we have ventured to apply the title at the head of this article-the "Amsteur Scavengers."-The members of this corps are numerous-in fact no one can walk down any of our principal streets without seeing some deligently at work, either during their long promenade, or in the short intervals which seperate a carriage from a shop-door. The work is performed gratuitousy, so far as the general public is concerned, the nly remuneration required by these amateurs being a little wonderment on the part of the beholders. The operation is very thoroughly carried out : for, wherever one of the amateur scavengers has passed, a broad clean arises may be perceived, from which there have been removed any such unsightly objects as pieces of orangepeel, cigar ends, and various nameless abominaions of the pavements of our streets. What becomes of these things we know not, and we dare ot imagine. In addition to all that has been

We cannot do justice to the many and diversified beauties which marked this production of genius,-the poetie grace,-the scathing sarcasm, -the bold and straight-forward announcemen of religious sentiment,-" the picturing words, words that were pictures in themselves."-the subtle wit that, as in the twinkling of an eye, stole inside the shield of prejudice and planted barbed truth in the heart, -the honest frankness and earnestness of spirit which pervaded the

We felt, and so we are convinced did every hearer, that such lecturing was indeed a power for good, and that the object was not to win applause, or merely to entertain or smuse, bu to reach the heart and to fix there great and l'fe-controlling principles. We must confess we rather enjoyed the prompt and plain-spoken protest which Mr. Punshon, in acknowledging a vote of thanks, made against the discourtesy shewn him in the unauthorized publication of a garbled report of his lecture at such a time. His words were heartily endorsed by the audience. and have since been echoed by the press with no uncertain sound. It is not often that a lec turer sees several of his hearers holding in their hands printed copies of what he is engaged in delivering, and to most persons this would have been sufficiently embarrassing; but this difficulty was triumphantly overpassed, while in the very brief gratis and extempore appendix to which we have referred, a slight but wholesome sacrifying was administered to those who thoughtlessly made themselves, in appearance at least, parties to a piece of unfairness and ill manners which is not likely to be repeated.

According to previous announcement the President preached on Sabbath morning at Brunswick St. to a crowded congregation. Great credi is due to the trustees and other officials for their exertions to secure comfortable accommodation for the large number of strangers present on the occasion. Lest in the Woods.

BY IRENE L. Ten years ago I moved with my husband and two little children far away from the great city where I had lived all my life, into a thinly-sectled region of the West. Our new home was a mile away from other dwellings, and dark forests shut us in even from our nearest neighbour. It was lone'y at first ; but we had books and knew how to erjoy them; and we had work to do that occupied the largest part of our time. So with our work, our books, and out two dear children, we found much that was pleasant in our new life. On Sundays we rested from our labour, and made the days as sweet and profitable for ourselves and our little ones as possible. Eddy was eleven years old, and May, our youngest living child, in her sixth year. Two were in heaven with the angels. We had our church think the good Lord, in whose name we met, was often very near to us. A neighbour rode over one Sunday morning a few weeks after our arrival, and came just as we were about holding our morning service We asked him to ioin with us, and he was pleased and consented. I saw the tears in his eyes more than once while my husband was reading a sermon. On the next Sunday he came again, bringing another neighbour with him. After that, our family church had many attendants every Sunday, coming from miles around. Sometimes the men rode over alone, but oftener with their wives and children.

I could tell of many things that befel us and some of our neighbours during the ten years that have passed since our removal to the West, in which I know you could not help being in find us. Eldy!" terested; but I shall relate only one incident now. It occurred during the first year of our
