in their objectives concerning demand, but it must also protect the confidentiality of the details of each case, and just as we at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE deal with the confidentiality of corporate files, the Department of National Revenue, for instance, is responsible for the confidentiality of the files of individuals.

Therefore, when an Hon. Member demands production of papers before an agreement is signed, there are many factors, including the legislation and regulations in effect and the rule of confidentiality, that prevent the minister from producing papers at that time. Similarly, once the agreement has been finalized, and once the actual work has begun, certain aspects of the file cannot be published without jeopardizing a company's competitive position, since free competition is one of the principles of our economic system.

That being said, for the benefit of the Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) I should now like to provide the following information regarding the agreement with General Aluminum Foreign Ltd. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce contributed $1.5 million to the project, while the Federal Development Bank provided a minimum loan of $700,000. That was the Federal Government's contribution under the program, and if the Member for Vaudreuil wants to know more about the various programs, perhaps I could tell him about the funds available at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the funds allocated to each program, and the percentage earmarked for Quebec, Ontario and Canada as a whole. Of course, I would have liked the department to get me the necessary information more quickly so that I could give the Hon. Member a more complete answer. I believe that it is important to give a direct answer, because, as too often happens in the House of Commons, Hon. Members indulge in lengthy debates just for the purpose of killing time, and I deplore this, and personally, I would have preferred to have a more thorough discussion of the legislation this afternoon. I agree with my Hon. colleague who asked that the rules be changed. I think this is vital because, Mr. Speaker, what this country needs is hard work. There is urgent legislation before the House, and if we start providing information like this at the end of the day just for the sake of making the 5 to 6 period a little more interesting, I think the rules of the game should be changed very quickly, for the benefit of all concerned.

Now, to provide some clarification of the budget of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I may point out that for the year 1980-81, $98.2 million were set aside for subsidies under the Enterprise Development Program, and of this amount, Quebec received more than $47.9 million or 48.8 per cent of the total budget for Canada. This was for subsidies, which are non-refundable. As for guaranteed loans, $231 million was budgeted for all of Canada, and of that amount, $25.5 million, or 11 per cent, was allocated to Quebec.

The purpose of the Enterprise Development Program is to enable companies in a strongly competitive market to become more diversified, more mechanized, and to introduce advanced technology in order to achieve strong penetration of new markets. This is vitally important. The department has a number of brochures that explain very clearly the exact objectives of the program and the types of subsidies available. I am not going to read them in the House, because I do not want to bore Hon. Members, but there are a number of programs of this kind that are available and that can be looked into at any time. Any suggestions for improvements will certainly be welcome and should be addressed to the minister or to departmental officials.

I referred earlier to the Enterprise Development Program and the grants and guaranteed loans for the defence industry. We often hear about this program and, in the case of the company mentioned in the motion, General Aluminum Forging Ltd., about how it relates to the defence industry. We often hear about these budgets in Quebec and Ontario. For the information of the Hon. Members, the total budget for the defence industry in Canada was $142.9 million in 1980-81, and Quebec received $66.6 million of this amount, or 46.6 per cent. This is enormous because the budget of the defence industry includes all technical research in the field of radar, radio and aerospace technology, which makes Quebec as well as Ontario more competitive with similar American industries. The same holds true for small business loans. The total budget in Canada is $408.4 million and Quebec received $120.9 million or 29.6 per cent of this total.

Another important matter, and the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) referred to it in his motion, is the budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. This matter is often discussed across Canada because people wonder what is really the mandate of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce compared with other Departments. I want to point out that the total budget of DREE for 1980-81 was $180.6 million, which amount was increased to $206.9 million in 1981-82. I believe that a good question to ask in this House would be: What is Quebec's share of this budget? Out of a budget of $180.6 million in 1980-81, Quebec received $118.4 million or 65.6 per cent, and out of a total budget of 206.9 million in 1981-82, $123.1 million was spent in Quebec, or 59.5 per cent. These figures speak for themselves and show how the presence of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE is important for a region.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is readily realized how important this can be for Eastern Canada, and so that the Chair may have all the relevant information, I have with me figures for both Eastern and Western Canada. As concerns programs which benefit Eastern Canada, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce spends over 20 per cent of its total budget in the Atlantic provinces, which means that it considers regional economic development a major concern.

As for the motion of the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil, who has asked that certain documents be tabled, I would point out that the figures I have just mentioned are available to the public. They can be looked up at any time. As for the internal communications between the company involved and the Department, I would like to say that correspondence was exchanged over a period of two years and that there were also discussions meetings and minutes. In his motion, the Hon. Member requests that these minutes be made public, and this, at the request of the Department and the company before the negotiations. The parties involved agree on which documents will be made public and which will not be, and this is extremely important from a the procedural viewpoint. The Hon. Member has asked that the Department be allowed to provide more explanations, regardless of the rules, but it must be kept in mind that there will always be some documents which cannot be made public, and this holds true for any negotiation since certain interested parties must be protected. I therefore must say that, whatever amendments are made to the regulations, whether in the House or in the Department, there will still remain confidential elements in the files.

Now that the file has been closed since the plant has been built, the situation has improved and the construction is now finalized, could other documents be made public? On this point, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil which specific documents he would like to see and which other maybe less important documents he would like to check.

• (1730)

At this stage, I would like to receive a formal request to go and check with the department, so that a distinction may be drawn between available and unavailable documents. To make the task of the Hon. Member easier it might also be useful at that point to ask the company itself whether or not it objects to our releasing certain documents because this is the third time I have to approach the department on that type of a case. The applicant company is always asked whether it agrees to the release of certain documents. This is most important, and neither party acts without the other's consent. Otherwise, documents of course could be leaked, and an application could be jeopardized for the sole reason that certain documents were to be kept secret at the negotiation stage.

Other aspects of the program are significant to industry and commerce, namely the Federal Business Development Bank. In respect of the program that was implemented concerning General Aluminum Forging Limited, I would like to point out that the Federal Business Development Bank made a concrete contribution within the business establishment itself. The Federal Business Development Bank granted a $700,000 privileged loan on top of the $1.5 million put up by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Federal Business Development Bank loans across Canada totalled $484 million in 1980-81. That was the funding. There were $113.2 million for Quebec, or 23.4 per cent, and last year, for 1981-82, $460 million were available for loans, of which $163.9 million or 35.6 per cent for Quebec, which is enormous.

Concerning the Federal Business Development Bank, there is an interesting question that is often put in our areas: "Does the Federal Business Development Bank take risks? Do they have risk capital?" On that point I would like to state that $13.6 million are earmarked as risk capital for the whole of Canada, of which Quebec received $4.3 million, or 31.6 per cent of the 1980-81 funding. Also in 1981-82, there were $15.6 million available as risk capital for the whole of Canada, of which $4.7 million for Quebec, or 30.1 per cent of total loans granted in terms of risk capital. This is important, because it is often stated that the Federal Development Business Bank lends money at rates somewhat similar to those charged by chartered banks. But again caution is warranted here, because the Federal Business Development Bank does not give a loan unless the applicant was turned down by a chartered bank, and second, the Federal Business Development Bank rate is indeed lower than the market's. However, the main point here is that a significant amount of risk capital is available at the Federal Business Development Bank, which opens the way for closely monitored ventures.

I would now like to turn to the small business development bonds. I like to quote those figures because the Hon. Member earlier asked for information on the department. In my view, the motion put by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (M. Herbert) boils down to a request for information in the first place: First on the company as such, the negotiations that were held between the department and the company. I think I responded directly to that part of the question earlier, when making clear that $1.5 million were coming from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and $700,000 from the Federal Business Development Bank. But over and above that, the Hon. Member asked for more information on the department. So I will carry on on this subject, because I have information here from my office that can be of use to every Member in this House. Well, as far as the small business development bond is concerned, this is very interesting, and I read: $3.553 billion for Canada last year, that is for fiscal 1980-81. Of that, Quebec received $1.184 billion, or 33.3 per cent. For fiscal year 1981-82, and this concerns the Export Development Corporation, there were $4.203 billion for the whole of Canada, while there were $1.539 billion for Quebec, or 36.6 per cent of the total expenditures and the total capitalization for the Export Developments Corporation.

Perhaps I might digress briefly and mention that it was thanks to the Corporation that Bombardier was able to gain a foothold on the American market, to the same extent that we were able with Aerospace to export Canadian technology as far away as Brazil. That is very important because, when the provinces make certain claims on the federal government, the officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion may just be somewhat slow on the uptake in the sense that they fail to provide information in terms which people may readily understand. But when we are dealing with figures ranging between $3.5 billion and $4.5 billion, I think we ought to be specific. The Bombardier contract alone still represents for Quebec an investment of $1 billion in state of peak technology since this contract has made it possible for us to prove that we can indeed compete very favourably with French and American manufacturers. And, of course, that opens up very promising future for Bombardier. And what about the workers and staff at La Pocatière and Valcourt who stand to benefit directly from the economic fallout? Indeed we owe all of that to our Minister and to the Export Development Corporation. Perhaps the Corporation is not widely known, but it should be because the figures we are talking about give an excellent idea of the work done by the Corporation.

Some people often say that Quebec does not get its fair share of the billions of dollars spent by Industry, Trade and Commerce Canada and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I have a couple of points to make about that. With respect to the total budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—and I repeat this because we have so few opportunities to explain it—Quebec has received $123.1 million out of $206.9 million for all of Canada, which accounts for 59.5 per cent of the entire DREE budget. As for the Export Development Corporation, I did mention earlier $4.203 billion for Canada in 1981-82, including $1.539 billion for Quebec, or 36.6 per cent. I take pleasure in explaining those figures because they are indeed very meaningful data which Hon. Members can use to keep their constituents informed. What do we do with all that money and what sort of direct planning is possible with a budget of that size? That is what I explained a moment ago when referring to Bombardier and Aerospace, and I might say the same thing about de Havilland and Canadair. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can get the unanimous consent of the House, but I would like to continue to explain the budget of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, all the more so since that is what the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil has asked—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The time allotted to the Parliamentary Secretary has indeed expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, would the Parliamentary Secretary entertain a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Since the time allotted to the Parliamentary Secretary has expired, he would be allowed to accept a question only if there were unanimous consent.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to allow the Member for Vaudreuil to put a question to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to take part in this debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil, and, with the Hon. Members who preceded me this afternoon, the Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) and the Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), I am prompted to say that we are all anxious to have parliamentary reform introduced as soon as possible in the House, so that at this time of the day, we will no longer have to kill time just to keep the debate going until six o'clock, instead of using the precious time of the House to debate other subjects that are far more important and of much greater benefit to Canadians.

• (1740)

Nevertheless, our parliamentary system has provided us in Canada with a democratic system of government that is probably the envy of the whole world. The fact that all Hon. Members may freely express their views here often means that the passage of legislation is delayed, but at least everyone has a chance to say what he thinks and sometimes to make some very important points. Once we have this minireform, which, as we all know, will be presented in the House on Monday, we will probably be able to avoid those soporific speeches during which Hon. Members, and often visitors in the gallery as well, tend to drop off to sleep. Incidentally, our visitors must often wonder what is going on in the House. Mr. Speaker, I think an explanation is in order, because people should realize that when the House barely has a quorum of twenty, the other Hon. Members are not all on holiday or partying somewhere else, but they are working in the Standing Committees of the House. There are a number of committees of the House, and Hon. Members are Members of these committees so they are actually working.

I would have liked parliamentary reform to provide for a rotating schedule for Hon. Members, namely, three weeks in the House and then one week in their ridings to attend to their constituents, but it seems this was not approved. In any case, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity—

[English]

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all due respect, I am very interested in hearing about parliamentary reform but the notice of motion requests "a copy of any agreement signed between the Enterprise Development Board and General Aluminum Forging Ltd." I have heard no reference to that whatsoever, and would ask that you rule as to relevance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has a valid point of order. The Chair was about to call the Hon. Member to order and ask that he speak to the subject at hand.

Mr. Shields: If the Hon. Member does not have anything to say about agreements signed by the Government with corporations, I will be happy to contribute a few words.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I realized just now that the Hon. Member was practically the only one of his party on the opposite side of the House, so I wanted to make a contribution to his education, but in any case, I was just going to address myself to the subject at hand. If he would like to add a few words, however, I have no objection, if my hon. colleagues agree to let him speak on this matter.

Since we are discussing the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I would like to take this opportunity to express some reservations and also make some comments with respect to the new department, since it now includes DREE, and I would like to inform the House that DREE, as we knew it, was an entirely exceptional instrument for regional development in Canada. However, now that the department has been restructured, we do have some reservations.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have heard hon. colleagues expressing some concern about the restructuring of DREE. It is practically common knowledge that what we now have is pitched battle between senior officials of the department, who are wondering who is going to get which position. Functions are being centralized, while the original purpose of the department was, of course, to develop the regions. They are centralizing in the large urban centres, comfortably ensconced in their ivory towers, and the bureaucracy—I am sure my hon. colleagues opposite are going to appreciate this, since they are very unhappy about all the bureaucracy in Government—the bureaucracy is steadily increasing and we now have a department that is practically immune to change. I forget which French writer said that bureaucracy was a monster administered by pygmies. That is quite true, when you think about it.

For instance, DREE in Montreal has 190 employees, in a department which is supposed to be concerned with regional economic development. Montreal has 190, Quebec City has 40, and in the regions where the work is actually done, there are 20. That gives a pretty clear picture of how this bureaucracy operates. It is more or less the same in the other provinces. So there certainly is cause for concern. And what kind of results can we expect? Of course, since the department was restructured, it is now being led by an exceptional man who deserves all praise, but I wonder how one man is going to control this bureaucracy.

I have the impression that my hon. colleague opposite has something to add, so if he is prepared to do so now, I am prepared to give him the floor.

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I thought I would get my colleague off the hotseat and maybe contribute a little. I know that he was struggling very hard to keep the debate going. I do have a contribution to make. In Notice of Motion No. 54, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) requests "a copy of any agreement signed between the Enterprise Development Board and General Aluminum Forging Ltd."

I have had a similar experience as the Hon. Member. I requested copies of the agreement between Imperial Oil and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to the loan to Imperial Oil to continue its activity in Cold Lake. It was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $40 million. We understand that part of the agreement, as indicated in the news release, was that if the plant did not go ahead within the year, the grant would be lost.

I think this is pertinent and follows very closely what we are talking about in this private members' hour. It is incumbent on the Government to make this agreement available so that we can fulfil our responsibility to our constituents and account for what the Government is doing. To do this, we must have access to these documents. I have repeatedly risen in this House under Standing Order 43, I have placed a motion on the Order Paper, I have questioned the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), and the former minister of energy, mines and resources, with regard to the agreement which was signed at a cost of $40 million to the taxpayers of this country, and I have yet to receive the courtesy of a reply and I have yet to receive those documents. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, they will probably never see the light of day during this session of Parliament.

• (1750)

In the same vein, I have made repeated requests of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, again by way of the Order Paper, by questions in this House of Commons during Question Period, and by way of motions under Standing Order 43, for all relevant material, all studies done, which indicate what the impact on the economy of Canada would be with the construction of the Alsands project and the Imperial Oil project in Cold Lake. We are looking at a $12 billion to $14 billion investment in the Alsands project and we are looking at a comparable investment in the Cold Lake project. Those are direct expenditure dollars, 1980 dollars. The direct flow-through, then, to the rest of the economy into virtually every Province in this country, the employment that it would generate, is vital information for this House of Commons I am convinced that if we had the available information which I requested with regard to those two plants all Members in this House would take a serious look at the policies which are forcing those two plants into oblivion. I am confident that these studies are in the hands of the departmental officials in Energy, Mines and Resources. I am also confident that if Hon. Members had access to that information, they would see the multiplication of the $24 billion investment in those two plants, what it would do to the economy over a 20 to 25-year period, and the jobs which could be created when we are in a position of having one and a half million people unemployed across the country.

When we see industries in Ontario and Quebec closing down, when we see whole communities shut down because they are dependent on a mine and the mine is closing out and when we see the auto industry pulling back, we can imagine the effect of a $24 billion investment in the oil sands which can produce energy security for Canada, which can create jobs across the country and inject into our economy an estimated $500 billion in a ripple effect. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that if Hon. Members had access to the information which is there in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, probably sitting on a shelf, or maybe hidden on a shelf, I am sure there would be a revolt in the Liberal ranks, among backbenchers over there, that would make this Government's head spin.

It is the responsibility of all Members of this House, not only to play partisan politics, but to gather all the information which they possibly can in order to make sound decisions for the health of our country. I have just given two examples of information, such as agreements and studies, that should be available to all Members of this House yet are being held back.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil when he asks why this is not made available. I truly cannot see one reason why I should not have access or, indeed, any Member of this House, to the agreement which cost the Canadian taxpayers $40 million. I believe it is our right, Mr. Speaker, to have that agreement in our hands in order to ensure that the Government has used that money wisely. But all I was able to get was smart-aleck answers from the former minister of energy, mines and resources when I questioned him on that agreement.

I think it is the absolute right of every Member of this House of Commons to have in their possession copies of the studies done by Energy, Mines and Resources showing the impact on the economy right across the country with regard to the Alsands and the Cold Lake projects, because then, and only then, can we in this House do the job which we were sent here to do by our electors.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): The time allotted to me is very short, Mr. Speaker, and I would just like to make one or two points. The Motion on the Order Paper deals with the Enterprise Development Board and the General Aluminum Forging Ltd., allegedly of Hamilton, Ontario. It was the location of the company in Hamilton, Ontario, which motivated me to look into this subject, and I would like to correct the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and indicate to him that there is no company by that name in Hamilton. Indeed, it is headquartered there under the name of Sterlake Enterprises Ltd. I believe that an inaccuracy should be corrected because in this particular Bill there is criticism, perhaps, of the Government, and by inference the company which is named is also considered guilty by association. I think that in presenting a motion of this nature such an implication should be taken into consideration. Information that is submitted may be valid in so far as being critical of the Government is concerned, but there is another side to the issue, and the other side here is the company involved. Many such companies are high risk companies which have to battle carefully for recognition and support, and presenting a motion such as this before Parliament, does bring about publicity, and that publicity could be interpreted as being unfavourable. Therefore, I feel there should be greater study of the presentations made, keeping in mind the effect it has on enterprising, innovative, companies which look to the Government for assistance, as for example this company which intends to open up the aluminum forging industry in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2) be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-131. I am particularly pleased to have the opportunity to follow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). Of course, he is the pension critic for our party and he knows a good deal about it, which will make it a little difficult for me to follow him. He knows so much about pensions for two reasons. First, obviously he has put an awful lot of work into his critic's role. Second, he has been collecting an old age pension himself for about 30 years. Well, I exaggerate a little.

I really want to talk about two things tonight with respect to what I think the Government is doing to our senior citizens. The Government is making things very hard for those people right now. Secondly, it is making sure that our senior citizens are going to have difficulties in the future. Essentially, what Bill C-131 sets out to do is to impose the famous six and five regime on a group which I believe is less able to bear that kind of hardship. I think all of us—certainly I do—approve of limiting Government spending, but not in this particular area. Why does the Government not look at eliminating some useless projects, some of these expensive things that we have watched the Government get involved in over the last year? But why, why, cut back on needed programs such as Old Age Security? The bulk of our senior citizen population in Canada depends very much on these pensions. They are not a cushion or extra income. They are in fact, in many cases, the only source of income. Of Canadians presently receiving Old Age Security, as I understand it, approximately one half or about 1.2 million Canadians, do not receive the guaranteed income supplement, but that does not mean they do not need it or could not use it. Many of those people are the ones who are going to feel the full impact of Bill C-131. They are the ones to be penalized by the Government, the very ones who have worked hard, planned and done everything possible to secure their financial independence for their old age. This Bill will jeopardize that security, jeopardize the savings they have worked for years and years to accumulate. It is also going to jeopardize, in many cases, something which is very important to these people, their own homes; the one thing that gives them a stable base and a real sense of security.

Indexing Old Age Security was the Government's answer to inflation. But not now. Now we find that the Government is going to place an unequal burden on a part of society which has virtually no clout with which to fight back. What the Government should be looking at is some kind of catch-up, not a penalty, which is certainly what Bill C-131 is all about. I do not think the Government has recognized the kind of limits there are on the savings of these people. The Government—I am sure this is going to happen—is going to force elderly Canadians to dig into their savings. That will have a particular impact today for one reason, the fact that people can now expect a much longer lifespan. They can expect to be pensionable for a much longer period of time. And what is very significant is that any losses they experience now are losses which will never be recouped. But the elderly are going to have to shoulder a permanent reduction in their standard of living because of what the Government calls, in Bill C-131, a temporary measure.

Let us stop and just look for a minute. Mr. Speaker, at private pensions. For example, they are not indexed. We also find that only about 40 per cent of our senior population enjoy private pensions. Therefore, many of our seniors will in fact lose their one inflation cushion, the one thing which allows them to cope with today's inflation. But it is not just a reduction of the savings of pensioners which is the problem. By keeping the amount that they receive at a lower level over the next two years, the Government is effectively reducing the base amount when full indexing returns. So the over-all pie is shrinking. Very simply, what that means is a permanent loss of that cushion against inflation. It is a permanent betrayal of this Government's promise. Senior citizens affected by Bill C-131 will live with six and five for the rest of their lives. It is going to become a permanent structure and permanent problem for them for as long as they live, and the Government insists on calling it a temporary measure.

If you look into the area of pensions in some detail, Mr. Speaker, you will find that it very much affects single people, and certainly women. We find that under the GIS the cut-off point for a single individual is around $8,900, and for couples it is about $15,000. That hovers very close to the poverty line. Anyone making that amount of money or more is fully indexed. Therefore, they will feel the full impact of Bill C-131. I think all of us would recognize that in this time of a high cost of living, $8,900 is not really very much. For a couple to live on $15,000, certainly in some of our urban areas, is not very much at all. In fact, it will be very difficult to maintain any kind of comfortable lifestyle on that income. Yet this Government has somehow managed to decide that it is enough to shoulder a part of what is supposed to be a temporary burden in the six and five fight. In fact, I think it is enough to threaten the savings of our senior citizens, and it is enough to limit their Old Age Security income forever.

We were relieved of course that the Government decided to use the GIS, but where we have some concern now is that many in fact will fall through that line which governs whether or not they will receive the GIS. As I mentioned earlier, that line is very close to the StatsCan poverty line.

• (2010)

I really believe that the Government has done the barest minimum it can to improve Guaranteed Income Supplement levels. It has been recommended that the GIS be used to bring even those who fall below that line, up to the level of the poverty line. This was recommended by the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the Canadian organization of small business and something called the Business Committee on Pension Policy. On April 20 the Minister indicated that she would be interested in doing that "as soon as funds are available", but it has never been done, Mr. Speaker. Instead, we find that there has been an attack on the whole plan of Old Age Security.

As I understand it, there are approximately 400,000 people in Canada receiving pensions—most of them women—who fall below the poverty line. The implications of this Bill for our future is very important, Mr. Speaker. Earlier the Hon. Member for Okanagan North drew our attention to the effects of the baby boom, showing that at present there are seven workers for every pensioner and that by the year 2020 there will be three workers for every pensioner.

What I find frightening about the Government's approach to Bill C-131 is that it offers no comprehensive fiscal plan to deal with the problems that face us. The Canada Pension Plan will need contributions of around 9 per cent of earnings in future, instead of the present 3.6 per cent, to maintain the present level of benefit.

Unless some comprehensive planing takes place very soon, a heavy tax increase will have to be imposed on workers by the year 2000.

At the present time the Canada Pension Plan is short of cash. Things are very tight indeed. It tooks as if the fund will be bankrupt by the year 2020. A lot of the money in the fund has been lent to the Provinces at low rates of interest, and there is a popular belief that much of that money will never be paid back. It is imperative that Canadians, individually, be allowed to prepare for retirement independence. Instead of that, however, we find that the Government is aggravating the situation, and that will have an effect on the future. It is discouraging Canadians from investing for their old age or retirement. Interest borrowed on money to purchase RRSPs and Registered Home Ownership Plans is no longer tax deductible. This is another disincentive to deferred spending and to the intense saving that is usual in the years before a person buys a home. The RRSP was designed to give our senior citizens some measure of liquidity in their retirement years. The home is usually the single largest family asset that families can acquire, but this dream is becoming something of a pipedream now. It is the one thing that could have provided an accumulation of sale capital or accommodation security.

The foregoing are not only indirect barriers to savings, Mr. Speaker, there are others, such as the high level of taxation, the erratic interest rates that are eating up the savings of senior citizens and, worst of all, the economic mess the Government has created. It seems to be blindly forging ahead without trying to improve the situation. That is just a small list of the things that have been happening.

The unemployed are spending the reserves that they should have been able to put away for their retirement. The unemployed cannot save, they cannot buy homes, they cannot contribute to the Canada Pension Plan and they cannot contribute to their own private pension plans. The Government is creating a generation of pensions that will likely need full Government support just to stay at the poverty line. Private savings should be encouraged.

The Government should be worrying about the present state of the economy and looking to things like the National Energy Program to stimulate the economy and create jobs. It should be looking at ways to encourage deferred spending or, in other words, various forms of saving.

The Government should be concentrating on preparing the country for the years ahead. It must look after its present obligations, but not by the means proposed in Bill C-131. The impact this Bill will have cannot be stressed enough. It will cut into the spending or the "coping power" of the senior citizens very severely. It will mean great hardship for them and will reduce the savings of those who have planned their retirement.

It seems that some Members of the Government have some reservations about reducing some pensions. A number of Members opposite have stated for the record that they will not support Bill C-133 in its present form. This Party will not support Bill C-133 nor will it support Bill C-131, Mr. Speaker.

Members of the Government seem to be able to make a distinction between the two classes of people affected by these Bills. On the one hand they are willing to protect the indexing that affects their own constituents, but they are not willing to do the same for the average senior citizen. Why are we not hearing from Members of the Government? Why are they not speaking out on this issue? Why have they decided not to support Bill C-133 but are prepared to go blindly ahead with Bill C-131?

Members of the Government who represented the capital region seem to understand why one Bill should not be meddled with but they cannot understand why the other should not. I do not think the other Members of the Government understand the implications of this. If they did, they would find themselves in a compromising position.

Bill C-131 would not have an equitable impact, Mr. Speaker. It would attack those least able to absorb the six and five regime, the group least able to influence changes on their own behalf. That group is being asked to shoulder a burden that will have a greater impact on them than on many other, if not all other, segments of Canadian society. It is not a temporary burden and it is not evenly distributed. It is a great contrast to the Government waste that we have seen over the last few years. It is a reduction in a program that is already underutilized, a program that needs growth, not pruning.

The Government does not recognize its responsibilities. It has shown a complete lack of willingness to look to the future and the problems it will bring. It is a Government that seems almost two-faced about its moral responsibilities and the narrow political motivations of its regional caucus.

I am pleased to have had this opportunity to speak on Bill C-131, Mr. Speaker. I think the Government should reconsider its stand on this legislation in direct correlation to Bill C-133.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the debate so far has been very constructive. I should like to commend my colleagues and all Members of the House who have taken part in it.

• (2020)

I contend that if the Members of the Party sitting on Mr. Speaker's right had really thought this Bill through, if they had put it in a realistic context, and if they had respect for the people it will affect, they would withdraw it. It is a bad Bill, and I will tell the House why. Like the rest of the six and five program, it assumes its effect will be equal on all people if it is applied evenly to everyone.

I cannot understand how anyone can accept this line of thought. It must be obvious that a pensioner with a $20,000 per year income from stock dividends, maturing bonds, RRSPs or a private source can afford to lose a bit of real purchasing power, far more easily than a widow living on just over $8,900 per year, the cut off line for the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

To put this income in context, Statistics Canada indicates that the poverty line for single individuals living in metropolitan areas is $8,922 or $10 more than the cut-off point for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. While it may be true that the GIS will be indexed to compensate for the limited indexation of the Old Age Security pension, the loss of any amount at all will be very difficult for the single pensioner whose income is about $9,000 to $10,000 per year, or the married couple with a combined income of slightly over $15,000 per year.

I would ask all Hon. Members to consider the restrictions and privations imposed by incomes this low. Assuming an inflation rate of only 7 per cent, a single pensioner will lose $150 over the next two years, while a couple, both over 65, will sacrifice $300. At 10 per cent inflation, the individual gives up $270 and the couple, $540. The low-income pensioner living on the edge of poverty just cannot afford this loss of buying power. That is one reason this is an unfair, mean-spirited Bill. It takes the greatest toll on those who can afford it the least.

Another reason I cannot support the Bill is that it penalizes the people who survived the hungry thirties, served their country in wartime and built up our industries in the post-war era. Assuming that 1.2 million pensioners will not qualify for the GIS, and that inflation will average 10 per cent, the Government will save $32.4 million from Old Age Security pensions over the next two fiscal years. The Government should not be proud of this. I do not believe our pensioners should lose almost $32.5 million of income, even in a period of restraint. I do not believe they should lose one penny.

Until the pension system is completely reformed, I contend that pensioners should not have desperate measures like the six and five grafted onto their income security program for the sake of blind uniformity. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said last Thursday night:

> We are asking 1.1 million old age pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation.

I say that her use of the word "ask" is a jarring euphemism. I suggest that she actually ask a couple of hundred randomly-selected senior citizens if they support limited indexing of the Old Age Security pension, which is the only source of income for over 300,000 seniors in Canada. I coax her to ask them if they would volunteer to be on the front line of restraint. I am sure she would get quite a different tally of votes than the one the Government expects from the House.

Although $32.5 million is a lot of money, it pales in comparison with the $400 million the Government just spent to strengthen the equity base of Canadair and de Havilland. It pales in comparison with the $500 million it is offering Dome Petroleum to help pull that Corporation out of its financial quagmire. I do not believe that many Canadians would disagree with maintaining the buying power of the old age pension for senior citizens, but any Member who listens to his or her constituents knows that many voters do not approve of big corporate bail-outs like the Dome deal.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said that it would take roughly $250 million above current expenditures to bring 725,000 single and widowed Old Age Security pension recipients just up to the poverty line, but claimed that it was impossible to find the money elsewhere in any foreseeable future. Yet, she is a frontbencher of a Government that feels it is able to whisk away some $660 million from energy programs, $245 million from Official Development Assistance, and $230 million for national defence over the next two years for other programs.

On one hand the Government proposes to take radical measures to reduce inflation. On the other hand it has seen fit to add $400 million to the equity of de Havilland and Canadair and to offer Dome $500 million, a sum which it may yet get to keep. Then there is the $990 million reduction in interest payments on the public debt. I am sure we would love to know what will become of that money. It certainly has not stopped the increase in unemployment. In the midst of all this free-floating capital, how can the Government hope to justify this mean, penny-pinching Bill? Obviously the Government does not have control of the purse strings. These anomalies are evidence of crisis management, piecemeal programming and a sad lack of a global overview of fiscal policy.

In short, the Government apparently has no idea how to save or spend public funds. Yet it touts six and five as if it were the cure for all ills, like a quack doctor's bloodletting, love potions and mustard plasters. The fiscal charlatanism the Government practises has not worked in the 12 years or so that it has held power to date. Its latest illusion, six and five, is not going to work either. It cannot simply superimpose six and five on social programs and expect it to make a bad program good or an expensive program reasonable and satisfactory.

I could address fiscal policy at length, but I will restrict my remarks to pension programs. It is safe to assume that all three Parties seated in the House support the concept of a minimum standard of income for all senior citizens, yet poverty persists in the country. Over 61 per cent of single persons over age 65 live in poverty, and about 14 per cent of families headed by persons over 65 are poor. In 1981, 3.7 million Canadians were below the poverty line, a figure which has not changed since 1977 in spite of the introduction of the spouse's allowance and enrichment of the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

While family allowance payments decrease annually as our birthrate declines and the population ages, this gain is more than offset by the 3.3 per cent compound annual growth rate of the senior citizen population. The substantial movement of women in the labour force where they may contribute to the Canada Pension Plan and private sector pensions, as well as the growth of personal savings among new retirees, will help keep down the cost of tax-supported income security programs in the years ahead. However, to break the persistent hold of poverty on such a large percentage of our elderly and to guarantee a decent standard of living for present and future pensioners, pension reforms must be made now.

We must give real incentives to save for retirement, incentives which will be fair to persons in all income brackets. Private pensions must also be encouraged with respect to portability, vesting, indexing and survivor's benefits. There are many ways to reconstruct the pension system, but one way we should not follow is to limit indexing of the basic Old Age Security pension to six and five per cent over the next two very difficult years.

Our seniors have given enough to this country. We will make their golden years a lamentable farce if we force them to join the front lines of restraint and to give even more. Our senior citizens have served. They should not be called on again. It is our turn to lead the attack, not theirs.

• (2030)

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Bill C-131 that we are discussing tonight is an extremely important Bill. It marks a part of the history of our country that I think will cause a serious setback. We are talking about the situation of senior citizens in Canada and the situation they will have to face in the future. I feel this particular Bill will, in many cases, put our senior citizens into a situation that is worse than the one they know now.

First, I want to speak a little bit about the life of the elderly in other cultures. I think it is important Canadian people in general take a look at how we treat our senior citizens. This is important because it says something about the way we look at human dignity and the value of people.

I have travelled a bit during my life and I have seen different cultures. Interestingly enough, in many cultures, the oldest citizens are the ones who get the greatest respect. They are the ones the rest of society looks after in a very special way.

I have travelled to Africa and through many villages. These villages have very little in the way of modern convenience as we know it. Yet the senior citizens of those villages are kept in honour. People go about their daily tasks, but the senior citizens, the wisdom of the community, are held together and are looked after and cared for by the whole community.

For centuries the Chinese have respected the wisdom of the old. That is true today in their culture. Right now in Singapore, which is a booming modern city, modern apartment blocks are set up for a family, but the apartments themselves are always set up as an apartment and a half. The apartment has a place, not only for the family, but for senior citizens.

In Canada other cultural forms have developed even in my own lifetime. One great step forward has been the idea that a senior citizen gets a pension and a senior citizen can look forward to some kind of secure income. I can remember as a boy the fear that old people had that there was no future for them, that they had nothing to look forward to at all except what used to be called the poor house. That was basically unfair. I congratulate this House and all the people in Canada who worked over the years to bring about universal pensions for our senior citizens.

This Bill is a setback to the very idea that we had accepted as a people that our senior citizens should be looked after in a special way.

My riding is Saskatoon East. Saskatoon East has a unique situation. In my riding there are probably proportionately more elderly people than in any other riding in Canada. Saskatoon is a city in Saskatchewan, and Saskatchewan has a very interesting age pattern. Sixty or seventy years ago, in the early days, young people from all over the world came to settle in Saskatchewan. My father said that when he went West in 1912 to take up a homestead, there were no people there with white hair. He does not remember seeing anybody who was old. Everybody was young. The person who was 30 years of age was considered old. Most people were 20 or 21 years of age. Those people were the pioneers and formed the Province. They were the ones who broke the Prairie, built the homes, built the schools, made the roads and built the towns. These people aged together. Right now in Saskatoon East I believe we have 18 or 19 senior citizen homes. We have St. Ann's home, the Jubilee buildings and Cosmopolitan Court. We have all these different places which the citizens have set up. When I speak to this Bill, I speak representing a lot of people who will be affected directly by the cutback in their pension and the fact that their pension will not keep up with the cost of living. I believe that is a direct challenge to the dignity of each one of those people.

As a priest I have done pastoral work for 30 years. One of the things a priest does is to visit senior citizens. Anyone working in pastoral work will tell you that there is one thing you must do and that is to visit senior citizens. They are lonely people. Many of them live with fear. Each one of us as we get a little older and our hair gets a little whiter—and, Mr. Speaker, you know what I am talking about when I talk about white hair—has within himself the question of security. A person will ask himself "How and where am I going to end up?" Yet, when we have our health and are able to carry on our responsibilities, that note does not strike as hard as when we get to the point in our lives—and it will come for each and every one of us—of reaching old age.

There are many reasons why this time becomes a very difficult period for many people. First, there is the question of death, not your own death but the death of people around you. This creates a state of loneliness. One wonders where so and so is. They have died. Then you think of somebody else and you realize they have died. Family members have moved away. Perhaps there is the death of a spouse. People become lonely and fear sets in. A person asks himself: where and how am I going to die?

If a person is secure from the worry of finances, that removes one of the problems of the fear of growing old. However, in the Bill before us today that notion of pension that was worked for by parliamentarians, by civil rights leaders and by leaders of communities all over Canada is being challenged on a principle that I think is a false principle. It is flippantly called the six and five principle. This six and five formula was passed by this House months ago as a way of handling inflation. The Bill encompassing that was passed by the Liberal Government and supported by the Conservatives. The NDP was the only Party that said the principle was wrong. Once you have a principle, you must accept the facts that follow from that principle. If you accept the six and five formula as a way to solve the financial problems of the country, you must accept the difficulties that you are putting into the lives of every person on whom you force the six and five formula. Adding this on to the problems faced by the senior citizens, those who have given their lives to build up this country, is, I believe, basically wrong.

The Party over there, the Government, has just stopped speaking to the Bill. I think their Members must hang their heads in shame because they have to go back to their constituencies and tell their senior citizens what the Government is doing. Over here, our friends the Conservatives are saying this Bill is a terrible thing, but they bought the principle. When you buy the principle you stand responsible for the results. I think the people of Canada should understand and know about that.

Let me come again to the notion of this extra slicing away at the income as the cost of living rises is such that a person with lots of money does not notice it. However, if a person does not have a great deal of money and is just making ends meet, he or she does notice it. He is struggling not to become any poorer. He is suddenly finding that while the cost of living keeps going up, his income is being cut back a little at a time.

I am sure Members of Parliament have spoken to senior citizens in their constituencies. Some senior citizens do not always understand what these measures mean. They do not understand the meaning of OAS, GIS or CPP. All that it means to them is that they cannot buy a bottle of milk, a pair of shoes or pay their telephone bills. They are finding themselves in a situation of fear, loneliness and growing misery.

Tonight we are debating this Bill, which will probably be passed. There is no one from the media here to write about the effects of this Bill on senior citizens. The Bill is being split up so that there will be no continuous debate; we may debate it again in another two days. In this way people will not realize what is taking place. The poor senior citizens, the founders of this country, are slowly being ripped off. Their standard of living will become worse than it is today.

A recently published book which was written by a modern theologian discusses the whole question of healing and caring for those who are hurting. In his recent book called "Clowning in Rome", Henri Nouwen writes about the question of hurting, the pain that senior citizens know. He says:

> I often wonder if the sheer artificiality and ugliness with which many people are surrounded are not as bad or worse than their interpersonal problems. I have found this painfully true in ministry to the elderly. Many old people suffer from the ugliness of their environment. Much healing could be offered to older people by helping them to make their home and room a little more beautiful.

I have visited the homes of some senior citizens. I do not think many people would want to live in some of those homes, but that is all those senior citizens have. They have a few artifacts in their homes which remind them of their families. They may have, for example, photograph albums with pictures of their families. Some of these senior citizens have difficulty making their own meals and must rely on people to bring food to them. Because of their loneliness they sometimes have a pet, such as a kitten or a puppy, in their home as companions.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to answer the Hon. Member's questions at the end of my speech.

The point I was trying to make before the Hon. Member rose concerns the difficulty these people have in finding a comfortable and human surrounding. At this time I would like to pay tribute to those who have built accommodations, particularly in my area of Saskatchewan, which are providing senior citizens with comfortable surroundings. Those people now have pleasant apartments to live in. However, I am concerned about those who must still try to make it on their own. They are looking for the more human surroundings which make their lives a little better than it otherwise would be.

I used the example of having a pet as a companion because I know of a senior citizen who lives alone because his wife has died and his family has moved away. Last year, at Christmas, he received a kitten from a friend. While this may not seem like an extravagant gift for people who have two cars and a summer cottage, this kitten meant that he had a companion to which he could be near when he previously had nothing else to keep him company.

As a result of the six and five program the incomes of these senior citizens will slowly be cut back so that they will not even be able to enjoy these little luxuries which make life bearable and a little more human for them. When we talk about the mechanisms of the six and five program, it seems to have a cold nothingness to it. However, when we discuss it in relation to day-to-day living of a senior citizen and the fact that their incomes will be cut back, we see how hard this program strikes at the very heart of the matter. I cannot repeat often enough the callousness that forced the Minister to introduce this legislation and put this burden on the back of our senior citizens.

Mr. Lalonde: Be honest!

Mr. Ogle: I actually believe that the Minister felt very badly about having to do this. She says that she did not feel bad about it, so that is that argument. I did feel that she felt bad about bringing in this legislation.

Mr. Lalonde: You should have at least intellectual, if not moral, honesty about it.

Mr. Ogle: She says that she did not feel bad. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) says that I should have more honesty. I believe that those people who are listening to me believe that this is honest.

Mr. Lalonde: It is not. What you are saying is not honest.

Mr. Ogle: I am pleased that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) are reacting to what I am saying. I believe there could have been another way to implement this program. When the Government was implementing its six and five program it could have made provisions which would not have affected these people.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member allow me to ask him a question about what he is saying? He is misrepresenting the situation so much that he is either ignorant about it or he is not honest about it. I leave him the choice. Surely he knows that all the recipients of GIS are fully covered under this Bill. They are not going to lose anything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) has the floor.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister of Finance has made his point. He has challenged me on two serious points. If he has questions at the end of my speech I will be glad to answer them. However, I think the Minister has made his point.

We are seeing a basic cut-back to a pension to senior citizens. The Minister talks about other areas—I do not know what he is saying about me.

Mr. Lalonde: They are increasing. They are not cut back.

Mr. Ogle: The Minister has now said that the pensions are increasing rather than being cut back. There is a natural human pride which many senior citizens have in being able to live on their old age pension. If they cannot do that, they feel like failures because our society has dictated that we are failures, if we cannot look after ourselves completely when we get old. I do not believe that. However, that has been said to me by many senior citizens. They do not want to end their lives in failure. The fact that they are forced into living with tests, letting the world know that they are poor and have been a failure, it is inhuman. That is not the way that cultures should look after their senior citizens. Senior citizens should have a place in society where they are respected because they are old, and the wisdom which they have should be used in such a way that it will benefit all of society.

• (2050)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ogle: What the debate is about today, and the challenge against our senior citizens, is the fact that they are not going to be able to live within their pensions as they would want to.

I will go back to this basic notion of security because pensions were introduced, and, again, I give complete credit to those who introduced them, who fought in this House and who argued for them and found a way to bring them in.

About 20 years ago when I was visiting in Mexico with my father, we came to the first town inside the Mexican border about noon. There were old women begging on the steps of the church for food, and they were dressed in rags. I have seen millions of people like that since, but it was a shock. My father was really, really struck by that, the fact that these people were begging for food to survive. When we got back on the bus, he said that if it were not for the old age pensions in Canada it would be the same there. He was not a great sociologist or an economist but he was able to identify the fact that pensions that had been fought for and won in this country were the only possible way of keeping old people from being beggars in the last part of their lives when they no longer have an income sufficient to provide decent living conditions.

On the question of the dignity of receiving a pension, I would just like to refer to Hansard where our good colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), on October 21, 1951—that was the day when you no longer needed a means test to get a pension—talked about the historic significance of that day when the old age pension law was free of the means test. When that happened dignity was restored to senior citizens. It did not require a test to see if you were so poor and such a failure in life that you had to be looked at like an experiment to see whether or not you should get enough to live on. That was an historic day, and it was a great and happy day in this country when that happened.

On October 26, 1979 the same Member, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, said:

> Members of the older generation, the generation to which I am proud to belong, are not ashamed to be on a pension. They are glad to show their identification cards and be recognized as part of today's senior citizen group. This is largely because we went for the principle of universality, because we decided we ought not to give pensions to older people just because they were poor but because they are people, because they have played their part in building up the life of this country and deserve a pension in the years of their retirement.

That is the principle, the dignity and self-respect of each person, each senior citizen, without tests, without fear, to be respected and to receive an income when they are in their declining years that will give them frugal comfort at least, human dignity, and not with the fear that this will collapse around them and that they will be left ailing and hurting when they are old.

What I would like to do is just to conclude with a few last remarks, hoping that this Government will find a way to assist elderly people, particularly women, because the majority of our senior citizens are women. They are also the ones who, because of the situation that exists in our country, have the least means of being looked after at this time. I will not go through the details of each particular change, and what each year will mean, dollar for dollar, except that it is getting less.

Our pensioners, the ones we are talking about tonight, are the people who have led the way in our country. They are the people who were the pioneers, the ones who sacrificed, the ones who faced the thirties, lived the depression, sufferred the sicknesses, the poverty, the bad, whatever you want to say about the depression. They were the ones who sent their sons off to war and waited out four years, not knowing whether or not their boys would come back. Many of them did not. They were the ones who endured that kind of suffering. They built up this country. Now when they get to their final years, when there is a little possibility of having complete security, this Bill is attacking that. This Bill is cutting back on their pensions. The over-all result of six and five in this year, next year, and the third year is that they will have less to live on than they have today, in proportion to what it costs to live. That is not right.

We have to be sure that the universality of the pension plan is for all of the senior citizens. It has nothing to do with what they have done in life. An important point to remember is that nobody in this House or in Canada can tell how they are going to end up. They may be millionaires today but they still may need the old age pension when they get to be that age. Nobody can say that they have security. That is not the way life is.

My last thought on the subject tonight goes back to the first idea I had, the question about the importance of the human rights and dignity of every Canadian. I will be voting against this Bill because I believe that the basic rights of the founders of this country, the senior citizens of this country, are being attacked tonight, being whittled away. I just feel unhappy that that is the way it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: I wonder if I have time to ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Will the Hon. Member accept a question?

Mr. Ogle: Gladly.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for my hon. friend from Saskatoon. I know he is a deeply caring man. I just wonder if he would like to leave on the record the frightening episode that he has described in his speech, when we know that the average loss of security to the old age pensioners in the first year of the six and five program will be $29 in total, and that the application of the 6 per cent will ensure that inflation will be reduced and these old age pensioners will be in the end better off and much more secure when the inflation rate is reduced.

I just wonder if the Member does not believe that a 6 per cent inflation rate would be better than a 12 per cent inflation rate, and that the old age pensioners should not be frightened into believing that we are doing some dastardly deed to their pension when really we are making things in the end better for them.

Some Hon. Members: Speech, speech. He is making a speech.

• (2100)

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Hon. Member who has questioned me on the point. He is working on a very serious assumption that I am not working under and do not believe in. He is working on the assumption that inflation is over, but it is not. This is a myth. They say this six and five program will bring an end to inflation, but I have not seen it happening. Therefore, when I talk like that, I am speaking about facts. The Hon. Member is talking about a myth and an assumption.

An Hon. Member: Have faith.

Mr. Ogle: I have just been told by one of my Liberal friends that I must have faith. I do have faith. However, facts are harder to accept sometimes than faith. My friend seems to have faith that inflation has been wrestled to the ground. Have you heard that before, wrestled to the ground? I do not believe that. For that reason, it is wrong to make the senior citizens of this country the scapegoats for a policy that is not working.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) accept a question? It will be a short one that he can answer with a yes or no.

Mr. Young: On the same point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Will the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East accept a question from the Minister?

Mr. Ogle: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will accept a question from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this is a question which the Hon. Member will be able to answer very quickly. I heard his speech tonight. I heard many speeches from the other side tonight. I cannot help but feel that they must not have read the Bill. My question to the Hon. Member is very simple.

First, is he aware that this Bill does not change anything with regard to the universality of our Old Age Pension? Second, is he aware that all senior citizens who received the Guaranteed Income Supplement, that is all senior citizens who are in need, will be totally and completely indexed, that they will see their pension increase by the total amount of inflation next year? Third, is he aware that those who do not receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement will, because of the quaterly adjustment, see their pension go up next year not by 6 per cent, but by 10.1 per cent? Is he aware of those three facts?

Miss Bégin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of how the Bill works. I am aware of how it is indicated to work. The question that comes to my mind is the question of the test. All that most people have wanted was to live within their pension income because they have dignity and pride. Now they are too poor to live and will have to be tested.

I appreciate what the Finance Minister has said to us. I know what the Bill is indicating. However, it is the basic pension that I have been fighting about because it is the dignity of the person that is important.

Before I sit down in replying to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), I would like to hear more Members opposite explain what they are doing.

Mr. Lalonde: Obviously you need it.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether it is in order for the Liberal Members to get up constantly to ask questions and make points in this debate when they refuse to put up speakers to participate in the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but agree with my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper). It is indeed unusual that the Government is not prepared to put up any speakers to defend this infamous Bill. We had a tragic speech from the Minister. Aside from that we have not had any other speeches.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that there have been several speakers on this Bill from this side. The Hon. Member should withdraw the allegations he has made and not mislead the House in the first three words of his speech.

Mr. Lewis: I think we should take this opportunity to examine—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should realize that there has been only one Liberal speak on this Bill. Is that several?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair appeals to Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North was recognized for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, one cannot help but agree that the Minister of Finance has shown the same ability to count as he has shown with the nation's finances.

I wish to address a few remarks between questions to this Bill to amend the Old Age Security Act. By this Act the Liberal Government promises to limit the indexation of the basic Old Age Security Pension to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent for the year after. What does this mean in practical terms? It means that the Liberal Party has abandoned the principle of equity and fairness which is inherent and basic to the indexation.

Let us talk about indexation for a minute so that we understand exactly what it is based on. It is a principle brought forward by the Progressive Conservative Party. During the early 1970s our Party could see what was happening to this country as a result of the economic policies of the Liberal Government. My colleagues of the day argued that it was not fair to the federal Government to benefit from inflation. We argue that personal income tax exemptions should be indexed upwards, adjusted annually to account for inflation. In other words, if a fair income tax exemption was $1,500 and inflation for the year was 10 per cent, the income tax exemption should be adjusted by $150.

The same principle applies to the old age pension. For example, the old age pension cheque in November 1982 is $246.92. If inflation continues to run at 10 per cent for the entire year, the cheque should be increased by the amount of inflation, in which case the people receiving the old age pension should get an additional $24.70 per month.

What has happened? The Liberal Party is forcing senior citizens to absorb the difference. That is why we do not have a great flock of Liberal backbenchers supporting this Bill. They left it to the Minister. She is "several", the Minister of Finance said. We do not see great hordes of Liberal backbenchers, who usually have speeches prepared by the Department, putting those speeches forward so they can be included in their "Householder". Who wants an infamous speech as part of a "Householder?" The backbenchers are close enough to the line as it is, and this is going to sink them.

During the course of debate there have been some comments from my colleagues to the left about our Party voting for the principle of restraint. We did that. We believe in restraint. In July we supported the Government. You might ask why. Because after two and a half years of wallowing in indecision, of increased spending, of increased deficit, after two and a half years, realizing what a mess was created, the former finance minister brought in restraint. But should we really say it was two and a half years, or should we go back to the late 1960s when this Party gave the St. Lawrence Seaway pilots 30 per cent and started the avalanche? That is what started the precedent, and Canadians have paid for it ever since with inflation. As Members of Parliament when this Party came to decide on that restraint Bill, we voted for restraint, and everyone knows what the NDP voted for. They voted to retain the salary increases which they wanted.

When I went home for the summer the people I met on the street asked me why the NDP voted against the restraint. Why did they vote against cutting their increases to six per cent? I would have liked to be able to explain to the people because every so often there is one or two NDP supporters out of thousands. I would have liked to be able to say something other than, I am sorry, but my NDP colleagues voted to retain their salary increase. And they know darn well that is exactly why they voted against that Bill. I do not want any of my Liberal colleagues to sit there smugly as if they had something to do with the restraint Bill. They know that restraint Bill came from Coutts, Davey and Axworthy. At least on our side of the House we had an opportunity to decide how we would vote on the Bill, whereas the sheep in the backbenches of the Liberal Party just did what they were told to do.

Let me say something about inflation because it is the very basis of what this Bill is all about. The inflation rate in March 1980 was 9.3 per cent. The Government worked it up to 13 per cent in July, 1981. Then it came up with the new idea to get it down, and this was called a recession. It worked on the recession and it has now got that recession right where it wants it. Now it has inflation down to 10 per cent. And what has happened to the prices that senior citizens are dealing with today? Pork prices have gone up 20.5 per cent. The purchasing power of the 1971-dollar is now 37 cents. Food prices have risen by 215 per cent. Housing costs have risen by 163 per cent. The 1981 average annual inflation rate of 12.5 per cent, created by the Liberal Party, was the highest in 33 years. And it was this Party, Mr. Speaker, that came into office by promising Canadians that it would not increase the price of gasoline.

I remember campaigning against my opponent in Simcoe North who promised the people, "No, sir, we will not increase the price of gasoline by 18 cents". He was right. He was telling the truth, which is unusual for a Liberal candidate. The Government did not increase the price by 18 cents. That was just a stop along the way. An interesting point, Mr. Speaker, is that we will have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) gracing the riding of Simcoe North on December 3. He is having a soirée at $100 a ticket. He has the nerve to come to my riding, a riding that has faced an increase in the price of gasoline of 91 cents, for a $100-ticket soirée. Let me tell you, there will not be too many citizens on old age pensions who we are going to see at that soirée.

The other night the "several" speakers for the Liberal Party, otherwise known as the Minister of National Health and Welfare, (Miss Bégin) made the opening speech, and it was a sad affair. This once proud Minister, humbled by her rejection of the senior citizens of Canada, came into this House and rejected everything she ever said in defence of senior citizens. This once proud champion of the poor and the downtrodden gave up, surrendered and backed off. I quote from Hansard of November 18, 1982 at page 20799. Here is what she said:

> After all, we know that we cannot give any guarantees to pensioners that others will join them in the fight against inflation—

It was not the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) who was over in France fighting inflation on $172,000 of the taxpayers' money. The Minister said, and this is a good one, and I quote from Hansard at page 20799 and 20800:

> —and all pensioners will receive more in 1983 or in 1984 than in this current year, 1982.

That is unmitigated gall. My mother used to say, "That person has the nerve of a canal horse." and it takes nerve to tell this House that the pensioners of Canada are going to get more money when she has turned her back on indexation.

Miss Bégin: I think what the Hon. Member says is such an inaccurate statement that I have a simple question to him. Is he saying that pensioners next year will have less money or more money? Because the answer is, more.

Mr. Lewis: Providing the Minister is still in her seat when I have finished my remarks, I will be pleased to entertain a question. It is nice to see her back in the House. I want to tell the Minister what is happening out in the real world, and I have a letter from one of my constituents, which reads as follows:

> I am writing this protest, the indexing at 6 per cent of my, and many others, retirement pensions. I have been very grateful my pension has been indexed at the cost of living index. My wife and I both receive the basic old age pension which is also being indexed at 6 per cent—

The writer goes on to say that they have always been glad to receive these pensions. The letter goes on to say:

> — but now we are wondering if it pays to try to be self-supporting. My wife also has a partial Canada Pension as she worked till the age of 65. I would be very grateful if you would express your opposition of this in your capacity as . . . (my Member of Parliament).

These people are out there. That is what this Government refuses to acknowledge. That is why you do not have these kinds of speeches from the Liberal backbenches. But I would like to take you back to a speech the Minister made on April 20, 1982, in which she said:

> We have no intention of changing the 'rules of the game'. We want to maintain indexing of the Old Age Security Pension and the Supplement every three months, and to retain the universality of the basic OAS pension.

What a difference six months makes in the approach and the rules of the game as seen by the Minister. And does the Minister wonder why the Canadian people do not believe the comments which she makes on universality? We have had a "bad-cop/good-cop" routine from the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Health and Welfare. The Minister of Finance says we are looking at universality. The Minister of Health and Welfare says we are not looking at universality. Who can believe what story? Which one is true?

Just before I left to come over here tonight, I found the final insult, the final backdown from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister is so ashamed of what she has done that she now has a new Act. She is so ashamed of what has happened to the Old Age Security Act under her authorship, she is now going to change it. It is now going to be the Senior Citizens' Benefits Act. The Minister just cannot live with what she has done to the security of old age pensioners. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Party believes that a deal is a deal, and because the Government made a deal with the old age pensioners of this country and told them it would index their pensions to the rate of inflation, that deal must be kept. That is why we are voting against this Bill, because we believe that when you tell the people something, you must follow through with your word.

This legislation is penalizing 1.2 million senior citizens who receive the Old Age Security pension and who presently do not qualify for either a full or partial Guaranteed Income Supplement. Based on an inflation rate of 10 per cent, each one of those 1.2 million senior citizens will be shortchanged and cheated by the Liberal Party of Canada to the tune of $290 over the next two years. Many of those people have incomes of slightly over $8,900 a year and are ineligible for the annual Guaranteed Income Supplement. That $290 means a great deal to those people. This Liberal legislation penalizes them, and penalizes elderly married couples with incomes just over $15,000. They lose $580 over the next two years.

It is about time that the Liberal Government lived up to the deal it made to index old age pensions. It said to the elderly of Canada: we want you to keep pace with inflation. Well, this Bill breaks that deal. This Liberal Government wants to make the old age pensioners of Canada suffer, and it is about time that it got out of office so that people and Parties who believe in their word can take over and give all Canadians a fair deal, not the kind of treatment they have been getting from the Liberal Government.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I usually rise and join in debate with a great deal of exhilaration, and I usually enjoy them very much. However, I rise with a degree of sadness tonight because the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who is piloting this Bill through the House, is someone whom I have watched with a great deal of admiration over the past two years for the way she stood in this House and answered questions and fought for the rights of people who are downtrodden, particularly, I thought, senior citizens and old age pensioners. I now recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister was speaking with a forked tongue. She was speaking like a puffball. You see a blowfish in the ocean, they puff up but there is no substance. I think she should be ashamed of herself.

What are we talking about, Mr. Speaker? We are talking about limiting old age pensions. This Bill will limit the increase in the basic old age pension to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983, and 5 per cent in 1984. The pension had been fully indexed to the rate of inflation as measured by the consumer price index. Analysing that a little further, Mr. Speaker, the Old Age Security pension now is $246.92 a month. It should increase to $271.61 on January 1, 1984, but it will only increase to $261.74. That is a difference of $9.78 a month, or $118.50 a year. I am sure the Minister, who is a connoisseur of wines, blows that on a bottle of wine at dinner. We are talking about $118.50, and this bankrupt Government, this immoral Government, lacking in any sense of propriety, is moving in on the people of Canada receiving Old Age Security. We heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) earlier when he interjected and said that it will be made up in the Guaranteed Income Supplement. But I ask the Minister, what about those just above the poverty line? I would like the Minister to answer that one. They will lose, if the Minister does not admit that, he is lying or he is misinformed. And he can take his choice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member asked me a question and challenges me to answer it. Does he want me to answer it? If he does, I will be very happy to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): If I may so inform the Hon. Member, this is hardly Question Period. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was recognized for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Very good ruling.

Mr. Shields: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Minister of Finance has oodles of opportunity to stand before—

Mr. Lalonde: You are afraid.

Mr. Shields: —great hordes of people at fancy dinners where his meal is paid for to give speeches, and I am sure he can pick a time appropriate to answer the question that I raised.

Mr. Lalonde: Chicken.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out another area which relates to senior citizens. The same Minister of National Health and Welfare makes a big show about going out to all the senior citizen groups in the country with a New Horizons Program grant. Being really magnanimous, she awards a small grant of $3,000 to a senior citizens group of maybe 50 people. When the cheque is delivered and the announcement is made she immediately sends out someone from her Department to extol the virtues of the Minister and her Department and what they are doing for the senior citizens of our country. That person is sure to be there at every announcement of a New Horizons grant, and I am sure that he or she spends $118 in expense account money to travel to these places. In fact, I suggest she or he spends a great deal more. I would suggest that people in her department are running around everywhere on expense accounts to oversee the high visibility programs so the Minister can get marks for that. I wonder how many will be travelling around telling the senior citizens of our country that she knew of the sacrifice she was asking the elderly people of our country to make on her behalf to help this Government to get out of the financial mess it is in.

In 1971, Mr. Speaker, the Senate Committee on Poverty said that one person earning $2,430 a year was at or below the poverty line. In 1981 that person is below the poverty line if they earn less than $7,370 a year. What are senior citizens making today, Mr. Speaker? They are making approximately $6,200 a year. These people are below the poverty line, yet we have these two ministers rising and saying it is not true, these people will not lose. I would like to remind the Ministers that not all these people live in downtown Montreal where prices might be lower. They do not live in downtown Toronto, Calgary or Winnipeg. Some of them live in isolated communities where milk is close to $2 a quart. Some of them are living in communities where bread runs $1 a loaf. Some people live in very high-cost communities. What do we say to those pensioners who cannot survive on what they have now? Do we tell them we are going to ride on their backs because the Government implemented a six and five program for the benefit of everyone and to help it get out of the economic mess it has created? It is absolutely sickening, Mr. Speaker, that in the year 1982 we would move in on the old people of this country who receive Old Age Security and tell them that we are going to take away some of their—

• (2130)

Mr. Masters: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member says "Oh, oh". I say "shame". It is an absolute crime that the Government should introduce legislation of this nature in this day and age. It is a crock.

Will Hon. Members opposite go back to their old age pensioners and tell them that the Minister says that, if their income keeps them below the poverty line, they will not lose on this? I am talking about the people whose income brings them just above the poverty line, Mr. Speaker. They will find themselves below it very quickly if this goes through. They are the people who will lose, and the Minister knows that.

My colleague spoke about visiting senior citizens in his constituency. I enjoy visiting them as well and going to their drop-in centres for a game of crib or a cup of coffee, or to talk about old times with them. I recommend to all Hon. Members that every time they visit their constituency they go to the senior citizens' drop-in centres. They will hear about the things they had to put up with in order to develop this great country from coast to coast. They did not have unemployment insurance as a safety net when they were out of work. They could not depend on social assistance and welfare to help them when they were unemployed. They had to grub with their own two hands. It brings tears to their eyes when they tell of the poverty they experienced while raising their children and launching them into the world.

I cannot imagine any Government, no matter how strapped for cash, attacking the Old Age Security payment. I cannot fathom that in this day and age. We are attacking the people who built this country and made it what it is today, so that we can all prosper.

We have many universities today and we have become the best educated population in the world. That did not happen because the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Health and Welfare brought in their short-sighted, terribly restrictive, theft policies. It happened because our senior citizens, those who came to this country as immigrants and those born here, suffered hardship, privation, depression, a drought on the Prairies and went without so that their children could eat. They built a nation. Today we are saying to them "We want you to sacrifice some more. You have not sacrificed enough."

We all know that there are elderly people and senior citizens whose lives have been shortened because of the privation they suffered and the struggles they had when they were young. We know that they did not get the nutrition they needed, and now we are denying it to them in their twilight years.

For the first time since I came to this House as a Member of Parliament I am absolutely thrilled that I am not sitting as a Member of the Government and that I am in the Opposition.

I want to recommend to all Members that they think of the people who built this country. Sit down and talk to them once in a while and ask them to tell the stories of the past. They do not regret the sacrifices they made so that we can all ride around in cars on paved roads and live in insulated homes. They like to see their children and the next generation with electricity and modern conveniences in their homes.

But I would ask all Hon. Members to look at the hands of the single ladies and widows who depend totally on the Old Age Security or the GIS. Their hands are worn because they did their washing with a washboard, because they were constantly in water, washing clothes and dishes. It does not take much imagination to realize the hardship they suffered. And we repay them by attacking their Old Age Security, Mr. Speaker.

That has to be absolutely the sickest thing I have seen the Liberal Government do since I came here two years ago, and it has done some sick things. My colleagues and I will do everything in our power to stop this Bill. It is absolutely and totally dishonest.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to oppose this Bill because I think it is one of the most unjust Bills that even this Government has devised so far.

I was a little shocked at the intervention made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder). In the style of Liberal Members opposite, he did not choose to make a speech as a speech, but rather to question the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and say that only $29 is to be taken away from pensioners next year.

I am surprised that the Hon. Member would choose to make that point. I think he is a man of even more experience than I, so he must know that $29 is not much when you have it. It is peanuts to anyone with an income of $50,000, $60,000 or $70,000 per year. For someone earning the salary that the Hon. Member and I do, $29 is, perhaps, the price of a taxi to and from the airport. It is not much, it is hardly noticeable; neither the Hon. Member nor I would notice if $29 more were taken from our annual incomes. Surely the Hon. Member knows that the people who depend entirely upon the Old Age Security or the Old Age Security plus the GIS are in a very different situation. This $29 can mean almost one streetcar trip both ways per week through the year—one visit per week to a son or daughter, or one visit per week to a store which is more than walking distance away, one visit per week to go to some kind of free entertainment provided for senior citizens. It would be almost the price of a quart of milk per week. If the Hon. Member thinks that people on senior citizen incomes have plenty of money for streetcars and milk, then I do not know where he has been living these last few years or who he has been living among. Certainly he has not been in touch with the people who live in the Spadina riding and in downtown Toronto.

If he had visited the streets of Spadina, if he had visited some of the rooming houses in downtown Toronto, if he had visited some of the old houses which have been maintained for years and years—in fact some of them have been maintained for 30 and 40 years—by one couple or perhaps the survivor of one couple, he would have a different picture. He would see people who are very thrifty, people who will scrub and clean their places in order to maintain the old wood of which their homes were built 100 years ago. He would see people who do minute repairs on their houses with their own hands, people who would not dream of having the money to hire someone to do the repairs. He would see people who still repair and make their own clothes for the same reason. He would see the remnants of half a dozen different waves of immigrants who entered Canada through downtown Toronto. Some of them moved on, some of them stayed there. Some of them have lived within a few blocks all their lives. These are the people who built the City of Toronto. I do not mean this only figuratively. I am talking about construction workers who built buildings with their own hands.

I am talking about the cleaning women who clean the magnificent office towers every evening when the beautiful people have gone home. They come in and clean these expensive offices mostly for a minimum wage. They spend five hours an evening every weekday night cleaning these buildings and coming home about midnight, while their husbands, if they are lucky, have to get up at five o'clock to go to construction jobs. If they are not lucky, the husbands are out of work. These women may be the sole support of the family. I am talking about other women who have maintained the needle trade in Spadina for generations. They still maintain and manufacture much of the clothing we use in Canada. Again, many of them are the sole support of their families at this time of unemployment.

If he spent time among these people, he would understand that when they reach the age of senior citizens they have not been able to save very much. They were paying for their houses. They were raising their childen. Yes, they tried to save. Probably their first savings went to pay the mortgage. Yes, they tried to save more than that, but inflation got far ahead of them. What they were able to save, what they were able to put in insurance policies or pension plans, does not amount to a hill of beans for many of them. As I say, these are the people who built our city. In fact, they are the people who built our country. They built it with hard work. They were not allowed in our so-called free market system to do much saving. This is why they still live in western downtown Toronto. They did not make it to the mansions of Forest Hill or the richer parts of North York or Mississauga. They are still living where they brought up their children.

Many of these people had little opportunity to learn English or French. They learned what was called construction English, at least the men did. Perhaps the women had less opportunity than even their husbands to learn it. To follow the complications of the language of legislation is impossible for them. They come to my office to ask what a government form concerning their pensions means. They ask whether it means that they will get this much or that much money; they do not understand it. These people are doubly shut out from understanding what the Government across the way is doing to them this evening.

Not only has the Government made successfully sure that very little goes into the media, it has chosen to chop the debate into little bits—one day here, one day there and one day another time. This is so that there will be no impact upon public understanding. The thousands and thousands of people about whom I am speaking in western downtown Toronto are further shut out by the language barrier imposed upon them by the conditions of their work when they came to help build this country. Therefore, they are among the weakest and most defenceless people in Canada. They are not the weakest in work, in courage, in thrift or in morality, but the weakest in ability to know what the Government is doing to them and to protest against it.

Their work has been taken from them. For the greater part, most of them were directed to put their work into somebody else's property, factory, store or construction company. They gave their working time at whatever was the price which could be negotiated. Their work has now been taken from them. They own no means of production.

Aside from their wages they were given the promise of a decent pension in their old age. They were told not to worry about it if they did not own farms as did their fathers or perhaps their grandfathers at home. They were told not to worry about it if they did not own a store or had to sell their home or business because of rising property taxes. They were told not to worry if they did not own a factory, a big daily newspaper or part of an oil company. They were told not to worry because they had a pension. Furthermore, now that inflation is galloping they are told that their pensions will be indexed so as to keep pace with prices. They are told that they will not get rich but that at least they will remain at a certain level of buying power.

We heard some yipping and chirping from across the way on the part of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) about how old people will get more dollars next year. That was a very cynical and misleading statement to put forward. The Minister knows well that getting more dollars next year is not the point. She knows well that they will buy less with the dollars they get next year than with the dollars they get this year.

• (2150)

Mr. Lalonde: How do you know?

Mr. Heap: Those who are losing part of their indexing will buy less next year than this year, and the Minister knows that.

Mr. Lalonde: How do you know?

Mr. Heap: A few months ago we had some confident-sounding predictions from the then minister of finance about how inflation was going to come down to 6 per cent probably within a year. We do not hear that bragging now, and for good reason. The prices which this federal Government administers, as well as the prices which the provincial Governments administer, are not coming anywhere near a 6 per cent increase.

The Government had the choice to intervene in the setting of the prices of fuel and gasoline. The Government had the choice to intervene in certain cases of rents. But in those and other Government administered prices, it has simply scorned, derided and utterly rejected any idea of holding prices down to 6 per cent increases. And yet the Minister has the gall to suggest that these pensioners next year will have greater spending power than they have this year. The Minister keeps on yipping, "More dollars," but she knows that more dollars will buy less because her Government has decreed that the prices it administers will go up not 6 per cent but 10 per cent, 15 per cent and 20 per cent.

The majority of the working people I know around Spadina have not had the opportunity to participate in strong company pension plans. They have not had the opportunity to pile up savings in private pension plans that were strong enough to stand against our galloping inflation. Therefore, they are going to be in trouble next year. For the most part they do not know it yet, but I know that beginning not January 1, maybe not even February 1, but soon after that they will be coming to my office and asking me what has happened to their pensions. The message will begin to sink through to them that many of them will not be getting a pension that will keep up with price increases.

The Government has chosen to cut the incomes of roughly half the pensioners. In other words, it will cut the incomes of those who are on Old Age Security only. It will cut their real buying power. The Government is not trying to hold down prices but is willing to pass a law to renege on what it promised those people. The Government is willing to pass a law to take away what it guaranteed to people over past years and for the future. For what? What is so important, crucial and overwhelming that the Government feels compelled to cut the incomes of some of our poorest people in the country?

According to the Government, it will get an average of $29 from each person. There is a little over one million of these pensioners. It means that the Government will take in the range of $30 million from the pensions. The Government will take from those pensioners $30 million, which is about one-tenth of 1 per cent of the deficit which the Government is running up. The Government has run up a deficit which we are told sometimes is $25 billion, sometimes $26 billion and we even hear it is $27 billion.

The Government would have to take one thousand times as much as it is taking from the pensioners to clear that deficit.

Of course, the Government is taking money from others as well. The Government is not seriously cutting back on its expenditures on wasteful causes. It is clear the Government does not need that $32 million so desperately. The only possible reason that I can see why the Government has chosen to undermine the incomes of half the pensioners in Canada is that this is part of the Government's long-range strategy to do away with the principle of universality. The Government has chosen some of the weakest and most inarticulate people in the country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would not want to misinform the House about the programs which this Government has embarked upon. The reason for the six and five—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please, that is hardly a point of order. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, since the Parliamentary Secretary is having difficulty understanding this point, I will explain it if he will allow me. What has been done is to say that pensioners are now to be divided into two groups. One group is to have this right of a guaranteed pension with indexation called into question. No longer will this group get full indexation. Indexation will be done on the basis of a means test, the means test used for the GIS. In other words, the Old Age Security pension will now be tied in with the GIS. It was not tied in before. The Old Age Security was independent and guaranteed, given to people as a right. Now it will no longer be given to them as a right. Now they must crawl and prove, as my colleague the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) said, that they are failures in order to be given the full indexed pension that was previously guaranteed for them. That is a direct attack on the principle of universality.

I can understand why the Minister of National Health and Welfare is so sensitive about this, if, as is very likely, she was on the losing end of a battle within Cabinet and she lost out to the man who is now the Minister of Finance. She would feel very sensitive about that. She feels doubly sensitive when she has to carry the blame for what he forced upon her. I can even understand her using some unparliamentary language during a speech before supper.

The fact is very clear that the Cabinet has decided to undermine the principle of universality. It does not have the courage to do it openly. A few speeches have been made here and there. The Minister of Finance said some things which he has qualified and he has danced around and said, "I do not really want to do that." But the way of introducing and trying to legitimize their idea is to begin with some of the weakest people in the country by taking away the right of a guaranteed Old Age Security pension on the ground that these people have not proved that they are failures. That is a direct attack upon the principle of universality. We will see more of that from this same Government as long as the people of this coutry let the Liberals stay in office. This is a shameful Bill which the Government has put forward. It is shameful that the Progressive Conservative Party voted for that in June.

Mr. McKnight: Why did your Party vote with the Liberals in 1979 then?

Mr. Heap: The Conservatives had the opportunity in June, July and August to vote against it. They did not do it then. Now they have begun to recognize what a dreadful Bill this is, and they would like to disown the responsibility for what they voted for in principle a few months ago. I can understand the Conservatives' embarrassment and how they would like to wipe out the voting on August 4. They would like to wipe it out from the minds of the old age pensioners whom they have helped to cheat. The old age pensioners will not forget. The old age pensioners will know that it was these two old Parties that decided to destroy the principle of universality.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—IMPACT ON PETROCHEMICAL PROJECTS. (B) FUTURE OF MEGAPROJECTS. (C) MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Hon. Dan Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, on November 17, and again on November 19, as reported at pages 20734 and 20820 respectively, of Hansard, I raised questions with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) and the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) pertaining to the disastrous effects of the National Energy Program upon the petrochemical industry.

I think it is summarized quite appropriately in a recent Globe and Mail article entitled "Feedstock Prices Crucial to Petrochemicals' Future". It states:

> Unless the federal Government soon recognizes petrochemicals as a manufacturing sector with a distinct feedstock price structure, the Petrosar and Petromont plants in eastern Canada may be partly closed, says Norman Kissick, President of Union Carbide Canada Ltd. of Toronto.

It goes on to say:

> The petrochemicals industry is in a period of severe crisis, he said in an interview. "There is no time for further debate."

The article goes on to elaborate on the situation in other parts of the country as well.

This is an industry in which Canada, with our abundance of natural gas as a feedstock, should easily have been a world leader. It is an industry which depends upon natural gas as its major feedstock and natural gas has to be competitive in order for the petrochemical industry to compete in the international marketplace.

This Government, however, through its imposition of the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the Canadian Ownership tax and the petroleum gas and revenue tax, has imposed crippling taxes upon the feedstock, namely natural gas. As a result of this, the basic feedstock price has been driven up at least 25 per cent higher than the competition from American competitors. The totality of this tax amounts to $1.05 per thousand cubic feet of natural gas. When it is worked out on the balance sheet, it amounts to 35 per cent of the netback revenue of petrochemical companies.

In 1978, this federal Government embarked upon a program of studying the various industrial sectors in this county. The 1978 task force on petrochemicals said that, as a minimum position, the Canadian Government should ensure that the cost of feedstocks and energy used in the manufacture of petrochemicals does not exceed the cost on the U.S. Gulf Coast. We know that as a result of the imposition of this very burdensome tax Canada is now in a non competitive position in so far as its feedstock is concerned.

This is what some people in the petrochemical industry are saying, and I will quote from the OilWeek Magazine of September 20, 1982 which says:

> Robert L. Pierce, Executive Vice-President of Nova, an Alberta Corp., told a conference earlier this year that the burden of the natural gas and gas liquids tax, plus the Canadian ownership charge, had a substantial effect on the cost of manufacturing ethylene and represented about $20 per tonne, or about 11 per cent of the plant gate price, of methanol. Clifford Mort, former Chairman of Dow Chemical Canada, said the taxes have added about 50 per cent to the variable cost of natural gas based ethane and a 'staggering 20 per cent increase' in the total cost of ethylene.

It goes on to say:

> 'It seems ludicrous' Mort said, 'that one of the few industries in Canada that had the prospect of competing effectively in world markets and whose expansion is based on large surpluses of supplies of natural gas should suddenly have a questionable future as a result of upfront taxes.'
> Meanwhile, price is also a worry for petrochemical manufacturers in eastern Canada which use oil based feedstocks to produce not only ethylene, but the higher olefins and aromatics which are not available from the manufacture of ethylene from ethane.

As well, Mr. Lapalme of the Union Carbide Corporation said that Canada is pricing itself out of the petrochemical business and parts of the industry are desperately looking for ways to survive. That puts the issue into context.

This industry base is dependent very largely upon exports. Eighty-five per cent of the end product is export. The selling price is set in the international marketplace so it must be competitive. It cannot pass these additional taxes on to the consumer.

• (2205)

One of the ironies of these taxes is that they are imposed on revenues and not on profits, so the Government has turned previously profitable tax-paying companies into losers. We all know that this Government supports losers. The result is that today there are at least a dozen petrochemical plants worth $4.5 to $5 billion on hold. They will not go ahead, they will not be developed unless there is some relief from these taxes.

Alberta Gas Chemicals Limited indicated in a report recently, and I quote:

> The taxes have reduced Alberta Gas Chemicals from a profitable tax-paying Canadian corporation to a projected loss in 1983. The company can survive the world-wide recession and the legislated increases in natural gas prices but not both of these plus the federal Government's taxes on natural gas.

The result of these taxes is the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs, and the spin-off benefits that would be associated with other industries.

Alberta Gas Chemicals Limited is now in the process of engaging in a joint venture with a New Zealand interest because of the feedstock, because the better tax treatment is such that they will then be able to manufacture their product and compete in the international marketplace. I say that is shameful.

No one is denying the fact that the economy is in an over-all recession, but the petrochemical industry is burdened by the recession, by the increase in energy prices, but primarily by the prohibitive tax structure. I urge the Minister and the Government to reconsider their position and make some amendments so that this industry can develop and continue to provide the jobs and the wealth this country needs.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I did like the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), some of which were excellent in my opinion. We too on this side can make very good comments. As you can see, there are always two sides to everything. Let us start with the situation in the petrochemical industry. Along the Gulf Coast in the United States they are faced with the same problem as we are in Canada because many plants are closing down; the same thing happens in Japan, where three plants have closed down in large petrochemical complexes. Europe is experiencing similar difficulties, which goes to prove that this is really a world-wide phenomenon, a direct result of the economic recession and above all of the oil glut which forced OPEC to bring their price down.

Now let us look at the problem in Canada, keeping in mind that I only have three minutes to answer this question. Various businesses now in operation have been created in relation to megaprojects, and despite the cancellation of some of these projects, others are still showing some positive results. The Department is currently carrying out new surveys in the petrochemical field and, in connection with the megaprojects which were under construction and those which are planned over the next ten years, it is expected there will be 200 direct surveys related to petroleum, and the funds invested in those 200 surveys might generate investments of up to $250 billion.

Here are a few actual examples of job creating projects in the energy sector. Several of them are now being carried out and others will be completed within the next ten years, including some which are now under way and others still in the planning stage: $2 billion for the development of the Venture-Sable Island gas deposit, $3 billion for the Western-LNG project, $3 billion for coal mining in northeastern British Columbia, $1 billion for the Norman Wells oil field and pipeline, and, in the past six months, the signed exploration agreements with respect to the Scotian Slope and Shelf, near Sable Island, and, in the Beaufort Sea, the upper expanses of the Arctic, and Davis Strait, $250 billion in investments which are expected to create quite a number of new jobs. All those projects are still in the planning stage and will be carried out over the next ten years.

PORTS—REMOVAL OF GRAIN ELEVATOR FROM PORT OF MONTREAL. (B) OFFER TO PURCHASE ELEVATOR

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my part in the debate this evening arises out of a question I directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on November 9 concerning terminal No. 1 or Annex No. 1 in the old Port of Montreal. The question arose out of an answer the Minister gave to one of his colleagues on the Government side. He was asked whether this Port and this Annex would be maintained to enable producers to truck grain into a terminal rather than be denied that privilege. Although the question was asked on November 9, the discussion on Annex No. 1 or the old terminal began on March 28, 1982.

A wholly-owned Canadian company, Allstate Grain, offered to purchase grain elevator No. 1 from the National Harbours Board. The National Harbours Board reply was that this facility would be turned over to Public Works Canada and would be demolished. The Allstate Grain Company, a wholly-owned Canadian company could not quite understand why this would happen. Over the last year it had purchased a Government terminal in the City of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan which it operates without Government subsidies. It continues to operate that for the benefit of producers of grain in that area. It wished to do this for the producers and shippers of grain in the Port of Montreal.

The rationale for the destruction of this terminal and facility does not make a lot of sense. It will cost the taxpayers of Canada millions of dollars to remove it. In reply to my question, the Minister said there is:

—an organization which is very anxious to take hold of that land, I said at the time, and I repeat now, that there are other facilities available to Quebec farmers who want to deliver their grain by truck. They can go to Sorel, to Quebec City, and also to Trois-Rivières.

I have had communication from the Minister of Transport, as have other Members of this House. We do not find it all that strange for the Minister to suggest that people who want to use this facility travel the distances that he recommends; 168 miles to Quebec City, 50-some miles to Sorel and a little under 100 miles to Trois-Rivières.

I do not find that strange when the same Minister of Transport informed the people in Arelee, Saskatchewan that there was room in an elevator at Wilkie, 165 miles away. He expected people to deliver their grain there because their line had been removed.

To carry on with the rationale for the destruction of this facility, it was not to build a new facility or improve the shipping capability in the Port of Montreal. It was to build a promenade, to beautify the City of Montreal. That is all very well, but it is to the detriment of the grain producers of Canada and the grain growers in the Quebec region. While all this took place beginning March 28, or March 31, on through May, there was an article in the Montreal Gazette of June 14, and I quote:

The National Harbours Board and Bunge of Canada Ltd. have agreed to invest $3.5 million each to renovate Annex No. 1 of the Port of Quebec's oldest grain elevator—

Work is expected to begin this summer on the elevator, which is operated by Bunge.

Bunge is not a Canadian company.

By the spring of 1983, unloading capacity of grain carried from western Canada by railroad is expected to increase by between 12 to 20 cars an hour.

This improvement should increase grain elevator capacity at the Port of Quebec by 500,000 tonnes a year—

A study made by Cansilo Ltd. last February recommended that Annex No. 1 serve as the receiving area and warehouse of export grain, besides continuing to be a winter warehouse for grain.

• (2215)

That winter warehouse, Mr. Speaker, is very important to the grain producers of western Canada because since 1979, under the initiative of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), grain was transported from Thunder Bay by rail to the ocean ports, stored and shipped overseas, which has greatly increased the export of grain from western Canada.

But the point is, and I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) will be answering, on June 14 there was an announcement of an investment of $7 million by the National Harbours Board and Bunge of Canada Ltd. into renovating Annex No. 1; a study was carried out by Cansilo Ltd. last February recommending that investment, so why have the National Harbours Board and the Department of Public Works decided to destroy the elevator and remove that facility which has benefited, and could benefit, the grain producers in the Quebec area and western Canada? It seems there is more at stake and more important things than the movement of grain. It happens to be a promenade in the old Port of Montreal. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to answer these questions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I do not know why Hon. Members are whistling. I apologize for the formal attire, Mr. Speaker, but I just returned from the National Harbours Board Police dinner.

There are not too many Canadians who know that the National Harbours Board Police is the oldest police force in Canada, having its origins in the Port of Quebec in 1837. I think it is fitting that tonight I am answering a question of the Hon. Member pertaining to the Port of Montreal.

The closure of grain Elevator No. 1 at the Port of Montreal is an integral part of two major expenditure programs; the Vieux Port Project, and the efforts to bring grain operations at the Port up to the state-of-the-art technology. The phasing out of Elevator No. 1 was decided in conjunction with the desire of the City of Montreal to restore the historical Vieux Port area. The significance of this area can be measured by the fact that this is where Jacques Cartier landed almost 450 years ago, in 1535. I know many of my colleagues from the Montreal area, as well as the grain producers in Quebec, are very anxious to get on with this restoration.

The second factor in phasing out the elevator was that, having been built in the 1920s, it did not warrant the major capital expenditures required to bring it up to present standards of efficiency and cost-effectiveness. It was estimated that $8 million would be required to make the necessary improvements in safety standards alone, not to mention other improvements. Instead, it was decided to expand Elevator No. 4, built in 1963. This expansion and modernization is now well under way, and is expected to be completed early in 1983, at a total cost of $8.9 million.

The benefits from this project far outweigh the loss resulting from the closure of Elevator No. 1. Number 1 has a storage capacity of 112,020 metric tons, whereas No. 4. will have a storage capacity of 265,000 metric tons when the current work is completed, compared to the 154,020 metric tons it had previously. Number 1 has a throughput capacity of 1,500 tonnes per hour, compared with 3,600 tonnes per hour for Number 4 upon completion, considerably more than the previous combined throughput capacity of the two elevators.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker).

CANADA LABOUR CODE—APPLICATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY LAY-OFFS. (B) NECESSITY FOR NOTIFICATION

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): I rise tonight to further my question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) which has to do with application to the British Columbia Telephone Company regarding lay-offs. I stated, as reported at page 20740 of Hansard of November 17, 1982:

> Last summer the British Columbia Telephone Company announced it was laying off about 1,800 people. These people were laid off without adequate notice as required by the Canada Labour Code—

• (2220)

I was very disappointed, Mr. Speaker, with the answer the Minister of Labour gave to my questions last week concerning the Government's lay-off legislation and regulations. In response to both my questions the Minister told me that the matter was before the courts. I can only think that he was not aware of the problem, because the answer he gave was not true.

It is true that one question is before the courts. Last August a British Columbia Supreme Court judge ruled that part of Section 30 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Regulations was ultra vires, and that matter had been sent to the B.C. Court of Appeal. But that was not what I asked about. I asked about amendments to Section 30 of the Labour (Standards) Regulations which the Government passed after its other regulations had been struck down. These new regulations are not before the courts.

I wanted to know why the Government had passed new regulations which took away from workers and unions their protection against lay-offs. In other words, Bill C-78 had provisions that where more than 50 workers are laid off at one time they must be given 16 weeks notice. The Minister dodged that question by pretending it was before the courts.

My second question had absolutely nothing to do with the courts. Under the regulations an employer is able to lay-off up to 50 people from an industrial establishment without the protection of lay-off legislation being offered to laid off workers. In the case of Bell Canada in Quebec, that company is trying to weasel out of those provisions by doubling its number of industrial establishments from about 35 to about 70. That means it could lay-off 49 people in each of the 70 establishments without offering any protection. It has already said it is laying off about 400 people in Quebec and not offering them proper notification of lay-offs. So I ask the Minister if it was his intention to let companies like Bell use the legislation in this way, and if not, what was he going to do about it?

I want to emphasize that the matter is not before the courts, but the jobs of many workers are on the line. These workers deserve an answer. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will not try to stick them with the same phony answer the Minister gave me last week.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish indeed to thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for raising this very important question. The question was why a new amendment to Section 30 was passed when a B.C. Supreme Court judge had already ruled part of that Section ultra vires.

The question seems to imply that a new regulation, Section 30(1)(f) of the Canada Labour (Standards) Regulation, was passed after the B.C. Supreme Court judge ruled a similar Section, Section 30(1)(d), to be ultra vires. Section 30(1)(f) had been under development since April 1982. It was processed through the various steps necessary for enactment and was approved by the Governor in Council on July 29, 1982, at which time it became law. It was published in The Canada Gazette on August 11, 1982.

• (2225)

The judicial decision on section 30(1)(d) was handed down by Mr. Justice Spencer of the B.C. Supreme Court on August 5, 1982, one week after the enactment of section 30(1)(f). In fact, therefore, the new regulation was in force prior to the court action referred to by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker). The approximate juxtaposition of the court ruling on 30(1)(d) and enactment of 30(1)(f) was entirely a coincidence. The two events were unrelated.

Because the initial decision with respect to 30(1)(d) is under appeal before the B.C. Supreme Court, Mr. Speaker, we are awaiting their decision before giving further consideration to Regulation 30. And, as the Minister pointed out the other day, when a decision is announced by the Court, we will proceed in light of that decision.

POLITICAL PARTIES

MEMBERSHIP OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, since Confederation, and up to 1968, respective Conservative and Liberal Governments respected the rights of individuals to own businesses, land and shares. Under this individual enterprise system, Canada rose to a position of second place in all the world. Individual Canadians were truly free. Since 1968 and the imposition of a government-owned economic system by the Liberal-Socialist Party, Canada has fallen to thirteenth place in OECD and fortieth place in all the world. Individual Canadians are very much less free. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That true Liberal Party supporters across Canada rise up and take control of the Liberal Party and throw out the present Liberal Members who make Lenin and Trotsky look like Genghis Khan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-131

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, both my colleague from Kingston and the Islands and I, over the past few days, have pointed out certain inequities in Bill C-131, the Government's assault on the old age pensioners of the nation. I shall not attempt to enumerate these inequities, Madam Speaker, but I want to observe that the sum to be realized in actual savings by the Government through the provisions of this Bill are so limited as to be meaningless, when viewed from the vantage of Government expenditures as a whole. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That, in view of the fact that Bill C-131 achieves little in the way of savings for the Government and inflicts disproportionate and unnecessary hardship on the senior citizens of this nation, this House urges the Government to withdraw this ill-conceived and unjustifiable legislation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF INVESTMENT CORPORATION IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In British Columbia the verb "to bric" means foolishly to privatize good government corporations with disastrous consequences. Now we fear that the Canada Development Corporation and its invisible Chairman, Anthony Hampson, who pretends to operate out of Vancouver, will lay off 3,250 workers and will privatize or "bric" the Government's 49 per cent share. Further, Senator Jack Austin, the same one who was defeated in Vancouver-Kingsway, has set up the CDIC whose object will be to "bric" Teleglobe, Canadair, de Havilland and other corporations, with God knows how many layoffs. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That the Government set up a real investment corporation based in Vancouver with a business, labour, and consumer board accountable to an elected Minister of Parliament and with the object of providing jobs, and furthermore, that Messrs. Austin, Bell, Strong and Hampson should be "briced" instead.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

DESTRUCTION OF WEST TORONTO RAILWAY STATION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing importance. In blatant and arrogant defiance of the will of the people, as clearly expressed by the Mayor of the City of Toronto, by the President of the West Toronto Junction Historical Society, and by the local Members of Parliament, Canadian Pacific yesterday stealthily destroyed the West Toronto railway station, despite the withdrawal, as recently as Tuesday last, of its application to the Canadian Transport Commission for authority to demolish. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House condemns CP's demolition of the West ed396;-1 Toronto railway station as an act of corporate vandalism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to note that the Prime Minister's vacation plans are unfolding as they should not, with a tour of eight sunny nations in January. His time would be better spent if he stayed in Canada and visited with some of the organizations which speak for our hard-pressed farmers. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Vankoughnet):

That the Prime Minister cancel his junket and remain in Canada to consult with farm leaders, in light of the fact that farm income is expected to be down by 28 per cent and in view of the fact that the Government's punitive excise tax on farm energy is forcing farmers to the wall, driving production costs up, contributing to inflation, and resulting in higher grocery prices at the supermarket checkout counters.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER AT PRESS CONFERENCES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to express my deep concern on a matter relating to the conduct of the Government. This morning there was a press conference in the Offices of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). Of course, accustomed to the pearls of wisdom which emanate so regularly from the headquarters of this Ministry, I hurried over eagerly to hear what the Minister had to say. Imagine my surprise when the Minister was not present at the press conference. Instead, to my disappointment and chagrin, the Minister was represented by a bureaucrat from the Department.

If I may quote from the memo given to people at this auspicious meeting:

... the past decade has seen great progress toward self-determination in Canada's North, which has excited and exhilarated everyone associated with it.

Therefore, if the Minister is so excited and exhilarated about this issue, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That he be present at all future press conferences, and that important announcements be made in the House to the elected representatives of this country, before release to the news media.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has been the lone Liberal to defend the Government's proposal to limit increases in old age pensions to 6 per cent and 5 per cent over the next two years, and in view of the obvious fact that the Minister's colleagues know how unpopular this piece of legislation is, and are allowing the Minister to swing in the wind and be hung out do dry by the machinations of Keith Davey and Jim Coutts, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House calls on all Liberals who do not support this indecent attack on Canada's elderly to defy openly the dictates of the back-room boys of the Liberal Party and demand that this unfair, unjust and indefensible piece of legislation be withdrawn.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

YMCA AND YWCA BUILDINGS—SUGGESTED INCLUSION IN WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, in many municipalities across Canada the local YMCA or YWCA is a prominent facility. They act as a focal point for a large and diverse number of community activities. The YMCA in Orillia, Ontario, recently suffered severe fire damage. In view of the importance of YMCA and YWCA facilities to a community, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Government include the building and renovation of YMCAs and YWCAs as part of its planned municipal public works program to be announced in the spring.

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITY TUITION FEE INCREASES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the former Secretary of State agreed in this House that the Government's six and five restraint formula should be applied to university tuition fees in light of the substantial contribution of public funds to post-secondary education. Yet university tuition fees have increased more than 16 per cent across Canada in this academic year, and 30 per cent in some Provinces. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Government take immediate action to ensure Canadian university students will be protected from financial cutbacks to universities, and that tuition fee increases will be limited to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in accordance with the Government's commitment.

Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That this House calls upon the Government to revise its NEED Program in Saskatchewan to allow workers protection under existing collective agreements and to provide for long-term job development.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROVINCIAL STATUS FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Today the Minister announced the Government's policy on constitutional development in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. What he did in this announcement was to reject the possibility of provincial status for either the Northwest Territories or Yukon within the foreseeable future. Why has the Government rejected the possibility of provincial status?

Mr. Nielsen: Because the Prime Minister is still alive.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, if the federal Government has rejected anything, it has rejected provincial status now. That is based on realistic factors, such as the tremendous land mass, the limited number of people, and the still relatively narrow economic base.

May I say that our position is based on the realities of the situation. As a northerner himself, I think the Hon. Member knows that there are very few northerners who realistically believe that provincehood, especially in the Territories, is appropriate at this time when they want division. I am talking about the Northwest Territories now. That is a fact. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that they want to wrestle with the question of division now, but want provincehood before that, that seems a ridiculous position and one with which most northerners would never agree.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, as a northerner I know that people who live in that part of Canada want control of their own affairs, the same as people who live in any other part of the country.

RESOURCE REVENUE SHARING

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my second question deals with the financing of the operation of government in the Territories and in Yukon. At his press conference this morning the Minister rejected the possibility of resource revenue sharing. Instead, he said that it is the policy of the Government to collect all resource revenues and then hand back dribs and drabs to the Territories as it sees fit. Why has the Minister rejected the possibility of resource revenue sharing?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, with reference to the Hon. Member's first remarks, may I say to him that not only the native leadership in the Northwest Territories but also the Executive Committee and the entire Assembly, indicated that they wanted the federal Government to indicate, in principle, its commitment to responsible and politically accountable government in the Territories. That is precisely what we have done and that is, therefore, why I can say with considerable confidence, in terms of the northerners whom I have met in the last half hour, that they endorse the Government's policy very enthusiastically. May I indicate that they wished they could have received a similar hearing from the previous Government when they made representations of this kind.

As far as the Hon. Member's question about resource revenue sharing is concerned, may I indicate to him that we met the Territories' desire for formula financing. That will allow them to accept political accountability for the moneys spent in the North. They will make their own decisions with respect to priorities for spending that money. That, again, is the real test of responsible and politically accountable government in the North.

In addition to that, we have established the principle of a discretionary fund that will assure northerners that they will have a fund to offset the cost of development in the North. It is the cost of development that is of particular concern right now.

May I indicate that they wanted the discretionary fund to offset the cost of development because that is where the real problem resides right now. It is exploration that is taking place right now. They are going through a stage of expenditure; there are no revenues, simply mammoth expenditures that must be made in order to attain revenues for the future. That is what we are prepared to share with northerners right now.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO AMEND YUKON ACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, may I put a very simple, brief, supplementary question to the Minister. Does he intend to introduce amendments to the Yukon Act which would give Yukon control over its natural resources? Does he intend to introduce similar amendments which would remove his power of veto over elected members of the Legislature introducing measures affecting the expenditure of money?

• (1120)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, we intend to amend the Yukon Act to give legal basis to the de facto situation which is there now in terms of responsible government. That is a position which the head of the Yukon government wanted us to take for some time, and I suspect that it has the support, not only of that Government but of the Hon. Member himself. That will take place. In future, also, it will mean that the Governor in Council at the federal Government level will not have to authorize elections. It will be done by the Commission in Council and therefore by the duly elected people in Yukon. Again that is something which is very much desired in the North.

The amendments to the Yukon Act will take place as soon as the claim of the Council for Yukon Indians is settled. In fact, that was the singular condition to us getting ahead with the amendment of that Act. Dennis O'Connor, the negotiator there, a man whom, I believe, the Hon. Member has backed in terms of his tenure as negotiator, indicated with some optimism that that claim will be settled within the next few months. That being the case, I would certainly hope that we could get ahead with the amendments to the Yukon Act, as the Hon. Member has wanted for some time.

Mr. Nielsen: The question concerned the removal of federal control over resources and federal control over finances. The translation of the Minister's answers to both those questions is obviously no.

FUTURE OF YUKON MINES AND RAILROAD

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister whether he could part the waves, penetrate all the smoke and mirrors of his announcement, and tell me and other Yukoners whether the federal Government has found solutions to opening the Cyprus Anvil mines, to opening United Keno Hills mines, and to putting miners and other out-of-work persons in Yukon back to work. What is the solution the federal Government is coming up with, with respect to putting the railroad back to work and all those miners who are suffering the tragedy of unemployment in company with 1.5 million other Canadians who are out of work in the country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I just do not believe that Yukoners will appreciate the Hon. Member misinterpreting their representation to this Government for two years. It has been that they wanted formula financing, a type of financing which allowed them to accept their own political responsibility for decisions made on financing, somewhat analogous to the concept of what we do with the Provinces. We have endorsed that.

Mr. Nielsen: What about jobs?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): We have given them a stake to this degree—a discretionary fund which the leader of that Government, the Conservative Government there, wanted in terms of a heritage fund. That can be provided under discretionary funding.

Mr. Nielsen: What about work?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Those are two things which we have acknowledged and done. For the Hon. Member to say that that is not what the people there wanted is a distortion.

Mr. Nielsen: Jobs, jobs.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As far as the Cyprus Anvil situation is concerned, may I say that we have been in intensive negotiations, not only with the Japanese but others, in trying to resolve that. The Hon. Member is fully aware that it requires a labour settlement first, which we still have not attained but are endeavouring to get. May I also indicate that I will be talking about the Cyprus Anvil situation when I am in Yukon in the next day or two. In all the time I have been in Whitehorse, Yukon, discussing Cyprus Anvil and trying to get that situation back to work, the Hon. Member for Yukon has not even been there.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY RESPECTING MANDATE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When he announced the formation of the Macdonald Commission it was quite unclear exactly what Mr. Macdonald was going to investigate. In the intervening two or three weeks the whole question has become even more muddled, and yesterday Mr. Macdonald added to the confusion with a press conference. At the press conference he said that he will not give up his corporate directorships—and I assume that applies equally to the other Commissioners—that he will investigate House and Senate reform, that he will take a look at constitutional reform, that he does not know what the Commission will cost, and that in fact he will look into everything with the exception of morality and the state of professional sport in Toronto.

• (1125)

Given that we have a serious economic problem in the country that has to be faced now, could the Prime Minister please tell the House what, in Heaven's name, is this Commission supposed to be doing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the clearest answer that I could give the Hon. Member would be to advise him to read the terms of reference which were part of the Order in Council setting up the Commission. If he reads that, he will not only understand what the Commission is intending to do but the Hon. Member will also understand what Mr. Macdonald was saying.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I think I do understand what this is all about, but I am not sure that public funding for Mr. Macdonald's leadership aspirations is a good thing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

JUSTIFICATION FOR FUNDING COMMISSION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, surely the Prime Minister knows that we are already funding—we, the people of Canada—the Science Council and the Economic Council, to look at the future and to determine what kind of economic direction we should be taking. We are funding the "blue ribbon committee" to advise the Government on immediate and long-range plans for the economy. Now we are going to spend another $5 million on fees and on advice for this Commission to look into all manner of things, not one single one of which relates directly to current economic conditions and how to solve them.

How can the Prime Minister justify spending $5 million right now on this Commission, given that the Commission hasn't the faintest idea what it is doing, and given that it is duplicating work already being done by other groups funded by the Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the two "givens" quoted by the Hon. Member are precisely not two "givens". The other work which is done within Government is not work which will be duplicated by this Commission. I repeat it is not a "given" that the Commission does not know what it is going to do. The terms of reference are quite clear. It tells them what they are going to do. The Hon. Member is basing his conclusions and his indignation on two wrong premises. I would urge the Hon. Member to read the terms of reference, and to think with a clear mind of the importance of having Canadians, not part of the Government, looking at the long-term prospects for Canada in economic terms and also in institutional terms.

This is hardly an invention. I had occasion previously when I was questioned to refer to the Rowell-Sirois Commission and to the Gordon Commission, for instance. These were very useful works for the elaboration of thought on the future of Canada, ten, 20, and 30 years down the road. This is what we want to have done outside the partisan atmosphere of this House, outside the more short-term preoccupations of departmental duties.

We want a group of distinguished Canadians, hopefully assisted by large numbers of Canadians in financial, academic and labour circles, who will be able to assist the Commission in arriving at a certain number of principles useful for the guidance of this or any government in orienting Canada toward a progressive path in the future. I repeat this has been done before. It is time that it be done again now, and I would urge the Hon. Member to try to depart a bit from his partisan approach to this and to think of the benefit that can come to Canada from it.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, it is not a partisan consideration. It was the Prime Minister who appointed Donald Macdonald, not I.

Mr. Crosbie: And Romanow.

Mr. Deans: It was Donald Macdonald who said he wanted to be free to leave and run for the Liberal Party's leadership, not I. If there is any partisanship injected into this, it was the Prime Minister and Donald Macdonald who injected it, not we.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

NECESSITY FOR JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, we have two million people who are unemployed in Canada. There are any number of job opportunities that could be undertaken if the Government had the will to pursue them.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister will appoint them all to Royal Commissions.

Mr. Deans: To send this group of high-priced individuals at $700 plus a day across the country, to walk around chatting to people about where the future might lead us, is a waste of public funds at this time.

• (1130)

Why does the Prime Minister not catalogue the various and many jobs that could be created in this country now, the projects that could be undertaken now, and try to get work for Canadians who are unemployed now, rather than create high-priced jobs for Canadians who are already employed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to indicate that his mind can only operate at one level. That is not the case with nor is it the duty of the Government which tries to discharge its functions.

A few weeks ago the Minister of Finance made statements in the House which were concerned with jobs now. The Minister of Employment and Immigration made several announcements concerning jobs now. We think that it is the duty of the Government, and we should have thought also the duty of Parliamentarians in general, to be concerned about the longer term future of Canada and that we should not be so narrow in our approach to reality and our duties as politicians that we are only concerned with today, tomorrow, and next week. We should be concerned with the orientation that the country should take in the future in a very rapidly changing world. This is the job of the Commission.

NATIONAL REVENUE

MOVEMENT OF TAX RECORDS FROM HAMILTON TO SUDBURY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Some months ago his Department moved the records of the Hamilton taxation office to Sudbury. My office and the offices of other Members are being swamped with calls from irate business people, tax accountants and taxpayers, who are told that it will take six weeks to get their files from Sudbury. When they call Sudbury they get a recorded message. The taxation staff in Hamilton are being unfairly blamed for the resultant confusion and they refer the irate taxpayers to the local Member of Parliament.

I resent my staff being abused because of a stupid decision made in the Minister's Department. How long will he allow this to continue?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, first of all, I must say that entirely I disagree with the Hon. Member's conclusion that the decision to decentralize the district office was a stupid one. I would say that before—

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition also has a habit of jumping to conclusions before hearing the answer, and his conclusions have often been wrong. I would invite him to let me finish my answer.

After this less than courteous interruption by his leader, I can inform the Hon. Member that all objectives have not yet been met to make decentralization complete, and I am sure he will understand that it takes time for the mechanisms involved in office decentralization to become operational, and once that is the case, taxpayers will be able to obtain a better service from their office. However, there is the time factor, and I am sure the Hon. Member will want to ask his constituents to help us by being patient until these services become operational.

[English]

COMPLAINT CONCERNING RECORDED MESSAGES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a constituent who called the Sudbury office 14 times and received a recorded message 14 times. At the same time he has a demand for payment of taxes placed on him with the threat of garnishee of his wages. All that he gets from "Big Brother" is a recorded message. How does the Minister attempt to justify having the administrative staff in one location and the records on which they rely in another location? Is he going to give the person who made that recommendation to him a medal for stupidity, because that is what it is?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, regarding the particular case to which the Hon. Member is referring, and any other cases that may exist, I would urge the Hon. Member, whenever he is unable to get proper service from our district taxation office—which would surprise me, except perhaps in certain circumstances—to call the minister's office, where we have people who will be glad to answer questions by Hon. Members.

I may also point out that just because files are located in one office and the officer who has to answer queries is located elsewhere, in another office, it does not mean that proper service cannot be provided. The Hon. Member is aware that tremendous progress has been made in electronics, and he should know that with computerized systems, we can bring information located in a file some 400 or 500 miles away, on to a small television screen. Thus, adequate service is possible even if the information is not available in the same office and in the same geographical area. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are maximizing the use of modern technology with a view to provide a better service to the taxpayer.

ENERGY

COST COMPENSATION REQUESTED FOR HOME OWNERS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It could be answered by the Prime Minister because it was the Prime Minister who promised to extend the gas pipeline to the east coast.

If natural gas were available in the Maritimes in 1983, as promised, Nova Scotians would be protected from the dramatic increases in the cost of fuel oil and electricity for home heating. Since the gas pipeline is delayed to 1986 and beyond, I would ask the Minister of Energy or the Prime Minister if the Government is willing to compensate Nova Scotians for this broken promise, by giving financial assistance to those who must continue to use oil or electricity to heat their homes this winter and for several winters in the future. Does the Minister think it is right that any person in one part of Canada, such as Nova Scotia, should pay more than the national average for energy costs?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I wish to tell the Hon. Member that the plans we are working on at this time are much better because we are paying 80 per cent of all the drilling costs off the coast of Nova Scotia. We hope that there will soon be natural gas off the coast of Nova Scotia, so that gas will not have to come from Alberta to Nova Scotia.

Of the $2 billion worth of work in drilling that will take place there in the next two years, the federal Government will pay a large portion of it for the Canadians who drill there, through the PIP Program. We are paying 80 per cent of it.

I hope the Hon. Member will be glad to see that we are doing our utmost to ensure that the resources off the coast of Nova Scotia will be on the shore very soon to serve the people of Nova Scotia.

Of course, in terms of paying the energy costs across Canada, we do not have a national rate. There are different rates across the country because power systems across the country are controlled by the provincial Governments. In terms of natural gas, we have moved the pipeline as far as Quebec. It might not need to go from Quebec to Nova Scotia any more because it is most likely that the drilling program will very soon produce natural gas off the coast of Nova Scotia which will serve Nova Scotians first.

Mr. Crosby: That is just the kind of nonsensical answer that annoys people in Nova Scotia and in other parts of Canada. I am talking about the cost which must be borne by individual consumers in Nova Scotia, and the Minister's answers concern Government policy and transfers between provincial Governments and the federal Government. It is the people who are paying for this broken pipeline promise.

EQUALIZATION OF ENERGY COSTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. When he hears his Minister talk about all these arrangements, does he really give any weight to the provision in the Constitution Act which the House approved, Section 36, which provides for equalization of economic opportunity in Canada? Does he not apply that to a situation such as energy costs? How can we have equal opportunities in the Atlantic area unless we have equalization for energy costs? Will he not apply this provision of the Constitution Act to this situation and guarantee that people in all parts of Canada will pay no more than the national average for their energy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would seem to me that the Hon. Member might reflect on what was done in, and before, the National Energy Policy, when we had precisely the intent of equalizing the cost of petroleum and gas across the country. That was done. That is why there are these huge subsidies to the importers of petroleum in the Atlantic Provinces in particular. This is an aspect which the Hon. Member and his Party have not supported. I am glad that they are coming around to the realization that the National Energy Policy was based on this concept of equalization. Naturally, we cannot equalize every last detail, and the cost must be borne—the cost of transport in particular—within Canada. Even there, we have attempted to equalize as best we can.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF VIDEO GAMES DEGRADING TO WOMEN

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. As some Members have been aware, there is a video game in the United States called "Custer's Last Revenge", which is extremely degrading to the native people, and especially degrading to native women, since it involves rape and other acts of this kind. Can the Minister of National Revenue assure the House that he will use every power of his Ministry to ensure that such perverted trash is not allowed into the Canadian marketplace?

• (1140)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): I can assure the Member for Ottawa Centre that I am concerned about the importation of this particular video game, and I may add that I have received representations from other colleagues, especially from my Cabinet colleague the Minister of State (Mines) who is also responsible for the Status of Women. This morning, I met the deputy minister of Customs and Excise, and I asked him, in the light of the guidelines governing the administration of Customs Tariff regulations and also in the light of our past experience in this area, to make a thorough study of the initial decision made with respect to the importation of this video game.

FINANCE

INCIDENCE OF DEFAULT IN REPAYMENT OF STUDENT LOANS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, if I may, and it concerns the increasing number of student loans which have been defaulted because of unemployment. With the rate of youth unemployment up to 21 per cent across Canada, because of the policies of the Government, it is an increasingly serious problem and, more and more, the Government is turning these loans over to collection agencies. Potentially, there were about 10,000 loans in 1980-81 which defaulted. Is the Minister aware of the extent of the problem and, if so, what is he prepared to do about it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows the economic situation the western world is facing, as well as the rest of the world. Therefore, when he blames the present situation on the federal Government, in the first part of his question—

Mr. Nielsen: How about Bill C-133?

Mr. Lalonde: —I would invite him to broaden his sights and see what has happened in the world in the last two years. The Government has taken steps to try to accommodate the difficult time we are going through. We have taken steps to remedy it in so far as we could in co-operation with all economic agents in society. We will continue to do so.

As far as the specific problem to which the Hon. Member referred is concerned, I will investigate the matter and report to him. I will see whether, indeed, there are situations where people are not able to repay debts. I will be pleased to inform the Hon. Member.

Mr. Rose: I will be pleased not to criticize the Government when unemployment is going up, if the Government, in turn, does not try to take credit for unemployment when it is going down.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON LOAN REPAYMENTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): I would like to ask the Minister if he is aware that most of these young Canadians want to pay back their loans. Some of them are trying to do it. I know of one case where a person paid back $738 just in interest last year, without reducing the principal at all, and that situation must be duplicated all over the country. Would the Minister consider either a mortgage type of loan subsidy to these students or, better still, a moratorium for those who are unemployed until the economic situation rights itself because of world conditions, not because of the Government's policy?

An Hon. Member: A moratorium on the interest charges.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I will look into the suggestions brought forward by the Hon. Member. I will examine them very seriously. Indeed, the Government is quite concerned and feels that we should not ask people, who are unable to pay, to make payments on debts that they owe to the Government but which they simply cannot meet at the present time, and that we should show concern and be willing to accommodate them if at all possible. The Hon. Member has made some suggestions and I will consider the matter to see whether they can be acted upon, or whether there are other, better ways of dealing with the problem he has raised. I will be very happy to report to the Hon. Member at the earliest opportunity.

AGRICULTURE

STATEMENT BY CNR CHAIRMAN ON CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, who is supposed to be looking after the interests of the farmers of Canada. The Chairman of the CNR has been reported in the Western Producer as stating:

> —farmers should assume they will have to pay all freight cost increases above the annual Crow benefit payment guaranteed by the Government through legislation to be introduced into Parliament this winter.

May I ask the Minister if that is the position of the Government? Does he support the statement of the Chairman of CN? If this is not Government policy, what is the Government's policy and where does the Minister of Agriculture stand on it?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would like to know where the Hon. Member stands on the issue of what farmers should pay, because he never made it very clear, either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: As he knows, the Government has not made a decision on the Gilson Report, but it will in due time. I am not aware of what the Chairman of CNR said.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): The Minister, in his speech to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said that in fact the Chairman of CN had made a very legitimate point that there should a capping of the subsidy paid under the Crowsnest Pass freight rate structure. How does the Minister square his statement here in the House today with the statement that he made to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Hon. Member is referring to a copy which states on the top of it, "Notes for a Speech".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Your Member over there has all the copies of my speeches for the last few years.

Mr. McKnight: It is lucky I have a fireplace at home, Gene!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MANAGEMENT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, once the House settles down and the Minister of Agriculture turns his hearing aid up, I also would like to direct a question to him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: That is an inside joke, for the other people who do not know it.

My question relates to the administration of Crown corporations. The Minister knows that the Canadian Dairy Commission went through a very detailed examination by the Public Accounts Committee which reported in 1978 and pointed out that the administration of the CDC, plus parts of its export policy, were very badly handled. Reference was also made to it in the Gibson Report concerning problems in those same areas, as well as the Kotes inquiry. We have just completed studying the Public Accounts Committee report which pointed out quite a few errors in the administration of the Canadian Dairy Commission. Throughout that entire period, the Commissioners and the top management, who were appointed by the Minister, have remained in office, whereas in any other business, if they had made those same types of business mistakes, they would surely have been retired. What is the Government policy for making the top management of Crown corporations, of which there are over 600, responsible?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to be as patient as I will be in waiting for the Public Accounts Report. I know that it went through a very thorough study in the last few days of the operations, of Canadian Dairy Commission. I want the Dairy Commission to be run as well as any corporation, private or Crown corporation, can be run. I am satisfied at the present time, when making comparisons between the operations of the Canadian Dairy Commission and any other corporation, whether private or other, whether in comparison with Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler or some of the other companies that we have helped, such as Dome, that it is run pretty well and is subject to public scrutiny.

I asked for the inquiries, but I am still of the opinion that one does not assassinate or fire anyone by innuendo. One waits until one has the facts. I have known the men and the Commission, as the Hon. Member said. I am responsible for their appointments. I am responsible for the Dairy Commission. I would put the operations of the Dairy Commission up against any other dairy operation in the whole world. This Dairy Commission has the support of the total dairy industry in Cananda, as does its Minister. Probably no other Minister can say that of his Ministry. He has total support, which the record indicates. When they all say how good it is, am I supposed to condemn it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, the issue is not how good the policy is, it is how the Corporation is being administered and, when there have been four investigations showing mistakes, someone should go.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RCMP INQUIRY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Since he wants to get into this issue, he also asked for an RCMP inquiry, and that has been delayed and delayed. I want to know when the Minister of Agriculture will bring that RCMP inquiry to a conclusion so that we can really get at the true facts.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, does the Hon. Member want me to put pressure on the RCMP and interfere with its investigation? Is that what he is suggesting? That is not my prerogative. It is not within my power to do that. I asked for an inquiry. They are making their inquiry. They will not make their report to the Minister of Agriculture, but to the Minister in charge of the RCMP. They make it through the appropriate Minister. That report then comes to me. I wrote to the Minister in charge of the RCMP to have that inquiry conducted.

When one checks the facts, one will not find that they say to the Minister of Agriculture, "There is that kind of inefficiency in there and you should take that action and fire that person or those persons," because it was not that firm. If the Hon.

Member can bring those accusations where there was that kind of wrongdoing in the Canadian Dairy Commission, he should put them on the record. I have had everybody study them. There may have been inquiries. There were certain things said without anything to back them up. I asked for the facts. That is why I asked for the internal audit of the Auditor General. I asked for that because I wanted the facts before I beheaded anybody or did anything like that to anyone. I said if anybody brings out the facts to the Public Accounts Committee—

Madam Speaker: Order.

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—ISSUANCE OF BUILDING PERMIT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of the Environment could tell us who is the official who ordered the Judd Buchanan building permit to be issued. On whose specific authority was that ordered? If the Minister does not know the answer to that question, which has been before the House for four days, will he give us an undertaking that he will answer that specific question next week?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the building permit was issued by Mr. Racine, as I think is well known. If I understand the substance of the question of the Leader of the Opposition, he knows that. He wants to know if there was some ordering of him to do that. To the best of my knowledge, if that was the case, it would have been as a result of a discussion with his superior, who would be the townsite manager. I do not know the substance of what discussions took place between them before the permit was issued by Mr. Racine.

I have given him the knowledge that I have presently, and I will follow his suggestion. If I can supplement that information, I will forward a communication to him.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, Mr. Racine, and Mr. Ross the Acting Superintendent, and the Director of Canada Parks West in Calgary have all said they were ordered to do it. I want to know by whom they were ordered to do it. That is what they said, Mr. Prime Minister. If you want to check what is going on in your Government, carry out an inquiry. We would be delighted to do it on the floor of the House of Commons.

CHANGES MADE TO ORIGINAL PROPOSAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me come to the letter of December 23 from the Deputy Minister of Environment Canada to the Member of Parliament for Bow River in which the Deputy Minister indicated that the Buchanan proposal had been rejected. I quote, "The proposed land exchange was not approved". The Minister said yesterday that the Government negotiated a very different proposal and then approved it quietly, secretly. Will the Minister tell the House of Commons what changes made an unacceptable proposal acceptable?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I will reply to the hon. gentleman's question. I do want, however, to point out to him and the House that he has not accurately reported what I said. I at no time said there were secret negotiations which took place after the letter to which he referred. Indeed, the fact is that discussions took place which were certainly not at all secret. On several occasions after that date—on January 4, February 1, June 7, July 5 and again August 30—the minutes of the Banff Advisory Council clearly indicate that there were indications of discussion on the project at that place. I think most Members know that discussions which take place at that Council are communicated to members of the town quite readily, so his allegation which is one made as well by Members on that side earlier this week, that after the letter to which he has referred that somehow there were continuing and secret and unknown negotiations, is simply not the case, and the facts bear that out.

In reference to the earlier part of his question, the other part of his question, there is indeed the letter which he described. Parks Canada, not being entirely sure that the original proposal was one which they would wish to accept, did have a memorandum prepared for Treasury Board which was considered. Treasury Board decided that that proposal was not one which they would accept. As a result of that, Parks Canada did go back and negotiated a different arrangement with the developers which led to the addition of another parcel of land on the part of the developers to that which was the other three, which were being and exchanged with Parks Canada. This narrowed very, very considerably what had been the previous disparity in value, so that was a very significant and substantial change. As a result of that change, Parks Canada officials were confident that the exchange was one which was of benefit to Parks Canada and to the townsite. They felt no need for a further second opinion and they therefore proceeded with the negotiations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if the Minister is so confident that this matter is in the public interest, will he agree to table in the House of Commons the first proposal which was rejected, the second proposal which was accepted, and any representations and any records of conversations that went on between the rejection of a proposal by Mr. Buchanan in the first instance and the acceptance of a proposal by Mr. Buchanan in the second instance?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman has referred to any representations, which is an extraordinarily wide net. "Representations" is the word I think he used. It is not the practice to reveal discussions or negotiations between private citizens pursuing business affairs and governments. As far as I know, it has never been the practice to reveal the kind of commercial information which might be of use or benefit to competitors in the marketplace. That is not something that we have ever done.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RIGHT TO NEGOTIATE WITHIN WAGE RESTRAINTS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. When the Bill cutting the wage increases of Public Servants was before the House last summer, the Government amended it to permit unions to bargain changes within the six and five guidelines. It now turns out that the Government is not permitting this. The Professional Institute of Public Servants is trying to provide increased maternity benefits for some of its members within the six and five guidelines. Treasury Board negotiators told the Professional Institute earlier this month that they were not in a position to respond to the request for increased maternity benefits and that they did not even know when they would be able to respond. Is the Government trying to weasel out of even its minimum commitment to bargaining and, if not, can the Minister give us a firm answer on when his negotiators will be in a position to bargain?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the Bill in question was amended by Parliament to give the authority to the Governor in Council to exempt from the Bill collective bargaining in the context of accepting the six and five principle. I have been working with colleagues in Cabinet to develop a set of guidelines which would be made available to the Public Service unions so that they would know the basis on which the Governor in Council would be likely to exercise that discretion. I have discussed this matter with the heads of the major Public Service unions. I told them that I am working actively to get these guidelines developed, and I will show them the guidelines for their input before the matter is finalized. I hope to do so as quickly as possible.

DELAY IN STARTING NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I am sure the President of the Treasury Board must realize that time is important on this very specific question. Public Servants have already had their increases cut below the cost of living and they do not want their increases delayed by this type of Government stalling. Why has the Government refused to bargain even within the six and five guidelines, when it has had all summer to prepare itself for this very important issue?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, as far as I am aware the increases of six and five which are permitted by Bill C-124 are not being held up by the matter to which my Hon. friend is referring. The Hon. Member is asking whether it would be possible for agreements to be negotiated of a kind that would not be covered by Bill C-124 because the Governor in Council would exercise its discretion to exempt them. In order to do this, I think it is fair to the public servants in question that they know the basis on which this discretion would be used, so there would not be negotiations on an agreement which later would not be found to be subject to exemption. I am trying to operate in a fair and efficient manner, and I want to get these guidelines worked out as quickly as possible.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

DESTRUCTION OF WEST TORONTO RAILWAY STATION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I address my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. The Parliamentary Secretary is aware that yesterday, in the wake of the demolition of a building in my riding, the CTC sent a telegram to Canadian Pacific, requesting an explanation for their actions, by ten o'clock this morning.

Has Canadian Pacific respected the deadline set by the Canadian Transport Commission to justify the wanton destruction of the West Toronto railway station? If so, what was the reply to the CTC telegram and, most important, can the Parliamentary Secretary assure the people of Toronto that conditions laid down by the CTC were satisfied before demolition took place?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the news of the demolition of the West Toronto railway station came as a complete surprise to the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, to the Minister of Labour, and to me—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Flis: —because the three of us worked very closely with the West Toronto Junction Historical Society to preserve this 71-year old building as an historical site.

When the owner of a railway station wants a station removed or demolished, he must apply to the CTC under Section 120 of the Railway Act. Canadian Pacific did this. The puzzling factor in this case is that, a few days before the demolition, CP withdrew this application, and did not apply for a demolition permit from the City of Toronto, claiming that this building is on federal land and does not require such a demolition permit.

CTC acted very quickly by sending a telex to CP yesterday demanding a reply by 10 a.m. this morning. I am pleased to inform the House that such a reply did come in this morning.

The Railway Transport Committee is meeting at this very moment to study this reply—

Mr. Nielsen: Put it back.

Mr. Flis: —and determine whether CP acted properly or irresponsibly.

VIA RAIL

ABANDONMENT OF SERVICE—ROLE OF CTC RAILWAY TRANSPORT COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether the Railway Transport Committee of the CTC will act as vigorously to see if the 20 per cent of VIA Rail service was abandoned in accordance with the law?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not see the relevancy of the Right Hon. Member's question to the question posed by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston. I would hope that the Leader of the Official Opposition would learn to ask more responsible questions in this House.

GREY CUP GAME, 1982

CONGRATULATIONS TO PARTICIPATING TEAMS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that it would be appropriate at this time to congratulate two great gridiron teams who, this weekend, are going to be performing in Toronto and have done such a great job for Canadian unity. I think this House should congratulate the Edmonton Eskimos—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: —and the Toronto Argonauts—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: —and no matter who wins I know they are going to do a great job this Sunday for the people of Canada.

Madam Speaker: I do not think I will venture to rule on that point of order! The only thing I know is that when the subject of football comes into the House, the House throws all of the rules out of the window and with good spirit, and that is great.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,410, 4,423 and 4,507.

[Text]

TRAVEL EXPENDITURES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 4,410—Mr. Fulton:

During the fiscal year 1981-82, how many trips were taken, at public expense, by employees of each Department and, in each case (a) to which locations (b) for what purpose (c) at what cost (d) was vacation leave involved?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The information sought is not readily available from departmental records; only total expenditures are rolled up by Department. Such information would only be available on individual travel claims and would necessitate compilation by hand, the cost of which would far outweigh any informational benefit that might accrue. Departmental emphasis is placed on internal control mechanisms, which require all government business travel to be justified and pre-authorized. Expenditures must be submitted on a travel form, which is compared with the pre-authorization by departmental administration to ensure that proper approval for the trip has been given and that the claimed expenditures comply with those permitted by the travel policy.

A recent survey of travel patterns in a representative sample of seven Departments showed a total of 380,950 trips during 1981-82. In the majority of cases, these are routine trips made by employees involved in direct service to the public, such as weights and measures inspectors, agricultural inspectors and advisers, and health inspectors. The employees generally use their own car or a government car to travel between workplaces during normal working hours. Travel for other reasons, such as travel for business purposes that is not directly related to a regular part of duties, attending conferences or taking training courses, has recently been the subject of more stringent controls by Treasury Board. More specifically, the Board has directed that Departments and agencies reduce business travel that is not directly related to a regular part of duties by 15 per cent from 1981-82 level; foreign travel (which represents 1.6 per cent of all travel) must be approved by the minister responsible, except for trips to continental U.S.A.; and the Minister responsible must also approve conference attendance in excess of two delegates from the Department, as well as all departmental sponsorship of conferences.

INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Question No. 4,423—Mr. Fulton:

Were 1,569 international flights taken by government officials between May 3 and June 10, 1982 and, if so (a) who took the flights (b) what was the (i) destination (ii) cost (iii) purpose of each trip (c) was any vacation time involved (d) were any persons not employed by the Public Service on any of the trips?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The figure quoted was supplied by the Central Travel Service of the Department of Supply and Services and would relate to bookings rather than actual flights.

The specific information sought is not readily available from departmental records; only total expenditures are rolled up by Department. Such information would only be available on individual travel claims and would necessitate compilation by hand, the cost of which would far outweigh any informational benefit that might accrue. Departmental emphasis is placed on internal control mechanisms, which require all government business travel to be justified and pre-authorized.

To accent the government's program of fiscal restraint a number of administrative mechanisms aimed at augmenting existing controls on government business travel, were introduced on August 6, 1982 including the requirement for all foreign travel other than to the continental U.S.A. to be approved by the Minister responsible.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON INFLATION AND TAXATION OF PERSONAL INVESTMENT INCOME

Question No. 4,507—Mr. Mitges:

What was the total cost to the taxpayer for the blue ribbon committee headed by Mr. Pierre Lortie of the Montreal Stock Exchange which was set up to study a mortgage rate reduction plan and certain tax proposals as outlined in the June 28 Budget?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Total cost for the Ministerial Advisory Committee on Inflation and the Taxation of Personal Investment Income:

(a)	Travel	$ 44,600
(b)	Freight and express	500
(c)	Telephone	75
(d)	Rentals	5,000
(e)	Consulting and research	309,225
(f)	Other professional and special services	41,600
Total		$401,000

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-98, an Act to amend the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Madam Speaker, the Canadian horticultural industry is a $3 billion a year business, employing something like 200,000 people. It is a huge and varied industry, stretching from coast to coast. Indeed, it is an international industry. Thanks to the advances that have been made in storage and transportation, our consumers have access to an incredible array of fresh produce from across the country and around the world.

As a matter of fact, Canadians last year imported $1.1 billion worth of fruits and nuts and about $600 million worth of vegetables.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) rises on a point of order.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, is it presumed in this debate that the Minister is now closing the debate, or is he introducing it? Technically, he could be closing it and I wish an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My understanding is that the Minister is proposing a motion to the House, the motion being the Bill. Correct?

Mr. Whelan: Correct. The great distances that fruit and vegetables travel en route to the consumer, coupled with the fact that they are highly perishable products, creates in many instances unique marketing problems. For example, a carload of British Columbia cherries may pull into the Ontario Food Terminal and the buyer is not pleased with the quality. This could be a rare occasion, because most of the time, 99 per cent of the time, the produce from British Columbia is of high quality. But if someone decided to say it was not of that quality, and if we did not have a mechanism for arbitrating this kind of problem, the load of cherries would sit there for a long time before some kind of agreement was reached between the buyer and the seller. By then we would have an unholy mess on our hands.

Fortunately, we do have an arbitration mechanism. Unfortunately, that mechanism has not had the legal teeth to do its job effectively since a court challenge to its powers in 1974.

The Arbitration Board has continued to function since then, but without the authority to enforce its rulings. There have, in fact, been cases where a party to a dispute simply refused to pay the amount of compensation which the Board deemed appropriate.

The amendment to the CAPS Act, which is before the House, would clearly establish the Board's legal authority, and would improve some aspects of its operation. I must stress that such action is needed because of the fact that we are dealing with highly perishable goods that are being shipped great distances.

Perhaps I should take a moment to run through the full arbitration procedure, and how the reconstituted board will fit in. First off, everybody who is engaged in the interprovincial and international buying and selling of fruits and vegetables must be licensed by Agriculture Canada. The licensee agrees to obey a code of practice which incorporates normal trading procedures. Here is how the arbitration procedure works. When a buyer feels that the shipment he or she has received is not of the grade requested, or that it has deteriorated in transit, he or she has 24 hours to take exception. Then an official inspection is done by an Agriculture Canada primary products inspector. Next, the buyer contacts the seller to see if they can reach an agreement on the settlement that should be made. If buyer and seller cannot reach an agreement, the seller files a complaint and the matter goes before the Arbitration Board. Meanwhile the buyer is required to dispose of the product to best advantage.

The Arbitration Board has been composed of three experts. The Chairman is appointed by the federal Government and the other two members are representatives from buyers and shippers. When the Board meets, the federal Government pays their per diems. In the reconstituted Board there would be three to five members, appointed by the Minister of Agriculture. Aside from the one or two Government representatives, the industry members would be nominated by the trade associations. As with the old system, the Board's decisions can be referred to a Board of Review. The old Board included the original members of the Arbitration Board, plus the Department's legal adviser and the director of our dairy, fruit and vegetable division. The new Board of Review will not include members who sat on the Arbitration Board.

Under the proposed system, the Board of Review will only be able to review how the Arbitration Board made its ruling; whether it considered all the information. From there, if the buyer or seller is still dissatisfied, and refuses to pay the amount recommended by the Board, the Board's decision is passed on to the Federal Court, and in effect becomes a decision of the court.

The Minister of Agriculture also has some scope to help ensure the smooth operation of the Board. The Minister has the authority to revoke the licence of a party that refuses to abide by the rulings of the Board, or who is the subject of repeated complaints. It is important to note that the procedure I have just outlined is followed by most of our fruit and vegetable trading partners, most notably the United States. It is only reasonable that we should be able to provide a reciprocal service to settle international disputes.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the long-overdue amendments I am proposing will help in the orderly marketing of agricultural products. As you and the Members of this House know, agriculture is prone to such an incredible range of production and marketing hazards, it is only reasonable that we should try to reduce some of the element of risk through the provision of a good arbitration service so as to make it fair and operate in a very smooth fashion.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, some eight years ago there was a ruling of the court which said that the establishment and rulings of the Arbitration Board for purposes outlined by the Minister were ultra vires and not binding. I think it would have been very important for the Minister to tell us in what way he has now closed the gate so that producers, dealers and receivers will now be able to get a reasonable, binding decision with respect to a dispute. Looking at this Bill and its predecessor, I wonder why the first one was thrown out and why this one will not be thrown out under the circumstances.

The absence, Mr. Speaker, of binding authority has been a very serious situation, and the Canadian Fruit Wholesalers Association and the Canadian Horticultural Council, the two groups which in the main represent the shipper and receiver of fresh fruits and vegetables, have been pressing very hard to have this system re-established. One of the real difficulties which arose was the fact that people who shipped into Canada really had no means of obtaining a settlement of a problem which might arise. One may ship a product in top-flight condition but in some cases it may arrive in less favourable condition. As a result there is often a dispute which arises between the shipper and receiver, and we need this Board of Arbitration to sit down around the table with the parties concerned and arrive at a binding decision. However, such a vehicle has not been available.

In the U.S., if such a situation arose, there is a vehicle of comparable nature which would arbitrate the dispute. Once the ruling is made, the licence of the person against whom the decision is made is in jeopardy if the claim is not in fact paid. American shippers of these goods into our markets have found themselves unable to obtain a reasonable, binding solution upon a customer in Canada who may wish to abuse the foreign shipper. The result has been that the American association has decreed that any Canadian involved in a dispute must post a bond equal to twice the amount of the claim lodged. This has caused some very serious difficulties for Canadians who ship their produce into the American market.

It has worked both ways, Mr. Speaker. The shippers from outside this country are uncertain as to their legal status with respect to the produce they ship into Canada, and people shipping out of Canada into the United States find themselves in a very difficult position when they attempt to make a claim concerning an unsatisfactory deal in the United States. So it is high time that a procedure to settle these problems is in fact in place. Trade between our two countries has suffered and American publications such as The Packer, which some people call the bible of the wholesale fruit and vegetable industry in the U.S., have been levying charges at Canada which are not very complimentary. So the earlier this Bill is in place, the earlier we can re-establish our historic relationship with the American receivers of our goods as well as the American shippers of our needs, the more healthy will be the trade between the two countries.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this present situation has affected all sorts of agricultural trade between Canada and the U.S. It is being used as a weapon. For example, in the potato disagreement between Canada and the U.S., particularly the State of Maine, the Americans are saying that Canada does not deal in good faith any more. They do not want to deal with us. The situation is giving us a reputation which we can ill afford. It is therefore imperative that this Bill should pass, be given Royal Assent and proclaimed at a reasonably early date.

Fortunately, during that period in which a legal and binding Board could not be established by the Department of Agriculture, an Acting Board has been the arbiter of disputes between shippers and receivers of fresh fruit and vegetable products. Its decisions were not binding but in roughly 75 per cent of cases they were accepted. However, even though a shipper may have been found at fault by the existing Arbitration Board, his licence is not in jeopardy. The decisions of the Acting Board do not have the weight that the Bill would give the appointed Board.

I suppose the Minister could suspend a licence if he chose to do so, but so far he has not. The proposed legislation gives the Minister the authority to issue or cancel a licence. I think the circumstances under which a licence could be suspended should be defined. The Bill is not clear on this point although it may be set out in the regulations which will follow.

Having just attended a seminar on fisheries, I feel it is imperative that the House, the Committee and the trade should know the terms and conditions under which licences are to be granted. It has been suggested that any dealer in the fresh fruit and vegetable trade should submit a bond with his application for a licence. This would put pretty serious constraints upon free access to business. I would say that probably the three largest dealers in fruit and vegetables today started with a roadside stand. They have managed their businesses in such a way as to gain the confidence of the trade and so have become very large indeed.

If we are going to insist on a bond, it should be available at a reasonable cost. There may, of course, be cases where someone with a bad reputation in the trade applies for a licence but cannot provide an adequate bond. In the main, however, the amount of the bond should not be so high as to act as a constraint.

The same remarks apply to licencing. If the cost of the licence is prohibitive, it is a constraint upon entry into this kind of business. I know that representations have been made for a large licence fee which would act as a constraint to entry into the business, but I think this should be considered very seriously. Until it is proven that irresponsible people are entering the business, excessive constraints should not be imposed.

There is a technical matter that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Minister will address it. As I understand it, no constraint is imposed upon one farmer who ships products to another farmer. On the other hand, if a difficulty about the shipment should arise, there would not be access to the Board of Arbitration. Should we not consider imposing a nominal licence fee for producers and purchasers? I think both should be licensed prior to the product being inspected at point of origin or at destination. Some people in this category do quite a little bit of business on their own and I think they should have an element of protection.

The seed potato industry is an example of this. There is really no way that a farmer in one province can know the financial reliability or integrity of someone who receives his product. An element of protection should be afforded such people.

There are some other aspects of the legislation that I should like to discuss, Mr. Speaker. It provides for a Board of "not less than three and not more than five members", but does not set out any guidelines for the qualifications of members. Perhaps that will be provided for in the regulations. The Minister touched on that matter this morning but not as fully as I should have liked. The explanatory note provides that the Bill would:

(b) empower the Governor in Council to make regulations, including regulations prescribing the products for which a licence is required and standards for those products—

This would mean an overlapping of regulations, because there already is a standard for grades of fruit and vegetables shipped within this country. Now we are proposing to regulate in respect of grade, standards, packages and other items. I should like the Minister to explain this overlapping of regulations when the Bill goes to Committee.

It occurs to me that licensed dealers in Canada should have the Arbitration Board available to them at the federal level for sales within a province. They would be licensed to ship products dealer to dealer under federal standards. In some Provinces there is a mechanism for dealing with problems that may arise, but in others there is no such provision. I do not think it would be an infringement upon provincial jurisdiction if there were an opportunity for licensed dealers to approach this Arbitration Board to settle disputes which might arise from shipments made within a Province.

I am quite concerned about the qualifications of people appointed to the Board and about its status, Mr. Speaker. Clause 1, amending Section 6 of the Act, reads as follows:

6.2 (3). The Board is a court of record and shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

That does not mean a great deal to the man on the street, Mr. Speaker, and it does not mean as much to me as it would to a lawyer, but I can see that it gives the Board a high status.

Clause 1, amending Section 6.6 of the Act, provides that the Board will have full jurisdiction. Appeal from its decisions may be made under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act. I do not know what is contained in that Section but I am advised that the Arbitration Board and the Appeal Board, known as the Tribunal, can rule on the fate of an individual without that individual having access to the courts of appeal. Apparently if someone were to appeal as provided in this Clause, he would find that the court has very little scope for action and would be virtually unable to reverse the Board's decision unless there was a great error in judgment or some aspect of the law. I do not know whether this really affects the human rights of individuals in Canada under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but I think the constraints of appeal to the courts of Canada are too excessive.

• (1230)

I reflect again upon the qualifications of the individuals who will constitute these Boards. As I understand it, they will not be legal minds. Nor do I think in the initial adjudication of a problem should they be legal minds. I think they should be minds which are knowledgeable of situations that can occur in the trade and that their decisions should be based upon them. When one fails to extend the full right of the courts of Canada to traders, I submit that that is precluding the opportunity for legal interpretation. Whether it may go for or against the appellant is really not the factor which should be considered. It is the fact that he cannot effectively get to the court to try to appeal a decision which he feels is unjust.

There is no clear indication in the Act as to what it may cost the individual to take his case to the Arbitration Board. I wish that could be defined. I think it is imperative for the sake of the trade that one in fact knows what will be the cost. I presume the cost will be spelled out by regulation, and I ask the Minister to give his attention to this item as well.

Referring to Section 6.7(2)(c) dealing with people who handle agricultural products on commission, I should like to ask whether they will be licensed as dealers or brokers. This is a question which must be addressed. At the present time I believe that the broker, the intermediary between buyer and seller, is not subject to the Arbitration Board except on very, very rare occasions. Since we are looking at the word "commission" as used in the Section to which I have referred, I raise the question as to whether or not brokers will in fact be subject to decisions of and responsible for the decisions of an arbitration case which happened to be put before the Board.

I do not have any intention of suggesting that this Bill is not needed. I do not have any intention of suggesting that this Party will block it. If the regulations are reasonable, if the Minister's answers are explanatory and address the questions I have raised today, I think we could expect that in the haste required this Bill could be put through.

I do ask the Minister to make a change in practice in the House, one which is very rarely observed. I think the Standing Committee on Agriculture should have an opportunity to study the regulations section by section, because his regulatory power is so broad. I think the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Canadian Fruit Wholesalers Association and any other group or organization within the trade itself should have an opportunity to express themselves in respect of the regulations, and I think the committee should have the benefit of that. I do not believe that the regulations and regulatory power extended to the Minister under the Act should be exercised without advance warning and without consideration by the committee. Some of the committee Members, including the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), are familiar with the practice of the trade and how the regulations will or will not work. I want them to look at the regulations, particularly because I do not want overlapping. I do not want consumer legislation and agricultural legislation in the regulatory structure interfering one with the other. We have troubles enough now without that. If we are to get into packaging as mentioned in the Act, then let us know that other Act will regulate packaging, labelling, etc.

I have nothing further to say. I look forward to discussing the Bill in committee. I hope it can be done quickly because the Act is needed for the benefit of the trade; it is needed very badly and post haste.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today is one which the horticultural industry and the fruit and vegetables industry have been awaiting for some time. Since 1974 they have been operating under a procedure which does not have any form of legality; it is strictly a voluntary type of operation. This has created some problems for fruit and vegetable producers in international markets.

The Bill is designed to reimplement an arbitration procedure which was in place and well understood prior to 1974. It will apply to shippers and wholesalers or producers of fruit and vegetables both in interprovincial and international trade. It is well known in the House but perhaps less known to the general public that agricultural trade in any product within a province is within the jurisdiction of the Province, and that the rules and regulations for the conduct of trade are handled within each Province. Each of the ten Provinces have their own ways and means of ensuring that buyers and sellers are adequately treated. Basically, the Bill is to apply to interprovincial trade and to trade between Canada and the United States and Canada and other countries.

I suppose pressure for the change has been present for some time. A court case challenging the voluntary arbitrary procedure occurred in 1974. It was a case involving a Montreal wholesaler and retailer. Since that time the arbitration procedure has been open to challenge. This is the first time the Government has seen fit to formalize the procedure which existed then.

Basically, the Bill proposes to set up a Board of five members to do two things. First, it will licence people engaged in importation, exportation or interprovincial trade in any agricultural product which is defined for the purposes of the Act as fruit or vegetables. Second, any question of grade or quality of goods delivered or received will be handled in the following manner: the local Government grader will be called in to determine whether the grades described on the manifest or in the agreement between the two parties were indeed the actual grades and whether the products were the quality they were alleged to be. If there is still a dispute, there is an attempt to arbitrate it by the officials; if that fails, it goes to a Board.

This five-member Board of Arbitration will be set up with its head office in the National Capital Region, according to Bill C-98. The Board members will be appointed for a term not to exceed five years, but at the pleasure of the Minister he can drop the Board members at any time, which is fairly standard in these types of operations. As well, Board members are eligible for reappointment if they have done a good job.

• (1240)

Mr. Rose: Or continue to vote the right way.

Mr. Althouse: As my colleague has just said, or continue to vote the right way.

There are standard procedures on how to handle this situation if all the members are not there. The Bill states that a quorum shall consist of a minimum three members. It provides that members of the Board may hear cases in any part of Canada. It does not, however, set out who the members of the Board shall be, from what industry, or from what regions they should come. I assume that decision will be left either to ministerial discretion or be spelled out by regulation. I think the trade would prefer it be spelled out a little more clearly, but we can get into that matter during the hearings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Unlike some of the Bills we have dealt with, there is no requirement for a notice of meeting. It says only that three members of the Board constitute a quorum. There is nothing about how much time members of the Board shall have of notice of a meeting. This may be an important point, given the nature of the country. Canada is a far-flung country consisting of five different time zones. Some members of the Board may, in fact, need a day or more than a day's notice in order to fly to the National Capital Region, or to wherever the meeting is called. That is a point that should be considered. Perhaps during our committee hearings we might decide whether giving notice of a meeting should be set out in the Bill itself or whether it is something that could be dealt with adequately by regulation.

The procedures for laying down complaints are outlined in the Bill. They are not terribly direct; they provide some variation. The Bill simply states that where the goods delivered or received do not meet the standards, within nine months after the Board has been made aware that one or other of the parties is dissatisfied with the goods, the Board shall have dealt with the case or have been provided with a written complaint. Some complaints with which the Board will be dealing will be fairly ancient by the time they reach the Board. But the complainants must file a written complaint. That is suitable. This procedure will not cost either of the complainants a great deal of money and, according to my reading of the Bill, people will have nine months to file such complaint. That seems to me to be a good long time for the process to get off the ground.

As previous speakers have mentioned, the Board has a fair amount of power. It is considered to be a court or record and its decisions will be judicially noted. The Board, as a court of record, is empowered to call witnesses if necessary and to swear them in. This Board is, in fact, vested with all the powers, rights and privileges that are vested in a superior court of record. It can issue summonses requiring people to appear before it and requiring either producers or receivers of goods to provide any and all records that apply to the subject matter at hand.

The powers of this Board are fairly substantial. It can also receive such evidence as the Board itself considers to be relevant, trustworthy and credible to the case.

The decisions of this Board will be treated as final, the same as any court of record. The Board must list its reasons for arriving at a decision. The aggrieved parties may then appeal to a Board of Review. Probably there will be very little action in court that can be taken outside of these two forums that will be available to producers and receivers of goods. The review tribunal will consist of five members, three of whom must be available to hear any case brought before it. It appears that this will be a sort of supreme court in Canada for agricultural products and standards applied thereto.

This review tribunal's office is to be located in the National Capital Region. The duties of its members are very similar to those of the Board, with the exception that it is to be a higher court providing appeal privileges. This particular group can hear any appeal. The grievance must be filed within 30 days after the Board has reached its decision. The tribunal basically has three choices. It can affirm the finding of the Board; it can vary or cancel the decision; or it can make another decision. The procedures are outlined fairly clearly. However, I have a bit of trouble with the procedure laid down, not with what is stated in the Bill but with what is left out.

As I read the Bill, the only power the Board or the tribunal has to implement findings would be the possibility of lifting the licence which the parties involved have received from the Ministry of Agriculture. That is the only punitive action that can be taken against someone who is found to have delivered faulty products. There is no bonding provision. There is no way of protecting the aggrieved party. I think this is a reasonably serious short coming in the Bill which will have to be dealth with by amending the Bill. I hope Government Members will be presenting such an amendment; this omission has been brought to their attention. If they do not present an amendment, I hope Government Members will see fit to support an amendment from the Opposition side of the House. I am prepared to move an amendment dealing with the bonding provision, which I think should be included since the aggrieved party has no financial protection the way the Bill is framed at present.

I think it is quite necessary it should do so because one of the problems that has been outlined to us by producers and handlers of fruits and vegetables, particularly on an international basis, is the difficulties they have going into American markets. American buyers have become rather leery of dealing with Canadian products because our laws do not provide any means for settling disputes.

This Bill will change that situation. Until now, United States buyers have been demanding a bond in value equal to twice the value of every shipment that enters the United States. This bonding requirement is punitive to Canadian exporters. We in this Party believe that the bonding provision could be an integral part of the Bill and would lower the cost of bonding to those involved in the fruit and vegetables industry to make them equally competitive with U.S. producers.

We believe that this legislation is important to the entire industry, especially since the fruit and vegetables sector has great room for expansion. Canada still imports a vast amount of fruits and vegetables which our climate is capable of growing. For example, in 1981 we imported $2.8 million worth of frozen broccoli which we are capable of growing and freezing in this country. We imported $875,00 worth of frozen peas which can even be grown in the Yukon. We imported approximately $2.9 million of frozen carrots and $1.4 million in frozen spinach. Other assorted frozen vegetables were imported in the amount of $4.7 million. A great many of these products could be produced in this country and frozen here in our freezing industry. The only possible reason we are not producing these products ourselves is that the industry has not been given the support which could make it viable.

The amount of fresh produce which is imported causes greater concern. While we obviously need to import bananas and other tropical fruits, we import other fruits which we could easily grow in this country. For instance, $92.4 million worth of tomatoes are imported annually. We have a greenhouse industry in Canada which is attempting to meet some of that domestic demand, but this is being hampered to some extent by the Government's taxation policy on natural gas. Greenhouses use mainly natural gas as a source of heat during the winter months. There are, however, other heating options which have not been totally utilized. For example, on the Prairies, where I come from, the climate is much colder than in southern Ontario where most of the greenhouse industry is located, but there are greenhouses on the Prairies which function year round. They are built next to power stations which simply release their excess heat into the atmosphere. Experiments have been conducted by building greenhouses beside these stations to allow the warm air to flow in between two layers of plastic and glass to heat the air inside the greenhouse. The tomatoes and cucumbers which are being grown in these greenhouses are selling locally at a very great premium compared to what is being imported during the winter from southern California and Mexico. People find these products delicious and are willing to pay 50 per cent to 100 per cent more for them. These products are so popular that people check with the produce department in anticipation of a new shipment. These products are gone from the shelves soon after they have been offered. The only problem is that not enough is being produced now.

Another example of a product which is imported but can be grown here is potatoes. We import almost $44 million worth per year. As well, we import $36 million worth of onions. We import over $30 million worth of cabbage, broccoli and asparagus. Approximately $40 million worth of green beans, carrots and cauliflower is imported and over $30 million worth of celery. Another big import item is lettuce , of which almost $68 million worth was imported. Again, this is a product which can be grown in greenhouses. Green peppers are another potential greenhouse product. There was $17 million worth of cucumbers imported into Canada.

There are certain areas of our country where the agricultural potential could be expanded. For example, $75 million worth of apples and pears are imported annually when the Maritimes could expand the production of tree fruits. There are certain parts of New Brunswick where grain production has been declining because of the wet climate. However, those areas are suitable for growing pears and apples. These areas which have that potential should be encouraged to increase the production of soft fruits in order to provide more jobs and increase the self-sufficiency of the entire country.

We hope that this Bill will provide increased inspection services at urban markets. Many of the expanding urban centres in our country do not have the proper market facilities where this inspection service can take place. It is time for terminal markets to be established with the assistance of the provincial and federal Governments. This would make the service available to producers, wholesalers and retailers.

We are prepared to have this Bill go to committee. I suggest it is important that the Government bring in the amendments I have suggested with respect to bonding in the committee. As well, we would be interested to hear some of the Government's proposals with respect to regulations. We hope that these will be discussed in the committee and that the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary will provide us with a full description of the type of regulations which they envisage being included in the Bill so we may better understand their position.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I thought that there was an understanding that we vote now. I apologize.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Another Hon. Member wished to be recognized by the Chair.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.59 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of closing remarks to make in addition to those I made before the lunch break. I think I had described the Bill in some detail and pointed out the necessity of attempting to achieve fruit and vegetable self-sufficiency in this country, suggested some of the kinds of programs we need to assist us and how I can see that this particular Bill will assist in providing a market mechanism whereby buyers and sellers will feel some certainty that the delivered product meets the required standards, and the Bill does provide, attempts to provide or alleges to provide some sort of financial security for that process to take place. However, as I pointed out at the beginning of my speech, it seems to me that the only teeth in the Bill would be if it were to remove the licence from someone not complying with the requirements pertaining either to delivery or receiving of goods; and the legislation cries out for a bonding procedure.

I would like to spend the last two or three minutes available to me discussing the type of bond which would be suitable here. We must be reasonably flexible concerning the written regulations, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). It seems to me that there is a wide variety of sizes of businesses operating in this realm. Some do several hundred thousands of dollars worth of business in a year while others do business amounting to millions of dollars. Shipments that some businesses handle in a week amount to one or two truckloads while other companies handle several truckloads. The size of the bond in each case would have to be consistent with the size of the business which is operating. This could be worked out in discussions between the two parties, the Horticultural Council and the wholesalers group.

I would hope that the Department of Agriculture and the Board which will be set up by this legislation would have discussions to arrive at a consensus among these groups so that it will be possible for several levels of bonds to exist and for a small firm to grow. The bonding provision should not be seen as a detriment to business. As well, those kinds of discussions should occur prior to the final regulations setting the amount of licence fees, because we do not want to see the licence proving to be a detriment to anyone going into the fruit and vegetable trades.

I therefore close with a final plea that the Government provide an adequate bonding regulation in the amendments during the committee process. We are prepared to support that aspect in principle, as well as the Bill; but we will be raising the kinds of questions and concerns I have described in my remarks this afternoon.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to a conclusion the debate on Bill C-98, which is entitled an Act to amend the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act. As has been previously mentioned, all Parties in the House of Commons are generally in agreement with the Bill.

• (1410)

This is basically a housekeeping Bill. It sets down the guidelines under which a Minister of Agriculture can operate and under which the new Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act will, in effect, operate. We all look forward to this Bill being brought before the committee. The committee will have an opportunity to review the licensing, bonding and cancellation of licences. We will be able to review them in relation to the existing horticultural industry.

The legislation has been requested for some eight years. Finally, we are getting these amendments. However, we are getting them without the regulations that are normally attached to a Bill such as this. The regulations is one area we will want to look at in committee.

The Bill defines "dealer" as any person engaged in the business of purchasing or selling agricultural products. That is a rather wide scope. We hope some dealers will come to Ottawa to appear before our committee. The Bill requires dealers who engage in the importation or exportation of fruits and vegetables, or interprovincial trade in those products, which is trade between the Provinces in this country, to hold a licence to be issued for the purpose as described in the Bill. That licence will be issued by the Minister of Agriculture. This is one requirement in the legislation.

The second part of the legislation would empower the Governor in Council to make regulations, including regulations describing the products for which a licence is required. The Bill describes agricultural products as any fresh fruit or vegetable. That again is a wide range. The Bill would empower the Government to make regulations for the fruit and vegetables industry. This industry has been calling for such a move for some time.

The Bill would establish a Board of Arbitration to hear complaints against licensed dealers from, I assume, affected parties. The Board would hear complaints regarding the failure to comply with the prescribed standards that we hope to discuss at some length in the Agriculture Committee. This is done in other countries such as the United States, our largest customer. It is a step in the right direction.

The last amendment to the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act would be to establish a review tribunal to which application may be made for a review of a decision of the Board. That is a stop-gap or safety valve measure. In other words, if a party is not satisfied with the Board of Arbitration ruling, it can move to a review tribunal.

One area we will want to look at in dealing with this legislation is the regulations. While this is a move in the right direction, we do not want to get into a situation where the industry is over-regulated. I do not believe that will be a problem with the five-man group to be set up to look into the matters I have outlined. Nevertheless, that is always a concern for the agricultural industry. While the industry wants help from the Government from time to time, it does not want to be over-regulated, something that seems to be inherent in much of what the Government does.

We look forward to dealing with the legislation in committee from the point of view of making the amendments more workable and to bring this Act up to date. Hopefully our work will attract some attention in the press. When dealing with the legislation, we will want to look at the horticultural industry which makes a tremendous contribution to this country in terms of food, processing and employment.

A number of people in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes, and to a lesser extent, although increasingly, in western Canada, are employed in the horticultural industry. As far as employment is concerned, it is probably one of the largest components in the agricultural industry. From time to time the industry has felt that it has been left out with regard to how it feels the Government should operate. Over the years, it does not feel it has had protection against dumping from other countries. One such example is apples.

At the time when the marketing of apples is almost over in the United States, the picking and selling of apples in British Columbia is just starting. If the Americans have a large crop, they may get rid of the tail end of that crop by shipping it out of the country at a fire sale price. This has happened not only with apples but with other commodities. It has happened in almost every region of this country. The horticulture industry has cried foul, and rightly so. I urge the Government to do something in terms of temporary tariff protection.

I want to make a few comments about tariff protection. There is an ugly scenario developing at this time in connection with the whole question of tariffs in international trade which could have a direct impact on agriculture, specifically in the horticulture industry. I am afraid we are moving dangerously close to an all-out trade war in 1983. This is happening for a number of reasons. The main reason is that the economy in countries around the world is in poor shape. When that occurs, countries have a tendency to retrench and throw up barriers to protect their producers from products of other countries. The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade meeting at the present time is attempting to deal with that question. We made some gains in terms of freer trade at the Tokyo Round in 1978. Nevertheless, this menace to world trade and our standard of living is a real possibility.

The horticultural industry could get hurt very badly if this is allowed to happen. I hope that is going to be one of the areas we are going to be able to discuss with the horticultural industry in the Agriculture Committee because it is probably their biggest single uncertainty at the present time.

In conclusion, we are looking forward to dealing with this legislation from the point of view of seeing if we can make it more responsive to the industry's needs, if in fact they want it changed—and there is some understanding there will be some changes made; but more importantly to have a good discussion and to have the Canadian public and the Members of the Agriculture Committee get a better understanding, a better feel and a better direction for one of the most important industries in this country, the horticultural industry.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take a great deal of time in this debate because I expect that my friend who represents a lot of agriculturists in Vancouver-Kingsway would like to speak, so I will not unduly delay the House with my remarks on this agricultural topic.

I represent a riding that is partially urban and partially rural. Agriculture is a very important industry in my riding. We have many farms on which people work full-time, if they can, but most of the time they are unable to do so as they are required by the nature of their income to take other part-time jobs. So while we have a substantial number of full-time farmers, we have an even larger number of part-time agriculturists.

The main crops in my riding are such things as broccoli, cabbage, strawberries and various other kinds of small fruits. The horticultural products that could be grown there are not grown, for a variety of reasons that have been touched on by previous speakers.

That has not always been the case. When I was growing up my family depended for its income upon a cannery. It was called Canadian Canners; later on it was bought out by American interests, as so much of our canning industry has been in Canada. The Hon. Member from southern Ontario knows that the food processing industry and the preserving industry in Canada is now largely American-owned. I think the only major one that is left in Canada is Canada Packers. We know what happened to Aylmer; it was bought out I believe by Del Monte. We have Stokely-Van Camp and jolly Green Giant and a number of other American firms who are operating in business as part of the multinational food industry or agri-business industry in this country.

My hon. friend from Saskatoon reads to us these horror stories about the amounts of imports that are available in Canada, chiefly from the United States: frozen broccoli, nearly $3 million worth; frozen peas, which we can grow in abundance in many parts of Canada, almost $1 million worth; frozen carrots, nearly $3 million worth; frozen spinach, $1.4 million worth; and all kinds of frozen vegetables as well as the fresh produce which has come to us from our good friends from California, other Southern states and Mexico, are imported.

We had hoped that if there were any beneficial results from the higher energy costs, it would be the fact that importing food would be a good deal more expensive because of the transportation costs and more Canadian produce would be acceptable in our markets because of its competitive price.

When one looks at these figures dealing with cabbage, potatoes, broccoli and tomatoes, I know whole areas of the country that used to produce these commodities but no longer do so. I wonder what is the matter with us, as Canadians? We have allowed not only our preserving industry to be sold out, but, along with that, because we have sold out our canneries—there used to be about ten of them in the Province of British Columbia—it follows that the producers of those commodities have gone out of business to because there was no market for their product. As a consequence, all Canadians have suffered. We have become much more dependent on imported products, and if we import products it certainly does not produce a great deal in terms of jobs.

Some people will counter by saying that the consumer got a break by importing these products. I am not sure that that is the case. If we become so dependent on imported products that we no longer have any agricultural industry in our country, including in my own riding, I think what will happen is that we could get an ultimatum to the effect that we will have to export our water to satisfy U.S. needs in the irrigation areas that produce all these fruits and vegetables, or we will be deprived of those imports when we need them.

What we need to do is to look at ways, in an agricultural strategy, to enhance these industries, rather than let them dwindle and erode to the point where there is nothing left.

I could go on and list all the products that we used to grow. Was there a part of this that the Hon. Member missed that he would like me to repeat? I would like to name just one. Once upon a time the area that I represent, and those areas contiguous to it, produced all kinds of fresh strawberries and we had the capacity to freeze them. I understand that last year we imported something like $31 million worth of fresh strawberries. That is absolutely ludicrous. Since we have an area that can produce small fruits or soft fruits, to import $8 million or $9 million worth of frozen strawberries, I think is shameful. At the same time we have nearly two million people unemployed. Some people are quick to say yes, but they won't pick strawberries. The point is that they will and they do.

One of the things that I would like to congratulate the Government for is the changes in the unemployment insurance regulations, Section 16, which allow for the first time agricultural workers who work only a very few days at any one farm to add them up in order to qualify for the 28 days. Previous to that change by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), many of these people who worked on these farms in the Lower Mainland, and also in parts of my riding, have been forced into the arms of labour contractors in order to qualify for unemployment insurance. That was, I think, a very, very positive move. Many of us who are very quick to criticize the Government should be equally alert to opportunities to state publicly when a good job has been done in a particular area, in response to representations, to let people know that we appreciate that.

Getting back to strawberries, one of the reasons we are in difficulty in Canada in terms of fresh produce imports—and this was touched on by the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta)—is the fact that because we are a northern country we are seasonally disadvantaged. When there is a surplus at the end of the season, in some places to the south of us, such as the United States, their price goes down and offers are made to the large supermarkets in this country through brokers at a price which is much lower than the price for our production, which is just coming into its peak. While it is not technically dumping, and therefore the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has no right to intervene, it does of necessity destroy the value of our crops that are coming into peak production. Even the offer for sale of a particular commodity which competes with the domestic product is enough to drive our prices down. I can give the examples of strawberries, apricots and peaches, things that we produce extremely well in our country. That is one of the problems we have, which applies not only to the preservation or canning industry we once had, but also to the fresh produce industry.

Anyway, while I think the Bill can be supported, I would also like to express a long-standing concern over the fact that, as in so many other industries in this country, we have allowed our capacity to be eroded; and if there was ever a time when we needed to look to a change in direction to reverse this trend, which goes back almost a generation, I would think the time is now.

I do not think we should try to hold up this measure too long. I think there are improvements that might be made, but I would like to give it my general support and send it on to committee while at the same time expressing gratitude for having the opportunity to speak on a topic which is a rare one for me, inasmuch as a number of the agricultural matters we deal with relate primarily to Prairie agriculture rather than the sort of general agriculture which is part and parcel of my own riding.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this agricultural Bill, and especially pleased to follow as I do the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose). I do not know if many Members in this House know, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you do, that the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody is a very good trumpet player. You hear him around this House and around Parliament blowing his own horn constantly. I was surprised that he did not talk about his trumpet in his speech today because he talked about everything else. Seriously though, while we will have to wait until Christmas to hear further trumpeting from the Hon. Member, perhaps I can trumpet a little myself about some things which concern me about this particular Bill.

The Hon. Member, although he said very little in his speech, did say something about the fact that we used to have canneries in British Columbia. He mentioned five of them. He called it Canadian Canneries, or the can-can as opposed to what we have now, the Can-Am, the American Canneries. I do not think he was talking about music there; I think he was talking about the fact we have lost this particular business—a lot of it, if not all of it—in British Columbia.

I can remember travelling to Castlegar in the West Kootenays last summer, Mr. Speaker, and visiting the Doukhobor Museum there. It is something that I recommend that you and other Members of this House, indeed, the public, go and see. When you see it, you have to commend the spirit and hard work of the Doukhobor people who came here from Russia and who have been maligned in books by my predecessor for Vancouver-Kingsway, Simma Holt. They actually had a great deal of courage and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Hon. Member, there is a rule of relevance in the House and it is very difficult for the Chair to relate the Hon. Member's current remarks to the Bill before the House.

Mr. Waddell: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you would listen to my remarks you would see that I am dealing right now with the canneries that were in British Columbia, which the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody pointed out we have lost and which has a direct bearing on this Bill dealing with agricultural products and standards. I am hoping in committee to discuss ways to bring back this particular industry to British Columbia and other parts of Canada, because as the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody, the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) have said, we are dependent on many imported agricultural products. Later on in my speech I want to talk about how we could in fact use our energy here in Canada to grow some of those products now imported.

The Hon. Member for Lisgar spoke about GATT, Mr. Speaker, and expressed concern about the negotiations going on and the possibility of a future trade war. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that he is right to be concerned. I just returned from a United Nations Parliamentarians for World Order Conference in New York where we were told that Third World nations are now going into negative growth.

Mr. Nickerson: So is Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Not quite yet, but soon. There are these great pressures in other countries to restrict imports and restrict trade, but I think there are other ways to deal with these problems. For example, we could take a look at producing some more of our own fruit and vegetables. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre spoke eloquently about potatoes, as only he can.

Mr. Rose: It was "a peeling".

Mr. Waddell: It was an appealing speech, Mr. Speaker, I agree. He made the point that we could do a lot more. Perhaps I should not say this to my colleagues, I know they do not believe it, but the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody made reference to me as representing a riding where there are no farms, and that is true.

Mr. Rose: No, I did not. I said there were a lot of farms.

Mr. Waddell: He said there are a lot of farms. There are no farms; it is a city riding, 100 per cent consumers; it is landlocked between other ridings and you can jog around it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the House is interested in the details of the Hon. Member's riding, but there is a Bill before the House.

Mr. Waddell: You are right, Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I was just going to tell my colleagues about my farm experience, but they will not believe it.

This Bill is designed to implement arbitration procedures between producers, shippers and wholesalers in interprovincial and international trade. At present, and since 1974, no such arbitration exists, I am told, because of a court case in 1974 which resulted in the old legislation being declared ultra vires. The Horticultural Council and the Canadian Food Wholesalers Association have been trying ever since to have it reinstated. This Bill deals with that issue, and so far as it does our party supports it, and we will deal with it in committee.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, there is strong industry support for this particular Bill from both producers and consumers. I understand there is pressure from growers in the U.S. to have this Act passed because there is no method of dealing with disputes.

Thirdly, I think it is causing problems for shippers to the United States because we do not have an Act which allows recourse for buyers in the United States. As a result, U.S. buyers are demanding, in the case of disputes, a bonding of 200 per cent of the value of the shipment. That, of course, makes it difficult for our industry and we should take steps to change that situation. The Bill will require that the buyer and seller both be bonded in order to obtain a licence. A refusal to submit to bonding will result in the licence being lifted. This will put teeth into the Act and ensure that all parties are protected and are required to deal in good faith.

• (1440)

Fourthly, a buyer will have 24 hours in which to register a complaint. The first course of action will be to get an inspector to look at the load. That inspector will then try to get an agreement between the parties. If no agreement is reached, the buyer will have nine months within which to file a request for arbitration. That is reasonable, although the arbitration procedure should be examined by the committee.

Fifthly, one concern that we have about the Bill is the continuing reduction in the level of inspection services. Arbitration requires a standard and that standard, largely, is grade. There has been a reduction in the inspection service for fruits and vegetables.

The irony is that this area was asked to participate in the cost-recovery scheme last winter and now pays higher inspection fees. As a result of negotiations carried on this year, it now pays 6 per cent more than previously. Then it was faced with cutbacks in services. Mr. Speaker, this is the wrong place to cut back and the committee should look into that.

I am told that there is tremendous potential in Canada for expansion in the number and the amounts of horticultural crops grown and processed here. The federal Government must be prepared to offer more support to the horticultural industry than is provided in the Bill, however. At the GATT round taking place in Geneva at the moment, greater protection must be sought against imports. Under the agri-food strategy the Government must use grants, must provide assistance to growers and must do consumer education to expand production, processing, retailing and consumption of Canadian produce. Under the Farm Products Marketing Act, specific groups of producers, such as potato growers, should be encouraged to form national supply management boards that will have the power to control imports and exports and be able to establish prices to provide a reasonable return on labour and investment.

British Columbia has a long tradition of natural products marketing. In fact, the system was invented there and grew up during the twenties and thirties when there was a struggle for compulsory marketing. It seems to me that the suggestions I have just made could expand the use of the Farm Products Marketing Act and its Board. When I was a small beef farmer for a short period in the Fraser Valley, I certainly had an interest in that particular Act.

We are still importing a tremendous amount of fresh and frozen produce, Mr. Speaker. In 1981 we imported $2,790,000 worth of frozen broccoli. Members can think of that every time they have broccoli in the Parliamentary Restaurant. We imported $2,880,000 worth of frozen carrots, $1,412,000 worth of frozen spinach, $875,000 worth of frozen peas and $4,696,000 worth of other frozen vegetables.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, one of his colleagues read the same list into Hansard before lunch.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, this is my speech and I want to make some points with these figures. We are dealing with the Bill in principle and these figures seem to me to be very relevant to the Bill. I hope to develop my speech along that line, if I am permitted. If not, I will sit down.

I will not quote the figures relevant to fresh produce, Mr. Speaker, as I think my colleague has already put them on the record. They refer to tomatoes, potatoes, onions, cabbage, broccoli, asparagus, green beans, carrots, cauliflower, celery, lettuce, cucumbers, peppers, apples, pears, strawberries and apple juice concentrate. We imported $55,907,000 worth of apples, yet, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out the other day, Canada has a tremendous potential for an apple industry in the Okanagan Valley, an area with which I am very familiar. We should be paying attention to the amount of apples we imported in comparison with the crops produced in this country. As the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody who, as well as playing the trumpet, is an expert on strawberries, will be pleased to know—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the Hon. Member that he speak of that valley with which he is so familiar, because he is obviously not familiar with the Bill.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will get his chance to rebut my remarks when he speaks on the Bill. I would remind him that I have just presented four detailed criticisms of the Bill. If he listens—and I know Liberals do not listen—he will find that I am referring to the possibilities of Canada producing more fruit and vegetables. This is something that will have to be considered in committee.

In order to increase production we could use some of the energy sources that we have in such great abundance. That suggestion is not as far-fetched as it might seem. We must look into the possibility of using solar greenhouses. We already have the solar technology. Just this summer I attended the Energex Conference in Regina. Representatives came from all over the world and over 100 papers were presented. I would draw the attention of the Hon. Member who rose on a point of order to the studies published as a result of that Conference. He will see that a number dealt with the use of solar energy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would draw the Hon. Member's attention to the rule of relevance. If it is the desire of Members of the House that the rule of relevance should never be enforced or considered, that has to be the wish of the House. But the rule stands, and Hon. Members are requested to observe it. I would bring that to the Hon. Member's attention.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, Clause 1 of the Bill deals with the licence required for international and inter-provincial trade. That is going to raise the question of imports. I am trying to make the point that we may not have to import as much produce as we do at the moment, and I have listed crops that can be produced in Canada. I was about to introduce what I think are imaginative ways of doing this that have been proposed by Canadian scientists, and I think we could use them. If I am not permitted to do that, then it seems to me that my privileges as a Member of the House are being trespassed upon. I want to go ahead and deal with that and with the possibility of diverting energy.

I will tell you why I want to do that, Mr. Speaker. Greenhouse operators have said that the federal tax on natural gas should be refundable in order to help them compete. I think that is a good idea. It would give them a chance to expand greenhouse potential in Canada. There is a great deal of interest, even in parts of my own urban riding, in using solar greenhouses to grow crops.

• (1450)

I should like to refer to a quotation of Richard Kadulski, Chairman of the Solar Energy Society of Canada, who said:

> Rather than bemoan that present economic structures are leading us towards ruin—

This is what the Government is always saying about us in the Opposition; perhaps it should listen. He continued:

> —we should seize opportunities to reverse the trend and make ourselves more self-sufficient—at an individual or community level.

This is what the committee should take into consideration when it is discussing the horticultural industry.

Some people say that the Bill before the House is not important, that it is just a matter dealing with Canadian agricultural products and that we should let the farmer representatives in the House speak on it. I do not agree. This is why I am speaking today. I think people from urban ridings should heed the message of Richard Kadulski and his words of wisdom.

We need more federal inspectors to mediate any disputes under the Act and to ensure top quality products for consumers. Also farm markets should be encouraged and growers assisted to meet demand as it grows. One of the good things the Government has done over the past few years was to encourage the expansion of a fantastic farmer's market on Granville Island in Vancouver. It has just caught on. Local produce, as much as is possible, is coming to that market. When the committee discusses agricultural standards and deals with Clause 1 of the Bill with reference to licensing, the inspection provisions of the Bill, the Boards and the marketing, the people appointed to the Boards, the appeals of particular decisions and so on, it should consider the new urban markets. I say this because "agricultural product" under the Bill means any fresh fruit or vegetable and the word "dealer" is defined later in the Bill.

There are some people in my riding who actually operate in the farmers' market on Granville Island. I congratulate the people who had something to do with getting it going. I make the point that terminal markets should be encouraged in more urban centres in Canada.

I was serious when I referred to the use of energy sources. I remember being in Regina and being shown by two university professors how they had grown tomatoes around a pipeline. They showed us these tomatoes. They were not the rubbery ones which one purchases in Safeway or other supermarkets. They were really good tomatoes. This is an example of what could be developed as a spin-off from such a Canadian industry. Anyone who has lived in Yellowknife, as I did for a couple of years, has gone to the supermarket there and seen the tremendous cost of food, especially fresh vegetables and fruit, and often frozen foods. I think the north could use some of the spin-offs from our energy power for such greenhouses in which to grow produce.

Finally, I should like to refer to a friend of mine who immigrated from Korea to the Fraser Valley in the Richmond Delta area. He had invented a movable greenhouse. He was able to plant his crop, and because the crops are quite early there, he was able to plant a couple of them. When a crop was finished, he would move the greenhouse in order to plant another crop and so on. It is a little invention, but it indicates the imagination of many Canadians in various walks of life, whether it is in the greenhouse industry, in tomatoes, in the Energex Conference or urban markets. We can do anything we want in Canada even though we are a cold country. I think we can cut down on the imports of such produce as broccoli, tomatoes and so on.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I intervene in this debate particularly because of Subsections 6.2 and 6.7, among other things. There was a famous exchange in the British Parliament when Winston Churchill extended the rationing of coal and fish in Great Britain during the War. Nye Bevan rose in response and said, "Mr. Speaker, England is an island of coal surrounded by a sea of fish, and only the organizational genius of the Right Honourable gentleman could see to it that we had a shortage of both".

Similarly, Canada is a country full of grain, with many bakers and bakery workers. Only the organizational genius of the Government could see to it that we are using American grain to make buns in the United States, to be brought up to Canada for sale through an outfit called McDonald's. This is an example of what has happened for a long time in the Canadian food chain, from the producer to the consumer. Consequently, it is an example of how the ability of Canadian producers to provide Canadians with more production has been reduced. Mainly it has gone into the hands of producers of fruit, vegetables, grain and grain products in the United States.

If, as and when we have to import fresh fruit and vegetables, surely Canada should be concentrating on importing from countries which definitely need the benefit of the export trade—and I am thinking of countries such as Mexico, and those in the Caribbean and Central America—rather than relying on the producers of fruit, vegetables, grain and grain products in the United States, mostly owned and controlled by oligopolies or whatever in the food production, processing, transportation, wholesaling and retailing business.

• (1500)

If I could illustrate, an agriculture product is a grain product, or vice versa. Let me illustrate what is happening to trade in British Columbia. In 1967-1968 British Columbia imported $1 million worth of bread and bakery products from the United States and exported $2.3 million worth of those products. By last year, 1980-1981, British Columbia was exporting $300,000 worth of bread and bakery products while importing from the United States $11.8 million worth. That is what has happened in that brief period of time from 1967 to 1981, a span of 15 years. Not only has there been a reversal in trade, but it has been a reversal in the order of ten times in dollar figures.

The same thing applies to production, processing—particularly processing—and the wholesaling of fruit and vegetable products. Much of the goods produced in Canada are canned and processed south of the forty-ninth parallel. Again, only the organizational genius of this Government could see to it that we had a shortage of processing capability in Canada for the food products that we produce ourselves.

It is not just some narrow nationalism or protectionism that I am talking about, I am talking about our failure to meet much more of Canada's needs by Canadian producers and processors.

Canadian producers are being victimized by fire sale grain prices in the United States. As a result, Canadian flour costs 45 per cent more in Vancouver than it does in Seattle.

Now look at what has happened. McDonald's wants to import buns. McDonald's restaurants cancelled their contracts with McGavin's bakery. Forty-four jobs were lost in British Columbia, 19 in Manitoba and 11 in Saskatchewan. What did McDonald's do? American grain is now used to make American buns to send to the Prairie Provinces where we have the best and the most grain in the world. I have eaten buns made in the United States, Mr. Speaker. They look like they taste, like compressed kleenex. If McDonald's does not like the buns that we make in Regina, Winnipeg or Vancouver, they can damn well go somewhere else to sell their buns. The bun fight is between two corporate empires. What does that accomplish? It picks the pockets of both the farmers and the consumers.

As I said, Canadian flour mills do charge, thanks to the Canadian Wheat Board ensuring a reasonable price to our grain producers—more for flour, in fact, 45 per cent more for flour than the Americans do. A farmer gets only 12 per cent or 13 per cent of the retail price of bread, the rest goes to the middleman.

It is interesting to note that McGavin's is controlled by flour milling companies, 60 per cent owned by Ogilvie Flour Mills—and I want to do a little more research on this but it seems to me that it, in turn, is owned by somebody down south of the forty-ninth parallel—and 40 per cent owned by Maple Leaf Flour Mills, which is in turn, owned by—you guessed it—the CPR.

If the McDonald's clan want to have a feud with the McGavin's clan, they should not be allowed to use bakery workers as cannon fodder.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): What has that got to do with horticulture?

Mr. Benjamin: I can tell the hon. gentleman that this is nothing but an additional example of what has been happening. How many fruit and vegetable processing plants since the early 1960s have been shut down in Canada while the processing of that product takes place south of the 49th parallel?

This kind of legislation is as much in the best interests of those who send fruit and vegetable products into Canada as it is in the interests of Canadians, whether they be producers or consumers. It used to be that the farmers, no matter what product they produced, used to deal directly with consumers, or nearly directly, but they have been driven farther apart by separate corporate intervention in the food chain, and the number of hands the food has to pass through between the producers and the consumers keeps increasing. Everybody else takes their bite off the top on the way.

This trans-border ownership of food processing has and will disintegrate the Canadian food system into little branches of regional economies of the United States. From a corporate point of view it makes sense. It makes sense for corporations to consolidate production and trade north and south across the U.S.-Canadian border rather than trade east and west across Canada. Canadian consumers and farmers lose because our traditional ways of dealing with each other are lost in the larger U.S. market.

The CPR is acquiring running rights over the Rock Island Railway to Kansas City, and through other arrangements can acquire transportation rights all the way to the Gulf of Mexico. The CPR wants higher rates on agricultural products then the CPR can move those goods to the Gulf of Mexico, rather than by way of Vancouver and the St. Lawrence Seaway. Trans-border ownership of food processing causes boom and bust cycles in the regions as the relative cost of production changes. Today it is a flour mill in Toronto—why they are milling wheat in Toronto, I do not know, because they do not grow a bushel of wheat in Toronto—and tomorrow it is in Mississippi. Today it is a packing plant in Calgary; tomorrow it is in California to increase economies of scale for some multinational. This harms our primary producers, processors and the workers in those processing plants here in Canada.

I am not particularly worried about whether some U.S. exporter of fruit and vegetables, or any other agricultural product into Canada, thinks he is getting a good price or not. I am not particularly interested in that. I would be more concerned about seeing to it that agricultural producers in countries that desperately need the business, like Mexico, there in the Caribbean, or those in Central American, get a good price for their product than I would be concerned for the multinational, owned and operated in the United States. If our country allows our farmers to go bankrupt, we will have to pay more for food in the future. It is in our interest to build east-west links rather than wait with supine acquiescence for greater entry of the United States into our markets, while their markets are becoming less penetrable. The U.S. has closed its borders to beef imports from Canada for the rest of this year. So much for that great friendly neighbour and the free trade proponents south of the 49th parallel. The minute Canada becomes more than self sufficient, not only in beef but in any other agricultural product, you will find the forty-ninth parallel closed to Canadian primary producers and processors. Yet we spend time trying to be extra nice to people who send fruit, vegetables and other processed agricultural products into Canada by seeing that they get a fair price. If they are not satisfied with the price, the Government will help them get a preferable one. It has been nothing but a series of governments of both the Liberal and Tory political stripe that have caused the loss of some 400,000 family farms in Canada in the last 25 years. I am not suggesting that all of these farms could have stayed in business, but the policies which have been pursued on prices, production, processing, importing and exporting by successive governments have decreased our family farm population to an all-time low. This has increased our dependency on imported fruits and vegetables and other agricultural products while decreasing our capacity to gain self-sufficiency in Canada.

My colleagues from British Columbia have talked about our failure to become involved in massive greenhouse operations in order to increase our self-sufficiency, particularly in the production of vegetables. If we will not take advantage of that opportunity, I believe our country should give priority to countries like Mexico and those in Central America for those fruits and vegetables that we import so that we do not have to rely on a multinational corporation which may own supermarkets and wholesale companies in Canada. These multinational companies import their products here and distribute them through their retail outlets at higher costs to the consumers. Sometimes fruits and vegetables which are grown in Canada are processed in the United States and shipped back here. Surely that does not make us worthy of our independence. It is only more of that supine acquiesence that successive old line Party governments have carried on for decades.

The entire costs of those primary producers of fruit, vegetables and grain are being squeezed not only by foreign-owned multinational corporations but by our own corporations as well. Again, Canadian Pacific is squeezing farmers on both their input costs and output costs. Canadian Pacific manufacturers and supplies fertilizers and feeds to farmers. It has a monopoly on the transport of many agricultural products. It is involved in flour milling and retailing. It is involved in meat packing. It is extracting the last possible drop of blood from farmers by giving them the lowest possible prices. All along that production chain, and even at its end, CP charges all that the traffic can bear.

It seems to me that an act to amend the Agricultural Products Standards Act is irrelevant if the farming community is being given to corporations beyond our borders or being handed to agricultural monopolies by default. Government regulations will not require the powerful economic empires to provide high standards of agricultural production because many of those empires, both in Canada and beyond, have more influence on the Government than the regulations. Those companies certainly have more influence than the primary producers do.

In the years that I have been here I have seen producers in the horticultural industry, like the members of the B.C. Fruit Growers and the members of the Niagara Fruit and Vegetable Growers, come here many times to appeal for help, but they lose each time. Nothing has really changed in terms of the health, welfare, good order and growth of the fruit and vegetable industry. Unless and until the Government sets its priorities for an increase of Canadian production and processing in Canada and the expansion of that industry, the situation will not improve.

With respect to those products which we must import during the winter, the Government must give priority to those nations most in need and buy their fruits and vegetables and other agricultural products. Surely that would be more helpful than providing the continuous aid, comfort and protection for corporations outside of our borders which are not interested in the welfare of Canadian producers. They could not care less about what happens to Canadian producers. They can get their products somewhere else.

I return to the matter of the bakery products as an example of what has been happening. The Government, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in the House, as well as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who is the great defender and protector of Canadian farmers, sat by while a licence was issued for a corporation like McDonald's to import buns made out of American grain into Canada. That is another symptom of the disease that we have seen in our agricultural industry. That is the most recent example. The Minister even pats McDonald's on the back and says that he believes that McDonald's is showing itself to be a responsible corporate citizen in making this decision. I wish he would go to work for McDonald's, preferably south of the 49th parallel.

It is my hope that when this legislation is dealt with in committee Members from all Parties will seriously consider the suggestions made by all those who spoke. Hopefully, a unanimous report will be submitted that recommends the Government introduce other measures to deal with the production and processing of all agricultural products in Canada, by Canadians and for Canadians. I also hope that this report will emphasize carrying on trade with those countries which desparately need exports of those products which we need.

I might remind the House that the same McDonald's Corporation produced a film in tribute to our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Well, I will be darned. What is their slogan?

Mr. Rose: "We do it all for you."

Mr. Benjamin: "We do it all for you." This great Canadian corporate citizen produced a film in tribute to the Prime Minister. What happens? It gets a permit from the Canadian Wheat Board to import buns into Canada made out of United States wheat. I am trying to be most generous and I am not concluding for one moment that this is why it go the permit. Perish the thought! The Prime Minister would not stand for that, and neither would the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Minister of Transport, or the Minister of Agriculture. It is pure coincidence that McDonald's produce buns and get a permit from the Canadian Board.

• (1520)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi rises on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to follow this debate, although it is somewhat difficult. I would like Your Honour, the Hon. Member or someone in the House, to explain to me what the importation of buns by McDonald's has to do with horticulture. We have discussed this now for some minutes and it seems to me that we are involved in a filibuster, and if we are, let us say that it is a filibuster, but let us not pretend that we are discussing horticulture when we are discussing buns. Someone could burn his buns.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite welcome to go back to his office and examine his buns—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): No, no. I must indicate to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that my predecessor in the Chair had privately expressed some concern to me as to whether or not relevancy was still being taken into consideration. Therefore, I can only add a suggestion that perhaps the Hon. Member for Regina West would like to make some particular effort to addressing himself to the Bill in question.

An Hon. Member: No bun intended.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): And no bun intended.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I meant no bun, either. I am simply applying the most recent example of what has happened in international trade concerning buns, and it applies to what has happened before in international trade with Canada in fruit, vegetables and floral products. By the way, I have completed my remarks about buns except for one point. The president of McDonald's, Mr. Cohen, is also one of the top Liberal fund raisers in downtown Toronto. It is passing strange that these things happen. Well, maybe it is not so strange that these kinds of things can happen in the realms of the old line Parties.

I want to conclude by saying that the attention of the House to the items in the Bill has also been evident concerning many other aspects of fruits, vegetables and other agricultural products. They must be dealt with to make legislation such as this less necessary, if necessary at all. I hope that the Agriculture Committee will apply itself to a second report when it reports the Bill back, one which deals with these other aspects which are germane to the legislation.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who is not from an agricultural area, I, too, intend to speak briefly on this matter. It is a subject which, although of primary importance to those people who represent agricultural areas, is also interesting to all Members of Parliament. We all have a vested interest in agriculture because we all eat. Unlike the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, it is my intention to obey the rules of relevancy and discuss Bill C-98 which is before us and what that Bill intends to do. It intends to modify or amend Section 6 of the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act. If passed into law, the new Section will read:

No dealer shall engage in the importation into or the exportation from Canada of, or in interprovincial trade in, any agricultural product—

That is the intention of the Bill. One will not be able to ship blueberries from the Province of Quebec to the Province of Ontario. One will not be able to grow cherries in the Okanagan and ship them into Alberta without having a licence and the authority of the Minister so to do. There might be some reason why one would want to create some impediment to international trade, but having to get the permission of the Government to ship agricultural products from one Province to another in Canada is, in my opinion, detrimental to the interests of the consumers in all Provinces. What we are doing with legislation like this and legislation such as that of the various marketing boards in different Provinces, is to make Canadian agriculture and horticulture inefficient and unable to compete internationally, increasing the final price paid by the Canadian consumer.

This legislation is typical Liberal legislation, when one gets down to reading the fine print. It is very bureaucratic, very arbitrary, and ensures jobs for the boys. In order to regulate interprovincial trade in agricultural products, they will establish a board. This is a favourite trick. They will establish a board under Clause 6.1(1). It will contain not less than three and not more than five members, appointed by the Minister, another five people he can appoint to another one of these boards, and each one of these people will be eligible to serve a term not exceeding five years and will be eligible for reappointment. Anyway, each of these people will serve at the Minister's pleasure.

In how many pieces of legislation have we seen a similar set-up where there is a board to be established having judicial powers, to be appointed by the Minister at the Minister's pleasure? I am scared of legislation like this. There might be times when it is reasonable to have it, but everything brought before us seems to contain similar provisions. It is dangerous. We are balkanizing commerce and agricultural products in Canada in establishing these boards, which are creatures of patronage, or can be. The danger is already there. Instead of having competition between producers of horticultural and agricultural products, instead of having proper competition between people engaged in the marketing of those products, we are encouraging these people to compete by hiring lawyers and appearing before the boards to argue their cases, to see who has the lawyer who can present the fanciest argument in legal terms, and they are not competing in a way which would reduce costs and increase efficiency.

Each member of this board is to be paid a significant amount of money authorized by the Treasury Board. That is a standard provision. Because these board members are generalists, very often they are appointed because they happen to be of the same political persuasion and Party as the government in office. That has been known to happen. However, because they are generalists and do not profess to be experts in cherries, cucumbers or some other particular product or method of marketing, the next thing they must do is to form a technical advisory committee. How many times have we seen that happen? Then, very often, besides having a technical committee, they say that they want input from the consumer and the marketing board, so they set up yet another advisory board to advise the board, which actually possesses quasi-judicial powers. The matter just escalates and gets bigger. More and more people become involved, the matter becomes more and more bureaucratic, and there is more and more difficulty in getting a decision from the board.

Under any reasonable method of operating one of these boards, the decision of the board should be pretty well final in most circumstances. If someone, after having received a decision of the board, thinks that it is not the right decision, or not a point of law, he should be able to appeal it to a court of competent jurisdiction. Under this Act, that will not be the case. Under 6.3(1) we have a new gimmick, a new board called the Review Tribunal, which will be established in a very similar manner. It will consist of people who owe their allegiance to the Minister, having been appointed by him and serving at his pleasure. It is another board to oversee the one established in the Act. It is a gimmick of gimmicks.

I do not think we need a review tribunal. It is superfluous and will only exist to serve the purposes of the Minister, allowing him to appoint a few more of his friends.

When any Act is introduced into this House by the Liberal Government, the first thing I do is to turn to that section which allows the Government to make regulations. I can guarantee that there is always a section which gives wide-sweeping regulation-making powers. In fact, very often Bills are presented that might as well contain only two clauses, the title and the regulation-making authority.

In the regulatory powers assigned to the Governor in Council under 6.7(1), there is power to prescribe any agricultural product for which a dealer requires a licence. Licences must be renewed annually under 6.7(1). A person must make application for the licence. He should be able to keep that licence unless he has disobeyed the law or there is other good reason to take it away. Of course, that would not employ enough people in the Department of Agriculture or require enough people to sit on these boards. Therefore, each year these people must fill in another group of forms in order to renew their licence.

In paragraph (c) of the regulations, we find something rather frightening. It is left to the Governor in Council to decide the circumstances under which the Minister may suspend or cancel a licence. That is absolute. The Minister will have the power of life and death over somebody whose business it is to deal interprovincially or internationally in agricultural products. There is no use having a board or tribunal supposedly offering some degree of protection to these people because the Minister can have the arbitrary power to take away a licence from someone whose livelihood depends on it. Is there any recourse?

This is typical of the Liberal Government which wants to vest in itself and its democratic right life-and-death power over citizens who should be able to engage in any business they want. There is another favourite. It also prescribes all the records that the licencees have to keep. You can be sure there will be a lot of records and papers to be kept.

At the end we come to the hooker. It is always there. It is the power that gives the Government regulation-making authority over virtually anything. If there is anything not listed here and not covered, they have the regulation-making power under Section 6. They have the power to regulate anything they want.

I do not like this kind of legislation. It strangles commerce, in this case commerce in agricultural-horticultural products. If there is need for standards in agricultural products and a need for these standards to be kept, we can rely on the good graces of the dealers and the inter-relationship between the agricultural product dealers. There is no need for the Government to come in except to establish certain standards.

If a dealer orders Grade A plums and a shipment arrives which is substandard, there is no need for the Minister or any board to become involved. If the dealer receives a substandard product, he will not deal with that supplier for very long. The problem will resolve itself. Alternatively, the dealer can sue in a court of competent jurisdiction. We do not need boards of the type envisaged by this Act.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is attending the GATT meeting in Europe. He is stating that the nations of the world should try to avoid those things that happened in the thirties when protectionism took over and destroyed trade and commerce throughout the world. Our Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying one thing at the meeting in Europe, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is in this House introducing legislation which will have entirely the opposite effect.

Instead of concentrating on more and more protection, we should be concentrating on ways of becoming more competitive internationally. That would expand rather than contract trade. It would give consumers of agricultural products, which we all are, cheaper and better quality food and would not threaten the livelihood of people in the agricultural industry, as is being done with legislation of this kind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 20, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-12, respecting bankruptcy and insolvency, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this Bill, I recognize that it is very complex, running a little over 300 pages. Certainly it is going to take a considerable degree of time to get through Committee. There is no doubt that Canadians want a Bill of this nature, but there are certain things that should be taken into consideration in the passage of this Bill. I believe the old bankruptcy Act is about 35 years old, nevertheless if it is going to be 35 years before we get another change to this Bill, so we had better make sure that it is going to do the job for which it was intended.

There are a greater number of bankruptcies now in Canada than ever before. In the depression of the thirties, there were not the number of bankruptcies with which we are now having to cope, simply because in those days credit was not so readily available. Things tightened up, but people were not forced into bankruptcy because they were not carrying the amount of debt that people are carrying today. We have allowed ourselves to get involved in a debt-ridden society, which perhaps started about 20 years ago when money started to free up and more and more of it became available. We got into revolving accounts that revolved over a period of three years, which meant that people were buying things and paying for them over an extended period of three years, things that otherwise they would have saved for and bought at the end of three years. Chargex was introduced, and that further extended the credit. We have witnessed a phenomenon that has never been seen before in Canadian history to the extent that it is today, which is the amount of credit that has been extended to Canadian people, either individually or in businesses.

At the present time there are in Canada about 40 per cent more bankruptcies than there were one year ago. I recognize that during the last quarter of this year this trend has slowed down somewhat, but nevertheless when you consider a 40 per cent increase, I think it is the responsibility of those of us who are elected as representatives of the people to make sure that there is legislation in place that is going to protect people.

In the January to October period of 1982, in the farming community, we find that there has been a 50 per cent increase in bankruptcies over last year. Last year there were 230 from January to October, and this year there are 344. One of the unfortunate things is the fact that the Province of Quebec has been hardest hit by this. This point was brought out in the Standing Committee on Agriculture yesterday evening when the Farm Credit people noted that there is an increasing debt load which somebody will have to carry. Possibly it is going to be all of the farmers in the country who are going to have to pick up this extra debt load. West of Ontario there were 53 bankruptcies last year; this year there are 68. That is a 20 per cent increase. Ontario had 123 this year and 126 last year, which means that their bankruptcies are going down this year. Quebec had 145 bankruptcies this year and they had 45 last year, and that is well over a 200 per cent increase. This is in the farming community. Unfortunately these figures do not include all those cases where farmers have just gone out of business, closed their doors, sold their assets and just shut down. There is no way of actually knowing just what that figure might be.

In view of this, I think it tells us, as elected Members of Parliament, that we had better give special attention to the farming community. We have tried to impress upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that while he was minister of Energy he did untold damage to the agricultural industry by bringing in the National Energy Program in the form that he did, and then putting on the excise tax on energy that is used in the production of food and the operation of the farm. Farmers are big users of energy, and when you consider that somewhere between 28 per cent and 33 per cent of their fuel costs is excise tax going to the federal Government, I think possibly the federal Government had better take notice of that, act accordingly and do something about it.

The Government has to realize that we are living north of the 49th parallel, it is cold, it takes more to heat our businesses and it takes more to heat our homes. It is something that really we cannot do anything about. We are not living in a southern clime where we do not have to worry about that. We recognize that we are in the northern part of the hemisphere, and it is costly to heat our homes. All this adds to our cost of living. When you consider that the same percentages of excise tax apply to the cost of heating our homes as apply to the energy for operation of our farms, that should be looked at.

The Minister of Finance says that he would like to cut down the inflationary aspect. There is nothing more inflationary, Mr. Speaker, than adding absolute costs to our cost of living, such as heating our homes and our businesses. All this adds to the problem that people have in trying to keep their businesses operating. With these extra costs added on, some of them start sinking gradually into the red, and there is no way that they are going to get out. Therefore you have to realize that people are caught in this dilemma and the Government can do something about it. People are looking for the Government to do something about it in order that this rate of bankruptcies may be lessened. Unfortunately, many people have been misled.

A particular incident I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members of the House of Commons that related to our community in Red Deer has to do with a gentleman from Montreal who sold his business and decided that he was going to invest his money somewhere where he thought it was safe. There was an advertisement in the paper from a group of people in Willowdale, Ontario who were making an investment in Alberta, in fact, in my City of Red Deer. He had been told that the place to put his money was in Alberta. These people were investing in a real estate project out there, so he invested his life earnings in that project. Unfortunately either through lack of experience or inflationary costs or for some other reason, the construction of the building was not budgeted properly. Therefore the money that they had borrowed from the lending institution, in this case an insurance company, was not sufficient to complete the facility so it could be put into operation. They could not get funds to complete the project and, as a result of this, the lending institution decided that they were going to move in and foreclose, although the construction was only half completed. The people who initiated the construction could not raise any more money so they lost all they had put into it. Along with that, this gentleman from Montreal, who wanted to put his life savings where it would be protected and he would have a return from it for the rest of his life, lost it all.

It is very sad, Mr. Speaker, that we have this kind of situation. When we deal with a Bill such as C-12, we have to recognize that there should be some kind of protection put into place, if we possibly can, for cases of bankruptcy such as this. There were a lot of subcontractors who lost hundreds of thousands of dollars on this project, too. They had wanted to take over the project from the lending institution to see if they could not put it together, finish it up and thereby get their money out of it. But no, it went down the tubes because the lending institution put it up for tender, somebody thought it was a good thing and grabbed it and paid off the lending institution. They got their money back, but the subcontractors and the fellow from Montreal lost everything. It is a sad situation and we have to recognize this is happening.

Another case in my community is that of farmers who had delivered rapeseed to a processing plant. The plant was expanding and, well, it is a long story but a lot of people recognize the problems of trying to process rapeseed in western Canada in competition with processors in Japan as well as those in eastern Canada. These producers had delivered rapeseed to the plant for processing, and the agreement was that they could sell the rapeseed any time they wanted, at whatever the price was that day. This was their option. They thought it was a good deal, but all of a sudden we find out that the Canada Grain Commission moved in on the processing plant to pick up what they call their letter of credit, or what some people refer to as a bond. In this case, it amounted to $600,000. When we went through the Bank Act, Mr. Speaker, we thought we had protection for those people. When they phoned me about the problem I said, well, we will protect you up to, I think it was $100,000. My good friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) knows what I am talking about. We had quite a battle over that in committee, and we thought we had protection for the farmers. However, we found out in order for the farmers to be protected under that section of the Bank Act—my colleague is nodding his head, he agrees with me—the business had to go into bankruptcy. However, in this case the lending institution did not allow that business to go into bankruptcy because they had control of the shares, thereby having total control of the plants' assets. Then we find out that the business itself had apparently been over-valued. It had been assessed at $8 million, but it turns out to be worth probably about $4 million or $5 million. So when you have a bank which has lent $5 million or $6 million and the farmers are owed about $1.25 million, you can understand that there is just not enough to go around.

In any event, the farmers felt that they were protected under this bond worth $600,000. It would at least give them somewhere between 43 cents and 45 cents on the dollar. But what do we find? The bank is now seeking a court order in an attempt to get its hands on the $600,000 as well.

I am not condemning the banks for doing that because they are good business people, they are out to protect their own interests, and you cannot condemn them for that. But somewhere along the line we have to try to provide some protection for producers in our bankruptcy legislation. That is why I think this Act deserves a great deal of scrutiny in committee, so that we will come out with the best possible Act that we can, giving as much protection as we can to our producers. There is a feeling in the business community that Bill C-12 is inadequate in so far as receivership is concerned.

There is another area of concern which perhaps relates right back to the earlier example I gave you, Mr. Speaker, where wage earners or subcontractors are not protected. The problems for employees or farmers increased tremendously under receivership as opposed to bankruptcy. When they go into bankruptcy, the are protected. But nevertheless, there always seems to be a way of getting around the problems which seem to surface when these situations develop. I guess possibly it is because the lawyers never cease to do their work and they devise ways and means of advising people how to get around these problems in order to protect their clients. But I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that somewhere along the line the suppliers of merchandise and products of any kind, or the working man's wages, should be protected in one form or another.

Another thing I think we have to consider is the sharing of all assets in a bankruptcy so that everyone involved is treated equally. There is another aspect of this Bankruptcy Act which I would like to deal with in relation to the Bank Act. However, I would not like to start today as I think I have only about a minute left. So with that, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could call it four o'clock?

TAXATION

SUGGESTED REINTRODUCTION OF MEASURES RESPECTING CAPITAL GAINS TAXATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reintroducing in this Session, the three measures affecting taxation on capital gains, namely, the common stock investment plan changes in the treatment of capital gains, Registered Retirement Savings Plans and the provision for transfer of capital gains on farming assets to RRSPs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce this motion with regard to capital gains. At this time in Canada particularly we are finding in the business sector across the country a drying up of capital funds available to the private sector for investment purposes. That is the kind of investment that is needed to get the economy going, particularly in the high-job creation, small business sector.

• (1600)

I should like to focus my remarks now on the plight of the farmer in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Normally, farmers do not contribute to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan. Generally speaking, they put all the money realized from their operation back into the purchase of equipment and making improvements. At least, that was the idea prior to the Government deciding to apply the capital gains tax to farmers. Usually, when a farmer reached the age of retirement he would sell his farm on the open market and use the proceeds as retirement income. In the Prairie communities today, you will find people who have lived all their lives on a farm and built it up to a viable operation, then sold it and moved to town when it came time to retire. As a rule they do not move to Phoenix or California or Hawaii but into places like Biggar, Saskatchewan, Two Hills, Vegreville, Athabasca, Slave Lake or High Prairie, where they live out their days among their friends. The Government has virtually made that an impossible dream.

At present, if a farmer sells his property to his son or daughter, he is charged capital gains tax on the proceeds. I received a letter from a farmer who sold his operation and found that the total capital gains tax payable exceeded the down payment he received. He had built up the farm and poured all he could into it, intending to retire and sell it, using the proceeds to buy a house in town for himself and his wife.

The Crosbie budget introduced a measure to provide that $200,000 of the proceeds of the sale of a farm could be rolled into a Registered Retirement Savings Plan, tax free. I submit that is not too much for a farmer to expect, and I think it is imperative that the House reconsider that suggestion. We all know the sad tale of the Crosbie budget; the Liberals and the NDP combined to defeat the budget and, as a result, farmers were left out in the cold.

When my NDP colleagues go out seeking the farm vote in the next election, I think they should remind farmers that they are now subject to the capital gains tax because of that Party's action.

In 1980, the Liberals were re-elected on what would appear to be empty promises. They had promised to examine the capital gains tax legislation but all that appeared in the October budget was a promise of a discussion paper on the subject. That paper has not yet appeared, Mr. Speaker, and farmers have not been approached to contribute to it. In November, 1981 there was another budget which further penalized the farmer on the sale of land. Even with all there retreats and flip-flops that appeared in that budget, this measure was not retracted. There is still no relief for farmers.

A search of the records shows that as far back as 1974 the Liberal Government promised relief for farmers by amending the capital gains tax legislation. This has not happened, despite the promises of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the various ministers of finance. Of course, the Minister of Agriculture says that campaign promises do not count! I find that statement unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. I think we must live up to our obligations to the farmers.

It is imperative that we move to bring in legislation that will allow relief from taxes when farmers sell their operations. In some cases, it happens that if a fifth or sixth generation farmer decides to sell to an outsider, he has to pay the accumulated taxes of six generations. That certainly is not right, and I implore Members of the House to adopt the motion which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reintroducing in this Session, the three measures affecting taxation on capital gains, namely, the common stock investment plan changes in the treatment of capital gains, Registered Retirement Savings Plans and the provision for transfer of capital gains on farming assets to RRSPs.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the motion put forward by my friend, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). He has put his finger on a very important problem. In fact, however, the Government has taken steps to move on this matter. The Lortie Committee called for the establishment of a registered share investment program which would allow capital gains to be paid only on the real gain, as opposed to the total gain which includes the inflationary component; in other words, indexing the value of common shares to make it more attractive for investors to invest in equities.

The Hon. Member put his finger on another important problem, the issue of capital gains realized within a RRSP, which are taxed as normal income when they are withdrawn. It seems to me only fair that if we have a capital gains tax which is half the normal tax rate, that the same tax rate be applied to income, be it from a RRSP or from capital gains in the normal sense.

• (1610)

I think the Hon. Member has a very good point. I assure him that those issues have been raised with the Government and with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I know that on the Registered Share Investment Plan the Lortie Commission recommended that we move ahead with it and that the Minister of Finance indicated that he intended to do so. On the Registered Retirement Savings Plan and the dealing with capital gains there, I am sure it is very logical and I am sure the Minister of Finance will look favourably on it as well. That is my personal opinion, given that we will be introducing RSIPs, which effectively means that only the real gain will be taxed. Basically the same principles are involved as in taxing capital gains out of RRSPs.

There is some relief for farmers if they sell their farms or they are passed from one generation to the next. For example, they have the benefit of what is known as a capital gains reserve for five years, over which time the capital gains can be spread for tax purposes.

During the hearings we had some time ago on income tax matters, the question of capital gains was raised as it relates to family farms and the intergenerational transfer of family farms. In that case farmers who sell or pass land on to one of their children can spread the capital gains tax over a period of up to ten years.

The Hon. Member touched upon some very interesting and some very important points, but we are probably tinkering around the edges of the problem. If we are to talk about capital gains, capital gains tax and how to modify it, it is more important to understand why we have capital gains tax in the first place and, with the present tax structure, why it is essential to have that tax. I think we have to talk about modifications to the tax system, as the Hon. Minister of Finance indicated in the two speeches which he made in the last few days. He dealt with the matter of the complexity of the tax system, which is terribly important, indicated that we need to do something to reduce the complexity. In the Finance Committee yesterday the Minister also indicated that this was especially a problem in the area of small business taxation.

Hon. Members opposite, the Parliamentary Secretary and myself heard about that problem during the month of September when there were hearings into the Income Tax Act and the proposed changes which were put forward in ways and means motions from the November and June budgets. We heard time and again from representatives of the small business community, the tax profession, and the accounting profession that the small business tax system was in total disarray. We heard that small-businessmen could not understand the tax system, and that it was costing them substantial amounts of money. This was also brought to the attention of the Minister. In a speech to the Canadian Tax Foundation the other day he asked its representatives to come forward with recommendations on how the tax system, as it applies to small business, can be greatly simplified to improve the environment for small business people.

Let me say a few things about the tax system, how it got where it is today and how the drive came for capital gains tax. If Hon. Members remember, it came forward during the time of the tax reform in the early 1970s. It was designed to resolve certain types of problems which existed then. With the elimination of capital gains tax today, we would be right back into the situation of having the same problems and of having to find some way to resolve them. Capital gains tax was designed to resolve those problems, and it has resolved them to a great extent. If we are talking about removing capital gains tax and about improving the environment for equity investment, there are other things which must be done as precursors before we can remove or significantly modify capital gains tax.

Let me return to the basic principles of taxation, but especially the income tax system, in the commodity tax, sales tax and income tax systems. On the basis of the income tax system itself, the basic theory behind it underpins our entire structure which is the same as that in the United States, Britain, France, Germany and Japan. That basic theory is that income is generated in the creation of wealth and in the production of goods and services, and that the income generated from the production of goods and services should be taxed somewhere between the time it is created and the time it goes into the consumption stream, or when someone uses it to buy goods and services for consumption purposes. Basically the theory is that it should be taxed somewhere in the line between creation and consumption; that is the basic principle behind taxation.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I draw the attention of the House to the improvement in the Chair, in the person of the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt).

Mr. Evans: The principle about which we are talking is income being taxed once, not twice. This is the whole basis behind deductions and exemptions in the system. Any moneys expended to earn income, whether it be wages and salaries paid, monies spent for good and services, or raw materials to go into products, are deductible and become taxable income in someone else's hand. The flow of income through the system created by the production of goods or services will be taxed somewhere, in somebody's hands, as it goes from creation to consumption. The whole thing will be subject to tax at some point.

Another fundamental feature of the tax system is the timing of taxation. There has been a great deal of ongoing discussion, and much of the argument about capital gains tax, capital gains reserves, income averaging annuities, Registered Retirement Savings Plans and so on, has revolved around the issue of timing—when do we tax it between the point of creation and the point of consumption? There is much dispute as to whether it should be a purely income-based tax system, indicating that as soon as the money is earned it should be taxed. This gives rise to such things as the taxation of accrued income, a very valid and legitimate way of taxing, assuming we want an income-based tax system.

As a general rule in that system we tend to be favouring consumption as opposed to savings and investment. At the other end of the extreme we could have a consumption-based tax system where the income would only be taxed if it were taken out of savings or investments and used for consumption purposes. This specific tax system would be similar to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan—earned money is put into an RRSP and is deductible for tax purposes, but the income from it is not taxed until the money is removed from the plan, presumably for consumption purposes.

They are two extremes. The consumption-based tax system is basically said to favour savings and investment. Thus, tax policy people have a choice. If we want to encourage consumption, we would tend to want an income-based tax system; if we want to encourage savings and investment, we introduce RRSPs, RHOSPs and various kinds of deferral mechanisms to defer taxation, which would move us toward a consumption-based system.

The third basic area about which we must be concerned in taxation is the equity question. There are two kinds of equity with which we have been dealing in our tax system for generations—basically horizontal equity and vertical equity. Horizontal equity is a simple concept—people who make the same amount of money should basically pay the same amount of tax, people who are in the same kinds of circumstances should basically pay the same amount of tax. On the other hand, vertical equity is that as one's disposable income rises one should pay a greater proportion of it in tax. This is the principle which underlies a progressive tax system as opposed to a flat tax system. Progressivity basically came about as a driving force in the tax system in the 1940s just before, during and after the Second World War. That was basically the time when tax systems became steeply progressive under the notion of ability to pay. In other words, those who have the greatest ability to pay should pay more or, under the notion of the marginal utility of income, a dollar to a poor man is worth more in terms of what the economists call utility than is a dollar to a rich person. If you tax a rich person and give the money to the poor person, the over-all utility of the system is more equitable. Those are the basic precepts underlying the notion of progressive taxation, the notion of income tax having a greater reliance on vertical as opposed to horizontal equity.

The other important feature in the tax system is the source of income. Here is where we get into the difficulty which gave rise to the capital gains tax in the first place. The source of income, whether from employment or investment is important. Under an ideal tax system, it would not make any difference where that income came from. You would treat investment income and employment income exactly the same.

The other hang-up that comes into this area of income source, whether it is employment or investment income, is on the investment side, and that is whether the income is earned by an individual or a corporation. Ideally, you would not tax corporations. Ideally, the income that is earned by a corporation would be attributed to the shareholders and included in their taxable income, subjected to their marginal tax rate. They would pay tax. Corporations would not pay tax.

A great many people say today that corporations really do not pay tax. Corporations either pass the tax along to their shareholders, or to consumers in the form of higher prices. But corporations do not pay tax. Either the owners or the consumers of the products pay tax. People pay taxes. Corporations are legal entities and they do not pay tax. Somebody pays the tax, either the shareholder or the consumer. If you tax the shareholder by putting the income in that person's hand, that is probably the most equitable way to do it.

Over the years, in the United States, here, in Britain, in France, everywhere, we have tended to differentiate between corporations and individuals. If you are an individual, a sole proprietor or a small-business person, and you earn income in your business, it becomes personal income and you are taxed. All of a sudden, a corporation comes along and, for some reason, we think we have to treat that income differently. You could have a three or a four-person corporation. For tax purposes a partnership of four people is treated totally differently than a corporation of four people, although the principles are the same. I own a company, I own it through shares or through a partnership. The income which that company earns is partially mine, represented by the amount of my partnership or represented by the shares I own. There should not be a differentiation, but there is. Then we get into a problem. The biggest problem that has arisen for tax policy is that the corporate tax rate is different from the personal tax rate. Not only that, but we have introduced a small-business tax rate. There is a big-business tax rate and a small-business tax rate. What about an individual, for example, earning income through a corporation, one who is in the 50 per cent tax bracket? If under our present system it were possible for an individual to pass income through a small business corporation and bring it out the other end, the small business corporation, lo and behold, is only taxed at 25 per cent. It may be taxed at only 21 per cent if it were a manufacturing-processing small business. Therefore, an individual, could funnel his income through a corporation and come out the other end paying only 21 per cent or 25 per cent instead of paying 50 per cent. Obviously, tax avoidance could take place, legally, but tax avoidance nonetheless.

Dividends from a corporation to the shareholder have always been taxable. What gave rise to the capital gains tax and the Carter Commission—there would not have been a Carter Commission but for this very problem—is what is called dividend stripping or surplus stripping. In the 1960s it became such a major problem of tax avoidance because individuals funnelled money through a corporation, and instead of taking dividends on which they would be taxed, they let the dividends and the earnings build up in the corporation, ending up selling the corporation. They took the money as capital gains and the capital gains, of course, were tax free. Therefore, income was being created in the system. Income was going through the system. It was being taken out of the system for consumption and it was not being subjected to tax. That was a fundamental flaw in the tax system.

The principle of plugging that loophole was a capital gains tax. If you take the money out of a corporation as dividends, you pay tax. If you take it out as capital gains, you pay tax, and presumably, through the dividend tax credit mechanism and others, you should get an offset. The corporation now has paid the tax, or you have paid the tax on your income from the corporation, and on your personal income tax form you get a tax credit to offset the fact that you have already paid tax as a part of being an owner of the corporation.

Theoretically, that is the ideal world. The problem is that you have two different corporate tax rates. The dividend tax credit basically offsets only to the level of the small business. If you are a big business paying 50 per cent tax, then you are being taxed twice. At the small-business level you are only being taxed once, theoretically. There are all kinds of problems. But the basic problem we had to face back in the 1960s was this problem of surplus stripping. If you were to eliminate the capital gains tax now or in any major way nullify it, you would wind up with a major tax avoidance problem that could not be tolerated.

There are ways of getting around this problem. However, they involve some fundamental changes to the tax system. For example, we hear people talk about a flat tax. They are talking about a flat tax for a very good reason. Once you take the progressivity out of the tax system, then everybody pays the same rate, and a buck is a buck is a buck and it can be handled that way. If you also apply the flat tax to corporations, then you do not have tax dividends or capital gains. After all, capital gains are simply the present value of future dividends. If I get the money as a person, I pay 30 per cent on it. If the corporation earns the income, the corporation would pay taxes at 30 per cent, let us say, and then the corporation would pass the money to me tax free. But it is not tax free because I own the corporation. The income is flowing to the corporation. It pays the tax and I own the corporation because I am the shareholder, then the money is given to me tax free, or if I earn it some other way, I pay 30 per cent. The same thing applies. It is a nice, clean system. Where the trouble arises, and this is where we are now, is that we have a progressive tax system where individuals have different tax rates than corporations. You can play tax avoidance games by going through corporations to get your income. With a flat tax it does not apply. No matter how I get the income at the corporate level, personally, 30 per cent, or 40 per cent, or whatever the flat tax is, it is paid once. There is no double taxation and the system works very nicely.

If we are going to deal with the capital gains tax, it seems to me that we have to deal with capital gains tax in a more fundamental way. We can eliminate the capital gains tax, but it implies some fundamental structural changes to the nature of our income tax system. It means effectively coming to a system where we integrate the personal and the corporate tax system. Right now the small business tax and the personal tax system are, for all intents and purposes, integrated. Tax paid at the corporate level is effectively offset against tax paid personally, so you only pay tax once. For the big corporation, it is not fully integrated, it is under-integrated. The corporation pays tax and the individual pays tax so, to some extent, there is double taxation involved. This has all kinds of implications for equity markets. It has all kinds of implications for equity investment.

As I think the Hon. Member for Athabasca said, one of the reasons why we have so much debt in our capital structure now is probably because of the fact that equity is not relatively attractive for getting money through the debt stream.

Those are the kinds of considerations that we are going to have to take into account if we want to deal with the capital gains tax system. We cannot simply eliminate it because, in the current structure, it would lead to insurmountable problems of tax avoidance which could not be accepted economically or sociably, and I guarantee that it would not be accepted politically.

If we are to deal with the capital gains problem we must deal with the fundamental problems which gave rise to capital gains tax in the first place. I believe that we can do that. There are proposals which can be considered by the House, by the Finance Committee or other committees. I certainly think that we must look at this area very carefully in the future development of the tax system.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a brief presentation during this debate concerning three measures affecting taxation on capital gains which has been introduced by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). The three measures concern the common stock investment plan changes in the treatment of capital gains; the registered retirement savings plan; and the provision of transfer of capital gains on farming assets to RRSPs.

I think the Hon. Member for Athabasca is trying to resurface the Crosbie budget which was defeated on December 11, 1979. I feel obligated to speak in this debate because I think that particular budget is being oversold to a great extent. I do not think it was even really understood by some of the Members in the Conservative Party.

Let me return to some of the original documents from that budget and use some of the Conservative Government's words to describe what it had in mind. One can see that it is not quite how it was portrayed by the Hon. Member for Athabasca, or by Conservative Members from the Prairies.

I will quote the first aspect of it as it appears in the Budget brief. It says:

> Individuals will be encouraged to invest in common stock of Canadian corporations by deferral of capital gains tax on shares purchased through a new Common Stock Investment Plan.

Capital gains was not being eliminated as is often portrayed. It was simply a deferral. As a matter of fact, the plan will probably be discussed before Parliament again because Mr. Lortie, President of the Montreal Stock Exchange, who was involved with one of the groups set up by the former minister of finance, recommended that this particular plan or its variant be discussed. Therefore we will probably see this plan brought back to the House and discussed in the full context of the tax law and philosophy as outlined by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

The second point made in the budget note says:

> One-half of income earned on common stock investments by Registered Retirement Savings Plans will be exempt from tax when received by individuals on the maturing of their plans.

Apparently, there would have been a reduction in tax for retirement savings plans that are made up of common stocks, under the Crosbie budget.

Since the Hon. Member for Athabasca talked about farms, I will use farms as an example. If the farm which was being disposed of was incorporated, the shareholders would have an avenue to avoid capital gains tax. If it was a normal farm, like the majority, which was privately owned and not incorporated, the third method would have applied. This is the area where I think we are often led down the garden path in rural Canada by some Conservative representatives. What the budget notes actually say and what the budget intendet is:

> Farmers will be enabled to get deferral of tax—

I stress deferral of tax. Tax was not eliminated, simply deferred.

> —once in a lifetime, on up to $100,000 in taxable capital gains (representing $200,000 of total capital gains) from the sale of their farm by transferring the gains to an RRSP.

Therefore, they were not proposing to do away with part of the capital gains, they were simply proposing to put it into an RRSP and defer the payment of those taxes. The RRSPs that were set up were not made up of common stocks or shares for most farmers but simply transfers of money. The tax was only deferred, not eliminated. This is according to the budget papers that were presented on December 11, 1979.

I believe this is very significant, because that action tells a lot about the Progressive Conservative attitude to farmers with respect to capital gains, much more than do their words.

Mr. Thacker: What would you do?

Mr. Althouse: Since the Hon. Member asks what we would do, I will point out what some of the NDP provincial Governments have done. I think this is significant, because the collection of capital gains tax is under the authority of both the federal and provincial Governments under the Income Tax Act. I would draw the Members' attention to the Province of Saskatchewan, which, under an NDP Government, exempted the first $100,000 on capital gains tax on farms. It exempted that tax, it did not defer it. It is one of the few provinces that has done so in spite of all of the provincial Governments being Conservative at one time or another. Provincial Conservative Governments have not addressed the capital gains problem in any real or significant way and not at all in the manner which the Hon. Member for Athabasca would have the House believe. I think we have seen an action which speaks far louder than words.

We believe that this exemption should continue on a federal basis as well. We are prepared to give some reasons for that exemption. We note that the Income Tax Act now exempts home owners and workers in the cities and towns from the capital gain on their principal residence. We say that the reason for the $100,000 exemption on farmland is for similar reasons. It is a form of a retirement investment plan by a farmer or small businessman, similar to the way a large home is for someone who is to retire.

Therefore, we think it is justifiable to provide for an exemption of $100,000 on the first capital gains as it applies to farmers and small businessmen. This would be a much more direct way to attack the problem now. I certainly would agree that revamping the tax system to make it more fair and equitable is desirable and important. It probably should be revamped again due to the changes in the ways taxes are levied in this country.

For your information, Mr. Speaker, I note that in 1952, 53 per cent of the taxes that were collected in this country came from the corporate sector and 46.3 per cent came from individuals. By 1980 that ratio had changed so that 30.5 per cent of the taxes collected in this country came from the corporate sector and almost 70 per cent came from individuals.

We hear much said in the House, particularly from the Official Opposition, about the fact that the country can get back on its feet by removing the Government's involvement in business. I suggest that this has been happening since 1952 in the sense that business has certainly not been paying its share of the capital through taxation in Canada. I understand from some of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that even the Government side recognizes that the tax load does not fall on corporations to the same extent as it falls on individuals. It is inequitable, and is becoming even worse. He did not seem to be giving any indication that that situation will change soon. Until it does change, I think people should expect to gain a few of the perks given to large corporations in the form of tax deferrals.

There is a basic difference between tax deferrals for individuals and for corporations. The main outlet for deferring taxes of individuals is through RRSPs, but individuals eventually need that money. They put it back into income and pay taxes on it. That is not the case with corporate deferrals.

In June of 1980, deferred corporate taxes in this country amounted to something like $20.8 billion. We do not have figures as to how much of those deferred taxes are ultimately paid. We do know that very few of those taxes are actually shown as income and are taxed. We know from studies conducted in the United States concerning deferral of corporate taxes that only about 1.5 per cent of those deferred taxes are actually ever paid. I think the reason is that corporations have an unlimited lifespan. As long as they remain fairly healthy, they can continue to defer their taxes forever, and they never have to declare any of those funds as income and pay taxes on them.

Therefore, I think that the analogy, the rules and the equity, if you like, between individuals and corporations are not fair, and the provisions contained in the Progressive Conservative budget of 1979 were totally unfair for those very reasons. They provided a form of equity to holders of shares or common stocks, but individuals, proprietorships, small businesses or small farms did not get any form of tax write-off, but, rather, only deferrals. I think that was an unfair situation in which to place farmers. It would have been much fairer to simply provide an exemption applicable to the first $100,000 of taxable income, as was done in Saskatchewan. That should have been spread to the federal level and it would have righted a wrong without greatly changing the current tax system.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join in this debate, particularly following the speech of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), because there is no doubt that he must be very worried about that Progressive Conservative budget of 1979.

Mr. Althouse: There was no problem in 1979 and 1980, I'll tell you.

Mr. Thacker: Hon. Members will notice that even though it was some three years ago, he is still worried about it, because the people of Saskatchewan, for the first time, had a Conservative Government here in Ottawa and after a mere nine months in power, only three months after the House had been called, there was a provision in the very first budget to give capital gains relief to farmers. That was a major task because, as we know, the power behind the Ministers, namely, the bureaucracy, did not want to make any changes. It was an enormous battle, but the party, the P.C. caucus, the backbenchers, stood up and Mr. Crosbie put it in his budget. This was followed by the defeat. The NDP, with many Hon. Members from the West supporting it in 1980, suddenly realized, after the election, what had happened. They had been duped.

Mr. Althouse: Capital gains reserve, what about it?

Mr. Thacker: Had the Conservative Government stayed in, there would have been on the books today substantial additional relief from the capital gains tax on bona fide agricultural land. That got away from them because of the NDP members in the West, and the people will not forget it—

Mr. Althouse: It is really no different than what is in now.

Mr. Thacker: —as the Saskatchewan provincial election brought to mind. The Hon. Member pointed out that Saskatchewan, under the NDP provincial Government, was such a great place. I would remind him that the Saskatchewan population today is exactly the same as it was during the thirties. What that means is that once a socialist government was elected in Saskatchewan, for all of those years, through the forties, fifties, sixties and seventies, all those who were part of natural increase had to leave the Province to get jobs. Why did they have to leave the Province? It was because the NDP government like any socialist Government anywhere in the world, started to grind down. The only unfortunate thing for the Saskatchewan NDP government was that it could not put a bloody fence up to keep people in, like in East Germany. It could not put boundaries around the Province to force the people to stay. Consider the western Provinces, B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan, which basically have the same type of resource assets. B.C., under a Social Credit Government, believes in individual enterprise. It has a population of 2.7 million. Alberta is almost exactly the same, with 2.2 million people. Where is Saskatchewan? With all the enormous resources which should be helping the people of the world, even the poor people of the world, it has a population of barely one million. That is because of a socialist government. Thank goodness in Canada we have an economic union and a Constitution which prevents socialist governments from putting up fences, because that is what would happen otherwise.

Mr. Tobin: What happened to the $225 million deficit? Can you address that, please?

Mr. Thacker: That $225 million deficit is a drop in the bucket.

Mr. Althouse: You ain't seen nothing yet!

Mr. Thacker: Contrast that deficit with what my friend opposite, the Hon. Member from Newfoundland in the national Liberal Government, has done in contributing to a deficit of some $25 billion this year and an accumulated deficit of $140 billion. What does that do to society? To simply service the debt, $17 billion plus is needed. Money is concentrated in the hands of people who already have wealth. The socialist policies of my friend, the Hon. Member opposite, are leading to an incredibly rich upper class.

Mr. Tobin: I am not a socialist!

Mr. Thacker: It is destroying our middle class. We will have a class system like that in India, like the system in all the other socialist countries. We will have an incredibly rich class of people in Canada and no middle class. We will all be poor, and that is what leads to revolutions, and quite properly so.

Mr. Althouse: What about the other deficit?

Mr. Thacker: I would like to refer to capital gains tax. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) gave a very fine speech with many flowery words, in which he very nicely set out the apology always given by the Government. He told of how the capital gains problem grew to the point where the Government began to consider it. My simple question to him, though, is, who did all this? Who put it in place? The Carter proposals of 1971, which would have treated a buck as a buck, had quite a bit of support. The Liberal Government did not bring in that report. The bureaucratic proposals which flowed out of the Carter proposals were entirely different. The only people who benefited were the accountants of Canada. The 1971 tax proposals did for the accountants what the constitutional proposals of 1981 will do for those of us who happen to be lawyers. It is like a licence to rob.

I gather the accountants have a huge statue of Mr. Edgar Benson and each year they lay on a new layer of gold leaf because of the enormous fees they have been able to collect as a result of the 1971 amendments. The Canadian Bar Association will soon be putting forth a proposal to put up a similar statue. I think we will put up a statue of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and every year, because of the enormous fees we will receive through fighting these constitutional arguments as a result of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we will lay on another layer of gold leaf. Over the generations, it will become a tremendous resource for the Canadian Bar Association, so that if we come upon tough times in the future we will be able to take off pieces of this gold and keep our membership up. What the Liberal Party has done has been to help accountants and lawyers.

Let us not forget that we have a motion on the floor to give relief from capital gains tax. The Government obviously has enough members lined up to filibuster this. Once again the Liberal Party is saying to the farmers of this land that they are not prepared to give any relief from capital gains.

Why do we not as a nation exempt bona fide agricultural land from capital gains tax? It is a very small part of our national heritage. This is a huge country, but the amount that is truly arable is a drop in the bucket. When we look at the global scene, the amount of arable land in Canada as a percentage of the world is the smallest fraction. However, out of that smallest fraction, because we put it into the hands of individuals, the farm family, we have produced enough food to export around the world. We have lots.

If we would develop our water resources in the west, we could feed the entire world for generations. We have the land, the solar units and water flowing out of the mountains. If we used it productively, it would be our ace in the hole, and it could turn Canada into the most powerful nation in the world. Within one generation, people are going to be knocking our doors down to get food. We do not need to have agricultural food exporting corporations. They will be banging down the door. Anyone who has looked at the demography figures knows that.

One advantage of exempting just the bona fide agricultural land, all of which is identified, is that it would keep in the small family farms which are clearly more efficient. As the farms get larger, they become more inefficient, the ultimate being the system in China and Russia where they have huge communal farms. We know that production drops off dramatically. In China they are now trying to get back to individual owners. If we exempted bona fide land we would keep more in small family production. That would mean many more tractors, drills and combines which would in turn mean more industrial jobs in Central Ontario. We could keep the enormous strength of that manufacturing industry here in Ontario. It would make it much easier to transfer to the next generation.

The problem with the tax now, as I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre knows, is that we have a value on the land that was adopted in 1971. We must consider the sale value today. In my part of the country, land sold for about $100 an acre in 1971. It is now selling at about $1,500 an acre, a gain of about $1,400 an acre. Of that, $700 comes into income in the year of sale. For the average 5,000 acre farm, the capital gains tax is truly enormous. A new purchaser coming along can very seldom put up the whole amount at the start. Therefore, the seller has to pay in income tax more money than he receives as the down payment. Not only that, there is nothing left to purchase a small home in the town. It is an enormous problem.

The Liberals talk proudly about the rollover which they have. If the farmer sells it to someone of the next generation who will actually be farming, he can get a rollover. That is true. However, what happens to the farmer with four children, a son living on the land, a son living and working elsewhere and two daughters? He cannot leave it to all of them. What if he wants to leave it to the boy who is on the land because he wants it kept together as an economical farm unit? The farmer wants it to stay together as a family farm.

If it is given to the boy on the farm at the 1971 value, the farmer can get the rollover, but can no longer do fairness and equity to those who left. If it is sold to the boy on the farm at greater than the 1971 value, capital gains tax has to be paid. Once he pays the tax, he does not have enough left to do fairness to the other children. It is a very serious problem which it has come about partly because of inflation.

As a result of these enormous deficits, there is simply too much money chasing too few goods. Inflation tends to settle out. Over the last ten years it settled out on land in particular. In my part of the country, the value of land has increased, not because of its productivity but because of inflation; people in times of inflation trying to put their money into something that will increase in value.

Recently I had an opportunity to buy some land. I ran calculations based on its productivity. Based on productivity, the land should have been $200 an acre, yet people are paying $700, $800, up to $1,000 to try to protect themselves from future inflation. Honest people trying to expand simply cannot pay that much, because productivity indicates it is only worth $200. This is a serious problem. As a result, we find foreign money being used to buy up land. Larger corporations with enormous cash flow from sources other than agriculture are purchasing the land. It is therefore becoming more inefficient. We are losing the family farms, the small communities and the manufacturing industries which produce tractors and other kinds of equipment. Instead, huge four-wheel drive units that are produced in the United States and elsewhere are being bought.

The net result of that capital gains tax exemption for bona fide land would be cheaper food. My friend from Ottawa Centre pointed out that the capital gains would catch speculators. That is true, but there is a very little genuine speculation on bona fide agricultural land. If the tax were attached only to the land, and it became a city subdivision, fine, tax it to death. However, the fact that there would be an exemption on bona fide land would tend to keep land for agricultural purposes. As I said earlier, that is what we need for the future. There is no doubt that the rest of the world is in deep trouble in terms of food production.

It has always been a source of great sadness that Canadians, one-half of 1 per cent of the world population sitting on the resources of half this continent, are out in the world capital markets, down on both knees with their hats off, begging the world to lend us money. At the same time we are competing with the Third World countries for oil. Why should we do that? We do not want to compete with them for oil. We should be a source of capital to the world and a source of energy, yet we are not.

It is close to five o'clock. I hope the House will accept this motion of my hon. friend for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words at the end of what I have found to be a very interesting discussion. I am sorry that the mover of the motion was not able to stay because I wanted to ask him a question. Perhaps the honourable Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) can give us some information.

By my calculations, under the new proposals for the treatment of capital gains, proposals developed from the November budget, it looks as if in the worst possible case a taxpayer, given the reserves and the rates of taxation, will have to pay 5 per cent of the gain per annum over a five-year period. If a farmer sells his farm outside his family, he would then pay 5 per cent of that gain for a five-year period and discharge all his responsibilities for his capital gain. If he sells his farm to one of his sons or to someone in his immediate family, the reserve period is stretched out for ten years. Therefore, his liability is only 2.5 per cent of the gain per annum. That does not seem to be an onerous problem, and those are the worst figures without any allowance for forward-averaging or any of the other normal deductions the farmer might be able to take into account.

We hear stories about these difficulties, but I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain to me, perhaps privately, how 5 per cent of the gain or, in the case of a family sale, 7.5 per cent of the gain per annum, is really that onerous?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: I am not rising to answer the question, Mr. Speaker, but to say that I am sure my hon. friend opposite was not intending a slur on the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) who is is not able to be here. The Hon. Member had to catch an aeroplane, and in view of the inclement weather he had to pop away just a touch early.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member from Lethbridge will be kind enough to give me some information personally about how this creates a difficulty.

Capital Gains

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As usual, Friday afternoon debates are the most interesting, but unfortunately the time allotted to private members' business has now expired. Accordingly, this House now stands adjourned until two o'clock on Monday afternon, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1). I wish Hon. Members a good evening, and a good weekend.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

TRADE

EXPORTS TO JAPAN

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, whereas officials of the Japanese government are presently in Ottawa to negotiate conditions relating to imports of Japanese automobiles, and noting that the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) has stated that he intends to talk tough and play hardball with Japan on this issue, while at the same time his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), has been advocating an end to protectionism at the GATT talks in Geneva, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the Minister for trade be directed by this House to refrain from throwing any curve balls which might jeopardize Canada's position as an exporter to Japan, especially in light of the fact that Japan has already cut back by some 30 per cent on coal shipments from western Canada, and bearing in mind the thousands of Canadians jobs in coal, fishing, tourism, automotive and transportation industries which will be threatened by increased protectionism against Japan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALBANIA—PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in view of the announcement in The New York Times on Sunday to the effect that the Canadian Government is considering the establishment of diplomatic ties with Albania, a Communist country leaning towards the Chinese view of Communism, and which is wedged geographically between Greece and Yugoslavia and wedged ideologically between Moscow and Peking, and in view of the Prime Minister's boast that he cleared the way for U.S. recognition of China by opening Canada's mission in Peking as a forerunner of such recognition, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Government make a statement on motions concerning this proposal indicating first of all whether, in making this move, Canada hopes to be trailblazing on behalf of the U.S.A., and secondly, what this move means in terms of additional cost and priorities, bearing in mind the need to strengthen Canada's relations with Latin America.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Over 20 years ago the then Conservative Minister of Justice told the youth of his party that the essential characteristic which identifies the Conservative is his belief that there is and must be an underlying moral and spiritual content to all political philosophy and action. Since the current Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was probably in the audience at the time, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That this House congratulate the Leader of the Official Opposition for finally giving us an update of the outlook of his Party when he said last week, "Forget about principle, the only principle that I am interested in is winning."

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

GREY CUP GAME, 1982

CONGRATULATIONS TO EDMONTON ESKIMO FOOTBALL CLUB

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Government has no representation in western Canada, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House congratulate the Edmonton Eskimo Football club for its success in winning five Grey Cup victories and its efforts in promoting national unity.

S.O. 43

Madam Speaker: The House may want to applaud the Edmonton Eskimos.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF WOODS COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in the Senate Report of 1981 on veterans affairs entitled "They Served, We Care", it was recommended that the Government appoint a committee composed of officials from both the Government and veterans' associations to review and update the recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House call on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to appoint such a committee without further delay to make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF CONSERVATIVE AND LIBERAL PARTIES ON WOMEN'S ISSUES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Recently released questionnaire results from the Tory Convention in May confirm what we have been saying for years—the Tories "think" like the Liberals "do". This is particularly true of women's issues. The typical Tory delegate wants to cut spending for daycare and family allowances, sees no need for better job opportunities for women, and is against affirmative action programs. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That the Tory-Liberal coalition be given the "Ostrich of the Decade" award for their head-in-the-sand position on issues of importance in women's struggle for equality in Canadian society.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT DECISION TO SUBDIVIDE TERRITORIES

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt):

That this House salute the Government's landmark decision to facilitate the subdivision of the Northwest Territories; offer congratulations to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on a job well done, and encourage the Minister to continue to take all reasonable steps to further the political development of the North, subject only to the clear and unmistakable provision that his understandable enthusiasm for this historic task must never mislead him into making any deal with the Hon. Member for Yukon to cross the floor to this side. That would be too high a price for us to pay, under any circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Flattery will get you nowhere!

Mr. McDermid: You could not afford him; you would not know what to do with all that talent.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CALL FOR HOLDING OF GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, 14 years ago Canada had a balanced yearly budget, a small national debt, and sound hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary educational systems. Now our national debt is over $140 billion, the deficit this year is over $25 billion, and health insurance, medicare and post-secondary educational systems are breaking down. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the Liberal backbenchers respond to the clearly demonstrated desire of Canadians to have an election so that they can defeat the Liberal Government which lied to them and cheated its way into power.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—DEMAND FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has stated that Parks Canada asked Mr. Buchanan and company to build their housing complex in the only park in the townsite of Banff which had beautiful 100-year old trees, with bridges over the stream, and constructed paths and benches, making it a restful place for Canadians and visitors to enjoy. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That the House condemn the Minister for making this deal and demand his resignation, as a man who desecrates a park should not be Minister of the Environment.

Acid rain takes years to destroy the trees in a park; the Minister does it in three days with chain saws.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, whereas the Government is refusing to grant a subsidy of $30 million to Davie shipyards in Lauzon, unless their employees agree to the 6 and 5 wage restraint plan, a plan that constitutes a direct attack against the collective bargaining process and is also a useless economic policy, I move, seconded by the Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the House demand that this Government abandon this policy of blackmail which may well cause 1,500 jobs to be lost at the shipyards.

Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That the financial transactions between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon be adjusted to reflect the fact that, pursuant to federal legislation, the latter are prevented from taking advantage of Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund placements.

HIGH-TECH INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, as the National Research Council estimates that, if the existing 1,000 high-technology firms in Canada doubled their gross output by 1990, the net benefits to Canada's balance of payments would amount to $12 billion and the creation of 650,000 jobs, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the Minister of State for Economic Development waste no further time in placing his high-tech industrial strategy before Cabinet in order to foster the creation of permanent, meaningful jobs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT FORECASTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Preliminary reports indicate a further decline in the economy in the third quarter of this year, which will make it the fifth consecutive quarter in which we have seen negative growth in the country. During that period some 540,000 Canadians have lost their jobs. The Minister indicated in his economic statement on October 27 that the turnaround in job creation would come in the fourth quarter. Given the continuing decline in the economy, does the Minister now stand by his forecast in October and, if so, does he expect to see some improvement in the unemployment figures which will be released this Friday?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in the statement I made to the House on October 27, I indicated at the time that indeed we expected there would be a continued decline in the third quarter and that we expected, however, there would be a turnaround in the fourth quarter. This is still our hope.

As far as unemployment is concerned, I have indicated that it would remain very high and that it would decline only gradually during the course of next year. Thus I do not expect a decline in the rate of unemployment this Friday, but I do not have any more information in this regard than the hon. lady. We will await the reports of Statistics Canada in that regard.

Miss MacDonald: That does not offer much hope either for those already unemployed or the ones who are fearing for their jobs today.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF TRADE RESTRICTIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The GATT talks, as we all know, have failed to create the conditions for an expansion of world trade. Indeed, some countries may try to restrict their trade even further. That will make worse the opportunities for job creation here in Canada where 30 per cent of our economy is based on trade. Has this unsettling possibility been taken into consideration by the Minister and, if so, what effect will it have on his relatively optimistic forecast for 1983?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is very unfortunate that the GATT ministers meeting did not come up with more productive results. Canada, which chaired the meeting in the person of the Minister of External Affairs, while there was also a delegation headed by the Minister of State for International Trade, did everything it could to strengthen the cause of anti-protectionism at this conference. Unfortunately, it seems we were not very successful. The Canadian Government is going to continue its campaign to encourage a lessening of the protectionist tendencies existing everywhere, including Canada. As far as our forecasts are concerned, these were made against the background that existed at the time, that is, in October 1982, and nothing that has happened since then, at the GATT conference, for instance, has provided any justification for changing them.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: I guess there is a difference of opinion there, because what I am trying to indicate to the Minister is that things have worsened economically for Canada since he brought down his economic statement in October.

MEASURES TO PROMOTE JOB CREATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the Minister will be meeting with his provincial counterparts on December 16, and given recent developments, the two that I have mentioned, that is, the continuing negative growth in the economy and the failure of the GATT talks, could he tell us what he plans to propose to provincial ministers in the way of new measures for job creation and growth in the country, or will he just sit back and let Canadians suffer until the Macdonald Royal Commission brings in its interim report?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that there would be only a gradual recovery, that we would see increases in the Gross National Product during the course of next year, and that the turnaround would come, we expected, during the last quarter of this year. I also indicated that, unfortunately, the rate of unemployment would decline very slowly.

I announced on October 27 a number of measures worth $1.1 billion. That amount comes on top of some $2.2 billion worth of various programs already announced by my predecessor. It takes a few weeks for programs to come into effect. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has consulted with his provincial colleagues already. Some provinces have not only supported our program but they have added funds to it, which is quite encouraging.

At the federal-provincial conference of Ministers of Finance we intend to review the economic situation together, to try to make sure our respective policies will reinforce each other rather than work at cross-purposes. We will be examining any steps that could be taken by the provincial Governments or the federal Government on the occasion of our respective budgets. I will have an opportunity to discuss the general thrust of my budget with my colleagues, and I expect that I will also be able to exchange views on how provincial ministers are preparing their own budgets which in most provinces, as the Hon. Member knows, come during the spring.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the Youth of Canada. In 1968 when the present Grade 12 graduates were about four years old and the present university graduates were between seven and eight years of age, Canada had a balanced budget and a small national debt, yet we had the world's best health insurance, medicare and post-secondary education systems. Also we had a business climate that created jobs for all. We now find there are not enough jobs, the health insurance, medicare and post-secondary education systems are breaking down, the national debt is over $140 billion, and the yearly deficit is about $25 billion. Does the Prime Minister realize what his policies have done to young Canadians? They have denied them opportunities in a land which should be full of opportunities.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am happy to remind the Hon. Member that, during the entire course of the 1970s, Canada had the world record in job-creation of all industrial nations, and that is what our policies have done.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister telling us that the whole Government existed just to create jobs in the 1970s? What about future planning for the children in the 1980s and the 1990s?

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF YOUTH REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, on the Macdonald Commission, for example, there is no member who could genuinely be said to represent youth. Why would the Prime Minister not have appointed some of the fine young business graduates, or university students, to sit on that Commission?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am happy to see that the Hon. Member is lending his support to the Government's establishment of a Royal Commission to look at the 1980s and 1990s. If the Hon. Member is making representation for additional Commissioners, I am sure the Chairman of the Commission would be happy to receive that from him directly.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSITION OF PERSONS EXHAUSTING BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister knows, the NEED Program announced by him will employ only one in twenty of the unemployment insurance exhaustees this winter. The Minister of Employment and Immigration's study indicates that over 82 per cent of exhaustees are unable to find work in the first two months after their UI benefits run out. Surely the Minister knows that, in terms of human suffering, there will be an average of 10,000 more individuals every month in 1983 becoming UI exhaustees. What further plans does the Minister of Finance have for work or further financial assistance for these people?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I wish that my hon. friend would get his figures in line with those of other members of his Party who have said we will be helping only one in ten of the exhaustees under the NEED Program. Whatever the figure, it is quite clear that we will not be able to answer the unemployment problem that we are facing at the present time through that particular job-creation program.

• (1425)

As I have indicated before, there are a number of other programs that have been set up by the Government, particularly under the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We had put well over a billion dollars into direct job creation before the announcement of the NEED program and the $500 million I have mentioned.

We have also indicated that what is required for real and long lasting job creation is a lowering of the inflation rate and a lowering of the interest rates so that the private sector can get going again to create the jobs in the plants, firms, factories and various industries of the country. This is what we are working toward, trying to make sure that we will have recovery where the private sector will be the answer to growth again.

Mr. Blackburn: The Minister's soft talk sounds very nice in here, but for the people demonstrating today outside in the freezing rain, and the hundreds of thousands across the country who will be forced onto welfare this winter, it is of no comfort whatsoever.

REQUEST THAT BENEFITS BE EXTENDED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, the Minister refers to economic recovery. All knowledgeable indicators are stating at this time that there will not be a recovery and unemployment will not drop significantly for at least a year and possibly two years. In view of this fact I would ask the Minister, since the Government is also facing the prospect of seeing its welfare costs go up substantially this winter as Canadians are left with no other resort, will he instead extend unemployment insurance benefits for the first 26 weeks of 1983 for those Canadians who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits already and who are still unable to find work?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. I might add, in answer to the Hon. Member, that in this particular regard we have already increased the premiums that are being paid by the workers and employers by some 40 per cent in order to meet the needs of those who are unemployed at the present time, and that the Government is assuming approximately 50 per cent of the total deficit in the fund at the present time. I am afraid that I cannot entertain the suggestion put forward by the Hon. Member in the current circumstances. I do not think that we can afford it.

Mr. Blackburn: I hope that the Minister fully appreciates the meaning of his answer. It means a greatly expanded burden on municipalities and provinces across the entire country, for welfare costs. Second, his few short words in that answer mean that literally tens of thousands of hard working Canadians will be forced onto welfare this winter. That is an absolute disgrace, and we in this Party are outraged.

JUSTIFICATION FOR GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): How does the Minister justify asking Canadians, including all those unemployed Canadians out there looking for work, to accept the poverty of welfare as a way of life, because that is what he is asking?

How does he justify that to those who are ready, able and willing to work, but cannot find it? How does he justify forcing them on welfare and saying, "I am sorry, that is the bottom line"?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's suggestion is just to extend more handouts. I am trying to tell him that, together, we should all try to build a situation where the private sector will again be able to hire people and get the economy growing again. That is what is very important and what we should all be pushing for together.

I indicated before, in my statement on October 27, that indeed, unemployment would remain very high, distressingly high. I share all those concerns of the Hon. Member. I am sure those concerns about the present situation are shared by many Canadians. However, there is no point in playing make-believe with the Canadian people on such a very important issue.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGATIONS MADE IN BRITISH SPY TRIAL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. This morning, at the Old Bailey in England, Hugh Hambleton went on trial under the Official Secrets Act on charges of spying. The Attorney General of Great Britain made certain allegations based on a statement made by Mr. Hambleton. Certain of those were as follows: first, that he had been a Soviet agent for more than 30 years, second, that he had contact with Soviet agents both in Paris and Quebec and that seven years ago he met Yuri Andropov, had dinner with him, and was encouraged to run as a candidate to become a Member of Parliament. Are those facts correct? Were they within the knowledge of the RCMP? Why was he prosecuted in Great Britain and not in Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have not seen those statements that were reported by the Hon. Member, and I would like to wait until I do before commenting on them. I have said, and I will repeat, that the RCMP have co-operated with the British officials to bring this case to the point at which it is now, and that until the case is disposed of I should not say anything further about it.

ROLE OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): I would like to ask the Solicitor General a brief supplementary question. Were the RCMP informed of all the information that I have alleged today? Is the Solicitor General aware of the facts pertaining to this individual, and did he have any discussions whatsoever with the RCMP on why the prosecution is taking place in Great Britain and not in Canada, notwithstanding the co-operation of the RCMP?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): I have indicated that the Department of Justice, through the Attorney General of Canada, advised that a prosecution founded in Canada, on the basis of the evidence that was available at a certain point, would not have been successful. Following that, the RCMP had other discussions with Mr. Hambleton himself, Mr. Hambleton departed for Great Britain, the RCMP had information obtained before and after the decision made by the Attorney General of Canada, and there was co-operation between the two friendly security agencies which have brought the matter to the point at which it is today. I think all of us should be pleased to see that justice is being done in the matter.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RETURN OF CONVICTED MURDERER TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Solicitor General. Over the weekend we were informed that Clifford Robert Olson is once again in British Columbia, ostensibly to give information and provide evidence related to certain unsolved murders in that Province. Can the Solicitor General give the House an ironclad guarantee that, in this instance, there are no further deals contemplated with Mr. Olson, either monetary or of another nature, and, in particular, can he give us the assurance the Mr. Olson has not been promised a transfer to Abbotsford or another British Columbia facility, that he has not been offered immunity from further prosecution and, finally, that he has not been offered any cash benefit for giving evidence? I wonder if the Solicitor General can direct himself to those questions.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): I can certainly confirm that Clifford Olson was taken by the RCMP to British Columbia last week under a court order obtained by the Government of British Columbia, by the Attorney General, from the Chief Justice of British Columbia, that Clifford Olson is there, that the investigation is under way, and that during the course of the investigation, which is totally under the direction of the Attorney General of British Columbia, I will not have anything to say about it.

RECOVERY OF MONEYS PAID TO CONVICTED MURDERER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): The Attorney General of British Columbia, just prior to the time the House resumed its session here, denied that it was his direction with respect to the transfer of Mr. Olson to British Columbia.

The Solicitor General's dealing with the Olson matter has been typified by confusion and obfuscation. The Solicitor General has participated in the actual payment of moneys to Mr. Olson while, on the other side of the coin, he has indicated to the families of the victims that he was trying to find some way of collecting, for their benefit, the profits received by Mr.

Olson. Specifically, I would like to know what the Solicitor General has done, if anything, to assist the families of the victims of Clifford Olson, in particular, to recover the moneys, the $90,000 which the federal Government had a part in putting away and out of the reach of the families of the victims of Clifford Olson.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): As to offenders profiting from their crimes, I have indeed been concerned about it. I have expressed my concern in correspondence sent to my provincial counterparts. There is currently a meeting of deputy ministers of law enforcement under way. It is one of the matters on their agenda.

I have put forward two or three suggestions on courses which might be taken to comply with that very fundamental concept of justice that an offender should not be able to benefit from his crime. However, as I indicated, and as my colleague, the Minister of Justice, has indicated in the House, it is a difficult matter. There is presently no legal machinery in place for depriving an offender of the profit from his crime. If a method were to be found, it would require legislation in this House, or legislation in one of the provincial legislatures, as I indicated in the letter that I sent to my counterparts. Therefore, the matter is under our consideration, but I do not have an answer for the Hon. Member yet.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION ON ISSUE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Solicitor General. On May 4, 1982, he did indeed send a letter to the solicitor representing eight families involved in the Olson tragedy, in which he set out some of the constitutional and jurisdictional difficulties in prohibiting a murderer from profiting from publishing details of his murders. The Solicitor General has perhaps already answered in part the question I would have put to him. The letter, dated May 4, states on the third page:

> I undertake to be available to meet with my provincial colleagues to see what uniform action may be taken.

He said, "circumstances do demand action". I would really like to ask the Solicitor General when the meeting with his provincial counterparts will take place. Is there any provincial Attorney General who objects to the appropriate amendment on the provincial scene, involving property and civil rights, which could dovetail with an amendment to the Criminal Code on the federal level, to ensure that those who commit murder are not able to profit from such murder? At the moment I am restricting it to murder.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, subsequent to the letter, I indicated some of the difficulties involved in a measure which could be seen by the courts as impinging on free speech, or expropriating property without compensation. These are two matters which are the subject of protections in the Charter or Rights and Freedoms and in basic principles of natural justice in our country.

On the other hand, the goal is also one which is very much a matter of public policy, of wanting to prevent criminals from profiting from their crimes. I have received feedback from some of my provincial counterparts who have expressed concern in terms of the considerations that I have just mentioned. However, the meeting of deputies is taking place this week. The meeting of Ministers may take place in the early or late spring. That has not been settled and may depend, indeed, on the amount of progress which is made on these issues by the meeting of our deputies which begins tomorrow.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, this matter has been kicking around for too many months. In view of the resurrection of the matter in the front pages of this land concerning the dirty deeds Mr. Olson committed, surely this is a lethargic approach to something which is a basic injustice. Not only to protect the civil right of the murderer, but also the collective right of the community and/or the sensitivity and anxiety of the parents involved, something must be done.

Could the Minister at least assure the House that, in terms of his jurisdiction now, and in terms of parole, there will be some type of restriction in a parole order prohibiting a murderer from directly publishing so that he can benefit? If these officials are to take so long, could he not give some instructions to the Law Reform Commission—God forbid—to come in with an objective assessment of the rights and wrongs, pros and cons, of this constitutional issue?

Surely the Minister must know that there are 28 States in the United States which already have legislation taking care of some of the concerns of the Minister, and that the interpretation of the Constitution in the United States is that there is no such thing as absolute freedom of speech when it involves sordid matters or murderers profiting from their murders.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I think that American jurisprudence is indeed helpful, but some of those States have found the measures that they put forward struck down as being invalid—

Mr. Nowlan: There hasn't been a murderer yet.

Mr. Kaplan: —under American law. Of course, Canadian law is different. My great worry is that we would see some method which would either be defeated in the court or some method which would work very well for the first case before us, but one which would create considerable difficulty down the road in cases which are not as easy and as obvious as the case involving Clifford Robert Olson.

Mr. Nowlan: Or the FLQ.

Mr. Kaplan: It is easy enough to know how to handle such a case, but what would be the consequences down the road of putting a measure in place which would perhaps result in other people being deprived of their civil right of speaking out, or of their property rights?

Mr. Nowlan: Let's put something in place.

• (1440)

Mr. Kaplan: It would be easy, in the Olson case, but creating legislation is a serious matter, and a policy cannot be created on the run. It has to be created with consensus between the Provinces and the federal Government, and in a way that will be effective but limited.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF REGIONAIR SERVICE IN EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On October 12, I informed the Minister of the poor service provided by Regionair in Eastern Quebec and the Gaspé. We do not care what Quebecair is going to be called, but we do care about good service. Some people who have never even flown with Quebecair are making a regular hue and cry about preserving its name, but we really do not care whether they call it Pepinair or Clairair or whatever. Last week, some pilots from Sept-Îles claimed their planes were not safe, and they sent a message to the Minister of Transport asking him to clean up Quebecair's board of directors. Considering the statements by the pilots and numerous complaints from the areas served by the airline, does the Minister have sufficient reason and evidence to request an investigation regarding the safety of Regionair planes in Eastern Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are two sides to this question. First of all, there is Regionair's safety record, and I have already asked my regional administrator in Montreal to start an investigation and send me a report as soon as possible. I must admit that at the time I made the request, I was not aware of details I received later from the Hon. Member. The second aspect is the relationship between Regionair and Quebecair. I cannot intervene at this point to decide how the company is going to be structured, and I can only say that negotiations—which I hope, will start shortly on Quebecair 2 will touch on both Quebecair and Regionair, and there will be no separation, and I think it would be premature if it were to be done now.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

MX MISSILE—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, who will know that in the next few weeks contracts will be awarded by the American Air Force for Construction of the MX missile. At least one Canadian company has already been involved in the development of this missile. Now we learn that Boeing of Canada, in Winnipeg, has been granted a $120,000 contribution from the Defence Industry Productivity Program, pending contract award, to help Boeing build part of the re-entry system for the MX warhead. How many taxpayers' dollars does the Government plan to spend to put a "Made in Canada" stamp on the MX missile?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would seem to me that, if the matter proceeds as the Hon. Member states, of which I have no knowledge, it would mean a lot of jobs for Canadians, rather than taxpayers' dollars involved in this.

JUSTIFICATION FOR CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): I find that answer rather disappointing. Last week, in answer to concerns raised by my Leader regarding the MX missile and the escalation of the arms race, the Prime Minister admitted that this concern was valid. In light of that, and in light of the Prime Minister's carefully cultivated reputation as a peace maker, what justification can he give for involving Canada—whether through Canadian corporate involvement or through the use of taxpayers' money as incentive—in this latest and ever more frightening step in nuclear arms development, knowing that money spent on arms development creates far less jobs than money spent elsewhere?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member returns to the question of taxpayers' dollars. I have no knowledge of the contracts to which he is alluding, but it would seem to me quite obvious that, if Boeing Canada is constructing something, there would be jobs involved and salaries paid to Canadian workers. That is more important than whatever tax incentives are there.

The Hon. Member talks of a moral issue. I would be happy to debate this question with him. I would be curious to know how many arms production involvements in which he would like to see Canada take part. Is it just the MX missile, or is it other forms of arms, or is it the building of aircraft? Is he objecting to the fact that there will be industrial fallouts in Canada from Canada building an F-18? Let him state his case. If he wants to be an absolute pacifist, I would respect this, but this would mean building no arms at all. This would mean that Canada should be a non-alingned nation, which I have not heard even his Party argue. They argue that we should be part of NATO.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are close.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, some of them argue it, but the Party has not taken the position that we should withdraw from NATO.

Madam Speaker, I see some of the Members nodding their heads, taking this point of view, but this is another example of the schizophrenia of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST YUKON ECONOMY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister is well aware of the crisis situation in Yukon, where the economy is in a virtual state of collapse. Thousands of northerners are leaving because of the shutdown of three very important mines there.

When can we expect the Minister to adopt the three specific proposals which were presented to him on October 6, which he promised to take to Cabinet, almost two months ago, which were submitted jointly by the Legislative Assembly of Yukon, Cyprus Anvil, and the steelworkers' union? When will he show some initiative by announcing an emergency assistance plan to offset the debt of the Northern Canada Power Commission, to facilitate ore shipments by the White Pass and Yukon Railroad, and to provide a short-term loan to Cyprus Anvil on condition that the mine be reopened immediately?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member might be the first to agree, judging by positions taken by his Leader and his entire Party, that it is unlikely any Government, nor would the Hon. Member recommend it, would give a blank cheque to Dome until they can show that they mean business, that they can operate a viable operation and can guarantee jobs for the workers on a long-term basis.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You gave them a cheque.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): We do not intend to be irresponsible with respect to that. The fact of the matter is that Dome has made some offers. We have analysed those offers, but we have indicated, certainly before we take those offers seriously and break them down, that since they are in the private sector, they have an obligation to conclude a labour agreement with their employees. They have not done that yet. I was up there this weekend. Apparently that is close. I would hope it would be settled by the end of this week—

Mr. Nielsen: You did not invite me.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Then we could at least nail down that variable and get down to business and see when we can get the mine reopened.

REQUEST FOR PROMPT ACTION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): No one is talking about a blank cheque here, Madam Speaker. The Minister knows that that agreement would have been signed long ago if the Government had made a commitment to a permanent remission of the northern benefits taxation.

Given all the millions which his Government is handing out in economic development grants and bailouts to its friends in other parts of Canada and to questionable projects around the world, when is he going to show some leadership to save Yukon, to prevent this irreversible destruction from becoming a terminal disease. How much longer does he expect the people of Yukon should have to wait while he and his Government muddle their way along, instead of acting decisively and promptly?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, about the only people trying to get any political exploitation out of this are the Hon. Member and his Party. I have been up there this weekend and I think the residents of the Yukon are entirely satisfied—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —that this Government is doing everything possible to get that mine reopened.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION ON PENSION FUND INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In June, 1982, the Transport Committee passed a motion unanimously calling on Parliament to provide the Committee with a reference to conduct a full inquiry into the CNR pension fund. I would like to ask the Minister what the current status is of this report, and when the House can expect to have this presented.

If he can wake up, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Epp: He is on pension.

Mr. McKenzie: We know the contempt that the Minister has for the CNR pensioners. I will redirect my question. In June, 1982, the Transport Committee passed a motion unanimously calling on Parliament to provide the Committee with a reference to conduct a full inquiry into the CNR pension fund. I would like to ask the Minister what the current status is of this report, and when the House can expect to have it presented.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the reason why I did not answer is that the pension fund of CNR is not my responsibility. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Labour. What the House of Commons Committee on Transportation does is not my responsibility, either. It is the responsibility of the Committee Members to decide what they will do with respect to an inquiry into pensions at the CN, which they were contemplating a number of months ago. My hon. friend should ask the Chairman of that Committee what they intend to do, not the Minister of Transport.

● (1450)

PENSION FUND INVESTMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): My supplementary is to the Minister of Labour or to the Minister of Transport. The Canadian National Railway pension fund has an 18 per cent share of Cast Shipping Line, which is on the verge of bankruptcy. Do either of the Ministers feel it is appropriate for the CN pension fund to continue to prop up a losing venture when bankruptcy could cost the fund many millions of dollars, and when the money could be put to much better use by increasing payments to CN pensioners?

I would like to point out, Madam Speaker, that this runaround has been going on for years between the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport. It is time they got their act together and did something for these pensioners.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, without going into the substance of the matter which the Hon. Member would like me to look into, I would like to consider the whole question first and give him a well thought-out answer. The Hon. Member is making allegations which, first of all, would have to be checked. Second, it is a substantial matter that has been put to a committee for deliberation. That committee, to my knowledge, has not reported and, therefore, I am not in a position to comment as to any recommendations made by the committee.

ENERGY

PETRO-CHEMICAL INDUSTRIAL COSTS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and/or the Minister of Energy. The pricing mechanism for oil-based petro-chemical industries is a matter of some concern to the petro-chemical industry, particularly in eastern Canada, although there is some concern as well in the oil-based industries out West. Many meetings have been held with Ministers, which are appreciated, but there is an Industry, Trade and Commerce and Energy task force which is about to complete its work or has completed its work. I would like to know has the study been completed, and if so, when the findings will be made public.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have had some meetings with the industry and have discussed the matter with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in reviewing the situation. We have received a lot of input, some from Members of Parliament. It is quite a complex issue. We hope that we will be able to deal with this problem in the near future.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RETURN OF CONVICTED MURDERER TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The people of British Columbia view with anger and revulsion the spectacle of convicted child murderer, Clifford Olson, again wheeling and dealing with the federal and provincial authorities to return to B.C. The Solicitor General knows that any transfer from Kingston to the Regional Psychiatric Centre at Abbotsford, British Columbia, is entirely a federal decision within federal jurisdiction. Will the Minister assure this House that Olson will not be transferred at any time from Kingston to the RPC in British Columbia? Will he further assure the House, again within federal jurisdiction, that not one more penny of blood money will be paid to Olson for his latest trip to B.C.?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, there is an investigation under way now in the Province of British Columbia. Investigations are easily disturbed by undue publicity and by statements made. For that reason I choose not to answer any questions about the investigation at this moment. That is the position I am taking.

PROFITS FROM BOOK SALES—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, once again Clifford Olson seems to be leading the Solicitor General around by the nose. The people in British Columbia have said very clearly they do not want him on their soil now or in the future.

My supplementary relates to the issue which was raised earlier of possible profits to Olson from the sale of a book on his murders. Will the Minister, in recognition of the outrage which is felt by all Canadians at the prospect of Olson again profiting from his murders, at least undertake to refer this important issue to the Justice Committee where we may carefully examine all aspects of the matter and make recommendations to ensure that this kind of profiteering will not be allowed to take place?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have indicated the objective of the Government, which is to try to formulate a policy to assure that profits from a book by a criminal will not be retained by him. There are difficulties, and I have explained what they are. I would be very interested in hearing from any Members of the House of any approaches they can suggest to overcome some of those difficulties, including the Hon. Member for Burnaby who has expressed some reservations about my proposed methods, but who has not come up with any workable alternatives.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

QUERY RESPECTING AGRICULTURAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the Prime Minister why a member from the Canadian agricultural community was not appointed to the Macdonald Royal Commission on the Economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know the Minister of Agriculture has recommended some possible additions to the Commission. The matter stands there. As I told the House last week there are, I believe, three more members to be added to the Commission list.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF AGRICULTURAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister give his unequivocal assurance that a member from the Canadian agricultural community, which is such an important part of our economy, will be appointed to this Commission?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, before answering that question prudently, I would have to wait for more suggestions from the Opposition. Only today I had the suggestion to add a representative of the youth sector of our community. Now I have the suggestion to add a member for agriculture. How many more will speak before we have a 20-man Commission?

AIRPORTS

INCREASE IN FEES FOR PRIVATE AIRCRAFT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the tie-down fees for private aircraft at the Williams Lake airport in British Columbia. This October, private aircraft operators were told that their tie-down fees were going to be increased by 66 per cent. This has caused a lot of problems because not only does it not square with the six and five program, but it has caused a lot of the aircraft owners to move their aircraft off the Government airport onto private dirt strips, thus causing hardship on the industry which serves private aircraft secondarily, mechanics, and so on. Can the Minister tell me how he can square this with the six and five program, and is he prepared to roll this increase back to 6 per cent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we have done that on a number of occasions. My Department has been as strict on this matter as one can possibly be, that is, that everything which was to take place after the announcement of the six and five program has been reduced to six and five. I have written to a great number of people on the other side to inform them of these realities, and I will do so for my hon. friend. I cannot give a 100 per cent guarantee that the case he brings forward now is one of those cases I referred to but the chances are great that it is, and I will confirm it.

CRITERIA FOR FEE INCREASE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): That is somewhat comforting, Madam Speaker, but I would like to ask the Minister, as a supplementary, how his Department figures this out in the first place. What do officials use for criteria? How would they get a 66 per cent increase in the first place? Last year there was a large increase in these tie-down fees, and it is driving small aircraft off the Government airports.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the usual criteria we use are the increases in cost of operating these facilities, be it at airports or elsewhere; the second is common sense. In most cases, and I have a number of them in mind, these fees or rates have not been increased for a number of years. It is sad to look at some of those cases occasionally, but in the case the Hon. Member mentioned it may be it was increased simply to correspond with the cost of operations increases.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DISCRIMINATORY ASPECT OF VIDEO TAPES

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle).

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Thank you, Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: This is great physiotherapy, Madam Speaker. Thank you for letting me take part. My question is for the Minister of Justice who, I understand, has some jurisdiction or responsibility for deciding on the importation of vido display discs or tapes. One in particular is called "Custer's Revenge". This matter has been raised in the House and it is generally agreed that the display on this particular disk is repugnant by even the most relaxed standards of decency. But is the Minister also looking at the other side of the coin, the discrimination? I do not want to elaborate on what the display is, but a lot of native groups and individuals have asked me to consult with the Minister to see if he would be prepared to look at it in that sense, apart from the pornographic nature of this disk.

● (1500)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, this is obviously a matter of considerable concern to myself and to a great many people in the House. I might say that, to the best of my information, the Department of Justice has not yet been consulted on this matter, but immediately before Question Period I had a meeting with the Minister of National Revenue and we agreed that we could consult very fully on the problem.

The decisions up to this point, I understand, have been taken at lower levels in his Department, and the Hon. Member may have questions to address to the Hon. Minister, but the matter is now under consideration at higher levels and we will certainly have an input as to the result.

REQUEST THAT REVENUE MINISTER CONSULT HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. The disk, despite its preview, has been imported and has already been distributed in Montreal and, I understand, in other areas of Canada. Can the Minister give us the assurance that he will, in his examination of this matter, consult with the Human Rights Commission concerning the discriminatory aspect with respect to native peoples associated with this particular display? Can he give me his assurance that this matter will be dealt with immediately and that he will report to the House as soon as possible?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as I pointed out to the House on Friday, I had an opportunity to meet the Deputy Minister at National Revenue who has very specific powers under the Customs Act, and we discussed the importation of certain goods that are defined in Schedule C, if I remember correctly, to the Customs Tariff. I asked the Deputy Minister to investigate this video game in accordance with departmental guidelines for investigating goods prohibited under Schedule C to the Customs Act, and second, to do so in the light of legal precedent in this respect. That is why we shall have close consultations with the Department of Justice to ensure that our decision is well-founded in law and in fact.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,250 and 4,499.

[Text]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Question No. 4,250—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the Department and, if so, are they embodied in a Code of Conduct or other specific document and is the Code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the Department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. Yes. EM&R issues to employees written guidelines governing conduct in respect of conflicts of interest. These guidelines are embodied in a specific document, Conflict of Interest Guidelines, which is available to the public.

2. In accordance with departmental discipline procedures and subject to collective agreements, records of disciplinary action are destroyed after three years have elapsed since the disciplinary action was taken, provided that no further disciplinary action was recorded during this period. Most collective agreements provide that such records will be destroyed after two years have elapsed if no further disciplinary action has been recorded during this period.

In view of the above-mentioned requirements, departmental records reflect 26 disciplinary sanctions imposed in the five years preceding April 1, 1982.

	Written Reprimands	Suspensions	Discharges
1977/78	3	1	None
1978/79	2	1	None
1979/80	2	2	None
1980/81	4	2	None
1981/82	6	3	None

To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act, we are not providing names.

STATISTICS CANADA—EXCESS PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 4,499—Mr. Siddon:

1. What amount did Statistics Canada spend in 1981 on regular publications and all other printed matter that has subsequently been deemed to be in excess of that required for sale or normal distribution?

2. What percentage of the total surplus material referred to in Part I was simply disposed of as waste without any cost recovery?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. In 1981, only one publication was found to be in excess of anticipated distribution (a small booklet 3¾′ × 5½′—Reference Canada). The surplus of 9,200 copies represented $450, an excess of 9 per cent.

2. None.

STANDING ORDERS AND PROCEDURE

THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That, commencing at 5.59 o'clock p.m., on Wednesday, December 22, 1982, or, as the case may be, at the time that the House concludes its consideration of Government Business on that day, the temporary changes to the Standing Orders set forward as Appendix C of the Third Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, tabled Friday, November 5, 1982, shall take effect;

That the proposed changes in the Standing Orders shall be applied in the spirit expressed in Part II (entitled "Recommended Experimental Changes") of the Third Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure;

That, subject to future Order of the House, the said temporary changes to the Standing Orders shall cease to have effect at 5.59 o'clock p.m., on Wednesday, December 21, 1983, or, as the case may be, at the time that the House concludes its consideration of Government Business on that day;

That, subject to the provisions of this Order, the dates and times of the commencement and cessation of the effect of the said temporary Standing Orders shall be valid whether or not the House is sitting; and

That the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print revised and re-numbered Standing Orders of the House incorporating the temporary Standing Orders and any technical or consequential amendments necessary.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure and even greater satisfaction that I may present a motion in the House today which paves the way for parliamentary reform, a concept I have always cherished and a goal I have always wanted to achieve. Hon. members will remember and I am particularly reminded of this today the disappointment I felt in 1974 and 1975, during the first two years when I was sitting on the far southwest side of this House, and every time I wanted to take the floor, I sent a note to the Hon. James Jerome, the Speaker at the time, in order to be recognized. On occasion, I took part in debates which were equally disappointing to the vast majority of my colleagues on both sides of the House. The result was that from the very outset, I showed an interest in making a modest contribution by participating in the search for solutions that would help this institution to evolve and to be more in tune with reality. I also remember that in 1976, in our caucus on the government side, I was given responsibility for preparing a draft proposal on parliamentary reform. After consulting with a multitude of sub-committees specialized in various fields, we succeeded in drafting a proposal which, I may point out, is in many ways similar to the suggestions that were made today by the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform and are embodied in the motion I have the honour of presenting.

Again, in 1976, in addition to taking part in the search for ways to make Parliament evolve, within the party caucus of Government members, I also remember spending several weeks during the summer, with a number of colleagues on both sides of the House, on the Committee on Procedure and Organization, a committee that managed to produce three reports which, unfortunately, were never presented to the House, but, I am sure, were used just the same and which have most certainly influenced members who not long ago were working on the report that is before the House today. Subsequently, after my initial disenchantment and after my involvement in a reform proposal at the caucus level and as member of a standing committee of the House, I wanted to remain involved in the workings of Parliament. In fact, fate was on my side, because the responsibilities I have been given since 1977 have always kept me very close to parliamentary procedure, either as Parliamentary Secretary to the Leader of the House in 1977 and in 1978, or as Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition in the House in 1979, and, for two and a half years now, since March 1980, as Leader of the Government in the House and President of the Privy Council. Once again, this opportunity to present a motion that will mean a giant step towards parliamentary change is not only a great pleasure for me it also as I said at the beginning of my speech has a very special meaning for me.

I am also very pleased that this fundamental proposal should come at a time when this session has already seen such major historic measures as constitutional reform and our National Energy Policy. A session, which, as Hon. Members are aware, has broken all previous records by being the longest session ever and also because of the number and significance of the measures that have been adopted. Mr. Speaker, we first had to adopt a motion that would enable the Government to patriate the Constitution and adopt a Charter of Rights, we had to approve the many bills constituting the National Energy Program, we had to approve three budgets, the Estimates for four fiscal years and some 140 pieces of legislation and we had to debate many motions on subjects selected both by the Opposition and by individual Members. In other words, this House has had to wait since April 1980, the beginning of the current session, until finally agreement was reached on a reform proposal that is certainly beneficial, considering the manner in which Parliament achieved this result.

Before I go any further, I would first like to pay special tribute to someone whose receptiveness to all aspects of parliamentary change, has, since 1968, made it possible for this institution and its Members to evolve, and I am, of course, referring to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). The House will recall that it was under the present Prime Minister that in 1968, Parliament unanimously adopted, and it was unanimous, contrary to popular belief, since there was agreement between Members on both sides of the House, unanimously adopted on December 20, 1968, a major reform in the area of supply proceedings. Still under the present Prime Minister of Canada, television made its entrance in the House of Commons, thus bringing Parliament closer to the Canadian people, and again, under the present Prime Minister of Canada, first in 1975 and latterly in 1981, salaries and pensions of parliamentarians were adjusted to decent levels, and still under the present Prime Minister of Canada, we now have the culmination of the developments of the past fourteen years, namely, this major step towards parliamentary reform, and it is the present Prime Minister who made this reform possible.

• (1510)

[English]

It was also under the Prime Minister that, besides all the reforms and changes I have talked about, funds have been provided for the caucus research bureaux, for the offices of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), and for such funds not only to be increased but in some circumstances even to be created. That is most important when we talk in terms of re-evaluating the role of the Member of Parliament in whichever side of the House he or she sits.

The House will recall that in 1968 no funds were provided for caucus research bureaux. It was in the fall of 1968 that the Government announced its intention to provide such funds, beginning in the 1969-70 fiscal year. In 1969-70 the amount provided for the Official Opposition was $125,000, and for each of the smaller Opposition Parties—because there was more than one at that time—$35,000. These amounts were originally paid through the Leader's office.

Starting in 1970 the caucus research bureaux were created as separate entities and a Liberal caucus research bureau was added. For 1982-83 the caucus research bureaux received the following amounts—and this is where we see the changes: Liberals, $601,000; Progressive Conservatives, $541,000; and NDP, $285,000.

The Office of the Leader of the Opposition did not have a separate budget until 1980, under the Prime Minister. In 1968-69 the figure for the Office of the Leader of the Opposition was about $87,500; in 1969-70 the Leader of the Opposition received $129,500 and the Leader of the New Democratic Party received $36,000. In 1982-83, under the Prime Minister, the Office of the Leader of the Opposition had a budget of $1,081,400 and the Office of the Leader of the NDP $569,700, both amounts separate from the funds of the research bureaux of the caucuses.

That is a reality that we do not talk about very often, but it is a reality that makes it possible for Members on both sides to come here and deliver better speeches and do a better job as Members of Parliament; or, at least, it should allow them to do a better job as representatives of their constituents.

The point I want to make in saying "thank you" to the Prime Minister is that since 1968 many changes have been made in this place, some of which are more obvious than others, but all of which were most important. They start with the reform by unanimous consent in 1968 of the Business of Supply, going through to this very substantial increase in research bureau funds of each caucus, to the funds allocated for the offices of the Leaders of both Opposition Parties, to broadcasting the debates of this House in 1978, to the increases in our salaries and pensions and to the reform we are discussing today.

[Translation]

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to pay a special tribute to the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, especially its Chairman, the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), and each of the members of the Committee for having come to a unanimous agreement on changes which, as I noted earlier, match almost exactly those I have always advocated and through which Parliament will better reflect the reality of the eighties. Finally, I want to pay homage to all those, men and women, who have contributed directly or indirectly to this result.

[English]

The process of reform of parliamentary procedure is, by the very nature of the institution, an ongoing one. In Canada the first major reforms came only at the turn of the century. It was almost 50 years later that the next major revisions took place. Then in the 1960s a series of committees and experiments, of which our present efforts are a part, began. Since the major revisions of 1968-69 we have had many committee investigations on the matter. We have tried several experiments and have even adopted some permanent changes. Once again, we have before us some proposed experiments and it is interesting to note that one of the proposals is for an automatically continuing committee review of our rules.

The Special Committee, of course, benefited from super-professional assistance from the committee's branch and the table research office and was particularly assisted by the former Clerk of the House, Mr. Alistair Fraser, whose wisdom, experience and subtlety of mind permeates the report.

My predecessor as Government House Leader, Leaders on both sides of the House, and our staffs, some of whom are still with us, some of whom have gone to greener pastures, all contributed in one way or another to this report. Although he was unable to participate in this committee, the report most certainly reflects years of work by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

• (1520)

Finally, although I never had the privilege of meeting the reputed grand master of parliamentary procedure as former Clerk Assistant of the House, one who knew him well told me: "If Gordon Dubroy was alive today, this is exactly what he would have produced".

[Translation]

The proposed experiment, Mr. Speaker, is interesting and relevant for three reasons. First, it will help to upgrade the role played by Members of Parliament. It will make Parliament more alive and more effective, without eroding the right of the opposition to a full debate. Finally, the third reason why this experiment will be interesting is that it will update Parliament and give it more respectability in the eyes of the Canadian people. To summarize, the role of Members of Parliament will be upgraded, Parliament will become more alive and more effective without infringing upon the rights of the opposition to a full debate. Parliament will be a more modern institution, more respectable, and more respected by the people, at least I hope so. If we go through the nine proposed changes, we can see that they will have these three results. I believe that every one of the proposed changes will have this effect. Of course, this is more obvious in the case of some changes, but even with the others, we shall have partly achieved these results.

The first proposed change concerns the parliamentary calendar which we wanted to implement for a long time and which our predecessors had already considered when looking at possible reforms. This calendar will finally allow Members of Parliament to plan ahead realistically and will make it possible for the Government to announce in good faith and on a regular basis,—at least three times during a session or at the beginning of each semester,—to Parliament and the opposition its legislative program the weeks and months to come. Of course, this program will not be restrictive and the Government will always be able to add to it, but if we want to benefit from the experience there must be no abuse of changes and I believe the Government is quite willing to make public regularly at the beginning of each semester its proposed legislative program to the Canadian Parliament. At the same time, the opposition will be in a better position to coordinate its strategy against whatever legislation it finds more controversial.

We can see immediately that a parliamentary calendar with three semesters and adjournments at set dates will promote efficient planning both for the Government and the Members of the opposition, and I am convinced that it will make Parliament even more productive, not because the opposition will be more prepared not to debate Government legislation, but rather because it will be able to make a preliminary choice of the subjects it finds most interesting and to use the time allocated to discuss Government proposals and allow passage of less controversial bills, which unfortunately was not always the case under the present system. As concerns this first change, I would also emphasize that the parliamentary calendar will not decrease the workload of Members of Parliament. It will not reduce their hours of work. On the contrary as a result of the changes implemented today we shall sit an average of 175 days a year, while the previous average was 165 days. We shall therefore have a heavier workload and ten more sitting days, and the proposed changes do not limit in any way the daily sitting hours of Parliament from Monday to Friday inclusively.

It is clear, therefore, that this parliamentary calendar will contribute significantly to upgrade the role of Members of Parliament. It should be conducive to better planning, greatly reduce or eliminate many of the frustrations many of us feel—I think that, in that area, the benefits will be obvious—and make Parliament more effective and, therefore, more streamlined and better perceived by the Canadian people.

As to the day sittings, the committee recommended that instead of sitting for two hours in the evening on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, the House should sit between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Again, this is an extremely positive change, which I have always supported, not only because it will make life easier for Members of the House, although there is nothing wrong in trying to improve the life style of parliamentarians, many of whom are men and women with family responsibilities, but also because it will make it possible for them to work harder in the afternoon than they can now in the evening when they are tired and, consequently, the tone of the debate suffers. Hon. Members will be more available in the evening for committee sittings, which will be more interesting. The smaller committees will sit more often because they will be busier, for reasons I will indicate in a little while. The parties on both sides of the House will also be able to hold special caucuses in the evening without any risk of coming into conflict with House sittings. And finally, Hon. Members on both sides of the House will be able to work quietly in the evening without fear of being interrupted by bells ringing in every hallway of Parliament, of having to cancel public engagements they might have both in Ottawa or in communities located within a reasonable distance from the capital, where they would be addressing the Canadian people, as they are duty bound to do.

The fact that Members of Parliament would not have to sit in the evening will upgrade their role in the sense that they would not have to answer slavishly to the call of the bell until 10:30 p.m. three nights a week, but that after 6:00 p.m., they would be free to come and go as they please, to look after the interests of their constituents, to sit on the standing committees of the House, to participate actively in the special caucuses of their respecting parties, to go and address the Canadian people in many communities located within a reasonable distance from Ottawa. This is an aspect which I feel is extremely positive and which will have a major impact on the way Hon. Members will perform in the House and assume their responsibilities in a more humane and, consequently, more involved, interesting and effective fashion.

The suggestion to limit speeches to 20 minutes, followed by a debate lasting some ten minutes, I find most original. I do not know how the debate will progress. This is a chance which I feel we are taking, and that we are all a little curious and worried about the way this experience will unfold, but as we are people of good will, we all want this experience to succeed, and I am sure that this type of original suggestion will achieve its purpose. Firstly, if speeches are shortened, they will be more interesting and to the point, and secondly, our debates will be livelier. As I was reading part of my remarks a moment ago, some of my colleagues opposite could not help commenting on it, and I realized that I was becoming boring; I quickly moved on to the subject matter of my speech, but as my notes were in English, I wanted to be sure to congratulate all those who deserved it.

But I think that after mid-January the 20-minute speeches will preclude long quotations, make the debates more lively and certainly more relevant since any Member rising to speak may have to answer questions and prove in no uncertain terms that he knows what he is talking about. And then, of course, speeches at the report stage will be cut down to ten minutes; that will speed up the debate and do away with tedious repetitions. The report stage of a bill will be more constructive and we will be able to proceed with third reading much more rapidly.

Another change which will enhance the role of Hon. Members, and make Parliament more interesting and definitely more modern is the fact that votes to be taken on Fridays will be deferred. Considered on its own, such a change is not particularly challenging, but taken in conjunction with others like shorter speeches, the new parliamentary schedule and the proposed over-all reform, I suggest that Hon. Members will be less in a partisan mood on Fridays because, any vote on a substantive matter being deferred, they will probably be more inclined to dispose quickly of the so-called non-controversial bills. It will be possible to clear the Order Paper of the many bills which are often absolutely essential, of a technical nature, or urgent for other reasons. We will be able to pass such bills without the fear of having to call Hon. Members for a vote since any recorded division will be automatically deferred until the following Monday. As a result, Hon. Members will be happier and healthier as well in the planning of their weekend activities in their riding or elsewhere in Canada. They will be having a few extra hours to travel and meet with their constituents in their respective ridings, feeling a lot more alert and less tired by last minute travelling crowded within two days as is the case now.

We are doing away with that parliamentary oddity, Standing Order 43, a move which practically all Hon. Members fully endorse. It is a proceeding which no longer serves any useful purpose, although there still will be a way to move an urgent motion in an institution such as ours. I would suggest however that if a motion is indeed really urgent and important, as Hon. Members are now required to explain in their preliminary remarks under Standing Order 43, I should think that if something very important and very urgent does come up, unanimous consent will be forthcoming without any recourse to a special rule. We will have the usual discussions between House leaders and/or the interested parties with a view to adopting any really important and urgent motion without debate and undue haste. Doing away with motions under Standing Order 43 is in itself a very positive step. Instead, Hon. Members will each have 90 seconds to make a point rather than raise objections.

I think we should try it on an experimental basis because I am convinced that those who want that experiment to succeed will draw maximum benefits from those 15-odd minutes before the Question Period and not make ill use of the time of the House. I hope that the Chair, mindful of the intent of the committee report, will recognize Hon. Members without any regard for party affiliation and that the time available will be equally distributed between both sides of the House.

With respect to Wednesday afternoon being devoted to Private Members' Business, as in many other instances we would have favoured other alternatives such as Monday morning from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., or Friday, but we on the Government side have agreed to that change as we did to others so that the experiment could be carried out. Since Private Members' Business will be dealt with on the same day, I hope that Hon. Members who want to introduce bills or move motions will find it easier to better organize their work and plan those measures for a specific day of the week. This might deprive the Government of the choice of one day in allotting opposition days. However, I am convinced that on a special occasion, as more experience is gained, if either the Government or the Opposition wish to earmark a particular Wednesday as an allotted day, this could be done by unanimous consent by agreeing to have Private Members' Business postponed to another day.

Another positive change is the one respecting quorum. Too often, the image of Members of Parliament has been tarnished by someone trying to make political gains out of an unfortunate circumstance whereby some Members happened not to be in their seats, thus preventing quorum. I believe that every time a count was called for lack of quorum, this was a disservice to this institution, to the parties in this House and certainly to Members of Parliament in general. Nobody is to be blamed really, because very often this happened during fierce debate when it was too tempting to avail oneself of the Rules. Those who objected seized this opportunity to express their disapproval and call the public's attention by having Parliament adjourn, because Hon. Members were meeting in committee or phoning in the Government anteroom, or attending to their business and functions. I believe that this temptation will disappear when the suggested change is implemented because whenever fewer than 20 Members are present in this House and an Hon. member calls attention to this and the Speaker is aware of this fact, the House will not be called for a count until the bells have rung for 15 minutes. And in such cases Hon. Members meeting in committees or attending to other Parliament Business will certainly hurry back to their seats in order that the House and committees may work simultaneously.

The other changes also are very important. They deal with the structure of our Standing Committees. Suggestions are made as to Special Committees and the reduction of committee membership in my view will have a most important impact. I, for one, have always supported that change, because it is my belief that a small group can much better and more easily concentrate on an important matter, as evidenced by the Special Committees that were established last year and made reports on matters of current interest. My parliamentary secretary had the privilege to chair one of those on the handicapped. They did tremendous work. They were seven. They drew their report within a reasonable time frame. The same may be said for the Chairman of the Committee on Parliamentary Reform, the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre). Experience has shown that smaller and more flexible committees, when entrusted with interesting matters, can have a very positive impact on the development of our parliamentary system, upgrade the role of Members of Parliament, sharpen their interest and ultimately enable this institution to produce much more enlightened measures that better meet the wishes of the Canadian people.

Therefore smaller committees, with 10 to 15 members, would be busier because all reports tabled before Parliament under a statute would automatically be referred to those committees. They would always have bills before them and estimates, as well as those reports tabled before Parliament that do not require special reference. In each of these committees, therefore, about ten members will be able to examine topics they are most interested in and submit reports to this House, to which the Government will have to respond intelligently in a limited time frame and which could afterwards be made public in due time. Finally, this ongoing review of regulations by the Committee on Procedure and Organization also seems to me like a constructive suggestion. I believe that this experience should be evaluated as it proceeds so that we may make adjustments if need be, not to undermine the experiment or long-term parliamentary reform, but rather to make this experimental process easier with a view to bringing about a more efficient, human and modern Parliament.

I would have liked to mention an area which those who deal with parliamentary reform will have to examine during the next few months, namely supply procedure, budget confidentiality, budgetary bills, financial bills and the delays involved as a result of our outmoded procedure which forces us years after a budget has been brought down, to still have to debate bills ensuing from past budgets. I believe this kind of reform now deserves special consideration and a consensus will not be easily reached when it comes to firm conclusions. Not only will such a reform be a challenge, but I believe that is most relevant and that if Parliament is to be in a better position to deal with today's problems, our procedure dealing with supply, the budget and supply bills will have to be updated so that the House of Commons can deal with these matters within a reasonable time. I believe that one of the ways to dispose of bills more quickly and to avoid many delays would be to allow preliminary consultation of all the people concerned before a budget is made public and related bills are tabled.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all Members of Parliament to make this experiment a success and not to look for anomalies or weaknesses in this proposal, since it is not perfect as we recognize ourselves and as I think our friends opposite and the members of the Committee also recognize. The rules proposed to this House have weaknesses and unclear elements, and I believe that for a destructive mind, it would be very easy although childlish to prevent this experiment from being positive and successful. I therefore call on the intellectual honesty of all Members and I want to assure them of the sincerity of the Government in implementing the proposed changes so that this experiment can be a success and result in fact in permanent changes to which adjustments may be made. Therefore parliamentarians on both sides of the House will feel more useful in society, will feel truly upgraded and, convinced that it is to their advantage to work in committees and that they can make a difference on legislation introduced in this House. As I said, it would be easy enough to botch the exercise, but to me it would be totally unacceptable and irresponsible. I think that it is merely a matter of credibility, not for the Government, not for the Official Opposition, not for Hon. Members collectively, not for the independent Member, it is a matter of credibility for each and everyone of us. It is a matter of credibility for this institution itself and it is essential as we are experiencing special problems confronting our community and while our economic and social development requires major changes during the years to come. It is essential for a democratic institution such as our Parliament to be in a position to respond to reality and adjust to our modern times, to the eighties. I think that the proposed reform is not the only solution but it is a step in the right direction. At long last, this institution will be operating within the framework of a series of Standing Orders which given the good faith and the practical sense of its Members will ensure a performance that will be more readily accepted by Canadians and will meet their aspirations.

Finally, I hope that this experience and the permanent changes to be implemented at a later date will pave the way to a regular and continued development. I regret that we should introduce by fits and starts such revolutionary reforms which contrast too strongly with the bad habits acquired by Parliament. I think that the suggestion that we let the Committee on Procedure and Organization constantly monitor the implementation of our Standing Orders will from now on allow parliamentary reform to proceed on a daily basis, and develop at a more regular pace without suddenly having every 12 , 14 or 15 years to make recommendations which following some experimentation become a step in the right direction. In conclusion I wish we will all show good faith, goodwill, and a practical mind so that parliamentary reform will become a continued procedure in the process of a normal and regular development to allow once again elected representatives to work proudly in the best interests of their constituents so that our democratic institution may play its true role and increasingly gain the respect of all Canadians.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, before the House Leader (Mr. Pinard) resumes his seat, I wonder if he would simply address himself to the minor matter which I raised last Thursday, when we were discussing the day to be set aside for debate of his motion, concerning the implementation of his motion and the experimental Standing Orders. He will recall that we had a House Leaders' meeting later that same day, last Thursday, and I suggested that there be included in the last line but one of his motion, after the word "and", the words "with the approval of the House Leaders". That was to avoid placing the potentially embarrassing discretion with the Clerk of the House to make decisions on his own with respect to technical and consequential changes.

By adding the words I have suggested and to which I understood all three House Leaders had agreed, it would make any additional technical or consequential amendments subject to consultation with the House Leaders before that discretion was exercised. Perhaps the House Leader could address himself to that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can confirm that the House leaders met last week, and we decided that it was unnecessary to amend the motion to make the discretion of the Clerk of the House in drafting the Standing Orders subject to consultation with the House Leaders, but it is, of course, understood that this is desirable, and that if any technical changes are necessary in Appendix C as proposed in the motion in my name, the House leaders, would appreciate being consulted before such technical changes are made, in order to ascertain that the changes are indeed of a technical nature and that the intent of the report remains intact. One example comes to mind, and I may bring it to the attention of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). It is a case of incorrect numbering. It is suggested that Standing Order 6.(4)(a) be amended, while this should be 6.(5)(a).

Mr. Nielsen: 6.(5)(b)!

Mr. Pinard: 6.(5)(b), I beg your pardon. So there is some confusion here. Any changes, must be purely technical, and we want to make sure that we are consulted in any case, before the changes are made, to prevent any change in the spirit and intent of the report. I can therefore confirm to the House Leader that we do have an agreement in that respect. It is unnecessary to amend the motion, and it is understood that the House Leaders would like to be consulted before any technical changes are made.

Finally, I can also confirm that in the last paragraph of my motion, the mandate given to the Clerk of the House to update the Standing Orders of the House of Commons is a restrictive one, since it applies only to Standing Orders incorporating the changes referred to in my motion and covered by Appendix C of the report tabled in the House by the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform. I understand that sooner or later, it will be necessary to revise or make technical changes in other Standing Orders which are not covered by the present experiment, but I submit, with due respect, that this is not the time to do so and that such changes are not covered by the present motion.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank the House leader for that clarification and for his commitment with respect to that understanding.

My first words must be of a congratulatory nature to the chairman of the committee and the co-chairman—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: —who have done an outstanding job in considering this very complex problem, together with Members of Parliament from all three parties who served on the committee. They approached their job with the determination to bring about this initial change and they are still sitting with that same determination to see that meaningful reform is brought about in our processes and practices in the House. No doubt their future reports will accomplish the objective which we all seek and certainly which we in this Party have been seeking for a good many years, as evidenced by the immediate attention the matter was given by our Government during the short period we were in office. It was the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who tabled a discussion paper, on behalf of our Government, setting forth meaningful changes in the process, and who put down a motion to refer that discussion paper to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: We are all happy to see that many of his suggestions contained in that discussion paper have now seen the light of day in the changes which have been proposed by the Special Committee.

The House Leader has described the third report as a giant step forward. Reform, as a whole, would certainly constitute a giant step forward. Without detracting one iota from the excellent work of the committee and from our expectations of its future work, I would prefer to describe the third report as a first tentative step. We all look forward with great anticipation to the future reports of the Special Committee, particularly when we get into the heart of reform of this place in the discharging of its central responsibility, namely, the control of the public purse and the accountability of Government to the taxpayers who foot the bill.

The references of the House Leader to the moneys which have been made available to the Opposition Parties and to the Office of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) bear one brief reflection. First, it is my understanding, and I believe I am correct, that the budget for the Office of the Leader of the Opposition, at $1.8 million, is a global budget, all-inclusive. I see the Government House Leader shaking his head in the negative, but I believe if he checks he will find that to be accurate. That must also be compared with the budget of the Prime Minister's Office, which, as he well knows, has split away from his own office, the PCO. Our latest estimates in the Blue Book concerning the functioning of the PMO show that it receives $4,196,000, almost three times as much. I might say that that amount is up by $818,000 over the last budgetary period, the last fiscal year, an increase of some 24.2 per cent.

I am attracted by the last paragraph of the introduction to the third report, which is to be found on page seven of Votes and Proceedings for Friday, November 5 last. All of my references hereafter will be to the pages of that issue of Votes and Proceedings, which I have studied, rather than to the committee report itself. That last sentence states:

> Your Committee unanimously recommends that its proposals be considered together as a whole.

I could not endorse any proposition more strongly. Changes to our Standing Orders and to our practices have a habit of being unable to foresee situations arising in the future, the effect of which is never anticipated by ourselves in a debate such as this or by committee members who bring forward the recommendations.

I might also say that, as I develop my remarks in this discussion, it is my intention to set forth certain understandings upon which we are accepting this third report on an experimental basis and to say, quite frankly, that within that one-year period we expect those understandings to be fulfilled in good faith and in the good spirit intended by the committee in the report. For it is only if the Government and the Opposition act in good faith in the implementation of these changes that they stand even a ghost of a chance of succeeding, as the Government House Leader has said. If that good faith fails on any side, the experiment would be terminated on the specific date set forth in the motion of the House Leader.

• (1600)

I wanted to include in my congratulations to the committee co-chairman and the committee members, and to express my congratulations and the thanks of all Members of the House to the several witnesses who appeared before the committee, some of whom have lived and worked with our practices and our Standing Orders and have been very concerned about the change that is necessary not only to make this place a more human institution, as the Government House Leader describes it so often, but to make it a more meaningful place for Members of Parliament, to make it a place where Members of Parliament as individuals feel that they are making a positive contribution in the discharge of the expectations which were the basis upon which they were sent here by their electors in the first place.

With respect to the former Clerk of the House, he was specifically singled out by the Government House Leader in his remarks. I, too, would like to endorse the fund of knowledge that was made available by the former Clerk to the committee, and to tell the Government House Leader that in a sense it was the former Clerk of this House who contributed to my presence here today, and that, he made that contribution in 1957 during the first election in which I ran. You might ask him, in a private moment, to explain that to you, Mr. Speaker.

I want to deal with the report generally. It is our feeling that Parliament maintains its power, integrity and prestige by remaining at arm's length from the bureaucracy and the Government. Parliament cannot allow itself to become a pensioner of the Government no matter how benevolent or how well-intentioned. Parliament cannot afford to become the private personal property of whatever Government might find itself in office from time to time.

Parliament is the highest resort of freedom, where free men and women are able to voice opinions and to criticize the excesses of powerful Governments without fear of retaliation. Parliament's independence, if that is to be the case, must be the primary concern of every citizen.

If Parliament is to carry out its mandate of controlling expenditures and overseeing the activities of Government so that the resources of the taxpayers do not become simply an instrument for retaining Governments in power, then Parliament must be free of coercion, intimidation or restraint. Parliament no longer needs to fear the pressure from an all-powerful royal court. Just as inimical to free deliberation is the pressure from a Government which would like to become all-powerful. I say these things without any intention whatsoever of being partisan.

Proposals for parliamentary reform usually aim at gaining more time for Government business and reducing the time available to an Opposition. From my personal viewpoint, the proposals of this committee fall into that latter category because there is no doubt in my mind that the changes contained in this third report are overwhelmingly in favour of the Government.

We, nonetheless, are prepared, on an experimental basis, to adopt the third report in the hope—and we have this sincere hope—that the Government will act bona fide and in good faith in the manner in which it used the excess advantages which they will gain as a result of these changes, and in the singular anticipation that we are going to see further changes in subsequent reports that will result in that kind of fiscal and over-all parliamentary control of Government and the purse strings. Those reports have yet to come.

Let me point out at once that what diminishes the Opposition diminishes Parliament and Parliament's ability to act. It is very clear that if there is to be effective criticism on a continuing basis it will come from the Opposition. Parliament is not strengthened, nor is the public interest served, by Members of Parliament who speak with emotion outside the House of Commons about the iniquity of certain legislation and yet who rise in the House of Commons and vote with the Government simply because they feel that that is their obligation, or that unless they do their careers will be deleteriously affected.

Parliament cannot afford—this is in keeping with those who hold the view that there are certain functions of this place for which there should be freedom to vote as a Member pleases—to have what have often been referred to as trained seals on either side of the House. That is why it is essential that the rights of the Opposition be preserved and that we maintain the capacity of the Opposition to make its position known in the most effective manner possible.

A simple numerical majority does not give a Government the right to ride like a juggernaut over the Opposition. Responsible Government also means taking minority views into account and paying attention to the position taken by the Opposition. Failing that, if we do not accept that principle as lying at the heart of our parliamentary system, we may as well accept, from my personal point of view, a one-party system such as that which now prevails in Poland under General Jaruzelski.

The last major reform undertaken in 1968 had the effect of removing much of the detail of both legislation and expenditure from the control of the House, relegating it to Government-dominated committees about which I will have more to say shortly. Obviously, this does not improve Parliament's capacity to deal with expenditure control.

In recent years we have had repeated warnings from successive Auditors General that Government expenditures are now completely removed from the control of Parliament. A vital brake on the excesses of Government since the days of Charles II has been control of expenditures by Parliament. To all intents and purposes, what those successive Auditors General are saying is that that brake no longer exists.

This is more than a mere question of procedure. It is a question of fundamental democracy, a question of the people's right to know how their money is being spent and to call the Government to account. That right has been lost. It has been lost totally, and that is not an exaggeration. It is one of the most important functions of this Special Committee, and that is one of the principal reasons that we accept on an experimental basis this report.

• (1610)

One of the most important functions of this committee is to regain that right and to regain, consequently, democracy in this country. Because unless this Special Committee comes up with a solution to the problem which has been pointed out by those successive Auditors General, and unless it can come up with that kind of solution which strikes at the heart of the reason for being of this place, then not only it but we will have failed.

I see some distinct encouragement that the committee is grappling with that problem from a very excellent paper which I have studied and which is now before the committee, I believe, under the combined authorship of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), who I see listening intently to this debate. It is a good thing to see a member on the Government side and a member of the Opposition sponsoring, in a common cause, a proposed solution to the very important problem of which I speak. The first thing which must be restored in the procedures of this House is a mechanism whereby Parliament regains control over expenditures.

Coming now to the proposals themselves in the third report, I re-emphasize my agreement with the words expressed by the subcommittee in the presentation of this report, that we should be looking at the proposals as a whole and not piecemeal. I re-emphasize the importance of that and say that is precisely what we will be doing in the coming year. Because within that year I am sure, Mr. Speaker, we are going to see further reports dealing with very important problems, such as parliamentary control over expenditures. We will move cautiously in the meantime. We wait for the total reformation package before making these changes permanent, which should happen well within one year from today, and we may then consider the package as a whole. The dangers inherent in doing otherwise, I think, are so obvious they need not be set forth by me here today.

We are adopting this report now on the basis of an expectation of those reports yet to come which will deal meaningfully with the changes that are necessary. The Opposition, by this interim report, this third report, are being asked to give up a great many protections while the Government is giving up virtually nothing. As an example, the Opposition generally loses its power to delay or even block unacceptable legislation. In the meantime, the Government gains very substantially in terms of parliamentary time which the Opposition must surrender.

The adoption of the parliamentary calendar, while perhaps justifiable on a strictly experimental basis, and certainly justifiable for the convenience particularly of those Members who have families and long distances to travel, certainly adds something in the order of ten days, as stated by the Government House Leader; but I think it is more in the nature of in excess of three weeks' time which will be available to the Government. This would be tolerable if the Government showed some inclination to bring Bills forward in a proper and efficient manner, but we have seen nothing of that in the over 400 days we have been sitting in this session. After more than 400 days in the present session, we are faced with Ways and Means proposals arising out of three different budgets, some at cross-purposes with each other in a kind of confusion and chaos that no amount of rules changes or goodwill on the part of the Opposition can cure. Sitting on the Order Paper today are something like 46 or 47 Ways and Means motions, the product of three different budgets. This is simply bad management on the part of a Government which really does not know where it is at or where it is going in terms of its fiscal policies. The point I raise is that no procedural reform can make up for incoherence, lack of planning and lack of direction on the part of the Government.

Since this is the first opportunity I have had since last April to do so, I would like to refer to the episode of the energy omnibus Bill which was dumped into the lap of Parliament with the expectation by the Government that the House was prepared to deal with a package which wrapped up something like 12 separate legislative enactments in one hydra-headed Bill. That is not the way I understand Parliament, and I believe that is a view shared by all in my Party.

I know that the Special Committee is grappling with this problem, and, indeed, it is a problem to try to spell out criteria upon which omnibus Bills are designed or criteria which will prevent abuse of the device of omnibus Bills. We expect great things from the Special Committee when dealing with that subject matter, as we do when it deals with the subject of parliamentary control over expenditures. But no Government, no matter what pressures might be upon it to get their legislative programs through, is entitled to abuse Parliament to the extent where they confine us to divide once on a plethora of measures involving several principles upon which divisions could very well be different on all.

We are prepared to provide the Government with extra time through a parliamentary calendar if there can be some assurance that the Government will make use of that time in an appropriate way. We expect the Government to bring down a legislative program in keeping with the needs of Canadians, having regard to the very pressing economic, personal and human problems which are confronting Canadians in our country today. We expect to have the broad lines of that program in plenty of time to be able to deal effectively with it and for the opposition to make a positive contribution. So far we see no evidence that that is going to be done and, presumably, that also is going to be the subject of future reports of the committee.

There is a proposal to restrict votes on Friday. There are some concerns which I feel should be expressed with respect to that proposal. Nothing benefits a Government more and an Opposition less, given our existing practices and procedures, than predictability. One of the few weapons which an Opposition commands to prevent Government abuse of power is the lack of that predictability. One of the abuses which is open to them—and we are willing to run the risk to see if the good faith the Government House Leader speaks about will be displayed—is that the Government could schedule termination of controversial debates on a Friday knowing full well there would be no vote on a Friday and knowing also full well that that vote would be set over to a Monday. Therefore, if the good faith of which the Government House Leader spoke is not present in the experimental period, it could ensure that Fridays will become some kind of repository for ending controversial legislation, enabling the Government to put over votes on such legislation until the following Monday.

Another thought that occurred to me over the weekend is this. Supposing the summer session ended on a Friday and we were dealing with legislation requiring a vote. Given no unanimous consent, would that mean that all those votes would be put over until the fall when we came back? The possibility is there in the rules. I do not mention that for the purpose of nitpicking, but just to confirm what the Government House

Leader has said, that the proposals are far from perfect even as they stand now.

Mr. Pinard: That is the problem.

Mr. Nielsen: He acknowledges the problem. This is the kind of procedure which has inherent dangers which require a very careful look.

I do not know whether I heard the translation correctly when the Government House leader was winding up his remarks, but he referred to an experimental period for the adoption of the changes proposed in the third report, which would become permanent at the end of the year. I am sure I must have heard wrongly or that it came across wrongly. That happens to me often.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Why does my hon. colleague not speak French?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I do not speak French all that well. I certainly know what the Minister is saying about me in the elevator, though!

In any event, we have to look at these changes very carefully. I really see no requirement for increasing to three hours the time required for giving notice under Standing Order 26. It is there and we are going to support it on an experimental basis, but I think its flaws will show themselves very quickly.

As for Standing Order 43, from my personal point of view there is no doubt of its usefulness in getting special attention drawn to special issues. I was rather surprised when I looked up the record a week ago to find that since the beginning of this session some 170 motions made under Standing Order 43 have been adopted. I could not believe that. I thought I had either miscounted or misconstrued, but looking through the Order Paper it is just fantastic the number that have gotten through. In any event, I agree that the procedure is rather useless and I do not think that the statements of a minute and a half are going to much lessen the farce. I would far rather like to see that 15-minute period used for extending Question Period. However, it is worth a try and we will see how it works. If it does not work I would suggest the committee go back to the drawing board and consider including that period as part of the Oral Question Period, making it a total of an hour.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in agreeing to shorter time limits on speeches the Opposition is giving up a considerable amount of time. Again, this could perhaps be more palatable or tolerable if we could expect the Government to bring forward a legislative program in some sort of planned way, but we see no evidence of this. By my calculations, and dealing only with the combined Opposition, the limitation on speech times has resulted in reducing the total available time in any debate from 4,080 minutes to 1,053 minutes, or a reduction at second reading stage of some 74.20 per cent. That is a considerable amount of available time to give up. At report stage we are giving up 50 per cent of the time and at third reading stage some 25 per cent of the time. The Government gains all that time and in return there is precious little except for perhaps the most significant proposal by the Special Committee when it deals with the work of our standing committee system. But there is no significant giving up of anything to achieve that balance between Government and Opposition which is so essential.

So on average, sir, this one device of limiting speaking time results in transferring some 49 per cent of the Opposition's over-all time to the Government, and I do not believe that this can be described as an improvement in procedure. I can describe it as something with which we are prepared to go along because the issue parliamentary control over expenditures is so fundamental and important that we are prepared to go along initially with this report to see whether that is going to happen. If it does not happen, then that understanding upon which we are accepting this report will have failed and the experiment will, with great reluctance, have come to an end. So I am putting great store in that Huntington-Lachance paper on expenditure control, as we all are on this side of the House.

On the question of committees, I do not believe that our problem in the past has been too many members, although that always is subject to improvement. Perhaps we have too many committees, some 26 standing committees of the House of Commons now, and I think that once we solve the problem of Members, we will solve the problem of substitutions. Right now there are standing committees of the House which overlap, which cover the same territory, and there are committees which meet so infrequently that they constitute scarcely more than a nullity in our process. So this implies a need for tightening up the number of committees required to conduct the business of the House of Commons, and perhaps that is one of the matters the Special Committee will be looking at as well.

The proposal which the Government House Leader had so much praise for a moment ago, the automatic referral of annual reports, is one significant change which is beneficial. It is not just the annual reports which have automatic referral, but to use the words of the changes in the Standing Order, it includes all annual reports of Government Departments, Crown corporations, including their subsidiaries, and other agencies, which are to be referred to the appropriate standing committee. It also includes returns or other papers that are laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament.

I see two very serious difficulties with that. Perhaps the most serious, and I think this may well have been overlooked by committee members, is that even given the very desirable change in the Standing Order, there is no mandatory provision for the committee to meet. If the Government does not wish the committee to meet, it will not meet. So that addresses itself again to the good faith that we are expecting the Government to exercise in causing these committees to meet immediately. As soon as the session opens, those standing committees should be struck and should be meeting. In the interim the Special Committee should be considering, in one of its forthcoming reports, proposing an amendment to our Standing Orders which will make it obligatory for these committees to meet and not leave it to the whim of the Government. I do not suggest that such a thing would happen, but a Government could abuse that change. It might be embarrassing to let the standing committee, which might have, for instance, responsibility for looking into contracts in Banff National Park, meet at this particular time. That obligation should be there, but it is not there now.

The second omission that I see in the automatic referral is that time and time again, notwithstanding the existence of statutory law requiring annual reports to be tabled within a specific calendar time, those reports and papers have not been tabled and the returns have not been made. I have seen annual reports of Crown agencies that were supposed to be tabled within a fiscal year not tabled for two years. So much for automatic referral of annual reports if the law is disregarded in the first place. In that case, the committee has nothing to review.

The third weakness I see is that the requirement that the Government must respond to the report of the committee is only triggered if the Government majority on the committee requires the response. If you look carefully, Mr. Speaker, you will see that the response is at the request of the committee. The committee is going to continue to have a Government majority, and unless that majority agrees to require a response by the Government, that is not going to be forthcoming. I do not suggest for a moment that this would happen, but in the past I have known of committee chairmen from the Government side going to a Minister and saying that the committee has in mind to recommend such and such a thing, and would he find that embarrassing or would he accept it? I can see a Minister saying that the action would embarrass him considerably and asking the committee not to make him respond. That requirement is rather toothless, therefore.

I hope the Special Committee will address those concerns. If it is serious about improving the committee system, it will make meetings of committees obligatory.

I do not know how you can improve a law which requires annual reports to be tabled by a specific date. I hope the committee will address itself to that problem and to the question of the Government majority emasculating the requirement of Government response to committee reports.

With respect to special committees, I am quite puzzled by the proposal which would authorize a member of the committee or authorize the committee to make public interim and final reports, even though the House is not sitting. I find that rather surprising. What the House is authorizing, if the proposal is adopted, is that a special committee of the House could report to the media instead of to the House. If that is what the majority of Members want to try for a year, we will see how it works.

I want to return for a moment an aspect of to this automatic referral of annual reports that I did not pick up in my first remarks on the subject. On page 19 of the report, after the reference to Standing Order 41, there appears the following:

"(4) Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the committee designated by the Member tabling the report, return or paper."

We know that only Government members can table reports, returns or papers; Members of the Opposition cannot table anything. This is a substantive change which I am not sure committee members wanted to make. At present such reports, returns and papers may be tabled only by Ministers or their Parliamentary Secretaries. What we are doing here is authorizing any Government Member to table a report and refer it to any committee he or she pleases. Perhaps that was not the intention. Perhaps the reasoning was that a Minister or a Parliamentary Secretary is also a Member. I want to point out the procedural difficulty, however, if a Member who is not a Minister or a Parliamentary Secretary were to discharge that function, which he or she would be perfectly entitled to do as a result of that change.

I want to make sure that Members appreciate what they are doing, on the adoption of this report, with respect to Private Members' Business. Because this session has lasted as long as it has—the longest in our history at well over 400 days—Private Members' Bills have not been discussed since March 24, 1981. When it comes to dealing with Private Members' Business in the House, this is one area where I believe the Government or the Opposition has no right to interfere. Private Members have precious few legislative privileges. Private Members' hour has traditionally been the time in the whole process which is peculiarly the property of Private Members.

Since March 24, 1981 Private Members have been denied the right to debate Bills. All they have had is Thursdays and Fridays; in effect, what they have been denied is two hours per week. In the first Supply period of the three semester periods, 40 hours of Private Members' time has been denied since March 24, 1981. By the change proposed in the committee report, which we are prepared to try for an experimental year, Private Members lose one hour per week. Three hours on Wednesday is all they will get. There will be no more Private Members' time at any other time in the week. Ordinarily, in the Supply period they would get four hours per week; this ensures them three hours per week, or 40 hours in the first supply period. But since March 24, 1981 we have lost that time.

I want Members to be very clear about what they are giving up and to suggest that they give up that time for a year, to try it out and see if it improves things. I suspect our Special Committee might want to take another very hard look at that. Speaking as a Private Member, I feel I would give up that right most reluctantly when it comes to the confirmation or otherwise of this experiment a year from now.

I want to deal with the quorum for a moment. There have been some misguided souls who fancy themselves as experts on the procedures and practices of this place. They have published articles and/or editorials which conclude that the changes proposed with respect to the quorum would prevent forever more a repeat of the tactics that were employed to stop the energy omnibus Bill. Nothing could be further from the truth. As I understand it—and I am sure that it was the intention of the committee—it is a 15-minute bell so that the House sitting is not terminated simply because some over-zealous Member calls for a quorum when someone may be out having a coffee. It is meant to call a quorum together when our numbers fall below a quorum and we are considering some order of business. That is as far as the change goes, and I am happy to see the chairman of the committee nodding his head in agreement.

• (1640)

I think it is a great amendment in favour of the Government, but I would caution the Government that it should not become too lax as a result of having this luxury of a 15-minute bell and not have its Members in here to meet it. We have all seen in the last couple of weeks what can happen if the Government does not fulfil its responsibility to have a quorum here; the Speaker simply adjourns the House until the next day.

While I think of it, I also caution the Government, in its sincere effort at encouraging this kind of good faith of which all Parties speak in trying to make this experiment work, that it should also think twice before doing things without a quorum in the House.

Let me simply conclude by saying that we are accepting the third report with caution and on the understanding that the expectations inherent in the spirit of the report and spelled out in what the committee intends to address itself to in the future will be achieved. Unless there is substantial and meaningful reform which will restore to this place fiscal accountability, there can be no question of making these changes permanent. If we have the kind of meaningful reform which will restore to the people of Canada and their elected representatives through this institution the parliamentary control which must exist if democracy itself is to continue, then the changes in the third report have a chance of becoming permanent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STANDING ORDERS AND PROCEDURE

THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard:

That, commencing at 5.59 o'clock p.m., on Wednesday, December 22, 1982, or, as the case may be, at the time that the House concludes its consideration of Government Business on that day, the temporary changes to the Standing Orders set forward as Appendix C of the Third Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, tabled Friday, November 5, 1982, shall take effect;

That the proposed changes in the Standing Orders shall be applied in the spirit expressed in Part II (entitled "Recommended Experimental Changes") of the Third Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure;

That, subject to future Order of the House, the said temporary changes to the Standing Orders shall cease to have effect at 5.59 o'clock p.m., on Wednesday December 21, 1983, or, as the case may be, at the time that the House concludes its consideration of Government Business on that day;

That, subject to the provisions of this Order, the dates and times of the commencement and cessation of the effect of the said temporary Standing Orders shall be valid whether or not the House is sitting; and

That the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print revised and re-numbered Standing Orders of the House incorporating the temporary Standing Orders and any technical or consequential amendments necessary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. House leader of the Official Opposition would agree to my asking him a question.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) accept a question?

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has dwelt at great length on the question of automatic referral of annual reports of departments and Crown corporations to the various standing committees to explain that he saw a problem if these reports were late.

Would he not agree with the members of the Committee that referral of annual reports would enable standing committees to initiate their own enquiries, and that in any case, the annual report remains before a standing committee until the next annual report is submitted, and that any technical delay in producing the report does not change the fact that the committee continues to have the right to initiate its own enquiries?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) does not get me wrong. I think it is an admirable change. One of its weaknesses is that we do not get current annual reports when they should be tabled. If that problem could be met, it would almost be a perfect change, were it not for the more serious one of the committee not being able to meet on its own initiative but relying on the Government to allow it to meet.

Let me just leave the Member with one example of the more serious problem. Under Standing Order 65(1)(t) we now have a Standing Committee on Northern Pipelines which specifically has referred to it documents and papers under four specific sections of the Northern Pipeline Act. Despite repeated requests from the Opposition for that Standing Committee to meet since the beginning of this session, over two and a half years, it has not met because the Government has not allowed it to meet. Yet it is empowered specifically to look into specific papers that are required to be produced under a specific Act of Parliament. Without the ability to meet on its own initiative, the change is pretty meaningless.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to be able to speak on behalf of my Party this afternoon and also as a member of the Committee on Parliamentary Reform to the motion of the Government House Leader that the parliamentary reform package recommended by the third report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure be adopted for the year 1983. I will try to do my best to match and transcend the enthusiasm which the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) demonstrated for the package. I look forward to hearing from other Members of his Party who will hopefully be more enthusiastic about what potential there is within this package for parliamentary reform, not just those reforms which are contained within the package but also those made possible down the road by the actions we are taking today. I will have more to say about that later.

I think we ought to stress, not in as tentative a way as the Opposition House Leader but in a positive way, that this is an experiment, that this is an interim report, and that these are the things the committee when it met thought it could come to an early consensus on and get before the House for its consideration. I am very pleased that we were able to do it, that we were able to put something before the House this fall, and that the three Party caucuses have had the wisdom to allow this to happen so quickly.

The adoption of this report by the House will break the ice on parliamentary reform. I am reminded of the ice that was caked around my car when I arrived at the airport today. The experiment will break the ice on parliamentary reform and make other things more possible down the road.

Members of the committee know that the report is imperfect and that indeed there may be things we will find out as we go along which were overlooked. There will be unforeseen consequences of the reforms and other things which need to be straightened out as we go along. It might even be somewhat chaotic, but it will be a creative kind of chaos rather than the paralysing chaos to which we are so often treated in the House of Commons as it now operates. Whether or not the chaos is creative will depend upon whether the goodwill continues, the goodwill which made the unanimous report of the committee possible, which existed in the committee and exists in the House to the extent that we were able to come to an agreement to deal with it today and implement the experiment as of January, 1983.

There will have to be the will to make parliamentary reform actually work. This is why I hope there will be more enthusiasm on the part of the Official Opposition as a whole than I felt the Opposition House Leader demonstrated for the proposals. I do not think we ought to go into them on quite the tone he demonstrated, because I think it is very important for the life of Parliament and the life of the House of Commons, about which I know the Hon. Opposition House Leader cares, that we go into this area on as positive a note as possible.

If the goodwill breaks down and the Government decides not to call committees into existence to exercise their new powers, it will be a breach of faith for which the Government will be responsible. The Government will hear about it if it acts in such a way as to make these reforms unworkable. Many of the possibilities which are contained in this package will not actually come to fruition if the Government stands in the way, but I do not think the Government will do that. I certainly hope it will not. I do not think the Government would have agreed to these reforms if it were the Government's intention to stand in the way of allowing them to be given a real try. But only time will tell.

• (1650)

Adopting this report today is crucial in terms of looking down the road, in that it makes the rest of the committee's work more meaningful. In my view, it would have been very difficult for the committee to have carried on looking at very difficult issues; for instance, the speakership, the supply process and the whole question of accountability of the Government to Parliament for its expenditures. We could not have moved into this area as a committee had we not had the feeling that there was enough concern in the House for parliamentary reform to at least experiment with the package on which we are agreeing today.

I quite agree with those who have said that this is no radical reform. This is not something about which we should be beating our breasts all that loudly. But it is an important first step. It is not just a tentative step; it is a step about which we can feel a great deal of satisfacton. Nevertheless, we have to see it for what it is. It is something that will break the psychology of despair about parliamentary reform which I have noticed, even being here only three and one-half years, has existed for some time, and particularly since the failure of the 1976 parliamentary reform committee. Thus, this is something from which we should take some satisfaction as a House of Commons today. This kind of opportunity presents itself so rarely, and I hope this is the beginning of something even more significant than the specific reforms that are contained within the package.

If we have difficulties down the line with recommendations that are in the package, committee members will be around to interpret the spirit of what the committee had in mind when it made its recommendations.

I hope the House Leaders and others who have to deal with the reality of these reforms will feel free to consult with members of the committee from time to time as to what we intended by this parliamentary reform, or to find out what was in our minds if we have not described it perfectly in the recommended Standing Orders.

This is one occasion for me, and I am sure for others on the committee, when I felt that Members of Parliament acting together could make a difference. In other words, Members of Parliament acting together made recommendations in such a way that the Government took steps to bring them into being.

One of the objects of parliamentary reform is that Members of Parliament can feel that they can make a difference when it comes to policy. We do, however, have a long way to go on that road. But 20 Members of Parliament got together, made recommendations and had them accepted, which means that a difference has been made. Therefore, we have given an example of what I would call parliamentary reform.

I think those who are concerned about things to come, as far as parliamentary reform is concerned, ought to take a look at the document that was mentioned, the so-called Huntington-Lachance position paper on accountability. It is called "Closing the Loop". This document is available to Members of Parliament and also to the public through the minutes of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure.

It seems to me that where the real problem lies is in making the Government more accountable to Members of Parliament for its actions. This is something which unites all Members of Parliament, regardless of the ideological differences that exist between Parties and individuals. We may want to make the Government accountable for different things. We do have different interests in what we want to pursue in terms of accountability, but it is in the interests of all Members of Parliament that the Government be made more accountable. That is certainly one of the most important areas with which the committee will deal. Adopting this report at this time will, I hope, create the kind of momentum which will result in subsequent reports of the Special Committee being taken more seriously, instead of finding their way on to shelves to collect dust.

I do not intend to speak much longer but instead make myself available as a member of the committee for any questions that Hon. Members might have about what was intended by particular reforms. I must say I am somewhat disappointed that there are so few Hon. Members present for this discussion; it is a discussion since we do not expect a division on this matter. It is disappointing that there are so few Members around even to mark the occasion. When I subtract members of the committee who are present here in the House from the total number of Hon. Members present in the Chamber, it seems that not very many Members hunger and thirst for more knowledge of what the committee had in mind with its recommendations.

The first few sections of the recommendations in the report have to do with the parliamentary calendar and timetable. To a great extent, that has been gone over. The parliamentary timetable is important in lending a degree of predictability to the planning of Members of Parliament. However, this does not only apply to Members of Parliament; it lends predictability in terms of timing to the political process and to the lives of everyone connected with the political process and with the life of Parliament. I think this particular reform will be beneficial and I am looking forward to seeing how it works out. The parliamentary timetable, however, is not particularly contentious.

I do want to speak about the length of speeches and the proposal within the report to curtail speeches to 20 minutes. Speeches previously were given a time limit of 40 minutes. If I use 40 minutes, Mr. Speaker, it is because I am taking advantage of my last opportunity to do so. Speeches which were formerly 40 minutes in length will now be reduced to 20 minutes, to be followed by a ten-minute question period.

The object of this change is to restore to Parliament, in a structured way, actual debate. There was a feeling among witnesses who came before the committee that the Commons was being treated to a constant string of set speeches and there was not enough cut and thrust back and forth between Members. By adding on this ten-minute exchange period Members might deliver the kinds of speeches which they could defend in a subsequent ten-minute question and answer session. We would also have the opportunity for more genuine debate.

• (1700)

This is another example of reform that will depend on two factors. One is the way Members use the debate and the custom which develops from this debate. The other factor concerns the discretion of the Chair. I, or I believe anyone else on the committee, do not foresee a Member rising to speak for nine out of the ten minutes in a rebuttal while the Member who originally spoke would only have a minute to reply. The purpose is for a Member to make a brief comment or ask a brief question, which could happen perhaps as many as four times within that ten-minute period in response to comments or questions which may have been raised during another Member's speech. I believe that that was what the committee was considering. It was not simply to replace 40-minute speeches with 20-minute speeches that were interspersed with 10-minute speeches. The purpose was to alow time for real debate.

I also want to comment on Standing Order 43. This was a difficult subject for the committee to deal with. We probably spent more time on this than we did on the other questions. We felt that the difficulty with motions under Standing Order 43 was public perception of them, especially since the proceedings of the House of Commons are now televised. These motions are incomprehensible to many people watching. Some of the motions which are moved during that 15-minute period before Question Period debase the language of "urgent and pressing necessity". As well, the requests for unanimous consent and the denial of that unanimous consent, particularly when motions were worded in such a way as to be obviously acceptable, gave the impression that Parliament was being negative toward quite otherwise positive statements made by Members. Therefore, we felt that the entire concept of Standing Order 43 needed to be reformed.

We considered what the actual purpose of motions under Standing Order 43 was. We felt that Members needed an opportunity to bring their concerns about particular issues of the day before the House on a regular daily basis. What eventually happened on motions under Standing Order 43 was that this Standing Order became the vehicle by which these concerns were expressed. The kernel, the importance of these motions is that they allow Members the opportunity to put themselves on record on a regular basis and bring to the attention of other Members, the House, their constituents and the country their opinions on particular issues or on the Government's performance.

We hope that this period of Members' statements will accomplish this better. It will be interesting to see how it works. There will be fewer statements than motions under Standing Order 43, but I hope that these statements will be more substantial. I am looking forward to that.

Real reform will continue to occur only if this mood for reform which presently exists continues and the work of the committee continues, and the House remains receptive to its subsequent reports.

I do not think this is an experiment which is overwhelmingly in favour of the Government. I disagree with the Opposition House Leader in that respect. I believe it is a balanced report. We discussed many of the matters which were raised by the Opposition House Leader. We reviewed all of those arguments as an all-Party committee. We came up with these recommendations and agreed that it was a fair package. I hope we can approach it in that light. Since the Government bears a great deal of responsibility, we hope that it will continue in good faith and that we will be able sometime to look back at this change and see this day as the beginning of more significant reforms in the Canadian House of Commons.

In keeping with what I said previously, if there are Members who wish to ask me questions about the committee's report, I will not yield my time until it is clear that there are no Members who wish to ask questions. In that case, I will assume that I have overwhelmed them with my remarks and that no more needs to be said. I also look forward to hearing from the chairman of the committee since I understand he is next to speak.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Now that we have completed the first round of speakers, one speaker per Party, I believe there is an agreement between all sides of the House that we have a 15-minute time limit. This is to provide a number of Members an opportunity to participate in this debate. There was an agreement to exempt the chairman and the vice-chairman from that time limit, but they have volunteered to accept the 15-minute time limit to demonstrate their great desire for shorter speeches. I believe the House will agree.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I looked over to see whether the chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), was agreeable to be bound. He is. Therefore, I and my Party are agreeable.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we are also quite prepared to stay within a 15-minute time limit. It is good to see such co-operation in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Subsequent speeches in this debate will be limited to 15 minutes. Agreed and so ordered.

[Translation]

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud, today, to have this opportunity of taking part in the debate on the third report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I greatly appreciated the kind words spoken on my behalf by the Government House Leader and the House Leader of the Official Opposition. Instead of elaborating on the report's recommendations, I would prefer to take this opportunity to explain the Committee's approach to its mandate, to point out the general direction of the reforms and to outline the Committee's agenda for the coming months.

The Committee started its work rather tentatively, with a first meeting in July. Although all Committee members favoured reform, it was clear that Hon. Members did not have the same views on what the Committee's agenda should be. Some wondered which questions should become the focus of immediate reform, and how much time should be spent on this by the Committee. Committee members also wondered whether they should be informing the general public about the role of Canada's Parliament. Subsequently, the Committee tried to project its ideas on reform. During our initial proceedings, we held internal discussions, without witnesses, about our own perceptions of the need for reform and how we perceived the various roles that all Hon. Members and Parliament play in the daily lives of Canadians. Later, we listened with interest to a number of expert witnesses, all of whom made invaluable contributions, although I would like to mention a few whose participation was particulary appreciated, especially in the production of the report before the House today.

Representatives of the Canadian Bar Association were the first witnesses to appear before the Committee, and they helped us to clarify our concepts of parliamentary reform. Dr. John Stewart of St. Francis Xavier University gave us the benefit of his knowledge, not only as an academic but also as a former member of this House. Justice James Jerome, former Speaker of the House, helped us to put our ideas in their proper perspective. However, we owe a special debt of gratitude to a former Clerk of the House, Mr. Alistair Fraser. Mr. Fraser appeared before the Committee and gave us such excellent ideas that we asked him if he would give us the benefit of his services by becoming Special Adviser to the Committee. The changes in the Standing Orders that will become effective as of December 22 of this year, as recommended by the Committee, reflect the quality of his advice and the appreciation of his suggestions.

I should also like to mention our Senior Clerk, Mr. Robert Marleau, who helped a great deal in planning the Committee's work and organizing the support staff, which did a tremendous job. Mr. Philip Laundy and all the Library of Parliament staff provided invaluable and very substantial assistance. Mr. Speaker, when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) announced in June that this Committee would be formed, he was keeping his word, because I remember clearly that as soon as he was appointed Government House Leader, he came out in favour of parliamentary reform and announced that he intended to start the process during his first term. The fact that we have now approved the Committee's recommendations demonstrates that he was sincere. That is entirely to his credit, and I am pleased to offer him my sincere congratulations.

Mr. Speaker, when my colleagues on the Government side asked me to chair the Committee's proceedings, I knew I was taking on an extraordinary challenge. I admit that I thought about it for some time before I accepted, not because I was intimidated by the challenge, but because I wanted to be sure that all parties were taking seriously the need to change our Standing Orders and procedures. As we all know, Parliament is going through a very difficult period and our credibility is at stake. It was therefore not unreasonable to wonder whether it was possible to find twenty members representing the three parties in the House, a team that would be able to reach a consensus so that the Committee could table a unanimous, serious report with realistic recommendations, with the hope of gaining the approval of all parties so that the recommendations could be implemented in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I soon realized that all three parties were serious and sincere when I saw the list of Hon. Members sitting on the Committee. My nineteen colleagues on the Committee reflect, I believe, the aspirations of Canadians from all parts of this country and include a number of former ministers, experienced members of Parliament and also newly elected members. This is a splendid team. I am very grateful to them, first of all for having elected me as Chairman of the Committee and second, I am grateful for their sincerity, their dedication and their commitment. The fact that the Committee's report has met with the approval of all parties in this House proves that Committee members have done an extraordinary job, and they deserve the congratulations of all their colleagues. I also wish to mention the invaluable assistance I received from the Committee's two Vice-Chairmen, the first being my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), former minister in the Progressive Conservative Government.

[English]

This Hon. Member showed on many occasions that he could rise above political partisanship and demonstrate his love and respect for this institution in helping us arrive at these recommendations. It was personally rewarding to me to have the opportunity of working with him.

I would also like to mention the great help brought to the committee by the knowledge of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). It was important that our recommendations reflect the concerns of the third Party and his interventions assured this to the committee. Both of the Hon. Members helped to make my task much easier. This report reflects their commitment as well as that of all the other Members.

I would like to make special mention of the constant presence and participation of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who was not a member but attended every meeting and participated. After hearing witnesses, we spent some time allowing members of the committee to restate their concerns with regard to reform. During this process, it became evident to me that we were beginning to function, not as a committee made up of partisan MPs, but rather as Parliamentarians concerned about the health of this institution. We all had a common goal of effecting meaningful and constructive changes in an atmosphere of collegiality and based on consensus. The attendance of the members of this committee was well above the norm in all my years of experience here, and their interventions in debate always had a very high standard. Again, I wish to stress the fact that the House has benefited because the people on the committee acted as Members of Parliament and not as representatives of political parties. I am amazed at the great quantity and high quality of work which can be done when this is the case.

The first series of meetings allowed us to identify the issues of reform. We then realized in subsequent meetings that there were certain reforms which could be implemented immediately while others would require further study and perhaps the summoning of further witnesses. We determined that it was important to have a beginning to the reform process and, for that reason, submitted the report and committed ourselves to subsequent reports to follow.

The changes suggested in the report, while allowing the Government to govern, addressed the balance which must be maintained to enable a Member of Parliament effectively to represent the electorate. These reforms will enhance the role of the Member in the House of Commons debates and in the committee system as well.

I would like to mention briefly some of the recommendations. The first is with reference to the fixed dates for sittings or the parliamentary calendar. Finally we will know and, more importantly, Canadians will know when their Parliament is in session. After 115 or 116 years, the Canadian people will know. The parliamentary calendar will enable all of us, whether in Government or in Opposition, to plan our activities more rationally and effectively.

Concerning the item on the length of speeches, the committee feels that the implementation of the recommendation of shorter speeches with a short debate following will greatly help in making this forum more lively and, especially, more relevant.

With regard to the subject of committee reform, it has long been felt by most of us that the committee system needed revamping, and quickly. Our proposals point the way in helping to make the role of the PM more meaningful and important through committee work.

I would like to draw attention to the fact that, with regard to the future, we in the committee view this report as only a beginning, yet a very important and meaningful beginning. I would like to assure Hon. Members that we are still working and have committed ourselves to at least two or three further reports.

The section of the report dealing with the future does list a number of matters with which the committee will be dealing as its meetings continue. The future report of the committee will deal with the issue of accountability. Two of our Members have tabled a report on that matter and we are studying what has been referred to as the Huntington/Lachance report, which shows the quality of the work that can be accomplished within this type of committee. This will focus on the relevant aspects of ministerial, administrative and financial responsibility.

The structure of the committee system will also be studied. This will involve items such as the introduction of a panel of chairmen, administrative budgets for committees and the possibility of minority reports. While the position of the Private Member has been considerably enhanced by the present recommendations, the committee will continue to deal with this subject.

The institution of the Speakership will form the subject of a special report. Attention will be directed to the planning of the legislative agenda and non-controversial legislation.

Once again, I wish to thank all members of the committee for their excellent work, the three Party House Leaders and all Hon. Members of this House, for without their support, no matter how excellent our work, the House would not have given its unanimous approval, which it did. Unanimous acceptance was crucial in having its recommendations implemented. I recognize, as well, the importance of the support given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), and this is also to their credit.

In conclusion and in keeping with the recommendation in the report, if any of my colleagues wish to question me—and I notice that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) made the same offer—I will be pleased to answer those questions that I am able to answer, with Your Honour's permission.

• (1720)

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to thank the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) for his kind wishes and extremely kind sentiments expressed towards me and, of course, towards the other members of the committee, but I speak personally now and want to thank him very much. I want to reciprocate by saying that, under his chairmanship, this committee has for me been one of the happiest experiences of my parliamentary life which extends, as does that of many other Members, over some ten years.

I think it is fair to say that the committee was successful in many ways because its presiding officer, the chairman of the committee, was not wont to stand on Members, was able to give Members sufficient time to express themselves, did not come to his work in the chair with preconceived notions, but, more than that, brought years of experience and understanding of how this place works to bear on the work that we were given by the terms of reference.

I want to say that if we have been successful—certainly there has been co-operation among the members of the committee—it is because there has been great leadership by the chairman of the committee, and I am sure that my colleagues on all sides of the House of Commons would want to share in that sentiment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am pleased that he mentioned the support that has been given to parliamentary reform by the Leaders of the Parties, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), and the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I think it is fair to say that the Party Leaders have given their support to parliamentary reform.

I think it is appropriate that at the beginning of my speech I pay tribute to the Leader of the Opposition. The House Leader of the Government (Mr. Pinard) paid tribute to his Leader. It was the Leader of the Opposition who, in the campaign in 1979 and in his first term as Prime Minister of Canada, indicated two commitments: the reform of the Parliament of Canada, hopefully; secondly, the question of openness in Government.

I was honoured with the responsibility of leading in the preparation of the position paper on parliamentary reform in 1979, with the backing of the then Prime Minister; and I also had the privilege of introducing in this House the first freedom of information legislation in the Parliament of Canada introduced by a Government, which I also remember with great affection. I see my friend across the aisle smiling, but I do remember it with great affection and long to return to the opportunity of introducing legislation. In any event, it was a commitment by my Party Leader to those issues that allowed that to be done very early, and I think that is important and hope the House will understand if I say that our Party has been known as the Party of reform in terms of this institution.

The next thing I would like to mention is the work of Mr. Alistair Fraser, the officers of the Table, the people from the Library of Parliament and all of the staff of this Parliament who have been so helpful to us. They have really been a strong rod and staff.

I would like to say to my own House Leader, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that many of the reservations that he has expressed, as House Leaders of Oppositions are wont to do—I can say that now because I am no longer the House Leader of the Opposition—are reservations that were expressed in the committee which were dealt with and put aside.

We recognized in the committee that just as the committee itself would fail if the members of that committee did not act in good faith, so the whole process of reform would fail if the Government, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the third Party in the House of Commons did not act in good faith. Men can devise rules from now until the Second Coming and there will never be a set of rules that will encompass the concerns of all people on all sides of the House of Commons. I am not commenting on the validity of those concerns because those are always concerns; they are legitimate reservations that one has. But one can take a look at the rules of this House, of the British House, of the American Congress and the Australian House of Representatives and one can find gaping loopholes in those rules. They run there on good faith. If the place is to run at all, it will run on good faith. If this experiment is to be successful—because that is what it is—it will have to be carried out in good faith, and the burden of the failure will lie on the heads of those who do not act in good faith.

The committee understood that they were embarking on a bit of a new voyage in terms of this report. I want to say to the House that there was an understanding among all the members of that committee that Governments have certain responsibilities, Governments must get a legislative program through—or should get a legislative program through. The public will judge whether that legislative program is good or bad. But Members of Parliament, the Opposition certainly but Members of Parliament on all sides of the House who do not form the executive, who are not members of the Cabinet, have to have the tools by which they can examine what Governments are doing.

I believe there is more to this House of Commons than merely saying yes or no to what Government proposes. I think there is much more to this place than what is contained in those epithets that one hears—the "trained seals", the "sheep" and so on. I believe there is much more to it than that. Not only should we, in a modern democracy, be able to vote yes or no to sustain a Government or not; surely we have to have the tools to ask the questions why and why not?

If the purpose of Parliament is anything, it is to allow Members of Parliament who are not in the Government to do much more than just dispose of what Government brings to Parliament. It is much more than that. Surely it is to ask those questions, to inquire, to let Government propose on the one hand, but to be able to inquire without hindrance into the merit of what it proposes on the other. It is this sense of balance that I have tried to put to the House that occupied the work of the committee.

I want to say that we as a committee have not regarded this report as the last word in parliamentary reform. It is the first word in parliamentary reform. It is the first word that has been adopted out of the unanimous report without any changes whatsoever. That is historical, I believe at least in your time, Mr. Speaker, and your time extends back for some period. I will not say how long. I think that is something for all of us to remember. It puts a tremendous burden on all of us.

The Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill said that the purpose of this first work is to break the ice. I say it is a log jam. It is hopefully to bring an end to what has been written about in learned journals as a crisis in confidence in the Parliament of Canada. The people are looking at our political institutions, and they are looking at them with a sense of cynicism. They say they are not representative. They say Governments can do what they want without hindrance. They say that the Member is bound by the Party line; he can never speak as he would like to speak, he must always vote the Party line. Our committee has indicated that the very fundamental matter of confidence is something that is going to be looked at in the future section of the report. We look, as a committee, at the independent references to committees, using the techniques which have been described by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), as the way in which Parliament can get out from under the thumb of government. It seems to me that whether the government is Conservative, Liberal, or New Democratic, if the latter should ever happen, it does not make much difference in the parliamentary system. Members of Parliament have been heretofore under the thumb of government in terms of what they can do and what they cannot do, what they can investigate and what they cannot investigate.

I believe it is in keeping with the parliamentary system that further power be granted to the House. If Governments act improperly in granting this power, if they do not call committees, then there is going to be one devil of a political price to pay. On the other hand, in the use of that power, if Members of Parliament, in the Opposition, perhaps, or anywhere else, act irresponsibly, then there is going to be a political price to pay. Obstruction heretofore has been the only real weapon that an Opposition has, and that is what has happened to the system. I put it to you that as we develop these rules, the Opposition will still have the legitimate use of obstruction. It is still there. But what we as a committee hope is that there will be provided some other weapons as well, the weapons of legitimate inquiry, of independence, and we hope that as our work goes forward we will have further resources.

The work of this Committee, Mr. Speaker, has just begun. Every one of us, Liberal, Conservative, New Democrat, Independent, if we believe in this Parliament we have to give this experiment an honest try. We will be worried about how it proceeds, naturally. It is an experiment, but it is the first time when we can perhaps begin to turn this crisis around.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend to every Member of this House that they read very carefully the future section of this Report, and I want to say to the Government House Leader that I believe it is important that this Committee stay together for the length of this experiment. This Committee that has worked so well together, should stay together and continue to work. I believe that is important to the success of the experiment, in order to bring about the whole change which the House Leader for the Opposition spoke about. I want to thank my hon. friends for the privilege of serving on that Committee. I hope the Government will allow it to continue so that we will be able to begin the second step of bringing this institution out of some of the chaos and crisis.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I must admit it is a great pleasure for me to participate in this discussion this afternoon, particularly to follow the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I say that in all sincerity because there have been two very pleasant experiences in my ten years in Ottawa; one was the time we spent on the Fiscal Transfer Payments Committee, and the other one was the time we spent on the committee discussing the change to the House regulations.

Mr. Blaikie: That is because I was on both of them.

Mr. Herbert: And I must admit that the hon. gentleman for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who participated on both committees, made it particularly enjoyable. In all sincerity, one of the reasons I enjoyed those two committees was that the attitude of the Members was non-partisan. It was an attempt to accomplish as much as possible in a non-partisan fashion. As a result of that, the work of those two committees has born fruit. In the case of the committee studying the changes to the regulations, of course, all we have brought in at the moment is an interim report. I believe that the major work of the committee has yet to be accomplished. I say this because, and I see across the floor of the House, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), I believe that the tough stuff, the difficult work, the discussions of how we are going to change the rules as they relate to accountability, are still to come. I know this is not likely to result in the same consensus as we have had up to date. However, my purpose is not to speak of what is to come, but to speak of what we have done so far.

I must admit that, as do all Members of the Committee, I have certain reservations on some of the items on which we have reached a consensus. I did say, for example, in a somewhat lighter vein, that I was concerned about what we were going to be doing with our evenings in the future when we were not working in the House or on Committees, although I have been assured the Government is going to find something to keep us out of mischief. Nevertheless, there were certain other aspects on which individual Members were not necessarily in agreement. I wondered if we were wise to devote Wednesday afternoon entirely to Private Members' Business. However, it is on this particular subject that I want to address my remarks this afternoon.

We have not yet come to the stage of discussing how best to use the amount of time that is allocated to the individual Members of this House of Commons, and I do want to express my opinion that this is one of the decisions which the Committee is going to have to reach at a fairly early stage, a recommendation on the basis on which the Members will be able to bring their representations to the floor of the House for decision of the Members. I say this in all sincerity. It is not the decision of the Government, it is the decision of the Members. We have to be able to bring our representations forth in a fashion in which we can have what I would term a "free" vote. Thus I proposed to the Committee, through my own brief, as most Members submitted their individual briefs, that we find some means by which we can make Private Members' Hour more meaningful. As many Members will be aware, I have a habit of standing up here at five o'clock on a Thursday afternoon and attempting to use up one hour or part of one hour of Private Members' time. I do not do this with any great pleasure. I must admit I do it because I have some representation to make, but I also do it because we do not have a mechanism at the present time by which we can come to a decision on an issue without putting the Government in a difficult position. In other words, the Government has to suggest to its Members that they have to vote against a particular motion when the public might assume that it would make a lot more sense to vote in favour of the subject matter.

My suggestion, for what it is worth, is that we should find some mechanism by which representations of individual Members can go to a special committee for study. The committee would then report back to the House, not necessarily in the same form as the Hon. Member's original representation, but would report back to the House in a fashion that has been well considered, possibly after the calling of witnesses, and at that stage, the report would be subject to debate. The report itself would then probably lead to a vote. Since the vote would not be binding on the Government, I see this as probably one of the easiest ways to get a free expression of opinion amongst the Members of this House.

Now, I have talked on this particular point to illustrate, as my good friend, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said, that the work of the committee has only just started. We have a long way to go, and this is one of the items discussed briefly and put aside because it will mean lengthy discussions before we arrive at a consensus. But it must be abundantly clear to everyone who looks at the new rules that putting together three Private Members' Hours on a Wednesday afternoon does not resolve the present difficulty of private Members' representations being generally of little value except for putting in a mailer to illustrate to the Member's constituents his own point of view on a particular subject. At some point we must face the need to bring the issue to the floor of the House for decision by all Members.

The same applies in many other areas. I spoke of accountability, but everyone knows we have also discussed amongst ourselves the personal issues, personal to Members of Parliament, as to how we should govern our own affairs. In other words, we have discussed the manner in which the choice of the speaker should be decided. These are things on which we have to reach a decision and on which, I hope, the consensus of Members of the committee will be sought in future reports.

As is generally known, it is our intention to look at the operation of other legislative bodies, particularly Westminster, which is essentially the pattern on which we operate here. We hope to gain from them some additional wisdom from which to make further recommendations to the House. It is not my intention to delve in depth into the problems facing our committee, but only to say that I was so delighted with the attitude of the Members in the deliberations so far that I am encouraged, probably for the first time in my nine years here—maybe I should say for the second time because I was also encouraged by the non-partisan attitude on the committee concerned with transfer payments—because I saw 20 individual Members who were able to pursue a consensus through freely expressing their point of view in a non-partisan fashion. We had an objective. We all recognized that the House as it is presently operating is not functioning satisfactorily. We recognized that the public had an image of the House which made us less than proud of the part we were playing in its operation. With that objective in mind, we decided that we had to bring forth some meaningful changes which would encourage the public to have a little more confidence in their legislative body.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying how pleased I was to participate in the discussions, and how happy I am that we were able to come to a consensus on so many wide and different subjects, and present to the House a unanimous report. I think that in itself was a tremendous achievement. I hope and pray that in future deliberations of this committee which, as the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton says, must continue—and I hope this point has been well made to Government; no matter what happens when this session ends, no matter what time this session ends, we honestly believe that committee must continue in the same spirit in order to ensure our legislative body is able to convey to the public that, apart from the normal partisanship which must exist between the Government and Opposition, there is a spirit on the part of all Members of this House to ensure that it makes some sense and that it is something of which we can all be proud. We want the public to feel that this is a good body of people they have sent to Ottawa to do their job, and in that regard they are satisfied with the way in which we operate.

As I have set out to convey, Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of work to do. I feel a lot has been accomplished. I would like publicly to express my appreciation to my colleagues on the committee for the enjoyable meetings we had, and the fact that we were able to reach a consensus. It is also my hope that the same spirit will continue in our future deliberations.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured to participate in this debate, in particular because I am not a member of the committee concerned, yet I have read the third report of the committee and its nine recommendations for fundamental change. While I quite approve of the concerns expressed by my House Leader on some of the implications of these changes, as only time will tell, I certainly do agree with my friend, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the Vice-Chairman of the committee, that this is certainly an historic day when the report of a committee on procedure is to be unanimously adopted by this House. My House Leader is here and can well reflect on the last committee concerned with the change of rules, which is referred to briefly in the report. It was a tremendously different mood then compared to what it is today, because the last changes were forced on the House by closure brought on by the now resurrected Mr. Macdonald, Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Economy. I well remember the prolonged debate, and in fact closure was invoked in a hot July. I agree with all Members who have spoken today about the tremendous difference in attitude today when this experimentation in effect is agreed on by all Members with the full knowledge that there may be some imperfections or dilemmas not fully seen by the committee, but at least it is a first step.

I agree completely, Mr. Speaker, with something said by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. It certainly has been my experience around here, that is, that you can pervert and prostitute any rule or procedure you want if you do not have good faith and a little understanding of each other's point of view. I think that is one of the things which affected, adversely, the work of the last committee on procedure, of which I was happy to be a member and which was chaired by Mr. Sharp, the then Government House Leader. We travelled to England, we did everything that all committees do, and we came up with many interim reports, and of course nothing was ever adopted because we got bogged down in a real partisan atmosphere where the work of that committee went for naught. I think we had some type of report in 1976 and nothing ever came of it.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, I am bemused and frankly amazed that this committee, with its 20 members, could come up with an objective report and get agreement on recommending to their respective caucuses agreement on the report so that it could come before this House as a unanimous recommendation of the three Parties. I do not know really what the reason for that is, whether we are prepared to agree on an experiment because we know we are more than half way through this session and change for a year will not affect too much as long as it is provisional and experimental; or whether it is the reading of the polls, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it is the more willingly receptive nature of Government Members to experiment with rule changes. The idea could be that after another election the positions could be reversed. They could be sitting to the left of the Speaker, wanting certain changes. Frankly, no matter on which side of the House one sits, there is agreement that the rules do constipate Members in the discharge of their duties.

• (1750)

Regardless of the reasons for this, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in the debate in the 15 minutes allocated to me, recognizing the admonition of my House Leader that in the next session the good faith exhibited by members of the committee be continued. It has to be continued, Mr. Speaker, and I think it can be, because of the calibre of members of that committee. I think they can influence their House Leaders.

As has been indicated in the speeches we have heard today, I firmly believe that the changes to the rules of the House of Commons are not changes to the rules of a House Leader or the rules of a Party, but to the rules of the Members.

I was disappointed that I was not a member of that committee but unfortunately, all the Members from this Party were very diligent in their attendance and their contribution, so I could not sneak in the back door. I will remedy that on another day. Because of their diligence I hope that we succeed with this experiment. It is a first step, a break in the logjam. We all know that although one can break a logjam, that still does not get the logs to market; there can be many back eddies or rocks and obstructions before the logs get to market.

I hope against hope that the good work of the committee and all the interesting experiments that will take place in the next year, will end in the adoption of these changes.

Even more fundamental than the good work that has been done on the issue of accountability, is the matter of votes of confidence in this House. This was touched upon by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. We can tinker around with the rules with all the goodwill in the world, but we must meet the issue of accountability, which is the reason the House of Commons was created all those years ago. Indeed, the reason for this Chamber being green is to represent the meadow in which the barons met behind the bullrushes, so that the King could not see them meeting and planning to resist his authority. All that is history, but accountability is fundamental today when even the Auditor General says that spending is out of control.

Speaking as a private Member, something that I think is even more fundamental than accountability, is a change in the rules as they relate to votes of confidence. There are many reasons why this change is forced upon us. It is overdue. One element has not been touched upon today, although it was perhaps part of the deliberations of the committee, and that is that before another election there could be 28 new Members in this House. I will not get into the pros and cons of that issue, but I believe that the larger this institution becomes, the more fundamental is its reform. It is important that through Private Members' Hour, or through Members acting collectively or acting privately but without Party Whips, it should be possible to influence the legislative process.

It is as clear as it is that the sky is blue over Nova Scotia all the time, and as it is that it is sometimes foggy in Vancouver, that as the base of the legislature is expanded—be that in England with 485 Members, be it Russia with the Soviet Socialist Republics and Members coming off the steppes, the Urals or Siberia—the larger the institution the more powerful the executive becomes, regardless of its political stripe.

It is for that reason that I am glad we are discussing some of the nine changes. I will not go into detail on all of them as we will have a chance to experiment with them and get into the details in the next session.

I could talk about the paradoxes of this place, Mr. Speaker. As I said in the brief that I sent to the Committee, never have there been more people coming to the House, never have more people been able to see the House through the means of television, but also never has the House or its Members been more out of the touch with the public.

Another paradox should force change, and if it does not, then this place is terminally ill. I think Members of the Committee recognized that because they came up with some changes, but not the one with which I want to deal now. The other paradox which forces change is that it is now a full-time job to be a Member of Parliament. I come from the East, other Members come from distant places in the West and from Central Canada, but regardless of where we come from, this is a full-time job. I am very happy to consider some type of parliamentary timetable. Jesus Christ taught in parables but I like to teach in paradoxes.

This institution is supposed to organize the business of Government and the business of the country but until a parliamentary timetable was suggested, we could not even organize our own time. That was an ironic paradox, I think. We are paid on the basis of a full-time occupation. Even though we may be pseudo-celebrities because of television and may have some status in our ridings, because of the different lifestyle necessitated by travelling back and forth to Ottawa, there are difficulties.

No matter how many improvements have been introduced since I became a Member—and I give full credit to the Government for the improvement in research facilities, constituency offices, technological change and travel privileges—there is no substitute for the physical presence of the Member in the House. That is a fundamental lesson that I have learned since becoming a Member. Members must be able to have a focus in their ridings so that their constituents can feel they have an opportunity to contribute to the legislative process and are not just taking part in a charade.

In many ways we are nobodies, Mr. Speaker. I believe that is a philosophical question which could be debated. I certainly believe that Members of the British Parliament are nobodies, unless they sit in Cabinet or in the shadow cabinet of the Opposition front bench. That is England.

My time has almost expired, Mr. Speaker. I am very glad that everyone complied with the 15-minute rule, after the opening round. The most fundamental question that Members who speak later could touch upon is the matter of votes of confidence. Ironically, the issues of the day have already caused us to experiment with that. There are some issues that carry no Party label—capital punishment, marijuana, abortion—and are social issues, matters of conscience. When Mr. Pearson was Prime Minister he experimented with a vote of confidence in theory and it was basically carried out in practice—a free vote.

This question should not be put off, Mr. Speaker. The Committee brought in a third report, but it will fail this House and the public if in its next mandate it does not address the question of a two-tier system of votes of confidence. I submit that if a Government loses a vote on the Throne Speech, a Budget or on tax Bills, it should then definitely fall. The Prime Minister should tell his Members they must support the Government or else take to the hustings. No Member likes to go out on the hustings; there is a possibility of being stricken by a terminal disease. On the other hand, on Bills such as those affecting unemployment insurance, medicare, Canada Day, Dominion Day, the railways or air transport, if the Government loses the vote, the next statement made by the Chair should be to the effect that "Bill so-and-so has been defeated. Has the Government lost the confidence of the House?" In 999 cases out of 1,000 the Government would not have lost the confidence of the House, but there would have been a clear direction from all Members for the Bill to be amended and then brought back to the House where it would get the support from all Members. That is as it should be.

Mr. Prud'homme: Agreed!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Why should we continue to vote as was done in the days of John A. Macdonald? We are being paid a good salary and are given benefits, yet the vote is conducted as it was 100-odd years ago.

There is much more that I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, but I will conclude by saying that I believe this first step for procedural reform could become the proverbial procedural leap for the Canadian Parliament.

• (1800)

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was wondering whether the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) would clarify a point that he made in the first part of his speech. He said that the last major rule changes in the House of Commons came about as a result of the implication of Standing Order 33. I was under the impression that it was only one part of those changes which applied to Standing Order 33, and that the rules changes report was accepted unanimously, with the exception of the change proposed to set up the time allocations proposals under Standing Order 75.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to respond to the Hon. Member who I know at that time was a very valuable member of the committee. He will also know from his work in the committee that he is quite correct. I was here during the whole debate and I believe, if the Hon. Member really wants the history, that it was the first speech of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wherein he invoked closure to get some closure under Standing Order 75A, 75B or 75C, but I can tell him that the temper in the halls and the temper in the House of Commons was nothing like the temper here today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

At 8 p.m. the House resumed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The last Hon. Member speaking before eight o'clock was the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). I understand he has completed his remarks. Seeing that we have a quorum in the House, I am delighted to recognize next the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith).

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate. I consider it an honour to have served on this Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I wish to outline a few brief points and make some observations about the report we have before us today. However, before doing that I would like to pay tribute to the good leadership that we have had on this committee. In particular, I would like to mention the Chairman, the Vice-Chairmen, Mr. Alistair Fraser and also those connected with the Table who helped us in many ways.

I think this report is a good one. It is an objective and a balanced report. I think it will help to make this place function better and work more efficiently. I have a few points that I would like to make but I will try to follow the example we hope to set in the next little while and give a short speech.

First, it is important to bear in mind that Members on this committee approached their task as parliamentarians. They did not come with the mind-set of an Opposition Member or of a Government Member. Perhaps at our first three meetings there was an inclination on the part of some people to do that. I may have succumbed to the temptation to do that myself, but any attitude that Members had along that line evaporated fairly quickly.

The committee made a wise choice in deciding to go out of town on two occasions. We went away for three days on one occasion, and on another occasion for two days. We worked together, we ate together, we set Party differences aside, and I think we developed some camaraderie. I believe the report that we have before us here is proof and evidence of the fact that parliamentarians, regardless of Party, can in fact work together to help make the House function better. The first point to bear in mind is that this report is the work of parliamentarians who worked together as parliamentarians.

Second, what we have here is a balanced package. I suppose the temptation is always there to go through a report like this and say that I like this and I do not like that. We will support this but not that because this will help us and that does not. That sort of thing leads to people picking and choosing. I have to commend the House Leaders and the Leaders of all Parties in the House because they did not succumb to that temptation. They accepted to advice of the members of this Committee that this was a balanced package.

Let us take an example. I suppose some people could argue that when the time limit for speeches is reduced, considerably in some instances, that will in the long run perhaps help the Government in that it will speed up the pace with which legislation is dealt. I suppose to some extent that is true. But, on the other hand, by having the Government agree to a fixed annual schedule it loses what has traditionally been a very important tool, one which governments of both Parties have used in the past. For example, when it is near Christmas or early summer the Government can say to the Opposition, "We will not give you a specific date, but here is a list of a certain number of Bills." The Government can say to the Opposition that when those Bills have been disposed of in a reasonable way, the House will adjourn. That is an important and powerful tool for the Government. The Government has given up that tool, and I am pleased it has. In return, however, we will have shorter speeches. That is an example of the way in which this report is balanced.

Third, I think this report will go a long way to making the role of a Member of Parliament more meaningful. Smaller committees will mean that a Member will serve on fewer committees, but the individual will be expected to become more familiar with the subject matter with which the committee deals. By having annual reports automatically going to standing committees, Members of Parliament will be able to get their teeth into the whole question of policy development in a way which they really have not been able to do in their review of the Estimates. Perhaps a lenient chairman might allow that under the current system, but I suggest that does not happen too often. We will find this is something that can and will happen, and it is a good thing.

To some extent we are going in the American direction, but not in a way that will allow fishing expeditions. We are going in the American direction in a way that will help bring the Government and the bureaucracy under greater scrutiny by elected officials. In my opinion, that is good.

Fourth, the adoption of this report will make Parliament more practical and more readily understandable to the public. Let me give a few personal examples, of which a quorum is one. I suppose that I will not be able to close down an Opposition emergency debate any more, as I once did on that famous night you will recall, Mr. Speaker. But that is fine. I am happy to see that surrendered. I do not think that it was—

• (2010)

Mr. Nielsen: Sneaky.

Mr. Smith: It was not sneaky. I was just using the Standing Orders.

I believe that these recommendations are practical and desirable. Another personal example involves motions under Standing Order 43. I will not be called "Dr. No" any more.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You will not be called "Dr. Yes" either.

Mr. Smith: I think that the motions under Standing Order 43 have really become a charade. The whole rule of urgent and pressing necessity was rarely adhered to. The question of unanimous consent which is necessary to allow a motion to be put but not carried was something that I think many Members did not really understand. That was frequently displayed by the fact that when Members wished to speak on a motion under Standing Order 43 that had been allowed to be put, had received the unanimous consent, they would regularly stand up at the wrong time. This tells us that Members did not understand the process. If Hon. Members do not understand the process you can rest assured that the public does not understand it either. I believe it is a positive step to abandon that practice and proceed with this new system where we have a daily period of 15 minutes which, in my view, acts as a safety valve to allow Members to stand up and sound off on matters of concern. Since we do not have to get into the business of consent for putting motions, I think it will help make this place more understandable.

There is, as well, the question of parliamentary Journals. There are some recommendations which suggest that the Order Papers should have an index. That is desirable. Mr. Speaker, have you ever tried to find something in Monday's Order Paper? It can be pretty difficult sometimes.

Mr. Nielsen: You have to understand it.

Mr. Smith: That is right. I have worked hard at it. I have a pretty good grasp of it. I suggest that if we can improve those Journals to the point where they become readily comprehensible and understandable it will be of great help. Those are three examples from the recommendations of the report which will make this place more understandable and practical.

Finally, I believe the members of this committee have a positive attitude which is spilling over into the entire House. That is a good effect. This positive attitude means that this experiment will quite likely work.

I suggest that this is a balanced report. It is interesting to note the eagerness with which members of the committee are looking to the remainder of their work. They are anxious to get their teeth into questions such as a review of the Estimates and into major Constitutional issues, such as what constitutes a motion of confidence. Hon. Members are enthusiastic about these subjects and they have built a head of steam in a positive way because they are approaching it from the viewpoint of parliamentarians instead of Opposition or Government Members.

I think that the mood of Hon. Members is healthy. Ironically, this mood is probably in direct contrast to what the public perceives the mood to be. I suggest that the public believes that we fight like cats and dogs in Parliament constantly. If they understood what has been happening on this committee I think they would applaud, welcome it and ask for more of this kind of co-operation. This co-operation has been brought about by many Members making a genuine attempt to make this place better. I think that we will succeed because Members want to make the House work better and they are approaching this change with that parliamentary attitude.

I believe that we will accomplish a great deal next year by proving that notwithstanding the fact that we may have very fierce partisan differences and notwithstanding that the struggle to form the Government will continue, that struggle will continue in a form that is more efficient and one in which the public interests are better served. As a result, I think this country will be better served in the long run.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat out of my depth in speaking on this matter. It is the first time that I have ever spoken about the rules of this place. I do not apologize for that because the first thing I learned when I became involved in activities, which were admittedly somewhat more physical than politics, was what my coach told me: "Never mind the rules. If you do not know them, the referee will always give you a break." I have worked on that assumption and have functioned quite well here.

I realize that the motion which is before us today involves taking a step toward what I think are necessary changes, even for those of us who make no pretense of knowing the rules and thereby rely on the smarter Members to direct us. I do believe, however, like the Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) and the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that there are certain things which we should keep in mind.

What we are witnessing today, in my crude analogy, is a group of undertakers preparing the body for burial. Everyone is praising everyone else. I see the jacket put on the deceased. I see the tie being tied. I see the rose put in the lapel and the cheeks being rouged. Everything is being done so nicely that all I can say is, heaven help us all if we do not get down and grapple with some of the real issues about the rules of this Parliament.

With respect to rule changes, everyone of those suggestions made during the experimental period, should be considered as a small step forward. However, these changes are only cosmetic, unless, as several Members have indicated, the feeling of trust which seems to be surrounding this committee is maintained and supported by those who actually carry out the rules.

For instance, it means nothing whether speeches are 40 minutes or 20 minutes in length. If we want a more effective way to have shorter speeches, I suggest that we will not achieve it by artificially controlling the time. We only have to follow the rules that exist now, and simply insist that the speaker apply what the rules say, that a Member of the House shall not read his speeches. It is as simple as that. We would cut out 90 per cent of the oleaginous type of remark that politicians are wont to make. I am not suggesting that it will work, but perhaps it is a rule we might return to. We can simply return to the old-fashioned principle that if someone has something to say they do not have to read it. A Member may have two or three words written on a piece of paper, but if he speaks his mind, even if poorly expressed, we will understand him. When we allow many Members to read their speeches, it only deadens the whole debate. We cannot have a true debate when we hear a series of prepared speeches.

I am interested in the cosmetic techniques, as I call them, which were advanced that would allow Members to speak for only 20 minutes, with 10 minutes left for questions and answers at the end of their speeches. It will be interesting to see if those Members who have read their speeches can answer the questions. It may be a very wise experiment to see what happens to those Members who think they can appear knowledgeable by reading a written speech. They will be on their own when they are questioned on their remarks.

I am suggesting that the committee, which has assured us in the House today that it has achieved a consensus, a complete unanimity of trust amongst its members, will seriously consider the paper prepared by Hon. Members from eachside of the House, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). I have read that paper and I wholeheartedly agree that the heart and depth of what we must do is to give back to Parliament what it once had before 1968. We must do more, as well.

Whether we like it or not, there are many Hon. Members in the House, and there will be many more in a few years. I would like to think that one of the quickest ways to facilitate the functioning of the House is to give Hon. Members every opportunity to speak. The committee should give very serious consideration to what I call the Manitoba system, and I had nothing to do with developing it. At one time there was an NDP Government in Manitoba and a Conservative Opposition, and there was continual fighting in the Legislature. One Member from each side, a fairly senior Member and one who had been a federal Minister, got together and said, "Let us make this thing work and give the Government the chance to legislate and govern, but let us give the Opposition the chance to speak as well". They set up a system where the Legislature was meeting and, simultaneously, in another room, like in our Railway Committee Room, another meeting was being held. If we had such a system, we could wander back and forth between two meetings so we could be in attendance at both places and have more opportunities to speak. There would be a little more freedom concerning the rules in speaking in the other place, which would usually be a committee of a very important sort.

This system introduced in Manitoba ten years ago has brought relative peace and harmony, and there has been very constructive work in that Legislature. I think we should call these two men as witnesses to our committee. They are both practical politicians, and I do not believe either of them is a lawyer. They could present their practical experience to our committee, and perhaps we could keep quite a few of our Members busy here and in another place at the same time, yet they would be free to come back and take part in votes and various functions. I put that proposition forth without saying anything more about it.

The second proposal is a longstanding one. To take care of the worry of the Conservative House Leader, the Hon. Member for Yukon, and it is legitimate, we must adopt the principle, on certain important matters, of setting up standing committees as statutory committees as opposed to the procedure carried out now whereby the Government decides to set up a committee and decides when the meetings are to be held, and so on. It should be put into statute. It would be preferable if the head of the committee were always a member of the Opposition and, second, if it had its own staff and were paid any sum of money to get the very best results. Such committees could do the job they are supposed to do but cannot do under our present system no matter how the amount of available time or number of speeches are juggled.

I do not know what the final choices will be concerning statutory committees, but I would suggest, first, that Public Accounts look at the expenditure of moneys. Second, before we spend the money Estimates should be prepared, which would put an end to the farce that we have been living under for the last 14 years in Estimates. Third, transportation should be considered. Two or three years ago a motion was presented by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) concerning transportation safety and related matters. These matters should be dealt with by a statutory committee which is always sitting, which is free to call witnesses, and which has sufficient staff to handle this very difficult situation. For instance, I do not think there is a single person in Canada who can cope with railway accounting. We are always seeing ridiculous episodes where the railway says it is losing money and it is always disobeying the laws of Parliament, but we do nothing about that.

The situation became so bad some years ago that all Parties in Parliament agreed that the Department of Transport was not competent to handle railways, airlines or any transportation-related matters. We set up a giant Canadian Transport Commission and gave it all the powers of Parliament, putting it into statutory form. What was the result? The CTC was just ignored by the Government. Under the laws of this land, only Parliament could change the rates on the railways, yet it was turned over to a man who wandered up and down, getting agreement from certain groups that the rates should be changed without the participation of Parliament. I refer to VIA Rail. Only the Canadian Transport Commission, under statute, has power to deal with something like VIA Rail, yet we had a Minister who simply ignored the CTC.

Parliament sits here, helpless. Until we can get these matters before a statutory committee which has power, not only to decide the facts, but also to take action on them, then all that we are discussing, designed to give us a chance to work together, is nothing but a sham or cosmetics.

From the temper of the speech of the Hon. Member for Yukon, I get the feeling that God help us all in the House if this committee does not come through with something substantive this year. All sorts of controversial matters have been listed, and we are told that this is what will be done in this year of grace. Many people will be interested to hear what will happen to several of the institutions here. We must trust that this committee will seize these matters and come to some conclusion, even though they are very sensitive matters.

I will refer back to the five statutory committees, and there may be others. There cannot be too many. It might not be possible to put others into special statutory form for several years, but I would suggest that those five would be a good start. I have listed Public Accounts, Estimates and Transportation, and the fourth and fifth are Statutory Instruments and Crown Corporations.

I want to end the second part of my conclusions. The Statutory Instruments Committee simply considers all our regulations. In many cases, not in the hundreds but rather in the thousands, evidence has come forward that the Civil Service has made regulations which have never been passed by Parliament. This is done through a certain little technique, and not a thing is done about it in this Parliament even though we have known about such occurrences for years. To everyone's disgrace in this Chamber, hardly anything has been done by us, with the exception of two or three of us, to protest this action. Let me give a couple of examples.

With reference to the power given to National Revenue, Parliament says that there will be no more succession duties, but regulations come through. A person dies and all of that person's property is deemed to have been sold at the date of death, and succession duties are collected without any approval of Parliament. For eight years I have tried to help orphans. The Minister has admitted, and Parliament says, that all orphans should receive family allowance, but the regulations state that orphans are not to receive it. The same applies to teenaged girls who become pregnant. These things make me annoyed.

I am staying here and I intend to win this battle, this war. Sooner or later, Parliament must back me up. There is no use in any of us coming down here, believing in certain things, if we know our rights, but not being able to do anything about them because of procedures. To the Minister's embarrassment, she stood up and said, "I cannot do anything about it, even though I have admitted it". My request is, please, God, ensure that these people do their job and consider some items of substance under these rule changes next year.

There are many ideas in the Huntington-Lachance report and many more ideas will be coming forward, I am sure. This trust that has developed in the committee, which is what the success of this report is based on, will it be maintained during this year and will it stand up to the serious changes that have to be made, the simple but serious changes to our rules? If they come through, they will have made their mark and served this country well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to extend my congratulations to the members of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. They worked for long hours all during the summer; they also worked wisely and productively, which is perhaps more important.

I think they were very wise in recommending to us a package. I was here in the thirtieth Parliament when previous attempts to modernize our rules failed and they failed for a number of reasons, among them the fact that Members tried to improve on a little here and a little there, and the result was that there was no agreement.

The committee members clearly profited from this experience. They recommended a package, and they have asked all Parties to deal with the package as a whole.

The committee should also be congratulated on having brought in an unanimous report. Some of the best moments in this House and in committees happen when Members put aside partisan differences to work constructively on a project together. Putting aside differences does not mean failing to respect them or failing to take into account the realities of our democratic process, but it means working for compromise and consensus in a way that is as fair and as effective as possible. Those are some of the best moments, but they are rare moments.

The system seems to have put a premium on fireworks and on aggressive behaviour rather than on thoughtful, careful examination of issues. As a result, Members with more taste and talent for negotiation and compromise than for confrontation find the House a less satisfactory place to work than caucus or committees or other fields of endeavour.

Because I had a committee meeting this afternoon I was not able to hear all of the speech by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). If I understood him correctly in the brief excerpts that I did hear, he was saying that perhaps it is frustration with the system that leads Members to be less than constructive and that if offered a better and more satisfactory way of operating, Members would be glad to take it. I think he is right; and I think we have here a very useful beginning.

The committee members reminded us in their report that the purpose of parliamentary procedure is to enable a democratic assembly to operate effectively and fairly. The recommendations should lead to a much more effective use of time and more opportunity for knowledgeable, conscientious Members to participate publicly.

Members of Parliament on the Government side sometimes find that they may have influenced the development of a policy, but may not even speak in the debate in the House either because of the conflicting demands of committees or because they are very conscious of the need to get the legislation through. They feel that if there are going to be many long speeches from the Opposition they should keep their interventions to the absolute essential, so as not to delay the vote. But our constituents should not have to take it on trust that we are working for them. They should be able to see in the House some public evidence of what they hope and trust we are doing privately.

Some of the proposed recommendations that I think will be particularly helpful to all of us, on all sides of the House, include the recommendation that committees would be free to meet in the evening but that the House would rise at 6.30. This removes one source of time conflict, that is a committee sitting while there is a debate in the House that one would like to hear or participate in.

The second is the question of the parliamentary calendar. The proposal of fixed sittings, and particularly the committee's suggestion that the Government prepare a legislative program before each semester, certainly allows Members an opportunity for orderly planning and preparation. I hope that is an opportunity that will be well used.

Shorter speeches are clearly an advantage, but, as the Hon. Member who has just spoken has pointed out, a shorter speech in itself is not the answer. What is particularly useful, I think, is the proposal for a ten minute question and answer period at the end of each speech. That will certainly put an end to the practice indulged in by only a minority of Members of reading speeches prepared by their researchers but, more important, it will encourage us to listen to each other's speeches and it will provide an opportunity for questions that do advance the argument. Hopefully, knowing that there is that ten minute opportunity we will see fewer of the spurious points of order that are sometimes interjected now by people wanting to get in on the debate, but who are prevented from doing so. The suggestion that is also in this report that the interventions in that ten minute period be relevant and add a constructive element is perhaps an interesting suggestion for the speakers, and one that we hope will be acted on.

I think we will all be glad to see the end of Standing Order 43 which has ceased to serve any useful purpose and is certainly not understood by the public. The proposal instead to allow Members to make statements for one and one half minutes on matters that they do wish to draw to the attention of the House seems a much better replacement for it.

The report gives a lot of attention to the role of standing committees, and all of these recommendations can only help, that is, the smaller numbers and fewer substitutions, which should add very much to the quality of committee work, and the fact that committees will have the power to initiate inquiries. I am also pleased that the committee is recommending the continuance of special committees and task forces. These short, sharp task-oriented committees have proved their value in the last two years.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the committee recommended that examination of this procedure be ongoing. I think we can all agree that it is important to keep it contemporary and relevant. We have been given a very useful package here and I think it is important to give it full and fair trial for a year, as proposed.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy tonight to be able to speak for a few moments on what I believe to be a historic movement taking place in the House of Commons. I am happy also from the historic point of view to be in a discussion following almost immediately after the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), who spoke quite eloquently a few moments ago. He happened to be the first person I met who was a politician. Actually, he was a candidate. That was at the end of the Second World War when I was a high school student in Rosetown, Saskatchewan, and he had been brought back from Burma where he had been a pilot in the Air Force. I remember his campaign was quite different from those of today. I think he actually campaigned from an old J-3 Piper Cub and long-range on the rural telephone line. It is an interesting factor that the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain has been in this House for many years since and he is also speaking tonight on the question of renewal of the House. I believe what is really taking place is the first solid, concrete step in a renewal which I hope will be for the good, not only of this House of Commons, but for all of Canada. I would also like to join with the other Hon. Members from all Parties in congratulating the members of that committee which prepared the study which we are going to use as a trial effort in the House of Commons next year. The NDP House Leader, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), is going around today with a very happy smile on his face. Probably the Hon. Members on both sides believe the smile indicates that he is only happy with this legislation before the House, but I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, the House Leader for the New Democrats has become a grandfather today for the first time, so he is taking on a sort of other aura of zeal, or whatever happens when you become a grandfather for the first time, and I would like to pay tribute to him and to his daughter, and particularly to his granddaughter, Melissa Folino, on her first day of life in Hamilton. I hope she lives to see this House of Commons become a much more effective place to operate.

• (2040)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ogle: The particular reason why I believe the legislation is so important tonight, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that I believe the House of Commons may find, through this new legislation, this new practice, a higher level and degree of credibility, because I think the Members of this House have experienced with Canadians a frustration. Because they are Members of the House they are challenged over and over again by people who ask them what they are doing here. "Why do you act like that? Why are you not serious?" Again, as I have said in other speeches in this House, I have not met a single Member of Parliament who I feel is not serious. People do not come here unless they are serious, unless they really have the good of Canada at heart. I hope that through these steps that are being taken today under this motion everyone will benefit, and I thank those who have done the hard work over the past summer in bringing it about. I do hope the final result will be that there will be a new image of credibility arising from all of us who are Members of this House of Commons.

Basically, the problem is that it is very difficult to have a large group of people do anything properly. My experience has been that if you put enough people together to do something, they will always do it poorly. That is not to say they are not trying. It is just simply difficult to have any large group of people do anything at the same time and do it well. Because we are all human beings, we do not do things perfectly.

This reform which we are working at now will not be the last reform. It is only a step. We will find it is imperfect, and something else will be needed down the road. However, the step is the important part, and that is why I rejoice with other Members in the House today who are so willing to accept this new effort. I am sure this motion will bring about progress and through it we will find a way in which the wisdom, knowledge and experience of the members who are here now, the future Members of the House of Commons and future Canadians, will be refined and directed in such a way that it can truly be a directive for the good of our country and for the good of the world, because we are part and parcel of the family of nations.

What I would like to speak on particularly is the length of the speeches. I feel that the short speech will be a much more effective speech. Anyone who has ever preached a sermon will know it is very easy to preach a long sermon and very difficult to preach a short one. The simple fact is that if we are going to say something concisely, it is necessary to work much harder preparing it. For that reason, I believe that speeches limited now to 20 minutes in the House, with the debate period afterwards in which the speaker can be challenged on his facts or presentation, will make for better speeches. I do not have any doubt about that at all and I am looking forward to it.

In the same light I would like to think that perhaps other modes of debate could be found which the committee can study. For instance, in the Congress of Brazil, which I am partly familiar with, the speaker speaks from the front. He speaks down toward the people in the House of Commons, which is a much easier way to speak. But at the same time there is another person from the Opposition who stands there also with a microphone, and the Speaker of the House can interrupt the debate at anytime to let the other person make his point. It turns into a real debate in which a point is made, which can be challenged by the other side. This is something that could be looked at by the committee because there just has to be a better way to engage in debate than the way we do now.

I would also like to speak about the size of the committees. I really believe that bringing these committees down to a smaller size will be for the betterment of all. One of the best experiences I have had in the House of Commons was working on the North-South Task Force. I think the members of that task force, and other task forces that worked last year, will all relate a similar kind of experience. Working with a small group on a specific project, there was a kind of a friendship that grew between all three Parties. There was respect. The task force members were not changed, the attitude was, you were responsible, you were there and you did it. Therefore, I am happy to see we are going to try seriously to work with smaller committees, which I feel will do a lot more good down the road.

Something else I would like to speak about is the system of voting, and I hope the committee, as it continues its studies, will look at that problem. I call it a problem because so much time, to my mind, is wasted in the House waiting for the vote. As all Members of Parliament know, when the bell rings there is a kind of great vacuum which starts in the life of a Member of Parliament while he waits for the vote. That can be 15 minutes or 16 days. You just do not know when the vote is coming. Last week we had a vote here which was called at about six o'clock. The vote was finally taken at 7.15 in the evening. For that hour and 15 minutes I felt really frustrated, along with everyone else in this House. I really believe that has to change. I would suggest that the Committee look at modern voting techniques like that which is used at the United Nations. It is an electronic voting device, with buttons on the desk with which the Member can indicate his vote. There are buttons for yes, no, abstain and absent. That is all you can do with this kind of a voting system. It should be possible to have an electronic voting system. We could keep the traditional vote for six or seven times a year to make sure that Hon. Members could stand up and be counted. That has some reason to it. But not for all the votes. If some of the votes could be, let us say, on a 30-minute bell, or the vote would be scheduled for eight o'clock, I say that it should be possible for a Members of Parliament to vote anytime prior to that, and it should be done electronically. It could be done in any part of the House of Commons, Confederation Building, West Block, wherever. If we each were issued a card which had an electronic code on it, we could put in a slot some place and our vote would be recorded. At 7.30 or eight o'clock the Speaker could indicate the vote was counted and the results would be listed on a board. The count would be there and the press or anyone else could print it in the newspaper the next morning. I think people might be more interested if they had a vote count everyday.

An Hon. Member: They'd think they were at a hockey game.

Mr. Ogle: No, they would not. They would have a feeling they knew what was going on. I do not know how many people in Canada know when we vote or what the votes are, but I think that kind of system would make it much easier for all the people of Canada to know how their Member voted. They would know whether he or she were there, yes, no, or whatever, it could be reported and printed in the paper every day after a vote.

• (2050)

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that what is happening today is a good thing but it is just the beginning. We have not done many of the things that could be done. I think the life of an MP, having talked to some of the older Members, is more difficult today because of the speed of a lot of things, transport being one. Members go home to their ridings every Friday night, like myself, spending six or seven hours on the plane each way. In the old days Members came down in September on the train, a nice slow ride down, stayed in Ottawa till Christmas, when they might go back. It was very different then. Interestingly enough—and all the Members can speak to this—everyone finds one or two or three constituents on the plane every trip we make. It is a great place to get information, but the work keeps on because the constituent finally has his or her Member belted down. You cannot get up, they will tell you exactly what they want you to hear. It is great.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have had the chance to say a few words on this motion tonight. I do not see a great light shining yet, but there is a little glimmer down at the end of the tunnel, and I believe with this step and others which will come, the knowledge, experience and wisdom of the people in this House will be directed more clearly and exactly in the direction Canadians want it to be directed.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this particular debate for a number of reasons. As has been stated by people on all sides who served on this committee, this was without doubt one of the most significant experiences in my parliamentary life. It was a model of parliamentary courtesy and it restored my faith in the ability of Canadians to get together to work something out. Indeed, it restored my faith in the system itself. Credit for that should go of course to our chairman, the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), and the two Vice-Chairmen, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). But I would be remiss in not mentioning the work done over the years by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), a man who has served this institution well for nearly 40 years, and for whom many of us have the greatest respect, and in whom many of us see the repository of every procedural wisdom. It is my regret that because of his recovery from his illness he could not take part in that particular committee, but his spirit was very much with us and I know I discussed the proceedings of the Committee with him on an ongoing basis, as I am sure did other Members of the committee.

This report is only the beginning, Mr. Speaker. In a sense we have just tinkered with the rules, but in such a way as to mark a beginning in the real reform of this House. Let us focus on three things: the parliamentary calendar, which is going to make it more rational for the Government to get its program through Parliament; the parliamentary timetable, which will have the effect of making the House a more humane environment in which to work; then there is the enhancement of the MPs role. So this report is only the beginning. Some may say it is too modest, but it took a lot of discussion and soul-searching. After the report was tabled it took a lot of soul-searching on the part of the Parties to accept it. In particular I would like to pay tribute to our House Leader, who has just come into the House, for having facilitated the easy passage of this report through the Government. I believe that was no mean feat, because there were reservations on the Government side, as I am sure there were reservations in the other two Parties. But the fact is that the Government and the Opposition have shown their faith in the members of the committee. That in itself is a significant fact. It is significant for those of us who have participated in that committee.

Where do we go from here? The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) made an excellent point. There is some responsibility with the Chair, Mr. Speaker, and I am speaking to you and your colleagues in the chair directly. There are some things we cannot do in changing the rules. We can only have faith in you and your colleagues that you will apply the rules in the best spirit. The point made by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was indeed a very salient one, that the rules in effect now should be enforced. I am talking about the rules of relevance and the basic courtesies of the House in the Standing Orders, which should be observed and enforced by the Chair. I hope this debate will in a sense make you, Mr. Speaker, feel obligated to deal with this matter very seriously.

The thing I want to dwell upon, Mr. Speaker, is the third point I raised, the enhancement of the role of the backbenchers. In the last 25 years the Government has come to dominate the House. Indeed, it is in the last 100 years, both here and at Westminster. This cannot be helped because society has become more complex, the demands on Government more stringent; but the power of the executive must be checked, not only for the sake of the country and the institution but for the sake of the government itself. A hundred years ago, Mr. Speaker, in Westminster and in this House most of the legislation which came forward was private Members' Bills. Now, most of the time it is government time. Private Members' time is relegated to three hours a week. I would hope in our next round of discussion in the Committee that we will look seriously at bringing private Members' motions and Bills to fruition so that there is division on these questions, so that a private Member can regularly have the opportunity of saying "I brought this piece of legislation to the House and I had it accepted by my colleagues." Let us not be so naive as to think the only repositories of wisdom in Parliament reside on the Treasury benches, with all respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: Spending power must be brought under more effective control. My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) have brought forward a report which warrants detailed scrutiny and which is being looked at by the Committee right now.

The rule of the Whip should be examined. I see my good friend, the chief Government Whip here, and I would say to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that this will be the last Parliament where any Government is able to enforce the Whips no matter what. The nature of Canadian society is changing and Parliament is changing, as evidenced by this committee's report, and government must change. I am heartened because the Government has accepted this report and it will take the lead from members of the committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: But there are times when a backbencher may wish to break ranks with his side. There must of course be matters of absolute confidence. We must ensure that any move to a Congressional style system is not allowed to go too far—some people want more of a Congressional system here, and we are getting that with the innovations in the committee system which are being accepted—and we have to be very careful that the very notion of responsible government in the parliamentary context, where the government gets it power from the House of Commons, is not diminished. We must make sure that the spending power, the Royal prerogative, rests with the executive. We as backbenchers can demand more power but we cannot usurp the basic responsibility of the government to initiate spending and taxing legislation. If we do, we are undermining the whole system of British parliamentary democracy.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should say that my concept of the role of a Member of Parliament is that I have an obligation to my Party. There is no doubt that I would not be standing here today if it were not for my Party. I have an obligation to my constituents—not only those who voted for me, but all of them. I must serve all of them once I am elected, no matter who voted for me.

• (2100)

I have an obligation to my conscience. Members of this House who sat in the Thirtieth Parliament had to look to their consciences on the subject of capital punishment. There was a lot of pressure, both inside the House and outside. We have to answer to our own consciences. All Members have an obligation to their conscience.

Those obligations mean nothing to the final obligation which, I submit, is that every Member of this House has the obligation to the institution of Parliament. If the institution of Parliament, as it has developed in the last 800 years in Great Britain and in this country, is diminished in any way, then the very foundations of democracy will be weakened.

We are but an island in a sea of tyranny in the latter part of the twentieth century. The reason we are that island of sanity in a sea of tyranny is because of the parliamentary system and because this committee has come forward with a report which will be accepted by the House. To me, that means that the parliamentary system is alive and well. At a moment when people were writing it off as being irrelevant, at a moment when Canadians were questioning the value of their institution, we have shown that Parliament can still work, that there is a way to go, that there is a future for this institution.

With my colleagues, I look forward to the resumption of our work in this session and in the new session. Within the next year we hope to bring a new meaning to the words "parliamentary democracy."

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I followed with a great deal of interest the comments of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) as he made his trip to Damascus. He has seen the light. I cannot help but wonder how it is that the Government came to the point where it was prepared to bring together Members from all sides of the House to examine the position to which the House had been brought by the Government and its method of governing and to come forward with a report, even as helpful as this one is.

The Hon. Member for York East mentioned our obligation to this House. I do not deny that obligation. But we also have an obligation to Canada, Mr. Speaker.

When we decided to put ourselves up for election and seek the support of Canadians it was because we believed there was something fundamentally wrong with the way the country was being governed, and perhaps with the institutions through which it was being governed.

I take full cognizance of the admonition of the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) that we must not just pat one another on the back about this; we must bring to it a critical eye. We should bring to this a fair amount of skepticism, because of the manner in which the Government has handled the country's business.

I ask myself why the Government agreed that the committee should meet. For three or four years there have been opportunities for the Standing Committee on Procedures and Organization to meet, but the Government has not responded to demands for meetings, so I approach the whole issue with a healthy skepticism. Aside from that, Mr. Speaker, my comments this evening will be confined to two or three areas.

One area relates to committees. This is dealt with in Section (5) on page 18 of the report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders on Procedures, Issue No. 7. This deals with Committees in a variety of ways. In certain cases the size of the committee has presented difficulty, but this problem has been settled. I think we should be prepared to accept the figures that are given. There may have to be exceptions in one or two committees, as has been the case with the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. It may be that the latter will have to be divided into two committees. That possibility has not been mentioned but it should not be excluded from the committee's review.

Substitutions within a committee is another matter that concerns me. I am glad we are not being inflexible about membership of this committee or that. When an issue arises which is of prime concern to a particular Member at a particular time and is coming up in another committee, that Member should have the opportunity to find a place on that committee, on 24 hours' notice. In that way the Member can represent the views of constituents much more easily than can be done in the House or, if the Member has certain expertise, it can be made available to the committee. I think there has been an attempt to remove inflexibility, and the 24 hours' notice required is a good move.

To my way of thinking the provision for automatic referral of annual reports and other reports to committees, will make the committee system work. It has not worked in the past, Mr. Speaker.

There are a couple of other matters dealt with in Subsections (c) and (d) on page 19 of the report which deserve comment and study, which I hope they will receive in the Committee. The automatic referral of the annual reports of Departments, Crown corporations and their subsidiaries and other agencies to the appropriate standing committee immediately after they are tabled in the House, is important. Even more important is that such tabling should initiate sessions of that committee. There is no reference whatsoever to having the committees meet to consider the reports. That is an oversight which I hope will be corrected.

I am certain that this report is going to be accepted, and I am glad to see that there will be a continuing review of the Standing Orders. I hope that all recommendations that cannot be put into the Standing Orders in the years ahead can be reviewed, and if approved in committee can immediately be instituted with the procedures of the committee. One way of achieving that would be that any five Members of the committee could go to the Chairman with a request to meet to discuss the matter in committee and to report within a week. There should be an opportunity for Members to take that action. It could be five members representing two Parties. There are instances today of very, very important issues that do not receive study because the Fisheries Committee cannot meet on two matters. There is a report of the Fisheries Committee on the West Coast and a report of the Fisheries Committee on the East Coast. We have tried to bring a meeting about in the House, we have tried behind the curtains and we have tried with the Minister, but he says it is not his business and he cannot order the committees to meet.

There should be provision in the regulations to permit any committee that has a report in front of it, to meet in order to consider that report, or even to write its own terms of reference. It has to be an agreed reference so that the four or five Members, or however many it needs, can insist that the meeting take place within two days. So much for the automatic referral. This is a shortcoming in Section (5)(c).

Turning to the Government response to committee reports, I notice that the House Leader on our side commented about it earlier. He said that it shall be at the request of the committee that the Government table a comprehensive response. Frankly, that is not good enough. I think the Government should be required under the Standing Orders to reply to every recommendation that any committee makes. If the committees are to have any meaning whatever, the Government must respond to their recommendations. If they do not make any recommendations, it is unfortunate and perhaps the committees are falling down on the job. But if they do make recommendations, each one should have a response from the Government, yes or no. There may be questions of policy, money or ideology which would prevent the Government from adopting this or that recommendation, but it should be required to say so within a certain length of time, be it 120 days or six months.

I believe that item by item, recommendation by recommendation, the Government should be required to reply to the reports of committees, whether they be departmental reports, reports on Crown corporations, their subsidiaries or other agencies. I think this is vital, to give those who sit on committees the feeling that they are getting some feedback from the Government for the work they have done.

Another matter on which I think it is worth commenting is Private Members' Business. There is no provision for Private Members' Business to be voted on, except when there is no quorum. Apparently that can be done in the House in those circumstances, for which we should all be ashamed. In the normal course of business there must be some provision in Section (6) so that there is an opportunity for a Private Member's Bill to be brought to a vote, either for the subject matter to be referred to committee or for it to be rejected. Otherwise, it is just a matter of having an hour of debate as provided here and it goes to the bottom of the list, which is 438 or whatever, and there is no vote. I believe we should have a provision in here for a vote. I see that the provision in the Standing Orders has to be rewritten. It indicates that the proceedings on any Bill or motion in the name of a private Member shall be interrupted one hour after being taken up and considered. That is just an airing of an idea. Surely there is a means, even on a Wednesday afternoon, of having a vote on a matter which is in a private Member's Bill.

Section (7) of this particular report deals with a continuing review of the Standing Orders. If I understand correctly, the committee will more or less be in permanent session. I hope to call on a number of Members of the Committee to examine and obtain reports on how various recommendations are working out in the House and to be able to modify them in the course of the year. I hope this is not a document written in stone for 12 months. If, as I suggested, there could be agreement on the requirement to have a vote on a private Member's Bill or to have the Government reply item by item or recommendation by recommendation to reports of committees, and if the committees could agree on those matters, I hope it could be brought back to the House between December 21 this year and December 21 next year and instituted in our order of proceedings. I think we could probably manage to live with that sort of thing.

It was never quite clear in my mind, except that we were coming to the end of the calendar year and the requirement to have a debate, why the committee brought its work to an end at this particular stage of the proceedings. I am not sure why other matters were not considered and brought forward. Therefore, I feel that a continuing review of the Standing Orders by the committee should be of a nature to permit it to come to the House with modifications based upon experience.

Another matter which is not clear in my mind is what will happen on December 21, 1983. This has been referred to as a package deal. It is an all or none proposition. What will happen on December 21, 1983? Do we have to buy all that is here, all that has been modified during the year, or will there be a seriatim vote on elements which have improved the House of Commons and a rejection of elements which have proven themselves to be unworthy of the House of Commons? I hope it is a matter the committee will consider, that if we are not committed to this package there will be no package at all. Some of it is experimental, we agree. I hope it will go on for a year, but do we have to buy the whole report as it stands?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this evening.

[English]

I have been a member of the committee. Although my name does not appear on the list of members in the report, I am still a member of the committee. I recognize that I have not attended all the meetings, but this was because they conflicted with my duties and obligations to the Standing Committee on Transport.

This has been one of the finest debates I have heard in the House since coming here. Until just a few minutes ago, it was a debate which one could term to be all sweetness and light. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) seems to have some grave misgivings about the report, and I should like to take a minute to answer a couple of his concerns.

First, he seemed to indicate by the tenor of his remarks that the committee will be a dictator to the House of Commons, which of course is not the case. The new proposed rules will be tried for a year. Surely it follows that at some point during the year the House—not the committee, not the Government, not the Opposition—will make a decision as to whether the rules need to be modified and, if so, in what manner. Also it will decide at the end of the year whether or not they should be adopted as more or less permanent rules of the House, to be modified from time to time by the proposed committee, which the procedural committee recommended be established for the purposes of having a continuing study of the rules and procedures of the House.

I associate myself with all the remarks which have been of a congratulatory nature to the Chairman and the two Vice-Chairman of the committee. I have a great deal more confidence in the ability of the House to act, as a result of having served on the committee and having seen all its members work in close harmony. Very often the most strenuous arguments were among Members of the same Party rather than among Members of different Parties. I think this is very good for the future of this institution.

Because of a reference from the Government a few months ago, I had the privilege of dealing with the domestic air carrier policy in the Standing Committee on Transport. We had the same experience then in the Standing Committee on Transport as we had in this committee on procedure reform. It seems to me that is a time when Members of Parliament are, in fact, serving the interests forwhich our constituents sent us here, when we are being Members, not only for an electoral district but Members for the country as a whole, and when we are proposing policy or passing legislation that deals with the good of all Canadians and not just making representations for a particular area of the country. I want to deal very briefly with three areas.

First, I would like to say that there are four things that give me a great deal of encouragement. We unanimously presented a report that deals with the hours of sitting. Already I have heard some concern expressed about what Members are going to do with their evenings. I do not have that concern and I do not believe that it should be the role of a committee on standing orders and procedure to try to devise rules that will protect the morality or ethics of the Members of this House. Surely to God they established their ethical conduct before coming here. If they have not, it is something for their constituents to deal with and not a committee of this House.

The fixed timetable, to which other Members have spoken, is something that I think is of vital importance to all of us so that we can order our lives in such a manner as to be able to spend an appropriate amount of time in the capital of the country and yet have sufficient time to deal with our constituencies and with our families.

Third, I think the reform of the committee system is vitally important to the survival of this institution. I do not have the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. I am not prepared, at this moment at least, to bring to the committee the idea that every report from a committee must be responded to by the Government. There are some reports from committees to which a response is not appropriate, Mr. Speaker. Surely it is within the wisdom of members of a particular committee to make the decision as to whether or not there should be a response to the Government. I think the wisdom of the committee in making that recommendation is a strength and not a weakness.

What of the future of the committee? There are many areas that have been dealt with today by other speakers, and I do not want to be too repetitive but I do want to deal with three of those areas. The first is non-confidence votes.

It is very important that we change the manner in which we conduct non-confidence votes. This point was brought up first this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). There is a good deal of wisdom in what he said. We must get away from this idea that every vote is a vote of confidence. Surely by now we can progress enough so that Members of Parliament on both sides of the Chair can make a determination as to whether or not a proposed piece of legislation is worthy of passage by this House without having the whips applied. I think we would have better legislation and more carefully thought out legislation and we would have a much better functioning House if there were not a vote of non-confidence attached to the vote on every Bill. I believe it is absolutely essential that the regulations formulated under a Bill be brought back either to the House or to an appropriate committee of the House for study because many things can be done by regulation, as the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out, that were not intended to be done by the House when it passed the legislation. That should come under the scrutiny of Parliament, just as the enabling legislation does. I hope the committee will deal with that point. If we 5566;-1 deal with that, we will provide backbenchers with much more freedom of action and with more adequate representation, not only of their constituents but of the country at large. We will have a much more vibrant and lively institution here. We will have a much greater sense of worth on the part of the individual backbencher that he will have some power and will be able to call the Government to account, that the Government must listen to the elected representative of the people and not just to the advisers of the Government and of the bureaucracy. That, to me, is of vital importance.

I hope from what I have heard here today that the expectations of this House for the work of the committee will not become too exalted. With all of the nice things that have been said about the committee today, it must be remembered that we are 20 members, none of whom are infallible, and we will not solve every problem of this House in the course of our deliberations. Not everything we do will be perfect. We will have to do some of it over. Mistakes will be made on the committee, and I think that should be accepted as a fact. We will not be able to come in with a perfect set of reforms. Reform is an ongoing procedure.

We do, indeed, have an obligation to this House, an Hon. Member said. I forget who it was, unfortunately. In my opinion, parliamentary democracy is probably the noblest institution of Government ever devised by mankind. It will only be noble as long as it is relevant. Those of us who serve in Parliament are finite mortal creatures who will wither and die. While we are here, if we do not work to revitalize this institution it, too, will become finite and mortal. It does not have to be so. It does not have to be a finite institution. It can be an institution with some immortality, with a great, long life, much longer than that of any human. It has already had a life much longer than that of any human. We must make sure with these reforms that the Parliament of Canada remains a vibrant, lively institution that serves the needs of Canadians, not only for today and tomorrow, but for many future generations.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to the third report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. Hon. Members might expect, having served on the committee, that I am a bit biased in favour of the report. I must confess that is true.

This was a wise report, and I hope the future will show that to be so. The basis for my conclusion about it being wise is not simply because I am a member of the committee. Like other members, I try to reserve the right to say no, the right to say that I do not agree with something that is going on, whether within my own Party or within the Government. I believe other Members have approached the task in that same vein. Therefore, I believe the report does have a balance with which we can live.

I consider myself still to be a new Member in terms of Standing Orders, even though I was elected to this House in 1979. I suppose in many jobs after a few years you feel you have mastered it and it is time to move on. But I am just beginning to realize and to understand how this place works, its inadequacies and how it could be made to work better. I can remember during the first nine months being on the Government side the absolute frustration at what seemed to be pointless opposition from the Liberals then in Opposition. I can remember my anger at realizing in 1978 that the then minister of justice had brought in a budget and our Party in Opposition opposed it. That was its state in the 1979 elections. When we returned to the government side, we put those same budget proposals, as if we were supporting them, and the Liberal Opposition was opposing them. This continued for some time. The further absurdity happened when we were defeated in 1980 and not all of those finance provisions were put through. Here were the Liberals, back in the government, putting those same proposals forward and we opposed them. As a new Member of Parliament, that had to be the crowning irony for me as to how absurd things were here.

And there is no doubt that being elected does not mean one must become a eunuch or someone who becomes immediately dumb and can only stand or sit when the Party says. I certainly do not intend to give up my right to speak out, and I hope other Members do not give up that right either. There is no doubt that Parliament itself will be an adversary process. One of the recommendations of the committee report is to allow that debate, because there is no doubt that we are locked into a battle for the hearts and minds of Canadians. Government is the exercise of power, including the power to take away the lives of its citizens. That is how much power governments have. The Liberal Party on one side, the NDP and our Party on the other side are locked into a battle for the hearts and minds of Canadians. We hope to win and they do as well.

The House will always be an adversarial place. Undoubtedly, there is no reason why the committees, the task forces and the special committees from which this report is a product, can become much less adversarial, because the purpose of these bodies is to group people around a problem. If they can address the problem and have experts express their views on it, a solution to the problem can be found, irrespective of the various philosophies in terms of the exercise of executive power and how the country should be run. With a little goodwill in these committees, free of the public television which exists in the House, surely we can come to a wiser result. That is what has happened in task forces, since 1980.

I had the privilege of being a member of the Committee of Fiscal Federalism. That committee got around the problem of how this nation should operate fiscally with the huge wealth and different views of its different regions. A report was issued from that committee which was also unanimous. While the Government did not accept all of the recommendations of the committee, several were adopted. Speaking for my own Province of Alberta with respect to that fiscal federalism report, the people of Alberta who I spoke to were very pleased with the parts of the report that reflected their view. I was thankful to the Members opposite and those in the NDP who agreed to including those views. I was able to return to my region, as a federal Member of Parliament, and say that Parliament is working for them, and I was able to produce the hard, cold facts.

I was pleased to be asked to serve on this Special Committee on the Standing Orders. Once again, the process was good. We argued about some subjects, shared a few drinks and had special meetings until those problems disappeared when we realized that we were facing a common problem.

One of those common problems was that which an elected Member faces with the power of the bureaucracy. There is no doubt that there has been an enormous growth in the bureaucracy federally, provincially and municipally since the Second World War. While individual civil servants are very fine people who work well within their jurisdictions, the Civil Service collectively has taken on a life of its own which is getting out of hand.

I believe that the same argument applies to Crown corporations. There is nothing inherently evil in the operation of a Crown corporation, but at the federal level where there are almost 600 Crown corporations and where there are almost as many at the provincial level across the country, there is no doubt that there is not enough fiscal control of that sub-level of Government.

I hope that we have taken steps to bring this under control as a result of our third report. However, I believe we must go even further in the future. Some Members have been concerned about the report. All that I can say to them is to let us try it. If it does not work we will change it. If that again does not work, we will change it again. If it is totally inadequate by next December we can revert back to this antiquated procedure where we can have four or five changes of Government which will be proposing and opposing something in the same absurd way.

In the future our committee will deal with Supply. I think this will be a relief to many Members. We will deal with the role of the Speaker and with votes of confidence. As I have come to know Members opposite, and even a couple from the NDP, I have no doubt that we can come to an agreement.

The question of private Bills was a critical issue which we dealt with in the report. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have so far received over 100 submissions from individuals and groups. Those people feel unquestionably that the role of the private Member of Parliament is important. Yet, when we look at our parliamentary timetable, we do not see much time for private Members' Bills to be handled. I believe that switching consideration of private Members' Bills to Wednesday is a very good idea. We have some other ideas which will make that process much more solid.

With no disrespect to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) I believe absolutely contrary to what he said about our being nobodies once we get 50 yards away from the Hill and being somebodies only on the Hill, I have found the opposite to be true. I find that I am nobody on the Hill because I am locked into a system where the bureaucracy has much more power. When I return to my riding, my constituents are pleased to see their Member of Parliament and speak with him. Therefore, I think that I am somebody when I am more than 50 yards away from the Hill, and I am not as important here.

I hope that Members will support the committee report so that we will have their critical analysis to make this a better place when future reports are tabled.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am also a member of the committee which has its interim report before the House tonight. I have had ample opportunity to state my views in committee, so I will just take a minimum of time in the House tonight. I understand that one of the two Vice-Chairmen, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), intends to speak, and perhaps we can use the remaining 20 minutes.

I would first like to thank the House and the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) for the opportunity to be on this committee. It was an exciting undertaking and one of the more pleasant aspects of my parliamentary career which spans some nine years, counting the years spent in the Newfoundland House, which was better. At the outset I would also like to congratulate the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) and the two Vice-Chairmen, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, as well as the members of the committee, for doing an excellent job to date.

I want to draw particular attention to the speed and dispatch with which the committee members, under the leadership of the Chairman and the two Vice-Chairmen, used in establishing a rather productive working relationship from the very outset. The fact is that the work of this committee is not an indictment of this institution, of Parliament. This institution has survived over 700 years over some very difficult periods, periods which were so dramatic that, by comparison, the now famous bell-ringing incident just pales into insignificance. The institution has seen some rather dramatic periods and has survived them and been all the better for them. This committee is not in any way an indictment. Therefore, it is incorrect to question the validity of the institution. Rather, it is proof of the strength of this institution which has evolved over the years to the point at which it requires new rules to meet changing times. This is not the first time the rules of this institution have been changed and it will not be the last.

The interim report, as significant as it is in many respects, is really only the tip of the iceberg. As Hon. Members know, an iceberg is eight-ninths, or almost 90 per cent, below the surface, and so it is with the work of the committee. The real impact, the real substance, I suggest, lies ahead. The full impact has not yet surfaced.

There are other issues we want to address. They have already been mentioned by Hon. Members, such as the issue involving the MP and the bureaucracy, which I want to see the committee address, as I believe it will. The issue involving the several aspects of accountability is already receiving the attention of the committee and of a sub-committee, in particular, and the House has already heard about that today. The issue of the Speakership is one which we want to consider. The issue as to how we should vote in the Chamber, as to whether it is the most efficient method or, even more important, whether it is the right method for this particular time, is also one which I should like to see addressed and one which I know we will.

A few moments ago the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) raised a number of important questions about this experiment. He is not in the Chamber at the moment, but I am sure he will have the opportunity to hear my response to his questions so far as I am capable of responding. I want to say in particular to him, and to the House, in case someone may not be aware, that the committee, of which I am a member and whose report we are considering right now, has no implementation function. Its mandate is to investigate and report. Therefore, one should avoid thinking of the committee as some kind of administrator or implementation structure which would sit in judgment of the actions of the House to decide just how well a rule is being implemented or if it suits or satisfies the intent of the committee. I submit that the committee's work is done once it has reported to the House and once it has made its recommendations, either on an interim or on a final basis, so that the real adjudicators of the experimental package are the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and the Hon. Member for every other riding in the country. Only he and the other Hon. Members of the House can answer this question.

I am sure that over the experimental period of one year we will all come to some conclusions as to which items in the package have improved the functioning of the House and which items we could well do without. I have no doubt, I say to him, that over the year we will find a consensus emerging about which parts of the package we ought to retain on a more permanent basis and which parts we ought to throw out before they do any further damage.

The same gentleman raised the question as to why the committee brought in an interim report at this particular time. I want to say to him that there was no magic reason why it was done at this particular time, except to say that the committee found reasonably quickly that there were a number of items on which it was fairly easy to get a ready consensus. We decided that we would recommend them to the House as an experimental package. That is something of an oversimplification, but that is basically the answer to the question raised by the Hon. Member. We have come forward at this time because we have identified some items concerning which we foresaw the possibility of a consensus. We were apparently right, given the rather rapid fashion in which the three caucuses accepted the recommendations in the interim report.

The real spirit of the report was summed up a few minutes ago by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). He is also a member of the committee, and he said, "Let us try it". This is an experiment. None of us are particularly married to it. We naturally feel some favour toward it or we would not have come to the House and recommended it. We feel it has a reasonable chance of success. However, the only way we will know whether what we put on paper will work in practice is to give it a try. So, in the spirit of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills and, I believe, of every Hon. Member in the House, let us try to see if it will work. I believe it will. If it needs some honing, refinement, so be it. In the meantime, while we try this package, I am rather encouraged that the committee work will continue in depth on some of the other issues I have mentioned. Other Hon. Members of the House and of the committee, in particular, have mentioned some. I would even suggest that there may well be an issue or two we have not really focused on yet, of which we have not seen the significance. Certainly, I have not, and I bow and defer to people on the committee who have been in the House much longer than I and who have been involved in other reform exercises such as this particular one. However, for my part, I have the distinct feeling or impression that we will come across a whole area that we have not addressed in any depth.

Therefore, I say, let us get on with the experiment. I believe that we have unanimity on this point, pretty well. I also say, let us get on with the larger task of the committee because if we are to measure, with any accuracy, the validity of having set up this committee in the first place, I ask Hon. Members not to measure it in terms of tonight's exercise but, rather, to wait and see what comes forward insofar as the larger issues are concerned, the issues to which we referred in our various speeches.

Mr. Nielsen: D'accord!

Mr. Simmons: This is really an historic night when my good friend, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and I are saying "Aye, aye" to the same point.

Mr. Nielsen: Never! You go too far!

Mr. Simmons: It gives me reason to ask if we really do not have a good thing here. It is so good that he can accept it and I can accept it with absolute agreement. It is absolutely amazing.

I am glad to be associated with the report and I look forward as a member of the committee to continuing the work which has been so well begun. This work could not go forward without the very active collaboration and understanding of every Hon. Member of the House, and that is not a buttered up way of saying that people have been in agreement with everything we have done. There have been some volatile arguments on aspects of this report involving items that we are now considering. That is not the point I make. The point I make is that I feel, irrespective of Party lines, a willingness and almost an anxiety to find rules which will serve us and this institution better. It is that spirit which is making tonight's exercise possible. It is that spirit which gives me confidence that we will come up with an over-all report, a final report as a committee, which will serve this institution and the people of Canada very well.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say a few words at the close of this debate on the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) concerning the subject matter of the third report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I, too, congratulate the movers of the motion and the members of the committee who brought us to this historic point in parliamentary life. As a ten-year Member and a three-year president of standing committees of the House, I welcome these changes and I want to comment on just a few of them.

The idea of planning on a semester basis will be an excellent discipline for both the Government and the Opposition. The Government will be forced to think a little further ahead than they now do, and the Opposition will be able to plan in a much more orderly fashion. They are now only able to learn the business of the House the week before it begins.

As far as the parliamentary calendar is concerned, and rising for the summer recess on the thirtieth of June, I note that the calendar will give us 175 sitting days a year instead of 165 days. I think that is good because, if it is needed, we should have that, knowing the ending date should end the brinksmanship that we see at practically every end of a session in the House now. The Government is always wanting to push through more things before the end, and the Opposition is always threatening to hold things up. Then there is a threat to make us sit longer. The idea of never knowing is very hard on the personal lives of Members, and very hard on the families of Members. Family life should be improved for all Members by the installation of this new calendar.

Previously, the summer recess coincided roughly with the academic school year. The children got out of school on the thirtieth and the MPs got out of the House on June 30 and they could all go to their ridings and their homes for the summer recess, and that was fine. In the last ten years only once, in 1978, did the House rise on June 30. In other years, excluding two years in which the House did not sit because of summer elections, the House rose in late July. I would just like to read out these dates, Mr. Speaker, July 27, July 30, July 14, July 25, July 23 and July 17, and this year, 1982 set the record when the House adjourned on August 4. I am sure we all remember that long, hot summer.

On the daily timetable aspect, I think that would be good for families as well. As I analyse the changes, I see that they really have only shifted the 8 to 10 p.m. sitting to 11 in the morning on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and the Adjournment Debate has been moved from 10 p.m. to 6 p.m. That debate is generally sparsely attended. I suppose the only effect of that is that it will keep a few Parliamentary Secretaries busy through part of the dinner hour. I said that this daily timetable was good for families as well. That is assuming that the Members take advantage of the close of debate at 6 and go home to their families, if they have them here. Other suggested uses of that evening time is other meetings, or travel, or study in your office or office work, et cetera. I think one or two Members may have alluded to it, but it may be the "et cetera" that will prove to be the problem. Long ago, I am told on good authority, night sittings were introduced for the very purpose of keeping Members of Parliament busy at night, and keeping them off the streets and out of the night spots and other dangerous places in the national capital region.

An Hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Clarke: I say that only half in jest, but on a very serious note I do hope that the evening time from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. is not taken up immediately by extra committee meetings. My committee, the Public Accounts Committee, traditionally sits at 11 a.m., so if we continue to sit then we will miss the 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. period of the House. Furthermore, the benefits that might accrue to the Members will certainly be lost to the staff who have to service that committee, if they have to come back here and work until ten o'clock.

We have been considering the size of the committee in the Public Accounts Committee for some time. I judge from the report that we will be getting ten Members instead of the current 20. That is not a problem as some of you know who have attended Public Accounts Committee meetings in the last number of years. We have to make a special effort, in the Public Accounts Committee, to get a quorum for conducting votes in the committee because our quorum is 11 and our normal attendance is usually in the seven range. We will be better organized with having only ten. I do not know what the quorum will be, probably six. We will probably have at least six most of the time.

The limitation on substitution will also be good for most committees. As I analyse how it might apply to Public Accounts I can see that it will eliminate the very few occasions that we have had where a lot of Members have come in order to achieve some special end that the Government might have wanted to achieve in one of those meetings. I think it might also prevent substitution of so-called experts, in subjects which the members of Public Accounts Committee are not expert. When these Members come in, although they are expert on their subjects, they are not experts on the proceedings and methods of the Public Accounts Committee. We very often find that their visit, while pleasant, has not been as useful to the committee as we all thought it would be.

One very important aspect of the committee's recommendations, Mr. Speaker, is the response to Committee reports. I suppose the Public Accounts Committee makes more reports to the House of Commons than any other. We get no official response from the House on these reports. The President of the Treasury Board usually replies, at least the last one did—I am not sure as I have not filed a report since the new one was named. He always replied to our reports by letter to let us know whether the Government agreed or did not agree. Again, in my memory, only three times have we had concurrence with the committee report, and then it was without debate.

So having examined all of the changes and made remarks on a few of them I just want to add that I think the acceptance of the proposal will benefit us all. It has shown the spirit of co-operation that can exist in this House, and I hope that during the year of trial it will all work out, and that the pitfalls which will undoubtedly be discovered will not be too great.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will of necessity be brief. I want to thank the Conservative Party for the generosity which they have shown this evening. It is that spirit of co-operation that I know will keep the House operating on an even keel.

I was going to say that I found the debate this evening in keeping with the deliberations of the committee. I thought that the suggestions that were put forward on all sides were suggestions that, even in some cases critical, were intended to improve the report and improve the operations of the House of Commons and intended to support this new venture that we have all agreed to undertake.

Why did we undertake it? Because it became apparent that the Members of the House of Commons were either unable or unwilling to operate within the existing rules. It was a general opinion that the existing rules did not accommodate the new House of Commons in the sense of the new dynamics of the House of Commons, the new problems that had to be solved, the new methods that had to be found and the new initiatives that had to be taken.

The rules that we have offered can work. The question is, will they work? The rules that we had could have worked. They did not work.

This interim report of the committee will work provided that the Members of the House believe that it should work, believe that it is important that the House of Commons not only be able to act appropriately but that it be seen to be acting appropriately, which is equally important. Not only should we understand that what we are doing is correct, within the general structure and rules of the House, but the public should be able to understand how we are operating so they do not think that the House of Commons is in fact a circus. I believe that what we have before us is the first step, and in the course of the next few months we will see a number of reports which will further encourage the development of the Members' participation, and in so doing it will make the House of Commons much more relevant, and as we make it more relevant, the people of Canada will benefit substantially from it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): One of the oddities of our system of Government is that he or she who is designated as Speaker is denied the right to speak in debate. I can only briefly note that it has been a pleasure for me to have served in the chair listening to this debate tonight. I might say that that pleasure has been marred for me personally by the mechanism of my system of arrival, and I would hope that the committee and all Members of the House would give some thought to the mechanisms of the mandate for those who occupy the chair so that we can the better serve you.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order. May I say, off the record, that the Government House Leader was kind enough to inform me last Thursday that the order of business has changed to Bill C-131, I believe, tomorrow, followed by Bill C-132, then Bill C-136; is that correct?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I proceed?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GARRISON DIVERSION—REPORTED APPROVAL OF PROJECT BY UNITED STATES. (B) INQUIRY WHETHER STEPS TAKEN TO DETER ACTION IN U.S. CONGRESS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, in light of the latest statements made in Grand Forks last week by Robert Wefald, the Attorney General for North Dakota, I find it imperative to stand this evening and call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to make an immediate appeal to Washington to curtail any further construction of the Garrison Diversion Project. Mr. Wefald, it appears, intends to totally disregard the affirmation of the International Joint Commission that the project would result in violation of the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty between Canada and the United States.

The Attorney General for North Dakota is resolved to have the construction of the Garrison Water Diversion Project completed, despite opposition by the Canadian Government and the International Joint Commission, if the United States Government determines the project is in its best interests. Mr. Wefald is under the impression the potential contaminating effect of pumping water from the Missouri River across the continental divide into the Red River watershed "was blown all out of proportion". Obviously, the threat to the environment, that is, Manitoba's waterways, and particularly the threat to Manitoba's fishing industry, is being treated with indifference. Evidently, Mr. Wefald has not been made aware of, or has not had the opportunity to properly assess the various environmental studies and evaluations which have been done on the effects of water flowing north into Canadian waters.

All the evidence compiled by the scientists involved in the sutdy of this proposed project points to the disastrous effect it would have on Manitoba's agricultural and fishing industries as a result of flooding agricultural areas and disturbing the ecology in Manitoba's waterways. In light of the Attorney General's statements, it is quite apparent that the Manitoba New Democratic Party's office in Washington is having no effect at all in relaying our fears and concerns in regard to the Garrison project.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make clarification of the Attorney General's statements. As the NDP lobbying team seems to be inconsequential in blocking the continuation of the project, I repeat my call upon the federal Government, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs in particular, to launch a new and stronger protest to the Governor of North Dakota and to the appropriate people in Washington concerning the Garrison project.

When we read statements such as those of the Attorney General of North Dakota, it is easily discernible that the endeavours of the NDP Office which was specifically set up to defend Manitoba's interests have been to little avail. Only 34 of the 435 members of the House of Representatives support the Canadian stand on the project. What have the lobbyists been doing all this time? The NDP does not appear to be particularly involved with, or have a commitment to establish the Canadian position on the Garrison project. If the NDP concerns were real, it would not allow the ruling of the International Joint Commission to be ignored. Representation should be made without delay to the proper officials in Washington to investigate the present state of affairs on the Garrison project, and to obtain verification of the intent of the United States on this issue.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member I would like to point out that the long-standing Canadian position on the construction of the Garrison Diversion Unit remains that Manitoba waters and fisheries can only be adequately protected from serious damage or degradation resulting from the operation of the project if the Diversion Unit is modified in such a way that it does not result in water transfers from the Missouri River Basin into the waters of the Hudson Bay Basin flowing into Canada.

The U.S. administration is fully cognizant of this position which has been conveyed to them on numerous occasions in recent years. The U.S. Government has assured the Canadian Government that it will honour its obligations to Canada under the Boundary Waters Treaty not to pollute Canadian waters. The U.S. Government has also accepted the International Joint Commission Report on the Garrison Diversion Unit which recommended that the operations of the project which could affect waters flowing into Canada not be built at this time.

As Members may know, the U.S. administration has proposed the appropriation of $4 million for the Garrison project in fiscal year 1983-84. Although this amount is quite small in comparison to the $1.1 billion price tag of the entire project, Canadian authorities believe that the Garrison Diversion Unit should be re-designed before more money is spent on a project that will, as now designed, permit foreign biota to enter Canadian waters. Federal and Manitoba Ministers, as well as senior governmental officials in Ottawa, have stated this view very clearly to the U.S. administration.

In addition, Canadian officials have ensured that Members of the U.S. Congress are fully aware of Canadian views on this appropriation. Indeed, Members of Parliament and Senators have spoken directly to many Members of Congress earlier this year, reminding them of the significant Canadian interest at stake in this appropriation. All of these efforts, including those by anti-Garrison groups in Manitoba, have ensured that Canadian views on the Project have been heard loud and clear on Capital Hill In Washington.

Regardless of the outcome of the appropriation vote, Canadian authorities will continue to insist that measures be taken by U.S. authorities to ensure that Manitoba waters and fisheries be protected from any injurious effects of the Garrison project. The Canadian side has a solid case on the Garrison issue and the Canadian Government will continue to strongly defend the interests of Canada and Manitoba in this project. We are counting very much on the support of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Should the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) come in I will recognize him out of the normal order. For the moment, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

CONVENTION CENTRES—FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO DEVELOPMENT OF RIDEAU CENTRE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to explain the circumstances of a recent event in my riding which attracted considerable attention and was widely reported in the press. I am, of course, referring to a decision by Eaton's to change the name of the Rideau Centre to Rideau Eaton Centre. As we all know, this decision was fiercely challenged by a number of local groups and by the population in general. On November 26, last Friday, Viking Rideau and Eaton's announced that they had decided to reverse their decision, and that the project would continue to be called the Rideau Centre or Centre Rideau. This evening, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a short overview of this question to explain why local reaction to the change was negative. First of all, however, I must publicly congratulate Viking Rideau and the T. Eaton Company who demonstrated that a corporate citizen can be a good listener and a good citizen. Companies and corporations have a social role to play, and one can certainly say that the T. Eaton Company has taken this role seriously. I should therefore like to congratulate them once again for their attitude in this matter. My thanks are also directed to Messrs. David Howard and J. J. Barnicke, who are partners with Eaton's in the company that is developing the Rideau Centre.

Now for a look at the facts. First of all, we should remember that the Rideau Centre project is a joint enterprise which for over ten years has involved the public sector, represented by the Federal Government, the Department of Public Works, the National Capital Commission, the City of Ottawa and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, while the Government of Ontario was also involved in the Convention Centre. On the private sector side, there was Viking-Rideau, Westin Hotels, The Bay, Ogilvy's, Caplan and a number of other merchants. Since the project was initiated, co-operation among the various parties has always been excellent.

It was therefore a surprise for everyone when we learned in the press last November 10 that the T. Eaton Company wanted to change the name of the Rideau Centre to Eaton Rideau Centre. This unilateral decision made without any consultation was justified according to the company since Eaton holds 40 per cent of the shares in the Viking Rideau Company, which owns the Centre, and this makes it the major shareholder. Eaton believed that its name would add to the business potential of the Rideau Centre. The press was quick in spreading the news. This elicited an immediate reaction. For my part, I telephoned Mr. Eaton, the mayor of Ottawa, Mrs. Dewar, and the Chairman of the National Capital Commission, Mr. Drury. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) was also involved, as was the MP for Ottawa East, Mr. Albert Roy. On November 16, I also presented a motion under Standing Order 43 in the House about this matter.

There are many reasons to oppose the change in name. First, the Rideau sector project involves much more than the Eaton store. In fact, it concerns the whole centretown area of Ottawa, including Rideau Street, the Byward Market, Sandy Hill, Lower Town, and so on. At the time of its inception, the project had a rather wide-ranging objective, namely to upgrade the centre-town of Ottawa where the activities and infrastructures had been on the decline for many years. The Rideau Centre Project would bring new life to the area. However, the Eaton store alone will not bring about these changes. Other stores and many shops will open in the Rideau Centre, as well as hotels, restaurants and other businesses which will also be involved in the commercial upgrading of this sector. Therefore, while Eaton is a major business partner, it is not alone.

Another important factor is probably our cultural heritage. In the National Capital Region, the name "Rideau" designates part of our history. We have only to think about the Rideau River, the Rideau Canal, Rideau Hall, Rideau Street, and so on. Rideau is synonymous with Ottawa.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I regret interrupting the Hon. Member, particularly as I have made several signals to him indicating that I would have to do so. I should explain that on the adjournment motion the Chair has absolutely no latitude. The time allotted to Hon. Members is three minutes; that time has expired, with perhaps some additional time.

I propose to make a rare exception; perhaps the Hon. Member would like to use ten seconds to finish his remarks. The Chair would accept that.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that I am entitled to seven minutes, not three. I am entitled to speak.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member may not understand; it is three minutes for the Member who poses the question and seven minutes—I apologize to the Hon. Member. I have reversed matters. He has a total of seven minutes and accordingly, has a full four minutes in which to complete his remarks.

• (2215)

Mr. Gauthier: I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, why you were gesturing to me. I know we discussed new rules in the House today but I did not think they would be applied so quickly.

[Translation]

If I may come back to my topic, it is of course the change of name of a very important development centre in my constituency, the Rideau Centre. There was a proposal to change its name to Eaton Rideau Centre. As I said, Mr. Speaker, it soon became apparent why so many business groups and citizens reacted negatively. For that reason, on November 22, 1982, the management of the T. Eaton Company came to Ottawa to discuss the name change with local authorities. That meeting probably convinced the Eaton management, because they announced on Friday last, November 26, that they had changed their minds because of the representations made to them.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank everyone who took part in the debate. Thanks should also go to the businessmen, citizens, the electronic and printed media who lended their support. Thanks to collective input, the voice of the people in the area could be heard. As I said in my opening remarks, we should also thank the management of the T. Eaton Company for responding to and understanding our objections and finally accepting that the common take precedence over their own interests.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that I received a number of letters and telephone calls on that subject. Even if this might look unimportant, for us in Ottawa it is a matter of heritage, of preserving our legacy.

We are going through a development stage, Mr. Speaker. Downtown Ottawa must preserve its Rideau heritage—Rideau is synomous with Ottawa.

That question of the name change for the Centre shows that the people in the National Capital area are interested in that major $200 million project. We are all proud of it, and I would conclude by wishing every success to the promoters of the Rideau Centre on behalf of the people in my constituency and the National Capital area.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I would like in the first place to congratulate him for the excellent work he has performed with respect to that matter as to most others relating to his constituency. I am quite pleased to announce that the project is now being carried out after several years of hard work devoted to planning and negotiations. I would like to point out to the members of this House how this Government, my Department and the National Capital Commission can co-operate with other levels of government and with the private sector in modernizing the core of some of our cities and improving the social and economic climate of our communities. The need for that project was first identified in the early sixties and the Cabinet gave its approval in principle in July 1973. The planning activities were spread out over a number of years because of the extent and complexity of that development project and the need to secure the participation of many interested parties of both the public and private sectors.

Our aim was to revitalize the eastern section of the National Capital, create permanent jobs and opportunities for the construction industry, as well as promote the use of vacant land belonging to the federal Government. I am convinced that the Crown will derive financial returns from its share of the gross revenue of the project.

Mr. Speaker, the project includes a 500-room hotel scheduled for completion next fall, about 650,000 square feet of retail store space, including a major Eaton's department store expected to open for business next summer, and a large convention centre which will be available in the fall of 1983. There will be parking facilities for 1,500 vehicles, a street reserved for buses and pedestrians as well as a pedestrian mall. What matters, Mr. Speaker, is that the project will have created approximately 2,000 jobs in construction operations on Canadian Government land between 1981 and 1983, 1,000 jobs in the general building industry in the National Capital Region, and additional jobs in the service industries. Some 1,500 people have found permanent jobs through the implementation of this project.

Mr. Speaker, the participation of the Federal Government is as follows: Department of Public Works, $19 million, and National Capital Commission, $11 million; the very significant participation of the private sector and the other levels of government is approximately $173 million.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—EVASION OF DUTIES BY AMWAY CORPORATION. (B) REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF POSSIBLE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the corporate personification of the "American Way" is on trial both criminally and civilly today in Canada. On Wednesday, November 17 last, I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) for an assurance that one of the largest direct sales companies in the world, namely Amway Corporation with sales last year of over $1.5 billion, would not be allowed to make a quiet deal with the Canadian Government to settle four outstanding civil actions. That same day the Company was charged by the Ontario Attorney General with defrauding the Canadian Government under the Criminal Code. The trial date was set for tomorrow, Tuesday, November 30, 1982. I understand the Company announced today that it did not intend to put in an appearance. This, of course, shows complete contempt for the Canadian judicial process.

Amway, short for the American Way, was in fact found guilty in 1979 by the American Federal Trade Commission of fixing retail and wholesale prices and misrepresenting the profitability of Amway distributorships. The Company is headed by a Mr. Jay Van Andel and Richard M. DeVos, two of the five largest contributors to Ronald Reagan's campaign and the owners of the Mutual Broadcasting System, which is the largest radio network in the United States. Mr. Van Andel was from 1979 to 1980 the Chairman of the United States Chamber of Commerce and a good friend of Gerry Ford. Mr. DeVos, until he was fired in August, was the National Chairman of the Republican Fund Raising Committee. Amway as well, I might add, is an important supporter of the National Right to Work, Legal Defence and Education Foundation. We have here a classic case of free enterprise getting greedy and going sour in an attempt to maximize its profits by duping Canadian officials.

Revenue Canada has alleged that for 1977 to 1980 alone, Amway dramatically undervalued its goods entering Canada. Apparently this procedure has been going on since 1965. The claim for this three-year period alone is some $148 million covering over 1,700 separate entries. I understand that a Canadian customs broker blew the whistle on Amway.

Some of the internal documents which I have seen constitute a searing indictment of the attempts by Amway Corporation, this American corporate giant and its largest subsidiary, Amway of Canada, to avoid the payment of literally millions and millions of dollars in Canadian customs duties and thereby defraud Canadian taxpayers of millions of dollars. I intend to quote in the short time available to me some of the salient extracts from those documents.

Dummy invoices apparently were prepared, and in one of the documents dated December, 1975, an internal company document, it is stated:

> No actual transactions take place between Amway and the contract warehouses.
>
> The invoices are never sent to the contract warehouses and never paid by them. The contract warehouses are not aware of the existence of the invoices.

It continues:

> A sharp auditor could request proof that the invoices were actually paid by the contract warehouses. No such proof exists.

In a document from the Vice-president, dated 1978, it is stated that the prices at which Amway of Canada has purchased products from Amway Corporation have been supported for purposes of Canadian customs duties as being proper by means of false representations, both oral and written. Canadian counsel has confirmed that the conduct practised constitutes fraud.

In a document relating to an attempt to set up another scheme with an Hawaiian corporation from Amway's accountants, we read:

• (2225)

—it is our opinion that the Hawaii warehouse exercise is a contrived situation serving no business purpose but to support what is inherently an unsupportable position when all of the facts are on the table.

Finally, in a letter to the Vice-president from the customs broker:

As you have explained, back in 1965 an Officer of your firm made false and misleading statements to Ottawa where an additional discount was granted on a Customs ruling.

The broker urged that full disclosure be made. However, the company did not choose to take that advice. It is essential, therefore, that the Canadian Government make no deals whatsoever with Amway Corporation or Amway of Canada. If the Company does not choose to appear before Canadian courts on the criminal charges it is facing, we must proceed to extradition on all outstanding charges in the very near future.

With respect to civil actions pending, I do not believe that these should be limited to three years. Where there is evidence of fraud we can go right back to 1965. The Government must make no deals. It must take the company to Canadian court, pursue the action and recover full interests on the claim.

I understand that in negotiations this past summer there was a suggestion of settlement by a Canadian official for some $105 million. This was stated by an Amway individual. I have also had this confirmed by a source within Revenue Canada. Such a settlement would represent a complete sellout of the interests of Canadians. Above all, there must be no secret dealings.

Recently, one of the spokespersons for Amway was quoted as saying, "The figure in terms of any settlement between Revenue Canada and any party will be kept confidential in accordance with departmental policy." This was said by François Filion, a Revenue Canada spokesman. That attitude is completely unacceptable. Canadian taxpayers have a right to full openness and full disclosures in the dealings with this Amway Corporation. They are quoted as having said that they have a cordial relationship with Canadian officials. I urge the Government on behalf of all Canadians to fully pursue all outstanding civil actions and to ensure that the millions and millions of dollars which are alleged to have been deprived of Canadians through the undervaluing of imports by Amway Corporation are fully recovered with penalties and interest.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure this House that at no time have information exchanges between the Department and Amway taken the form of negotiations. I repeat, there have been no negotiations and no secret deals and there will be none.

However, there have been exchanges of information between the parties to ensure that all facts relevant to the issues are clear to all. This has taken place within the normal adjudication process of the Department carried out under the Customs Act, Sections 160 to 168.

When goods become subject to seizure or forefeiture, the Department forwards to the interested party a formal notice of seizure pursuant to Section 161 of the Customs Act. This gives the party involved the opportunity to present, within 30 days of the date the notice has been issued, any information pertinent to the case. After the expiration of that period, the Department has the authority to consider and weigh the circumstances of the case and render a decision under Section 163 of the Customs Act.

In 1979, acting upon information that there might be irregularities by Amway regarding its imports to Canada, the Department immediately initiated an investigation. Shortly thereafter the RCMP was brought into the investigation.

In 1980, the Department, you will recall, informed Amway of its conclusions and filed four claims in the Federal Court, totalling $148 million. This represents the duty paid value of the goods imported. That is the value for duty of the goods imported, determined in accordance with the provisions of Canadian customs law, plus duty and taxes on this value.

In the case of Amway, the adjudication process was suspended on the advice of the Department of Justice, pending the decision of the Attorney General of Ontario concerning the question of laying criminal charges against the company, the Department having first protected its position by filing these claims.

Criminal charges were laid by the Attorney General of Ontario on November 12, 1982, and the Department is consulting with its lawyers to determine the appropriate course of action to follow respecting completion of the normal adjudication process.

• (2230)

It has been and is the normal practice of the Department to recognize that where a value for duty, albeit too low a value, has been declared at the time of entry and duty and taxes have been paid on that value, the final decision will take this amount into account by allowing it as a deduction from the gross amount claimed. Thus, Amway was advised that the final decision would probably be in the order of $105 million. Again following normal practice, the Department has continued to maintain its four claims in the Federal Court for the gross amount of $148 million.

The question has been asked whether we would ask for interest on the sum due to the Crown by Amway. Let me remind you that the Customs Act does provide for a penalty significantly greater than the duties and taxes not paid. It has not been the practice to seek interest except in some cases where the Department has agreed to deferred payment arrangements.

As you know the Department does not normally disclose information concerning penalties paid under the Customs Act. However, in this case the Department intends to disclose this information, in the public interest, in a way which will not prejudice the interest of any of the parties involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House has now deemed to have been adopted, and accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. Have a good evening.

At 10.31 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

COMMUNICATIONS

LONG-DISTANCE TELEPHONE FEES CHARGED TO RESIDENTS OF TOTTENHAM, ONT.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the residents of the Village of Tottenham, in my riding, are being charged long-distance telephone rates for calls to the Toronto area, despite the fact their distance from the nearest switching centre is only a few miles. In light of the fact that the present long-distance charges constitute an undue financial burden to the residents, who place well over 50 per cent of their calls to the Toronto region, and because Bell Canada has waived its rules in other areas of the Province, in similar circumstances, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Communications instruct Bell Canada to provide extended area coverage to the residents of Tottenham.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT POLICY REVIEW

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in view of the precarious state of the Canadian shipbuilding industry, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House instruct the Government to release the shipbuilding policy review it has kept under wraps for the past two years, despite the urgent need for increased protection and support for Canadian shipbuilders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ELIGIBILITY OF NATIVE PEOPLE FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Inasmuch as many elderly native persons in Canada's North do not receive Old Age Pension benefits as most do not have birth records, speak very little English or French, or even know that this benefit may be available to them and, as a result, must rely on family members and friends to survive, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the House calls on the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to take immediate steps to correct this deplorable state of affairs by informing native persons living in isolated communities that they may be entitled to an old age benefit and of the procedure to be followed to apply for such benefit.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FINANCE

SUGGESTED TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR SHARE SUBSCRIPTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, many enterprises in Canada are suffering loss and, as a consequence, cannot take advantage of tax credit programs and tax allowances as their activities are not profitable. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the House instruct the Government to follow the advice of the Economic Council of Canada and introduce legislation to provide that shareholders of a corporation that registers losses for which tax credits cannot be obtained immediately be allowed to deduct from their personal taxable income an amount paid by them in a subscription for new shares to cover this deficit.

CANOLA FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas the CPR and CNR have announced freight rate increases of over 40 per cent for canola products, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the Minister of Transport immediately take the appropriate steps to limit the rate increases to 6 per cent as per the six and five program.

MINISTERIAL TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, last year the travelling expenses of Cabinet Ministers and their Parliamentary Secretaries in the Liberal Caucus soared 70 per cent to almost $2 million, while they lectured other Canadians on the need for restraint. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That those big spenders meet after Question Period today to prepare a statement for the House tomorrow, justifying how they can now slash Old Age Pensions and Family Allowances in the name of fiscal responsibility, after they themselves have made a complete and utter mockery of that very principle.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF BENEFIT PERIOD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in a callous disregard for the well-being of thousands of Canadian men and women who have been unemployed for a year or more and will be unable to obtain unemployment insurance benefits, refused to extend the benefits program for such people, saying that they should be forced to go on welfare. This is a policy that this Party categorically rejects. In view of this, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That the Minister of Finance reconsider this decision and announce that the Government will extend unemployment insurance benefits by a further 26 weeks.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

UNITED STATES HEARINGS ON IMPORTED CANADIAN LUMBER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, and trust that all Members of the House will see fit to support this motion. Recognizing that Canadian lumber shipments to the United States last year amounted to $1.8 billion, recognizing that the forest industry is a critical component of the Canadian economy, and recognizing that the United States is presently considering the imposition of a countervailing duty on imported Canadian lumber products, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

• (1410)

That the Canadian Government demonstrate its concern by having Canadian officials at the hearings presently taking place rather than an embassy staff person and, in addition, by encouraging provincial Governments, expecially British Columbia, to do the same.

Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House call upon the Solicitor General to refuse to co-operate in the construction of any federal/provincial maximum security prison for women in North Burnaby pending the outcome of such consultations and only in the event that the citizens of Burnaby agree to such construction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT HEARINGS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED REFORM OF TAX SYSTEM

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a very urgent matter, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Inasmuch as children are Canada's greatest resource, and present family allowance cheques do not pay even enough for the price of a pair of jeans, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the Liberal Government stop eroding family allowances by six and five cutbacks, allowances which are the right of all Canadian children, and that it concentrate instead on reforming the tax system to pay for essential social security programs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REASONS FOR NOT PROSECUTING CANADIAN PROFESSOR

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) today tabled a letter written by his predecessor explaining the reasons why they did not proceed with the prosecution of anybody with respect to conclusions arrived at by the McDonald Commission, and in light of this precedent by the Minister of Justice, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice to table the legal opinion as to why the officials in Canada, in the Solicitor General's Department in particular, did not proceed with the prosecution of the alleged spy, Hugh Hambleton.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

INSTALLATION OF LIGHTING IN MEMBERS' OFFICES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that fluorescent lighting has now been linked to cancer in both working men and women, and that the Department of Public Works has refused to instal incandescent lighting in some Members' offices in the Parliament Buildings, while the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has had the Department of National Health and Welfare pay to have alternate lighting installed in her office, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That all Members who wish to have alternate lighting installed in their offices have it paid for by the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

TRIAL OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR IN BRITISH COURT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday we learned in a British courtroom, not a Canadian one, that Hugh Hambleton, who is charged with offences under the U.K. Official Secrets Act, was a Soviet spy for more than 30 years in constant touch with Soviet agents, that he had had dinner in a Moscow apartment with the head of the KGB, and that he was found with the most sophisticated Soviet-built espionage equipment in November, 1979.

Mr. Nielsen: In Montreal.

Mr. Speyer: This morning in that same courtroom we learned that he had not only turned over to the Soviets thousands of NATO documents but that he turned over 80 of the most top secret documents classified as "Cosmic", to the Soviets. In light of the fact that there are thousands of Canadian troops stationed in Germany, has Canada gone out of the business of prosecuting spies?

• (1415)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that is a rhetorical question. Of course, in a proper case where the evidence was there, where the Official Secrets Act would be effective in obtaining a prosecution, there would be a prosecution brought. I would remind my hon. friend that the evidence to which he is referring has been led by the prosecution. There is a case under way now. One assumes that the defence will want to put in evidence as well. I would urge all Hon. Members not to make statements in the House or to characterize evidence in a way which could, if communicated to Great Britain, jeopardize a fair trial. There will be time for discussing matters like this after decisions have been reached by courts in Great Britain.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, this is the Government that will prosecute the Toronto Sun and Peter Worthington, but will not prosecute a true spy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, on May 23, 1980, in this House, in answer to a question directed by the late Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville, the Solicitor General said:

—there is a question as to whether any official secrets at all were obtained to be given to foreign governments. Second, there is a question of whether any of the information that was given, secret or not, was damaging to our country.

That was May, 1980. In light of the statements made by the Attorney General of Great Britain this morning that 80 of the most secret documents which NATO had, were conveyed to the Soviet Union—

Mr. Nielsen: From Canada.

Mr. Speyer: —was the Solicitor General ignorant of those facts when he gave that answer on May 23, or was he just not telling the truth?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not going to confirm any facts in the matter for now, but I can tell the Hon. Member that I was fully informed about the basis on which the decision was reached by the officials in the Department of Justice and by the law officers of the Crown. As I indicated before, there will be a time when I will be prepared to be more forthcoming about the evidence which we had and the way in which the decision was made, but I urge my hon. friend not to press me to do that now.

STATEMENT MADE BY RCMP OFFICER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, yesterday in answer to questions that I posed, the Solicitor General said that there was the highest degree of co-operation between the British authorities and those of our Security Service. I would ask the Solicitor General to confirm reports that appeared for the first time, to my knowledge, in July, 1982, that a Frank Pratt of the Special Services of the RCMP told Mr. Hambleton not to go to London or he might be in for "a hostile reception". Is that accurate or is it not?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it is true that the Security Service had a continuing contact and exchange of information with Mr. Hambleton from the time that the decision was made that there should be no prosecution, and that he was told that if he did go to Great Britain he could meet a hostile reception. But Mr. Hambleton was determined to go, and decided on his own that he would.

EXPLANATION SOUGHT FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the Government of the late Mr. Pearson decided that it had sufficient prima facie evidence to strike the Spencer inquiry to look into the activities of a postal employee. The Government also thought it had sufficient prima facie evidence under this Prime Minister to prosecute one Peter Treu. Can the Solicitor General explain to the House why in this case a spy, self-confessed, had been operating for some 30 years, much of that time in Canada, travelling on a Soviet passport, seems to be immune from arrest and prosecution in this country?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, one of the factors is the difficulties with the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's nonsense.

Mr. Kaplan: My friend has mentioned two cases. I ask him to look at the opinions expressed by the courts about the Official Secrets Act in both of those cases.

The Department of Justice has revisions of the Official Secrets Act under consideration. They have not been brought forward—or were not brought forward—at the time of the Hambleton decision because the McDonald Commission was sitting. It was anticipated that the McDonald Commission might produce recommendations which ought to be taken account of in any amendment or improvement of the Official Secrets Act. That is one of the reasons.

• (1420)

BACKGROUND TO GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, is the Government conducting any inquiry into the circumstances of this case in order to determine why Hambleton was able to function for as long as he did in this country, and is the Government looking particularly at the Gouzenko files to see whether or not this man was identified at that time? Did the Government receive any information from any other security service, particularly the CIA, identifying Hambleton and, if so, when?

I would also like to know when the opinion was given by the Department of Justice that there was insufficient evidence to obtain a conviction, because that is what I take the Solicitor General to mean, not insufficient evidence to support a prosecution, a prima facie case against Hambleton?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the decision was made during the month of January, 1980. The Hon. Member asks if we know a great deal about Hambleton's activities in the country. We do know a great deal about his activities.

As I indicated yesterday outside the House, we learned a great deal more about his activities after the Security Service informed him of the decision reached by the Department of Justice about prosecution. That information was communicated not only to the British but to other friendly intelligence services, one of whom took advantage of the opportunity to come to Canada and interrogate Hambleton further.

Indeed, the Security Service has produced information about Hambleton, has communicated it to the British, and in fact a member of the Security Service is in Great Britain, ready to provide assistance to the prosecution that is under way now.

NATURE OF DECISION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have one brief supplementary question, if the Minister of Justice will allow me to interrupt his discussion with the Solicitor General for a moment. When the Solicitor General says that a decision was made in January, 1980, was that in the form of an opinion from an official in the Department of Justice to the officials of his Department, was it in the form of a recommendation, or was it an outright decision by the Government at that time?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): The event in January, 1980, was a meeting between officials of the Ministry of the Solicitor General, the Security Service, and the Department of Justice.

Mr. Nielsen: Officials?

Mr. Kaplan: Officials.

QUERY RESPECTING PROFESSOR'S ACTIVITIES IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister on the same subject. As he knows, Mr. Hambleton is being charged in Great Britain for activities that he undertook in part before 1961, and in part for activities that went on from 1961 to at least 1979. We know that he left NATO's employment in 1961.

Since the RCMP discovered all kinds of interesting spy equipment in his possession since then, what precise kind of activities was Mr. Hambleton involved in after 1961 while he was here in Canada? What information does the Government know was being passed on to the Soviet Union in that period?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have information on that subject but I would prefer to discuss that information after the trial is concluded. The Hon. Member is asking for the evidence that will be adduced or might be adduced in the case. I think it should come out in the case.

EVENTS BETWEEN 1979 AND 1982

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I will try another tack which has everything to do with the Government's decision either to prosecute or not, and something to do with the efficacy of the RCMP. We know that the spy equipment, which was clearly identified as being Soviet made, was found in his quarters. We know that he was a self-confessed KGB agent for 30 years. We knew that a couple of years ago. The Minister said at the time that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute, in the opinion of the Department of Justice, but he said in the House yesterday that, by the time more evidence was acquired after 1979, Hambleton had left the country. I would ask the Minister what happened in the three-year interim. What was discovered between 1979 and the time that he left that was not discovered before? Why was effective action not taken earlier?

• (1425)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there is an answer to that question but, again, I would prefer to give that answer after the trial in Great Britain has been disposed of.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL REASSURANCE ON CANADIAN SECRET INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask another question, Madam Speaker, and I hope the Minister will be a little more forthcoming in his answer to this one. He did not say in 1980, when questions were raised in the House, that there were no official secrets obtained by Hambleton, nor did he deny that such official secrets were passed on to the Soviet Union. Today will the Minister, in the House of Commons, at least reassure Canadians by saying that the Government does not believe that any official secrets were obtained in Canada, and does not believe that they were passed on to the Soviet Union? Will he at least reassure us of this?

Miss MacDonald: He cannot.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that is another question that I cannot answer today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REASONS FOR RCMP ACTIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Solicitor General, who will understand, as one of the law officers of the Crown, that the sub judice rule does not apply to proceedings in the United Kingdom, or in Russia, or in the United States, or in any other country.

Why did the RCMP try to prevent Mr. Hambleton from going to the United Kingdom when they had all this information about him? What were the reasons the RCMP interceded and told him not to go or he would get a rough time in the U.K.?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, a basis of co-operation was established between Mr. Hambleton and the Security Service after Hambleton was informed by the Security Service that the Department of Justice had advised against prosecution. That co-operation resulted in a considerable additional amount of information being given by Hambleton which would probably not have been given if the relationship had been a hostile one.

An Hon. Member: Given to whom?

Mr. Kaplan: The Security Service considered that, in view of that relationship, it woulld be appropriate for them, knowing that he was determined to go in any event, to warn him that he might encounter a hostile reception. Therefore I think that the Security Service behaved entirely properly in the matter but, at the same time, the Security Service co-operated fully with British authorities and, I would insist, during their surveillance of him in Canada, were acting very much to assure effective national security in Canada.

ADVICE GIVEN BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice, whose officials gave the legal opinion with respect to the failure to prosecute Mr. Hambleton in Canada. I want to inform the Minister that our Official Secrets Act, which has been under such criticism by his colleague, the Solicitor General, is far broader than that of the United Kingdom and allows for prosecutions "for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State", with respect to any foreign power, and that of the United Kingdom relates to an enemy of the United Kingdom. I would like to know what was the basis of advice given to the Solicitor General's Department and the police not to prosecute Mr. Hambleton.

Will the Minister of Justice, in the precedent that he set this morning in releasing his predecessor's letter with respect to the failure to prosecute people as a result of the McDonald Commission, table in this House a full explanation and written opinion as to why the prosecution did not take place?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, various comments which have already been made from the Opposition side indicate an awareness that the law has not been interpreted in the same way in Canada as it has been in B itain. The British Government has been very successful with prosecutions under its Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, they would at least try!

Mr. MacGuigan: The law involved in the two cases is different. Obviously, the facts that are involved in the two cases are different and, in light of the fact that this case is sub judice in the courts of—

Some Hon. Members: It is not here.

Mr. MacGuigan: Hon. Members opposite say that it is not here, Madam Speaker. It is not, technically speaking, here, but this is a country with which we have the friendliest relations, it is a country with which news is freely transmitted back and forth, and I suggest that hon. gentlemen can restrain their curiosity, to enable a fair trial to take place in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nielsen: Curiosity? It is absolute astonishment!

ALLEGED SOVIET OFFER OF ELECTION FINANCING

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question with respect to this matter. Has the Canadian Government requested any explanations from the Soviet Government concerning the alleged offer of Mr. Andropov to finance the election of an alleged spy to this House of Commons, given the fact that that allegation is contained in a statement—and assuming that it was a voluntary statement—given the accused in London? Has there been any explanation for this, and has there been any investigation conducted with the Soviet Government about this allegation?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I had no knowledge of this allegation. Therefore I do not know if an explanation has been requested. I will inquire.

POSSIBILITY OF ELECTION CONTRIBUTIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Now that the matter has been raised in the House and the Prime Minister has knowledge of it and will make the usual inquiries, does the Government have any evidence of any contributions made by the Soviet Government to the election campaign of any Member of the House of Commons in the last decade? This is an isolated case, apparently, the only case that we know of that has come to the surface. Are there any other cases where the Soviet Government has attempted to intervene, and would the Prime Minister extend his inquiry to that?

Mr. Nielsen: Fred Rose, probably.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the allegation having been made or sustained, but I will make inquiries.

PROVISIONS OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General will remember that the very earliest opinion emanating from the Department of Justice about the Hugh Hambleton matter was the preposterous proposition that, because Canada's national interest was not in any way abrogated by this man, even though he clearly admitted giving away secrets of both NATO and the United States to the Soviet Bloc, this did not infringe upon Canada's Official Secrets Act. I now ask the Solicitor General, in the two and one half years that he has had that office, has he done anything to attempt to rectify this alleged gap in the Official Secrets Act.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): As far as giving away secrets are concerned, or the expression in an earlier question about being a "self-confessed spy", it is true that Mr. Hambleton did indicate publicly that he had been giving information to the Soviet Union, but he indicated that it was open source information, and that is normal. That has happened in other cases.

Mr. Nielsen: Like the Spencer case.

Mr. Kaplan: It is not something that the Government would want to encourage, but if open source information is given, as Hambleton claims he was doing, that would not have brought him under the Official Secrets Act, from the definition of what a secret is.

Mr. Nielsen: Exactly the same as the Spencer investigation.

Mr. Kaplan: As far as the security of Canada is concerned in the Official Secrets Act, that is a matter that the Department of Justice is dealing with in considering revisions to the Official Secrets Act, based on the cases that have been fought and lost in Canada before, and based also on the recommendations of the McDonald Commission.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE ARRANGEMENT WITH ACCUSED

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): If the Solicitor General will review his files, of course he will find that there is not only evidence in Canada but there is evidence emanating from an American source as well as to the alleged traitorous activities of this man.

Obviously some deal was struck by the Security Service with this man. Some commitment was given by the Canadian law enforcement agencies to this man in order to extract more information from him, so the British could proceed. Would the Solicitor General mind telling us now what that commitment was?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): I can assure the House that there was no deal but what did happen, as I indicated, was that the individual was informed that the Department of Justice had formed the conclusion that no prosecution could be founded against him. He was told about the state of mind of the Government in relation to a prosecution.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: On that basis a relationship of confidence was established, for which there were no other considerations.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

INCREASES IN DEPARTMENTAL BUDGETS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, Canadians of all levels of income, but especially lower and middle income Canadians, are experiencing difficulty as they find their costs increasing very quickly. My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. While he requires most lower and middle income Canadians to restrict their increases to 6 per cent and urges all Canadians to follow suit, it is interesting to note in his own Department he has allowed increases of 16 per cent, and in the budget of his Minister of State for Economic Development he has allowed an increase of 150 per cent this year.

Would the Minister explain why he expects lower and middle income Canadians to restrict their increases to 6 per cent while he is prepared to accept a 16 per cent and a 150 per cent increase, for the Department of Finance and the Department of Economic Development, respectively?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to point out quite clearly and categorically to the Hon. Member that no official in the Department of Finance has got more than a 6 per cent increase for next year and 5 per cent the year after, according to the law passed by this Parliament. That applies to all public servants and all Crown corporations that are subject to the rules. There has been no increase in favour of any official in excess of what has been the criterion adopted by this Parliament, and that has been supported very widely across the country. My hon. friend is not comparing apples with apples. I would like to add that there have been reorganizations and reassignments inside the Department. I have also requested that there be an increase in the number of people in the Corporate Financing Branch and also in the Economic Analysis Branch. I have appeared before the Parliamentary Committee to provide all of the information in this regard.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, as the minister of hypocrisy, that is the kind of statement one would expect. While the rates have been restricted to 6 per cent for various agencies, the budgets for the Minister of Finance and for the Minister responsible for economic development obviously have not been restricted to 6 per cent; quite the contrary.

Oral Questions

BANK OF CANADA

CHANGE IN MONETARY POLICY COURSE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): My next question is for the Governor of the Bank of Canada but, unfortunately, he is not here, so I will have to direct it to the Minister of Finance. It would appear that Governor Bouey has changed his course and has now abandoned M1 as a serious aspect of his monetary policy. He has now admitted that he is going to tie interest rates in Canada, in order to regulate Canadian exchange rates with American currency.

Will the Minister please explain, when the American deficit is expected to be nearly $200 billion, which will obviously drive up American interest rates, why he is agreeing to tie Canadian fiscal policy more closely with that of the United States?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would urge the Hon. Member to resort to a little more intellectual honesty in his analysis of the situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the second part of his question is concerned, I will be very pleased to send him a copy of Governor Bouey's speech of yesterday. It is all spelled out there. I hope when he reads it he will come to the right conclusion.

NATIONAL SECURITY

DECISION NOT TO PROSECUTE CANADIAN PROFESSOR—ROLE OF RCMP

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. May I ask him whether or not the RCMP Security Service recommended that the Government proceed under the official Secrets Act to prosecute Mr. Hambleton?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it is not the responsibility of the Security Service to recommend prosecutions. That is the responsibility of the Attorney General's officials.

Mr. Nielsen: Did they or did they not?

POSITION TAKEN BY RCMP

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General if he is asking this House to believe that that force which prosecuted Mr. Treu, Mr. Worthington, and even attempted to prosecute Tom Cossitt, sat back silently and acquiesced in another country prosecuting an alleged Canadian spy and never objected for one minute to the lack of prosecution in this country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): I have no doubt that many members of the Security Service, many Members of this House, and many members of the RCMP, regret the limitations in the present Official Secrets Act.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: I know that was a factor that was much in their consideration.

Mr. Nielsen: That is for a judge to decide, not the Government.

Mr. Kaplan: Beyond that, it would be speculation for me to try to guess what particular members of the Security Service might have thought.

Mr. Lawrence: But you have not done anything about it.

LOCATION OF SOVIET INTELLIGENCE OFFICIALS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. The problem with the Official Secrets Act is that it is too broad, not too narrow. I want to ask if any of the Soviet handlers of Mr. Hambleton are still in the country.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I remind Hon. Members that Canada has perhaps the most active policy of declaring Soviet diplomats to be persona non grata and that recently, during the period when the Members opposite were in office, a considerable number who had been cases in the works within the Security Service were persona non grata. I cannot and will not answer specifically in the House whether any of the individuals who dealt with Hambleton are still present in Canada, but I think I have said enough to show that there is an effective surveillance on members of the KGB who are here in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, since there is a long and honourable tradition in countries with a parliamentary government of high officials and Ministers resigning over security matters, and I bring to the attention of the House and the Minister the case of former Chancellor of West Germany, Willy Brandt, who resigned from that country's highest office because of a security problem, has anyone opposite even remotely considered that course of action in this matter?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what particular defect, or error he considers has been made by the present Solicitor General in relation to those matters.

BANK OF CANADA

CHANGE IN MONETARY POLICY GUIDE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who has already referred to Governor Bouey's statement in Toronto yesterday, when he indicated that the Government's M1 policy is not a useful guide to policy. Will the Minister offer an explanation to the House why we have been asked to follow a policy so slavishly for many months, if not years, which has resulted in unemployment jumping since July, 1980, by over half a million Canadians, with some 20,000 concerns going bankrupt in this country, all in the name of fighting inflation, which has only gone down one-tenth of 1 per cent? That policy is now judged to be wrong. How does he explain it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Governor has explained extensively the reasons why at the present time he is not going to refer to M1 as the proper criterion. M1 is not a policy. It is a criterion to which the bank refers in its conduct of the monetary policy of the country. There have been significant changes in the banking system which have made the definition of M1 quite inadequate in defining what is actually happening in terms of the currency in circulation and demand deposits. In light of this evolution, which is parallel to a similar evolution in the United States where the Federal Reserve Board has indicated that it is abandoning M1 as a criterion, the bank has come to the conclusion that it should develop broader criteria and refer to the general situation in terms of the exchange rate and the inflation rate as a reference.

As I said, this reference to M1 has been in existence since 1975, but the evolution of the last few months has shown that it is not a useful criterion. The policy remains the same. The policy of the bank is to try to encourage a reduction in the rate of inflation. We have met with considerable success in the last few months in that regard. We hope we will continue to meet with success, and reduce inflation in this country, which will lead to a reduction in interest rates, the creation of more investment and more jobs.

Mr. Stevens: Clearly this Government never learns when it is faced with the most brutal evidence that any Government could ever wish for to show that its policies are wreaking havoc rather than solving anything.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING NEW MECHANISM

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, will the Minister indicate to the House, if he expects us to accept his prattle, how he can explain Governor Bouey's statement made last February that M1 is particularly useful as a check against cumulative error in monetary policy over the longer term? What is the new check that the Governor is going to offer so as to ensure that tens of thousands of more Canadians are not ruthlessly cut down by the monetary policy of the Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Governor has indicated that, with the development of new methods in the banking system of overnight investment accounts, personal deposit accounts with both chequing and savings features, et cetera, the calculation of M1 did not represent the actual situation in terms of the money in circulation and the demand deposits. Therefore, in light of these developments which have been paralleled, as I indicated, by similar developments in the United States, the Governor has decided that it would be more appropriate to have broader references than merely M1. I hope this will help us reduce the level of inflation in this country, and create an environment where we will have more investment and more jobs.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT JAPANESE METHOD BE ADOPTED TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Japanese system of having many small groups made up of equal numbers of management and labour working together in plants to improve productivity, quality and design, has proved far more successful than the Canadian system of confrontation between management and labour, will the Government give leadership by taking steps to encourage Canadian industry to adopt the far more successful Japanese method of industrial operation, and in that way make it possible for Canada to become a leader rather than continue to be a follower in today's very competitive world?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, during the past two and one-half years as Trade Minister, I have benefited substantially from the Hon. Member's advice and counsel. Thus, I want to assure him that any suggestions he makes will be considered very seriously by this Government. With respect to the specific representation that he makes, my colleague, the Minister of Labour, and I have been in consultation with labour and management in terms of setting up task forces with the Government to do exactly what the Hon. Member suggests. In fact tomorrow I am meeting with the automobile industry, both labour and management, and hope to be able to announce something with respect to a task force, with the co-operation of the three parties, as he indicated.

HEALTH

FUNDING FOR PLANNED PARENTHOOD ASSOCIATION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the Minister explain why federal funds for the Planned Parenthood Association of Canada have been slashed by 50 per cent, from $250,000 to $130,000, when we know that over 1,000 teenage girls in Canada become pregnant every week, many of them 13 and 14-year old children having children? The incidence of venereal disease has reached epidemic proportions. In view of this trend, why is the Minister reducing instead of expanding grants for Planned Parenthood for the kinds of programs that will develop responsible sexuality in young people in Canada?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, for one very good reason, namely, that this falls completely within the responsibility of the Provinces. We do not have the power to be in the business of the direct delivery of either social services or health services. Had I received notice of the Hon. Member's question, I could have checked the figures. Although the figures are of some magnitude, we are in a phase-out procedure with the Provinces, at their request, because they want full responsibility in this area. We will continue to help the national association with which we have had discussions for years, in fact prior to my time, with regard to this happening and the fact that it had to happen with the sharing of power.

INCREASE IN TEENAGE PREGNANCIES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I am ashamed to hear the Minister speaking this way on behalf of Canadians. Does she not realize that Canada has signed international agreements endorsing access to family planning as a basic human right, and yet we are denying this right to Canadian young people? There are many programs which the Planned Parenthood Association plans on a national level that are of federal responsibility, such as media programs. Why has the Minister ignored reports from her own Department wherein public health nurses from across the country have told her that the number one health problem in Canada is the increase in teenage pregnancies? What does she intend to do to counteract this trend, and let's not say leave it to the Provinces?

• (1450)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, my colleague opposite is telling me that I should do away with the Constitution and the existing division of powers. I am very sorry to insist that I cannot do that. There are many Canadians of good faith who wish there were no provincial Ministers of this, that and the other, but this is not our jurisdiction, Madam Speaker. I cannot provide direct services in the field of social services or health. Do not forget that the Provinces receive billions of dollars to do just that. I think the Hon. Member should put the pressure where it belongs so that the provincial Governments give priority to planned parenthood services. This is a priority.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, if I understood what the Solicitor General said today, he has said so far that he did not have enough evidence with which to charge Mr. Hambleton, that Mr. Hambleton was told that, and as a result Mr. Hambleton co-operated, and that co-operation produced new evidence which is now part of the charge in Great Britain. I ask the Solicitor General, Madam Speaker, what precisely was the commitment to Mr. Hambleton. Was the commitment that no charge would then be laid, or that no charge would ever be laid? If the commitment was not that no charge would ever be laid, why, when the later evidence was available, was he not charged?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, no commitment was made to Hambleton at all. What I indicated, I repeat, is that he was told that the Department of Justice, the Attorney General, had concluded that no charges could be laid against him. On the basis of having been given that information he agreed to co-operate with the Security Service and produced considerable additional information which, as I indicated, was widely shared with friendly intelligence services.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, it at least seems possible that Mr. Hambleton co-operated because he knew he would not be charged.

NATO CONVENTION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, in addition to the earlier testimony referred to in London today, further testimony indicated that there is a 1949 Convention among NATO countries requiring each country to protect the other's secrets. Was NATO consulted on the decision not to prosecute, and if not—in effect if the Convention was ignored—on whose authority was that decision taken?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): My understanding is that national security information is shared by security services directly and not through NATO.

MEDICAL CARE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the proposed Canada Health Act and its implementation. In response to a question from the Hon.

Member for Oxford on November 16, the Minister misled the House when she stated:

—negotiations are still going on between Ministers and officials.

In fact, Madam Speaker, negotiations have not been going on. There have been no meetings with provincial Ministers, with the exception of the Minister of Health of British Columbia on September 29, at which time the federal Minister of Health said she was preparing draft legislation for approval by Cabinet. In fact her press secretary, Mr. Dozier, has confirmed that there are no negotiations now. Will the Minister admit that she in fact misled the House and she is now acting on the proposed Canada Health Act in a unilateral way, without provincial co-operation or negotiations?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Hon. Member is wrong in his statement, Madam Speaker. I repeat, in case he did not understand what I told his colleague a few weeks ago, we are continuing the work of negotiating with the Provinces. He may not be aware of how these things take place. They are done at times between provincial and federal Ministers in an official meeting; at other times through officials; at other times between Ministers in a bilateral way as well. This is what negotiations are all about, and we are proceeding with them exactly the way I said the other day.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, my understanding, from direct contact with provincial Ministers of Health, suggests that in fact negotiations are not proceeding according to the commitment that the federal Minister made last May.

PROVINCIAL RIGHTS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Health aware that the changes she is proposing in the Canada Health Act will infringe on traditional provincial rights as guaranteed in the Constitution, infringe on individual rights, and will threaten the ability of hospitals and communities to care competently for the increasing health needs of Canadians? Is she aware that, on the basis of the May proposal, the provincial Ministers might take this to the courts and that she indeed might be starting another federal-provincial constitutional war, and if so, what does she intend to do about it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, if the movie E.T. was not such a friendly one, I would ask the member if he was coming from that other planet. What he refers to is extraordinary, really. I think it would help me understand the extraordinary statements of the Member if he could name the provincial Minister he is referring to who told him these things privately, and what is exactly the problem.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EXPANSION PROGRAMS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who will know that yesterday in his speech the Governor of the Bank of Canada warned against the development of new expansionary economic recovery programs. He will also recall that three weeks ago at the Liberal Convention he promised Canadians that he would be announcing a five-point expansionary economic program. My question is simply this: what is the Government's policy? Are we going to have expansionary economic recovery programs or not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Government's policy can be seen in the statement made by the Minister of Finance when this part of the session began in late October. It was to find $1.1 billion to create jobs, and to do that by reallocating money from other areas.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT TO LIBERAL PARTY CONVENTION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister may recall that he was not quite so modest three weeks ago when he said:

—we will put in place a national program to rebuild our communities, restore our infrastructure, and renew our industrial strength. Right across Canada in every region, in every city, in every village, there are roads to be built, sewers to be constructed, community projects to be advanced, ports to be deepened, or railway tracks to be laid.

—we will take federal dollars and use them to stimulate spending decisions—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: All right, where is it?

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

An Hon. Member: You said it better, David.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, there is no question that I said it better, but as to the substance of the question surely the Prime Minister must square that rhetoric with what the Governor of the Bank of Canada said yesterday, and come clean with the Canadian people.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member recognizes, I am indebted to him for having read, much better than I, that section of my speech. The applause from this side was an indication of that.

If the Hon. Member will look at the announcement of the Minister to which I referred, he will find in there several examples of hundreds of millions of dollars being allocated to various projects such as the ones described in my speech, and efforts made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration as well as by the Minister of Finance and other Ministers to involve the Provinces and the private sector in the spending of those moneys in ways which will get the Provinces or the private sector to contribute. There are already several indications from Provinces that they would be willing to involve their own funds in creating jobs in the way indicated by the Minister and myself. That is the way it is done, Madam Speaker.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—DEPARTMENT'S DECISION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General who, just a few moments ago, told the House that no agreement or deal was made between Hambleton and the security forces, but rather this gentleman Hambleton had been presented with an opinion of the Attorney General's Department which indicated no prosecution would be made, after which he then released additional information.

I ask the Solicitor General did the Attorney General's Department then examine the issue of prosecution, having regard to the additional information made available to it, and did that Department then determine no prosecution should be launched?

• (1500)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, at the point after the decision was made about which the Hon. Member asks, there was a focus of attention in the Departments of the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General on improvements to the Official Secrets Act, so that it would be a more effective instrument in the protection of national security. This is not to say there would not be a prosecution ever under this Statute, but as McDonald recognized and many other observers recognized, that Act is due for a major overhaul.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General has specifically avoided answering the question I posed to him. He told us that with some information the Attorney General concluded, through his office, that no prosecution should be levelled against Hambleton. He then told us that Hambleton released additional information. I asked him whether, on the basis of that additional information, the Attorney General was still of the view that a prosecution should not be levelled against Hambleton. He has not specifically answered that question and I think that throws light on the entire process. To suggest that the issue was then whether the Official Secrets Act should be amended and not whether this man should be prosecuted, must throw light on the way the Government rewards mass murderers and traitors.

I want to ask the Minister if the rule to be applied is that all these people have to do is to keep back some information that later can be handed over to the Security Service, so that they will be treated leniently by the Government.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think that is a ridiculous question. In fact the Security Service did not return to the Department of Justice with its additional information, to seek a further ruling. It gathered that information and communicated it to other intelligence services. It was anticipated that other ways would be found to counter the activities of Hambleton, which indeed were effectively countered from the moment it was realized he was engaged in giving information to the Soviet Union.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF HON. STANLEY KNOWLES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, 40 years ago today, on November 30, 1942, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was elected to this House of Commons. I understand that the Hon. Member is being honoured in Winnipeg today. I think it should be noted in Hansard that this is a rather important anniversary.

I note that in a book entitled "Stanley Knowles, The Man From Winnipeg North Centre" by Susan Trofimenkoff, he is quoted as saying, when first elected, that it felt "pretty good". I think we should express on behalf of the House that many backbenchers as well as other Members feel "pretty good" that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre has been a Member of this House of Commons for 40 years, as of today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Apart from the fact that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has been in the House for a long time, I think we would all want to recognize that his contribution has been tremendous.

I would remind the Hon. Member, however, that he is not allowed to make commercials!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, on the same point of order—I do not remember whether it was a question of privilege—I would like to say that I appreciated the absence of my official critic today. However, I know he is in his riding, celebrating his forty years in politics, and we on this side of the House wish to join his party in offering him our warmest congratulations.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have another point of order, but I would also like to emphasize the exceptional career of the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and offer him my very best wishes on this occasion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I just want to draw the attention of my colleagues to the business of the House. Today, as agreed, we shall consider Bill C-131, and even if the bill does not pass second reading by the end of the day, and that would be unfortunate, since I hope we will finish second reading today, but if we do not, the agenda for tomorrow will be Bill C-132. In other words, whatever the result of the debate today, tomorrow we shall be considering Bill C-132, which deals with family allowances.

PETITIONS

MR. DOMM—SUPPORT FOR GENERAL DISARMAMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, Peterborough has often been referred to as the test centre for corporations and Governments for products and programs. It gives me great pleasure today to present a petition to the House of Commons signed by 3,400 petitioners in the federal riding of Peterborough.

The petition of the undersigned residents of the federal riding of Peterborough now avail themselves of their ancient

The 3,400 signatories hereto affixed to this petition, to be turned over to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), state as follows:

We support the goal of general disarmament and mandate our Government to negotiate and implement, with other Governments, the balanced steps that would lead to the earliest possible achievement of this goal as in duty bound—

Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to present this petition.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,246—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Agriculture have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the Department and, if so, are they embodied in a Code of Conduct or other specific document and is the Code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the Department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. There is a departmental Code of Conduct called the "Conflict of Interest Guidelines". This document is applicable only to Agriculture Canada employees and, as such, it is an internal document which is not normally of interest to the public. It is, however, available to the public on request. In addition, the departmental discipline policy is contained in its Personnel Manual and is accessible to all employees.

2. Employees were disciplined for breach of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines and pursuant to the principles outlined in the departmental discipline policy. The details are as follows:

	Employees Reprimanded	Employees Suspended	Employees Discharged

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 25, consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, this Bill has been before us on more than one occasion. There have been interruptions in the debate and therefore I think it is worthwhile, as we begin another round on the matter, to recall the import of the Bill.

Those of us who are taking part in the debate no doubt started out by reading Clause 1 of the Bill. In the massive verbiage on the first page we find Clause 1, which reads as follows:

● (1510)

Notwithstanding anything in this section, the amount of the full monthly pension that may be paid to any person for a month in 1983 shall be the lesser of (a) the amount that, but for this subsection, might have been paid for that month—

It goes on, but basically the explanatory note tells us what is the effect of the Bill. We should all recall that the amendment would limit the indexation of the pension to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984 and that it is an amendment to the Bill on Old Age Security.

Some facts which are worth recalling at this stage were brought to my attention during the summer recess. I refer to the Times-Colonist of August 28, 1982 in which some interesting extracts from the report of the National Council on Welfare appeared. The article dealt with poverty, which is basically what we are talking about today. People who rely on the old age pension as their only income are in many cases very close to the poverty line. Part of the article indicated that a family of four was poor if it was surviving in a big city on less than $18,243 annually, and that the same family in a rural area was poor with an income below $13,419. Also it indicated that couples in big cities were poor if their income was less than $11,800 and, if they are in rural areas, less than $8,669.

We are talking about poverty, and I think that must be made clear at the outset. The 1980 figures provided by Statistics Canada show that there were 3,475,000 Canadians under the poverty lines. This is a disgraceful situation, and we are talking about reducing the indexation of the incomes of many of these people.

A further piece of information which I think is worth putting on the record appeared in the same article. A CP report from Ottawa indicated that these 3,475,000 poor Canadians represented 15.1 per cent of the total population of Canada. They have been singled out by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to receive less than they would be receiving if the six and five rule were not imposed upon them, as the Bill intends to do.

Further in the article it was indicated that the Council reported that most poor Canadians lived on incomes which were hundreds and often thousands of dollars below the poverty lines. Also it indicated that 80 per cent of poor families are 10 per cent to 20 per cent below the poverty lines and that 75 per cent of poor single persons are more than 20 per cent under the poverty lines.

One of the reasons people are in this dreadful situation is inflation, which is a component part of the debate. The Minister is intending, for those people who are old and on pensions, that we should ignore inflation and impose upon them the six and five formula which would provide them with increases in their income well below the inflation rate.

My final reference to the article is this. It indicated that incomes have been eroded by an inflation rate of 12.5 per cent in 1981 and will be eroded by 11.5 per cent in 1982. We now have the context in which the debate is now being set.

There is a scheme afoot in the Bill to impose upon those with fixed incomes increases of no more than 6 per cent in 1983 and no more than 5 per cent in 1984, while I am afraid we can bet our bottom dollar that the inflation rates will be three and four points higher than that for each of those years.

We are being asked to agree in Parliament to offering those on old age pensions to accept less than the inflation rate. I think this is absolutely disgusting. Also it explains why not one Liberal, aside from the Minister, has stood up to defend the Bill. The Minister alone has had the nerve to rise and suggest the imposition of this iniquitous six and five formula on pensioners. Obviously the Liberals are staying away in droves and are counting on their overwhelming majority to do the trick for them, to impose on their mothers and grandmothers, those who gave them the opportunity to get to this place, the six and five formula. It is a disgraceful performance if ever I saw one.

Some of us on regular incomes and still in the work force can afford the six and five formula. There are promotion prospects for some, but pensioners are on fixed incomes with little prospect of bettering them. There are limits if they receive too much in the way of incidental income. They lose one part or the other of that income. It will be a great deal tougher for them.

It is worth looking at some other facts or trends in the aging of our population to indicate how the problem will be aggravated in terms of numbers. I hope it is not for this reason that this shoddy Government is hoping to save money, but the population of Canada is aging. There are almost 700,000 fewer Canadians under the age of 20 than there were ten years ago, but there are 800,000 Canadians over the age of 60. That is the group which the Government is attacking. If we want to project even further into the next century, it is estimated that by the year 2020 there will be only two or three workers in Canada to support every non-worker. These are the ones who will have to pay the taxes to provide assistance for those who have retired from the work force.

Is this the reason the Government is trying to save money today, in order to look after those people 40 years down the line? I wonder if this also has something to do with those public servants who manage to arrange for themselves a posting to Paris to live on $170,000 a year, or those who manage to arrange to be sent to the French Riviera to learn French at almost as iniquitous a sum? These disgraceful misplacements of priorities, these iniquitously, wasteful public expenditures, make it more difficult, I would have thought, to defend a Bill of this sort. It certainly must have a bearing on the attitudes of those on the other side of the House who are afraid to stand up and say something, although I see some of them are making notes. I hope they will stand up when the time comes to defend. I would rather see them fight the proposal that is made by their Minister. I wonder whether there is a single one of them who has the courage to do that.

I think it is worth looking at poverty levels. I have been looking at them and we have been talking about poverty levels. In essence, we have been dealing with poverty levels at this time because the Government is thinking of imposing—I will not be a party to it—on those who are within the poverty range its six and five formula. But what about out there in the harsh world? The inflation rate from one year to the next will go up. I suspect it will be 9 per cent or 10 per cent next year. I do not think, and I am sure there is no one on the Government side who in his right mind believes, that the six and five formula will bring the inflation rate down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the next two years, especially when this formula is going to be imposed on those who cannot afford it. With inflation stalled at 11 per cent or 12 per cent—maybe even 10 per cent—the 6 per cent imposition will hurt. Do you know whom it is going to hurt, Mr. Speaker? It will hurt our parents, our grandparents and our uncles, those who have provided a good life for us. Those are the people who will be hurt, and this is the Government that will follow the leader and try to impose this formula on that segment of the population.

I think it is worth putting a few figures on the record. I am going to deal with couples. I could deal with a family of four, but by the time people have reached retirement age it is normally a couple—hopefully a couple and not just a single person, lonesome, by himself—a couple who have reached the age when they are relying on the Old Age Security payments. The OAS payment for two, according to current levels, is $246.92. This would produce a grand total of $5,924 in a year. In addition, if that were their only income, they could perhaps draw on the Guaranteed Income Supplement, which would give them another $4,587; together with the $5,924 that would give a couple a total of $10,511. Let me repeat that figure: a couple would get a total of $10,511. The poverty level has been variously calculated by a variety of institutions, the principal of which is the Senate report on poverty.

I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and that of those who are planning to vote for this Bill to a recent publication which came to me on November 8, compliments of the Senator in charge of the Committee on Poverty. The poverty lines in 1981, according to the Senate committee poverty line criteria, amounted to $12,300. According to the StatsCan revised low-income cut-off, the amount is much lower, but let us take the higher figure of $12,300 as the poverty level. If your annual income is below that figure, you are in want. I think that is what poverty means. In 1981 if you received $12,300, you were in need.

I think it is also worth drawing to the attention of Hon. Members that in 1971 the poverty line stood at $4,040. If we put those figures side by side, we will find that between 1971 and 1981 the poverty level has trebled. Inflation has managed to triple the poverty line. The level at which people are in dire need is an amount of $12,300 today. What about the figure I have just quoted, the maximum that two people both drawing Old Age Security and the GIS can get, of $10,500? There is a difference there of some $2,200, which gives a percentage variance between what they are drawing and where the poverty line is of 11 per cent, the percentage of inflation. These are the people on your right-hand side, Mr. Speaker, who propose to impose the six and five formula over the next two years upon those who will be $2,200 below the poverty level.

How is that trend of tripling inflation in ten years to be contained for those on fixed incomes? The six and five formula will not do it. The six and five formula will not do it for those on fixed incomes at all. There will be pressures elsewhere on society to inflate—to ask for more—because of the inflationary factor that I have suggested will be 10 per cent and 11 per cent.

Furthermore, savings have been discouraged by this Government by making fulsome and false promises which are now being somewhat hedged. There was an indication that the just society—just for the Liberals, I suppose—of "Don't worry, we will look after you" will have to be reneged. The Liberals will have to qualify that promise.

• (1530)

Investment has been discouraged by this Government over the years by interfering unduly in the marketplace. Let us see where that interference has taken place. For example, Pacific Petroleums was acquired not because there were resources and futures in the ground, but because it gave a storefront image to the Government. Merit in British Columbia was also an outlet for refined products. To my recollection, Petrofina will cost $1.5 billion without producing one single drop of new oil, let alone a barrel, just to provide another storefront in eastern Canada for Petro-Canada. We were recently told that it would cost approximately $300 million to acquire BP Canada. That original figure has now risen to almost $600 million.

This total amount gives us an indication of where the Government's priorities lie. They do not lie with those who have provided us with what we have today. They are the people who are being affected by this proposal today through the six and five formula. They are less able to shield themselves from its effects than the rest of us are.

I have spoken in the House previously about the current consumer price index. I have suggested previously and I will suggest again that there should be a new index for those to whom the old index does not really apply. I would like to go through this index and explain which areas I believe are completely unsuitable to those it is being applied to.

For example, food is supposed to be responsible for 21.5 per cent of the total index. Consumption of food at home represents 16.8 per cent and meals away from home represent 4.6 per cent. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how many pensioners are able to spend a quarter of their food money at restaurants? I suggest that there are very few and, in fact, probably none. That figure makes a distortion of this aspect of the consumer price index.

Housing is supposed to represent 34 per cent of the index. The breakdown of that figure is 19 per cent for shelter, 8.6 per cent for operations and 6.4 per cent for furnishings. I wonder whether that percentage for furnishings, which is approximately 20 per cent, is really needed by old age pensioners or could even be purchased by them. They have spent their lives accumulating their treasures and their tables and chairs and other furnishings; they do not need to spend that amount of money on furnishings. Once again this is a distortion of the housing portion of the index.

Clothing represents 10 per cent of the disposable income. This percentage is then broken down among men's clothing, women's clothing, girls' and boys' clothing, infant clothing and other clothing materials and related services. This portion could probably stay in its present form.

Another segment of the CPI concerns transportation. It represents almost 16 per cent, 14 per cent of which relates to privately-owned transportation. How many of the people with whom we are concerned today—those who are living 10 per cent below the poverty line now—can afford private transportation? Only 2 per cent in this index is attributable to public transportation. Nearly all the old age pensioners I know use public transportation because they cannot afford to drive their own cars.

Only 4 per cent of the CPI is attributable to health and personal care. A greater percentage is likely needed in this area for those in this particular age bracket. I suggest there is a distortion in this area as well which should be corrected.

This distortion is evident when we see that 8 per cent of the CPI is for recreation, reading and education. That is twice as much as health care. I think the breakdown on recreation, reading and education is worth putting on the record. Of that 8.3 per cent for this item, 6.6 per cent is for recreation. What does this recreation involve? Skiing or the purchase of ski equipment? Is 6 per cent of that 8 per cent recreation for people over the age of 65? Let us be serious. This is an index that is not prepared or applicable to those old age pensioners. Reading represents 1.7 per cent of that 8 per cent. I suggest that this figure is probably higher, while a great deal of reading material, of course, comes from public libraries. Tobacco is almost 2 per cent; I hope that percentage is dropping. With respect to alcohol, how many pensioners can afford to spend 4.3 per cent of their disposable income for recreation, reading and education purposes on alcohol? That is one-half of what the amount attributed to reading, recreation and education.

Therefore, I suggest that a separate index for the elderly is required which is properly geared to the purchasing patterns of those who are in this particular age bracket. This is the type of index which should apply to the increments in the Old Age Security and to the GIS.

The whole concept that a consumer price index can be applied universally across the country is a matter of folly. Therefore, I speak up for these pensioners because they are defenceless, both financially and economically. I also speak up for them because they are our mothers and fathers and in some cases our grandmothers and grandfathers. They gave us this country and the benefits we enjoy. Why is the Government planning in this legislation to rob them of the benefits they gave us to enjoy and which they should be able to enjoy themselves in their declining years?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate on Bill C-131, which, Hon. Members will recall, is part of our anti-inflation measures. First of all, I have been wondering why Members of the Progressive Conservative Party were opposed to a Bill that placed restrictions on increases in old age security benefits for persons who were relatively well-off. We must remember that the Canadian government has maintained full indexation for all senior citizens receiving the income supplement and has also agreed to indexation of the basic amount for this group. I wondered why so many Members of the Progressive Conservative Party were opposed to a 6 and 5 per cent ceiling on indexation, a measure senior citizens are being asked to accept as part of the fight against inflation. While listening to the previous speaker, I asked my colleague how old the Hon. Member was. In fact, he is getting his old age security pension, and I now understand why the Members of the Progressive Conservative Party are not standing up for needy senior citizens and are taking up the cause of senior citizens with big pensions to keep them from being affected.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How do you know?

Mr. Olivier: Shame!

• (1540)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members on the Progressive Conservative side should be honest with themselves. During the short time they were in power, they were ready to throw out universality of pension benefits. In fact, it was worse than that, and I feel that this House cannot afford to be hypocritical and play politics with a subject of this magnitude.

Mr. Speaker, when I realized that Hon. Members on the Progressive Conservative side were defending their own interests in connection with Old Age Security benefits, I decided that I would not give their arguments further consideration. Mr. Speaker, unlike Hon. Members on the Progressive Conservative side, this summer Members from Quebec worked instead of going on trips. I chaired a committee which included a number of my colleagues, a committee which met with senior citizens groups throughout Quebec to discuss inflation and the 6 and 5 policy, and any other subjects that were of interest to them.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of the committee were: Senator Yvette Rousseau, the Hon. Member for Verdun (Mr. Savard), the Hon. Member for Missisquoi (Mr. Bachand), the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens) and the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Dion). Mr. Speaker, while all our colleagues on the Progressive Conservative side were probably travelling around Europe, we were working and truly defending the cause of our senior citizens. The groups we met included the Senior Citizens' Forum, the AQDR, the FADOQ and also members of senior citizens' clubs and individual senior citizens, the real people and not senior citizens who sit in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, at these meetings we explained what the Government of Canada was doing for senior citizens. Both Progressive Conservative and New Democratic Party Members have told us only about incomes, and I may remind Hon. Members—since the Progressive Conservatives failed to mention this, either on purpose or because they forgot or because they are not aware of the program—that the Canadian Government is maintaining full indexation for senior citizens receiving the income supplement. This supplement is fully indexed to the cost of living and the same applies to the basic pension paid to individuals who are eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is also important to remember all the other programs that are geared to senior citizens—programs that are concerned with income, housing, health, recreation, cultural activities and home care. I think all Hon. Members are aware of the Canadian Government's basic pension, Guaranteed Income Supplement and Spouse's allowance programs, which are three of the most important programs to which all Canadians have access in connection with Old Age Security benefits. There is also the Canada Pension Plan, and for Quebecers, the Quebec Pension Plan. As for housing, it is unfortunate but among the people we met, I am sure that many were not aware of all the programs the Canadian Government is financing, either alone or jointly with provincial or municipal Governments. First of all, we have what is known in Quebec as low rental housing. In this area, the Canadian Government finances 50 per cent of the operating deficit for subsidized housing, and in Quebec, it is probably true that between 50 and 56 per cent of such housing is occupied by senior citizens, who are thus able to pay lower rents than they would do otherwise. Another program wholly financed by the Canadian Government—here again, there is a high percentage of senior citizens, is Co-operative and Non-Profit Housing. The program is 100 per cent financed by the Canadian Government and is allowed an annual subsidy in order to maintain interest rates at 2 per cent for 35 years, and on top of that, there are start-up fund grants for groups, which operate autonomously.

There is also another area, which provincial governments prefer not to mention, and which also falls under housing. I am referring to senior citizens' homes, which are extremely important for this age group. The housing units set aside by the Canadian Government under Section 56.1 for 2 per cent financing are very often used by the Province of Quebec—I must say I am more knowledgeable about the situation in this particular Province—for senior citizens' homes. Unfortunately, the Province of Quebec, and I suppose the same applies to other provincial governments, does not mention the Canadian Government's contribution in financing these homes.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, another area that is very important to senior citizens is health care, and everybody is aware that 50 per cent of the cost of operating Local Community Service Centres or other health care services is paid by the Government.

Another area is that of home care services for senior citizens. In addition, we have recreational and other activities for senior citizens. As far as home care services are concerned, I mentioned earlier in this connection the Department of National Health and Welfare and the financing of Local Community Service Centres which provide home care services. Most ridings also seem to have community development programs or summer employment projects. These projects are used by groups to create jobs and also to provide home care services for senior citizens. I know that in my riding, since I became a Member, the first two or three projects that are approved usually have been home care service projects for senior citizens.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, every riding, every parish and every village has its senior citizens' club. Before, senior citizens had to stay home and twiddle their thumbs. Now they have activities that are geared to their needs and especially designed for them, and this has been happening all across Canada, in every village, city and municipality, thanks to the New Horizons Program. Senior citizens groups themselves define their own programs, and the Department of National Health and Welfare, and its extremely efficient minister, are responding to the needs of these people.

Mr. Speaker, with the Quebec Caucus Committee on Senior Citizens, I would like to offer a few conclusions, since my Progressive Conservative colleague held a meeting of all Progressive Conservative Members aged 65 or over to find out whether they would go along with the 6 per cent ceiling on indexation or preferred full indexation. First of all, we received a press release:

> The Forum of Senior Citizens and the pension program

—a press release issued by this group after their meeting with the Quebec caucus members, and I quote:

> The Forum of Senior Citizens of Montreal is pleased with the anti-inflationary measures recommended by the Federal Government, and it has agreed to accept the indexing of the basic pension under the old age security program at 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984.

Mr. Speaker, this is a group which truly represents the real needs of senior citizens in the Montreal area.

We also have an article from a newspaper in the riding of my colleague from Missisquoi (Mr. Bachand), which reports the conclusions of the meeting, and I quote:

> Another program was approved outright by the people at the meeting, namely, the 6 and 5 program—

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Members from Quebec are not afraid to take a stand, but we are not about to stand up for the same interests as the Progressive Conservative Party. Fortunately, not all Members of the Progressive Conservative Party are defending only the interests of the very rich, but in any case, we are here to protect the interests of senior citizens, of people who are indigent. These are the people we met, and they supported us in our intention to vote for this Bill, because these people know perfectly well that the fight against inflation is going to help them. We have a very good example of this in the area of subsidized housing. Even if we did maintain full indexing of pensions, the Government of Quebec, through its Minister of Housing, Mr. Tardif, has announced that the rates for all subsidized housing in Quebec would be increased by between 20 and 30 per cent. So of course, senior citizens preferred to take our side, not so much because they approved limited indexation but in order to convince the Government of Quebec and the other provincial governments and the private sector that they would have to do their part to bring inflation down to six per cent.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I wish to congratulate the Minister for the work she has done in the health sector in general and for what she has done for senior citizens. I can assure you that I shall be proud to vote in favour of this Bill and thus help those who need it most.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I listened with great pleasure to the distortions of the Member for Montréal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). It was the nature of his speech and the fact that he decided to make a speech in the House that caused me to rise.

There has been a full two days' debate in this House. It was begun by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) putting forward her proposals. As she put them forward I watched her face, and I thought that if ever I saw a Minister not convinced about the righteousness of her brief, a brief which attacked the senior citizens of the country, that she on platform after platform had said she would defend, it was on that day in the House.

Although she and I sit on opposite sides of the House of Commons, I want to say that my heart went out to her.

Miss Bégin: Where is it?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): An indication of just how bad the atmosphere is in the Government Party is that today, well into the debate, is the first time there has been a private Liberal Member of Parliament rise to make a short speech extolling the virtue of attacking the senior citizens of the country, those people who receive Old Age Security in Canada. These people are more exposed in terms of inflation and uncertainty than any other group.

The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is behind the curtain nodding his head and saying it is not true. I want to say to the Member from Ottawa Centre, come into the House, go to your place and defend this attack on the senior citizens of the country. At the same time defend the attack of your Government on the public servants of the country, on the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, on those who served the country as members of the Armed Forces, and their widows and families. State the position. Do not stand behind the curtain; come into the House and state the position. Are they going to stand with those pieces of legislation, or are they going to vote against them? I have heard people say they are against this Bill as it is written; they are against another Bill as it is written. I want to know when the votes are counted where they stand.

I want to say to my friends, those who have remained silent over there on Old Age Security, that there is a power in a Government caucus if a Government caucus is prepared to exercise it. This seems to be the only Parliament in the western world where all of the discussions take place in private. I was in the United Kingdom a week ago yesterday and watched a debate and finally a vote in their House of Commons, where the Conservative Government of Great Britain was attacking a socialist program. I listened to Conservative Member after Member after Member of the Parliament in Great Britain stand up and attack the proposal by the Government. When the time came they did not scuttle into their seats to vote confidence in the Government; they abstained, and one of them even voted against the Government.

That is how Government listen. I and my other friends make speeches in this House of Commons but no one on that side listens. Those members of the Treasury benches will not listen. That is the way the system works. We can state a certain position. The Government will be accountable at the next election.

If there is real opposition to something, whether with respect to pensions for Old age Security recipients or with respect to public servants, members of the RCMP, the Armed Services, their widows or their families, and if there is an honest belief that what the Government is doing is wrong, then it is morally wrong for Members of Parliament not to stand up and vote against, or abstain, but never to use the excuse that confidence in the Government is at stake, that the Government may fall if they exercise their right of independence. Yet that is what they are saying. I say that is wrong. There is not a self-respecting person in the country who thinks about the system who does not believe that that is wrong.

The situation is this. If the Government of Canada was defeated on Bill C-133 or defeated on this Bill involving Old Age Security—of course, it is an important Bill—I will wager that they would not dare face the country on their attack on senior citizens. You bet they would not, Mr. Speaker. The next day they would be in here with a motion of confidence. That is when the Liberal Members and others who have confidence in the Liberal Government would have the chance to vote confidence. But not with respect to a piece of legislation; that is not how the system works.

The Pearson precedent has certainly affected the question of confidence in the Canadian House of Commons, but it does not only affect those who are against the Government because of where we sit in the House or because of how we feel; it also affects those who support the Government.

I want to say to my friend from Ottawa Centre and to all my friends opposite, whether we are dealing with this Bill C-131 or Bill C-133 with respect to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act for the broad Public Service of the country, that there is an opportunity for them to stand up and defeat their Government on the Bill. I will wager them dollars to donuts that the next day they will have a chance to stand up and support their Government in terms of confidence. That is the essence of the Pearson precedent in 1968.

When I read stories about certain Members of Parliament changing their ground just a wee bit, I have to ask myself, why? Who is so mesmerized by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he says it is a matter of confidence? If it is a matter of confidence, I wonder how some of those Members would appreciate going to the country on the basis of attacking senior citizens—which is how it will be construed—or attacking those Pensioners under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. That is the raw politics of it.

It goes beyond raw politics in this Bill. I hold it as a principle that those who are outside the work force, those who are making no contribution in the real sense in terms of work, in terms of making demands, those who have run their course in terms of a regular work day and ask nothing else but that they have a chance to live in a reasonable amount of peace, ought not to be the tools or the levers for Government redistribution of income. It is as simple as that.

We brought in indexing and all of us supported indexing. Why? Because we said those people were different, they do not have the levers to bargaining power that others have. They need to be protected. Whether it be a new index, a senior citizens' index, the consumer price index or whatever it is, we must protect them. It is no protection, in my judgment, for that group to see their indexing limited.

The Public Service accepts that the indexing of their wages and salaries should be limited. They do not like it. Members of Parliament do not like it when it happens to them, but they accept it. Why? Because they can bargain again and hopefully make it up. But the problem is that those people in the latter years of their life cannot do so. You just do not lose those two years; you lose the progression upwards with the index whenever it is taken off.

If the Government will not forecast anything in the economy in terms that are reliable because they say it is impossible, how can they say with certainty today that inflation will be reduced to six and five? I hope it will be, but how can they say that? Why should they leave those people exposed?

• (1600)

That is the issue of principle, pure and simple. It is not just a little matter of administration, shifting funds from here to there. Whether talking about this bill, Old Age Security, or about the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, there is a contract, an agreement and an understanding.

This Bill goes right to the heart of social programs. It is the basis of it. There is much more than just an agreement or contract; there is a moral obligation on society. It is becoming apparent that that moral obligation is getting greater every year. The statistics are startling. I will not trouble the House with them because I understand another Member wants to follow me and I will listen to her. However, the statistics in terms of the aging and our obligation are growing.

They are growing in a time when we have decided to undercut the elderly in terms of our obligation. That is wrong. Therefore, I intend to vote against the Bill. No amount of petty-fogging, no amount of meetings with groups of senior citizens in Quebec and no amount of meetings of any kind will stop me from doing that.

I do not say this because senior citizens in my constituency have been in touch with me. Long before I saw this Bill, I held it to be morally wrong. It is morally wrong for this Parliament to support that proposition. Parliament has a special obligation to senior citizens. They look to us to answer that special obligation. They look to this Minister to answer that special obligation. I do not know what they are saying in Quebec to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, but they are saying something different to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton and, I dare say, to other Members of this House.

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie said that when we, Members of Parliament, were travelling in Europe they, the great Liberal Party, were defending the Old Age Security payment. Some defence! A couple of days of debate, one Minister and one Member getting up to defend it, not on the basis of this program but on the basis of other programs the Government has put in place. We agree with those other programs. There is no argument there. The argument with this Bill is solely and simply whether it is right to cap that index in terms of recipients of the Old Age Security.

If that index was put there to ensure that those who are defenceless are defended, in the sense that we in Parliament on both sides of the House defend them, then indexing had a purpose. We ought not to forget the purpose. Those who are defenceless look to us to protect their standard of living. This is not going to be done willy-nilly in the dark of night in a budget speech of which there was no advance warning. We voted against that budget speech which contained exactly this provision.

I want Members opposite to go to their senior citizens and then get up in this House, every one of them, and tell the country that they are supporting denying full benefits to the senior citizens of this country. I do not want them to sit there silently but to get up and speak. There must be someone opposite who agrees with me. I cannot believe that the Liberal Party is so bereft of the principle it once stood for; I cannot believe that is the case.

I want those opposite to go to the Government House Leader and ask him to remove their gags so that they can get up to speak on this very important Bill. This Bill is going to be fought in the House of Commons for as long as we can fight it, using every legitimate parliamentary means. When it goes to committee, and I assume it will at some time if the Government is so determined, we will fight it there.

I say to my friends opposite that it is quite safe for them to vote against a Bill involving changes in Old Age Security. It is quite safe to vote against a Bill to change the arrangements with respect to supplementary retirement benefits. The Government will not be defeated. Does anyone think the Government would go to the country standing behind in the polls as it is at present? Can anyone imagine going to the country on the backs of the senior citizens of Canada? I would lay dollars to doughnuts that sitting in the Government House Leader's file already is the motion of confidence that would be brought in the next day. Therefore, you can all support your Party and support your Government—and I must say I have a prejudiced view—with all its supposed strengths, but still take a stand in terms of the senior citizens of this country.

I want some Members opposite, not just one, to stand up and say they have had enough of this. That is the essence of Parliament. The Canadian Parliament is light years behind the British Parliament in terms of how it deals with matters of confidence. Every time I go overseas, I never cease to be amazed at the courage of backbenchers, whether Liberal, Labour or Conservative, and I assume members of the new party whom I have not seen in action. Their independence is amazing. The first question asked by the Prime Minister of Great Britain or the Leader of the Government is: "Will the caucus stand for this; what will the caucus say?" That is the last question asked in Canada.

This is a chance for my friends on the other side. I will ask them to do this only one more time this session, when we deal with Bill C-133, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. It is one chance for them to stand up for a principle that there is a special obligation owed by the Government and Parliament as well as the people of Canada to whose who are no longer part of the work force and cannot defend themselves through unions and other things. I will ask them one more time to stand up and be counted on the side of what is morally right in terms of the people whom this Government and this Parliament pledged to serve.

I thank the House for its attention. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie for rising to his feet to defend the indefensible with the eloquence of the condemned. In the event of a vote against the senior citizens of this country, those who vote had better know that they are going to be watched by a growing constituency in Canada.

• (1610)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as this is my first speech in the House I would like to take the opportunity to pay tribute to my immediate predecessors who served here with distinction; John Gilbert, now His Honour Judge Gilbert, and Bob Rae, now the Member for York South in the Ontario legislature who is seeking to end 40-odd years of Tory rule in Ontario and establish the first Social Democratic Government in Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: Another of my illustrious predecessors is still a Member of this House, the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees). I am sorry he is not in the House at the moment. He said he would be out looking for a fist fight in the corridor, and if he could make it back he would be back for his honourable mention! I share with these gentlemen the honour of representing a very fine riding, Broadview-Greenwood, and I am deeply grateful to the citizens of that riding for having elected me in one of the more colourful, interesting and stormy by-elections in recent years on October 12.

I have chosen to make my first speech on pensions because this is a matter of utmost importance and one on which I have personally done a lot of work, both as an activist in the women's movement, a founding member of the Ontario Committee on the Status of Women, as president of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and as a member of the Ontario NDP Women's Committee. I regret that I am joining this debate not on a matter of pension reform but on cutbacks. Reforms are what we surely need, and Bill C-131 is one of the nastiest, stingiest and meanest pieces of Liberal legislation to come before this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: It takes money away from our pensioner population, for the most part people on low, fixed incomes, the people least able to bear the load. It is unfair in the extreme and is aimed at people who have worked and raised families, survived the depression of the 1930s and lived through difficult economic times before there was unemployment insurance. It is aimed at people who have low private pensions, if any, a great number of them, especially women, with no private pensions at all or the least possible under the Canada Pension Plan.

I want also to protest the hypocritical way in which this legislation has been introduced. The principle of the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Lalonde's) economic statement was not to "abandon the victims of the recession", not to "put the axe" to the social security system which has been decades in the making. I know pension reform has been a Government concern over the past few years. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has called it the highest social policy priority of the Government. A national pensions conference was held in 1981 at which women's organizations, among others, participated and where reform was the agenda. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself has spoken on the issue, I recall in the election of 1979, specifically dealing with ways to improve pensions for women. I even went to a Liberal Party function to hear the address, which will show my great devotion to duty in this respect. Then what happened? Instead of reform we have cutbacks. The Minister of National Health and Welfare even has the gall to present this legislation as an invitation to voluntary heroism and self-sacrifice for the national good. I quote from her speech of November 18:

> We are asking 1.1 million old age pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation. I am very conscious of the sacrifice we are asking of them.
> I have to stress that it is not without reluctance that we make this request.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a very devious way to refer to a Bill which in fact has nothing voluntary about it at all. If the Minister meant what she said, she would send out a letter to the pensioners concerned and ask them if they would like to lead the way in fighting inflation. They would have the option of sending a little card back saying they wanted to have their pension cheque cut in order to fight inflation to the ground. If they were not willing to engage in this heroic action, then their pensions cheques would be indexed fully as they would otherwise be without this legislation. That surely would be the honest way if it were truly a voluntary program.

Let us consider for a moment how this sorry state of affairs has arisen. We all know the Minister is not in fact a monster who takes pleasure in making pensioners live on less money. She is under pressure as a result of the Government's woeful mismanagement of the economy.

With regard to unemployment and falling tax revenues, the Government's job is clearly difficult. It cannot rely, as it has in the past, on selling off our resources because in a world recession the demand for these resources naturally falls too. An adequate income security system requires a healthy economy to support it and that is precisely what we do not have in Canada. That is why my Party is continuing to stress the strategic problems of our economy and the need for major reform through an industrial strategy. But in the meantime, without substantial economic reform, there are alternatives.

By the Minister's own estimate 1.1 million pensioners will lose $55 each in 1983, which would save the Government $61.5 million. That happens to be approximately the cost of Government advertising in one year. We could cut out the entire Government advertising budget, save the money, and it would spare us a great deal of propaganda.

Mr. Nielsen: That is only half the cost.

Ms. McDonald: That money is a drop in the bucket in terms of corporate give-aways and military expenditures, which the Government still plans to increase. It is the kind of money which can be made up merely by cutting luxuries like foreign embassies and other unnecessary expenditures. The NDP has been scrutinizing Government expenditures for moneys to divert for job-creation programs. We have come up with far greater success than the savings from these Old Age Security cutbacks.

Clearly with a modest effort the Government could come up with a more equitable way of finding the money. This is a sort of no-win situation. If inflation is really only 6 per cent or less, clearly we do not need the Bill at all. If inflation is around 6 per cent or a little bit higher, it is not going to save very much money, so why bother? But if inflation is really substantial, then the Bill is unconscionable. So in all three cases, we really do not need it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: We in the NDP feel particularly strong about pension cutbacks because it was our party and our predecessors who fought for a public pension system in the first place. A few points in this history are well worth noting because they are still relevant today. It was back in 1925 that we had the first success in establishing public pensions, long after a number of western European countries instituted them. It was then a minority Government situation. J. S. Woodsworth and A. A. Heaps, as labour representatives—because this was before the CCF was formed—made a pensions Bill a condition of their support. They offered to support either the Liberals or the Conservatives, whichever would bring in a public pension Bill. The Conservatives said no, the Liberals said yes. A Bill was duly passed but then turned down by the Senate.

Perhaps there is a lesson to be learned here because the Conservatives suffered a serious defeat in the next election. After that election the Bill was reintroduced, passed in the House and then the Senate, and thus Canada got its first public pension for persons 70 years and over, based on a means test, and it was $20 a month.

Expanding and increasing the old age pension has continued to be a priority of the CCF and NDP. Universal Old Age Security at $40 a month was achieved in 1951. Indexing began in 1966, and full indexing in 1972. But note that the only increase in real terms—that is, beyond inflation—took place in 1973 when again we were in a minority Government situation and again it was pressure from the NDP which got this real increase. The sad fact is that the amount of the Old Age Security has remained low. When introduced in 1951, it was 17 per cent of the average industrial wage, and has now fallen to about 14 per cent. Now the NDP is urging reinstatement to the level it was back in that very regressive decade of the 1950s. This is scarcely a radical demand.

Even with the Guaranteed Income Supplement, Mr. Speaker, the income of elderly couples hovers only around the poverty line, and for the single elderly, mainly women, the amount falls below. It is women who are mainly dependent on public, non-contributory pensions, for it is they who have spent most of their lives caring for children and there is no pension for doing that most important work.

As a new Member of the House I am proud of the role my predecessors in the CCF and the NDP have played in pension reform. I am proud to be in the caucus with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has been the most vigorous and successful fighter for public pensions in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: Pension reform is a subject on which I promise to be very active myself. I am glad to see the Conservatives now joining us in fighting the Government on Bill C-131, but I regret to say that it is a little bit too late.

• (1620)

We have heard stirring speeches, notably from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), but where were the Conservatives when we needed them last summer when the Government introduced six and five? Alas, the Conservatives voted for six and five then. They are making speeches now so that they can tell their voters, especially their senior voters, that they opposed the Old Age Security cutbacks. But they did not oppose the Bill and the principle when it really mattered. It was the New Democratic Party that fought alone last summer when the Tories, with their superior numbers, could have stopped the Government. Instead, they shamefully supported it.

Finally, let me point out that there is still much that can be done for pension reform, even with the present constraints. We could, for example, act immediately to improve contributory public pensions. The Canada Pension Plan is an excellent plan in universality and portability. Its main defect is that the pension is too low. Our object is to raise the CPP to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage. This is a long-term ambition, but we could at least begin the process now.

Another important reform is to include homemakers in the CPP, at least by instituting the drop-out provision. It is true that Ontario vetoed this measure, but Ontario has since had a Royal Commission on Pensions that recommended accepting it. When have the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare last spoken to Premier Davis about this? Surely now is the time to put pressure on Ontario to move.

Next, we could improve private pensions with regard to portability, vesting, survivors' benefits and the splitting of pension credits on marriage dissolution. We could end discrimination by sex in annuities. We know what is wrong with private pensions and it will not require public expenditure to put that right because these are contributory pensions. What is required is legislation, regulation and co-ordination with the Provinces. Surely this is an important enough matter to give it really high priority.

In closing, let me return to the immediate question of Bill C-131. The answer must be no, no, no! Whatever our economic problems, taking it out on the elderly on fixed incomes at the poverty line is not an acceptable solution in a decent society. If the Government cannot be progressive, imaginative, creative, or competent, let it at least be decent. I ask the Government to withdraw Bill C-131.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, while I do not agree with all the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), I want to congratulate her on the excellent maiden speech she just delivered to the House.

I welcome the opportunity to speak today on Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, because I am deeply concerned about the welfare of our senior citizens and particularly the 11,000 who live in my riding of Leeds-Grenville. This legislation, introduced into this House by the Government of Canada, is going to add an undue measure of hardship to a sector of our community that cannot even begin to find the resources with which to cope.

This morning I attended a public forum organized by the Ontario Advisory Council on Senior Citizens. The chairman, Frances McHale, had the pleasure of going to Vienna to attend the United Nations World Assembly on Aging and did a lot of work at that Assembly. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), was also a member of that delegation. In Brockville today the forum is discussing the problems faced by senior citizens. I think it is very apropos that we, too, discuss this matter today.

In the few weeks that I have been a Member of Parliament I have received a great number of representations from senior citizens in my riding. They are concerned about the effect this legislation will have on their day-to-day lives. They are becoming increasingly troubled about falling further and further behind in their never-ending battle to keep up with inflation.

The majority of senior citizens in Leeds-Grenville and indeed the majority of single pensioners have had to resort to living in senior citizens' housing because they could no longer afford the constantly increasing expense of owning and operating their own homes—homes in which they have rich and fond memories of growing up and homes to which they returned after marriage to raise their families.

We have a tremendous number of beautiful old homesteads all over Leeds-Grenville and I am appalled at the great number that are up for sale, the great number that have been converted into multiple dwellings because the elderly who lived in them for the past 60 years or so can no longer afford to pay a heating bill that runs into hundreds and hundreds of dollars per year, or the hydro bill, or the cost of putting gasoline in their car to drive back and forth to town to see the family doctor, or buy the groceries needed to sustain themselves. These people do not want to give up their homes, but they have been put into a position of having to do so because the economy of this country is in such a tragic state.

The alternative is being forced to move into senior citizen housing where they have a room or a suite with a common recreation area. Certainly this accommodation is adequate but the choice, the freedom of choosing, is an option that has been taken away from them. Surely this is not what they deserve for having devoted their lives to raising the future citizens of this country.

I have spent many afternoons talking to senior citizens in Leeds-Grenville, visiting them in their apartments, rooms and homes. They tell me time and time again that they do not want to be put out to pasture like tired and faithful old horses. They tell me they want to remain productive and useful. They want to remain an important part of our society, a society they were instrumental in building. But without the necessary income, our senior citizens will not be able to continue participating in the activities of the community.

In my riding, and I know this is the case throughout the rest of the country, the elderly try to be active year round with outings on bus trips, seminars and social events. I would hate to see them have to curtail their activities simply because they no longer have that extra dollar or two to spend on these so-called luxuries. These people have knowledge and wisdom to offer us, gained through years of experience, and they should have the opportunity to do so. Instead, they are forced to sit at home and waste away. They should be able to grow old with dignity, not with despair.

In the past, the old age pension had been indexed to the rising cost of living in an attempt to enable pensioners to keep pace with the increasing cost of day-to-day expenses. On November 18, in an answer to a question asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, as reported at page 20773 of Hansard:

> The Hon. Member talks of protection against inflation. It is to protect Old Age Pensions and Family Allowances against inflation that the Government introduced indexation many years ago.

Yet today we are debating a Bill the Government introduced that will take away that same protection he was so magnanimously talking about.

The Government is using this legislation as a means to get senior citizens to practise restraint. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the Government is completely out of touch with reality because pensioners have already been practising restraint in every aspect of their daily lives. They already have to restrain themselves from buying many of the basic items of food and clothing. Yet the Government has the audacity to ask them to practise restraint and to do without that added 4 per cent cost-of-living increase they so desperately need to keep up with the continually rising price of food, clothing, transportation and shelter.

There are 100,000 poor and near-poor affected by this proposed legislation. I am particularly concerned about the single pensioner who will be most affected by the Bill. Women are the majority in this category and have only the old age pension to fall back on if their spouses are no longer living and they have not been employed in the labour force at any time in their lives. Single pensioners who receive only the basic old age pension of $246.92 per month will be the ones who will fall further and further behind, while those eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement will have their supplements to assist them in keeping pace with the rate of inflation and, therefore, will have a somewhat small chance of stabilizing their standard of living.

But what about the 50 per cent of pensioners who receive only the basic pension? They are among those who have worked all their lives to ensure, hopefully, a comfortable retirement—seniors who have scrimped and saved over the past 30, 40 and 50 years; seniors who have invested their hard-earned dollars over the years in order to be able to live above the poverty line in retirement; seniors who have sacrificed those many evenings out, a new winter coat or a new car, so that their retirement savings could grow and build for the future.

Our senior citizens of today are the people who built the country to what it is now. They are the people who are the backbone of our great nation. They are the people who defended our borders in two world wars to give us the freedom and democracy we enjoy today. They are the people who survived the bread lines and the soup kitchens of the great depression. They are the people who toiled and sweated through 10, 12 or 14-hour days so that their children could enjoy some of the luxuries of life they never had when they were young. We cannot ignore the contribution our seniors have made to Canada and to us as individuals, but if the Bill is allowed passage through the House, we will be doing just that.

The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has said time and time again that she cares about our elderly, that she cares about their needs being met and that they are being properly looked after. If she really cared, if she was really concerned, the Hon. Minister would have prevented Bill C-131 from being introduced in the House, so that seniors could still have a fighting chance to maintain their standard of living as they have tried to do in the past.

The Government is not only limiting the indexation of the old age pension through the Bill; it is also limiting the indexation of personal income tax to 6 per cent under amendments to the Income Tax Act. That means the Government is not only making our seniors pay once, it makes them pay twice; it goes back for more through the Income Tax Act. This is hardly the response one would expect from a caring Government or a caring Minister.

Instead of helping them at a time when they need it most, the Minister has gone along with the wishes of her Cabinet colleagues who have only just begun to realize that it is time to restrain the extravagant and ostentatious spending in which their Government has been engaged for the past 14 years. To save their own political necks, they pick on the most vulnerable section of Canadian society to pay for the gross mismanagement of an economy gone wild. The Government has a cold-hearted, callous attitude toward the senior citizens of the country, not the warm-hearted one it claims to have.

Our seniors deserve far better treatment for their many years of service than the Government is giving them in this legislation. They have fought for the country, they have helped it grow into a great nation, and they have raised a nation of workers who are struggling to maintain the standard of living established by their fathers and mothers. It is time the Government repaid them for so many years of service rather than penalize them for being over the retirement age.

We are all in favour of the Government restraining its spending, but surely the mistakes of the Government should not be a burden the elderly are expected to bear. Let us look at how much the Government will be saving by limiting indexation on pensions—$10 million. This is not a great sum when we put it against an increasing deficit of almost 1,300 times that amount. There are many other areas in which the Government could save this $10 million. Just to give one small example, in the last fiscal year the Government is reported to have spent $10.5 million on what it terms "hospitality", meaning food, entertainment and liquor, hardly essential items for the bureaucracy during times of advocating restraint. The amount it spent on hospitality is just over the amount of money it will save through the Bill on the backs of our senior citizens.

This is at a time when over 600,000 of our elderly are living in abject poverty. Yes, I have spoken to these people. I have seen what they put in their shopping carts in the grocery store. I have visited with them in their homes. I know their fears of wondering how on earth they will make ends meet. The Government should be looking at itself for ways to save this sum of money. Where is the equity? Where is the fairness of saving money at the expense of the elderly who have contributed so much to the country? Where is the protection of which the Prime Minister spoke last week? What has happened to the Liberal philosophy of looking after those who cannot look after themselves?

At a time when we are faced with the worst recession in 50 years, the Government is taking money out of the pockets of those who need even more, instead of helping them when it is obvious they require all the assistance they can get. I should like to see the Government explain to all senior citizens why they should be the ones to give up so much so that the Government can save so little. This is a savings of a few million dollars pitted against a climbing deficit of over $100 billion. It will not even make a dent in this outrageous, continually growing deficit.

All the Old Age Security, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the spouses' allowance payments put together account for only 2.5 per cent of the nation's gross national product. That is a drop in the bucket for the Government. But the money lost to senior citizens is worth much more to them. To them it means a lowering of their already falling standard of living, more and more hardships for them to face, and more financial burdens to bear for those who no longer have the strength or the determination to cope with these problems.

What about the future? What about the seniors of tomorrow? We are only too painfully aware, or should be aware, of the fact that there will be a decreasing number of workers to pay into pension funds which will have to look after an increasing number of pensioners. There will be a major drain on the old age pension, the Canada Pension Plan and retirement plans in about 30 years when those of the baby boom generation hit the age of 65. There will not be enough people paying taxes or contributing to private and public pension plans to support the drain on revenues expected at that time.

We need to prepare for the future, and we can do it in a number of ways through pension reform and re-educating the young people of today so that they will not have to rely on Government-subsidized old age pensions for their retirement. Fortunately, a switch to alternative retirement income is already beginning to happen. The number of people eligible for GIS is decreasing steadily despite the increase in the over 65 population. In May, 1978 53.9 per cent of pensioners qualified for GIS while in May, 1982 only 49.9 per cent required the same benefits. But we need to do more.

The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare has spoken many times of bringing in a green paper on pension reform, but we have yet to see it. I urge the Minister to consult with all Parties to bring about immediate discussion on pension reform. We can no longer afford further delay in an area where there is such urgency. We must consider areas of reform which will take us away from assuming greater public debt. There must be determination to progress and meet this challenge of the future.

In conclusion, the younger generation of today has to be given direction now to prepare itself for retirement 25, 30 or 40 years down the road. We must concern ourselves with providing incentives and direction so that those who follow will be able to provide for themselves in the future. I hope the Government will turn away from penalizing the present senior citizens with legislation to limit indexing to 6 per cent and 5 per cent and turn its attention toward preparing the youths of today for the future of tomorrow.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that one has the pleasure of listening to two maiden speeches in a row in this House and to find them both very well done. I wish to compliment the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) and the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I cannot, because of the tradition of the House, quarrel with anything that was said by either one, and I would not want to do so in any case. But next time, it will be fair game.

I do not rise with pleasure to speak on Bill C-131. The remark usually made by speakers at the commencement of a speech is: "It gives me great pleasure to rise to speak on Bill" such and such. This Bill gives me a great deal of pain and anger. Bill C-131 should not be before the House. In fact, it should never have been written. Why the Government decided to introduce this kind of legislation at this time is beyond me.

We are in favour of restraint. Our Party believes in restraint, but we have never intended that restraint to be applied against senior citizens in this country. Yet here we have Bill C-131. One gets the impression that the Government looked around to see where it could make some cuts. The Government could not cut anything from de Havilland, Canadair or PetroCan, nor could the Government get a cheap price on Petrofina. The question was, where could the Government cut? It must have thought about the cheques being sent to the old age pensioners. They cannot hurt them much, so they apply their cuts to them and to the civil servants.

Let me digress for a moment. There seems to be some confusion in the House about this triad of Bills that we have in this broad area of six and five. Bill C-124, which the Conservatives supported last July, was a six and five pay raise cap. This Bill also had a provision for a pay cut Members of Parliament. Bill C-124 was supported by the Conservatives, moved by the Liberals and opposed by the New Democratic Party.

Bill C-131 now comes before us and it is to cap the indexation of old age pensions. It is not an indexation of supplementary pensions, but to cap the indexation of old age pensions.

Bill C-133 is to follow. This Bill is to cap the indexation of pensions paid to federal civil servants who have retired, Members of the Armed Forces, members of the RCMP and others. The hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) mixed these Bills, unintentionally I am sure, when he was speaking on Bill C-124. Votes are taken separately on each of these Bills and it is quite possible to vote yes for one and no for the other, which is what the Conservatives are doing. We voted yes on Bill C-124, which capped pay raises for civil servants and had a pay cut in it for Members of Parliament, and we intend to vote against Bill C-131.

I like to speak on a Bill such as this because the constituency from which I come is the senior citizen capital of Canada, the retirement city of Victoria. I was pleased when in 1980 a former colleague of ours from Leeds-Grenville put a question on the Order Paper asking what constituencies in Canada had the highest percentage of senior citizens, persons 65 years af age and over. The answer tabled in due course was that the ten constituencies with the highest percentage of senior citizens, persons 65 years of age and over, in descending order were: Victoria, B.C.; Vancouver Centre, B.C.; Joliette, Quebec; St. Paul's, Ontario; and Winnipeg North Centre. If I could pause there for a moment, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, (Mr. Knowles) unfortunately is not in the House today. I am sorry he is not here because he would not like this Bill, I can assure the House. He is well known on all sides of the House for his tremendous, indeed indefatigable, efforts on behalf of pensioners. Personally, I owe him quite a bit of gratitude for the number of times I have been able to ask for his advice and clarification on very obtuse points that one comes across in Government Bills at times. I suspect it is his presence that attracts senior citizens to Winnipeg North Centre in such great numbers.

I will continue with the list of the sixth to the tenth constituencies having the highest number of senior citizens living in them. Next comes Mount Royal, Quebec; Hamilton West, Ontario; Vancouver Quadra, B.C.; St. Henri, Quebec; and Don Valley West, Ontario.

As Hon. Members will notice, the Province of British Columbia has three of the ten constituencies having the highest percentage of senior citizens living in them, Victoria being right at the top. That, I suppose, is partly because of the salubrious climate. But the people of Victoria, of which 22,500 are old age pensioners, have grown accustomed to their presence and have found an ability in them to be a productive and an outgoing part of the community.

I might just say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that the New Horizon grants have been of good value in Victoria. They are well used and they do much to give a quality of life to the senior citizens which they otherwise would not have.

However, our society is now evolving differently. We have fewer people in the younger one-third of the population and even more people in the older, top one-third of the population. We will have to address the problem of life after 60. We will have to address leisure time and what to do with it. Technology is finally getting its point across that automation and the use of robots in factories will enable production to carry on without a great deal of personal effort. We will have to look at shorter work weeks and shorter work days. This in turn leads to more leisure time, yet we seem not to be looking at that. Leisure time is something that must be addressed and I hope that in future Bills we may see something in that order.

It is strange the way this Government has moved since the first old-age pension was introduced in Canada in 1926. It was a pretty meagre pension in those days. It was subject to a means test and a person had to be 70 years of age. The amount paid was $20 a month.

Then things began to improve a little for old age pensioners. I recall that my father had prepared for his own old age in a rather modest way. He found it great amusement, because he was almost a life-long Conservative, to have a Liberal Government suddenly present him with an old-age pension at age 70. In the very month that he reached 70 years of age, the means test was done away with and my father received his pension, about which he chuckled in the years left to him. We recall when the Conservative Government was headed by the former right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who pointed out that pensions were in no way keeping up with the inflated cost of living. His Government brought in a decent pay increase for old age pensioners.

From there we go on to Liberal times in the 1960s and eventually we come to the indexation of old age pensions, a measure suggested by the Hon. Robert Stanfield in the election campaign of 1972. The Liberals who opposed it, saying that it was impractical, brought it in shortly after the election. There was a steady effort made by the Government to improve the lot of senior citizens. But the government began to change its policy during the last five years. We saw the introduction of one small restriction and subsequently other restrictions which I will elaborate on later.

This particular proposal is a first. The Guaranteed Income Supplement has been established and we now see a Bill which will significantly change the complexion of the senior citizen's old age pension by having it indexed to only 6 per cent unless the pensioner is drawing the Guaranteed Income Supplement. The fact that we have two categories of old age pensioners will be even more pronounced. There are those who draw the basic pension and those who draw the basic pension plus the old age supplement. The current scale of the Old Age Security payment is $246.92 per month for a single person. The Guaranteed Income Supplement, which applies to pensioners whose income is at a certain level, which I believe is below $8,500, is $247.89. The total of these two pensions is $494.81, which amounts to an annual payment of $5,937.72. Of course, that is the current amount and it will increase as quarters go by.

As individuals approach their retirement years, they have understood and become accustomed to the fact that senior citizen pension incomes were indexed to the cost of living. Therefore, they were able to plan for their so-called golden years in the knowledge that they would have a certain amount of money. If individuals could anticipate receiving $494.81, and perhaps another small income, the old age pensioner would be able to pay for an increase in his rent, transportation costs or health care because of the indexing factor in the pension.

As well, those who are on the old age pension without the supplement also expected that their pension would be increased according to the consumer price index. It turns out that this will no longer be the case. They will have to lower their standard of living and this is extraordinarily difficult when you are a senior citizen. It usually entails lowering the cost of accommodation.

I have seen the situation quite frequently in Victoria that when a pensioner's income will no longer meet the rent they have to find a place where that pension can meet the rent. This means giving up what might have been a two-bedroom suite and moving into a one-bedroom apartment, or indeed a single room. This is perhaps the most demeaning of all the experiences one runs into as a result of this demeaning Bill.

How did we arrive at this pass under the benevolent and capable current Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has always given me a very clear impression that she favoured the welfare of senior citizens? Yet she has brought in this Bill which will obviously affect the standard of living of senior citizens, particularly those who do not draw the Guaranteed Income Supplement. I believe that an earlier speaker, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), mentioned that it is customary in other parliamentary systems for ministers to resign if they cannot look after their portfolio or department, cannot either introduce suitable policies or maintain the ones in existence. That is not the case with this Government. A Minister writes a Bill, introduces it in the House and whips everyone into line to vote for it.

I cannot avoid mentioning that only one Liberal, apart from the Minister, has stood up to give his opinion. I would particularly like to have the Member, who in essence is my MP when I am in Ottawa, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), stand up and tell us why he thinks it is fair that the retired citizens in his riding should be receiving less disposable income in the future than they are at the present time.

The Minister said in April, when speaking about this possibility: "We have no intention of changing the rules of the game; we want to maintain indexing of the Old Age Security pension and the supplement every three months".

There is another statement which I think shows what the Minister used to say. She seems to be no longer following the same course. On November 4, 1980, at page 4402 of Hansard, the Minister of National Health and Welfare had this to say in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) when she was in receipt of a document prepared by the Canadian Council on Social Development:

> But the universal pension as well as the GIS supplementary pension are indexed fully to the cost of living every three months and these people will be protected fully against these increases.

The Minister has changed. They got to her. Those Members do as they are told in that Party and to heck with the constituency they represent in the broad sense. As a result we are faced with a Bill like C-131 which essentially is the first one that has taken direct aim at the senior citizens of this country and which is resolved to hurt them.

The Minister has frequently said that pensioners will be getting more money next year than this year. She is quite right to say this if the Government is trying to confuse the general public about whether they will receive more money next year than this year. I agree that they will get more money but it will be limited to an increase of 6 per cent if they are not receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement. If inflation is more than 6 per cent, they will be getting less disposable income.

People in this particular situation will not have the spending power which they have had this year. The Minister has pointed out that this Bill provides for an increase in the supplements that will be large enough to compensate for the shortfall in the pension itself due to the 6 per cent cap. Of course, this means that if we have a 12 per cent increase in the cost of living in 1983, the basic Old Age Security payment will go up 6 per cent and according to my calculations the Guaranteed Income Supplement will have to rise 18 per cent. These are rough estimates since the two pensions are almost equal in value at the present time. The Guaranteed Income Supplement will have to rise approximately 18 per cent if the recipient of the GIS is not to lose any purchasing power. I hope that that will clarify it.

My immediate reaction upon hearing that people on the Guaranteed Income Supplement would get what is called a triple indexation if their estimated 6 per cent was half of the increase in inflation was that the figures were wrong.

The Minister had told us that 55 per cent of the people are drawing the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and I am confused about that because our figures indicate that the number drawing the Guaranteed Income Supplement has been falling. This was thought to be because, as the years go by, more people who have paid into the Canada Pension Plan are coming into that age bracket. Consequently, our figures are quite a bit different.

The private retirement incomes held by recent retirees and the steadily expanding coverage of the Canada and Quebec Pensions Plans are working in there, and it is our impression that considerably under 50 per cent of the people are receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement. However, I expect the Minister will probably have another opportunity to speak in the debate and she may take that opportunity to correct these figures if they are indeed incorrect.

I would like to discuss British pensioners for a while. The Minister will recall that I raised this subject four years ago. They are getting very shabby treatment in Canada. It may be because we are unable to come to some agreement between Canada and Britain. However, it should be pointed out to the general public in Canada that these people are being placed in a terrible position. In 1976 the laws were changed with regard to the length of time one must live in Canada to earn a full pension. It had been ten years but it was cut back.

What I believe to be the first kind of attack on senior citizens by the Government of Canada was that they had to live in Canada for 40 years to get full entitlement. If they came here from another country and lived here for ten years, they would then receive one quarter of the old age pension. The Government said: "We will pay them the Guaranteed Income Supplement which will help them". However, it will not help them beyond the limit of the Guaranteed Income Supplement which, right now, is a maximum of some $247. If one has a full old age pension and no other income, one receives the GIS and is limited to this $247. However, if one came here from Britain ten years ago, one only receives a quarter of a pension, which means that one will then have a total income of $309.62. One will receive an old age pension of $61.73 and the Guaranteed Income Supplement of $247.89; that is, if we are discussing the situation this month. Whereas a Canadian or someone who has lived here for 40 years, a single person, will receive a total of $484.81 from the Government, one who came from Britian ten years ago will only receive $309.62, which is a difference of about $185. These people are definitely not able to live on that amount and it is a very difficult situation in which the Government has put them. This applies only to people who came here after 1976.

I must say that I am rather startled at the number of people who have come to Canada since 1976 and been misinformed by the immigration people as to the rules governing pensions in Canada. These people, in applying for their pensions, find to their horror that they will not receive an old age pension of $246.92 but, rather, one of $61.73, which is pretty awful.

I would like to quote from Hansard of May 27, 1980 wherein the Minister's statement from December of 1978, four years ago, was quoted. It was in reference to an answer to a question I had asked in December of 1978. At that time the Minister stated:

> I am investigating the possibility of reciprocity of pension but the Brits really are not helping at all. I hope this will be put on the agenda of our two Prime Ministers if they meet very soon—
> Parenthetically, they met a week or so later.
> —which is what we heard in the press yesterday.
> I will continue with the quote of the minister. It reads:
> As soon as I know whether it is to be on the agenda or not I will inform the House and that will, of course, change completely and speed up, I hope, my course of action. That is my priority. Italy was a priority, Great Britain was one. Italy is done and I am very proud of it, but I want to unblock the Great Britain dossier. It is very important.

It was not as important as she thought, I guess, because there is no visible evidence of an inch of progress having been made since that day when she made that statement in the House of Commons in December, four years ago. While it may not mean a great deal to the Government of this country, it means a great deal to the people involved that the governments should get together and accomplish what must be done to prevent these sincere, hard working, elderly people, who have contributed considerably to this country, from suffering.

I expect that this Bill will pass. Despite what we heard a little while ago in the House, if the Liberals produce a Bill and none of them has the courage to vote against it, it passes. There was no way the Government could be defeated last July on the original Bill of this triad, when the pay was capped. There is no way, if it is given the normal course of voting in this House, that the Bill will fail. I deeply regret the fact that the Bill is here, and I deeply regret my foreboding that it will pass, because it should not pass. It is a cheap, petty attack on those people who should not be attacked in such a fashion.

To be among that group now, one must have been born before November 30, 1917. Those who were born before that date now qualify for an old age pension and those born after do not, but some of them soon will. If one were born before November 30, 1917, that means that one was born during the First World War. One would have had about a good ten years in one's early childhood of living through the twenties, which were referred to as the gay twenties before the word "gay" became totally inappropriate. We will have to think of another description for that decade when Canada was prosperous and going ahead and it seemed to be a great place. We soon found out differently in the 1930s when these people went through a great deal.

The bright promises for the future during the 1920s soon faded in the realities of the 1930s when the Second World War came along. Then there were a couple of good decades when very much progressive legislation came through and the Government seemed to have a realization of the part that was to be played if these senior citizens were to be treated honourably.

However, the Government seems to have become forgetful of the contribution which was made by these people and is now determined to cut its deficit or to be able to afford more purchases for its pet projects. For example, Petro-Canada might want to buy another oil company and it would only take another bit off the incomes of old age pensioners if the Government went forward with it. I think it is a shameful performance and I really look at some of my friends across the aisle and wonder how they can possibly put up with it, but they are.

That concludes my remarks, except to say that I wish we could find another dozen voters somewhere to give the Bill the treatment it deserves, which is defeat.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment on this Bill because I remember clearly the June budget and the six and five program that were brought in to attack inflation in Canada. I recall the general acceptance across the country of the six and five program when it was first brought in. In my experience from talking to people in my own constituency, going across the country, going on hot line shows or making speeches across the country, I find there still is considerable acceptance of that program.

I remember clearly that Hon. Members in the Conservative Party took some time to express their support for an attack on inflation. Many of them were directly or indirectly supporting the six and five program. I was grateful for that support, then. I think that some of the comments that we have heard from the Conservatives and the NDP continue in that vein, but they are healthy reminders to the Government that we must be careful even in an important attack like this one against such a deep economic problem.

I believe the speech that we have just heard from the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) reflects not only his concern for a fight against inflation, but also reflects a genuine compassion for senior citizens and a desire to remind the Government to go gently. I would have welcome that kind of reminder and I am sure most of here would.

Because we have been talking this afternoon about principles and about who would be willing to stand up and defend this idea, I want to remind the House that the basic principle still holds true today. We still must engage ourselves in a fight against inflation. It is inflation that causes the worst problem for all Canadians but especially for senior citizens and other people on fixed incomes.

The greatest compassion that we could show to anyone on a fixed income is to provide them with security and stability to meet their cost of living. If people can look ahead to next year and say that the cost of living will hold steady, then that will be the greatest contribution we can make to their lives. It is not misguided to attack inflation. It is not misguided to give pensioners security on the price of food, the price of housing, the price of transportation, the price of clothing and the price of gifts for their grandchildren and their children. Those are things that matter deeply to people, and pensioners want to have the security of stable prices.

In my riding I think pensioners understand that the six and five program is giving them that kind of security and that kind of a target. Senior citizens support the attack against inflation. I have called radio stations and been on hot line shows across the country, including at a station in Victoria, and the question that comes to me constantly from seniors is whether we are going to give them stability of prices and security on the cost of living. People are not asking us about indexing their pension. People are asking whether we are going to get the reason for the indexing under control.

When I talk to pensioners they note that the six and five idea has in the way the Government is applying it, an element of fairness in it. We are applying the six and five idea wherever our reach extends. We are applying it to companies, to prices as well as to wages, and to our social assistance programs. Seniors, in my experience, are saying that it is effective. The six and five program is enlisting co-operation from businesses, from labour, from ordinary people and, most especially, from other Governments. The six and five program is generating an effective attack against inflation.

Finally, seniors have noted that the way we are using the six and five program is helping to rebuild the economy. Pensioners in my area can see how effective, for example, the $3,000 housing grant is becoming in the housing market in Mississauga. That grant is financed by the reallocation of funds from programs like these. We are not simply cutting back; we are using the funds to stimulate the economy in other places, to create jobs and to give people some confidence that there is lasting help. Those are things pensioners want us to do.

As a Liberal I am very conscious that we must help people who are vulnerable and I am very proud of the record that we have with our various pension programs. I have listened to the recitations and the histories of pension programs in Canada coming from Members on all sides, and I am conscious that it was Liberal Governments that introduced those programs. It was Liberals who gave pensioners a great security net in their pension schemes. But that does not mean that those schemes must constantly be written in stone.

Pensioners today remind us that the basic problem of inflation is that it is attacking their security net. Pensioners themselves tell us that high prices are ruining the security that they have in those pension programs. They are telling us that inflation is the biggest threat they face. They do not regard the six and five program as an attack on senior citizens; they regard it as an attack on the worst problem facing senior citizens and as the logical development in the security of a pension scheme.

Seniors across this country want food costs, rent costs, transportation costs, clothing costs and all the other basic costs brought under control. They have been telling us to not throw money away by constantly increasing the protection they have against inflation, but instead to get inflation down. Senior citizens know that inflation is causing us to lose jobs, causing us to lose the markets for our businesses, causing us to lose the security and comfort that all of us have come to expect from our economy. Senior citizens know that high inflation is creating high interest rates and creating that terrible daisy chain of economic woes that we have been experiencing recently.

Senior citizens are prepared to join in an attack against the root cause of our woes—inflation. They see co-operation from many Canadians and they are prepared to be co-operative in that effort. They have noticed that the federal Government has moved in other sectors, has controlled telephone prices, has controlled CMHC rents, has controlled scores of prices that would otherwise have gone up beyond the 6 per cent ceiling. We have used the money earned from savings in the 6 per cent program to help farmers, fishermen, small businesses and workers in all walks of life.

Above all, senior citizens have seen that the pension program itself is still intact. Next year the pension program will have a 6 per cent increase. The principle of the pensions and their indexing is there. On top of that is the principle that the poorest pensioners are the most protected. That remains intact. By the ingenious joining of the GIS and OAS systems, we have been able to protect those pensioners who need every dollar they can get out of the pension system.

• (1720)

These are basic ideas in this program. I have been asked by people across the way about my principles and whether I will stand up and vote for this Bill. I say I will do it proudly. I do not do that from any sort of external coercion; I do it because I am proud of this program.

I have been asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) to give him some of my time. Apparently he feels the challenge that has been made. If Members of this House want to hear about his principles and ideas, they will let him take a few minutes out of my allotted time to say that he, too, is prepared to support this Bill.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) wants to speak, he has had all afternoon to stand up. It is proper that a Member on this side now be recognized. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills be now heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is a perfectly acceptable motion, but I wonder if the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) would do the Chair a favour and not put a motion which I may eventually have to put to a vote. I think what he wants is recognition of the Hon. Member. The Chair is inclined to see that Hon. Member. I would rather not deal with a motion that might become votable. If the Hon. Member has intended that I deal with a votable motion, I will, of course, respect his right. Otherwise, may I simply proceed as I ordinarily would. I understand there is not unanimous consent to recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). I would now look to my left in the usual order.

Mr. Taylor: On that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill C-131. I find it incredulous and I am amazed that the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), would stand here and say that he will take great pride in voting for this Bill. He is going to vote for this Bill because he supports it. What he really wants to do is cut back on the pay senior citizens are receiving in spite of the fact those senior citizens have done absolutely nothing wrong over the past 10 or 15 years.

The Parliamentary Secretary spoke about compassion. He claims the Liberals are compassionate. When I get into my comments, I will show that the Liberals have not been compassionate with the Canada Pension Plan, inflation or students. Over the last 14 years they have put us in a deficit situation. We have a deteriorating business climate which is getting this country into deep trouble. I will prove beyond any reasonable doubt that they do not qualify for the appellation of being compassionate.

The Parliamentary Secretary spoke about fairness. Howe fair is it to take a senior citizen with just the OAS, $3,000 a year, and limit that to 6 per cent or $180, compared to what is earned by a Member of Parliament, $62,000 and what will amount to an increase of $3,900 next year? That will be our increase, yet we restrict senior citizens to $180. What about the Deputy Ministers who earn $90,000 and next year will automatically receive an additional $5,400 while the senior citizen receives only $180? The Parliamentary Secretary talks about fairness and compassion. It is a bunch of ballyhoo, and I do not accept it.

He talked about the great Liberal Party that put into place the medicare system, the hospital insurance system and the Canada Pension Plan. That is correct, but the Liberal Party of 15 years ago is not the Liberal Party that stands before us today. It is an entirely different Party.

Classical liberalism, which many of us stand for, the right of the individual to build something and profit from it, has been taken away. With all of their intervention, thousands of statutes and regulations and Crown corporations, they have taken away that right that we all stood for as classical liberals compared to the tyranny of state capitalism.

Members opposite should have a history lesson in economics. I will give it to them. Before 1750 we had in this country state capitalism. At that time there were kings and monarchs. They made all of the decisions with respect to the division of capital and how it was applied to the nation.

In about 1750, as a result of a long process, we got into classical liberalism where the individual owned the capital. The capital was divided into millions of individual segments and the individuals were allowed to make the decisions. When that swept through Europe, it created more wealth than had ever been created in the entire history of mankind. Even the poor in the western nations were far richer than the kings had been under state capitalism.

Since World War II we started with the new form of liberalism, state intervention. After 200 years, from 1750 to 1950, we started on a steady move back to state capitalism, exactly the same point in which individuals found themselves before 1750. We have now ground down to where individual Canadians are at exactly the same point as the peasants were before 1750. That is what the new Liberal Party is doing. Is that something to be proud of? The Parliamentary Secretary should hang his head in shame.

Thirteen Progressive Conservatives have stood up to oppose this Bill because it is wrong. Three Liberals have stood up with a mish-mash of comments on compassion and fairness. It was a bunch of nonsense. There were four NDP who spoke against it. This is another example of the Government since 1968, the new Liberals, the new state intervention. They are the new kings of the land.

The individual Canadian now has to pay the price. There is a special price for our senior citizens who worked hard all their lives. Their standard of living is dropping and will drop more if we do not get these people opposite out. I am pleased to report that senior citizens are banding together. They see the threat of the current Liberal Party. They will be active in the next election and will do their part to throw them out.

This Bill is part of the six and five program. Wait until January when the new rules come in. Members will speak for 20 minutes and there will be a 10-minute question period. I can hardly wait until Members opposite read their departmental speeches. The odd one prepares his own speech, but most are prepared for them. We will have a lot of fun. Members will have to know what they are talking about. I can hardly wait.

The Government is virtually extorting from senior citizens their proper fee. Let me talk about Bill C-133. All during their careers, retired public servants paid into the pension plan. They paid an extra 1 per cent pursuant to a signed and negotiated contract. They paid that amount and now they are entitled to indexing at the rate of inflation. They paid an extra 1 per cent—pursuant to a signed contract and they are entitled to the benefit. The Government took the money, put it into a special—well, it did not put it into a special account but there is a bookkeeping entry. The money was frittered away, but it is on the books and there is a surplus of about $14 billion, if I remember correctly. But the Government is not going to honour the contract, and that is extortion. If private enterprise did that, those guys opposite would be up yelling and screaming. But because their Cabinet has done it, they are going to stand up and vote for this Bill, and all their claims to independence do not mean a sweet thing because they are not independent. They are being called to support a Cabinet which should not be supported. If they really represented the true interest of their constituents they would let the people have a choice. We know what the people will do, they will turf them out.

• (1730)

When any of these Bills are being discussed, Mr. Speaker, we should never forget about where we were in this country. Let us go back to 1968. We had a small national debt, just a drop in the bucket. We had a balanced budget. yet even with that we had a health care system second to none. We had hospital insurance and a medicare system under which the doctors were happy. We had post-secondary education for thousands upon thousands of people who were able to come from both the farms and the cities and go to university. We had a first class agricultural industry which exported to all countries of the world. We had a manufacturing infrastructure in Ontario second to none. Our standard of living was second from amongst of the OECD countries, which meant we were second in the world. That is what we had in 1968 and we could truly be proud. Not only did we have Old Age Security, we had a Canada Pension Plan and a regular retirement benefits program for senior citizens under which they could feel secure and know that they had done well throughout their life, built a nest egg for their retirement, and they could look forward to their old age. There is no doubt we were one of the finest countries in the entire world.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what has happened? Have the citizens changed? Did we do something to deserve being where we are today?

Let me tell you where we are today, Mr. Speaker. The first thing the Government did was to change the rules so that Members of this House were no longer in control of the purse strings. During the normal course when the Estimates come along, they are automatically approved. It does not matter what this House or the standing committees do. From the moment financial accountability to this House ended, you can chart the deficit as it went up in direct proportion to what the Government has been doing to this House since then. As a result we are no longer second in our over-all standard of living, we are thirteenth. We are in fiftieth place in our financial standing in the Euro-money market. So practically everyone else in the world is doing better than us.

Government Members always stand up and say, well, inflation is affecting the entire western world and we are trapped just like everyone else is. Well, that is true, but why have we dropped from second place to thirteenth? It is because of their policies over there, nothing more. Let us not fool ourselves. When they force this Bill through, they are forcing through a law which breaks a signed and sealed contract. The federal civil servants delivered their end of the contract, they paid the extra 1 per cent. In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, the Government should say that, well, we have taken your 1 per cent for all these years and now we are breaking the contract, so we will give you your 1 per cent back. That would be the fair thing to do, but the Government is not doing that. In fact, it is continuing to collect the 1 per cent from the employees today. So federal civil servants are being forced to pay the 1 per cent, but if they have to retire today they are not going to get the extra inflation benefits. Surely the Government should be consistent; if it is going to break the contract, it should give them their money back.

Mr. Taylor: They would not break the contract with Buchanan, though.

Mr. Thacker: I said that in 1968 we had almost a negligible national debt. It is now over $140 billion, and if we add in the Government's contingent liabilities for the guarantees it has given to the Massey-Fergusons, the Domes and the Petro-Cans of the world, the exposure is well over $200 billion. We have gone from balanced budgets to a deficit of over $24 billion a year or $2 billion a month, Mr. Speaker. The interest to service the debt is going to be about $17 billion or $18 billion. As I have said before, that is not insignificant because it concentrates wealth in the hands of people who are already wealthy.

If someone has $1 million, they are not going to put it out into business; they are going to lend it to their own Government and get 19.5 per cent, as they did last year. That has the effect of making the rich even richer, and it does away with our middle class. When we do away with our middle class, Mr. Speaker, we will lose that enormous buffer against extremism, whether it be political, ideological or religious extremism. As the Government destroys the middle class, it destroys Canada, and we will end up like the Third World countries where there is a small group of the incredibly rich and a huge group of poor.

Is that what Liberalism is about? Is that what compassion is about? Is that the fairness that the Hon. Member for Mississauga North speaks about? He stands up and is proud of that system. I would like to see what the senior citizens of his riding think of that.

How did the Government do this, Mr. Speaker? Canadians are a bright people, but as they get more education it seems that this Government wants to impose more regulation on them. Is it not ironic that when Canadians were developing and building this country—under Conservative Governments and old Liberal Governments, the classic Liberals—we did not have to have regulations and rules to affect our people. Now that we have them educated—we have probably the highest standard of education in the world—we think they need to have millions of statutes and regulations to hold them down. That is what Liberals have done to the people of this country. They got us into this enormous trouble, for which we are now paying a severe price. They did it by offering very attractive programs in practically every area, including many under the sole jurisdiction of the Provinces. At the same time as it offered these programs, the Government kept taxes low and borrowed the difference. It is great at the start. Maybe 5 per cent of tax revenues go to service interest on the debt. It is 10, 15 or 20 per cent and now it is up to 30 per cent. At 30 per cent the Liberals are alarmed and want to cut back. When it was 20 per cent some of them said that the trend line was wrong and, in time, would get us in trouble. The Liberals kept saying that if people voted for them, they would get cheap gas. Suddenly, they want to draw the line at 30 per cent. Why 30? Why not let it go to 35, 40, 50 or 100 per cent? If Liberalism means that programs can be offered, based on low taxes and the difference borrowed, then why is 30 the magic figure?

• (1740)

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) will direct his mind to that question. Why is 30 per cent of the tax revenue going to service the debt? Why is that the point chosen to cut it off, rather than 25 per cent or 15 per cent? What does the Hon. Member think the ideal figure is? I should like his views on that.

Senior citizens are being asked to cut back. Those are the people who will have to use the medicare system and the hospital insurance system more, as they grow older. As early as last year, by cutting out the revenue guarantee, which was really a fiction, the Government cut back on contributions to the Provinces by several hundreds of millions of dollars. As a result, the Provinces cut the flow of money to hospitals and doctors, and now senior citizens will have to pay more out of their own pockets for these services.

It is a two-edged sword, Mr. Speaker, and senior citizens get it both ways. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is shaking her head. All revenue sharing was fiction.

Miss Bégin: You are a fiction too!

Mr. Thacker: I was a member of the committee and I heard the evidence. It had been negotiated away by the Minister of Finance when the last agreement was negotiated. It was revived again as a peg on which the Government could hang its hat.

I would not expect the Liberals to honour a contract, Mr. Speaker; they never have. They will look you in the eye, sign a contract with you and next day stick a knife in your back. They started that in Alberta in 1971 with a verbal agreement on energy. The very next day, Donald Macdonald stood in this House and put a knife in Alberta's back. The next time Alberta came to discuss a natural gas pricing agreement, they would not accept the verbal agreement of a Cabinet Minister and insisted that it be in writing. And 24 days later the Minister, Alastair Gillespie, stood in this House and arbitrarily broke that contract that had been signed, sealed and delivered.

Now the same thing has been done to senior citizens. I am not surprised when the Liberals break their contracts because they do not know what a contract means in terms of honour, integrity and honesty.

Mr. Taylor: Unless it is with a Liberal; then they will not break it.

Mr. Thacker: Senior citizens will be hurt by the effect of this legislation on the health insurance program and on medicare. Students will be hurt by its effect on the post-secondary education system. We no longer have jobs for everyone as was the case in 1968 and yet, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why there should not be.

The whole purpose of Government strategy throughout the years should have been to create a business climate that would provide jobs for our youth. It has not only failed in that goal, but has attacked it. The National Energy Program cost thousands of jobs in the West alone and, indirectly, has cost thousands of jobs in the manufacturing infrastructure of Ontario.

This nation has grown on megaprojects. Under the program proposed by this Party for an 18-cent tax on imported oil and a special tax on the companies, the funds would have been used for such things as Fundy tidal power, the expansion of the James Bay project in Quebec, the Nelson River project in Manitoba, the Alsands and Cold Lake plants—that money would have been used for investment to create jobs. The spin-off in Ontario and Quebec would have been enormous.

Is my time almost up, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Fisher: No, it just seems like forever!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is a problem of relevance.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, in corroboration of my main point, I was showing that this Bill hurts all parts of the community, not only senior citizens but the youth of the country and everybody else.

What about the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Evans: We are not talking about the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Thacker: But you should be!

Mr. Evans: We are talking about Old Age Security.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals try to isolate these matters in separate Bills and then ask you to enforce the rules of relevancy so that Canadians will never see the broad picture. I am trying to show them the broad picture—a concerted attack by the new Liberals. They are not like the old Liberals, who were fair shooters.

What will be the effect of these deficits and this Bill on senior citizens? The Parliamentary Secretary spoke about the effect of inflation on senior citizens and about the cause of inflation. He said that senior citizens want to bring inflation down. That is true, but they want it to be done fairly. I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me if he can look senior citizens in the eye, knowing that he and I will receive an increase of $3,900 in salary on January 1, when they will only receive $180. Does that not cause him any problems? He is shaking his head to indicate that it causes him no problems at all. Well, it causes me problems, Mr. Speaker.

If the Government wanted to attack inflation it could do so by proposing an across-the-board increase, so that people at the lower end of the income scale would receive more, and those at the higher end of the scale would receive less. This would have the effect of bringing us closer together. There would be a broader middle class and not the extremes of the incredibly rich and the incredibly poor. That is what should be done in times of inflation, because inflation does create a rich class and a poor class. Surely that would be Liberalism. It is Progressive Conservatism.

Mr. Fisher: You are slipping into bed with the NDP.

Mr. Thacker: I enjoy these debates, Mr. Speaker, because there is no doubt that when I speak it gets those boys agitated over there. Even the ladies are agitated.

Mrs. Mitchell: Even the ladies?

Mr. Thacker: They hate to hear it from the hip.

Mr. Fisher: It would be nice to hear it from the head!

Mr. Thacker: We call it straight, from this side. There is no pussy-footing around. They particularly hate it when a man stands up—even a lady stands up, and tells them that they are not really the Liberals they thought they were.

Mrs. Mitchell: Even a lady?

Mr. Thacker: They are not the compassionate, fair people they thought they were. It cannot be maintained today that Canada is a land where fairness prevails. Things are occurring that are not fair. That is not consistent with the principles of Liberalism, it is not consistent with Progressive Conservatism and it is not consistent with NDPism.

It is not fair that in times of high inflation, a percentage settlement is given so that a man making $90,000 per year receives an increase of $5,400 while senior citizens only receive an increase of $180. That is absolutely not fair. Across-the-board settlements are called for in times of inflation, so that we do not fall into the Third World country category.

What have senior citizens done to deserve such treatment? What sin did they commit, to be treated like this? It is true that some of them voted Liberal, but that may be the only mistake they made and I am sure they will not make it again—or at least not those who understand what has occurred in the country.

There is no doubt in my mind that people have to re-take their sovereignty. For too long, individuals have trusted Governments in this country, and I think we have gone too far in that respect. People now need to re-take their sovereignty. They need to spend two hours a week insisting that their Member of Parliament explain matters to them. They need to read about what Governments at all levels are doing and then make their opinions known. We get away with murder in this House as far as our disposition of public funds is concerned.

• (1750)

I could continue for a long time pointing out what the Liberal Government has done and why it should be voted out of office. The Government proudly sets out in this Bill the basic old age pension at $246.92 and what it will be in 1983 and 1984. By October 1984 the senior citizen about whom we are talking will be receiving $274.83, a magnificent increase from $246.92! It is incredible, it is peanuts. It will hardly buy three meals by 1984.

An Hon. Member: They have soup kitchens in Toronto now.

Mr. Thacker: That is true. The memo pointed out that we are talking about people who are already below the poverty line as established by our friends in the other place. The poverty line for singles is $8,912.40. These people are already below that, and the Government is imposing upon them a 6 per cent increase. It is just not right. Married couples are in the same boat. Pensioners who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement will be protected to a lesser amount, but that is not the principle we wanted in Canadian society. We wanted them all to be treated fairly because they have paid their dues. We are all prepared to pay our dues.

The crowning irony which makes me more bitter than anything else is that if our taxes had been increased since 1968 when people were offered programs, if they had been presented with taxes at the same time so that they could have really chosen what they wanted, we would not be in the current jam. If those of us who made much more than the ordinary citizen had paid more taxes in 1968, 1969 and 1970—especially during the 1970s, the good years—we would not be in this jam today. When all the rest of the countries in the western world that chose to go into deficit positions were in really deep trouble, we could have been stepping out and genuinely borrowing to retool our industries. Keynesian economics will work, provided the Government uses both sides of the equation. In short, Keynes says that when there are tough times the Government should borrow to stimulate the economy. The other side of the coin is that when there are good times the Government should repay the debts so that it is in a balanced position and, if bad times come again, it can borrow in order to retool factories and to start megaprojects.

The Government opposite did not follow that rule. During the good years from 1968 and into the 1970s, but particularly the 1970s, the Government continued to offer programs, keep taxes low and borrow the difference. Because they had low taxes, Canadians went out and bought houses that were too big. They took on mortgages which were much larger than they should have been. They paid more for businesses and for land than they should have. They were being deceived. They had the programs, they were paying the low taxes, but they did not realize the deficit was piling up.

If we had a Government that was straight up with people and offered a corresponding tax with a program, people could have really chosen. I think about where we could have been if we had a balanced budget today and we did not have a national debt draining $17 billion just to service it. We would not have had concentrated wealth in the hands of a few people. We would be balanced so that we could borrow now in order to get the country moving again. In that way we would not have been faced with Bill C-131, for which the Government will stand and vote and which we will oppose. We would not have to be here at all. Also the senior citizens of Canada would not have been faced with inflation, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare could have continued to be incredibly proud of her programs.

I am sure the Minister must be frustrated because she more than anyone else sees the need of these people. She speaks eloquently of their need but because of other people in Cabinet who have created the enormous deficit, she is being hurt; her position and reputation are not what they were because of this. It is a tragedy, but let us not let them off the hook. There are political consequences when people make such mistakes. I say to Hon. Members opposite that they should rise and say to the Cabinet that it has done wrong. They should indicate that Canada needs a major program to get out of the present situation, which does not include increasing the travel allowances of Cabinet Ministers and their Parliamentary Secretaries by 70 per cent when senior citizens have to take less; that is not right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on second reading of Bill C-131, to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), and to commend the action of the Government.

We have listened to some eloquent speeches. I have great admiration for the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who unfortunately today was a typical master of false assumption. With vigour and great eloquence he defended his wrong assumption that only he recognized our special obligation to the elderly. I should like to read into the record the conclusion of a letter from the Guelph Senior Citizens Council which reads:

> There is a great deal of respect among elderly Canadians for the efforts you have made on their behalf, and also for the Ministry of Health and Welfare under your jurisdiction.

Of course the Council was referring to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and her Department.

The Minister is well known throughout the country by the elderly Canadians, for her compassion, her interest and her determination to ensure that they live well and happy and with justice. I hope I have laid this to rest at least for the moment. While the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton may be eloquent, he should save it for assumptions that are right, not false ones.

Also I would like to bring to the attention of the House that we heard much this afternoon about voluntary sacrifice and heroism. It seems to me that there was a feeling across the floor that only they recognized these facts. Again these assumptions are false. I do not know of any Party which has ever held power in the House that has had so much consideration for the elderly. It bothers me that there seems to be a feeling that the Bill has something to do with removing something from somebody. It is really making an offer to somebody. It is allowing senior citizens to share in the combat, if one likes, against inflation. They want to share. Certainly senior citizens, a vast number of them to whom I have spoken, are saying, "Can you do something about stabilizing our income and about stabilizing things so that the money we now have will go further or at least as far as it used to go?" Our six and five program is an attempt to do this. May I call it six o'clock?

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2) be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) had the floor.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted at six o'clock, I was talking about the broad program of six and five and its attempt to fight inflation. This Bill that we are debating today and which we have been debating since last week is just part of a broad program to put the six and five program in a position where the Government can continue to fight inflation. I would like to draw to the attention of Members on the other side that none of us would be supporting Bill C-131 if it were in isolation. But we must remember that it is part of an over-all package to control inflation. Bill C-131 is part of a comprehensive plan. It is part of an over-all package for economic recovery, and it cannot be taken in isolation. If that were true, none of us could support this action.

What we are trying to do with this legislation and through the six and five program is to reduce the burden on the taxpayer. We are asking everyone to make a contribution, except those who are in the greatest need. We are saying that we can reduce the burden on the taxpayer and it is a matter really of non-contributory versus the contributory plan. We are looking at such things as the GIS, the Old Age Security and the Canada Pension Plan. We know which of those are contributory and which are non-contributory. We know that those programs designated to assist people in the greatest need are the GIS and the child tax credit programs. What we must do, above all, is to defeat inflation. Equally important, we must restore economic growth. If we do not restore economic growth, there will be an even greater pressure on the social programs than there is now. Therefore, our six and five program and Bill C-131, which is part of the whole package, are to fight inflation but they are also to restore economic growth.

The reason I feel that I can support this legislation is that the Government is asking for a small contribution from all of those who benefit from programs funded by the taxpayer and from those who work for the taxpayer. What are the choices? A bigger deficit? A burden on the taxpayer? I do not think so. But today, if we think about it, who is in greatest need? I have no doubt that all of the things we have heard about the plight of the elderly today are true. I agree times are difficult for them. Times are difficult for them because they have lost stability, mainly because of the economic times which have arisen, principally because of inflation. Who is in the greatest need?

Mr. Young: Dome.

Mr. Schroder: I think it is the unemployed who will lose their life's work. What about youth, 25 per cent of whom are unemployed? We must have the funds to generate employment. After all, if we do not generate employment and if we do not restore our economic growth, who is going to pay for tomorrow's pensions? How will we generate the funds to take care of those people who will be in the greatest need?

It is very easy to identify with those people. As I said earlier in my speech today, I would not like anyone to believe that only the Opposition cares about the aged. After all, I want to emphasize that anyone who thinks about them will recognize that for all of these years this Party has been a caring Party. It was our Party that established the legislation. There has not been any sudden change. This afternoon an Hon. Member asked whatever happened to the Liberal Party of 1968. How has it changed?

Mr. Young: It has changed in a thousand ways.

Mr. Schroder: I wonder whether that Hon. Member has ever heard of evolution. We have to change with the times. The economic times of today in the world are different. We have had to change. If we all contribute today, we will be able to provide for a brighter tomorrow. Certainly, those with the greatest interest in the ability of taxpayers to fund these programs are retired. We seem to forget what this Bill is all about. This Bill is all about helping those people least able to help themselves. There is no question that there is a crisis in our national life. The Government has called upon all Canadians to share in a determined effort to fight inflation and bring it down. It is only right that those Canadians who are not in need are entirely prepared to share in the serious sacrifices that are required to bring our current economic crisis under control. It requires the co-operation of Canadians to overcome this formidable challenge.

• (2010)

At a time when the Government is calling upon Canadians to tighten their belts and strive even harder to overcome the evils of inflation, I find it gratifying to see that the Government's total commitment to protecting and ensuring that those benefits it wishes to give through those programs that are designated to assist our fellow Canadians most in need will not be reduced. One can see that this is provided for in the Bill.

The Government is proposing in the Bill which is before us today to limit indexation of the Old Age Security benefits to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. I want to emphasize the point that full indexation of these benefits will resume on January 1, 1985. However, this Bill also ensures that the lowest income pensioners will be fully protected from the limitation of the indexing factor. This fact seems to have been forgotten. The Guaranteed Income Supplement for pensioners with lower income will continue to be fully indexed. In addition, everyone receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement will receive an extra increase to fully offset the limitation of indexation of basic Old Age Security payments. This same protection from the limitation of the indexing factor will also be extended to recipients of a spouse's allowance.

When this is all put into context with what we have heard from the Opposition so far, one sees that their allegations that the Government is removing benefits and reducing what those in the greatest need have are false. That is not the fact.

I would like to concentrate on these particular aspects of the Bill. Low income pensioners will continue to receive the benefit of fully indexed pensions. This means that pensioners in receipt of a Guaranteed Income Supplement or a spouse's allowance will receive a benefit that will continue to be indexed to the Consumer Price Index. In addition, the benefits will be increased by an amount corresponding to the loss associated with the reduced indexation on the basic income.

This approach maintains the income guarantees of the present program. In fact, there are now some pensioners who are just above the qualifying income level for the Guaranteed Income Supplement who will be eligible for this benefit because of the limited indexation of the basic pension. I want to emphasize that no pensioners loses out. This is an important fact which the Minister has been trying to point out. This is the purpose of the program.

As I have said, those who are not in need are being asked to make some contribution in the fight to reduce inflation. This is the purpose of the six and five program. Those benefits which pensioners have received in the past will be retained during 1983 and 1984. They will continue to receive them in 1985 when full indexation is restored to the program as a whole. We can be proud that the guarantees made to low income pensioners are being honoured and fully protected by this Government.

It is most encouraging that in spite of the economic constraints, after objectively analyzing our social policies for older Canadians, the Government has been able to maintain a firm stand and give assistance where it is most needed. This legislation is most important because it emphasizes the Government's continuing concern and commitment to the needs of our persioners. All Canadians have seen the effects of recession and spiralling inflation on the economy. However, some groups, such as low income pensioners, are particularly vulnerable to the impact of inflation. Even at a time when great restraint is in order, it is reassuring to see that the Government is very aware of the plight of those older Canadians who are most affected by inflation.

In Canada, at the end of the nineteenth and into the twentieth century, the increasing level of industrialization led to a change of lifestyle and weakened the traditional extended family responsibilities. The individual increasingly became responsible for saving and providing for his or her own retirement. At the same time, the new industrial structure meant that increasing numbers of older workers were being forced into retirement. Poverty among the elderly was widespread because few pension plans existed and personal savings for retirement were inadequate. Increasing pressure was brought to bear on the federal Government to aid the elderly who lived in poverty.

The federal Government assumed the major responsibility for the welfare of the elderly in 1951. Section 94 of the British North America Act was amended in that year to authorize Parliament to make laws in relation to old age pensions.

It was only 16 years ago in December, 1966, that the Guaranteed Income Supplement Program for Old Age Security recipients was approved. In January 1967, pensioners born on or before December 31, 1910, who had no other source of income, became eligible for a 40 per cent supplement to the Old Age Security pension. The Guaranteed Income Supplement Program was initially designed to provide financial assistance to those persons who would not be eligible or would not fully benefit from the introduction of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans in 1966.

I have lived long enough to remember the days when we lived in the so-called gold watch syndrome when all that one received after working many years was perhaps a handshake and a gold watch. These earning-related social insurance programs providing for the income protection in the event of death, disablement or retirement of labour force members, offered no benefit to those already retired and only limited benefits to those retiring during the ten-year phase-in period. We had problems even at that time.

The Guaranteed Income Security was to be a transitional program gradually phasing out as the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans were phased in. The extent of the Guaranteed Income Security Program when it was first introduced was to provide a basic minimum income to those pensioners who had no other source of income. It served as a floor below which pensioners' income could not fall. The Guaranteed Income Security was never intended to provide an adequate income but was simply designed to financially assist pensioners with little or no income who could not fully benefit from the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans.

It was soon realized, howver, that these earning-related plans would not replace the need for income assistance to the elderly. Therefore, the Guaranteed Income Security was made a permanent feature of the Old Age Security Program. This became effective in 1971.

Since 1971, the guaranteed income approach to alleviating poverty in this country has been acknowledged as one of the most important advances in social policy in Canada's history. It is a way of ensuring that the basic needs of pensioners with no income or very limited income other than the basic Old Age Security pension can be met without subjecting them to the indignity of a means test.

Another significant change in the program occurred when, in 1975, a second income-tested benefit, the spouse's allowance, was introduced. This income-tested benefit was payable to the 60 to 64 year old spouses living with Old Age Security pensioners. The program was intended to meet the needs of many married couples in Canada who were being forced to live on a single Old Age Security pension and a Guaranteed Income Supplement, because only one spouse was over 65 and eligible for these benefits. In the traditional pattern of marriage in this country, the husband was generally older than the wife, and very often, especially in the case of older couples, the husband had been the only wage-earner. It was quite reasonable, therefore, to ensure that the minimum income needs of the couple would be basically met through this program. It did not make much sense, for example, that a couple receiving Old Age Security program benefits might also have to seek provincial social assistance to meet basic income needs.

The Old Age Security program and, in particular, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, are widely perceived to be the only practical means of ensuring that Canada's elderly have adequate incomes. This program now plays a vital and important role in Canada's retirement system. Indeed, the Guaranteed Income Supplement is the only part of the retirement income system that presently guarantees a minimum level of income to virtually all of Canada's elderly population.

The cost of improving benefits in any program is not negligible, but the importance of these income-tested programs has been fully recognized and protected. In 1979, and again in 1980, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and Spouse's allowance programs were enriched. The benefit rates were increased by $20 per pensioner household on January 1, 1979 and again by $35 in July of 1980. The role of these programs is so important to those pensioners requiring this additional financial assistance, that in those years when inflation was inflicting severe financial difficulties, the Government took decisive action to increase its commitment to these people.

The Government is striving to protect the improvements that have been made thus far in our effort to fight poverty and to ensure that our elderly population is guaranteed a basic minimum income level. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has repeatedly said, sacrifices by those who can throw a lifeline to those struggling with inflation and economic hardship must be made. Our country will recover from the ravages of inflation. That is what the program of six and five is all about and that is what this Bill is trying to do. It is trying to ensure that we will succeed with this program. I think one of the major reasons we are hearing so much criticism from the Opposition is the fact that the program is succeeding, and the fact that inflation is being reduced and these elderly people will eventually be better off.

Mr. Young: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the Hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Schroder: At the end of my speech, I will be quite happy to answer the question of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is not the responsibility of the Chair, I suppose, to explain that that is not a point or order, but I should indicate that if there is an indication by the Hon. Member who is now speaking that he wishes to entertain a question, then that might become a matter of consent for the House. However, it is not a point of order which the Hon. Member has raised.

Mr. Schroder: I believe that we can all take great pride in maintaining and fully protecting the rights of our low-income pensioners in these hard times. We have said over and over again that this is the Government which has been known for doing just that. The social contract between the Government and the people of Canada has not been broken, nor will it be broken. We in Canada can be proud of the system of retirement income planning that presently exists, a three-tiered retirement income system to which this government is fully committed. The first tier of the retirement income planning system is the Old Age Security program. It is the cornerstone upon which a solid foundation for the future retirement of every Canadian can be laid. It provides a guarantee that pensioners will receive a minimum level of income when they retire.

The second tier consists of benefits from the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. These Plans are part of the compulsory contributory social insurance plans which I mentioned earlier, plans which enable members of the labour force to acquire and retain protection for themselves and their families against the loss of income due to retirement, disability or death.

Finally, the third tier of our retirement income system consists of private income sources such as employer-sponsored pension plans, registered retirement savings plans, and the other savings and acquired assets of a lifetime.

It is probably important that we recognize that these later acquired assets of a lifetime are one of the major things which are being hurt by inflation. People who have saved diligently, who have put money away for a rainy day because of inflation, are finding that these dollars are no longer sufficient.

We have said earlier, as did my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), that the Government is doing its best to control those prices over which we have some jurisdiction, but it is incumbent on all of those who are earning and all of those who are not in need to try to make some contribution to this fight against inflation. Therefore, we see these three components, old age security, public pension plans and private resources, diminishing as inflation continues. Therefore, the fight against inflation, the reduction of inflation, enhances our savings on which we have been counting to support us as we grow old, when we are no longer capable of earning.

These three components constitute the framework of the three tier retirement income planning system in Canada. Retirement income is planned over a lifetime and this Government, by confirming its commitment to the Old Age Security program has shown great strength and leadership. This Government has reaffirmed that the concepts of universality and indexation shall and must be protected and retained for our present and future generations.

I do not think I can put this in any stronger context than by saying that the Government is concerned about others. We are concerned about those people who have been so eloquently described by the Opposition as people in need. It is satisfying to me that the need has been identified on both sides of the House. This Government has recognized that need through all these years and has established programs to look after these needs.

Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will continue to make sure that those in greatest need in this country will be looked after. They will not be forsaken. I hope they will be reassured by the statement from Members of the Government who are supporting this legislation and that they will not be frightened into thinking something is being taken away from them or that they are going to lose what they were counting on having.

This legislation, not only this Bill C-131 but the total package of legislation of six and five, is to protect our senior citizens and to make sure that what they get from the Government and what they have saved through their lifetime will meet their needs.

I would like to reaffirm that this concept of universality and indexation shall and must be protected and retained for our present and future generations.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the opportunity of speaking to Bill C-131 because of a long-standing interest—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I was notified by my House Leader that the next speaker on the roll would be from our Party.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That will teach you to listen to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would not want the Hon. Member to have as many difficulties as the Chair does in attempting to find some reasonable juxtaposition as between Hon. Members who wish to speak. My impression is that it is a reasonable time for one of the Members to my left to speak, but if the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke would like to pursue it I promise to consider whetl er he ought to be the next speaker. My impression is that I ought to recognize the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and I think, following him, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

If Hon. Members in the House are satisfied with that tentative approach or that judgment, then I can sit down and relax. If not I will listen to any Hon. Member who has a problem.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to hold up the proceedings of the House, and I will respect the Chair.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, in fairness I have to say that we have had three speakers since the last NDP speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) makes a very gentle point, and it is much appreciated by the Chair.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I might just begin my comments again by saying that I have been waiting a long time to speak on this Bill as the debate on it has progressed over the several afternoons and evenings. It would be a much happier occasion if we were addressing a Bill which was improving the lot of pensioners, and establishing a benefit, instead of making it more difficult for our senior citizens to make their way in these difficult economic times. Pension reform will have to wait until after the November 1981 Budget, and after the borrowing Bills, the sports pool and several other bits of legislation which will come forward between now and the end of the session are taken care of.

Bill C-131 proposes to limit the costs of living increases in old age pensions to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984 without regard to the rate of inflation. Exempted from that six and five formula will be those pensioners receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement. By limiting Old Age Security increases to six and five the Government estimates that it will effect savings of some $105 million. I would ask my colleagues and those in the opposite side of this House to keep that figure in mind as we proceed through these comments.

This figure raises a number of issues, not the least of which is the amount of Government spending. The purpose of this Bill and the purpose of the six and five program, of which this Bill is a part, is to save the Government money and to increase its revenues. We on this side say that it is about time that the Government cut back on spending, which has been out of control for quite some time. In our wildest dreams we had not contemplated that the six and five restraint program would begin on pensioners, the persons who have worked throughout their life and now can least afford to bear the brunt of this kind of attack. They are in the front lines while the Government Department heads are free to continue to bring foolish expenditures and frills to the front of spending, but not to the front of the six and five formula which they have so effectively promoted over the last several weeks.

How is it just and equitable, Mr. Speaker, to cut back on pensions while spending millions of dollars on Government advertising? Would it not make more sense to eliminate that advertising and keep the pensions fully indexed? All Members have been receiving a considerable amount of mail to that effect, and I am sure my colleagues have been impressed by the spirit that has been shown by senior citizens who say that they will carry their load and pay their way.

Several senior citizens in St. Catharines have written to me saying that they feel it is their duty to participate, to help Canada get out of this difficulty in which the Government has placed us. They are prepared to cut back on the amenities of living; they are prepared to trim their grocery budgets; they are prepared to "make do" another year with their present wardrobes, and they are prepared to encourage others to follow their example.

That kind of spirit, determination and willingness to sacrifice is alive and well in Canada. The Government would be well advised not to squander the last semblance of trust that is in existence now between the people of Canada and this Government.

I do not have to point out that quite apart from the political consequences that would ensue there is a far more serious consequence of loss of faith and trust in this Government itself. Once that trust has been lost, years and years of rebuilding will be required to regain the credibility that is essential in our democratic process.

The spirit being shown by our senior citizens and the trust that they are placing in the federal Government with regard to the six and five program is based on the premise that all Canadians and all levels of Government are going to play their part. Their determination to help Canada is not based on the assumption that they put up with less so that others can spend more.

Unfortunately, that is the case that exists at the present time. Senior citizens receiving the OAS are being asked to forgo $105 million; public service pensioners are being asked to forgo $100 million; Members of Parliament, Senators, House of Commons employees, public servants, RCMP, Armed Forces personnel and employees of Crown corporations are to forgo $800 million. Mothers are being asked to forgo $155 million in reduced family allowance benefits. In addition to these savings, the Government is increasing personal income taxes by $1.3 billion, or an average of $137 per taxpayer. It is slashing, and I emphasize slashing, $582 million from selected Government programs. The restraint total is $3,042 million.

Who really is doing the belt-tightening in this country? We can see that selected sections of our society are forgoing $1.16 billion in reduced salaries, pensions or benefits and that the tax-paying public in general is contributing $1.3 billion more in taxes, for a combined total of $2.46 billion, or better than 80 per cent of the Government's entire restraint program.

The Government, which claims to be leading the way, can only find of this grand sum $582 million to cut from its expenditures. What a shabby example this Government is giving to the people of Canada as it tries to convince them we should try to join together in a program of restraint, a program that is so essential in these difficult economic times, forced upon Canadians by this extravagant Government.

If pensioners are going to be asked to tighten their belts and rally around the flag, then the frills will have to go first, the extravagant use of Jetstars, the Petro-Canada energy advertisements on television and radio and in the newspapers, the free briefcases provided for public servants. The list goes on and on. Also, as we see in today's paper, there are the excess expenditures over last year for Ministers' travelling expenses. These items added up to over $500 million in 1979, so they are not an insignificant amount in 1982.

More important, however, wasteful spending sends a message to Canadians that they are being taken for a ride. Let us look at that for a moment. When the press continues to show waste and useless expenditures of this Government, how can Canadians be expected to co-operate? They are being taken for a ride. While they scrimp and save, the Government tends to spend and squander. In these difficult economic times, indeed at any time, the Government cannot afford to leave such an impression with the public, especially the Canadian public, yet we see no action being taken to correct those abuses.

Our Leader has proposed that a parliamentary committee be established to track down waste in Government spending and be empowered to put a halt to it, putting in place a committee or agency to cut such spending where it is found. However, the Government vetoed that proposal. It was not acceptable because it might cut into some of the Government advantages or perks.

We in the Opposition do everything possible to bring forward examples of waste so that the necessary action can be taken, but rarely is anything ever done. Does the Government not care about using the hard-earned money of taxpayers in such a frivolous way?

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) recently raised a small matter of $6,000 spent on a courier service to deliver maps and photographs to 576 newspapers across this country. Couriers were used instead of Canada Post, incurring this expense of $6,000 for no just reason. In the eyes of some, it might be a small amount. They may say, "What's $6,000?" I emphasize that because I want to tell Hon. Members opposite what $6,000 means. Six thousand dollars represents the amount paid in taxes to the federal Government by two average taxpayers from the City of St. Catharines. In other words, those two taxpayers worked all year, paid their bills, kept up their rent or struggled with their mortgages and contributed $3,000 each to the coffers of this Government. They might have put that $3,000 to much better use themselves, but they thought the Government would use their money, wisely spend it on necessities and as needed. In one single thoughtless moment, that trust was dissipated. The Government squandered what those two taxpayers had contributed after working for a year.

Who could argue that those two individuals could not have put that money to much better use in these days of high interest rates, high mortgage costs, they could have made a contribution to their own welfare instead of having it frittered away in that thoughtless moment.

Who on the Government benches cares if some poor individual in St. Catharines has his or her $3,000 wasted on courier services? To them $3,000 is just a drop in the bucket.

It is the attitude that counts, not the amount. If you do not care about the individual taxpayer's money and if you do not care about the pensioner's forgone cost of living increase, it is high time you packed up and left the job to someone who cares, someone who is prepared to respect the taxpayers' hard-earned money. That is why attitude is of so much importance. As long as this indifference of the Government continues and as long as waste and extravagance are the order of the day, there is no way that we on this side of the House can support a Bill such as the one before us.

Waste and frills must be cut first; trimming and tightening of departmental budgets must be next, then wage, pension and benefit restrictions will follow. Those are the priorities that might logically have been set by the Government, but with this Government, it is the reverse. All we are doing now is cutting the incomes of people to cover the cost of the waste and frills, which means that we are making no headway whatever.

In the interest of relevancy, I am leaving aside the major policy adjustments that could go a long way and should be made if we are to recover from this recession which besets us, but it should be understood that more than restraint alone is needed.

My comments today are clearly not going to change the Government's attitude. The Government will not withdraw the Bill and adopt the proper priority program as it is politically wed to the six and five program. It will see it through no matter what. This being so, and being determined as they are, I want to make a few comments on the Bill in the expectation that when the Bill gets to the committee, level heads will prevail and suggestions will be brought forward into amendments.

We have heard a lot of talk from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) on how this Bill does not hurt the needy or affect those in need. That is pure nonsense. The six and five comes into effect for a single pensioner when that pensioner reaches or surpasses an income level of $8,900. Statistics Canada would classify such an individual as being below the poverty line in any major city in Canada, and Canada, and 40 per cent of all Canadians over 65 do live in metropolitan areas with populations of over 500,000.

• (2050)

Married couples join the six and five program when their household income exceeds $15,099, hardly a king's ransom today. In all, some 100,000 pensioners are hovering at these minimum income levels, and they are going to have their cost of living increases frozen at six and five while their rent or mortgage, food, heating and clothing costs will continue to rise, often at a rate in excess of that of inflation. It is evident that using the GIS as a basis for deciding wl.o is in and who is out of six and five is not satisfactory. The GIS is designed to keep pensioners at a statistically arrived at minimum level needed to live; it is not designed to provide a few extra dollars for movies, dinners out or holiday trips. Accordingly, if the GIS is the lowest acceptable income level, how is the pensioner earning just $1 more than the cut-off level for the GIS better equipped to see his or her pension cut?

I would propose, Mr. Speaker, as an absolute minimum, that the GIS base be scrapped and the Senate committee poverty line be adopted. This is still not being extravagant or generous, but it is a major step closer to putting some truth in the Minister's statement that adoption of the six and five will not affect those in need.

I further propose that money saved by limiting pension increases be specifically allocated to a program clearly identifiable as one of assistance to senior citizens. Whether this be for housing assistance, the New Horizons Program, national park fees or whatever, it can be decided on the basis of need and priority, but it is to assist those who need it. I believe it to be absolutely essential that pensioners affected by six and five know exactly the sacrifice they are being asked to make and where the money is to go. This Bill asks everyone to participate except the Government. Let the Government give leadership and then, if necessary, after it has gone through an accepted list of priorities, call on the pensioners and they will respond.

I cannot and will not vote for this Bill, and I will not support any similar effort to shift the burden of economic mismanagement—including resource mismanagement—onto those who have lived their work-a-day lives and are now least able to bear that load.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I want to open my remarks on Bill C-131 by saying that it is a sad day in this House when the Government has the gall to bring forward this Bill, especially today, the fortieth anniversary in this House of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), a man who fought a hard fight to bring about universality of our pension plan.

When I came into this House, Mr. Speaker, as a bright young Member, I watched the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) with a great deal of intensity. I watched her stand up in this House and defend time after time, day after day, her commitment to bringing about pension reform. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the Liberal Government has destroyed the compassion that the people of Canada expected from it. The people of this country looked forward to the Minister bringing in the innovations they were expecting. I want to say that I had some personal dealings with the Minister. I went over and discussed programs and policies, and the problems I had with some of my constituents. She told me at that time, "you see, we can be compassionate". I thought at that time, yes, we do have responsible Members of Parliament, responsible Cabinet Ministers who do listen. But now we have a situation where the six and five world has started to take over.

No one has mentioned the "Blue Chip Committee". What happened to that six and five program committee headed by Ian Sinclair, President of Canadian Pacific? They were travelling across Canada, expounding the six and five program. I wonder if Ian Sinclair is still so proud of this program, now that it is starting to affect pensioners across Canada. His salary is in the neighbourhood of $500,000 a year and he is expounding on the six and five program. I want to make it clear that no one can justify cutting pensions to meet the six and five program limits, particularly at times such as these.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary talk about how we must have restraint. He knows that just the other day in this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced a new Royal Commission into Canada's economic future. The salaries of the people on that Commission are going to be in the neighbourhood of $700 a day. Mr. Macdonald is going to be the Chairman of that Commission, and he created the problem at the time he was Minister of Finance.

This Bill is going to rob over a million pensioners of a portion of their pension which they have earned. Pensioners will lose in two ways. First, they are going to be out of pocket because indexing over the next two years will not keep up with inflation. Inflation this year will be at least 10 per cent, but the indexing will be limited to 6 per cent. The optimists tell us that next year inflation will be 9 per cent or more, but the pensioners' indexing will be limited to 5 per cent.

The Minister claims, Mr. Speaker, that the people hit by this legislation can afford to sacrifice. The Minister knows that in many cases that is not true. Many pensioners who do not benefit from the GIS now live at the poverty line. The single pensioner's eligibility for the income supplement ends when outside income, including Old Age Security payments, reaches a total of $6,123. That means that a single pensioner with a total income, including the Old Age Security, of $9,200, is still going to lose nearly $300 over two years. The Minister must be aware that an income of $9,200 is already $500 below the poverty line for people living in large cities.

• (2100)

The National Council on Welfare has estimated that over 100,000 poor and nearly-poor Canadians will have their incomes reduced as a result of this legislation.

Another thing the Bill does is to whittle away at the universality of pensions. The Minister has denied this, but it is the truth. The relative value of the Old Age Security, which is universal, is being whittled away while the income tested Guaranteed Income Supplement, is being increased.

In my term as mayor of a city, a young couple came to see me. They were visiting Revelstoke to see their elderly parent. He was trying to survive in his own home and to look after himself. As you can understand, Mr. Speaker, our senior citizens are proud. This young couple told me that he needed help. I went down with them to see him. We discussed his problem and I got all the information I could. I tried to find some way of helping. About a week later, through the social assistance programs in the area, I found that some moneys were available for help. Proud as could be, I went down to advise this elderly person of the help that was available, but he informed me in a very proud way that he had gone through the hungry thirties without relief and he did not want relief now. I think it is very clear that the Guaranteed Income Supplement is a means test.

In the last election campaign the Liberals spent a lot of time talking about pension reform. It is interesting to note what they mean by that. I say to the Minister, shame on the Government for attacking our senior citizens at a time when they need help. She knows that they need help. She knows that the reform is required now and that we should be heading in that direction.

Perhaps the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who is responsible for the status of women, would like to explain this pension reform to the senior citizens in her constituency. More than half the people who will have their Old Age Security payments cut, are women. I am sure they would be interested. I am sure half of the population on or near the poverty line, who are women, would be interested in hearing from that Minister.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said in the past that pension reform was her highest priority. The Bill illustrates what Jesse James meant when he said banks were his highest priority.

The Government has intentionally split up the debate on this Bill, bringing it one day for debate then bringing in some other Bill in order to take the attention away from it. Members of the Government have refused to speak on it. They are ashamed of it, and well they should be.

The Conservatives also have a few questions to answer. When Bill C-124, the six and five program, was adopted, the Conservatives expounded on it at great length. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) called it a "good beginning" but said that the Government had not gone far enough. Now the Conservatives have finally seen the light about the six and five program. Today I heard several Conservatives speak about contracts. They had no hesitation in breaking contracts under the six and five program, with labour groups going to the International Labour Organization meetings in Geneva to appeal the breaking of contracts in Canada.

The Conservatives said that we did not go far enough with that program. They talked about action, but now they realize their mistakes and are trying to defend their position. Whilst that is going on it is interesting that none of the Conservative Members who represent the multinational corporations, such as the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) or the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble), has made a speech promoting the rights of senior citizens and their pensions. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), that great baron of the oil companies, has not stood up in this House to express his concern.

Where are the Tory speakers who oppose this Bill? Where are the representatives of big business? Why do they not stand up and talk about universal programs for health and pension services?

On this side of the House we know what is happening. We saw this sort of thing start in the United States where Proposition 13 was adopted and, as a result, the social programs affecting the poor, the elderly and the sick, were the first to suffer. We know where the Tories stand on this type of legislation. They claimed to oppose Bill C-133. I should like to read from Hansard what the Conservative House Leader (Mr. Nielsen) said when asking about the business of the House on November 18. Referring to Bill C-133, as reported at page 20775 of Hansard, he said:

—relating to the pensions of public servants, whether he will bring it forward tomorrow so that we could deal with it expeditiously.

In other words, the Conservative Party wanted to deal with Bill C-133 expeditiously. But that is not what the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said at a public meeting in Ottawa, when he indicated that his Party opposed the Bill and would fight it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been good enough to give us a quotation from Hansard in support of his argument about what the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said. Perhaps he would be good enough to give us the citation for what he claims the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) care to reply to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis)?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, if there are any questions at the end of my speech I will be pleased to answer them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Where is Joe?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke has the floor.

Mr. Parker: At this time, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put forward the position of the New Democratic Party on pensions. We believe that an adequate pension is a right and not a privilege, and should be available to all senior citizens regardless of sex, marital status, income class or previous work history. An adequate pension system must have retirement incomes high enough so that retirees remain, as nearly as possible, on the same level as the average standard of living.

• (2110)

These are the kinds of things about which we are talking. Retirement incomes must be above the poverty line regardless of pre-retirement earnings. Pensions must be viewed as intergenerational transfers which connect the standard of living of pensioners to the general standard of living. Only the federal and provincial Governments are in a position to level taxes, remit the transfers and ensure supporting legislation to guarantee an adequate standard of living. Public pension schemes must be expanded immediately to guarantee a poverty-free, secure standard of living for Canada's two million senior citizens. This is the kind of reform we should be discussing in the House today, not the regressive legislation which the Government brought forward.

It is sad that all the blame should rest on the shoulders of the Minister of National Health and Welfare because she is a very compassionate Minister. Also it is sad that her colleagues have turned on her and left her to defend a policy which we all know is wrong, wrong, wrong. It must be stopped. I urge the Minister in the strongest possible way to rise in the House and request that this piece of legislation be withdrawn immediately, to stop any further suggestion of erosion of the cost of living which many senior citizens know they will be facing in the next couple of years.

There is no guarantee. The Government has given absolutely no guarantee that inflation will come down, yet it is telling senior citizens that they will have to bear the burden of reducing it. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) rose in the House and expressed his concern with regard to inflation and how it must be battled to the ground. That same Parliamentary Secretary did not bat an eye when the Government spent over $50,000 promoting its six and five program. It sent out stickers and pamphlets to our constituency offices promoting that program. Little did any of us realize that the old age pensioners of Canada would feel the bluntness and cruelty of the Government.

My Party will be opposing this legislation in the strongest possible terms. The Whip of the Conservative Party asked me whether our speakers would be rising in the House to speak on the Bill. We will rise to speak on it as long as it remains in the House. I have a fear that it may not be for very much longer because the Liberal Government is nervous about what is happening. It is splitting up the Bill, bringing it in one day and hiding it behind a piece of legislation the next day; bringing it forward another day and hiding it once again behind another piece of legislation. Liberal backbenchers do not have the courage or the decency to rise on behalf of their pensioners in their ridings and say that they have had enough and that it is time to get on with some real changes to the pension scheme which will help pensioners rather than take away benefits from them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in the debate this evening. I am certain that we have special responsibilities to speak on behalf of Canadian food producers, on behalf of small business and on behalf of the unemployed, particularly when there are nearly 1.5 million unemployed people at present. Throughout the debate on Bill

C-131 we have had an opportunity to speak on behalf of another sector of the community, the people who have contributed so much to the development of economic activity and stability in Canada, namely, our senior citizens.

I have a special interest in senior citizens because I come from an area in southwestern Ontario in which the City of St. Thomas is located, the capital city of my constituency. It may come as a surprise to some Hon. Members that this city of roughly 30,000 people has the second highest number of senior citizens on a percentage basis in the country, second only to the City of Victoria. Although it may not be very relevant to the Bill, I am pleased to have an opportunity to tell the House about that situation. Of course I would not let such an opportunity go by, within reason, without speaking on behalf of the senior citizens in my riding of Elgin.

Although Bill C-131 is only five pages in length, it is over 17 years in backwards thinking. It drives a nail in the heart of the pension program set forth in 1965 by the then Prime Minister, the late Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson. Basically, the Bill is part of the Government's six and five restraint program. It limits increases in the basic old age pension to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. Previously the pension was fully indexed to the rate of inflation as measured by the consumer price index. I firmly believe that was a commitment by the federal Government to the senior citizens of Canada and that it should be kept today.

Currently the old age pension amounts to $246.92 per month. That is hardly a princely sum. Since the pension is adjusted quarterly, by October 1984 pernsioners will be receiving some $274.83 per month if the Bill is enacted. Habitually, senior citizens have always had to bear the brunt of inflation because any adjustment in payment always came three months after the fact. Now they are being told to make a further sacrifice in a nation where inflation has been running at levels beyond 10 per cent. They are being told by the Government that they must accept the six and five restraint program. The gap between the six and five per cent and the real rate of inflation will mean a major sacrifice in the purchasing power of those who receive only the old age pension, those who do not receive any GIS or spouses' allowance. Currently, single persons over the age of 65 do not receive any Guaranteed Income Supplement of spouses' allowance if their total income including basic old age pension is greater the $8,912.40, a level of income $10 below the poverty line for single persons living in metropolitan areas with populations of 500,000 or more.

Today approximately 40 per cent of the 65 and over population live in metropolitan areas which include the Cities of Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Ottawa, Calgary, Winnipeg and Hamilton. Approximately 1.2 million of our senior citizens will be affected. Senior citizens will lose $290 over the next two years if inflation remains at 10 per cent. The other group detrimentally affected by this Bill are the elderly married couples with incomes of just over $15,000. They will suffer a loss of income over the next two years of some $580.

These are the cold facts of the Bill. It will be our senior citizens who will have to bear the full impact of these cuts in their pensions. They will have less money to spend on food and on accommodation, and consequently will have less money on which to live.

It is interesting and yet ironical that at the Liberal policy convention held recently on November 5, 1982, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

> When conditions change, Liberals adapt. When old solutions fail, Liberals think anew. Above all else, when economic diversity strikes, Liberals act.

Mr. Lewis: He means they cop out.

Mr. Wise: And act they have. The Liberals have acted by cancelling a contract. They have acted by breaking a promise and by disregarding a commitment and they have acted by tearing the heart out of our Old Age Security system.

At the same time as the Liberals were acting against our senior citizens, forcing the six and five restraint upon their incomes, these same Liberals were not acting with comparable dedication against other sectors in our society.

For example, on October 21, Treasury Board announced that certain CBC editorial employees would receive an increase in salary of some 11.5 per cent. As well, the same Liberal Government has refused to roll back the scheduled price increases in oil and gas costs. Oil prices will increase some 46 per cent over the next two years and natural gas prices will increase by nearly 50 per cent over that same period. Yet pensioners who own homes and drive cars will be expected to pay for these increases out of their six and five per cent increases in their pensions.

Again, on July 28, 1982, the National Energy Board, which is a Crown Corporation of this Government, announced a tentative increase in the tolls paid to TransCanada Pipelines. In reaching its decision, the National Energy Board approved the company's wage offer to its employees of 12 per cent in 1982 and 7 per cent in 1983.

Mr. Lewis: Shame.

Mr. Wise: On August 1, as a result of changes in the Customs and Excise Tax Act, certain excise taxes have been increased to the extent of 15 per cent. Unemployment insurance premiums are another example of what is paid by workers and employees. These premiums were increased by some 50 per cent in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Canada Pension Plan premiums were increased by 12.1 per cent. Over the weekend I was visited by a farmer from my riding who gave me some information which was sent out as recently as October 13, 1982. This information was in the form of a notice by CN Rail to certain industries and certain grain elevators regarding the private siding agreement. Although CN Rail is complying with the Government's six and five restraint program, the notice states that at the end of this program, these contracts will be renegotiated, reopened and, indeed, in the year commencing January 1, 1985, these private siding agreements will increase by nearly 40 per cent.

VIA Rail is another example where increases on certain fares have been increased, not by 6 per cent but by 10 per cent. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority authorized an increase of 10 per cent in seaway tolls for the next year. Rents charged by the federal Government have increased by 25 per cent in certain cases, and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has increased its rents by some 37 per cent in certain cases as well. Although Canada Post has announced a 6 per cent increase in postal rates for 1983, it should be remembered that less than a year ago that same Crown Corporation, Canada Post, received a 76.5 per cent increase on the understanding that mail service delivery could be improved. I wonder if the people in rural Canada who have had their Saturday delivery discontinued and other people who have had the indication that Canada Post will be closing more of its wickets on Saturdays would really agree that service has been improved.

These exceptions make a sham of the Government's six and five program. If the Liberal Government can afford to make these exemptions, it can afford to exempt our senior citizens from this imposition as well.

The Government indicated that it will save between $15 million and $20 million in this move. I would not want to be associated with a certain Liberal who commented at one time, "What's a million?" I think $1 million is a tremendous amount of money, particularly if it happens to be public funds. Certainly, $15 million or $20 million, which the Minister on behalf of the Government hopes to save out of this measure, is a great deal of money. But without a great deal of difficulty, I am sure this Government could easily come up with the additional moneys required to pay the full indexing in payments to our senior citizens.

I could cite a list of examples as long as your arm, Mr. Speaker, but I must remind the Liberals that the Government has spent $150 million on a defunct Ottawa computer company, another $100 million on a monument in Algeria.

Mr. Lumley: Come on.

Mr. Wise: I see the former minister of international trade is getting a little edgy. But it costs about $1 million a month to keep the Jetstars flying. The Government spent some $17 million last year on the purchase of paper alone. It spent $3.5 million on taxi fares. The Government spent $16.7 million on telegrams and cables. Hospitality amounted to over $10 million. An amount of $50 million was spent on photocopying. And advertising came to some $63 million.

I do not think it would create a great deal of difficulty with a bit of mediocre management to come up with $15 million or $20 million to honour the commitment to the senior citizens.

Let us take a look at the travels costs of some of the Ministers of the Crown. We find that the travel costs of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) increased by 350 per cent. The travel costs of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) have increased 218 per cent. The former minister of energy, mines and resources, who is now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), increased his travel costs by some 263 per cent. The list goes on and on. And what about the former minister of national revenue? His travel costs have increased by 274 per cent. I want to be honest and fair about citing some of these travel costs of Ministers. After checking on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin), I find that at least she can claim that her increased travel costs are well within the six and five program. I believe her increases in travel costs amounted to some 3.5 per cent. Her increase in travel costs should be a lesson to other Ministers. It is possible with a bit of effort to stay within those guidelines when it comes to travel costs. I should also indicate that the travel costs of the former minister of veterans affairs and the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) are down considerably, by about 49 per cent.

With this type of attitude, it can be seen that this Government has a great contrast in the way it manages its affairs, the way in which it treats senior citizens and the way in which the Government treats its friends. For example, Joel Bell, the newly appointed President of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, has received a ten-year, no-cut contract from Cabinet. Our professional athletes are not granted such contracts any longer. His qualification for such a contract, as far as I can tell, is that he was a former economic adviser to the Prime Minister. Our former colleague and my friend, the Hon. Judd Buchanan, the former Liberal MP from London, was able to arrange a sweetheart deal for his company—

• (2130)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect, the Chair is having some difficulty relating the Hon. Member's remarks to the Bill before the House.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I respect your intervention, but what I am trying to establish is the fact that there is a difference between the Government's attitude toward our senior citizens and its attitude toward people with whom it is dealing. I am trying to make that case before us tonight.

Another example in making this case concerns Arthur Erickson, a Vancouver architect and friend of the Prime Minister who was selected to design the new Canadian Embassy in Washington despite the fact that his name was not on the list of those architectural firms recommended to Cabinet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rule of relevance is difficult. It is a difficult decision for the Chair, but I would appeal to the Hon. Member to direct his remarks more specifically to the Bill before us.

Mr. Wise: Again, I appreciate your interjection, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that some of my comments perhaps create some uneasiness in Liberal Members.

Let me continue by saying that at the same time the Liberal Government extends such generosity to its friends, it is cutting the pensions of many of our elderly people. Rather than enacting this ill-conceived Bill which attempts to help bail out this present Government from the consequences of economic and fiscal mismanagement, the Government should be looking at other ways of pension reform.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order. With respect to relevancy of the Hon. Member's speech, I could perhaps draw his attention to the fact that this Bill is part of the broad scheme which is not to save money but part of the six and five program which is designed to reduce inflation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is making a point of debate, not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) has the floor.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that my hon. friend across the floor is somewhat on edge. I have some knowledge of the input and representations that are being made to me as a Member of Parliament representing the constituency of Elgin. My hon. friend's constituency is within 100 miles of my riding. I am sure that his uneasiness is caused by the fact that he is receiving similar representation from his senior citizen constituents.

I have more latitude because I do not occupy the position of Parliamentary Secretary at the moment. I appreciate that he has a definite obligation to cite the official Government position. I am not hampered by those same guidelines which govern my hon. friend.

The population in Canada of those over 65 has risen by more than 600,000 in the last ten years. This age group has been growing at the rate of 3 per cent per year. This means that without any increase in real benefits the economy will have to grow 3 per cent each year just to provide the necessary revenue to support pensions for these people.

If we do not move on pension reform, we will find ourselves encouraging a far larger public debt. Therefore, we should encourage people to begin planning for their retirement from the moment they enter the labour force. We should encourage people to prepare private pension plans instead of totally relying on the Canada Pension Plan. This would involve making private pensions plans and personal savings instruments such as Registered Retirement Savings Plans more accessible to people who have to move from one job to another, who work part time or drop out of the labour force, as is the case in particular for women in our society who do so to raise families. It means making it possible for women to work in the home to build up pension entitlements in their own right. It means early investing in private pension plans. These are but a few measures which the Government should be undertaking.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said, every year we let slip by without action makes it more and more difficult to avoid real crisis when the elderly become the largest single aid group in the population. If we fail to prepare for it, we will have no excuse because the warning has already been given in the age group statistics of the 1981 census.

Unfortunately, this Government apparently does not want to prepare for the future. Its complete lack of vision can be seen in this Bill. This Government believes that our senior citizens can do with less. My colleagues and I do not believe that single pensioners earning just over $8,900 or married pensioners earning just over $15,000 can do with any less than they are receiving now.

Again, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) stated in his eloquent speech on November 18, as reported on page 20812 of Hansard:

> Senior citizens have already paid the price and we should not ask them to pay more. They should have the right to live well now.

That sums up our position. Our senior citizens have already sacrificed enough for the benefit of our country through their hard work, their dedication, their spirit and, last but not least, through their taxes. In return for their sacrifices this Government now plans to cut many of their pensions as a result of the measures contained in Bill C-131. We look at the way Government issues exemptions and exceptions from its six and five program for other federally controlled sectors of the economy and the way it deals with its close friends. This contrasting treatment is nothing more than blatant hypocrisy on the part of this Government. Our senior citizens deserve better treatment and they need better treatment. Bill C-131 is untimely. It is the cancellation of a contract and the breaking of a promise. It shows complete disregard for a longstanding commitment and is nothing less than an insult to the senior citizens of this country.

The end result of this Bill will be the removal of benefits to a sector of our society which needs it the most at a time when they can afford it the least.

It is a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to speak on behalf of the senior citizens of this country and the senior citizens of my riding of Elgin. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the Government Members opposite as well as the Minister of National Health and Welfare for whom I have a great deal of respect, that, in all honesty, I must indicate that I will certainly welcome the opportunity to vote against this Bill.

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Members opposite this evening, not only the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) but the Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) and the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) as well.

During the next 20 minutes I would like to clarify some of the statements we have heard about the Bill with which we are now concerned. It seems to me that Members of the Opposition have done a disservice to the elderly in Canada. There have been many misrepresentations about the intent of Bill C-131 toward our elderly. I realize that Members on all sides tend to make speeches in the House which are then mailed to their constituents. I venture to say that if many of the speeches made by Members earlier this evening are mailed to their constituents, they will certainly receive a lot of misinformation.

I will begin by commenting on some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke which he made earlier this evening. He talked about the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) not being very compassionate toward the poor of this country or toward the elderly in our nation. In my view, he went on to mix two very important themes which the Liberal Government has had since the speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980. One must take into context what is said when one begins not to differentiate pension reform as it was called in the Throne Speech from Bill C-131 which is before us this evening. He said that, as an example, the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who is responsible for the Status of Women, should be ashamed that half the women in or near poverty will be adversely affected by the Bill. He said that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had reneged on her commitment to universality of social programs in this country.

Let me just single out those two as examples. The 50 per cent in or near poverty will not be affected by the contents of Bill C-131. We on this side of the House have consistently said that one must understand the social security system that is in place in Canada today to understand properly the context of the six and five program as it relates to our elderly, in particular. It goes without saying that the Old Age Security is the first basis of protection for our senior citizens.

I return to this fact becuse he said that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not a compassionate person, and that was a reflection on the Liberal Party. However, it has been a very compassionate Liberal Party which has largely laid the foundation for our social security system in Canada today. Whether one is in the lower income scale or whether one is an elderly person in this country, the Liberal Party has had a tradition of protecting such people who need help most.

As I said, the first basis of our senior citizens' protection is known as Old Age Security. Any person over the age of 65 is eligible for Old Age Security without any attempt at a means test. In addition, if one is among the 53 per cent who qualifies by a means test, then one is eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement plan. Over the years, of course, we have added a protection relating to the spouses' allowance program for those people who are between the ages of 60 and 65 and who, because of the need for extra money, are eligible for a special allowance.

In discussing those three areas of concern I should say that I think the elderly in Canada should be made aware of exactly what Bill C-131 means to the average elderly person in this country. What we have said is that for the unfortunate 53 per cent of Canadians in need there will be no reduction or capping of the indexation of the Guaranteed Income Supplement plan. That will continue to go with the rate of inflation. The only ones who will be affected by the Bill are those who qualify for Old Age Security on the basis of age.

Let me further explain the need of people who are over the age of 65 who do not qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. They, too, have a vested interest in the six and five program which the Government has chosen as an economic course to follow. For instance, many people over the age of 65 who qualify for Old Age Security may also qualify for a private pension plan from a private source. The greatest difficulty involving private pension plans has been the annual rate of inflation in Canada. Many Canadians are fortunate enough to have a private pension plan, but when inflation rises by 10 per cent, there are very few who happen to have a cost of living allowance added to their private pension.

Let me separate these three very important factors under Bill C-131. First, it will only affect those people over the age of 65 who qualify only for old age security. Second, it will not affect those who are eligible for spouses' allowance or Guaranteed Income Supplement. They will be maintained, fully indexed, ensuring protection against income loss.

I would like to return to some of the things mentioned by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke tonight. He spoke of the lack of commitment by the Liberal Party and by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to pension reform, yet if anyone has been active in this whole area, it has been the Minister of National Health and Welfare, along with the Liberal Party. We began with a national conference on pension reform back in April of 1981. We have proceeded by going across this country to explain the idea behind pension reform. We are presently in the process of developing a Green Paper to look after that matter.

I noticed that the Hon. Member for Elgin also mixed up the two areas, private pension reform and Bill C-131, which is before the House tonight. The Government indicated its commitment to private pension reform in the Speech from the Throne in April of 1980. We have never wavered from our desire for pension reform. I am sure there will be some progress in the reform of private pension systems before the present mandate is finished.

If I can, I want to further explain the rationale linking economic and social policy. It is very important to realize the kind of world in which we were living in the first six months of 1982. I know that many of the Hon. Members of the Opposition tend and wish to blame most of the economic conditions presently facing the Canadian people on the Canadian Government. Let us consider some of the economic conditions existing today and those that existed six months ago in the OECD countries. Six months ago the inflation rate in Canada was running between 10 per cent and 12 per cent. In the U.K. it has been running at 14 per cent. Our unemployment rate six to eight months ago was hovering around the 10 per cent mark. Were other OECD countries doing any better?

The inflation rate in France, in Italy and in the U.K. were running approximately the same or higher than the rate in Canada. In the United States there was roughly the same percentage of unemployment, but, admittedly, it had a better track record in controlling inflation. I suppose we had many alternatives, in terms of economic policy, by way of which to address those issues. Some people in the Opposition were calling for drastic Government program cuts, but they did not wish to specify in which programs they wished to have cuts made. They were calling on others, particularly the Government, to increase the size of the deficit and to stimulate the economy, despite the fact that they knew that would have added to inflationary pressures in Canada which, in turn, would have disastrous effects on productivity and on our ability as a trading nation to export our goods.

Who has the vested interest in high inflation? Who gains by high inflation rates? I would venture to say it is not the elderly who gain by high inflation rates or the poor in our society, who are largely non-unionized and whose wages are unprotected by cost of living arrangements. It is mainly the larger groups in our society, which are protected by cost of living allowances, by union contracts and by their companies, which are protected from the ravages of inflation. I then say to myself, if they are the only ones who gain, how can Hon. Members call the Minister of National Health and Welfare an uncompassionate woman, or say that the Liberal Party does not stand for compassion? If we are to be compassionate in the world, we must ensure that the ones who need protection the most are protected by Government, which is a fundamental requirement. Those people are the ones on fixed incomes, and I would assume that most people over the age of 65 fall into that category. We must also protect those who are non-unionized and the poor.

How will we do that through Bill C-131? In terms of our compassion and the protection shown toward those who are poor, non-unionized and on fixed incomes, I would suggest that it is evidenced by the fact that we have not touched those people on Guaranteed Income Supplements and we have not touched the spouses' allowance by capping the indexation, and these people will be fully protected from inflation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has moved, along with the Government, to help those who need help the most.

Admittedly, some people over the ages of 65 will share some of the burden of the six and five program. It seems to me that it is a moot point to determine who in Canada will bear the brunt of the six and five program. We can all share in the success of the six and five program. I do not believe there is any reasonable Member of the Opposition who firmly believes that a 10 per cent and 12 per cent world is better than a six and five world. If the economic course of six and five, as set out by the Government, is the best one to follow, then we must all share in it. Admittedly, people receiving Old Age Security will share some of the cost, but I would like to correct some of the information given out by Hon. Members of the Opposition. I am sure it was not done deliberately, but I think that the record has to be correct as to what will be the cost borne by those people over the age of 65.

The Hon. Member from Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) mentioned in her speech that there will be 1.1 million Old Age Security recipients who do not receive Guaranteed Income Supplements and who will lose $290 over the next two years, $70 in 1983 and $220 in 1984, due to the proposed limit on indexation.

My understanding is that the Member for Kingston and the Islands based most of her figures on a release from the National Council of Welfare shortly after the June 28 Budget. The National Council of Welfare assumed an inflation rate of 11 per cent in 1982, 10 per cent in 1983 and 9 per cent in 1984. I am happy to point out to the House that largely as a result of the political direction and the economic direction that we gave in that June 28 Budget to a six and five world, we have in fact had success in the last four to five months. The numbers projected over the years 1983 and 1984 significantly reduce the cost to those Old Age Security recipients. According to recent estimates, the average pensioner receiving Old Age Security will lose only $29 in 1983 and $52 in 1984. That is going to be some reduction to those people—we are not trying to dispute that. Nor are we trying to say that the limit of $8,900 makes that person particularly rich in our society. Where those people on OAS have a vested interest in the six and five program, and I am speaking of those people who only receive OAS, is that large numbers of them have access to some form of a private pension plan that is not indexed. If we are successful in the six and five program in reducing inflation from a 12 per cent and 10 per cent world to a 6 per cent and 5 per cent one, they will make up that money by having the income from their private pension source not subject to such high inflation.

If you are needy, poor, over the age of 65, require the Guaranteed Income Supplement or spouse's allowance there will be no reduction, no capping on the indexation of those programs, and I want to stress that point.

The Member for St. Catharines and a large number of the Members of the Conservative Party pointed out a lot of the wastage in Government programs. It is not only the Opposition who are concerned about wastage in Government programs. We, too, have a vested interest as Members of the Government side. Many times in the House during this last six months either the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has welcomed suggestions by Members of the Opposition in areas and programs in which they feel there is wastage. Both have been willing to investigate those programs and eliminate that wastage where it is required.

I think what we have to realize is that under an Old Age Security system you have to be aware of the size of the program to put this in perspective. I notice that the Member from Elgin mentioned that there was a Cabinet Minister who spent some $177,000 last year in travel across the country. I believe the average person sitting at his home would probably be astounded at that amount of money being spent, but I think in order for us to be effective as the national Government we have to get the message of the Government programs and policies, to all regions of the country, and receive their input. In order to do that we cannot just stay in Ottawa and not go to Vancouver or the Maritimes or the other regions of Quebec and consult with the various groups—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member again I am calling to his attention the rule of relevance, and speaking to the subject matter of the Bill.

Mr. Frith: I thought it was relevant, but I appreciate your ruling on it. I just wanted to point out that the Government of Canada, through its programs and through its economic direction, has developed a very successful program under six and five. It has been successful for the last four or five months.

Mr. Lewis: It has done wonders for Sudbury.

Mr. Frith: I think the majority of Canadians now realize that all groups in our society are going to have to get behind the Government programs to develop a six and five world. I think if we are realistic and intelligent enough about it, regardless of which Party we represent in this House, we must realize that if we can get inflation rates down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in this country in the next two years, the social security system will be much stronger in this nation than it is under a 12 per cent or 10 per cent world.

I would hope that in the ensuing debate over the next few days the Members of the Opposition would not give out erroneous statements about the effects of Bill C-131 and not bring in extemporaneous debate on the need for national pension reform, which we have no doubt is required in this country. Senior citizens are worried in this time of economic uncertainty; they worry about the fact that they are on a fixed income, and when they hear a Member of Parliament giving out information they assume that information is correct.

It is very important that the research people supply correct information on the background for speeches, so we do not have a deluge of letters such as have been received by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and various Members opposite, stating all kinds of untruths with respect to Bill C-131 and the intentions of Government.

This Government is going to win the hearts and the minds of the Canadian people with the six and five program, and the social security system will be that much better for it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I just have one comment for the Liberal Member who just sat down—you have got to be kidding!

We are debating Bill C-131 tonight, which is an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2) and the first reading was on October 28, 1982.

Under the explanatory notes it says here:

Clause 1. New.

This amendment would limit the indexation of the pension to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984.

We all know we have an inflation rate of about 10 per cent. That clearly indicates how senior citizens will fall behind in a very short period under an arrangment like that.

I want to congratulate some of my colleagues in the Conservative Party on the excellent contribution they have made to this debate on the Old Age Security Act and in particular my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) who, when speaking a couple of days ago on the Bill, stated:

Mr. Speaker, normally I receive a great deal of pleasure in speaking to the various Bills which come into this House, but this afternoon I speak to Bill C-131 with a certain degree of sadness and regret.

All of us on this side of the House support that statement.

Because of this Bill I see the destruction of what I think is a fairly good pension system for Canada. This is certainly a backward step with Bill C-131.

The Member for Okanagan North went on to say:

Our pension system rests on four tiers. We have the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement which give a basic amount of money to people who retire, we have the Canada Pension Plan which supplements that amount of money for those people in the working force, and we have private pension plans, which are many and varied. Finally, of course, we have personal savings, which include our house and mortgage and RRSPs. This system provides a fairly good pension system in this country.

He goes on to quote statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare which supported those pensions, but this Bill certainly takes the steam out of anything she said in the past.

May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF APPLIED SYSTEMS ANALYSIS. (B) ATTENDANCE OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS VICE-PRESIDENT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, following my questions concerning Mr. Michael Kirby's attendance at a recent meeting of the International Institute of Applied Systems Analysis held in Austria this month, I received a letter from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Lapierre) noting that the members of IIASA, as it is known in its acronymical form, are "non-Governmental organizations". The letter further states that the United States Government for "primarily budgetary reasons" withdrew its support from IIASA and also that Canada makes an annual contribution to this organization of about $400,000 per year.

• (2200)

Mr. Kirby, according to this same letter, was there as a representative of the Canadian committee. Mr. Kirby apparently is a veritable renaissance man. Like Benvenuto Cellini or Leonardo Da Vinci. This man appears to be an expert on everything: On the Constitution, can anyone forget the famous memorandum; or on the Atlantic fishery, can anyone forget his recommendations there, although some of us would like to; or lately on railways and transportation, since he is now heavily involved in CN as a vice-president? Apparently the man has time left to contribute to the world scientific community. He is truly a remarkable man. Of course, I am not surprised, considering some of his illustrious namesakes, whom we all know. However, I am not fully satisfied with the raison d'être for us being involved with this particular organization, Mr. Kirby notwithstanding.

First of all, it appears that the withdrawal of the United States from this organization was not for budgetary reasons primarily, as the explanation stated, but rather out of apprehension that a Soviet official who occupied an administrative post at IIASA was involved in intelligence activities. An American official was quoted recently in a scientific publication, that the Reagan administration has been concerned that Soviets and Eastern Europe scientists had access to Western data bases through western computers and also that Soviet scientists working at that institute might not be bona fide scientists.

In fairness, this is not an unanimous view in the United States scientific community, but it is significant that the highly respected Royal Society in Great Britain is also getting out of this organization at the end of this year, adding further weight to my contention that our country has better things to do with its money and its bureaucrats than taking part in this organization.

These withdrawals were caused by Soviet abuses of the society's stated aims. The Soviet Union placed into its administration an espionage agent name Arkady Belozerov who was identified by a Norwegian double agent as his Soviet control. Consider as well recent reports from Reuters News Agency which quotes from a United States Senate report. Again I quote:

> So dominant a role does American technology place in the Soviet's military and industrial scheme that it is likely that they have come to think of U.S. research and development programs as their own ... Acquisition of American technology has enabled the Kremlin to make giant strides in military strength at a minimum of risk in investment and resources.

This type of information, however, has not impressed one of our federal bureaucrats. Dr. John Stone, a policy advisor in the Department of Science and Technology, who spelled out publicly on behalf of the federal Government that Canada will continue to support the work of the institute, as the criticisms of the institute are hogwash and inspired by new McCarthyites in the Reagan administration. Thirty years after Senator McCarthy, officials and even Ministers in this Government seek to confuse and frustrate legitimate questions on security by this kind of intellectual hogwash.

What troubles me is that the continuing participation by our country, officially or unofficially, in IIASA exemplifies our Government's naivete in its dealings with Communist countries.

It accepts all source of dubious characters attached to diplomatic postings here in Canada who come from Eastern Europe, while allowing Warsaw Pact countries, for example, to supply us with their people who may or may not be working in Canada's best interests in those locations where we have embassies and consulates.

We are not at all interested, it would seem, in correcting the situation whereby the Socialist Republic of Czechoslovakia pressures Canadian citizens who have present or former connections with that country, and our Government continues to ignore the passport problems, and tolerates the practice by some Czech-Canadians of travelling to Eastern Europe on Eastern European passports. I know of Public Servants, former Czech citizens, who use Czech passports validated by the Czech Consulate in Montreal on their trips to Czechoslovakia, and use their Canadian passports on the return trips to conceal some of their travel details. We seem to be the leading example among Western countries of Lenin's famous doctrine, "that capitalists will ultimately sell the Communists the very rope that Communists will use to hang them."

I do not think anyone advocates an attitude of complete hostility or paranoia toward Communist countries, but surely we should show a little concern for the area of high technology that the Soviets and their allies are so anxious to obtain from us, in all probability to use against us. We should also, I suggest, have the proper governmental officials speak to people like our Dr. John Stone, who apparently feels free to make remarks of a quite distasteful nature about the administration of President Reagan. I will be watching with great interest to see how IIASA progresses, and I trust that sometime soon we will either achieve some tangible benefits for the world scientific community and, hopefully, for our own country, or we will cease supporting it. Perhaps my hon. friend, when he responds to my questions, will tell me just what benefits we have received so far and how long he thinks we can justify supporting IIASA at a time when we are desperately short of research and development funds in our own country.

I remind the House that one large company in West Germany, for example, the Siemens Company, probably has more resources and more people working in its corporate structure than we have in our entire country, yet we feel quite free to continue to financially support this organization under these conditions.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start off by telling my hon. friend that I share his view on the experience and reputation of Mr. Michael Kirby. He is a remarkable man, and that is why I am very proud to see that he has agreed to serve with this institute and participate in its work. We all agree that he is a distinguised maritimer and he would not participate in any activities which would threaten either the security or reputation of Canada.

We know for a fact that the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis is a multilateral non-governmental research centre, established in 1972 to promote the development and application of systems analysis to the complex management problems facing contemporary society. My hon. friend refers to espionage agents and Soviet abuses. It is very hard for us to understand how an espionage agent could be useful when we know that all IIASA's work is non-confidential and published openly. If the Soviet Union needs an agent to read that stuff, I tell my hon. friend one is not needed, and there is no reason for him to play the Sherlock Holmes game—because in this case this is all public information. Any member of any country can use this material.

In keeping with the nature of the institute, the members are all non-governmental organizations. Canada was a founding member and is represented by the Canadian committee for IIASA. There are 14 other national member organizations from the Soviet Union, the United States, Japan and many European countries. The U.S. government has, according to our information, for primarily budgetary reasons withdrawn its support for IIASA. If the Hon. Member has other facts, we will be happy to check them for him.

Canada's contribution has been $400,000, and it is the responsibility of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) to decide every year what the contribution will be. The Hon. Member will certainly have the opportunity when the Estimates are brought in to ask questions of the Minister on the relevancy of supplying moneys to this institute. But I want to reassure him that we do not have any worries about any information which could be gathered by some foreign sources. We are proud to say that it is published, non-confidential and for the use of any country that wants to use it.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—STUDY OF INCOME LEVEL APPLICABLE TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE. (B) REQUEST THAT ADJUSTMENTS BE MADE RETROACTIVE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue in more detail a question I directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) on November 19, 1982, dealing with the possibility of raising the casual earnings exemptions for recipients of war veterans allowances, which are presently set at $3,100 for married veterans and $2,100 for single veterans, to a more reasonable level.

The War Veterans Allowance was designed to provide a little extra for veterans who could not claim disabilities under war veterans compensation, and to acknowledge their sacrifices. The War Veterans Allowance Act was brought in 52 years ago. At that time, it was subject to a means test and paid $20 a month for veterans 60 years of age. The Old Age Pension established in 1927 was greatly increased over the years. The means test was removed from the basic pension, and the age was reduced from 70 to 65 years. Yet, the War Veterans Allowance qualifications have remained the same. They have kept the maximum income level at a rate which is certainly unreasonable for 1982. The allowance has changed from being that something extra to being a payment available for people with incomes below the poverty line. This was not the original intention.

Prime Minister Robert Borden in a speech made to Canadian troops at Vimy Ridge in 1917, stated:

> The Government and the country will consider it their first duty to see that a proper appreciation of your effort and of your courage is brought to the notice of your people at home . . . and that no man, whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders, will have just cause to reproach the Government for having broken faith with the men who won and the men who died.

This Government has not taken up that duty of showing proper appreciation of our war veterans' efforts of courage. Many of them now reproach their Members of Parliament explaining the unfairness of the present annual allowable income level for War Veterans Allowances. We must realize, and the Government obviously does not, that a person who works for 30 or 40 years deserves his share of the national wealth and productivity. Our veterans are now older and should be justly rewarded for their years of service to this country. Many, being between the ages of 18 and 24, gave the best years of their lives in service for our country.

I approached the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the issue of annual allowable incomes on two separate occasions. On July 15, 1982, the Minister agreed that the annual allowable income for veterans receiving War Veterans Allowances was too low and he promised that steps would be taken to correct the situation. When asked what the new limit would be and when the new amendments would be made, the Minister replied that he was studying the possibility of raising the casual earnings exemption for recipients. He assured me that he was hopeful new legislation would be introduced by the fall of 1982.

On November 19, Mr. Speaker, I questioned the Minister on the present status of his study and when legislation would be passed concerning the annual allowable income for war veterans. The Minister then stated, or rather he enlightened me, that legislation does not have to be passed on this issue; rather an adjustment can be made through the War Veterans Allowance Board. If indeed it is simply an adjustment that needs to be made, why has action not been taken? In the name of all of our war veterans, what is the Minister of Veterans Affairs waiting for? Fall has passed and winter is here, and we have not as yet heard any results from the alleged study. I feel very strongly that the veterans have waited long enough, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs to give this matter a priority status and report to the House without further delay.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's observations. I am somewhat taken aback by the excessive comments which would seem to indicate that the policies of the Government have been less than adequate in terms of its concern and commitment to the wellbeing of our veterans, the non-partisan attitude I have found in committee and to our approaches to make sure our veterans receive the best there is.

• (2215)

Further to the Hon. Member's question of November 19, 1982, respecting casual earnings exemptions for recipients of War Veterans Allowance, the Minister indicated in the House that the casual earnings levels were last adjusted in July, 1980. He also indicated that he had asked the Chairman of the War Veterans Allowance Board to review the total area of casual earnings and to bring forward a report.

The Minister expects to receive this report shortly. In addition to the report from the War Veterans Allowance Board, it is anticipated that draft amendments to the War Veterans Allowance regulations and Civilian War Allowance regulations will be brought forward. Hon. Members can be assured that action will be taken on the report as expeditiously as possible.

The Hon. Member also asked the Minister for some assurance that if the legislation was brought forth after 1982, it would refer back and include 1982. As has already been brought to the attention of the Hon. Member, War Veterans Allowance continues to be fully indexed on a quarterly basis.

We can make amendments to the regulations as recommended by the War Veterans Allowance Board, and I am hopeful that Hon. Members on all sides of the House will support the recommendations. In this regard the Chairman advised the Minister that the proposed amendments are based upon the most current information available.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to clarify one point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not in order at this point.

PIPELINES—PROPOSED WATER PIPELINE FROM LAKE DIEFENBAKER TO REGINA, SASKATCHEWAN. (B) REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on November 2, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what progress had been made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) in his discussions with the Province of Saskatchewan, particularly with regard to a proposal to build a pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to Buffalo Pound. Such a pipeline could supply Regina and Moose Jaw with a much needed supply of fresh, clean water.

This project became a major topic of discussion during the fall municipal elections in Regina. All major candidates running for aldermen and for the position of mayor supported it. In fact, the City of Regina committed itself to support the pipeline financially. There is an arrangement between the workers of Ipsco and the management of the plant to back the idea of a pipeline. They have formed a committee in Regina, the Good Clean Water Committee. In fact, it is an example of labour and management in co-operation. The company is willing to sell the pipe at cost. Approximately 600 jobs will be created in the manufacturing of the pipe and some 570 jobs will be created laying it. It is a project for which there is a tremendous need. Obviously now is the time to build the pipeline.

The response of the Prime Minister to my question was to say the least somewhat flippant. The need for a source of fresh water has been growing in the City of Regina and in fact in the City of Moose Jaw for a number of years. As the City of Regina in particular has grown, so has the need for new, clean, fresh water grown.

A study was commissioned jointly by the City of Regina, the Province of Saskatchewan and I believe the City of Moose Jaw at the beginning of 1981. That committee reported some 14 months later. It recommended that the new source of fresh water for the Moose Jaw and Regina area be delivered and that such a project be undertaken. During the election, the New Democratic Party of Saskatchewan committed itself to bringing a new source of fresh water to Regina and Moose Jaw during the next four years.

The reason the project should proceed now is that over 1,000 steelworkers have been laid off at the Ipsco plant. Large public projects such as the pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to the Buffalo Pound should be undertaken in periods when there is high unemployment. Therefore, the time to undertake the project is now.

When the Prime Minister responded to my supplementary question, obviously he was not aware that Ipsco had never experienced such a massive lay-off of its workers until the Tories became the Government in Saskatchewan. That makes the difference and it is the reason the project should be undertaken, because of the large number of unemployed workers. This is a way by which these workers could be put back to work. Rather than having them take home unemployment insurance payments, they could be earning real wages. They could be productive and produce pipe needed for this project. Therefore, I was somewhat dismayed at the flippant remarks by the Prime Minister. I hope the Government will take this opportunity tonight to indicate whether it has had further discussions with representatives of the Province of Saskatchewan and whether we can expect an announcement before Christmas that this project will proceed, so that the workers at IPSCO will have some assurance that there will be some work for them at least in the New Year.

• (2220)

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a proposal was indeed put forward last summer to the Saskatchewan Government by the Regina based company Ipsco to construct a pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to Regina and Moose Jaw to provide fresh water to these two areas. The proposed 90 to 100 mile pipeline would not only provide fresh water to the municipalities, but could provide employment for Ipsco workers who have been laid off, or who may face lay-off if conditions in the economy do not improve.

The Saskatchewan Government has received the proposal and established a one-man task force to look into provincial water problems. A report was to have been submitted to the provincial Government in November, but the deadline has been extended until the first week of December. Recommendations on the pipeline can be expected from the task force. Our understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that the Saskatchewan Government will review the recommendations brought forward in the task force report and then decide on options for solutions.

In the meantime, federal Government support has been given to the task force by providing the technical expertise of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Agency. The PFRA will advise the task force on water development needs and potential in Saskatchewan. Since the federal Government has not yet been officially approached by the provincial Government for involvement in the proposed pipeline construction, we have not participated in any discussions with the province. The Government, however, would be willing to consider any recommendations from the Saskatchewan Government that would provide better water, as well as increased employment opportunities to that area.

As Hon. Members know, the federal Government has recently signed an agreement with the Saskatchewan Government to increase employment in that province. The New Employment Expansion and Development Agreement will provide $15 million for employment in Saskatchewan. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who is also Chairman of the Western Affairs Committee of Cabinet, has noted the co-operative nature of the negotiations on the NEED Program. Water and soil conservation in the Prairie has been examined as a priority issue by Members of the Western Affairs Committee. We will thus be open to recommendations from the province concerning the pipeline initiative.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

PIPELINES

PROPOSED NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in order to put the matter to rest, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Government admit what everyone knows anyway, that it has no intention, and never had any intention to cross the St. Lawrence River with the natural gas pipeline, and that the whole thing was a political bamboozle designed to take in the Maritimes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE JUDICIARY

SECOND SUPREME COURT JUSTICE SOUGHT FOR NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the workload of the single Supreme Court Justice of the Northwest Territories has reached inhuman proportions; whereas the backlog of cases is increasing daily, so that justice is being delayed to the extent that justice is being denied; and whereas the Minister of Justice has been aware of the problem for five years but has not acted to effect its remedy, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That a second Supreme Court Justice for the Northwest Territories be appointed immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS

LEVEL OF CAPITAL COST TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. While the Government calls for equity and restraint and sets limits on wages and salaries of 6 per cent, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) extends the provision for oil companies to write off virtually 100 per cent of their exploration costs. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the House hereby calls upon the Minister of Finance to restore the capital cost allowance for small business to its pre-November 1981 level, since if any sector requires help these days it is Canada's small business community, not the major oil companies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

COST OF DAVEY-JOYAL COMMITTEE PUBLICATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, this morning there was delivered to my office, and to the offices of other Members, an expensively-bound annotated book of propaganda material claiming to be the semi-annual report on the progress of the six and five program, from the Davey-Joyal Committee. The Committee has no parliamentary authority whatsoever, yet it apparently spends public money. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House notes with dismay the enormous waste of money expended by the Davey-Joyal Committee, operating under the orders of the Prime Minister, in producing and delivering propaganda material for the Liberal Party, including the TV musings of the Prime Minister, and that this House calls upon the Prime Minister today on motions to explain to the House under what authority a committee designated as the Davey-Joyal Committee should be entitled to expend public money.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

CALL FOR DISBANDMENT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the establishment of the Macdonald Royal Commission on the economy was a shrug of the shoulders in the direction of the more than 1.5 million Canadians out of work, and a slap in the face to the already excessively tax-burdened workers who will have to pay the estimated $10 million to $15 million cost of the Commission. If the Government is allowed to continue its destructive economic policies, in three years the number of unemployed will have doubled and those Canadians actually able to pay their spiralling taxes will have become an endangered species. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government immediately disband this cosmetic and costly Commission and, to demonstrate its trust in Canadians, call a general election which would permit the people of Canada to choose the right solution to our economic ills.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

FOSTERING OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, at a time when the Government proposes to spend $500 million to create 60,000 temporary jobs, the Canadian shipbuilding industry, with the capacity to create 15,000 permanent jobs, is deprived of a supportive government policy and faces unfair competition from foreign shipbuilders. Accordingly I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Government give urgent priority to the formulation and implementation of a shipbuilding policy that will foster a viable Canadian shipbuilding industry and create jobs for Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SASKATCHEWAN CONSERVATIVES' POSITION ON CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, in order to be of aid and comfort to my good friends and colleagues to my right, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Saskatchewan Minister of Agriculture said that the Saskatchewan Conservative caucus and Cabinet is split down the middle on the Crow rate, and in case the split might apply to the seven Conservative Members of Parliament from Saskatchewan, at a time when the federal Liberal Cabinet is drawing up plans to cancel the rates, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That the House request the Minister of Labour to appoint three and a half Conservative MPs from Saskatchewan and that well-known Crow opponent, the Hon. Member for Lisgar, to a four and a half member mediation commission chaired by that Hon. Member to help Saskatchewan Conservatives resolve their disunity so that we can see where the heck they stand.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

EXCISE TAX ON FUEL USED FOR HOME HEATING AND AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is a plea on behalf of millions of Canadian home owners whose home heating costs have escalated because of the taxation policies of the Government. It has been estimated that excise taxes comprise almost one-third of the total costs of home heating fuel and farm energy. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the Minister of Finance ease the burden for millions of Canadians by eliminating the excise tax on fuel used for home heating and for agricultural production. No Christmas present could be more welcome by Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MINES AND MINING

NOTIFICATION OF LAY-OFFS BY MINING COMPANIES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the employees of Wabush Mines at Wabush and Labrador City in Labrador were laid off for more than 18 weeks last year, in a lay-off that was extended from an announced ten-week lay-off, and in view of the fact that these miners and their communities are concerned that they may face lay-offs again this year but have been unable to get information from the company, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the Minister of State for Mines pressure Wabush Mines to communicate their planned production schedule for the coming year to the union and to the communities involved, and that further, the Minister of Labour introduce legislation which forces companies to provide adequate notification of temporary lay-offs in the same way that they are required to give notice of terminations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PARKS CANADA

TOLL BOOTHS AT PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madame Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In 1976 Parks Canada constructed a toll booth system for entrance into the Prince Edward Island Park. This toll booth system has been of great concern to the area residents who base their living on the tourist traffic in the National Park. This decision, made by Parks Canada, without any consideration for the local people, has had an adverse effect on their businesses. These people should have some input into the decision made by Parks Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Minister responsible take action on the views expressed by the Barckley-Stanhope-Dalvay Tourist Association by eliminating the toll booths at the National Park and reopening previously closed entrances.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

REQUIREMENT TO HOLD HEARINGS ON ABANDONMENT OF BRANCH LINES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the Government's proposed changes in the statutory rates for the movement of grain, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to remove the legal requirement of the Canadian Transport Commission to hold hearings on Prairie branch line abandonment by using the Railway Act to freeze all branch lines, the same Act which the said Minister used to abandon 50 per cent of VIA Rail in western Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

LIBERAL PARTY REPRESENTATION IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I have received a request from a Grade 11 student at Langley Secondary School in British Columbia. This student writes:

My concern is Liberal representation (or the lack of) in western Canada. My question is: why are the Liberals not represented in Parliament in the three western Provinces? What policies or programs should the Liberals put forth in order to gain the support of the western voters?

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the Prime Minister write to the people of Langley and explain that there are Conservative Members in British Columbia who vote with the Liberals on all essential policies.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Surely the Hon. Member is not serious. That kind of request is not appropriate under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister in his capacity as Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Security and Intelligence. Has Professor Hugh Hambleton of Laval University been working as a security agent for the Canadian Government for the last two decades for the purpose of infiltrating the KGB?

• (1415)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member might be referring to statements that have apparently been made in Great Britain on that subject during a trial that is taking place today. I think the fact that such statements were raised at that trial makes it even more obvious that no statements on that subject should be made in this place.

Mr. Lawrence: As the Solicitor General would appreciate, that question concerns what is reprinted in the London papers, not what transpires here in Canada.

QUERY RESPECTING DOCUMENTATION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Would the Minister of Justice tell us if there has been any evidence, documentation, or any correspondence by the Government of Canada to Mr. Hambleton or anyone on Hambleton's behalf, indicating that he has been working as a security agent for the Canadian Government at any time?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, not to my knowledge, but I am not sure that that type of knowledge would come to my attention. I would like to reiterate the point made by the Solicitor General. We understand that this very issue has been raised in the trial in the United Kingdom. The Hon. Member may say that what is said here will not be repeated in Britain, but how do we know that? This is a trial in a country which has a long tradition of fair trials, like our own. It would be extremely ill-advised for any statement to be made here which would in any way affect the course of that trial.

BANK OF CANADA

MONETARY POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On Monday an extraordinary admission was made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada that the monetary policy which had produced 20 per cent-plus interest rates had been wrong and totally misguided. The Minister of Finance agreed with this yesterday. He said nothing about how a new interest rate policy would be followed in order to avoid this past disaster. Would the Minister say now what that new policy will be, so that Canadians can judge better for themselves whether these disasters of 20 per cent-plus interest rates will be repeated in the future?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I was in the House of Commons yesterday when the Minister of Finance answered that question. I must admit that I do not agree with the Hon. Member's introduction to his question. I certainly do not agree with his interpretation of the answer given by the Minister of Finance, I would refer the Hon. Member to his answer and to the speech which was given by Mr. Bouey in which he expands upon those other criteria which the bank will be taking into account in the future in addition to M1.

Mr. Wilson: I read that speech. I could not find anything in it which gives any indication of what the future monetary policy will be. That was the question I asked the Minister just now. That is the question which he did not answer.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the previous Minister of Finance continually blamed high interest rates on the United States. The recent statements by the Governor, not only in his speech but at the IMF meetings in September as well, indicated that interest rate policy will be even more dependent in the future on what happens in the United States. What is the Government doing to decrease the dependency of our interest rate policy on the United States in order to avoid the gross errors of the 20 per cent interest rates that we have had in the past two years?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member began his question by saying that he had read the speech of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the answer of the Minister of Finance. I find that difficult to believe because, if he had read them, he would have his answer before him.

I cannot do better than to draw to the Hon. Member's attention the response given by the Minister of Finance to that question yesterday. He said, as reported at page 21117 of Hansard:

> The policy remains the same. The policy of the bank is to try to encourage a reduction in the rate of inflation. We have met with considerable success in the last few months in that regard. We hope we will continue to meet with success, and reduce inflation in this country—

• (1420)

It is quite apparent that the Government's policy of six and five, introduced in the June budget by the former Minister of Finance, as illustrated by reports, including that of the Conference Board of Canada today, has had some good success in bringing down inflation and, hence, that is a made in Canada aspect of controlling inflation and thereby controlling interest rates.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I might just refer the Minister to that Conference Board report because, far from saying that it was six and five that resulted in the drop in inflation, it said that the private sector was bringing the inflation rate down before the six and five program was introduced, and the six and five was a late starter.

MORTGAGE RATE POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the question I want to ask the Minister now is in connection with the Lortie Commission conclusion that the proposal to reduce mortgage rates by using the Income Tax Act should not be introduced, and the Minister of Finance has confirmed that it will not be introduced. Since the Minister himself, as well as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, urged Canadians to buy new homes in anticipation of this new policy, what is the Minister proposing to do to avoid the double wrong that he has done to Canadians, the wrong in encouraging them to buy homes and then reneging on the policy, and also following an interest rate policy which was dead wrong?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, it is quite apparent that the Hon. Member is being quite selective in his use of material that is available to him, in his questions today. I think, if he were fair, he would point out that in the Conference Board report, to which he made reference, it is found that somewhat less than a majority of those who were canvassed said that they had made plans to reduce their wage increases below 6 per cent. As a matter of fact, the majority of those who were canvassed said that they had made plans to hold their wage increases down after the six and five policy was announced. Therefore, I wish the Hon. Member would at least—

Mr. Wilson: Talk about the inflation rate, Paul.

Mr. Cosgrove: —be forthright in having all the material made available.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have a selective memory.

Mr. Cosgrove: In answer to his last question, since the Lortie Report was commissioned all Canadians have become aware, including, quite obviously, those Canadians who have been buying homes in record numbers in the past three months, that interest rates have been reduced by some 6 per cent and—

Mr. Wilson: You reneged, Paul.

Mr. Cosgrove: —the proof of the confidence of Canadians in the marketplace is evidenced by the fact that they are buying homes in unparalleled numbers, certainly compared to the last few years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT BENEFITS BE EXTENDED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On Monday the Minister of Finance refused to extend unemployment insurance benefits to unemployed Canadians whose benefits had expired but who are still unable to get jobs. Since then I have learned of a case in British Columbia involving a particular worker who worked for 13 years but who has lost his job and is now losing his home, and whose unemployment insurance benefits are about to run out. This man, like thousands of other workers, first wants a job. If he cannot get that, then he would like the right to unemployment insurance and not be forced onto welfare.

Will the Prime Minister take the opportunity, before we recess for Christmas, to correct the Minister of Finance and assure the people of Canada that the Government will extend U.I. benefits so that workers will have the right to them, at least, and will not be forced to go onto welfare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot add anything to what the Minister said yesterday. We have attempted to deal with the so-called exhaustees by trying to find work for them so that they could qualify for regular jobs or, failing that, re-enter the unemployment insurance rolls. However, insofar as providing jobs for every unemployed worker in Canada is concerned, whether or not he or she has been on unemployment insurance, I am afraid that the Minister of Finance conceded that we did not have that kind of money. So—

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I wish the Prime Minister would listen with care to the question. The question was not about jobs, as such. The question, in this instance, was about unemployment insurance benefits.

REASON FOR NOT EXTENDING BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would therefore like to come back to the Prime Minister and say that, before Christmas, thousands of working families will be forced, for the first time in their lives, to go onto welfare because they are not entitled, according to the law as it now exists, to unemployment insurance benefits. Considering the fact that the federal Government already picks up the major share of welfare costs, and considering the fact that workers would rather have unemployment insurance, why does the Government not do the appropriate thing, which makes sense and is socially desirable, and extend the unemployment insurance scheme for all the workers who, unfortunately, will need financial assistance?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member refers with care to the answer I gave, I think he will find that I dealt with that. It is a question of making money available to do what the Hon. Member suggests, and we do not have that money available.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN TAXES FOR HIGHER INCOME EARNERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister another question. Since many Canadians saw him on television a few weeks ago talking to the people of Canada about sharing, if I remember the phrase correctly, about the strong perhaps being required to help the weak in our difficult times. The Government cut taxes by over a billion dolllars for the top one-seventh of income earners last year. Will the Government practise what it preaches in this instance by restoring those taxes to the top one-seventh and using the more than one billion dollars to create jobs for Canadians who need them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to our hope for sharing in Canada. He will realize that the safety nets, and the Canada Assistance Plan is one, are a way of sharing. It is unfortunate that we have to resort to that type of assistance, but it is an application of the principle of sharing between Canadians. As the Hon. Member knows, the federal Government pays 50 per cent of all costs incurred by the Canada Assistance Plan programs.

Increasing taxes is a suggestion which I am sure the Minister of Finance will note in the budgetary context, but there is an argument that to increase taxes is not particularly conducive to an economic revival at this time. The argument will go on, I am sure, between the Hon. Member and other economists.

AIR TRANSPORT

QUEBECAIR 2—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns Quebecair. When the Minister of Transport announced his solution for Quebecair, the company's employees made it clear that they intended to meet with the Minister. I should like to know whether they still intend to do so, and also whether the Quebec spokesman, Mr. Leblond, has been in touch with the Minister of Transport. What is the present status of the Quebecair question?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Quebec Minister of Transport, Mr. Clair, has stated publicly that he was satisfied with my explanations regarding a number of areas. However, there is still one question on which we have not been able to agree, and that is whether negotiations should focus on creating a new company or on restructuring the existing one. My thoughts on the issue are quite clear. I think that if we try to restructure the previous company, with all the financial obligations with which it is burdened, including its debt to the Government of Quebec, to Mr. Webster, to Mr. Hamel, to Mr. Provost, and so on, the company will never get off the ground. On the other hand, I can hardly refuse to give Mr. Clair an opportunity to defend the opposite view. It will not be easy for him but I can hardly prevent him from doing so. So that is where we are now, and we are going to try to clear up our differences this afternoon. As far as the status of Quebecair employees is concerned, in the note I sent Mr. Clair a few days ago, I undertook on behalf of the Government to give them some form of protection. Of course, I was not very specific, and for good reason, since I must be careful to avoid making any commitments we cannot honour in other cases as well. So that is where we are now with the employees. Mr. Leblond was appointed by the Quebec Government as the intermediary in this question, and we shall have our own negotiator as well on this task force which is to be created very shortly.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATE POLICY ON HOME OWNERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. For the better part of a year the Government has been making interest rate policies based on what the Governor of the Bank of Canada now admits was an unreliable guide. As a result, thousands of Canadians lost their homes, not through any fault of their own but because of the Government's mistaken high interest rate policy. What explanation does the Minister have for these thousands of Canadians who lost their homes because of the Government's misguided interest rate policy?

• (1430)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that the policy of the Governor of the Bank is any different this year than it was last year, or during the year the Leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister of the country. The Hon. Member asking the question has not really characterized the policy of the Governor of the Bank and the posture of the Government of Canada in so far as interest rates and financial policy are concerned. In his statement the Governor of the Bank said that for a number of months the Bank has not used M1 exclusively as the only criterion in applying the policy against inflation and the difficulties that inflation has visited on our economy, including high interest rates and the difficulties that they bring to many people in Canada, not only to home owners but to small-businessmen. The Governor indicated that the M1 characterization was only one of the criteria at which the bank was looking.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Minister that the high interest rate policy affected not only home owners but farmers, owners of small businesses, and many other Canadians. It was wrong. Not only did it cause thousands of Canadians to lose their homes, but many hundreds of thousands of others are today carrying interest rates at 20, 21 and 22 per cent because of a policy the Governor of the Bank of Canada said was wrong for more than a year. What does the Minister intend to do to compensate those persons who are carrying much higher interest rates and mortgages rates than they should be because of the Government's mistaken policy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I indicated in a previous answer that, since the June budget, interest rates have fallen by approximately 6 per cent. This means that a person with a mortgage of around $50,000, with the interest rates being reduced by 6 per cent, is paying $200 a month less in carrying charges. There has been a remarkable improvement in so far as interest rates are concerned.

It would be trite for me to remind the Hon. Member that the Government, in response to the plight of people during the period of time when interest rates were high, announced a number of programs to assist not only home owners but small businessmen. In the field of home owners renewing their mortgages, there was the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan, a plan to protect those people who had to pay more than 30 per cent of their income under their newly renewed mortgage contracts. That was a sensible and sensitive response. It was sensitive to people facing that difficulty. It was sensible in that it did not encourage the expenditure of billions of dollars which some people would have had us expend at that time.

SHIPBUILDING

CONDITIONS FOR OBTAINING SUBSIDY FOR DAVIE SHIPBUILDING OF LAUZON, P.Q.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Last Sunday, workers at Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon brought out a majority vote against the 6 and 5 policy. Since the Minister knows perfectly well that this company is awaiting the Government's decision regarding a subsidy of $30 million for the construction of a ferry, could the Minister inform the House whether it is true, that if the union failed to support the Government's 6 and 5 policy, it would not only be in danger of losing but would, in fact, have lost, the $30 million subsidy altogether?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I shall be happy to answer this question, because it is the first time Hon. Members have acknowledged that my Department is the client in this case. CN Marine has, in fact, decided to invest $100 million in the purchase of this ship. However, the price quoted was in excess of our ability to pay, and we therefore required an additional grant of $30 million from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For three months, the Government said that it could not be done because an exceptional contribution by the Government of Canada is necessary to make construction at all possible, unless Davie Shipbuilding employees are themselves prepared to make a sacrifice, and we have been repeating this to all and sundry for three months. Well, we are now in a position where we are about to say: This is the deadline, and if you cannot reach a decision before that deadline, we shall have to withdraw our order.

CO-OPERATION OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I had understood that the Government's policy vis-à-vis the private sector was one in which the private sector was asked to co-operate with this program, and I did not think it was compulsory. Now, if I understand the Minister correctly, this policy which was voluntary for the private sector would now be compulsory, according to the Minister's reasoning, namely, that either they agree to observe the 6 and 5 ceiling and they get a contract with a subsidy of $30 million, or they do not, and then 1,000 employees lose out on this construction job. Is that more or less what was meant by the Minister?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I think we all have to realize that this is a case where the Government is using public funds in an effort to remedy a particular situation, namely, to prevent these employees from being laid off. Since the Government is making a special effort to accommodate the interests of these employees, it feels it also has a case for asking or demanding, if my hon. friend prefers, that these employees make a special effort as well. The whole point of the policy is to keep inflation at 6 per cent, and in doing so, they too are helping to achieve this goal. Therefore, I do not have the impression, and I do not think Canadians have the impression, that we are taking a particularly hard line with these employees. We are proposing an arrangement that will benefit both sides, and in any case, they will have an opportunity to make up their own minds on the matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ROLE OF UNITED STATES IN SUPPORTING FORMER REGIME

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs my question is directed to the Minister of State for External Relations. I am sure that the Minister is aware of the present conflict between the supporters of the former Nicaraguan Dictator Somoza, who are being aided by the Governments of the United States and Honduras, and the legitimate Government of Nicaragua. I am also sure that the Minister is aware of an initiative by Mexico and Venezuela to resolve the conflict through peace talks. Has the Government of Canada protested to the Government of the United States about its destabilizing interference, and will the Minister assure this House that the Government will support the Mexico-Venezuela initiative and meet with officials from Mexico and Venezuela to ascertain the details of the initiative and the role that Canada can play?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, regarding the joint proposal by Mexico and Venezuela, the Prime Minister has already given the Heads of State of Mexico and Venezuela the assurance that the Government of Canada fully supports this peace initiative as an attempt to bring about greater stability in this area. As for the second part of the Hon. Member's question, namely, whether we have made representations to the Americans to express our concern and consternation vis-à-vis destabilizing interference by foreign powers in Nicaragua's domestic affairs, such representations have been made several times through the United States Embassy in Ottawa and through our own diplomats posted in Washington. We have reiterated to the Americans our grave concern about any foreign interference in the domestic affairs of foreign countries, and this obviously includes Nicaragua.

SUGGESTED OTTAWA DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): I thank the Minister for the answer. In an effort to expedite an end to this conflict and restore peace and stability to the area, would the Minister take the initiative of inviting the Foreign Minister of Nicaragua, Miguel D'Escoto, and the Foreign Minister of Honduras, Dr. Edgardo Paz Barnica, to Ottawa to discuss a possible solution to this conflict?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, last spring, it was agreed that the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua would pay an official visit to Canada. However, this summer, the Government of Nicaragua had to cancel the visit. We have now reiterated our agreement in principal with the visit of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua, and we are trying, through diplomatic channels, to find a date that would be agreeable to both Ministers of Foreign Affairs. As regards an invitation to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Honduras, I shall have to find out about this and answer the Hon. Member's question later on.

MEETING WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Minister recently held a round of consultations in Saint John, New Brunswick, on economic and regional development issues. Among those he met with were representatives of the shipbuilding industry. I would ask the Minister to tell the House who accompanied him on his delegation, and ask him to advise the shipbuilding workers what they can expect, in a tangible way, as a result of those meetings?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, we had a very stimulating session with Local 3 of the Union and with management. I was accompanied by the Hon. Member for Saint John. He was largely responsible for bringing together management and labour with ourselves and the Minister of Public Works, who is the responsible Minister for that region. It was an extremely interesting and frank discussion, and it is a beginning, I believe, of actually bringing together in the same room representatives of labour, management and Government to try to arrive through consultation and co-operation at a solution to some of the very difficult problems which face that particular industry and which also face all industries in this country coast to coast.

Mr. Corbett: I asked the Minister what the shipbuilding workers could expect, in a tangible way, from that meeting, and it is obvious that they can expect much more of the same thing—nothing.

GOVERNMENT POLICY REVIEW

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my supplementary to the same Minister is with regard to his discussions with the shipbuilding industry in Saint John. Would he advise whether the matter of the Government's shipbuilding policy review was raised and, if so, what was the Minister's response? Will he make a firm commitment to use his good offices to set a date and to release the contents of that very critical report?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First of all, Madam Speaker, the decision to release any report with respect to that industry will be made by the responsible Minister in due course. I am sorry the Hon. Member was not present at the meeting which took place in Saint John, because he demonstrates such an interest in it. The meeting was to review the history of the industry in that area to acquaint the delegation, and myself in particular, since I was not as familiar with it as my two colleagues, with the very proud history of achievement of that particular industry in Saint John, its expectations for the future, and the very significant technology team which they have been able to bring together and which has made that particular industry one of the most efficient in this country.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

INCREASES IN UTILITY FEES PAID BY PERSONNEL

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I would like to address my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is undoubtedly aware that, effective today, thousands of members of the Armed Forces who occupy PMQs are faced with increases in their utilities, in particular in Moose Jaw of approximately 100 per cent, and I understand in the Maritimes the increases are 200 per cent or 300 per cent. Could the Prime Minister advise why, in the light of the Government's six and five program, such exorbitant increases have been authorized?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am pleased on behalf of the Minister of National Defence to make the following statement. There is a meeting today between the officials of the Department of National Defence and the Treasury Board, and that particular issue is under active discussion right now.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. It has to do with the emergency planning orders and the confidential memo sent to him by Mr. Snarr, the Executive Director, in which he quotes letters from three different provincial Governments which indicate their concern that the Government would suspend rights guaranteed under the Charter, that it would invade provincial jurisdiction in localized situations, and it would permit a subtle takeover in control by the federal Government. He goes on to give the strategy for making this an acceptable plan for the country. One of his plans to make it succeed is and I quote:

> —in dealing with the Provinces we would 'soft-pedal' peacetime activation and for the time being concentrate on wartime interfaces between NEAs and provincial Government facilities.

If this plan is as good as the Government thinks it is, and if the Government wants to establish trust, why is it necessary to be devious?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am not going to comment on memos that are confidential, since that was the preamble to the Hon. Member's question. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government never intended to go against the Charter of Rights, and we certainly do not want to encroach on areas that fall under provincial jurisdiction.

[English]

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): My supplementary is directed to the same Minister. The memo goes on to say that, if a Province adamantly refuses to undertake any role at all in civil defence preparedness, the federal Government would then cut off all the funding allocated to the Province for those purposes, and then move in and do what otherwise would be the role of the Province to do. How does the Minister square that with the need to carry on harmonious federal-provincial relations? Is he trying to undercut the Provinces again?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the answer to the last part of the question is no.

RAILWAYS

CANOLA FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am given to understand that the canola crushers and growers have been notified that the freight rates for canola products are going to be increased by 41 per cent to 42 per cent, both on the CPR and CNR lines. How does the Minister justify this increase to the western farmers in light of the five and six guidelines that the Government has laid down?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is quite simple. The Railway Act, Section 276, states that the cost of transportation must exceed the variable costs. In other words, rates cannot ever come under the variable costs. If the CTC had not passed the order that they have passed to increase the minimum compensation rate by 42 per cent, they would have been in violation of the law. The law being the paramount authority in these matters, I think it should prevail.

EFFECT OF INCREASES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance yesterday said that five and six was the law of the land. Is it the law of the land, or is it not? In addition, I would like to know whether this will affect imports from the United States coming into eastern Canada, putting the canola growers in western Canada to an unfair advantage in terms of competition? And does the Minister expect that these types of guidelines, 40 per cent and 50 per cent increases, will roll over into the Gilson Report, and other products shipped in western Canada?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think the rate is a West to East rate only. I could not swear to that. I am not knowledgeable on that, so I will check, but again I think it applies only to transportation from the West to the East.

The effect that this will have on Gilson is a rather complicated matter. The present rate for transportation of rapeseed or canola oil and meal to the East is the minimum compensatory rate. Gilson recommended that from the West to Thunder Bay it should be the statutory rate in due course. But he did not indicate what it should be from Thunder Bay on to the East. The logic of the system would indicate that it should be commercial rates at that point. It so happens that if you put the statutory rate to Thunder Bay and the commercial rate from Thunder Bay on East, you have a higher rate than the rate you have now, which is the minimum compensatory rate all the way. There is an obvious problem with that, and we will try to solve it in due course, when we make our announcement on the implementation of the Western Rail Transportation Initiative.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

PURPOSE OF MEASURE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister with regard to Bill S-31 which regulates provincial involvement in transportation. The Province of Quebec has indicated that it is opposed to the legislation, the Province of Alberta has indicated that it is also opposed to the legislation, and Pierre Lortie has also indicated that he is opposed to the legislation. Mr. Lortie, of course, is an adviser to the Government on other matters.

It appears that only Canadian Pacific is vitally concerned about the passage of this legislation. Why is Canadian Pacific's vested interest more important than the expressed interests of the Provinces most affected and the interest of the President of the Montreal Stock Exchange?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the main purpose of the legislation is to discourage Provinces from exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction. The Provinces, under the Constitution, cannot make laws or adopt policies having to do with interprovincial or international transportation. They would become enabled to do so if they were able to acquire control of, and to issue policy directives to, an interprovincial or international corporation. They would be going around the Constitution in a way that the federal Government finds it undesirable to allow.

REGULATION OF CONTROL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I will put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. He knows full well that the federal Government has the power to regulate, at any time, in the national interest. Given that, if there appeared to be a problem developing, the federal Government could establish such regulations as to make sure that the problem did not mature, why would the Government think it more appropriate that foreign investors from any part of the world should be able to own the interprovincial trucking and transportation industry in Canada, if they so desire, and not feel it appropriate that the duly elected representatives of the Provinces, who are responsible to the Canadian public, ought to be able to make decisions, similarly, to have investment in Canada's future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is because, presumably, the foreign interest or, for that matter, the private sector interest in operating a railway or exercising a degree of control over an interprovincial or international industry, is to make money, to make profits. The purpose of the federal Government is to issue policies which ensure that that objective does not enter into conflict with the national good of the Canadian people, in other words, that the service be provided. If the control is exercised by a provincial Government, I presume the Member would agree that the first purpose of the provincial Government is not to make money or to make profits for its shareholders, but to exercise political directions. If this is the objective of the provincial Governments, to exercise political directions on interprovincial railways, we feel this is regrettable.

The Hon. Member is, of course, correct. The federal Government could step in and start a fight with the Provinces and sort of say, "You should not be running the railway which you control in this way because, for instance, you are asking to move the head office of the CPR from Montreal to some other city in Canada", and we would get into an interprovincial conflict in an area—

Mr. Deans: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member does not want to hear my answers but I want to assure him that it is an important subject of ensuring that there is no extraterritorial application by the stronger Provinces against the weak ones. This would happen if they can control an interprovincial transportation company.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF DEGRADING VIDEO CASSETTES

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Last week representations were made to the Minister by all Members of the House, and I believe a question was directed to him by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown about the "Custer's Last Revenge" cassettes. The Minister undertook to study this and to give us a reply. Has he had an opportunity to do this?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as I mentioned to the House before, I asked the Deputy Minister of National Revenue to act under the provisions of Section 46 of the Customs Act and investigate this video game called "Custer's Revenge", which has aroused the indignation of many groups, including many parliamentarians here in the House, women's groups and representatives of native peoples. I am pleased with this opportunity, which the Hon. Member has provided, to inform the House that after a thorough review of the case, the Deputy Minister of National Revenue has decided to prohibit entry into Canada of the video game "Custer's Revenge".

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Hon. Member for Châteauguay said, a day or two ago, that the federal Government is "pussyfooting" around the recognition of an independent Palestinian state, that the Liberal caucus is "overwhelmingly sympathetic" to the Palestinian cause, and that the Government has to "move now to support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state". He also said that all of the Quebec caucus, except for two or three, and the majority of the Liberal caucus, want that policy put into effect.

May I ask the Prime Minister if there has been any change in the Government's policy with respect to the Middle East and with respect to the question of Israel and the Palestinian situation, or not? Is that now under review and might there be a change? What exactly is the position? Is the Liberal Member for Châteauguay right, and is the Government following his advice and that of the majority of the caucus? Just what is the position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are changes which have been announced from time to time by the Government in the evolution of the policy on the Middle East. For instance, around the Beirut events and the invasion of Lebanon there was a new policy announced which is shared 100 per cent by the Hon. Member, since he himself moved a motion in the House to that effect. So there are some changes and they are all well known to the Hon. Member and the Canadian public. They are on record, to be read.

As far as the Hon. Member for Châteauguay is concerned, he is a Member of caucus, a very Hon. Member, and he puts points of view forward in caucus. I am not aware of particular phrases quoted by the Hon. Member, but certainly there is no attempt on the part of the Government to prevent Members from developing their thoughts on any future event.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO LIBERAL MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister was about his Government's policy. A prominent Member of his caucus has made certain statements which lead the public to believe that the Government is going to recognize an independent Palestinian state. He went on to state, by the way, that he favoured high level contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organization. The public is entitled to know if this is the policy of the Government, or not. If it is not, will the Government clearly say that it is not going to have high level contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organization which exists for the purpose of destroying the State of Israel? It has never revoked that purpose.

It is up to the Government to say whether it is now going to recognize an independent Palestinian state. Apparently a majority in the Liberal caucus was told by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay that he believed this should be the policy. Is the Prime Minister stating that that Member of Parliament is wrong on both counts, that the Government is not now going to recognize an independent Palestinian state, and that the Government is not now going to have high level contacts with the Palestinian Liberation Organization? The public is entitled to know.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member stated that the alleged statements by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay would "lead the public to believe". I believe what is happening is that the Hon. Member for St. John's West is attempting to get the public to believe that a statement by a Member of this caucus becomes Government policy. If that is the case, I could ask the Hon. Member whether it is the policy of the Tory Party that bilingualism should be destroyed in Canada and that there should be only one official language. These are statements made by Members of his caucus. I have never asked him if this is the position of the Tory Party, and I do not attempt to lead the public to believe that either.

• (1500)

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister could clear the matter up very easily.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—REASONS FOR SECURITY SERVICE ACTION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It does not have to do with Hambleton himself but pertains to the attitude of the Security Service. After the Security Service had amassed its evidence and submitted it to the RCMP, could the Minister tell me why the Security Service was prompted to warn Hambleton that if he went to Great Britain he would meet a hostile reception?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I answered that question yesterday, and I stand by the answer I gave then. The Hon. Member has to recognize that the Security Service is not primarily in the business of catching crooks, seeing them tried, and seeing them punished. The objectives of the Security Service are much broader. They are to protect the national security of the country.

Often there are very good reasons for establishing relationships with individuals which result in the production of information of very great value to the national security. Without referring specifically to this case, as the Hon. Member has asked me not to do, in many cases there are very good reasons for maintaining relations with individuals which result in benefits to the national security of our country, for example, in gaining information about the way counter-intelligence is being operated by hostile security services in our own country or in other friendly countries.

The Hon. Member should not be surprised that the Security Service would engage in the gathering of intelligence, in establishing relationships with individuals and not having them result in every case in the matter being referred to the CIB and having charges laid.

PETITION

MR. DOMM—SUPPORT FOR GENERAL DISARMAMENT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the three hundred and forty-second report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) on Tuesday, November 30, 1982, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITIONS

MR. GREENAWAY—CALL FOR HALT TO CANAGREX LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 293 citizens of the Cariboo-Chilcotin riding in British Columbia. The purpose of the petition is to express the clear and strong opposition of the citizens of Cariboo-Chilcotin to Bill C-85, the legislation to establish Canagrex. In particular, the petitioners protest the buy and sell provisions of Canagrex, as well as its wide-ranging powers.

The nature of the petition is to halt the passage of Bill C-85 and to prevent approval of Canagrex at third reading and thereby prevent the establishment of Canagrex. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to halt the passage of Bill C-85 and to prevent approval of Canagrex at third reading.

MR. KING—CALL FOR CESSATION OF NUCLEAR INDUSTRY ACTIVITY

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present a petition to the House on behalf of 2,023 persons, most of whom are residents of Okanagan-Similkameen in British Columbia. This petition is similar to the one I presented to the House on December 14, 1981 which contained 5,903 signatures, for a combined total of 7,926 signatures in protest of all nuclear-related activities and in support of the efforts of an organization in Westbank, British Columbia, called "Candu Won't Do".

The nature of the petition is to pray and beseech the House to consider this vital issue which concerns all life and to introduce a Bill in Parliament to stop all nuclear-related activities, including uranium mining, production and sales of Candu reactors, and to decommission all nuclear reactors with due respect to life.

We trust and pray that Madam Speaker will find the petition in order and that the House will take appropriate action.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-131

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among representatives of the parties and that it has not been possible to reach agreement in respect of the proceedings at the second reading of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2). Therefore, I wish to give notice that at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, to allocate one sitting day to the said stage of the Bill.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am somewhat surprised that this notice comes today. I learned of it about a half hour ago when I spoke with the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard). We had a discussion last evening with respect to the disposition of Bill C-131 and Bill C-132. It was my understanding upon leaving that discussion that we would have the opportunity today of discussing the matter in caucus to see whether or not we could come to some agreement. That was the extent of the consultation. Then I spoke with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), with respect to the attitude of his Party concerning the disposition of Bill C-131 and Bill C-132.

I have not had the opportunity today, since my discussion with the Government House Leader, of again discussing the matter with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. In the hope that we might be able to save some of the time of the House, rather than triggering this motion which will take up time tomorrow and move Bill C-131 to Friday, I should like to inform the House, as I informed the Government House Leader but have not had the opportunity to inform the Acting House Leader of the NDP, that we are prepared today to deal with Bill C-132, to deal with the measure through second reading and into committee, and that we are prepared tomorrow to deal with Bill C-131 and send that matter to committee.

If that is acceptable by unanimous consent to the New Democratic Party, it would save a day of House time, or at least a minimum of two hours, give us the opportunity of dealing with other matters on Friday, and obviate the necessity of the Government imposing closure, as was notified by the Minister just now.

It seems to me that the Government House Leader would probably be in accord with that suggestion and perhaps it might meet favourably with the NDP that we proceed in that fashion—Bill C-132 today and Bill C-131 tomorrow.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, this is the first time that a suggestion of that kind has been put to me. Without attempting to analyse the motive, I want to make clear that we are unalterably opposed to the passage of Bill C-131. We will do everything in our power to ensure that the aged population of Canada who are in receipt of pensions do not have their pensions reduced one single, solitary cent. We will not, therefore, agree to the passage of the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: As you can see, Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was quite right to say that there has been no agreement under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B. That is why we are serving notice today that, unless there is an agreement, we will proceed with that motion tomorrow. However, my office door is wide open and whenever my colleagues opposite decide to come to such an agreement, we will go along. Otherwise, we will move the motion tomorrow.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it is not a question of being a Liberal stooge—

Mr. Kristiansen: No question about it.

Mr. Nielsen: —whoever it was in the New Democratic Party who made that accusation, because our sympathies with respect to Bill C-131, the Old Age Security Act, are precisely the same as those of the NDP. We intend to vote against the measure. All we are suggesting is that we deal with Bill C-132 today, bring it to a vote, send it to a comittee and then we will deal with Bill C-131. I thought the Acting House Leader for the New Democratic Party was in sympathy with this proposal when I spoke to him last night, that we deal with Bill C-131 tomorrow and bring it to a vote. We intend to vote against both of those measures, but let us vote on Bill C-132 today and Bill C-131 tomorrow. That will save the time of the House.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I will be brief. I do not intend either to disclose or in any way to make reference to the comments that I had with the House Leader for the Conservatives last evening. His interpretation of our exchange is not in keeping with my recollection. However, voting against a piece of legislation is one way to indicate opposition. We are not only opposed to the point where we want to vote against it, but we are opposed to the point where we do not want to facilitate its passage in any way.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I want to make one thing clear about the business of the House for today and tomorrow. Indeed, we will be studying Bill C-132 today, but tomorrow, even though we are planning to move the motion to limit the debate on Bill C-131, we will continue the debate on Bill C-132 after the division on the motion. It is therefore possible that a vote could be called on Bill C-132 tomorrow evening.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that requires some clarification. Let us assume for a moment that there might be a disposition in the House to dispose of second reading debate and reference to committee of Bill C-132 today. What will be the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Pinard: Bill C-136, Madam Speaker.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,201, 3,203, 3,439 and 3,615.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

TAX RETURNS OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 3,201—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,564 which stated in part that "no statistics are available" in regard to the number of income tax returns by Members of Parliament that were in any way re-examined or re-assessed by the Department of National Revenue, are the tax returns of all Members of Parliament and Senators in the hands of one specific individual in the Department of National Revenue and, if so, for what reason is it impossible for the government to have statistics available on the number of such returns that have been dealt with over and above the original assessment?

2. Is the government aware that the Member for Leeds—Grenville possesses the name and position of the person in the Department of National Revenue who holds such files in his custody and is the government also aware that no one else in the Department is permitted access to the files except by government order?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The tax returns of Members of Parliament, like those of any other taxpayer, are filed in various District Offices and Taxation Centres according to the place of residence of the taxpayer and therefore are not in the hands of one specific individual. However, all returns of Members of Parliament filed in the Ottawa District Office are in the custody of a single individual as a matter of local practice. Statistics on the total numbers of reassessments are maintained and the number of reassessments by board occupational groups, but not for small groups such as Members of Parliament.

2. Access to the tax files of Members of Parliament is not made by government order. Access is accorded as required for the same reasons as apply to all files of taxpayers and is restricted to officials as authorized under Section 241 of the Income Tax Act.

INTEREST ON OVERPAYMENT OF TAXES

Question No. 3,203—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. (a) Did the Department of National Revenue pay interest at the rate of 12 per cent on income tax overpayments when the interest on Canada Savings Bonds was raised to 12 per cent (b) does the Department intend to pay 19.5 per cent on income tax overpayments now that the interest on Canada Savings Bonds is at 19.5 per cent and, if so, on what date?

2. Are citizens, who were to receive tax rebates before the postal strike but who received their cheques only after the postal strike, entitled to interest at the rate of 12 per cent up to the date they received their cheque and, if so, does the Government intend (a) to inform them of this right (b) to send them, under separate cover, a cheque for interest on the amount involved?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) The rate of interest is set by regulation under the Income Tax Act and for the calendar year 1981 has been set at 12 per cent per annum. This rate applies to overpayments as well as to arrears of tax and deficient instalment payments. (b) The rate prescribed for income tax overpayments and arrears is set independently of the rate fixed for Canada Savings Bonds.

2. Yes. Taxpayers entitled to refunds are eligible for refund interest at the prescribed rate for the period commencing with the latest of the day the overpayment arose, the statutory filing date for the return in question, the actual filing date of the return in question, and ending with the day of refund or application to other taxes.

During the period of the postal disruption the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, made arrangements whereby taxpayers could pick up refund cheques at their local district taxation offices. This special pick up arrangement was publicized through the media and many thousands of taxpayers were able to obtain their cheques in this way. No further measures are planned.

TRANSPORTATION AND TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Question No. 3,439—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the Budget of November 12, 1981, which announced that free airline transportation provided by employers would be considered taxable as income, will this provision apply to Cabinet Ministers using such transportation to go to and from their constituencies or elsewhere, when not on Government business and when exceeding the quota of trips permitted for Members of Parliament to and from their constituencies, and (a) if so, what will be the effective date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Subparagraph 6(1)(b)(i)(A) of the Income Tax Act excludes from income from office or employment amounts received in the year as an allowance for personal or living expenses or as an allowance for any other purpose that is expressly fixed in an Act of the Parliament of Canada. Subsection 43(1) of the Senate and House of Commons Act refers to transportation and travelling expenses as each House may by order prescribe. Therefore, the value of any transportation or reimbursement of transportation and travelling expenses specifically prescribed and covered in the latter mentioned Act is not taxable. In addition the value of any transportation or reimbursement of such specific expenses to Members of the Senate and House of Commons incurred while on government business is not taxable. When the transportation is for personal as opposed to business use, a taxable benefit arises.

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES ON INCOME TAXES

Question No. 3,615—Mr. Herbert:

Does the Government provide copies of personal income tax returns to the Government of the Province of Quebec and, if so (a) under what conditions (b) how many copies of individual returns were supplied in each of the past five years?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Subsection 241(4) of the Income Tax Act permits the exchange of information with a Province on a reciprocal basis for the purpose of administering a taxing statute similar to our Act. Conditions are also contained in Part XXX of the Income Tax Regulations dealing with such exchanges.

Information is exchanged with Quebec on a regular basis but copies of individual returns are not normally given to that Province, although there is nothing in the law which would preclude this being done. In the circumstances we have no statistics on the provision of copies of individual returns.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I would just like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about two questions that I have had on the Order Paper for a considerable time. One of them has been on the Order Paper for over a year. It is a question with regard to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) who took a JetStar flight to Winnipeg for the official opening of a new firm. I asked how many aircraft, how many ministers and how many staff were on that trip. I am quite sure it does not take over a year to compile that type of information.

I have another very important question, No. 4,175, which I placed on the Order Paper on March 24. It reads:

Was there correspondence between a R. W. B. Bailey, Chairman, SGPE Sub-Group and a Mr. R. Gagnon, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, dated February 17 and February 19, 1982 respectively on the subject of a hiring team to recruit Francophone employees?

A further part of my question reads:

For each of the departments and the Corporation listed in Part 4, what schools and universities are the hiring teams visiting in each province and territory?

I would like an answer to this question because I want to know whether any federal Government hiring teams are coming to the Province of Manitoba to hire students from the University of Winnipeg or the University of Manitoba, and also what nationality they will hire. This is a very important question to me, and it is important to the country to find out where all of these hiring teams are and whom exactly they are hiring for the federal Government.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into both of those matters on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 77 to 81 transferred for debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

She said: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to introduce Bill C-132. This Bill is one of a series of initiatives which were announced in the budget of June, 1982. The changes in the Family Allowances Program which are outlined in this Bill, together with similar changes to the Old Age Security Act, the Income Tax Act and a number of other related Acts, comprise what has now become known as the Government's "six and five" program. The changes to these Acts were offered only after the most careful consideration on the part of the Government, but with the full realization that the way to defeat inflation for Canadian families and the way to economic recovery requires some degree of sacrifice by all Canadians. Family Allowance recipients—in other words, mothers—are among those many Canadians being asked to make this sacrifice. I repeat the expression I used for the Bill reducing the indexation for seniors who do not need the supplement—that they are being asked to make a sacrifice with others.

Although the modifications in child-related benefits contained in this Bill are relatively modest, we are confident that the example being set by Family Allowance recipients, by mothers across the country—which means by lots of families—and by pensioners, civil servants, Members of Parliament and taxpayers, as part of a national will to fight inflation, will be followed by all Canadians.

What does this Bill do? I will say exactly what it does in the hope that Opposition colleagues who want to speak on the Bill will limit their speeches, as provided for by the rules of the House, to the Bill in question and not carry on with misinformation in the way that took place during the discussion on the Bill concerning old age pensions.

Specifically, this Bill proposes to limit, only for those who can afford it, the indexation of Family Allowances to a 6 per cent cost-of-living adjustment in 1983 and a 5 per cent adjustment the year after. Right now, the Family Allowance payment is $26.91 per month per child. When families receive their cheques on approximately January 20, the amount payable for each child will be $28.52. This will rise to $29.95 the year after.

• (1520)

Hon. Members will recall that Alberta and Quebec have opted on their own to vary the federal rate. Therefore, the amount per child will differ somewhat in those Provinces.

As a consequence of this Bill, only one-third of Canadian mothers receiving Family Allowances will get a smaller increase than anticipated for their child benefits in the coming two years. I want to emphasize the fact that this Bill permits an increase in all Family Allowances for the next year. Indexation has not been eliminated completely; the principles of universality and indexation are maintained. Furthermore, we have acted to ensure that all families in the low income range and younger families in the middle income range will not be adversely affected by this two-year measure. The previous Minister of Finance stated this clearly in his June budget, and I also explained in an insert which was mailed with the Family Allowance cheques at a later date that the Child Tax Credit in 1982, which is to be received early next year, will be fully indexed to the cost of living.

In addition, all recipients of the Child Tax Credit, which are two-thirds of Canadian mothers, will receive a one-time special increase of $50 which will be added to the credit in order to compensate for the capping of indexation of their Family Allowances. This means that the two-thirds of all mothers who receive the full Child Tax Credit will receive $343 in the coming months instead of the indexed $293 that they would have normally received. They received far less last year. While they would have received $293 in the forthcoming year, they will receive $343 in Child Tax Credits per child. This is non-taxable. Two-thirds of the Canadian women who receive the Family Allowance will benefit from this increased Child Tax Credit. This represents approximately two and a half million recipients.

Families with incomes, including combined family incomes where applicable, which are less than $26,330 in 1982 will receive the full Child Tax Credit. Families whose income is above that level will also qualify for the Child Tax Credit but only partially. The Child Tax Credit will vary on a decreasing scale, losing 5 per cent of income above that amount. The increase is being applied in such a way as to allow all those receiving the Child Tax Credit in any amount under the present system to receive an extra $50. For example, a mother with two children will receive an extra $100 up to a family income of approximately $38,000. This is how the present Child Tax Credit system functions. I will comment later on the ceiling at which the full Child Tax Credit is no longer applicable.

This additional $50 credit will commence at the beginning of the two-year special restraint period toward achieving a rate of inflation of only 6 per cent and 5 per cent. I have insisted that this credit be given immediately because it is important for mothers to know how their family budget will be affected.

The first Family Allowance cheque to come next year will be delivered at the end of the third week of January. While the amount for all those who receive Family Allowances will be more, the amount that one-third of those families who are more financially stable will receive will be more, but less than anticipated. That is why we have indicated that this legislation particularly affects mothers in high-income families.

For this reason I was surprised to hear the House Leader for the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) announce a few minutes ago that his Party will vote against the Bill. I do not quite understand their reasoning for such a decision. I want my explanation to be clear in the event that some dimension of the Bill has escaped some Members of the House. Mothers will receive their Family Allowance cheques in a slightly lesser amount than would be the case with full indexing. At the beginning of January they can immediately apply for their Child Tax Credit. I point out that the mothers who can apply for Child Tax Credit immediately are those without income or with very low income. They do not really come under the income tax system. They are the ones most in need. These mothers will be the first to have their returns processed by Revenue Canada and will be the first to receive their Child Tax Credit in the mail. They will receive these Child Tax Credit cheues by March. The cheques which they will receive in January and February will be more than, they are now, but slightly less than anticipated. The amount for January and February will be $28.52 for each child. However, two months later and continuing until the end of the usual income tax period they will receive a non-taxable Child Tax Credit which will be much larger than anticipated and far greater than last year's amount.

In other words, I think it is fair to say that, with the exception of the months of January and February when families will be missing $1.40 per child on each of their Family Allowance cheque, their Child Tax Credit cheques will be greater in the months of March, April or May.

There is another group that will not be affected by this Bill. They are the children who fall within the jurisdiction of welfare agencies, Government Departments or institutions. They are the children who fall under the category we call Special Allowances. These special allowances are paid on behalf of children under the age of 18 who are maintained by the agencies I have mentioned.

Since we have been very careful and have had the proper tools to protect not only the low income families but the middle income families as well, the savings from this restraint measure are relatively modest. They represent $70 million over two years. This could be explained by the fact that there will be a reduction in Family Allowances of $320 million over the two-year period; however, there will be an additional cost to make up for the loss which the Child Tax Credit will cost the Treasury, amounting to $250 million.

It seems to me that through this Bill we are clearly asking those families who can afford it to make some sacrifices, and not for the purpose of saving money. I want to insist that it has nothing to do with saving money, which was often stated as being the purpose of the Bill touching on the old age pension because of the Government deficit and all the rest. Rather, it is to bring about economic recovery and growth which will directly benefit all families far more by protecting them against the ravages, the erosion of their budgets simply as a result of high inflation. This is the purpose of the Bill.

I have been here for days and have listened to horror stories which told of the results if Family Allowances were capped in the same way as were old age pensions for those who did not need the supplement. I think I will hear all sorts of arguments from Hon. Members opposite. They will make a long shopping list of everything that is wrong, to their way of thinking, in the child benefit system in Canada, or of any unmet need or problem that they recognize concerning families and children.

[Translation]

I know, because this is what happened during the debate on the bill to cap indexation of Old Age Security benefits of people who do not need the supplement. I am also aware that some Hon. Members will rise and have the nerve to say that by capping indexation of family allowances for families who are well off, and I am not referring to middle-income families but wealthy people, we are undermining the principle of universality. Hon. Members in both opposition parties said this when we were applying the same procedure to the pensions of individuals who do not need the supplement. It is quite clear, however, and I would like to remind—

[English]

—in particular, I would like to remind the leader of the New Democratic Party that, contrary to what he said publicly a few days ago, universality will not be affected at all by Bill C-132, which we are discussing right now. It will cap the indexation for families which are quite relatively well off. To say that Bill C-132 is part of an attempt to change the fundamental nature of family allowance is as ridiculous as saying that the six and five program, applied to increases in, say, the Bell telephone system, is an attempt to get rid of the telephone system. The logic is approximately as brilliant, as far as I can see.

Perhaps Hon. Members opposite think that when we applied the six and five program to ourselves, to our salaries as Members of Parliament, it was done to get rid of the Opposition. Maybe that was a wish expressed by some people in some quarters, but the logic is quite weak. I think everyone will see that it is not a very reasonable attempt to harm the Government, to pretend that the six and five program applied to the Family Allowances of those who do not need it in the first place, those who do not need the special help of the state, means a major change in the program.

[Translation]

I think people ought to know that Canada has one of the best child benefit systems in the world and that many countries in this present day and age would not be able to afford the benefits we have been providing for the children of Canada for years. For instance, France, which the Province of Quebec is always so eager to copy, France does not pay any family allowances to families with only one child, no matter what the circumstances are. In addition, the present Government in France is looking at new taxes as a way to cut its expenditures. Details are now being discussed, and there were reports last week in French weeklies including Le Point, L'Observateur, L'Express and in the newspaper Le Monde. France is now looking into a new tax measure under which families will be paying directly for their own family benefits, and this in addition to the present tax burden on all French families. I am not saying this to critize a foreign country, especially a country like France. In fact, I could say the same thing about West Germany, for instance, which also has family allowances. Just recently, I read that the West German Chancellor announced a proposal that will substantially reduce family allowances, and the worst part is that it will apply to families with more than two children. Belgium has just announced a temporary reduction in its family allowances, and there is a possibility that family allowances for the first child will be dropped. In other words, many countries are having to cope with the same economic difficulties as we are. I think it is very unfair, but I suppose it is to be expected in politics, that the Opposition is blasting the Government for poor management. Although there may be a difference in degree, the economic situation is pretty much the same in all western countries, and each country is making adjustments according to the ideology of the party in power.

We have decided that people who need help must get it. We have said time and time again that our first priority is to help those whose needs are greatest. I could add another word that could or should be the basis for any future changes in the family allowances program, and it is the word "redistribution". I think everybody knows what this means, but in any case, redistribution means taking from groups that have a lot and then making sure that they do not get anything until those who do not have anything at all have received a fair share. Perhaps I should be a little more specific with respect to family allowances.

[English]

When we speak of children and the federal Government, we speak of only one program, Family Allowances. In the recent past, but not for the first time, many rumours have fed a public debate which never took place except among the media or through editorials. However, the public debate which really never took place in our country was with regard to what is called being for or against universality of Family Allowances. I submit that this is not the proper terminology and is not the concept at stake at all. Universality is a problem in medicare. That is where it really applies. However, to my way of thinking as Minister of National Health and Welfare, what really applies, because of our social policies, is the objective of equity and redistribution and caring for those most in need. If we had the appropriate equipment in Parliament, I would be able to give Members a graphic, visual presentation of the three levels of child benefits that flow to families from the Government of Canada at the present time. We would see that the total sum of benefits received by families are not well distributed in terms of equity and redistribution.

• (1540)

Another question is, if it is not suitable, why do we not change it? That is another question which I will address shortly. There are three elements in the system. One is the well-known Family Allowance which is taxable and goes to every child in the country through his or her mother. Another is the Child Tax Credit, of which I must say we are very proud and which was introduced in 1978. It is a mechanism to distribute the benefits only to those with the least income. We could ask ourselves if it is "normal" that it is available up to such high income levels. I will ask that question in a few minutes. However, the concept is surely the best we could have worked out.

[Translation]

When it was introduced, the child tax credit went to all families earning less than $18,000, and over and above that amount, the tax credit gradually dropped to zero. However, as a result of indexation, we have reached the point where the child tax credit applies to children in families earning as much as $26,000 or more. That is a lot of money, and as a result, two-thirds of Canadian families are receiving the child tax credit. Low-income families receive the full family allowance, while in other cases, the allowance tends to be less, since it is taxable for other Canadian families. The child tax credit is received in addition to the family allowance. Both low- and middle-income families receive the full child tax credit, which gradually drops down to zero for families who do not need it at all. In addition to all this, and there is a problem here, we have what is called the personal deduction for dependent children, which is part of the income tax system. Either parent, depending on family circumstances, may claim the deduction. I do not remember the exact amount, but I think it is fairly high. I cannot find it in my notes, but I think it is substantial, and if I remember correctly, the exemption is at least $600 per child, or about that amount . . . $670 per child on the next tax return, I am told by my colleague from Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and I thank her for this information. A tax exemption is the opposite of a tax credit. With a tax credit, the less you earn, the more you get, and with the tax exemption, the more you earn, the more you benefit, and this means that practically speaking, mothers with a family income of less than $10,000 never even see this money. The tax credit concept, a relatively modern one in the taxation system, was introduced about ten years ago and is gaining acceptance, although there is considerable resistance among fiscal experts. Thus, the child tax credit is extremely important because with it we have introduced an entirely new element in the fiscal system, a measure that is judged to be very significant in redistributing wealth and removing some of the social injustice in our society.

This is also the mechanism we will need one day to establish and deliver a guaranteed annual income. Speaking about the child tax credit, there are two matters about which I would like to say something. These changes may be an improvement, and this is what I want to ask. We also have to consider whether such a decision would be appropriate at this time when Canadians are very worried about the economy, when they need to tighten the family budget and to know where they are going. This is not an easy question to answer. The other change which I think might be an improvement has to do with the child tax credit and a double scale of benefits. The first thing we have to ask ourselves is whether or not it is right in our society that families with an income over $26,000 receive the full child tax credit. I do not ask this question because I think there is something wrong in making $26,000 or $27,000 a year. Quite the opposite, I am very happy for those who do and the more there are, the happier I will be, because it means that our society as a whole is richer. This has to be mentioned because it is important. I ask the question because of something I said in my speech on old age pensions and which, to my knowledge, was not picked up by any Member of the Opposition. Obviously, no federal or provincial Minister of Health and Welfare in this country or in other Western countries will be able in the next few years to get more money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, in other words, from the taxpayers' money to add to his or her programs. This is what I am trying to explain.

The hundreds of millions of dollars which I used to obtain for this purpose no longer exist. We shall have to rely increasingly on a method which I have used myself. I do not recall how the votes divided, but I presume—my colleagues will correct me if I am wrong—that it was with the agreement of whole House that the bill creating the child tax credit was passed late in the Fall of 1978. You may remember that everyone supported the bill, at least I think so. Everyone voted. I am not sure how the Progressive Conservatives voted, but I shall check on it and I hope for their sake that they had enough common sense to vote for it. I am sure that they would support it today, but I do not remember what they did at the time. I presume they supported the bill. With regard to the financing of the child tax credit Hon. Members will remember that I had to withdraw a special exemption of about $50 for each child and that I was also forced to limit family allowances that same year. We considered it better to make the redistribution within the child benefit structure than to delude ourselves that we could find hundreds of millions of dollars elsewhere. At the time, as Hon. Members will recall, I had to agree with the indexing of the ceiling for families eligible to the full child tax credit. The ceiling was $18,000. I left it at $18,000 because each year it would allow a greater redistribution to poorer families. However, since politics is the art of the possible, this amount was indexed and it is now over $26,000, which means that two thirds of all Canadian mothers receive the child tax credit. I now ask this question and I ask it in earnest: Is this what we want? Because among those receiving the child tax credit many are over the poverty line. I have asked the other question to various groups who represent what we call small wage-earners and people on welfare.

[English]

As the Child Tax Credit is now such a large amount, mothers may tell us that it would be better for them to receive it more than once a year, possibly three or four times a year, or one day each month, because of the need in the family budget.

I resisted that, against much advice from professionals in the field when the Child Tax Credit was created because I thought, and mothers confirmed to me, that a large amount distributed once a year is precisely something for which low income families can never budget properly. It goes either for bicycles for the children, a washing machine or something else that is needed in the family.

Now that the amount is double what it was three years ago, it is worth asking the question. I asked the Anti-Poverty Organization to look into that problem and advise me accordingly.

I have repeatedly touched upon what I believe could be improvements in the child benefit system. I again stress there is no point in dreaming about hundreds of millions or billions of dollars, which only God knows where to find, to add to the budgets of these statutory programs. Instead, in the future we will have to look to improvements from within. The Family Allowance costs Canadians about $2.2 billion, of which close to half a billion dollars comes back through income taxes. The value of the Child Tax Credit is close to $1 billion in benefits. The Child Tax Exemption would be around $800 million.

[Translation]

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to repeat that the universality or indexation of family allowances will not be affected. We are not doing away with indexation, we are keeping it for everybody. It is only being capped for all families that are relatively well-off, which means in fact only one third of all Canadian mothers. I should not have to apologize for this, because both the rich and the poor in our society are affected, the families in which a son, a brother, a husband or a wife may have lost his or her job due to the hard times, a main cause of which is the fact that the shopping dollar of every family is being eroded by inflation. What is better then for the people? To feed inflation and keep it at the 12 or 13 per cent level with full indexation or to take the bull by the horns and attack inflation head-on? Of course, it is to attack inflation, and anyone involved in public administration is aware of the need for psychological persuasion and a general mobilization, if inflation is to be wrestled to the ground. And this general mobilization, we in Canada have decided to achieve it through the six and five program. These figures, of course, have been chosen arbitrarily, but they should make it possible for us to cut the 12 and 10 per cent inflation rates by half and bring them down to 6 and 5 per cent. These are our objectives, and in order to achieve them, we are asking all those responsible for various areas in our society to follow suit.

That is why I am asking—and I make no excuse for it—all Hon. Members, including those in the Opposition, to join forces with us to vote in favour of Bill C-132, with the assurance that both Quebec and Alberta are prepared to amend their legislation accordingly, since Family Allowances Act of Alberta is different from ours. This type of co-operation between governments—I insist on this, because it is important—reflects a common effort to bring about an economic society in which inflation is under control.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the comments the Minister made in opening the debate on this Bill. One statement she made was that she anticipated that Opposition Members would make a shopping list of everything they think is wrong. I have to tell the Minister that if we were to prepare a shopping list of everything we think is wrong with what the present Government is doing, we would be sitting here for days on end. She would really have to move to impose closure, because there is no end to what is wrong with what this Government is doing.

I also say to her that it is not only Members of the Opposition who are making shopping lists of what this Government is doing wrong. Canadians from one end of the country to the other are making similar shopping lists. They are waiting for the opportunity to present them to the Government when it gets around to calling a general election. Then they will show this Government what it is doing wrong.

As the Minister said, this Bill is part of a package of three linked together which deal with limiting the indexing of Old Age Security, Family Allowances and superannuated public servants. It is one of three Bills which affects pensions and benefits to children. The Minister spoke about pensions and benefits to children, both in this House and in broadcasts outside this House.

When the first of these three measures was introduced—Bill C-131, which limited the indexing of old age pensions—in her remarks in the House the Minister told the senior citizens of this country that they should be the ones to lead the fight in the battle against inflation. That was her charge to the senior citizens of this country. In the course of that debate and in responding to the Minister, I made the point that what is needed is not a series of ad hoc Bills like this, but a comprehensive reform of our income security systems and our retirement income system. There should be a comprehensive analysis and reform of those systems so they meet the goals they were designed to meet, not only now but in the future.

It is clear to anyone who has looked at the income security system and the retirement income system that at the present time they are not meeting the goals for which they were designed. How can they when in this country over three million people are living below the poverty line? Those security systems are just not working. Much of the assistance is not being targeted to those most in need. In her remarks, the Minister made some reference to that. She said that through the security systems the income is not well distributed. I agree with her. Therefore, I urge her to get on with a comprehensive review of these programs.

• (1600)

But instead of reforming these systems, what does she do? Instead of reforming these systems so they better fulfil their purposes, the Government tries to impose a series of ad hoc measures which, unfortunately, will further distort and complicate those systems. What they will end up with as a result of these three Bills is that the anomalies and inequities presently in the system will be increased rather than diminished.

Having said that, I would like to proceed to the specifics of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, yet another part of the so-called six and five restraint package which was announced in the budget last June. It sets monthly Family Allowance payments at 6 per cent above the 1982 level beginning January 1 of next year, and 5 per cent above the 1983 level, beginning January 1, 1984. Had the normal indexing procedure been followed, and assuming a 10 per cent inflation rate in 1983, then Family Allowances would have been $1.48 per month more in 1983 and $3.05 per month more in 1984 that they would be if this Bill had not been introduced. What that amounts to, Mr. Speaker, is that over the two-year period this Bill will be in effect, mothers will lose $54 per child which they otherwise would have received.

Through this measure, as the Minister has said, the Government expects to save $320 million over the next two years. However, although it is not part of this Bill but was given extensive reference by the Minister in her comments, there is another measure which the former Minister of Finance introduced in his budget last June. That additional measure was that there would be a temporary increase of $50 per child in the refundable Child Tax Credit for the 1982 taxation year. On the one hand we have a program of deindexing Family Allowances, which is supposed to save the Government $320 million. Off-setting that is a temporary Child Tax Credit increase for next year which will cost the Government $250 million. The $50 increase, that one-shot temporary increase, will be available to mothers early in 1983.

These two measures, the deindexing of the Family Allowance which is incorporated in this Bill and the temporary increase in the Child Tax Credit, will mean that all families who qualify for the full Child Tax Credit—that is, those families with incomes below $26,300—will come out $32 per child ahead in 1983, and they will lose a little over $4 per child over the entire two-year period. Families who qualify for a partial Child Tax Credit will lose something between $4 and $54 per child over the two-year period. Those who do not qualify for any Tax Credit will lose the full $54. There will be, of course, a further loss when full indexing resumes in 1985: the base payment will have been permanently lowered.

I do not intend to speak at length on this Bill, but I would like to reiterate one point I made in speaking to the Bill on old age pension indexing just a few days ago, and that is that the Government's six and five restraint program is being applied in a most capricious and inequitable fashion. We have only to compare the treatment which the Government is meting out in the way it addresses the deindexing of old age pensions and the deindexing of Family Allowances to see this. The disparity between the sacrifice being asked of senior citizens and families with children betrays the callousness and lack of thought which went into these Bills.

I spoke of this in the debate on the Bill on old age pensions, which took away the full indexing from the pensions of senior citizens, but it does bear repeating because the cold hard numbers which you associate with it clearly make this point. Assuming a continuing 10 per cent inflation, single old age pensioners with incomes of $9,000 will be asked to sacrifice $290 over the next two years. Not only that, they will continue to sacrifice in 1985 and after because the base for their future pensions will have been permanently lowered. The $290 which they are being asked to sacrifice represents, perhaps, a month's rent which they will have to find from some other source, if they can do so. That is what they are being asked to sacrifice.

What is the Minister asking a family with two children and an income of $26,000 to sacrifice? Under Bill C-132 which we are looking at today and its related budget measures, these families will be asked to sacrifice $8 during the same period. Moreover, the maximum sacrifice any family will be asked to make, no matter how high its income, will be $54 during the period that this Bill is in effect.

What a comparison of the impact of these Bills shows, Mr. Speaker, is that some families with children in Canada will be slightly better off in 1983, assuming the one-year increase in Child Tax Credit. Yet no senior citizen will be any better off than they are now, and this includes the 360,000 who have no income other than Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, because there are no off-setting measures for those at the lowest income levels as there are in the case of families with children. One is given a special benefit, the other is not. In addition, the 1.2 million senior citizens who do not receive the income supplement will be considerably worse off. That is the difference in the way this Government is approaching these two Bills. It simply will not accord the same treatment to the senior citizens of this country that it does to families with children.

I ask the Minister, where is the equity there? How can the Minister justify this disparity? The answer, surely, Mr. Speaker, is that she cannot. In fact, she does not even try. What the Government does is ignore the difference in the way that it is imposing the six and five restraint program. It is pretending that no differences exist. And I may say the Government is becoming quite good at that because it has had lots of practice at that kind of hypocrisy.

The Government claimed earlier this year that it was not reducing its commitment to medicare and post-secondary education. At the same time, its own estimates showed that almost half a billion dollars less was being spent for these purposes, but it chooses to ignore that.

• (1610)

Take another case. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) claimed several times recently in this House that negotiations were proceeding with the Provinces on a new Canada health act.

Yesterday, the November 30 issue of the respected trade newspaper, The Medical Post, was sent to every Member of Parliament. It quoted several provincial Ministers of Health to the effect that there had been no negotiations on the new Canada health act since last September, and further quoted the federal Minister's own press secretary, Bernard Dozier, as saying: "At the moment there are no actual physical discussions going on between Ottawa and the Provinces".

The point I want to make is that what they say and what they do bear little resemblance to each other. Nowhere was this more evident than in a statement specifically related to this Bill, a comment which the Minister of National Health and Welfare made in an interview on "Canada A.M." on November 4, when she said:

> All social programs, that means in particular pensions and all benefits for children, will remain the way they are.

Miss Bégin: That is true.

Miss MacDonald: The Minister says that that is true. Bill C-131, which deals with pensions, Bill C-132, which deals with Family Allowances, and Bill C-133, which also deals with pensions, are on the Order Paper. What are they doing there if the Minister says that benefits for children and pensions will remain as they are?

Miss Bégin: They will.

Miss MacDonald: The Minister says they will. These Bills cut those programs back. Is anyone really trying to pretend that these three Bills do not affect pensions and benefits for children? Is the Minister really saying that they will have no effect on those programs?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) rises on a point of order.

Miss Bégin: Would the Hon. Member accept a question?

[English]

Miss MacDonald: When I am through with my speech, certainly I will accept a question from the Minister and I will have her statement right here in order to answer it, Mr. Speaker.

I really want to pose the question to her, after having made that statement, is she really trying to pretend that these Bills do not have any effect on pensions or on Family Allowances? The Bill before us is entitled "an Act to amend the Familly Allowances Act, 1973". Perhaps we are to take the Minister's statement as a pledge that there would be no further changes. Perhaps that is what she wants to explain. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is backing out of its obligation—wherever it can conjure up the ghost of a pretext for doing so.

With the enormous deficits we now face, the need for restraint in expenditures is, of course, clear. What is inexcusable, however, is the series of Bills before us with these ill-conceived, ad hoc measures for restraint. These Bills ignore such basic principles—to which I thought the Minister was committed—as contractual obligations, the distinction between essential and non-essential expenditures, and the necessity to graduate the levels of sacrifice required from different income groups. The Bills ignore these principles.

These are the principles this Party has consistently fought for in responding to the Government's restraint program. I would say to the Minister that we will continue to fight for these principles through all stages of this Bill and through all stages of Bill C-131, which deals with old age pensions, and Bill C-133 which deals with pensions of superannuated civil servants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), it has been indicated to the Chair the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) has requested permission to revert to motions.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the House that I rose earlier today to table a motion to amend the Income Tax Act. The Table officers have brought it to my attention that the motion should have included the Income Tax Act Application Rules, 1971.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-132, to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had a question.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) had the courtesy to let me ask a question. I shall do so to try to correct some important misinformation that she gave without permitting me to reply. This is a very simple question and I would like her to answer it.

The measure under discussion is a Bill capping, through six and five, the Family Allowances of those who do not really need them. Were the Bills on pensions not included in the budget at the end of June? The Hon. Member has the date of my broadcast; I do not because I did not know that she would bring this up today. Did I not speak on "Canada A.M." at the end of October or November, in which case I was absolutely right in what I said?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Minister made the following statement:

All social programs, that means in particular pensions and all benefits for children, will remain the way they are.

Miss Bégin: When? I ask you, When?

Miss MacDonald: The statement was made on November 4. These Bills were introduced and put on the Order Paper at that time, so I ask the Minister how she could make the statement when she had bills on the Order Paper which were going to change the Family Allowance and the old age pension?

Miss Bégin: I am sorry, I am waiting for the answer to my first question. Were these measures not announced clearly in the budget at the end of June? Does the Hon. Member not know what a budget is?

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to oppose Bill C-132. This Bill, to amend the Family Allowances Program, is another imposition by the Government of six and five restraint. In Bill C-125 last spring, the Government attacked workers with the six and five restraint. Recently we debated Bill C-131, an attack on senior citizens with its restraint on the old age pension. Bill C-132 is an attack on Canada's children, our most important national resource. It is an attack on families who are suffering from the highest unemployment rate in our history. They need every cent of their monthly Family Allowance cheques to pay the extra cost of clothing and feeding their children.

The Bill is also a slap in the face for women. I am sorry that the Minister is not in the House at the moment to listen to this point. The Family Allowance cheque is sometimes the only cheque that many women in Canada receive in their own name. This has great significance, even for mothers in high income families.

Even more harmful from the point of view of this Party—and I did not hear the previous speaker refer to this matter—is the fact that this Bill, following upon Bill C-131 which capped indexing and eroded the universal old age pension, is a deliberate Liberal strategy to erode Canada's universal social security system, in this case Family Allowances.

The Minister denied this but then she quickly said that the purpose of the Bill was to gear the Family Allowance to lower income people. Of course, we are in favour of adequate support for low income people, but we are also in favour of a universal Family Allowance.

• (1620)

I strongly suspect the motives of the Government in this matter. The basic monthly Family Allowance has been a right in Canada since 1945 when, as a result of CCF pressure, it was first introduced in the House. It is not something that can be taken away at the whim of an uncaring Liberal Government or, for that matter, a Tory Government. The federal Government, by reducing the cost of living on Family Allowance cheques, is signalling that it no longer gives priority to the maintenance of the Family Allowance Program to cover all families in Canada.

The Minister repeatedly denies this, but at the same time her application of this proposal enforces the point I just made. Last June 29, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) claimed that the June budget "fully protects the lowest income Canadians and the working poor". Only persons "who are not in need will be asked to share in the serious sacrifices which are required to bring our country out of the economic crisis". We agree with the National Council of Welfare which indicated that the social policy aspects of the June budget would adversely affect thousands of low income Canadians.

Family Allowances until now have been fully indexed, but the budget first, and now as expressed in Bill C-132, will limit indexation to 6 per cent in 1983 and to 5 per cent in 1984. If there had been no budget and no Bill C-132, Family Allowances would have been $358.44 per child in 1983. However, with the budget cutback it will now amount to only $342.24 per year. This reduction means a great deal to many families with children, including middle-income families. Let us not kid ourselves; it is not only low income families who are having trouble these days. Middle income families are suffering from the high cost of living, are being threatened with unemployment and are probably paying off mortgages at exorbitant interest rates. They are hit hard as well. If they have two or three children, of course it is difficult for them to manage.

The Minister stated that she chose to protect the Child Tax Credit which goes to low and middle income families by retaining full indexation to the cost of living. However, she failed to point out that the Child Tax Credit is an annual refund, whereas most families depend upon monthly Family Allowance cheques to cover the costs they face in purchasing clothes and school books and in putting food on the table for their children.

The $26.91 per child is little enough as a Family Allowance to help with the costs of raising children each month. It does not even pay for the cost of a pair of jeans which most children need today, or the expensive runners which they also require. Of course, the price of these items will increase far above 6 per cent during next year. I know many families who do not seem to be known by the Minister that urgently need their Family allowance cheques, not at the end of the month but before the end of the month, to put food on the table. I know many mothers who simply do not have food to feed their families. Their welfare cheques are gone on rent and other costs, and they desperately await their Family Allowance cheques to put food on the table. I am sure there are many people who are working part-time or on unemployment insurance who have the same problem. The Minister does not seem to realize how important this is.

Also I should like to say that even higher income families use the Allowance as an essential part of their monthly income, often as an allowance for teenagers or for educational expenses. With unemployment reaching the highest level in our history, there are many families who normally would not have relied on Family Allowance for basic survival but now really need it just to keep food on the table and clothe their children.

Children are a state responsibility; they are not only the responsibility of individual families. I refer back to the report of the National Agenda for Action in a book called "For Canada's Children", which was a result of a study by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. It was put out by the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child. I see the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy) has left the House. He chaired that Standing Committee. He will recall that the Committee committed itself, and it thought the Government, to some major steps. This is what it said about children:

> Children should be a first priority, but in the structure of the Government of Canada there is no place where they are a primary concern.

The Minister has given several examples of this recently. It continued:

> Children are the responsibility of all levels of Government we elect to represent us. Children are not independent economic entities: they depend on the family for their economic welfare. The normal working of the economy and the economic policies of Government therefore tend to affect the child indirectly through the family.

Also it said:

> Since the quality of life of Canadian families is inextricably linked with the economic decisions made by governments, a concerted effort should be made to ensure that the economic decision making process takes into account the well-being of the family and the child.

Unfortunately, the Government has ignored this sound advice from the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child. It has ignored it by not establishing a secretariat for children which the Commission recommended that could have certainly taken a stand on the matter before us today. Also the Government ignored the Commission Report in the development of its program of restraint and, in particular, in drafting the Bill before us.

The Family Allowance cheque traditionally recognizes the importance of children and families in Canada. It is the only means by which pay cheques and Unemployment Insurance cheques are topped up to allow for the cost of feeding and clothing children each month. Under our system a single person receives the same pay cheque as a married man or woman who has several mouths to feed. We have developed as a Canadian tradition, of which most of us are very proud, a way to adjust to additional size and responsibilities of families with the monthly Family Allowance cheque indexed to the increase in cost of living and with tax deductions for dependants.

Of course, the Family Allowance cheque is very important to all families, not only low income ones. Also I should like to say that the cheque is of particular significance to women, as I mentioned earlier. It is usually mothers who are the main parenting persons in the home. They are the persons who receive the Family Allowance cheque. For women who are full-time homemakers, often the Family Allowance cheque is the only one they receive in their own names. Perhaps many Members sitting in the House do not realize the significance of this, but I ask them to think for a moment about how they would feel if they had worked hard all their lives raising children and looking after a home, with no pay, no benefits, no pension, and were now being faced with a reduction in the one cheque which comes in their own name.

Mr. Kelly: You are being silly.

Mrs. Mitchell: The Hon. Member says that I am being silly. He should hear from some women across Canada as we have, such as those on the Task Force on Older Women who do not think that this is silly at all. It is very basic from the point of view of women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: The Family Allowance cheque is of particular significance to women. Increasingly in today's world homemakers and mothers who are in the home full-time or during a good part of their lives receive no recognition, and recognition today is usually in the form of remuneration, unlike it might have been in previous generations. About the only thing they get is a card on Mother's Day and the Family Allowance cheque. To reduce the cost of living by discontinuing the indexing of Family Allowance cheques is a slap in the face to the women of Canada and to full-time mothers. The Liberals in effect are telling mothers that they are not important. In other words, mothers are the ones who can be made to pay for inflation in Canada today. They are telling mothers that they can buy second-hand clothes for their kids at lower cost because they are not going to maintain indexing to keep up with the real cost of living. This is what the Liberals are saying to many mothers and families. It is a callous Liberal Government that says that. There are many other ways the Government could have saved money, and indeed brought money into the coffers, other than by taking this means in a period of recession.

• (1630)

In the future, if our economy improves—if it ever does—I would like to see us consider the possibility of increasing the Family Allowance to an amount which more adequately would recognize the parenting role of a mother or a father in the home. An increased allowance, when we can afford this, could help cover the cost of daycare for a working parent or could be a means for full-time homemakers to pay into the Canada Pension Plan in their own names. We will be debating this point when we get around to the Green Paper on pension reform.

Recently I attended hearings of the New Democratic Party Task Force on Older Women. These hearings were held in every province of Canada. A woman in Fredericton proposed that the monthly Family Allowance should be raised to a minimum of $200 per family per month so that women could have the choice to remain in the home to care for family members full time and have some financial recognition, not a full wage, but some recognition for this labour. It could also provide the means for some homemakers to pay into the Canada Pension Plan on their own behalf. For mothers who work it could help to pay for daycare costs. If we believe that children are our greatest resource and that parents should have a choice of how they care for their children, this is indeed a very interesting proposal. One caution in that regard is that we do not want changes which would increase the ghettoizing of women in the home and would further exploit their labour as has traditionally been done in the case of homemakers.

We in this Party believe that we must retain the full Family Allowance, paid monthly, and that a monthly payment is essential for each child. It should increase as soon as the economy can allow for this. In order to finance this universal allowance more equitably, we have a proposal which I did not hear the Minister mention at all, nor did I hear the Hon. Member from the Conservative Party mention it. We propose that the financing of this universal program—and the same thing applies to old age pensions—could be paid for more equitably through a reform in the tax system. The highest income people in society would repay the full amount through a more realistic income tax system. We are opposed absolutely to a means test for Family Allowances for the same reason that we oppose a means test for old age pensions. A means test stigmatizes people. It adds to bureaucratic costs. It is far better to reform the tax system and tax back the allowances from wealthier families while maintaining a universal Family Allowance Program as a right.

Both the old age pension cheques and Family Allowance cheques are not socked away in the bank. The money received from them goes immediately into consumer goods and is recycled within our economy. Indeed, this is a stimulus to small business and certainly helps to maintain jobs. Those allowances are important from an economic point of view as well as a social right.

The NDP stands solidly behind universal social security for Canadians. We fought for adequate pensions, pensions above the poverty line, and we will continue to do so by resisting the imposition of six and five on the basis of the old age pension.

We fought for the right of workers to unemployment insurance and disability coverage. We are proud that we have a Program now. Compare the tragedy we would be in if we were back in the same situation as workers were in the 1930s.

Universal medicare was pioneered by Tommy Douglas in Saskatchewan. Medicare is now available to all Canadians. Finally, in 1945 after considerable pressure from the CCF and the labour movement, universal Family Allowances were initiated. These allowances became taxable in 1973, but their being taxable meant that only a portion of the allowance is returned through our income tax system.

We know that the wealthiest people in society pay no income tax at all. That is where the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) can get more money for her restraint program instead of taking the money from the backs of children and families.

I repeat, Family Allowances are a right. Family Allowances must not be considered welfare. They must be fully indexed to the real cost of living, not to a six and five reduction in the cost of living beginning next year. Since the Liberals want to target those most in need, why do the Liberals not reform the tax system and have the higher income people pay more and the lower income people receive more? Of course, we are in favour of the Child Tax Credit system. In fact, we would like to see this system expanded to a guaranteed annual income. That is not to say that we should not have a universal Family Allowance Program as we have described it.

The Liberals, through Bill C-132, are signalling to us and to Canadians their willingness to erode the universal Family Allowance system in Canada. The Minister can deny this, but we have quotes from the former Minister of National Health and Welfare who is now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). On November 3, 1982, he said:

> The Government may end universality of the family allowance program but will not cut old age security benefits.

According to the article, we find:

> Lalonde said in an interview he disagrees with some of his colleagues who say universal social programs are a basic principle of Liberal philosophy.
>
> And he believes Canadians may be ready to swallow an end to universality of family allowance in which all parents, regardless of income, receive monthly benefits. He thinks they may be ready to accept that such benefits should go to those most in need.

Another sentence from this article reads:

> But he said family allowance is an open issue on which he hopes there will be a cool-headed, rational debate.

When our leader questioned him in the House a few days later, the Minister began to back down and waffle and said that he was not abandoning the principle of universality but he still was going to keep an open mind on this question.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare can say all she likes about retaining universality, but that does not sound like a very permanent commitment to us.

We also know from press reports that the Liberal Government during the summer, and the Cabinet in particular, was considering the whole concept of universality as it affected old age pensions as well. The Liberals, being very pragmatic, did not have the guts to go against the political reality, and when they heard from their supporters, even Liberal Members from right across the country as well as middle-income and higher income people, that they would not tolerate a cut in the Family Allowances, this is when the Liberals backed down. It is not because they believe in the Family Allowance in principle. No, that has never come into the question at all. It is simply political pragmatism, as it is with the Conservatives.

Speaking of Conservatives, I would like to know what their position is on universal social programs. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said not a word about this. All she talked about was the ad hocery of programs and the specific amount. She did not once affirm that the Conservative Party believes in universal Family Allowances for Canadians. Indeed, we have information which indicates that when the Tories were in Government very briefly in 1969, they had already begun a process to dismantle the universal Family Allowance Program.

• (1640)

Mr. Lewis: That is a lie.

Mrs. Mitchell: Let us have a statement to the contrary.

Mr. Lewis: You produce it. You made the statement.

Mrs. Mitchell: I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) the Minister of Finance at that time. What hypocrites both the Tories and the Liberals are. What a shame it is that political expediency is their only reason for retaining the Family Allowance Program at all.

We in the NDP will not tolerate an erosion of the Family Allowance Program in Canada. We do not say this because it will get us votes or it is politically expedient, but we believe that this is a basic principle of a democratic and enlightened society. It is the foundation of our social democratic philosophy. If one examines the practical governments and the practical economic and social achievements in the Scandinavian countries, West Germany and Austria which have had social democratic governments, one will see that it has worked well both from an economic and social viewpoint.

We will not join the Liberals to victimize Canadian children. We insist that there must be a retention of full indexing on Family Allowances. As I said earlier, we believe that Canada's children are our number one resource. They are the responsibility of society as well as a family responsibility. I heard one Conservative Member laughing and making a joke of this remark when I said it earlier.

Mr. Lewis: Which one?

Mrs. Mitchell: Family Allowance is a right. It is not a gift. Its purpose is not simply to give children a nice present so that their parents will vote for the Liberals or the Tories. The Family Allowance is needed to cover the extra cost of having and raising children. Surely in today's world it is needed more than ever.

Our regret is that the payments cannot be higher at this time. We also regret that the Liberals will do nothing to implement a more just tax system to recover some of the costs of that Program from those who need it least.

Let us discuss dollars and cents for a moment and review the Government's spending priorities. The total cost of Family Allowance is approximately $2 billion. The amount that the Government will save by imposing this reduction in the cost of living index under Bill C-132 is approximately $320 million. In view of all the other priorities and areas where cuts could be implemented, I wonder if the Minister believes that she has chosen and supported the proper program to cut. For example, one can consider our obsolete F-18 fighter planes. One plane costs $37 million. We have ordered 138 of them at a total cost of $5.2 billion. Are these airplanes more important than Canada's children and a universally protected Family Allowance Program?

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) referred to federal Government advertising programs that cost $60 million when she was talking about old age pensions. This money would pay for the funds the Government is trying to bilk out of the hides of senior citizens under the other Act. We can suggest other examples, such as embassies which are not needed at this time.

The amount which is paid to approximately 3.5 million mothers on behalf of seven million children covers children under the age of 18. We know that our birth rate in Canada is declining and certainly the cost of raising children is a major factor in that decrease.

As I mentioned in the House the other day, the only group in which there is a large increase in the birth rate is among adolescent mothers. This tragedy, which I pointed out in the House, was not responded to in a positive way by the Minister, and it must be recognized by the Government. Since the majority of these adolescent mothers unfortunately keep their children and raise them by themselves, in many cases the Family Allowance is basic to their survival and that of their parents who often take over the responsibility of raising the children.

The Family Allowance Program covers approximately 50 per cent of our population who have children under 18 years of age. I have indicated that it is very important that this allowance be paid on a monthly rather than yearly basis. I was very surprised that the Minister of National Health and Welfare talked about perhaps making changes to the Child Tax Credit so that it be provided two or three times a year. I believe she indicated that she thought this Child Tax Credit was a nice bonus at the end of the year which might allow families to buy a refrigerator or some other item. I wonder where she has been. Has she recently talked to any families on welfare or families who are trying to live on unemployment insurance? Has she talked to any families who are trying to pay off a mortgage? They do not need that money for a new refrigerator. They need to put food on the table, and in many cases toward the end of the month it is very little food.

We feel that the Liberals and the Tories—I would like to hear from Conservative Members if they disagree—would like to establish a means test for most social programs, targeting these programs primarily to families in need. If this is true I would suggest that they are the mean Party. We believe that we must have universal Family Allowances just as we must maintain fully indexed old age pensions. These can be partially paid for by a reform in the tax system. However, there must be an adequate income support system as well. This is where I think the child tax system is justified. We would like to see further steps taken in that direction. It is the beginning of a guaranteed income system, but is presently far below the poverty line.

We do not favour the present punitive welfare system which essentially imposes a means test on Canadians. The welfare system does not provide incentives and, in fact, acts as a disincentive for many people, particularly single mothers, to finding alternatives and working for independence.

The present welfare system does not integrate the administration of national and provincial income support programs. There are many varied programs with different eligibility requirements. Each Department has its own "fraud squad" which attempts to develop ways to deny people's requests. There are many highly paid bureaucrats who administer these programs since they are not integrated. Our Party suggests that there should be a reform of social programs. The whole question of Child Tax Credits and Family Allowances should be an integral part of this review.

The debate on Family Allowances cannot be limited to past and present economic circumstances only. We must retain a fully indexed Family Allowance but we must continue to look at the future. It is important that we consider all our social programs and policies with respect to future trends which, in some ways, are quite frightening for us to consider. In view of revolutionary societal changes which will take place, if they have not already happened, we must be prepared to re-evaluate and redesign the entire Canadian income support system. The micro technology revolution is displacing workers permanently and eliminating obsolete jobs in many sectors of our economy, particularly in the service, sales and clerical sectors which employ so many women. Massive layoffs, which are causing so much suffering at the present time, may prove to be permanent. It is frightening to think of workers in the forest industries, in many other resource industries and in the automotive industry in this country who were on unemployment insurance. They have exhausted their benefits and are now facing the need to apply for welfare. If we do not correct this situation they will remain on welfare. Of course, they lose all their savings and assets before they can apply for welfare benefits. Fully indexed Family Allowances are essential to their survival. However, from a long range point of view, we must do everything we can to create more jobs immediately and to plan for economic recovery, which will create whole new areas of jobs with different time arrangements. However even with the best of plans, one wonders if full employment in the traditional sense will ever be achievable again in Canada. Meanwhile, families will suffer and Family Allowances must be sustained and, hopefully, increased.

It is also urgent that we redesign and update our income support system and integrate the Child Tax Credit so that it will be available in a positive way as a right to supplement part-time wages. Part-time jobs may very well become a permanent way of work for many families in future. Hopefully, with planning, the robots which will come as a result of our technological revolution will be able to increase our gross national product so that we will be able to pay adequate income support supplements to retain families above the poverty line. We also need new kinds of work which are fulfilling and meaningful to society. Unfortunately, time does not allow us to debate futuristic matters further today. However, I would urge that all Parties put this on the agenda for full debate of social policy at a future time.

In closing, I want to summarize again the NDP's position on Bill C-132. We strongly support the continuation of universal family allowances and strongly request that full indexing of these allowances be continued and that they not be restrained by six and five cutbacks. We believe that old age pensions and Family Allowances are now considered by Canadians to be the basic foundation of our Canadian society. There is no doubt about it. They represent an economic stabilizer as well, and certainly will fill an economic need. We believe that we must not retreat from universality or apply a means test which relegates such programs to being welfare benefits rather than as a basic human right.

Therefore, we oppose Bill C-132 which imposes six and five restraints on Family Allowances because it is the first step by the Liberal Government in eroding universal Family Allowances. It asks families, particularly mothers, to pay for Liberal mismanagement of the economy, providing very little financial recovery in exchange for the damage which it may very well cause. It ignores tax reforms and other Government economies which would provide needed income and savings during this time of economic recession.

We will oppose the Bill for the same reasons that we oppose Bill C-131. It is a senseless attack on the basic social security programs. It turns people with children into scapegoats. It increases the value of the income tax tested portion of the program, the child tax system, at the expense of the universal portion, the Family Allowance. It permanently reduces the level of benefits to families at a time when two million Canadians are unemployed, three million Canadians live at poverty levels, and the costs of raising a family are the highest in our history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity this afternoon to speak on Bill C-132. I would like to consider it particularly in the light of the Government's six and five program, a program which has been very well received by the Canadian people. I believe that the Gallup polls, which tested public opinion on the program in September, indicated that some 65 per cent or 67 per cent of the people supported the six and five program. I especially want to mention the legislation here this afternoon relating to Family Allowances in conjuction with the Income Tax Act because upcoming legislative amendments will ensure that low and moderate income families with children are compensated via the Child Tax Credit for the reduced cost of living increases in Family Allowance benefits over the next two years in which this Bill will be in effect. By this action, the Government is demonstrating that it is concerned about family incomes and about families with children.

Indeed, it is fortunate that the Government introduced a refundable Child Tax Credit in 1978. This progressive Program was born of difficult economic times, but not as difficult as those we face in the country today. Therefore, it is only fitting that this vehicle should help many Canadian families with children during the current economic struggle. This program has been tremendously successful in the past and I think the Government should be commended for bringing in the Child Tax Credit in 1978.

Hon. Members may wonder why I am speaking about the Child Tax Credit Program when the legislation before us this afternoon is Bill C-132, the Family Allowances Program. It is true that the increase in the Child Tax Credit will be accomplished through the amendments to the Income Tax Act. However, I very strongly feel that Hon. Members cannot responsibly debate the Family Allowances legislation without considering the corresponding changes which have been made to its close relative, the Child Tax Credit Program. Further, if the two pieces of legislation were examined in isolation, Hon. Members could inadvertantly mislead and, indeed, unnecessarily alarm Canadian mothers in low and moderate income families. I am quite sure that none of the Hon. Members here would not want to do that this afternoon, although I do not really recall the two Hon. Members opposite commenting that, in fact, two-thirds of the families and mothers would, in fact, receive as much or more under the two combined Programs. The Child Tax Credit was introduced into the tax system in 1978 because the Government recognized that not enough financial assistance was being directed to low and middle income families with children, especially when compared with the considerable tax advantage offered by the income tax system to those in the higher income category. The Government knew that the best way to increase assistance on behalf of children was through a re-allocation of resources from within the child benefits sector. This was accomplished, first, by reducing the Family Allowances, effective January, 1979, to $20 per month from the figure at that time, which was $25.68 payable through 1978; second, by phasing out, over a two-year period, the higher child tax exemption for children 16 and 17 years of age, starting with the 1979 taxation year and, finally by eliminating the $50 per child federal tax reduction for 1979 and subsequent taxation years.

When the Child Tax Credit Program first began, the maximum credit available on behalf of each child eligible for the Family Allowance was $200. Families in which the net income of both spouses was $18,000 or less in 1978 qualified for the maximum credit. In the case of a single-parent family, this $18,000 threshold applied only to the parent with custody. Families with incomes above the threshold received progressively smaller benefits as their incomes rose. Maximum benefits were reduced by 5 per cent of the amount by which the families' net incomes exceeded the $18,000 base line.

The Government certainly received some criticism when it introduced the Child Tax Credit Program in 1978. However, many of the doubting Thomases were proved wrong when they said that the Program would never work, that mothers would not obtain the required social insurance numbers and that mothers would not apply for the benefit if they were fortunate enough to hear about the Program at all. As we all know, those fears were unfounded. Not only did Canadian mothers prove the critics wrong, they even surpassed the Government's best expectations. The participation rate for the Child Tax Credit Program is among the highest for all Government Programs. Because of the Program's great success, it has not proved necessary to make major changes in the Child Tax Credit Program since its introduction.

There was, however, one minor but nonetheless important change in 1981. At that time the legislation was amended so that, effective with the credit program in 1981, payment could be tied to the eligibility for the Family Allowance in January of the year the credit is paid. Originally the credit went to the person who received or was eligible to receive the allowance in December of the preceeding year. This meant that in certain cases where a child went from the custody of one parent to the other in December, the credit was paid to the parent no longer having custody of the child; so obviously this was a good amendment which ensured that the parent having the custody of the child would receive the credit. It also meant that if a child was adopted, or returned to his or her parent from an institution in December, no credit was paid to anyone. As well as this minor change, the maximum amount of the credit and the level of the family income threshold have been increased each year in line with the increases in the cost of living. For instance, in 1980 the maximum credit payable was $238.00 per child for families with a net income below $21,380. In 1981 these amounts rose to $261.00 and $23,470, respectively.

Had the Government not been required to make adjustments to this Program in order to bring inflation under control, the maximum child credit for 1982, that is the credit payable in the spring of 1983, would have been $293.00 per child for families with a net income of $26,330 or lower, in 1982. However, as I said earlier, because of the strategy the Government adopted in the June Budget, the six and five program, the maximum child credit payable in 1983 will be increased by $50. This means that the maximum 1983 credit will be $343.00 per child. The income threshold will remain at the previously announced level of $26,330.

There are really three points in the Child Tax Credit change which I believe the Hon. Members must keep in mind when considering the implications of the Family Allowances legislation that is before us today. First, the $50 increase will be sufficient to make up completely for any loss due to the 6 and 5 per cent ceilings on Family Allowance indexation which the 2.4 million low and moderate income families with children will experience over the next two years. The Government does not expect and will not permit them with their five million children to undergo a loss because of the steps that have had to be taken to facilitate the recovery of the economy.

Second, the $50 increase will be paid in advance of almost the whole period during which indexation of Family Allowances is limited. To elaborate somewhat, the reduced or capped indexation of Family Allowances will first be effective with the January 1983 Family Allowance cheques. But most mothers will receive their 1982 Child Tax Credit, including the $50 increase, by March or April of 1983. This means that most families receiving the credit will obtain total compensation for the limited allowance well in advance of most of the period during which the cap on Family Allowance benefits is in effect. I feel that this is an especially significant and positive feature of the legislation which should not be overlooked. It is no coincidence that the same approach was taken when the original Child Tax Credit legislation was introduced.

I should also point out that the $50 increase in the Child Tax Credit will approximately balance the loss in Family Allowance indexation only if inflation remains at the high rate we have seen during the past year. If the six and five program works in the way in which it is protrayed, the rate of inflation will be lower in 1983 and 1984. This means that in the second year of the six and five program, the effect of the cap on the Family Allowance rate will be minimized. Were this to happen, mothers receiving the Child Tax Credit would be more than compensated through the $50 increase, for the effect of the indexation limit over the two year period.

I want to point out that no cost of living limits have been placed on the Child Tax Credit Program. This means that both the maximum amount of the credit and the income threshold will continue to be fully indexed. Thus, the maximum Child Tax Credit will be increased by the full rise in the cost of living, to arrive at the maximum Child Tax Credit to be paid in 1984. The income threshold of $26,330 will likewise be indexed fully. It is also very important to emphasize that full indexation of Family Allowances will automatically resume in January of 1985.

Obviously, if the increase in the Child Tax Credit is going to compensate mothers in low and moderate income families for the loss they will experience from the limits to be placed on the Family Allowance indexation, then the cost of this increase will also offset any family allowance savings from these groups. Thus, the savings to the Government over the two year period resulting from these program changes will basically come from upper income families who are in a better position to pay for it.

Clearly, it was with the greatest reluctance that the Government chose to place a limit on the amount of the annual increase in family allowances. The 2.4 million mothers receiving family allowances, who also receive the Child Tax Credit, will be fully protected over the next two years. However, the million or so remaining mothers who do not qualify for the credit have been asked to incur a slight loss, along with many other Canadians, so that together we can fight the battle against inflation. This loss will be just under $50 per child over the two years of 1983 and 1984.

The Government could have chosen a much more drastic course of action. It could have done what others have advocated, and slashed Government spending by eliminating whole programs. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) talked about having these programs fully indexed while the Hon. Conservative Member for St. John's East, on the night of the Budget, when they asked him what he would have cut out, said that he was afraid to tell us because they would never be elected.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member for St. John's East is Mr. McGrath.

Mr. Foster: Well, St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). It is obvious that we have the full spectrum of the Tory Party there, Mr. Speaker.

We did not take those drastic actions, that others advocated, because it would have taken away the lifeline for Canadians who are dependent on this Program of Family Allowances and the refundable tax credit. I think that the Government should be commended for maintaining the Program in spite of the very difficult economic times that we face.

Mr. Lewis: Which the Liberal policies have produced.

Mr. Foster: Most of us realize that in Canada we have one of the highest standards of living, social security programs and—

Mr. Lewis: What about Sudbury?

Mr. Foster: —and a lifestyle which is much better than many other areas in the world.

Mr. Lewis: Six out of work for every five workers.

Mr. Foster: This Program of maintaining a Child Tax Credit which will benefit those in low and moderate income families and give them more than what they would have received from full indexation, will ensure that they will continue to have the very best social security system during this very difficult time that we will face during the next couple of years.

If we all work together, as the six and five program is designed to promote, we will overcome these difficulties—

Mr. Lewis: How about the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Foster: —while at the same time maintaining one of the best social security systems anywhere in the world and, indeed, a good Family Allowance and Child Tax Credit Programs.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments on this legislation which is specifically concerned with family allowances. I was just listening to the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who was so anxious to inform the House that Canadians were delighted to support the 6 and 5 policy. This policy has a direct connection with the bill before the House today, since it is because of this policy that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has been obliged to introduce amendments. Obviously, if you ask businessmen and manufacturers, they are going to be very tempted to say yes to the 6 and 5 program.

Ask any employer whether there is anything he would rather do than restrict wage increases to 6 and 5. The answer is clear. But I am not convinced that employees are unanimously in favour of the 6 and 5 formula, when they do not know whether the cost of living is going to go up by 10 or 12 or 8 or 9 per cent. I do not think the elderly are particularly in favour of this formula either. So it is certainly not true to claim that Canadians are applauding the 6 and 5 program—in fact it is far from true. There is, of course, a category of people that supports this policy. And there is also more than meets the eye in this program, which was basically supported because of the present economic situation.

Perhaps we should ask ourselves why it is that the House is once more considering legislation that is a direct consequence of the poor administration of the last fifteen and especially the last five years, and of the wrong choices made by this Government. Why was it necessary to impose a policy on Canadians, and I mean impose, because although it was touted as a voluntary measure, I can prove today that it is no longer voluntary. I have been told in so many words that the Government is now requiring the private sector to apply the 6 and 5 plan. I think the voluntary concept has changed quite a bit, in only a few months. Of course, the Member for Algoma, like the Minister, mentioned the excellent social programs we have here in Canada. It is always the same old story, Mr. Speaker. When I listen to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), he tells us that Canada has the best farmers in the world and that our agriculture is healthy, at a time when the Farm Credit Corporation is facing an unprecedented demand for loans. Today, we are being told about our excellent social programs. It is true we have good ones in Canada. It is true that a few years ago, Canada seemed like a good place to live. There is no doubt about that, but that is not the point. We are certainly not challenging the significance of social programs or the need to maintain them, and we are certainly not questioning the family allowances program. We certainly have no intention of doing so. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleague for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) would readily agree when I say that we acknowledge the merits of family allowances. The amounts of course have been increased through the years keeping pace with the cost of living and other changes. There is no doubt about that. What would happen, for instance, if we did not have our social programs, considering the disaster that we are now facing? It is true that the situation would be quite serious. Thank God that we have our social programs even though they too often give the impression of a kind of prosperity which is absolutely artificial because it is based on millions of dollars spent to some extent for non-productive purposes. I think that it would have been advisable to promote through research and development, an orderly industrial development which would allow us to save huge sums which are now earmarked for social programs. As I said, Mr. Speaker, we feel that our family allowance program is most important. But it is no use worrying the people silly by quoting the Prime Minister's comments. Earlier the NPD Member referred to the statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Last summer, as I vividly recall, the Prime Minister himself had stated he was loath to cut into social programs, even though the lack of money made such savings necessary. I clearly remember the public reaction to his statement. Even the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), if I am not mistaken, was reluctant to make such cuts. At any rate, the people were really worried. Maybe the intention was to get feedbacks through this particular Minister. When they got it, it took two cabinet meetings for them to decide against slashing social programs.

I would also like to state that I very patiently listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare winding her way around telling us that the legislation would not make much difference as it involves only as little as $4 to a maximum of $54. What she says boils down to this: We need not object so much, we need not worry. The whole thing amounts to $4, $8 or $54 at the most. But although she stated she was very comfortable in introducing the legislation, I have a feeling she is not so comfortable with Bill C-131, and quite understandably. I, for one, refuse to accept that the Government dump the cost of its mismanagement, the wrong courses it has taken, on the most helpless groups in our society. Today, naturally, no reference was made to the wrong decisions that may have been taken. Simply, they look to the future and say: Well, things are fouling up elsewhere, and so are they in Canada, and the Government, of course, is not to be blamed, everyone else, so to speak is except this administration that has been here for the last 15 years.

The Minister states there will not be much change, but finally had to admit that sacrifices will have to be made by everyone including mothers and children who are not responsible for this Government's wrong decisions and mismanagement. If the Bill really changes nothing, why ask some Canadian mothers and families, in significant number to accept self-denial to pull the country out of its present mess? This country, as the Minister remarked, is in a rut and she wants mothers to make sacrifices which may be minor as far as this legislation is concerned, but which are very heavy in the case of senior citizens. And this Government does not only appeal to senior citizens and mothers, and finally children, to bear the brunt of a situation they did not create, it will force their co-operation willy nilly. So if the Minister is so eager to have mothers join in the national drive for sacrifices, it is because they are bound to lose something. I suggest this is indecent, it is unacceptable that the Minister should call on Canadian mothers to suffer the consequences of a mismanagement they are not responsible for. This is why I object to the principle of making those families, mothers and senior citizens pay for this Government's errors. I believe there is no one in this House so lacking in compassion as to accept with equanimity that helpless innocents be forced to shoulder the problems Canada is now facing. And we are asked, without any hesitation to co-operate with a Government which is leading us into bankruptcy. We are asked to co-operate with a Government which has made but the wrong choices, especially these last few months. How could we be willing to co-operate with a Government which is responsible for Canada's current situation? If only as a matter of principle, I would reply by a firm no if a Minister or the Government were to ask me to support this Government's mismanagement with which we have been forced to live for so many years and for which it is mostly to blame. I do not want to waste the time of this House, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say that when a group has to pay even an insignificant amount—because while it is true, as the Minister said earlier, that the Bill does not represent a major change since it is simply changing four quarters for a dollar, as we say in Quebec, the principle remains the same whether we are speaking about four dollars or $50—when people who are certainly not responsible for this situation are asked to partly assume this responsibility for this Government's mismanagement and these people are certainly in no position to pay, I believe—

Miss Bégin: With $38,000, they cannot pay this?

Mr. La Salle: —even if it is $4, for people with children who earn under $26,000—

Miss Bégin: They cannot pay with an income of $38,000?

Mr. La Salle: The Minister is absolutely certain that they are able to pay. However, one thing is certain, the Canadian people know they will have to pay because the Government has no compassion for those affected by the legislation now under consideration, and I hope that I shall have the opportunity later to speak about Bill C-131 concerning senior citizens, who will certainly be affected. But the Minister has found a formula to shuffle $18 in here, $36 in there, to come up with $50 and say that after all this shuffling, the families involved will not have much to pay. However, the Minister has spoken about a sacrifice, therefore it implicitly means a loss. The Government is dealing severely with people who are not responsible and who should not be left holding the baby. And the Government could not care less who is going to suffer, whether they be mothers, children or senior citizens, all will have to pay for its failure. That is what I had to say, Mr. Speaker, and that is also why I shall vote against this bill, because I feel very strongly that some people who can hardly afford to pay are being squeezed by the Government. The Minister may feel differently, but it is not the first time I have to deal with the Government Members opposite. But the fact is that it is my duty to tell the Government that it is not only damaging the country as a whole, but is directly attacking people who deserve more compassion than they are getting today.

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, let me first consider the basic provisions of Bill C-132, which amends the Family Allowance Act. The purpose and sole reason for this legislative action is the implementation of the Government's infamous six and five restraint policy. We are being asked to apply this policy to those families who have children under the age of 18 years. In specific terms, the Family Allowance payment, now fixed at $26.91 per month, will be increased to a limit of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. As a result, the absolute limit will be $1.61, for a monthly payment of $28.52. This is slightly more than $19 for the full year.

On the face of this, Mr. Speaker, it may seem to be a very small amount with which we are dealing, but in the aggregate, across the whole of Canada, considering all the families involved, it becomes a very large amount. More important, it is not only its effect in dollars and cents upon Canadian families, but it is a signal that the Government of Canada is sending to lower income families across the nation. The signal is that it is going to reduce inflation at the expense of the ordinary, low-income Canadian, the very people we want to help in this time of recession. The Government of Canada is indeed sending out the signal, "We are going to take money from you in order to improve the economy of the country". We have to ask ourselves, is that what we want to do? Is that the kind of policy we want to support in this Parliament of Canada? We must ask the important question, why is the Government taking this action in the name and under the guise of "restraint"? The answer is quite simple. The Government is attempting to save $115 million in 1983 and $200 million in 1984.

This Government, which grandly proclaimed a policy by which it paid families a monthly stipend to insulate and protect them from the ravages of inflation, is now cancelling its contract with Canadian families. It is now saying, "What we told you since 1945, we are no longer prepared to implement. We are going back on our word to the Canadian people. We are going back on the promises which we made to provide a certain level of income to all Canadian families. We are reassessing the policy, and the reason we have to reassess it is our spending over the past decade has caused a massive deficit, so the first people we are going to cut off is the families of Canada, and next will be the old age citizens".

The Government of Canada has created the problem and now it asks Parliament to assist it to resolve the problem. It wants to cut off the benefits which are going to the people in Canada who are most in need of assistance.

There are 3.6 million Canadian families affected by Family Allowance, and the Minister tells us that only 1.2 million of those families who receive Family Allowances will be adversely affected. The families so adversely affected will be robbed by the Canadian Government to the extent of $17 in 1983 and $30 in 1984, for each child. Is it not a sad state of affairs, Mr. Speaker, when the Canadian Government has reduced the economy and its Treasury to such a point that it has to turn around and say to Canadian families, in addition to old age pensioners, "We now have to take back from you the statutory benefits which we conferred on you many years ago. We now have to take these benefits from you because we have the country in such a financial position that we can no longer carry these benefits"? In other words, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Government are making poor Canadians pay for its mismanagement of the financial affairs of this country.

Our difficulty in this Parliament is simply this: we realize and recognize the financial mess in which the Government has put this country, we realize the massive deficit which has built up over the years by the Government has to be dealt with, but at the same time, is this the right and proper way to deal with it? Is it right and proper that we try to save this kind of money by taking from the families of Canada what amounts to a very small portion of the family income, but in aggregate is very large? And this is done in the name of restraint, all in the name of getting the economy back on track, of reducing inflation so that, in turn it will reduce interest rates in Canada.

But what is the net result of this legislative action? The Government of Canada is going to spend $95 million more in this area. It is simply reallocating funds, taking it from one group of Canadians and giving it to another. One wonders how this machination came about. What counsels of Government recommended this change of policy in the case of Family Allowance after almost 35 years of continuous payments? We have to ask ourselves these questions. The Canadian people have to ask the Government, what is it doing? Has it lost control of the financial affairs of Canada to the point where it has to grab money wherever it can and take its chances, regardless of the effect on Canadians?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that the funds will be reallocated and only a small number of the persons involved will be adversely affected because, in the case of families with incomes under $26,330, they will benefit from an increase in the Child Tax Credit. In the result, there will not be any bad effect on Canadian families. We have to ask ourselves this: if the net result is an expenditure of $95 million more in public funds and if, as the Minister proclaimed a moment ago in this House, the net result is that Canadian families will not be in a more difficult position as the result of the change, then why are we making the change? How does this help Canada as a nation? How does it help us come together to resolve our economic problems?

The answer becomes very clear, Mr. Speaker, and it is very unfortunate for the Canadian families directly affected by a tax measure of this kind; it is simply the Government's posture. It is trying to fool the Canadian people. It has said, "We have messed things up for ten years, but now we are going to resolve them. Here is how we are going to resolve them. We are going to cut back on this benefit. We are going to cut out that benefit. We are going to save money here. We are going to put those savings in another place, and all will come out right in the end."

If Canadians had any faith in the Government of Canada under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), if Canadians had any reason to believe that the Government had the capacity and ability to solve the problems it has created, there might be reason to support a measure like this. The fact is that Canadians have lost faith in the ability of the Government to resolve the problems that exist in Canada. They are starting to recognize that these kinds of solutions are not solutions, but merely a pretext. They are a public fraud.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare stands up in the House and tries to convince Members and the Canadian people that the Government is doing something right in this case; that by cutting back in this minute way on a small benefit, in talking about amounts like $1.61 per child per family, we are doing something to save the Canadian economy; that by applying the so-called six and five program in this way, some good is going to come about.

I am no economist, Mr. Speaker, but the people of Canada are not qualified as economists either. I do not think anybody really believes that. I do not think there is one person in this country, other than on the Government benches, who really believes that these kinds of measures are going to have any real effect on the economy of Canada. They will simply cause difficulty for those Canadian families who require this money. They will do nothing to advance or change the course of financial transactions or anything else related to the economy.

What we are dealing with, in a sense, is a public fraud. The Government of Canada, under the Prime Minister, has said, "We are going to deal with the problems that we created. We have now a policy that will reduce inflation. That is the great enemy in Canada. If we reduce inflation, we reduce interest rates; if we reduce interest rate, the economy will pick up and create jobs and opportunities for Canadians."

What are we to say to a Government which perpetrates that kind of fraud on the Parliament of Canada and on the people of Canada? How could this measure possibly change the course of the economy in Canada? It is nothing more than the word we are not allowed to use in Parliament but I can use it in another context. It is fraud. It is fraudulent. It is not going to accomplish anything.

What the Government of Canada is doing through the medium of the Minister of National Health and Welfare—whom I could easily believe is once again a dupe in this process because her knowledge in other fields is at such a low level that I can understand how her officials could convince her of the rightness of her course—what the Government is really trying to do is to create the idea and the perception that the Government is moving to solve the problems in the economy but cutting back on social service payments.

That only applies to the Canadian families affected by the cutbacks in family allowance, it applies to the health care system, the educational system and to senior citizens. There is an idea abroad in Canada that we have spent too much of the national resource on social services. There may be some basis for that idea, but what the Government of Canada is not doing is coming to grips with the real problem. It is reassessing its priorities and reassessing its ability as a Government to provide social services. It is dipping in here and there under the guise of an over-all policy called six and five. It is changing this provision and that benefit and so on, to try to pretend to Canadians that it has a plan to solve the problems in Canada.

Let me switch to the economy and say that when there is a deficit in current spending of $26 billion and when that is added to a debt, to bring the total debt for Canada to over $130 billion, it must be recognized that some action has to be taken. There is no way that working Canadians across the country, 10 or 11 million of them in this fiscal year, can incur, as individuals, a further debt of over $1,000. That is the effect of a deficit of $26 billion spread over the work force in Canada.

We realize that something has to be done to stop that. What has to be done is to take effective economic action, not merely taking $100 million away from families through the reduction of the indexing of family allowances.

We are talking about a Government that is losing $500 million in the postal service when we could actually have a postal service that produces revenue. We are talking about a Government that over-spends by $300 million on a program to market dairy products. We are talking about a Government that loses $1 million per week or $52 million per year, on an airport in the Province of Quebec. Yet that same Government comes to the House of Commons saying, "We can accomplish something by cutting back to the extent of $1.61 per month on The Family Allowance."

I defy any Member of the Government to justify that kind of action. I defy any Member of the Government to stand up in this House and say that they agree with that kind of action.

If the Government wants to save $100 million and reduce inflationary pressures through Government spending, I am sure it could find ways, if it used any kind of good sense or imagination to do so, and probably save another $200 million or $300 million, without affecting children, old age pensioners and senior citizens.

It does not want to do that. It wants to create a drama and say, "We are cutting back so hard that we are getting right to senior citizens and children right across Canada. That is how close we are budgeting. That is how fine we are cutting expenditures."

It is a fraud, Mr. Speaker, and I will tell you why. The six and five program hits 500,000 civil servants across Canada. The Government says it will cut salary increases to six and five, but what does it do with Michael Pitfield, the Clerk of the Executive Council? It gives him a 6 per cent increase so that he draws over $100,000. That is not all. It signs a separation contract with him and says, "Mr. Pitfield, when you leave the service of the Government of Canada, you have a pension for life." That is what it does with the public funds. I realize that when you add up the benefits to Mr. Pitfield, they only amount to a quarter of a million dollars. That is all Mr. Pitfield gets out of this Government for the ten or 12 years of service he has given it. It is a pittance. It does not make any difference, I realize that. It is the example. What it is willing to do for Mr. Michael Pitfield is to give him a quarter of a million dollars, but here is what it is willing to do for the children across Canada. It wants to take $1.61 a month away from the children of Canada. What kind of thinking is that? I say to everybody across Canada that they should not think Mr. Pitfield is the exception. That is the unfortunate part of it. He is the rule of the Government of Canada. How can the Minister of National Health and Welfare stand in the House of Commons to try to justify such an action with the expenditures that she and others who sit in Cabinet have approved? Mr. Pitfield is only one example.

Let us talk about the jets which they just bought for $26 million. They are taking $100 million away from the children of Canada and they are spending $26 million or more than a quarter of that amount on jets. Does anyone in the House of Commons think that that is appropriate action? I ask any Minister whether that is the right and proper thing to do. Is that the way to finance things in Canada? They take $1.61 a month away from every child eligible for Family Allowance and spend a quarter of it on jets. They spend a quarter of a million on Michael Pitfield and on long-term superannuation contracts. They allow the postal service to lose $500 million a year.

I give up with this Government. I can stand in the House of Commons and point out these things, criticize and waste my time. I have statistics here whereby I could project the Government's deficit of $26 billion across the Canadian population and tell each working Canadian what it is costing him or her. I could do all these things, but what is the point? The Government is in control and it will not listen. It will not do anything. It has all the mannequins across the way who stand up when they are told to stand up to justify these policies, and we are left to criticize.

I know this thing has to be brought to an end. But they will not do it. They will take away $1.61 from each child in Canada. They will continue to spend to the extent of a $26 billion deficit. They will continue to give favourite public servants like Michael Pitfield increases, while cutting back on other public servants. They will continue to buy jet aircraft and fly them all over Canada. They will continue to spend $5 million on Canada's birthday and change the name from Dominion Day to Canada Day by mischief in the House of Commons. We will not stop them in the House of Commons, but I say to Government Members that we are putting it all down and I hope the people of Canada listen. I hope they are putting it all down, because the day of reckoning will come. When that day comes, even though the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not have to come out of her safe seat in the Province of Quebec and does not have to worry about a 44,000 vote majority, let me tell her that there are other ways for the people of Canada to get back at that kind of activity. There are other ways for the people of Canada to show the Minister and her whole Government what they think of the way they have governed the affairs of Canada.

I can only say to the people of Canada that they had better start thinking about it now and they had better not be fooled. When the day of reckoning comes, they want to remember things like the $1.61 taken away from the children of Canada. Also they want to remember things like the $26 million spent on jets. They want to remember the $5 million they spent on firecrackers on Canada's birthday. They want to remember all things like Michael Pitfield and his $250,000-plus benefit.

All Hon. Members on this side of the House, and certainly my Progressive Conservative colleagues, will remind them day after day what the Government is doing. It will not get this Bill through the House and passed without it being recorded and registered with the people of Canada what the Government is doing and why it is doing it. We will go on and on from this day forward.

Let me address the following remark to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have never had the chance to address her in the House. The Minister does not understand the situation in Canada. She stands up in the House of Commons and pretends to understand the problems in the health care field. What will she do to solve the problems in the health care field? She is going to get rid of the physicians of Canada. She is going to clamp down on physicians and make things more difficult for them, and they will want to move to the United States of America and other places. That is how she will control and improve health services, and this is what she will do with social services. She will stomp on anyone who gets out of line, because she and her Government are in control. I like them to do as much of that as they can because they are hurting the people of Canada, and the people of Canada are finally realizing how the Government is hurting them and how the Government has stooped to the level of taking away $1.61 per month from our children. They are taking it away to finance this nonsensical purchase of jets, nonsensical contracts with senior public servants like Michael Pitfield and a variety of unnecessary purposes.

Our job—and I am sure my colleagues share this view with me—is to point these out continually. We will not let them get away with that stuff. The people of Canada now realize, as we get into the economic crisis, the mistakes they have made. They cannot cover them up with some phony six and five program. They cannot pretend that they are being very careful with the income and assets of the Canadian Government—the property of the Canadian people—simply because they are cutting back on essential benefits and services like health care, Family Allowances and old age pensions.

This is what we are reduced to in the House. Perhaps we are pointing out the obvious, but I think Canadians will forgive us if, after all these years of Liberal rule and all the fraud they have committed on the Canadian public, we are not taking any chances this time.

We have another Bill before the House about Old Age Assistance. Let us remember the election campaign when they promised $35 a month to senior citizens. They said, "Look, this is what we think about senior citizens, those deprived persons in Canada—we will provide them with this benefit of $35". Then they turn around in the House of Commons and come up with Bill C-131 to reduce that benefit. I could refer to a long list of Government promises, but I do not have that much time. I could only summarize it by saying that we in this Party are fed up with the fraud practised by the Government of Canada on the people of Canada. We realize that they can, for a period of time, fool the people of Canada. We realize that that is what they are trying to do with the Bill before the House, where they take away $100 million from one set of children and pretend to give a benefit to another set of children, with a net increased expenditure to the federal Treasury of $95 million. And they call that restraint to fool those people in Canada who realize that they have over-spent and that there must be restraint!

I think one thing is becoming clear. Canadians are fed up with this kind of fraud. They recognize it, they realize what it is, and all the rhetoric, explanations and statistics from the Government side will not bail them out of this situation. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare rises again in the House to defend the little people in Canada and to say how the Government of Canada will protect them, I hope she remembers the $1.61 which she has taken away from the children of Canada. Let us remember that, let us talk about that. I hope she remembers about the physicians whom she is driving out of medical practice when she talks about improving medical care. It gets that personal; it has to get that personal. When we are dealing with fraud, we have to charge persons with fraud and convict them of fraud. That is what I am doing here today. I am charging the Minister of National Health and Welfare with fraud, and I have the evidence here to convict her.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the last speaker I think of a United Way slogan which I hesitate to steal, but it goes something like, "Because of you it is working". I believe that today we are seeing the essence of frustration in the Opposition. Opposition Members realize that the six and five program is working, that we will reduce inflation and that there is nothing they can do to stop it. What they are doing is using various kinds of subterfuge and spurious arguments to try to make it sound as if it is not working. I think they will fail in this process, because I do not believe Canadians buy it.

It is interesting to listen to Opposition Members because they talk as if they had Canadians in their pockets. I want to make it clear to them that I do not share that view; I do not think they have.

• (1750)

I know it is popular to be critical. After all, I think the job of the Opposition Members is to be objectively critical and to try to make sure that the right questions are asked and they get the right kind of answers. But what are they doing in this debate? Opposition Members are attacking this Bill with shotguns in their hands as though it were a target, firing off in all directions. Opposition Members are not really talking about the Bill and what it is all about. They are talking about us taking things away when really what we are doing is giving something away.

The purpose of this Bill in a package and in the context of the six and five argument is to change the inflationary expectations and therefore to reduce inflation. It is not to save money or to change the system. Opposition Members are trying to suggest that we are trying to save a lot of money. They are saying, "Look at the pittance you are taking".

Miss MacDonald: That is what the Minister of Finance said.

Mr. Schroder: We hear Opposition Members saying this will not save that much money and it really will not accomplish very much. It really will not do much to the deficit. But we are concerned about the fact that we want to reduce inflation. When we reduce inflation, then we make the indexing more realistic. What is the use of having an 11.5 per cent indexation if inflation takes all of it or more? Is it not better to have a program such as we have, which tries to reduce inflation, reducing indexation to 6 per cent so that we will end up with a very little, if any, loss in pension because we are stabilizing things? That is what the big complaint is about. What people want to know is why you cannot do something about stabilizing the situation. We are trying to do that with this Program.

Last evening I spoke in the debate. I said that none of these programs are in isolation. One cannot look at the deindexation of these programs in isolation. I said last night that if reducing Old Age Security payments were in isolation, none of us could support doing that. We probably could not support this Bill if it were in isolation, but when it is part of a package, which is designed not only to reduce inflation but also to accomplish what reducing inflation does, which is to promote economic recovery, we can. Without this economic recovery or economic growth, there will be even greater pressure in the future on these social programs so that we must work toward reducing inflation, generating economic recovery which in turn will help us to generate more jobs and complete the circle of restoring economic growth.

You would think, from the speeches we have heard, that this Bill is an attack on universality. I have already explained to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Members that this method of six and five or deindexing is not an attempt to change the system. The system is still there. We are saying to people that they will still get an increase but the increases are being reduced slightly, ever so slightly. But the system is still there. The system is still working. What we are attempting to do is to increase the real value of what people will get by reducing inflation. Therefore, I come back to my argument that because this is working, this is why we are getting attacked from all directions in the form of spurious arguments about what is happening instead of hearing concentrated arguments on the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), probably inadvertently, referred to this Bill as if it were a mother's pension, and the pension was the mother's. I would draw to her attention that Family Allowances are payable to all children under the age of 18.

However, I am pleased to speak on behalf of Bill C-132 which extends the six and five program to Family Allowances. In other words, this Bill is another part of the package. Despite its brevity, a scant 17 lines, if I recall correctly, this Bill is an important part of the Government's economic recovery program. I have to emphasize that over and over again. I would like to focus my own remarks on the economic rationale behind this measure for this Bill represents much more than a short-term cost-cutting exercise. It is part of a carefully balanced economic strategy and it is a good illustration that sound economics and sound social policy can work together.

We have heard many lectures on the economy and certain kinds of economics, but this is a good illustration of how sound economics and sound social programs can work together.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has explained that the Bill is simple enough. The monthly Family Allowance will only be allowed to increase by a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. After that, full indexation to the consumer price index will resume.

Mr. Gass: You are talking out the Bill.

Mr. Schroder: This is an illustration again that we are not disturbing the system. The system is still there.

Mr. Gass: Question.

Mr. Schroder: The scale of the Family Allowance Program best explains the importance of this measure.

Family Allowances are paid monthly to 3.6 million families on behalf of 6.7 million children under the age of 18. Payments during the 1981-1982 fiscal year total led just over $2 billion. This is clearly a Program of such magnitude that it could not be ignored in any effort to restrain over-all Government expenditures. Goodness knows, we have heard enough about Government expenditures and that we should be doing something about controlling Government expenditures. Here we have a program which involves $2 billion a year, and we are attempting in a way to include this in our six and five program which is an attempt to establish economic recovery. Yet we are being criticized, and we hear said that it is not very much and we should not bother with it. Well, $2 billion is a lot of money.

Clearly a program of such magnitude cannot be ignored. The effect of Bill C-132 will be to generate savings of some $265 million over the two-year period, but that is not really that important. What is important is its effect on reducing inflation.

Mr. Taylor: You are filibustering your own Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

COST OF DAVEY-JOYAL REPORT ON RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday all Members of the House of Commons received a two-and-a-half-inch-thick binder containing a report by Senator Keith Davey and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) on the supposed success of the six and five program. The Economic Council has just stated that the apparent success of the six and five program is, in fact, due to market forces, and not to the efforts of the Government's expensive advertising campaign. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Liberal Party reimburse the taxpayers of Canada for the cost of this report, and the cost of all six and five propaganda, on the grounds that it is misleading advertising.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

TRADE

CALL FOR HALT TO RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Noting the failure of the recent GATT talks in Geneva to arrest the destructive wave of protectionism which could well result in contractions in world trade reminiscent of the depression years of the 1930s, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House calls upon the Governments of Canada and the other nations of the world to pursue policies designed to encourage and maximize world trade and to cease erecting unnecessary barriers to international commerce.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Government promised to implement a Canadian marine industrial strategy by autumn, 1980, and we are still waiting for that policy announcement; whereas during the previous two years over $1 billion in Canadian shipbuilding orders have been awarded to offshore competitors because Canada lacks an effective marine industrial strategy; whereas we are losing tens of thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in industrial spin-off benefits because of the Government's continued inaction; and whereas the Canadian shipbuilding industry is facing its worst recession in a decade, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the Minister of Industry and Regional Economic Expansion immediately bring forward the Government's long promised shipbuilding policy, or make a statement in this House of Commons as to why the Government refuses to produce a shipbuilding policy and a policy to develop a Canadian merchant fleet.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

PURCHASES OF ART—ELIGIBILITY FOR CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The November, 1981, budget, despite any slight modifications since that time, has seriously interfered with the sale of art work in Canada. The removal of the work of non-living artists from capital cost allowance eligibility has had devastating effects on purchases of art work including that of the living artists the changes were to help. I move, therefore, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Minister of Finance announce reversal number 45 to the effect that capital cost allowances will again be allowed for the purchase of all art works.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES CAUSED TO PATRONS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and, I am tempted to say, depressing business. Since the Canadian public has repeatedly received mail, much of which includes accounts which fall due on certain dates, since the mail often arrives late rendering it impossible to make payment by mail and have it arrive at the account office in time to avoid credit charges being added, and whereas Canada Post would like to remain as the sole agency for delivering mail in Canada without any guarantee of service, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That Canada Post establish a permanent fund so that patrons who have charges or other related expenses as a result of slow delivery may have recourse to recovery.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

PERMISSION TO ISSUE TAX-FREE BONDS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The federal Government has not carried out its grandiose plan to provide low-cost mortgages for home buyers through a special tax-free investment fund. Nevertheless the same objective can be partially achieved by permitting municipalities across the nation to issue tax-free bonds for capital construction of utility systems as well as servicing residential subdivisions. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That the Government bring forth legislation immediately to permit municipalities to issue tax-free bonds, to raise capital for needed municipal capital works projects, and thus generate jobs. Such a policy would use tomorrow's potential federal tax dollars to create jobs today.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DEMAND FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a matter which is both urgent and critical. There are tens of thousands of unemployed workers all across the country who will be running out of UIC benefits within the next few weeks. In Hamilton alone, between December 6 and December 20 of this year, in excess of 3,000 workers will cease to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House demand that the Government extend UIC benefits to those whose claims are exhausted and to those who through no fault of their own, are now required or will be required to apply for welfare.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

CALLER TO OTTAWA RADIO PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 with regard to a very grave matter. On November 24 I appeared on a two-hour open line radio program about forced metric conversion on station CJSB, Ottawa. One caller who identified himself as Bob was, I am informed by a "brown envelope" source, actually a senior media relations officer of the Metric Commission who was phoning in under an assumed name, when his real name is Peter McCulloch. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That since the forced metric conversion program was introduced by stealth and it would appear now that its paid minions are still practising stealth to carry out a dubious mandate, this House condemns deceit, duplicity, misrepresentation and impersonation used by a public servant who holds a position of public trust, and that the Metric Commission apologize to CJSB and its listeners for this arrogant and shameful act of public mischief.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALLEGED AMWAY SUPPORT FOR PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Amway Corporation is facing charges of defrauding Canadian customs of $28 million, in view of the fact that Amway has been instrumental in getting a number of Members of the Progressive Conservative Party elected, and considering the fact that the Official Opposition is pressing the Government to reduce the national deficit, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson):

That the Progressive Conservative Party, because of its flirtatious activities with Amway, pay the $28 million that Amway owes to Revenue Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas our beloved Prime Minister will soon leave Canada for another sovereign sojourn abroad, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Prime Minister's personal valet be asked to remind the Prime Minister each morning that over 20 per cent of our young Canadians are unemployed as a result of his Liberal Government's policies which have so effectively destroyed business climate during his reign.

Madam Speaker: It is getting worse and worse!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROGRAM SUGGESTED TO ATTACK UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, every month, every day, and in fact every hour, this House and the country hear of factories closing, businesses going broke and people being put out of work. Even the Minister of Finance admits that we are facing a tragic situation with regard to unemployment. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Prime Minister for the first time in this session do as he has promised, take federal dollars and put in place a national program to rebuild our communities, restore our infrastructure and renew our industrial strength in order that we may at least begin to attack what can only be described as a horrendous problem of unemployment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering that despite two years of controls on Japanese cars imported into Canada, their share of our sales market has risen from 22 per cent to 30 per cent, and considering that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been unable to negotiate reductions in the importation of Japanese vehicles for 1983, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

• (1415)

That this House direct the Minister to introduce measures immediately to ensure that Japanese automotive imports be limited to 15 per cent of our market.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS ON PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has gone around this country since October 27 and he has said everywhere that we would be relying on the dynamism and the creativity of the private sector in the creation of growth. Yesterday the Minister tabled the third set of Ways and Means motions since the November 12 budget. Except for minor alterations in those Ways and Means motions, the anti-productivity and anti-creative stance of the budget of November 12 still stands in place. How does the Minister expect Canadians and business to have confidence when he says, on the one hand, that the dynamism and creativity of the private sector is to be the engine of growth while, on the other hand, he files motions and conducts tax policy which is exactly the opposite?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to read carefully the Ways and Means motion which was tabled yesterday. I refer him to the numerous adjustments I announced in my October 27 statement which imply several hundreds of millions of dollars of relief in taxation to the workers of this country and to the small business community and the business community at large. He will realize that the measures and changes I have announced will be of significant help to the business community and the investment community as well as to the workers of the country.

I also want to refer the Hon. Member to statements which have been made by spokesmen for the business community since my statement of October 27. These statements indicate that the changes I have proposed are positive steps which will help recreate greater confidence and encourage more investment. Therefore I invite him to rely on the words coming from the business community itself with regard to this matter.

MANUFACTURING SOFT COSTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that the business community was counting on him to be a Minister who would reverse some of those terrible provisions. After he gave his statement on October 27 he indicated that he might do something with respect to soft costs which are incurred when a manufacturer extends his plant or makes alterations or additions to his plant, thus creating new productivity and new jobs. The Ways and Means motion filed yesterday does nothing with respect to the soft costs issue here. The Minister knows it is a serious matter. If we want to have advancement and growth, we must have some assistance for business. The Minister has done nothing. When will he come clean?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I came clean on this subject several weeks ago. I refer the Hon. Member to a press release which was reported in the newspapers of this country, a copy of which he has received, in which I indicated that changes had been made with regard to MURBs and to soft costs. These changes were announced a few weeks ago and also appear in the Ways and Means motion and will find themselves in the Income Tax Act which I hope to introduce next week.

Following those changes, the Hon. Member can refer to press statements attributed to developers who have indicated that the changes I announced will likely stimulate some $400 million to $500 million of additional investment in the construction industry during the course of next year. I think that is a very positive development. I invite the Hon. Member to refer to that press release and to the press reports on that particular subject.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister to refer to his own Ways and Means motion. With respect to soft costs, it does nothing for someone increasing or expanding his plant.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN BUSINESS TAX PROVISIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): The Minister knows there was testimony before the Standing Committee with respect to capital cost allowances. He knows that there are all sorts of innovative machinery that must be purchased, in the automotive and electronic industries particularly. Why does he continue with this half capital cost bankrupt theory of November 12? Why did he not change the capital cost jurisdiction to make sure at least that those in high tech situations, those who must improve productivity to be competitive in the world, could take advantage of a fast write-off for their plant and equipment?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am sure that my hon. friend will be able to point out a number of provisions that I have not changed. Indeed I have indicated that it was not my intention to agree to all representations that were made asking for a tax break or tax relief right, left and centre.

The Government has to be responsible, and the Minister of Finance has to carry out his duties in a responsible way. I have agreed, as I said, to a large number of changes which I felt were appropriate in the current circumstances.

As far as the capital costs allowances are concerned, I examined this question very carefully and very thoroughly. I compared it with the situation in the United States, and in other countries which are in competition with us. Over all, our regime of capital cost allowances with the provisions that are contained in the Ways and Means motions, compares quite favourably with the regime that is available in other countries. I think this is good enough in the current circumstances.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister says that the capital cost allowance system is satisfactory, but he knows that business profits this year from manufacturing retailing, et cetera are less than 50 per cent of a year ago, and a year ago they were terrible.

Why does the Minister carry on with this horrendous penalty against business and at the same time expect business to supply the jobs we need for our young people? Why does he continue with this foolish attitude expressed in last year's Budget, an attitude based on statistics that were totally out of date at that time and are now horrendously out of date? Why does he continue to penalize industry and business? Can he not do something to make his protestations around the country seem at least honest?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a specific provision in the Ways and Means Motion that was tabled in the House. It is true that corporate profits were down considerably during the past year. I said that it was a matter of concern for all Canadians, for myself and for this Government. However, the changes suggested by the Hon. Member will not solve the problem. What is needed is a solution that will stimulate our entire economy, and with it, the demand for goods produced by our manufacturers. The general drop in profits in our economy is a result of the present slowdown in the international economy, and that situation is not going to be changed very much if we make minor adjustments here and there. In fact, even if I did take the Hon. Member's advice, meaning that corporate taxes would be removed entirely, even if I did, there would still be a drop in profits. In the circumstances, I think the suggestion made by the Hon. Member is irresponsible.

[English]

INCOME AVERAGING ANNUITY CONTRACTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question, too, is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister of Finance has received many representations concerning the iniquitous treatment of I.A.A.C.s and the capital gains reserves, which is still a remnant of the MacEachen November Budget. Is the Minister prepared to consider any changes to the provisions governing the income averaging annuity contracts and, if not, why is he not prepared to entertain changes.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my officials and I have examined those issues very carefully. I have examined the representations that were made before the Joint Parliamentary Committee and also the report of the committee. I indicated in my statement in October that there were a number of adjustments that I was ready to make in the current circumstances. I have come to the conclusion that these particular provisions contained in the Ways and Means motion are the right ones in the present circumstances.

• (1425)

I would argue that the various provisions contained in the Ways and Means motion have been the subject of discussion and debate for well over a year. It is high time that Parliament came to a resolution of these issues. I will be very happy to debate those provisions when we come to the consideration of these issues, either in Committee of the Whole or the Standing Committee, if it is decided to refer it there. However, I would advise my hon. friend that the provisions that I have put forward are those which I arrived at as being the most fair in the current circumstances, taking everything into account.

ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Since these provisions place a burdensome upfront tax, particularly on small businesses and farmers who in some cases are forced to borrow to pay their upfront taxes, and since this also has the effect of increasing the level of taxation by as much as 25 per cent, how does the Minister square his current position with his statement that he is going to rely upon the private sector and individual initiative, as well as the creativity of the individuals within the private sector, to generate the kind of wealth and confidence that are needed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as well as trying to generate the required wealth and the incentive, we as parliamentarians have a requirement to try to have a reasonably fair tax regime. In the circumstances one has to bear in mind whether there are exceptional advantages given to limited groups of individuals compared to others.

As I said, a large number of changes have been made to take into account representations that have been received by the parliamentary Committee and by myself as Minister of Finance. I believe the current changes go a long way to accommodate the strongest points that have been put forward, but there are other issues and points on which we must proceed as has been proposed, or with some slight amendment.

I remind my hon. friend that, with regard to small business, I have made several changes to accommodate and help small business, such as putting the 12.5 per cent dividend tax only on future dividends and not on past dividends, not elevating the taxation on health and dental care plans, and not proceeding at this time with the wholesale tax. All these provisions will be of great help to small business.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS AT BOWATER PLANT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday we learned that 750 people in Corner Brook will be losing their jobs as a result of the partial closure of the Bowater plant. Considering that this closure will have a significant effect on the economy of that Province, is the Government willing to investigate charges made by people in the Province that, through its other operations around the world, Bowater is dumping paper products on the world market, and that it has refused to modernize the plant in Corner Brook over the last 30 years?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will take notice of the suggestion made by the Hon. Member and examine whether it would be appropriate to have an investigation made of this situation. Indeed, if there are elements of evidence that could justify such an investigation, I will certainly discuss it with my colleagues.

ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for the answer he has given. However, I remind him and the House that, in the 1980 election, the Liberal Party as part of its platform announced, and I quote:

> Liberals will expand and strengthen the Foreign Investment Review Agency to include a periodic review of all firms ... to assess the performance of those companies.

The Mayor of Corner Brook said that they have been told for years that the company had been making money. Will the Government admit now that its failure to act on its own election promise has resulted in lay-offs occurring without us knowing whether or not they are necessary? Will the Minister also tell us whether or not the Government is ready to introduce legislation as it promised in 1980, before any other lay-offs occur in this country?

• (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The answer to the first question, Madam Speaker, is absolutely no. The answer to the second question, I believe, has been answered by the previous Minister of Finance in his budgetary statement last November or last June.

INDUSTRY

PLACEMENT OF SACKVILLE, N.B. FIRM IN RECEIVERSHIP

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question on the matter of employment is directed to the Minister of Public Works, who is also responsible for New Brunswick's affairs in Cabinet. The Minister recently received representations from Tantramar MLA Bob Hall, and other local New Brunswick leaders, regarding the imminent placing into receivership of Sackville's largest commercial employer, Enterprise Foundry Co. Limited, a 110-year old locally owned company with 200 employees. In view of the fact that the company was placed into receivership at noon today, will the Minister tell us why there has not been a response to the request of the company president to call him back and discuss ways and means of saving or restructuring the company's position? Second, what have the Minister and the Government done, or are prepared to do now, to assist in preserving these 200 jobs and removing the Royal Bank's bolt from the door?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I need your guidance as to whether we are answering questions on a regional basis or on a departmental basis. But, certainly, I did not wait for the Hon. Member's new MLA in New Brunswick to try to do something on this issue. However, I believe the question belongs to my colleague, the Minister of Trade.

MINES AND MINING

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF PINE POINT MINES IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed either to the Minister of State for Mines or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, whichever considers himself best qualified to answer. However, both of these Ministers should be aware of the latest disaster to hit the Canadian mining industry, that is, the announced closure of Pine Point Mines, which is the biggest private employer in the Northwest Territories. Hundreds of people will be affected by the lay-offs. What is the Government planning to do to help those people who will be affected by the closure?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, many of the programs of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, are available, and I am sure this has been communicated to the employment people, to say nothing about the very significant programs announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, here a few weeks ago in terms of the NEED Program which will be available sometime in early January or February.

I might also indicate, Madam Speaker, there are other places in the Territories where there is virtually a boom economy and many job offers are open to employees. I am referring, particularly, to Norman Wells, which project this Government, in a very far-sighted way, announced about a year ago. I am told they are advertising for employees right now to go to Norman Wells. Perhaps some of the employees there will still find job opportunities in the Territories.

Mr. Nickerson: I thank the Hon. Minister for that announcement regarding Norman Wells, but I do not know if that is really going to help the miners in Pine Point too much, immediately.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): My supplementary question, Madam Speaker, is in two parts. First, could the Minister give us his assurance that he is prepared to meet personally with officials of the steelworkers' union, and officials of Cominco, to see if anything can be worked out to help prevent lay-offs and, hopefully, to prevent closure? Second, could he undertake to review the rates charged by Crown Corporations such as NCPC and the Canadian National Railway? Could he review those rates to see whether a reduction in those rates might mean that the mine would not have to close and lay off both mine workers and railway workers?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, my answer to the Hon. Member's first question is, yes, of course, I would be more than happy to meet with Cominco and the steelworkers anytime they desire, to see whatever can be done by my own Department, of the Departments on my colleagues, which would be of real assistance in this situation, because it is an unfortunate one. My answer to the Hon. Member's second question regarding NCPC rates is, yes, we can check to see if some action on the part of NCPC might alleviate the situation, and I will get back to the Hon. Member on that.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCED LAY-OFFS BY BOWATER CORPORATION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, and is with regard to the West Coast of Newfoundland. The Bowater mill announced yesterday they were shutting down No. 7 machine, which will result in a permanent loss of 746 jobs. The company stated they do not expect things to improve until 1985. The plant will have to close for eight weeks in the first quarter of 1983, in any event.

I point out to the Minister that the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is 19.2 per cent, and in the West Coast area 10,000 people are out of work out of a work force of 51,000, a rate of 20.3 per cent before this shut down happens. It is a devastating blow to the City of Corner Brook. Given this situation, will the Minister and his Department of the Government initiate steps immediately to see what can be done to persuade or to assist Bowater to change that situation? If the situation cannot be changed, are there other Government programs or projects which could be put in place on the West Coast of Newfoundland? Newfoundland, economically, is a wasteland from one end to the other, and the seriousness of this situation now on the West Coast cannot be exaggerated.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, we are all very concerned with the situation described by the Hon. Member. The matters which have been raised will certainly be taken up by the Economic Development Committee of Cabinet. I am sure that my colleague in Industry, Trade and Commerce and my colleague in Employment and Immigration are already seized of the problem and undoubtedly will have recommendations to bring forward to their colleagues.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, this is not a problem which can be solved by the Minister responsible for employment. The unemployment insurance payments in Newfoundland this year are going to be doubled. The amount is simply fantastic and staggering. These are people who have had permanent jobs since the 1930s in this mill in Corner Brook.

Someone is talking to the Minister. I would like assurance that he can hear me. What action can the Government take, apart altogether from the normal processes, to assist western Newfoundland? Can the Minister hear me? One of the Liberal Members is harassing the Minister.

In addition, Madam Speaker, is the Minister taking action in connection with the closure of the Burin fish plant on the south coast of Newfoundland, and the tragedy that hangs over that industry? Is the Minister going to take action on the Kirby Task Force to do something to save the fishing industry as well? We have two disasters, at least, at the moment in Newfoundland.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, contrary to what the Hon. Member stated, the Government of Canada has been a little bit in advance with respect to Bowater. As a matter of fact, in July of this year, after discussion with Bowater, we signed a DREE contract for over $14 million in an effort to ensure that Bowater would be competitive, assuming the international markets would turn around, to provide jobs for the people in that particular area.

With respect to Corner Brook, perhaps the Hon. Member would be willing to talk to his political colleague, the Premier of the Province, concerning the possibility of locating the Fisheries College in Corner Brook. We made representations that we would like to have the Fisheries College located in a community outside of St. John's, such as Corner Brook, and the Premier of the Province insisted that it be in St. John's.

TRADE

UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZATION OF WHEAT EXPORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure he will understand the question because of his role at the recent GATT ministerial conference in Geneva. Last month the United States announced the Blended Credit Program, which is a new program for subsidizing the exportation of wheat from that country. It is worth about $1.5 billion over the next three years, and is in contradiction to the position which they took at GATT.

• (1440)

Has the Government or the Prime Minister petitioned the United States asking them to withdraw that very destructive program? If they have, and the answer is no, can he assure us there will be a similar program for Canadian farmers so we do not lose our world markets?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, all these particular problems were discussed at the recent GATT ministerial meeting. One of the problems not solved was the question of ceasing subsidies. It was the most difficult part of the conference. But there is a work program established to deal with trade in agricultural products over the next year or so, and it is hoped that out of that some common effort will be made to deal with the problem the Hon. Member has mentioned.

Oral Questions

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I note that the Province of Saskatchewan and the federal Government have signed an agreement under the NEED Program, and I congratulate the two Governments for taking action in establishing a job creation program in Saskatchewan. However, there are some basic and valid concerns by workers in Regina, and in Saskatchewan generally, where they are afraid that many of the jobs to be created are jobs now being done by organized workers, and that the salaries provided under the NEED Program will be half of what they are getting now. They are afraid that the NEED Program is just another instrument to be used to reduce the people's standard of living. Can the Minister of Employment and Immigration give us any assurance that the jobs created under this Program are not jobs now being done by organized workers?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to give the Hon. Member that assurance. The guidelines of the agreement we signed with Saskatchewan enunciate, first, that the group of people eligible for employment under the Program are those who have exhausted unemployment insurance benefits. Secondly, the work projects are incremental to work now going on, not replacement of existing work. Thirdly, there is the opportunity to top up the basic $200 average wage we are putting forward. Municipalities or other organizations have the opportunity to go beyond that to a higher wage level if it is in their interest to do it. We have absolutely no interest in trying to replace those on the job; rather it is to provide additional work for those who have exhausted UIC benefits and who want to go back to work rather than simply go on welfare.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Right Hon. Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Referring to the post-employment conflict of interest guidelines which demand that former Ministers not be involved in commercial operations connected with their former portfolios for two years, and given that the hon. Judd Buchanan was involved in a land deal in Banff involving Lot 17, on September 17, 1980, and Lot 23-2 on August 25, 1980, and given that Mr. Buchanan was President of the Treasury Board from November 24 to June 3, 1979, will the Government now freeze this project and order a complete investigation of this matter by a parliamentary committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not see any reason to freeze this project on the basis of what the Hon. Member has said.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, most Governments would investigate before they came to that conclusion.

ROLE OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my second question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. Treasury Board refused to approve the land exchange in Banff in December, 1981. Why was the land exchange executed in November, 1982, not referred to Treasury Board?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I have already answered that question in the House, perhaps in the absence of the Hon. Member. It is because there were substantial changes negotiated as a result of the view which Treasury Board took of the transaction. Those changes were so substantial that Parks Canada officials were satisfied that it was in the interests of Parks Canada and the town of Banff to proceed with the new arrangement, which was entirely within their power to do.

REASONS FOR NOT CONSULTING TREASURY BOARD ON SECOND TRANSACTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of the Environment has missed the point. The first transaction required Treasury Board approval. Treasury Board refused the first transaction. It was not given the opportunity to refuse the second transaction. Why was Treasury Board not called upon to judge the second transaction after it had been called upon and refused to accept the first transaction?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): No, Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is mistaken. Treasury Board approval for the first project was not required, but given the disparity in the values of the land exchanged, the Parks Canada officials decided to seek the opinion of Treasury Board, which they did.

Mr. Nielsen: Exactly.

Mr. Roberts: Treasury Board gave that opinion. The officials then went back, as I have already indicated, and negotiated a substantially different arrangement. On that substantially different arrangement Parks Canada officials did not feel a need to consult Treasury Board again. They were sufficiently confident that they did not feel the need to seek a second opinion.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what the Minister has said is that, so long as Treasury Board was obedient, Treasury Board would be consulted. But when it became clear that Treasury Board would not approve a transaction which smacked of patronage, Parks Canada and the Minister declined to put that matter before Treasury Board. That is what the Minister is saying.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPERTY SELLING PRICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, since the Minister responsible for Parks Canada has spoken of land values, will he confirm that one of the properties involved had been purchased by Mr. John Gow in 1972 for $25,000, and that eight years later it was sold by Mr. Gow to the company in question for $250,000?

Mr. Benjamin: That is called free enterprise.

Mr. Nielsen: Not in this case.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, in reply to the first part of the Hon. Member's question I must repeat—I have made it clear again and again in this House—that there was no intervention on my part to overrule, change or transform recommendations which came from civil servants. So the question of patronage which he continues to cite in his questions is certainly not applicable in this situation.

As to the second part of his question, the details and financial arrangements which took place in relation to the property before Parks Canada entered into the situation, I am in no position to respond.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Minister may claim he is in no position to repond, but he has a duty to be in a position to respond to questions which may very well involve serious patronage and which may very well involve the Government of Canada approving projects which should not be approved.

ASSESSED VALUE OF PROPERTIES SOLD TO DEVELOPMENT COMPANY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister undertake to find out the assessed value of each of the pieces of property involved in the transaction, the price paid for those properties when they were purchased by individuals who subsequently transferred them to the company involved, the Buchanan-Gow Company, and all other information which relates to the value of the properties, so that the House of Commons will be in a position to judge that information? Will he table that information in the House of Commons so that all the people can see it, rather than taking the Minister's word that the Minister did nothing wrong?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member continues to use and repeat the word "patronage". He has been specifically and repeatedly challenged to come forward with any concrete allegation which is verifiable and which he is prepared to support. He has continually refused to do that.

As to access to documentation, I am quite prepared to present to the House and to individuals any documentation which would be available under access to information legislation. If he wants other specific information let him table a question on the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: —Order Paper and we will provide whatever specific information which he wishes to have to which he is entitled.

Mr. Taylor: What are you afraid of?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF PERSONS EXHAUSTING BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR AID TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and has to do with the increasing number of Canadians who find themselves no longer eligible for UIC benefits and who are, for a variety of reasons, not eligible for welfare as well—those people who fall into the cracks between social service programs. In some places this has now reached crisis proportions. The City of Kamloops is one of those places which has been forced to open up a food bank and emergency guidance centre, and just in the last two days the mayor has had to assemble a special crisis committee to deal with this increasing problem.

Would the Minister consider establishing a special fund to assist particularly hard pressed municipalities with this special problem? Failing that, would he reconsider his decision not to extend UIC benefits for an extended period of time? If it is the source of money about which he is concerned—and I am sure it is—would he consider restoring the tax that was cut for upper-income Canadians in the previous budget?

• (1450)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration has pursued negotiations with the Provinces pursuant to the decision to set up a special $500 million program to create jobs for those people who will see their unemployment insurance benefits expire. He has had discussions with a number of Provinces. I am happy that the Government of Saskatchewan has agreed to co-operate and add funds to those of the federal Government, and that the Government of Ontario has agreed to add another $100 million. These provincial Governments are setting a good example which could and should be followed by the other provincial Governments under whose responsibility come the municipalities.

I remind the Hon. Member that the Provinces waste no opportunity to remind the federal Government that municipalities are their responsibility, not ours, and that anything concerning the municipalities should be under the jurisdiction of provincial Governments.

I think the solution is more through the federal and the provincial Governments working in co-operation, and I hope that through this co-operation we will indeed be able to do as much as can be done for those who see their unemployment insurance benefits expire.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF BANK BRANCH CLOSURES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Recently the Bank of Montreal announced that it would close 100 branches across Canada. The Royal Bank announced that it will close a number of branches and cut back on the hours some of its branches are open. This will have a very serious effect upon employment in banks, and an even more serious effect upon the services which banks provide, particularly in one-industry towns such as Wabush, Newfoundland, Duck Lake, Saskatchewan, and Barrière, British Columbia. Will the Minister investigate the serious effects these closures and cutbacks will have on employment in the industry and on the level of service of banks, which is so important to meeting the needs of Canadians? Will he discuss these decisions by the banks with their senior officials?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised the question should be directed to me. I shall, of course, look into the matter. I will discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Finance. As for services being withdrawn from certain communities, I am sure that in this very competitive area, when one bank branch closes, perhaps another bank will open a branch in the same location to provide this service. Otherwise, perhaps the Canada Post Corporation, through its many post offices across Canada, could provide this kind of service to people who have been abandoned by the banks.

HEALTH

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON AGING

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will recall that last summer there was a conference on aging in Vienna and that there was a strong Canadian delegation, due no doubt to her efforts. Shortly after the conference reports were circulated that the Minister intended to follow up the conference with an all-Canadian conference on aging. Is there any truth to that statement? Does the Minister plan to call a Canadian conference on aging in the near future, or at all?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member is not my official critic on pension matters, because this was announced officially last September. I could send him copies of the speech which I repeated to more than one audience. The National Conference on Aging, by and with Canadian participation here in this country, to follow up on the international conference last summer in Vienna, will take place in Canada in the month of June.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Withdraw Bill C-131 as the first step.

Mr. Dantzer: I am glad that I am the critic on pensions, but I become very discouraged being that critic.

PENSIONS

PRODUCTION OF GREEN PAPER

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I have repeatedly asked the Minister when we will have the green paper on pensions. Perhaps she could tell us today precisely when the paper will be released.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to announce that the green paper on pensions will be released in the second week of December. I am not sure of the exact date of the press conference.

Some Hon. Members: What year?

Miss Bégin: Hon. Members opposite are always mixed up about times. We are not talking about two or three years ago; we are talking about this year, in ten days' time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

PRICE CHARGED FOR UNLEADED GASOLINE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Senior officials of Environment Canada have charged that the oil companies are overcharging Canadians by as much as 12 or 13 cents a gallon for unleaded gasoline, considering the actual cost of production. The Government of Canada has apparently spent thousands of dollars on studies which have demonstrated, in the words of one of the Minister's officials, "The price difference between leaded and unleaded gasoline is absolutely ridiculous". What action has the Minister of the Environment recommended to his Cabinet colleagues to deal forthrightly with this price-gouging at the expense of Canadians?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the study to which the Hon. Member refers is one of a series of studies which are being done under the aegis of Environment Canada. The studies have been proceeding now for something like a year to 18 months. As I say, it is one of a series. We expect that the whole series of studies will be completed sometime very early in the new year. When that takes place, my officials and I will try to bring together the conclusions which will be drawn from all those studies and then find some way of consulting with the public in a discussion of their over-all conclusions and findings.

The Hon. Member asks what action we intend to take. I do not intend simply to impose or provide a series of recommendations without further consultation with interested parties, without further consultation with the public. I believe that consultation should take place on the entire set of studies we are conducting, not simply on the basis of one of them.

REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA ROLL BACK PRICE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. Obviously his officials have drawn their own conclusions about the studies. They are not awaiting any further recommendations or studies by themselves or by anyone else. They have concluded that, without a doubt, there is a price-gouging.

Petro-Canada's prices for unleaded gasoline are apparently, according to the same officials, as exorbitant as those of other oil companies. In light of that fact, will the Government at least instruct its own oil company, Petro-Canada, to roll back the predatory prices it is charging Canadians for unleaded gasoline?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, no doubt there are a variety of ways in which this situation can be approached. I would prefer to wait and see the entire base of information that we have as a result of all the studies, before spontaneously acting with one approach in relation to one of them.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

EXCISE TAX PAID BY CANADIAN CANCER SOCIETY

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns the interpretation of the Excise Tax Act which has imposed federal sales tax on the importation and manufacture of publications dealing with the education of the public in the field of cancer, the detection of cancer, and its available cures. This has added a burden of about $100,000 per year onto the Canadian Cancer Society and its volunteers. The Minister has listened to his public servants and has refused to reconsider that decision.

In light of that extra burden on the organization, would the Minister again look at the problem to see whether there could be a remission order issued with respect to the matter? Failing that, would the Minister of National Revenue be prepared to recommend to the Minister of Finance an amendment to the statute which would at least exempt the Canadian Cancer Society from that kind of taxation, so that its volunteers will not be burdened with that extra amount of work? Would he undertake to do that, please?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, in his comments the Hon. Member, a former Minister of National Revenue, seemed to be saying that I was blindly obeying—perhaps I am extrapolating somewhat here—my own officials. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that in this particular case, the Minister of National Revenue is complying with an order of Parliament which changed the tariff item for the importation of certain types of publicity material by certain organizations, including the Canadian Cancer Society. After changing the provisions of the Customs Tariff for this particular tariff item, it was necessary to charge sales tax, since, as the Hon. Member will recall, the issue was that imported printed matter should also be subject to sales tax. As Minister of National Revenue, I am applying provisions that were approved by Parliament in 1980, if I remember correctly, and this is a matter of equitable implementation of the Excise Tax Act as passed by this Parliament.

• (1500)

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. I asked the Minister to look at the law from the point of view of a remission order. The Minister did not answer that question. I also asked him to consider a change in the law because the volunteers for the Canadian Cancer Society have to collect about an extra $100,000 a year just to pay the tax on those things.

Will the Minister comply with those two requests, given the fact that, whatever Parliament may have said, it was a mistake in terms of the justice and the equity of the case? Will the Minister make a recommendation to the Minister of Finance for the inclusion, in the next budget, of a change in the Excise Tax Act, on the understanding that that particular change, if it were dealt with on its own, would go through this House very quickly?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is saying that Parliament made a mistake in approving this change in the tariff item governing the importation of printed matter for certain organizations, including charitable organizations, and thus the Canadian Cancer Society. I am not so sure Parliament made a mistake here, since there was a measure of inequity involved, namely, publicity material printed in Canada was subject to sales tax, while imported publicity material was not, so that the Canadian National Institute for the Blind was paying 9 per cent excise tax on material it had printed in Canada while another organization, the Canadian Cancer Society, was importing its printed material without having to pay the tax, because of the problem with the tariff item. The Hon. Member is asking whether I would be willing to recommend a remission of duty and taxes in this particular case. The Hon. Member should be aware that if we do it in this case, we will have to do the same for all charitable organizations paying excise tax on material printed in Canada. As for recommending to the Minister of Finance that the excise tax should be amended to exempt charitable organizations from payment of excise tax, I am sure that as a former Minister of National Revenue, the Hon. Member will understand that the entire issue must be considered within the broader perspective of assistance to charitable organizations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a few questions for the Government House Leader. Assuming the division bells ring on the termination of the debate under the provisions of Standing Order 75C at approximately eight thirty o'clock, and assuming the vote is completed around nine o'clock, would the Government House Leader inform us what we will be dealing with for the remainder of this day, for tomorrow and as far into next week as he can go?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker. Later today we will be dealing with the second reading stage of Bill C-132, concerning the Family Allowances Act.

Miss MacDonald: There they go, cutting off the children.

Mr. Pinard: Tomorrow, since we have an agreement, we will call Bill C-132 which will come to a division no later than four o'clock tomorrow afternoon. This is as a result of a meeting among House Leaders this morning and a subsequent one that was held at 1:30 p.m. this afternoon.

[Translation]

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, we shall proceed with consideration of Bill C-133, at the beginning of next week, to be followed by consideration of Bill C-131. Thursday will be the last opposition day for this supply period.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I do not know how the Government House Leader's reference to the word "agreement" is going to be taken by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, but I assume that we are of a mind that second reading of Bill C-132 will be completed and the matter referred to committee by the end of the day tomorrow. In the meantime, is the Government House Leader saying that the designated day under the notice given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare yesterday will be Monday? If not, which day next week will be the designated day for the conclusion of second reading of that measure?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I just indicated that we will be dealing with Bill C-133 next week, which is a most important and urgent Bill. We will start with that on Monday. The allocated day which the Hon. Member is talking about will follow second reading of Bill C-133, which we hope will get to second reading early in the week. Most likely it will be some time in the middle of next week, probably Wednesday. In any case, I said that the first item of business next week would be Bill C-133.

As we will get second reading of Bill C-132 later tomorrow, then the appropriate committee can deal with Bill C-132, pending second reading of Bill C-131. We are not wasting time; we are being very practical. The last allotted day, as I have just indicated in French, will be next Thursday. All of this is subject to change with reasonable notice.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, so that we have it abundantly clear, there is no specified designated day for Bill C-131. We are, therefore, in limbo of a day being designated pending completion of Bill C-133. I believe that is the way to interpret it.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the House business as put forward by the Government House Leader is as I anticipated it would be. As far as tomorrow is concerned, we recognize the importance of Bill C-132 being given proper and adequate committee study. It is a very important Bill affecting a large number of people and families across this country. We want to have adequate time in committee to deal with it, and because of that we do think the matter will come to a vote tomorrow for second reading in order that adequate time will be available for the committee to study the matter.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to know from the Hon. Member whether he has the same views on Bill C-133. If so, we could send it to committee next Tuesday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I did not anticipate that I would be asked a question. Could I have it repeated?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, are the dispositions of the Hon. Member the same in so far as Bill C-133 is concerned, and that after a reasonable length of time the Bill be sent to committee as soon as possible so that witnesses can be heard?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, in response to that specific question, there is no doubt in my mind that after a reasonable length of time that Bill will be disposed of and sent to committee. There is no doubt in my mind that that Bill contains matters that are very detrimental to retired civil servants in this country, and there is also no doubt in my mind that it will be in committee for a prolonged period of time in order that those people's views can be heard.

PETITIONS

MR. GREENAWAY—PREVENTION FROM PROFITING FROM CRIME

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 2,820 citizens of Cariboo-Chilcotin riding in British Columbia. This is by far the largest petition that I have had the honour to present in the House to date.

The purpose of this petition is to express the strong opposition by the citizens of Cariboo-Chilcotin to the publication of any books and the reaping of any financial gain through the sales of any publication by convicted mass murderer Clifford Olson. The nature of the petition is to urge the House of Commons to examine what measures may be taken to prevent Clifford Olson from further profiting from his heinous and repugnant crimes through the publication of a book.

• (1510)

The petitioners hope that, in your examination of the petition, you will find the petition in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of Speaker of the House to refer this matter to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons for full consideration.

Time Allocation

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-131

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

She said: Madam Speaker, some Members of the Opposition have asked why we are moving time allocation on Bill C-131. The Opposition has already debated Bill C-131 on second reading for three solid days and evenings. There have been 23 Opposition speakers who have stood up, 17 Conservatives and 6 NDP. Five speakers rose to speak on the Government side.

Up to this time we have heard a clear intent from the Opposition Parties to vote against the Bill and it was publicly said in some quarters of the House that they will even prevent the vote on second reading.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No. Who said that?

Miss Bégin: Have the Opposition been talking to the Bill? If any Members have any new proposal to put forward on this Bill, they will have the chance to do so this afternoon. However, during the entire debate on this Bill we have heard repeated one single speech which was probably prepared by the research bureau of the Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: Those Members were speaking of everything under the sun except Bill C-131. What they did say about Bill C-131, I must say, was filled with misinformation and allegations that were wrong and dangerous. Some Members stated emphatically that our legislation would affect universality. The fact is that universality is being maintained. Other Members have said that we are taking money from the poor. This is false because every pensioner who receives the supplement will have full indexation of both their pension and supplement.

Opposition speakers referred to the deficit, unemployment, Ministers' travel expenses and the Bill on public service pensions which is to be debated later. All of these subjects were lumped together to give people the impression that these Bills, each of which has its own intent, are directed against senior citizens.

I must say that the figures cited by Opposition Members were sadly out of date in many cases and, in fact, incorrect. Therefore, these figures give misleading information to the public about the impact of this Bill.

I repeat that pensioners who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement will not be affected by this Bill. The majority of pensioners, more than half, receive the supplement and they will get the full indexation on the supplement as well as the value of the full indexation of the basic pension. They will not suffer any decrease in their benefits. All pensioners will receive an increase in their pension as compared to the amount they receive this year. All pensioners, including those with excellent means and income, will receive an increase in their pension cheque in January, but it will be slightly less than anticipated. A key factor in this debate is that the Government has ensured protection for those most in need. This is the objective of the redistribution which we have always fought for.

[Translation]

In fact, the 6 and 5 program to be implemented by Bill C-131 must be accepted in order to stabilize the effects of the fight against inflation. And I think this is something the Members of the Opposition do not want. The Progressive Conservatives supported the 6 and 5 program to fight inflation, to cut it in half so that 12 per cent and 10 per cent will become 6 and 5, if everyone does his share. It means pensioners with adequate incomes, women with children who are able to manage, and that is only one-third of this group, taxpayers, Members of Parliament and Ministers. Our own salaries have been cut, and many Canadians are starting to follow our example and support this policy. In fact, we may be seeing the beginning of a success story. Inflation started to drop last July, and what is needed now is a joint national effort. The Official Opposition said yes, we agree with the 6 and 5 program. They agreed at first.

However, when it comes to areas where implementation of 6 and 5 is not as easy and where conversely, it is very easy to indulge in petty politics, then the Opposition all of a sudden becomes very stand-offish and will not have anything to do with these aspects of the program. It only wants to go along with the easy parts of the program. It has done nothing to promote the program and that doesn't need an Act of Parliament, and I am referring to the program that our Government Members and our Ministers and of course the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) are publicizing across Canada at meetings where they are urging co-operation by employers and employees and unions, many of whom have made a tremendous effort. As a result, a start has been made with reducing inflation and we did not necessarily need an Act of Parliament to achieve this. Now that programs are being used to continue the fight against inflation and now that we are asking people who are relatively well-off to do their share as well, the Opposition has withdrawn its support and is trying to sabotage this effort.

[English]

I repeat that I do not regret nor do I apologize for moving this motion of time allocation because of the repetition of the same speech, which concerned everything except the subject, or gave wrong information on the subject, which is only creating worry in a segment of our population that does not need more worries.

I believe that we should proceed with the Bill and send it to committee so that pension cheques will ar ive in time. This afternoon we are engaged in a debate on time allocation for which I ask all Members' co-operation.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) should be ashamed to stand there as a Liberal and support this Bill. In true socialist tradition the Liberals will rewrite history. They have been taking credit for supposedly helping the poor for years so they can describe themselves as great Liberals. When they now have to cut back their aid as a result of the inflation which they have caused, they are trying to rewrite history by saying that everyone is prepared to support these cutbacks and no one will be significantly hurt. They say that these measures do not represent an abandonment of universality. That is not true.

We are proud that 17 Members stood to give their views. Every Member on this side would like to stand and oppose the Bill but the Liberals will not let us. Only five Liberals found the courage to stand up and speak. Then when they stood, they were speaking for the Government. Were they trying to represent the views of 1.2 million Canadians, senior citizens, a substantial number of whom make barely over $8,900? Were any of the Liberal Members standing for them and speaking out? No, not one. Five stood and, in a mealy-mouthed way, tried to back up the Government; but they are so embarrassed that Hon. Members opposite with any sense of honour will not stand and speak for the Bill.

Therefore, the Minister must come in and impose closure. That is what we are faced with here. Let us not kid ourselves, this is closure. This is denying the right of elected citizens to stand up and say: "I have senior citizens who are being hurt". The Minister would deny us that right and she should not stand up and be proud of that.

The Minister tried to say that the six and five program is cutting inflation in this country. Nothing could be further from the truth. Senior citizens know what is cutting back inflation—the depression—because they have lived through it. They saw similar types of situations during the twenties, which then brought the country to its knees during the thirties. They know that inflation must be stopped and they want it to be stopped fairly. It is the depression which the Liberal policies are bringing upon this country. That is what is causing inflation to drop, not the six and five program.

The Liberals are closing off the debate because they do not like publicity; we are starting to get the point through to individual Canadians that this program is not fair. This Bill is unfair imposition on 1.2 million Canadians who are at the low end of the income structure.

Are there any cutbacks of expenditure of the Government? Has there been restraint on the part of Deputy Ministers who are making $90,000? Do you know what they will receive next year, Mr. Speaker? Barely 30 days from now, they will receive an automatic raise of $5,400. What are we taking from senior citizens? We are taking away $209. They will make $209 less next year than they were entitled to receive under the regular system of inflation indexing. However, the Deputy Minister will receive an additional $5,400. We, as Members of Parliament, will receive close to $4,000, yet we expect our senior citizens to receive less than before. That is not fair. None of us stands here saying that is fair, but the Government is putting it through.

That is the state of Liberalism in the country today. Liberals are prepared to ride on the backs of the few. This Bill is just part of a triumvirate. They are even going after mothers receiving Family Allowances. Why do they not go after themselves and cut back their jet flying back and forth across the country? They even fly, as we have often said, like the geese. They fly in great flocks across the country.

Mr. Epp: Convoys!

Mr. Thacker: Conveys!

Mr. Epp: For protection.

Mr. Thacker: As the Hon. Member says, it is probably for protection. However, they are not cutting back on themselves.

The other Bill upon which closure will be invoked, Bill C-133, is with respect to retirement allowances. It will affect seniors who have worked for our own Government for years, who have paid into the regular pension benefits plan and have also paid an extra 1 per cent for protection against inflation. They paid that 1 per cent, not out of their hearts, but rather pursuant to a signed, sealed and delivered contract. Our civil servants performed their end of the contract. They then retired in the fullness of time. However, the Liberal Government with the support of all its members, some of whom spoke rather bravely, will stand to support this cutback when the time for the vote comes, and the contract will be broken. The Government will break a contract that was signed. It has no sense of what it means to negotiate a contract, even though civil servants have fulfilled their end. The Goverment will unilaterally break that contract.

Mr. Siddon: I wonder what the Speaker thinks of that?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, what do you say about that? What do you think of a Government that would do that? Has there been any cutback on the movement of these Canadian projects to the ridings where Liberal Cabinet members live? There is not one cutback there. Liberals will look one square in the eye and say: "If you vote for us, we will give you something; but if you do not vote for us, we will move that project out and put it in a Liberal Minister's riding". They have done that, resulting in extra cost of hundreds of millions of dollars across this country.

Are there any cutbacks on Crown corporations? No. In fact, it has been the very opposite. We now have a new Crown corporation, CDIC, which will require an entirely new structure of accountants, lawyers and administrators. Joel Bell will come in and will probably earn $90,000, $100,000 or maybe $150,000. The Government will never tell us how much it is paying because it does not want Canadians to know. However, there will be no cutbacks on Crown corporations.

Have there been any cutbacks on sabbatical leaves? No. The Government hired a civil servant and paid him $150,000 to attack an industry, to destroy the only industry in Canada which could have carried us through this inflationary period, the depression. While all the rest of the world was mired in depression, we could have been strong. We could have been a source of capital and a source of energy to the world. But no, the Government hired a civil servant for $150,000 to destroy that industry, and then what did it do? It rewarded the guy. The Government sent him to Paris for a sabbatical, costing $200,000 extra.

Have there been any cutbacks on Government guarantees? The Government is prepared to guarantee the big boys who are prepared to kick in money to the Liberal campaign and all that, but it will not protect the little, individual Canadian, the senior citizen who is trying to eke out an existence in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver and is earning nearly $8,900. Is the Government prepared to help that person? No way. I am sorry, senior citizen, but you do not carry enough clout. The Liberal Government does not like the senior citizens of this country and they will make them pay. They do not like mothers who have families either, and will make them pay. If one has a family in this country, one will be in trouble under a Liberal Government.

If one dares to work for the Government, if one dares to perform one's end of the contract and pay the extra 1 per cent, thinking that the Government will honour its contract, the Government does not like that person and will take it away from him. I feel very badly for any of the civil servants who are coming up to retirement age, because they will be hurt.

Does anyone ever get fired from these Crown corporations? If Crown corporations make errors, or the management fails, are employees retired or fired? Never. In private industry we know that if 100 corporations start, at least 24 per cent will fail through inefficiency or bad management. Has any Crown corporation, in the entire history of Canada, ever failed? Never. That is because they come back to the Government which created them. The Government is into everyone's tax pocket and simply spends more tax dollars to keep Crown corporations going, with the result that there are now over 600 of them. That has caused a reduction of the tax base in Canada, and because Crown corporations are not paying their fair share of taxes, it means that the rest of us, as individuals, must pay more. Therefore, the Government cannot give senior citizens what they genuinely deserve.

When it comes time to show restraint and to try to put a program in place which is fair across the board, do the Crown corporations pay their fair share? No way. The Government goes for the poor little senior who has paid his way in the country. Most of these senior citizens fought in the war and many are now suffering grotesque disabilities as a result, whether psychological or physical. They need us more than ever, but the Liberal Government is letting them down.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that we in this party believe that we cannot tamper with the pensions of senior citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I want to say to the Conservative Members that all the bleating which we are hearing today is quite inconsistent with yesterday's statement by the Conservative House Leader, who said he was quite prepared to deal with the Bill and let it go through. I do not quite understand why, all of a sudden, the Conservatives are pretending to be opposed to the measure introduced by the Minister. There is no question in my mind but that the support of the Conservative Party for the six and five program is absolute. They quite well understood, when six and five was brought in, that it would affect pensioners, as it would affect many other people in society. Suddenly to pretend to be opposed to it because there would be some political gain is a disgusting manoeuvre which should in no way be allowed to occur in that Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: There is no way the Government can justify moving to limit the debate on this particular piece of legislation today. This legislation goes to the very heart of the social welfare programs that we in this country have long supported. It goes to the very root of the incomes of senior citizens, regardless of where they live in the country and regardless of what their ability is to meet their financial obligations. There are hundreds of thousands of senior citizens in this country for whom any reduction in their income, considering the increase in inflation, will prove to be disastrous.

• (1530)

Yesterday when I spoke I said we were not only opposed to this Bill but we were opposed to any reduction of any kind. Not one single penny, not one red cent, should be taken from senior citizens in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: They were the people who came through the depression when there were virtually no pension programs. They are the people on whose backs this country was built. It is to them that we turn with pride when we look at the accomplishments that we have made in this country. All of a sudden we are asking them—no, we are not even asking them, we are telling them that inflation brought about in part by this Government's mis-spending has to be fought by senior citizens' incomes being reduced.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you yourself do not agree with this measure and I know that there must be, somewhere in the Liberal benches, others who care about the impact of what is happening here today. I know that there must be some on the Liberal benches who have an understanding of what this measure will mean. Not only does it mean a reduction in purchasing power for senior citizens in 1983 and in 1984, but it means for every single year of their life from today on they will have less income to spend than they would have had and their income will constantly be behind the rate of inflation. It means that we have accepted in principle that senior citizens are not to be given incomes that even begin to meet the requirements exacted by an economy that does not show pity for those who do not have an independent source of wealth.

I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister, withdraw this Bill. Withdraw this action today; withdraw this Bill.

The Minister stands up and with tears in her eyes tells us that it is a small amount that she is asking senior citizens to give up, and it does not really amount to a lot of money. If it is such a small amount, why the hell does the Government need it? If it is such a small amount, surely the Government can find other sources of income in order to guarantee that these seniors will not be asked to make this contribution. My goodness gracious, we are looking for something like $30 million to $60 million over the period of time that this measure will be in place.

Is the Government saying that we cannot find that amount of money within the waste that currently goes on in various and many Government ministries? Is the Government saying that the information program of the Government is more valuable than meeting our commitment to senior citizens, so that they can have a decent income? Is the Government saying that the appointment of another 15 Senators is more important than allocating that money to meet our commitment to senior citizens' incomes? Is the Government suggesting that bailing out Dome Petroleum is more important than meeting the commitment to our senior citizens?

Is the Government suggesting that these small amounts that the Minister speaks about are more appropriately carried by senior citizens whose incomes are already inadequate, rather than carried by those whose incomes are far more than they need? Is the Government suggesting that it could not reasonably have asked those in the upper 10 per cent of the income earners of this country to carry some of the additional burden, so that it did not have to take this action? Surely to God this is not what the Government is saying.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is in my judgment one of the worst pieces of legislation I have seen since I entered the House of Commons. It stands alongside the worst legislation I have seen in 16 years of politics. It is completely against all the things that I believe, and that I believe that the Liberal Party believe, with regard to social justice.

I put to you, sir, that not only are we opposed to it, not only do we intend to vote against it, not only do we think that bringing it to a vote is inappropriate and wrong, but we think this Bill should be delayed by whatever means is available to every Member of this House to guarantee that the Bill never passes; and that is what we intend to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to get back to what the purpose of this two-hour debate today is really all about. It is not about the merits of this Bill.

Mr. Lewis: There are no merits.

Mr. Smith: It is about whether or not a reasonable amount of time has occurred to discuss this Bill in general principle, so that it can come to a vote on second reading. The Bill will still be able to go to committee, still be capable of being examined on a clause by clause basis at great length, if committee members so decide; but what we are really discussing here today is whether or not there has been ample time and opportunity to discuss this Bill in general principle—because that is what second reading is all about—and to allow it to come to a vote. I think that that is the pertinent question.

We discussed this Bill on November 18 for two hours, again on November 25 for three and a half hours and on November 30 for three hours. That adds up to eight and one half hours. In addition to that there will be another two hours in which it will to some extent be debated today. There will also be a full day of debate which will follow, in the event that this motion carries.

In addition to that, if one goes back to the last budget debate, the principle which this Bill will bring into legislation was then debated at great length. The point that I think is really pertinent here today in this debate is, has there been ample opportunity for this Bill to be discussed in general principle so as to allow it to come to a vote at the second reading stage? I think that any reasonable and fair-minded person would have to say yes to that.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Smith: That is not to say that they need feel that they want to vote for it. I accept the good faith of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) when he says that every fibre of his body is against this Bill. Fine; he is entitled to that viewpoint. But I do not think that entitles any one particular Party to drag out debate indefinitely, to prevent the Bill from coming to a vote.

What we had here today was a speech from the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), who somehow would lead us to believe that the Conservative Party is prepared to stop the Bill by whatever means might be at their disposal. That, of course, is not the position that the Conservative House Leader took yesterday when he indicated that he was prepared to see the Bill go on to committee. I think if you look at the position that the NDP has taken at this stage, they have indicated in no uncertain terms that they will do anything they can to prevent it from coming to a vote.

Yesterday their House Leader, as reported on page 21173 of Hansard, said:

> —I want to make clear that we are unalterably opposed to the passage of Bill C-131.

Again he said:

> —voting against a piece of legislation is one way to indicate opposition. We are not only opposed to the point where we want to vote against it, but we are opposed to the point where we do not want to facilitate its passage in any way.

Today, in speaking to this motion, he said that the NDP was prepared to use whatever means available to them to prevent this Bill from coming to a vote.

Mr. Deans: Right on!

Mr. Smith: If you look at the speech given by my good friend, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), on November 18, as reported at page 20805 of Hansard, he said:

> We in the New Democratic Party unequivocally state our opposition to this Bill. As far as we are concerned, we will not be happy until the Government withdraws that Bill.

Mr. Deans: That is right.

Mr. Smith:

> This Bill is an offensive piece of legislation and it should not be allowed to pass through this House. . . . We will have no part of this Bill at all in this corner of the House.

● (1540)

I am not disputing that he feels strongly about what he said. He has a right to those sentiments. What I am suggesting is that a deliberate pattern has been indicated here which demonstrates that the New Democratic Party is not prepared to allow this Bill to come to a vote at second reading stage. He then said as reported at page 20809 of Hansard:

> In conclusion I will say that if this Bill is not withdrawn by the Government it is the view of this Party that it cannot be allowed to be rammed through the parliamentary process.

When we have debated it for over eight and one-half hours, for another two hours today, and another full day next week, plus all the references that were made to the principle in question during the budget debate, that is hardly ramming it through. Even after all this time will have been spent on it, it still will not have got to study by the committee. He went on to say:

> If and when it is referred to committee individuals and organizations wishing to have input into this measure must have an opportunity to do so.

I do not know whether there will be a lot of witnesses before the committee. There will not be any witnesses unless that Party allows it to get there and at least makes a pitch to make representations on that Bill. By preventing it from coming to a vote on second reading, they are preventing any opportunity for this Bill to be the subject of input by witnesses.

On November 30, the Hon. Member for Kootenay-East Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), as reported at page 21150, said:

> My Party will be opposing this legislation in the strongest possible terms. The Whip of the Conservative Party asked me whether our speakers would be rising in the House to speak on the Bill. We will rise to speak on it as long as it remains in the House.

Mr. Keeper: Read the whole speech.

Mr. Smith: I read the whole speech. The Member is entitled to his viewpoint. The point of this debate today is whether there has been sufficient and adequate time to debate this Bill in general principle so that it can come to a vote on second reading and go into a committee. That is what this debate is all about.

There have been a lot of red herrings brought into the heated argument that we have had so far that are not particularly helpful. Nobody likes to say to anybody: "You are going to have less as opposed to more". The act is that if you are going to have a restraint program that means anything, it has to be across the board.

Although I disagree with the position of the NDP, they are a little more honest than the Tories. They never worry about where the money will come from. The Tories like to have it both ways. They say they are all for restraint, all for slashing spending, in principle they will go along with the six and five program. However, when it comes to applying it to any identifiable group of individuals, they like to score little political points by defending them like Horatio at the bridge. I do not think that is honest; it is sitting on both sides of the fence. I do not see the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) here today. I would be interested in hearing his comments.

In any event, the pertinent issue today in this debate is whether a reasonable amount of time has been spent on this stage of the Bill. Any fair-minded individual would have to conclude it has. We should allow it to come to a vote and go to committee for further examination. Those who are opposed will have ample opportunity to make their views known at that stage. When it comes back to the House, they will have an opportunity to vote against it then as they do now. At least the elected representatives of this country should be allowed to vote on this issue and proceed to the next stage.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, those Liberals are at it again. I do not know why they do it. There is no reason. It must be that they enjoy the use of closure.

On his own admission just five minutes ago, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) admitted that this issue had been debated for less than three days; less than three days on second reading of a Bill that will affect in perpetuity every Canadian as they approach the age of 65. That cannot be considered too long a debate. The debate has only just started.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) rose in her place this afternoon and pointed out that Bill C-131 is very important. She said we have to get through it, that they could not allow any more debate, that debate had to be closed off after three days. When asked when another day would be designated for the vote on second reading, she shrugged her shoulders. She did not know when the vote would take place. The order of business for next week is Bill C-133, an issue you have something to do with, Mr. Speaker. On one hand the Government says today this is an important item that has to be dealt with quickly. In the same breath, it says it does not know when it will come back and be voted on. There is no need for closure in this instance.

Mr. Smith: "Time allocation".

Mr. Nickerson: The Parliamentary Secretary should have listened to what the House Leader of the Official Opposition said yesterday. He made the proposal that if it was part of the package, we would deal expeditiously with Bill C-131 and allow it to come to a vote on second reading, in the same way as we would like to see the vote in this House on Bill C-133 to find out how the five originally honest Liberal backbenchers vote. I do not know how many of them are left now. I remember seeing in print that at least one of the supposedly honest Liberals could not vote for Bill C-133 in its present form. I want to be here when the vote is taken to see which way that Member votes.

If the Government had listened to what the House Leader of the Official Opposition said yesterday, it would have seen the opportunity to work together with those on this side. We wanted a package deal with the series of Bills dealing with the six and five program, we do not like what the Government is proposing and we want to have an opportunity to make improvements. We know the program will get through for no other reason than they hold the majority in this House. However, we had hoped to make some improvements to those Bills, perhaps improvements which you, Mr. Speaker, would find worthwhile.

Maybe we would have improved Bill C-133 so that it did not come back to the House in its present form and those who say they cannot support it in its present state could support it after amendments brought forward by the Conservative Party. That is not to be the case.

For some reason, the Government is scared of the NDP. I cannot understand why. I certainly would not be scared of them. I do not think they are any great danger to anybody. In fact, it is a Party that is self-destructing. I do not think they could take on anybody.

Today the House Leader for the NDP said this is the most fundamentally wrong social service legislation that has been proposed in 16 years, but how many Members do they have here? They have four Members here to deal with the most important piece of legislation in 16 years. They could not have kept this debate going and the Parliamentary Secretary knows that. That Party is so badly divided it is not funny. It is a Party that is falling apart.

• (1550)

I notice that Members of that Party are drifting all over the House, continuously leaving the benches of the Opposition and wandering over to take a back seat on the Liberal side. For example, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) is an ex-NDPer, and recently we had another illustration of someone wandering over from the NDP to the Liberal Party. In any event, Mr. Speaker, it is not much of a philosophical switch at all.

This, then, is the Liberal attitude which they show us today and have shown us on several occasions in the past where they needlessly imposed closure. They say: "Look at us; we are the rulers and we are going to show you people in the House of Commons how we operate things here. We don't want you to debate this. We are tired of listening to what you have to say."

I do not know how many times the Liberals have invoked closure in this one session of Parliament. Not only do the liberal members have this attitude of arrogance towards the Canadian people and towards Members on this side of the House, but they also have that attitude towards their own grassroots supporters, and these people are rapidly catching up with what the Liberal hierarchy is doing to them.

A few weeks ago, here in Ottawa at the Liberal convention, the grassroots of that Party, what few are left, suspected that the Government was up to something and adopted a resolution designed to arrest these things which they suspected were going on. They adopted a resolution at that convention which told the Government to maintain universality in its social programs. I remember seeing the Minister of National Health and Welfare on television raise her hand in support of that motion. At the very same time as she was doing that, she was scheming underneath how to get rid of universality. This is the way the Liberal Government operates. At that debate, I remember old-time Liberals like Senator Croll spoke passionately of how they brought in the system of universality in the first place. They spoke of the parliamentary battles they had fought. They spoke with pride of the accomplishments of the old-guard Liberals of the Pearson era and before—before this bunch got in, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-131, which we have before us, is the end of universality. That cannot be denied. All the arguments which have been presented that the old age pensions are still going to increase just do not wash. We are going from a system of universality in social programs to the concept of means-tested social programs. This is being done gradually. This year, the old age pension escalation will be capped at 6 per cent, but the GIS will continue to grow at the rate of inflation or a little better. Because inflation is going to be with us as a result of the deficit which the Liberal Government continues to run up, after a while, in proportion, the OAP will become insignificant in comparison with the GIS. It can then be discarded and we will have a fully means-tested Old Age Security system, if that is what I can call it—because, in my opinion, it will no longer be a security system.

The old concept of universality is that you pay in taxes or in various impositions, and automatically on attaining a certain age or succumbing to an infliction, you are entitled to the services which are there to be provided. Under the Liberals we are getting away from that universal system and going into a means-tested welfare system. We will all be on welfare.

The results of Bill C-131, in the long run, are inevitable and they are an integral part of the scheme of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his predecessor. I can tell the House that Canadians will not be fooled in this matter. What is probably more important right now is that the Members of their own Party will not be fooled; they are going to turn around and vote against these people because these Party Members know what the Government is doing.

If this Bill goes through it will be the end of universality and the end of Old Age Security. And this is being accomplished through closure.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and talk about this time allocation motion. I have been concerned ever since I came into this House as to how we tend to mismanage our time. I wish to quote from the proceedings of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, where it says at page 7:7:

> The purpose of parliamentary procedure is to enable a democratic assembly to operate effectively and fairly.

At the end of the paragraph it says:

> As time is a limited commodity, parliamentary procedure should ensure that the time available for parliamentary business is used as effectively and as fairly as possible.

With respect to "fairly", we have had eight and a half hours of debate, 23 speakers from the Opposition and five speakers from the Government side; and in considering the speeches which have been given, I am struck by the lack of new information which is coming forward.

Time allocation is a good management tool. The all-Party Committee has just made recommendations which have been approved in the House in an attempt to streamline the legislative procedures of the House. It seems to me that time allocation is a method of good House management. It apportions the time effectively. I think it is important when you are debating a Bill such as this that it move quickly through the various positions, so that senior citizens are not kept dangling, so there is some assurance to them of what is going to happen. There has been ample time for the Members of the Opposition to get their objective criticisms across.

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) stated very nicely, I think, that time allocation is not closure but is a gentle form of ending the debate. John Kenneth Galbraith, in "The Scotch" in 1964, said, and I quote:

> Only a thin line divides the articulate man of wisdom from the windbag. The Scotch expected a man to prove his wisdom by putting it to good purpose.

It strikes me, given the speeches from the Opposition during this debate, they are not really putting their time to good purpose. It seems to me that if they have some constructive criticism, the way to put it to good purpose is to get this Bill to committee where they can make their constructive suggestions and we can move the Bill ahead. In listening to the Opposition speakers we get the impression that they are not putting their time to good purpose.

• (1600)

Now, John Andrew Holmes, in an article called "Wisdom in Small Doses"—we are certainly getting that from the other side—said that speech is conveniently located midway between thought and action, where it often substitutes for both. When you look at what has been happening in this debate, there is no question that we are in this sort of nebulous position. The motion which the Minister has put forward this afternoon represents an attempt to move from the limbo between thought and action, from speech to action. It really represents an attempt to use the time of the House for action taken on the basis of reasoned thought and debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder), recognizing that he spoke the Bill out last night and he is speaking again today, would agree that the Bill would be in committee today if he had not talked it out last night; and I was wondering if he would permit a question on that.

Mr. Schroder: If there is time at the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dick: His second speech in less than 24 hours.

Mr. Axworthy: And they are all good speeches.

Mr. Schroder: We are trying to manage our time properly and the Opposition insists on interruptions which really make no significant contribution to the debate. I will just have to continue with my speech, and if they listen I presume they might learn something.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schroder: I think my next quotation is very apt for Members on the other side, particularly the Hon. Member who has just interrupted my speech. Sir William Osler said in 1919: "Consider the virtues of taciturnity: speak only when you have something to say".

Mr. Lewis: Take your own advice.

Mr. Schroder: If Hon. Members on the other side would listen to this, they might recognize the fact that while they maybe made some good points in this debate, they made them over and over and over again.

Mr. Lewis: That is because you do not catch on quickly.

Mr. Schroder: The purpose of this debate is to add objectivity to the issue, to add some new points. That is the science of debate. After 23 speakers it is becoming increasingly obvious that they have nothing new to say. Another quotation, which I could perhaps take credit for if I wanted to but which is anonymous, is to not speak unless you can improve on silence. I think, Mr. Speaker, that what we can do with around this House is a little more silence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Starting now.

Mr. Schroder: Especially from the Opposition. Perhaps in reforming the House we should have incorporated a silent period during debate which perhaps would have been good for all of us. Certainly by continuing this debate, the Opposition can no longer improve on silence. They cannot even improve on what they are saying. You know, most of us are ordinary people.

An Hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Schroder: Ordinary people merely think of how to spend time. You can draw your own conclusion, because I am talking about the Opposition. But those with talent try to use time.

Mr. Lewis: Save him from himself, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I heard a Member opposite comment that really the issue before us right now is whether or not we should be discussing the Bill at length, whether or not the Bill should be passed in principle. I do not know just exactly what principle the Hon. Member was considering. I know the principle which I worry about in this Bill, and I know it is not being addressed by Members opposite. If we are discussing principle, we must discuss the decency which should be inherent within this Bill.

Here we have a Bill which is a method whereby the Government can save money, money to help compensate for the gross deficit that Members opposite so irresponsibly have brought on the people of Canada. We cannot talk about the principle of the Bill without talking about who is going to be affected by it.

Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, was introduced in this House in October. It was the Liberal Government's way of offering a thanksgiving gift to the senior citizens of Canada. It was the Liberal Government's way of saying: "thank you, golden oldies; thank you for what you have done for Canada. Thank you for what you have offered to Canada. Thank you for the dedication and the love you have bestowed on your country. We want to thank you for this, and this is the way we are going to do it."

This country now has a misery index of 22 per cent, and the Government is going to attack the senior citizens as the most helpless group within our country. The Government is going to hit them because they are easily hit. They are down and Members opposite are ready to kick them. It is the Liberal Governement's way of showing gratitude and appreciation for what has been done. That is why I rise, Mr. Speaker, because I am concerned with who is being hit by this atrocious piece of legislation.

Who are these people affected? They are people who went through a depression, a world war, people who waited behind for their loved ones to come back from that war. They are people who suffered their way out of that world war, people who put everything they had into bringing Canada back on its feet. They are people who worked hard during the post-war years, people who were burned out because in their three score and ten years they lived three lifetimes. What is Canada's gift to these people? We are going to limit them to a 6 per cent increase on their old age pension in the first year and 5 per cent in the second year.

• (1610)

I do not think there is anything more to the Bill than I have just stated. It is not a complex Bill. There is nothing that can be done by amendment. There is nothing in the Bill which should prompt any Hon. Member opposite to give support to it.

I do not like this Thanksgiving present; as a matter of fact, I no longer like Thanksgiving.

Mr. Simmons: Do you want to abolish that too?

Mr. McCuish: I would like an opportunity to go to the chopping block and take the turkey with me who is responsible for the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, this entire debate is nothing if not entertaining. I know Mr. Speaker has been preoccupied in the past few minutes with process. I commend what my good friend, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish), has said. I suggest that you read it at leisure, Mr. Speaker, for its comic effect, when you have the time to absorb what he said. Then, if possible, you should get hold of some of the more recent pontifications of his colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), when he talked about what he and his Party would do if they were in Government.

An Hon. Member: The slasher.

Mr. Simmons: Yes, the slasher. He talked about how he would save several billion dollars overnight. They cannot have it both ways. I say to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley that they should really tell the people of Canada how the slasher will find all that money. They know how; they know exactly how. They do not propose saying it unless they have to, but I think it is time that we called their bluff.

They cannot any longer in one mouthful tell the people of Canada that they would be the great artists of restraint and that they would find billions upon billions of dollars, without also telling them how they propose to find those billions of dollars. They cannot in the next mouthful turn on the tears. They cannot give the old tear-jerker speech with a straight face, as the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley just did. He cannot have his cake and eat it too; he has to do one or the other. He has to gang up on his buddy from York-Peel and say: "Slasher, old man, you are misleading the people. I, from Prince George-Bulkley Valley, am in favour of universality. I am in favour of perpetuating those social programs for the good of the Canadian people about whom I just gave a tear-jerker speech." That is what he has to say. Also he should say: "Slasher, I do not believe you although I belong in the same Party, because if you, slasher, find all those billions of dollars, I have a sneaking suspicion that you will take the money at the expense of those people about whom I have just given a tear-jerker speech."

Which is it? Are they for social programs which this Government brought in? Are they for old age pensions? Are they for payments from the public treasury to people who cannot help themselves? They may be for them. They say they are for them, but they were terribly silent and absent when the need for such programs was first recognized. Without exception, it took a Liberal Government on every occasion to take the initiative for all the programs we have been debating over the past few days.

That great tear-jerking Party is good at making tear-jerking statements. Its Members were noticeably absent when we were looking for someone to formulate a program to address the needs of senior citizens and mothers who needed Family Allowance income. They were very much absent in those days, but now the old band wagon syndrome has taken over. Now they see a good thing, and there is a good thing. After 30 or 40 years of banging away at them over there, we in the Liberal Party have convinced them that this is a good thing. Now they rush in to be the champions of what once they despised. They rush in now to be the champions of programs which they never had the gall, the gumption or the foresight to bring in.

I become a little short of temper, a little hot under the collar, when I see the unadulterated hypocrisy of people who, in successive mouthfuls, can say that they will save $50 billion or $60 billion. That is what the slasher said. He said that they would get the deficit down and have a balanced budget in seven years. I say: "Tell us how, slasher; tell us how you will obtain a balanced budget and do all the things the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley also said you should do".

My good friend from Guelph, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder)—

Mr. Kempling: He talked out the Bill last night.

Mr. Simmons: If I could have the attention of Hon. Members opposite, a few minutes ago the Parliamentary Secretary talked about silence. I do not often disagree with him, but I disagree with my good friend from Guelph because I think there has been a lot more silence than he said there was.

Mr. Kempling: Oh!

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) is not quiet for very long. I say to him that there is a difference between empty-headed noise on the one hand and intellectual noise on the other hand. There has been an absolute intellectual silence for days on that side of the House on this particular debate. The intellectual silence has been absolutely deafening.

An Hon. Member: You are deafening.

Mr. Simmons: One of the earlier speakers today on the Tory side of the House talked about—

Mr. Kempling: Tell us what he said.

Mr. Simmons: Still he babbles. Do they wind him up in the morning?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: I hear a lot of noise over there. Perhaps there is some kind of crystal installed in them that keeps them going, and they only have to replace the battery once a year. They just keep babbling. He or one of his friends—and he has a couple—talked about people moving from one side of the House to the other. It somehow bothered them that people should move from one side of the House to the other. I shall not impose upon the House my particular views on that subject. Suffice it to say that I have been here fairly regularly for the past three years and I have not seen any people move from this side of the House to their side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, I must call his attention to the motion before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: I fully thought that I was on the motion all the way. Less than 30 seconds ago I appealed to you, Mr. Speaker, to check Hansard to see the very informative discourse of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley. If there was any suggestion that I was suggesting he was off the subject, I apologize to all concerned.

Someone else on that side of the House mentioned universality earlier today and talked about getting rid of it. It is the same old con game, the same old mugs game, where they spread fear all the time. Clearly the Government is on the record, not only in terms of words but in terms of actions over many years, as being very much for universality. I know that people on the other side have come lately to the cause—welcome. We have been part of the cause, espousing the cause and putting our money where our mouth is for a number of years on the issues of old age pensions, Family Allowances and spouses' allowance.

Mr. Lewis: We do not have that much money.

Mr. Simmons: I know this is an embarrassing subject for them, but it is something they have to live with. Before they talk about getting rid of universality, I say to them that that old smear tactic, that old playing on the fears of helpless people, is too low. They should not engage in it under any circumstances. It does not help them politically. It does not do anything for their self-dignity. It does not do much for my respect of them. Why do they not get off the kick about who is supposed to be ridding the country of universality? It will not be this Government. If they have some ideas, if they are caught thinking out loud about what they would do, if and when they are in power for a few fleeting moments, let them say it. Let them have the courage of their convictions. Otherwise, it the same old tactic—let us play on the fears of the helpless out there; let us do the old tear-jerking routine again; let us spread the word that maybe, just maybe, the Government will tamper with universality! That is good for a few kicks; that is good for a few votes. It is the same old approach. They have not changed one whit. There is nothing new. I wish at least for the sake of variety and a bit of novelty in this debate that these fellows once in a while would get their act together and come up with something more original than playing on the fears of helpless people who cannot be here to defend themselves.

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It does not appear that the Hon. Member has unanimous consent.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, the other day when I spoke on Bill C-131 I indicated that I was not very happy about the prospect of speaking because it is a real shame that one has to speak in this House on such an horrendous bill. However, today I am very happy to speak on the closure motion on Bill C-131. I think it is a great privilege for anyone in this House to oppose this type of closure which has become standard practice by this Government during this session.

Closure is really an undemocratic procedure to enact in this House. I remember many years ago that I was disgusted by a Liberal Government when it imposed closure on what was known as the pipeline debate. That was way back in 1957. It was then that I became interested in being active as a Conservative. Therefore, on this occasion I am very happy to speak once more against this practice which this Government seems to have made a part of its regular bag of tricks.

In the late 1950s there was a fellow by the name of C. D. Howe who was the one responsible for closure. He was the C. D. Howe of "What's a million?" fame. With this Government, the phrase is "What's a billion?" And on and on it goes. For the past two days on this side of the House we have been speaking on behalf of a very large group of people in Canada in the debate on Bill C-131. But these people are a minority. They are our senior citizens. These are people over the age of 65 who receive Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement in order to support them in their retirement. However, two and a half days is not enough time for any group of people to oppose adequately a Bill which attempts to take rights away from a minority. Yet that is what this Bill is doing and it is why we have to speak out against closure.

The people on the other side of the House know, and they know full well, that it takes several days of debate in the House of Commons before word filters out across Canada about what is happening. I dare say that right now half of our senior citizens and half of their organizations do not know the extent to which this cutback will affect them through this program of six and five. I see the Minister shaking her head, but it is true. Bill C-131, in spite of the fact that the Government denies it, is lowering the income and placing many people on the poverty line who were not on the poverty line before. That has to be so because this Government is taking away the purchasing power of our senior citizens over the next two years.

It is all very well and good for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to say: "Thank God we will be in the promised world of six and five next year". If we are, the Minister knows the proper person to thank. But I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not in the world of six and five. The rate of inflation in this country is still over 10 per cent. It is still in the two-digit range.

Our senior citizens who are at or near the poverty line will have less purchasing power, which will place more and more of them on the poverty line or below. It is that group of people who are near that line who will be so seriously affected by this Bill.

This Bill does attack the universality of the old age pension scheme, which is the basic support for our senior citizens. Several Members have commented on this in the past few days and it really is the only remark that upsets the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder), in a most incredible statement when he was reading his speech a few moments ago, probably written by department officials, said that perhaps we should consider that we should not speak in this House unless we can improve on silence. I suggest that is why over the two and a half days of debate only five Members from the Liberal Party have spoken. Obviously, they thought they could not improve on silence.

This Government has spoken about pension reform. The Minister has travelled across the country. I suspect she has spoken in every major city in Canada about pension reform. She advised us today that we will have some indication of what pension reform is all about in the near future. But let us take a look at the record of this Government, a Government that refuses to allow us to debate this issue so that the people of Canada will know what this Government is doing to its senior citizens.

In this Government's budget, the first thing the Liberals did was to penalize our senior citizens in terms of their savings and investments. The Government followed that with Bill C-131 and what it proposed to do via Bill C-133. This Government has done nothing to improve the status of pensioners in this country. I think our senior citizens should know that and we in this House should be allowed to inform them. It would be a far different thing if the pension system were in trouble.

Certainly if this Government, like some other governments in the world, the United States in particular, were having real problems with the social security system, I am sure that Members in this House would co-operate in finding ways to finance what is an ailing system. For instance, our Canada Pension Plan is in trouble now. You can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that we will give this Government the co-operation it needs to improve that system. But the basic support system for the aged is not in trouble. The OAS is working perfectly well. It is the kind of income support that any country would be proud to give their senior citizens.

This leads me to ask this Government and this Minister, why are they attacking this system? We recognize there is a demographic problem, but that did not affect Old Age Security assistance. We recognize that inflation is a problem in this country. But surely a government that spends money the way this Government has cannot place its problems on the backs of our senior citizens.

Let us look at what this Government has done. It has spent $13.7 million on Bombardier by way of guarantees. This Government has made a $200 million loan guarantee to Chrysler; there is a $500 million investment for Dome Petroleum; a $34 million debt guarantee for de Havilland; a $125 million guarantee to Massey-Ferguson; and a $20 million investment in Minaki Lodge. What about its recently set-up Crown Corporation of which this Government is so proud? I am referring, of course, to Petro-Canada, which is paying $18,000 a day in rent for empty space in Calgary. But now this Government is saying that it needs to fight inflation on the backs of the elderly.

My colleagues and I will continue to oppose closure on Bill C-131 as long as we are able. We will continue to oppose the Bill itself because it is highly unjust to the senior citizens of our country.

• (1630)

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. Mitchell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder about the sequence of speakers. We have had three from each side—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The sequence of speakers has been observed scrupulously.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I want to stick fairly rigidly to the subject of the motion, which does not concern the subject matter of Bill C-131.

I am a member of the Committee which has been reviewing the regulations of this House of Commons. One of the matters that we have discussed is the problem of getting legislation out of the House. The Members of the Opposition Parties that are represented on that Committee recognize that the Government has a right to govern, and the Members of the Government Party on that Committee recognize that the Opposition has a right to oppose.

I do not believe that any Member of the Committee has suggested that opposing a Bill went to the extent of being able to block its passage other than by a vote on the floor of the House. Therefore, our discussion centred around how we can bring an issue to a vote on the floor of the House. One of the suggested changes to the regulations of the House that has been accepted and will be effective next year is a limitation on the time for speeches. It is hoped that this procedure will aid somewhat in the passage of bills at second reading. This change represents a step forward. I think it will be helpful to the Government and it will still leave all Members with the opportunity to speak. There is no restriction to the total time, but I hope that since speeches will be limited, the remarks of Members will have to be relevant because they will have to confine their remarks to a 20-minute package. After eight hours of debate, which will generally last for two or three days, speeches will be limited to ten minutes.

We have a very real problem which we must face. When I say "we", I mean all Members. The Committee had discussed the implications of our Standing Order 75 and I think it is worth quickly reviewing the three paragraphs in that Standing Order.

Standing Order 75A deals with a situation where there is agreement among the representatives of all Parties to allot a specified number of days to a Bill. A motion is then proposed and, of course, there is an immediate decision. In other words, the decision is made without debate or amendment. Under normal circumstances, one can also anticipate a decision being made without a vote.

Standing Order 75B deals with the situation where we can get substantial agreement between the Parties but not necessarily unanimous agreement. Once again there is a provision whereby the motion will allow for a fixed amount of time for the termination of the debate at that particular stage. However, since it is not unanimous, there is, in effect, a two-hour period for debating the motion, following which there is a vote.

That brings us to the third paragraph, 75C, which we are using this afternoon. Standing Order 75C deals with the situation where no agreement can be reached on time allocation and the Government sees that it is unable to bring an issue to a vote unless it takes this step under Standing Order 75C. In this particular case we are concerned with second reading. The desire of the Government at this stage is to get the Bill out of the House on second reading and into committee where it can be studied by the Members of the committee. This procedure, then, must be used because of the inability of the Government under the existing rules of the House to obtain what would ordinarily be general agreement that there be committee study.

The reason I am very concerned and wish to talk specifically about this issue is that, as many Members will be aware, there is a tremendous backlog of Government legislation. There are many Bills on the Order Paper at the present time which are awaiting passage. In addition to those on the Order Paper, there are almost 300—I repeat, 300, because that figure is very important—pieces of legislation which have been given consideration in the various Departments but which cannot be brought forward because it is obviously impossible to get anything close to that amount of legislation through the House of Commons.

I know that you have a great interest in certain pieces of legislation, Mr. Speaker, so I will deal with those. They are also pieces of legislation in which I take personal interest. It is legislation dealing with the Public Service.

Mrs. Mitchell: What does it have to do with the Bill?

Mr. Herbert: The Opposition tells me to talk about the Bill. I am talking to the motion before the House under Standing Order 75C, which is to limit debate on the Bill. That is the subject matter of the motion and to which I am addressing my remarks.

I have been working here for ten years without success in an endeavour to get important pieces of legislation brought before the House. It is not because the Government is unwilling or that the Opposition is unwilling, but because there is an inadequacy of House time to consider these measures. We cannot even bring them forward for discussion, let alone pass these measures. Therefore, we find ourselves in what I consider to be the ridiculous situation at the present time where no matter what we do among ourselves we cannot reach an agreement which will make it easy for the Government to have discussions on its proposals or, for that matter, for the Opposition to indicate its stand on these measures.

I honestly believe that it is long past the time that we face up to the fact that far too much time is spent on second reading debate in the House of Commons. I fully understand the need for time to pass between the introduction of a Bill and its passage. I understand the Opposition's point of view that there must be time for the public to be made aware of an issue. However, I do sincerely suggest that this should not occur by dragging out a debate on second reading on the floor of the House.

When the Opposition debates this motion this afternoon, I ask them to address the subject, which is the real basic problem of when we must come to a conclusion on second reading debate—not passage of the Bill—so that we can get a measure into committee where we can call witnesses and delay it, if we want, to give the public time to consider the measure. We can have freer discussion in committee while we will not block the introduction of worth-while measures in the House on second reading.

I would be very happy to hear from the Opposition, particularly Her Majesty's Official Opposition, how they intend to handle this subject if they ever—God help us—become the Government of this country.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the eloquence of Government Members on closure, when they have more speakers talking on closing down debate than they do for the actual debate of the Bill itself in order to justify the extreme hardship they are asking the senior citizens of this country to bear. I suggest that the sound of silence on this Bill would not be justified from the point of view of senior citizens.

We oppose closure because we oppose this Bill. We feel that there has not been enough time to make all the arguments, both from the point of view of our position and with regard to informing Canadians about the purpose of this Bill. It is extremely important that senior citizens and all Canadians have a chance to know what the imposition of the six and five program means as it affects pensioners by the indexing of old age pensions.

• (1640)

We also feel that the Liberals want to close down on the Bill because they have not really been able to justify their reasons for using senior citizens in this land as the victims of their economic disasters; and they have not tried to make many speeches. We think their action is unconscionable.

A few minutes ago an Hon. Member to my right said that senior citizens are the ones who suffered very much during the Depression, who fought to feed their families at that time, who have worked hard all their lives, have kept their costs down and are faced with inflated costs for their basic needs today. They are the ones who will be asked to bear the brunt of six and five restraint.

Mr. Herbert: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the subject of the motion which is before the House? My contention is that the Hon. Member is not speaking to the motion.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree with me that I am speaking directly to the point of the motion. As I said, the reason they are imposing closure is because of the very statements of the Hon. Member opposite. We feel the Bill has not had full enough debate and I am explaining that matters have been omitted and not fully brought forward. That is why we oppose closure, so my remarks are surely directed to the point in question.

I note the Liberals have not spoken to the issue of tax reforms. We feel that if there is such a financial problem, and indeed there is in this country, rather than curtailing the indexing of old age pensions, the Government should be considering tax reform so that those with higher incomes would pay more of the tax burden and those with the highest incomes, those in the very wealthiest sector of our society, should not have loopholes whereby they pay no tax at all. That is what should be done to cover costs, not take money from the indexing of old age pensions. That is why we oppose the closure that is being imposed on us today.

The other point raised yesterday in relation to Bill C-132, which has not been debated fully either, is that it represents an erosion of universal old age pensions to cut back on indexing in this way. We know that several times the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been quoted as saying that he is not sure that we should have universal social programs and the Cabinet has been considering some rescinding of universality. Therefore, we want more Hon. Members to be heard on these issues.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that there was no new information to bring forward. I am extremely upset, as will be the women of Canada, that the Liberals will not allow us to have a full debate on the impact of this Bill on women pensioners. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) knows full well that she has been sponsoring conferences across this land on women and pensions. Time after time, those in attendance have been told that women are the hardest hit by economic stress and the inadequacy of pensions.

The Bill will add a burden to the women of Canada. Over one million women pensioners live on very low incomes and most of them, far more than men, live in poverty. Single or widowed women live in abject poverty. They are isolated with no access to transportation. The high cost of living is hitting them hardest. They are facing a deplorable situation with increasing anxiety because their cost of living indexing will be cut by the Government.

Another reason we oppose closure is that women do not have adequate Canada Pension Plan coverage, and that matter will be debated at further length, I am sure. Many women either do not have Canada Pension Plan coverage at all or else it is extremely low since they worked for the lowest wages and are in and out of the work force because they raise children.

Women are also devastated when they become widowed. I am sure Hon. Members must know women friends who have lived fairly comfortable lives while their husbands were alive, but when these husbands die, they suddenly find that they are destitute. The worry which this Bill will add to their shoulders is quite immoral.

Many of the widows in this country are too proud to request the Guaranteed Income Supplement because they see this as being welfare. They have the right to a full pension which is indexed at today's cost of living. That they must pay the rising cost of fuel, must meet very high rents and costs of clothing and food which will be far above the 6 per cent increase this year, I am sure.

We also oppose closure because we have not argued enough on behalf of women pensioners, who live on average to 77 years of age, which is seven years longer than most men. They will suffer longer because of the cutbacks and the punitive actions of this Government directed toward old age pensioners. They are isolated by poverty. Many have contributed all their lives to their country and families as home-makers. They have raised Canada's children. They have worked with no pay or benefits and now they are receiving pensions. For the first time in their lives many will be receiving cheques in their own names, but the indexing on those cheques will be cut down. It is a disgrace, which is why we want the debate to continue and to hear a response from the Government.

Where is the Minister responsible for the status of women? She is not even in the House. She has not contributed to the debate. No one on the Liberal side has given justification to the women of Canada for the Bill that has been brought in or for why women will have to suffer from the cut in indexing.

I would simply like to say that an article quoting the YWCA appeared in the November 11 edition of The Globe and Mail giving the reasons why the Guaranteed Income Supplement is not the answer and why we must have old age pensions for women above the poverty level. The NDP Task Force on Older Women, which has held meetings right across the country, heard from women who complained that they are not adequately served by the pension program of this country. I also refer Hon. Members to an article in The Toronto Star today which states that older widows are the poorest in society, that the cost of living is rising dramatically and that their incomes are going down. In turn, their indexing will be cut, which is immoral.

We want the debate to continue so as to give Canadians, particularly women of all ages, a chance to hear about it and to respond. We want to hear justification from the Government for why it is taking this action and what its impact will be on women pensioners.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-131

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin:

That, in relation to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to take up a few minutes of the precious time of the House in order to support the motion of closure presented by the Government with a view to ending the debate. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) pointed out so perceptively, after nearly nine hours of debate, Opposition Members have had ample opportunity to express their points of view. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, not only are the same points being made over and over again, those same points have, for the most part, no basis in fact and are being voiced primarily to deceive the Canadian people, especially the elderly who are well aware that the achievements of the Liberal Party in formulating social programs and taking new initiatives with respect to social policy are quite exceptional, and if we look at what has been done by our hon. friends in the Official Opposition, there is no comparison.

Mr. Speaker, I am always surprised when Opposition Members shout rape when the Government, after a reasonable length of time, decides that debate has lasted long enough. After all, we were elected to run the country, and I am a member of this party because I appreciate its determination to do just that and, once the Opposition's arguments have been heard, to make decisions.

Mr. Speaker, in her speech the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), who has unfortunately already left us, made it very clear that she had an abiding interest in this question. She felt that the Liberals had not approached the heart of the matter. Before the end of this debate, I want to say once and for all what the actual facts of the matter are, Mr. Speaker. I think we all agree, and no one is going to challenge this, that more than half of those who are 65 and over and receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement are not in any way affected by the provisions of Bill C-131, since they are guaranteed full indexation to the cost of living. What is the situation, Mr. Speaker, for senior citizens who are getting only their basic pension? At the present time, they are getting $246.92, which full indexation as of January 1, would have raised to $251.12, while capping indexation at 6 per cent will raise the present amount to $250.62, a difference and I think people ought to realize this before the end of this debate of exactly 50 cents per month. Mr. Speaker, if we calculate this over 1983 as a whole, considering that the projected inflation rate, according to the Government, will be 7½ per cent, I expect that if the present trend continues and I have every reason to believe that will be the case, a senior citizen receiving only the basic pension will have a loss of income of $29 in 1983 and $52 in 1984. We are no way near the catastrophic prediction made by the member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who claimed that on the basis of an inflation rate of 10 per cent in 1983 and 9 per cent in 1984—one wonders where she got her figures—senior citizens stand to lose $70 in 1983 and $220 in 1984. Mr. Speaker, I think it is important Canadians should know that between January and March 1983, senior citizens will have a loss of income of 50 cents per month, and this applies to 47 per cent of the population, while the other 53 per cent will be receiving the basic pension and Guaranteed Income Supplement with full cost-of-living indexation.

This is certainly not the catastrophe being predicted by the Cassandras in the Opposition. Mr. Speaker, people ought to realize that for this Government, the all-important thing is to win the fight against inflation. And it is important because we must not forget that many pensioners receive only the basic pension because they are already receiving benefits from private pension schemes which are often not or only partially indexed, and these are the people who will benefit most if we succeed in bringing inflation rates down as far as possible.

I would also like to comment briefly on what was said by the Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who claimed that the Government was neglecting single pensioners and was doing nothing to improve their situation. I would like to remind the House that in 1979, when the Liberals were still in power—we did, of course, have that unfortunate period of eight or nine months in 1979—so before we were removed from power, we had increased the Guaranteed Income Supplement for singles by $20 and as soon as we were back in power, after the end of the Progressive Conservative interregnum, we added another $35. The increase for singles is the same as that for couples, because we realize that singles who are now receiving about 56 per cent of what a couple is getting, should probably get more, because as we all know, there are fixed costs whether you live in a house or a senior citizens' residence or an apartment. In fact, the cost of living for a single person may be about two-thirds of what it is for a couple. We realize we must do more for singles. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is very keen on this, and that as soon as economic and financial conditions permit, we shall act accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, in June 1982, the Minister of Finance announced that about $105 million could be saved by capping indexation of basic pensions. We are glad to see that the actual savings will be less, because it is an obvious sign that we are winning the fight against inflation. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say it is high time we ended this debate. I think that within reasonable limits, the Opposition parties have had ample time to express their views, and besides, they will have an opportunity to make constructive proposals when the Committee meets for a clause-by-clause study of this Bill.

Mr. Dick: Depending on what the Speaker says, perhaps we should suggest that it is five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock and proceed to Private Members' Hour?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely Private Bills, Notices of Motions for Papers, Public Bills.

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading Private Bills, the House will proceed to Notices of Motions for Papers.

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS

All items preceding Motion 112 allowed to stand.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of any publications or items published as a result of grants given by the Canada Council to Mr. Bill Bissett.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the very refined language of the motion, I would in fact wish that copies of the material published by Mr. Bissett be put on the desks of every Member of the House of Commons. Perhaps if that happened we would have no more of the nonsense of publishing this sort of thing. There was no difficulty getting the books published by Mr. Bissett. In fact, they are available in the National Library of Canada. I have an armful of them with me.

• (1700)

Three years ago, in the spring of 1979, a number of colleagues and I spoke disparagingly of the federal Government through the Canada Council making funds available to Mr. Bissett. Mr. Bissett sued a number of us. I want it to be known that I would challenge Mr. Bissett to carry out that suit or to start a new suit, whatever he wants, because the material that he produces is simply garbage. I will give a description of it to a greater degree in a moment. I want it on record that I am prepared to go outside the House, where I have no immunity, and read this speech or any part of it, in case Mr. Bissett thinks that I am doing this in the House of Commons in order to be immune from challenge in the courts. I am not.

I fought for some time to try to find words to describe what I am talking about today. As my temperature rose higher and higher and as I read some of the material, I looked back at what some of my colleagues had said. I decided as a calm afterthought that I would read what had been said by one of my colleagues on December 13, 1977, just five years ago, when this matter was raised. I will read one paragraph referred to during the "Late Show" when the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) was speaking. He discussed the material that I am discussing this afternoon and this is what he said:

> This material, supported and masquerading in the name of art, is a demeaning degradation of human experience. It is in my view neither creative nor beautiful, it is not even grotesque or ugly beautiful, it is neither uplifting nor fulfilling, it is not even passionate or erotic; it is simply vulgar degradation of the human experience—vulgar and demeaning at a level well below that of funky graffiti written on the back of washroom doors. This type of vulgarity deserves to be placed in a category of the hate literature of pop art and should not be censored but rather branded as unfit for human consumption, and discarded on the rubbish heap to rot in its own vulgarity.

That as well as anything I could say describes the material published by Mr. Bill Bissett, yet the Canada Council continues to provide him with money. One might have thought that when this matter was first raised in 1977 the Canada Council would have had a look at what Mr. Bissett was saying and, as a result of that look, perhaps change some of its grants, but no. Since 1967, when Mr. Bissett received $2,500 to write poetry, up to and including 1982 when he has a short-term grant to write poetry, he has received a total of $53,274. I should be careful. There was one small grant to take him to Glasgow to the song and poetry festival at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada, where I hope he enjoyed himself.

I am not unaware of the benefits of the Canada Council or of its source. My memory tells me it was introduced at the time that Mr. Diefenbaker was Prime Minister of Canada. It was created to support the arts in Canada. That is a very worth-while enterprise and a very worth-while subject for the Government of Canada.

A number of people in Prince Edward-Hastings have received Canada Council grants. I have no fault with their grants. Let me go a step further and say that I do not pretend to be a critic. There are many things the Canada Council supports that I find of little value. My taste does not go to some of the avant-garde art. My taste tends not to be supportive of some of the literature, dance and theatre, but I find absolutely no fault with that. They are the chosen works of artists in Canada and are looked on as such. I would not criticize them. I am sure there are Canadians who support that train of culture.

Nor would I censor the work that is being produced by Mr. Bissett. If he wants to produce the kind of garbage that he does, if he can find help to get it published and sold in the stores of Canada—although I cannot for the life of me understand who would take it—that is fine. By all means. I have absolutely no objection. What I object to very strenuously is the fact that he is using money from the taxpayers of Canada, through the Canada Council, to do this. Far worse than that, with the kind of garbage he puts out he is in fact stealing. I am confident that in any given year there are applications for grants from the Canada Council that are far more deserving than this. I am sure that if this money could be put towards such things as ballet, symphonies, books or dance, or any such worthy causes that Canada Council supports, I would have no argument.

If the Canada Council felt they needed to have an example of poorly written trash full of suggestive lines and four letter words, surely one example would have been enough, or even two. One can only stomach so much of this degradation. Because the books were available, I tried to work my way through some of them, but so help me I could not. I doubt that 10 per cent of the words in the book are properly spelled. There is some kind of tone to it; and when I get the meaning of the poem, I can hardly read it. I chuckled when the Minister answered the first two of my three questions. He actually spelled one of the titles wrong. He spelled the title "Poems", as you or I would spell it. Mr. Bissett, however, spells it "Pomes". I suppose there is some poetic licence in that, but it seems that even our staid Government sees the need to use the English language as it was intended.

I will give some explanation of what is in the books. I will not hold them up in the House of Commons. I know it is against the rules, but I would not do it in any event for fear that the cameras might get too close. Someone might be looking and would get a chance to read it, and I do not want to be responsible for disseminating that sort of thing.

• (1710)

In the books there are—I was going to say "explicit human acts", but surely they are not human. Surely the things described in his books are sub-human. The sort of thing which is described by Mr. Bissett in his works are beneath the dignity of the majority of Canadians.

Finally, I was warned at one point during the attempt by Mr. Bissett to sue myself and others that the press of Vancouver, particularly Talon Press and something by the name of "blew ointment press"—how does that name grab you?—have been responsible for taking money from the taxpayers to print this sort of thing. I frankly include them in my criticism, knowing they may well be upset, because they are as culpable as Mr. Bissett.

I am not going to take the 20 minutes allotted to me. I have set out, I think satisfactorily, how bad this material is. I could perhaps have taken a thesaurus and repeated two or three passages from it to find more adjectives to cover the despicable nature of the material, but that would do very little good. The whole purpose of this exercise, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, as the motion says in very fine language, would be to have the Government produce some of this material and put it on the desks of Hon. Members so they can see exactly what the Canada Council, an arm of the federal Government, is doing with the taxpayers' money.

I am being totally non-partisan, you will notice, Mr. Speaker. I have not blamed the Government or any of the Ministers in the questions I originally put on the Order Paper. The Ministers very quickly answered them. On this particular evening I have no desire to castigate anyone on the Government side. I expect there will be some Liberal Members responding to what I have said. I merely want to draw to the attention of the public of Canada the way in which some of the taxpayers' dollars are spent, with the fond hope that perhapss-omewhere down the road, someone from Canada Council will have the courage to say no when this sort of thing is brought before them again, and they can go on and do the work they should be doing.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): It is a great pleasure for me, Mr. Speaker, to participate in this debate in support of the position taken by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Hastings (Mr. Ellis). I support his motion questioning the wisdom of the Canada Council giving grants to one by the name of Bill Bissett, a self-styled poet.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that we have a responsibility to keep our culture and heritage alive and to keep our identity ever present. However, there is also no question that some recipients who have been granted funds from Canada Council, ostensibly for this very purpose, have not followed through. To them, Canadian patriotism and nationalism has become not the last refuge of the scoundrel, but the first sanctuary of the rip-off artist. One glaring example is the person by the name of Bill Bissett, who seems obsessed in the writing of poetry with repeating obscene four-letter words over and over, which really depicts what many people think his poetry is all about.

Regardless of the protestations of concerned citizens all across Canada, which were completely ignored by the Canada Council, the pundits in that Department continue to fund this individual so he can produce even more of his so-called poetry which no newspaper in the country would ever think of printing. As my colleague from Prince Edward-Hastings stated, this man has received some $53,274 of Canadian taxpayers' money from the Council to produce his filth. If he had used his own money, that would be his own personal business; but for Canada Council to continue to fund him, courtesy of taxpayers' dollars, is wasteful and unforgivable. Writers who write what people will not read serve no purpose other than their own self-indulgence. If such people want to feed their own self-indulgence, then let them do it with their own funds, not with the hard-earned money of other people, such as Canadian taxpayers. Let them write on their own time and expense. There is always the possibility that in the process of earning a living, they might even become better writers.

I do not think it is the responsibility of the taxpayer to support writers when no one will pay to read their works. For that matter, why should the taxpayer support theatre which no one will pay to watch? Tax dollars were never meant for the purpose of providing writers, actors or producers with an ego-satisfying outlet or income. There is nothing wrong with amateur drama groups, but I do not believe they should be subsidized by the state.

I have personally been actively involved for over 20 years in an amateur drama group in my own home town of Owen Sound, the Owen Sound Little Theatre. Not once has our group requested financial assistance, either provincially or federally. We have always stood on our own two feet, ever improving ourselves and our play productions, which has helped to maintain continued and active support by the people in our community over the years. Such grants, I believe, only serve to smother motivation and incentive, not to mention desire and ambition. If it cannot be accomplished without grants, then it is not worth being done.

Canada Council makes awards to some 90-plus publishers and periodicals in Canada. I believe this not only encourages mediocrity, but it punishes the talented. If publishers did not receive public money they would be more discriminatory about what they publish. They would really have to hustle to sell books and promote authors.

There is no question in my mind that art and cultural have always been part of human nature and will continue to survive in one way or another despite any intervention by the State. If the Canada Council is going to continue to dole out taxpayers' dollars, it must tighten up its requirements and more actively critically investigate every application before it is approved. In other words, the people in Canada Council must take extra pains to live up to their mandate and trust so that they are never violated.

The people at Canada Council are not an entity unto themselves. They are answerable to their peers; at least, they should be. But despite all good advice and constructive criticism, Canada Council always turns a deaf ear and continues to carry on in a haphazard manner. Members of Parliament who have seen the obscene poetry of Mr. Bissett have expressed utter amazement that Canada Council have supported such works. Even reprimands from the Auditor General has not fazed Canada Council. The Auditor General's report on the Canada Council cited the "lack of adequate documentation on some of their files both for applications submitted and for subsequent action on individual projects", and that this inadequate documentation was "very extensive, costing the taxpayers several million dollars".

• (1720)

It is a sad state of affairs, Mr. Speaker, that the Canada Council is not even accountable to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal). The Council reports through him directly to Parliament. This is a totally inadequate way to allow for ministerial responsibility for accountability by the Canada Council to Members of Parliament for the spending of millions of dollars annually. This is totally unacceptable in a democracy. What it means is that the taxpayer will never be allowed to know or pass judgment because the Canada Council refuses access to information by Members of Parliament and the Minister. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is, how autocratic can one get?

Let me repeat that Canada is still a democratic country, not a dictatorship as the Canada Council would like us to believe. All of us in public office, elected or otherwise, are responsible to the people of this country and not the other way around. I fervently believe that the Canada Council should get their act together, shed their arrogance and disdain for others, get out of their cocoon and become part of the real world. People who continue to live on cloud nine can do so if they wish, but they are not the kind of people in whom I would put faith and trust to manage and disburse millions of taxpayers' dollars. Commonsense, Mr. Speaker, is the bottom line. It is too bad that this is an unknown quantity as far as the Canada Council is concerned. Let us hope it will change before much more damage is done.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity of participating in this debate. It is ludicrous, to a large number of Canadians to see Parliament debating poetry when people are losing their jobs and their homes, and the country is in a major social and economic crisis. It will create the impression that we do not know how to use our time more effectively.

I for one do not believe that it is Parliament's function to debate the merits or otherwise of a particular poet and his poetry. I have no objection to debating whether to give cultural agencies like the Canada Council money grants to carry on cultural activities. In fact, I wish Parliament would spend more time debating that issue. But for us to discuss the merits of a particular decision or method of decision by the Canada Council is a waste of time.

However, there is a larger question involved, that of censorship. When Parliament begins to decide what is appropriate and what is not appropriate poetry, then I think we start down the road of censorship, a slippery road indeed. I remind Hon. Members that it was a Conservative Government which appointed Mr. Applebaum and Mr. Hébert to write their report. The second recommendation of that report is as follows:

> To the extent that the functions of cultural agencies and offices require the exercise of impartial, critical judgment in the support of cultural activity, they should be exempt from political direction in the form of ministerial directives of either a general or specific nature.

I think that also includes Parliament. The decision as to what form of art or which artist is acceptable is a decision to be made by their peers, not by Parliament. When Parliament becomes involved it threatens academic and intellectual freedom.

Mr. Mitges: At taxpayers' expense.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentions the taxpayers' responsibility. I think in this sense he is right. Parliament has and should have the opportunity to debate money being spent for the arts. But, as I mentioned before, I wish we could spend more time debating the general topic of public support for the arts and not art itself.

We are debating today the question of a particular poet, Mr. Bissett. Well, I am not going to stand here and argue the merits or lack thereof of Mr. Bissett's poetry. Art, Mr. Speaker, is in the eye of the beholder. I know many people consider Mr. Bissett to be a well known and important Canadian poet, and in Canadian literature courses in most universities Mr. Bissett's poetry is mandatory reading. His poetry has been published in over 47 publications. Now, Mr. Speaker, publishers do not publish poetry unless there is a demand for it. Obviously there must be some demand for his poetry, and for Hon. Members to suggest that he is only published by disreputable publishers is inaccurate. His poetry has appeared in such publications such as "The First Encounter", "Saturday Night", and the "Paris Review". The latter two are well known literary and intellectual publications. For us to say that they should not have printed his poetry I think is intellectual nonsense.

Certainly Mr. Bissett's poetry is difficult to read. It is part of what is called the "Black Mountain" school of poetry. Some people call it the concrete school. In my understanding of that school, the visual presentation of the words is as important as the actual meaning. The sounds that the poem creates are as important as the literal meaning. I am no expert on poetry, and I do not think that any Member of this Parliament is. Essentially, this school of poetry is another way of looking at the world, taking different aspects of reality and presenting them to us.

Some poets go out of their way to get a reaction from their readers using certain words over and over again. You know, they say it is a blow against the tyranny of words. That is their justification for using words which the previous speaker felt were offensive words. I am not outraged by them. To me they are words you hear on the street. They hold no tyranny for me. This is not my taste in poetry; but for us to try to suggest that the Canada Council should not make a grant available to any person is outrageous and not appropriate.

• (1730)

I have one other point which I should like to bring to the attention of the House. An Hon. Member has suggested that no legitimate poet or critic considers Mr. Bill Bissett's poetry of value. Again that was wrong. For example, Milton Acorn, a well-known and well-respected Canadian poet has defended Mr. Bill Bissett and his poetry. I could mention other well-established and well-known poets who have come to Mr. Bissett's defence. I ask the question again: who are we to make such judgments here?

Generally the type of words and images used by Mr. Bissett in his publications do not conform with my tastes, but I do not become as upset as have previous Conservative speakers. They called them obscene. There is mild obscenity in some of his poems, to be sure, but I would rather see Parliament debate what I really find obscene—war, nuclear weapons, hunger, torture and repression in the world. I think these are appropriate topics for discussion in Parliament. If we are to discuss obscenity, let us discuss the real obscenity which exists, not the merits or demerits of a poet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am very much indebted to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for providing me the incentive to rise. I am not quite sure why he participated in the debate, having found it such a tragic waste of time for the House to devote one hour to cultural matters, then professing that the House should not give its blessing to censorship or sit in judgment of the works of art of fellow Canadians, and then proceeding to defend the artist.

However, I should like to deal with his points one by one. First, let me talk about the effective use of the time of the House in terms of economic stress over cultural matters. This was a display of either the ignorance or the hypocrisy of the NDP. I come from what is generally regarded as a cultural community, Stratford. People from all over the world, but mainly Canadians and Americans, spend $7 million a year buying tickets for the Stratford Festival. For every dollar spent on a ticket, $3 is spent on accommodations, food, souvenirs and travel. These dollars do not go to multinational companies but to small-business people, not only in my riding but in London, Kitchener, and the towns and villages surrounding Stratford. I have never seen a cultural dollar provide a better bang for the buck in terms of the economic multiplier effect than the $1 spent on a ticket in Stratford, in Niagara-on-the-Lake, for the Winnipeg Ballet or wherever. If my Hon. friend in the NDP is talking about providing a stimulus to the economy through cultural events, I say to him that he should come to Stratford.

This is not necessarily only a cultural debate. It is also an economic one. I have serious reservations about censorship, but I did not hear that matter raised. He made no reference to the fact that we were talking in terms of censorship. Having been given a mandate from fellow Canadians to represent them in the House, it would follow in my view that we would have a responsibility and obligation to be deeply concerned about the use of dollars which they send to us in terms of taxes and about how they are spent. Were I the chairman or a member of the Canada Council and I heard no criticism, I would be very worried. I would be extremely concerned if there were no criticism of the decisions I took. It is profoundly helpful, not only for constituents and taxpayers but for the Canada Council, for it to be the subject of criticism.

Any Member of Parliament who stops receiving letters of criticism starts worrying about the next election because the people have forgotten him. The Canada Council should worry when we in the House of Commons stop discussing what we consider to be decisions that are not in accord with the best interests of our taxpayers or constituents. That is the time to start worrying.

There is a great difference between censorship in the abstract and censorship when it relates to the expenditure of the dollars of taxpayers. I have no difficulty distinguishing between the two. It may have been a waste of my friend's time, but it certainly was not a waste of my time to hear the remarks of those who participated in the debate or to be able to criticize. When we in Stratford, who owe so much to the Canada Council, are not in accord with its judgment, we criticize.

The Stratford Festival is judged year after year. We have to stand up and be judged. If we fail to meet the level of expectation of the Canada Council, we are quite rightly cut off. There is absolutely nothing wrong with that. I think I speak on behalf of almost any arts organization with which I have had any contact when I say that the moment an organization does not permit itself to be judged by the ticket buyer, the Canada Council or the community supporting it, whether it be a Little Theatre in Owen Sound or the Stratford Festival in Stratford, the particular arts facility is doomed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate this afternoon raised by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis). I am rather interested in the most recent remarks of the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis). As the Hon. Member well knows—and he alluded to the fact—the Stratford Festival, in which he is very much interested, receives a great deal of support in many ways from the Canada Council. Because I come from the neighbouring riding of London West, I must add that we in the area appreciate the efforts of the Stratford Festival and what it means not only, as the Hon. Member mentioned, to the Stratford area, but certainly throughout southwestern Ontario, to London in particular and of course right across the country. There is no doubt that the Canada Council in many ways is the supporting arm of arts and culture in Canada.

At the outset I should like to indicate that it is fine to bring these matters before Parliament for debate. Certainly from time to time the Canada Council must be responsible for its actions, but I emphasize the point, as I am sure all Hon. Members know, that the Council operates at arm's length of Government and regardless of the Government of the day. As was already mentioned, grants awarded by the Canada Council, whether they be to poets, writers, musicians, theatre groups or touring groups, are done on the basis of the judgment of a panel of jurors, if one likes, who assess each individual application for a grant as it comes along.

I am sure all Members received today a very interesting document from the Canada Council which gave a report on the first seven years on the Touring Office of the Canada Council. The report detailed to a great extent the tremendous work of the Council in facilitating artists and young theatre groups, not only those in stationary positions, to tour across Canada and also on an international basis. I recommend that each Member read the report in detail.

• (1740)

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, the question of language, of literature, of the work of various Canadian poets has often been raised in this House. As a matter of fact, I believe it was the late Right Hon. Lester Person who referred to the fact that these questions kept arising time and time again. He said that members should really stop bringing such questions to the House, that perhaps they are letting failure go to their heads. Nevertheless, the matter has been raised. It is one which must always be answered, no matter how unfounded it may be. I suppose, and I can speak from experience having come from the broadcasting industry and having had the opportunity of working in that industry over a number of years, that perhaps what disturbs us is good. We can be disturbed on many fronts and on many elements. When we are perhaps disturbed, and especially when it comes from the cultural world, it sets us thinking and acting. I would hope that Canadian art and literature would always disturb us. How then can our standards be determined, not standards for censure or suppression but community standards for acceptance and rejection? Here it seems to me that one could do worse than cite at length the criterion set for the Supreme Court of Canada, by Mr. Chief Justice Bora Laskin as follows:

> In seeking a Canadian community standard based on the average appreciation of art, the Court, in my opinion, is not limited to a settled national consensus. The average in community attitudes is better struck according to the range of exposure that that particular art, or art forms, have had in the localities of Canada where art is exhibited.

In other words, standards should be based on familiarity, on study and on considerable exposure. Judgment stems from knowledge, understanding, and responsiveness to the collective community experience—of writer, publisher or reader—which is every nation's literary heritage.

It has been the basis of the Government's cultural policies in literature to encourage and stimulate the suppliers of our literature, because the ultimate beneficiary is our nation as a whole. I am sure Hon. Members opposite would agree that our literature, no matter what its nature, enables us, in the well known words of Tom Symonds:

> —to know and understand ourselves; who we are; where we are in time and space; where we have been; where we are going; what we possess; what our responsibilities are to ourselves and to others.

Thirty years ago the framers of the Massey-Levesque Commission's Report asked plaintively:

> Is it true, then, that we are a people without a literature?

Today, in large part because of the various measures of support the Government has been able to institute, both indirectly through the Canada Council and less indirectly through support programs of the Department of Communications, we can point with great pride to an extraordinary growth in Canadian writing on the one hand and in the size and enthusiasm of Canadian audiences on the other, because Canadian writing has established its place not only in the literary history of this country but throughout the world.

The written and published words are flourishing in Canada in manifestations sufficiently varied to respond to all possible tastes. This signifies without any doubt that the spirit of artistic and intellectual freedom is alive and well and growing in Canada. Productivity and artistic maturity are proceeding hand in hand.

Today writers' lives are a collective success story in creativity, productivity and public esteem, both here and abroad. Critical attention and media recognition have been coming to Canadian writers as never before. But they also need to have enough to live on. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) criticized the fact that this Bill was being debated today and suggested that we should be talking more in terms of economic concerns. That point was picked up by the Hon. Member for Perth. I would agree with the Hon. Member for Perth to the extent that this is an economic matter, because we are concerned about Canadian writers, their livelihood and just how they are able to live. For example, and this may come as rather a surprise, the median income of full-time writers in Canada was, according to Statistics Canada for 1978, the last year for which we have complete figures, about $7,000 a year. Income from royalties amounted to about $3,000 a year. Canadian writers on their own are not making money hand over fist overnight. It is, as the Hon. Member for Perth has suggested, an economic debate and one which must be addressed with all sincerity and honesty.

Publishing in Canada is also a success story, and again not often a financial one. Canadian publishers have to face the full power and force of the highly successful great American houses, with their enormous home market base, and try to foster and increase the flow of Canadian books. In this context any support not given can be seen as leading simply to the waste of Canadian creative resources. The problem here is not how to give less, not how to censor, not how to constrict and subdue the natural flow, even if it does occasionally splash over us in ways that we might find uncomfortable. The problem here is how to support, nourish, fertilize and foster for the imaginative enrichment of us all.

It has been explained often enough in this House how grants are made by the Canada Council. For the benefit of Hon. Members present I suppose there would be no harm in repeating that explanation yet again.

All applications from individual artists are assessed by independent professionals, knowledgeable in the discipline of the applicants. For literature the juries have included such writers as Margaret Atwood, Dennis Lee, James Reaney, and Earle Birney, each of whom has won the Governor General's Literary Award. These jurors and appraisers are asked to evaluate the artistic quality of the applican't work, his career and its place in the world of contemporary literature. Obviously the assessment is not made on a few works or a few words taken out of context. There are many books of the very highest spiritual content containing passages which, taken out of their setting, can startle and shock. Yet one would be foolish to judge them on an individual basis.

The Department of Communications also gives support to Canadian literature through its Canadian Book Publishing Development Program, which is aimed at improving the corporate health of Canadian publishers. The sale of these books increased by 23 per cent over the previous year. The Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee has now come forward with recommendations for certain modifications and amplifications in the programs of support for our literature. We plan to act rapidly in response to this report. Their recommendations are of the highest importance for our future intellectural and, consequently, moral growth as a nation. I do mean moral growth, in spite of the quotations that have been cited once again here today. A nation without its full, flourishing and free literature is really like a people without a voice, without expressed thought, without defined future commitments or without a vocal conscience, no matter how that conscience finds it necessary to express itself.

I am sure that the Hon. Member must agree that we must continue to support our artists at this time because in all of their manifestations, even the ones we do not like, they are our voices. Perhaps they are not like the voices that are raised day in and day out in this place, but they are our voices that perhaps can have a greater effect in many ways than some of the voices we hear in the House of Commons. They help us to look to the future.

I think the point which must be stressed with respect to the criticism of the Canada Council grant to the particular writer involved is that the Hon. Member failed to point out the fact that this particular writer has written a number of books which I am sure the Hon. Member has not had the opportunity or perhaps the inclination or interest to read. Perhaps he should read them. He has taken one particular area out of context, if you will, to make his criticism. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that in order to have a better view of this particular writer's craft and his ability to communicate, he should in fact look at the entire works of that writer.

As I mentioned earlier, the Canada Council does in fact work at arm's length. I believe that all Hon. Members would have to agree that the jurors who base their decisions on the grants that might be awarded are people with a strong representation of the proessional fields which they do represent. I suggest that the Canada Council does merit our support in many ways. It merits our support to the point that when we study the Applebaum-Hébert Report much more will be said about it. Hopefully, Parliament will see fit to increase the awareness and financial support not only for the Canada Council but for all areas of art and culture in the country.

Again, I refer to what the Hon. Member for Perth had to say about the fact that this is an economic debate because this does involve dollars and cents for artists as well as for the communities which many of these artists support through writing, theatre groups and music. Symphony orchestras are an example of community support. Theatre London in my area receives support in many ways from the Canada Council. It should be encouraged to give greater support.

I will conclude with those remarks, Mr. Speaker, and trust that the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings will look at the entire work of this particular artist and not just at one particular sentence. I must refer to the Stratford Festival. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, that if the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings were alive in the days of Shakespeare, he would not have been able to stand up and espouse the greatness of the Stratford Festival, which we all know encourages and highlights the works of Shakespeare. Yet I do not hear any criticism of some of the words used in the great Shakespearian plays. The intent of what Hon. Members opposite have said is rather questionable. Again, let us support the Canada Council however possible.

Mr. Ellis: There is no argument.

Mr. Burghardt: The Hon. Member says he has no argument, yet he stands before us to criticize the handing out of funds to this particular artist. These artists are only doing their work.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) deals with a very specific matter but it does provide an opportunity to consider the work and the organization of the Canada Council.

In responding immediately to the words of the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to the Canada Council, I want to make it clear that we are here to ask what the Canada Council can do for Canadians, not what Canadians can do for the Canada Council. The challenge we have is to examine the work of the Canada Council to determine if it is fulfilling its mandate or, indeed, if the Canada Council in this day and age of restraint should have a mandate from the Parliament of Canada.

Just to deal briefly with that point, I remind Hon. Members in the House that this is the twenty-fifth year of the operation of the Canada Council, which I understand was organized in 1957 with a $50 million grant. I recall that this grant seemed like a large amount to turn over to the arts in those days of the low dollar values. However, 25 years later, the budget alone for 1981-82 of the Canada Council involves $62.8 million in expenditures. We are dealing with a relatively vast organization.

I was impressed by the words of the Parliamentary Secretary when he said that we can rely on the Canada Council to make arm's length decisions on matters affecting the arts across Canada. One could also ask what the relationship of the Associate Director and Director of the arts division, Mr. Timothy Porteous, is to the Government of Canada. If I am not mistaken, his claim to fame is that he is a personal friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I wonder if they occasionally talk about matters pertaining to the arts.

My purpose in rising today is to deal particularly with the current situation between Canada Council and the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra. The Atlantic Symphony Orchestra has been a very important part of community life in Halifax and across the Maritime Provinces for some time now. The closure of the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra was announced this year. The problem is that the financing for this symphony orchestra is not available. I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary and those who deal with the Canada Council to have the officers responsible conduct an immediate investigation in an attempt to save the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra, in accordance with their mandate, in order to provide that important community service to the City of Halifax, the Province of Nova Scotia and all of the Maritime Provinces. Only through action such as that will the Canada Council fulfill its mandate and serve not only the people of my Province of Nova Scotia but all Canadians.

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in the final two minutes I would like to elaborate on one of the major points made by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) with respect to the question, in terms of these grants that are given out by the Canada Council, as to who decides on those grants and on what basis. In other words, who is qualified to judge artistic quality? I would point out that this has always been one of the difficulties that the Canada Council has had in judging the work of artists, particularly young artists, and determining how those grants would be given.

The Canada Council is very unique in the sense that it is a creation of Government which, paradoxically, operates quite independently from Government, while remaining accountable to it. It is a structure of artists, by artists, for artists.

One of the original directors of the Canada Council stated that the Canada Council has to make decisions daily about artists in their twenties who have perhaps one volume of poetry to their name or a string quartet that has only given one performance. He said, "We are, in fact, required to look into the seeds of time and say which one will grow and which one will not."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-131

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin:

That, in relation to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair should perhaps explain to Hon. Members that the key for the bells has been mislaid.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): However, it being past the time of meeting, the occupant of the Chair thought that proceedings should start now as there is a quorum.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with you, Mr. Speaker. I would offer you a key if I had one. However, I must insist that unless the bells ring to inform Hon. Members that the House has, in fact, started, which would be quite out of the ordinary, then I think Hon. Members would be able to indicate, on a matter of privilege, that they had not been properly summoned for the evening session.

Since I am here, it does not matter to me, but I wish you would find the key, Sir, because it is important inasmuch as we will have a vote in 12 minutes, I can assure you of that, and without the bell, unless the Government House Leader is prepared, like the old bell ringer of years gone by, to take in his hand a bell and to march through the halls ringing it, we will feel obliged to ask that the vote not take place at that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Do I see the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They have lost the key? You have to be kidding.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think we have a quorum and I understand the point made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I will not agree to a vote being taken without the bell calling in the Members. However, I would invite him to quote the proper Standing Order stating that the bell is required at eight o'clock to call in the Members.

Mr. Deans: I would suggest, without quoting the Standing Order, that there is clear precedent for the necessity of ringing the bell in order to indicate—

An Hon. Member: Ding dong.

Mr. Deans: —that the House has been called into session. However, in the interests of harmony, if there were unanimous agreement, I would be quite content to allow the 12 minutes which are not yet used up in the two hour debate to be used now on the clear understanding that, but for the want of a key, the vote could take place. Maybe we could agree that if we do not have a key 12 minutes from now, the vote will take place when the key arrives.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Somebody should check their pockets.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the suggestion, which I was about to make, that in order not to waste any time, due to this fortuitous event, and considering the fact that we have a quorum and Hon. Members want to conclude debate on the motion which is being debated by the House, we conclude debate after 12 minutes, and if we still have not found the key by that time, I would even be willing to agree that we resume debate on Bill C-132 and that the vote be deferred until later, when they key is found.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I would take keen delight in entering into any discussion with respect to the application of the rules of this place. What the Government House leader has said sounds eminently sensible, and I really do not believe that I should take a part in the substantive discussion of the application of the rules, since I am hardly an expert on the bells.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, if I may be of some service to the Chair? I would like to inform the House that in my office, I have a ship's bell, and perhaps you would care to use it to call in the Members.

[English]

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, if I could make a suggestion, maybe you could order another set of keys to be made, so that the other set could be kept under the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair has heard the various interventions by the Government House leader and the House leader of the Official Opposition as well as the NDP House leader. Is there, therefore, unanimous consent that we proceed in the way which was outlined?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if you would just listen carefully, I think you can faintly hear a bell, and it is a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to rise and speak to the motion on Bill C-131. I can understand why the Government has brought in closure, because it is not the type of matter it would like to discuss for a very long period of time. It is not a popular Bill and, therefore, it would like to sneak it through as quickly and as quietly as possible, hopeful that the Canadian public will not know about it.

Taking away money from senior citizens and asking them to lead us in the fight on inflation is hardly fair, considering the fact that those senior citizens are the ones who led our country to prosperity. Why does the Government of the country not take the lead in cutting its expenditures instead of increasing them by 22 per cent? Perhaps it could cut its spending so that it can increase its expenditures this year by only 6 per cent and maybe, by next year, by only 5 per cent. Perhaps the Government could take the lead in cutting our deficit so that the deficit increases next year by only 6 per cent and, the year after that, by 5 per cent. This would be a new wrinkle. We would all like this and it would be a very acceptable type of Government. We have only been debating this Bill, through which the Government seeks to cut the pensions to the senior citizens in this country, for eight and a half hours. The speech made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) this afternoon sparked my memory a little bit. I point out that the Parliamentary Secretary spoke last night in the debate and used up the available time. Otherwise, the Bill probably would have passed last night. Not only was he not satisfied with speaking for a lengthy period of time last night but he decided to get up today and make an intervention. He spoke about how Parliament does not use its time properly and how insensitive Parliament is to an effective and efficient use of time.

• (2010)

It made me think, oh yes, we had an increase in old age pensions back in 1973, when I had the honour of being here, and I remember that it was the greatest waste of the time of the House. In 1973, when the Bill to increase old age pensions was introduced in this House, the Members of the NDP and the Progressive Conservative Party, who were then in Opposition proposed to the Government that we have two speakers per Party, and then put the Bill to a vote. The Government refused, and Members of the Government spoke for three full days on the increase of old age pensions. Then the Government Party "forced" a vote, which came to 228 yeas to zero nays. Forcing a vote on a motion when nobody is opposed to it has to be an absolutely ridiculous waste of time. But the Government Members wanted to speak on their then popular measure of increasing old age pensions, and they spoke for three full days. Yet when they are introducing a measure to cut the pension, to reduce what the people get, they want to cut it off at eight and a half hours.

An Hon. Member: Double standard.

Mr. Dick: The Government certainly has a double standard, to say the very least. It is being a little hypocritical, when they bring in a positive measure they think is going to be well received, to want to talk about it at length. They then have as many as 37 speakers speaking in favour of it so they can zerox copies and send them out to their constituents. But when they want to make cuts, and hurt the people who least deserve to be hurt in this country, they want to cut off debate.

I had an opportunity to go down to the Parliamentary Library this afternoon, after I heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I want to quote from page 1793 of Volume 2 of the First Session of the Twenty-Ninth Parliament where, after the Question Period, the Hon. Marc Lalonde moved that Bill 147 to amend the Old Age Security Act be read a second time and referred to a Standing Committee. He said:

—the bill that is now before the House for second reading proposes the largest single increase in the basic old age security pension that has ever been made since the inception of this particular program over 20 years ago.

Now we are having the first cut that we have ever had in over 30 years of old age pensions, and they do not want to talk about it.

He went on:

I feel all the more privileged that the very first bill I have the honour to propose for the consideration of parliament is one which aims at substantially improving the economic condition of those 1.8 million senior citizens to whom Canada owes so much for making it what it is today.

Such hypocrisy for Marc Lalonde to say that when introducing the Bill in 1973, and try to cut off debate today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member should refer to other Members in the House by the name of their ridings, or their portfolio, please.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what his constituency was in those days, but he was the minister of health in 1973, and he finds himself as the Minister of Finance today, not being generous as he was in 1973, but introducing six and five to cut down the pensions of the senior citizens of this country. That is what the Minister is proposing; that is the double standard used by the Government today. They insisted then that we keep debating the Bill and wasting time by taking a vote on a motion which nobody opposed.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The worm has turned.

Mr. Dick: It was this Government which was hypocritical during the 1979-1980 federal election campaign, when it went around the country and promised among other things that it would increase senior citizens' allowances by $35. It was after the election that they then said, oh, it is only the GIS, it is not the general package that goes to old age pensioners.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Not the basic.

Mr. Dick: That is the second time they have deceived the senior citizens of this country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Dick: Ebenezer Scrooge was a miser, but at least he was an honest miser and he treated his foes as he did himself. The Liberal Government of today is really, in this month of Debember, playing like Scrooge, but it does not want to have an honest and full discussion about this matter. They want to cut it off because they are so embarrassed. They want to hide this matter. As a matter of fact, in the year 1973 the Liberal Government had to bring in a second Bill on old age pensions which it brought in on September 6 of that year, because it had botched the one it brought in on March 6.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I remember that.

Mr. Dick: They had not allowed indexing on the quarterly instalment plan. We spent seven days debating the old age security pension in 1973. Now, after eight and a half hours, they want to cut off the debate.

I understand why they might want to have a double standard but I think it is unfortunate. If they wanted to be true to themselves, and wanted to be fair or even a bit honest, then they would show the leadership required in this country.

I ask them, instead of increasing Government expenditures by 22 per cent or 17 per cent or 16 per cent, whichever figures you want to use, let them cut it to 6 per cent; and next year promise that the national debt is not going to increase by more than 6 per cent. Let them show leadership right at home in their handling of government affairs in this country, and quit trying to lay the leadership on the backs of those who are over 65, who have served this country, who have built this country into what it is today and now, after having shown leadership over the last 40 years, are being asked to show leadership a second time. I do not think that is honest or fair. I think the Government has the responsibility, and should not call upon the senior citizens who have already contributed.

The senior citizens of this country are not equally well off, but the Government is introducing a means test, and some senior citizens, as a couple, will lose almost $600 over the next two years because of this Bill. I think the Government should bring in restraint, and I believe in the six and five program being applied in certain cases, but it should be implemented where it is most important first, that part which is increasing inflation, and that happens to be the Government's own habits of spending.

My time is almost up, Mr. Speaker and I just want to say one last thing about six and five cutting off senior citizens' pensions. It is unfair, unjust and totally reprehensible.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more edifying then participating in an important debate in front of an attentive House, so I take great pleasure this evening to be able to present my reflections on the motion that is before us on the Bill whose fate we are attempting to shape.

An Hon. Member: That should take about two minutes.

Mrs. Mitchell: We heard your reflections yesterday.

Mr. Kelly: Two arguments have been developed and hurled across at us in this two-hour debate: First that this Government is applying closure an in attempt to terminate this important debate and that it is not interested in looking at the sensitive and detailed technical arguments that are involved in this issue and second, that this Government, in a very brutal way, is determined to fight inflation on the backs of the senior citizens. I would like to look at those arguments and see if there is any merit in them. If there is, this Government is doing the wrong thing to a very sensitive segment of our society.

• (2020)

Are we invoking closure? Are we terminating this debate? Obviously the answer is that we are not invoking closure and we are not terminating debate. The hon. gentleman opposite who is walking down the aisle, in his rococo debating style has charged us with disinterest.

Mr. Deans: Are you being mean?

Mr. Kelly: No, I think I am being generous. I was actually trying to choose between rococo and Jovian. I did not know which of the two was more accurate or generous. Anyway, are we terminating debate? The answer is no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It being 8.22 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 75C have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

AIR CANADA—ADVERTISING BUDGET

Question No. 4,487—Mr. Siddon:

1. What amount did Air Canada spend for advertising in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82?

2. What amount did Air Canada budget for advertising in the fiscal year 1982-83?

3. What percentage of Air Canada's fiscal year 1982-83 advertising will be devoted to (a) newspapers and magazines (b) radio (c) television (d) trade show or convention exhibits (e) any other?

4. Did Air Canada declare a deficit in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 and, if so, what was the extent of that deficit?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

The Air Canada fiscal year coincides with the calendar year, therefore, the following answers vary slightly from the years requested in the questions.

1. (a) 1980 $32,603,000 or 1.8 per cent of the operating budget. (b) 1981 $35,063,000 or 1.6 per cent of the operating budget. (c) 1982 The amount is under adjustment, but a similar percentage of operating budget.

2. The 1983 advertising budget has not been set yet.

3. Newspapers receive the bulk of the Air Canada advertising budget because of their flexibility. Radio and television time must be booked in advance which is a disadvantage. The actual percentages are regarded as proprietory information because of the advantages advance knowledge of the company's advertising strategies would give domestic and international competitors.

4. The annual report, tabled in Parliament on March 29, 1982 and distributed to all Members, indicated profits over the past five years totalling $200 million with $40.1 million in 1981 and $57 million in 1980.

AIR CANADA—MOUNT EVEREST VENTURE

Question No. 4,503—Mr. Stewart:

1. Did Air Canada sponsor, in whole or in part, a team of climbers to scale the summit of Mount Everest in Nepal and, if so, what was the total cost to the taxpayers of Air Canada's sponsorship of the climb, including (a) pre-Everest practice climbs at other locations (b) the organization of the team (c) team equipment and supplies (d) payment to Sherpa guides (e) all air fares, including return fares from Canada to Nepal (f) advertising?

2. What reason, if any, was there for the use of taxpayers' money for the sponsorship of this venture?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

1 and 2. While Air Canada was the sole sponsor of the climb, many Canadian firms supplied goods and services. The costs for the project were covered from funds allocated to corporate advertising from earned revenues. Since advertising expenditures are normal airline operating expenses there were no costs to taxpayers. Advertising funds were used on this project because of the public impact, visibility for the Corporation, and planned route expansion into Asia in the near future following the signing of favourable bilateral agreements.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 1, consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, last evening when talking on this Bill I indicated that in the Budget of June 28, 1982 we announced changes in two programs. In 1983, the federal Family Allowances rate will be increased by only 6 per cent instead of the full increase in the cost of living. This means that starting in January 1983 and continuing through the remainder of the year the Family Allowance will be $28.52 per month for each child, except in the Provinces of Alberta and Quebec.

This will be in place of the estimated $29.87 per month which normally would have been paid through indexing. In 1984, the Family Allowance will rise by only 5 per cent to $29.95 per child. Recognizing the fact that we are committed to helping those in greatest need, and recognizing the fact that this measure could hurt low and middle-income families with children, the Child Tax Credit payable to Family Allowance recipients once a year at tax time has been increased by $50 for the 1982 taxation year. This means that the maximum credit, which would have been $261 for this taxation year, will now rise to $343 per child, payable early in 1983, rather than the $293 announced earlier.

The result of these changes is that for the 2.5 million mothers receiving the Child Tax Credit, the increased credit will consequently compensate for the limited indexing of the Family Allowance in the next two years. The remaining 1.1 million families receiving Family Allowance, that is those with incomes too high to qualify for the Child Tax Credit, will have slightly less benefits than they would have received with the full indexing.

The limited indexing of Family Allowances has a much broader purpose than simply to trim expenditures and set an example for fiscal restraint. It is part of the strategy for economic recovery launched in the June Budget.

• (2100)

One point I want to make very strongly this evening is that nothing that we are doing changes the system. Indexation and universality are still intact. This is an extremely important message that we must get across. At the time the June Budget was being drafted, inflation was stubbornly clinging between 11 per cent and 12 per cent. This was despite a deepening world-wide recession. In the face of rising unemployment, it would have been easy to heed the calls coming from all corners of this Chamber to over-stimulate the economy. This would have set inflation rates spiralling even higher. Instead, the Government took a longer term view of the situation. It determined that we needed a comprehensive program of economic recovery. In order to put Canadians back to work, most of us agreed that it was necessary to tackle high interest rates which were obstructing new investment and consumer spending. We could not accomplish this by ourselves. As a relatively small country in the world, first we had to bring our own domestic inflation down significantly.

The first priority in June had to be inflation. Once and for all, we have to crack the inflationary spiral and end the inflationary psychology which fuels it. Only then can we achieve real solutions to the related problems of interest rates and unemployment. That is the basis for the six and five program of which this Bill is a part. It is all part of the package. The real strength of the six and five program is that it seeks to build a broad national consensus and persuade Canadians to impose a kind of self discipline on their wage and price-setting behaviour. I am confident that this approach will prove more successful in the long run than the alternatives which some have suggested.

We would not achieve the same kind of resilient and responsible economic behaviour by simply imposing wage and price controls or wading in with an indiscriminate axe among carefully constructed Government programs. Instead, we are relying on the Canadian people to participate in a common effort to reduce inflationary demands on the economy.

Having explored how the Bill fits into the over-all context of economic policy, I would be amiss if I did not also address its social policy implications. Family Allowances have an old and distinguished place in the broad range of social programs which provide assistance to Canadians. As various Ministers have often repeated, the underlying principle shaping these programs is to provide the most assistance to those who need it most.

This principle is much in evidence in the Program we are now discussing. This means that only the top one-third of Family Allowance recipients, the one-third with the most income, will lose any benefits at all. These are the families best equipped to share in the anti-inflation campaign. The lower income families will continue to receive the same assistance.

I am afraid this point has been missed by many Members in their speeches. It is important to realize that Family Allowances are essentialy the most important component of a three-tiered system of child benefits. The other two tiers are contained in the income tax system, the child tax exemption and the Child Tax Credit. It is this package of benefits which matters, and which demonstrates the Government's commitment to protect those most in need during these difficult times.

There is one final point which I would like to stress. Again it is one which has been missed by most critics of the six and five program. The six and five program is designed to bring down rates of inflation. I cannot stress this enough. Inflation can and must be beaten. This means that the six and five program is limited to only a temporary period of transition to a world of lower inflation. Once we have achieved this goal, we will have closed the gap between the six and five limits, and full indexing will resume in 1985. Anyone who becomes unduly exercised over projections of lost benefits is assuming that inflation will stay in the 10 per cent to 12 per cent range. We simply cannot be complacent.

I am pleased to be able to remind the House that we are already seeing positive results. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his economic statement pointed out that since the June budget monthly increases in the consumer price index have subsided to an average of six-tenths of 1 per cent. This is a drop from the average of nine-tenths of 1 per cent in the six months before the June budget. We are now within striking distance of 6 per cent inflation or better by the end of 1983. As far as Canadians receiving Family Allowances are concerned, this is doubly good news.

First, the gap between full indexing and the six and five limits is closing so that the impact of Bill C-132 on their monthly cheques may be even smaller than anticipated. Of course, we still must press on with the legislation.

Second, and more important, it means that the terrible strain that inflation has caused for families trying to make ends meet may begin to ease in the coming months. As we discuss this Bill, I think we all realize that there is no single piece of legislation, no tinkering with taxes or income transfers, that can do as much to help ordinary Canadians as the vanquishing of inflation.

Certainly the vast majority of the public realize this. That is why they have supported the six and five campaign from the beginning. As I said earlier, six and five is premised on building a national consensus and on the willingness of Canadians to pull together and reduce inflationary demands. It is premised on solidarity and sharing.

I would urge the House to give quick passage to Bill C-132. Brief as it is, it is also an important part of a larger campaign to tackle inflation and lay the foundations for a lasting economic recovery. It is a valuable lesson in the way sound economics and sound social policy go hand in hand.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, through you, my remarks will be addressed almost exclusively to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I believe she knows what is happening. I want to say that Bill C-132 offers to the Minister the opportunity to restore her honour in the House. It offers her an opportunity to correct an injustice that has been with us for over nine years.

Since this is one of the rare occasions when we have had a chance to amend the Family Allowances Act, it means the Minister and her staff will have to bring forward and review the regulations. Under the Family Allowances Act regulations orphans were discriminated against, and so were teenage girls. Parliament decreed ten years ago that every child up to the age of 16 or 18, depending on whether he or she went to school, shall receive the same family allowance as every other child, regardless of the means of the parents or guardians. Regulations were promulgated and brought in that disallowed orphans in Canada to have access to Family Allowances at a time when they need it the most. This was done without any protest from Parliament. Under the regulations, these orphans are assumed to be adults, and because they are assumed to be adults, they pay taxes. The only right they have to Family Allowance is if their income does not reach the deduction allowed to a single adult.

This is absolutely contrary to the principles of the Family Allowances Act which is supported by every Party in the House. The only rationalization that the civil servants can offer for this regulation is that when someone's parents die they must therefore be in receipt of an estate and subsequently pay taxes. If they pay taxes, they must be an adult. There are several tens of thousands of orphans in this country who have varying amounts of income from their estates and, as a result, they are barred from Family Allowances under this regulation which I have already indicated. That is absolutely contrary to the spirit and the principle of the Act.

This situation also applies to a group which I have said very little about in the House. It concerns teenage girls. I suppose there is a certain reticence about raising this subject because the regulations say that Family Allownaces go to all children except teenage girls 18 or under who are pregnant. Parliament gave the Minister or her Department no right to decide that this was an immoral act which therefore bars them from something that the Parliament of Canada indicated shall go to all children under 18, regardless of the means of the parents.

I know that when the Minister was made aware of these facts many years ago by one of her senior civil servants, she courageously stood in the House and said that she would do all she can to change the situation. My last question to her in the House concerned the progress she was making in dealing with the orphans. She said, "I have tried but I am told by the Minister of Finance that there is not enough money." I believe that was her answer.

The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is a former minister of her Department. He would not dare to protest when the present Minister changes these regulations. She simply has to remove the definition of an orphan, and all orphans will then be treated like every other child, regardless of their income. However, if the Minister changes the regulations in this Act, it will automatically affect the other Program, the child Tax Credit Program, because it is based on the definition of a child that is contained in the regulations under the Family Allowances Act that we are now amending.

I would suggest, now that the Bill to amend the Act is before us, that the Minister could protect her own honesty in the House, since she has given her word that she would do everything possible to change the regulations. If the Minister were to instruct her Deputy Minister to ensure that those who are presently drafting the regulations correct this anomaly, which is immoral and unjust to the orphans and pregnant teenagers of this country, I do not believe that one voice in Parliament would oppose that change. Parliament would certainly not oppose it on the grounds offered by the civil servants.

I appeal to the Minister to act on this opportunity, especially now that she has a friendly Minister of Finance who is not influenced by his officials and who is aware of these facts since they arose during his regime. Perhaps he will look the other way when these regulations are changed to eliminate this anomaly, because his honour will be restored as well. I hope that the Minister seizes this opportunity and lives up to the philosophy that I know she has, that all people should be treated equally in this country, particularly under these social programs. I accept the Minister's word, supported by her action, that she believes in what I am saying. I am suggesting seriously that now is the time for her to move. A few thousand people she never knew may bless her for it.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak on Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act. This Act could rightly be named an Act to increase the number of families who will live below the poverty line. This Act, along with Bill C-131 and Bill C-133, attacks a longstanding principle which this country has learned to expect and believe. The policy of universality has served Canadians well. It is a policy which all Parties of the House have supported. All Parties have supported the principle of universality for the social programs such as Family Allowance, medicare and old age pensions.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has said in the House that this Bill does not affect the universality of Family Allowance. I suggest that this is an attempt by the Government to pull a red herring in order to divert our attention from the fact that old age pensions and Family Allowances are being eroded and becoming more selective through a very clever manoeuvre in the budget. Perhaps the Minister does not know what universality means.

The debate on universality and selectivity has been a central issue in the development of social services by the Government of this country. The concepts are generally considered to refer to the question of who shall benefit and how their entitlement is to be defined. Universality denotes the idea that benefits or services are made available as a social right by virtue of belonging to the entire population or to a particular group. Selectivity is the notion that eligibility for benefits and services is judged according to the individual needs, which are usually determined by an income or means test. A universal program preserves the dignity of the recipient of the social benefits. People are not divided into givers and receivers. Therefore, the stigma and the sense of alienation from society which results from this distinction is avoided. Because our system is basically equalitarian, everyone sees universal programs as being an extension of that equalitarianism. Since benefits and services are offered to everyone without discrimination, the payment is seen to be a fair and equitable distribution of the resources of the country.

With a truly progressive tax system, those who do not need the benefits of Family Allowances could have those benefits fully or almost fully taxed away. If we operate on a selective basis, it is necessary to distinguish the poor from the non-poor, and therefore it requires a means test. The means test separates, on a discriminatory basis, the haves from the have-nots.

Over the years, the arguments against the means test have been legion, but I would like to bring a few of them before us. First of all, the stigma of poverty is a deterrent to many people who may need the help of a particular service but who will not apply for it. Second, economic conditions fluctuate. A family may need services or assistance today, but not tomorrow. By the time they get them, they no longer need them. This makes it impossible to have the right kind of service at the right time. Third, the means test contributes to the feeling of superiority and inferiority, thus widening rather than reducing social inequities. Fourth, services targeted to the poor are always fairly highly visible and thereby are constantly under attack for their cost, for their effectiveness and for other reasons. The more affluent get their benefits in a more discreet way through the tax structure, while the poor are forced to do it visibly. Fifth, the assumption is made that such benefits to the poor will assist them in becoming no longer poor. That, in itself, is false. That argument ignores the fact that poverty cannot be changed without making a structural change to society, limiting the opportunities of the wealthy to gather, to accumulate, more privileges. Therefore, selectivity claims that everyone should operate under the free market system; everyone, that is, except those who are in need. That is inconsistent with the social policy of all three Parties in this House.

Lately, we have been treated to a spectacle of debate within the Liberal Party, which has been playing to the media, television and radio. It is the debate about the future of Family Allowances and the future of social welfare programs on a national scope. The debate seems mainly to be on Family Allowances, but the results of that debate will be felt in all the social programs that are part of the structure of this country. It will also be felt by programs such as old age pensions and medicare.

I would like to quote from an article in The Globe and Mail dated November 3, 1982, with reference to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). It states:

> The Government may end universality of the family allowance program but will not cut old-age security benefits, Finance Minister Marc Lalonde said yesterday.
> He said in an interview he disagrees with some of his colleagues who say universal social programs are a basic principle of Liberal philosophy.
> And he believes Canadians may be ready to swallow an end to universality of family allowance in which all parents, regardless of income, receive monthly benefits. He thinks they may be ready to accept that such benefits should go to those most in need.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is on the other side in this debate. On November 4, from The Citizen we have this statement:

> Health Minister Monique Bégin said Wednesday the Cabinet has decided not to restrict family allowance because of the current recession.
> But she acknowledged that in future there may have to be a "redistribution" of funds for all social programs which would mean some of them would no longer be universally available.

She is not quite sure whether universality is such a good thing. She went on to state, "Nothing is permanent in life".

The recent Liberal Party policy convention got some of these people off the hook because there they were forced by public demand, and Hon. Members know what the Liberal Party is like. It makes its policies by consensus. The convention decided that it would reaffirm the support for universal Family Allowances. That might be what the Liberals said they would do, but there seems to be a diffference amongst them as to whether universality is a Liberal penchant or not. This Bill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare says, does not touch universality. As far as it goes, that is true, but the Minister admits that it puts many families below the poverty line. The Minister said that, but then she said, "Well, we will take care of that". As reported at page 21178 of Hansard for December 1, 1982, she said:

> There are three elements in the system. One is the well-known Family Allowance which is taxable and goes to every child in the country through his or her mother. Another is the Child Tax Credit, of which I must say we are very proud and which was introduced in 1978. It is a mechanism to distribute the benefits only to those with the least income.

If that is universality, we have the wrong meaning. The Minister went on to say, "The Child Tax Credit is received in addition to family allowances". Therefore, what the Minister has accepted from her colleagues is a movement away from universality. By not allowing the legal indexing she is reducing the amount of money that can be received in favour of Child Tax Credits, which is a selected tax credit.

• (2130)

I do not oppose tax credits as such, if it is the best that this Government can do to keep families alive. If they cannot solve the problem any other way, we will accept that as one of the solutions. But let the Minister not say that she is not introducing a selective program and let her not discuss how careful she is to support and how often she speaks in defence of universality.

The same thing is happening to the old age pension. The song played by the Government has been: reduce the universal pension and increase the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Again, this is a reduction in the universal program and an increase in the selective program.

The Minister has lost her fight within her Party. The rank and file of the Liberal Party have lost their fight to maintain universality. Instead, universality of social programs is no longer a basic policy of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Blais: Stan, you do not know what you are saying.

Mr. Hovdebo: The Liberal Government has struck out on this issue. They struck out, first of all, on Family Allowances, which is no longer an entirely universal program because it is supplemented by selective tax credit programs. Old age pensions are no longer a universal program. They are supplemented by the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Medicare is no longer a universal program because this Government and many of the Provincial Governments allow extra billing. So the Liberals have struck out, and regardless of how many bases they steal in the next few weeks, they have struck out on social programs.

The Tories have been expressing a great deal of outrage at the possible end of universality, but the Conservatives are not all lily-white in this respect either. In fact, their move against universality came some time ago when they were in power. I can read you the following selection from The Toronto Star of November 3, 1979:

> The Clark Government is planning to eliminate or drastically reduce both family allowances and income tax deductions for children. The Star has learned.
> Family allowances, which have been paid monthly to Canadian mothers with dependent children since 1945, would no longer go to families earning $35,000 or more a year. Tax deductions for dependent children, which date back to the introduction of income tax in 1917, would disappear.
> Both would be replaced by the child tax credit system, which would benefit people at the lower income levels and give nothing to those in the upper income brackets.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the Conservative position, and a few days later we have this from The Citizen:

> Several times Welfare Minister Crombie responded to questioning in the House with the suggestion that the Government was seeking ways to "provide money to those who most need it".
> But challenged by the NDP's Bill Blaikie for assurances that "money saved on any detraction from universality . . . will be used for the benefit of low-income Canadians", the minister declined to do so.

So the Conservatives have also abandoned their long time position on universality. However, in this House in the last few days they have been telling us on and on and on that they support universal programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the Hon. Member's attention that there is nothing in this Bill which states any kind of change in the universality.

Mr. Hovdebo: I am glad the Hon. Member brought that up. The defence of this Bill by both himself and the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been that the selective part of their Program, the Child Tax Credit Program, will take the place of the money that these people are not going to get from Family Allowances. The Minister said that in her speech yesterday, and so did the Parliamentary Secretary. They said, we will take care of everybody with the tax credit, even though they will lose some money. But tax credits are selectivity. Therefore, they are backing away from universality on this Program.

One of the arguments about selectivity is that it is more efficient. The Minister in this case has made the assumption that more selectivity means more efficiency in the provision of social programs, such as Family Allowance. This appears to have been accepted by both the Liberals and the Conservatives.

The Canadian Council on Social Development has challenged this assumption. The Minister argues that efficiency is a cost of universality.

Miss Bégin: I never argued that.

Mr. Hovdebo: On the other side of that same argument, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) argues that more selectivity enables the Government to target benefits to those who really need them, and at the same time they can save some money. But is selectivity really more efficient? Since 1974, when Family Allowances were made taxable, a portion of the Family Allowances have been returned to the federal Government and to the Provinces, through the tax system. To the extent that the tax system is progressive, it represents the principle of means testing which already operates within the system in regard to Family Allowances, but it is a hidden system which does not denigrate the people who are affected by it.

The Department of National Revenue already employs a small army of public servants whose work it is to administer taxes, to take back from those with relatively higher incomes relatively larger portions of the Family Allowance which they have received. To administer an additional form of selectivity, which is the tax credit, takes another army of civil servants, and payment of that group of civil servants must be subtracted from the savings which could be effected. Even the cut-off level will require a section established in the National Health and Welfare Department to process and monitor claims. Therefore, it does not appear that the process is that much more efficient than the process already in place.

There are other ways of doing this which might be more efficient. For example, if we desire to cut off high income earners entirely, there is a simple way of doing that. On page 4 of the income tax form, after the net tax payable has been calculated, an additional item can be added requesting that one who pays high income tax add on Family Allowance received directly to the tax payable, in lieu of showing it as income. This super taxation of Family Allowance was used from 1935 to 1947, at which time it was again taken off.

The Canada Council on Social Development, to its credit, has publicly opposed the proposal made by the Government with regard to the increased selectivity of Family Allowance through the tax credit. It has provided some figures on cost savings that are contemplated. Using the Child Tax Credit as a method of assessing the need, the Council argues that 70 per cent of the families receive the Child Tax Credit. The saving would be 30 per cent less than the amount taxed back, or 15 to 20 per cent of the total expenditure.

If we project the 1982 Family Allowance expenditure, it will be approximately $2.16 billion. After taking off the cost of administration and the six and five program reduction, the Government might save around $300 million. There are 3.6 million families which receive the Family Allowance and 2.5 million who receive the Child Tax Credit. That number will likely increase if the six and five program is put into effect. With that $2 billion spent on Family Allowance and adding the increased tax credit, the saving amounts to 1 per cent of the total expenditure for Family Allowance. A lot of heartache and a lot of poverty will result from a 1 per cent saving. Where are the priorities of this Government?

Mr. Schroder: I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the purpose of this Bill is not to save the Government money but to stimulate economic recovery so that those people receiving—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is definitely not a point of order. It is debate.

Mr. Anguish: He is also incorrect.

Mr. Hovdebo: One of the ways to stimulate the economy would be to give people more money to spend. This reduction for families that need it most will hurt. This money does not stay in their pockets or go into the bank. It is spent that day or the next day. Families that are destitute or close to being destitute are dependent on the Family Allowance. The moment they get that money, they use it. That is the kind of stimulation we need, not a reduction in the amount they are given.

Previous speakers have shown the effects of reducing the indexing of Family Allowances and how this will affect low income families. The Parliamentary Secretary pointed out another factor. If you take money away from people, they do not have it to spend. The reason this Bill is being brought forward is so that more money will be spent, and this in turn will stimulate the economy. The Parliamentary Secretary's logic requires a little refinement. I will not spend time documenting further the effect of this reduction of income for families who need it.

After the indexing is resumed in 1985, the allowance will be $391 for each child rather than the $429 it would have been without the June budget. Adding on the Child Tax Credit, low and middle income families will receive $742 per child in 1985, $38 less than they would have received without the budget.

When the Minister says that a low income family will be better off with the reduction and the added tax credit, that is incorrect. By 1985 they will receive $81 less. What we need is a more equitable tax system, not a reduction in Family Allowance and an increase in family tax credits. This selective tax credit will lower the family income of families rather than increase it.

I spent a lot of time talking about the Government policy and a bit of time on the Tory policy. It is only fair that I put before Members the policy of the New Democratic Party. The NDP has always supported the principle of universality in social programs and strongly believes that our existing programs should remain intact as a basic right of all Canadians.

The embracing of the philosophy of universality and the rejecting of the negative intent of selectivity are a continuing policy basis of our social programs. It has been part of this Party's history and principles since becoming a Party in 1933, and in fact earlier when J. S. Woodsworth was here as a Labour Member.

The practical argument of classicial selectivity used by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and by the former minister of finance in the Conservative Government is a complete smokescreen. The solution is not to alter the program but to alter the tax system so that it becomes the instrument of equitable distribution.

• (2150)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I did not anticipate speaking this evening, but I am very glad to participate in this debate, if only to counter some of the arguments made by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who really was not fully honest about the intent of the measure. I know it was not intentional. It was a case of misguided economics of the New Democratic Party.

As one of the Liberal rank and file to which the Hon. Member made reference a few moments ago, I would like to talk about the red herring in this whole debate which is being put into circulation by the Members of the NDP, that this is a debate about universality or selectivity in social programs. It is nothing of the kind. What we have before us is an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, one of the pieces of legislation which will give effect to the Government's six and five program which is designed to reduce inflation. It has nothing to do with universality or selectivity.

You have been so lenient and generous, as is your wont, Mr. Speaker, that I thought you would allow me to counter the arguments which have been made by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, even though that Party has nothing whatsoever to do with the basic principle in this piece of legislation. First, with respect to the universality/selectivity argument, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that if there was any notion that the Liberal Party was going to abandon universality, that notion was put to rest at the Liberal National convention held in Ottawa a few weeks ago. I am speaking very directly to my hon. friends in the front benches across the way who, I am sure, received the message loud and clear at that time that during a time of terrible economic conditions, the worst in 50 years, the last thing you do is to cut back, in real terms, social benefits for those who need them most.

Some Hon. Members: That is what you are doing with the six and five.

Mr. Collenette: The New Democratic Party is saying that is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker, because they know, but they do not want to admit, that we are right, that if inflation comes down in the 12 month—

Some Hon. Members: If, if, if.

Mr. Collenette: Let me deal with the "ifs". If inflation comes down in the 12 month period to 6 per cent, then, obviously there is no net loss to those recipients of any of these social benefits which are being capped. The NDP does not believe inflation is coming down because it has a vested interest in inflation continuing in this country. That is why they are arguing. This is the inflationary Party, when you listen to their friends in the Canadian Labour Congress, when you listen to their Party Members, when you listen to their speeches in debate in this House. They do not want inflation to go down because the NDP revels in an inflated society. Why? Because they have no conception of real economics, about the true economic forces which move the country.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to vex these poor souls opposite who are so misguided. The fact is, the Liberal Party will not abandon universality in social programs. Absolutely. That message has been received loud and clear.

Let me speak about universality in some of the social programs. When we talk about universality in old age pensions or medicare, it is totally different from universality in family benefits. They are two types of programs, I submit, and perhaps not all my colleagues agree with me. I think an argument could be made for more targeting on Family Allowances, but on old age pensions, on medicare, there is no way. A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, we introduced a Child Tax Credit which was a degree of targeting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the noise level has gone up to the point where the Chair has difficulty hearing the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette).

Mr. Collenette: I know full well, Mr. Speaker, what I am saying because, unlike the Members opposite, I have actually thought about this. A few years ago, when we instituted the Child Tax Credit, that was a degree of targeting, of helping certain people who needed help the most, and that was consistent with the Liberal tradition, but the Family Allowances program remained universal. There was just some flexibility in its application.

Some Hon. Members: Now you are thinking of changing it.

Mr. Collenette: No, there is no way of changing it, as far as I am concerned. The basic universality is intact, but there can be some targeting within that universality.

An Hon. Member: That sounds like pretty twisted logic to me.

Mr. Collenette: The Hon. Members opposite talk about my twisted logic. If you read the "blues" and see what the Hon. Member for Prince Albert said, you will realize those who are twisting logic are not on this side of the House. This legislation is part of a strategy to bring inflation down. A few moments ago, before the Hon. Members opposite started to ridicule me on the whole question of selectivity and universality, they said, "But inflation is not coming down". Where have they been living for the last six months?

An Hon. Member: In a depression.

Mr. Collenette: Have they not been looking at the consumer price index, the leading indicators in Canadian society, to see that the six and five program is an absolute success? The battle is being won, but they cannot recognize it because they do not want to recognize it. The Hon. Members opposite know full well that in the 12 month period between June 28, 1982 and June 28, 1983, one year after the six and five program was announced, inflation will be well within the six per cent guidelines. In fact, I believe it was the Governor of the Bank of Canada who made a statement the other day saying that for the last three months the real inflation rate has been running at about 8.5 per cent. We still have a long way to go until next June, and inflation is falling extremely rapidly.

Mr. Deans: Two point two million people are unemployed.

Mr. Collenette: Yes, there are 2.2 million people unemployed, but what is going to get them back to work? A sound economy—

An Hon. Member: One point four million unemployed.

Mr. Collenette: —the elimination of inflation, and the ability to invest in the country. That is what will get this country going again. And the foundation of the strategy to get Canadians working has to be to get inflation down. And it is working. I hope, as do many, that the Government will be building on the six and five program to help stimulate employment further, and I would invite the Hon. Members to sit here for the next few weeks, perhaps into the new year, when they will see the true ambit of the strategy, which is, first, to eliminate inflation, or to reduce it significantly, and to build upon that by investment in the kinds of measures announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on October 27, so that jobs are created and we can look forward to better times.

To say that this Bill which we have before us is a philosophical debate on the notion of universality in social programs versus selectivity, is completely misleading. It is not deliberate, I know, because the Members of the NDP do not know any better.

I would invite my colleagues who are present to support this Bill. I hope that in the next few hours, when those in the NDP retire for the evening, they may think this matter through more fully and look, perhaps, at the "blues" of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert to see the faulty logic. Because inflation is coming down. This Bill, and the other Bills which are before the House, are an essential ingredient in getting inflation down. If the Hon. Members opposite were true Canadians, concerned about restructuring the economy, regbuilding the economy, having an economic revival in this country, they would embrace this program, as Canadians have done, in order to build a better future. But I do not think the Members of the New Democratic Party want to build a better future because they are wallowing in the distress of today and the ideas of yesterday and that, Mr. Speaker, is the total sum of the history and comportment of the NDP in this country. That is the reason they have never held power at the national level.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

HEALTH—FUNDING FOR PLANNED PARENTHOOD ASSOCIATION. (B) INCREASE IN TEENAGE PREGNANCIES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, November 26, the National Office of Planned Parenthood was phoned by an official of the Department of National Health and Welfare and informed that their funding for 1983-84 would not be the $250,000 as promised, but would be $130,000, a 48 per cent reduction. This is a devastating blow to the organization which provides a link to 50 provincial and municipal organizations, organizes educational conferences, publishes a journal, and had planned this year a major media campaign aimed at young people.

The timing of the cutback is ironic in view of the fact that the Health Promotion Branch of the Department recently conducted a survey of public health nurses to ascertain their views on major health concerns. These concerns were teenage pregnancies, obesity and drug and alcohol abuse, in that order of priority. At a time when teenage pregnancies are of major concern—as I said in the House the other day, over 1,000 teenagers a week including many 13 and 14 year olds are becoming pregnant—the funding for this type of program should be expanded, not reduced.

When I raised this in the House, Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the Minister, I really do not think she could have understood my question because her answer made no rational sense whatsoever. She said that direct delivery of social health services are a provincial responsibility and that is why they were phasing out this program. I have correspondence, Mr. Speaker, from the Minister and her officials to Planned Parenthood in 1981 which says completely the opposite. It is extremely supportive of this national organization. I agree, it does not provide direct services and those are a provincial responsibility. It provides co-ordinating, educational and promotional types of services which are extremely important in the area of family planning.

According to this correspondence the federal grant was to have been $250,000 for 1983-84 and by agreement it was to be reduced to $200,000 for 1984-85. Not this year, but two years from now. There was nothing in the correspondence regarding the question of jurisdiction. Therefore, this drastic cut really is a breach of promise. There is no question about that, if you read the correspondence. Planned Parenthood agreed to the cut only on condition that funds they had previously received would go directly to the provincial family planning group. The Minister has not lived up to this deal.

I also want to say that the role of the Planned Parenthood organization is extremely important because of the very high incidence of unwanted pregnancies among teenagers. In 1979 there were 32,000 babies born to teenage girls, an ever increasing number being under 15. In addition to that, we see a barrage of sexploitation on TV and in magazines and movies which is really encouraging active and quite irresponsible sexuality in young people today, very young teenagers. So it is most important that there be a national campaign, particularly a media campaign, to counteract this high incidence of adolescent pregnancies.

I would also like to say that the federal Government assumed a very major leadership role in 1977. It signed international agreements that access to family planning is a human right.

I would like to quote from the Badgley Committee Report of January 1977, which was very strongly supported by the House and by the then minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who said that the federal Government would take the lead in birth planning in Canada. Subsequently a Family Planning Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare was established. It supports three voluntary organizations—Planned Parenthood, Serena, which is a French organization concerned with natural family planning, and also the Canadian Association for Fertility Research. I understand that the budget of this federal Department has been slashed considerably and will be slashed by two-thirds for 1983.

The report of the Badgley Committee indicated:

> The extent of induced abortions in the future can be expected to remain the same as at the present time, and its occurrence may gradually rise, unless there are effective changes made in the contraceptive practices of Canadians, particularly among high risk groups . . . these changes may be brought about by increased efforts through research to find more effective and acceptable methods of contraception and by co-ordinated family planning programs for public education and health promotion.

These are the very things which Planned Parenthood provides. It continued:

> Without taking them, there is virtually no likelihood that the volume of induced abortions will be reduced or even contained at its present level.

The report went on to indicate that it was extremely important for the federal Government to take leadership in this whole area.

Finally, it is false economy to cut back on family planning information when adolescent pregnancies are increasing. If I had more time, I could indicate the extremely high costs of this in welfare and health services.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, further to the question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) of November 30, 1982, I should like to advise her that the Department of National Health and Welfare has provided sustaining grants to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada and Serena Canada in accordance with their objectives to provide family planning services to all Canadians requesting them.

The policy of the Department has consistently been to support a portion of central office expenditures of national voluntary agencies, while a portion of the expenditures is covered by revenue from other sources. According to the guide to family planning grants, it is expected that after an initial period of support by the family planning grants these agencies will develop other sources of funding. Over a period of time they will reduce and finally eliminate their dependence on family planning grants for a significant portion of their budgets.

Following the June 1977 Conference of Ministers of Health, there was consensus of the Provinces that family planning services came within provincial responsibility. In order to assist the Provinces in meeting this need, the Department funded a number of projects on a demonstration basis, projects which were later continued through provincial funds. We recognize that it is up to the Provinces to determine the course of action they wish to pursue.

As well, I would advise that because of the period of economic restraint, family planning grants have been reduced by $1.4 million over a two-year period, which is comprised of $700,000 per year. The Department of National Health and Welfare attempted to distribute the funds in the family planning program in the most equitable manner in order that each ongoing project would be in receipt of at least minimal operating funds. Federal contributions to family planning services will continue to be available through the Canada Assistance Plan and the Established Programs Financing Act. The Department of National Health and Welfare will also continue its information activities in family planning.

Adjournment Debate

NATIONAL REVENUE—MOVEMENT OF TAX RECORDS FROM HAMILTON TO SUDBURY. COMPLAINT CONCERNING RECORDED MESSAGES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) on November 26 regarding National Revenue records involves a very serious matter. At that time I questioned the Minister about irate calls which I receive in my office from taxpayers in Hamilton and area who find that it takes a long time to get their records from Sudbury to the Hamilton area where they can be looked at. It is more serious than usual because of the precarious position of our economy. Most people who have a tax problem owe the Tax Department money. If they do not have the cash and they have a cash problem, the cost of borrowing money to pay the tax is very high.

• (2210)

Several professional people involved in the taxation process, such as tax consultants, lawyers, auditors and individual taxpayers have contacted my office to complain about the length of time it takes to get tax records from Sudbury.

It seems several months ago, I believe it was last January, that tax records formerly held in Hamilton were moved to Sudbury along with those of four other taxation centres. Apparently a total of nine taxation centres will eventually shift their records to Sudbury. The common complaint is that when contact is made with the taxation office to discuss an appeal or an assessment that has been made on an individual taxpayer, the person making contact is told that it will take a minimum of six weeks to get the records from Sudbury.

In several instances National Revenue has taken action to collect taxes and has threatened court action or garnishee of wages. Because so many payrolls are processed on a computer, and many times small companies hire outside sources, an employer has a serious problem if garnishee notice is presented. Many employers will tell an employee unofficially that if he or she has a garnishee placed against his or her wages it could cost the individual his or her job. There is double jeopardy involved here.

In many instances the claim by National Revenue for taxes is challenged by a taxpayer. National Revenue will say, "Pay the amount owing now and we'll talk about it later." But the taxpayer, in most cases, has a cash problem and also feels it is unfair to pay taxes if he or she has a reasonable case that may be adjudicated. Time becomes a problem. National Revenue will threaten to garnishee within 30 days if the tax is not paid. The taxpayer calls National Revenue to make his case and is told it will take at least six weeks to get his records from Sudbury. On the one side of the coin, a person is told that he will have his wages garnisheed in 30 days, and on the other side of the coin he is told he cannot get his records for six weeks.

The Minister is asking me to advise my constituent to be patient, that big brother is working on the problem and that through the magic of modern technology some day we will be able to have an adequate service on a television screen. That was the essence of his reply. I am not against progress in the handling of paper if it will provide faster, better and more economical service. However, the taxpayer is the one who should be served; that must be the objective.

Since I raised the question in the House, I have received more calls from people reconfirming that my allegation is valid. One woman called yesterday to say that her employer had received a registered mail notice to garnishee her wages. When she called the tax department to enquire, they informed her they had advised her of this action. Now the Post Office is involved. The lady stated she had never received the notice, or any communication from National Revenue. Her problem was similar to many others. She had submitted tax receipts with her return and she believes they had been lost. One person told me of sending three sets of receipts, that is, the original and two sets of copies, and those issuing the receipts said they would not accommodate her further if she could not get this sort of thing straightened out. But the constituent, whose employer received the garnishee notice, was fortunate. She was able to discuss the problem with her employer, and she has been able to keep her job.

The income tax form is so complicated that it invites problems. Even the multi-coloured tax guide and instruction courses do not help much. The difficulty of the tax form is a source of many problems. The Minister, in his reply, states that I could call his office and his staff would answer my questions. He went on to say that the files could be in another remote location many miles distant and the same service could be provided as if the original file was there, all through the magic of electronics.

• (2215)

The bottom line is that people are complaining in such numbers that I believe there is a problem. I did not invent the problem. I am trying to find a solution to their problem. The Minister, rather than looking into the matter, first advises me to tell my constituents to be patient and then delivers a homily on the miracle of modern electronics. The problem is still there. I want to know what the Minister will do beyond making pious comments.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the decision to create taxation centres for the massive routine operations of the Department was taken in 1975 by this Government as part of the over-all decentralization program. It has gone very well and we now have eight centres operating in the country. We have retained the traditional 28 district offices across Canada. The district offices are still where they have always been, and continue to be responsible for dealing directly with taxpayers on the kinds of questions about which the Members' constituents appear to have been concerned. The centres were created in order to produce greater efficiency in the handling of the many millions of transactions that are necessary to administer the income tax system. Another objective was to spread federal employment more widely.

I will now deal with the difficulty of communications. As taxpayers have been advised, if they require information of any kind they should contact their local district offices. The tax guide provides them with the address of each district office and with various telephone numbers they should use, depending on the nature of their inquiry. The Department, through the district offices, handles millions of telephone inquiries each year and handles hundreds of thousands of inquiries over the counter.

Most general questions can be answered by reference to the extensive informational literature that is made available. Most of the questions the taxpayer has about his own affairs can be answered at the district office, because the staff in every district office has access to the central computer records at Ottawa through computer terminals, with which each district office is equipped. In a small minority of the case it is necessary to obtain the taxpayer's file from the taxation centre.

The actual time involved for the vast majority of the files requested by the Hamilton district office from Sudbury is normally five days and not the six weeks as the Hon. Member suggested.

He also speaks of business people, tax accountants and taxpayers who phone Sudbury and get a recorded message in response. There must be some confusion here. To begin with, since direct phone contacts with taxpayers are to be handled by the district offices, only a minimal provision for phone service is made in the taxation centres. For this reason it has not been necessary to have recourse to recorded messages in the taxation centres of the kind which are in common use in many organizations with a high volume of phone business.

The Department is constantly trying to improve communications. To this end, the directors of the Sudbury taxation centre and of the Hamilton district office will be meeting with representatives of the accounting profession in Hamilton in the near future to hear about the problems they have had and to see if there are some ways in which they could be removed or at least reduced.

In closing, the Department wants to hear about particular specific problems in communications. I emphasize "specific", because the general charges of the kind the Hon. Member has made are not really helpful, particularly when, as in this instance, they appear to run at variance with the facts.

AIR TRANSPORT—QUEBECAIR 2—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on December 1, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) about the status of Quebecair or perhaps I should say about the Quebecair 2 affair. Some time ago, many people were saying that the Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian Government were to blame for the problems of Quebecair, because they were not allocating any routes to Quebecair and were indulging in unfair competition through Air Canada, and so forth. Comparisons were being drawn with Nordair, with people saying that Nordair was getting a better deal than Quebecair. A Parti Québécois member from my area, the member for Arthabasca, even sent me a letter saying that Nordair was an Ontario-based company!

• (2220)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify a few points regarding the present situation of Quebecair, to know what is going on. Perhaps I should recall for the benefit of some people who are not familiar with the situation, that both Nordair and Quebecair were started by Quebecers in 1947, Nordair being based in the Lac Saint-Jean area, the heartland of Quebec, and Quebecair in Rimouski. Today, Nordair still has its headquarters in Montreal. Nordair was asked to develop routes in Northwestern Quebec, while Quebecair was to do the same east of Montreal. The situation with regard to Quebecair is indeed unfortunate, especially for the company's employees whose jobs are at stake as a result of Quebecair's financial difficulties, but there are other intervenors in this case who have helped to create this situation, because I think that the interest shown by Minister Pepin, more specifically on November 22—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he must refer to the Members of this House by their Department, not by name.

Mr. Dubois: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your comments and I realize they are based on many years of experience in this House. The Minister of Transport, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin.

As I was saying, both companies were asked to develop routes, and the fact that today, after 35 years, Quebecair is experiencing problems, is due to the fact that some quite incredible things have happened. One of the facts which I want to straighten out this evening, Mr. Speaker, is the allegation that Quebecair never had its place in the sun nor the chance to state its views on air transport matters when it had come upon the chance of developing certain routes, and that every time Quebecair had applied for routes east of Montreal, it had always been given that right by the Canadian Transport Commission.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, many people have complained that this company did not obtain its share of subsidies from the Government of Canada or from the Canadian Transport Commission. They were saying that Quebecair was getting only $400,000 a year and that it had received nothing in the past. However, we should tell Quebecers that the Department of Transport has in its records that since 1966, when a subsidization policy was drawn up, Quebecair received a total of $7.5 to $10 million from the Government of Canada. Those moneys were granted with no strings attached contrary to the Quebec Government which obtained from Quebecair in return for its investment a substantial number of shares and even the opportunity to take complete control, whereas the Government of Canada has never asked anything in return from Quebecair.

And they would have us believe that the terms laid down by the Government of Canada do not help Quebecair. As far as I know, and I stress this point once again tonight, Quebecair is left with only 6 planes, and they make a mountain out of a molehill when I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) what is the status of the question. I feel that Quebecers should be made aware of the financial situation of Quebecair and should also know that the corporation at one time had BAC-111 type planes. It decided to purchase some Boeing 737s and tried to sell its BAC-111s. Having failed, it made a further attempt to sell them. It still has these planes, as well as some 737s which are out of order most of the time. That is why I asked the Minister of Transport how things stood. I wanted as well Quebecers to know about the very expensive mistake Quebecair made when it changed its planes. Last year the Government of Quebec invested $15 million to prevent any merger with Nordair, contrary to what people were thinking. We can say now that Quebecair is in a real predicament, and who is to be blamed for it? First, its management which has acted with sheer incompetence; its board of directors which was forced to approve the purchase of a certain number of Boeing 737 aircraft and then to authorize switching back to BAC-111's; the shareholders who stood idly by while management took all those irresponsible decisions; and especially the Government of Quebec which failed to put a stop to this extravaganza and blocked the merger with Nordair in the summer of 1981. In such a situation, the Canadian Government had a responsibility towards the employees, and that is why I asked the Minister what he was doing about them. What is going on? How is it that we on this side of the House, the Members from Quebec here in Ottawa, are the ones who will be taking over and making sure that Quebecair 2 becomes operational? Where does the Government of Quebec fit in? That is why I asked the Minister of Transport to tell me what is going on.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois)) for his comments and his explanations concerning Quebecair. Of course, these last few weeks, we could even say this last month, we have heard in Quebec certain gratuitous comments about Quebecair, and also about what the federal government, and more specifically the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Canadian Transport Commission, are supposed to have done to Quebecair in recent years. Naturally, the facts reported by the Hon. Member for Lotbinière are true, and the federal Department of Transport and the Canadian Transport Commission are certainly not to blame if such a situation now exists at Quebecair. However, when the Quebec Minister of Transport came to Ottawa for a meeting with his counterpart and asked for assistance to bail out Quebecair or solve the problems of this carrier whose services is essential to a large area of the province especially Eastern Quebec, he made certain statements which were then given widespread publicity in Quebec. This is at this point that the Members and the caucus from Quebec moved in and started to follow the situation closely, as is being done with all matters of great importance for Quebec. We had meetings with the federal Minister of Transport. There were meetings of the Quebec Members, especially those whose ridings are affected by this carrier, and we made suggestions to the federal Minister of Transport.

And this is why some ten days ago, last Monday to be more accurate, the Canadian Minister of Transport made an offer to his Quebec counterpart to solve the Quebecair matter once and for all. Later on, we received requests for further details from the Quebec government that did not seem to understand the federal offer very clearly. Details were submitted last Thursday, and once more, the Quebec government asked whether we could not consider putting Quebecair 1, the existing corporation back on its feet. The Minister of Transport clearly answered yesterday in this House, Mr. Speaker, that he and also we, Members of Parliament, from Quebec, did not see how we could salvage a company with such a huge deficit. However, the Minister of Transport gave another proof of his open-mindedness, and no later than today he indicated to his Quebec counterpart that he was ready to open negotiations to solve the issue. And next Monday, Mr. Speaker, a task force will meet to look at the possibility of finding a solution and whether we could not keep Quebecair afloat, which we do not believe possible, Mr. Speaker, but we will just the same make every effort to provide that service to people in Eastern Quebec and save Quebecair, and above all jobs for its employees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock.

At 10.29 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
