NOTICE.

The following Table is published under the resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the 8th May, 1856, adopting the recommendation of the Committee to whom my report had been referred. It is that adverted to in the Notice prefixed to the Index to the Statutes in force in Upper Canada, as necessary to exhibit clearly the result of the revision which the order to prepare that work had obliged me to undertake, and to afford directly that information as to what Acts and parts of Acts are or are not in force, which can only be gathered indirectly from the Index. The Table and the Index supplement and check each other, the former affording fuller information as regards the Statutes and parts of Statutes not in force, and the latter as regards those in force. Any Act referred to in the Index or Supplement can be found at once in the Tables in its place according to date and chapter; and if fuller information as to the provisions of any Act in the Table be required, it will be found under the same Title in the Index, where a brief note of the subject of each section in force is entered.

The Object of the Table is not to shew what any Act under consideration itself provides, for this appears on the face of the Act which is supposed to be before the reader, but how its provisions are affected by later Acts which are not before him. This could, however, be done only so far as their action upon it is direct and susceptible of being briefly stated, for it would be impossible in any moderate space, even if time permitted, to trace the indirect effect of every Act upon every other; there are probably, for instance, few Statutes connected with the practice of the law which are not in some way or other incidentally affected or modified by the new Common Law Procedure Act.

If the information now given could have preceded or accompanied the Index, I should have felt more at liberty as to the form of the latter, and could perhaps have improved it for some purposes by dividing the Acts more and entering their provisions under a greater number of special titles. There is, however, considerable advantage in referring to the whole of an Act under one title, in an Index not attached to the volume containing such Act; and the important object of enabling every one to test for himself and easily, whether the Index is or is not correct in treating any Act or part of an Act as in force or not in force, will be at least equally well attained by the form and order of publication actually adopted.

The Table comes down to the present time, including the Acts of 1856, and their effect on former Acts: and as the changes made by these Acts in the Index are important, a brief continuation of that work to the same period is added, including not only the additions and corrections consequent on the said Acts, but the Errata in the original work, and some references from one part of it to another which appeared desirable. The Acts of 1856 are referred to by their chapters only, except—the Common Law Procedure Act, which is so long and so important, that the subjects of the several divisions adopted in the Act itself, have been separately indexed,—and the County Courts Act, the several sections of which are entered.

In preparing the Table the same distinction has been made between Public Acts and those of a Local or Private nature, as in the Index. As regards the former, every section found to be directly repealed or affected, has been mentioned: as regards the latter, the Acts amending them are referred to without entering into further details. An Act, the special purpose of which is confined to Lower Canada, is omitted in the Index, and merely referred to in the Tables by the words "Lower Canada" opposite the number of its chapter.

A later Act upon the same subject as a former one is considered as amending it, although it may merely make additional provisions upon the subject without actually repealing any thing in the prior Act: and it has been deemed convenient under the first Act upon any subject, to refer to all the Acts relating specially to the same subject.

Acts repealed by permanent Acts which have themselves been afterwards repealed, are treated as not revived by such repeal, although the usual form of words for preventing doubts as to the revival may have been omitted, unless there is something to shew the intention of the Legislature that the repealed Act should revive.

As regards Acts supposed to be "EFFETE" because nothing more remains to be done under them, the remarks in the Notice prefixed to the Index are applicable; the word merely expresses an opinion that such is in all probability the case.

When no part of an Act is deemed to be in force, this opinion is expressed and the reason assigned; but for greater facility of reference, the subject (or some part of it) of an Act supposed to be wholly or partly in force, is printed in Capitals, and the Chapter in Roman Numerals. The date of the Royal Assent is given after the subject, except where it is the same as that of the next preceding chapter or chapters, in which case it is not repeated.

It would now be an easy task to collect together and reprint the enactments in force upon any subject, if this were thought advisable in view of the complete work in progress in the hands of the Revising Commissioners. Their labours and future legislation must soon impair the utility of my work, but it will, I hope, always remain useful as shewing how the Statute Law stood in 1856, as the Revised Statutes will do, as a memorial of what it was in 1841.
