$20,000 FIRE AT NOME

Nome, Jan. 31.—Fire which broke out in the Dexter building about 4:15 this morning destroyed it, as well as the Warwick and Bodega buildings on the north side of Front street. The total loss will probably amount to $20,000.

How the fire originated is shrouded in more or less mystery. Only one person was in the Dexter building at the time. This was Cecil Barcroft, who with George Hoxsie occupied two rooms on the second floor at the rear of the building. Barcroft retired about one o'clock and was awakened
by the smoke which filled the room.
Hastily jumping out of bed and without waiting to don any clothing he made his way along the corridor and down the stairs to Front street amid the stifling smoke and flames.

The morning was intensely cold.
The thermometer at the fire engine house registered 42 below, and consequently 10 or 15 minutes delay was occasioned in turning on water. In the meantime the flames had spread to the Warwick building adjoining the Dexter, and were leaping like mad, and the burning sparks, fanned by the wind, which is always created by a fire, were scattered far and wide.

The Hunter building, separated from the Dexter by a narrow alley,
was in imminent danger, but a number of the firemen, among whom were
C. R. Staples, N. J. Nicholson and George H. Chapman climbed to the roof of the building, the hose was dragged up by means of a rope and soon a stream of salt water was playing all around. The building was saved.

The first floor of the Warwick building was used as a lodge and club room by Nome Aerie, No. 75, F. O.
E. They lost everything, including furniture, paraphernalia, a piano, in short everything that the rooms contained, and their loss will be quite heavy.

The second story of the Bodega was used as a lodging house, Miss Espen being the proprietress. She lost everything except her trunks. The building and contents were owned by

R. J. Park, who is now on the outside. The ground floor was not occupied.

John H. Barton who was sleeping
in a room upstairs in the Warwick, had a narrow escape for his life. He was compelled to make a jump of many feet through the smoke and flames in order to reach the street, which he did clad only in his night clothes. W. C. Josh, who also occupied a room in the same building, lost everything except the clothes he managed to get on before escaping
from the building.

Developments go to show that the fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin. L. N. Botts, captain of the chemical engine, says that the fire from the Warwick met the fire from the Dexter, both hallways being on fire when the chemical arrived, a few seconds after the alarm was turned in. He decried the flames in the hallway of the Dexter, but it was impossible to check them in the Warwick.

This is also the opinion of J. H.
Barton, who was sleeping in the Warwick, as, when he emerged from his room, he found a big hole burning in the corridor, across which he was forced to jump while the flames shot upward.

The Dexter and Warwick buildings were owned by C. E. Hoxsie, the Bodega by R. J. Park. The Bodega and Warwick were built in 1900, the Dexter was among the first substantial buildings erected in Nome, having been built in 1899. The two latter were corrugated iron buildings, and to this fact and the heavy snow covering is due the fact that the flames were kept so long confined inside the building. However, had there been a heavy wind, the result might have been exceedingly disastrous. The losses are approximately as follows:

Dexter building and Warwick	$12,000
Nome Aerie, F. O. E.	1,600
Bodega	5,000
H. O. Butler, damage to stock	250
A. C. Schow, fixtures	800

Andrew Carnegie

The following editorial appeared in the present issue of the San Francisco Examiner, under the title, "Is This Man's Life a Success?"

It is a man's life work may be said to be finished. There are rare instances in which great work is done after that limit has been reached, but in a man's life has borne whatever fruit he is going to bear, and stands out, as it is, practically its full proportions.

Andrew Carnegie is seventy—and the good ship which has been out on a long voyage and is now entering the port from which it is never again to sail, the champion money-maker of this or of any age retires from the wonderful struggle in which he has so long engaged to enjoy such a life as may come to him before Carnegie shall ring.

Andrew Carnegie may live ten years longer, or even twenty, but he will accomplish no more than he has already accomplished. He will sow no more, he will reap no more. His harvest is all in.

What was the net result? Is this man's life a success? To some sense it is a marvelous success. Mr. Carnegie has made three hundred millions of dollars!

Is it doubtful if any other man in the history of the world ever succeeded in doing better than that along the same line? Even now that the master mind no longer directly superintends things, the wonderful money-making machine constructed by him in other days turns out gold cash at the rate of 50 cents a second, $30 a minute, $1,800 an hour, $43,200 a day, $302,400 a week, and $1,209,600 a month!

He has brains to organize a business able to turn out wealth like that. Mr. Carnegie's fortune in dollars and cents is as great in its way as the Partition, as St. Peter's, as Napoleon's Italian campaign, as the life of Shakespeare.

It took genius to make the other things—and it took genius to make Carnegie's fortune in dollars and cents. But now that the great fortune is made, what does the man who made it think of it?

With amazing frankness, he tells us that it is a burden, and not only a burden but a disgrace. According to his own free confession, Mr. Carnegie is ashamed of his three hundred millions of money!

There is no pleasure in it for him. It often as he thinks of the fortune that he has made his face turns as red as a beet.

He knows that in the course of nature he will have to die pretty soon, and his one great business now is to shield himself of his gold before he passes out.

Mr. Carnegie was reared in Scotland under domestic influences similar to those depicted in Burns' "Cotter's Saturday Night," that is to say, under religious influences, and he still has an idea that upon the other side of the river of death dwells a being who will have some sort of standing with us when we get over there; and he doesn't feel like facing that being with three hundred million on his head!

So he is getting rid of it as fast as he can—scattering it here and there with a lavish hand. Now, we have no right to think that Mr. Carnegie is insincere in all this. When he tells us that he is ashamed of his princely fortune, and that he is making haste to unload himself of it before he dies, so that he can cross the bar poor, it is our duty to believe that he means just what he says.

How low does this help us to answer the question, "Is this man's life a success?" Is it success to spend one's life in piling together that which, when he has got it, you do not want, that which makes you blush as often as you think of it, that which, having gathered together, you must cast away before you die, so that you can go in peace?

Mr. Carnegie is a business man, one of the greatest ever on this earth, but great as Mr. Carnegie is as a business man, he is still greater as a prospector.

What a sermon his life is upon the venerable old lie that wealth makes happiness! How powerfully does this man's experience preach against the cherished delusion that a man's first, last and only aim should be to make a "fortune"!

There is a man who possesses the greatest fortune that was ever piled up in this world—and according to his own confession, he is ashamed of it, and means to get decently rid of it as soon as he can! That was when Mr. Carnegie did what he does today. Once he thought that it was his supreme business to make money. He made it—and now he admits his mistake, admits that he has been all these years upon a fool's errand!

We reprint this editorial from the Examiner because we consider it one of the best sermons ever delivered on the vanity of human wishes, and at the same time the most soul-barrowing description we have ever read of the terrible mental suffering produced by excessive prosperity.

But it seems to us that none of the great newspapers of the country, which are in the habit of giving us a Carnegie editorial about once a week, have yet struck the key note of this symphony. A duty therefore devolves upon The Miner.

The facts about Carnegie—and they are of record in public documents—are substantially these: He maintained for many years at Washington a lobby whose sole duty was to nurture a high protective tariff on steel.

He demanded this tariff to protect American labor against the pauper labor of Europe.

While he was enjoying a "protection" of $11 a ton on his steel rails, the government made an investigation to ascertain the cost of producing steel rails in this and competing countries. The report showed that the "labor-cost" of a ton of steel rails was only about $4 greater here than abroad.

In other words, Carnegie, under the pretext of "protecting American workingmen against the pauper labor of Europe," robbed the consumers of his product of $7 on every ton purchased.

Moreover, while Carnegie was loudly beseeching congress to protect American workingmen against the pauper labor of Europe, he imported into this country 7000 Hungarians under five-year contracts, to work for $1 a day, displacing an equal number of American workingmen who had been receiving from $1.50 to $2.50 a day.

The armor-plate—but that's too bad! Now, under our beneficent-competitive system and the high protective tariff maintained by the government for Carnegie, he had a legal right to coin $300,000,000 out of the sweat and tears and lifeblood of the toiling thousands he "protected."

But we maintain that he has no right to pose as a philanthropist on money so acquired. And now, leaving facts and entering the realm of speculation, we do not believe that Carnegie's grief is as poignant as depicted by Mr. Hearst's editor. We are not an expert on the peculiar malady now afflicting Carnegie. It is a disease we have been trying to catch ever since we came to Tonopah, but so far it has escaped us. But we do know something of the Scotch character—we assume the Examiner's assertion that Carnegie is Scotch to be correct—and the sublime forbidity the average Scotchman displays under the affliction of prosperity, and we haven't the slightest doubt that Carnegie will eventually recover.

If Carnegie's conscience really does hurt him, or if he is anxious to become a real philanthropist—one whom the whole world will praise, honor and revere, and write books about, and build monuments to, and remember five hundred years from now—let him stop building libraries for distant cities too mean to build their own, and distribute his millions among the people who produced them—the half-starved workingmen of the prosperous Republican state of Pennsylvania.

Give his millions to the ones whom he drove out of the Husks! At the muzzle of his guns! In the past. —Tonopah Miner.

ANOTHER RACE

Youngsters Pull Off a Mile Handicap Sprint

The second mile handicap race for juveniles was run Saturday night at the rink resulting in a victory for Hugh McDonald, the ten-year-old son of Angus McDonald, the ice man. There were eight entries, but only five stayed in the race until it was completed. As in the race the Saturday evening previous, Emil Forrest and Hugh McDonald were on the scratch, the others taking a handicap of various lengths depending upon their ability as skaters. Myer Packer, Harry Robertson and Lawrence Mero received 50 yards; James Fallon and Wallace McDonald, one lap; Sammie Agee, three laps. At the crack of the pistol all got away in a bunch, the scratch men hitting a pretty good pace from the very start. Sammie Agee true to his promise appeared on the track and made a start just as an evidence of good faith, but he was not in good form, having been over trained and after seeing the youngsters well on their way the old veteran quietly dropped out in the third round. It was a matter of regret that he did so as at the time he was holding his own and had more than an even break for first money. Sammie is a little short on legs, but he works them with a piston-like regularity that causes the owner to get over the ice with just about as much speed as any of them. His wind is good and there is but little doubt among the toots that he can throw dirt in the eyes of most of the short distance men. Hugh McDonald carried off first money in 3:34, Myer Packer coming in second and Jimmie Fallon third. Forrest dropped out in the first lap, Sammie in the third and Mero in the eighth. The prize was a gold pin.

VERY GOOD SCORE

Klondike Cycles Win the Hockey Match Saturday Night

The Klondike Cycle and Avery hockey teams pulled off another game of hockey at the rink Saturday night at the conclusion of the mile handicap race, the former demonstrating their superiority by defeating their old opponents by a score of 2 to 1. The lineup was the same as on the previous Saturday evening with the exception of, Chester Davis, one of the Avery forwards, whose place was filled by Jack Cameron as substitute.

In the first half but one goal was netted, that by George Delfel for the Klondike Cycles. The game set was rather fast and there was considerable chopping with sticks and other rough work. In the latter half Wallace was slashed over the head with a stick by Mayhood who was sent to the fence for five minutes by the referee. Each side scored in the latter half, one of the goals being taken by George Delfel and the other by Jules Delfel. George Kennedy refereed and gave the excellent satisfaction he always does in that position. The referee played for was an oyster snipe that was enjoyed after the game at the expense of the Avery's.

The following was the lineup: Klondike Cycles—Goal, Phillips; point, James; coverpoint, Hanwell; forwards, George Delfel, Matthey, Heath and Wallace.

Avery—Goal, Forrest; point, Weber; coverpoint, Gilbert; forwards, Hawley, Prather, Jules Delfel and Cameron.

Wasted All Three Wishes

An Irish legend has it that a good fairy once visited an aged couple and promised them that any three wishes they would make would be granted. After racking their brains for some time in an endeavor to discover what they desired most, the couple decided to visit the county fair, to see if something there would suggest what they wanted. They did so, and after rambling around all day, not seeing anything that exactly suited them, toward evening they found themselves before a display of kitchen utensils. Among them was a soup ladle, cheap, but likely to appeal to a woman, so the old woman, in an absent moment, said, "Oh, I wish I had one of those," and immediately she had it. The old man was so enraged because his wife had thoughtlessly thrown away one valuable wish that he retorted, "I wish that was stuck down your throat," and immediately this was done.

Thereupon he was at once sorry at what he wished, and the only thing left to do was to wish the ladle out again, so all three wishes went for naught.—Ex.

WATER PROTESTS

Annual Grist of Suits Over Water for Sluicing Purposes

Now that spring is approaching there is in the gold commissioner's court the usual crop of water law suits appearing, litigation that seems bound to make its presence felt every year at about this time. There is not a week passes that there is not a way from one to half a dozen suits filed in which the bore of contention is water. The trouble principally arises among the bench and bill claim owners, so many of whom depend upon little rivulets, seepage, etc., for the water they require early in the spring. On Saturday there were filed in the gold commissioner's court two suits of precisely the same nature, each having the same defendants but different plaintiffs.

The first was Donald B. McDonald and John Parks vs J. B. Knox, H. C. Hamilton and W. F. Collins. The defendants have made application for 100 inches of water, now appropriated under the Robertson grant, to be taken from Adams creek and Nine-teen and Twenty pups the same to be used on American hill. The plaintiffs are operating on Magnet gulch and state they are not parties to the application but are opposed to it. They also say that if the application is granted they will be injured thereby, their ditches tapped and ask that the petition be dismissed.

W. H. Armstrong and nine others protest against the granting of the application upon almost identically the same grounds. The hearing has been fixed for May 6.

The lineup for this morning's game was as follows:

Palmer's—Goal, Harold Anderson; coverpoint, Sam Crawford, forwards, Lawrence Mero, Wallace McDonald, Lawrence Spencer, Myer Packer. Monarchs—Goal, Solly Phillips; point, Eddy MacFarlane; coverpoint, Stewart Woods; forwards, Harry Robinson, Cuthbert Cuthbert, James Fallon.

The Palmers were handicapped by having no player at point, but this was equalized by the Monarchs having but three forwards. The game lasted 35 minutes and was one of the best the boys have yet played.

During the game Harry Robinson was knocked down by the puck striking him in the forehead but he was not hurt and went immediately into the thick of the game again. The referee was Lloyd Hawley and the goal umpires were Jules Delfel and Athol MacFarlane.

IMPORTANT MOTIONS

Heavy Bond Demanded in Syndicate Case

Appeals Must First be Lodged With the Territorial Court En Banc.

Among the more weighty matters of importance coming before Mr. Justice Craig in chambers this morning was a motion and argument in the well known case of the Canadian Bank of Commerce vs the Syndicat Lyonnais, the motion in a manner referred to certain witness fees and also a stay of execution pending the perfecting of an appeal that is being taken. The debt originally sued for, it was stated, was $92,500 for which judgment was given and which with the costs and interest now amounts to $101,000. There is already in court the sum of $57,000 and counsel for the plaintiffs, which secured the judgment, in making his argument relative to the security for costs and the remainder of the judgment insisted upon either the cash being put up by the defendants or the bond of some responsible security and guarantee company on the outside.

On account of the peculiar conditions existing here, the fact that the average man as soon as he makes a few dollars sends his money to the outside counsel for the plaintiff had very grave doubts as to whether there was anyone here who could qualify in the extent of $40,000, take an oath that he was worth that sum over and above all his debts and liabilities.

Counsel for the defense in his reply considered that his learned friend had labeled the Klondike when he said that he did not consider that there were any persons in the city who could qualify upon a bond in the extent of $40,000. In ruling upon the motion his lordship called the attention of counsel to the fact that in this country of all places it was a hardship for anyone to have $100,000 tied up in court for a year, during which time he can not hope to secure any revenue from his money. The defendant company had already had $57,000 in court for a number of months and to compel them to put up an additional $43,000 and then have the whole amount tied up for perhaps a year or more was scarcely fair to them if they were prepared to give a good and sufficient bond as security.

His lordship ruled that the defendant should have ten days in which to furnish bonds that should be absolutely acceptable to the court. In the meantime the defendant gives his undertaking that during the interim none of the property, dumps, or assets of his clients shall be disturbed, nor have they been to the present time since the judgment was rendered.

Another matter coming before his lordship was a motion for an appeal in the case of Carboneau vs Letourneau. An appeal had originally been taken to the supreme court of Canada, but a wire from the Ottawa representatives of the local counsel had informed them that an appeal must first be lodged before the territorial court en banc at Dawson before proceeding to the supreme court of the Dominion. Under those circumstances counsel for the defense, the appellants, asked to lodge his appeal before the court, he having withdrawn his appeal to the supreme court. Counsel for Carboneau resisted the motion upon the ground that his learned friend was too late in making his application, that the time in which such motion could be received had already expired. It was also insisted that in case the motion was granted that the appellants put up security for costs amounting to about $2000. This, counsel for Letourneau stated, if insisted upon would prevent them making their appeal, as both his clients were poor men, miners who had lost all they had by being compelled to give up their lay, and there was no possible way by which they could give security for costs. His lordship ruled that the motion for the appeal would be allowed upon the terms that the case was to come down on the first sitting of the court, April 15. The court reported, it was stated, was rushed with work and it was feared would not be able to get out the transcript of evidence in time, but his lordship said every facility would be given him in order to get the briefs out during the next two weeks.

Biography of a Snowflake.

Under the title Mr. Arthur H. Bell in knowledge describes the life history of the aerial frost flowers of winter. In order to have a fair start in life a snowflake should be built up on a particle of dust. Then, if it has the good fortune to begin its career at the top of a cloud many miles above the earth and to pass through many atmospheric strata, differing in their temperature and the amount of moisture they contain, our snowflake is very likely to become a notable individual among its kind. In a stratum of water vapor the little flake catches moisture on its tiny spicules, and when it enters a colder stratum below the moisture is frozen, and so the flake grows. In a thawing air many flakes sometimes cohere, forming disks from an inch to two or three inches across.

Won on His Nerve

Register of the Treasury Lyons, although a colored man and a Republican, almost daily goes out of his way to do a kindness for some southern Democrat in Washington. The register has saved the scalps of a number of political opponents from falling into the basket. One who has been rather prominent in the years ago in politics in the south has made frequent small borrowings of the register, and the other day the official asked him:

"How is it, M—, that you always come to me in four straits and all the time you have opposed me in every fight I have made. I appear to be a first class man when you want money."

"The truth is, Captain Lyons," replied the erstwhile influential fellow, "politically I am opposed to you, but financially I am your friend."

Official Subpoenaed

"That is the first time I was ever subpoenaed as a witness in a case in all my life," said one of the court officials this morning to a bunch of reporters gathered in his office. He held in his hand the document that commanded his presence in the police court on Monday morning, March 30, at 10 o'clock, to give evidence for the crown in the case of the King against Christensen who is charged with perjury. Among the others who have been summoned to appear in the same case are F. G. Crisp and Clerk of the Court McKay.
