A Great Event

In one life the discovery of a remedy for one's long-standing malady. The patient of despondence in your blood. You invited it from your ancestors. Will you transmit it to your offspring? In the great majority of cases, both Consumption and Catarrh originate in Florida. It is supposed to be the primary source of many other derangements of the body. Begin at once to cleanse your blood with the standard alternative.

Dublin Letter.

We are excited fully in a former letter in the center view of the future of Trinity College, now the old building on the "Green." It occupies the site of a great religious establishment founded in 1146 by the King of Leinster, and supported by Henry VIII. The buildings and lands were presented to the corporation of Dublin, and later in the reign of Elizabeth allotted for the founding of a university. The college dates from 1592. Of course not all the buildings now within the college grounds were erected at that early time.

Like many other famous seats of learning, Trinity, in its beginning, was poor enough, and at one time the institution seemed likely to collapse for want of funds. "But as I wish 'rebolutions' were suppressed," says a local writer, "and Irish chief, being slain or banished, and Irish lands confiscated to the crown, fresh grants of property were made for the support of Trinity College, and in the course of time it became a wealthy institution." In its character in its functions the college was for many years as much a hostile garrison in Ireland as any military barracks in the country. In other words, it was simply an instrument for the extinction of the religion, and the destruction of the nationality of the Irish people. There is no need to recount here the penal prescriptions which operated for so long a time against the Catholic people of Ireland in respect of education. Education was forbidden to them by law under the heaviest penalties; it was illegal for them to fly even to foreign countries for that system of education. The priest, was an outlaw and a felon; there was to be no education in Ireland but English Protestant education; and at the head and front of that system were Trinity College. Year after year there went out from its walls scores of educated men to take hold of every position of power and emolument in this country, while for nine-tenths of the race, the masses of the people, were degraded, and degraded, there remained scarcely any other occupation than that of hewers of wood and drawers of water. The settled policy of their rulers seems to have been to keep the masses to the level of brutes, in order the more easily to retain them in slavery. But as time went on, a more liberal sentiment sprang up, even in Trinity College, and many of their within it men of wiser minds and more generous instincts, who procured such a reform in its statutes as admitted Catholics to a certain extent in its halls. This liberalization was not without its advantages, for the institution afforded, in fact, it is to the credit of Trinity that it took this step long before either of the English or the Scotch universities had minds to set with liberality. Later on, further relaxations were made, until soon after the passing of Mr. Gladstone's Irish church disestablishment act the college had received of all that remained of its exclusively Protestant constitution, and remodelled its laws upon a purely secular basis.

We have said that Trinity was designed as an instrument for the maintenance of an alien ascendancy in Ireland, but that more generous sentiments made their way into it. The pride of race and of national blood took a firm hold there, a feeling which grew and strengthened until, as time went on, and the parliament and people of Ireland began to think of casting off, as we described in our last letter, the fetters with which they were bound, the men of Trinity College, Grattan and Flood, Plunket and Curran, were the leaders of the movement, and carried on the struggle with a triumphant issue. The walls of the Dining Hall of the college are covered with the portraits of the great men of that day. Many of the leaders of the insurrection of 1798, and of the men of Ireland who gave to England; the poets Moore and Goldsmith, all these were Trinity College men. So, too, were several of the leaders of the movement, Thomas Davis, John Mitchell and John Martin, and later still, Mr. Isaac Butt, the first leader of the present Home Rule movement.

The college and its grounds will well repay a visit. On either side of the entrance from College Green to the college is the statue of Edmund Burke and Goldsmith. Under the porch a door on the right gives entrance to the College Museum, in which are many antiquities and curiosities. Passing through the porch we enter Parliament Square, so called in memory of the generous aid given by the Irish parliament, for the erection of its buildings. On the right is the Examination Hall, on the left is the Chapel and the Dining Hall. Midway between the buildings stands the handsome Ball Tower, erected by Archbishop Boreford, one of a family of churchmen, who holding some of the most lucrative positions in the establishment, obtained, within a brief period of time, out of the funds of that institution, very nearly a million of money. Further on is the College Library, a fine range of buildings, containing about 300,000 volumes, and including among its treasures "The Book of Kells," "The Book of Dimma," "The Book of Armagh," "The Liber Hymnorum," and other ancient Celtic manuscripts. Further on, still, we come to the Geological Museum, a new and handsome structure, and turning to the right we see the College Park, or rather a succession of small parks, extending over a space of thirteen acres and a half. The grounds are laid out in inviting walks, in tennis courts, and cricket ovals. To the stranger within the gates of Trinity, these peaceful, sunshiny groves, which are completely hidden from first view, break when he comes upon them, like the realization of some soothing dream of Arabian rest and of student leisure.

Not far from the City Hall we came upon a place of rather curious interest, the central point of British rule in Ireland, Castle. The present pile of buildings is of comparatively modern erection, bearing very little resemblance to the fortress which was first given the name of "Castle," and whose foundation dates from the reign of King John. Over the archway, by which we entered, stands a figure of Justice, but the edifice is rather weather-beaten and battered, and significantly enough, the tower has long since dropped from her base. The position of the figure, however, has been regarded as not wholly inappropriate, in as much as Justice is represented with a sword.

From the Castle, we went to the chief objects in the Castle yard are the Barrington Tower and Chapel Royal, while around are the chief offices of the Irish Government. The tower has more the appearance of antiquity than any other part of the buildings, but even it is no part of the original construction. On the site which it occupies a tower was erected some five centuries ago, and the destruction of the nationality of the Irish people. There is no need to recount here the penal prescriptions which operated for so long a time against the Catholic people of Ireland in respect of education. Education was forbidden to them by law under the heaviest penalties; it was illegal for them to fly even to foreign countries for that system of education. The priest, was an outlaw and a felon; there was to be no education in Ireland but English Protestant education; and at the head and front of that system were Trinity College. Year after year there went out from its walls scores of educated men to take hold of every position of power and emolument in this country, while for nine-tenths of the race, the masses of the people, were degraded, and degraded, there remained scarcely any other occupation than that of hewers of wood and drawers of water. The following Collection of Letters written by Cardinal Newman during his lifetime, and collected by Mr. John Glynne, includes of course only those printed in periodicals, or those which, though addressed to private persons, have received the writer's sanction for their publication. One letter, written to the Bishop of Birmingham at the time of the Vatican Council, and already published, is not here reproduced, for a reason which it is hoped the reader will understand sufficiently from the following notice. The other letters, addressed to the Standard in March 1870 are not intelligible, save as a context to that private document which has just been printed. The letters to Dr. Tusey on the "Birmingham," and to the Duke of Norfolk, on the Civil Allegiance of Catholics, each a book by itself, naturally do not place in this collection, and, for analogous reasons, is omitted, the letter on Anglican Orders, addressed to Father Colledge, &c., in 1848, and republished in "The Rambler." And since limitation of space compels further sacrifice, I have made it in the case of the communications most recently addressed from the Oratory at Birmingham to the Standard, and I do not venture to venture the reflection that the letters thus absent are still fresh in the memory of that Young Generation which will draw from the fact that these papers a fresh indication of the subject; an affection destined to carry into the future, from those who were his contemporaries to those who come after us, the tradition of a great epoch and of a venerable name.

GOOD BYE.
LITTLEMORE, O. S. 1845.

To a number of Friends.
I am this night expecting Father Dominic, the Passionist, who, from his youth, has been led to have distinct and direct thoughts, first of the countries of the North, then of England. After thirty years (almost) waiting, he was without his own seat here. But he has been able to do with conversions. I saw him here for a few minutes on St. John Baptist's Day last year.

He is a simple, holy man, and manifestly gifted with remarkable powers. He does not know of my intention; but I mean to ask of him admission into the one fold of Christ.

RECEIVED INTO THE CHURCH.
LITTLEMORE, O. S. 1845.

To the Rev. T. W. Allies, M. A.
My DEAR ALLIES—I am to be rejoiced that what I believe to be the one church and the one communion of plotted this evening, if it is so ordained.

Father Dominic, the Passionist, is here, and I have begun my confession to him. I suppose two friends will be received with me.

May I have only one-tenth part of such combined reasons pouring in upon him that he is doing right. So I am most most; but, alas! my heart is so hard, and I am taking so much as a matter of course, that I have been quite frightened lest I should not gain faith and contrition sacraments. Perhaps faith and contrition are incompatible in one person, or nearly so.

Ever yours, most sincerely,
JOHN H. NEWMAN.

"DREAMING SURELY."

Sept. 6, 1848

To the Rev. T. W. Allies, M. A.
My DEAR ALLIES—Thank you for the pamphlet you have sent me to-day's post, which, from the subject, I shall read with much interest. I was very glad to find my introduction was useful to you. You would have been more pleased with the Archbishop of Bhamoan; he has a very saintly man.

Glads as I am to be of service to you, it pains me more than you can understand to write to you. I cannot make out how you reconcile it with your own position which you hold so few people, if any in the world ever did before you. You have, excuse me, no pretence to say you follow her living authorities, or her Reformers, or Lamb, or her liturgy, or her Articles? I cannot understand a man like you going by private judgment, though I can understand a man identifying himself with the church of England, or of Rome with the church of Rome, and, but it am so me to find him attempting the church of England by himself, and making himself the prophet and doctor of his church.

This, I suppose, you and a few others are now doing—calling that the church of England which never was before so called since that church was a point from which to drop bombs down upon the Castle, so great was the dread of attack entertained by the local authorities.

From hence we naturally turn our steps to those old and memorable parts of Dublin, which are associated with the tragic memories of '98, and with the lives and deaths of Lord Edward and Robert Emmet, and which shall be ever venerated as among the holy places of Irish patriotism.—Shant' Aboo, in Toronto Catholic Review.

LOCAL AND OTHER ITEMS.

Mr. FRANK C. KELLY, solicitor, one of John Kelly, Esq., of this city, who has been appointed his executor, left here on Saturday morning last for the Grand Junction, at Niagara, P.O., where he will continue his studies, and also teach English.

Mr. GRACE, ANTHONY O'BRIEN, of Halifax, was at St. Margaret's, on Sunday last, the guest of the pastor, Rev. D. J. J. McDonald. He preached on the occasion. He left here for Kilmora, on Monday afternoon, and crossed to the Malabar for home, on Tuesday morning.

Mr. DORAN, of the large manufacturing firm of Doran & Co., of London, Ireland, and Mr. Gilmore, one of their travelling agents, arrived here on Friday evening last, and left again on Saturday morning. Mr. Doran, as well as being an extensive manufacturer is a magistrate of the city of Belfast. He is well acquainted with the duties of the Hydrants of this city, who reside in Halifax. They were delighted with what they saw of this Province.

The Maritime Press Association met in this city last week. There were about forty visiting pressmen, and lady friends, from the Province of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. They visited Sumner's Hotel on Tuesday; spent Friday visiting points of interest in and around Charlottetown; very particular to dinner, at the Obsolete House, by the local pressmen, on Friday night, and had an excursion to St. John's on Saturday. We regret our space does not permit us giving more of the account of the proceedings. The visiting brethren were delighted with what they saw of the Province.

Another eleven o'clock on Saturday night last a fire was discovered in a stable in the rear of J. D. McLeod & Co's store, Queen street. So rapid was the spread of the flames that the valuable horses belonging to Mr. J. D. McLeod were burned before they could be rescued. Mr. T. J. Macquarrie, in his endeavor to save the horses was so badly burned that he died on Monday morning. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Great indignation is felt, and Mr. McLeod has offered a reward of three hundred dollars for the apprehension of the person who set the fire.

Rev. JOSEPH FAYNE, Maronite priest, from Mount Lebanon, arrived here on Saturday evening last, and is, for a few days, staying at the Bishop's Palace. He travels all over America, in order to have the confessions of the Maronites of the United States, and to give spiritual words of any Arabs that may be living in different places. He held the parochial mass in the Cathedral, on Monday morning. He celebrates mass in the Syrian language, according to the Maronite Rite, the ceremony of which differs somewhat from the Latin Rite. He is accompanied by Rosalia Zizan, a boy from his own country, who has been living in Worcester, Mass., for the past year.

The mail steamer Vancouver arrived at Rimouski at 9 a. m. on Sunday last after an eventful voyage. Soon after leaving Miramichi she met a gale, and for two nights and a day she was swept by heavy seas. One of the crew, a French Canadian, was blown overboard and had his leg broken, and another crew member was injured. On Friday morning while proceeding slowly an enormous iceberg loomed up directly ahead, and the vessel was forced to stop. The iceberg struck the bow, and the vessel was forced to stop. The iceberg struck the bow, and the vessel was forced to stop.
