THE Lady of the Night

Amelia Makes a Success

CHAPTER X. AMELIA MAKES A SUCCESS.

"I can't find Nora," said Ryall, with a troubled countenance. "I've been to Nelworthy. I've asked everywhere." "Oh, bother the girl!" said Mrs. Ryall; "she's all right. She's gone to some of her old cronies, some of the common people, farmers, she's so thick with. Don't let's worry about her; she'll come back presently. The question is—shall I put on my purple velvet with the pearls or my white satin frock with the lamethyrs? I want to look my best, for your sake, Reginald. Oh, don't look so gloomy. Here's a chance of our taking our proper place—the place you're always cackling about—and of proving that we are somebody. You're all right, I know; you've got a dress-suit, because I've seen it. It's old-fashioned, and you look a guy in it; but it doesn't matter how a man looks; it's the woman that goes by."

She thought and talked of nothing but her dress from that moment until the one in which they started in the hired fly for the Hall. She had decided in favour of the purple velvet, which was ravenet, and the pearls, which were a string of palpably glass beads. She had made herself up with greater care than usual, and if she could only have been gazed she might almost have passed muster; for alas! the art of making-up is practised by ladies of a higher class and rank than actors and music-hall artists. She was all in a flutter of excitement—Ryall sitting gloomily beside her—on the way to the Hall, and her excitement culminated as she passed through the file of footmen, and was received by Lady Ferrand, a nervous and faded-looking hostess, and was greeted by Sir Joseph, all suavity and affected geniality.

They had arrived last, of course, for Mrs. Ryall had lingered at her glass beyond the last moment, and there was only time for one introduction—that to Miss Florence Bartley. In making Sir Joseph remarked, with a smile, that Miss Bartley was almost one of the family, and that her father was a great friend of his.

They went in to dinner. The house was fairly full. Sir Joseph liked people about him. With the weakness of most newly-made men—a strange weakness, considering their acuteness—he liked to have fashionable people, whom he fed and amused, people who laughed at him behind his back, and amongst themselves called him "old Joe."

It was an elaborate dinner, one such as Mrs. Ryall had never sat down to. Everybody laughed and talked freely; but Sir Joseph, on whose right she was seated, paid her marked attention, and after a glass of wine or two her tongue was loosened. There was a silence now and then as she talked, and the other guests looked at her curiously and with expressive smiles at each other; but Sir Joseph passed a swift frown round the table, and emphasised his attentions to her.

At a little distance Miss Florence, radiant in her beauty and a Persian costume, observed Mrs. Ryall closely, without appearing to do so, and her glance now and again rested on the lady's husband, who sat stiff and silent, but who looked, for all his obvious weakness, a gentleman, or the wreck of one.

In the drawing-room, before the gentlemen joined the ladies, Florence edged her way to Mrs. Ryall, and encouraged her to talk, and presently, when some one said something about music, she asked Mrs. Ryall to sing. By this time the lady was in the seventh heaven of self-satisfaction, and she sang it—well, as she used to sing it, when she was "Happy Amelia" of the Halle. There were some ladies there—strange to say—and they shrank with a little shudder in their chairs; but the men gathered round her, exchanged winks and nods of appreciation and amusement, and applauded her loudly. Marvellous to say, Ryall stood by with a smile of innate pride.

There were loud cries for an encore, and Mrs. Ryall sang again, a song even more pronounced than the last.

The Ryalls' carriage was announced, and Ryall bore off his triumphant bride. They were accompanied to the door, not only by Sir Joseph, but by the rest of the men, who clapped their hands and laughed half-derisively as the fly drove off.

PIMPLES ON FACE CUTICURA HEALS

Caused Disfigurement, Itchy and Burning, Had Restless Nights.

"My face came out in little pimples that were sore, and I scratched them constantly, and they they turned into sores, causing much disfigurement. I became so itchy that I scratched myself by scratching. The burning was so, and I had many restless nights." "This trouble lasted about a year before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after using three cakes of Soap and two boxes of Ointment, I was healed." (Signed) W. Byrns, St. Basile, Que., Nov. 23, 1915.

What a success! said Mrs. Ryall, as she sank back in the fly and fanned herself with a cheap and gaudy fan. "Didn't I tell you, Reginald, 'ow it would be? We've turned over a new leaf to-night; we've got into proper society. Any you've only me to thank."

Sir Joseph smoked his cigar, and went thoughtfully to the room along with where his faithful spouse was awaiting him. Lady Ferrand looked very small, very insignificant, and very tired. She had played second fiddle to Sir Joseph all her life, and a very poor little fiddle it looked in the rich dressing-gown which was drawn about it.

"You have come at last, Joseph," she said fretfully. "It's dreadfully late, and you're looking more yellow and dyspeptic every day. It's those cigars, and the wine, and the company you keep. I do wish there was an end to it; you'll be ill again, I know you will, and what ever made you ask that dreadful woman and her husband? You can't want to know such people for the mere sake of knowing them."

"Not likely," said Sir Joseph, as he divested himself of his tobacco-saturated smoking-jacket. "What's the matter with you to-night, old lady?" "I'm tired and sick of it all, Joseph," she said. "I 'ate this life; I wish we was back at the little house at Clapham. We was 'appy enough there; she ham. We was 'appy enough till you got into this Stock Exchange, and speculating business."

"Clapham!" retorted Sir Joseph, with a snort of contempt. "Look where we are now—"

"Yes, I know; we are great people—at least I 'pose we are; I've my doubts sometimes—and we've plenty of money, but money don't bring happiness. And there's Selwyn—he's not like my own boy. Sometimes I'm inclined to think he's ashamed of his mother, and looks down on her. That's going to be the end of her. That's going to be the end of her. And there's that Elliot Graham, living here like a servant—"

"Don't you worry about Elliot Graham," growled Sir Joseph, "he's my business."

"And that woman—she's my business anyhow—I think she's a common woman from the 'Ails—"

"Never you mind her," said Sir Joseph snappishly. "She's my business, too, or I shouldn't have called her here. And just you to be agreeable, and make a friend of her. What's the matter with you to-night, Betsy? Haven't you got everything you want? 'Aven't I made a lady of you, and a gentleman of your son? You go to bed, and don't worry your head about my plans. They're turned out all right up to the present, and I mean 'em to turn out all right in the end."

CHAPTER XI. NORA'S FIRST REFUGE. About an hour after she had left the shed in the field, Nora entered Forlash. The shops of the sleepy little seaport were just opening, and she paused before one with a strip of mirror in its front, and looked at her reflection. She saw a boyish form dressed in a rough serge suit; and for a moment, she stared at her changed appearance. Nora Ryall had gone, and quite an ordinary-looking lad had taken her place, ordinary in everything but the length of her hair; for, short as were the wavy curls, they were, to Nora's mind, not short enough for a boy. In fear and trembling she went into a shop and bought a pair of scissors. The shrewd assistant handed her the scissors with scarcely a glance, and added a small folding mirror with a corresponding lack of interest. Nora stole back to a field and shored off the superfluous hair. A wry smile curved her lips as she surveyed herself, for the metamorphosis was now complete, and she looked a boy indeed; a remarkably looking boy, though she was not conscious of the fact. Instinctively she assumed a boy's gait and manner, as she returned to the streets, and lounging into a milk shop, she asked, as abruptly and roughly as she could, for a glass of milk and a bun. The woman who served her eyed her with just the usual amount of interest, but Nora grew nervous and flushed painfully, as well she might.

"What sort of work?" inquired the shopkeeper. "Anything," replied Nora. "Could I get anything in the town?" The woman shook her head. "I don't think you could. But you might try; what have you been used to?"

"Farm work," replied Nora. The woman shook her head again. "There's nothing of that sort about here; you'd better go into the country, out Nelworthy way."

The crimson rose to Nora's face; she muttered a hasty thanks and left the shop. She was already beginning to realize the difficulties of her position; but she was heartened by her breakfast, and still more by the fact that the dream of her life was being realized; that she was a boy, free to go where she pleased, and do what she liked, without attracting attention or remark. She tried one or two of the other shops, but without success. There did not appear to be any demand in Forlash for the services of a boy who knew nothing but farm work.

Discouraged, but not cast down, she left the town and went along the road in the direction of the moors. While in the town she had kept a careful look-out for the boy with the cards, but had seen nothing of him. She had bought a loaf of bread and some cheese, and was sitting by the wayside eating it, and wondering where she was to spend the night, when she saw a pony carriage coming along from the town at an easy trot. A lady was driving, with the reins in one hand, and a book in the other. She could scarcely be said to be driving, for the horse was going along unguided, and evidently knew his way. He appeared to be very old, the low pony phaeton was a ramshackle affair with wobbling wheels, and Nora, regarding the turnout and its occupant, with interest, saw that the lady was also old.

She had a pleasant face, the expression of which was that of a person completely absorbed, and oblivious of everything that was going on around her. A huge hat, tied with ribbons under her chin, was all askew, an old-fashioned mantle had nearly slipped off one shoulder; on one hand she wore a black glove, on the other a grey, and a basket of marketing stood unsafely at her feet. A very fat dog, of the spantal breed, waddled behind.

As the horse came abreast of Nora he stumbled. The lady woke up, dropped her book, and clucked at the reins, and, in doing so, kicked out the basket. The whole thing came to a halt, and Nora sprang forward to the rescue. The lady looked at her as if she had dropped from the skies, and continued to gaze at her absently as Nora restored its contents to the basket, and replaced it safely in the carriage.

"Dear me," said the lady, in by no means a startled voice, but as one who merely comments on an ordinary occurrence. "Where did you come from, boy?"

Again Nora was encouraged by the boy.

"I was sitting there by the wayside," she added; she added "ma'am" as politely as she could.

"But why did you frighten Jacky?" demanded the lady placidly. Nora explained that the horse had stumbled.

"Nonsense!" said the lady. "Jacky never stumbles. He must have caught sight of you suddenly; he is very easily started; he is so young. What are you doing here? Where are you going?"

"I don't know," replied Nora wearily, wishing that she did. "I am looking for a situation."

"You won't find it by the roadside," remarked the lady. "Well, I am much obliged to you. Where is my book?" Nora picked it up and handed it to her.

Take It In Time!

Do you know that by far the larger number of the common ailments of women are not surgical ones; that they are not caused by any serious displacement, tumor, growth, or other marked change? Do you know that these common ailments produce symptoms that are very much like those caused by the more serious surgical conditions?

Do you know that many women and young girls suffer needlessly from such ailments? More than that, they endanger their health by allowing their ailments to continue and develop into something serious.

If treated early, that is, within a reasonable time after the first warning symptoms appear, serious conditions may often be averted. Therefore, at the first appearance of such symptoms as periodic pains, irregularities, irritability and nervousness, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be taken. It is prepared with accuracy and cleanliness from medicinal plants. It contains no narcotics nor poisonous drugs, and can be taken with perfect safety.

The Vegetable Compound acts on the conditions which bring about these symptoms in a gentle and efficient manner. The persistent use of it shows itself in the disappearance, one after another, of the disagreeable symptoms. In a word, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound acts as a natural restorative, relieving the present distress and preventing more serious trouble.

Why not give a fair trial to this medicine

Fourteen Hours in Coffin

A remarkable case from burial alive is given in the London organ of the Medical Research Committee, as follows: On October 27, 1919, a hospital nurse of Charlottenburg, Prussia, aged twenty-three, took morphine and veronal, and wandered into the Greenwald, where she became unconscious. The temperature was low and the atmosphere damp and chilly. Next day she was found and taken to the mortuary. A doctor saw her, and found her deathly pale and pulseless, nor was she breathing. He dropped some sealing wax on the skin, and no reaction took place. He pronounced the body dead, and it was placed in a coffin, still in its wet clothes.

Some fourteen hours later, on October 29, the coffin was reopened so that a lawyer might identify the body. It appears that the undertaker's man saw that the cheeks were blue and that the head moved slightly. The same doctor was recalled, and now heard faint sounds, but there was still no pulse and no breathing. The patient was taken to hospital, and at 10 a.m. on October 29—i.e., forty-two hours after the swallowing of the poison—the limbs and trunk became partially stiff. She was still unconscious and showed no reaction to stimuli. The heart sounds could now, however, be heard over the breastbone, the heart being at 30.40 per minute. There was still no pulse and no breathing. The skin and lips were deathly pale, but the cheeks bluish ("leicht cyanotisch"). Active treatment for morphine poisoning—morphine was found in the stomach—now began. The stiffness passed away in two hours, and consciousness was regained on October 30. On November 3 the patient was convalescent. She remained well.

Elizabeth of Roumania.

Princess Elizabeth of Roumania is now a Grecian Princess, and in the course of time, may become Queen of Greece, for she has married the Crown Prince, eldest son of King Constantine, who is once more on the throne.

Princess Elizabeth on her mother's side is connected with the British Royal family, for her mother, the Queen of Rumania, was Princess Marie, daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, who in the British peerage was Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh, second son of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria. Princess Elizabeth's father is Ferdinand I, King of Rumania, nephew of the late King Carol, who was succeeded by the nephew on October 11, 1914, the third month of the late war.

Princess Elizabeth is the second child of the Rumanian Royal Family. The first is Carol, the Crown Prince, born on October 15, 1893; Princess Elizabeth was born on October 11, 1894. The other children of King Ferdinand are a son and two daughters.

It is well known that the Queen of Rumania warmly sympathized with the Allies in their struggle to save Europe from German domination, and did much towards preventing her country from following Bulgaria. No doubt her daughter holds similar sentiments and, like her mother, looks to Great Britain as the home of her ancestors.

The Princess' mother-in-law, the Queen of Greece, is a sister of the ex-Kaiser, now in exile in Holland. It is difficult to imagine any great depth of affection existing between this Prussian mother-in-law and her pro-Allies daughter-in-law.

SPREADING DISEASES. Defective teeth, diseased gums, discharging abscesses, gum boils are positively dangerous because of the spreading of the infection to other parts of the body; indeed that infection can spread to others. More than this, those suffering from these conditions are more likely to contract diseases entirely apart from the infections themselves. Their systems are likely to be permeated with virulent germs and therefore in no condition to make the resistance necessary to ward off these other afflictions.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

SUCH A LITTLE CHANGE!

If there is anything more maddening than to have something one has said, repeated with a twist that gives it a totally different meaning than that which one intended, I have yet to meet with it. Here is an example of that sort of thing which I encountered recently.

A friend of mine and I went to see a mutual friend who has a brand new baby.

The All-Important Decision. The nurse brought the baby in and after we had inspected its minute perfections, decided whom it was to look like, and commented on the pathos of its infinite helplessness, its mother said to the woman with me: "Whatever would you do if you had a helpless little bundle like that in your home?"

The point of that remark lay in the fact that the visitor is an artist who has been married several years and has no children, and is not strong for domestic cares.

Before and After Translating. "Well," she said, "if one came to me I suppose I should look after it the same as everyone else does."

Yesterday I heard that remark, which had evidently passed through several mouths, repeated. And this is how it now went: "Elsie said she guessed if she had a baby she could look after it as well as anybody else could."

Not a very great change in wording, was it? But all the change in the world in spirit.

As it was said in the first place, it meant simply that she supposed that if she were confronted with the care of a baby she would manage to take care of it, just as millions of other women do who have never had babies before.

As it was repeated, it meant that she, without any experience, could do as well as anyone else.

Change of Emphasis Does It. Unquestionably this woman is inclined to be self-confident on many subjects. And it was this knowledge of her character that those who repeated that remark were injecting into their translation.

But I heard that particular remark; I know it was not made self-confidently, and I resent for her the injustice of that translation.

It is so easy by the exchange of a single word, or just by the change of emphasis, to give a meaning that the speaker did not intend. And it is such a temptation to do this when one has a preconceived idea of the person's character and can fit the remark into that. But it is no fun to have it done to oneself. And if you have the least respect for the Golden Rule it is, therefore a good thing to try not to do.

MY COLUMN

(By THE CUB-EDITOR.)

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

I am now enjoying a rest from the vicissitudes (good word that) of serial writing, and how better could I enjoy it, than by setting out on paper my views with respect to woman suffrage. In doing so I am fully aware that I shall incur the dislike, if not the deadly hatred of everyone interested in this so-called reform, but let me say here, that never shall it be said of this cub-editor, "he hesitated to express his convictions because he feared the consequences." And now, enough of this preamble! I shall, to use a colloquialism, "cut the cackle and get to the horses."

I shall begin by asking a question—"Why do women want the vote?" The answer is, becomingly, "they haven't got it. Somebody may accuse me of trying to be funny. I am not. I am in deadly earnest. Women are like the child crying for a certain dress because Mrs. Smith has one just like it; so will Mrs. Smith not want a vote because Mrs. Brown has one also. But you may say, they all want the vote at present. Yes, so they do, or think they do. But wait till they get it and then see what happens. At present they are all united in their struggle for franchise, because they have nothing else to do, and are anxious to add to the troubles of the men who are people our assembly. But once a woman, always a woman. Mark my words, and to use the expression of a famous statesman, "Wait and see."

(In my next column I shall discuss the ways in which women will probably use the vote—when they get it.)

RIMES OF THE TIMES.

THE EVENT OF THE SEASON.

On Friday night the Sports in town. Will all to the Casino go; And with the soothing weed, will drown.

All thoughts of sleet, cold, rain and snow. Their keen attention too, they'll lend To recitations by Tom Halley; The air with their applause they'll send In accents loud—phenomenally.

And then they'll follow Tom O'Neil And with him, cremate Sam McGee; By that time they will likely feel That they are on a joyous spree.

And then—now hold your breaths, I pray— Applause will strike the atmosphere And up will rise to have his say. None other than our own George Ayre.

But what he'll say, I shall not tell; Go to the meeting and you'll hear 'Twill be told then and told you well, well, And from the lips of Mister Ayre.

A THOUGHTFUL TRAMP.

A gentleman returning home late one night down a lonely country road was suddenly attacked by a tramp, who, not satisfied with annexing his victim's watch and chain, turned his pockets out also, and took his money.

When the unfortunate gentleman staggered on to his feet again he beheld the tramp smiling at his discomfort.

"Here's half a crown for yer, govnor," he said, "my mate's down the road, and if he meets you, and you ain't got no money on you, he might hurt you. Good night!"

A Suggestion Worth Considering.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir—I understand that to-morrow night a meeting of the sporting fraternity of St. John's will be held at the Casino theatre to consider matters of sport and that a portion of the time will be occupied in holding a smoking concert.
Last night as no doubt you are aware, a public meeting was called in the Casino for the purpose of discussing a War Memorial. The attendance at this meeting amounted to about a dozen. The words of the Police Officer on the door, "enough for two good games of draw." The meeting was postponed to the autumn which means that nothing will ever be done, as apparently the longer this matter which should have been attended to two years ago, is postponed, less and less interest seems to be taken in the project of a War Memorial.
From the talk I have heard among the sporting fraternity of the city, I believe to-morrow night's meeting will be packed to the doors. Might I therefore suggest to you to suggest to Mr. Ayre, who I understand is the convenor of the meeting, that the concert be abandoned and the meeting be divided into two parts (1) to discuss the athletic project, and (2) to discuss the War Memorial. I would suggest that Mr. R. G. Rendell Esq. be invited to take the Chair during the second part of the meeting. After all, when one figures it out, it was the "sports" of the country that went to the war and it is up to the present "sports" to be prominently featured with any project to keep green the memory of those real sports that didn't come back.
Yours very truly,
P. E. OUTERBRIDGE.

Obituary.

JAMES GOODWIN.
A telegram received in the city yesterday announced the death, at New Melbourne, of Mr. James Goodwin, one of the most respected residents of that settlement. Mr. Goodwin in his younger days prosecuted the fishery and with marked success. In later life he was appointed one of the mail couriers for Trinity Bay, travelling in all weathers and giving general satisfaction to the inhabitants of the various places served by him. He also took his part in local affairs, being for a time a Main Line Commissioner and a member of the Education Board. Mr. Goodwin will be remembered as a prominent and influential member of the Orange Society. His family will have the sympathy of his many friends in Trinity Bay and in St. John's, in their bereavement to-day.

How Cameo is Carved.

The stone—onyx and sardonyx— from which cameos are carved is so plentiful on the Uruguay River, Brazil, that ships often take it away as ballast. Nevertheless, perfect pieces of large size are costly, a piece suitable for a large portal costing as much as $75.00. This stone is preferred for cameos because of its hardness and durability, and is suitable for such work owing to the fact that it comes in layers of contrasting color, as black and white and cream, can be done much more rapidly. Still the ancient work bears the palm for artistic excellence. The cutting is raised, the cutting is called an intaglio. The cost of these gems is due to the time and skill required in the work. Formerly a small gem might occupy an artist for a year or more, but with modern appliances the work can be done much more rapidly. Still the ancient work bears the palm for artistic excellence. The cutting is now done by holding the stone against a revolving drill, whose soft steel is hard enough to cut the stone. The utmost patience, caution, and delicate handling are required, as the slightest slip may be fatal to the work. Minard's Liniment for sale every where.

SHROPSHIRE MINERS RETURN. LONDON, May 25. About the only new developments in the British miners' strike to-day was the return of some of the Shropshire miners to work at the old terms, pending settlement of the dispute.

USING THE KNIFE. LONDON, May 25. All Government branches have been instructed imperatively to cut estimates for next year's supply service by twenty per cent. A circular issued by the Treasury to the various departments states that, as far as can now be seen, the ordinary revenue for 1922-23, even if taxation is remitted, is not likely to exceed £250,000,000. Interest and debt services will absorb £465,000,000. The current year's estimates for the supply aggregated £603,000,000.

WAR ON THE JORDAN. JERUSALEM, May 25. Inhabitants of Transjordan are reported in revolt against the newly appointed ruler, Prince Ze'ev, son of King Hedjaz, and to have defeated the Prince's troops, killing 180 in a pitched battle. The insurgents, it is understood, desire to be governed by British Administration under High Commissioner Sir Herbert Samuel.

"HEROIC ECONOMICS" FRANCE'S SOLUTION, AND MUST BE. NEWFOUNDLANDS. PARIS, May 25. France must borrow thirty-two billion francs to cover expenditures this year. M. Cheron, reporter of the Finance Committee informed the Senate yesterday. France faces what he described as a difficult but not impossible situation, if Germany meets her obligations regularly and France makes proper efforts. Discussing the deficit M. Cheron said, "It is impossible for these conditions to continue. The Budget must be balanced within two years, at latest, by heroic economics."

FRATRICIDE IN ARGENTINA. BUENOS AIRES, May 25. Two persons were killed and several wounded in fighting here yesterday between Union and non-Union port workers.

IN IRELAND. DUBLIN, May 25. One civilian was killed and two were wounded, and nine captured when soldiers surprised a party destroying Ballycarthy Bridge, near Tralee to-day.

CROZIER'S SERIOUS CHARGES. LONDON, May 25. Brigadier-General Crozier, who was commander of the Auxiliary Division of the Royal Irish Constabulary until last February, when he retired on account of disagreement with General Turner, over the question of punishing certain British soldiers charged with looting Antrim, yesterday made a number of fresh accusations in an interview in the Daily News. He charged the British soldiers with robbing a Post Office disguised as Sinn Féiners, with murdering Father Griffin, and authorities with "squaring" witnesses who might have given unwelcome evidence.

THE OLD STORY. BELFAST, May 25. Wholesale charges of intimidation and personation during balloting in Ulster for members of the new Northern Irish Parliament are being made by both Nationalists and Unionists.

QUIET IN BELFAST. BELFAST, May 25. Belfast has returned to almost normal this morning, after a night of wildest excitement. Reports indicate that many districts in Ulster were similarly affected.

ALEXANDRIA RIOTS. CAIRO, May 25. Wire communication between this city and Alexandria has been stopped by the cutting of wires. A nervous atmosphere prevails. Military and police are patrolling the town.

Ethel Clayton's Beautiful Complexion

That splendid actress now appearing under the Paramount banner is famous for her beautiful complexion. She attributes her wonderful skin to the use of a simple toilet article called Derwillo. There is nothing like it for tan, freckles, shiny nose, sallowness, dark, rough skin. It takes the place of face powder, stays on better, as perspiration does not affect it, and it instantly beautifies the complexion. One application proves it. If you want a nice lily-white skin with rosy cheeks, get a bottle of Derwillo to-day; you will be delighted. Derwillo is sold at all up-to-date toilet counters. Be sure to read large announcement of Miss Clayton's soon to appear in this paper. It tells how to instantly have a beautiful complexion and a soft, white, velvety skin everyone "just loves to touch."

Fire Engine as Bridal Coach.

A fire alarm sounded in Windsor, London, the other morning for an unusual purpose. Believing that they had to attend an outbreak, members of the brigade answered the call quickly, but discovered that the gong was a summons to the wedding of their chief officer, Mr. Harry Hall, and Miss Pounford. All the firemen put on their uniforms and helmets, and drove to Clewer Church on the new motor fire engine. After the wedding they formed an arch of axes outside the church, and then, with bells clanging joyously, proceeded to the bride's house, the newly married couple being given seats on the engine.

The Best Kind of a Boy.

The scout
Doesn't pout.
He's a regular fellow;
He's no mollycoddle
At trifles to bellow;
He isn't a coward.
He isn't a cad.
But a scout
In and out,
Is a fine-tempered lad.
A scout
Is no lout.
He is thoughtful for others—
Especially so for
The sisters and mothers.
He isn't a bully,
Whatever may hap,
But a scout
Without doubt
Is a thoroughbred chap.
A scout
Doesn't fout.
The advice of the Master;
He turns from the trails that
May lead to disaster;
In ways that are sneaky
He falls to find joy;
For a scout
Is throughout
The best kind of a boy!
—Denis A. McCarthy, in St. Nicholas.

Government Timber Deal.

At the second reading of the Bill to permit the exportation of timber for a special purpose, in the Upper House yesterday, Hon. Dr. Campbell informed the Council that the bill was intended to permit the exportation of a quantity of pine logs cut during the past winter, under agreement with the Government by contractors in various portions of the colony. Permission was granted to cut some £2,000 cords. About 25 to 30 thousand cords were taken, which the contractors were to dispose of, but in the event of their failing to do so by June 1st, the Government guaranteed them $6.00 (not rounded). So far one contractor had reported to the department that he was not able to dispose of his cut of about 2,000 cords, and as the others may yet be heard from, it is necessary that the Government have legislation ready to meet the situation.

A Reflex of the Times.

The Imperial Tobacco factory, which has been working on short time this while back, will close down on Saturday for about one month, or until their surplus stock is disposed of. The closing of the Tobacco Factory is due to short sales, and is a reflex of the conditions of the country, which, indeed, is up against hard times when men forego their smoke. Remembering that we have a Reform Government it may be, however, that the people are getting real "good."

Personal.

Miss Mildred Rowe, late of Steer Bros. office, leaves by the S.S. Digby for Boston, where she will be married to Mr. Raymond Butt, late of the Royal Stores. When leaving the office, she was presented with a purse of gold by her employers and staff.

DISARMAMENT.

If all the nations would disarm, 'twould be a splendid thing, and we might live secure from harm and dance around and sing. How happy we should be to know that wars would come no more, that no new Hindenburg would go to splash around in gore. I thought, when war was at its height, that when the war was done, there would be left on earth no wight who'd want to pack a gun. I thought we'd had enough of graps, the war fans to deter, for all the world was sick of bones and death and blood and fur. Now while the nations all profess a strong desire for peace, they hoist the same old martial mace, and war spels never cease. "We'd dump our armament to-day," one monarch sadly rips, "but there's a king across the way, who's building countless ships. He's building guns and submarines to multiply his power, and we would surely spill the beans if we relaxed an hour." The king across the way remarks, "I can't disarm alone, for there are sundry royal sharks who'd like to lift my throne. I have to build my guns and boats if I would keep my throne; I do not fear for others' goats, but I would hold my own." And so the old, old game proceeds, and will till time is done, and this poor foolish planet speeds no more around the sun.

Napoleon Twice Crowned.

The Imperial Coronation of Napoleon Bonaparte took place in the Church of Notre Dame, the ancient cathedral of Paris, in December, 1804. The crown, having been blessed by the Pope, Emperor Napoleon took it himself from the altar and placed it on his head; after which, with his own hands, he crowned his wife, Josephine, as Empress. But to the Imperial crown was soon added a crown royal—for, following the example of the French, some of the people beyond the Alps requested Napoleon to accept the ancient Iron Lombard crown—the crown of Upper Italy. Therefore, on May 26, 1805, the ceremony was performed in the splendid but unfinished cathedral of Milan, the Archbishop of Milan officiating. Napoleon, however, was less reverential or ceremonious than he had been at Notre Dame; he seized the Iron crown and placed it on his brow exclaiming: "God has given it to me, we to him—who attempts to touch it." In the following month the old Genoese Republic was united, not to the Italian kingdom, but to France, and the Republic of Lucca was transformed into a principality, and given to Elisa, one of Napoleon's sisters, and her husband, Baciocchi, to be held as a fief of the French Empire. Thus, the military Republic of San Marino, with its two old cannons, and a population of about a thousand souls, was the only one left in the Italian peninsula. It is an independent State today.

Pepys and His Diary.

Pepys' Diary is surely the most interesting specimen of that kind of literature ever published, all the more so because he never intended anyone to see it, and wrote it in a difficult kind of shorthand. Born on Feb. 23, 1633 (3), Samuel Pepys was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, and took the degree of B.A. and M.A. On Dec. 1, 1658, he married Elizabeth St. Michel, a pretty girl of fifteen at St. Margaret's, Westminster. When he began his diary on Jan. 1, 1659-60, he was living in Axe Yard, Westminster, with his wife and one maid, on £50 a year. The same year, however, he became clerk to the Navy at £300 a year. Other offices were afterwards added to this, and his salary steadily increased. By the end of 1668 he had set up a coach with a pair of black horses, and wrote in his diary that he was mighty proud of it. He was a hard worker, often beginning work at four in the morning. He made himself thoroughly efficient in his department, and became one of the best "masters of the King's Navy" that England has ever had. When he had done his daily work he believed in enjoying himself right well. Music and the theatre were his chief diversions, but any kind of amusement suited him, and he did not miss much. As his post everlastingly increased, it became a sort of cinema picture of the time, and as the period includes the restoration of Charles II., and the plague and fire of London, there is plenty of interesting matter, indeed, it is the best picture of that time that has come to us. Besides public and court affairs, Pepys put in all the little details of home life, what he had for dinner, when he drank too much, where he went on Sunday with critics of the parson and the sermon, and any pretty girls who may have been in the congregation. All these details are very charming. He gave up writing the diary in 1669, because of weakness in his eyes, though he lived more than thirty years afterwards. He died at Clapham on May 26, 1703, and was buried at St. Olaves, Hart Street. The diary was found in the library of Magdalene College and was first published in 1825.

Just Folks

When a fellow's knocked out and he can't get about, "stay there in bed." And the doctor says, "stay there in bed." When he's all aches and pains and the blood in his veins seems to flow like a fluid of lead. You may dose him with pills and with tinctures and squills, But the cure for a man after all, Are the roses of love and the glad voices of The good friends who drop in to call. Shut him up all alone, and he'll lie there and groan In the dusk of his dark, captained room. And his cheeks will grow pale, and his spirits will fall, And his face reflect only a gloom; Then no powder or pill can restore to his will The courage to see the thing through, What he needs is the smile of a friend for awhile Or the good that a few flowers can do. Any doctor will say, if you ask him to-day, That with all of his wisdom and skill, Why he'd oft be dismayed were it not for the aid - Of the friends of the fellow who's ill. That nothing he knows has the power of the rose, Sent in by a friend who cares, To banish the gloom of an invalid's room, And lighten the pain that he bears. Let us put a smile on your countenance.
