The W. C. T. U. Convention.

The regular annual convention of the W. C. T. U. was held at Lansdowne on Oct. 5th and 6th, with the president, Mrs. Mackie, in the chair.

The convention opened by devotional exercises, conducted by Mrs. B. O. Britton of Gananoque, and Mrs. Connelly of Brockville.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted and committees were formed for the various branches of work required of them.

The Presbyterian church very kindly opened its doors in welcome for the afternoon meeting and also for the morning session, while the Methodist church was open for the medal contest in the evening, which was very largely attended. Excellent music was furnished during the evening by Mr. Cummings and Mrs. Walter Peck of Brockville and also by local talent.

One of the most interesting features of the evening's program was the presentation of a life membership pin to Mrs. Mackie in recognition of her most efficient services during the past few years.

The morning session was devoted almost entirely to the election of officers.

The report of the treasurer showed a balance on hand of $40.90, an increase of over $15.00 for the year.

The following are the officers:

John L. Sullivan Redeems Belt.
Chicago, Oct. 7.—The famous championship diamond belt presented to John L. Sullivan by admiring friends in 1887, and later left by him in Chicago as security for a $4,000 loan, is again in the possession of the veteran heavyweight pugilist, it became known today.

Sullivan redeemed it from a jewelry firm yesterday, paying $5,300. The celebrated trophy is made up of 350 diamonds, and fourteen pounds of gold. The former champion regarded the belt as his most cherished possession, until shortly after he was defeated by Corbett in New Orleans in 1892.

Deputy Sheriff Williams, of Watertown, who has been engaged in running down a gang of river pirates who have systematically robbed summer cottages among the Thousand Islands, was in Brockville on Thursday and in company with Police Constable Arthur Storey, continued his search for goods stolen at up the river points.

They were successful in locating three hundred and fifty pounds of insulated copper wire which had been sold to a local junk dealer for ten and one-half cents a pound. This is part of a quantity of wire stripped by the river pirates from a power line on one of the islands near Alexandria Bay, and is worth considerable money.

Deputy Sheriff Williams arranged to have the junk dealer go to Watertown for the purpose of identifying, if possible, the two men that sold him the wire. Three suspects are in custody at Watertown charged with the depredations among the islands.

Upon a previous visit, Deputy Sheriff Williams located a quantity of stolen silverware and a skill which had been taken from the vicinity of Alexandria Bay and sold to Mrs. Fraser who keeps a boat livery at the foot of Bethune St. Mrs. Fraser and Arthur Laonde, who is employed at the boat livery, accompanied the Deputy back to Watertown last evening, and will see if the men under arrest there are the ones who sold the stolen goods.

The silverware and skill were sold for $12.50. Much inconvenience and loss has resulted from the depredations of river pirates among the islands during the past few years, and this season the authorities made a determined effort to break up the gang which had been at work.

Jocelin's Penance

This was signed with a curious black mark as if a sooty thumb had been pressed upon the page.
 "Is from Dame Bernice!" Rohese joyfully exclaimed. "Saved, saved, poor Jocelin from his dreary prison, and I, thank the holy saints from almost as ill an one." And she shuddered as she thought of the cruel look the Prioress had given her. Amid her rejoicing, Rohese did not think of the perils and difficulties of her undertaking, but straightway supped heartily, and almost gaily prepared for her dark and dangerous journey. Night had fallen, and she was allowed no lights, but she easily sought and selected the few jewels and treasures she desired, and though there were some hours to wait, she donned a dark hooded mantle, and sat with what patience she could muster until after the nocturnal bell had rung, and she heard the monks, attendant on the Abbot's household, go patrolling down the stone passage of the chapel, and then back again to their cells.

When all seemed securely quiet, Rohese unlocked the door and slipped cautiously into the long corridor, the door of which the witch's key also opened. It moved easily, as if on greased hinges, and though a watch was set nightly all through the field house, strange to say, the place seemed deserted as some ancient ruin. Quickly she passed to the great hall door. Here she paused, feeling doubtfully of the key. Surely it was far too small for that great lock! But on trying it she found (as the witch had written) it opened all doors—for the heavy lock turned with a gentle click, and Rohese found herself speeding across the icy courtyard. The gatekeeper snored peacefully before the glowing brazier in his little lodge; the heavy bars of the gate swung back without a sound, and when she had turned and pushed it shut again, Rohese was outside the Abbey walls. Along the lonely way she ran, the far-off stars blinking coldly on through the mist; the night wind touching her cheek with chill fingers, and the hazel coppice through which she passed casting weird shadows on her path, seeming to stretch gaunt hands to stay her. Rohese felt as if she were shut alone in some grimy black chamber, where gibbering, hideous phantoms crowded near, and she sped with terror lending swiftness to her feet. An owl shrieked from the wood like a tortured thing, and the cold sweat rose on her brow. Half way to the tower she stopped. Her breath came in gasps, and shivering with fright and cold, she leaned against the Abbey wall. All was darkness and silence, save for the hoarse, rusty noise of a branch stirred by the wind. Over her head a great hawk flew heavily and slowly, sounding his warning cry as he flew, and Rohese, knowing that up there in the wide night sky a soul was passing out somewhere into the void, crossed herself and murmured a prayer.

Just then a dark figure seemed to spring up from the ground at her side, and the shriek of terror which rose to her lips was silenced by a hand clapped roughly over her mouth.
 "Milk-liver, wouldst draw the whole monkly pack howling at our heels?" and the eerie face of the witch of Eyebrowed closely into her own. "Old Gooseberry hath stoned us well to-night, though, odds-bodkins, why should I so torment my achin' bones for two young filberibbits? Well, hilt thee now! I've done all I can or will. What yet remains to do thy young heart must dare, for by Grimaldin's eyes, though I'll sport on murky nights about the graves and pluck the shrieking man-drake in the dark, I'll venture not where thou must walk to-night. The way itself is dread and then, mayhap the tortured dead lurk there, who gnawed the living flesh from off their bones whilst starving in the Oublette. None save I know it, so if thou 'scapest the gulf and ghosts, thou'lt find thee safe at last where thy monkly lover languishes."

Rohese answered her in a firm voice, "Show me but the way, name, and though I cross over dead men's bones, I'll follow it, for I fear not." And all the courage of her race was up in arms to quell her womanly fears.
 "Well spoken! Thou hast thy grand-sire's spirit, maid. I like thee well, my little wench, and dare say thou'lt find a way to draw the monk forth, look ye now!" and digging away the turf from near a boulder, the witch lifted an iron ring with her staff, and disclosed a narrow opening in the ground.
 "Wind this rope about thy waist, put this flask within thy bosom, for it will aid the monk's escape. Pass down these steps; then pause, count thy paces carefully as thou descendest, for if thou takest one-half step too much there'll be no maiden left to De Cokfeld. Count fifteen steps, then pause; press thyself close against the right hand wall ere thou takest one more, and moving slowly, pass through the darkness with great care. Best say thy prayers, for if thou movest to the left one-quarter inch thou'lt fall into a gulf none e'er hath fathomed. When thou hast at last turned corner thou'lt see, if no dread phantom rises on thy path. Move swiftly onward until a wall obstructs thee. Lift up thy arm its full length; run thy hand along its ledge, where thou'lt find a bar; slide it back, and thou canst pass into the cell where thy monk lies in the Oublette. Once thou hast got him out, and left the secret way, close and cover it securely, then close the straight to De Cokfeld; provide thyself with a chosen few and thence to thy sea-girt tower in Norfolk. There set sail for Normandy, where thy father's cousin, Edmund, dwelleth in his strong fortress at Gallion. If thou wishest not the young monk's company, send him to me at Ely, where for his mother's sake, who one time served me, I'll aid him. Hasten thee now, farewell. Be brave, for all depends on thee Prosper thy quest."

And the witch disappeared as suddenly as she had come. Left alone, Rohese did not pause, but with wild beating heart entered the opening and descended the damp, broken steps. On the last she paused, then stepped down, and counting her paces carefully reached the wall. Pressing herself close to it, she found herself on an inclined path very narrow and slippery, ever leading upward through the darkness. After some moments, she turned a corner, and reassured by the fact that she had passed the dangerous part, she found the bar in the wall, and with carefully moving its length backward, a portion of the wall slid gratefully aside, and Rohese passed into a cell dimly lit by the wan light of the early dawn coming through a grated window set high up in the wall. She was in the cell of the Oublette, and going to the centre of the room, where a low stone curving round a black well in the floor, she leaned over and called, "Jocelin, O Jocelin! Jocelin, 'tis Rohese calls thee!" Far down beneath her a thin, faint voice cried out in surprise and joy one single word—"Rohese!" and she knew the poor monk still lived in the depths of the Oublette.

CHAPTER XX.
 Rohese looked about her for an object to which to fasten her rope. The cell was entirely bare, save for a heap of fags in one corner. The window was too high and far from the pit to admit of using its bars; time was fleeting; should her escape and the attempted rescue be discovered, her punishment would be sure, and she had no doubt Jocelin's life would pay the forfeit. Rohese did not think of him now as a monk, a man, or a lover, but as a creature who, for her sake, had been condemned and left to perish by slow degrees in the Oublette. She must not waste precious time in accomplishing her purpose, she told herself feverishly, as she felt that strength and courage which had buoyed her up through her journey flitting. So, womanlike in her darkest hour of doubt, she leaned over the Oublette to encourage the man whose life and liberty depended upon her strength and determination.
 "Jocelin," she cried, "I have come to save thee!" The monk answered her but faintly, worn with torture of mind and soul, emaciated by confinement, and semi-starvation (for very meagre were the portions let down to him by his jailers); his dry tongue could scarcely articulate, and his dull brain scarcely conceive the intelligence that there was still hope for him; a forlorn hope, 'tis true, but when woman wars with unfavorable circumstances, there seems to come upon her an added sense, an instinctive perception of the thing needful. Rohese fastened her rope to the witch's wicker-covered flask, and lowering, said, "See, here is wine—drink and gain strength and courage, my poor friend."

Jocelin obeyed; Rohese heard the distant "gug-zus" of the rare Chianti, the parched monk drank and drank, as though it would never get its fill. It was but a few seconds when Jocelin spoke, in a tone very unlike his first hoarse whisper. The wine had stimulated him and he was himself again.
 "God's benison on thee!" he cried, "Take my grateful thanks for coming thus, like an angel to solace the fast hours of so tortured, lost and damned a creature. I know not how thou found'st the way, sweet, but I see in this a token of forgiveness, or thy body would have rotted, and my soul beat itself free from its wretched cage, alone and unheeded by such divine mercy and forgiveness."
 "I thank thee, Rohese, I thank thee! Fare thee well! Depart now from that dreary cell; the stones are cold unto thy tender feet; and thou, if found here, would suffer for this deed of charity. Fare thee well, light of my life. I can die now in peace. Since thou hast forgiven me much, perhaps God can also. I loved thee well, Rohese—to my undoing, but if a broken and contrite heart, and bruised, weary flesh can gain supreme forgiveness, surely my poor soul may yet attain the lowest spot in heaven, where, in gladness to see thee enter into the golden glory of the saints. Ora pro me, Rohese, farewell!"

 The voice faltered, then died away. Rohese's eyes were filled with tears; yet she dared not give away her emotion which swayed her.
 "Nay, Jocelin, not farewell, for I have with me means of thy liberty. Arise—prove thyself a man; though weary and weak, shake off this lethargy. Our Lady has answered my prayers; I was shown a secret way hither, and now in but one little moment, Jocelin, this rope—stout fastened to—some nearby thing, an by my troth, I'll straightway draw thee forth."

"Nay, lady, thy strength of body commensurate with thy wit. Stand back of wouldst pull thee into this dread place, destroying that which I hold dear above sweet heaven itself."
 Rohese was at her wit's end; well she knew that, unaided, she could not lift the weight of Jocelin's body, and if she did not find some way to raise him, and that speedily, through would goon, his straining strength would fail, and she would have to leave him to his fate. But how fasten the rope? She searched the cell in vain. Then, as she gazed with a despairing prayer upward, her eyes pierced the gloom, and she saw suspended from the intersected groins over the Oublette, a great hook (used, no doubt, in former times by those who descended into the pit to see if their victims still suffered). And how could she reach it? And if the rope were let down thence, how could the monk, weak and with untrained muscles, ever hope to climb it? Then an explanation broke from her; her woman's wit had solved the problem. Quickly she seized the sturdy faggots, and began tying them, at short distances apart, along the rope. When they were all distributed thus, and she had tested each knot, she ran to the door, she pulled it tight, and after much scrambling up the rough stone wall finally reached the ledge. Here she was many feet nearer the hook, for the ceiling was mercifully low, this being the topmost cell in the tower. After many fruitless efforts she finally succeeded in casting the noosed end of the rope over the hook, and when she had fastened it to the floor, she pulled it tight, and clapped her bruised hands in glee when it drew taut and held fast.

"Now," she cried, "now Jocelin, take courage!" and she let down this strangely improvised ladder.
 "Nay, 'tis useless," said the monk. "Depart, I beg of thee, as I have not the strength to come up, if I had the will. An outcast renegade, with a price on his head; an object of scornful pity, let me die in peace here, since thy coming hath so comforted me."
 Rohese set her teeth hard and clenched her hands. What was she to do? It was already day, as the growing brightness outside showed.
 "Jocelin," she cried, "Jocelin, wilt break my heart and desolate my life? Come to me! I am frightened in the dark and cold, and what with excitement and despair, she began to sob, crying, "Ah, thou lovest me not, and carest not if I die."

Jocelin sprang to his feet, for at that cry all the manhood in him rose. She whom he loved called him to her side. Pain racked him, and weakness oppressed him, but he called to her strongly—"Weep not, Rohese, for I come. Steady thou the rope!" and Rohese, her tears still flowing, threw all her young strength upon the rope and held it. Well for Jocelin of Brakelond, that no convent-bred maid stood there in that supreme hour. Her muscles, trained and strengthened by her hardy life at De Cokfeld, stood Rohese in good stead, and steadily she held the rope while Jocelin, slowly, painfully, with hoarse labored breath, drew himself up fagot after fagot. He was half way up when Rohese's trained ear caught the beat of a creature who, for her sake, had been condemned and left to perish by slow degrees in the Oublette. She must not waste precious time in accomplishing her purpose, she told herself feverishly, as she felt that strength and courage which had buoyed her up through her journey flitting. So, womanlike in her darkest hour of doubt, she leaned over the Oublette to encourage the man whose life and liberty depended upon her strength and determination.

"I come, beloved, I come," said Jocelin; but Rohese could tell by his voice that he grew weaker. The fact that he was in the Oublette kept him from hearing the approach. "Time, O time!" Rohese pleaded with heaven, and "Haste thee, Jocelin, oh, for Christ's sake, haste thee!"
 Now they were at the prison door; now they had paused, and she could hear the faint sound of their voices; then the jingle of keys. Her arms ached; her head reeled. It seemed as if she must loosen her hold on the rope and fall fainting into the pit. Jocelin had paused for breath.
 "I can come but slowly, Rohese," he started. "I grow fainter as I climb; it seemed to Rohese as if she had stood there for hours. "Haste," she cried mechanically, straining her ears to catch every sound. They must have the tower door opened by now! Ah, thank God, it seemed to hold; they could not open it, and tried other keys.
 "Up now, Jocelin of Brakelond, for Mary's sweet sake! For the love thou bearest me! Up, man, up!" Jocelin clambered on, too spent to answer, he was nearing the top. Rohese could hear another key inserted in the rusted lock. Two, three more faggots! How far apart they seemed to watch and clamber. Now Rohese heard the door creak on its rusty hinges; now they were on the stairs.
 "Merciful saints, give us time! Haste, O haste, my friend! Thanks to Fate, O anxious ones! It is the slow

TORTURING SCIATICA

A Severe Sufferer Cured Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Fierce darting pains—pains like red hot needles being driven through the flesh—in the thigh; perhaps down the legs to the ankles—that's sciatica. Non but the victim can realize the torture. But the sufferer need not grow discouraged, for there is a cure in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills make new, rich, red blood, which soothes and strengthens the feeble nerves and thus frees them from pain and restores the sufferer to cheerful activity. In proof we give the statement of Mr. Thos. D. Leinster, Wapella, Sask., who says: "I was attacked with sciatica which gradually grew worse until I was confined to my bed. For three months I had to be shifted and turned in my bed as I was unable to help myself. I suffered the greatest torture from the fierce, stabbing pains that accompanied every movement. I consulted several doctors and had drugs and medicines until I was nauseated, but without getting any benefit, and I began to believe I would be a continuous sufferer. Finally I was prevailed upon to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and after taking them for about six weeks I was able to get out of bed. From that on I kept steadily improving until I was free from this terrible and painful malady."
 The most stubborn cases of sciatica will yield to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills if the treatment is persisted in. These pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

feet of old Tristian who, with Richard of Hennan, climbs the winding stair. Lucky chance which made old Tristian pause for breath on the landing, despite Richard's surely "Come." Two, one fagot more. The footsteps sounded in the little entry outside.
 "Give me strength, Ah, Heaven!" cried Rohese, and as Jocelin reached wearily for the last fagot, she leaned forward, and bracing herself well against the curb, she lifted him bodily out of it, just as the monks paused at the door. As the lock turned with a rusty click, she dragged the half-conscious man across the floor, and pressing hard against the turning stone, dropped it behind her, and stood in the dark, black passage with Jocelin at her feet. Then as she drew breath, she heard the cell door open, and the loud exclamations of the entering monks.

CHAPTER XXI.

It was some moments ere Jocelin could stand, and by this time the monks within the cell, having satisfied themselves that the Oublette was empty, had departed to bear the news to the Abbot; Richard exclaiming, "The devil has spirited away his own," and Tristian following him, mumbling thankfully, "It is the holy saints who have rescued him." Wonderful to relate, the Abbot received this startling intelligence with equanimity.
 "Ye have done well to inform me so readily, my sons," he calmly replied; and they departed wondering, to retrace the tale in the chapter room. In his heart, Samson was glad of Jocelin's escape, ascribing it to some sympathetic access to the prison keys, had despised the condemned monk away. Despite his anger at the sin, the Abbot held it well for Jocelin of Brakelond's liberation, regarded the monk's indiscretion more leniently. "Truly, I rejoice," he said to himself, as he went forth to join the Abbey Advocates, whom he had assembled to discuss his plan of confining his wantonly inclined ward in the nearby priory, that she might be under the corrective influence of the Prioress Rosamund.
 "Yes, 'twas ever thus," he muttered angrily, tugging at his beard, "since the days of Eden! The woman tempted me, and I ate." By my silver cross, 'en I was deceived by the fair young wench, until she spoke out brazenly before them all, without a falter, when even my rough old cheek burned with the shame of it. "Twas as my bidding I clung, and by the saint! Hereafter no woman shall enter his abbey, be she old and ugly as sin, or young and fair as purity. I'll so order it at next chapter."
 While the Abbot went toward the audience hall, and Tristian and Richard spread the wonderful news, Jocelin and Rohese had come safely across the narrow path and emerged into the light; pausing a moment in silent horror to gaze back on such part of the perilous way as the morning light revealed. Then, they hurriedly closed the entrance, concealing it as best they might, and hastened into the copse, and so on, into the heart of the wood, toward De Cokfeld.

As Rohese's jailer did not visit the gate chamber till evening, they would have almost a day's start of the monks, and by keeping off the highway, at a safe distance in the wood, Rohese thought they might reach her castle by daybreak the next morning. (To be Continued.)

Blissful Depravity.

In a border southern town lives an elderly negro carpenter who is locally distinguished for to things—his use of large words and his amusing fear of him, who is big, impressive and domineering. In this town a trio of young professional men kept bachelor quarters together.
 Not very long ago one of the three called the darkey in to do some small repairing jobs about the apartment.
 "Bose," inquired the old man, in the midst of his work, "does you white gon'tmens live heah in total depravity of de feminine sex?"
 "We do," was the answer.
 From the bottom of his henpecked soul the old darkey fetched up a long, deep, sincere sigh.
 "Well, suh," he said, "ef I wuz ez you is, I should suttinly remain so."

Differing Forms of Speech in Great Britain and the States.

The common objects and phenomena of nature are often differently named in English and American. Such Americanisms as creek and run for small streams are practically unknown in England, and the English moor is a stranger in the United States. The Englishman is naturally but little familiar with bayou, gulch, gully, canyon, butte, divide and bluff. He knows the meaning of sound (Long Island Sound), but always uses channel in place of it.
 In the same way the American knows the meaning of English bog, but almost always uses swamp or marsh (often elided to ma'sh). Foot-hill is an Americanism; so is cold snap; so also are prairie, backwoods, flats and neck (in the sense of peninsula). The Englishman seldom if ever describes a severe storm as a hurricane, a cyclone, tornado or blizzard. He does not say that the temperature is 29 degrees or that the thermometer or the mercury is at 29 degrees, but that there are three degrees of frost. He calls ice water, iced water.—Pittsburgh Press.

TULLE DANCE FROCK.

A charming tulle dance frock is shown in tones ranging from gold to brown. This change of color develops from the top and deepens as it veils the hem. The simple necked bodice is quite transparent with surplice crepe front and back. Dainty folds of the silk net are tucked here and there, then confined at the waist line by a crushed girde of brown satin nocturne. The skirt, a fascinating series of panzer drapes, causes the satin bound edge to dip here and there.

"OLIVER TWIST."

Dickens Got His Principal Characters From Cruikshank.

The true story of the origin of "Oliver Twist" is not generally known. It is this:
 After the amazing success of the "Pickwick Papers" Dickens was thinking of following it up by a story of London life, with which he was more familiar than with English country life. Just about that time he happened to visit the studio of George Cruikshank and was shown some drawings the latter had made illustrating the career of a London thief. There was a sketch of Fagin's den, with the Artful Dodger and Master Charley Bates, pictures of Bill Sikes and his dog and Nancy Sikes and lastly, Fagin in the condemned cell.
 Dickens was much struck by the power of these character sketches, and the result was that he changed the whole plot of "Oliver Twist." Instead of taking him through spiltless adventures in the country he introduced him into the thieves' den in London, showed up their life of sin, but brought his hero through pure and undefiled.
 Thus it will be seen that George Cruikshank, not Charles Dickens, was the originator of the leading characters that appear in "Oliver Twist."—London Saturday Review.

Simplicity of Modern Home.

In place of the restless, overfurnished, overdecorated rooms that were in vogue a few decades ago, our homes are growing more gracious with the beauty of simplicity. Elimination blowing like a refreshing breeze through open doors and windows, is sweeping away that which was needless or ugly, leaving the useful, the comfortable and the beautiful behind.
 This is the general trend to-day and that permanence, simplicity and individuality are becoming more and more widely the American home-maker's idea we know practical experience. We have found that those who come to us for advice about their home problems are seeking not for the novel or the unusual or the fashionable, but for the thing that is appropriate for their special needs, that expresses their personal taste in design and color, that will bring comfort as well as beauty into the home, and, above all, that will last. They have had enough of temporary furnishings, of objects that were made to endure only as long as the fashion that deceived them. And today they are seeking wall and floor-coverings, finishes, furniture and fittings that, once installed, will become satisfying and permanent elements of the home.—Craftsman.

Their long acquaintance had ripened into love and he had proposed. "Dearie," he asked, confidentially, "when did you first learn that you loved me?" "When I found that I became very angry when anybody referred to you as a 'brainless boob,'" she answered.—New York Herald.

Vital Healing Power Fills the System And Health Returns

A crowning curative triumph in medicine is now given to the world, and all who have been sufferers from stomach ailments, indigestion and headache can be cured by a purely vegetable remedy.
 Calomel, salts and such like are no longer necessary. They are harsh and disagreeable. Science has devised something far superior, and you can go to-day with 25c to any druggist and buy a box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are considered the very quickest and safest cure for the stomach, bowels, liver and kidneys.
 Half sick men and women who scarcely know what ails them, will be given a new lease of life, with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Depressed spirits disappear, headaches are forgotten; appetite increases, blood is purified and enriched, pains at the base of the spine are cured, the nerves are toned up, ambition to work is increased, and day by day the old-time health and vigor return.
 A trial only is necessary to prove how beneficial Dr. Hamilton's Pills are to all who are weak, nervous, thin, depressed or in falling health.

FOR GERMAN GUNS.

(Philadelphia Record.)

The crowning, British atrocity has been uncovered. The attempt to kill 65,000,000 people, men, women and children, by starvation, seemed to be the utmost limit of ferocity, but it was not. It was mere trifling for the brutal British to suggest that at any moment when the Germans were tired of dying of starvation they might surrender and get a square meal, because they knew perfectly well that the Germans never surrender. This method of averting extermination might be open to other races, but it is barred to the Germans, who would have to perish to the latest woman and the most recent infant if Great Britain could make her attempted blockade complete.

Yet there is food raised in Germany. According to official German authorities there is enough for the comfortable subsistence of the entire population, so that while the British are engaged in a horrible and unprecedented measure of exterminating the German nation, they are doomed to failure because Germany produces all the food it needs. This is evidently understood by the British, who have now advanced from an attack on a nation's food supplies to an attack upon its instruments of mastication. England is keeping teeth out of Germany. Without teeth the Germans cannot eat that superabundance of food which is produced at home, and are doomed to starve to death in the midst of plenty.
 Manufacturers in Ohio packed a case of false teeth and shipped it ostensibly to a Swedish port. Evidently there was a British spy in the tooth factory, who told the British Consul in New York about it, and he refused to vise the manifests of the steamer unless several hundreds tons of cargo were removed and this case of Ohio false teeth exhumed and examined as to its good faith in pretending that it was going to stay in Sweden. The vise of the British Consul is extremely convenient to a steamer intending to pass anywhere near Great Britain on its way to German or Scandinavian ports.
 At an expense of $3,000 for demurrage and labor in shifting the cargo the box of false teeth was dug up, and the lid marked for Sweden was removed, and there was disclosed a German address. The box can't go because the steamer carrying it would be picked up by a British war vessel and gently but firmly guided into a British port. England will not allow Germans to have teeth.

Here is the hard fate forced upon Germany by her relentless enemy. Fifteen million dollars' worth of American pig had been confiscated by Great Britain in order to destroy the Germans by the slow and awful process of starvation, and the Germans cannot eat the domestic pork products because England will not permit teeth to reach Germany. Thus a new horror has been added to war.

MY DRUMMER BOY.

My Ned has gone, he's gone away, he's gone away 'til good-bye, he's killed.
 Him and his drum lies in the rain, lies in the rain where they was staid.
 Where they was staid, he was staid.
 He was my soldiers boy, my Ned, Between these breasts he'd lay his head.
 But now he's killed.
 My soldier's gone. His head lies now be-tween two naked stones.
 His drum is broke.
 There's none to mourn him in the rain, In the rain where they watch his bones.
 Which watch and creak.
 His great red hand is wasted bare, That tanned his drum, that touched my hair.
 Hark! Not a stroke.
 But what is this beside my heart, beside my heart that sounds?
 Tap, tap, tap, tap!
 Oh, what is this that beats within, like drummers beating bounds,
 Tap, tap, tap, tap!
 What wonder have I felt and heard? Is it the wing-beats of a bird?
 Tap, tap, tap, tap!
 My boy is gone, yet near my heart another boy lies now.
 Though the drum is dumb, He thumps my heart like soldiers thump.
 To say he's come and gone, A drummer boy, all gaily dressed, Will yet again be at my breast.
 Hark! There's his drum!
 She Was Frank.
 The moving picture director was having trouble in getting one of the scenes right. The girl was supposed to resist an attempt to kiss her, but the rehearsal was far from satisfactory.
 "Think, now," said the director, coaching her, "haven't you ever tried to stop a young man from kissing you?"
 "No," was the girl's frank reply.—London Answers.

BIG TREE MAIL STATION.
Renowned as the Oldest Postoffice Building in America.
The pioneers of the northwest often made use of huge trees hollowed out by fire or decay. Some of these "tree houses" they occupied as temporary residences. Others they used as shelters for stock or as primitive barns. Only one, however, ever had the distinction of being a United States postoffice. That stump is in Chillum county, in the state of Washington.
In early days the settlers were widely scattered, and it was a long journey over rough trails to the postoffice. Carriers could do no more than leave mail at some central point. The big cedar stump, twelve feet in diameter and reduced to a shell by fire, was a base from which a number of trails radiated.
By common consent it became the postoffice for a wide region. The settlers put on a roof of cedar shakes and nailed boxes around its interior, which they regarded as marked with their names. There was a larger box for the outgoing mail. There were no locks, but the mails were never tampered with.
This primitive postoffice was used for more than a year. It has been carefully preserved and is annually visited by hundreds of interested sightseers. The stump is believed to be over 2,000 years old, which clearly establishes its right to the distinction of being the oldest postoffice building in America.—Youth's Companion.

GRANDEES OF SPAIN.
Etiquette of the Hat That Differentiates the Three Ranks.
A grandee of Spain enjoys the privilege, granted him many hundreds of years ago, of remaining "covered" in the presence of his sovereign. This custom dates from the period when, according to the theory then held, the king was "the first among equals."
The ancient formula always at the coronation of the kings of old Spain was: "We, your equals, choose you to reign over us." And the king assented in this declaration of his nobles.
There was a time when all grandees of Spain wore their hats in the presence of the king, but in time the idea of caste began to prevail, even among the grandees, with the result that they were eventually divided into three classes, and these classes were distinguished by the hat etiquette.
The first class entered the royal presence covered; the second class entered uncovered, and after an advance of a few steps, put on their hats, unbidden by the king, and the third class also entered uncovered, but did not "cover" until requested to do so by the king. Then, according to the etiquette, "all were equal."
There have been grandees who were not Spaniards—notably the Duke of Wellington, upon whom the cortes conferred the honor in recognition of his services to the state.—Exchange.

One often hears the remark, "He is a good citizen." What is it that makes a good citizen? He is one who leads a respectable life, takes a pride in himself, in his home and in his town. He takes an interest in all public questions, local and otherwise. He is a good neighbor, willing to assist in any good enterprise, and is prepared to take his share of public responsibilities. He does not go about boasting, but does his duties quietly and unostentatiously, but rather thoroughly and well. He is not unkind in criticism but rather fair and charitable. He is not jealous of the prosperity of others, but likes to help others on the road to prosperity. When called upon he is willing to make sacrifices for the general good.

What will you do for these?
MAGNIFICENT soldiers and sailors from every part of the British Empire are laying down their lives for you and yours. Perhaps some of your own blood are amongst them.
An urgent appeal has gone forth from the Marquis of Lansdowne, President of the British Red Cross, for funds to provide medicines, appliances, comforts, and hospital equipment of all kinds to alleviate the sufferings from wounds and sickness of sailors and soldiers from all parts of the Empire. This appeal is endorsed by their Majesties, the King and Queen, and every British possession is setting aside, by official proclamation

"Our Day" For Sailors Oct. 21 and Soldiers Oct. 21

"We shall be truly grateful to you for assistance in relieving the sufferings of our wounded soldiers and sailors from all parts of the Dominions."
Lansdowne,
President British Red Cross Society.
"This is the first appeal of the Motherland to Canadians in this present war. It calls upon our humanity as well as our loyalty."

Lieut.-Governor of Ontario.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS
PAINTS & VARNISHES
The paint that protects the outside of a house should not be the same as the paint for a floor or a door or a wall. Different surfaces require different finishes. There should be but one thing in common—Sherwin-Williams quality—the quality that makes each paint, varnish, stain, enamel or other finish just right for its purpose.
If you know the paint and varnish you are using on your house or in your home are made by the same maker in the same sure, careful, painstaking way as the paint used on iron bridges, steel buildings, railroad cars and automobiles, we believe you will have more confidence in them.

Safety First.
It was a children's matinee of "Alice in Wonderland." Parties of small fry conveyed by guardian adults had been pouring in a steady stream down the aisles to settle in their seats with much flutter of short skirts and bobbing of heads and tossing back of curls.
One group consisted of mother and nurse, a gay little maid of eight or so, and a solemn little boy somewhat younger. Each child clutched a program, and on their faces was a look of rapt expectancy. As they were filing into their seats the little girl pulled at her mother's sleeve and said in a loud stage whisper:
"Mother, don't you think you and Marie had better sit at the two ends to keep away the germs, you know?"—New York Post.

The Czarina.
"Do try and get the empress to smile, Eulalia," said one of the grand duchesses to me at some court function.
But that was sooner said than done. There is not a trace of artificiality in the empress's character. She seemed unable to pretend she was enjoying herself when, in point of fact, she was fatigued and bored. Moving as the central figure of a splendid pageant, I think she was always wishing the ceremony to be at an end and to find herself free to be with her children again.—H. R. II. the Infanta Eulalia in Century.

The Housekeeper

Before using any tins for cooking, I always fill them with cold water, adding a handful of salt and allow them to stand several hours, then rinse well in clear, cold water, says a New York Press contributor. You will find this well worth the trouble, for nothing sticks to them.

One of the best remedies for removing the unpleasant odor from a room is to put a lump of ammonia in a common jar and pour in a few drops of any perfume on hand. The ammonia will absorb the extract. Then pour in half a teacupful or less of boiling water.

When beating butter and sugar to a cream, a perforated spoon will make the task easier. To prevent made mustard from drying and caking in the mustard pot add a little salt when making. Lace continually cleaned with gasoline or naphtha will turn yellow quickly.

Sponging with warm vinegar is said to remove the shine from blue serge. Sponge thoroughly, then lay a cloth over the serge and press with a hot iron.

A pinch of gum tragacanth in store backing will brighten the polish. To clean a sink without injuring the hands, put a lump of washing soda in the sink and let the hot water run upon it till melted. A little vinegar will take the tarnish off the range trimmings.

An Appeal on Behalf of the National Canadian Patriotic Fund.

We have now entered upon the second year of the war, and the end seems as far off as ever. No one imagined a year ago that by September of 1915, Canada would have sent across the Atlantic nearly one hundred thousand men, with as many more to follow if necessary. This magnificent enlistment, while primarily due to the loyalty of our people, has been, in a large measure, made possible by the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

This greatest of all the national benefactions is now assisting twenty thousand families of men who have enlisted for overseas service. These men have gone forward with the full assurance that the people of Canada will see to it that during their absence, their wives, widowed mothers and little children shall be maintained in comfort. We hear that the drain upon the fund is assuming large proportions, that the reserves are being materially decreased, and that the National Executive Committee now finds it necessary to make a further appeal to the Canadian public.

There are many funds, most of them worthy, but of them all the Patriotic Fund is the one we cannot allow to fall. It is the duty of the Government to arm, equip and maintain the troops. Not a dollar do the Federal authorities give to the Patriotic Fund. This work depends solely on the patriotism and generosity of our own people. Thousands of brave men are fighting our battles, believing that we meant what we said when we told them that we would care for the wife and children. It would be to our everlasting disgrace if our pledge were broken.

The national organization, with headquarters at Ottawa and branches or affiliated associations in every part of the Dominion, is worthy of our most generous support in the tremendous and ever-growing task that it has undertaken. Ottawa, Sept. 1st, 1915.

Grocers as Fighting Men.

In olden times in England the grocers made a useful part in national defence. The Grocers' company was commanded in 1557 to furnish six hundred men for the resistance of the English against the Spanish Armada. Further demands of the same kind were satisfied in successive years, and in 1588 the company supplied 500 men to resist the Spanish Armada. Authority was granted to press men into this service, and apprentices and journeymen were called upon to leave the counter for the battlefield. Sir John Phillipot, an early master of the Grocers' company, cleared the North sea of a horde of Scottish pirates by means of a fleet equipped entirely at his own cost.—London Chronicle.

How Bookworms Are Tracked.

To guard the million books in the New York public library against the ravages of bookworms and other insects which feed upon the paper, the glue on the backs, and the cloth and leather bindings, an constant care is exercised, and a keen watch kept for any evidence of their activities. One woman is assigned exclusively to this work. When treating the books she wears a large apron which completely covers her gown. A cheesecloth veil protects her face against the germs which lurk in the dusty documents, and even this air she breathes is screened against contagion. Close doors and books that have been returned from infested areas are fumigated before being restored to circulation.—Exchange.

Everglass Insurance.

At the club I accidentally knocked off a man's eyeglasses, which splintered on falling. The man replied to my apologies, "Never mind, old chap, they're insured." He gets a new pair for nothing and his policy costs him 50 cents a year. If it is possible to insure against twins and triplets, potatoes, crops and the loss of one's eyes, why not against the smashing of spectacles and eyeglasses?—London Mirror.

THE PHONE IN WAR.

Contest, Without It, Impossible as Conducted at Present.

If the telephone were not a part of the army equipment to-day the war simply could not be conducted at all along the present lines. The war thus far has been an artillery duel. Without the telephone the big guns would be useless for the objective is rarely, if ever, in sight of the battery.

The gunners train their guns on the target by laying them at a fixed angle with some definite visible point. The captain goes to a place from which he can see the enemy, and has a telephone line run out to him from the battery, watching the fall of the shells he telephones in the necessary corrections.

In the German artillery trenches orders and instructions are sent almost exclusively by telephone, the soldier attending it lying face downward and calling out instructions for firing, giving the range and the distance.

The perfection which has been attained in means of communication is a factor of incalculable value. For instance, the possibility of such a departure from the front as that of General St. John French recently would have been unthinkable in other days.

To-day, however, General French can return to England, confer with Lord Kitchener and Premier Asquith, attend councils before the king, and in the meantime hold hourly conferences over the telephone with Sir Archibald Murray at the front in France or Belgium.

A direct telephone line to the base headquarters at Saint Omar, France, near Hyde Park, London, insured General French being in as close touch with conditions at the front during his three-day visit to England as if he were present at headquarters.

Not the least valuable phase of telephone usefulness, though seemingly a very minor one, is its ability to supply entertainment to the entrenched armies.

A really grave hardship of war is the entire lack of diversion suffered by the men at the front, and the strain of remaining long in the trenches without any amusement has frequently proved extremely serious.

By means of the telephone however a condition, for it has been found that soldiers in the front trenches can listen to gramophone concerts being enjoyed by men in camp eight miles in the rear.

The report does not specify how widely this means of diversion has been employed so far, but limited as its application must of necessity be at present, it is undoubtedly of very definite value.

In obtaining information regarding the movements of the enemy the telephone is of the greatest significance, and the multitude of adaptations and skillful manoeuvres to transmit information by telephone unknown to the enemy are practically unlimited.

Examples are manifold, but one instance warrants especial mention. One day during a change in position the Russian troops in hundreds passed by a man in soldier's uniform lying in a ditch, whom he complained of rheumatism, but refused to get up.

Finally, a Cossack patrol came along and one of the Cossacks, suspecting that the man might be a spy, struck him with a whip. At this he leaped to his feet, revealing a telephone, over which he had been telling the Germans of everything that had passed along the road.—Tit-Bits.

Out of the Mouths of Babes.

Little Fred—Mamma, do I get another piece of pie?
Mamma—Why do you ask, dear?
Little Fred—Cause if I don't I'll eat this piece real slow.

Eddie (aged 4)—What are the little lights in the sky?

Eddie—What are stars?

"Cause he don't know things," answered Johnny. "I had to take his candy and show him how to eat it."

Force of Drops of Water.

It seems almost incredible that so small a thing as a drop of rain should injure the propeller of an aeroplane, but such is the case. At so great a speed does the propeller revolve—1,200 revolutions a minute as a matter of fact—that a rain drop hits it with such tremendous force as to chip a piece of the wood away. Some idea of the hardships entailed by flying through the rain at sixty miles an hour may be gathered from the fact that an aviator who recently went through such an experience alighted with the edge of his propeller fretted as though it had been gnawed by rats. The rain drops had chipped pieces out of the blades and also bruised the aviator's face, owing to the force with which they hit against his flesh.—London Spectator.

TWO KINDS OF TYPHOID

Both Are Dangerous Although the Effect is Different.

People differ in the way they have diseases as much as in the way they do things. For instance, some people have typhoid fever and go to bed with it. Others have typhoid fever and walk walking proud. We say they have walking typhoid.

The strange part about it is that the typhoid bacillus in these two cases of individuals suffering with the disease, may be the same or different, just as poisonous, just as active in growth, just as prompt in getting into the blood. But the effect is different.

Perhaps it may be a surprise to some people to know that it is just as dangerous to have a case of walking typhoid around the milk house as it would be if the patient were seriously ill.

Possibly some people will wonder how they are to tell when a person really has typhoid if he can walk around and still have a serious case. That's where the skill of diagnosing comes in. Most cities have laboratories now where tests can be made free of charge.

These include the blood tests and especially the Widal tests and the bacteriological blood examination. The ordinary test only requires a drop of dried blood in a clean piece of glass.

Better Than Spanking

Spanking does not cure children of bed-wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this. There is a constitutional cause for it. W. S. Windsor, Ont., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instructions. Send no money but write her to-day if your child wets the bed. The chance are it will help it. This treatment also cures adult bed-wetting. People troubled with uric acid difficulties by day or night.

NAMES OF OUR EARTH.

It Was Called Ge by the Greeks and Terra by the Latins.

Answering the question, "Who named our planet the earth?" Why could it not have had a romantic and beautiful name such as Asromonians have given to the planets Jupiter, Venus, Mars or Neptune? Our planet alone, has the utilitarian, but not graceful name the earth. Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

The good Anglo-Saxon folk gave the name Ge to this (our) world, and the Greek divided it into two words to earth. But it is this Ge given to it by the Greeks, and Terra by the Latins? Ge is indeed common language, but Terra is highly romantic.

Classic mythology tells that Terra was one of the most ancient deities and wife of Uranus and mother of Oceanus, the Titans, Cyclopes, Giants, Thera, Rhea, Themis, Phoebe, Tethys and Mnemosyne. And she is the same deity as Tellus. But Tellus was the most ancient goddess after Cybele, in later mythic ages she was called by the exceedingly romantic names Cybele, Rhea, Vesta, Ceres, Thetis, Bona, Prosperina and others. And when passed under the euphonious titles she episodes. At times she got into romantic difficulties, viz. circulating around with other goddesses and gods.

RENOVATING CARPETS

Floor Coverings Brightened Up by Dyeing or Washing Them.

Perhaps you were planning to buy new rugs or to re-carpet the floors—and perhaps you have changed your mind about it and decided that the old rugs and carpets will do until the cost of living isn't quite so high.

But this won't be so bad after all if you invest in a little dye, which fortunately is not expensive and brightens up the faded floor coverings. To do this successfully you must first scrub the rug and then rinse it. Mix the dye and keep it well stirred in the vessel, so that the color will be even. While the rug is still wet, apply the dye with a clean whitewash brush. It colors evenly this way. If the rug is dyed on the floor, place a few new newspapers under it to absorb the moisture. It should be thrown double over a line to dry, or else allowed to dry on the floor. It will shrink slightly.

For a cotton rug which turns a dirty white use such colors as dark green, mahogany, red and delft blue. Jute rugs may be dyed in a similar manner, but the dye in this case should be applied to the rug. If a carpet is almost all wool, the color may be brightened or wholly restored if washed with a rail of water containing three gills of ox gall. If necessary to use fresh ox gall, procure it at the butcher's, cut it into small pieces, cover with warm water and allow it to soak for several hours. Dilute the liquid with a taster and should be rinsed off with clear water.

If the tan shoes have been spotted with grease, rub the places with a piece of cotton. When dry, polish with the usual wax.

Old Saws Autoized.

The auto's the thing. A tire saved is a tire bought. Gasoline makes the auto go. Oil in time keeps the engine fine. While there's gasoline there's hope. Be careful and you'll never be pinched. It's a long stretch of sand that has no end. An autoist is judged by the company he rides. Into each machine some accidents must befall. All the world loves the owner of a new model. A four-cylinder car may look at a twelve.

"Is a wise autoist that knows his own machine. A reckless driver and his machine are often parted. Trust in the Lord, but keep your tail light burning. A car in the garage is worth two on the sales floor. You never miss the gasoline till the tank runs dry. He who rides in the rear seat cannot choose the way. Out of the fullness of his gasoline tank the good tourist lentheth. In the spring a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of a new model. Let thy muffler remain closed, for Speed and the world speeds with alone. All machines that glisten are not gold, but if they glisten you may be sure they do not need painting. Seest thou a man diligent in his driving he shall get to the next town, or shall not tarry long on the road.—Indianapolis News.

Magazines On Warships.

If there is one danger that sailors dread more than any other it is an explosion in a powder magazine. To prevent such an occurrence a device for flooding that compartment in the most possible time is fitted to most of the big battleships. A pipe below the surface connects the magazine with the sea. This pipe is closed by two taps, which are connected with the deck. In case of danger it is only the work of a minute to open the taps, let the sea rush in through the pipes and flood the magazine. The water is afterward drained off by means of a gutter.—London Mail.

Breaking It Gently.

Why don't you use that instead of a pencil?" "Well, you see," Benjamin explained, "I want a pencil to write and ask the editor how to remove ink stains from a carpet."

Mimicking Death.

Sarah Bernhardt's fondness for playing death scenes (you remember her habit of sleeping in a coffin) made her an object of terror to the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid. When the great actress visited Constantinople years ago Abdul refused absolutely to see her or witness her playing, declaring that he had no wish to come in contact with a woman who could mimic death to such perfection.—London Chronicle.

BANANAS.

Not Only Good to the Taste, But Notably Nutritious.

Every day of the year and three times a day comes the demand of the family to the housewife for food. How to satisfy the demand is the ever-present problem. Food values are better understood to-day than ever, and we learn with new interest of the food values of the familiar foods. Many of them, readily obtained, are cheap and plentiful. In this class we find the banana. On the authority of the U. S. Government chart prepared by O. F. Langworthy it may be said that the banana contains, besides other constituents, protein 1.3, carbohydrates 22—two nutrient necessities for the building of the body.

This knowledge makes us all the more willing to use the banana; we know we combine nutrition with pleasure. The banana is so popular, so readily carried that the picnic basket does not seem complete without it.

In eating a banana tear off the outer skin and with a blunt knife gently scrape the outside. This removes a pithy covering that some people find hard to digest. A dainty way to eat a banana: Take one portion of the outside skin and fold around the banana. This will save the fingers from becoming sticky.

How to Cook Roman Meal Porridge. Invariably use double boiler, or set boiler in basin of boiling water. Have water boiling in both vessels, that in one cup Roman Meal to each two cups water. Cover, set in outer vessel, and never stir again, even while serving. For early breakfast cook at evening meal and warm in morning, using a little less Roman Meal. It's a dark nut-brown, granular, rich porridge. It nourishes better than meat, prevents indigestion and positively relieves constipation or "money back." Ask your doctor. All grocers. 10 cents and 25 cents.

Prolific Fungi.

An average sized mushroom will produce as many as 1,800,000,000 spores, and a common toadstool shagging cap has been shown to produce as many as 5,000,000,000. Fortunately for the other inhabitants of the world, however, the probability of successful growth of any given spore is somewhat remote.

The mushroom or toadstool plant is formed by fine filamentous threads which ramify beneath the soil, and if we assume that a successful plant of the mushroom or shaggy caps produces as many as ten mushrooms or toadstools we find that the chance against successful growth to maturity is respectively about 18,000,000,000 and 50,000,000,000 to one in the two species mentioned. Even more prolific than the mushrooms and toadstools is the giant puffball, a large specimen of which has been known to produce as many as 7,000,000,000,000 spores.—London Knowledge.

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHY

A photographic competition recently organized by the C. P. R. is highly commended by the Canadian film and camera industries. Photographic dealers say that they have not been so busy for a long time, and bless the thought of the C. P. R. Hundreds of amateur photographers will from this on be enlisted in the cause, which is that of obtaining pictures along the line of the whole system—pictures snapped unprepared and spontaneously, and which are not being told that the formal pose. The C. P. R. has its own photographers, of course, with Mr. Bennett in charge, but these competitive pictures will, it is anticipated, produce unstudied scenes at the summer resorts, on the lakes amid the hills and valleys—scenes endowed with the brightness of holiday life. These, when the awards are made, will be used in the folder literature of the company, which depicts bright and unstudied glimpses of the human side of things throughout the country in the warm summer days, when so many of our people are in the country.

The Manufacture of Plate Glass.

The casting table of a plate glass factory is about twenty feet long, fifteen feet wide and six inches thick. Strips of iron on each side afford a bearing for the rollers and determine the thickness of the plate to be cast. The molten glass is poured on the table, and the roller, passing from end to end, spreads the glass to a uniform thickness. The glass after the annealing oven, where it remains several days. When taken out it is very rough and uneven and in that state is used for skylights and other purposes where strength is desired rather than transparency. The greater part of the glass, however, is ground, smoothed and polished.

Thirteen-Hour Fight With Salmon

Mr. G. Gladwin-Erington landed a 42-pound salmon from the River Awe, Argyllshire, with a light rod after plying it for over thirteen hours—from 11.45 a.m. on one day to 12.50 the next morning. For a great part of the fight, says Mr. Gladwin-Erington, the fish suik-ed and remained stationary. "A boat was brought down from Loch Awe on a car at 10 p.m., which caused him to move at last. Finally, by aid of a strong acetylene motor-car lamp, he was induced to come near the bank and was gaffed in 3 feet of water by my gillie."

CHAIRS.

How They Have Been Evolved Through the Ages.

It seems odd to contemplate that with the multitude of chairs to be found in every home these days, once upon a time there were no chairs as we know them in any home. In those days benches answered the purpose now served by chairs, and when a family drew up to the table for its meals in the middle ages they sat on long benches, which had no support for the backs, instead of chairs.

From long ago there were heavy thrones on which the rulers sat, but these thrones chairs were so heavy that they could not be easily moved. Later the benches were given a back, and still later the chairs as we know them to-day were evolved. It was not until 1600, in the time of Charles I., that the average Englishman knew of chairs or had them in his house, according to those who have made a study of furniture. The first English chairs were imported from France, and the native cabinetmakers and carpenters made chairs in imitation of these.

Found the Missing Brooch.

Detective work, following faint clues, dark hints and the like is not the only method by which robberies may be solved. The wife of a prominent officer in the marine corps, who resides in Baltimore and has a country place in Virginia, is authority for the statement, and offers the following little story in proof of her contention. It seems that while she was at her Virginia place, she one day missed from her jewel box a valuable diamond brooch. She had the servants searched high and low for the trinket, but it could not be found. All of her servants except one had been with her for years, and were absolutely trusted by her. The one exception, a mulatto girl, persistently urged upon her mistress the possibility of the brooch being at her Baltimore town house. "But, my dear, I don't know of it," she said. "I know that it ain't around here," persisted the girl.

Whatever suspicions the mistress may have had she kept to herself. After a while she returned to Baltimore, bringing her servants with her. "Is this your brooch, Miss Alice?" asked the mulatto girl after a search of the house had been concluded. Her mistress shook her head. "No," said she, "I have not found it, Mary, but," lowering her voice and speaking impressively, "I have no cause to worry."

"No, you?" enquired the girl. "No," continued her mistress. "You see, I went to a fortune teller to-day. She told me that whoever had the diamond would die shortly, and that the brooch would be found among their effects. I only have to wait for their death to know who took my brooch."

"Mah gracious!" breathed the mulatto girl. "Did dat voodoo woman say dat?" "She did," replied her mistress, solemnly. The mulatto girl precipitately departed and, strangely enough, her mistress found the missing brooch that very night pinned to one of her gowns.

RUSS FORGES HAMMER HARD AT HUN LINES

Berlin Admits That Car's Offensive in the North is a Serious Matter.

CAN'T SPARE MEN

To Send Through Hungary Against Serbia, as Report Has Them Doing.

London Cable.—Military observers viewing the situation on the Austro-Hungarian front are inclined to receive with reserve the reports that an Austro-Hungarian force, estimated as high as half a million men, with 2,000 guns, is being sent down through Hungary against Serbia.

These observers say that the Germans are not in a position to withdraw many troops from the Russian side, and the armies of Emperor Nicholas are making a desperate effort to assume the initiative in the fighting.

THE RUSSIAN OFFENSIVE.

Official despatches from the German capital continue to emphasize the importance of the Russian offensive in the north, which is declared by Berlin headquarters to be a movement of great strength, backed up by ample munitions.

Berlin announces also that the Russians have assumed the offensive along the Bessarabian frontier, north-east of Czernowitz, where so much fighting took place either in the war.

Grand Duke Nicholas, who was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Russian forces on the Caucasian front when Emperor Nicholas assumed supreme command of the armies of Russia, arrived to-day at Tiflis.

REDUCED TO PASSIVITY.

The Times' correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs: "Generally speaking, the Russian offensive between the Lakes of Drisviaty and Narotch and the villages of the initiative from the enemy and reduced him to passivity.

The stubborn defence of Dvinsk astonished the Germans. Prisoners say that they expected that the capture of Novo Georgievsk, Grodno and Brest-Litovsk would be difficult and costly, but that they never anticipated the sacrifice hitherto vainly offered for Dvinsk, which has been more costly than that offered for any of the others.

RUSSIAN REPORT

Petrograd Cable.—The following official communication was issued from the headquarters in the Caucasus region: "In the Jamboussou region the usual Russian became indefatigable, southwest of Jamboussou the Germans bombarded the neighbourhood of Bargaou. In the region of Dvinsk the artillery duel has been incessant.

In the southern region of the Pripiet River there is no change. On the estuary of Stokhol, the enemy once more sought to capture the village under cover of a concentrated fire by his artillery. We repulsed this attack. Southwest of Clartorisk the enemy was thrown back toward the village of Novo Zelki, leaving in our hands about 150 prisoners and one quick-firer.

"On the Caucasus front, in the coastal regions of the Black Sea, southwest of Khopa, there has been nothing but advance guard actions. Southeast of Lake Fortum, on the front between the Villages of Keghyk and Ardost, northwest of Khorossan, on October 4th, the Turks, profiting by darkness, attempted to advance, but were stopped by our fire. South of Khorossan, near the Village of Kuria, there have been brushes with a Turkish advance guard."

THE GERMAN REPORT.

Berlin Cable.—"Eastern theatre of war: Army group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg: The enemy yesterday again began attacks of great importance between Lake Drisviata and Krewao. The attacks were either repulsed or broke down under our fire. The enemy obtained initial successes at Kosjany and south of Lake Wieszlaw, but by counter-attacks the situation was again restored to our favor with heavy losses to the enemy. The situation is unchanged with the army groups of Prince Leopold of Bavaria, and Field Marshal von Mackensen. Army group of General von Linsingen: Engagements developed in the district west of Czartorysk.

Feeling References to Directors Who Have Passed.

Montreal, Que., Report.—At the meeting of the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway to-day the report of the directors was unanimously adopted. Richard B. Angus, Sir Edmund B. Osler, Sir Herbert S. Holt and Colonel Frank S. Meighen were elected directors.

It is to be hoped that in anticipation of the close of the war and the new conditions that will come with an organization will be perfected for unity of action by Dominion and Provincial governments and the important business interests of the country. We likewise made progress in the environs of the Navarin farm. The number of prisoners taken exceeded 1,000.

"On the rest of the front only artillery engagements are reported. These were especially intense in Artois, in the region of the Givenchy wood and Hill No. 119; in the Argonne, to the north of La Harazee to Le Pretre wood; in Lorraine, near Leintrey, Reillon and Badonviller, as well as in the Vosges, on the Metzeral ridge."

BELGIAN REPORT.

Paris Cable.—The Belgian official communication reads as follows: "The enemy's activity before our front. It has bombarded the region of Furnes, Pervyse and Oostkerke. A struggle with bombs has occurred in the region to the north of Steenstrate and to the north of Dixmude. Our artillery dispersed military pioneers at several points."

GERMAN REPORT.

Berlin Cable.—The following statement was issued by army headquarters to-day: "Western theatre of war: A French hand grenade attack on the hill north of Neuville was repulsed. "In the Champagne the French yesterday attempted to resume the offensive on the front of their former attack, with heavy artillery fire, which increased to the greatest intensity during the afternoon. The enemy hoped to prepare our positions for storming in a general attack he intended making. Simultaneously he was getting his troops ready for the attack along the entire front. Under our artillery fire, directed on the enemy's points of departure, the French were only successful at certain points in bringing their troops forward for the attack. Wherever they did advance they were driven back again with heavy losses. Repeated rushes on the high road from Compe-Py to Souain broke down completely. North and northwest of Ville-sur-Tourbe the attacks were entirely unsuccessful."

CRUDE OIL ADVANCES.

Pittsburg, Pa., Report.—Another advance in the price of crude oil was announced at the opening of the market to-day. Five cents was added to Pennsylvania Crude, bringing it to $17.75.

This latest advance adds 35 cents a barrel to the price of Pennsylvania, over the quotation of three months ago.

HEAVY GAINS BY THE FRENCH IN CHAMPAGNE

Taking of Village of Tahure Badly Weakens the German Second Defences.

MORHAUT WARNS

Military Critic of Berlin Takes the French Offensive Very Seriously Now.

Paris Cable.—Further important gains by the French troops in Champagne are announced in the official communique issued this evening by the War Office. The village of Tahure, less than two miles south of the railway serving the German trenches along the district between Rheims and the Argonne, has been taken by assault, and the victorious French infantry pushed forward and reached the heights north of the village. These heights form a part of the German second line.

As in the case of the previous great success in this part of the front victory followed an incessant bombardment of the German trenches, French bayonets completing the task. More than 1,000 prisoners were taken by the French in these operations, which included progress in the environs of the Navarin farm. On the rest of the front intense artillery engagements are in progress, especially in Artois and the Argonne and in Vosges.

WARNED BY ITS CRITIC.

A Rotterdam despatch says: "Although the majority of the German papers shriek loudly about the allies' offensive being smashed, Major Morhaht, quite the coolest of the German military critics, sounds a strong warning in the Berliner Tageblatt, clearly suggesting that Germany has as yet experienced only the beginning of things and much more serious attacks may be expected on a much more extended scale. He says: 'What has been the result of the Franco-British offensive which has been going on eleven days? Our higher command remarks that the offensive is a failure. This judgment will satisfy wide circles in Germany who have not concealed from themselves the seriousness of the western situation. We must, however, add to this declaration that the great struggle in the west has not yet found its conclusion. It is a question of several armies on the French side and even if one of them can be booked as lost already France will not leave the enormous supplies of ammunition, supplemented by what still comes from neutral America, and the masses of heavy artillery will, without doubt, lead the French to new action for which she has made enormous preparations.'"

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable.—The following official communication was issued by the War Office to-night: "Our action in Champagne obtained to-day new results. Our infantry troops, after strong artillery preparation, captured by assault the village of Tahure, and reached the summit of the small hill of the same name constituting a point of support in the second line of the enemy resistance. We likewise made progress in the environs of the Navarin farm. The number of prisoners taken exceeded 1,000.

"On the rest of the front only artillery engagements are reported. These were especially intense in Artois, in the region of the Givenchy wood and Hill No. 119; in the Argonne, to the north of La Harazee to Le Pretre wood; in Lorraine, near Leintrey, Reillon and Badonviller, as well as in the Vosges, on the Metzeral ridge."

GOETHALS STAYS

Panama Canal Builder Remains at Post as Zone Governor.

Panama Report.—Major-General W. Goethals has been reappointed as Governor of the Panama Canal Zone.

This fact was announced by General Goethals last night, on his arrival on board the steamer Cristobal from New York, after a vacation spent in the United States. His action was taken, he said, in view of the recent closed traffic through the canal.

General Goethals said he would remain in Panama indefinitely until such time as the condition of the canal would permit of his departure.

KISLE FREED

No Murder Case Made Out Against Foreigner.

Windsor, Ont., Report.—Lack of sufficient evidence against Michael Kislo, the foreigner indicted for the murder of Felix Maline, which occurred in Ford, Ont., on the morning of June 1st last, resulted in the case being taken out of the hands of the jury by Mr. Justice Middleton to-day. When the prosecution rested its case, the court announced that the testimony was insufficient to put Kislo upon his defence, and he was ordered discharged. Kislo was not released, however, but was immediately rearrested on a second warrant, charging him with theft. He was sentenced to a month's imprisonment, the leniency of the sentence being in part due to representations of counsel, who called the attention of the court to the fact that Kislo had already served four months in jail waiting trial. At the expiration of his sentence, it is probable Kislo will be deported to the United States.

WARNED AGAIN

License Board's Policy On Selling After Hours.

Toronto Des.—The three Catharines hotel keepers who on Monday admitted having broken the law by selling to boarders outside legal hours have escaped with a warning from the License Board that will discourage any further transgressions. Incidentally, the same warning will be given serious consideration by every hotelman in the province who is prudent and not anxious to get suddenly out of the hotel business.

In "suspending sentence" upon the proprietors of the St. Catharines, Ellis, and International Hotels, Chairman Flavell announced that henceforth the hotel keeper who broke the law would be dealt with not in court, where a fine might be imposed, but by the board itself, in drawing attention to the provision in the Act of last session giving the board power to cancel or suspend any license, the chairman says: "This provision will not be allowed to become a dead letter, which all persons interested had better bear in mind before violating the law."

The chairman, in announcing that the St. Catharines men would escape with a warning stated that this action was due partly to the fact that they had admitted the charges, and thus saved the expense of calling witnesses and holding an investigation, and also to the fact that the board's policy in respect to infractions of the law was not generally known.

WILSON TO WED

U. S. President Will Marry Mrs. Norman Galt.

Washington Report.—President Wilson's engagement to Mrs. Norman Galt, of Washington, was announced at the White House to-night. The information was given out as follows: "The announcement was made to-day of the engagement of Mrs. Norman Galt, of this city, and President Woodrow Wilson.

The announcement that the President is to marry was a great surprise to most people in Washington. The engagement has been kept a secret within the White House circle, and few even of the President's most trusted advisers believed the marriage would take place for many months. Mrs. Galt is a beautiful woman of a distinct brunette type, the widow of Norman Galt, who was part owner of a large jewelry store here, and who died some years ago. Mrs. Galt now owns this store, which is run for her by her two brothers. Mrs. Galt is about 40 years old, and comes from Virginia, the President's home state.

DEMAND ORDERS FOR MUNITIONS

Canadian Firms Complain That They Are Getting None.

While U. S. Plants Are All Very Busy.

London Cable.—Complaints from large manufacturing firms in Ontario and New Brunswick are reaching the respective Agents-General of those provinces regarding failure to secure orders for munitions. One manufacturer in Toronto states that he is able to supply high explosive shells, yet he has had no order since July, and says that if this continues Canada will be filled with men tramping the streets. He feels that there is a link missing between Canada and Britain, while the United States is fattening at the expense of the Dominion.

At an informal conference of the provincial agents yesterday, the question of their status was discussed, the consensus of opinion being strongly in favor of their respective Governments allowing them power to conduct certain trade negotiations for their provinces. The case was cited of the efforts made by the Nova Scotia Government to secure coal contracts from the Admiralty, in which the negotiations had been transferred from the hands of Agent-General Howard to those of the High Commissioner for Canada, Mr. Howard, while acknowledging the interest displayed by Sir George Perley, thought that the refusal of the Admiralty might have been met effectively by direct representations from one of our duly accredited agents.

Owing to Mr. Howard's insistence, the matter is being reviewed with the Admiralty.

Agent-General Reid of Ontario, asserted that he knew of firms ready to fill war and other orders in England, but no other Canadian official in London knew of them or give any information concerning them.

Blown-Up Powder Plant Was Shipping to Allies.

Emporium, Pa., Report.—Four men were instantly killed, another probably fatally hurt, and six seriously injured in the explosion at the plant of the Aetna Explosive Company here last night. A large quantity of smokeless powder, prepared for shipment to-day to the allies, exploded from some yet undetermined cause, blew the two-story structure to atoms, and shook the surrounding country for miles around. The mill had been closely guarded day and night, and officials informed expressed the opinion that the explosion was accidental. President P. A. Mosher, of the company, arrived here to-day on a special train from New York, and conferred with the company officials in an effort to ascertain the cause of the explosion. Officials to-day stated that the property loss was $215,000.

FATAL BLOW-UP

Compressed Air Tank in Toronto Workshop Kills Man.

Toronto Report.—One man was killed and another injured yesterday morning when a tank of compressed air exploded in the workshop of the Canadian Ornamental Iron Company, 88 River street. The dead man, William Taylor, 113 Hunter street, was hurled through the roof of the shop by the force of the explosion and fell crashing back into the wreckage of the building. His body was fearfully mangled and death was almost instantaneous.

When the explosion occurred Taylor and Mark Smith, 370 Wilton avenue, who were blacksmiths, were working near the tank. Smith was blown to one side, between the forge and the wall, and was burned and injured in the arm. He was taken to his home, and while his injuries are painful they are not considered serious.

The tank was blown through the roof and fell on another part of the shop, almost completely wrecking the place. A small fire broke out, but it was extinguished before the fire wagons arrived. The force of the explosion was so great that numerous windows in the neighborhood were shattered. The managers of the company are unable to give any reason for the cause of the explosion.
