The Voice

Is easily injured—the slightest irritation of the throat or larynx at once affecting its tone, flexibility, or power. All efforts to sing or speak in public, under such conditions, become not only painful but dangerous, and should be strictly avoided until every symptom is removed. To effect a speedy cure no other medicine is equal to

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

The best of remedies, this preparation rapidly soothes irritation, strengthens the delicate organs of speech, and restores the voice to its tone and power. No singer or public speaker should be without it. Lydia Thompson, the famous actress, certifies: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been of very great service to me. It improves and strengthens the voice, and is always effective for the cure of colds and coughs."

Magical Effect

that I have suffered very little inconvenience. I have also used it in my family, with excellent results, in coughs, colds, &c.—Win. H. Quinlan, Minotau, Australia. In the spring of 1885, at Portsmouth, Va., I was prostrated by a severe attack of typhoid pneumonia. My physicians exhausted their remedies, and for one year I was not able to even articulate a word. By the advice of Dr. Shaw I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and to my surprise and great joy, in less than one month I could converse easily, in a natural tone of voice. I continued to improve and have become since a well man. I have often recommended the Pectoral, and have never known it to fail."—George M. Lawrence, Valparaiso, Ind.

GORDON'S GRAVE.

Shoulder to shoulder, we'll find him together,
Fled when our hero was sleeping alone!
Far from his land of the mountain and heather,
Left on the sand, for his pillow a stone;
Bleeding for aid, not a soul to protect him—
How our ears ring with his spirit's cry!
Was it like England he loved to neglect him?
Fighting for life, yet daring to die!

Sound the alarm! We will know where they laid him,
Search till we find the red spot where he fell,
Death to the coward who basely betrayed him!
Let the country be loved—but too well,
Ow did he die! Like a soldier, God bless him!

Sent out by England, her honor to save,
Let not our cry in his death-sleep distress him,
Ours be the glory to stand at his grave!

Hark to the shout on the wings of the morning,
Borne from the uttermost ends of the world!
Help comes from children, who, cowardice scoring,
Rush to our aid with their banners unfurled.
"Lift up your head, my discomfited nation!
England has need of the strength of her sons,
Let us all fall in to discover our brother,
Let us all stand, as of old, to our guns!"

Is there a page in our insular story
Fitter of heart or vigor than this?
England, downhearted, re-joins to her glory,
Cheered by her children—refreshed by their kiss!
False though the foe be, and foul though the weather,
Love is the beacon of hope on the land!
On to the grave of our hero together,
Shoulder to shoulder, and sword within hand!

CLEMENT SCOTT.

POOR MISS BROWN.

A large schoolroom decorated with holly and ivy, with colored paper flowers and rings, and bright with gaslight and crumpled with people. There were many girls with "fringes" dipping into their eyes or curled elaborately over their foreheads; careworn-looking mothers carrying babies; solid-looking men who seemed to wonder what they had been brought here for, and sheepish-looking lads huddled together in the corners.

At one end was a platform with a piano and a few chairs, and with a screen drawn across it.

Maj. Giffard, who was sitting with Mrs. Lowry in the front row of spectators, watched the screen with a curious feeling at his heart.

What would any of his club friends say if they were to see him? he wondered. He had had several invitations to dinner for that night, but he had declined them all. He had a previous engagement, he had said; and the men had chaffed him a little as to where he spent his evenings now. An hour ago he might, had they been present, have seen him handling steaming mugs of tea, cutting bread and butter, and joking and laughing with the poor people.

Cosby felt as if this were to be his last happy evening. The morning's post had brought him a peremptory note from Mrs. Skiffington.

Mrs. Skiffington had returned home unexpectedly, and is really coming to stay with me. You must come and meet her, she wrote. 'It is absolutely necessary. There is such a thing as common courtesy. Of course no one can force you to marry her against your will, but at least you must come and see her and arrange matters. I cannot make further excuses for you.'

And in a postscript was:

'My Dear Cosby: What are you doing with yourself in London? No one seems to know where you spend your time.'

If Mrs. Skiffington could only have glanced in at this gathering, she would have seen her fastidious nephew looking more animated and sager than she had ever seen him at her entertainments.

Mrs. Norman was at the piano playing some 'simple old airs'; presently she struck a few triumphant chords as the screen was thrown back and the conjurer appeared.

Maj. Giffard had thought he knew just how Alison would look on every occasion, but he had never seen her as she looked now.

The people, led by their vicar, clapped loud and long. She did not seem at all disturbed as she stepped forward to the front of the platform, smiling and bowing to her audience. She wore a long gown of some black silky stuff, with gold flowers all over it. It was a little open in front, showing her white throat; the sleeves fell back from her lovely arms. With her bright hair and shining eyes and her slim, girlish figure, she made a fair picture; and Cosby Giffard's heart was full of love as he sat and applauded with the rest. Now he knew what would bless and sweeten all his life. If he could only win this girl's love, then, indeed, his life would be worth living; not—but he would not think of that—not yet. He would do all that was humanly possible to win her.

This was what Maj. Giffard was thinking while the conjurer, behind her table, performed marvels, and her audience was spell-bound. He never took his eyes off her. Once she looked at him and smiled a tender little smile, and then she turned away again; but that seemed enough for the major.

'Are you not tired?' The conjuring was over, and now that the musical part of the entertainment was to commence, Maj. Giffard was in the little room behind the platform talking to Miss Brown. The vicar and Mrs. Lowry had been there, too, offering their congratulations; but Mrs. Lowry was at the piano now, playing some gay dance music, and the vicar had gone back to keep order among his flock.

'And you really liked it?' Miss Brown said.

'Liked it?' The major would not trust himself just then to say what he thought. 'Where did you learn all those wonderful things?'

'Well, I learned them for my poor people. I believe in amusing them; they have so little brightness in their lives.'

'I do not think they will forget this evening, I know I never shall.'

Miss Brown was busy looking over some music, and her face was very bright as she listened.

'Mrs. Lowry is coming to the end of her piece, and it is your turn now,' she told Maj. Giffard.

He had a fine tenor voice, and was considered by his friends to be rather particular as to where he sang. Mrs. Skiffington, for instance, who, when in town, was great at musical entertainments, would have thought herself highly favored in getting her nephew to give her two songs. But for these poor people he sang several, and they clapped and cheered him far more than they had applauded the conjuring. The conjuring was a thing they could not quite understand. They were dimly conscious that they were being made fools of, and this thought detracted somewhat from their enjoyment; but singing such as Maj. Giffard's went home to all their hearts, and the expression in Alison Brown's eyes and on her face grew deep and tender as she listened. She knew that these passionate love songs were sung for her, but that for her they never would have been sung at all.

The entertainment was over, the audience had dispersed, and the performers were on their way back to the vicarage for supper. In front were Mr. and Mrs. Lowry and Mrs. Norman, Miss Brown and Maj. Giffard bringing up the rear.

This hour was always the noisiest part of the night in the thoroughfares through which they had to pass. The narrow pavements were crowded; round the public house doors some lads were indulging in rough horseplay. Alison, the strong, the independent, shrank a little before the crowd. He took her hand and drew it within his arm, and there he held it for a moment.

'Miss Brown,' said he—and there was almost a tremor in his voice—'would it be possible that you could ever learn to care a little for me? I love you so much that my life is worth nothing to me without you! If you could only love me a little!' Alison's face was turned from him; he could not see its expression; but she did not take her hand from his arm. 'You have taught me so much! I do not remember my mother, and I never knew how good a woman could be until I knew you.'

'But you do not know me yet,' she objected; 'it is only six weeks since I first saw you.'

'Only six weeks; but I have loved you since the first day I saw you, and when I met you that afternoon at the vicarage, I knew then that it was my fate! Ah, Alison, won't you give me one word of hope? I will wait as long as you like; for your sake I will do anything, if only you will hold out a little hope to me! Alison, look round at me.'

And she looked round at him. Her eyes were shining. Cosby had been afraid, distrustful of himself, but he could not doubt that look.

'Is it possible,' he cried, 'that you can love me?'

'I think,' said softly, with a lovely blush on her cheeks 'that I could.'

It was about ten minutes' walk from the schoolhouse to the vicarage, but Cosby and Alison did not go straight home that evening; as during their walk Maj. Giffard told her all the story of Miss Brown, of her difficulties and perplexities. Alison listened thoughtfully and now and then asking a question.

'Do you think,' she said once, 'that if you had never met me, you would have agreed to marry Miss Brown?'

'Never!' said Cosby. 'You are the one woman in all the world I could ever have cared for.'

'My darling, that is why I am telling you everything; I love thought is so hard to give it all up as since I have known you. For myself I have enough, but I should like to have it to give to you. I should like to see you mistress of Snaveham. It is a lovely old house.'

'It is very hard on you,' she said.

'Alison, if you marry me, you will have to be poor!'

'I do not mind being poor; money is not everything. But poor Miss Brown—what is she like? Have you seen her?'

'No I have never seen her. She is very rich and very old, I believe.'

'Young or old?'

'Young, I think; but, upon my word, I know very little about her. I was to have met her in the autumn, but she went abroad. Now my aunt, Mrs. Skiffington, wants me to go down and meet her next week.'

'And you will go?' Alison said eagerly.

'Yes, I shall go; and I shall tell her that I am engaged to the dearest, sweetest girl in all the world!'

'Poor Miss Brown!' repeated Alison, with a sigh. 'Cosby—it was delightful to Maj. Giffard to hear how she recommended his name—will you promise me one thing?'

'Twenty things if you like!'

'You will go down to Hertfordshire and try to like Miss Brown?'

'Alison!'

'Listen! She may be very nice—how can you tell—and you don't know what it is to be poor; perhaps some day you might begin to think of all the money you had lost—of all you had given up!'

'If you did not mind being poor, I should not care,' he told her.

'This is what you are to do. You are to go down to Mrs. Skiffington's and see Miss Brown. You are not to tell her you are engaged to me, because I will never be engaged to you until you have seen her. I think Cosby, poor thing, even though she may be strong-minded and horrid! You are to stay there a few days, and then—it seemed to Cosby that there was a little tremor in Alison's voice—you will tell me if you have changed your mind. I shall not be angry with you—I shall not blame you in the least. Your uncle wished it—and you say he was always good to you—and she is very rich.'

'Oh, Alison my love, don't talk to me like that! It sounds as if you did not believe me—did not know how I love you!'

'They were in the vicarage hall by this time. The maid who had let them in, having a pretty good idea what brought Maj. Giffard there so often, had discreetly retired, and they were standing alone under the gas lamp. Alison's fur cloak had fallen back, showing her slim figure; her gray eyes were very soft and dewy, and on her proud lips was a sweet smile.

Surely no woman had ever been like her, no man had ever loved so well, Cosby Giffard thought, as he took her hands and drew her closer to him.

'Alison, only tell me that, when I come back from seeing Miss Brown, you will listen to me—will love me.'

'When you come back,' she said, 'when you have seen her and talked to her.'

ANTI-SLAVERY PRINCIPLES.

'And so there has refused to marry Frank F.' said grandamma Little, settling herself at her knitting, and looking mildly over her glasses at her favorite granddaughter, who loved dearly to talk things over with this sage counsellor.

'Yes, grandamma,' said Elinor bravely, though her eyes filled with tears. 'I knew it would never do for her, looking imploringly into his friend's face.

"It's over now for you, for, Roddie," replied the latter, "yet you must wait, but my hand will never be kept from you in the same way."

Helping him up and putting an old-fashioned dressing gown on him, Sandy supported the sufferer to the bed, and from the sick chamber, into the hall and on to the door. A hush followed his appearance. All eyes were turned on him, and men and women expressed one another in whispers who he was; for the face was nearly covered with a bandage. They watched him as he walked to a woman who lay the body of a young woman, and saw him sit down and gaze into the lifeless face; then a wail of sympathy arose again from the crowd. Still the mourner moved not. It seemed that life had gone forth to animate the memory, now servant to a bleeding heart, in recalling and living over again years of love and happiness, else to each and so sadly ended.

"Ah! Nellie; man we part me!" Here he pulled the bandage aside, and looking at her for a moment, "Farewell! Farewell! Take me home with you, and in God's good time we'll meet again at the end of the road." And so they parted; she to the dark silent tomb; but he wandered disconsolate up and down cheerless lanes of life, ever haunted by visions of that fatal night in the river, and came in the darkness, yet lit up by the eye-blinded hope that behind the curtain of nature, beyond the horizon of time, she still lived on, purer, sweeter, nobler, longed for fulfillment of God's promise, when with smiles and outstretched arms she will welcome him on the golden sands of the shores of Eternity.

General Intelligence.

EQUITY COURT.
The matter of Charles J. Osmen vs. the Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company, William Willis, the National Improvement Company of New York, and Charles H. Hamman, came up in the court this morning for final hearing. It will be remembered that when Mr. Willis the attorney of the English company, sold the road to Mr. Hamman, president of the National Improvement Company, Mr. Osmen, of Albert County, obtained an injunction restraining the transfer, claiming that Mr. Willis had entered into a prior agreement to sell the road to him. Mr. Osmen then brought a suit in equity to set aside the contract with the National Improvement Company. Without going to trial all lawyers stated to the court today that a settlement had been arrived at between the parties, the terms of which would be submitted to the court to-morrow morning. It is understood that under the settlement the plaintiff is to receive the sum of $25,000, in consideration of which he will withdraw his suit. The injunction is dissolved and the sale of this National Improvement Company takes effect. Each party pays its own costs. Dr. Barker and Hon. E. McNeil appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. C. W. Weldon for Mr. Willis, Mr. A. A. Stockton for the Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company, Mr. C. N. Skinner for the National Improvement Company, and Mr. R. O. Stockton for Mr. C. H. Hamman.

On Saturday Mr. Watson Allen obtained an ex parte injunction to restrain A. L. Michaels, of Halifax, to whom Meyer Moss, of Moncton, had made a trust deed of his property, from selling the property. The injunction was procured at the instance of Messrs. A. S. Brown & Co., of Halifax—Globe. 161.

COMPLIMENTARY TO MR. DRAPEL.

The following testimonial speaks for itself:

The Terminal City Co., which has just closed a delightful excursion from Boston to Canada and return, desires to express its compliments to the colonial railway of Canada for the pleasant accommodations afforded the excursionists upon its line, and particularly of the general passenger agent, A. Busby, also those of the travelling passenger agent, H. H. Draper, whose gentlemanly attentions to the wants of the excursionists and care for their comfort have been exceptional, proving him a first class railway official, and also for the prompt attentions of the trainmen, and we most heartily commend this railway to the travelling public as a well built and most admirably equipped and thoroughly managed thoroughfare.

HIRSH M. PEARL,
General Manager Terminal City Co.

Droit, Sept. 10.—One of the saddest cases of death in the history of this town happened last night. Mrs. Crozier, a much respected and charitable lady, and who managed a summer boarding house situated on Water street, had been ill the last few days, but last evening was feeling quite well. The doctor in attendance prepared a prescription which was sent to the drug store of Messrs. R. F. Stark & Co. to be filled. After being administered, the patient became very violent, and to the horror of those present it was discovered that the druggist had made a mistake and sent 15 grains of strychnine instead. The poor woman died in great agony a few minutes after taking the deadly poison. The sad affair has cast a gloom over the community. Coroner John Daley held an inquest this morning, and the jury, after considerable discussion, rendered the following verdict:—

"That Mrs. Crozier came to her death by a dose of strychnine sulphate, and further find that the drug strychnine sulphate was dispensed by mistake for salina, which had been prescribed by her attendant physician; that the bottles containing such drugs had been changed, and a bottle containing strychnine sulphate was in the place of the bottle containing salina; that the dispensing chemist was not aware of the change of bottles, and the death was purely accidental." The jury also censured the proprietors of the drug store for not having poisonous drugs kept separate. Mrs. Crozier was a native of Annapolis, and 72 years of age. She leaves three daughters, Mrs. J. A. C. DeLamhardt, Miss Maud, and Mrs. Spence, who resides at Lynn, Mass., and a son residing in California.

The Halifax council chamber was crowded with a brilliant audience Thursday Sept. 11th to witness the presentation to Lieut. Stairs of the address from the city council. The address complimented him upon his part he had taken in the Stanley expedition and the public felt that the second in command to Stanley was a son of Halifax. Mr. Stairs, who was dressed in the uniform of an officer of the engineers, in reply expressed his gratification that such a reception had been tendered him.

ST. HYACINTHE, Sept. 11.—Mr. Anger, of this place, while on his way this morning to bring a doctor to his sick son, and while crossing the Grand Trunk track at Petit Range crossing, did not hear the Montreal express approaching. He was struck by it and instantly killed.

DON'T GIVE UP

The use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. One bottle may not cure "right off" a complaint of years; persist until a cure is effected. As a general rule, improvement follows shortly after beginning the use of this medicine.
With many people, the effect is immediately noticeable, but some constitutions are less susceptible to medicinal influences than others, and the curative process may, therefore, in such cases, be less prompt. Perseverance in using this remedy is sure of its reward at last. Sooner or later, the most stubborn blood diseases yield to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For several years, in the spring months,
I used to be troubled with a rowdy, tired feeling, and a dull pain in the small of my back, so bad, at times, as to prevent my being able to walk, the least sudden motion causing me severe distress. Frequently, boils and rashes would break out on various parts of the body. By the advice of friends and my family physician, I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla and continued it till the poison in my blood was thoroughly eradicated."
—L. W. English, Montgomery City, Mo.
"My system was all run down; my skin rough and of yellowish hue. I tried various remedies, and while some of them gave me temporary relief, none of them did any permanent good. At last I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, continuing it exclusively for a considerable time, and am pleased to say that it completely

Cured Me.

I presume my liver was very much out of order, and the blood impure in consequence.
I feel that I cannot too highly recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla, as it has cured me of my liver complaint, and I did so, and now feel like a new man, being fully restored to health."—C. N. Frink, Decorah, Iowa.

the weak strong.

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 4.—At yesterday's session of the Dominion labor congress a letter from the Victoria, B. C. trades assembly was read protesting against Chinese immigration because of their immorality and the congestion of the labor market that resulted therefrom.
The letter said the working men of Canada should take the necessary steps to secure the intervention of the government in the matter.

War has been declared on the poolrooms in Louisville, Ky., and an effort will be made to close them under the gambling laws. Witnesses have been subpoenaed, and it is believed on their testimony the grand jury will indict the pool-rooms for violation of the law.
The Louisville pool-rooms practically control the poolroom operations all over the country, and their closing will be a blow at hor-reback in Kentucky.

The establishment of A. R. Bell on Dock street, and T. Wm. Bell on Prince William street, were visited by Capt. L.
Rawlings and officer George Baxter.
They searched a dozen loads of gin, whiskey, sherry and port wines and other liquors at A. R. Bell's and a quantity of gin and whiskey at T. Wm. Bell's place. The latter claims that he does not sell his liquor to John and therefore not liable to pay license.—Gazette.

St. JOHN, September 4.—A day or two ago a boy named Tighes was accidentally shot in the neck by a companion. Several shots were fired, and the boy was killed. The body was taken to the American Hospital for the month of July, 1890, entitled "Value of Birds to the Farmer."

After referring to the foolish
"Scalp Act" of Pennsylvania by which the state expended $90,000 in bounties for owls and hawks to protect $2,000 worth of chickens!
The article goes on to speak in the following terms of the robin:
"This is one of the most useful of our common birds, notwithstanding it has the audacity to eat a few cherries, for which depredation they are often shot by the exasperated owner.
Henry Ward Beecher once said:
The man who would shoot a robin,
is a man who would shoot a man, and conscientiously for food, he has him the blood of a cannibal, and would if born in Oshkosh, have eaten ministers, and digested them too.
The robin is one of the most useful of all our birds in destroying insects, which are most injurious to our fields and gardens. Robins raise two or three broods of young each season, and it requires large numbers of grubs and worms to feed them upon.
The quantity of worms required by a young robin is surprisingly large, being more than its own weight daily. Sometimes the young are fed almost exclusively upon cut worms."

The horticulturists near Boston once petitioned the government to strike out the name of the robin from the list of protected birds.
A committee, one member of which was Prof. Jenks, was appointed to investigate the habits of the robin.
Prof. Jenks clearly proved that the bird is a benefactor. From daily observation he found that the robin is a most useful bird, and that a large number of the birds of the robin are the most useful of all the birds of the field. The robin is one of the most useful of all the
