MONDAY EVENING, JUNE 2, 1873
Death of Lieutenant-Governor Howe.

The Hon. Joseph Howe, Lieut.-Governor of Nova Scotia, has passed away. The announcement has come with startling suddenness. The probability of such an event had not occurred to us, although we were aware that he has been suffering for some time from a disease supposed to be liver complaint, yet it was thought that the change from the active duties of a Department to the less onerous dignity of a Lieut.-Governorship, would prolong his life for some years. This was the opinion of his physician, and the apparent rest and enjoyment which his new position allowed him, encouraged the hopes of his friends that such would be the case. Even to the last his wife and son were unprepared for the final dissolution. He was conscious till the close of his mortal career, which ended on Sunday morning at half-past four o'clock. The announcement of his death caused profound feeling throughout his native Province, as it will throughout the whole Dominion. He was born in 1804, so that he was 69 years of age. From early life he has been connected with the politics of Nova Scotia. He was a journalist by profession, and has been editor of the Acadian, Nova Scotian and Morning Chronicle, respectively. He was ever a strong advocate of Liberalism, and for many years a leader of the party in Nova Scotia. Among the measures in a large degree due to him, we may mention the concession to Nova Scotia of responsible government and municipal institutions, as well as the recognition of the Liberty of the Provincial press. He represented the Counties of Halifax, Cumberland and Hants, respectively, in the Local House, and the latter in the Dominion Parliament since Confederation. His opposition to the union of Nova Scotia with Canada, is still fresh in the minds of all our readers, and with his usual energy, he went to extremes in his resistance to that measure. In fact he went so far as to pay a personal visit to England, to use his influence towards undoing the legislation which united the Maritime Provinces and the old Province of Canada into a Dominion. In 1869 he startled the political world by not only renouncing his anti confederation principles, but accepting office as the colleague of men upon whom he had, almost up to the last moment, been heaping the bitterest and most violent invective. His example was followed by others who were his political associates and thereby the Liberal party of Nova Scotia received such a blow that it has not yet fully recovered. In this course of action it can be no means said that Mr. Howe distinguished himself favorably. Some of his subsequent actions are open to severe criticism, prominent among which we may mention his utterances and personal deportment during his visit to Manitoba and his recent lecture before the Y. M. C. A. at Ottawa. But charity bids us hope that his early actions will shed a halo of glory around his name which will fade from view the errors which marked the closing scenes of his career. We would fair attribute them to an unguarded out-spokenness and eccentricity of character, which became more apparent as he advanced in years.

He was ever loyal to his native Province and her gain was ever uppermost in his mind, a fact which his fellow-countrymen on several occasions acknowledged by delegating to his care important public affairs. He visited Canada in connection with the Inter-Colonial Railway scheme, uniform postal rates and the protection of the fisheries, in 1871, and in 1874 was a member of the Detroit International Commercial Convention, on which occasion he delivered a speech distinguished for its eloquence, depth and loyalty to the mother country. His appointment to the Governorship of his native Province was gazetted on the 10th ult., and it was a promotion at which all men rejoiced. Whatever may have been his political views, antagonisms and errors, it was felt that his former services to Nova Scotia deserved a fitting recognition, which nothing short of the highest position would satisfy. He will be remembered by friend and foe as a man of genial character and large-heartedness, at all times kind and respectful.

 and a Tremendous Rush at our Mantle and Millinery Rooms.

On all hands we hear of dull trade: "Nothing doing," says Tom, Dick, and Harry, but it is not so at THE LION. Times better than ever. Still great bustle and activity at the leading house. The spring trade is opening beautifully, thus encouraging us to greater endeavors in the public good; and the reason of our success is apparent. Our Goods are all direct from the manufactory, and none can do a successful business only those who buy from first hands, for which our Establishment has long been noted, and has raised the standard of our House (combined with the energy of the proprietors of the firm) to the present proud position, and more especially for the last two years, so that our daily sales are almost equal to the combined trade of the same character in the Town of Guelph.

SMILE WHENEVER YOU CAN. When things don't go to suit you And the world seems upside down, Don't waste your time in fretting, But drive away that frown; Since life is oft perplexing, 'Tis much the wisest plan To bear all trials bravely, And smile whenever you can. Why should you dread to-morrow, And thus despoil to-day? For when you trouble your care, You always have to pay. It is a good old maxim, Which often should be preached— Don't cross the bridge before you, Until the bridge is reached. You might be spared much sighing, If you would keep in mind, The thought that good and evil Are always here combined. There must be something wanting, And though you roll in wealth, You may miss from your pocket That precious jewel—health. And though you're strong and sturdy, You may have an empty purse; (And earth has many trials, Which I consider worse!) But whether joy or sorrow Fill up your mortal span, 'Twill make your pathway brighter To smile whenever you can.

ANNABEL OR THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XXII. AGONISING REALISATIONS—STRIVINGS FOR LIBERTY.

We feel it impossible adequately to describe Annabel's state of mind or the suffering she endured when the realisation of her position came upon her, which it did slowly but inevitably. That was the most merciful thing about it, but it was due to Nature's beneficence, not to Dick Matlock's intention. Had the full effect of his revelations come as he made them the poor girl would have been crushed utterly and at once into shrieking despair—perchance into madness; but, as we have already indicated, the immediate result was to stun and paralyse her sensations, thus rendering her for the time incapable of acute pain. But this could not last always—nay, it could not continue long. By degrees, and one after another, the dread features of her situation manifested themselves, and the pang of woe pierced deep into her heart. The prospect was truly appalling. To be imprisoned there for ever, in the power of two such beings as Dick and Moll; never again to walk abroad to enjoy the free air of heaven, to behold the beautiful forms of nature, to see a smiling face, or hear the voice of sympathy; to be cut off from all joy and hope—she so young, so full of love, and capable of all the highest enjoyments which life can furnish—oh, it was terrible, terrible. But deeper still was her anguish when she thought of Philip receiving tidings of her death, and mourning for her as lost. Picturing, as she could so vividly do, his unutterable grief, his hopeless misery, she wailed and moaned for him even more than for herself, and, in the bitterness of her despair, imprecated the curse of heaven on the head of Mrs. Langton, the author and instigator of the diabolical plot of which they two were the victims.

Sometimes will, frantic thoughts of making her escape filled her soul, and she would go from room to room in that upper story where she was confined trying to discover some means of release. But such explorations only showed how futile was the hope. Besides being at a great height from the ground, the windows were small, and the walls in which they were set was so thick that she could obtain but a glimpse of the wood or distant moor, as solitary and desolate. From one window alone could she obtain anything like a view of the flat far-reaching heath, and for a whole day together she would sit gazing wistfully forth on the brown expanse, in hope of seeing some living being to whom she could make a signal of distress. But not once were eyes cheered or her hopes raised by beholding one human being, so unfrequented was the region, and so remote from resort.

Frequently, too, would she make passionate appeals to Dick, striving by tears and entreaties to move him to pity. Alas! the night as well have applied the stone walls to open for her exit. He only gloated with undisguised triumph over her misery, and answered her with brutal words which only aggravated her suffering. Once she made such an appeal to Moll; but only once, for she was met by a threat of such personal degradation should she dare to repeat the request that she resolved rather to die than to ask her again.

Finally the idea took possession of her that if she made an appeal to Mrs. Langton herself the latter would be moved to pity and relenting. If she could only write to her she could solemnly swear that if released she would give up all claim to the estate, and never trouble her more, never once come into her presence, or utter one complaint to mortal of the treatment she had received. Nay, she would go away to another country, where her existence would be for ever unknown to all—all but Philip, who would gladly follow her—and where, content in each other's love, they would live beyond the ken of all former acquaintances.

She made herself believe that a letter couched in these terms would be successful, and solicited Dick for pen, ink, and paper that she might write it. The latter laughed outright at the suggestion, and told her, with that blunt directness of speech to which he always treated her, that she was a fool for imagining anything so preposterous. Annabel was in no state of mind, however, to see the folly, and could not be convinced that such a course would be fruitless, but pleaded day after day for writing materials with such pertinacity, that Dick at length actually one afternoon brought her pen and ink, a sheet of writing paper, and an envelope, that she might pen the letter which she had conceived would be so effectual.

Such a procedure on Dick's part would have seemed suspicious to Annabel had she been able calmly to consider it; but she was too wildly overjoyed to doubt his intentions, and offered her extravagant thanks for an act which was but a part of the savage cruelty in which he indulged—his fixed intention being, of course, while promising to put the letter in the nearest post-office, to carry it no farther than the kitchen fire, and deposit it there. Then when no answer came, it would be an additional agony to Annabel to know that her appeal had failed.

The afternoon following when Dick brought the writing materials, and she begged for an additional candle that she might write the letter that very evening. This request Dick also granted, and two hours later he came up with it himself to enjoy the satisfaction of seeing her at her abortive work.

From Calais to Calcutta by Rail.

The ambitious designs attributed to Russia in connection with its present operations against Khiva have had the effect of drawing unusual attention to the Indian possession of England, and affairs connected therewith. It is not now supposed that the Czar has any immediate designs against India, but rather that the possession of Persia is aimed at so that Russia may have an outlet on the Persian Gulf, and by the circumvention of Turkey obtain another on the Mediterranean Sea, and thus encircle the whole of the East, from the confines of Hungary and the Adriatic Sea to the borders of Afghanistan, within its powerful and inexorable grasp. A glance at the map will show how specious is this conjecture. Suppose this scheme were carried out, it would make the Bear a power on the Red Sea and in the East, and completely shut England out from access to her Eastern possessions by the Overland Route, and force her to accept the only alternative, the old and tedious route round the Cape of Good Hope. In this way Russia's aggression upon India would be very greatly facilitated while at the same time she would obtain control of the great national highways of commerce between Europe and Asia, and enrich herself with the tolls therefrom. Thus a twofold advantage would be gained—an almost incalculable increase of power and prestige, and a proportionate increase of wealth.

The leading minds of England and India seem to be fully aware of the importance of checking these ambitious designs of Russia, and with that object in view it is now proposed to bring these Eastern countries threatened by Russia, into closer relations and thus strengthen the mutual interest. It is conceived that the most effectual means of securing this end will be to construct a railway from Peshawar, the terminus of the railway system in the north-west of British India, to Herat, an important and strongly fortified city in the west of Afghanistan near the Persian frontier, and thence through Persia and Asia Minor to Constantinople, where it will connect with the Great European Railways via Adrianople, Belgrade, Pesh, Vienna, Frankfurt, Cologne, and so on to Calais, forming a great overland railroad 6,400 miles long, whereby the time between London and Calcutta—532 hours by the fastest route at present (via Marseilles, the Suez canal, the Red Sea and Bombay R.R.)—will be reduced to 214 hours. The length of the proposed line from Peshawar to the Golden Horn would be about 2,500 miles and would cost about £30,000,000 stg. or $150,000,000. This vast sum of money would doubtless be forthcoming as soon as the project was shown to be practicable. Reimbursement could scarcely fail to be, as it would attract almost all the local traffic along the route besides an immense amount of through traffic, and become the channel where, by the rich treasures of the east would be transported to Europe in return for the manufactures and productions of the latter. As to its practicability there can scarcely be two opinions. It is not so long as the Union Central and Northern Pacific Railways which cross this Continent, and it is about the length of the proposed Canada Pacific line. The route is not more difficult than the latter, while it would have the advantage of being able to secure a larger and cheaper supply of labor in its construction.

There is every reason to suppose that the rulers of the countries through which this road would pass would be friendly to its construction and willing to give it a helping hand, as it is so much in their interest. Turkey has already inaugurated a railway system in Asia Minor, and Persia is partly traversed by the iron horse.

A casual observer will at once see that such a line of Railway would present a powerful barrier to Russian aggression. It would have this tendency for two reasons—first, because of the impetus which it would give to the development of the countries through which it passes, it would soon have alongside it a numerous and industrious population ready at any time to resist aggression, and secondly, it would enable England and her allies to transport their troops to any point where designs hostile to their interests were manifested.

We published a telegram lately announcing that M. de Lesseps, of Suez Canal fame, had proposed to the Russian Government a scheme of which it was said the Czar approved, for a railway across Central Asia, starting from Tashkent, on the Amur River, where it would connect with the existing European lines of Railway, to Samarcandah, 1,500 miles, and thence to Peshawar 531. This would make it 2,550 miles in length, or about 200 miles less than the proposed English line between Peshawar and Constantinople, but the through route from Calais to Calcutta by the Russian line would be 7,500 miles or almost 1,000 miles longer than the other. The construction of either or both of these lines would soon work a wonderful change in the manners and customs of Central Asia, by bringing them in contact with the civilization of Western Europe.

MANUFACTURE OF COCOA.—We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Blype & Co., manufacturers of diabetic articles, at their works in the Easton Road, London. See article in Cassell's Household Guide. 326mdw

Iron in the Blood

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Ferruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protozoid of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as it is easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating, and enriching the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damage, and neutralizing all morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of its wonderful success in the remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhoea, Boils, Nervous Affections, Gills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its enervating effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new vitality into the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women, and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass. Pamphlets Free.
