Canada's Bountiful Harvest

Canada's wheat crop for this year has reached the total of three hundred and thirty-six millions, two hundred and fifty-eight thousands of bushels. This is more than twice the yield of any preceding year. This great crop was produced upon twelve. millions, nine hundred and eighty-six thousands, four hundred acres, and. averages nearly twenty-six bushels per acre.

The yield of oats, rye and flax is greater than was anticipated in the early part of the season. Of oats the yield is four hundred and eight-one millions, thirty-five thousands five hundred bushels; of barley fifty millions, eight hundred and sixty-eight thousands of bushels; of rye two millions, four hundred and seventy-eight thousands, five hundred bushels; of buckwheat eight millions, one hundred and one thousand bushels; of corn for husking fourteen millions, five hundred and ninety-five thousands of bushels. Besides these there are large crops of mixed grains, peas and beans, amounting to about twenty-one millions of bushels. Evidently the Canadian farmers heard and obeyed the request urged in the early spring by officials of the Government and others whose experience authorized them to give advice, that efforts be made for a larger harvest, and a kind providence has smiled upon their efforts.

R. Duncan is the thoughtful donor and the School Board has expressed its cordial thanks on behalf of the school and the town.

The late Mr. Anderson, kindly bequeathed the nucleus of a school library. A few editions, but, very few, have been added to it, until the more. It is hoped that others may be induced to increase the collection. The Principal and his staff will shortly prepare a complete Catalogue and put it in order.

It will all be needed, much of it in Canada, much of it in Britain, France and Belgium. The great question at present is the question of ships to carry it across the ocean. One method proposed is the requisitioning of steamers by the British Government for the purpose. Thanks to the British efforts the danger from submarines is not so formidable as it has been, and in one way or other this great Canadian harvest will find a market.

At one of the Chautauquas, the Hon. W. J. Bryan delivered his lecture on "The Causeless War," to a large assembly. The title suggests the line of the thought pursued. It was, of course, an attempted justification of his retirement from President Wilson's Cabinet. In closing he urged very strongly the inadvisability and folly of increasing the United States army and navy, and was cheered to the echo. But no sooner had he closed than the choir, and orchestra and audience began to sing, "The Red White and Blue." When they came to the words.

"The Army and Navy Forever," they saw the want of harmony between the song and the lecture, and burst into loud laughter.

If the United States had been treated as poor Belgium was, a lecture on ciety the "Causeless War" would not have awakened much enthusiasm, and probably Mr. Bryan himself would have brethren than any other Lodge withchanged his subject to "The Army in the jurisdiction of Nova Scotia per and Navy Forever."

Mr. Bryan's lecture would without German element, and would assist overseas:

the agents of the Kaiser in their propoganda in favor of Germany. But that propoganda has not succeeded. One of the professors of Trinity College, Hartford, in order to ascertain the feeling of educated men upon this subject and upon the war in general. sought the opinion of the faculties of 25 leading colleges and universities, 9 theological schools, and 7 law schools, covering 19 states. The result is as follows-"In the Colleges of the North Atlantic States, out of 3191 professors, only 108 are pro-German, and in the Central and Western States out of 2511 professors, only 276 are pro-German." A good proportion of the pro-Germans are of German birth or descent, while many of the strongest opponents of Germany are persons who have received their education in part in Germany and are well fitted to express an opinion.

read for the children, reporting that our masters seem in a state of gloomy ndecision-and the blessed guns still rear beside the Marne.

September 7th .- An exciting day. Pretty Madame Tison had prought us some vegetables, and Alzire was dancing with joy as she got out the soup pot, when there was a crashing of cannon close by, and shouting and a storm of rifle shots. We heard a loud humming overhead, and one of the enemy's air ships passed, dropping a bomb in a field.

Then Madame and Alzire literally flew out of the house, for men were passing-a detachment of cavalry in the uniform of France. My two mad nurses were in among them, madame making the color-bearer lower the tricolor he bore so that they could kiss a corner of the sacred silk. However, we are not victors yet; the battle of the Marne still continues, only we are having a little of it here. The enemy, strongly barricaded, hold the bridge end of the town with a field battery while the cavalry raid, capture a good portion of the stolen-I suppose I should say requisitioned-stores.

September Sth .- Fighting all day at the other end of the town .. Many unhappy non-combatants are killed, and we think of Emil, still with the enemy's Red Cross.

September 9th .- A day of gloom. The French retire with the captured stores, and cur masters are ruling us again, watching every act with sullen fury, and punishing savagely the Alzire to Paris and her mother. least trangression to their orders.
