FATHER GENDREAU INJURED

Was Priest Referred to in Yesterdays Despatches as Being Injured by Runaway Fire Team in Seattle—Muscles of His Heart Badly Effected.

Special to the Daily Nugget. Seattle, March 18.—In Saturday's combination accident the passenger in the hack who was badly injured by a runaway fire department team crashing into it, proves to be the Very Rev. Father Gendreau, new bishop of the Yukon, now on his way to Edmonton for church conference. The muscles of the heart are injured and his nervous system is badly shocked.

(Yesterday the Nugget received and published the following telegram from Seattle: "A fire hose wagon and street car came in collision on Columbia street hill, Seattle, Saturday night, when three firemen were badly injured. The horses breaking away from the apparatus then plunged into a hack, the driver and a Catholic priest who was a passenger, being badly hurt."—At that time no thought was had that the priest referred to was our own well-known and popular Father Gendreau. Today's telegram, however, conveys the news that will cause much sadness when read in Dawson this evening.)

A POKER NATION BUDGET SPEECH

Naturally Addicted to Making Bluffs

Is the Way German Papers Speak of the United States of America.

Special to the Daily Nugget. Berlin, March 18.—The German press is vigorously discussing the possible practical results of Prince Henry's visit. The agrarians maintain that Germany has done quite enough for America, and now it is America's turn to do something for Germany. The Tagliche Rumschau comments that while America is "a poker nation which bluffs naturally," Prince Henry bluffed his late friends and hosts in a most remarkable way in the role of what United States papers are pleased to call "a democratic prince." The Rheinische of West Phalische avers that Germany is making herself ridiculous by pursuing "a picnic policy no one can take seriously."

Special to the Daily Nugget. London, March 18.—The budget speech was delivered in the commons yesterday. The estimated surplus for this year is five million eight hundred thousand pounds. There will be no tariff changes this session as the occasion is inopportune and the tariff policy of the government is stability. Fielding was hopeful that the treaty with France would be broadened and some arrangement made with Germany. Machinery for beet sugar industries and structural iron for the same will be admitted free for another year. Borden, Conservative leader, criticised the alleged extravagance of the administration and the opposition amendment favors preferential tariff within the Empire.

out for provisions, tools, etc., $1,100 for a boiler, $900 for wages, and $60 for securing title papers, one-fifth of each of which amounts plaintiff claims to have paid for the account of defendant, the whole aggregating $2,364, for which judgment is claimed, together with interest at 24 per cent. per annum from August 10, 1901.

Defendant on his part admits part of the allegations contained in plaintiff's statement of claim, but insists that it was agreed that plaintiff should wait until the cleanup of 1902 for the return of the various sums advanced by her. He also by way of counter claims sets up that he has expended for lumber, implements, feed and freighting the sum of $1016, which he alleges plaintiff agreed to accept in settlement of his share of the purchase price of the claim paid by her. He also alleges that he has been put off the claim and has been damaged in the loss of time and labor to the extent of $2,000.

A number of lays have been let on the claim and good sized dumps are now out ready to be sticed up as soon as the water runs. Jones intimates that the suit is an attempt being made to freeze him out of his interest.

WITH SONG AND MIRTH

Was St. Patrick's Day Celebrated

Entertainment in A. B. Hall Nets a Handsome Sum for Father Judge Memorial Fund.

The celebration of St. Patrick's day in the A. B. hall yesterday evening was another of those successful events for which Dawson is so justly becoming famous. The hall was very prettily decorated, the green of old Ireland largely predominating. To the right of the stage reclining against the proscenium was a large crayon portrait of Father Judge, an excellent likeness from the talented Max Kohn. Judge Macaulay presided at the entertainment, the members of the committee also occupying seats on the stage.

The opening address by the chairman was followed by an oration by Mr. Dougald Donaghy, whose eloquence upon the public platform first became known during the late political campaign. Dan Gleason sang several songs which were uproariously received. Mr. J. S. Cowan gave "Mr. Dooley on the Chinese Question." Miss Jewell sang. Frank Johnston entertained the audience with his inimitable dialect stories and John Mulligan and Miss Krieg favored with an Irish sketch. Mr. Jas. J. Thornton gave a reading. Corporal Cobb was heard in several well rendered songs and Mr. R. P. Wilson was much appreciated in a Kipling selection. Ray Southard was applauded to the echo in his song "St. Patrick's Day is a bad one for the Coon."

Mr. C. S. W. Barwell, Harry Sedley and Max Landreville were each down for a number but were compelled to send regrets, being detained elsewhere. The house was comfortably filled and a handsome sum will be added to the Father Judge memorial fund.

VALUABLE PROPERTY

On King Street Has Changed Hands

Example of How Big Money Has Been Made in Dawson Real Estate.

An example of the big money that has been made from real estate investments in Dawson, is brought to notice today by the sale of the property known as the Portland block, which is located at the corner of King street and Second avenue, for the sum of $15,000. In April, 1899, the lot on which the building stands was purchased by J. R. Gandolfo for the sum of $3,200, a cash payment of $1,600 being made. That was the total sum invested by Mr. Gandolfo as he immediately leased the ground for a term of two years and made his subsequent payments from the ground rent.

E. J. McCormick, who leased the ground, erected the building which now stands on the property and opened the Portland cafe. McCormick made a splendid thing out of the venture and when his lease expired renewed it for another year by placing a new story on the building. During the time since the original purchase was made Gandolfo has received upwards of $13,000 in rent, making a total of $28,000 that he has realized on an investment of $1,600. The purchasers are Messrs. Bossuyt and Carey, who, all agree, made a bargain in getting the property at the price of $15,000;—and thereby hangs a story which is being told on Gandolfo with much relish by those who know.

It seems that the genial "Gan" made over the property to his wife a few months ago, just for the purpose of proving how generous and devoted a husband he is. Gandolfo is one of the few men in Dawson who can afford to make his wife a $15,000 present and as events show he was not only able to but did so.

Now Mrs. Gandolfo has a business head of her own. While the property presents a goodly appearance and yields a handsome monthly revenue, she bethought herself of the possibility that a fire might come along some day and send the Portland block up in smoke. And besides, $15,000 in good hard cash is a nice tidy little sum and Mrs. Gandolfo preferred the cash to the building. Hence the negotiations for the sale.

The lord and master of the Gandolfo household knew nothing of what was being done until the deal was practically made and then, to quote a line from the Mikado, "he naturally objected." Fifteen thousand dollars was no money at all for the property—it was worth half again as much, and so on. But Mrs. Gandolfo merely smiled and requested her lawyer to prepare the deeds.

"Gan" says, "It's hard luck when a man's wife won't take his advice, and just think the profit on that $1,600 investment has only amounted to about $25,000—but then, of course when a woman makes up her mind there's no changing it, and after all it was not such a bad deal when everything is considered."

In a lame rejoinder the Minister of the Interior refused to be drawn into the discussion, but he committed himself to the somewhat unexpected statement that he was "prepared, in accordance with Prussian tradition, to take the odium of a royal decision which was not agreeable to himself," and that he would "leave the press to draw its own conclusions" of his conduct.

cent. of the total suicides in England and 30 per cent. of those in Scotland are furnished by women. The proportion is much lower in France, where it is 21 per cent., and still lower in Austria and Switzerland, where women account for 17.9 and 14 per cent. respectively.

This is generally attributed to alcoholic excess. At any rate, out of every 100 cases of drunkenness brought before magistrates in those countries, no fewer than thirty are those of women.—Ex. "Dresden China Beauty"

Once she was called the "Dresden China Beauty of Washington Square" in old New York. But fate has shuffled the cards since then.

At the death-bed of her distinguished father-in-law she assumes the title of her husband, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, Earl of Dufferin and Ava, Viscount and Baron Clandeboye of Clandeboye, County Down, in the United Kingdom; Baron Dufferin and Clandeboye in the Kingdom of Ireland.

The "Dresden China Beauty" has changed her love title for one of the greatest in all England.

When she was but a wee scrap of a girl, playing about the north side of Washington square, she had the yellowest of yellow hair and bluest of blue eyes and the pinkest of pink cheeks.

This was an uncommon heritage, even among the aristocratic scions who belonged on the north side of the Arch. People used to stop and ask whose lovely little girl she was.

To one after another her proud nurse explained that she was Flora Davis, daughter of Mr. John H. Davis of No. 24 Washington Square North.

Meanwhile admirers of the child's dainty, fairylike beauty endowed her with another name. They labeled her the "Dresden China Beauty," and the label fitted her so well that it clung fast until she herself discarded it to become the Lady Terence Blackwood.

But that was not until her horizon had widened far, far beyond the confines of Washington Square North. She still had her yellow gold hair, her blue eyes and her very pink cheeks. She still suggested the dainty, delicate beauty of the Dresden china artists, but her face gradually became less and less familiar in America. New children romped and ran along the aristocratic pavement, while she was being labeled with many new and pretty labels, deliciously fitting and foreign.

Before she was ready to make her debut in New York society the "Dresden China Beauty" was taken over to Paris to be taught the ways and manners of the Faubourgs. Although she was but a schoolgirl, supposed to be hidden behind tomes of irregular verbs, somehow she came to be known as "the most beautiful 'Americaine'."

Her mother, who was Mr. Davis' second wife, was herself a renowned beauty of Cleveland. She tried to keep her daughter as secluded as possible, but beauty, like murder, will out. Mrs. Davis had her hands full with her beautiful Flora, who was quickly celebrated as the only daughter and heiress of the rich Wall street banker.

Through all this adulation the young girl seemed to retain the great charm of her unconsciousness. She was looking forward to the season when she should make her debut when her first real grief assailed her. Her mother died suddenly while they were still abroad.

With her father Miss Flora, as she was then, apparently heart whole and fancy free, returned to America and to Washington Square North.

The "Dresden Beauty" had assumed her old title. All New York was apprised of her coming, and a couple of years later the only daughter of the Wall street banker was introduced to the most exclusive set in America at a great ball at Sherry's. It was given under the auspices of Mrs. Paran Stevens, Mrs. I. Townsend Burden and Mrs. Jules de Neufville.

On that night Miss Flora Davis added fame to her beauty. She was of an unusual type. A man once trying to describe her said he had seen her lay a rose leaf upon her cheek, and he would defy detection as to where the velvety softness of one began and the other ended.

When the new beauty was most beautiful, and not quite out of her teens she went abroad again, with her father. This time she was absorbed in music. She sang at many great houses exquisitely. Ambrose Thomas praised her, her teachers gave her plenty of work and she buried her blonde head persistently behind old opera scores, but they were as powerless as French grammars to hide her charms.

It happened to be the season of 1891. The great Lord Dufferin, great administrator and great diplomat, was the British Ambassador in Paris. In his household was his second son, Lord Terence Blackwood.

Paris is big and its houses are many, but even as though the match had been decreed in heaven, Lord Terence Blackwood and John Davis' only daughter met and loved.

For some months the match hung fire. He was the second son and most portionless. With her tremendous beauty a more brilliant alliance had been predicted. It was rumored that among the most ardent of her suitors was Paul Deschanel, the famous young French politician, who has since become president of the Chamber of Deputies and husband of the niece of the late Antonio Terry.

"The Dresden China Beauty" returned to America with her father, leaving the bestowal of her hand in doubt.

While her world was still asking which would win, Mr. Davis, the banker, with scarcely any announcement and no conventional fuss, was married to a daughter of the late Augustus Whiting. Immediately after the ceremony the new Mrs. Davis with her happy husband and beautiful stepdaughter returned to Paris.

There at the American Church, brilliantly surrounded by men and women of high degree, the "Dresden China Beauty" bravely faced love in a cottage and accepted the hand of Lord Terence Blackwood, second son of the distinguished Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, universally regarded as the ablest of British diplomats.

All Lord Dufferin's sons were educated to work, in spite of the advantages which an eminent father usually bestows. The second son was in diplomatic service when he married John Davis' daughter. He has remained in service ever since, first in the English Embassy at Paris, then as secretary at St. Petersburg and later in the legation at Stockholm.

Meanwhile Lady Terence Blackwood's father saw to it that the cottage in these various places was of splendid and imposing proportions.

Lord Dufferin's second son was living with his wife and two dear little baby girls in Stockholm, earning a career for himself, when suddenly a Boer bullet created him heir to one of the greatest of English titles. His elder brother, the Earl of Ava, a bachelor thirty-six years old, had been killed at Ladysmith while he was carrying messages from one commander to another under fire.

Instantly the second son became a personage, heir to all the titles of his father, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. His brother was the Earl of Ava, and, according to a good old English custom, Lord Terence Blackwood at his death selected another of his father's titles and became known as the Viscount Clandeboye, the name of the house and estate in Ireland.

The Viscountess Clandeboye, once the "Dresden Beauty of Washington Square," becomes on the death of the Marquis of Dufferin a peeress of the realm. The able Marquis was in his seventy-fourth year and already enfeebled by the anxieties and cares of half a century in the service of the crown when he fell sick last month.

In deference to his wishes, his son and heir was recalled from Stockholm and given an agreeable position at the Foreign Office, so that he and his beautiful American wife might henceforth reside in London.

Love in a Stockholm cottage was transferred to 75 Cadogan square, a luxurious home provided by the Viscountess' banker father.

There the beauty of the American Viscountess acquired new fame. Her house, with its great white staircase and tremendous blue hall, was described by every paragrapher in London. The peculiar tint of the pink curtains in her drawing room, shading into deeper pink at the walls, seemed to shed a new and more fascinating light upon her golden hair. Her locks and her skin became as famous as in the old days when her nurse used to trot her about on the north side of Washington Square.

While his daughter was advancing her titles and her fame Mr. Davis remained on in the old house. He had become for the third time a widower and for the fourth time a husband. His last wife, who was once Mary Ethel Jackson, died a year ago, leaving him a son, who may be seen any clear day riding over the very pavements where once his stepister used to hear herself called the "Dresden China Beauty."

Now that the Viscount Clandeboye will succeed to the title of Marquis, there is much speculation as to how far he will go in diplomatic art. His distinguished father began life as Baron Dufferin, a poor, unknown, Irish peer. He climbed up from one office to another, till he became in turn Viceroy of India, governor-general of Canada and ambassador to Paris.

He retired from public life full of honors, crowned with every distinction that could be conferred upon him for brilliant services, yet comparatively poor on account of his lamentable connection with the Whitaker Wright concern, which is now in liquidation.

But the American Marchioness of Ava has plenty of money at her command to keep up the title as it should be kept up. Her position as peeress of the realm will be as high as that occupied by Lady Curzon of India.

Irrespective of any honors that her husband may win for himself, she will be one of the leaders of the official and social world in the British empire.

The little "Dresden China Beauty" ranks next to the highest among the English nobility, and those who have seen her lately declare that she wears her title as proudly as ever she did the nickname bestowed upon her in her childhood days, when she was just plain Flora Davis of No. 24 Washington square, north.—Examiner.

Value of Perfumes.

Among the many wise beliefs of the ancients was one that the secret of flowers and herbs was conducive to health and the prolongation of life.

Odorous herbs, notably vervain, ward off the evil eye. The Mosaic ritual is full of hyssop, nard and frankincense. Greece set cinnamon gates to its elysium, and surrounded it with a scented river a hundred cubits broad, which souls swam through and thereby purged themselves of earthly grossness.

Pliny records eighty-five remedies derived from odorous rue, forty-one whose base was mint, thirty-two from balsam from roses, twenty-one from lilies, bulb and bloom, and seventeen medicaments strong in the virtue of violets. Thus it appears that the violet cure for cancer is among the very new things that surface science scorned because they were so very old.

Pure violet essence is said to be especially suitable to nervous people. But it must be obtained from the flowers themselves, not from the chemical imitations. Chemically derived perfumes are irritant, poisonous even, to persons of especially sensitive constitution.

True flower scents are obtained in three ways: First, by spreading fresh blossoms upon glass thickly smeared with pure grease, letting them stand in the sun, and as they wilt, replacing them until the grease is as fragrant as the flowers; second by repeatedly infusing fresh petals in oil, and third, by infusing them in ether, which is then distilled to a dry solid.

As this solid sells for $250 an ounce it is easy to understand why the other process, though far and away the best, is not commonly used. But the scented grease and the essence made by steeping in pure spirit are never cheap. After all the scent possible has been extracted from the grease it is still fragrant enough to make the very finest perfumed soap.

All the citrene scents, bergamot, neroli, orange-flower water, are refreshing, and in a degree stimulating, if properly prepared. To make a lasting perfume some animal base is essential—musk, civit or ambergris.

If the base is too strong it makes the flower-scent curiously irritant. People who feel themselves faint in a crowded room are often the victims of several scents simultaneously attacking their nerves. A single odor, no matter how strong, after a while deadens the olfactory nerves, whereas a combination keeps them active.

His Wife's Red Hair.

Paris, Feb. 22.—Pauline Astor is the heroine of the young swaggar set in Paris because of her daring in a unique costume at a masked ball given by G. W. Lopp. Fashionable youths and beauties vied with each other in the originality of their costumes. The Baroness Lefevre appeared as the Imperial Eagle. Miss Dupeyster was an Egyptian princess. Miss Astor eclipsed all as a flower girl in a pretty and simple dress. Leon y Castillo, the son of the Spanish ambassador, and the Baronesses St. Vincent and De Choiseul are assiduous in their attentions to Miss Astor.

Jack Gouraud of New York, the husband of Amy Crocker, is the most conspicuous American youth in Paris. He bought twenty horses, and intends to race a mail coach to Versailles and other suburbs against time for heavy wagers. His wife's red hair and superb toilettes are the sensation of society.

Reason Why Birds Fly

A subject of world-wide interest is found in air navigation. Birds are past masters in the art, while we as yet have scarcely begun to learn anything about it. Birds inhabit the atmosphere in untold multitudes. Such species as the condor and frigate bird may be said to live in the air. The frigate will not touch a rigid support often for a month at a time, stealing his food from fish-hawks and floating in great circles to the height of a mile or more while it is being digested. The condor carries its twenty pounds, with an additional ten pounds of freshly gorged carrion, to an altitude of three miles, and serenely waits for an empty stomach to return to earth.

If a thirty-pound condor can circle around for six days, three miles high in the air, why cannot a man? Is there something wrong? Science is as dumb as the Sphinx when confronted by a soaring bird, and common sense is baffled. The bird carries no engine with it. It does not move the flappers it has after it gets well going. Its moving parts seem to be of use only to get it off some unknown dead center. Once going it is a genius of the lamp, violating all known mechanical laws, persistently doing work in holding up a heavy body and overcoming atmospheric resistance at the rate of fifty feet per second without discoverable expenditure of energy.

A condor will alight on a carcass after being six days in the air—and go to work as if it had enjoyed a long rest. To say that there is always wind where the birds are is no help. Why cannot a man float in wind as well as a bird? Any wind, or no wind at all, is all one to the bird. Does the weight of the man act differently from that of a bird, that he comes down so promptly?

What is a feather? It is an air engine and the bird surfaces are made of them. They have been looked upon as a light, flexible material for making an extended surface impervious to air, that would readily fold upon itself, and their exquisite mechanical structure has been overlooked. They consist of a quill and two vanes, made up of spicules, between which are the plates. The plates cross a channel, about one-fortieth of an inch wide, made by the spicules. These channels are open through the thickness of the feather. The plates are hinged to the epicules at one end only, the other terminating in hair-like serrated appendages which lock into each other, lapping over themselves in the center of the channel. There are about 1,000 of them to the inch, or practically innumerable, and they are located at the outer surface, filling about the one-fifty part of the depth of the channel. They are about one-twenty-thousandth inch thick, as nearly as an amateur with the microscope could determine, so that nineteen-twentieths of the space is open to the passage of air. Thin as they are, they are ponderous when examined edgewise with good specimens of the gold-beater's art. They are capable of rotating through about 25 degrees, and are beautifully curved at their outer edges.

The curved edges of the plates are to the rear in the extended wing. The mechanical service of the plates is obvious. The curve impinges against the air current through the feathers and drives the bird to the front. Pressure produced by the normal factor of weight is thus made to serve as the motive power of flight.

The lover of nature who is familiar with wilds unfrequented by man may witness activities seldom seen in populous places, and the struggle for life between a Wilson's hawk and yellow hammer on the Colorado mountains indicates the possession of some mechanical energy greater than can be produced by pressure action. A frigate bird of our southern coasts can move vertically upward for half a mile, at a velocity of 100 feet per second, with no visible wing motion whatever. There is a spiral configuration of the plates where they meet in the center of the channel, which, possible combined with the pressure action, may augment the forward thrust by introducing some molecular energy into the case. These very curious and novel exhibitions of motion still require explanation, and it may be found that the ordinary equilibrium pressure of the atmosphere, at fifteen pounds to the square inch may be upset by this fine plate work mechanism.

Sensitive to Perfumes.

"Young Kubelik, the violinist," said a well-known musician in Toronto the day after the wonderful gardener's son appeared in Massey Music Hall in the Queen City, "is extraordinarily sensitive to perfumes, and experiments of great scientific value in the determination of certain odors essential effects are often made on him. Perfumes intoxicate him like alcohol and create in him the most excessive emotion. The

The Bug Bible

The bug Bible was printed in 1549 by the authority of Edward VI., and its curiosity lies in the rendering of the fifth verse of the Ninety-first Psalm, which, as we know, runs: "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night nor for the arrow which flieth by day," but in the above version ran, "So that thou need not be afraid of any manner of insect."

Ludicrous as this sounds, it is etymologically without justification. "Bug" is derived from the Dutch word "bwg," which meant a hobnob or terrifying specter, a signification traceable in the word commonly in use today—"bugbear"—and Shakespeare once or twice uses the word in this primary sense, notably when he makes Hamlet say, "Such bugs and goblins in my life."—Ex.

Stroller's Column.

Dominion Creek, March 1.

Stroller.—The devil is "enwee"?

to do; but "enwee" blocks me. It seems to be accompanied by gaps and I have seen that cured in chickens by running a feather down their throats; but I dissent try that with Jennet.

Any information regarding the treatment of "enwee" will be thankfully received.

Yours, THOMAS

Now, Tom, you see where you put your foot in it by marrying a back number female instead of one of the younger generation, and you could have gotten one of the younger ones just as easily as you did Jennet.

Besides, you had no business to marry a set-in-her-way school teacher from whose heart the hey-day of youth had departed. No woman who has spent the best part of her life in imparting to the juvenile mind the knowledge that IT IS AN OX can ever warm up sufficiently to become enthusiastic over a roadhouse dance.

Jennet contracted ennu, or "enwee," as you prefer it, when she was teaching, and it will cling to can lasso and lead into the matrimonial corral a man of wealth, he will feel that he is not living wholly in vain.

As the lady does not give any particulars as to her race, color or previous condition of servitude, the Stroller has been forced to make requisition on his knowledge of one of the mysterious sciences, or black arts as people may be pleased to call it, in order that he might form some idea of the lady's appearance. And right here the Stroller will impart a secret that may be practiced without seriously impairing the health by giddy young girls and three-button-cutaway youths who have reached the age when they think it smart to live on Navy Plug.

Take a letter like the one above; don't pay any attention to the words written but read between the lines. Place the letter under your pillow and then just before you retire eat six pickled pigs' feet, half a mince pie and a pound of fruit cake. In the vision you will have three hours later, the writer of the letter under your pillow will come seventh in the procession that will pass before your eyes and hover over you. It will be just behind the devil and in front of the Treadgold octopus.

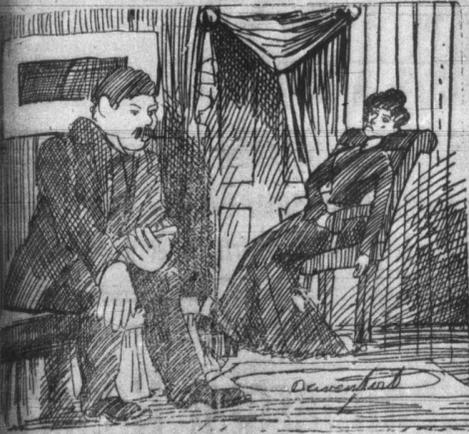

The Stroller followed the above receipt with the letter in question and what he saw looked very much like the cut accompanying this effusion.

The Stroller imparts the knowledge thus obtained for the benefit of the many wealthy men in the Klondike who are yearning to correspond with some loving girl whose heart is aching to pour out its goodness all over some wealthy man.

Gentlemen, it is now left with you to make the next move. The letter is bona fide, but there is a glaring possibility that the picture is not.

The city council has again met and adjourned without selecting a clerk, which act the Stroller deems an injustice to himself and the other 39 applicants for the position. Of course the delay does not amount to much with the Stroller as it will be all right when it comes; but for the other 39 who will be disappointed and who are being kept here at an expense when that expense might as well be paid at roadhouses on the way out, it is rather hard. It would be as little as the council could do to inform this expectant throng that the persimmon will eventually fall to the Stroller and that they may as well hike out up the river.

Owing to the number that will be going, excursion rates may likely be obtained at roadhouses and as you will doubtless woo slumber three or four in a bed or by relays, considerable of a saving should be effected on that score. Now here is a straight tip: None of the roadhouses have bars or are supposed to sell hooch; but they all have a few bottles on hand in case of rabies. Elect one of your members, an honest-faced fellow, if you have him in your crowd, a committee on liquid refreshments; let him call the landlord to one side and say something about the dried apple pie he ate at the previous roadhouse producing cramps; he will get a bottle; it won't be very good and he will pay well for it; but he will get it. Then when the cavalcade will have resumed its journey and passed up and were the "young people" of the neighborhood. Jennet was single and was very much of a back number. She had been in school for several years, and someone what the younger set called a prim old maid. I also felt that place and the result was that I just sort of drifted to her as a natural consequence. She has thrown me over eight years before but when she learned I had a claim on the Klondike the way she turned up to me was a surprise to the young lads, and, having had some years experience in Dawson roadhouse halls and on when I had been in town, the way I warned her to her surprised even Jennet.

her like a strawberry birthmark. The best thing you can do, Tom, is to borrow some money on your dump and ship Jennet outside, as you will never be happy here. After she is gone you can come to Dawson and have a few of those long, dreamy, collar-and-elbow waltzes and in a few months and long before you have spent the half of your spring clean-up, you will have forgotten that such a cloud as Jennet ever fitted across your firmament.

Ship her? By all means. It is better for you both and especially for you.

West Superior, Wis., Feb. 25, 1902.

Editor of Dawson City. I would like to have you send me one of your papers, and I would also like to have you put this ad in your paper.

Wanted to correspond with a gentleman of wealth, object matrimony. Miss A. L. Burnette, West Superior, Wisconsin.

Oakes Ave 1066.

The above letter came to the Dawson postmaster and later found its way into the hands of the Stroller, who makes haste to comply with the lady's request by inserting her advertisement where it will be read, as all men in quest of wives read the Stroller's Column. If the Stroller, in his humble way, can be the agent whereby one loving-hearted woman around the first bend in the river, let some one of your party with a clear, baritone voice sing

"Pass around the hooch and we'll all take a drink."

You will then halt and your official marker will take the bottle and a piece of chalk which he will carry for that purpose, and put as many marks on the bottle as there are men in your party. Any man who drinks below his mark will not be in on the next bottle, but if terms can be agreed upon one man can purchase or trade hooch for another's privilege at the bottle. The Stroller hopes that the unsus-

Successful candidates will not say harsh things of him on their way up the river. It is not his fault that his merit is to be recognized, and he has none but the most kindly feeling—a feeling of pity and commiseration for all who have entered the hopeless contest against him.

The Stroller knows a hooch miller at Skagway who has a plant at the head of Smugglers' Cove and to whom he will give the pilgrims a letter of introduction if they will call on him before starting. Do not hesitate to call, gentlemen, as you will not be able to detect from the Stroller's demeanor that he considers himself vastly superior to you.

To Be Bigger Man.

Berlin, March 5.—Relief is felt here that the flight of Prince Henry through the United States is now drawing to a close without any untoward incident, for, notwithstanding Emperor William's entire confidence as to the safety of Prince Henry, others in authority have had misgivings that some Polish fanatic in Chicago, wrought up over the conflicts and national feeling in Polish Prussia, might attempt something violent.

The prestige of Prince Henry has immensely increased in Germany by the impression he had made upon the Americans. His behavior in the United States is looked upon here as natural, dignified and happily adapted to the character of the Americans.

After his return home the Prince will probably be entrusted with a large share of public affairs, the impression being that Emperor William will find something else of first choice for him to do.

ANDREE'S SAD FATE

Aeronaut and Associates Met Foul Play

The Swedish Government Has Been Notified of the End of Her Daring Son,

Winnipeg, Man., March 6.—A report sent out from the Hudson Bay Company a short time ago that Andree, the Swedish aeronaut, and his associates had been killed by Eskimos, is confirmed by advices received at the head office of the company here.

Alston Churchill, in charge of the company's most northerly post on the west coast of Hudson Bay, has written that after about two years' search, the men sent out by him have returned with a report similar to the one first published. Traces of the daring balloonist and his associates were followed for hundreds of miles, but it was impossible to locate the tribe who caused the death.

The story of the searchers is that Arctic Eskimos saw "Oimik" (one of their largest boats) floating in the air. When it settled to the ground three white men strangely dressed came out with guns, which they indiscreetly fired. Andree and his associates were killed with musket bows and everything of value taken.

The searchers found knives, tobacco, and cartridges supposed to be long to Andree in possession of one of the most northern tribes, but could get no further information. News that Andree undoubtedly met his death at the hands of the Eskimos has been forwarded to the Swedish government.

Patience—I hear women refer to some women as stout and some as fat. Where do they draw the line?

MANY ICE TRAVELERS

Coming Into and Leaving Dawson

Coming From Upper River and Going to Koyukuk—Former in Majority.

At present there are many people both coming to and going from Dawson. The arrivals are almost entirely from the upper river and consist principally of Dawsonites who went to the outside last year. Arrivals are now coming in so thickly that it is impossible to keep track of them; fully one-half the number coming by private conveyances of which the regular stage lines have no knowledge. Within the past three days it is estimated that fully 25 have arrived on bicycles.

The travel from the city is mostly down the river, Koyukuk being the terminal. Nearly every morning last week witnessed the departure of a party for the Koyukuk and the same can be said for every morning of this week so far. Very few people will start for the lower river countries north of Fortymile or Chicken creek after the first week in April as by that time the trail will probably be too soft to venture on the long journey to the mouth of the Chandelar.

However, on emigration and immigration the former has the best of it, as more are coming to Dawson than are leaving.

"What," asked the dreamer, "would you do if you could be a king for a day?"

"Me?" answered the practical man. "I'd borrow enough money to live on for the rest of my life."

"You know," said the orang outang, "that man is descended from a monkey."

"Yes," answered the chimpanzee, "and his descent has been very great. But let us set it down to his credit that he tries to rise again. Every now and then you hear of some man who is doing his best to make a monkey of himself."
