SIR JAMES WHITNEY CONTINUES TO IMPROVE

300 DOG SHOW WINNERS DEMAND PRIZE MONEY

SIR JAMES IS NOW STRONGER IN EVERY WAY

Saturday Afternoon Bulletin Indicated That Steady Improvement Before Noted Has Not Been Interrupted.

HIS BROTHER SAID HE WOULD GET WELL

Mr. Whitney of Ottawa Has Throat Illness Clung to Opinion That Doctors Are Now Recognizing.

It is rather significant that Mr. E. P. Whitney of Ottawa, who receives regular and special reports on Sir James' condition, has said all along that his brother would get better.

"Sir James Whitney is resting quietly this afternoon." This bulletin, issued late Saturday afternoon, following upon the encouraging report of the morning, which was as follows: "Sir James Whitney is decidedly better. He is much less delirious, and took a good breakfast. (Signed) Dr. A. McPhedran, Dr. C. K. Clarke, Dr. B. A. Payne." It is the most optimistic word that has been handed out by the premier's physicians since the commencement of his trying illness.

That there is not only a possibility but a probability of Sir James' ultimate recovery is now acknowledged by his doctors, who have up till now refrained from making any rash forecasts as to the probable outcome of the illness.

"The stamina of our patient has been wonderful. His doggedness has alone been responsible for his present improved condition, and unless unforeseen elements arise, I think the premier is on a fair road to recovery," said Dr. C. K. Clarke.

His better in every particular—his nerves steadily, his heart action is stronger and he has recovered from his somewhat depressed mental attitude that was overcoming him."

Special accommodation for the visitors is being prepared by the city and the board of trade. Lieutenant J. Fontenay of Belleville, president of the associated boards of trade, will preside. F. C. Morley is the secretary-treasurer.

WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS MEET ANOTHER DEFEAT WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Woman suffragists met another defeat today when the house rules committee by a vote, four to four, failed to report a resolution for the appointment of a standing suffrage committee.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The long series of peculiar antics of Sir Hugh Graham and their far-reaching effects on all kinds and conditions of men have been the talk of Montreal for weeks. The talk not only increases but a decidedly new element has been introduced and that is the rush of many to get out of his way and avoid either exposure, danger or destruction.

He is credited with being at the bottom of the Nationalists and their onslaught on the naval aid bill; he is charged with buying into one or more of the French dailies in order to change its policy; of preaching naval defence in one language and against it in another; of making a fool of Sir Wilfrid and Mr. Borden at the one time; of being a big holder of Trams and more or less concerned in the effort to renew the street railway monopoly in Montreal and suburbs; of buying up The Herald and The Witness; of getting into mortal combat with Lorne McGibbon; of being the cause of W. J. Burns and his detectives and his dictographs being introduced among members of the city council, of

DISPUTE BETWEEN OFFICERS OF DOG CLUBS MAKES 300 WINNERS WAIT MONTHS FOR PRIZE MONEY

Cash Has Stayed in Bank Since Last April's Show—Toronto and Ontario Kennel Clubs, Brought Together by Much Mediation, Fell Out After Show.

Bow-Wow—G-r-r-r-r. Scene: The joint dog show. In the armories last spring and a hundred other places since then. Before a thousand interested spectators the combatants are battling for a juicy bone. Excitement reigned thru the whole dog-gone building on that memorable Good Friday of 1913, when was commenced a battle that is still waging.

The combatants are human—they are the officers of Toronto's two kennel clubs, but they have caught the inseparable characteristics of their "pets," while they, the latter, are patiently waiting, with ruffled feelings. Whether the battle is between Airedales or dachshunds has not yet been learned, but at the present time there lies in a Toronto bank $1000. It is the bone. It is also the prize money that was won by the doggies at the last show, and as it is still in the bank instead of being meals for doggie, the poor little besties are rightfully ruffed to say nothing of their masters. It came about something like this: "We want a dog show on Good Friday," said the Toronto Kennel Club. "You can't have it. We want one," said the Ontario Kennel Club.

"There shall be one show and you two fighting doggies shall be friends." "Give me the money first," said the Toronto Kennel Club, the mother of all puppy societies. "There was one show. It was a success. But being as it is a little dog's delight to bark and bite the scrap started. Each put some money in the bank to act as a bone, and it played its part well. Then No. 1 wanted to draw it out and No. 2 said no. "What do you want it for?" "None of your business."

"Then you can't have it unless you show your accounts first." "Give me the money first for prizes and some other things and I'll show them to you." "I won't show accounts." "I won't." "Then don't."

The authors have not yet decided just how this dispute will end, but in the meantime some three hundred prize-winners are waiting for their prize money, and are, to say the least, sore that they should have to wait just for a little petty scuffling, principally of a personal nature. One side has consented to arbitration, but doggie No. 2 wants more fight—so it still goes on.

STEEL COMPANY TO GROW FOODSTUFFS FOR ITS EMPLOYEES

United States Corporation to Distribute "Vegetables From 8000-Acre Farm.

(Special to The Sunday World.) CONNEAUT, Ohio, Jan. 24.—The United States Steel Corporation, according to its officials, will shortly have in operation the first co-operative farm in this country for supplying foodstuffs, as far as possible, to all of its employees. The project was made public today. The land adjoins the 8000-acre farms of the Steel Corporation east of this city, which were brought in 1900, with a view to erecting a gigantic steel plant. This undertaking was later abandoned and the big acreage was turned into a stock grazing and vegetable farm.

Arrangements are now being completed to supply all the lake freighters with foodstuffs produced on the farm. As rapidly as possible the numerous subsidiaries of the corporation in the central states will be included in the list, until the big farm is supplying a large proportion of the corporation employees with fresh meat and other foods. A three-storey brick supply house has just been completed by the Steel Corporation at Conneaut Harbor. This as a central point of distribution will, it is claimed, eliminate the middlemen supplying the produce of the farm to the employees.

Canadian Condition Encouraging. Canadian banks have adopted a cautious policy for over a year. They were compelled to do so by the action of larger outside financial institutions and will now feel relieved that the strain has passed without causing anything worse than a temporary embarrassment for those not prepared to meet the emergency. That Canada has passed thru the siege in such excellent manner paves the way for a continuation of the confidence of British and other investors.

With plenty of European money for investment Canada's claim will be among the first to receive recognition. Ability to take care of maturing obligations is the first thing given consideration by a lender. Canada has demonstrated its ability to do this during a trying period. Growth of population will demand much more capital for reproductive enterprises, and no country in the world offers more favorable opportunities along this line than the Dominion.

Easier for Toronto. A plentiful supply of money in sight has especial significance for Toronto, which has several large undertakings to carry out and the knowledge that bonds can be easily floated at a fair price should go a long way to dissipate any sentimental depression which may exist.

CRIMES FEW, THO SPECTRE OF WANT HAUNTS MANY MEN

Workers, Assert Police Officials, Are Not the Men to Commit Lawless Acts, Even Tho Hungry.

FEWER DESERTIONS LESS WIFE BEATING

Unemployment does not mean an increase in crime. Enquiry made by The Sunday World among the city police authorities on Saturday brought out the above assertion. The strongest evidence was that the unemployment situation now existing in the city has had no tendency to increase crime, which, in fact, if anything shows a decrease over the same period last year.

"The criminal is not as a rule recruited from the working classes," said Inspector Kennedy, head of the city detective force, when interviewed on the matter. "It will be found that the honest toiler is not the man to commit crime even tho thru circumstances over which he has no control he is thrown out of employment."

"It will be found that most of the thieving is committed by the loafers—the man who will not and does not want work whether it is to be had or not. This class are just about as numerous in prosperous times as hard times, and the present case is no exception to the rule."

Sergt. Mackie of the detective department declared that the fact of no increase in crime being apparent was no exception to periods of unemployment which had existed during the winters of other years. He could say this after a number of years not only spent with the Toronto police force, but also as the result of observations made in other parts of the police service in the old country.

Begging More Prevalent. Much distress, of course, generally leads to begging. Toronto was becoming known as an easy mark in this respect. Thousands flocked into Toronto from surrounding smaller cities and towns, the citizens of Toronto as a whole were the sufferers thereby.

Staff Inspector Gregory of the morality department, once there had been a marked decrease in cases of wife beating and desertion since the beginning of the year. The reason of this, he explained, was that when times are good and money is plentiful drunkenness and "carrying on" are prevalent among certain classes of the community, but with unemployment and lack of money these people begin to take a more serious view of life.

At the police station it was stated that no increase in the number of "drunks" had occurred since the unemployment situation began. It was considered that the fact that few drinks were not to be had for the asking might explain this. "No money, no drinking," was the motto of the staff. The police said it was remarkable, however, the number of men who had not a cent on them who were brought in drunk. One case in particular was that of a man brought in intoxicated on Friday night without having a cent of money on him, who, as it was his first offence, was released on Saturday morning. He was again brought to the police station drunk on Saturday afternoon, and as before had no money in his possession. "Where did he get the free drinks?" was the mystery which the police were unable to answer.

Donald A. Smith TO MAKE A CLAIM Hasn't Definitely Decided Position in Regard to Strathcona Estate.

(Special to The Sunday World.) HAMILTON, Jan. 24.—That Donald A. Smith 14 Spruce Side avenue, of this city, will in all likelihood claim a share in the large estate of the late Lord Strathcona, Canada's grand old man who died recently in London, England, has been established. While Mr. Smith does not claim relationship to the late Lord Strathcona, he will not say anything definitely as yet as to the exact relationship between the two. It is stated, however, by people who know Smith personally that he is a grandson of Lord Strathcona. His father, they say, is James H. Smith, who resides in Boston, and is a son of Donald Smith, who was known in his later years as Lord Strathcona, and is also a full brother of Mrs. R. J. Bliss Howard, the recognized heir to the estate.

When spoken to over the telephone on Saturday afternoon by a reporter of The Sunday World, Donald A. Smith stated that he would rather wait until things have developed more fully before giving out anything definite as to his claims on the estate of Lord Strathcona. He would not admit or deny that he was a grandson.

SPEEDY PASSAGE OF COMPENSATION BILL IS CERTAIN

Will Go Thru Legislature With All Strong Points Retained—Only Dissension From Government Members

OPPOSITION PLEDGED TO HURRY MATTERS

There is considerable speculation about as to the reception which the workmen's compensation bill of Sir William Meredith will receive when brought down in the Ontario Legislature. One thing is practically certain, that the measure will go thru with the majority of its strong points retained.

The sentiment of the province on the bill is fairly well established. The Whitney government, in bringing in the measure, is again gauging the public demand with accuracy. The bill has come in the condition of society and the relations of capital and labor, when such a measure is passing from a stage of consideration to one of absolute necessity. The approval which will follow this legislation will come from the very foundations of the social strata.

The difference between the manufacturer and the labor interests may be carried to the floor of the house. There are at the present time several members of the legislature whose relations are bound up indissolubly with the position of the capitalists. On the other hand, while there is only one acknowledged champion of labor, Allan Stuchbome of Hamilton, the bill in its draft form, as resolutely supported by the Trades and Labor Congress of the province, is bound to hold the support of a large number who count for their seats especially upon the labor vote.

It is not considered likely, however, that there will be raised much of a dissenting voice on the government side of the house. The bill in its final stage may be looked to reconcile many of the points which now give rise to any anxiety on the part of the manufacturers. Its passage thru committee in any event would afford abundant ground for careful revision, and the intention from the first has been to make it as logical and consistent as possible.

Opposition Urged Haste. This would then be taken to indicate that the debate on the compensation measure would be the very best criticism from the opposition side of the house could not under the circumstances be of very great moment or duration, because of the government's announcement of the government's intention.

The stand of the opposition during the session succeeding the announcement of the appointment of a commission has been one of urging expedition. It was made subject of prolonged debate last year that the act should have been placed on the statutes at that sitting, it being argued that the number of deaths occurring yearly, and the prevalence of industrial diseases might have been met to the relief of labor in some measure by the enactment of the act.

The bill was then taken to the floor, and the government's intention was to pass it in the end would work out better to all concerned than a careless measure thrown together in haste and subject to the yearly weeding-out process which the national bill of some countries are at present experiencing.

Speedy Passage Likely. An excellent opportunity is presented to the opposition of the province at the approaching session to work into practice the expedition which they have been declaiming. Certain it is that there will be the opportunity for them to align themselves on the side of the labor party in criticism for the draft bill of Sir William Meredith, and the unanimous support of all the recognized organizations of the workers. From present indications it might be safely predicted that this bill, although perhaps the most sweeping in its scope of any on the statutes, will set a record for speedy passage thru the house.

CITY'S MEMORIAL SERVICE TO STRATHCONA SUNDAY Meeting in Massey Hall Called by Acting Mayor During Afternoon.

"Toronto cannot honor too much the memory of so great a Canadian as Lord Strathcona," said Controller McCarthy, while acting mayor of the city he ordered memorial service for Sunday afternoon in Massey Hall. The doors of the building will be open to the public at 2.15.

The provincial government is sharing with the city in the carrying out of the memorial service to Lord Strathcona. Members of the cabinet will attend along with members of the city council. The board of education will also be present, and has arranged for the attendance of 200 cadets.

Woodrow Wilson's Great Message to Congress

A Deliverance That is Pat to Many Things in Canada

THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN BIG BUSINESS AND PEOPLE

A List of the Reform Bills to Be Submitted to Congress

A great political revolution is being worked out in the United States, and marvelous headway in the direction of reform has taken place since Woodrow Wilson came into office as President. All the questions that are up for discussion and reform in the United States arise with more or less insistence here in Canada, and what takes place in the United States is more than a beacon to the people of Canada. We have the same issues here; we are not yet delving with them in a vigorous way. For some reason or other, the bulk of Canadian papers are withholding from their readers details of what has taken place, and is taking place, in the United States. The World from day to day, has given the fullest possible information in regard to these things; and, on the line of this policy, we publish below a full and exact report of President Wilson's latest deliverance to congress. Every Canadian ought to read this message.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—"The antagonism between business and the government is over." In this sentence President Wilson summarized the spirit pervading the anti-trust message which he read to a joint session of congress in the house this afternoon.

It took him exactly twenty minutes to outline the plans which, he said, when enacted into law, will result in completing the "constitution of peace."

Through the message he urged on congress the necessity of passing legislation that would destroy the instrumentalities which one class of business has taken improper advantage of other classes. He insisted that in so doing no legitimate enterprise should be injured and no undue commotion should be caused in the business world.

He was applauded repeatedly as he read his message, slowly and impressively. Republicans joined with Democrats in noting their appreciation of the plans which he proposed. When he finished a volume of free applause filled the chamber.

The President struck the keynote of his message when he said: "The President of the United States is in a well-modulated voice. He began his message. Occasionally he raised his left hand and shook his index finger by way of impressing his words. Otherwise he made no gestures. Between sentences he looked about the chamber and appeared to be pleased at the attention which his remarks commanded from every side. His every word carried to the corners of the chamber and the galleries.

The President was interrupted by applause when he announced that nothing should be torn up by the roots and that no novel or sweeping changes are necessary at this time. The conservatism of these statements appealed to the Republicans as well as the Democrats, and the applause was general.

When the President announced that he favored control of railroad capitalization by the Interstate Commerce Commission Minority Leader Mann started the applause. The greatest applause came when he announced that guilty corporate officials should be jailed for their offenses.

Most of the audience appeared to be surprised at the apparent brevity of the message. An outburst of applause went with the President as he left the chamber.

Full Text of Message Which President Read to Congress

The President's message in full follows: "Gentlemen of the Congress: In my report 'On the State of the Union,' which I had the privilege of reading to you on the 2nd of December last, I ventured to reserve for discussion at a later date the subject of additional legislation regarding the very difficult and intricate matter of trusts and monopolies. The time now seems opportune to turn to that great question, and I have been glad to have the opportunity which absorbed your attention and the attention of the country in December, is now disposed of, but also the cause opinion seems to be clearing about us with singular rapidity in this other great field of action. In the matter of the currency, I cleared suddenly and very happily after the much-debated act was passed; in respect of the monopolies which have multiplied about us and in regard to the various means by which they have been organized and maintained, it seems to be coming to a clear and all but universal agreement in anticipation of our action, as if by way of preparation, making the way easier to see and easier to set out upon with confidence and without confusion of counsel. Legislation has its atmosphere, like everything else, and the atmosphere of accommodation and mutual understanding which we now breathe with so much refreshment is a matter of sincere congratulation. It ought to make our task very much less difficult and embarrassing than it would have been had we been obliged to continue to act amidst the atmosphere of suspicion and antagonism which has so long made it impossible to approach such questions with dispassionate fairness. Constructive legislation, when successful, is always the result of convincing experience based on the mature public opinion which finally springs out of that experience. Legislation is a business of interpretation, not of origination, and it is now plain what the opinion is to

CHIEF ANTI-TRUST LAWS AS URGED BY PRESIDENT Here are the principal reforms urged by President Wilson in his anti-trust message:

- 1. A law that would give the Interstate Commerce Commission absolute control over railroad capitalization.
2. A law prohibiting interlocking directorates of banks, railroads, industrial, commercial and public service corporations.
3. A law defining the debatable ground around the Sherman law; one that would prohibit trade agreements and all practices that are unfair to the public and to competitors.
4. A law providing for the creation of an Interstate Trade Commission to assist the corporations and to assist the courts in dealing with concerns that break the law.
5. A law making guilty personal by imprisoning responsible officers of corporations instead of punishing businesses.
6. A bill prohibiting holding companies, with the suggestion that action should be taken to break the power of "individuals or groups of individuals," who control more than one corporation, even tho they acted as individuals and not as holding companies.
7. Giving to private individuals the right to sue corporations for redress on facts and judgments proved against government suits, and providing that the statute of limitations should run only from the date of conclusion of the government's action.

which we must give effect in this matter. It is not recent or hasty opinion. It springs out of the experience of a whole generation. It has clarified itself by long contest, and those who for a long time battled with it and sought to change it are now frankly and honorably yielding to it and seeking to conform their actions to it.

The great business men who organized and financed monopoly and those who administered it in actual everyday transactions have year after year, until now, either denied its existence or justified it as necessary for the effective maintenance and development of the vast business processes of the country in the modern circumstances of trade and manufacture and finance, but all the while opinion has made head against them.

The average business man is convinced that the ways of liberty also the ways of peace and the ways of success as well, and at last the masters of business on the great scale have begun to yield their professed and purpose, perhaps their judgment also, in honorable surrender.

Antagonism Between Business And Government Is Over, He Says

What we are purposing to do, therefore, is, happily, not to hamper or interfere with business as enlightened men prefer to do it, or in any sense to put it under the ban. The antagonism between business and government is over. We are now about to give expression to the best business judgment of America, to what we know to be the business conscience and honor of the land.

The government and business men are ready to meet each other half way in a common effort to square business methods with both public opinion and the law. The best informed men of the business world condemn the methods and processes and consequences of monopoly as we condemn them; and the instinctive judgment of the vast majority of business men everywhere goes with them. We shall now be their spokesmen. That is the strength of our position, and the sure prophecy of what will ensue when our reasonable work is done.

Not to Tear Up the Roots. When serious contest ends, when men unite in opinion and purpose, those who are to change their ways of business joining with those who seek for the change, it is possible to effect it in the way in which prudent and thoughtful and patriotic men would wish to see it brought about, with as few, as slight, as easy and simple business readjustments as possible in the circumstances, nothing essential disturbed, nothing torn up by the roots, no such thing as a business which can be left in wholesome combination.

Fortunately, no measure of sweeping or novel change is necessary. It will be under the old object, NOT to unsettle business or anywhere seriously to break its established courses athwart. On the contrary, we desire the laws we are now

Would Regulate Financial Operation of the Railroads

In the second place, business men as well as those who direct public affairs now recognize and recognize with painful clearness, the great harm and injustice which has been done to many if not all of the great railroad systems of the country by the way in which they have been financed and their own distinctive interests subordinated to the interests of the men who financed them and of other business enterprises which those men wished to promote.

The country is ready, therefore, to accept and accept with relief as well as approval, a law which will confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to superintend and regulate the financial operations by which the railroads are henceforth to be supplied with the money they need for their proper development to meet the rapidly-growing requirements of the country for increased and improved facilities for transportation.

We cannot postpone action in this matter without leaving the railroads exposed to many serious handicaps and hazards; and the prosperity of the country are inseparably connected. Upon this question those who are chiefly responsible for the actual management and operation of the railroads have spoken very plainly and very earnestly, with a purpose we ought to be quick to accept. It will be one step, and a very important one, toward the necessary separation of the business of transportation from the business of speculation.

Urges a Trade Commission. The business of the country awaits also, has long awaited and has suffered because it could not obtain further and more explicit legislative definition of the policy and meaning of the existing anti-trust law. Nothing hampers business like uncertainty. Nothing daunts or discourages it like the necessity to take chances, to run the risk of falling under the condemnation of the law before it can make sure just what the law is.

Nothing hampers business like uncertainty. Nothing daunts or discourages it like the necessity to take chances, to run the risk of falling under the condemnation of the law before it can make sure just what the law is.

Make Guilt Personal and Spare Business, Is President's Advice

Inasmuch as our object and the spirit of our action in these matters is to meet business half way in its processes of self-correction and disturb its legitimate course as little as possible, we ought to see to it, and the judgment of practical and sagacious men of affairs everywhere would applaud us if we did see to it, that penalties and punishments should fall not upon business itself, to its confusion and interruption, but upon the individuals who use the instrumentalities of business to do things which public policy and sound business practice condemn.

Every act of business is done at the command or upon the initiative of some ascertainable person or group of persons. These should be held individually responsible and the punishment should fall upon them, not upon the business organization of which they make illegal use.

It should be one of the main objects of our legislation to direct such persons or their corporate cloak and deal with them as with those who do not represent their corporations, but merely by deliberate intention break the law. Business men of the country should, I am sure, applaud us if we were to take effectual steps to see that the officers and directors of great business bodies were prevented from bringing them and the business about to pass to be the bulwarks and safeguards of industry which will effectively prohibit and prevent such interlocking of the PERSONNEL of the directorates of great corporations—banks and railroads, industrial, commercial and public service bodies—as in effect result in making those who borrow and those who lend practically one and the same, those who sell and those who buy, but the same persons trading with one another under different names in an identical combination and to those who effect to compete in fact partners and masters of some whole field of business. Sufficient time should be allowed, of course, in which to effect these changes of organization without inconvenience or confusion.

Such a prohibition will work much more than the mere negative good of correcting the serious evils which have arisen because, for example, the man who has been the directing spirit of the great investment banks have usurped the place which belongs to independent industrial management and to its own behoof. It will bring new men, new energies, a new spirit of initiative, a new blood into the management of our great business enterprises. It will open the field of industrial development and origination to scores of men who have been obliged to serve when their abilities and their energy are directed, it will immensely hearten the young men coming on, and will greatly enrich the business activities of the whole country.

There is another matter in which imperative considerations of justice and fair play suggest thoughtful remedial action. Not only do many of the combinations affected or sought to be effected in the industrial world work an injustice upon the public in general; they also directly and seriously injure the individuals who are put out of business in one way or another by the many diabolical and exterminating forces of combination.

I hope that we shall agree in giving private individuals who claim to have been injured by these processes the right to found their suits for redress upon the facts and judgments proved and entered in suits by the government where the government has upon its own initiative sued the combinations complained of and won its suit, and that the statute of limitations shall be suffered to run against such litigants only from the date of the conclusion of the government's action.

It is not fair that the private litigant should be obliged to set up and establish again the facts which the government has proved. He cannot afford, he has not the power, to make use of such processes of inquiry as the government has command of. Thus shall individual justice be done while the processes of business are rectified and squared with the general conscience.

Old Things that Must Be Done. I have laid the case before you no doubt as it lies in your own mind, as it lies in the thought of the country. What must every candid man say of the suggestions I have laid before you, the plain obligations of which I have reminded you? That these are new things for which the countries are not prepared? No; but that they are old things, now familiar, and must of course be undertaken if we are to square our laws with the thought and desire of the country. Until these things are done, conscientious business men the country over will be unsatisfied.

Let us, therefore, things our mentors and colleagues. We are now about to write the additional articles of our constitution of peace, the peace that is honor, and freedom and prosperity.

Persons Suing Corporations Could Use Government's Facts

There is another matter in which imperative considerations of justice and fair play suggest thoughtful remedial action. ### LADY GIBSON OPENS FINE COLLECTION OF EMBROIDERIES

Woman's Art Association Shows Valuable Specimens of Work From Italy and England.

A unique exhibit was opened to the public yesterday afternoon at the galleries of the Women's Art Association, Jarvis street, when the first collection of embroideries and laces of the Italian and English schools ever shown in Toronto was on view. Lady Gibson, who was accompanied by Miss Gibson, was present and, metaphorically, pressed the button, declaring that citizens generally might now inspect and admire the best of the work of the school at Fieschertown in the Mare in Wiltshire, England.

In the collection are coverlets, portieres, cloths, d'oyles, panels and tapestries surpassing anything of the modern schools. Many are reproductions, as for example the great portiere, which is an exact copy of one done by Mary Stuart, the beautiful Queen of Scotland. In this the light peach-colored background is a wonderful foil for the rich Roman blues and reds and the varied greens in which the design is carried out.

A marvelous production from woman's skill and patience is a mantle or shelf drape, in which the pattern is the white hand-made linen of the formalities outlined by closely woven stitches of green.

The Kensington School is largely represented. Exquisite Irish laces, fillet, reticella, crewel, Madonna and others are represented. The Jacobin period is largely in evidence.

In securing the loan of the collection, which will only be on exhibition for a short time, a long dream of Mrs. Dignam has been realized. It was thru Mrs. Walter Long of Ottawa that the collection, which is valued at several thousands, came to Canada. While some of the smaller articles are for the general trade and artistic standard of the community.

SANE SUNDAY FOR TORONTO SAY CHAFING RESTAURANTS

Irrational Laws Prevent Personal Liberty—Against Will of Thousands, They Say.

Steps to compel the rescinding of the irrational blue laws that prevent Torontonians from even using the public slides on a Sunday have been inaugurated by a number of local business men.

The inaugurators, who are said to be principally restaurant owners, who have been struggling under the present laws for a considerable period, urge in a pamphlet that they have just issued, that conventions contemplating sessions in this city consider the closed Sunday before making arrangements to meet here.

Ever since the closing of the slides, over a year ago, several thousand Torontonians have been waiting for a chance to get back at those who they feel have taken away a large part of their personal freedom, as well as means of healthy exercise. Whether this movement against over-legislation will have any effect remains to be seen.

Cuttings from the pamphlet appear as follows: "The Toronto bylaws extend a cordial invitation to all conventions contemplating a visit to our fair city, but as a note of warning to all delegates, we call attention to our Sunday bylaws.

"They must be observed by all and every person visiting the City of Toronto.

"It is against the law to sell a postage stamp on Sunday, therefore it is impossible to buy a one-cent stamp in Toronto on Sunday.

"It is an offence and liable to a fine of $5 or $10 to sell a newspaper on Sunday, so bring your newspapers with you.

"It is against the law to sell cigars on Sunday.

"It is against the law to sell tobacco on Sunday.

"It is against the law to sell matches on Sunday.

"Off the Premises.

"It is an offence and liable to a fine of whatever the magistrate sees fit to impose, if a restaurant keeper to sell for consumption off the premises food of any kind, therefore, if you want to take your family or your friends for an outing on a Sunday, and enjoy the pleasure of a basket lunch, you must stock your food during the week as it is impossible to buy even a sandwich for consumption off the premises on Sunday. If you are stopping at a hotel, it will be necessary to prepare your food and keep it in your room over the night. You cannot be arrested for that.

"Eat Where You Buy.

"It is against the law to sell chocolate for consumption off the premises on the Lord's day, so if you are fond of this innocent and healthful food, you will have to deny yourself that pleasure. Even if you keep it in your room over the night, it would be unfit to eat the next day.

"It is against the law to sell chocolate or candy of any kind on the Sabbath for consumption off the premises, so if your wife and children or your friend want five cents worth of chocolates or candy, you must take them to a restaurant and sit down at a table and consume your five cents worth at the table.

"It is a breach of the Lord's Day Act to sell peanuts for consumption off the premises on Sunday, and visiting delegates should fill their pockets during the week to insure them of a supply for Sunday.

"Rubbing in the Kneecap.

"If the convention happens to come to Toronto during the winter months, all delegates visiting the city during the week to insure them of a supply for Sunday, and visiting delegates should fill their pockets during the week to insure them of a supply for Sunday.

FAMILY FEUD ENDS IN MURDER TRIAL

Man Shoots His Cousin After Quarrel Over a Missing Cow.

ST. SCHOLASTIC, Que., Jan. 24.—(Can. Press).—Charged with murdering his cousin, Leonard McGibbon is being tried here before Judge Robitoux, and the details of the family feud which ended in the shooting of John McGibbon at Dalesville on Aug. 21 are again being described.

John McGibbon sr. told of a feud of sixteen years, standing between his brother Peter and himself and their respective families. This feud had arisen thru his purchase of his mother's farm at a sheriff's sale.

The evidence of Elizabeth McGibbon was chiefly the story of the shooting itself.

She and her brother John saw their uncle Peter and his two sons, Melville and Leonard, enter their property, and her brother, after getting his gun, had taken her with him to see where they were going. Some distance from the house they saw the trio coming up the hill toward them. She and her brother then started to retreat, as Leonard had a gun. The uncle and cousins, however, overtook them and hooked their way. The uncle, Peter McGibbon, enquired for an alleged stray cow. John denied knowledge of it and then the uncle had made as to the hit the witness.

SOME GRAFTERS AMONG THE BUILDERS OF DAYS GONE BY

Age of the Great Cathedrals Had Its Jerry-Builders and Crafters and Incompetents, Contends Writer in New York Paper.

That the age of the great cathedrals had its jerry-builders and grafters and incompetents, even as this present day, we are assured by a writer in the Engineering Record. It is only the structures that have survived; a medieval building means to us a solid and enduring piece of work, but that is only because it is the enduring that endures; the other kind crumbles early and is forgotten. An architectural hornet's nest was recently stirred up by a writer in a London paper who bemoaned the passing of the craftsman from his one-time leadership, and lamented that the master builder of medieval times had given place to the mere architect of today. Says The Record: "Granting that there were giants in those days who left behind them monuments of such eternal beauty that they have been the chief inspiration of all that has come after, it is by no means true that the merit belongs to the builder or the craftsman alone. The great work of antiquity was wrought by the combination of artist and mason in proportions now unknown, with time as their silent partner. However, the creative mind began its career, its host was usually sleeping in the crypt it had planned a century or so before the building, as we know it, was finished. As to the most of medieval work, it has gone to well-deserved decay long since. We let our imaginations run riot in dreams of the faithful workman's loving artistry, forgetting the nameless and pestilent bunglers whose clumsy fingers wrought abominations in wood and stone. And few even of the masterpiece have escaped the stupid and ruthless meddling of the renovator, whether architect or builder by training. "No, the old days were as full of bad design and worse execution as our own. The ruins of St. Mary's Abbey in York, for instance, show as vile a grade of rubble as any cheap contractor of the twentieth century could imagine, and the building tumbled easily into the decay it deserved. Some of the good and stable work of the past has happily remained to us and has served as a model from century to century. The ordinary architect of today makes fewer mistakes by copying it than by trusting to his own imagination. Whether his predecessor began as artist or as mason makes precious little difference. "But before passing hasty judgment upon the architect of our own times, think a moment of the evil days upon which he has fallen. In the medieval times he must perforce know only the technic of masonry—the rest was his art. If he were building a church the fine stimulus of the Gothic was his inspiration, and his medium was craftsmanship in stone. Today he must know masonry and concrete, structural steel and sanitary plumbing, lighting and heating, electric wiring and acoustics. The old congregation did not need to read and mostly couldn't, expected to be cool and generally was, could not understand the Latin of the service even if it chanced to hear it. Little need for wonder or blame then if the architect, having to be a Jack of all trades, bungles a goodly number of structures if he tries to cover the whole range single-handed. The wonder is not that he sometimes does badly, but that he ever succeeds in rising out of the turmoil into greatness. "Besides all this, he has to struggle against or make surrender to a complex commercialism that makes the machinery of construction terribly intricate. His predecessor did not have to plan for buying his stone from one source, his steel from another, and his woodwork from a third; he was not hounded by agents of patented devices nor pestered by circulars of supplies offering him the usual architect's commission of "per cent." If he were a grafter it was by malice premeditated, and not by daily temptation. All these things the architect of today has to endure, besides being called a slavish copyist if he turns to the best in antiquity and a commonplace innovator if he does not. "His chief hope is in suiting himself as best he may to new conditions, calling in technical advisers on the details which he cannot in the nature of things have time to master, even if he has the ability, standing the more firmly by the interests of his client as he confronts a regiment of subcontractors and remembering that he must be artist before being engineer or contractor. Originality and resourcefulness are much more difficult to find than technical or constructional skill, and if the architect is to be a more than a master mason or boss concrete mixer, it must be by the possession of these attributes. And, looking about, one cannot but realize that art did not die with the Gothic nor perish with the Romanesque."

RUPTURE TRUSSES.

Old-fashioned truss torture is no longer necessary. Gallie, slipping trusses and barbarous methods of treating rupture are done away with by the wonderful invention of a specialist who has devoted fifty years to this one affliction. The old congregation did not need to read and mostly couldn't, expected to be cool and generally was, could not understand the Latin of the service even if it chanced to hear it. LONDON, Jan. 24.—(Can. The men refused to comply with the employers' demand, and when they ceased work this afternoon for the week-end declared that the employers would have to withdraw their demand before they took up their tools again.

GREAT DEMAND FOR HOUSES AND OTHER INVESTMENTS WAKE OF INNOVATION OF PROFIT SCHEME

Small Stores Particularly Benefited by Operation of Ford Plan—Other Factories Have Not Felt Effect, as Ford Plant Has Not Drawn on Their Staffs.

(Special to The Sunday World.)
DETROIT, Jan. 24.—The working of the Ford profit sharing scheme, which embraces fifteen thousand employees in this city, is being watched with great interest here.

Naturally the question arises as to what effect such a wholesale distribution of money will have upon the men themselves, upon other manufacturers and in the end upon the community whose people are the recipients of this benefaction.

The Ford Motor Company does not propose having the money frittered away. The sociological problems involved are being looked after with a thoroughness that presages universal benefit. Investigators in the employ of the company, practical men selected from the shop and office forces, are looking into home conditions of the men, housing accommodations, personal habits, the degree of thrift displayed and other matters pertinent to the subject. On the findings, which are verified absolutely and indexed, will be based the disposition of each individual case.

To inculcate Thrift.
If a man is found to possess those habits which are a menace to good citizenship he will be cautioned and afforded every opportunity to reform. If in due season he declines to take advantage of the chance presented he will be displaced. The plan is almost revolutionary. Young men will be required to start bank accounts or invest in real estate or some other substantial holding, and they must, upon demand, be able to disclose what has been done in this direction, not for the benefit of the company, but for their own good.

This policy is not dictatorial; every man is a free agent. But he is given to understand that disregard for suggestions involves, and at the same time impresses upon him, the fact that the company wants to help him in every way possible. This brief outline of policy gives rise to curiosity as to how the move is being accepted by employees and outsiders, and the effect it will have on the community.

Better Homes in Demand.
So far as employees are concerned it promises to inculcate a spirit of loyalty even more intense than that which formerly prevailed. The men have entered into the plan with enthusiasm, and the adjustment to new conditions made possible in their homes has already made itself felt in a manner that is quite noticeable. It is estimated that the general social scale.

Better homes are in demand, and enquiries for real estate investment have increased to a pronounced degree, indicating a determination to improve the opportunities afforded. The exodus from congested boarding houses and tenements, whether voluntary or from fear of what might follow continued residence there, is going far toward solving the housing problems that always confront a great industrial centre, and is being worked out by the men themselves without the interference of any agency other than the attention of the Ford Company.

Felt by Small Stores.
The effect of the profit-sharing plan, although it has but recently been put into force, is being felt particularly by the small stores that supply the families of operatives. Not only are the purchases more numerous and of a better grade in every line, but bills are met more promptly, because the customers have more money. And the end is not yet for it is anticipated that as soon as those who benefit under the plan have adapted themselves to the new order of things the advance will be even more pronounced.

If it was merely a wholesale distribution of money to be spent as the recipients saw fit, without any check whatever, financial interests might view the move with something akin to alarm. As it is, they regard it in a favorable light, because anything that tends to increase material stability strengthens the position of the community and consequently of its financial institutions. It is anticipated that during the next few months there will be a heavy increase in a savings account, that will continue to grow indefinitely, for company supervision of the affairs of its employees is to continue for all time.

Other Factories Unaffected.
Announcement of the profit-sharing plan was greeted with mixed emotions by other manufacturers. It was pointed out by timorous ones that the Ford Co. would be able to control the local labor market, that disension would arise elsewhere, and that labor difficulties would follow unless they met the large scale established by the Ford Co., which they clearly are not able to do. Quite the contrary has been the case. The company would only employ a given number of men. It had most of these before the plan went into effect, and what few have been placed since that time were not sufficient to affect other plants. With the innovation still fresh in mind, matters elsewhere are running along as of old. There has never been heard of any fortunate enough to be in the employ of the Ford Co. are straining every nerve to show their appreciation of its generosity and public spiritedness.

ENGLAND IN MIDST OF SEVERE WEATHER

Nineteen Degrees of Frost Was Registered in Southwest District.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(Can. Press).—A cable from London to The Tribune says: There was a sharp drop in the thermometer during Thursday and Friday, the development of an intense high pressure system over Eastern Europe. Between 19 and 16 degrees of frost were registered yesterday over the southwest of England, including London, and in spite of the brilliant sun and the still air the thermometer failed to rise above the freezing point at any time in the day, and fell rapidly again after midnight. It was the coldest day since Feb. 5, 1912.

SILVER IN THE PULPIT OF KNOX PROFESSORS

Hidden Treasure Found After a Night-Long Search.

Under the lecture pulpits of Rev. Dr. Robertson and Rev. Prof. Law were concealed the seventy-five sets of silverware which, for a long time, had been the subject of much furor and no little annoyance to the prospective breakfasters at the Knox College dining hall on Saturday morning. Annoyance it was, for the seventy-five students in the residence had to eat out of five porridge spoons, which, it must be admitted, is a difficult matter when the voracity of the student appetite is introduced into the equation.

While the janitor slept and while the other students were attending the meeting of the university literary society on Friday night half a dozen students committed the "theft" which caused so much annoyance at breakfast time on Saturday morning. The assistance of the police was called into requisition to locate the missing silverware which, however, was not found until long after the breakfast hour was over.

MISREPRESENTATION IN ENGLAND MUST STOP

Hamilton Will Take Steps to Bring Notice to Officials at Ottawa.

HAMILTON, Jan. 24.—(Special).—In an effort to rouse the provincial and Dominion governments from their lethargy in immigration matters, it has been proposed by officers of the citizens' relief committee, that steps be taken at once by the proper authorities to bring to the notice of the officials in Ottawa and Toronto, the widespread misrepresentation that is being used in the old land to attract people to Canada. Those who are in need at present claim that conditions were badly misrepresented to them by the government during the past year or two.

PICK-UPS FROM THE WINGS.

"Omar the Tentmaker," by Richard Watson Tully, is referred to in New York as a vague, incoherent, and ludicrous bore. Gladys Bates Post's acting and the scenery are complimented.

Eugene Walter has just completed a new play called "A Plain Woman," in which Ada Dwyer will play the leading part. Rehearsals have been in progress for some time and it will shortly be produced by Klaw and Erlanger.

William A. Brady is preparing a melodrama New York life, written by Thompson Buchanan.

C. M. S. McClellan, author of "Leah Kiechma," adapter of "The Pink Lady," "The Little Cafe," and others has just completed a one-act play, Holbrook Blinn may be seen in the leading part.

The dramatic authors of Paris are profoundly agitated over the proposal of a number of journalists in that city to abandon the modern practise of first-night dramatic reporting in the press and the intention of the critics to recur to their former custom of publishing their dramatic reviews at the end of the week.

Alberta Farmer Has Started Seeding

Special to The Sunday World.
LETHBRIDGE, Jan. 24.—During this month Geo. Kingsbury of Eyemore district seeded sixteen acres of wheat on his farm. Plowing and discing in Alberta in January is somewhat of a record, but this centre can claim the distinction of having actually seeded land to wheat in what is supposed to be the coldest month of the year. The soil was in the finest possible condition for seeding.

WORLD'S RECORD IS BROKEN BY TORONTO MOTOR

Local Engine Runs for Over Week at High Speed Without Stop or Repair.

The eyes of the motoring world are focused on Toronto. Out in the Russell factory, a test is in progress that threatens to shatter every existing world's record for motor achievement. Already it has set up a new mark for reliability—the Russell-Knight motor having completed 216 hours without adjustment, stop or repair. This is nearly double the period similarly achieved in any other test.

Without question, the conditions surrounding this test are the most severe under which a test has ever been attempted. The motor is running under wide-open throttle developing its maximum power at every speed from 500 to 1500 revolutions per minute. The test is being conducted under disinterested technical observation, Professor H. W. Price of the engineering department, The University, having complete charge.

The motor is strictly a stock motor, having been selected from stock only a short time before the test commenced. Not a single alteration or adjustment was made to it that would not be made when installing the motor in a car. Fuel and oil consumption are showing up remarkably well—less than one-fourth as much oil being consumed as in a recent test of one of the best-known poppet motors in existence. Compared with the usual extravagant figures for tests of this kind, where economy is the desideratum, the Russell-Knight motor is a miser with fuel and oil.

The power curve graphically illustrates the wonderful flexibility of the Knight-type engine. At 1500 revolutions within its safe speed limits this 28.8 rated h.p. motor is developing 47 1/2 h.p.—almost 75 per cent. over its normal output. Of much significance is the fact that every increase in speed shows a corresponding increase in power. This is a clean-cut contrast to the poppet-valve motor, where a drop in the power production accompanies an increase in speed beyond a certain point. It is the inherent motor-flexibility of the Knight-type engine that makes it pre-eminent for use in automobiles. After 5000 miles of running under full power, the song of the motor is so sweet and true that even the most pessimistic observer can't see anything but success ahead.

It looks as if Canada is destined to loom very large on the world's motor-map. And it is some satisfaction to Canadian motorists to know that the car built for their especial requirements is even now conquering the world.

WANTS LARGE SUM FOR EDUCATION

Hamilton to Complete Their Work.

HAMILTON, Jan. 24.—(Special).—From the general estimates drawn by the board of education for this year, it will require $485,000 from the city, which is $60,400 more than last year. It will also spend $212,000 raised by the sale of debentures, which bring the 1914 budget up to $647,000. With this money the board will complete the work started on the various schools in the southeast and northeast sections of the city, increase the salaries of the female teachers and probably of the male teachers.

OUTSELLS BECAUSE OUTSERVES

COUNCIL MAY NOT LOOK AT HARRIS' SCHEME MONDAY

Too Large a Proposal to Be Attacked Without Consideration of All Its Many Points.

OPEN MIND AS TO WATERWORKS SITE

There is no certainty that the report of Commissioner Harris upon extension of the waterworks plant will be discussed at the meeting of the city council on Monday. It is too big a thing to be attacked in a hurry. Besides some members of the council are unfavorable to selling any more debentures this year than are absolutely necessary.

A short time ago Commissioner Harris reported upon the doubling of the filtration plant at the island, and he directed attention to the inadvisability of having established filtration beds where the water has to pass through the tunnel under the bay after being filtered. He stated that he refrained from recommending having the filtration beds on the mainland, near the pumping station, only because of the large amount of money already invested in a filtration plant on the island. The commissioner's viewpoint is fully appreciated by the council, and when a duplicate waterworks plant is constructed the filtration beds in connection with it will be as close to the consumers as possible.

Mechanical Possibility.
There is another fact being well considered by the council. It is that fully seventy-five per cent. of the water supplied last summer had to be chlorinated because the filtration beds had not the capacity for more than a quarter of the required supply. The contract for doubling the filtration plant at the island will soon be let, and the additional plant will be on the slow sand and mechanical system. The present plant is altogether slow sand system. It was proved last summer that even a plant of doubled capacity at the island would give but half the required supply of water without chlorination. This makes certain that chlorination must be relied upon equally with filtration until the additional plant in the eastern part of the city is installed and in operation. Even after that a certain amount of chlorination must be expected in the warm months when storms stir up the sediment in the lake.

As to the practicability of the plan proposed by Commissioner Harris for the plant at Victoria Park the council has an open mind and does not intend to be influenced except by hard and fast facts in hydraulics.

Money Becomes Plentiful, End of Quietness is Here

York State bonds, The New York American says.
Doubtful significance was given to the sale of $51,000,000 worth of New York State 4 1/2 per cent. bonds yesterday by the almost immediate resale of them by the bankers to whom they were allotted at an advance which netted them about $550,000.

The two transactions showed the high credit of the state and the plentifulness of money available for safe investment. For the volume of this showed that more than five times as many bonds could have been sold as were offered. It is not many months since there would have been doubt of the ability of any state to place so "heavy a loan," and not even the strongest of private corporations would have dared to offer so large a block of bonds. The success of this operation shows the confidence in the investing public and the emergence of hoarded capital.

All the above is of great interest to Toronto. It means the loosening of the purse strings of the banks and loan companies, a revival of manufacturing money by the bankers, the continuance of building operations, and, above all, the lifting of a load of apprehension which has hung over the city like a pall for several months.

The manager of the largest mortgage loan company in Canada said Saturday that the rate on loans to builders would be 7 per cent. on Monday. He would not say that builders would get cheaper rates in a few weeks, but that there was plenty of money. Conditions had improved greatly since the first of the year, when the rate was 7 1/2 per cent. Private funds for builders, which are handled by lawyers and real estate firms, are being made up of $75,000 far more money offered than is asked for. Contractors expect a flat rate of 6 by the spring.

L. K. CAMERON RECOVERING.
Coming as welcome news to his friends is the information from of General Hospital that L. K. Cameron, the king's printer at Toronto, is making a good recovery. He has been six weeks in the hospital suffering from paralysis, and a short time ago his life was despaired of.

Henry W. Savage's production of "Sart," an English adaptation of Zigeunerprimitia, the Hungarian opera which has been played all over Europe, was made in Atlantic City, N. J., on Christmas night. The cast includes Mizzi Hajos, Blanche Duffield, Charles Meakins, Carl Stall, L. Wilmut-Merkyl and J. Humbird Duffy.

HAMILTON DEMANDS CHEAPER HYDRO RATES

Meters Are Suggested as a Means of Obtaining Reasonable Price.

Special to The Sunday World.
HAMILTON, Jan. 24.—Controllor W. H. Cooper appeared before the hydro commission this morning to demand that a more reasonable rate be granted the city for the hydro power supplied the Beach pumping station. He also stated that the city had been charged double for the power at the Trolley street disposal plant. He suggested, as a means of reaching a more reasonable price, that meters be installed. The controller then took up the street lighting system, stating the works department wanted a price for the power in bulk necessary to light all the lamps.

He asked many other questions related to the lighting system and ended up by asking whether the commission would be ready to install the hydro lighting system by July 1, so that in case it would not be able to do this, the Cataract Power Co. could be asked to renew their contract for one or two months. He stated that the lights now in use in many cases were not satisfactory and said that the city would rather pay a higher price for the power than to have a poor system.

David Warfield's 900th appearance in the role of Simon Levi in "The Auctioneer," will be celebrated on Tuesday night, January 13.

CHANNEL TUNNEL BECOMING POPULAR

Aviation Has Deprived Opposition of the Greatest Objection.

By W. B. T. Thompson.
LONDON, Jan. 24.—The channel tunnel was the subject of a lecture and discussion at a recent meeting of the Royal Society of Arts.

had been growing weaker, while those in its favor have been growing stronger all along the line. He believed that the possible disadvantages of the tunnel were few, and might never occur, whereas the certain advantages were countless and constant, and would be experienced every hour of every day by ever increasing numbers. One objection raised to the tunnel was that it would deprive Great Britain of her position, but he thought that aviation had done that already.

both the English and the French sides, and the opening of a valve in either country would fill the tunnel with water for a mile of its length. As one who had had to do with the tunnel beneath the Mersey, and also with the Simplon tunnel, the longest in the world, he gave it as his opinion that the problem of ventilation would be of the simplest possible character. The ventilation of one-tube railways was a far more complex problem.

clear that they raise no further objection against it," he added, "in France we are ready to begin the work tomorrow morning." A telegram was read from Baron d'Estimang, in which he said that the tunnel would be a "monument to peace and civilization."

VOTES FOR FLOWERS IS THE NEW WAR CRY

English Lady Gives Bouquets for Signatures on Suffrage Petition.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—A beautiful lady, with an April face, so the chivalrous French papers say, has been bartering roses with French deputies for their signature on a monster petition she is getting up in favor of woman's suffrage. The beautiful lady is, it appears, none other than a distinguished non-militant suffragist connected "with the highest English aristocracy," who had adopted the nom de guerre of rather, de paix, of Lady Lillian Clontworth. I leave Lady Lillian to tell her story and explain her aims in the words she used in a French newspaper, only exercising my right of selection for the good lady, was rather prolix. "Unhappily married and miserable," writes Lady Lillian, in excellent French, "I realized that the English law is shamefully unjust to women, and how necessary it was that the women should have the vote."

Militants Are "Odious." Finding the militant suffragists to whom she first carried her grievances and her hopes "odious and destitute of feminine grace," Lady Lillian suddenly saw the "better path." It was to gain votes for women "by gentleness."

Having realized her mission in life, Lady Lillian undertook a crusade through Europe to bring back a million crosses, or, preferably, signatures, in favor of votes for women. Up to date, she has been fairly successful. She has ten thousand signatures already. "Everywhere people have been very good to me," she writes, "except in Germany, where several newspapers said I had been arrested, and that I was 40 years old; both of which shameful charges are utterly untrue. In Paris, when I stood on the boulevards offering bunches of violets in return for signatures, they 'ragged' me a little, but, on the whole, they were chivalrous and kind. One man tried to kiss me, and another, instead of writing his name, wrote 'your ducky,' but these were exceptions." Paris is much more interested in Lady Lillian, with her red roses and violets, than in a wilderness of Pankhursts.

BAKERS WERE VERY DANGEROUS PEOPLE

Report Drawn Up at Request of Napoleon—Make Strange Statements.

(Special Cable Dispatch.) By Henri Ferrer.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—Somebody has just unearthed a curious document, dating back to the first empire, which makes rather amusing reading. It is the report, drawn up at Napoleon the First's request, by the then prefect of police, on the state of mind of the workers in Paris.

From it we learn that in the year of grace 1807 publicans were, as a class, unfaithful to their wives, house painters drunken; shoemakers drunkener; and hostlers inclined to revolutionary ideas. Bachelors, the prefect had found to be contrary to the general opinion, the meekest and most affable of men, the explanation being "that, by reason of their trade, they are continually inhaling animal emanations, which lower their constitutions with the privileges of health and tranquility."

RUSSIA MAY PROFIT BY PANAMA CANAL

Hope That Europe Will Become Consumers of Siberian Fish.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 24.—The Russian export chamber has been devoting many of its semi-weekly meetings to various aspects of trade relations with America, which continue to interest Russian industrial and commercial circles. The blow dealt to an expanding trade in which the United States has risen to second place in imports, is reflected in reports for the first seven months of 1913. During that period Russian exports to America decreased by 2,000,000 roubles, or over $1,000,000. The new American tariff is expected to recoup for Russia some of this loss by increased trade in certain articles, such as eggs, hides and wool.

One of the organs of the Russian ministry of finance dwells upon the Panama Canal's menace to the Russian merchants' predominance in Mongolia. Mongolian wool and hides even now largely go to San Francisco by way of Tientsin. To save this raw material for Russian industries, the ministerial organ advocates that "feeders" should be built to the Trans-Siberian railway, traversing Mongolia to its main centers, such as Ulaan-Kobdo and Ulyanautal. On the other hand, Russians view favorably the development of Siberian and Manchurian timber exports to America; hopes also are entertained that Europe may become a large consumer of Siberian fish, via the Panama Canal. The freight rates via the Suez Canal are prohibitive, and the Japanese profit by buying the whole catch at ridiculously low prices.

Women will find more news of interest to them in The World's magazine page every morning than in any other paper.

RUSSELL KNIGHT MOTOR

Breaking World's Reliability Record Has Run 216 Hours—Nine Days and Nights Under Full Power Without Adjustment, Stop or Repair

Now Running Better Than At The Start

In April of 1909, the Daimler Company of Great Britain submitted two of their Daimler Knight Engines to the severest test that, up to that time had, ever been undertaken by an internal combustion motor. This run included 132 hours with wide open throttle on the bench, then a run of 2,000 miles on Brooklands track and a further bench test of five hours. The successful completion of this test is now a matter of history.

In December last, in the United States, before the Automobile Club of America, the Moline Automobile Company, of Moline, Illinois, submitted one of their Moline Knight motors to a test. The marvellous performance of that engine is fresh in the minds of motorists. It established the world's record for reliability and power production.

We believe that it is possible in Canada to produce a product that will meet competition with that produced anywhere in the world.

On Wednesday, the 14th of this month, we selected from our stock one of our regular motors which had just been assembled and given its usual short run on the bench, but before it had received its full regular test.

It was to run day and night continuously until such time as it had either broken all records or required adjustment or repair.

Every minute of the time it was to be under the technical observation of Professor H. W. Price (Engineering Department, University of Toronto) or his associates.

It was to run constantly under wide-open throttle—commencing at a speed of 500 revolutions per minute the first day, and increasing by 100 revolutions per minute each day until the maximum motor speed was reached. The motor is strictly a stock motor in every respect.

Up to date after nine days' constant running, this motor has broken two world's records.

I. RELIABILITY. It has run 216 hours, without a single adjustment, stop or repair.

II. LUBRICATION. It has established a new economy record for lubrication—using less than one-fourth the quantity of oil consumed by one of the finest poppet motors in a recent official test.

To-day (Friday) at 3 p.m. this motor is running at 1,400 revolutions per minute. It is developing 47 1-2 h.p.—almost 75 over its R.A.C. rating of 28 h.p. It has run a total of 216 hours. It has covered a distance equal to 8,500 miles—UP HILL. It has not had a single adjustment, stop or repair. Yet it is running swifter—pulling stronger—working smoother than at the start.

Beauty of line, luxury of appointment, and completeness of equipment are combined in the Russell with a degree of motor-reliability and economy not equalled in any other car.

EAT

What You Will--When You Will--Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Will Digest the Meal Easily and Surely.

Food in itself is harmless. The reason stomach troubles arise is due to faulty digestion brought about by overworking the body or brain, sickness, overeating, late hours, etc.

"Eat! Why, That's My Middle Name Now. But Always Take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After Meals to Play Safe."

The only way to correct faulty stomach troubles and digestive mistakes is to do what nature wants. All that nature needs is a little assistance to do this work. This is why doctors tell you to diet. By not eating nature is compelled to aid her. You do not then overwork her when she is already exhausted. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go into your stomach just like food. They help digest this food. Then they enrich the blood, and thus when the next meal is eaten the system is better prepared to do its work with assistance or at least less helpfully.

ON PARLIAMENTARY HILL

Special to The Sunday World.

OTTAWA, Jan. 24.—It takes a long time to get up steam in cold weather! That may explain why parliament, opening this year in January instead of November, has been listless and less interesting than had been anticipated.

As yet there has been little or no punch in the assaults on the government. Dr. Clark of Red Deer made a good speech, but it was not up to his usual high standard.

Some of the Conservative members who took part in the debate spoke as the Sir Wilfrid Laurier prime minister. They criticized his rule, forgetting that the Laurier administration had passed into history.

It may be said, without flattery, that the best speech made in the debate so far, was the one delivered by the prime minister. Mr. Borden was the mental grasp of a good lawyer and the clarity of statement so essential for the successful practitioner.

The situation of this country with regard to its upper chamber is somewhat peculiar. Canada has less control over a majority of the senate which puts itself in opposition to the popular will than any other dominion of the empire that I know of today.

The best point scored by the opposition in the debate must be credited to Mr. A. K. Maclean, the Liberal member for Halifax. He pertinently enquired whether anything was to be done for national defence by sea until enough deaths occurred to change the party complexion of the senate. We can scarcely ask other nations to refrain from attacking us until a certain number of Liberal senators have passed to the great beyond.

It is claimed that this provision was inserted to prevent and break up the senate, the assent of the British Government. It may be interesting in this connection to refer to the oft-quoted but little read B. N. A. Act of 1867.

Mr. Maclean of Halifax did not shine as a financial critic. Indeed he was wrong to the extent of ten millions dollars respecting the borrowings of the government in London during the parliamentary recess.

Finance Minister White had no trouble in dealing with Mr. Maclean's half-hearted criticism. The minister made a splendid speech in the afternoon, and had practically finished when Mr. Speaker left the chair at 6 o'clock.

The maritime province members took advantage of the debate upon the address to argue against any further reduction in the parliamentary representation of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Got First Prize Calf For Half Day's Work

Lambton Mills Man Offered to Milk Stock Man's Cows and Got Animal in Exchange — Daughter Raised it and Captured Big Prize at Stock Shows.

A prize calf that almost failed to be even a calf, well describes the animal shown by Leo Chord, of Lambton Mills, at recent stock shows in this city, and that swept all honors before it in the class for yearling shorthorns.

It was by the merest chance that the beast was not purchased by one of the packing houses at the time that it was born at the stock yards, the mother having been shipped for sale by a James Shear, of Dublin, Ont.

But cows must be milked dry before being sent on a long journey, so the owner, unhappily a "non-milker," offered the calf as a reward to any ambitious body that would venture the job. Mr. Chord volunteered, stripped the cows, shouldered his calf, and went home to Lambton Mills with his prize.

But paths of glory lead but to the grave, and after a triumphant season at the Toronto stock shows the calf was photographed with its mistress, and then led up the gangway that ended in the St. Lawrence Market.

Bedford and Henry Ford

The New Spirit of Capitalism on This Continent Contrasted With the Old School in Europe

On December 16th last, the Duke of Bedford sold a valuable property in the heart of the City of London for an amount estimated as ranging from $15,000,000 to $50,000,000. The deal only involved about 19 acres of land, but included the famous Covent Garden Market, several theatres, and many other important public buildings. This land was originally granted to the Russell family in 1540 by Henry VIII, and for more than three centuries the Russells have reaped succession after succession of unearned increments, due to the expansion of London under the leasehold systems which required tenants to erect buildings, pay all taxation and a ground rent. Term after term they have been enabled to increase revenues that they did nothing to earn, and were free to spend. But with the prospect of drastic reform measures the present peer, no doubt, deemed it prudent to unload and transfer the risk to one more willing to take a chance.

The New Spirit of the New World

Two or three weeks later Henry Ford of Detroit started not only North America, but the civilized world, by an announcement that he proposed to share the profits of the Ford Motor Company on equal terms with his employees. Last year his company made $25,000,000 of profit, not his unearned increments towards which he had contributed nothing, but by reason of the ability, energy and enterprise of Henry Ford. At sixteen years of age Ford was a farm worker, then he became a machinist, and seeing a gasoline engine at work, conceived the idea of a self-propelled car. For two years he worked and experimented, fashioning every part of the first crude vehicle himself. Even after he had demonstrated its possibility, it needed a long litigation in the courts to vindicate his right to the harvest of his toil. Within other ten years Henry Ford had built up the biggest automobile business in the world.

The Contrast Between the Two

Do these two men, the products of a widely different environment and atmosphere, not present an instructive contrast? The Duke of Bedford inherits wealth that has descended for hundreds of years and has apparently no compunction in gathering in the growth of the harvest of his toil. Within other ten years Henry Ford had built up the biggest automobile business in the world. It is not getting to be more and more the view of the new business morality which is evolving in America? Much has been said, and rightly said, about the tyranny and unscrupulous methods of the older school of capitalists on this continent, but an increasing number are imbued with another spirit, which is more in evidence in America today than in Europe.

THE ENGINEERING FACTOR BEHIND THE WORLD'S OIL CRISIS

One of the Difficulties That Have Come With the Wide Use of Oil Was That Few Universities Have Special Course of Training—Day of Coal in British Navy Has Ended.

A feeling of consternation in European engineering circles followed the announcement that certain oil concessions in South America, granted to foreign capitalists, have been surrendered as a result of the official attitude of Washington. As long ago as last September it was announced in the bulletin of a British engineering society that Lord Murray of Elmhurst, one of its members, had concluded contracts with the government of Ecuador under which the world's oil crisis, according to the bulletin, would be solved. The whole of the oil that republic for oil. If the new American attitude to concessions in South America, as outlined by President Wilson, is to be applied in Ecuador as absolutely as it seems to apply to Mexico and Colombia, the world's oil crisis, according to an expert in the London Mail, will pass thru many an acute phase.

As civilization, as we now interpret the word, is a matter of the last century, and it is almost useless to make comparisons of the present age of energy with the past because of the progress which is now being accomplished by the white man. What he is really doing is to replace the primitive labor of men and animals by chemical and electrical energy. To use again our new word, we may therefore say that we have only had that energy in existence during the last ten or twelve decades. Fortunately for Great Britain, the work of energization commenced in this country concerning let us say, the antecedents of the numerous wives of Henry VIII, or the other past events whose importance to this age is so greatly exaggerated because of the instruction of the ordinary child, Europe and the northern portion of America, more or less rapidly copied the pioneer energy of this country. In more recent years the most highly energized nationalities are the British Empire, the United States, Germany, France, and Japan.

Germany Not Slow
Germany is not behind England in equipping its engineers with a training rendered so necessary by the severity of the oil crisis. The courses for petroleum specialists continue to be given in the principles and practice of mining, boring in all its branches and the transport storage and refining of oil. The students in England and in Germany attend lectures and laboratory classes in the science allied to the subject. Mathematics, physics, chemistry, geology and calorimetry are all taught with special reference to the exploitation of the oil fields of the world.

The Next Half Century
Turning to Mexico, we find it described as a land which, from an engineering standpoint, remains unenergized like China. The certainty which is staring the civilized nations in the face is that the work of energization has just begun and will be the feature of the history of mankind during the next half century at least. There have been so many countries anxious to be energized that little heed was paid to those contented with their sluggishness. New conditions have sprung into being recently. The increase in the number of countries which grew expert in the manufacture of machinery not only led to an extension of the market but precipitated the oil crisis. Without a supply of oil in abundance, the engineering science of the world becomes meaningless. It is, indeed, no exaggeration to say, writes that close student of this subject, that the average business and professional man entirely fails to realize that civilization, as we now interpret the word, is a matter of the last century, and it is almost useless to make comparisons of the present age of energy with the past because of the progress which is now being accomplished by the white man. What he is really doing is to replace the primitive labor of men and animals by chemical and electrical energy. To use again our new word, we may therefore say that we have only had that energy in existence during the last ten or twelve decades. Fortunately for Great Britain, the work of energization commenced in this country concerning let us say, the antecedents of the numerous wives of Henry VIII, or the other past events whose importance to this age is so greatly exaggerated because of the instruction of the ordinary child, Europe and the northern portion of America, more or less rapidly copied the pioneer energy of this country. In more recent years the most highly energized nationalities are the British Empire, the United States, Germany, France, and Japan.

At the present moment the huge amount of work in the far east is for practical purposes unenergized. It is in a transition stage, such as was this country when James Watt had reached the end of his life, or as was Japan a few decades ago. China has been passing thru a political crisis, which can be traced back by the thoughtful to the invention and perfection of the steam engine. That invention heralded the age of energy, and also only a hundred years of that era has gone by. It has left its mark in every quarter of the globe, not even excluding the Poles. It has utterly transformed the manner of living and the habits of thought of the inhabitants of the energized countries, and it has shaken the foundations, dug during centuries of ignorance, of customs and beliefs that over the world.

World and Energization
What the average business and professional man entirely fails to realize is that civilization, as we now interpret the word, is a matter of the last century, and it is almost useless to make comparisons of the present age of energy with the past because of the progress which is now being accomplished by the white man. # STREET MYSTERIES OF A GREAT CITY

Birds of a Feather Flock Together in Business Section of London.

(By W. B. Thompson.)
LONDON, Jan. 24.—Undoubtedly one of the most curious features of London is the manner in which men engaged in particular businesses and professions have congregated for some mysterious reason, in certain streets and areas. This particularly is recalled by the suggestion that Harley street will, before they cease to be the abode of doctors, on account of the fact that it is becoming, in these days of motor, too noisy.

Where, should the doctors decide to desert Harley street, they will move to, it is, of course, difficult to say; but it is almost safe to affirm that when they do migrate they will finally settle down again all together in some quiet corner of the metropolis.

Many of the Londoners who still remember the time when London's chief doctors congregated in the neighborhood of Finsbury Square which was deserted for Harley street, on account of the many businesses which set up in the former neighborhood.

There are many other curious instances, however, in the manner in which professional and business men flock together. Tottenham Court road, for instance, is the great furniture thoroughfare of the metropolis, while Long Acre is monopolized by motor car firms and carriage builders. Aviators have made Piccadilly the headquarters of the aeroplane industry, in which street the Aero Club and the offices of "The Aeroplane" are situated.

Why is Hatton Garden the home of diamond merchants, and why do so many music hall artists insist on living at Brickton? A stroll down Holborn reveals a street in which the bicycle manufacturers, while there are probably more typewriting firms in that district than in any other street in the metropolis, Gerrard street, Rupert street, and some of the other streets in Soho, appear attractive to toy dealers, and many private theatres are found in that classic neighborhood.

That manufacturers seem to have a fond liking for Blackfriars road, while Willesden can probably boast of more laundry firms than any other district in the metropolis, and many private theatres are found in that classic neighborhood.

Hoxton seems to be the home of jam manufacturers, and Houndsditch that of toy dealers, while Clerkenwell road is the greatest centre of ice cream merchants, makers of street organs, and mosaic floor makers, broom makers, and Fleet street the hub of the newspaper world.

WHAT ROYAL PEOPLE WILL DO FOR LOVE

There Are Many Cases Where Love Is Placed Before the Crown.

(By W. B. Thompson.)
LONDON, Jan. 24.—Cupid's power is strikingly illustrated by the sacrifices willingly made by royalty, who defy the laws of kingdoms and marry for love. Often, in the case of a prince who marries "beneath him," it means deprivation of rank, privileges, and wealth, while, at other times, the prince who marries beneath him, it means the loss of the legal privileges of an ordinary wife, both she and her offspring are debared from the special rights of the husband and father as a royal personage.

At the same time, however, a prince who married for love cannot, except on sufficient grounds for divorce, have that marriage set aside to marry a royal lady. Furthermore, his morganatic children are legitimate and can inherit his private property.

The romantic love story of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and his wife, the Duchess of Hohenberg, who recently stayed with King George and Queen Mary, at Windsor, provides a striking illustration of what a woman of inferior rank may have to suffer for marrying a royal personage. The archduke, who is heir to the Austrian throne, declined to marry any of the royal ladies offered for his choice, for he had fallen in love with a maid of honor, the beautiful woman who is now his wife.

Although the archduke's wife was not a princess, she was a woman of noble birth, and she was only after some years that she and her husband wore down the prejudice which existed against her, and she was created a duchess by the emperor—a title which conferred upon her privileges more in harmony with her dignity as the lawful wife of the future sovereign.

By the terms of the marriage settlements, however, the archduke's wife cannot become empress, nor even her children succeed to the imperial throne; also it is pointed out that royal marriage settlements have, before now, been set aside.

In this country, the Royal Marriage Act, which came into force when George III, was on the throne, reduces to the position of something like that of morganatic unions abroad every marriage in the royal family of Britain not approved by the sovereign and parliament. That is to say, they are not recognized in the sense of royal marriages. For instance, the marriage of the Duke of Cambridge's marriage with Miss Faneborough, the actress, who died in 1890, the children of the marriage bearing the name of FitzGeorge. Again, there is the case of the late Duke of Fife, whose daughter, Princess Arthur of Connaught, had a marriage with a man of low rank, which was not approved by the sovereign and parliament. That is to say, they are not recognized in the sense of royal marriages. For instance, the marriage of the Duke of Cambridge's marriage with Miss Faneborough, the actress, who died in 1890, the children of the marriage bearing the name of FitzGeorge. Again, there is the case of the late Duke of Fife, whose daughter, Princess Arthur of Connaught, had a marriage with a man of low rank, which was not approved by the sovereign and parliament. ## METHODS OF PAVING CAR TRACK AREA ANTIQUATED, WASTEFUL

Two Million Dollars Has Been Spent in Last Five Years on Work That Must Be Done Over Again in the Next Five Years—Ordinary Pavements Above Average, Says the Civic Survey.

Nearly two million dollars almost wasted in five years, and the further expenditure of $600,000 a year to keep the streets in a passable condition, is the latest declaration of the experts employed by the bureau of municipal research in the civic survey dealing with the repairing of street railway track allowances by the works department. The most significant clauses of the report are herewith quoted in full:

"A casual inspection of the streets of Toronto gives the impression that the pavements are in very poor condition, but upon a more detailed and careful investigation, it develops that the pavements, exclusive of the street railroad area, are above the average. With the exception of a few streets, such as Winchester, McCaul, Eastern avenue, and a number of the unimproved streets, the roadways proper are in fair condition. The pavements within the street car tracks and immediately outside of the outer rails are very poor.

"In slippery weather, if the roadway proper is paved with a more or less smooth pavement, teamsters prefer to use the granite blocks of the railroad area, which give better purchase for the horses.

Past Methods Bad.

"In Toronto, it is evident at once that no definite policy for this class of work has been developed in the past, and it is even more evident that there has been a decided lack of proper co-operation between the department of works, the street railway company, and the Ontario Railway Commission. The use of 'T' rails, toothed stones, and runners outside the rails in this work is a kind of construction discarded by progressive highway engineers many years ago.

"Faulty construction methods, both in the pavement proper and the tracks, have caused and will continue to cause a very unsightly and, in many places, dangerous condition in streets over which the street car lines operate. King street, Queen street, Yonge street, and practically all of the heavy traffic streets are only about 50 per cent. efficient as facilities for transportation, due to the condition of the track allowance pavements.

Could Be Improved.

"That no scientific effort is being made to eliminate these defective conditions is indicated by certain new construction work where the old methods are still being followed. On Avenue road, a comparatively new street, 'T' rails, outside runners, and toothed stones all have been used. On St. Patrick street and Bloor street, where construction work is now going on, the same construction methods are being followed. On King street east, wooden blocks are being set between the rails and four runners immediately outside of the outer rails. Granite blocks or brick in this connection, even if properly grouted with Portland cement, are bad enough—wood blocks are absolutely impossible for heavy traffic conditions.

"In following up the expenditure for track allowance repairs, it eventually developed that funds for this work had been provided thru the issuance of ten-year debentures.

"The use of debentures for providing funds for payment of track allowance repairs, which last on an average considerably less than a year, means that the bonded debt of the City of Toronto in respect of this work will exceed the valuation of the work itself from ten to twenty times. The 20 per cent. return from the street railway company more than covers all street repair expenses, including construction and reconstruction, and such practice only encumbers the debt service of the city.

"During the past year (to Nov. 24), $214,195.31 has been spent in maintenance, or an average maintenance cost per square yard of 39.98 cents. Since the first of November, over $45,000 has been expended in repairing the railroad area pavements. Even with this very large expenditure for emergency repairs, the present condition of the railroad area (Nov. 26), is a disgrace to the city. How much of this money was wasted owing to poor construction methods, it would be difficult to tell. It is sufficient to say, however, that some of the repairs made within the last three weeks are today beginning to show signs of failure, and apparently it will not be long before the railroad area will be in as bad a condition as it was on Nov. 5.

Nearly Two Million Dollars Lost.

"Looking at the matter in another way, if one adds to the cost of repairs the amount of money spent in construction and reconstruction, the total for the last five years amounts to $1,884,420.35—$3.167 for every square yard of track allowance pavement in the City of Toronto. This means that in the last five years every yard of track allowance pavement could have been reconstructed, with proper construction methods, and the cost of maintenance reduced to practically nothing.

On the other hand, after this tremendous expenditure of nearly two million dollars in the last five years, Toronto is today burdened with a railroad area which will necessitate the expenditure of approximately two million dollars more in order to place it in a proper condition. Under present conditions the annual rate of maintenance of 40 cents a yard will necessitate an expenditure of one quarter of a million dollars a year, and still fail to improve materially the condition of the streets.

"After considering in detail the present condition of the track allowance pavements in the City of Toronto, we are forced to believe that a large part of the $1,884,420.35 expenditure in the last five years has been absolutely wasted, and that the continuation of the present construction methods will need $500,000 a year to keep the streets even in a passable condition.

Scientific Methods Needed.

"A definite program for this kind of construction should be prepared at once by the department of works and submitted in conference with the street railway company to the Ontario Railway Commission for approval. If the tremendous maintenance cost on the present track allowance pavements is to be reduced it is essential that the use of a modern type of rail be insisted upon, and that the stone blocks, brick, or wood within the rails be set on a concrete foundation and adequately grouted with Portland cement. With such construction methods there is no need for runners of wood, brick, or granite block on the outside of the outer rails. The type of pavement laid on the street outside of the track allowance should be carried clear to the pavement treatment if any being inside the space bounded by the other rails.

The report also recommends the institution of the "civil service" method of appointments to the works department in order to insure proper qualification of employes and freedom from influence in appointments.

STRANGED BY NAIL

FORT WILLIAM, Jan. 24.—(Can. Press.)—Valenti Guiridetti, a young Italian boy living in Fort Arthur, was strangled to death yesterday by a short screw-nail lodging in his throat. Valenti's brother, a little older, had locked him in a room while he went outside to buy some candies. Upon returning a few moments later he found the boy lying dead on the floor. A post mortem examination revealed the cause of death.

NO PAY FOR WORKS DEPT. MEN ON SICK LEAVE

Commissioner Harris has notified the employes of the works department that hereafter they will not be paid when they are off work on account of sickness. He leaves it optional for him to decide who has become ill thru overwork, and those employes will not have their pay docked. The employes know that some have feigned illness to have extra holidays with pay, and they are annoyed that others should have to suffer for it. Statistics have shown such a big total of extra expense from keeping sick employes on the pay sheet that Commissioner Harris determined upon drastic action.

Only recently Commissioner Wilson issued orders that employes of the street cleaning department who laid off work on account of sickness should go on half pay while absent. Strong objection to the change was made by the employes, but Commissioner Wilson showed them how great is the expense to the city in paying wages during sickness, and he made it evident that many who laid off were not sick and doubted their income thru payments from the civic employes benefit fund and from one or more lodges.

RAIN STOPPED WORK

Second Draft of Men From Unemployed Bureau Lay Down Tools.

Wheelbarrows, picks and shovels were stacked on Saturday by the second draft of the unemployed that was sent from the civic registration bureau to work in the parks and on other civic works. The heavy rain effectively stopped outdoor work.

"Only men who understand sewer work will be allowed to work on sewer excavation," said Commissioner Harris when asked how many additional laborers will be required on the numerous contracts let on Friday. "Sewer excavation is a dangerous job to the unskilled, and we will not take chances with those of the unemployed who have never worked in a deep trench."

Organized labor is arranging a big demonstration by the unemployed next Wednesday at the city hall. The speakers will urge the council to protest to the Dominion Government against bringing more emigrants to Canada this year.

The Big Eyes Club of the World are holding their annual at-home at Freemasons Hall on Wednesday evening of this week. The following ladies have kindly consented to act as patronesses: Mrs. H. STRONG UNDERTONE TO LOCAL STOCKS

Commerce Scores an Eleven-Point Rise in a Few Days.

INDUSTRIALS DISLIKED Interest Will Converge in Issues Whose Dividends Are More Sure.

The Toronto stock market closed the week with a strong undertone, the only evidence of earlier prices being in some speculative stocks, which have had good advances and have encouraged the taking of profits. No news other than easier money conditions has reached the market to account for the recent improvement in prices, but this in itself is important enough to be responsible for the change.

After such a strenuous advance as has been witnessed a steadier market is to be expected, but this is entirely dependent on the action of the public. If a large outside demand develops, the further advances may entirely uproot the calculations of present market operators.

A rise of eleven points in Bank of Commerce in a few days is clear evidence of the scarcity of investment securities and the desire of the public to buy while such good interest returns are to be had.

The industrial in the market will be under the influence of such fallings as Macdonald, Monarch Knitting, Canadian Cereal, Canadian Machinery and others, and this section of securities has for a time lost its attraction. Tractions and others whose dividends are pretty well assured will get the call and with it a better market.

MAY TAKE HAND IN MEXICAN CRISIS

Feeling Aroused in British Financial Quarters Interested in Mexico.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—A circular was sent out today to members of the London Chamber of Commerce in order to ascertain the opinion of whether it would be advisable for Great Britain to take steps in conjunction with France and Germany to ask President Wilson to take action to regularize the financial position of Mexico. Baron Southwick is president of the chamber.

Mexico's default in the payment of interest on its bonds has aroused considerable feeling in financial quarters in London, and it is suggested that Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary, might advantageously initiate negotiations with Berlin and Paris.

PROFIT TAKING AT NEW YORK

Reaction Resulted by Market Averaging Up Well at the Close.

WALL STREET, 10.10 a.m., Jan. 24.—Heavy profit-taking sales in the principal stocks brought about a reaction at the opening today from the high prices reached on the week's rise. A few issues continued to advance, American Sugar gaining 1-3/8. All of the leaders, however, were lower. Losses of about a point were sustained by Reading, Southern Pacific, Lehigh Valley, B. & O., and Amalgamated.

On the whole, the market closed weak. Speculative selling for both accounts depressed stocks today. Initial losses were extended by increased profit-taking sales when it became apparent that the advance had been checked definitely. Washington reports that important developments in the Mexican situation were expected soon. Weakness of Reading was due in a measure to reports that Lake Shore was selling its holdings of the stock. Experiments on the short were successful in uncovering stop loss orders and many stocks weakened to the extent of a point or more. Investment shares moved in contrast with the remainder of the list, and in some instances large gains were made. Bonds were irregular.

STANLEY KETCHEL WAS THE MOST ECCENTRIC BOXER THAT RING HAS KNOWN IN MANY A LONG DAY

MY MOTHER BACKED ME AGAINST THE BARN AND PLAYED THE HOSE ON ME.

By Igoe.

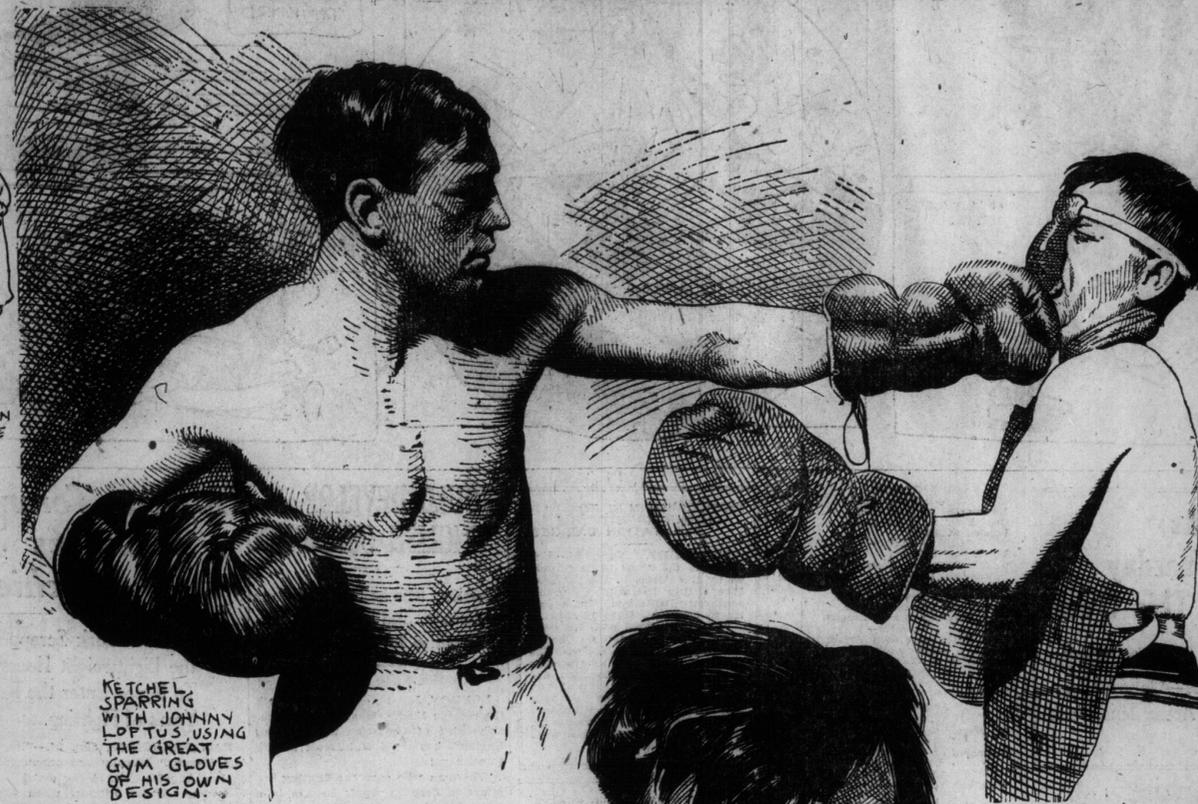

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Just now in Fisticiana no name is mentioned oftener perhaps than that of the great fighting Pole, Stanley Ketchel. Every time a fight audience sees two lumbering heavyweights...

Had Ketchel lived until now he would have been a greater sensation than when he was fighting under the title "the Michigan Assassin," a fighting name by the way, bestowed on him by the writer...

Ketchel had his good points as well as his bad. Not that Ketchel was vicious or cruel. He had a wonderful personality and a great heart...

Perhaps the most uncomfortable hour I ever put in with Ketchel was in Wheeling, W. Va. It was the day after the Klaus-Ketchel fight in Pittsburgh.

He said, "He hunted me out by chance, and I was hired to stand behind a drop curtain on the stage of the town and this was my job. My employer handed me a big gas pipe wrapped in cloth. Now, in the third round I'll back them up against the drop curtain...

mind. Here was "a quiet little out-of-the-way place," as Ketchel p. . . "And a good chance to cut down the colored population just a trifle."

It was only after promising him that I would come back again that night and allow him to snuff out the lives of two of them at least, that we completed our meal.

I asked Ketchel once, what he considered his hardest fight. "The one I had with that big Swede in the streets of Grand Rapids," he answered.

"Well, when they led me home with both my eyes closed, I left the bully on his back in the gutter. When I got home my mother backed me up against the barn and turned the hose on me to wash off the blood and mud. She didn't recognize me even then until I made motions with my hands. My lips were too puffed to even speak.

Ketchel was very religious. He took a great deal of pride in a library he was supplying the Notre Dame Convent in Grand Rapids. As a boy he attended the Sisters' School for a while.

In the hem at the bottom of Ketchel's fighting trunk he had sewed in many of the little religious medals that different people had given him. Ketchel guarded these trunks always with a fierce earnestness.

Ketchel used to tell of his franks around Butte, with a great deal of glee. "There was a fellow who came there once and offered to knock out all corners in four rounds."

THE EYES THAT NEVER FLINCHED WHEN A BATTLE WAS ON.

He said, "I would never start to fight before he had shaken hands all round with every trainer and bottle holder. On the night he knocked Jack O'Brien out in Philadelphia, just as the gong rang for the first round, Ketchel suddenly remembered that he hadn't shaken the hand of 'Pete, the Goat' a camp mascot."

Stanley turned and saw O'Brien. He started to flinch at O'Brien with his left hand, all the time looking over his shoulder for "Pete, the Goat." Finally Ketchel saw Pete worming his way down the aisle to the ring. When he got to the corner, Pete reached up with outstretched hand. Ketchel saw it jabbed at O'Brien with his left, and then reached back and clutched Pete's hand. Then he turned with an air of utter satisfaction and knocked O'Brien out in a round.

Ketchel had an idea that he was as clever as any fighter living. He always stormed about it. "They say that when a fellow just missed knocking me out by half an inch, that I'm lucky," he said.

It was always a sore subject with Stanley. Jack O'Brien claimed after the first fight with Ketchel, that Stanley was clever, despite the idea to the contrary. "You never saw me miss a fellow so often with my left hand, did you?" asked O'Brien.

One night at dinner Ketchel and a number of us were sitting around a big table on which rested a glass tank filled with queer fish and tadpoles. Langdon Smith's "Evolution" came up in the talk and some one dug it out and read it. When they explained to Ketchel that one idea of life is that we all evolved from tadpoles, those same polywogs became a source of intense interest to Ketchel.

Not a great deal has been heard of W. M. Walker, who is associated with W. Weegham in the Chicago Club of the third league. But more will be said in the future.

That's what they say," I answered. "Gee! Ain't that hell!" snarped Ketchel, and he resumed his gaze on the tadpoles.

"That's what they say," I answered. "Gee! Ain't that hell!" snarped Ketchel, and he resumed his gaze on the tadpoles. Ketchel got a copy of "Evolution," and we often found him off in the woods around camp, struggling with the big words and the big thought in Smith's masterpiece.

Bob Davis, the Munsey editor, was a great crony of Ketchel's. Bob was presented with a wrist-band that was simply a thick hair, supposed to have been taken from the tail of a sacred elephant in India. A tiny gold clasp held it securely around one's wrist. A charm was supposed to scotch on anyone who wore it.

When I picked him up in my arms, his last words were: "I'll be all right, colonel. I've got my lucky little bracelet on. Take me home to mother." said Colonel Dickerson, in telling us of Ketchel's end.

"I didn't want to take any chance of Stanley's death going unavenged. Well, two farmers captured the man, and turned him over to the posse. I refused to pay the reward, and we had a lawsuit. The man was tried, with his wife as an accomplice. Both were given life. A new trial was given them, and the woman was let go. The man got a second sentence, and is now serving out his sentence of life imprisonment."

I KNOCKED SOME OF BUTTE'S FAVORITE CITIZENS DEAD.

When I got to the ranch Stanley was laid out on the same rough, farm table at which he had been seated when his slayer appeared in the doorway. Ketchel's first words were: "They tried to get my roll, colonel. He did have a lot of money on him, and when they caught the man who stole him they found Ketchel's money on him."

Fighting Federals--Who They Are

By J. Ashley-Stevens. (All Rights Reserved by Collier's News Bureau.) CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 24.—Money, the fighting instinct, gameness, and luck are among the assets of the fellows who are backing the new Federal League, and that's a combination which may carry that organization far. Did you ever hear the story of the life of Charles Weegham? It's one of those modern romances. His business life began in a lowly place. Then fighting instinct, gameness and luck came to his assistance. They converted him into a business success, a man rated by the commercial agencies at half a million dollars.

Ten years ago, Weegham was the night manager of a restaurant much frequented by the men who worked on the morning newspapers of Chicago. At the midnight hour there was a gathering in this restaurant. Weegham became a part of the night life. The big stories were inquired about. He became the confident of the newspaper men. Then he started a small restaurant of his own. It was one of the "help yourself" brand. Restaurants were established. Weegham prospered. Everything that he touched turned to gold.

He added a billiard hall and it was converted from a failure into a success. He added a picture show and vaudeville theatre to his holdings. Immediately it showered gold upon him. In ten years this fellow has ascended in the business world until it is known that he has more than half a million dollars invested in his enterprises. He has a magnificent home on the fashionable Lake Shore Drive.

He is one of the successful young men of Chicago. It's estimated that he is earning at least a quarter of a million dollars a year. He started a fighter and he developed the ability as he soared, and on top of that he is what is known as a lucky man.

WOULD DEVELOP ENGLISH CHAMPION

Charlie Mitchell is Serious About it, and Looks for His Promise to Come True.

(By Trixie.) LONDON, Jan. 24.—Charlie Mitchell, the veteran English heavyweight who, since the death of his home in Brighton, England, has not lost interest in the game, says: "The man who says the fighting instinct is dead in Great Britain is a fool. I wish all the problems of life were as easy to explain. The British so-called champions have of late years been boosted into prominence, they have not fought their way to the front. As soon as they did one or two decent things in public they were hailed as world whippers when as a matter of fact they were a little better than novices, and had no right in the limelight at all. "As soon as they 'bumped' into a man of any class they were dropped out and made us, as a nation, something of a laughing stock for the world. "It needed only a French middleweight to come over and knock out our best heavyweight to make us fully realize where we stood in the game of fighting. How would we feel if a German repeated the French boy's victory?" Asked as to whether there are boys in Great Britain who can whip Carpenter, the old fighter said: "I think we can find fifty men for that job, and with more than a fair chance of success. We have the stuff; all we want to do is to bring it to the front on a piece of ribbon. We want to make our man fight his way from the bottom to the top; he'll have to meet all comers in all kinds of ways with the gloves, and prove he has a heart, a constitution and a proper amount of skill." Mitchell has an idea about the best way to go about finding British champions is to get the best four men from England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, match them, and pit the winner against the world.

Harlem Tommy Murphy Promises To Quit If Ritchie Defeats Him

Veteran New York Scrapper Just Wants One Chance for the Lightweight Honors, and If He Fails He Promises To Never Enter the Ring Again—Has Had Fourteen Years of Fighting.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 24.—"Harlem Tommy" Murphy has announced in Los Angeles that in the event of losing to Willie Ritchie, when the first chance comes to him for swatting the championship crack he will retire from the ring for all time to come. Naturally, should he win, Murphy wouldn't think of retiring, but would aim to go ahead and clean up as much money as possible. Other fighters have made the same decision in advance of matches, and have as promptly forgotten all about their plans, even when the defeat has been a crushing one. "Harlem Tommy" however, isn't particularly given to making declarations, and in his case, since he is nicely situated from a financial standpoint, the announcement really means more than would ordinarily appear. "I have been in the game since 1900, which means just 14 years," he told an interviewer. "I sincerely believe that I can beat Willie Ritchie; and if I lose I will quit the game." Judging from conversations with Murphy, the New Yorker is keenly alive to the fact that he can't go on forever; and since it is not absolutely necessary from a standpoint of making a living, the chances are that Murphy will be well pleased when he can retire from active ring work. Joe Levy and Sam Walsh, respective managers of Joe Rivers and Leach Cross, have had an interesting spat over the evident desire of Cross to get a return match with Rivers. Before leaving with Rivers for Milwaukee, where the Mexican is to meet Ad Wolgast, Levy threw forward the following at Walsh's. "Joe has fought Leach three times, and at various routes. We are not going to dedicate the rest of our lives in fighting Leach. Anyway, we want to fight

Would You Like to Meet the King?

This Important Step in Your Social Career Can Be Arranged if You Have Position, if You Have Great Beauty, if you Have Money— Several Toronto Women Have Attained Coveted Honor.

"I have been received by the King. I have reached the highest pinnacle of feminine ambition, the very apex of the social universe."

How many Canadian women would give their all for the right to utter these words?

No matter the nationality or the creed, or the political beliefs of members of the social set, standing before them as a hill they should try to scale, is the reception at the Court of St. James.

Women will work for the honor, they will sacrifice much for it, and they will plot and plan and pray that they may be able to say "The King received me."

Altho the number of Canadian, and even Toronto women who have been honored at the royal court is comparatively large, it is usually only after many years of social prestige in this country that the door leading to Britain's throne is opened to women from the Dominion.

The few coveted moments in the Royal presence, the honor of dragging a court train—in due statefulness, and the display of diamonds consistent with the occasion are just the climax of a period of striving. The silent curtsy before the enthroned royal couple, the silent retrogression from the regal presence, and the presentation is over, but what does it mean? Surely it carries with it more than these few moments of uncertain pleasure. Reception at the royal court, while it is the climax of a social life, is really only the commencement of social triumph, for with it go a thousand and one little prerogatives that bear fruit in after years.

Presentation at the court of St. James carries with it the right to be presented at any of the courts of Europe, and also places the lucky one in line for social functions of every rank.

Canadians who are to be presented at a royal court are notified by the colonial secretary of their good fortune. Each year a list of notables from the various colonies is prepared by the secretary's department and is submitted to the lord chamberlain and the royal household, in order that preparations may be made for the occasion.

The ambition of the Canadian woman regarding a presentation at the English court is governed by no such restrictions as are placed on her sisters of other countries. They must have the born right to aspire to such a favor. The Canadian woman faces no such difficulty, she is presented on her own merits, she feels that she is as good as any woman if she can only be recognized, and it is the obtaining of this recognition that tempts women to spend almost their whole life in working toward the pinnacle of social fame.

Even should it be impossible to obtain social prestige on this side of the water, the aspirant need not give up hope altogether, for there are known cases of men and women being able to obtain recognition in royal circles when ordinary methods of "breaking in" had failed. Admission into one of the smaller courts thru friendship with some person of sure social standing greatly increases the chance of an entree at St. James, for while there is no specific limit to the number of debutantes each year, it is only those that are quite capable of showing their worthiness for the honor that have even the ghost of a chance of a presentation.

Divorce is the only absolute barrier that the court of St. James sets against society women. The divorced woman always has been, and quite probably, always will be barred from the royal presence.

Friendship with royalty is of course of some assistance, but is really more useful after making your bow than before. It may help keep you in the coveted circle.

It has been said that one could buy one's way into the sovereign presence if one only had enough money and knew how to spend it judiciously. That is a bald way of stating something which may have a modicum of truth. One knows that the expense of the titled personages of any country and particularly of England, are enormous, and a title does not always carry with it great wealth. If it did less would be said about the Americans who buy them for their daughters.

Could one reasonably expect a countess or a duchess or a woman of lesser rank to use all her social knowledge and influence to gain the highest honor her land gives, to strangers, without some recompense? "It is the fair exchange which is no robbery," recently declared an English writer.

The ordeal of presentation is apt to be more or less severe to even throne is no mimic show, but one of the most impressive of realities. More than one matron, now serene in her possession of the honor, can tell how she was well-nigh overcome with stage fright she became violently sick in front of the royal seat and, in helping herself to her feet, clutched hysterically at Her Majesty's garment. This is just an instance of the strain that those people who are well versed and quite used to social customs undergo when greeting themselves before Their Majesties.

While some of the customs that are joined to an entree at the British court have been eliminated in recent years, especially since the accession of Queen Mary, the old-the most social poise, for the woman, arrayed for the first time in her flowing court gown, passes under an ordeal hardly realized by the uninitiated. She passionately prays that she will acquit herself beyond comment.

The centre of the dramatic stage produces a fright which sometimes paralyzes both speech and action. The approach to the fashioned rules governing the gowns of both debutantes and court ladies are maintained with even greater faithfulness under the regime of the present sovereign than formerly. From the three ostrich plumes pointing forward in milady's coiffure to the tip of the nine-foot train, each spot must be a very model of nicety. The dress must be either pure white or cream and should be cut of the dress be what might originally be called "too décolleté" it is not improbable that one of Her Majesty's ladies-in-waiting will hint that part of the train is in the wrong place. Shoulder straps are not allowed at a court reception. They are not correct so short sleeves must take their place, while the gloves worn must be of correct length to pass the cursory eyes of Her Majesty's assistants. These are just a few of the little things that must be looked after if the curtsy to Her Majesty is to bear the fruits desired by the lucky social climber.

PRESENTED AT COURT. MRS. H. M. EAST.

Social customs and demands are hard enough for even the ordinary person to learn but the rigmarole of facts and follies that are adjuncts to a court reception frequently better even the most experienced of our social set. Private schools of coaching in court conduct are conducted by numerous well-known women in London who make no mean income from picking to pieces the weaknesses of the social queens.

The list of Canadian women honored at the court of St. James is a long one, and while Toronto is not recognized as the social centre of the Dominion, she has had even more than her own share of representatives at court receptions. Among local women that have been honored are Lady Mackenzie and her daughters, Lady Melvin Jones, Lady Williams Taylor, Mrs. T. Crawford Brown, Mrs. Allan Cassels, Miss Chelsea Cassels, who was presented by her mother, Mrs. Wallace Jones, Mrs. F. H. Phippen, Miss M. Robbins, Mrs. James Scott, Miss M. Campbell, the Misses Plummer, Mrs. H. M. East, and Miss Catherine Welland Merritt.

This list will be added to this year, altho the fortunate women of this city have not yet been notified of their pending presentation.

The privileges of women are said to be limited, but presentation at court of St. James is exclusively a womanly right. Men are not presented. Their only royal recognition comes thru invitations to court functions or a private interview with the King.

That Freezing Fad for Winter Bathing

"Snow Birds" and "Polar Bears" Who Plunge Into Icy Water for the Perilous Fun of the Most "Shocking" Cold Weather Sport

HERE is the recipe for becoming either a "snow bird" or a "polar bear," this choice being offered to comprehend both the women and the men who may read this chronicle of winter aquatic: First, you must be an enthusiastic swimmer, to whom all seasons look alike and to whom the thermometer is merely an abstraction; you must have healthy, red blood, a sound heart and sound wind. Lastly, and what is most requisite, you must possess a high degree of courage—the sort that enables a man to leap out of bed with instant cheerfulness and dress when he would give the world for another hour's sleep.

Men have stood up to be shot, looking unflinchingly into the muzzles of the rifles, and so have been sung as heroes; but, to the view of the uninitiated, the ordeal appears to be less trying than the proposition of plunging into icy water. It is the sudden shock that one is most fearful of less than the anticipation of further physical discomfort.

The Shock That Lures.

But it is this very shock and the cold which set the blood tingling that form the peculiar joy of the "snow bird" and the "polar bear." What at first seems rigorous finally becomes a positive joy. That is how the winter swimmer explains it. The "snow birds" and the "polar bears" are inhabitants of New York and inhabit the Long Island section. The formal opening of the season was on Christmas day at Brighton Beach, though there had been informal gatherings along the beach a week earlier.

Among the Christmas day celebrations were 40 girls, "breaking in" for the first time. The thermometer was 32 on the sands and 35 in the water. The general regret was that there was no snow, for at such times the "snow birds" and the "polar bears" feel that their existence is justified.

All of the gatherings are attended by large and curious "galleries," comfortably coated and muffled from the wind and cold and mutely admiring the enthusiasm and the hardihood of the bathers. Long Island for years has been the home of the winter bather, from the time that the hardy mossback settler on the south shore held that all seasons were bathing seasons, and so made a delight of the frapped baths, to the more recent Capt. Charles McEnroe, savior of hundreds of lives and wearer of 40 medals, who broke through the shore ice to make his way to open water and swam two miles in Long Island sound, off College point.

When the white Sundays come the "snow birds" are, of course, in their element, and if there be ice in the water, so much the better—they will have fulfilled the cherished ideals of their organization. There is no lack of numbers of those who would duplicate old Capt. McEnroe's feat of breaking through the ice to save life.

Miss Elaine Golding, the mermaid, who swam part of the way through the Panama canal, but was prevented from making the entire trip by an official ruling, took part in a trolle on her return from the tropics. In a comparatively short time she had swum from the top to the bottom of the thermometer, so to speak. Sunburned, like a native of the south, she breathed it out two miles toward Sandy Hook.

Icy Water Challenges.

Now it happened that Chief of Detectives Dougherty of New York, who, besides being an expert thief-taker, takes icy swims with as much skill, paddled along with her on her way inshore, not knowing her identity. She readily outdistanced him, and when he followed to the beach and made some joking remark on her prowess she challenged him to a two-mile contest on the following Sunday at Bath Beach, where she makes her home.

Mr. Dougherty has a creditable record as a swimmer, but Miss Golding has not been defeated at any distance of more than a mile. Besides, she holds the record in several long distance swims. Mr. Dougherty learned her identity and her record later. One of his trusted sleuths informed him.

Thus it was that when Miss Golding arrived in the wintry Sunday afternoon, accompanied by a brigade of newspaper and moving picture camera men, the detective chief was nowhere to be found. Not that he had foregone his regular winter swim, because he had entered the water at 10 in the morning instead of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when the girl champion hoped to match her skill against his.

Which shows that, while a "polar bear" may have unquestioned courage, there are times—especially where "snow bird" may be concerned—when he considers discretion the better part of valor. And the failure to race did not prevent Miss Golding from taking the icy plunge, as did the wary detective chief. The only persons who considered the day empty were the camera men.

There is winter bathing all along the south shore of Long Island, most of it individual instances where the persons live near the water, and after the dip run through the biting wind to their homes. At Brighton and Bath beaches are the only regular gatherings, informally organized.

If you were living near by, or were interested enough to make the journey to the beach any Sunday, you could qualify for either "bird" or "bear" with no more condition than that you took the plunge into the icy surf and smiled though the ague of the chill threatened to rattle your teeth out and to dislocate your joints.

Largest Flock of Snow Birds.

This season's list was the largest on record, and before the sun grew warm again and the warm-blooded bathers turn with yearning to the sea, it is highly probable that the flock of "snow birds" will be surprisingly increased.

An athletic expert who watched the Christmas play of the winter bathers remarked that the women naturally stand the cold better than the men, and to illustrate the point indicated the manner in which women dressed for cold weather. "They wear furs, all right," he admitted, "but then much of the neck and the chest is exposed and the sheerest of hose is worn. In fact, a woman dresses as for summer, with the exception of her coat, and that, while pretty as a ribbon-tied confectionery box, often has as much protective quality as a coat of crepe paper.

"You'd think she would freeze to death on an outing or surely contract pneumonia or galloping consumption. But she doesn't—not by a long shot. Rig a full-blooded man out in that weight of masculine dress and he would immediately contract close relationship with rheumatism and a host of other undesirable things.

"It seems to me that woman is naturally a cold-blooded animal. No, I'm not joking! She stands the shock of cold better than man, though she is more delicately constituted in her nervous make-up, just as she stands the shock of sudden disaster better than man. I've seen a 15-year-old girl in summer bathing togs rolling in the snow down here when I was looking on shivering in my fur-lined coat. And once the women become 'snow birds' they are never divorced from it. What's the answer? Figure it out for yourself."

Proud in Their Paris Costumes.

The "snow birds" this winter are proud of their Paris costumes, declaring they are the very latest word in winter beach dress. There are some, however—the glowing veterans of several severe winters gone by—who prefer to make no concessions to fashion, however pictorially becoming, and stick to the one-piece swimming suit. They are so insured to cold that they do not shrink from going liberally uncovered.

The Paris costume might be taken for a one-piece creation but for the flare in the sweater tunic, which is right in the vogue, being slit at the sides. It has been described as "parade dressy," and to watch a score of active, red-cheeked girls so garbed racing or hurling the medicine ball, is worth standing for hours in the cold to see.

Old Neptune should be proud of them, for to the gray, uninviting sea of the arctic months, shunned by the fickle, light-hearted summer hordes, these women turn in the exuberance of health and good will, decking themselves for a holiday.

The Science of Living to be 100

Metchnikoff in His Laboratory.

How Dr. Metchnikoff and Other Scientists Are Seeking to Make Rules and Prescribe Food That Will Put off "Old Age" and Increase the Number of Happy Centenarians.

Dr. Metchnikoff, Leading Advocate of Soured Milk as a Means of Deferring Old Age.

OUT of a day's volume of news recently there appeared, in one issue of the metropolitan press, four stories. Each had for subject a person of great age.

Two women had celebrated their 102nd birthdays, one in Brooklyn, N. Y., the other in Mansfield, Ct. Mrs. Rebecca Clarke, in London, age 103, had presided over the wedding celebration of her son. At West Babylon, L. I., two twin brothers, age 95, had entertained their 30 lineal descendants.

None of these stories was more than a few lines in length. That men and women, here and there, reach the mark of 100 years has ceased to be remarkable.

But the coincidence of the items did attract attention to the fact that these scattered birthday celebrations grow more frequent and thereby indicate a world-wide tendency toward the century mark in life, going to prove that science has, at last, correctly blazed the pathway to this goal. In the activity of the woman of 102 years in Brooklyn, or the one of 103 in London, there is today something of pertinent, personal interest for every one. What hundreds are doing thousands will do. Science is not only proving its theories of longevity, but is harder at work than ever on the steps to a certain age of centenarians.

And the very latest, most approved rules of life—based on an average of practical results and modern standards of public hygiene—are simple. Every man has it in his power to fill out the round of a hundred years.

- 1—Do not worry.
- 2—Be moderate in all things.
- 3—Observe the common laws of hygiene.
- 4—Drink microbe-treated sour milk.

This is the magic regimen, the last composite word from professional life conservationists, hygienists, nature devotees, eugenists, public health experts, medical theorists, centenarians and Metchnikoff, the foremost analytical scientist of the day. The students of life conservation, who hold the Chinese doctor's theory of preventing disease, have easily proven that the average span of life is gradually lengthening and are bending their energies toward those higher standards of hygiene which are necessary to the public growth centuryward.

Municipal Propaganda. Municipal, state, national and international boards of health are daily making the way easier—their tables of statistics are substantial proof. The followers of every other scientific avenue are uniting on the general testimony of the centenarians themselves. And from Africa or the steppes of Russia, the hills of Kentucky or the populous centres of almost any land is coming verification of the efficacy of the Metchnikoff diet.

The theory of this scientist is that physical weakness increases with intestinal putrefaction. To combat the bacilli man has from birth in this part of his organism, to find a harmless enemy of these microbes was the problem which has seemingly been solved by Metchnikoff when he discovered the lactic bacillus. This sour milk microbe feeds upon what may be called the old age microbes; with the declination of the latter youth is figuratively renewed.

"As many different kinds of soured milk have been consumed on a vast scale," Dr. Metchnikoff explains, "and have proved to be useful, it might be supposed that any of them is suitable for regular consumption with the object of preventing intestinal putrefaction. From the point of view of flavor I find that soured milk, prepared from raw milk, is much the more agreeable. However, when a food is to be selected for consumption for a long period of time, we must keep hygiene strictly in view.

About Raw Milk. "Raw milk contains a large assortment of microbes, and frequently some of these are harmful. The bacillus of bovine tuberculosis, as well as other pernicious microbes, may be found in it. Prolonged consumption of raw milk increases the risk of introducing these microbes into the organism, and this possibility drives me to recommend soured milk prepared after heating, boiling the milk for several minutes.

"Bottled milk, to make it undergo the lactic fermentation properly, must have added to it a prepared ferment. What is necessary is not merely rennet, as was formerly supposed, but a number of organized ferments, that is to say, microbes. "In experiments it was the obvious course to begin with the Bulgarian bacillus, as that is known to be the best producer of lactic acid. It number of organized ferments, that is to say, microbes. "In experiments it was the obvious course to begin with the Bulgarian bacillus, as that is known to be the best producer of lactic acid. It with them a certain quantity of life, there is a consensus of opinion sweet food (jam, sweet-meats, and especially best root).

"Cultures of the bacillus can be made not only in milk, but in vegetable broths, or broths of animal peptone to which sugar has been added. They can be taken in dry form (powders or tablets).

"A reader who has little knowledge of such matters may be surprised by my recommendation to absorb large quantities of microbes, as the general belief is that all microbes are harmful. This belief, however, is erroneous. There are many useful microbes, among which the lactic bacilli have an honorable place.

"The course recommended consists of the absorption either of soured milk prepared by a group of lactic bacteria or of pure cultures of the Bulgarian bacillus, but in each case taking, at the same time, a certain quantity of milk sugar or saccharose."

Following Metchnikoff.

The conclusions of Metchnikoff have not been announced until after the most careful and prolonged investigations. All races, with every detail of their manners and customs of life, have been subjected to microscopic dissection. A sour food prepared from the milk of buffaloes, kine or goats was found to have been used by the Egyptians from the remotest antiquity. In the sections of Russia where longevity is common soured milk in great quantities is consumed in two forms, one of which is raw milk spontaneously coagulated and soured, the other of which is boiled milk soured with a yeast. The chief food of many tribes in Africa, noted for their active old men, is soured milk. The staple diet of the Mpeseni is a "curdled milk, almost solidified."

In Bulgaria, where there is almost universal use of sour milk as a diet, the average span of life has been found to be much greater than that in other parts of the world, and the mark of 100 years has never been considered unusual.

Marie Priou, for example, who died at the age of 158 years, lived for the last ten years of her life entirely on cheese and goats' milk. Ambroise Janet, a laborer of Verdun, age 111, ate nothing but unleavened bread and skimmed milk. Nicole Mara, age 110, lived only on bread and milk food. In the village of Sba, in the district of Gori, there lived Thense Abalva, whose age was supposed to be about 180 years. This woman was quite capable and looked after her household duties. Although she was bent, she walked firmly. She never took alcoholic liquors. She rose early in the morning and her chief food was barley bread and buttermilk, taken after the churning of the cream.

While the milk diet is not conspicuous in the rules of living followed by many notable examples of long life, there is a consensus of opinion regarding worry, hygiene and moderation. Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor, says: "A man is just beginning to live at 85. With my system of living I wouldn't be surprised if I should live to be 150 years old."

The Lesson of Centenarians.

Among other prominent exponents of the rules given for reaching 100 are 50 octogenarians of Monroe county, Pennsylvania, who at a celebration last October had for guest of honor Mr. L. Weiss, age 112, who rode 67 miles in an auto to be present; the oldest man since Bible days, Thomas Cam, who died in the parish of St. Leonards, Shoreditch, England, at the age of 207; Dr. Chao Choy, Chinese physician of Toronto, Canada, age 149; Hedwig Stavne, gooseherd, of Dornow, Prussian Poland, age 120; 500 octogenarians in Japan, who have organized a society, "Hyakunin-Kai," the president of which is ex-Premier Count Okuma. (Count Okuma says he will live to be 125.)

"Sleep nights, eat just what you need and no more and don't worry, to live to be 100," declared Philadelphia's three well-known centenarians, Mahala Ayers, age 111; Mrs. Ann Elizabeth Magill, age 103, and Mrs. Elizabeth Wonderly, age 103.

coagulates milk rapidly, giving it a strong acid flavor, but it often also gives a disagreeable taste of tallow.

"After the milk has been boiled and rapidly cooled, pure cultures of the lactic microbes are sown in it. The fermentation lasts a number of hours, and finally produces a sour, curdled milk, pleasant to the taste. This milk, taken daily in small quantities, controls the action of the intestines and stimulates the kidneys favorably. It can, therefore, be recommended in many cases of disorder of the digestive apparatus of the kidneys and in several skin diseases.

"Those persons who, from some reason or other, cannot take milk, may swallow the bacilli in a pure culture without milk. However, as the microbes need sugar to produce lactic acid, it is necessary to take

Goichels and Quavers

A WEEKLY COLUMN OF MUSIC GOSSIP

Owing to the constantly growing demand for sittings at the concerts of the Mendelssohn Choir the pathways are this season finding it advisable to run special trains to Toronto from many of the most important centres in western Ontario. It would be safe to say that the attendance at these concerts would fairly represent the leading professional musical elements of this province.

Special interest is being shown in the orchestral matinee of Thursday afternoon, February 5, in which Mr. Harold Bauer, the eminent Russian pianist, plays the Schumann Concerto. The superb Chicago orchestra, which appears at unusually great strength this season under Mr. Stock, is presenting a magnificent program, including Brahms' Symphony, No. 4; Elgar's Introduction and Allegro, Op. 47; and Strauss' brilliant symphonic poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

The sale of tickets to non-subscribers begins on Wednesday morning, January 28, at 9 a.m.

Rheta Morine Brodie will sing Arthur E. Semple's "Ave Maria" at her recital in Forsters' Hall on the 21st inst. The flute obligato to this beautiful selection will be played by the composer. Miss Brodie will sing a very interesting program, including excerpts from Gault's "Joan of Arc," Handel's "Judas Macabaeus," Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and songs by Stewart, Craigie Ross, Hugo Wolf, George Hue, Dvorak, Stange, Franz and Brahms. Miss Brodie is one of Marie C. Strong's most promising pupils, and has made a distinct place for herself at the annual studio recitals. Moreover, she is winning her way to the front, both in church and concert work.

George Dixon, the tenor, has been spending much of his concert time in the United States, under his New York management, but is now booking engagements through Canada. The following is taken from The Waverley Review: "Owing to the excellence of his recital here three months ago, Mr. Dixon was received with great enthusiasm. He was in excellent vocal condition, and displayed the same beautiful art in phrasing and finish, whether in the pathetic appeal of 'The Sands of Dee' or the rollicking aria from 'Cagliostro.' His enunciation is clear and distinct, which gives added charm to his always admirable interpretation. For pleasing stage presence, ease of manner, and a wide range of vocal power, variety of theme and versatility, Waverley has never heard the equal of this artist."

The Prince of Hayti is one of the well-known musical amateurs in Paris and is said to possess an excellent natural baritone voice.

The Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company has been reorganized and Mr. Hopper as the principal attraction, will open its season in Canada on February 26. In addition to Mr. Hopper the company will include Arthur Aldridge, Arthur Cunningham, Herbert Waterous, John C. Thomas, Alice Brady, Gladys Caldwell, Sara Edwards, Florence Lee, Gertrude Self and Marie Mordant.

The church at Arnstadt, where Bach was organist from 1703 to 1707, has been completely restored, its organ, constructed at a cost of $450,000 from an English capitalist to purchase the building.

An excellent photograph of Luigi von Kunits, principal of the violin department of the Canadian Academy of Music, appears in last week's issue of Musical America.

Special musical services are being given each Sunday evening by the choir of College Street Presbyterian Church under the direction of James Quinlan.

Jan and Boris Hambourg, Paul Morzy, Mary Campbell, Miss Snielek and Margaret Valente gave a delightful program on January 16th at the beautiful concert given at Frederick Mercer, Moore Park.

Angela Binden-Edwards announced a musicale for February 4th, in which a number of her vocal pupils will take part.

Notwithstanding the bereavement sustained by the family of Dr. Edward Broome in the death of their little son on Sunday, there will be no postponement of the "Messiah" concert next week.

Two members of the staff of the Canadian Academy of Music have had honor kept upon them this week. Miss E. H. Keenan, on account of the artistic triumph of his pupil, Vera Barstow, at Massey Hall, as soloist at the National Chorus concert, and Francis Fisher Powers, whose former pupil Belle Broome, has made such a hit at Shea's this week with her beautiful singing.

Madame Kathryn Innes-Taylor is giving a song recital on Wednesday evening, February 11, in the Margaret Eaton Hall at which she will sing songs by Faure, Debussy, Renaldo, Chabrier, Mallinson, Cyril Scott, Berlioz and Easthope, Martin. The feature of the program will be a group of cradle songs. Mme. Innes-Taylor has spent some time in choosing them in order that each one may be characteristic of the composer among whom are: Tschalkowsky, Balakorev, Grieg, Brahms and Scott. The recital is under the patronage of Sir John and Lady Girard, Mrs. H. D. Warren, Mrs. Gerard Heintzman, Mrs. Murray, Alexander, Mrs. John Garvin, Mrs. P. C. Larkins, Mrs. George G. Burnett, Mrs. Agar Adamson, Mrs. F. B. Elliott, Mrs. McGillivray, Knowles, Mrs. M. G. Keown, Mrs. Frederick Paul, Miss Amy A. Strath, Mrs. George Kerr and Mrs. R. S. Williams.

A very fine students' recital was held at the Canadian Academy of Music last Saturday afternoon when the teachers represented were Peter C. Kennedy, Francis Fischer Powers, Luigi von Kunits, J. E. Newton, George Bruce, Walter Howe, Walter Kirshbaum, Stanley Adams, P. C. Smith, and J. Y. S. Ross. These recitals are steadily growing in interest and the rapid progress shown by the pupils is a high testimonial to the excellence of the staff equipment.

An interesting and comprehensive series of ensemble concerts are being arranged by Dr. Vogt in connection with the season's work at the Toronto Conservatory of Music. A number of advanced pupils and student teachers of the institution will cooperate with Miss Lina Adams and Dr. Leo Smith in a selection of standard trios, in the quartets, quintets, etc., the Toronto String Quartet will co-operate. Works under preparation at the present time embrace trios, quartets and quintets by Mendelssohn, Mozart, Beethoven, Godard, Arensky, Schumann, Reisinger, Dvorak and Schubert.

Stanley Adams gives an evening of "Song and Story" in Hamilton on February 9, and later in the season in Montreal and other eastern cities.

The Old Country Cricket Club is giving its third annual concert in the school hall of the Parkdale Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening, January 27. Those providing the program are: Alfred H. Hinton, pianist; Jean Reade, E. Hazelton, R. Gourlay, McKenzle, S. Winifred Parker, vocalists; Joan Mitchell Hunter, violinist; Grace Webster, elocutionist, and Olive Henderson, accompanist.

It will doubtless be of interest to lovers of music to know of the Ingall concert which takes place in Forsters' Hall on Thursday, January 29. Mr. Ingall, who is a pupil of James Dickson, Washington, D. C., will be assisted by Jean Hunter, violinist; Harvey Robb, pianist, and Ethel Cocking, elocutionist. The entire vocal program will be made up of English songs.

Frieda Langendorff, teacher of several of Toronto's well-known singers, is singing with great success in Dresden and Prague.

Officers of the Steamship Gregory, who rescued five survivors of the Oklahoma, were in Toronto last week. The popular impresario, at a recent violin recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, when Captain Aspinwall and his men occupied two boxes.

E. A. V. Stanley, the present proprietor of the London Opera House, visited De Wolf Hagner, Canada, has received an offer of $450,000 from an English capitalist to purchase the building.

The Prince of Hayti is one of the well-known musical amateurs in Paris and is said to possess an excellent natural baritone voice.

GREAT CROWDS FOR MENDELSSOHN WEEK

Presence of Royalty Will Add Ech to International Gatherings.

This season's concerts of the Mendelssohn Choir promise to surpass in interest any ever given by the society. Capacity houses seem assured for all of the performances, and at no time in the history of the society has the demand for accommodation from distant points been so large as this year. In a real sense these concerts may be deemed international, in their significance and influence.

For the opening night on Monday, Feb. 2, the conductor has chosen a number of choral masterpieces representative of the finest creations in Slavonic and Italian music. Besides Moussorgsky's gorgeously scored "Song of Tschalkowsky's" most brilliant and telling a capella choral work, the Cherubim Song No. 3, which was last sung by the society in its New York concert of 1907, a splendidly virile and rhythmically exhilarating example of Slav national folk scenes by Nowowiecki, will be included in the program. Verdi's inspiring Stabat Mater will have its Toronto premiere on this occasion, besides the Dominie Jesu, Sanctus and the thrilling Libera Me from the "Mozart" Requiem, in which Verdi's great genius is superbly emphasized. Added eclat will be lent the inauguration of this year's concert by the presence of His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, whose interest in music is well-known.

The chief choral offerings of Tuesday evening are Wolf Ferrar's masterpiece, "La Vita Nuova," and the quaint Austrian ballad for men's chorus and orchestra, "Erzige Egen." The two most important of recent British choral works, namely, Elgar's "The Music Makers," and Coleridge Taylor's "A Tale of Old Japan" constitute the program of Wednesday evening. Thursday evening's choral offerings include a number of well-chosen novelties, amongst which Julius Harrison's stirring "Viking Song" for men's chorus and orchestra stands prominent.

The sale of tickets for subscribers opens on Thursday morning, Jan. 22, at nine o'clock.

Jan and Boris Hambourg gave their fifth and final concert in Rochester on Friday. Their program included Franck's quintet and Beethoven's A Major sonata for cello and piano of modern Royal solo. This is the second season that these clever musicians have given a series of concerts in Rochester, and arrangements are already concluded for a third season, beginning next autumn. They are also booking numerous engagements in other American cities, when Ethel Newcomb and Legniska will be the assisting artists.

The latter were given by members of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Miss Estelle Carey, the splendid young soprano from Hamilton. Miss Carey was heard by many hearers by the wonderful flexibility and power of her voice. Many comments were heard on her almost marvellous enunciation.

Miss Carey sang "Haymaking," by Needham, and "Invictus," by Bruno Huhn, in the afternoon; and "Nymphs and Fauns," by Bemberg; "At Dawning," by Cadman, and "Smiles," by Maxwell, in the evening. She was obliged to give encores for every selection, so enthusiastic was her reception.

The day will long be remembered in the annals of musical history as a criterion in commercial conduct, devoting a day entirely to music at a complete sacrifice in revenue.

When the Quinlan Opera Company comes here next Spring, many music lovers will recognize a familiar figure in the person of E. C. Hedmond, who acts with the production capacity in connection with the famous Grand Opera Company in English, which will be a feature of the Atlantic's repertoire in Montreal, Toronto and other Canadian cities. Mr. Hedmond, the no longer singing leading roles, is remembered for his beautiful singing of the title role of "Le Cid" throughout the United States and Canada, with the famous Grand Opera Company, twenty years ago. The most of his fame has been won on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Hedmond is a native of the State of Maine. He received his early education in a College at Montreal, and later took a course at the University of Jena, Germany. Deciding to devote himself to a musical career, he studied singing, piano and theory at Leipzig Conservatory, and was for several years a leading tenor at the opera in that famous centre of artistic enterprise. Later he went to the Royal Opera in Berlin, and was in 1888 engaged by Frau Cosima Wagner as one of the leading tenors of the Bayreuth Festival. The next year

DAMROSCH ANSWERS FOREIGN CRITICS

Leading European and American Musicians Indulge in a Warm Discussion.

Much discussion has been carried on in Musical America of late on the question of home and foreign training for musical students. In last week's issue the following interesting interview with Walter Damrosch appears:

Walter Damrosch answered his foreign critics in an interview here today, and incidentally upheld the contention of John C. Freund editor of Musical America, that the practice of American musical students of going to Europe for their tuition is a waste of money and under certain conditions of grave danger to health and morals.

Regarding the first subject he said: "The conditions of the lack of morality among musical pupils abroad, and for which I have been denounced by Berlin critics, were prevalent in Milan, Italy, twenty-three years ago. I did not say anything of conditions at the present time for I have not been in position for a good many years to know of them, but from what I have heard of them I have no reason to change my opinion.

"As for girls going to Europe to study music, it is unnecessary and actually harmful. They spend their money uselessly and come back with only the name of having studied abroad, not being as far advanced as they would have been had they studied at home. American teachers are the best. They are the most thorough, most able and the most energetic. They care more for results than they do for money they get. In Europe, the teachers look for the money first and do not care much about results.

"Americans are beginning to realize this. They have long looked with awe upon a student returned from abroad, but familiarly with his or her playmate or singing in later years, has disclosed that Americans who completed their studies at home were better than Americans, a discerning individual. It doesn't take many observations of this kind to see thru the tinsel of foreign study and so-called finishing. After a while they will cease going over there."

Williams' 65th Anniversary a Memorable One

Last Tuesday a Festival of Music in Their Warrooms—2000 Guests Were Delighted.

Last Tuesday, from 9.30 a. m. to 10.30 p. m., the warrooms of the R. S. Williams & Sons Co., Ltd., of 145 Yonge street, were thrown open and visitors thronged the ten floors, listening to the concerts, recitals and demonstrations on the various floors and thoroughly enjoying the hospitality of the management.

Mr. Williams' collection of rare old violins; photographs on the second floor, especially Mr. Edison's new diamond disc; and the two concerts on the fourth floor, were the feature events.

The latter were given by members of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Miss Estelle Carey, the splendid young soprano from Hamilton. Miss Carey was heard by many hearers by the wonderful flexibility and power of her voice. Many comments were heard on her almost marvellous enunciation.

Miss Carey sang "Haymaking," by Needham, and "Invictus," by Bruno Huhn, in the afternoon; and "Nymphs and Fauns," by Bemberg; "At Dawning," by Cadman, and "Smiles," by Maxwell, in the evening. She was obliged to give encores for every selection, so enthusiastic was her reception.

The day will long be remembered in the annals of musical history as a criterion in commercial conduct, devoting a day entirely to music at a complete sacrifice in revenue.

When the Quinlan Opera Company comes here next Spring, many music lovers will recognize a familiar figure in the person of E. C. Hedmond, who acts with the production capacity in connection with the famous Grand Opera Company in English, which will be a feature of the Atlantic's repertoire in Montreal, Toronto and other Canadian cities. Mr. Hedmond, the no longer singing leading roles, is remembered for his beautiful singing of the title role of "Le Cid" throughout the United States and Canada, with the famous Grand Opera Company, twenty years ago. The most of his fame has been won on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Hedmond is a native of the State of Maine. He received his early education in a College at Montreal, and later took a course at the University of Jena, Germany. Deciding to devote himself to a musical career, he studied singing, piano and theory at Leipzig Conservatory, and was for several years a leading tenor at the opera in that famous centre of artistic enterprise. Later he went to the Royal Opera in Berlin, and was in 1888 engaged by Frau Cosima Wagner as one of the leading tenors of the Bayreuth Festival. The next year

"WHEN STRONG WILLS CLASH" AT THE PARK

The Park Theatre still continues to prove itself to be one of the leading theatres in the city. The programs which are supplied are always of exceptional merit and includes four really high-class vaudeville acts and several of the very best and latest motion picture films.

Wednesday, which is the night of the week, is devoted to amateur talent, special prizes being awarded to the best turn of the evening. Great amusement is caused by the efforts of some of the aspirants to the stage.

As a special attraction for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, an especially fine two-reel drama will be introduced, entitled, "When Strong Wills Clash." This is a play of an exceptionally attractive nature and should be appreciated by the patrons of this popular west-end house.

"THE SEA ETERNAL" AT ASTER THEATRE

The leading feature of the Monday and Tuesday program at the Aster Theatre will be "The Flower of Destiny," a splendidly worked out two-reel drama.

On Wednesday and Thursday an extra special attraction, the management of this popular house has secured "The Sea Eternal," one of the very best two-reel features procurable.

The story in this play is most interesting. It deals with a young couple. The wife is in danger of drowning and the husband fails to save her. She, however, is washed ashore in a neighboring town, but has lost her memory. Some years later a man is seen in a dangerous position and the half-witted woman risks her life to save him. On seeing it is her husband the woman recovers her memory.

Other features will also be added to the program.

"THE MUTUAL GIRL" AT GARDEN THEATRE

The success of the new enterprise of the Garden Theatre is assured. At each of the evening performances the house was packed, and the matinees were a complete success.

For Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week the program will be on the same high-class basis. The leading feature will be a photo play, "Mothers," a four-reel feature adapted from the novel of the same title. In conjunction with this another special feature will be shown, entitled "The Mutual Girl," a play which is classed as the best now in use.

As last week the theatre will open at 7.30. Two single reel plays will be shown to start the entertainment, thus giving patrons time to take their seats before 8.30, when the big features will be shown. After the big features are completed the two-reel which started the program will again be shown, so that everybody will have an opportunity of witnessing the whole program.

The prices of admission for this week will be 10c, 15c and 25c, while the price at the matinee will be 10c for all seats.

WONDERFUL PLAY AT COLONIAL THEATRE

One of the very best releases during the past months is to be the leading feature of the program at the Colonial Theatre, on Monday and Tuesday.

"Absinthe," which is in four parts is without the slightest doubt the most absorbing play ever introduced in this form of entertainment. As for the acting in the production, to say that King Baggot is to play the leading man is sufficient but to add that Leah Baird takes the leading ladies part, is to say that it must be a play of exceptional merit. It is said to be the best thing ever enacted by these two star players.

"Absinthe," was made in Paris, in the very heart of the district which is infested by drinkers of this terrible spirit. It has the atmosphere, the story, the plot, and straight from the shoulder touch.

It should certainly prove to be a great attraction to this popular city theatre.

"OLGA TRESKOFF" AT ECLIPSE THEATRE

The leading attraction at the Eclipse Theatre on Monday and Tuesday will be "Olga Treskoff," featuring Helen Gardner.

The scene of this remarkable feature is laid in Russia, and is a portrayal of the revolutionary uprisings in that country.

Olga Treskoff, the charming daughter of a prosperous merchant, is loved by Paul, a poor woodchopper.

Baron Barovitch, a retired army general, is involved in a political conspiracy. On the way to meet a Japanese agent to deliver a map of Russia's fortifications to the baron, she injures his knee. Paul and Olga's father appear and they help the wounded man to Treskoff's home. The baron meets Olga and is fascinated by her beauty. Realizing that he cannot deliver the secret plans because of his injuries, the baron dispatches Paul with the papers, getting the oath that he will under no conditions disclose the identity of the sender.

Just as Paul delivers the envelope containing the plans he is arrested for a crime that he is guiltless of, and is sentenced to Siberia.

Olga Treskoff becomes the wife of Baron Barovitch. In the meantime it is discovered that he is the real culprit. Olga fatally stabs the chief of police, who had insulted her, and accompanies her husband to Siberia.

There the baron meets Paul. A quarrel ensues near a precipice, and in the struggle they lose their foothold and are dashed to pieces on the crags below.

Grief-stricken, Olga's only hope is that death will soon take her.

"ANTIQUÉ BROOCH" AT MADISON THEATRE

A program of exceptional interest has been secured by the management of the Madison Theatre for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

In addition to the usual magnificent entertainment for which this splendid house is noted, a splendid two-reel drama will be introduced, entitled "The Antique Brooch." This splendid photoplay will be shown at this theatre for the first time in the city, and should certainly prove to be a great drawing card for the patrons of this house.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday another two-reel drama will be shown for the first time. "The Smuggler's Son," is a story of exceptional interest. It is of a most thrilling nature, and should be most appreciated by the audience of the theatre.

Several other most attractive features will be included in both the programs, making the entertainment exceptionally enjoyable.

The orchestra at this theatre is not the least attractive feature, special music being rendered during the program.

NEW CANADIAN FEATURE FILM CO.

Mr. Alfred Lake, former proprietor of the Criterion Theatre, Toronto, and Mr. Ernest Noble, late of the Consolidated Feature Film Company, have entered into the feature renting field under the name of Lake and Noble Feature Film Attractions, with offices in Toronto and Montreal. Their local office is now open for business at 36 Richmond street east.

These gentlemen have the double advantage of exhibiting and the exchange business, and they hold very optimistic hopes of making their venture a success.

Mr. Noble just left New York after purchasing the best features this market afforded and he invites the exhibitors in Eastern Canada, including Ontario and Quebec, to get in touch with this new company in order that they procure the very latest feature productions.

JOHN E. BRENNAN, THE KALEM STAR COMEDIAN, WAS A MINSTREL

Although a Well-Known Stage and Vaudeville Comedian, His Comical Personality Has Equipped Him for Photo-plays—Dan Leno of America.

It was to be expected that Mr. John E. Brennan's entrance to the field of motion pictures should mean signal success for this celebrated humorist. During his career on the stage he has made millions laugh—both in America and Europe. His comical personality and his many humorous creations have peculiarly equipped him for photo plays.

Mr. Brennan, who is of Irish parentage, was born in Springfield, Mass. At an early age he made his first stage appearance as a dancer in numerous "elimination competitions," including a contest with Johnnie Williams, the Lankashire lad—champion of England—he outclassed all rivals and gained the title of the world's greatest clog dancer. For several years Mr. Brennan was leading comedian with notable minstrel organizations, one of his best known engagements being that of end man with the famous Primrose and West organization.

Later he accepted an engagement as stock comedian at Keith's, in Boston, playing the principal comedy roles in the plays which Mr. Keith presented as afterpieces for Milton Aborn's comic operas.

Then followed many successful seasons in which Mr. Brennan starred in his own company, presenting "The Ivy Leaf," "An Irishman's Love," "Dear Irish Boy," "True Irish Hearts," "The Tinker," and a Scotch play, "Bonnie Scotland."

He is as jolly in real life as he appears on the stage, and is a prime favorite with his fellow players in the Kalem Santa Monica Comedy Company. Mr. Brennan has now established a home in that city.

"I might as well admit," he says, "that I have practically said goodbye to the stage. I enjoy every minute of my work in the pictures—even when I have to fall downstairs—and as my one aim in life has been to make people laugh, the fact that hundreds of audiences throughout the world are seeing my performances simultaneously has spurred me to newer and greater things."

"THE CONVICT'S STORY" IS A CLEVER DETECTIVE PLAY

The Audiences Are Mystified and Interested Thruout the Entire Two-Reel Product in the Kalem Company's Latest Release—Prison Life Clearly Shown.

A photoplay which really succeeds in mystifying the audience, keeping it in doubt as to the real perpetrator of a crime for which the hero is sent to prison is to be found in the latest two-part Kalem production, "The Convict's Story." This drama is to be shown at motion picture theatres, commencing Monday, Feb. 2.

Briefly told, Lawrence, a young society man, is sent to prison on a charge of having stolen a necklace belonging to his fiancée. All the evidence points to the man's guilt. In fact so cleverly is the story told, that even the photoplay patrons are inclined to side with the jury that convicted the man. Later, in astounding fashion, Lawrence is proved innocent. The production is greatly aided by the superb performance of Carlyle Blackwell, the popular Kalem leading man. The story follows:

Lawrence is invited to attend the New Year's party given by Elizabeth Craig, his sweetheart. As the boy leaves the fashionable boarding house where he is stopping, he drops Elizabeth's invitation.

On the night of the affair, Elizabeth's father, presents the girl with a magnificent diamond necklace. The girl shows the jewel to Lawrence, who calls presently. The two are in the library just before midnight, when Lawrence asks Elizabeth to be his wife. Drooping her head, the girl shyly consents.

His happiness brimming over, the boy seizes Elizabeth in his arms. As he does so, his cuff link becomes entangled in her necklace, tearing it from her throat. Lawrence disengages the jewel and places it on the table.

A few minutes later, the merry-makers in the reception room shout out to the lovers to come and count the year out. With a hasty kiss, Lawrence and Elizabeth leave the room. Shortly afterwards, Lawrence makes ing the ensuing six months wins for him the favor of the prison officials.

At the end of that period, Jarly, who styles himself as a "gentleman crook," arrives to serve a term. The following Sunday finds him sitting in the midst of a group of convicts who are eager to learn of the events of the outside world. Lawrence is one of the group.

Jarly boastfully recites some of his adventures. Finally, the man starts on one of his most recent escapades. According to the thief, about six months previous he secured a room in a fashionable boarding house. As he was leaving his room that evening, the man saw his next-door neighbor drop a letter in the hallway. Waiting until the young man had departed, Jarly picked the missive up.

Continuing, the crook declares that it was an invitation to a New Year's celebration, which was to be held at the home of one of the city's most prominent men. On the spur of the moment, Jarly decided to lurk in the vicinity of the house, in hopes of striking something promising.

On the night of the affair, states Jarly, he crept on to the verandah and cautiously peered into one of the rooms. Standing near one of the tables, he saw a young man and a girl. As he gazed, he saw the man disengage a necklace that had caught in his cuff link, and then place the jewel on the table. Shortly afterward, Jarly saw the man leaving the room, leaving the necklace behind.

Seizing advantage of the opportunity, Jarly slipped into the room thru the window and picked the necklace up, departing immediately. For some reason, he feared that the theft had been seen and that he was being followed.

Lawrence listens to this tale in dazed amazement. He realizes that here lies the solution to the theft of Elizabeth's necklace. A theft which has cost him his name and reputation. Jarly goes on. Hastening home in fear, he entered the house, and then his departure, declaring that the last car for his home leaves at half-past twelve. Her sweetheart has no sooner gone when Elizabeth misses her necklace. Remembering that it had been placed on the library table, the girl runs into the room. The jewel is gone.

A terrible fear clutches Elizabeth's heart, but she desperately drives it out. Inquiring to her father, she tells him of her loss. Craig listens to her story in grim silence. Stunned by the mysterious disappearance of the necklace, the guests depart in silence.

Craig declares his belief in Lawrence's guilt, pointing to the young man's hasty departure as proof. Summoning an officer, Elizabeth pleads so hard to be allowed to accompany him that her father finally gives his consent.

Lawrence is mystified upon seeing his sweetheart, her father, and a policeman enter his room, when he opens the door in response to their knock. His face depicts his amazement when Craig bluntly accuses him of having stolen the necklace. Flushing with suppressed anger, Lawrence turns to the door and orders him to raise the alarm.

Without further ado, the officer commences his search. Elizabeth looks on in amazement in a way which shows her belief in his innocence. A moment later, both turn in response to an exultant cry from the policeman. Diving into the bottom of the dresser drawer, the man brings to view the missing jewel.

Elizabeth falls back with a cry of horror, while Lawrence stares as if petrified. His shoulders slowly droop, while his head drops forward. For a moment he turns as if to speak, but realizing the utter futility of words, the boy turns to the officer and holds out his hands for the steel bracelets.

Lawrence's arrest creates a sensation. The papers are filled with the story of a society thief. Barely after having reached the jury room, the 12 men and women reach their verdict of "guilty." The boy is sentenced to serve 19 years in prison.

Upon arriving at the grim, gray building, which is to be his home for the next decade, Lawrence is assigned to clerical work. His weekly durransacked his mind in an effort to find a hiding place for his loot. An idea came upon him like an inspiration.

Entering the room of his next-door neighbor, the crook placed the necklace in the bottom of the dresser drawer, certain that the tenant of the room would not disturb the contents. It was his intention to return the next morning and recover the jewel.

Fate intervened. Jarly declares with a rueful smile. The police entered his neighbor's room and found the jewel. As the result, the man was arrested and sent up.

Filled with rage, Lawrence leaps upon Jarly the moment the infamous tale is concluded. Guards separate the men and learn the story. The amazing tale reaches the ears of the authorities and Lawrence is freed.

Craig overcomes with remorse when the papers tell him of Lawrence's innocence. Hastening to the prison he is the first to greet the boy upon his release. Eager to make amends for the wrong he had heaped upon the boy, Craig gladly gives Lawrence his consent to marry Elizabeth.

MISS KELLERMANN HAS BAD ACCIDENT

Knocked Senseless While Diving From a High Cliff With a Man.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Annette Kellermann, who is with the Universal Company in Bermuda, was knocked senseless during one of the scenes of "Neptune's Daughter," which calls for a struggle between Miss Kellermann and Herbert Brenon, who plays the part of a fisherman. While plunging from a high cliff into the sea, clasped in each other's arms, Mr. Brenon's head struck Miss Kellermann's temple, rendering her unconscious. She was saved by her husband, Mr. Hopper, Brenon's assistant, who named a boat and came to her rescue. Altho she recovered shortly, it was impossible for her to continue in the picture until the following day.

"LEAH KLESCHNA" AT CARLTON THEATRE

The Famous Players' productions are drawing big crowds to the Carlton Theatre. For Monday and Tuesday of this week the management have secured "Leah Kleschna" featuring that wonderful actress, Carlotta Nilsen.

This is, doubtless, the best of the Famous Players' series. The photography is splendid. The story is too well known to need repetition.

For Wednesday and Thursday the management has secured a splendid two-reel drama, entitled, "The Flower of Destiny," which on Friday and Saturday "The Golden Pathway," a most absorbing two-reel play, will occupy the chief position on the program.

In addition to these big feature plays several of the very best and latest one-reel comedies and dramas will be shown.

BIG IMPROVEMENTS AT U-KUM THEATRE

This well-known theatre at Dovercourt and College has undergone considerable alterations, which have undoubtedly brought it up to the top notch as a "theatre worth while," and will be fully appreciated by patrons in this locality. The entrance is a decided improvement, and the soft, velvety feel of the heavy carpeting after one enters the inner door leaves the strong impression of comfort and homeliness. The management are to be congratulated on the new innovations, which should add immensely to the popularity of the house. For Monday and Tuesday the special attraction will be "The Adventures of Kathlyn," now running in serial form in one of the newspapers. On Wednesday "The Ancient Order of Goodfellows" will be the attraction, and deserves the patronage of the residents in this district. A number of first-class comedies and educational and interesting films will help to complete the program.

On Monday and Tuesday at the Royal George Theatre, St. Clair and Dufferin, present "The Lavenders," a powerful drama in two parts.

TWO BIG FEATURES AT ROYAL GEORGE

On Wednesday and Thursday the leading feature will be "Checkers," one of the most interesting sporting dramas ever introduced in this form of entertainment.

The acting is perhaps the chief feature of the entertainment, this being remarkable good. Many stirring horse race scenes are introduced and these, mixed with a splendid love story, make it a drama of special interest.

ATTRACTIVE FILMS AT PRINCE GEORGE

The Prince George Theatre, Dundas street, has been successful in securing three programs of exceptional merit.

On Monday and Tuesday, "Under the Black Flag," a powerful drama in three parts will be the chief feature. On Tuesday and Wednesday, "Rastless Spirit," another interesting drama in three parts will be shown.

The chief attraction of the week however is left for Friday, when "Checkers," the best sporting drama ever written will be shown. The drama is of particular interest and introduces Mr. Thomas W. Ross in the title role.

NEW THEATRE OPENS ON CLINTON STREET

The Willowdale Theatre, corner of Clinton and Bloor street, opened its doors last week, and promises to be one of the best and most comfortable family motion picture houses in the district. The management will introduce special features on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and are sparing no expense to give patrons a really first-class presentation of the world's best productions in motion picture photography. The house is well ventilated, and when being passed by the inspectors every detail was O.K'd without a single alteration being required. For Monday and Tuesday "Thieves and the Cross," in two sensational parts, will be staged. On Wednesday and Thursday "Influence and Sympathy," in two parts; and Friday and Saturday, "Raspberries to President," a powerfully told story of exceptional merit. Also a host of other attractions.

"CHECKERS" AT THE KING GEORGE

On Monday and Tuesday the King George Theatre, Bloor street, has secured a worthy successor to "David Copperfield," which proved such a tremendous success. On these two days the management will introduce "Checkers," one of the very best sporting dramas ever presented in this form of entertainment. It is full of exceptionally interesting and stirring moments which is run in conjunction with a very pretty love story, making it a feature of special merit.

BIG PRODUCTIONS AT IDLE HOUR THEATRE

"In the Tools of an Adventress," a dramatic story of love and intrigue will be the leading attraction on Monday and Tuesday, at the Idle Hour Theatre, Queen and Parliament streets. This feature has been secured at enormous expense, and it should certainly prove to be a great attraction to this popular house. The story is in three parts and deals with a son's desperate efforts to save his father from ruin and shame.

On Wednesday and Thursday, as an extra special attraction, the management has secured "The Living Corpse," a thrilling drama adapted from the famous story by Count Leo Tolstol. There is not the slightest doubt but that the expense to which the management of this house has been put in procuring two such fine features, will be much appreciated by the patrons of the house.

SOCIETY ATTENDS OPENING NEW MOVIE

The Vermont Theatre, Bathurst and Vermont, was formally opened on Wednesday evening last, under distinguished patronage. The presence of Chief Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, accompanied by Lady Falconbridge and party, also Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, W. R. and Mrs. Johnston and party, helped considerably to make the new venture most auspicious. This new family theatre is eminently adapted to meet the requirements for an up-to-date motion picture house in Dupont and Bathurst street vicinity. The construction provides ample ventilation, with a seating capacity of nearly 400 in the auditorium, and the management, Messrs. H. E. Stonge and W. C. Harwood, have gone to considerable expense to make the Vermont one of the most popular cinematographic theatres in the city. A special feature, entitled "Thor, the Lord of the Jungle," was staged on the opening night before a crowded audience, supplemented by a first-class orchestra, which was enthusiastically pre-lauded. Special features will be shown Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; two days have been allowed for each, with a host of other comedies and unique attractions. For next week the following program will be projected: Monday and Tuesday, "The An-

SCIENT ORDER OF GOODFELLOWS" A POWERFUL STORY WELL ACTED; Wednesday and Thursday, "The Street Singer," an exceptionally interesting love drama; and on Friday and Saturday, "The Express Car Mystery." Along with these will be run a good variety of the real comedies, and other high-class productions.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS AS MOTION PLAY

Edward Abeles Will Play Lead in This Famous Old Comedy.

With Edward Abeles in the role of Monty Brewster, a part he has played over eighteen hundred times, the Jessie Lasky Feature Play Company will shortly begin work on a film production of Brewster's Millions. The film will be in five reels, and will be staged at the company's studio at Hollywood, Cal. The scenes aboard ship will, however, be staged on a yacht. Work on the new Hollywood studio is being rushed for completion about February 1.

Cecil C. De Mille and Oscar Apfel, who are now putting the finishing touches to the Lasky film production of "The Squaw Man," will also stage "Brewster's Millions." "The Squaw Man," the Lasky Company's first release, is scheduled for February 15.

"Home, Sweet Home"

A homeless man wrote "Home, Sweet Home!" Perhaps no other could ever have expressed the intense longing—the yearning—the keen pangs of a heart starving for home—for hearthstone and loved ones.

Certainly no words and no music could convey with more feeling that greatest of passions of the human heart—the desire for a home of its own. But one other desire on earth surpasses it—and that comes—mercifully—only to old age—when it longs for its home "not built with hands, eternal in the heavens."

This world-wide melody occurs in Bishop's opera of "Clara, the Maid of Milan," brought out at Covent Garden in 1823. In the published music it is called a "Sicilian Air"—but it is probably Bishop's own. It was the favorite encore of Jenny Lind—and thousands wept when they heard her sing it.

THE STAGE

How the Classic Dance Arrived in Vaudeville

Four years ago, a clever Italian in New York thought it was time to give vaudevillians the chance of seeing better acts than they were in the habit of seeing. He spent a great deal of time trying to think of and plan something original. It was to be quite different from anything that had ever been tried out anywhere.

The result was a beautiful Greek myth, formed into tangible reality on the stage. The story of the myth was this: The spirit of dancing lived in a beautiful garden. She had never seen a mortal, and spent her days flitting amongst the trees and flowers. One day, a shepherd boy chanced to wander into the garden, and lay down to rest. While he slept, the spirit came, and looked upon a human being for the first time. He awoke. He was fascinated by her. But always she danced around him, and away from him. He could not touch her. He sang to her, as she danced airs from Puccini and Leoncavallo. But the beautiful spirit always evaded him, and floated away in a myriad changing of lights.

That was to be a vaudeville turn four years ago. Just about the time when all theatres were raving about the Merry Widow Waltz. The Italian found his actors, spent a great deal of money in scenery and lights. Day after day he rehearsed it, until the two people who were acting in it were perfect in their parts. Then, he gave a performance for the critics. They lauded, they praised, they poured extravagant epithets into his ear. But they said it would never go. It was not time for such good stuff on the vaudeville stage. The audience would boo it, they would run the artists off the stage. Probably in ten years it would go. Wait and see.

That was two years ago. This season has brought us such stars as David Blapham, Ethel Jackson and Blanche Buica. Last season saw Ethel Barrymore in the variety shows. It looks like a sort of rapid evolution.

But now comes the surprise. This week found a company of artists at Shea's, carrying out the idea of the Italian of four seasons ago. It remained for Madame Marini and Mr. Marcel Bronski to bring a small ballet and introduce the classic dances to the vaudeville audiences. As yet, their audiences do not seem to know whether to laugh or remain serious during the dancing. But Madame Marini has great hopes, and while they are not making any great financial gain as yet, she thinks the time is not far distant when vaudeville will see the best acts, songs and dances, in modified form.

Frank Manning Once Ran and Acted In His Own House

Frank Manning, who played Jake Rothschild in "Maggie Pepper" last week, has had quite a varied experience in the show business. Eighteen or twenty years ago he owned a little theatre in Easton, Pennsylvania. It was one of those—well, of the very lightest form of amusement. The slap-stick sort, probably would be a good name for it. Manning was cashier, proprietor, stage director and actor, all in one. He used to go on and do his turn, then rush wildly around to the box office to count up the receipts.

When the company were playing there, not many weeks ago, the manager of the theatre, on hearing that Frank Manning was to appear, exclaimed, "Well, I thought Manning would finally specialize in one line. Five or six years were too many to have in one line, even tho' it was a cheap vaudeville one."

Rose Stahl Hopes to Pick A Good One Out of Three

Rose Stahl, who has just closed a successful week here in "Maggie Pepper," is a Canadian. She was born in Montreal, and spent eight years in the Sacred Heart Convent there. She speaks French fluently. Her greatest hobby is the study of human nature. Needless to say, she has plenty of opportunity to indulge it. In the shops, where she spends a great deal of time, being an inveterate shopper, in the hotels, in the theatre, even, she observes the people about her. This, undoubtedly, accounts for the finish—at least for some of the finish of her plays. She listens to conversation, she watches people while they talk, and, thru this, is able to make the conversations in her plays more natural.

There is a great deal of mystery surrounding her next play. She has been evolving from the Patricia O'Brien type of characterization until it may not be difficult to imagine that her next role will be an entirely different one. No fewer than three plays are under consideration.

Miss Stahl is a great advocate of the stock school of training. She is a brilliant example of a stock graduate, and has played almost every conceivable role, from tears to titters. Not the least successful was her Camille, and she once prepared "Juliet," letter perfect, in less than three days.

Maggie Pepper will carry her thru this season. It has had almost as long a life as the immortal Chorus Lady. It is a record for any actress to appear in only two plays in ten years. These two have been Miss Stahl's starring vehicles, for that length of time.

THREE BIG STARS IN GREAT SHOW AT PRINCESS SHORTLY

Elsie Janis and Montgomery and Stone in "The Lady of the Slipper" Here Feb. 2.

Mr. Charles Dillingham of the Globe Theatre, New York, is to send his pretentious music show, "The Lady of the Slipper," in which will appear not one star but three—Montgomery and Stone and Elsie Janis, to the Princess Theatre the week of February 2. Mr. Dillingham has made long and careful preparation for this important offering, which ran an entire season at his own theatre, New York, and there will be a notable cast and a production combining novelty and good taste, of course. In past seasons Montgomery and Stone have been seen at the head of their own company and Miss Janis has appeared as a star, the head of her separate organization. In combining the three stars and their companies Mr. Dillingham suggests most attractive potentialities of entertainment along lines which he picturesquely suggests under the term, "Musical Fantasy." Most of the favorite artists who have been seen with Montgomery and Stone in "The Old Town," and with Miss Janis in "The Slim Princess," have important roles in "The Lady of the Slipper." The musical score of "The Lady of the Slipper" was composed by Victor Herbert who gave to the world the tuneful melodies of "Mlle. Modiste" and "The Red Mill." The libretto is the joint work of Anne Caldwell and Lawrence McCarty and the lyrics were written by James O'Dea. The piece is staged by R. H. Burnside. There are more than one hundred people in the company supporting Montgomery and Stone and Miss Janis; among the principals are: Douglas Stevenson, Allene Crater, Marjorie Bentley, Eugene Revere, Gladys Zell, Robert Rogers, Violet Zell, David Abrahams, Samuel Burbank, Helen Falconer, Ione Bright, Harold Russell, Evelyn Conway, and Edna Bates.

FAR greater than "What Happened to Mary," the "Adventures of Kathlyn" places the heroine in thrilling situations that seemingly offer no loopholes of escape.

It is the story well worthy of following and each chapter is a distinct drama in itself that creates a strong desire to know what is to come.

What the Theatres Offer This Week

"The Doll Girl" Princess.

"The Doll Girl" described as one long succession of delightful melodies, will be presented at the Princess Theatre this week by Charles Frohman. Heading the company as co-stars are Richard Carle and Hattie Williams, and surrounding them are a number of exceedingly clever and able artists who by their combined talents have made the presentation of this newest of musical comedies one of the treats of the present theatrical season.

Some two years ago there was produced in Paris a comedy that was all about a little girl and her doll. The play was a big hit. It occurred to two German authors, Stein and Willner, that the plot would be a delightful one when set in musical surroundings.

Under the title of "Das Puppenmädchen" and with music by Leo Fall, the piece was on of last winter's big hits in Berlin. Mr. Frohman was not slow in securing the comedy after which he had Harry B. Smith adapt it to suit American tastes. The work under the title of "The Doll Girl" was presented in New York last August, and for four months it enjoyed a remarkably prosperous run. The piece has many things to commend it and unlike most works of French and Teutonic extraction it is clean and wholesome. Further than this it furnishes Mr. Carle and Miss Williams with roles in which they are truly amusing.

"The Doll Girl" really unfolds a story, and it is interesting. The Marquis de la Tourelle, a festive nobleman (Richard Carle), has some property in Paris to his chateau in order to put an end to the infatuation of his nephew and heir (Robert Evett) for Yvette (Dorothy Webb), daughter of the village tobacconist (Cheridah Simpson). Rosalilla, a Spanish dancer (Hattie Williams), the Marquis' innamorata, follows him secretly to the village, disguises herself as a country girl, and gathers evidence of his fickleness. For the marquis, having arranged with a theatrical manager (Will West), to lure Yvette to Paris under promise of putting her on the stage, falls in love with the girl who still plays with dolls, and wishes to marry her himself. Thus, in the second act the marquis is confronted by a jealous nephew, Yvette, who not take him seriously, and an infuriated Spanish dancer breathing sudden death. She has a club of fourteen admirers; the marquis' deflection of the girl's attention, an ominous number in short, things go badly with Richard Carle, which means that he has opportunities to be amusing. In the third act everything comes right, of course, and more graceful dancing and evolutions under the trees and the shaded electric lights.

The presentation is a spirited one. There are twenty-four musical numbers, and a good-looking chorus. Miss Williams has two excellent numbers, "Come On Over Here," and "Love With a Capital L." Robert Evett, a tenor who can really sing scores in "Will It All End in Smoke" and "The Honey-Moon," "On Our Honey-Moon." Will West has one capital number, and a burlesque dance with Mr. Carle that is immensely funny. Cheridah Simpson has a ragtime song and an eccentric dance. Mr. Carle sings and dances with his accustomed cleverness, and he has one scene with Miss Williams that will be remembered for the laughter that it occasions. The three acts are delightfully staged, and the costumes are described as gorgeous.

years later, is identical with the first and into the shop of See Yup wanders, this time the daughter and her sweetheart. The girl is wearing the green beetle ring found in her father's pocket when he died. A trap is again prepared by the Chinaman and the tea is drugged. Before the girl can drink it her mother, now a demented slave, sees the ring and dashes the drugged tea from the girl's hand. A sensational and surprising finish is provided for the episode. A feature of the week's bill, Bernard A. Reinold and his company, in "How Hofmeister Did It." This is a wholesome story of the home life of a German and his family. The old folks are growing old and Gretchen has many suitors. There is much humor, interesting and novel, humor crowded in the story and Mr. Reinold is a clever German character actor. He is remembered in his Detroit Dialectical and is quite as delightful as Hofmeister.

Bert Errol, with the Tetrazzini voice, shows some handsome gowns. Ted and Ethel Dooley are versatile entertainers who introduce the tango. They also sing and do many surprising stunts awhile. Grace Wilson is dainty and charming and The Vivians, sharpshooters, are sensational. Seymour's Happy Family is a company of comedy and musical dogs that are wonderfully trained.

"A Fool There Was."

Judging from the many requests already received, and the mail orders that have been pouring into the box office of the Grand for the coming engagement of Robert Campbell's production of "A Fool There Was," the one-time production of the Star Theatre, the entire country by storm, having attained a more widely mentioned reputation than any other one single play that has brought out so vividly, and this largely accounts for the unprecedented success of "A Fool There Was."

Each character is a type of its own voice, shows some handsome gowns. Ted and Ethel Dooley are versatile entertainers who introduce the tango. They also sing and do many surprising stunts awhile. Grace Wilson is dainty and charming and The Vivians, sharpshooters, are sensational. Seymour's Happy Family is a company of comedy and musical dogs that are wonderfully trained.

The "Jolly Girls" Star

To say there is something going every minute, is not expressive enough for the time will be something doing between the minutes at the Star Theatre next week, commencing Monday matinee, January 26, with daily matinees, when the "Jolly Girls" Company, with Mui Clark, will be the attraction. And in conjunction with all that the above expresses, there will appear at each and every performance the world renowned Cunniff, "The Jail Breaker," the man who defies all locks, keys and bars.

In addition to appearing twice daily at the theatre, Cunniff will each day during his engagement, visit an institution in this city where equipment for the restraint of criminal and insane persons is kept, and, with permission of the officials in charge of such institutions will be locked, strapped or fastened in such equipment and will then, before the eyes of the officials and the representatives of the press of Toronto, readily free himself from whatever binds him and all restraint in which he is placed; doing this without the aid of keys or mechanical device of any kind, using nothing to accomplish his feat but the tools by nature furnished, his hands and feet and an ever alert and active mind. This may seem incredible, but to substantiate his claim as told during his engagement all articles known to science and human invention for the restraint of insane and criminal people, and will give demonstrations from the stage of how easily and quickly he frees himself from these. This he does before a committee of impartial persons from the audience, any of whom are welcome and invited to come upon the stage and witness his operations close at hand.

Cunniff has but recently returned from a tour of the world on which he visited all the large and important cities and gave precisely the same exhibition that he will give in Toronto, and takes pride in saying that nowhere did he find a device that would not yield to his dexterity.

Not only does he use the paraphernalia carried by himself but is always glad to use in his public performances, any and all handcuffs, straight-jackets, etc., that may be loaned to him from officers and residents of the city, or brought to the theatre for that purpose by anyone who will be kind enough to do so, and all are cordially invited to bring such and will be heartily welcomed.

The Shuberts have arranged to bring over another English company in "The Girl on the Film," to begin an engagement in Chicago early in February. The members will be engaged and rehearsed under the direction of George Edwards, in London.

lous singing, poetic speech, eloquent gentleness of expression, graceful dancing, everything, in short, that art can add to this natural charm of woman for years after one has seen the play. Never in the history of the stage has an actor portrayed bordering anywhere so near the whimsical and follies, the passions and the emotions of the human heart and mind that are brought out so vividly, and this largely accounts for the unprecedented success of "A Fool There Was."

The "Honey-Moon Girls" Gayety.

The big burlesque musical success, "The Honey-Moon Girls," will commence a week's engagement at the Gayety Theatre Monday matinee.

Every minute, detail, costumes, scenic environment, music, lyrics, book, ensemble numbers and electrical effects were looked after with unerring eye and critical ear, and as a consequence, the dramatic reviewers have been a unit in pronouncing their production one of the most complete, elaborate and enjoyable it has ever been their good fortune to witness. The book is by George Totten Smith. In addition to the star, Phil Ott, there are: Frank (Bud) Williamson, Alice Lazar, Nettie Nelson, Virginia Ware, Billy Inman, The Harmony Trio, Dave Kinder, and several other principals just as prominent and a monstrous chorus. Victor Hyde, one of the best-known masters of stagecraft, personally supervised the production, and it is his boast that it is the best work he has ever done in his long, successful career. With a chorus the instruction was quite special and intended solely to develop in the beauties every art calculated to please the most blasé. Grace in stage deportment, walk and gesture, melod-

OPERAS CHOSEN FOR SERIES HERE REVEAL ARTISTS AT THEIR BEST

RICHLIY PAID STARS IN FINEST ROLES

Grand opera with world-famed stars in their greatest roles, will be presented in Toronto at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, beginning next Monday, Jan. 26, and continuing for one week, when the National Opera Company of Canada makes its only appearance of the year at that playhouse.

"La Gioconda," an opera fairly teeming with arias, ensembles, and orchestral interludes of extreme beauty, will be the first bill presented. The opera served to open the Montreal season of eight weeks of the company, and also ushered in the season at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York this year. It has become extremely popular with opera-goers the world over, and seems to be gradually supplanting the pompous and ceremonial "Aida" as an introductory offering of a season at the foremost opera houses. The presentation of this opera by the Montreal organization this year mark the first time the opera has ever been revealed to Canadians.

Marie Rappold, for six years leading prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera of New York; Jose Segura-Tallien, the sensation of the Montreal season; Rosa Oltzka, Maria Classens and Giovanni Martinelli are the principal artists to be heard in this work. Ethel Gilmore, a Hamilton-born girl, will make her first bow to a Toronto audience in this opera, as the premiere danseuse of the ballet corps, which numbers 40.

Other bills of the engagement are: "Carmen" on Tuesday; "Samson and Dalila" on Wednesday; "Madama Butterfly" on Thursday; "Otello" on Friday; "La Gioconda" on Saturday; and "Carmen" on the evening of that day.

Leo Slezak, greatest of the world's dramatic tenors, who receives, it is said, $1500 for every appearance in opera, constituting him the highest-salaried tenor next to Caruso, will appear in "Samson and Dalila" and "Otello." He is world-renowned for his impersonation of the title hero of the latter opera, and after his recent premiere appearance at the Metropolitan in Montreal, was declared to have made out of that part one approximation of the greatness of his conception of Otello.

Jeanne Germaine-Reache, principal contralto of the company, is famed throughout the operatic world for her impersonations of Dalila and Carmen, two roles in which she will appear in Toronto. The "Carmen" production will enlist an all-star cast, including Helen Stanley, last year of the Chicago opera; Georges Roselli, for the past three years leading baritone of the Paris opera; Miss Oltzka, who is remembered as the leading soprano of the "Savage" production of "The Girl of the Golden West"; and Dora Phillips, most famous of the "Cio-Cio-Sans" of operatic in the vernacular, who will also appear in that role in Puccini's exquisite "Madama Butterfly." Luisa Villani sings Tosca and Desdemona to Slezak's Otello. Gaudez appears as Lohengrin.

The latest news from the vaudeville field is startling news. Mary Garden is trying to make up her mind to appear in the two-a-days. When she does make up her mind her vaudeville will be a sort of "Salome."

Harry Lauder is said to have closed the first week of his present engagement in New York to $25,000 business.

New Henry Miller denies the report that he is to return from the stage.

From the reports, it is evident that "Josephine" is making a grand tour in Philadelphia as in Toronto. The total business of the run has broken all records for the theatre in which it appeared in that city.

A discovery has been made in Lou Tellegen, leading man with Dorothy Donnelly, in "Maria Rosa." He has just completed a long engagement with several theatres, having appeared in Toronto with her three seasons ago.

Mary Shaw is to revive "Ghosts," and will put her old familiar role of Mrs. Alving. The recent success of plays of a somewhat sociological character is the result of the revival of the "Bessie" drama.

Robert Hilliard, who is appearing in "The Arcturion," is to marry a Mrs. Olga Williams, as soon as she can secure a divorce from her chauffeur-husband, with whom she eloped while he was in the employ of her father, James Eward, the wealthy brewer.

Stories Of the Operas

LA GIOCONDA

The action takes place in Venice; in the seventeenth century. Gioconda is a ballad singer and is in love with Enzo, a Genoese noble. She supports her mother by singing in the streets of Venice. Barnaba, a police spy, is in love with her but Gioconda rejects him. In revenge, he plans to ruin Enzo by rekindling the latter's earlier affection for Laura, now the wife of Alvise, one of the heads of the state inquisition, and that accomplished, bringing the matter to Alvise's attention. He succeeds, Barnaba is made a prisoner and is to die. Gioconda, the aware of Enzo's stronger love for Laura, enlists Barnaba's services to secure Enzo's liberation, on promise to yield to his protestations of love. Enzo is freed, and Gioconda sees him happily reunited with Laura, then kills herself rather than allow Barnaba to claim her.

CARMEN

Dun Jose, a young brigadier, in strolling in a square in Seville, comes across Carmen, emerging from a cigar factory in which she is employed, and is fascinated by her. She throws him a rose. A moment later Carmen's tempestuous nature flares up, when she is crossed by one of her companions of the factory. She trounces the girl and is arrested. Fate ordains that she be given in Jose's charge to the prison. Jose cannot bring himself to do else but connive at her escape, which is successfully accomplished. Jose is punished by imprisonment but goes to see Carmen after reinstatement in his regiment, which halts in his march about the place of rendezvous. This is the tavern of Lillas Pastie, a resort of smugglers, gypsies and social outcasts. As the bugles sound retreat, Jose is glared at by the skins of enchantment that Carmen has woven about him as she trod the measure of a wild dance for his seduction. His dalliance is fatal, for soon an officer comes in search of him and orders him to rejoin the regiment. Jose renounces his peregrinations and the habits of the place, side with him and spirit away the officer. This act makes Jose an outlaw, and he has little choice but to embrace the life with which Carmen has brought him into contact. Gradually the distance for this sort of existence grows, and Carmen, who in the meantime, has conceived a liking for a new villain to the camp, Escamillo, the bull-fighter, bids him to inform her that his mother is lying on her deathbed, leaving, owing subsequent vengeance to the fickle and defiant Carmen after a vain attempt on the life of the usurper of her affections. Later, showing the ravages of an outbreak, she meets Carmen as she comes to Seville to attend on the triumphs in the bull-ring of her new lover. He seeks to exact a pledge from her that she will return to him. She disdainfully negatives his demand. Then, as she attempts to enter the ring as a shout of acclaim for some particularly clever feat of her arena here penetrate to her, he intercepts her and plunges a dagger to her heart. The holiday crowd pours out of the arena to find him prostrate in grief over the Lohengrin comes in his boat, drawn by a swan, to defend Elsa from the charge preferred by Trramund and Ortrud, who covet Elsa's estate, of having murdered her young brother Godfrey. Trramund is vanquished and disgraced by Lohengrin, who wins Elsa for his bride. One condition he exacts from her—that she will never ask who he is or whence he came. By the influence of Ortrud, however, she rashly questions him, and in fulfillment of his vow, but in great grief, he leaves her and departs in his boat driven by a swan, from whose neck he removes a golden chain, which breaks the charm which the sorceress, Ortrud, had cast over Godfrey, changing him into the form of that Duke Godfrey now comes into his rights as the Duke of Brabant.

LOHENGRIN

Samson et Dalila

The first scene of this Biblical opera shows a square in the city of Gaza, where a gathering of Hebrews is lamenting the destruction of their city and the profanation of their altars by the Gentiles. Samson bids them to take courage, and they are cheered by his words, but their mood soon changes when a number of Philistines approach and revile them. A fight occurs, and Samson wounds Abimelech. At this juncture, Dalila comes from the temple of Dagon, followed by the priestesses. By her wiles, the Philistines hope Samson's power will be divulged. She invites Samson to the valley where she lives. Samson tries to resist her fascination, but finally succumbs. Dalila calls the Philistines, who are concealed nearby, and Samson is overpowered, blinded, shorn of his hair, and put in chains. The high priests and Philistines rejoice over his downfall, and taunt him as he appears later on a public square of Gaza, a pitiful figure. Samson prays for strength to overcome his enemies, then in wrath and rebellion at their revilings, strains impotently, as the populace believes as it laughs in derision, at the pillars of the temple. They give, then burst—the temple totters, falls. A second after groans and shrieks—then silence and desolation.

LA TOSCA

The action takes place in Rome in the year 1800. An artist, Mario Cavaradossi, is seen finishing a painting in a church. An old friend of his, Angelotti, who has escaped from prison and is hiding in the cell, is helped by him with food and a secret way of escaping disguised in woman's clothes. La Tosca, a famous singer, who is in love with Mario, finding the door locked, and hearing whispers when she comes to call on Mario, suspects him of a betrayal. Scarpia, the chief of police, enters in hot pursuit of the escaped prisoner. He finds a fan dropped from the fugitive's bundle, and further excites by clever feat of her arena here penetrate to her, he intercepts her and plunges a dagger to her heart. The holiday crowd pours out of the arena to find him prostrate in grief over the chambers to be further questioned, but she refuses to say where Angelotti is hidden. La Tosca is also questioned, but she likewise refuses to give any information. On Scarpia's order, Mario is removed to the adjoining room and put to torture; hearing her lover's cries, La Tosca breaks down and reveals Angelotti's hiding place. After exacting a promise from Scarpia to save Mario's life, and securing a written attestation of that promise, La Tosca agrees to yield herself to Scarpia, but overcomes by terror and hatred, she kills him with a knife taken from the table he had set for dining and winning with her. She escapes after she wrests from his fist, clenched in death, the precious paper he had just signed, ordering a mock execution.

Tosca reaches Mario's prison and tells him that Scarpia has given orders for a mock execution with blank cartridges, and that, when the soldiers fire, he is to fall and feign death; then, later, they are to escape together.

The depth of Scarpia's villainy is shown however, when on the soldiers retreating, La Tosca discovers that it has been a real execution and that her lover is dead. In despair, she throws herself over the ramparts just as Scarpia's murder is detected, and soldiers come to seize her.

OTELLO

"Otello" was presented for the first time in 1888, at Munich, and was written in the 73rd year of Verdi's life. The first scene shows Otello returning in his ship, the eyes of a gathering on shore following his course thru the waves. He lands and tells of his victory over the Turks. Shouts of joy and exultation rend the air. Then follows a convivial chat between Cassio, Rodrigo and Iago, in the course of which Iago makes Cassio drunk. Cassio loses his rank as captain. In the third scene we see Desdemona with her husband rejoicing in the felicity of their mutual love. In the second act Iago influences Otello's jealousy by making insinuations as to Cassio's relations with Desdemona. When Desdemona then pleads for Cassio's reinstatement as captain, Otello's suspicions are increased. Angerily he refuses, and drops her handkerchief in agitation over Otello's demeanor, and Emilia, Iago's wife, picks it up. Iago then tells Otello of a dream of Cassio in which he revealed his love for Desdemona, then hints he has seen Otello's first love taken, the lace handkerchief, in Cassio's hands. Otello swears to revenge her infidelity. In the third act Otello pretends to have a headache and asks for the handkerchief. Desdemona tells him she has lost it but he charges her with infidelity. Meanwhile Iago has brought Cassio and urges Otello to hide himself so as to be enabled to observe the alleged fidelity of his wife. Iago makes Otello believe Cassio is telling of his love for Desdemona, when in reality Cassio is speaking of his sweetheart Bianca. Otello's jealous suspicions are confirmed when Cassio draws forth Desdemona's handkerchief which Iago had deposited in his blouse. Iago advises Otello to strangle his wife and to have Cassio killed.

In the fourth act, Otello smother's his wife. Emilia discloses her husband's villainy. Iago flies and Otello kills himself at the feet of his innocent wife.

Lowes' Yonge Street Theatre. The management of Lowes' Yonge Street Theatre announce that they have secured as a feature for this week an extraordinary novelty production entitled "Circus Days," this travesty by the Ellis-Nowlan Troupe on that delight of our younger days, the old time one-ring circus. There will be clown, acrobats, bareback riders, ring master and all the trappings except the pink lemonade and peanuts. This is bound to delight the young people. George Armstrong, the happy chappy, with his million-dollar smile and an abundance of new jokes and parodies is also announced for next week.

The Tallaferrero sisters, Mabel and Edith, who are co-starring this season in "Young Wisdom," a new play by Rachel Carothers, are sharing equally in favorable criticisms.

From A. H. Woods' office comes the announcement that, owing to the illness of Florence Reed, the production of "The Yellow Ticket" has been postponed. It was to have been presented Jan. 6, at the Eltinge Theatre, New York.

"Adventures of Kathlyn" Thrilling Animal Picture, With Oriental Setting, Will Be Continued This Week—"The Two Ordeals."

Kathlyn quickly recovers from the curious sensation of being forced to occupy an unwelcome throne in company with the scheming counsellors of a fanatical people. The high priest prepares to go on with the ceremony of marrying her to Umballah, who is the main spring of all her troubles; but she conserves all her powers of resistance to this proceeding, and, with the dominant force of the Anglo-Saxon, for the time covers the superstitious brown men who hover about their part which she instantly takes advantage of, and the Council of Three, coerced by public spirit, decide that she will be given a week in which to consent to the marriage. Thus ends the sentimental episode in the gorgeous festival of the durbar.

During this horrible week of respite for the captive queen, a high caste native, Ramabai, is charged with murder, and, under the law, all his property reverts to the reigning sovereign, including even his wife. In this instance, the wife is a beautiful young person, Pundita, highly educated. Kathlyn at once frees the captive, as far as slavery is concerned; and Pundita, in gratitude, begs to remain with her until she learns the fate of her husband. When Kathlyn hears her story, she orders Ramabai brought before her, and declares him innocent. He, in turn, craves permission to remain in the palace, as the queen's personal bodyguard. Thus Kathlyn, by fate and by force, secures for her personal service, two powerful factors in her favor (who remain with her throughout this series of plays). During this trying period, while Kathlyn has all her work working to thwart the conviction of the crafty people about her, Bruce, an American sportsman, happens upon the scene from the far interior, where he has been hunting big game and at once becomes a hero in spite of himself.

Dragged to Leopard Trap. The second reel opens with the close of the foisted Kathlyn, who, refusing the alliance with Umballah, the council has decreed that she must submit to two ordeals with wild animals. If she survives these, she will be permitted to occupy the throne like Elizabeth of old, as a maiden queen. Bruce, learning of her plight, has managed to communicate with her, and swears himself her life champion. Pundita communicates with Bruce the circumstances of the ordeals. In the first test Kathlyn is dragged to a leopard's trap, and lashed to the mainstay of the deadfall as a human bait to lure the spotted cat from the depths of the jungle. She is so secured that the heavy door will fall the moment the animal springs upon it. It would seem that there is no hope of escape. The faithful pundita, however, has informed her that Bruce will not fail to appear at the proper moment. Now comes the stealthy leopard closer and closer to the trap. At the last moment there is a flash, but it is not the form of the leopard hurrying thru the air—but Bruce. Even as the heavy door falls, the famished, frenzied cat is clawing at it, trying to break thru. Bruce fires at the animal thru the bars, and it limps back to the jungle, broken from his fire.

While Kathlyn has escaped from the beast by a seeming marvel, for the second time she refuses the request of the council, to marry the villainous man that dominates them. She is ordered to an amphitheatre, where the populace assemble to witness her fate as the refractory leader of her community. Bruce, now more wonderfully resourceful than ever in Kathlyn's interest, appears before the high priest and the council and tells them that a miracle will save the queen from the jaws of the savage lions, but if they compel her to submit to such a cruel ordeal, the same force will destroy many of the people assembled to witness her death. The impressionable people shrink at this idea; but stern Umballah mocks at him and orders him driven out.

That same night we see Bruce and Ramabai meet at the house of a high caste native. Ramabai is the leader of a band of high minded conspirators, whose object is to uplift the people and secure better government. They lead Bruce to a secluded place where are hidden land-mines, which have been smuggled by revolutionists into Allahabad in view of impending military troubles. These mines, with electrical appliances for operation, rare loaded on elephants, and then, under cover of night, the little band enter the silent and deserted arena of the amphitheatre, bury the mines, and connect them with wires leading to a box on the lower amphitheatre. The great day comes. The hungry lions are shown in their dens; the populace crowd in the stalls; and then comes Kathlyn, the beautiful captive, regal in her simple robes of white, who is led into the arena. She walks to the far end, and stands under a canopy designed as a resting place for athletes between their feats. Umballah and his council are in the royal box. The keeper opens the door, an dith famished lions rush into the arena. They see the shining human mark; they crouch their lean, sinewy bodies for the fatal spring. The scene flashes back to the shadowy box, where Bruce is manipulating the push-down of a blasting machine. As he establishes the connection, there is a rush, a roar, and the volcano of earth and stone bursts in the arena, leaving in its litter a great gash between Kathlyn and the savage lions. The spectators flee in panic, leaving many dead and mangled. Bruce leaps down from his box into the arena and seizes Kathlyn in his arms, as the scene dims.

Never in the history of the concert platform has there been an event of such classic import as the joint concert to be given here on Wednesday night by Tetrizzini and Ruffo, two of the greatest artists of the operatic world; and the program to be presented is worthy of special comment.

Mme. Luisa Tetrizzini's art is of such international renown that any commentary upon her vocal powers is superfluous. Her achievements have been proclaimed by the world's most capable critics as evidence of a rare and unique, florid ornamentation, dramatic fervor and audacious authority; in fact, she is known as the greatest of the English language has been bestowed upon this veritable wonder of the operatic world.

Mme. Tetrizzini has selected her program from the compositions of the greatest masters of the operatic world, and in fact, all the difficult ornaments, vocalizations, and brilliant passages, are so admirably adapted to her own marvelous vocal capacity of the golden-voiced days in Metz, where she loved her father's trade of ironwork, and in which craft the youth became so proficient that he was given numerous special commissions to execute work of unusual artistic character, and which were the result of her own vocal and histrionic powers.

Titta Ruffo, who is known in her country as the world's greatest baritone, is the most highly-gifted male artist, vocally and histrionically, of the contemporary operatic stage.

Ruffo is a Tuscan by birth, and his golden-voiced days in Metz, where he loved his father's trade of ironwork, and in which craft the youth became so proficient that he was given numerous special commissions to execute work of unusual artistic character, and which were the result of her own vocal and histrionic powers.

When quite young he entered the famous Santa Cecilia Conservatory in Rome to study vocal culture. He made his debut as the Herald in "Lohengrin" at the Constantinian, Rome, but his first success was effected at Gattania in Sicily, where he created a furor as the hero in Verdi's "Shakspere Ball." Then he has sung in Italy, Spain, France, England, Hungary, Poland, Russia, many, Roumania, Egypt and South America.

Ruffo made his American debut in Philadelphia with the Chicago Opera Company, and in fact, he has received an ovation unparalleled in the history of the operatic city. His Metropolitan Opera triumph and was enthusiastically acclaimed as the greatest baritone of the age.

Ruffo's voice is remarkable. It is a true baritone of soprano, with a flexibility and power, with a most penetrating range, extending as it does into the range of bass, and in resonance it is unsurpassed, his mezzo voice, and being delivered with the clarity and phenomenal and he sings the "Cadenza" in the "Bridal Song" which is one of the numbers he will sing on the occasion of his appearance here, with an authority, brilliancy and force, an accomplishment that justifies every encomium bestowed upon him. A table vocal wonder of the century.

"Sari" was announced to open at the Liberty, New York. Mizzis Tabor, Blanche Devereaux, Resendee Wheeler, Harry Davenport, Charles Meekins, J. Humbird, and Winthru Merkle in the cast.

What chance has a self-respecting egg in these degenerate days? Time was when it was the weapon of political criticism in the campaign days on the hustings or provided the basis of endless argument on the part of the village solons, who sat upon the crates that contained the hen fruit and disputed as to whether it was the first egg that came from the first hen or the first hen from the first egg. On know the discussion. Those happy times are fled. Today, a cruel fate offers but the alternative ignominies—cold storage or the incubator. Truly these times be out of joint.

SUCH IGNORANCE.

Passing a Japanese store on King street West, a few years ago, at the time Peter Pan blouses were much in favor and the ladies, by chance, glanced into the window, and there, to my great delight, lay as I thought, a pure Japanese blouse. As I thought, a pure Japanese blouse, I asked the Japanese gentleman standing at the counter, what he was asking for the Peter Pan blouse displayed in the window? Not seeming to understand, he came to the window with me, and a broad smile overspread his face. He pointed to the blouse, and said several other customers in the store, and that he had a number of them. He said, "That is not a blouse, it is a kimono, and gentlemen's pyjamas." Needless to say, I made a hasty exit.

OH, THOSE WOMEN.

The most embarrassing moment of my life was when making a personal application for a match covered position. I had just assured the superintendent that there was no likelihood that I would leave the position if I secured it, because of marriage. He asked for letters of recommendation. Like all women, I carried a mass of letters and papers in my handbag. Seizing upon the first one I saw, I handed it to him. He glanced at it, smiled and observed that it evidently was not meant for him. It started out: "My darling, if you could only know how lonely and forsaken, etc."

My most embarrassing moment was in a street car. When noticing my shoe lace untied, I fastened it securely. When the car stopped at my street, I rose to go, but was suddenly jerked back into my seat. "WHACK"

It was at my Island cottage, Hanlan's Point, I conceived the idea of having the carpenter make me an adjustable shutter with a rope and pulley, on the back of the head, like the head of a veranda, to keep out the weather when necessary. It got finished and I went proudly to display it to some people who came to rent the cottage for the summer. "Just under the rope do what the summer started to say, when down banged the heavy shutter and gave me an antonion."

ing whack on the head, I lay setting me down on the ground. I began to feel poor, aching knob and to reassure myself whether it was cracked; I looked hastily round to see if any of the neighbors were gazing, pretended I was quite pleased about it all, while feeling as mean as a nickel. I could see my customers were getting inflated with suppressed laughter, also trying to be sympathetic. They were afraid, anyway to take a cottage that behaved like that, so I lost my customers and did no bragging about my shutter to the next one.

Believe in Signs? Most Everybody Does. Eerie Superstitions Have Firm Hold Here

While enjoying a summer vacation on one of the lake steamers, my attention was attracted by a conversation between the negro storekeeper and the second cook. The storekeeper was just leaving the storeroom, and was in the act of locking the door when the cook made application for a bar of soap. The request was summarily denied, and the custodian of the steamboat necessities proceeded to walk away with an air of finality that showed all argument unnecessary, yet the "stinking Jimmie" dish and the possibility of a verbal cutting from the steward led to an emphatic repetition of the request: "What fo ya ax me dat, nigrah? Doan you know dat awian backen's hot crossen?" This explanation put an end to all argument, and it was arranged that the request should be made again in half an hour.

shortly after this, while driving in various parts of Ontario with a fairly well educated white man, he also gave every indication of a stunner's head crossed. This explanation put an end to all argument, and it was arranged that the request should be made again in half an hour.

Everywhere, Friday, and the number thirteen are the cause of real dread in the lives of many. We frequently hear of persons being called in for a meal merely to avoid having thirteen at the table. Hisoids find it difficult to induce travelers to occupy room number thirteen, and for this reason they frequently omit having a room thirteen, seven and twenty-three are considered correspondingly favorable numbers.

Most Everything Means Bad Luck

A Presbyterian missionary who came from Connecticut in the early days would always make a cross before he went to work, and he never forgot, and we find many people who are relieved from thoughts of harm by that sign made with hand or foot by placing the thumb and index finger in front of the eye, the flying of a bird into your house—especially a bat, selling a swarm of bees, the crowing of a rooster on your front steps, killing a toad or spider all forbode evil or poor success to many.

Superstitions Are Common Even Now

These incidents led to an inquiry as to whether people are really illiterate to the extent of believing in whether they are merely cultivating a local attitude toward these relics of former days when superstitions rather than scientific methods were the controlling influence with certain classes of people. Repeated attempts to induce persons to act contrary to these superstitions, and to raise certain questions. This fact rather than their protestations of disbelief is the real test of their sincerity. Well educated persons in Canada, who are blending of Indian and Negro superstitions with their own, makes Canada a place of unusual interest for the study of superstitions, and the blending of the two.

Our mixed population coming from all parts of the world, and the blending of Indian and Negro superstitions with their own, makes Canada a place of unusual interest for the study of superstitions, and the blending of the two.

Our mixed population coming from all parts of the world, and the blending of Indian and Negro superstitions with their own, makes Canada a place of unusual interest for the study of superstitions, and the blending of the two.

We're all "Jonahs" To Some People

A fellow came out on the street one morning with a black eye. A friend asked him what had happened, and he replied that he had met a certain old man who was supposed to be a "Jonah" and had failed to cross his fingers to break the omen. In a fight sequence, he was licked in a fight.

THE FIELD OF ART

What Toronto Artists Are Doing—Spring Exhibition of Ontario Society Opens March 13—Canadian Scenery Attracts American Painter—G. R. Brunuch Shows Fine Water Color Sketches of Norway—News Notes of the Week.

By Irene B. Wrenshall. That the beauty of Canadian landscapes attracts the eyes of artists from all parts of the world is shown by a despatch from New York, which states that among the artists who are exhibiting in the exhibition of the National Academy of Design, New York, was "Wharves of Quebec" by Birge Harrison.

By latest advice the opening of the Ontario Society of Artists will be held on March 13. The exhibition will probably remain open until April 11.

In the Cercle Volney's annual salon, opened recently in Paris, by President and Madame Poinsone, an exhibition of Canadian art was shown. The artist, as described according to a press despatch, as being a fair manifestation of rather conservative French tastes, and the exhibition was a success. The despatch goes on to say that "landscapes are few and far between, portraits, interiors, and other subjects being the most numerous."

In view of the fact that a formal request for the opening of the Ontario Society of Artists will be held on March 13. The exhibition will probably remain open until April 11.

and baby, both good Canadians well posed and tenderly handled, will likely be included among the pictures at the spring exhibition, it may be "cut out" by a sketch of a small girl with wonderful bronze hair, the latter tone catching an extra glint from the sun. Miss Long's little one is holding a cell in her hand. Talking of some of her models, Miss Long laughed over the trouble she had been having to persuade one small girl to sit still for a portrait at a moment at a time. Even a large orange proved of little use to keep her quiet long enough to catch the sparkle in her eye!

The "Land of the Midnight Sun" has a call to the romance of each one of us, whether or not we have had an opportunity of gazing upon the glories of it ourselves, so it is a peculiar pleasure to look upon the work of an artist who has studied the beauties of its northern landscapes so often that he is as thoroughly conversant with such lovely tint of color as with the crimson and gold which burnishes the maples in his own home city of Toronto.

In a private view this week in the studio of Mr. G. R. Brunuch, A. R. C. A. there were on view water-color sketches of the Lofoten Islands, and of various wonderful fjords of Norway. The artist, who is a native of the island of dark majestic water between towering mountains, sun-tipped with a glow of crimson and gold, showing clearly against the background of the cloudy sky, and contrasting boldly with a clump of dark firs nestled in the mountainside. It is a scene which would be peculiarly enthralling to the mountaineer, and the artist has captured with his brush some splendid effects at Spitzbergen. One striking picture is romantic in character, for from the spot depicted, "Andree's station on Danes' Island, north of Spitzbergen" went in 1897, a compelling vision of its beauty. The sketch, shows the wrecked balloon house, while to the right is the tiny shack where Andree and his two Swedish companions lived while preparing

It's a Wonder Any of Us Are Alive With So Many Things Meaning Really Bad Luck—Signs Will Even Tell You If You're in Love—Superstitions Run Rife in Ontario.

This "Jonah" was an inoffensive old man who was really very religious, but evidently lacking in vitality. It is quite common to see people turn across the street or into a store to avoid meeting him. This same aversion extended to his son who was somewhat like the father.

There are some who believe that good luck is brought by picking up a hairpin, hanging it on a nail and making the new moon over the right shoulder with no branches of trees or grass intervening. Crossing arms with another person at the table is sure to bring bad luck; while four persons crossing arms in shaking hands means a wedding, which is usually classified as good luck. If by mistake you should enter a garment into a washing machine, it should be worn in that way all day. Putting on the right shoe first in the morning is a start for good luck throughout the day.

Double Cedar Knots To Cure Rheumatism

A leaf of tansy worn in the shoe is supposed to cure ague, and some claim to have been cured of rheumatism by placing their shoes in the form of a cross between the house and the street. In western Ontario is the belief that a double cedar knot carried in the pocket will cure rheumatism, and in the eastern part of the province we learn that a gall from the stem of a goldenrod will cure it.

Others wear a ring cut from a potato for the same effect. Some carry a potato in the pocket for prevention as well as for a cure of that disease. Some ladies believe that if a bird builds its nest from their hair combs, they are sure to suffer from headaches.

Finishing a four-leaf clover, a horseshoe with the point opening toward you, or having in your possession the left hind foot of a rabbit that has been killed in a graveyard at midnight are omens of good luck. Carrying cabbage or making a pillow slip from New Year's Day brings good luck all year. If your right palm itches, you are to see a friend. If it is the left palm, you are to receive money. We have often seen persons fishing in their coffee cup with a spoon for a bubble of cream, and trying to get the bubble to the mouth without breaking in the belief that the act will bring them money. Stirring apple butter both ways is sure to spoil it, and every-thing is supposed to be better if stirred with a motion in the same direction as the path of the sun.

Plant the Potatoes At Full of the Moon

Soap made during a change of the moon is sure to be a failure. Undergrowth and sprouts should be cut when the moon is full to prevent their coming up again. Potatoes planted in the morning will not make plenty of tops but few potatoes. All vegetables which bear their edible portion above ground should be planted at the time of the new moon. The times of the full moon and new moons are considered the most auspicious for beginning new enterprises.

In spite of accumulated evidence against the belief, many still say that rain on Easter means rain for seven Sundays, or rain on Monday brings rain for seven days in the future. "Rainbow in the morning, sailors take warning; rainbow at night is the sailor's delight." These are quoted, if not believed, everywhere in Canada, in fact the world over.

Among the signs of a death in the family are the mowing of a cow after midnight, the howling of a dog, the tapping of a bird at the window, the swarming of bees on a dead limb of a tree, unless in the influence of a floor or bringing May-apple blossoms into the house.

If You Want to Get Married, Here's Help

A group of young girls can usually supply an endless chain of signs regarding love and marriage. While walking, very few will allow a post or tree to separate them from a companion whose friendship they value highly, unless in the influence of a counteracted by the magic words, "bread and butter," spoken in concert. For the same reason, few will accept a sharp or pointed implement from a friend or lover without some slight payment for it. A girl picking a thread from a man's coat is sure to result in marriage to him. Many refuse to try on an engagement or wedding ring of a girl friend, because it means the postponement of their own wedding for seven years, and the cutting of a wedding ring to change its size, brings trouble surely. Sweeping dirt across the feet of a young girl is supposed to prevent her from ever marrying.

Rain on the wedding day, seeing the bridegroom on the wedding day before time for the ceremony, or wearing beads or pearls are all bad omens of an unhappy life. "Something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue," as parts of the wedding, are supposed to bring many a bride confidence in the happy outcome of a union. The old maid can make sure of the number of years until her marriage by counting the base of the cuckoo on its first appearance in the spring. Many have tried counting nine stars on each of nine successive nights and then looked for their future mate on the tenth morning. The maiden who sleeps with a spray of hawthorn or a piece of wedding cake under her pillow always hopes to dream of her true love.

Now, if you are still unconvinced that superstition is not dead, watch a Yonge street crowd fight shy of walking beneath a workman's ladder.

A Great Canadian Passes

Not only Canada, but the Empire is the poorer by the passing of Lord Strathcona. To the younger generation of Canadians, who knew him only after he had attained commanding eminence, he appeared in a peculiar sense the embodiment of the national genius. He loomed up a great historic figure, whose grey spirit had taken color in the wastes of Labrador and of the northwest. There is something in Canada that fits the blood of Highland Scotsmen. On an infinitely grander scale Canada repeats the Bens and glens, the moors and torrents of the land of the mountain and the flood. These Highlanders found in Canada a larger atmosphere, which made them larger men—larger in vision, in confidence and in capacity. We fancy that in days to come Lord Strathcona will stand out because in a very real and true sense he was among the first to realize the potentialities of the Dominion as it is known today. The birth of the Dominion dates from the transfer of the vast Hudson Bay Company territory to the state. Lord Strathcona had much to do with that achievement, as he had later with the pacification of the northwest and with the building of the railroad which more than any single work laid the foundation of national unity. Honors crowded upon him in his old age, but greater than these is his long record of devoted and patriotic service.

British Indians and The Empire

The course of the trouble raised by the claim of natives of British India for free entrance in any number into other parts of the Empire, and particularly the self-governing Dominions is due to their insistence on their "rights" as free-born British citizens. This point was effectually dealt with by Sir West Ridgway, who has held many important offices under the crown, in a letter to The London Times. "Within the fortified enciente of the British Empire," he wrote, "There are many houses and many families, each house inhabited by its own family. These households have common interests; but each manages its own affairs—wisely or unwisely—without interference from others, and no one is entitled to enter any house not his own, except on invitation, and even then he must submit to the conditions which may be imposed." This, we take it, is a correct description of the Empire as it is today. The Dominions have each its own immigration policy, which they have the right to impose, vary or alter at will. But this also means that it is not immigration, but emigration which should be checked. Where a certain class of immigrant will not be accepted members of that class should be held up, not at the port of arrival, but at the port of departure.

Chamberlain Leaves The Stage

Another statesman of imperial fame and reputation has retired from public into private life in the person of Joseph Chamberlain. Tho for some years he has been unable to take his place in parliament, his name remained on the role of the house of commons, and in a sense he shared in its deliberations. The formal breaking of that tie carries with it not a little of pathos. About his place in British politics and in the wider field of imperial affairs there is, and will be, much diversity of opinion. Personal and political feeling is still too acute to allow of judgment. But no one has questioned that when he separated from the Gladstone cabinet in 1880, he pursued a course in accord with his genuine conviction, and in so doing abandoned his undoubted chance of becoming leader of the Liberal party and of attaining to the premiership. All his acts in connection with his labors for closer Imperial union may not be approved, but he at least did much to create Imperial sentiment.

Unemployment and Immigration

Canadians who accept some responsibility for the right development of their country must look askance at the great volume of immigration. Mainly owing to the activity of the Dominion agents in the United Kingdom, the United States and the continent of Europe, immigrants are pouring in at a rate comparable only to that of the United States when it had more than three times the population—at a time when the incomers were mostly of similar stock to that of its own population. The United States, too, offered a much greater variety of climate, and in consequence many more opportunities for constant employment. Canada is, and must for long remain, to more or less extent, a land of seasonal occupation. At certain periods work is plentiful—when they pass the unemployed naturally gravitate to the cities and towns and increase the number on the outlook for a job. This year the difficulty has been aggravated by the protracted money stringency and the consequent checks to expansion. Signs, too, are not lacking that industrial activity must await the restoration of credit before regaining its stride and the general result is shown in the number seeking relief. No doubt the conditions in the cities are not so extreme as has been asserted for political purposes, but they are bad enough to warrant a halt to be called in regard to immigration.

President Wilson and The Trusts

President Wilson last week opened his campaign for legislation, not to amend, but to explain and clarify the Sherman anti-trust law. Since his inauguration he has accomplished two of his objects, tariff reduction and currency reform, and with a measure of ease and absence of friction, which proved the supremacy he exercises in the councils of the Democratic party. His ascendancy is due to the confidence he has inspired in his cabinet and in the rank and file. They feel that he knows the road, that he has thought out the problems he seeks to solve, and that he is following forth a settled policy. No less has the president succeeded in restoring business confidence. None knows better that on the results he achieves rests the fortunes of the Democratic.

IS HE GOING ADRIFT?

Co-operative Credit Unions In Quebec

Writing in Harper's Weekly, under the title, "Breaking the Money Trust," Louis D. Brandeis, the well-known Boston lawyer, deals in a recent issue with the formation of co-operative and credit unions. These, he holds, will aid in rendering the banking system more democratic, as has been found in countries where those unions prevail. In this connection, Mr. Brandeis gives an interesting account of a movement which originated in Quebec fourteen years ago, but has attracted little attention in Canada, outside of that province. Its founder was Alphonse Desjardins of Levis, a public-spirited man of large family, and small means, who lives as simply as an ordinary mechanic, and has long been engaged in the study of social questions and in improving social conditions. Many years ago, says Mr. Brandeis, M. Desjardins became impressed with the fact that the people's savings were not being used primarily to aid the people by encouraging production. In Levis, a town of 8000 inhabitants, on the St. Lawrence, opposite the City of Quebec, there were at that time three ordinary banks of deposit—a mutual savings bank, the postoffice savings bank and three incorporated "loaners." Still the people were not served, nor after much thinking, could he hit upon a method of relief. By chance, however, he heard of the European rural banks and proceeded to work over the idea for use in Levis. In 1900 he established in the town the first credit union, and for seven years carefully watched the operation of the little bank. During that period this pioneer union had accumulated $80,000 in resources, had made 2900 loans to its members, aggregating $350,000 and averaging $120 each, the interest rate being 6 1/2 per cent. In this time the bank did not sustain a single loss, and Desjardins concluded that democratic banking was applicable to Canada. He then proceeded to establish other credit unions in the Province of Quebec. These now number 121, and 19 have also been formed in Ontario. Desjardins actively assisted in this and has now other 24 applications in hand. Massachusetts, under his guidance, passed in 1909 an act for the incorporation of credit unions and has now 26 in operation, of which 11 are Jewish, 8 French-Canadian, and 2 Italian. Mr. Brandeis regards this as a strong indication that the immigrant is not unprepared for financial democracy.

Home Rule for Ontario Cities

Ontario cities have suffered from the marked disinclination of successive provincial governments and legislatures to accord them a reasonable measure of home rule. They have been cribbed, cabined and confined in all ways, ordered to do this, forbidden to do that and circumscribed within narrow bounds, irrespective of local differences and necessities. It was not without reason that the civic survey, which has been investigating the Toronto departments, described the act of governing its activities as a town and village act. One of the main reasons, perhaps the most effective reason, for the remarkable efficiency of German city administration, is the wide individual liberty accorded by the state. The Prussian Government, for example, rather invites than discourages independent action. It has no fear of a "checker board" system and welcomes experimental departures from the beaten track. Nor does it regard the nominal amount of a city's debt as indicating the true weight of its burden. Debts incurred for really beneficial purposes or for investment in reproductive enterprises are no more "debt" in any true sense than is the capital of a private undertaking. German cities are usually extensive suburban land owners. They plan years in advance and increases in land values, instead of providing a sphere for the operations of land speculators, accrue to the city itself, which is thus enabled to maintain prices at amounts that allow for proper housing. Ontario cities should long ago have been granted similar powers. Their troubles would be less today.

Electrical Sterilization of Milk

Some authorities hold that the pasteurization of milk by heat impairs its food value, especially for infants. It is, therefore, of interest to learn from a paragraph in the current issue of Conservation, the monthly bulletin of the Dominion Conservation Commission, that that new general servant of mankind, electricity, has come to the rescue. For the past two years researches have been in progress at the University of Liverpool, with the object of lessening the cost of sterilizing milk. As a result, it has been demonstrated that all extraneous organisms in milk can be effectually destroyed by electricity without changing its flavor or composition. The Liverpool city council has now authorized the installation of the electrical method at one of its milk depots.

CRUSTS AND CRUMBS

By Albert Ernest Stafford

WHAT IS pragmatism? This is being asked in many circles where the schoolmaster is not quite at home, and we were talking about it the other evening in a way that led me to think that a little more attention paid to it would lighten many mental burdens and solve many difficulties. There is something rather uncouth and unfamiliar at first to the ordinary reader about the word, but it is from the same Greek word that we get practice and practical, and when one has had much to do with philosophy and philosophers it is encouraging to come across a system that professes to have something to do with things practical. Even when Prof. James asks: "May there not after all be a possible ambiguity in truth?" one is disturbed not the least, for a suspicion that such was the case has probably been lingering in the back of the mind after consulting a number of prophets, priests and philosophers. The new pragmatic men say, it seems, that "truth, in our ideas and beliefs means the same thing that it means in science." It means, they say, nothing but this, that ideas (which themselves are but parts of our experience), become true, just in so far as they help us to get into satisfactory relation with other parts of our experience, to summarize them and get about among them by conceptual short-cuts, instead of following the interminable succession of particular phenomena. Any idea upon which we can ride, so to speak; any idea that will carry us prosperously from any one part of our experience to any other part, linking things satisfactorily, working securely, simplifying, saving labor; is true for just so much, true in so far forth, true instrumentally. This is the "instrumental" view of truth taught so successfully at Chicago, the view that truth in our ideas means their power to "work," promulgated so brilliantly at Oxford.

OUR TALK did not centre especially on technical pragmatism, and indeed I am not specially allured by technical systems of any kind. All systems only represent certain points of view. "Anything is but a part," as Walt Whitman says, and the particular merit of pragmatism is that it takes account of other systems. The particular merit of theosophy is that it not only takes account of other systems, but accounts for them and explains them. It is a poor system which can only get along with others by ignoring them or meeting them with violent opposition. This is the weakness of most of the ecclesiastical systems. The Kikuyu incident is an excellent example of this conscientious intolerance. It is an outcrop of materialism. My experience has led me to regard the materialistic as the most intolerant of all systems. Coated with religion it is at the base of all harsh uncharity. The materialist is unhappy at the thought of anyone believing or knowing more than he conceives possible. And he usually refuses to take the step by which others have gained the farther knowledge. This same characteristic is to be noted in the case of the materialistic ecclesiastic who usually pins his faith to forms and creeds and traditions. I often wonder how he can understand God's infinite toleration which permits all kinds of beings to exist, but he usually consoles himself with some vision of a future hell.

THE materialistic cult, both in religion and science, is not so strong as it was fifty years ago. The church people are beginning to recognize the cogency of St. Paul's assertion: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." The scientific men still have Huxley's tough nut to crack, which he presented in the Romanes lecture of 1882, when he declared that whether from the hardness of his heart or of his head he had to recognize another term in the universe besides force and matter—that of consciousness. That has been further complicated for the mere materialist by the latest dictum of physical science that there is no such thing as matter; that what is called matter is only the shape or form taken by force or motion. And so we pass back inwards to the ether or the seven ethers, at any rate quite off the stage where materialistic dogmatism can be of any avail, and we must rely on consciousness whether we will or not. There is no difficulty about any of these things unless one has contracted a violent prejudice. Once one assumes allegiance to a certain cult and feels bound in honor in our foolish human way to die for it, right or wrong, of course difficulties arise. But if one stands ready to drop any absurdity as soon as a demonstration of the absurdity has been made, one will never go far wrong. I have suggested that the man tied up to a cult or a prejudice might remind one of the warnings given to those who get lost in a desert or a forest, whose chief danger is that they walk around in a circle. After traveling for hours they discover that they have come back to where they started. One leg is a little longer or stronger than the other, and takes longer steps, with the result of a circular journey. The mind that has one leg, one prejudice, one blind belief stronger than another will travel in a circle round a center from which it cannot free itself. So I think we should have a goal in view and march towards that, whether by following the stars, or by keeping a straight line behind one, thus setting a straight forward course and making progress. I find the people of twenty-five years ago who were materialists or dogmatists, or fossils of any description are just where they were, as reluctant as ever to listen to new ideas and new truths; while the men who were open minded have traveled over vast tracts of country and are in all ways the better and broader for having lived.

THE MATERIALIST, according to the Encyclopaedia, thinks that all facts are explainable in terms of matter and motion, and of psychical processes by physical and chemical changes. The idealist explains matter by mind, and denies that there is another class, the natural realists, and to them minds and material objects have equally effective existence. It is to these that pragmatism is akin. It is a practical, sensible way of looking at things, and, held without prejudice, enables one to organize one's experience without contracting a violent antipathy to important elements in it, or without omitting large portions that evidently appeal to other people. We have all heard of the man who went to the menagerie, and after examining a dromedary closely, and noting all its oddities, announced: "There ain't no such animal." This is the attitude of the materialistic sceptic who sees all the phenomena of religion around him, conversion, repentance, metamorphoses, renewing of mind, and so forth, and calmly announces that he does not believe there is any such thing. The same attitude adopted by many who observe spiritualism, psychic science of all kinds, faith healing, mental healing, Christian science, all mental arts as like as two peas in a pod, but refusing to recognize any relationship. Their general verdict is: "There ain't no such animal."

WHAT IS called naive materialism is the result of the natural difficulty that persons without philosophic training have in appreciating the facts of consciousness. It is on account of this perhaps frequently excusable ignorance that much of what is called scepticism exists. It is not real scepticism, but merely ignorance. The French Academy of Sciences postulated the phonograph. No savage can understand writing or telegraph. It is just as difficult for the average sceptic or facts of the spiritual life. There is no need to denounce him, much less to burn him at the stake. He still retains the savage inability to understand unfamiliar phenomena, and he adds to that a reluctance in many instances to be oppressed with the moral responsibility which a clear understanding of spiritual existence involves. This is true of people in all classes of society and of all stages of belief or creed. Very few have sufficiently open minds to embrace all the other diversified elements of belief and unbelief, and to recognize the true relationship with the one central consciousness, the one underlying Life. I have a little sympathy with the incredulous as with the incredulous. An old friend used to say: "If you believe all you hear, you will eat hell, you see." There is as much incredulity, scepticism, as it is called, in the churches today as among free-thinkers, so-called, and the freedom of free-thinkers is a joke, for they would regard themselves as disgraced if they permitted themselves to take any but a pre-concocted view of the universe. A way of escape has been opened up for many by pragmatism. At least it provides for the open mind, which so few systems do. One of the Masters who wrote theosophical movement, about whom much has been written, recently wrote: "Behold the truth before you, a clean life, an open mind, a pure heart, an eager intellect, an unobscured spiritual perception, a willingness for one's co-disciple, a readiness to give and receive advice and instruction, a loyal sense of duty, a respect for the teacher, a willing obedience to the behests of Truth, once we have placed our confidence in, and believe that teacher to be in possession of it; a courageous endurance of personal injustice, a brave declaration of principles, a valiant defence of those who are unjustly attacked, and a constant eye to the ideal of human progression and perfection which the secret science depicts—these are the golden stairs, up the steps of which the learner may climb to the Temple of Divine Wisdom."

Wrap Designs for the Home Dressmaker

How the Favored Fashion of the Moment, the Simple Kimono Line, Makes Home Cutting Easy and Opens the Way for the Exercise of Individual Taste

1—Kimono Wrap of Emerald Green Satin, Embroidered with Silk and Silver

By STELLA GORDON

Do you know how really simple and within the making knowledge of almost every one the average wrap of the season is? I asked my friend, the Modiste, as she removed the coverings from one lovely wrap after another and threw them carelessly over the chairs.

"It is lucky for the makers of them that women don't stop to analyze the bits of brocade and plush and velvet we give them, for any clever seamstress could duplicate nine out of ten of them, so none but the expert could tell the difference between the creation and the copy. Fact! If you don't believe it, I will snip you out a pattern and tell you enough secrets of the trade so you can have a new wrap for less than half you would have to pay me for it."

"You know no real designer uses patterns," she confided as she folded a sheet of heavy paper and scissored out a queer shape for me. "We just wrap the stuff about the figure and cut out places for the sleeves and sew it up and put on some trimming and there it is! All done but paying the bill!"

"Oh, of course you are not to take me literally. It just happens that the present style of evening wrap is quite simple, and you may as well take advantage of the fact and have a new one. Your common sense must have told you that they are not intricate. The trimming is what makes them. That and the importance of the right lines. You must have the right lines. It is the silhouette that makes or mars the appearance of the woman of the moment."

Artistic Swathing.

"So when you build your wrap bear in mind that the stuff must appear to be swathed round your figure and at the same time there must not be the least appearance of bulk or the suggestion of clumsiness."

"The greatest fulness must come just below the hips. There must be no inward curve at the waist. But at the hem the garment must be drawn in closely and held in place to conform with the fashionable gown.

"Tell your women readers to buy the stuff for their wraps from the bargain tables. And tell them not to be afraid of strong colors or big designs. There is forgiveness for the bizarre in the evening, wrap of the season. The shops are full of lovely materials which can be had for at least as little as half of the original price, for they are the novelties both in pattern and hue that are not desirable to be held as staple."

Following the hints of my friend I made a round of the shops and found nearly every wrap shown bore out what she had so generously told me. The kimono is the foundation of all the gorgeous things we grow envious over, and we sigh because we have not the limitless incomes which let us possess them.

Why, of all the wraps that I saw, and the best of which I am reproducing for you on this page, two-thirds could be made by the little seamstress that does your simple summer frocks.

A good kimono pattern is the best model you can have. I would advise making a perfect model from muslin first and do away with fear of waste when you take the final daring slash into the expensive fabric you may have chosen. Also, you will have better success if you use the very wide material. Otherwise you will have to piece for the cuffs and seam, and all such contingencies may as well be avoided by the amateur.

And for your own convenience, as well as for the triumphant finish of the cloak, I hope you possess one of the most useful and inexpensive dressmaker's "dummies." In draping you will find it invaluable.

There is not much fancy for the full length garment. There has been from time to time whispers that it was on its way to favor, but it has not arrived. Three-quarters length or less is the average. It promises to last as the accepted thing during the summer.

Bewilderingly Lovely Material.

The materials offered for these wraps are bewildering alike in their loveliness and variety. There are the brocaded velvets, the satin brocades, the brocades that show the richness of metallic thread in their weave. There are simpler plain velvets and velveteens and corduroys. There are the most delightful plushes and some distinctive goods that reproduce the quality of fur. Then there are silks, moires and taffetas, and any number of new and fascinating wool weaves that have most puzzling names. As for width, there are plenty of goods 50, 54 and 56 inches that are suitable.

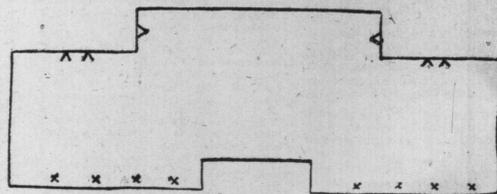

They may be seamless on the shoulder or the garment may be made with sloping shoulder, which is becoming to almost all figures.

In choosing the wraps illustrated I have tried to show the best and most modish lines and the easiest to make. The one in the first figure gives an admirable idea of what may be accomplished with a square of material. It is developed in emerald green satin of a heavy quality, and one side of the garment is embroidered in silk and silver. It is a design that may be varied in limitless ways, depending upon the artistic skill and patience of the maker.

One corner of the square forms the point at the back, and two other corners meet in front just below the waist line. The rest of the material is allowed to run up to the neck, where it is shaped and draped to give the effect of a cape in the back. One of the newest outer garments and one which is sure to be good all during the summer is shown in the second figure. This is one of the simplest forms of the kimono. It is fashioned of that exquisite new green called "pussy willow," and is of taffeta in the softest quality.

Quite elaborate and eminently suited

Kimono Pattern. Cross Marks at Top Indicate Folding Line

The shade is neither gray nor green, but has the suggestion of both. The sleeves are shorter, and there is a set-on cuff which runs up into the shoulder in raglan style. The collar is Japanese, a wide strip of material wide.

The top is doubled down to the waist line in front, where it is slashed to form a wide kimono sleeve for the upper part, and the lower part is free to be brought around the figure, meeting in front, where it is seamed to the upper fold, brought down from the shoulder to meet it.

Looks Elaborate; Not Difficult.

Far more elaborate in appearance but no more difficult to make is the model displayed in the third picture. While this is in red and black uncut velvet it would be quite as charming carried out in the Egyptian crepe, which I am told will be much liked for the later spring.

In making this you have only to follow the diagram shown here, which is simple and convincing. Double the goods and square out the under arm piece and cut out the neck. At the lower edge the back and fronts are gathered into a shaped band of imitation broadtail, which runs up the front and out into a scarf adorned with a black silk tassel. In the lighter material this band might be some contrasting color or hand-crocheted.

Quite elaborate and eminently suited to the most formal wear is the last model, number four. As shown, it is of gray satin with dull blue flowers for the brocade. It is cut from one piece of the goods, which is very wide.

The top is doubled down to the waist line in front, where it is slashed to form a wide kimono sleeve for the upper part, and the lower part is free to be brought around the figure, meeting in front, where it is seamed to the upper fold, brought down from the shoulder to meet it.

By taking a bit of paper and folding it you will soon get the idea of the way it is done. There is a straight strip of blue velvet for the Japanese collar, and an inner Medici frill of cream lace. There are also rosettes of satin sewn with crystals and a beaded cord and tassel for the neck finish.

India annually produces a rice crop of greater value than the American cotton crop.

Easy Housekeeping for Brides

A Charming and Inexpensive Dining Room in White Enamel

She Can Even Wash Dishes Without Becoming a Cinderella.

(The same being some of the things that Rebecca Reed found out for herself.)

WHAT Ho Little Bride! So you are going to housekeeping? And you are resolved to hitch your automobile to a star, of course, and have a very happy journey through life because you love each other. Everything else is merely incidental, isn't it? Your shining eyes have almost a reproached expression when I prosaically speak of "household machinery" as being an important factor in the keeping of that "perfect happiness" in its pristine state.

"Jack" you assure me, "is not a rank materialist, and for anyone to speak of the way to a man's heart being through his stomach is nothing short of vulgar. If he had wanted a cook instead of a companion—"

Wait a minute, Little Bride, that is exactly the point I was going to make. He doesn't want a cook instead of a companion, but unless you give the household machinery at least as much time and thought as you expended on your trousseau, "Jack" is likely to find himself in precisely that situation.

Your Training.

JUST what has been your training for home making, may I ask? Are you a "poor little rich girl" who has often been warned that she will not have a bed of roses if she marries a man who can not give her all the luxuries that "father" has hitherto provided?

Or are you a little business or professional girl who is quite sure she is not the one to be fooled by servants or tradesmen, she is so worldly wise?

It really does not matter much which you are, the situation will be much the same if you are going to marry a man whose salary is less than $3000 a year. The older generation of home makers, it seems to me, are given to minimizing their early domestic difficulties in retrospect, so that even "mother" may not be able to guide you past these matrimonial shoals which she, luckily, sailed around in safety.

Home Making and Housekeeping.

Right here I want to point out the difference between "home making" and "housekeeping." Some of the best housekeepers in the world have failed to make homes for their families. There are certain essentials to be observed, but the woman whose entire viewpoint is from the material end will never be much of an inspiration to her husband. The trouble with the young housekeeper in many instances is that on realizing that even married life is real, bringing with it disappointments and disillusion, she "lets down" and becomes a mental burden to the man she marries. In other words in failing to realize her ideal, she refuses to "idealize her real" which is the only genuine philosophy after all.

Planning Expenditures.

If you are sensible young people, you have figured it all out on paper, and have decided that on this present salary you can be very cozy and do considerable entertaining. You can keep a housemaid and put something in the bank or in the Building Association each week. I hate to be a wet blanket, but it is going to cost you exactly one-third more than that. No I don't know what figure you have set, but I do know that thirty-three and one-third per cent. additional expense will be added so let us go back over that important document once more and do a little lopping off here and there.

Well let us start away for dollars

Your Apartment and Furnishings.

So you see, Little Bride, the decision is "up to you," and from my heart I give you this advice. Let your bank account be the last item to be changed. What about your house, or flat? If you are sure it answers all purposes and that you can not get one just as nice in a little less fashionable neighborhood, then pass on to the next, furnishings. Unless you are the one great exception you will do as most brides do, that is, furnish their first homes at a figure away out of proportion to their husband's income. That trite old axiom, "It pays to buy good things," is the most overlooked principle of the home-maker. I do not suggest cheap, poorly built furniture, but if your taste is good and you have an eye for color, you can make your home unique instead of its being a replica of every other house that you visit, and do it on much less money.

The Dining-Room.

MAHOGANY is naturally your first thought, particularly for your dining-room. You probably have some very handsome wedding gifts and you feel that you should have a china closet in addition to the regular pieces of the dining-room set in which to show them off.

Have you ever thought of the possibilities of a white dining-room? They are endless. I saw one in the home of a millionaire, which a good cabinet maker could reproduce for less than the cost of the very mediocre imitation of mahogany. The round table is built on simple lines, and the crystal chandeliers have a lattice of narrow wooden strips forming diamond shaped panes in their doors. Nothing could be more attractive than the glass and silver sparkling within. The closets have a double advantage in that, lacking the glass and silver, sheer white curtains inside of the doors may hide this fact from dinner guests.

If you prefer the dark wood furniture many interesting pieces can be found among the second hand stores or in visiting the sales in country farm houses. The different articles may not match exactly but to my mind that only gives them a more individual touch, provided they "combine" well. The point in this is: If you furnish expensively now, in ten years your things will actually be shabby. Visit the home of almost any friend in moderate circumstances where little folks have whacked and scratched the tables; and careless maids set hot dishes on their polished surfaces. How much better they would look if a coat of white enamel could have renewed their youth each Spring during the cleaning season!

I know it is a great temptation to try things "fixed," but it is much better in one's mind to furnish all at once. Buy what you need and as you live with your things you will much better understand what kind of things are best suited to your taste, your environment and your purse.

The Servant Question and the Kitchen.

THE question that furnishes the conversational topic for the average sewing bee—the servant question. Do you know what it costs to keep one five-dollar-a-week maid of the average type? Wrong again. Four five are not twenty twenty-four when applied to the servant question. Now figure it out yourself.

Jack whistles a long, low whistle and mentally taps his bank account once more for he is not the man to ask this radiant being to do household drudgery for him. Horrid dishes gummy sinks, co-

tato parings—Ugh! You get the vision too, don't you Little Bride?

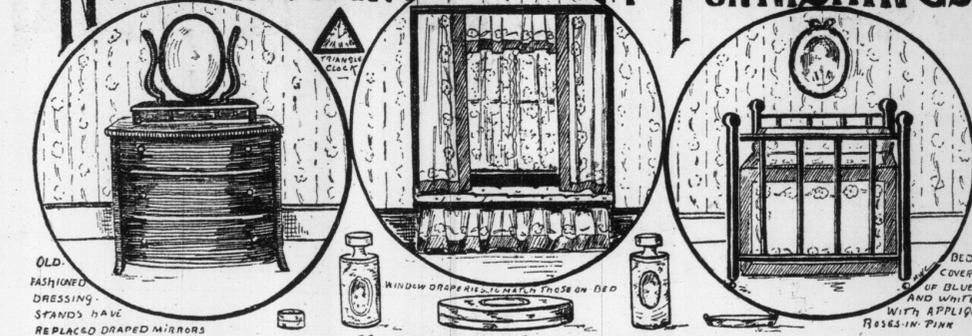

Well, dismiss it as speedily as possible and let me give you a much pleasanter vision. It is only tradition that demands that "woman's sphere" be made as unattractive as possible and some women impose it upon themselves as a consequence of Mother Eve's shortcomings. If home-making is to be your profession, why not go about it scientifically. One of the cleanest, ### happiest working housewives I ever saw, was a woman surgeon. She had no tradition to hamper her, no preconceived notions of the grubbiness of housework.

As her career was to be a professional one, her mother had never attempted to "teach" her housework, so as a bride she did not have to struggle with the handicap of knowing how to do it the wrong way.

A well equipped operation room was probably her ideal, for her kitchen was

NEWEST IDEAS IN BED ROOM FURNISHINGS

By Marion W. Clark.

THERE is a growing tendency, and an excellent one, to treat a bed as a bed and not to disguise it with extra pair of curtains and colored effects.

There is nothing prettier on a bed than white and if a colored lining is used at all, it should be of the palest possible tint.

When white is the foundation, of course, it is possible to add all kinds of pretty appliques and embroideries in color to harmonize with the curtains and upholstery of the furniture.

Heretofore when one wishes the counterpane to match the window curtains, the only thing to do, was to buy an extra pair of curtains and piece them together, running a strip of lace insertion down the line where they were pieced. The result was satisfactory, but it was a good deal of bother.

Now it is possible to buy a bedset of dimity with floral borders that matches in design the muslin curtains, which are edged with plain white ruffles. The bedset is shaped to fit a single bed and roll bolster, the bolster sham being separate. Such a set in dimity bordered with big pink roses costs about $9.99 without the curtains which, of course, are sold by the pair, according to the number of windows to be draped.

In the sketch above is an imported counterpart of white bordered with plain blue. Pink roses are applied inside the blue on the white. There is no ruffle or fullness of any kind, but its very simplicity and the ease with which it may be laundered comprise its chief charm.

When flowered materials are used for hangings and for the upholstery or the coverings of chairs, the carpet should be plain with a floral border, and if the flowers are very vivid in the draperies, a plain white paper with silver stripes should be selected and only a narrow floral border well up to the ceiling or against it.

If you prefer to keep the bed all white (and many people do) one can make beautiful covers at home of white linen, hemstitching or scalloping them around the edge and embroidering a huge monogram in the center. In this case the bolster sham is made separately but corresponds in regard to the border and the monogram.

A recent bride who clung to the idea of Marseilles spreads had them scalloped and bound with braid for her spare-room bed. Her carpet was flowered and the red quilts were flowered and the plain blue inside curtains had borders of pink roses. So she rightly immuculate. The walls were painted a light yellow, and all iron pipes—water, steam and drain pipes were painted with aluminum paint. For the price of a maid's wage for three weeks, not counting wear and tear, she got a fireless cooker, which not only saves labor but gas bills as well and is really part of the modern woman's household implements.

SPEAKING of gas bills—a word to the wise. If you are going to cook on a gas range, you probably have a private meter. Through that meter there comes a flow of gas just twice the amount you need. A valve in the main pipe just below the meter controls this. Point it out to Jack and let him see what he can do to lower expenses by reducing the pressure which is responsible for the rapid registering of your meter.

If you can afford to have aluminum kitchen ware it is the best. Don't hide it away in cupboards but have several kitchen shelves with brass hooks on the under side on which to hang the things with handles. Narrow strips of wood can be made into excellent knife racks by tacking small blocks of wood along one side at intervals. Leave spaces between the blocks to accommodate knives of varying sizes. The rack should be placed against the wall above the table or cutting board—you can tell where it will be most convenient. This method of keeping knives is much better than placing them carelessly in drawers where the amateur cook may cut or scratch herself in getting her paring knife.

Dish Washing.

THREE strips of wood may also be utilized for fashioning a draining board for dishes, patterned after those seen in the department stores, and which are placed in the sink board during the draining process. The draining of dishes is one of the important things a bride must know. It saves her hands and her time and is the only sanitary way to do them. Not one woman in a hundred really knows how to wash dishes. As it seems to be their special prerogative this sounds extravagant, but it is true. A peep into the sterilizing rooms of one of the big hospitals would provide some valuable suggestions along this line.

First scrape the dishes and then hold each one under the running spigot. Two dish mops with handles hang conveniently near the sink. One of these is the "dirty" mop. With it you mop off the actual food that clings to the dishes and then plunge them into a dishpan of boiling water, which is moderately soapy. Then take the "clean" mop and quickly rub off the dish. Flush it up to the surface of the water, remove it with a tea towel in your hand and place it to drain in the rack. The heat absorbed by the cup or platter will quickly dry it without the aid of a towel. But be sure that the water is hot, not lukewarm. Treat silver in the same manner, but instead of using slightly soapy water use water into which half a teaspoon of baking soda has been placed. Lay the silver out on a tea towel when removed from the water and when dry polish it off with a clean tea towel. You will be surprised at the luster of your "every-day" flat silver.

The best results are obtained in "scientific dish washing," if you do not hurry the draining process. Go about your other work and when you return, everything will be ready for the cupboard. Boiling water, as you see, is the essential thing, and with this process there is no unnecessary handling or "wiping," and we have what hospital folks would call surgically clean vessels for food, meaning that they are free from germs.

Potato Paring.

ANOTHER beté noir of the housekeeper is the paring of potatoes. As they are one of the commonest articles of diet (although there are other starches that are superior) it is necessary to get around this point in another than the usual way. Except for French or raw fried potatoes, the skins can be removed just as well after they are slightly cooked as before, and oh, it is so much easier! Rinse them off, drop them into boiling water and let them cook five minutes. This is just sufficient to loosen the skins. By holding them with a fork you can slip your knife under the skins and speedily remove them. The potatoes will then be ready to put back on the fire to prepare for boiling, mashing or any of the ways in which you intend to cook them.

Amid the many jokes on young brides and their culinary feats, I would suggest that even though Jack loves mince pie and some of the more complicated dishes, you refrain from attempting any of the simplest meals for at least a year. When you have learned to cook one thing without burning the other two and can serve them hot and well seasoned on your pretty china, and when you can pour the coffee with the grace of a hostess while you sit smiling across the table, becomingly gowned in your nice little wash dress—then are you well on the way to become a real home maker.

Your Hands.

As you sit by the fire later in the evening and Jack tells you that your hands are just as pretty as when they first came to his notice in spite of your hard work, you may well tell him, if you are a frank little bride that science has helped you and that on the cupboard shelf is a bottle and a box which hold your beauty secrets. The bottle, an eight ounce one, contains this mixture:

Alcohol, bay rum, rose water, glycerine, equal parts. Carbolic acid one drop, Juice of one lemon.

This is rubbed on the hands after the work is done. In the box is plain corn starch rubbed on after the lotion is used and then dusted off. Even scrubbing could not harm the skin or nails after that treatment. But you need not scrub, for Mary the weekly clean-up girl does all that is necessary for you dear little home.

TO AMUSE A SICK CHILD.

THERE are many ways to amuse a sick child, besides buying games and toys at the shops. The child enjoys the toys she makes herself better than any other kind. A paper tablet, pencil, crayons and scissors are all that are necessary. One particular maid of ten years amused herself through a week of the mumps by making a "Stara Game." There are many things to do for this play. First she manufactured money by drawing small circles, the size of a penny, writing in the disc the amount which the coin was to represent, and coloring it yellow for gold and brown for copper. These circles she cut out and with them filled her purse. Then she began to make the cards, the paper to be purchased with the money. Paper dolls came first. With mother's aid she drew a full figure of a doll, with dresses, hats and furs complete; and these she colored to suit her girlish fancy. The cutting out was a part of the pleasure.

MAGAZINE pictures are excellent for coloring purposes, especially the fashion figures. Before these, dollars are cut out, if they are pasted on a sheet of table paper, they will have extra body, and will endure.

"A Paper Doll Party," is a morning's occupation for the youngster, and one which will delight her. There are several duties on her part that this function calls for. First, the invitations must be written and dispatched to the various dolls. Second, the refreshments have to be drawn, colored and cut out. This includes plates, spoons, dishes of fruit, cakes, candy and ice cream, and a souvenir for each doll. Third, the dollies have to be dressed in their best bits and tuckers and introduced to one another, before dancing and eating. Another morning may be spent in drawing a Noah's Ark, and coloring the animals.

HOME-MADE "Jig-saw" puzzles are made by pasting colored pictures on cardboard and then cutting the same into small, irregular pieces. These are mixed up in a box, and then patched together again to form the original picture. There are only a few suggestions for the little youthful invalid, but there are many others which the child's ingenuity will invent with the aid of paper, pencil, crayon and scissors.

SHALL WE HARDEN OUR CHILDREN?

If we attempt to harden our children during the periods of rapid growth, the consequences may be disastrous, says an expert. These periods of rapid growth are between the fourth and the fifth, the ninth and the tenth and the thirteenth and the fourteenth years. The writer quotes Alois Strasser, who says that hardening is necessary, but that, in addition to the age of the child, his constitution should be considered, and the surface covering of his body related to his weight.

During the first few years of a child's life it is necessary only to adapt his body to indoor temperatures, and, suitably clad, to varying outdoor temperatures. The child should not be given even mildly cold baths before he is three or four years of age, then only a mere sponging of the body, and this in the morning. Cold showers and douches at this age are detrimental.

Up to the time he is fourteen a short stimulating bath in the morning is all that is necessary. Regularity in this matter is important. Safety and comfort are the criteria, depending upon the susceptibility of the child.

The Old-Fashioned House

Minor furnishings for the house of eighteenth century type are not easily picked up, but of late some of the old-fashioned domestic furnishings have been reproduced at prices which even the very thrifty may seriously consider. The revived fashions include bellows in brass or carved wood, Franklin stoves, which furnish the cheering effect of the open fireplace minus its dangers—if left alone—and dog and iron in brass or iron. Delightfully quaint, too, are the freestone stools having four short posts joined by cards of firm wood lumps and hand-woven to form a foundation for a cushion in gay-hued chintz, taffeta or velvet. Also the round, braided mat of alluring coloring. These are pretty in any room furnished in eighteenth century style.

WHEN there is a young baby, the mother is glad to know that a bassinot on wheels can be purchased. The clothes basket bed is reasonable and all that, but it must be carried

The Girl and the Prima Donna

THE girl was tired out in body and mind. She had been sent to interview a "near-Prima donna," as she viciously termed the rising young singer and the last touch had been added to a miserably discouraging day when her "coop" had been indignantly rejected by the editor.

"Great Scott!" he had barked. "You might as well expect me to feature a Flat last farewell. Her father, a noted clergyman! Everybody knows he was a sexton! Mother a descendant of Lady Hamilton! Nice pedigree that! Has invented a patent tea-kettle, used daily by the Kaiser! Oh, piffle! You better go over to the opera house, Miss Lindsay, and see if you can't get hold of something worth while."

It was half past three when she reached the opera house, and the "Bohème" rehearsal was scheduled for quarter to four. So the big auditorium was empty except for some cleaning women sweeping at the back and a few of the musicians raising discordant violin tunings down front.

"It wasn't my fault," the girl thought, hardly able to keep back the tears of fatigue and hunger, for the interview had been conducted over the singer's lunch, in which she had not shared. "I can't give the woman a personality when she hasn't got one. How would she talk about big things with a mean little mind like hers! Music! what does she really care about music or anything or anybody but herself!"

She thought of her own life and it seemed to her as empty as the big seats, as chaotic as the "Walkure" scenery in front, leaning up against a backdrop of "Butterfly."

JUST then a very sweet, very penetrating woman's voice rang down the aisle:—"Mon Dieu, Mr. Arsenkyim, you give me the headache!" it said. "Well, I suppose I can spare the time to read his libretto if I have to."

The girl turned around, startled. The Prima Donna was strolling down the aisle with the Impresario, who seemed to her no way unused either to his star's language or the casual way in which she dismissed him. She sat down across the aisle from the girl, nodding her greetings and pulling off gloves and hat to give a silently-following maid. Several people had drifted in while the girl was waiting her day. Soon the Prima Donna's golden head, rising out of her wonderful fur coat, became their center. Among reporters, press-agents, fellow-artists there to rehearse later or merely to look on, a critic or two, she was the magnet for them all. With a smile always ready for the big tenor who had been the first to join her, she laughed, chattered French gossip or listened delightedly to jokes more or less brilliant.

THE girl watched them dreading from her place. She might have joined them, they would have received her courteously, and the editor's "something worth while" might have come of it, but she was in no mood for their cheerful cynicism. Meantime, the chorus had assembled on the stage for the "Cafe Momus" scene. The little conductor rapped sharply on the stand and the wonderful Bohème music began. Love swelled through every note of it—love, and the loss of love—and the dry thinness of Elvora's life spread before her like a desert.

Someone took the seat next her, with a shiver of silk and a whiff of delicious perfume. It was the prima donna.

WHAT'S the matter, little one?" she said kindly. "You look miserable."

"Oh, how do you do?" the girl said. "I'm well, thank you. Just a little tired of things," she added, trying to force a smile.

"I thought you looked that way," the prima donna remarked. "Something wrong, eh? Anything I could help out with?"

It was not the first time the girl had met with this woman's kindness, but she was unused either to a fire to-day it was like the girl's frozen hands, which one stretches out frozen hands.

"No, thank you ever so much," the girl returned. "Things just don't seem worth while to-day somehow. I don't believe you've ever felt that way, though, have you? You couldn't do what you've done if you got discouraged."

The prima donna's beautiful face had grown very grave. "I did once," she mused. "Only I was hungry, too. You're not, are you?" the girl shook her head. "It was in Berlin. And the woman that gave me my start—Maria Lehman—came up and said to me, 'What's wrong with you, little one? Just as I did just now. And all my career began that day.'"

"I know," the girl said. "It's a beautiful story. But you see, you got somewhere. And I don't seem to. The little bit of writing I do doesn't seem worth doing."

YOU won't have some of the things I said of you that they invent every day about some of us, because you're not the type certain things are said of," she went on more deliberately. "But they'll call you mean and chattering if you save your money, and a wasteful fool if you don't. They'll say you borrowed most of your material from Dante when you didn't steal it from De Maupassant. Oh! don't I know what success means? You may have love with it—her eyes rested for a second on the tenor across the aisle—but you've got no time to try to hold

"What's the matter, little one? You look miserable."

Clothes and Your Success

WHAT would you think if your employer came to his office some morning in a full dress suit and an opera hat? You can't even imagine such a thing, can you? But that isn't a bit more absurd than the way some women dress. In the Christmas rush I saw an employe minding along through one of the department stores in a peep skirt, with unnecessary bunches of fullness, and her hips, and about a yard of width at the ankles. She was trying to hurry from one part of the store to the other, on an errand of importance, and with one hand she raised her skirt, in accord with the latest dictates of that extreme and faddish style.

Very likely when she donned her outdoor garments she had a wisp of a fancy or a feather of some sort sticking straight out of the back of her hat, so that it endangered the eyes on the glasses of some one in the crowded streets or cars every time she moved.

NOW don't think that I am criticizing any girl for wanting to look her best and dress as well as she can afford to every day in the week, but common sense, good taste and good judgment must be combined to evolve a suitable garment for daily wear.

If you want to wear those faddish things, wear them during your leisure hours. But this is just where the trouble comes in. The majority of girls are not earning enough money to have separate and distinct wardrobes, one for their leisure time, which is so scarce, and one for business hours.

Then what are you to do? To affect a compromise and appear as if you can at all times. That is the question that you must consider seriously, for your own good.

Some of you economize on your everyday clothes. You think any old thing will do to wear out at the office, and to wear to and fro, and save all your good things for other places. You do yourselves an injustice and an injury. If that is your practice, don't you know that among strangers the usual impression that you make and leave is conveyed by your outward appearance? That impression may not be a true one, but if it is pleasant, you have made a long stride toward further interest. In the world of business any suggestion of poverty, or failure, or dejection invariably suggests inefficiency. An appearance of conscious assurance and efficiency will do much to help you toward that end. You discredit both your own dignity and that of your employer if you wear suits and dresses of a style noticeably out of date, or shabby. To be your best, you must be suitably and becomingly dressed. Anything that makes you conscious of your apparel detracts from your best effort, under any circumstances. So, if you have to sacrifice some of your desires, do not make the sacrifice on the business side. Your friends and acquaintances know you and like you for yourself, and for them it is not as important to consider outward impressions.

SUITABILITY is the keynote of all good dressing, and if your garb stands that test you are well dressed, regardless of its cost.

But quality is an important point for the business girl to consider. Your clothes receive constant and hard wear, and it is cheaper for you, in the long run, to buy shoes and coats, and dresses of the best cut and quality. Cheap clothes may look well at first, but they soon lose their shape and hang wrinkled and limp, and then you must either buy more or go shabby. Five and six dollar shoes are better for you, because they hold their shape and appearance and look as good as new after they are mended. They also are more comfortable, which is another essential of all articles worn constantly.

By the way, it is economy to have as many pairs of shoes as you can afford, that you may take turns in wearing them and giving the others a rest.

Of course, as to style, the only general rule that can be observed by any one is to follow the general mode closely enough to appear up-to-date, but to modify it to suit your own individuality, comfort and the needs of your particular activity. Simple lines add beauty and dignity to any gown.

NOW just a few words about your other clothes for other occasions. Be sure to have a couple of simple, pretty frocks, if they are only cotton ones, to slip on when you are at home. The mere process of changing from your plain, serviceable suit into a really feminine one, immediately changes the current of your thoughts and the expression of your face. It rests you, and at the same time rests your business dress, which you put on a hanger in your room.

And don't forget a dressy dress—as pretty and as nice as you can have. Social opportunities come to you, often unexpectedly, and to accept and enjoy them in the proper spirit you must have the proper things to wear. Don't think this extravagant. It is as necessary as food and shelter for you to exchange your business garb for a frock, and your occupation for recreation.

The only thing that is real extravagance for you is to buy clothes that you have neither time nor opportunity to wear, and have them hanging away, unused. Get good clothes, but no more than you can wear out while the mode lasts.

And remember that the well-dressed business woman goes herself simply, quietly and in a conservative style as does any well-dressed woman for the street or shopping. She wears no jingling and superfluous jewelry or ornaments, and her attire is only noticeable for its good taste and common sense.

ARE you in love with anyone?" the prima donna demanded, abruptly. The girl's face became one of flame of scarlet denial, itself a confession. "Because if you are, marry him and let the writing go."

The girl and the woman looked at each other.

"I mean it," the prima donna said.

ARE you in love with anyone?" the prima donna demanded, abruptly. The girl's face became one of flame of scarlet denial, itself a confession. "Because if you are, marry him and let the writing go."

Up to a short time ago, she lived with her family, her mother, a brother and a younger sister. The brother and sister both worked and it required nearly the salary of all three of them to run the little establishment. The older girl became dissatisfied and after a quarrel left home and rented a room in a house, which was owned by a refined woman, and in which one of her friends had lived for two years. She went out for her meals and seemed quiet enough in her room, but after a few weeks the landlady suspected that she had been picking up an acquaintance from her window with young men in a house opposite. She watched and her suspicions were confirmed, so she told the girl she could not allow such things to continue and requested her to secure other quarters at the end of the week.

THE girl, however, like many another careless young creature, seemed not to realize that she was doing anything to be condemned and continued to scrape acquaintance with the numerous students who lived in the same street. Finally she brought two boy friends home with her one night and entertained them in the parlor. The landlady objected, knowing that the formality of an introduction had been dispensed with, and again told the girl to seek a room elsewhere, but the latter begged to be allowed to remain and wished to take a better room on the second floor in order that she might there entertain her callers. But she found that conventions were strictly observed in this house and that she had no other alternative than to leave.

When Saturday night came, the day her week was up, she carelessly purchased her way and not until after she had been to the moving picture show with one of her escorts of the opposite

"Mind you, I believe you have it in you to write as well as they say I sing—as I know I sing. But, Mon Dieu! what will you have when all's said and done?" She looked straight ahead of her at the vari-colored scene on the stage. "You'll have jealousy and meanness and tale-bearing. You'll have people you almost never saw popping up to say that they laid the foundation of your success, and that you've been ungrateful ever since."

A wave of her golden hair tumbled into her eyes and she pushed it back impatiently. Under her lids she shot a glance at the girl.

YOU won't have some of the things I said of you that they invent every day about some of us, because you're not the type certain things are said of," she went on more deliberately. BIRD PLACE-CARDS
The pyroxylin place-card-holders, that have been used this season, in the form of birds, are now brought out in colors, and are decorated to represent all the feathered creatures of the air, and are so tinted to fit in with any color scheme that the hostess is using.

Should a member of your family return to the home some day and be taken with a chill, vomiting and highly nervous symptoms and complain of sore throat, get out your clinical thermometer and follow the directions previously given to ascertain the degree of fever. Put John to bed at once in the most isolated room in the house regardless of whose it is, and send for the doctor.

If it is pronounced scarlet fever, decide who is to be the nurse and get the other members of the family out of the house as speedily as possible, before they become prisoners by the quarantine, which will be placed on the household label on the front door will eventually put an end to business or school for many weeks, even if it is a very light case, as the germ may reproduce the disease after a long period of inactivity.

There is less danger of contagion during the onset of the fever than later when desquamation, or "scaling," begins. When you realize how the tiny particles of skin rub off on bedclothes and clothing, you can readily see that the air would soon become germ laden, and the germs could be carried out by thousands on the clothes of the nurse, or on the dishes of the patient. The nurse in the sick room, owes it to the others not to go freely into all parts of the house.

If the situation is such that the nurse can not remain in isolation with the patient continuously, she should at least have a loose butcher's apron or wrapper and a close fitting cap to wear while in the room and remove when she leaves it.

THE red rash which appears on the second day dies out in about a week and the darkened scales of skin are shed in quantities. It is at this stage that there is danger of Bright's disease or nephritis, inflammation and "running" of the ear, inflammation of the lining and covering of the heart, and threatened pneumonia. The medicines will be ordered by the physician and the nurse's particular duty will be to follow directions on the part of the patient so that the heart condition will not be accentuated.

Keep the nose and throat as clean as possible with mild antiseptic sprays and specifics is ordered.

By attention to the throat now you may be able to prevent an operation later for middle ear disease.

By having him drink water freely, you flush out the system and may ward off Bright's disease.

Keep the room at a temperature of sixty-five to seventy degrees Fahrenheit with constant ventilation to prevent pneumonia.

By anointing the patient's body every day with an antiseptic oil or carbolic vasoline the skin is soothed and the scales less likely to be blown around.

Allow the patient no food except what has been ordered, which will usually be Milk, Koumiss, Junket, Albumin water, Fruit Juices, Gruels.

Note temperature, pulse, respiration, stools, quantity and appearance of the kidney secretions and keep a sample each day of the urine for the physician's examination.

Care of the Rooms.
S O much for your remedial measures, for John. You are not to forget other members of the family, yourself and possibly the neighbors.

The patient, I presume, is in a large airy room at the top of the house, next to the bath or with running water in the room. With cloths moistened with a three per cent, solution of carbolic acid, wipe the floor, furniture, sills, door-knob, mantle-piece etc., once a day, but never dust or sweep. Thoroughly disinfect the secretions of the patient and all articles used by him before they leave the room.

Hang a sheet, dipped in bichloride or carbolic solution, over the door way leading from the room. The moisture being the important thing, re-dip it as often as it becomes dry.

Solled linen should be placed in a wash boiler full of water, either carbolic or chloride of lime, and on reaching the kitchen or laundry, should be put on the fire and boiled without removing the lid of the boiler.

When patient and nurse are ready to leave the room to go into a clean portion of the house, they both must have an unusually thorough bath, hairy and all, in tincture of green soap; a dilute alcohol rub and finally a sponge bath of bichloride of mercury of a strength made by dissolving three tablets to a half tub of water.

The disinfection of the room will be taken up in another article.

You've got to give your life to your art? You've got to face the nightmare of younger competitors coming up every day.

As abruptly as she had come, the Prima Donna rose and went back to her circle.

"Mata, qu' as tu done, cherie?" the big tenor whispered to her, anxiously. "Nothing," the star returned absently. But a very lovely light came into her eyes as she smiled at him.

When the girl reached her home that evening, she found a letter on the table in her room. It ran:—
Miss Elinor Lindsay, 19 West Street.

The Girl in a Boarding House

A GIRL, eighteen years old, is employed in a wholesale office in a large city. She is quick at operating an electrical machine, which produces women's dresses, and often earns as much as $22.00 a week.

Up to a short time ago, she lived with her family, her mother, a brother and a younger sister. The brother and sister both worked and it required nearly the salary of all three of them to run the little establishment. The older girl became dissatisfied and after a quarrel left home and rented a room in a house, which was owned by a refined woman, and in which one of her friends had lived for two years. She went out for her meals and seemed quiet enough in her room, but after a few weeks the landlady suspected that she had been picking up an acquaintance from her window with young men in a house opposite. She watched and her suspicions were confirmed, so she told the girl she could not allow such things to continue and requested her to secure other quarters at the end of the week.

THE girl, however, like many another careless young creature, seemed not to realize that she was doing anything to be condemned and continued to scrape acquaintance with the numerous students who lived in the same street. Finally she brought two boy friends home with her one night and entertained them in the parlor. But she found that conventions were strictly observed in this house and that she had no other alternative than to leave.

When Saturday night came, the day her week was up, she carelessly purchased her way and not until after she had been to the moving picture show with one of her escorts of the opposite character, and the girl's life be spoiled irrevocably. I believed that under the right influence she might become a sensible and good woman. The landlady finally agreed with me. Later, after having a plain talk with her, she told the girl she might remain. She has since been as quiet as a mouse and I have found upon getting acquainted with her, that she is ignorant and simple.

THIS is her first experience away from home and her mother seems to be rather tyrannical and hard. The daughter, consequently, has not had the kind of love which is a girl's best guide and protection when she faces life, and I have endeavored to give her some advice in a way that I tried to make rational and she seems responsive.

She has a friend who has been in the habit of visiting her regularly, but here again there enters a question. She wants to have him call every night, and this he started to do. Again the landlady remonstrated; she was not going to allow anyone to monopolize the parlor, both for her own sake and that of three other women in the house who are privileged to use it. The girl's inexperience and ignorance of the amenities of life kept her from appreciating the delicacy of the situation, and she thought again that she was badly treated.

She now suggested entertaining her "beau" in her room. He afterwards proved to be her fiancé. This plan, of course, was rejected, and again she could not understand why; nor why if she rented an extra room on the second floor, her company could not be entertained here.

The girl is in the wrong house, that is very evident, as the other people in it are cultured and accustomed to the usage of good society. But the fact remains that she is there because she wants to stay among such persons. A few weeks among them have given her an insight that makes her ambitious to be different, and she is endeavoring to keep her hold on the situation that will inspire her to better things.

PRACTICAL NURSING

Hints to the Home Nurse

By a Graduate of the Philadelphia Polyclinic Hospital

When Germ Diseases Visit Us.
THE change of time, which alters the cuts of our clothes and our manner of shaking hands, also has its effect on the popular fashions in disease. Our grandmothers, and even our mothers looked forward to the annual nursing of contagious fevers as the children arrived at the proper age to "catch" them, just as they expected to clean house Fall and Spring or do the Winter canning.

The idea was to "have it and have done with it." The immunity, which the various fevers brought with them, seemed to be the aim, and practically no consideration was given to the immediate danger of the disease itself or of the terrible aftermath which follows almost every one of the germ diseases the markings which remain to the end of life.

After dinging into our ears for generations the fact that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" we are now applying the maxim in our care of human life. More or less criticism is directed at the new fashions in families for instance, quite reason that adoption state where we can afford to know nothing about the nursing of these diseases; for one case in a neighborhood where the nurse has been negligent for one hour, may result fatally to hundreds.

SCARLET FEVER.
Should a member of your family return to the home some day and be taken with a chill, vomiting and highly nervous symptoms and complain of sore throat, get out your clinical thermometer and follow the directions previously given to ascertain the degree of fever. Put John to bed at once in the most isolated room in the house regardless of whose it is, and send for the doctor.

If it is pronounced scarlet fever, decide who is to be the nurse and get the other members of the family out of the house as speedily as possible, before they become prisoners by the quarantine, which will be placed on the household label on the front door will eventually put an end to business or school for many weeks, even if it is a very light case, as the germ may reproduce the disease after a long period of inactivity.

There is less danger of contagion during the onset of the fever than later when desquamation, or "scaling," begins. When you realize how the tiny particles of skin rub off on bedclothes and clothing, you can readily see that the air would soon become germ laden, and the germs could be carried out by thousands on the clothes of the nurse, or on the dishes of the patient. The nurse in the sick room, owes it to the others not to go freely into all parts of the house.

If the situation is such that the nurse can not remain in isolation with the patient continuously, she should at least have a loose butcher's apron or wrapper and a close fitting cap to wear while in the room and remove when she leaves it.

THE red rash which appears on the second day dies out in about a week and the darkened scales of skin are shed in quantities. It is at this stage that there is danger of Bright's disease or nephritis, inflammation and "running" of the ear, inflammation of the lining and covering of the heart, and threatened pneumonia. The medicines will be ordered by the physician and the nurse's particular duty will be to follow directions on the part of the patient so that the heart condition will not be accentuated.

Keep the nose and throat as clean as possible with mild antiseptic sprays and specifics is ordered.

By attention to the throat now you may be able to prevent an operation later for middle ear disease.

By having him drink water freely, you flush out the system and may ward off Bright's disease.

Keep the room at a temperature of sixty-five to seventy degrees Fahrenheit with constant ventilation to prevent pneumonia.

By anointing the patient's body every day with an antiseptic oil or carbolic vasoline the skin is soothed and the scales less likely to be blown around.

Allow the patient no food except what has been ordered, which will usually be Milk, Koumiss, Junket, Albumin water, Fruit Juices, Gruels.

Note temperature, pulse, respiration, stools, quantity and appearance of the kidney secretions and keep a sample each day of the urine for the physician's examination.

Care of the Rooms.
S O much for your remedial measures, for John. You are not to forget other members of the family, yourself and possibly the neighbors.

The patient, I presume, is in a large airy room at the top of the house, next to the bath or with running water in the room. With cloths moistened with a three per cent, solution of carbolic acid, wipe the floor, furniture, sills, door-knob, mantle-piece etc., once a day, but never dust or sweep. Thoroughly disinfect the secretions of the patient and all articles used by him before they leave the room.

Hang a sheet, dipped in bichloride or carbolic solution, over the door way leading from the room. The moisture being the important thing, re-dip it as often as it becomes dry.

Solled linen should be placed in a wash boiler full of water, either carbolic or chloride of lime, and on reaching the kitchen or laundry, should be put on the fire and boiled without removing the lid of the

A PAGE OF THE BEST HUMOR OF THE WEEK

Before and After.
Sink: "Why don't you use your wondrous hair restorer yourself, if it is so good?"
Barber: "Ah, sure! You not understand! Look at my assistant; I represent 'before use,' and he is so 'after use.'"

Everything Strained.
Mrs. Baye: "She is simply mad on the subject of germs, and sterilizes or filters everything in the house."
Visitor: "How does she get along with her family?"
Mrs. Baye: "Oh, even her relations are strained."

Better Still.
Literary Assistant: "You see, sir, I followed your rules, and wrote on one side of the paper only."
Editor: "You can do better still."
Assistant (eagerly): "How?"
Editor: "Don't write on either side."

For His Eyes Alone.
"I gave Walter a beautiful necktie of my own make for a New Year present," said Mabel.
"Was he pleased?"
"Oh, yes; he said its beauty shall be for no other eyes than his own. Wasn't that lovely of him?"

The Witching Hour.
He: "I have your permission to call this evening."
She: "I shall be very pleased; but don't forget that father switches off the light at 10 o'clock."
He: "That's kind of him. I'll be there promptly at 10."

Precautions.
First Jeweler: "Aren't you afraid to leave those diamonds in a front window at night?"
Second Jeweler: "Not with my scheme. Just before I go home I put in a little sign on them reading: 'Anything in this window twenty cents.'"

Brings It Home.
The well-known comedian, Mr. R. C. Knowles, tells this story in regard to a visit he paid his doctor. In the waiting room he found the head of a big firm of undertakers.
"Hello," Mr. Knowles exclaimed. "Are you in partnership with the doctor?"
"No, not exactly in partnership," was the reply. "I carry his work home."

There were two Browns in the village, both fishermen. One lost his wife and the other his boat at about the same time. The vicar who called, as she supposed, on the widower, but really upon the Brown whose boat had gone down.
"I'm sorry to hear of your great loss," said the vicar.
"Oh, it ain't much matter," was the philosophical reply; "she wasn't up to much."
"Indeed!" said the surprised lady.
"Yes," continued Brown, "she was a rickety old thing. I offered her to my mate, but he wouldn't have her. I've had my eye on another for some time."
And then the disgusted lady fled.

Not Quite.
Mrs. Enright: "Suppose I were to die, what would you do?"
Mr. Enright: "Why, I should simply go crazy."
Mrs. E.: "Marry again?"
Mr. E.: "Oh, not that crazy!"

Knowing the Route.
A woman, who, both by bearing and dress, could be distinguished as "new rich," entered a train, and with a very haughty air seated herself near an old Italian.
When the conductor came to take the fares she said to him in a loud voice: "Put me down at my husband's bank."
The conductor, evidently knowing her, assured her that he would, and passed on to the Italian.
"Put me down at the old fellow as he paid his fare."

Equal to the Emergency.
Marcella: "Rosemary is the most resourceful girl I know."
Waverley: "Indeed?"
"Yes, she was in the country last Christmas when her sweethearts called to see her and there wasn't a bit of mistletoe about the place. So she fixed some pearl studs to a sprig of apple leaves, and when her beau came and saw them on the chandelier he never knew the difference."

No Contributions.
"Sir," said the trembling young man to the girl's father, "I love your daughter and she loves me, and I have come to ask you for her, sober and industrious, but poor. Will you give assent?"
"Not a darn cent!" growled the old man.

Equal to the Emergency.
"Rosemary is the most resourceful girl I know."
Waverley: "Indeed?"
"Yes, she was in the country last Christmas when her sweethearts called to see her and there wasn't a bit of mistletoe about the place. So she fixed some pearl studs to a sprig of apple leaves, and when her beau came and saw them on the chandelier he never knew the difference."

At the Play.
A young lady went to see a play one evening. She was separated from her companion, another young lady, by two rows, and thinking that the man next her was alone, she decided to ask him to change seats with her friend, so that they would not be separated.
"With a sweet, demure smile, therefore, she laid her little hand lightly on the man's arm and said: 'I beg your pardon, but you are alone, are you not?'"
The man, a stout, red-faced chap, put his hand up to his moustache and whispered, out of the corner of his mouth:
"Cheese it, kiddie; the wife's next me here."

A retired naval officer became the rector of a country parish. His parishioners, wishing to give him a surprise, subscribed amongst themselves and bought a flag for the church tower. Directly the old gentleman saw it he flew into a violent rage and ordered it to be taken down at once. One of his parishioners asked him why he did not like it.
"Allow that flag to fly on my church tower!" he raved. "Never! It's an insult. Do you know what that particular flag signifies, sir? It means 'In distress; want a pilot.'"

The vicar of Leeds, Dr. Bickersteth, tells of a clergyman who rang him up on the telephone to ask if he would consent to his taking a marriage service in which the word "obey" was left out. He replied that he was not the bishop, but was tolerably certain that the bishop would not allow him to omit the word.
"But who is the lady going to marry?" he inquired.
The answer was, "She is going to marry a doctor."
He then asked, "Would she mind if you put in the word 'consent' instead?"

Squire's Daughter: "Have you brought your music?"
William: "Music! I don't sing by music, I sing by hearsay."

An Error of Phonetics.
Mr. Arnold Bennett once told an amusing story about the Cockney accent that prevails in parts of London.
"The Cockney accent," said Mr. Bennett, "turns 'make haste' into 'make late'; and 'it turns into 'v' or 'f.' Thus, in Cockney, 'father' is pronounced 'faver'; and 'thisie,' 'fistie.'"
"A little boy, who always spoke the broadest Cockney, was sent by his mother to buy some fish."
"Gimme a haddie," he said to the fishmonger.
"Finnan?" the dealer asked.
"At this the boy laughed knowingly, with the air of one determined not to be cheated.
"Finnan?" he said. "No, not likely. Pickin'!"

Quite True.
"Yes, my friends," exclaimed a lecturer, "there are many excuses for the glass. The sick man says he must have his glass to make him well. The shivering taxi-man must have his glass to make him warm. The sweating mechanic must have his glass to make him cool."
"But they lie, friends. Don't believe the workman who says he can't work without his glass. I defy anybody to mention to me a workman who cannot work as well and better without his glass as with it."
A voice in the back of the hall made itself audible:
"I'll tell you one!"
"I defy you to do so," said the lecturer; "I defy you, sir!" he roared.
Then the voice observed:
"The glazier can't do without his glass."
The lecturer continued his oration at a decided disadvantage.

Obedient Instructions.
The wit of a sharp retort often makes the hearer forget its impertinence. Such a rebuke was that which Sir W. S. Gilbert administered to an over-bearing man at a dinner party.
After the dinner Gilbert was standing in the hall, waiting for a friend to join him, when a pompous and somewhat near-sighted gentleman, mistaking him for one of the servants, exclaimed:
"Call me a cab!"
"What do you mean, sir?" spluttered the other. "How dare you, sir?"
"Well," Gilbert retorted, "you asked me to call you a cab, and I couldn't call you 'hansom.'"

Tommy's Hobby.
The following happened in a Manchester school the other day. The teacher had been speaking of unique and valuable collections of objects of art and interest, and spoke of the fabulous wealth that had been expended by some of the collectors on their peculiar hobby.
"Thinking to obtain some idea of the characters of the members of his class in this direction, he asked them what they thought they would like to collect if they had plenty of money."
Up went the hand of a boy who was noted for particular brilliance—in fact, answers from him were very scarce on any subject; so this opportunity was seized by the teacher.
"Well, Tommy and what would you collect?"
"Rents, sir," was the prompt reply.
The lesson changed, and the teacher is recovering from the shock.
Hostess (gushing): "They tell me, doctor, you are a perfect lady-killer."
Doctor (modestly): "I assure you, my dear madam, I make no distinction whatever between the sexes."
"There is nothing more uncertain than a horseshoe," exclaimed the man with a tendency to talk loud.
And the melancholy friend responded:
"You never worked in a meteorological office, did you?"
The fare at a certain boarding-house was very poor. A boarder who had been there for some time, because he could not get away, was standing in the hall when the landlady rang the dinner-bell. Whereupon an old dog that was lying out on a rug commenced to howl mournfully.
The boarder watched him a little while, and then said:
"What on earth are you howling for? You don't have to eat it!"

Mr. Charles Frohman, the well-known theatrical manager, was once talking about his plans for the winter.
"I had hoped that Sir George Alexander would go to the States," he said.
"Alexander isn't his right name, is it?" his friend asked.
"No," said Mr. Frohman, "his right name is Samson. It was a pity to change the name of Samson for that of Alexander."
"But Alexander conquered the world, you know," said the other.
"Samson, however, is the more appropriate theatrical name," Mr. Frohman insisted. "Have you forgotten that Samson was the first man who brought down the house?"
"Where's my umbrella?" demanded the wife of a member of parliament.
"I'm afraid I've forgotten it, my dear," meekly answered her husband.
"It must be in the train."
"In the train?" snorted the lady. "And to think that the affairs of the nation are entrusted to a man who doesn't know enough to take care of a woman's umbrella!"

A certain millionaire did not approve of foreign missions. One Sunday at church, when the collection was being taken up for these missions, the collector approached the millionaire and held out the collection bag. The millionaire shook his head.
"I never give to missions," he whispered.
"Then take something out of the bag, sir," whispered the collector. "The money is for the heathen."

Where will Mrs. Dobs go now that both her daughters are married? To her son-in-law's house in Birmingham, or to that of her son-in-law in Leeds?
"One wants her in Birmingham and the other wishes she would go to Leeds."
"What dutiful son-in-law!"
"I beg your pardon. The one in Birmingham wants her in Leeds; the one in Leeds wants her in Birmingham."

A very distinguished British man of science had the folly, says Professor Thriller Matthews, of inventing thrilling episodes and pretending that they were of his own experience.
On one occasion, after he had spun a marvelous yarn, with himself in the centre of the coil, a sceptical friend looked him in the eye and asked sternly:
"Gilbert, do you mean to say that this really occurred to you?"
Whereupon the imaginative man of science replied, with a twinkle:
"Yes, it just occurred to me."

"This is one of my ancestors," she said, pausing before a portrait. He fell at Waterloo. Have you any ancestors?"
He suddenly remembered an uncle who had sole charge of the front of a cinema show, and murmured, "Er—"
"Did he fall anywhere?"
"Not exactly; but I remember being told how, clothed in full uniform, he stood before an eastern palace and kept a howling, surging mob at bay single-handed!"
"Really? How splendid!"
"Oh," he thought, nothing of it. Did it every night for years."

Miss Elio de Wolfe, commenting at a tea in New York on the engagement to her mother's French maid of a young man belonging to a rich, old Knickerbocker family, said: "Marriages of that type are seldom happy. They turn out like the bootmaker's."
Miss De Wolfe, smiling, resumed: "A retired bootmaker, who had married his servant as his second spouse, was once asked by a friend how he was getting on. His significant reply was: "Soles make stiff uppers."

In some respects," said a New York lawyer, "Harry Thaw is as naive as a child. Altho his money commands the country's finest legal talent, he always insists that it is he who directs his cases. It is skeptical, too, of all who approach him."
The lawyer laughed.
"Thaw," he continued, "is as skeptical as Jamie, Jamie, a village celebrity somewhat lacking in intellect, sat on the racecourse fence the day of the local races, mouching away at a leg of mutton, which he had somehow procured and of which he was very proud.
"A wealthy steel magnate, whose country house was near the village, rode by in his fifty-horse power racing car and, seeing Jamie on the fence, said:
"Ah, Jamie, are you here already?"
"Oh," retorted Jamie, with a dignified and important air, looking significantly at the mutton bone, "oh, yes; ye all know a body when he's got anything."

An Epitaph for a Trust.
"Miss the trustee!" said Senator La Follette at a luncheon in Washington. "Yes, oh, yes, when the trusts go we'll miss them—we'll miss them like the widow."
"A widow, at her late husband's funeral, happened, during the burial service, to drop her handkerchief into the open grave.
"A young man gallantly offered to leap down and get the handkerchief for her.
"But the widow shook her head.
"No," she said, "leave it there. I have done with tears now."
First Critic: "I understand you saw Scribner's new comedy last night. Who played the hero?"
Second Critic: "I did. I sat thru the whole thing."

Her Partner: If you are tired of dancing, Mrs. Newcomb, we'll sit down and have a little conversation, shall we?"
"Yes, Mrs. Newcomb, we'll sit down and have a little conversation, shall we?"
"Certainly, my son," said Mrs. Newcomb, so delighted at this evidence of dancing because usually that she handed the young man a dance.
"Well, I saved it all right," said Mrs. Newcomb, smiling. "You said it brought a whole report from my teacher, you would give me a quart, but I want."

James' economy.
"Papa," began James, "wouldn't you be kind to save a dollar for me?"
"Certainly, my son," said Papa, so delighted at this evidence of saving because usually that he handed the young man a dollar.
"Well, I saved it all right," said James, smiling. "You said it brought a whole report from my teacher, you would give me a quart, but I want."

Source of All Trouble.
Most of the trouble in this world is due to one fact, and that one fact is that people in it are mean and the other half women.—Chicago news.
I'm puzzled about this custom of eating up music."
"I can't understand whether the food is intended to keep your mind off the music or the music is intended to keep your mind off the food."

No Necessary Lover.
"Sir," said the young man with much respect, "I know that you are a millionaire, and that I am poor. It seems presumptuous in me to aspire to the hand of your daughter. But I have thought the matter out, and with some diffidence I have resolved to make my request. Love, sir, is not bound by social considerations or by mere social convenience. I have very real affection for your daughter, and I pray that you will put no obstacle in the way of our early marriage."
The old man seemed interested in the young man's story, and inclined to listen.
"Quite so, said he. "As you know, I am not in the habit of sticking at trifles, providing the main purpose is straight. But which of my girls do you want?"
The young man breathed a sigh of relief, and courteously replied: "Oh, I'll leave that to you, sir."

The Ins and Outs of It.
Mrs. Burke Stone, at a recent luncheon in Newport, summed up an automobile accident neatly:
"but miles from anywhere, the car broke down, and we found we were in for a walk."

A Repeater.
"You surely don't give your band a necktie every Christmas?"
"Oh, yes, I do. And the poor fellow never seems to know that it is the same one!"

The Effect of Rubber Tires.
"How did you feel after the car had gone over you?"
"I was almost completely erased."

Do you suppose scorching is the cause of all these automobile fads we see?"
"Indeed no! In nine cases out of ten it's the installment plan!"

William (who has been persuaded to contribute to our annual concert): "Can 'ee tinkle 'Varnet's Boy,' mias?"

The Latest.
"At last," cried the musician, "I have fame with me again. Willie, 'How so?' asked his wife, who had heard the same thing before.
"You know Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' and the marvelous recitativo it brought him?" said the musician.
"Yes; but what of it?"
"Well, I'm going to write a 'Divorce March.'"

In After Years.
Wife: "You used to say I was beautiful. Have I changed?"
Husband: "No, but I have since I joined a church."

Why Willie Was Left.
Willie, at a Christmas party given by his sister, was allowed to participate in the snapdragon game, and sat amid a band of beautiful girls of 19 or so.
The lights went out, the usual snatching for favors began, and then when the lights were up again, Willie was to be seen crying bitterly.
"What's the matter, Willie? Did you get anything?" a lady asked.
"No," sobbed Willie spitefully. "As soon as it got dark, that man with the brown whiskers—boo, hoo!—he grabbed me hands and didn't stop—boo, hoo, hoo!—he didn't stop kissing them till the lights were up again!"

The Double Event.
Ella: "You say she has driven two men insane?"
Bella: "Yes. She hit 'em."
Ella: "What about the other?"
Bella: "She married him!"

"AWA WT YE!"
William (who has been persuaded to contribute to our annual concert): "Can 'ee tinkle 'Varnet's Boy,' mias?"

A commercial man was rash enough to make a telephone call when exceedingly short of time, and found when he spoke he had been put on to the wrong number.
The number he wanted was the simplest possible—one.
To shortness of time he thereupon added shortness of temper, and somewhat angrily complained to the operator of her mistake.
"What I want," he finished by declaring with savage distinctness, "is 'one' on the trunk."
And the operator retorted quietly: "Yes, you do, and I'd like to give it to you."

"You are a regular miser!" exclaimed Mrs. Snooper, when her husband refused to give her twenty-five shillings she asked for.
"No, not a miser," replied Snooper, "merely an economiser."
An Italian who kept a fruit stand was much annoyed by possible customers who made a practice of handling the fruit and pinching it, thereby leaving it softened and often spoiled. Exasperated beyond endurance, he finally put up a sign which read: "If you must pincha da fruit, pincha da cocconati!"

An eminent Scotch astronomer tells this excellent story against himself. He once explained in a lecture that a certain star looked no bigger than a threepenny-bit a hundred miles away. After the discourse one of the audience said to him: "I know you for a Scotsman, for no one but a Scotsman would trouble about a threepenny-bit a hundred miles off."

A little girl had sent back her plate for chicken two or three times, and had been helped beautifully to all the other rich things that go to make a good dinner. Finally she was observed looking rather discontentedly at her unfinished plate of pudding.
"What's the matter, Dora?" asked Uncle John. "You look mournful."
"That's just 'the matter,'" said Dora. "I am more'n full."
Then she wondered why everybody laughed.

In the Name of Charity.
"We are going to give a series of bridge parties for the poor. I love to do things for the poor."
"So do I. I love to play bridge for them."

A Sure Thing.
According to a nurse in one of the big hospitals, a visiting surgeon recently caused a robot patient almost to collapse by joking with him after an operation.
"What are my chances for recovery?" asked the patient.
"Splendid," said the surgeon.
"What do you mean by splendid?"
"Why, you have one chance in twenty for recovery."
"That is not very encouraging. I can't see how my chances are as splendid as you say."
"Well, I'll explain," said the surgeon. "In this particular operation it is generally conceded that there is one chance in twenty for the patient to recover. The case, however, presented I have operated upon for your complaint does not fall into the usual class of the twenty who ought to recover."

And the Famous Doctor Cured.
"I beg your pardon. The one in Birmingham wants her in Leeds; the one in Leeds wants her in Birmingham."
"And the famous doctor cured your friend of the inflammation that was so bad."
"Oh, completely. She's really sick now."

Circular Evolution.
"Jim"—Burrhead boy.
"Frank"—Burrhead boy.
"Mr. Brown"—head clerk.
"Burrhead"—Burrhead of the firm.
"James"—Burrhead of the firm and power on the street.
Her Partner: If you are tired of dancing, Mrs. Newcomb, we'll sit down and have a little conversation, shall we?"

"Well, I saved it all right," said Mrs. Newcomb, smiling. "You said it brought a whole report from my teacher, you would give me a quart, but I want."

Getting it Straight.
"After all," said Kwofer, "it's a true saying that 'he laughs best who laughs last.'"
"Not at all," replied Wise. "He really truly says: 'He laughs best whose laugh lasts.'"

A gang of laborers was employed digging a mysterious ditch across the street. It was a sewer or a place to put a gas pipe or something. One man in particular was working as if he were a chorus man in a play, just going thru the motions and pretending to dig a ditch.
The foreman came along and spoke to him. "Don't be afraid," he said, "with rich sarcasm. 'Lean on it, shovel now an' tain. If it breaks I'll pay for it!'"

Probably.
Miss Wheat, the new teacher, was hearing the history lesson. Turning to one of the new scholars, she asked: "James, what was Washington's farewell address?"
The new boy arose with a promptitude that promised well for his answer.
"Heaven, ma'am," he said.
Jones: "If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion I will denounce him as a liar."
President: "Mr. Jones, I call you to order. Our bylaws do not allow you to do that far."
Jones: "Then I call Mr. Oldboy a liar as far as it is permitted by the bylaws of this association."
"Is she good to the children?"
"Very. She lets them do everything their father doesn't want them to do."

A Repeater.
"You surely don't give your band a necktie every Christmas?"
"Oh, yes, I do. And the poor fellow never seems to know that it is the same one!"

Fame.
"Why did the great pianist refuse to play?"
"Temperament. He got mad because his name was printed in smaller type on the program than the name of the piano on which he was to perform."

Office Seeker.
"Is there anything else in the job you speak of besides the salary?"
Political Boss: "There's a little work on the side."
Office Seeker: "Ah! I knew there was some string to it!"

The Source.
Mr. Hoyle was a most indulgent father, but of late he had commenced to think that his son Arthur was taking advantage of his generosity.

"Why, when I was your age, young man," he said one morning, after a particularly urgent demand for more funds, "I got mad as much money to spend in a month as you spend in a day."
"Well, dad, don't scold me about it," said the youth. "Why don't you go for grandfather?"

Hopeless.
A gentleman who had been spending a holiday at a Scottish seaside village voted for its golf links as one of the caddies if he got much carrying in the winter-time.
"Nae, sir, nae," replied the caddy. "There's nae carrying in the winter-time. Ye see, it's this way. If it's no snae it's frost; if it's no frost, it's snae; if it's neither snae nor frost, it's rain; if it's no rain, it's wind; if it's a fine day, it's the Sawayn!"

Habit or Preference?
A young woman of Baltimore was asked by a friend as to the likableness of a young chap who for some time had been paying devoted attention to the young woman in question.
"Oh!" replied the fair one, carelessly, "William is a nice fellow, but he talks shop 'too much."
"How's that?" was the next question. "I thought he was a street-car conductor."
"So he is," returned the other, "and he's continually saying, 'Shut up, closer!'"

Getting it Straight.
"After all," said Kwofer, "it's a true saying that 'he laughs best who laughs last.'"
"Not at all," replied Wise. "He really truly says: 'He laughs best whose laugh lasts.'"

A gang of laborers was employed digging a mysterious ditch across the street. It was a sewer or a place to put a gas pipe or something. One man in particular was working as if he were a chorus man in a play, just going thru the motions and pretending to dig a ditch.
The foreman came along and spoke to him. "Don't be afraid," he said, "with rich sarcasm. 'Lean on it, shovel now an' tain. If it breaks I'll pay for it!'"

Probably.
Miss Wheat, the new teacher, was hearing the history lesson. Turning to one of the new scholars, she asked: "James, what was Washington's farewell address?"
The new boy arose with a promptitude that promised well for his answer.
"Heaven, ma'am," he said.
Jones: "If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion I will denounce him as a liar."
President: "Mr. Jones, I call you to order. Our bylaws do not allow you to do that far."
Jones: "Then I call Mr. Oldboy a liar as far as it is permitted by the bylaws of this association."
"Is she good to the children?"
"Very. She lets them do everything their father doesn't want them to do."

A Repeater.
"You surely don't give your band a necktie every Christmas?"
"Oh, yes, I do. And the poor fellow never seems to know that it is the same one!"

The Effect of Rubber Tires.
"How did you feel after the car had gone over you?"
"I was almost completely erased."

Do you suppose scorching is the cause of all these automobile fads we see?"

Stories and Poems By Our Little Readers

Macleod, Alta. Dec. 29th, 1913.

Dear Editor and Members: I am a new addition to your welcome club. I would like to join your S.-F. C. and would like to get a button.

Here is a riddle and a piece of poetry which I made up:

If a barrel weighed fifty pounds what would you fill it with to make it weigh twenty-five pounds. Ans. Holes.

"When the wind goes whistling woo-oo-oo, all round the house on Christmas Eve, and the sun sinks down, and the stars shine out, why then I am happy you may believe.

I hang my stocking up on the stove ready for Santa to fill, you know.

And when I am asleep just so, why, he will fill my stocking, you know.

Age twelve. Yours truly, Dalton Reid.

A Story of Christmas and The Sunday World.

It was Christmas time, when all the little kiddos were wishing for Santa to come. They were all very excited, the same as I would be when their mother read the story of John and the goose to them.

One of the girls who was very happy said to her mother, "Mother, don't you think John was a bad boy to run away?" Another one said, "I think it served John right for the goose to run after him." Now I guess I'll tell you how these little girls spent their Christmas. They were up bright and early in the morning to see what Santa had brought them. The smallest girl found a doll, a sleigh, a game, some nuts, and candies, the other one the same, so they spent their Christmas with much happiness. I hope you all had as happy a Christmas as these two girls.

Tom's Skate.

On Saturday afternoon the river had frozen, and many boys and girls raced over its clear surface.

The Sunday World, and bring the groceries home. After he had received the parcels, he hurried back to the ice to have a skate. When he arrived the ice was deserted, so he and his grandchild had a happy Christmas Day reading the Sunday World, especially the comic section.

The Odd Nickel.

Todmorden, Toronto, Ont. Jan. 8, 1914, 59 Randolph Ave. In the suburbs of Toronto, there once lived a little girl named Nellie. Her mother and father were dead, so she lived with her grandfather. Her grandfather being rich gave her everything to make her happy.

It was about two weeks before Christmas, and she wanted to buy her grandpa a present. Her savings were in a small leather bag hanging on her bed rail. She took it off and counted her money, which came to one dollar and five cents.

She wondered, then said, "One dollar for a present for grandpa, and five cents over."

She had a girl friend whom she always went to when in doubt. Nellie was her name, so she told Nellie to buy a Sunday World for him.

He had never had a Sunday World, because he used to be a farmer, and he never thought about it.

Christmas Day came, she gave grandpa a collar box, which pleased him very much, but when he saw the paper he was greatly delighted. So he and his grandchild had a happy Christmas Day reading the Sunday World, especially the comic section.

Smile away...

And while you smile Another smiles, And soon there's miles and miles of smiles; And life's worth while because you smile.

That is our motto: No matter what happens just SMILE.

Who is ever any better for crying? NOBODY; so why should we cry? If mother or father asks you to do a thing, why pout? You only feel badly afterward. Do it with a SMILING face; then everyone is happy. If you smile, why? mother SMILES, father SMILES, baby SMILES; and soon, if you look hard enough at Puss, you will see that she is SMILING also.

There is nothing in the world like a SMILE.

Anyone may join this club; big people as well as little people; for (just whisper it) sometimes a big person needs to smile, just as much as a little person does.

All you have to do is to remember the above; send in your name to C. A. Macphee, Sunday World office, Toronto; then we send you an S.F.C. button, and when you get it—

I am quite sure You'll SMILE some more.

We regret that we have had to leave some names off our list of S. F. C. members but the number of letters we have received has been so great that we have not had room for all. But keep on looking and you will see your name soon.

Say! John one day went fishing frogs, Now, what a thing to do! To fish poor frogs was very wrong, And this young Johnny knew. He put a drag, a haul, a RUSH— Then out he threw the line; He saw the frogs come swimming up, And cried, "My! this IS fine."

At last he felt a little pull And then a jerk, Oh! My! A tug, a drag, a haul, a RUSH— And then a piercing cry. For, what is this that happens now? Alas! poor little John; The last you saw was John and rod, Now John and rod are GONE.

A monstrous frog had grabbed the worm, He gave a jerk, you see, And in John went, ker-flop, ker-flop, As nicely as could be. But what is this that happens next? Why! down and down they go. Till soon they reach the sand and stones, Quite twenty feet below. Pa Frog comes up and Ma Frog, too, Pa Frog comes up, and Ma Frog, too. Then tadpoles two, three, four; They think a queerer thing than John. They never saw before.

Then tadpoles two, three, four; They think a queerer thing than John. They never saw before. "We'll out his legs right off," say they, "And have them with our tea; A dish of legs in bread crumbs fried, Will taste quite good, you'll see."

"Oh! dear good frogs," poor John howls out. "Please let me go, I say;" Ma Frog just smiles and says to all, "They'll do for lunch today." Young John's poor Pa was on the shore, He tears his hair and cries, "Will no one dive and get my child? He's here before your eyes."

Now Mutt, good dog, was there, of course, And great was his distress; He showed more brains than Pa, or all, I really must confess. For when he sees John's awful plight, He plunges down below, And knocks the frogs, north, east and west. Then grabs John by the toe.

When on the shore they finally land, Pa pats Mutt on the head; "That dog is worth his looks in gold," Was what the people said.

P.S.—Yesterday they had frogs legs for lunch, but John said he did not care for any. C. A. Macphee.

Well! once upon a time the butterfly was not called BUTTER-fly, BETTER-fly, or any other kind of fly; it was just called blue fly if it happened to be a blue one or spotted green fly, if it happened to be a spotted green one, and so on.

Now to put the QUESTION to you plainly—have you NEVER wondered just ONCE why it happened to be called BUTTER-fly? If YOU have not, I have, so I just hunted 'round till I found out and I'll tell you (NOW I HOPE YOU ARE LISTENING).

Well! the spotted green fly (or the butterfly, as we call him these days), the spotted green fly and the Bumble Bee (I'll tell you some other time why the Bee is called Bumble), the spotted green fly and the Bumble Bee, BOTH liked little Miss Wasp. Why they should BOTH like one and the same wasp at one and the same time is one and the same QUESTION I cannot answer, but anyway, it remains they BOTH liked one and the same wasp at one and the same time.

"My!" said Mr. Bumble Bee to Miss Wasp, "that Mr. Green-fly makes me tired and I do wish he would change his suit, that one he has is so spotted."

Miss Wasp said nothing,

Doris Bedwell.

This drawing was sent in by one of our little SMILERS, and you see I have used it to illustrate my story. Thank you, very much, dear little Doris Bedwell.

but when he had gone she put her head in her sleeve and laughed fit to die.

"My!" said Mr. Spotted Green Fly, to Miss Wasp, "that Mr. Bee makes me tired and I do wish he would go to a doctor to see what is wrong with his voice; it's nothing but a rumble, stumble, bumble and you cannot make that out half the time."

Miss Wasp said nothing, but when he had gone she put her head in her sleeve and laughed as if to die.

Now; anybody (at least anybody with any sense, like you or I) knows that nobody or nothing can make honey except a bee.

No matter how hard people try, NOTHING tastes like honey, but just HONEY. Well! the bee sat one day wondering how he could best please Miss Wasp, and at last he slapped his knee and cried, "I have it, the very IDENTICAL thing," and that night, guess what he did (NOW GUESS HARD). Why! he gave a dance, and, of course, Miss Wasp was the guest of honor.

Towards twelve, refreshments were served, and SUCH refreshments you never saw. Peaches and HONEY, cake and HONEY, lobster salad and HONEY, coffee and HONEY. And, mind you! even the floor was polished with HONEY wax.

Talk about successes! Every paper was full of it next day and Miss Wasp, of course, was the belle of the ball. But where did poor Mr. Spotted Green Fly come in? Well! to tell the truth—NOWHERE. And why—because he was not asked.

"Never mind," said Mr. Spotted Green Fly to himself. "Never give up," and guess what HE did! (NOW GUESS HARD). Why! he went to work and bought 700 pounds of butter.

He said to himself, "I cannot get honey, so I'll get next best, and that is butter; they LOOK just the same, so no one will know which is which and that night HE gave a dance. But, dear me!! when Miss Hummingbird got her first sip of peaches and BUTTER she said, "Good night!" and simply flew from the room.

When Mr. Lizard took his first nip of the cake and BUTTER, he cried, "See you tomorrow, old chap," and slunk away.

When Mr. Frog took his first bite of lobster salad and BUTTER, he yelled, "Jolly evening, don't you know," and hopped out the window, but when Miss Wasp took her first MOUTHFUL of coffee and BUTTER, she howled, "What does this mean, you moon-faced slob?" (Nice language for a lady, but I don't think she could have been one). Anyway, she howled, "What does this mean, you moon-faced slob?" Then she lifted the cup of coffee and BUTTER and threw it at poor Mr. Spotted Green Fly's head, on which it stuck just like a hat.

The company thought it best to break up after that and so they all went home, leaving poor Mr. Spotted Green Fly to clear up the mess. Anyway, ever since that day all flies like Mr. Spotted Green Fly have been called BUTTER-flies and I don't wonder at it.

Turvey's Ma said yesterday, "I wonder why that child said she would rather have butter on her bread than honey?"

The White Thoughts.

Little bad thoughts have black black wings;

Little good thoughts have white; Little bad thoughts make wrinkles grow;

Good thoughts bring dimples bright.

Little bad thoughts give mother's pain;

But little good thoughts bring joy. I'd rather think hard for the good white thoughts,

That make me a happier boy.

Little bad thoughts make feet go wrong;

But good thoughts lead them right—

Fly off, little thoughts, with the naughty black wings; I wait for the wings of white.

Phylla Butler Bowman.

ARE YOU AN ARTIST?

Am sorry that so many of the drawings sent in cannot be used.

A great many, while very good, have not been drawn with the proper ink for reproduction, and others I have been able to use by going over some of the lines.

Your picture must be drawn on heavy white paper. Higgins waterproof ink should be used.

All the lines must be distinct and clear, and your work should be mailed flat, not folded.

Drawings should be original. Also please give age.

Spring Hats and a Spring Suit

THE flare on the right side is the most pronounced of the Spring styles in millinery. Jet trimmings and lace, especially horse hair lace, are extremely fashionable. The Marquise toque of flowers is very much in favor.

The white hemp hat on the right side of the page has a crown of black velvet.

The hats here given are by Vasselinvitard, and Lewis of Paris, and Moorehead and Jardine, of New York.

The three-piece costume was designed by Fremet. It is a peacock blue mohair in poplin weave. The skirt in the new bustle is the unusual one-piece affair of which the sides are cut out to make the drapery. The organdy collar and the use of the tassel are most fashionable. The under bodice is of sheer peacock blue embroidered chiffon. The coat is cutaway straight from the bust.

EXTRAORDINARY bargains mark the fourth week of our $1.00 per day reduction Diamond Sale. Our prices are now so exceedingly low that many people are picking out the bargains to sell again at a profit.

This, our fifth annual $1.00 a day Reduction Diamond Sale, stands head and shoulders above its predecessors in real money saving opportunities, owing to the greatly increased and superior stock to choose from. Money never bought more than it is doing at this stage of our sale.

Last week we had an overwhelming onslaught of customers for these bargains, but this week you will have greater opportunities than last, as our prices are still lower, owing to the continued $1.00 a day reduction on each Diamond article on sale.

This annual Diamond Sale is the only one we ever have. It is a sale with a reason, and affords you the greatest bargain opportunities, as our Diamonds, at the original prices marked, are exceedingly good values, but after taking $19.00 from the usual price of any Diamond on sale on Monday, will enable you to pick rings from our stock that from an intrinsic standpoint, alone make a most profitable investment.

You can best judge of the extraordinary advantages of this $1.00 per day reduction sale by coming early tomorrow to see our window display and figure out the prices for yourself. SCENE IN "A FOOL THERE WAS," THE ATTRACTION AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE THIS WEEK

LITTLE ETHEL GETS THE VAMPIRE'S BEAUTIFUL ROSES.

There are many child actresses, but the Child Actresses in the capital letter class. This talented little miss began her theatrical work four years ago in her little Ethel Wichmann, appearing in home city, Chicago, and the list of "A Fool There Was" at the Grand plays in which she has appeared next week is to be numbered among would do justice to many actresses three times her age.

Her first part was Little Eva, in "Lucie, Ton's Cabin," and she was next cast for the Child in "Ten Nights in a Bar-room."

"You know," said the little actress, "you cannot be called a regular actress until you have played in those two plays."

After serving such apprenticeship, her talent became known to the big managers, and soon the little girl was in much demand. Among the noted plays in which she has appeared are "Seven Sisters," "Mother," "Cameo Kirby," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Lovers' Lane," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," and last season she was featured in a western comedy called "The Littlest Tenderfoot," in which she played the part of a slinky little cowboy, the part being written especially for her.

"Oh, but I like to play girl parts much better than boys," I don't like boys very much, anyway, do you? I just love my part in "A Fool There Was," only, in some parts it is so sad. Lots of times I want to cry when I come in and find my daddy so sick. I just love Mr. Grand, who is my daddy in the play, and lots of times when I have my third act scene with him, I wish he was my very own papa."

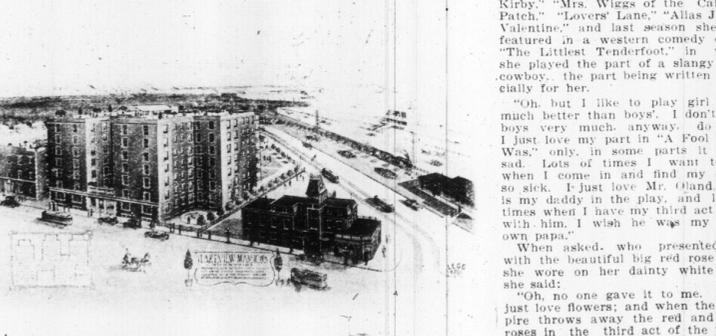

When asked, who presented her with the beautiful big red rose which she wore on her dainty white dress she said:

"Oh, no one gave it to me. But I just love flowers; and when the Vampire throws away the red and white roses in the third act of the play, I always run out and pick them up after the curtain goes down, before the stage hands start changing the scene, so I always have a red and white rose to wear."

When asked regarding her plans for the future, she answered, with a toss of her wise little head:

"Well, I don't know just what I will do after this season. I have received several offers to play in vaudeville; and only last week I was offered an engagement by a big moving picture company. I think I would love to play in moving pictures, and maybe I will some day."
