conflict them in any sorrow. Never go on doing anything that vexes or torments them, though it be an amendment to yourselves. If you get good things, do not keep them all to yourselves, but share with others. The love is never selfish.

2. Be gentle and patient with one another. We all have sinful hearts; you have your own faults of temper, and your companions have theirs. If you wish to be happy together, you must learn to be gentle and patient.

3. Pray for one another. When you kneel down to ask your Father in heaven for all that you need yourself, ask him also to pardon, and bless and comfort your young friends.

And then, if God spare you to grow up, how happy you may be together all through your lives. For there are no friends like old friends, and no love like that which has been long known and tried.

"Present state of Italy."

Learning from an advertisement in the Examiner newspaper, and from a handbill, copies of which were largely distributed through the town, that Dr. Mallock, Roman Catholic Bishop of Newfoundland, would lecture on the above subject, in St. Dunstan's Cathedral, on Tuesday evening, in aid of the funds of the Irish Volunteer Company of this city, we found our way thither at the hour appointed.

The lecturer, having been introduced to the meeting in flattering terms by the chairman, a brother ecclesiastic, arose, with manuscript in hand, and looked around upon his audience. Our expectations were now high. We were about to hear a Bishop, famed for political interference in his own diocese, and therefore one, a person would suppose, well informed respecting the affairs of the country in which his chief residence was.

What of it we heard, was chiefly respecting Rome, which everybody knows does not exactly correspond to the whole of Italy; but even the present state of that city as regards its people was very imperfectly described. The lecturer commenced by giving some of his own reminiscences of the "Eternal City," referring to its numerous monuments of art, its magnificent churches, and wonderful catacombs.

With respect to other statements in the lecture, they are scarcely worth noticing. The state of Italy as a whole was never considered, and there is any arrangement in the affairs of the Papal dominions, could only be gleaned from a few superficial remarks on some things existing there scarcely compatible with good order.

carefully through the town and village, but saw nothing at all like the scenes depicted in the illustrations of the plates; on the contrary, the country seemed more than a century behind Great Britain and Ireland in agriculture and commerce.

The following article which we copy from the London Times, throws considerable light on the present state of affairs in the Pope's territories, as well as describes the bitter disappointment of his Irish recruits:

Punishment in the case of the Pope's Irish Brigade has not been what we have generally supposed. The old soldiers, once, have four upon their heads, and are not to be taken as a whole. The wretched creatures who were kidnapped by the recruiting agents of the Roman Pontiff have, to their cost, there are worse creatures in the world than those who have been taken from their homes, and who have been sent to fight for a Pope who has no right to their blood.

From all that we have seen and heard, and from all we know of the dispositions of our people and the whole population, we have reason to believe that your Royal Highness's progress through these Provinces will be one of the greatest and most triumphant manifestations of public feeling which the present generation has ever witnessed, and here can be no doubt that your Royal Highness will be enabled to collect at different places which you visit such variety and amount of local, geographical, commercial, political and ecclesiastical intelligence as only be obtained by a personal itinerary of actual observation, such information as may enable you to conduct with ability and success in your duties which devolve upon you.
