The Imprisoned Heiress
—OR—
The Spectre of Egremont.

CHAPTER VII.

The next moment he made a startling discovery. The cord had been cut near the top!

This discovery was proof sufficient of his great peril, and he gently drew back his arm and awaited the next attitude of affairs.

He was still thinking, when he heard a faint sound in his room—a token of another presence there than his own.

There might be more than one man there, he thought, and they would be well armed. To attempt to dash past them would be a rash upon certain death. To be still would be worse.

His resolve was taken.

Keeping a vigilant watch upon his curtains, alive to the faintest sound, suppressing his breathing to the lowest possible pitch, and with the utmost caution and noiselessness, he gradually arose in his bed and slipped out at its head, standing erect between the couch and its drapery.

He had scarcely done so when the sound he had heard was repeated.

His lordship drew himself up and awaited the result.

Suddenly—so suddenly as to startle him, there having been no premonitory warning but that faint sound—the curtains were gently parted and an arm was thrust within the opening, the hand grasping a murderous-looking knife.

Lord Ashcroft remained silent.

The arm looked brawny and large, and the hand was incased in an old and stained leathern glove.

Nothing was to be seen but that sinister arm, except an evil-looking eye that gleamed through the parting in the bed-curtain above, although its glances rested only upon a deserted bed.

The fact of its desertion was evidently not apparent to the assassin, for with a sudden and nervous movement he struck out his arm, plunging his knife into the bed at the spot where his victim's heart should have been.

A smothered curse came from the lips of the assassin as he discovered his failure.

That imprecation still lingered upon his lips, his hand still grasped the knife, when Lord Ashcroft, with a tiger-like spring, leaped from his hiding-place upon him.

The assassin gave a startled cry and turned to flee.

Catching up his dressing-gown Lord Ashcroft started in pursuit.

The would-be murdered rushed into the parlor, pulled open the door leading into the corridor, and as he did so his pursuer noticed his form distinctly, the freight being clear and bright.

The face he could not see.

Through the dimly lighted corridor, down the broad staircase, through the lower hall, went the pursuer and the pursued, with a clattering noise that sounded fearfully loud at that hour, and, as they passed into the vestibule opening onto the portico, his lordship noticed that the outer door was ajar.

Even as he made the discovery the intended assassin dashed through the opening, and out into the pitchy darkness of the night.

Farther pursuit was useless.

As his lordship acknowledged this reluctantly to himself, the fresh wind brought to his ear a mocking laugh, and the words:

"Better luck next time!"

Lord Ashcroft thought seriously of rushing out in the direction from which the voice came, but remembering the state of his toilet, closed the door and went back to the staircase, upon the upper step of which lay his dressing-gown, where he had thrown it in his anxiety to capture his intended murderer.

He caught it up and put it on, subduing his excitement as he heard one or two doors open on the upper corridor, and then composedly walked on toward his room.

He had not taken a dozen steps ere the Lady Lorean rushed out from her room and Lord Egremont emerged from his, both startled and frightened.

Lord Egremont carried a pistol, and was followed by his lady, who appeared alarmed.

"What is the matter?" cried the host, excitedly. "Is it you, my lord? I—I thought—"

"Oh, what is it, Lionel?" cried his sister, running toward him, and clasping her arms about him. "I thought I heard some one pursuing some one else."

"Hush, Lorean, there is no need of fear now, dear. I was pursuing some one."

Lady Egremont groaned and caught her husband's arm.

"I beg your ladyship not to be alarmed," said Lord Ashcroft, astonished at her manner. "The man was quite alone. I pursued him out of the house and closed the door upon him. He cannot intrude again tonight."

"The—the man!" said Lady Egremont hysterically.

"Yes, your lordship, the same, I think, who shot at me in the plantation. He was in my room with murderous intent a few minutes since."

The Lady Lorean uttered a faint shriek and sobbed convulsively, pressing her brother's hand as if she would never more permit him to leave her.

"Oh, I wish you were back at Ashcroft, Lionel!" she exclaimed. "Your life was never in danger there, and here you have been twice attacked."

Lord Egremont came forward, his features working with emotion.

"My lord," he said, "your life is as sacred to me as my own—more sacred in fact, for with yours is connected that of my dear ward. The words of the Lady Lorean are perfectly natural, but they have stung me to the quick. The assassin who has twice attacked you shall be immediately discovered, I pledge you my honor. Did you think him to be the same as before, Gosman Kepp?"

"I have not yet come to that conclusion, my lord."

"In that case my duty is plain," said Lord Egremont, resolutely. "I must convince you that the assassin is not an inmate of the mansion. Your lordship secured the outer door?"

Lord Ashcroft assented.

Lord Egremont passed into his chamber and touched his bell-pull, in consequence of which summons a servant appeared and received an order, at which he departed wondering.

A few minutes later the great bell of Egremont, that was used only on special occasions, and which had been originally designed to summon the tenantry to the defense of the mansion in feudal times, was rung with a subdued peal that awoke every sleeper within the dwelling.

"Let me go down to the lower hall, my lord," said Lord Egremont, as sounds of commotion began to be heard.

Lord Ashcroft assented and conducted the Lord Lorean below, Lord and Lady Egremont following them.

In a few minutes they were joined by the Lady Alexina, who seemed greatly alarmed, and by Lyle Indor, whose anxiety seemed relieved on observing that the members of the family were all gathered there, and by a host of wondering servants, in every variety of costume.

The general impression seemed to be that Egremont was on fire, but that idea was immediately dissipated by Lord Egremont, who called upon his housekeeper and butler to declare if every servant in the family employ was there.

They were all there, as was soon ascertained, from the Lady Alexina's French maid to the lowest scullion employed in the kitchen, and not one of them showed any signs of guilt or confusion.

"Does any one of them resemble your assassin, my lord?" whispered Lord Egremont.

Lord Ashcroft answered in the negative.

Lord Egremont and the countess, Lady Lorean and Alexina, with Lyle Indor and Lord Ashcroft now hastened to the latter's chamber, to search for some clew to the assassin.

In the bed was discovered a murderous-looking knife, but it gave no hint as to its probable owner.

The matter was discussed, and various suggestions offered; but it was noticed that Lady Alexina said but little, and failed to express her gratitude at the narrow escape of her betrothed.

While the discussion was progressing, Lyle Indor withdrew, but soon returned, saying:

"There is a pistol, my lord, that I took to Italy two years ago. I never had occasion to defend myself against the brigands, so the weapon has scarcely been used. I think it is better than nothing and you will favor me by keeping it until your cowardly assailant is secured."

Lord Ashcroft regarded the pretty useless thing, thinking how appropriate it was to its effeminate owner, and that he should greatly prefer for his own use the gun he had captured in the plantation, but he thanked Indor courteously, and deposited the pistol in his pocket.

When Lord Ashcroft was left once more alone, he fell into a perplexed reverie as to Alexina's strange conduct.

"How strangely Alexina regarded me," mused his lordship. "She looked as though she were disappointed because I was not killed."

Railway Built by Doctors?

The most wonderful, and at the same time the most isolated, railway in the world is in South America. It begins and ends two thousand miles from civilization.

The task of getting European goods into northeastern Bolivia used to be gigantic. It took six months, and every pound had to be carried on the backs of natives to escape the rapids. The railway was begun as long ago as 1874, but it had to be abandoned, because every sleeper laid cost a life. It was only when medical science stepped in to help the engineers that the colossal task was accomplished ten years ago.

The line was built by the Government of Brazil. It circumvents nineteen cataracts, starts two thousand miles from any other railroad, and ends at a similar distance in Bolivia. The great waterways complete the journey from Atlantic to Pacific. The Americans say that it was really built by "Dr. Lovelace and quinine."

Rumor J. K. L. Ross Will be Head of Besco

MONTREAL—Rumors of immediate reorganization of British Empire Steel Corporation are continuously in the air. This week's story was to the effect that Commander J. K. L. Ross would accept the presidency of the British Empire Steel Corporation, and that a complete reorganization would be effected that would cause some of the present bondholders to take preferred stock in order to allow new bonds to be issued.

The amount of new money that would be raised would be about $25,000,000.—Financial Post.

"Eczema on My Face Completely Relieved"

Miss Winifred Ernest, Box 46, Blockhouse, N. S., writes:

"Ever since I was a little child, I suffered with eczema on my face. At times my face was completely covered with large sores, and I tried nearly every kind of medicine that I heard of with no results. This lasted for over twenty years, until one day I asked the advice of my druggist, who bade me give Dr. Chase's Ointment a trial. After using the Ointment for a few days, the sores began to heal, and soon I was completely relieved of the disease."

CANNOT APPROVE TREATIES. LONDON, Nov. 21. The British Foreign Office to-day issued for publication to-morrow a letter from Foreign Secretary Austen Chamberlain to the Soviet Charge D'Affaires, Christian Rakovsky, notifying him that the British Government, after deliberation, cannot recommend to parliament the Treaties with Russia which were negotiated by the MacDonald Government. A long note from Mr. Chamberlain to M. Rakovsky was also issued declaring that the British Government does not doubt the authenticity of the famous Zinovieff letter. In addition, the note virtually reiterates former Premier MacDonald's protests against Soviet propaganda.

I was troubled in this way for over a year, and a friend told me about the Vegetable Compound and induced me to take it. I must say I have received great benefit from it and am able to do my housework now. I recommend the Vegetable Compound myself and am willing for you to use this letter as a testimonial."
Mrs. WILLIAM MORSE, Bloomington, Annapolis County, Nova Scotia.
Do you know that in a recent canvass among women users of the Vegetable Compound over 220,000 replies were received. To the question, "Have you received benefit by taking this medicine?" 98 per cent. replied "Yes."
This means that 98 out of every 100 women are in better health because they have given this medicine a fair trial.

THE VERONICA'S STORY. HALIFAX, N.S., Nov. 21. Battered and weather beaten; her navigation instruments and motors crippled, short of food and waterless, the British four-masted schooner Veronica was towed into port this afternoon, reporting herself the victim of hijackers of Montauk Point, and declaring the loss of a large liquor cargo, the exact value of which could not be determined. Capt. Daniellson and two supercargoes came ashore but refused to give any information. The remainder of the crew is mostly German, with little English, but the mate, a Scotchman, giving the name of Parker, shed a slight light on the incident that left the craft a helpless derelict on the Atlantic since last Monday. According to the meagre story obtainable the Veronica was boarded by a schooner's crew of fifteen men on Oct. 24th, the visitors coming for the ostensible purpose of purchasing a liquor cargo. They subdued the crew at the point of revolvers and stayed on board three weeks during which time they disposed of the greater part of the Veronica's cargo over the side to liquor merchants. The captain and officers were locked in the cabin locker and the crew forced to aid the pirates, according to the story, and each night they were locked into a compartment. Mate Parker said he had had experience with Chinese pirates, but that the Orientals were gentlemen compared with the liquor pirates with whom he had come in contact. According to members of the crew they shipped on the Veronica at Bremen, for a trip to Melilla, Morocco, but had not seen land since the day she sailed out of Bremen four months ago. Their provisions ran short and water was low. Champagne and whiskey were used to quench thirst and when the vessel reached here there was said to be not a drop of water on board. The alleged pirates are understood to have left the schooner last Monday, first crippling the engines and navigation instruments. On her arrival here customs officers sealed up the remaining quantity of liquor left behind by the raiders.

No Hazards Involved In Choosing Westinghouse

IN the planning of a Steam Turbine generating plant, there are the usual indecisions besetting the mind of the engineer. There are several makes of good steam turbine generating plants from which to choose, but the question is which will be the most dependable and economical after years of service. It is reasonable to suppose that the original designers who had exerted the most care and thought on its several factors and had determined its construction for economy and general utility, are the safest upon which to decide. Westinghouse perfected and made possible the Steam Turbine for the generation of electrical energy.

Mr. R. H. Palmer
 Address Rotary Club

At the Rotary Luncheon on Thursday the address was given by R. H. Palmer. Rotarian Arthur Mews presided, and the guests included Messrs. D. J. Kennedy, C. J. Piercey, and Parsons of Harbour Grace. Mr. Palmer's address on the Flour Mill project was as follows:

Mr. Chairman—In rising to say a few words to you at this time let me first of all express my appreciation of the opportunity of attending this Rotary luncheon, and putting before you in a simple and homely way some facts which I trust will be of more or less interest to each one of you. Before dealing with the matter of Flour Milling which is the subject on which I am expected to make a few remarks, let me express my appreciation of the opportunity of attending the Rotary Luncheon one week ago to-day, and of the pleasure it afforded me in listening to the many excellent addresses made by the several speakers on that occasion. The question of civic betterment has been one of great interest to me for at least the past ten years, and wherever I have been located it has been my pleasure to take an interest in all such questions, and judging from the manner in which this question was dealt with last week, I believe it will not be long before an improvement is seen in our city of St. John's.

Coming to the question of Flour Milling, Milling is the order of converting into flour through a process of steeping, drying, crushing, separating and grinding of wheat into a finished form, and blending to produce a flour of a specific composition and possessing definite characteristics. Any housewife who is experienced in the art of bread making does realize that unless flour possesses certain characteristics it is impossible to make good bread.

Essential industry is divided into three classes, and these classes are

In their respective values: First, feed; second, clothing; and third, housing of the human race. Flour has from time immemorial constituted a large part of human food, and flour milling is to be classified as Grade A, class No. 1.

Wheat has figured largely in human food as far back as we have any record. The first introduction of the children of Israel to Egypt was owing to the shortage of corn in their own land, and the necessity of going into Egypt to procure corn to feed themselves and their families. Whether the corn mentioned in the Holy Writ is the corn we know of or not I cannot say, but since the grave spoilers of the Pharaohs have reported having found wheat within the tombs recently opened, I think we are justified in supposing that wheat and wheat flour had constituted that part of food even as it does in our day. But whether it was corn as we know or wheat as we know it, in order to make it fit for human consumption, had to be ground or milled.

The development of flour milling from the time wheat was ground by a hammer; ground between stones, and later by a burr mill up to the present roller system is a long step, and we who are undertaking to establish a Flour Mill in Newfoundland, have the benefit of experience of similar industries for years past, and in all parts of the world. In establishing this industry here, we are undertaking nothing new or experimental. The only difference in Flour Milling in Newfoundland and a Flour Mill in Canada or the United States, or for that matter in China, is geographical location. The same conditions which make success or failure elsewhere are to be found here, and, in many particulars the possibility of success is much greater in this country.

Some people think that we cannot bring the raw material into this country; manufacture it into flour, and sell it in competition with the imported finished article. The fact that we can do this is borne out by the movement of many of the large mills which have been operating in the city of Minneapolis in the wheat belt of the Northwestern States. They have already secured and are putting plants in the city of Buffalo—long distances from the grain fields but in the heart of the market. A tendency today in not only the Milling Industry but many others, is to freight the raw material rather than the finished product. Flour Milling is not a haphazard undertaking—given a modern plant with suitable raw materials, the difficulty of producing a No. 1 flour is very small.

What are the essential factors for the success of any industry? Industry today is a product of science, and as such it must be considered. It is the practical application of scientifically determined facts that makes industry possible, and successful industry is merely the assembling of certain facts and data in their proper relation to each other. These facts are all determinable through investigation and analysis. Broadly speaking these facts are connected somewhat as follows:

Plant, Raw Materials, Cost of Manufacture, Product, Marketability, Management and Organization. These are the points we were confronted with and had to satisfactorily answer before capital could be induced to lend itself to our undertaking. For the most part they have not been hard to answer. The question of plant was easily answered by a comparison with mills producing a competitive article. We know the cost of a similar plant in Canada and United States; we know its capacity, and by a special study we know the same regarding the plant that we will erect here.

The question of raw material is one that is equally easy to answer. Wheat has a better freedom of market than perhaps any other raw product. We can buy our raw material for the same price as our competitors; we know what it will cost to remove that wheat from the head of the Lakes to Montreal. We know what it will cost to put that grain through the elevator at Montreal, and we know what it will cost to transfer it from Montreal to St. John's. We also know what it will cost us per bushel to discharge at this point, so that up to the time of putting the raw material through our machines, we know our cost will compare most favourably with those who will be competing with us.

Manufacturing cost is principally a question of power and labor. We know what our competitors have to pay for power; we know or what we can produce power and we believe it is not going to be a difficult matter to purchase our requirements or power from the present operating Power Company. Labor cost, we would add, bears upon our competitors. It will not be any greater here, so there is no reason why we cannot manufacture just as cheaply in St. John's, and for what we know we can manufacture more cheaper here than in Canada or the United States.

Then there is the question of product. Given modern equipment with No. 1 raw material, we can manufacture equally as good flour in Newfoundland as can be made in any other part of the world. With regard to the last two points, those of Manufacture and Management, these are really the essential features in the success of any industry. From Government statistics, we know the market possibilities in Newfoundland. For the past ten years the flour imports have averaged 408,000 barrels each year, sometimes going as high as 512,000 barrels. Our plant will be capable of producing 300,000 barrels a year, so that we are not overbuilding for the market.

Some of our Canadian Milling friends have endeavored to point out that the people of Newfoundland demand only a "Patent" flour. What do they mean by a "Patent" flour? It is an American term which came into being 1870—at that time the Middlings Purifier was perfected which permitted of the separation of the finer fibres made and the flour dust from the outer granular middlings, effecting a cleaner and purer flour. This Middlings Purifier was patented and many of the Millers at that time were changing from the old system to the new, were proud to advertise that they made a "Patent" flour, and since then the word "Patent" has become the Trade name of many of the Milling companies until today it has also become a fixture.

In analyzing the Wheat berry, we find it is composed of an outer coating of bran, an inner starchy substance and the germ. In the grinding of wheat into flour, it is necessary to separate the bran coating without pulverizing it as should it become pulverized, dark specks will appear in the flour, and the housewife is not very apt to think that instead of having a very necessary constituent of any food in the flour that these specks are mites. It is also necessary to remove the germ as if this part of the berry was left in the flour it would become rancid.

Separating the berry and the germ, we have known what is a straight flour; by a part separation and purifying we remove a low grade leaving the choice part of the wheat berry which is commonly known as Patent flour.

With the establishment of these mills in Newfoundland we will not be dependant upon the local market entirely. We have connections to-day through which we will be able to sell every surplus barrel of our products, in fact I was assured just before leaving New York recently that we would have no difficulty in finding a market for every barrel of flour our plant will be capable of turning out.

With regard to the management of which is perhaps the keystone of the success of the industry, I am going to say very little, except that the men financially interested are prepared to give me the opportunity of making good. The organization that we will have will be associated with people of the largest buying and distributing organizations operating in United States and Canada. With these points taken care of, we feel confident that in beginning this industry, we have every assurance of ultimate success.

Our friends the Canadian Millers have been careful to point out also that we would not be able to find a market here for all our products. At the present time that is correct. The feed importations of Newfoundland now average something like 4000 tons a year, and the cost of same to the consumers in this country makes it impossible for very many to make use of feeds which are necessary in the production of beef, pork and mutton, much of which at the present time in my mind is being unnecessarily imported. Feed to-day is costing the people of Newfoundland nearly $50.00 per ton and we propose to sell feed at the mill at one cent per pound plus cost of containers and to my mind this will at least double the present consumption, and will go a long way towards stimulating the production of meat for which at the present time our money is being sent out of the country.

In conclusion let me say a few words as to what the establishment of this mill will mean to Newfoundland. From a financial point of view we are sending out at the present time an average of more than three million dollars per year for flour. With the establishment of this Mill, we will send out approximately one million and a half dollars for wheat this will make a difference in our trade balance and will go a long way towards the reduction of interest and ultimately reduction of our debt. We will save to the country all the money that at the present time is being sent out to pay flour and labor, not only in the manufacture of flour but in the manufacture of containers since which the flour is shipped to this country. We will also save for the country all the money that is now spent for the material to go into these containers.

The cheap feeds will be a tremendous boost to agriculture and while I admit the fishery is the basic industry of Newfoundland and will always remain so, there is no reason why the population of this country cannot be increased to nearly a million by

"My Back Aches"

It is not much wonder that the mother in the home has backaches and headaches when you think of the multiplicity of work and worries she has from morning until night and from week to week.

But pains and aches come from poisons in the system and if the kidneys and liver were doing their duty as filters of the blood the poisoning would not remain there.

This is why it is usual to blame the kidneys and the liver for backache, headache, rheumatism etc.

The way to get rid of such pains and aches, then, is by arousing the action of the kidneys and liver and this is most promptly and most certainly done by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

By using this popular medicine you can usually obtain relief in a few hours. You will realize then the advisability of using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills once or twice a week so as to keep these vital organs active and ensure that the poisonous waste matter is promptly removed from the system.

In most homes this medicine is kept constantly on hand for use in case of emergency. Not a bad idea, is it?

You will notice that while the price of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills has been increased to 35 cents, the box now contains 35 pills instead of 25 as formerly.

Likewise Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is 60 cents a box of 60 pills, instead of 50 cents a box for 50 pills. Edmondson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

The introduction of modern methods of Agriculture, stock raising and other Industries that grow out of these things.

To the present flour distributors we will have a benefit rather than otherwise. We intend to erect a flour warehouse capable of housing 20,000 barrels of flour. We will also have on hand a large stock, enough to meet any demands. The situation at the present time is that the importers to-day must of necessity tie up considerable capital in flour stocks, whereas with the co-operation of the flour milling plant, they will simply need to send their orders to us with instructions to ship and we will do the rest.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is about all should be said at this time, but I feel confident that with the establishment of this industry it will prove a very great boon to the people of Newfoundland generally, and I expect it to be of profit to me personally.

St. John's Mother No Longer Fears Whooping Cough

Use of Vaporizing Ointment, Vicks Vapor-Rub, Proves very Effective for All Cold Troubles

Mrs. David England of No. 20 Field St. is another mother who has learned that it is no longer necessary to "dose" the children with internal medicine in treating colds.

As she says: "I have used Vicks on my children for whooping cough and colds with excellent results and I must say that it is the best thing I have ever had for a household remedy. I would not be without it in the home."

"When Vicks is rubbed over the throat and chest for croup, deep chest colds, bronchitis or whooping cough, its volatile ingredients—Menthol, Camphor, Eucalyptus, Thyme, etc.—are released as vapors by the heat of the body and inhaled directly into the affected air passages.

At the same time Vicks is absorbed and stimulates the skin like a liniment, taking out tightness and soreness and thus helps the vapors inhaled to break up the congestion.

It is a stubborn cold that can withstand this direct, double action of Vicks.

Liner Strikes a Whale

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 15 (G.P.)—A story of a 20,000-ton whaler at a wharve was told when the liner Scythia arrived here on a recent trip. It was reported: "On the evening of the day we left Boston a lookout reported 'We have hit a small log of wood.' Examination failed to reveal any damage. At day break, however, a dead whale, 35 ft. long, was found firmly wedged across the stem about 6 ft. below the surface. There is little doubt it had been there all night, and was the lookout's 'log of wood.' The whale had been careless, and was kept in position by the weight of the ship pushing against it. To clear the obstruction we went astern. This freed the whale, which sank immediately."

King vs. Leonard Gillespie Reid—Before a Special Jury.

(Yesterday Afternoon)

The trial of Leonard Gillespie Reid on a charge of manslaughter which began on Monday morning before Mr. Justice Kent concluded about 7 o'clock last evening when the jury after two hours deliberation brought in a verdict of guilty. Sentence of imprisonment for one year was imposed.

Mr. Hunt, for the Crown, began his summing up at 2.45 by thanking the jury for the attention they had given the case during the four and a half days of the trial. He pointed out that they were bound by their oath to give their verdict according to the evidence. He reminded them that in consideration of the case that they owed a duty to the public which should be carried out to the best of their ability. The onus of proof was on the Crown and the case had to be proved so that 12 ordinary men could conclude beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was guilty. The Crown claimed that Reid was guilty of reckless driving, and where death arose over this speeding, then the case was manslaughter. On the evidence of speed, there has been differences, but had the 31 Crown witnesses agreed to the fraction of an inch there would be grounds for suspicion of collusion. As evidence of speed they had John McGrath, who said it was going at 40 miles per hour; Doody said it came 300 yards in 20 seconds, and was going fast; Parsons who also saw the car said it was going at 40 miles per hour; Hall said it was going twice as fast as Pedigrew's car, that was going at 18 miles per hour; Chambers felt a terrific rush of wind and Grouchy also felt a rush as the car went by; Sleator and Mellor said the car was going at a safe speed and they agreed that a safe speed was 30 miles per hour. This, without various expert evidences, he claimed, was sufficient to show speed. Counsel claimed that the jury a clear idea of what happened. There is no question as to the sobriety of the party at Donovan's, no evidence had been produced to show that any of these had been under any influence of intoxicants. There was evidence that the occupants of the motor car had taken some drinks at the house in Topsail. As to the evidence that the various distances given it would be remarkable if all the witnesses agreed on this point, or as to the correct time of the various happenings, but the jury had to form their own opinions as to these things and also as to the speed that the car was going, but their opinions must be based only on the evidence brought forward in the case. The estimates of speed would have to be taken with great caution; they were made hurriedly and in a short space of time, and it is very difficult to judge speed under these circumstances. The brakes of the car are used to control it, and for cases of emergency, and it is the duty of the owner of the car to see that the brakes are in proper condition. In this connection the evidence of the witnesses was also reviewed. The accused had told what had happened immediately preceding the accident; how, after seeing the lights of the bus, he paid his attention to what was happening around the bus, and that he saw some men near the bonnet. There were powerful lights on the car and surely the accused could have seen the three men on the road before he did so if he was keeping a proper look out. It was, however, for the jury to decide whether the accused exercised the proper precaution in this respect. There had been some evidence in the quantity of liquor consumed by the accused, but the jury had to consider this as much as the effect this liquor had on the accused and as to whether it had any connection with what happened. The Judge then went on to read other parts of the evidence that had been referred to in addresses of Counsel. Taking the whole case in mind, it is the duty of every person who drives on a road to exercise proper care and if a man who drives in a careless manner and through his culpable neglect causes the death of a man, even though there was no intention of doing so, it is the duty of the jury to return a verdict of manslaughter; but if they were not satisfied that this was so, that the Crown had not proved its case, then the accused was entitled to acquittal. It is their duty to consider every part of the case and they must give due care and weight to every phase of the case. Judge Kent believed the accused had made a frank statement as to what he believed had happened, and the same was true in the case of every other witness. The question of this lights, and that Lovett had said he heard the sound of the engine when it was close on them, is conclusive proof that there was tremendous speed. Mr. Hunt asked the jury to consider carefully every bit of evidence and they were convinced that there was evidence beyond the shadow of a reasonable doubt, of reckless driving, then they must have the courage of their convictions and disregarding the consequences that must follow, must bring in a verdict according to this evidence. Mr. Hunt's address occupied one and a half hours.

At 4.15 Judge Kent began his charge to the jury. The length of time spent on the case, although very long has been well spent. The Crown Counsel has brought every bit of evidence possible and have conducted the case in a manner which Crown Counsel would be expected to do. The Counsel for the defence have also done their duty with their usual vigor, in justice to their client. This is an important case as far as the public is concerned, and it is one of greatest importance to the accused. Manslaughter is a crime that covers much ground, but this case deals with only one kind, manslaughter by negligence. The duty of every person who goes about anything that is attended by risk is to take reasonable care. Every person who goes on the street owes to every other person the duty of taking care, but the duty is to discern whether there is criminal or culpable liability; not every action is attended by criminal liability. If a person neglects a duty and causes the death of another man even without intent of killing, the person is guilty of manslaughter, provided that the accused was found guilty of culpable negligence. The charge against the accused must be proved beyond the shadow of a reasonable doubt, and by this is meant anything that would influence a reasonable man. Judge Kent then went on to read some parts of the evidence. They had listened attentively to the stories told by the Crown witnesses and their own view of the scene of the accident, and the evidence of Reid himself should give the jury a clear idea of what happened. There is no question as to the sobriety of the party at Donovan's, no evidence had been produced to show that any of these had been under any influence of intoxicants. There was evidence that the occupants of the motor car had taken some drinks at the house in Topsail. As to the evidence that the various distances given it would be remarkable if all the witnesses agreed on this point, or as to the correct time of the various happenings, but the jury had to form their own opinions as to these things and also as to the speed that the car was going, but their opinions must be based only on the evidence brought forward in the case. extent of the injury was not a material factor, it would be the same if one man was killed as if a dozen had lost their lives. The thing to be decided was, if Leonard Reid was guilty of culpable neglect in the management of his car on that night; if that was not proved the accused was not guilty, but if it was proved there should be returned a verdict of guilty, even if there was no intention of causing loss of life. Judge Kent instructed the jury to retire and if there was any part of the evidence, they were not clear on, they should return to Court and have it read for them. The jury retired at 5.05.

At 7.05 the jury returned into Court and through their foreman, J. Armstrong, announced the verdict of "Guilty." Asked if he had anything to say why the sentence of the court should not be passed upon him, Howley, K.C., Counsel for the prisoner, replied, in part:—Your Lordship, on behalf of the prisoner I bow to the verdict of the jury, but ask Your Lordship in considering the question of sentence of the Court to take into consideration, as I feel sure you will, the circumstances of the case which has been the subject of enquiry the past week. It is very seldom in the annals of our Courts that a finding of "guilty" is made against an accused where there is an absence of criminal intention in the sense in which it is generally understood. As a rule we look for the punishment of a guilty man, a man who has broken the law in some form or other, deliberately and intending to break it. As a rule the ingredient we call a guilty mind must be present in more or less active form before we here deal with sentence and guilt. In this case, guilt, as found by the jury, is found more through an omission of care, more through an inferential guilty mind; against the criminal law. There is a more, though, if I may so express it, code of a Court of Justice which judges a negative guilty mind. We have had cases in our Court of Justice, a code where it times; cases involving offenses sometimes finds "not guilty." But in this case the jury finds "guilty"—and I have no fault to find with them as they have done their duty as they see it—but in this case we have a reversal, where the jury finds guilty and the other does not according to its own standard. The accused is but a boy and in addition there are other conditions in his life which makes it extremely hard that a sentence of a Court of Law should be passed on what the Court calls a criminal offence from what really arises from a boyish want of sense. Others, besides himself, must suffer, and I ask Your Lordship, in deciding the sentence of the Court to give him, as I feel Your Lordship will, not alone your personal sympathy, which I feel has already been given, but in your judicial capacity to give him all the allowance which your position permits.

Mr. Justice Kent—Prisoner at the Bar: You have been found guilty. It is true the killing resulted in the charge against you was not intentional and was the result of carelessness; but carelessness in charge of a car and driving at excessive speed. I have considered seriously all these elements and that the result was unintentional, but the safety of the public must be assured. The sentence of the Court is that the prisoner be imprisoned in His Majesty's Penitentiary for one year from this date.

The verdict was then confirmed and the jury dismissed, after which the Court closed.

ANIMALS I HAVEN'T KILLED.

One hears a great deal said from time to time about the automobile driver's reckless disregard for human life. And, of course, that type driver does exist and is a menace to the road.

What auto driver could not write some kind of an essay about wild and domestic animals that I haven't killed.

Why Does A Hen, Etc.

Of course the worst of all offenders against the autolist's peace of mind is the hen. That first riddle of our childhood: "Why does a hen cross the road?" had two answers. "Because she wants to get to the other side," and "because she can't go around." A third answer can now be added, "because she sees an automobile coming."

If wish some student of psychology would make his life work to examine into a hen's mental processes (if they exist) and find out if hens can be motivated by a desire to commit suicide. Can it be that harem jealousies are behind some of these mad dashes into the path of the would-be elusive auto?

I suppose the dog is next to the hen the most eager for martyrdom.

TRIUMPHS OF INVENTION.

When a Father Adam made a spade of good old honest oak, and started in to dig the glade, his wife, admiring, spoke: "Invention can no farther go, all records fall behind; it is a luxury to know a man with such a mind. Methinks we'd always have to dig the garden with our hands, to raise the fodder for the pig, and beans for home demands; and it was such a grievous job, a task so punk and drear, at every dig I shed a sob, and heaved a briny tear. You saw me pawing in the muck, you sighed and said, "By jing, this way of raising garden truck is not the proper thing." And so you turned your mighty brain to tools that might be made; your mental throes were not in vain, and now we have a spade." And for a time the spade was thought a triumph high and wright, and grew the stalk and vine. And Adam thought his bulging brow was not designed in vain until he gazed upon a plow turned out by Tubal Cain. The plow was better than the spade, which fact no man could doubt; and Adam saw his laurels fade, his glory petered out. And people smiled as he went by, a sad and brooding gent, and said, "There goes the loosed guy who thought he could invent." So guard your laurels while

Will Government Give Refund to Canadians

ON THE GERMAN DEBTS!

Much indignation was caused among Canadian importers and others who owed money to Germans at the outbreak of war when the Secretary of State Department, Ottawa, demanded these accounts should be paid in full rate of exchange; that is, 4,1901 marks to the dollar, instead of the rate that prevailed after the war when payment was made. Mr. Justice Andette in the Exchequer Court of Canada has just decided in the case of Greenhalghs, Ltd., Montreal, that they are not required to pay at the par, but at 33-66 on the dollar—the rate prevailing when the money was tendered.

This decision is regarded as final, and the question now arises: Will the department refund all excess amounts collected from Canadians?

World's Oldest Statute

The world's most ancient statute is to be found outside, not inside, the British Museum.

It is said that it took two hundred men from the crew of H.M.S. Topaz, and three hundred natives, to drag the statue from its original site, although it weighs only four tons. It is the work of a race of huge builders and was one of many similar colossal statues, some of them weighing as much as a hundred tons, scattered over Easter Island, in the Pacific.

These hideous images were originally supplied with hats, in some cases weighing another five or six tons, which were red because they were made of tufa or volcanic rock. All the hats have fallen off now and are found lying around the huge statues as though there had been a high wind.

Jelly-Fish at Anchor

The manner in which a jelly-fish produces its "children" is really wonderful.

In most cases the beginning is an egg, which, lying on the bottom, produces a beautiful tree-like growth. The "tree" fastens itself to the bottom and brings forth buds which, when ripe, drop off and develop into jelly-fish. The latter in turn lay eggs and the process is repeated.

Most of the very large species have a different way of reproducing themselves. The egg is set free in the water and develops into a pear-shaped larva, which for a while swims about rapidly, being provided with hair-like appendages that serve the purpose of ears. Then the larva settles down, anchors itself to the bottom, increases in size rapidly, and finally splits up into thin, flat discs which swim off and grow up into large jelly-fish.

Beefsteak is delicious when parboiled, spread with butter sauce, seasoned with mustard, cooked a little longer, and garnished with chopped, pickled walnuts.

Supreme Court

REX VS. J. T. MEANEY.

Jury Unable to Agree on a Verdict. The court met again at 2.30 p.m. yesterday, when His Lordship the Chief Justice continued his charge to the jury. Having read over the evidence of various witnesses, he pointed out that all calculations and figures were based on the records and books of the Department. A discrepancy of about $178,899.00 was found therefrom. It was not an accurate figure, but the point that a huge shortage was in evidence was the question to take the attention of the jury as to the cause, or the agent who caused that shortage. The case of the crown was that goods entrusted to the accused had not been accounted for, and it was the jury's duty to find if there was a guilty intent in the disposition of these goods and moneys. First they were received by the Controller and it was the duty of the jury to ascertain what had become of the liquor or the money it realized. (His Lordship here read the evidence of Mr. Grant regarding orders from the Controller for liquor.) He then directed the jury to consider if the accused as a servant of the Government, was responsible for the money and goods of the department. Did he apply any goods or money of the department to his own use. If he had done so the accused was guilty of larceny, but if he had done so before either the goods or money had come into the possession of the rightful owners, then he was guilty of embezzlement. The judge then bid the jury to retire and consider these points.

At 2.50 p.m. the jury left the court and returned again at 4.50 p.m. Having answered to their names, and being asked by His Lordship if they had come to a verdict they announced through their foreman, Mr. Wm. Bowman, that they had reached no agreement.

Asked by the Chief Justice if they could possibly come to an agreement, the foreman replied that if Section 4 of the charge were better explained to the jury, they might possibly reach an agreement.

Questioned further by His Lordship the foreman said that they required to be further enlightened as to the section of the evidence regarding the special orders for liquor passed over the bar, and the disposal of the money thus received.

His Lordship then read over again the evidence of Mr. Grant, foreman of the Controller's Department, who handled these orders. The money taken was given direct to the accused and no record of it was kept. Reading the evidence of Mr. Donnelly, His Lordship emphasised the testimony referring to these special orders the money for which had been deposited as "special deposits" in the Exchequer Account. His Lordship pointed out that there was no audit regarding these special deposits, nor could it be ascertained as to how much these special deposits amounted to.

The jury requested to know how much these special deposits amounted to.

Mr. Knight deposed that there was no evidence taken during the trial to show this.

Mr. Winter admitted this, but said the amount could be ascertained from the bank.

As the evidence taken in court during the trial could not further enlighten the jury, they retired again for further discussion.

Shortly after six o'clock they returned and on being asked, their foreman Wm. Bowman, told the court that they could not agree.

His Lordship then discharged the jury. Bail was renewed for the prisoner to the extent of $40,000. The accused for $20,000, and Messrs M. Martin and J. J. St. John for $10,000 each.

The accused was liberated to appear again when called upon.

Fur Farms

OTTAWA, Nov. 16 (Can. Press)—Fur farms in operation in Canada in 1923 totalled 1,240, comprising 1,179 fox farms and 61 farms raising fur-bearing animals other than foxes, according to a report on fur farms of Canada issued recently by the Dominion Bureau of statistics.

Although the fox has proved most suited to domestication, other kinds of fur-bearing animals are being raised in captivity—mink, raccoon, skunk, marten, fisher, beaver and muskrat. Karakul sheep, from which are obtained the furs known as "Persian Lamb," "Astrachan" and "Broad-tail" are being raised successfully in Canada as are also Chinchilla rabbits. In 1923 the number of miscellaneous fur-bearing animal farms was 61, compared with 49 the previous year. These are farms raising other than foxes.

The total value of fur farms in 1923 was $8,424,964, an increase of $634,860 over 1922. The total number of all fur-bearing animals on the farms at December 31, 1923, was 40,125, an increase over 1922 of 9,343. Silver foxes increased from 22,318 in 1922 to 25,186 in 1923. The total value of all fur-bearing animals on the farms was $6,325,668. The value of the silver foxes on the farms was $6,119,651, an average value per fox of $243.

Record is made by the Bureau for the first time of farms for the raising of Chinchilla rabbits and of coyotes or prairie wolves. Increases in number of fur farms are shown by all of the provinces except Saskatchewan, but the largest proportional increases are in Ontario and Alberta, where the numbers of fur farms have almost doubled.

Seasons Criminals Like

Different Months Have Different Crimes. The jewel theft season is over and the criminal who makes a speciality of this form of robbery is now either taking his ease at some South Coast watering place, or possibly having a holiday in Dartmoor. At any rate, he will not get busy again until the middle of next spring.

As any policeman can tell you, each season has its own particular crime. Summer is the jewel thief's best time, because the lengthening evenings take people out of their houses, and so give facilities for robbery.

The Fur Stealer's Opportunity. Now that the days are shorter and the weather colder the fur stealer finds his opportunity. The first thing a woman does at this time of year is to get out her furs and put them on, and the insurance companies have been driven to advise their clients to be most careful not to wear furs loosely about their shoulders, but to make sure that they are securely fastened. The snatcher works like lightning and the fur is gone before its owner can turn round.

With November the burglary season comes in. The long dark nights of winter are the opportunity of the cracksman who, if he has to bore a wall or open a safe, requires several uninterrupted hours for the task. Burglary reaches its highest pitch in December, dies away in January, and, oddly enough, almost ceases in February. Why this should be so is difficult to understand, for February is still very much a winter month.

Shop-lifting is another winter crime and reaches its zenith during the season of Christmas shopping. The pickpocket, on the other hand, is busiest in summer, when race meetings offer an easy field for his operations.

Lancashire Aroused to the Need for Protection

LONDON—The Manchester Guardian warned Liberals against voting for Conservative candidates on the ground that if the Conservatives were returned with a majority they would unquestionably bring in some form of protection, which the party still believes in, despite the fact that the country pronounced against protection at the last election.

The tremendous Conservative vote in the Lancashire district would seem to indicate that the cotton interests at last realize the dangers of Franco-German and other continental alliances, and the advantages of Imperial preference, hence their vote for the Conservative candidates.

Your Tell-Tale Boots

"Tilt-Bits" Medical Correspondent on Footwear and Health.

Whilst opinions differ on the possibility of reading character from the hand, it is incontrovertible that our feet—no matter how much we seek to disguise their shortcomings in shoes—betray our weaknesses very plainly to the eye of the expert.

It is quite possible to point out foot defects and weaknesses which are clearly indicated by abnormal wear on the shoes. The prevalence of such foot defects is mainly due to badly fitting and badly shaped shoes; to the weakening of the foot muscles and consequent strain on the foot caused by such occupations as involve incessant walking or standing, as in the case of waiters, waitresses, barmaids, postmen, policemen, messenger boys, and the like.

Is Your Walk Unnatural?

A turning ankle will give the shape of the shoe a twist. A bunion will strain, stretch, and distort the toe. In every city, men, women and children are to be seen with crooked heels, widened and protruding bunions on joints, and turned and worn-down heels. These shoe conditions are the result of foot defects. If you have a soft or painful spot on your foot, it is natural to twist this in walking.

Many defects in the shoes can be traced to the fact that the wearers have neglected to keep their leg muscles in good condition. They may have neglected to give them the exercise they require, or, on the other hand, they may be over-fatigued.

Very often the customers of boot-shops complain of the poor wearing quality of the footwear sold to them, emphasizing the inferiority of the material as revealed by the shoes not keeping their shape, and attributing the stretching and giving way of certain seams and stitching, to bad workmanship. But in many cases the complaints can be traced very directly to defects and weaknesses of the customer's feet.

By examining closely each point of pressure, the tread of the wearer, and by taking the shoe off and examining the inner sole, a great deal can be learned about the feet. A ready means of identification of various foot troubles is presented by the inner sole. It often indicates a weakened arch, the end of which is flat foot. If depressions are found in the inner sole at the ends of the third, fourth and little toes, you can look for a weakened arch.

If depressions are found in the centre of the inner sole across the ball of the foot, you may expect to find weakness in one or other of the five long, thin, arch-forming bones, whose heads have become depressed and slightly displaced. This deformity may also be revealed by the wearing through of the outer sole at the same place.

Sufferers from bunions and enlargements of the toe joints, which may be due to weak arch or flat foot, are therefore apt to wear their shoes to the outside to avoid pressure.

Those who have weak ankles and flat feet often wear away the inner border of the heels, owing to the overbalancing of their weight on the inner border of the arch. When there is acute pain, amounting to neuralgia, in the arch of the foot, extending to the forward part of it, due to weakness of the transverse arch at the ball of the foot, sufferers are apt to spread the uppers of the shoe over the outside edge of the sole owing to the fastening out of the ball of the foot.

Among women a common cause of the bulging of slippers and low shoes at the sides is weakness of the arch of the foot with resulting flatness. Anyone who has been afflicted with bunions leaves a mark on his or her old worn-out shoes, as easily identified by the expert in "shoe-reading" as the finger-print of a noted criminal by the C.I.D. specialist.

Rod and Gun

THE DECEMBER ISSUE.

Brimful of interest to every sportsman is the December issue of Rod and Gun in Canada. Two especially good stories appear in the first section. I've Wandered in the Village, Tom, by George R. Belton, will touch a chord of sympathy in everyone who has returned to the home town after years of absence. The Yellow Mink is a thrilling mystery story by Phil H. Moore's best style. Bonnycastle Dale upholds his reputation as a writer of very interesting wild animal and wild bird stories in The Canada Grouse. Queer Ducks by J. W. Winslow, the last of his series of duck stories, is decidedly one of the best. It contains information on the subject of these wild fowl not often available. F. V. Williams and Martin Hunter, other regular contributors, have stories that are worthy successors of their previous ones. Besides other interesting and instructive articles, the regular departments are all up to the mark. Guns and Ammunition comprises a number of extremely interesting articles on a variety of subjects. In addition to these features, the winners in the $500 Photo Contest, which has aroused such universal interest, are announced in this issue.

Dancing According to Regulations

Winnipeg, Nov. (Can. Press).—Sentimental couples may well reserve their embraces for places other than dance hall floors. Furthermore, keeping moving is an important part of the proceedings. These two deductions are drawn from a regulation which has been recently sent out to proprietors of city dance halls by the license department, which deals in very specific regulations, and outlines in close detail exactly the kind of motions dancing couples may engage in, the extent to which they are allowed to stand still and where their hands must be placed. The man's hand must be placed at the middle of his partner's waist and her left arm must not encircle his neck. The regulation was sent as a form letter written by F. Kerr, city license inspector, as a result of complaints that rhands must be placed. The in certain city dance halls. The adherence to the code of action set out he contends, will keep all dancing up to a high standard of morality.

New Jersey's

Woman Representative A "Wet." New York, Nov. (Can. Press).—Mrs. Mary Norton, elected to the House from Jersey City was the first of her sex to be so honored east of the Mississippi. Interviewed after her election she said: "They call me a wet, and I certainly am in favor of some modification of the Volstead Act, although I would not advocate a return of the saloon. Something on the order of the Quebec system would be my plan; that is, selling light wines and beers freely and strong liquor under government control. I have worked among the poor and suffering all my life."

BUD'S LAMENTATION.

I wish I'd lived in seventy-six
When freedom needed men of might
And there were few to dare and do,
And bravely battle for the right;
I could have crossed the Delaware
With Washington and all his men,
Or stood with George at Valley Forge,
If only I'd been living then!

I might have been a famous man
If I had lived in sixty-three,
I could have led a charge ahead
And called my men to follow me,
I might have cheered Abe Lincoln up
When he was troubled and forlorn
And helped a lot, but I could not,
Because I wasn't even born!

I read my history day by day
And think about those warriors bold
Who fought and bled where blood ran red
Throughout those glorious days of old,
I might have been a hero, too,
A general's cap upon my brow,
But I can't see a chance for me,
There is no work for heroes now!

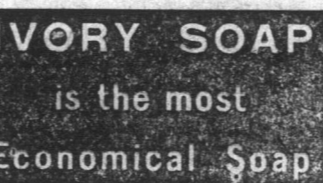

There's nothing left for me to do,
Old Glory safely flies in air,
There is no foe to overthrow,
No call for heroes anywhere;
I have to add, subtract, divide,
Learn capitals of every state,
And how to spell and scribble well,
And all because I came too late!

A Population Problem

Remarkable Growth of Native Families in South Africa.

South Africa is faced with a population problem of considerable difficulty. Some remarkable figures regarding the native population are contained in the recently published census statistics of the Union for 1921. In the 1911 census the greatest number of wives possessed by one black man was 46, but this time a Northern Transvaal native had 51, while two in the Zoutpansberg district had 79 and 110 respectively. The biggest establishment was that of a native with 79 wives, 134 sons and 50 daughters, his nearest rival having 51 sons and 42 daughters by 55 of his wives. It is interesting to note that none of these 55 wives had more than three children. The total number of native husbands is given as 718,292, and of wives as 854,560. The figures regarding the spread of Christianity and the decrease in illiteracy also have their interest. Increases in the numbers of those professing the Christian faith were shown by all the non-European races, the proportions to the total of each race rising in the case of the Bantu from 262 to 342, and in that of Asiatics and other non-Europeans combined from 679 to 715 per 1,000. Ninety per cent of the Bantu are still illiterate, but while in 1904 5.4 per cent of the males could read and write and a further 1.2 per cent could read in 1921 the number able to read and write had almost doubled. In 1921 the illiterate males formed 87.9 per cent of the male population, compared with 91.6 in 1911, and 93.2 in 1904.

Touching Wood

Many people, after they have boasted of their good luck, proceed to "touch wood." So did our remote ancestors, the tree worshippers.

An authority on such matters wrote: "The remarkable similarity in customs all over Europe points to the conclusion that tree-worship was an important element in the early religion of mankind, especially of the Aryans, and the singular uniformity of rites and ceremonies which can easily be shown to exist in widely separated countries warrants us in believing that the practices continued down to a very recent period—some even among ourselves—were substantially identical with the rites and ceremonies observed by Egyptians, Etruscans, Greeks, and Romans." The primitive belief was that spirits resided in trees. Without this basic idea being entirely lost, there came the period of the Sacred Groves and the Druids' Oaks, and then the dedication of certain sorts of trees to the earliest and simplest form of superstition.

We touch wood to call the attention of the tree spirit to the fact that we recognize his influence in the good luck of which we boast, and in order that he may not feel slighted and change our good fortune into bad; at least, that is why our ancestors touched wood.

Concerning Stockings

MENDING HINTS.
When mending a stocking that is much worn it is a good idea to take a piece of georgette or net of the same colour as the stocking and darn over this. The georgette will not show and will lengthen the life of the stocking. The life of children's stockings can be prolonged if, before they are worn, they are covered with close darning at the toes, heels and knees.
