A Notable Scottish Priest.

The following extract of the sermon preached by Bishop Chisholm, of Aberdeen, at the funeral of Monsignor Clapperton of Fochabers, County Elgin, is taken from the Banffshire Journal:

We meet today to pay the last tribute of our respect and esteem for a Priest who has passed away from among us, and to offer up in common our prayers for the repose of his soul. Monsignor Clapperton was a striking figure in the ecclesiastical history of the country for nearly half a century. He died in his 88th year. He was born when George IV. was King of England and Pius VII. was Pope. What an eventful period in the history of the Church and of the country is co-ordinated in the span of his life! One Pope in exile, and restored to his dominions in honour and éclat, another having to fly from the Eternal City, he also restored amid the acclamations of his people, to be again despoiled of his possessions and dominion; and the present occupant of St. Peter's Chair a prisoner in his own house on the Vatican Hill. In the Monsignor's time the battle of Waterloo—"that King making victory," was fought and won. He outlived the entire and long reign of Queen Victoria. Coming nearer home, in Edinburgh, Cameron, Paterson, Carruthers, Gillies were Bishops; S. rain, Smith, M. Dunal, Archbishops. There were two ecclesiastical districts in Scotland when he was born—the Lowland and the Highland. He saw the country divided into three—the Eastern, the Western, and the Northern, and he lived to see the re-establishment of the normal Church Government in Scotland under two Archbishops and four Suffragans. What a marvelous change he lived to see in the position of the Church and in the attitude of outsiders towards her. When he was a young man the word "Catholic" was a name of opprobrium. Now, other Churches look upon it as a sign of narrow mindedness.

He acknowledged their right to claim that designation for themselves. By the law of the land, a priest was forbidden to wear any distinctive garb as such. Now, there is hardly a clergyman in the land but appears in what used to be the distinctive and forbidden garb of a Priest. He saw Catholic Emancipation passed; he saw Catholics admitted to represent their constituents in Parliament—closed against them for nearly 800 years. There are today 77 Catholic Members in the House of Commons and 83 Peers in the House of Lords. Catholics in his day were not allowed to rise to any position in the State or community. Now, Catholic Generals lead the armies; a Catholic nobleman is in the highest post in the Navy. Catholic judges administer justice in our Courts. There is hardly a family of position and title throughout the kingdom but can claim a Catholic relative or connection. The highest positions in the land are open to Catholics as well as to Protestants; with, I think, three exceptions, if not only one—that of the Lord Chancellor in England, and the King Lieutenant in Ireland, and the King over all.

When Mr. Clapperton was ordained priest on the 29th of June 1836, there were only fifteen priests and one bishop serving in what was then the Eastern District, and which included the present Diocese of Galloway and Dunkeld. What is now known as the Archdiocese of St. Andrews and Edinburgh was then served by five priests out of these fifteen, four of whom were in Edinburgh itself and one in Stirling. Today there are in Edinburgh City and Leith 23 priests; in the Archdiocese itself 70. The Western District, which included Glasgow and two missions now in the Diocese of Galloway, and the entire Diocese of Argyll and the Isles was served by two bishops and 53 priests. Of these, 18 served what is now the Diocese of Argyll. In Glasgow there were five priests. In the city and suburbs today there are 178. The rest of the Diocese, excluding Argyll, was served by other five priests. In the entire diocese today there are 321. Thus, the entire area which was served in 1836 by 32 priests requires now 390. The Northern District, which is practically the Aberdeen Diocese today, was then served by 21 priests. Today there are 67, of whom 23 are in the Benedictine Abbey of For Augustus. There was one college at Blair with a president and three professors. The same today has a president, with five resident and three exterior professors. There is also an Ecclesiastical College for the Archdiocese of Glasgow, having a president and four professors. It is not this a matter of congratulation and hope? If things will progress in the future as they have done during the lifetime of Mon-nor Clapperton—and there is every reason for the signs of the times to think that things will go on even more rapidly and sweepingly—what may we look for in the not distant future? If such a state of matters as I have described to you has come about in the comparatively short space of one man's lifetime—in spite of opposition, of poverty, and of enemy on all sides—what may we not reasonably expect in a much improved state of matters, when the church is as free as other Churches, and when men are beginning to pay attention to her position, to listen to her claims, to respect her teaching, whilst they are becoming indifferent to the teaching of their own? Should one be considered too bold if he were to say that there is perhaps a young priest newly ordained who, when his panygerio will be preached 65 years hence, may be pointed to as one who has lived to see in Scotland only the Catholic Church and Infidelity?

In 1836 the boy of thirteen years commenced his College course in the old College of Aquorthies on the banks of the Don. In 1839 he proceeded with about thirty companions to the new College on banks of the Don, provided by the munificence of Mr. Mackenzie of Pitodale (may his memory be ever blessed!) James Clapperton is the first name entered in the College book of Blair—and he rejoiced to live to see a new college commenced to take the place of the old, and to accommodate 120 students. He showed his interest and love for his old Alma Mater by becoming a somewhat generous benefactor of the new. To me, who have taken a somewhat active part in this great work, it is a most grievous disappointment that the good old man has not lived to see the completion of a work of which we are now almost in sight. He looked forward quite recently with keen interest to the opening of the new college church, which I hope will take place in September. But God has willed it otherwise. He did his part nobly in preparing the way, but he has not lived to see its accomplishment.

The Decay of Bookbindings.

Book lovers whose books have been covered in leather within the past forty years will find some rather unpleasant reading in the report of the Society of Arts' Committee on Leather for Bookbinding. They will learn among other things that "books bound during the last eighty or hundred years showed far greater evidence of deterioration than those of an earlier date—many recent bindings showed signs of decay after so short a period as ten, or even five years;" that "there is ample justification for the complaint that modern leather is not so durable as that formerly used;" and that "the deterioration becomes more general on books bound after 1850, while some leathers seem to be generally good until 1880, after which date nearly all leathers seem to get worse." This information is bound to have a saddening effect on collectors who in recent years have spent much money in dressing their treasures in leather bindings, for the authoritative of the report is beyond question. It is a record of the research and statement of the conclusions of almost a score of experts—binders, librarians, leather-makers, and chemists—divided into sub-committees to deal with the subject in its different phases.

But whilst the committee feels itself bound to chronicle the deterioration, it does not despair of re-establishing something like the old standard of quality in bookbinding leathers. If it would be incorrect to say that there is balm in Gilead, it is at least literally true that there is hope inasmuch as a tanning agent. The causes of deterioration are primarily unsuitable tanning agents and the destruction of the fibre of the skin through excessive thinning of the leather; and means of remedying these defects are suggested in the report. The committee came to the conclusion that "a pure sulphur tannage will provide a good and durable leather, and that leather may be produced which will prove as durable as any made in the past." They also satisfied themselves that it is possible to test any leather in such a way as to guarantee its suitability for bookbinding, though they have not yet decided as to the desirability of establishing a formal or official standard. So that it would appear that in future book-lovers may depend on having their books covered in leather that will last at least as long as the works of the early bibliopagists which are now so much esteemed.

The quality of the material is not, however, responsible for all the deterioration; the bookbinder and the librarian are called upon to share the blame. So far as the binder is concerned, no fewer than five contributory causes due to modern methods are specified; and in order to remove these causes two modal specifications have been drawn up—one for binding heavy or valuable books, and the other for ordinary library binding. It is a tribute to the quality of the early work that the suggested reform is only "a return to the methods in general use up to the end of the last century"—that is to say, the eighteenth century—methods which, in the opinion of the sub-committee which investigated the branch of the subject, "are better than those now in common use." Binders should make themselves acquainted with these methods and should practice them.

John Lavery, the well-known Catholic artist of Glasgow, S.S. 1.8.1.0., has just added another Laurel to his European fame by gaining the first class medal at the eighth international Art Exhibition at present going on in Munich.

Dom Jean de Hemptinne, O. S. B., nephew of the Benedictine abbot primate, Dom Hildebrand de Hemptinne, celebrated recently in the chapel of the orphanage at Mallebrugges, near Ghent, in Belgium, his first Mass. He was assisted by his brother Ivan, a Benedictine novice, and his brother also, a Frabescan novice. Another brother, is a Trappist novice. The youngest sister of these favored souls received her First Communion at the same time from the new priest's hands.

A new house of the Nuns of May Help of Christians was opened towards the end of last year at Tad's, the birthplace of Josophone, the author of "Stabat Mater." It was Mgr. Ridolfi, the devoted pastor of this diocese, who requested the nuns to extend their mission to that town. He it was who brought the house and furnished it where children poor and others can receive an education befitting their state of life.

Abbot Benser, the new Bishop of Metz, is a personal friend of Emperor William of Germany. Not long ago the Kaiser presented him while yet abbot, with a gift of a splendid high altar, remarking as he did so: "Now, isn't it to be had that should be the gift of a pagan?"

The Rival Grit Claims.

The appointment of Sir Louis Davies to the bench of the Supreme Court of Canada creates a vacancy, not only in the Cabinet, but also in the representation of West Queen's in the House of Commons, and if current reports in the newspapers can be relied upon, the filling of these vacancies may create some little trouble and heart burnings among our friends, the Grits.

A Liberal tried and true." It asseverates that in selecting their candidate the Liberals of West Queen's should remember those who have stood by them and those by whom they have stood, in defeat and triumph. They should remember it says, those who "upheld the banner of liberalism in the political battles of the past. This appeal for the selection of a "Liberal tried and true," for one who "upheld the banner of liberalism in the political battles of the past," is evidently intended to convey the impression that some who now masquerade as ardent Liberals, were not so ready to do their part in the Liberal cause at some critical juncture in the past.

The Duke and Duchess

Montreal's welcome to the Duke and Duchess of York last Wednesday left nothing to be desired. Three hundred thousands of people thronged through which the royal procession passed, and gave the royal couple a continuous ovation. The city has never seen anything like it. The royal train arrived at 3 o'clock amid the booming of cannon and the ringing of church bells. As their royal highnesses stepped from the train, followed by a brilliant suite, they were met by his excellency the governor-general, his worship Mayor Foran, and the chairman of the reception committee.

Addressed and Barqueted.

Mr. D. A. Lawson, who for the past eighteen years, had been a station agent on the P. E. I. Railway, at St. Peter's, has recently been transferred to Hunter River. The people of St. Peter's, regretting his removal, took advantage of the occasion to testify their regard and esteem for him and Mrs. Lawson. Consequently, on the eve of his departure he and Mrs. Lawson were entertained and made recipients of thoughtful gifts. The Presbyterian congregation presented Mr. Lawson with an elegant and costly silver water pitcher, basin and tray, accompanied by the following address:

time ago, when the prospective vacancy was first spoken of, the name of Mr. Horace Haszard was mentioned in connection therewith. Subsequently Premier Farquharson was announced as a probable candidate. The Guardian, the morning Grit organ, espoused the candidature of Mr. Haszard and dilated upon what it considered his suitable qualifications for the position. But the Patriot, the evening Government daily, pronounced strongly in favor of Mr. Farquharson. A halt was then called for a time; but now the race seems to have terminated and these two Grit organs are at it again. The Guardian was the first to re-enter the lists in this somewhat delicate discussion. It essayed to outclass its belligerent contemporary by forestalling it in adulation of Mr. Farquharson. It feigned to believe that "the well-being of the Province requires that the Premier shall retain his present position." It gave expression to the fear that "a very serious dislocation of our Provincial affairs might and probably would result should he at the present juncture, retire from the local leadership." Who would succeed to the Premiership? "What would be the effect of the change upon the policy of the administration, notably in regard to the new legislation now on its trial?" At these questions, fraught with possible grave complications rose up before the troubled vision of the Guardian writer. After furnishing an answer upon the grave responsibility the Premier would assume in withdrawing from the leadership at the present time and thus jeopardizing the possible results of his eminent statesmanship, the morning organ directs attention to the fact that the leadership of the Province is not in any way a less honorable position than that of private representative in the Commons.

At a cabinet meeting held at Ottawa on Saturday evening, Sir Louis Davies was appointed to the Supreme Court Bench of Canada, in the place of the late Judge King of New Brunswick. It was also decided to appoint Mr. Britton ex-M. P., of Kingston, to the vacancy on the high Court Bench of Ontario.

Blandine of Betharram.

BY J. M. CAVE.

(American Messenger of the Sacred Heart.)

Beneath the hood an evil-looking face that stooped quickly towards her, and, before she could utter a word, hissed in her ear: "O sound and you are dead, you and this blind woman!"

"Now, little one," said the rascal "you are not going to be hurt. Good friends are waiting for you. Your own mother's relations, as you'll be taken safe to them, and I happier than here."

The child heard his swift footstep for an instant, still she could not move, so lightly were her bond drawn; neither could she cry aloud for the myriad folds of the grand-hoodage choked every sound she was capable of uttering.

"How came you by these, my child?" "Honesty, Abbe, honesty. Do you not trust poor Nan?" "When I had to fly to save Rand, the last time, I had to pass near the old house of the Vallinski family."

Scott's Emulsion is not a good medicine for fat folks. We have never tried giving it to a real fat person. We don't dare. You see Scott's Emulsion builds new flesh. Fat people don't want it. Strong people don't need it.

But if you are thin Scott's Emulsion is the medicine for you. It doesn't tire you out. There is no strain. The work is all natural and easy. You just take the medicine and that's all there is to it.

deat, if you feel strong enough to walk. I would carry you, if only I could guide my steps."

"I can walk, Mamma; but I am afraid he will see us, and hurt you." "Fear nothing, my treasure. You are the child of Our Lady of Betharram, never forget that. She will never abandon you, her own Blandine of Betharram."

"And Blandine's heart rejoices as she clasps Margaret's hand and leads her towards the sanctuary. She feels strong and brave, under the protection of that name."

THE RESCUE. A little drama, short and sharp, and been enacted, while Margaret and the child were on their knees, thanking for the providential rescue. Hardly had Blandine's living feet borne her out of sight, when rescuer and captor stood face to face. They looked into each other's eyes an instant. The eyes of the old man, calm and mild; the eyes of the thwarted desperado fiercely flaming. One look at the cords at their feet, and the villain hissed: "You cut them!"

"You have one crime less on your soul." The reply was a pistol shot. The priest's hand at that same instant formed the sign of the Cross in the air, between him and his adversary. Another shot, and again the aged hand formed the sacred sign, slowly, solemnly. A third shot, and no other weapon of defence, no cry, no effort, no appeal for succor. "In the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost!"

The words were comprehended in that symbol before which fly the powers of hell. They had no power against it now. "Hell and damnation!" The smoking pistol was flung aside, and with the spring of a tiger the villain was upon the helpless priest. But hardly had he touched him, before he could do him the least harm, he was himself helpless and hands-off, surrounded by agents of the law, who had to do with one they had long been desirous of laying their hands upon.

"Some mother, perhaps a good woman, too, may be mourning for his misdeeds this very hour," was the Abbe's thought, as he descended to the chapel to say Mass. When he issued from the church, he found Nan waiting for him.

"O Abbe," he cried, "if I only could, how I would like to be your servant. Come to my poor lodging, for we must keep a lodging when we reach Paris. Come! I will mend your clothes and keep them dry. O Abbe, if I only knew how to thank you, and—how to be good!"

"God sees the heart, my child. You have only to speak to Him." "That villain tried to shoot you! I heard the shots. I would have been there before you, to stand between him and you, but they held me back."

"God was between us," said the priest, "and I have work yet to do, since He spared me. You said something about papers that interest the child. Have you obtained them?"

"Yes, here they are, Abbe. Poor Rand thought he had secured them. He was mistaken. Those he took and gave over to that wretch are papers of no value. I put them in the good envelopes to deceive him. It was most fortunate for him, poor fellow! O Abbe, how good you have been to us! God will surely reward you! Here Abbe, these papers will tell you that a reward of a thousand francs in silver, is offered for information concerning the child's mother. And as much more for the child herself if brought safely to her relations."

"How came you by these, my child?" "Honesty, Abbe, honesty. Do you not trust poor Nan?" "When I had to fly to save Rand, the last time, I had to pass near the old house of the Vallinski family. I saw some of the faithful old people, and I told them of the death of their young lady, and how she had left a bill. This had happened after I left France, the deaths of both father and mother. The only one who could claim the bill now is her girl-mother. The god-mother of her mother, you must understand, Abbe, for that relationship in Russian law gives certain rights. Well, to be

GAINED 9 1/2 LBS.

BY USING MILBURN'S PILLS.

VICTORIA, B.C., March 6, 1901. The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—Some time ago my daughter, aged 19 years, was troubled with bad headaches and loss of appetite. She was tired and listless most of the time, and was losing flesh. Her system got badly run down, so hearing your Heart and Nerve Pills highly spoken of, I procured a box, and by the time she had used them she had gained 9 1/2 lbs. in weight and is now in perfect health.

Yours truly, Mrs. P. H. CURRIE.

table, on each table a bowl, spoon and "pistol," or little loaf. He broke the bread into the milk, which they quickly brought him. He had been performing prodigies on his spiritual strength alone. He was not in the least conscious of them, but weakness made itself felt. His labors of the last twelve hours had left his face unruined. No one, looking upon him, would have thought it possible that he had accomplished such things at all. Battering with the police of Lourdes to save weak Rand, walking to Betharram, because the train were few and far between, and he thought it wiser too, to go as a pilgrim foot. Climbing the Calvary by secret paths, lying in ambush till the moment of rescue permitted him to rise near the very spot where he had divined the attempt would be made to carry off the child. The risk his life counted for nothing. He was ready, but when all was over, and he had to bend his old joints to descend the hill of Calvary, it was a trial indeed. He had hard work to make his genuflections during Mass, so stiff had his limbs become. But the frugal repast restored him a little.

He is no ordinary Abbe, this aged man, sitting before the poor shed, with the smell of the cows and the manure heap coming between him and the breath of the river. Far from it, and because he has some way to go with us yet, some words to speak in the interest of little Blandine of Betharram, we may as well say something of him here.

The Renewal of a Strain.

Vaccines to over. Again the school bell rings at morning and at noon, again with tens of thousands the hardest kind of work has begun, the renewal of which is a mental and physical strain to all except the most rugged. The little girl that a few days ago had roses in her cheeks, and the little boy whose lips were those so red you would have insisted that they had been kissed by strawberries, have already lost something of the appearance of health. Now is the time when many children should be given a tonic, which may avert much serious trouble, and we know of no other so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla, which strengthens the nerves, perfects digestion and assimilation, and aids mental development by building up the whole system.

Glady's Bloom (archly)—Now just for instance, guess how old I am. Cleve-ton (diplomatically)—I don't know, but you don't look it.

Good Health is Impossible without regular action of the bowels. Liver Pills regulate the bowels, cure constipation, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache and all affections of the organs of digestion. Price 35 cents. All druggists.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows. They had been drifting about in the open boat several days, and all were near unto death, when the half-finished sailor in the bow leaped up and cried: "A sail! A sail!" "What a bargain sale!" shrieked the half-dead woman passenger as she began fumbling for her purse.

Before the old croquemort reached the English Villa he bought him self that on a business that might take hours to accomplish. He was fastening and very weak, for he had walked from Lourdes to Betharram, seven miles, at least. So he turned aside and halted before one of a long row of sheds, besides whose doors stood promise of refreshment in the shape of bread and milk. Before each door was a little round

The visiting team came to bat for the last time and made eight runs, just enough to win. "Yah," shouted the victorious captain, "I thought you said you could see our finish at the beginning?" "So I did," replied the other dolefully, "but I couldn't see your big inning at the finish."

If you take a Liver-Liver Pill to-night before retiring, it will work while you sleep without a gripe or pain, curing biliousness, constipation, dyspepsia and sick headache, and make you feel better in the morning.

To make money it is necessary to have a clear, bright brain, a cool head free from pain, and strong, vigorous nerves. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills invigorate and brighten the brain, strengthen the nerves, and remove all heart, nerve and brain troubles.
