In The Home Circle.

IT IS THE CORRECT THING.

For a man to show his appreciation of his wife's efforts.

For every member of a household to remember that punctuality is a virtue to be practised daily, and in small matters as well as in the more important ones.

For every room in the house to be as attractive in its way as the parlor.

To know that open-handed hospitality is generally rewarded by the happiness afforded, even in this world.

To know that great men and noble women are generally reared in happy homes.

To remember that courtesy, patience, consideration, affability, self-sacrifice, sympathy, are some of the virtues to be practised in the home circle.

To have family prayers in common where possible.

For every member of a household to consider morning prayers as much of a duty as prayers at night.

To be punctilious about saying grace before meals, and returning thanks afterwards.

To let no unpleasant subject ever be broached at table.

To be ever ready and glad to give a place at one's board to a friend.

To be temperate in eating as well as in drinking.

For a Christian "to eat to live, not live to eat."

For a Catholic to serve Friday fare on Friday, no matter who is expected to dine.

To have a crucifix in every bedroom.

To have Catholic paintings or engravings in the parlors as well as in bedrooms.

For children to love, honor and obey their parents.

For parents to teach children their prayers as soon as they are able to talk.

To be careful that children never see or hear anything that could tarnish their innocence in the slightest degree.

To take care that children are not frightened by stories of ghosts and hobgoblins.

To punish them when they need correction.

To be kind but firm always with children.

To watch over their associations.

To answer their questions accurately.

To understand their faults as well as their perfections.

To let them dress as children, partake of the amusements of children, be obedient as children, be innocent as children.

To remember that a "grown-up child" is a disgusting as well as a sorrowful spectacle.

To understand that precocity is not talent.

A New Method of Teaching History.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson, writing in the Atlantic Monthly on "History in Easy Lessons," says that in the teaching of history nowadays a method prevails very generally in our public high schools, whereby the pupils (using of all religious persuasion) are encouraged to search historical subjects themselves, simply looking toward the teachers as presiding officers in the debate. He says: "There could hardly be a finer example of this than in the classes of American history which I once saw conducted by that fine teacher and large-minded author, Alice Wellington Rollins. When I said to her, 'You could not, of course, go through the period of the Protestant Reformation in this way?' she replied that there was no period so interesting and successful in her experience. He class, she said, was about equally divided between Catholic and Protestant; the girls in succession brought out all they knew, and then, for want of ammunition, begged leave to have the debate adjourned until the next week, when they would come back with their cartridge boxes replenished. In answer to my inquiry if either side converted the other, she replied, 'Probably not,' but that they lived all their lives holding their own view in a larger spirit, as understanding the points at which honest minds could differ."

The Good and Bad of this Method.

Such a method as this of teaching history in the public schools is, in our opinion, a great improvement on the old way of having the teacher present the Protestant side of the case, and totally ignore the Catholic side. The Catholic Church or her children do not fear a free and frank discussion of the Reformation or anything else, provided always—and this is most important—that exact justice is shown by the presiding officer (who in this case would be the teacher), and that in the reference books, to which the pupils have access in order to "replenish their cartridge boxes," Catholic and fairminded Protestant authorities are fairly represented. That's all Catholics ask for in historical questions—a fair field and no favor. But with a prejudiced teacher as presiding officer at these school debates, or with a teacher whose own knowledge of history was not broad and liberal, we can see very plainly that the class in history would speedily degenerate into a far worse injustice than the method once in vogue—and we fear still in vogue in many public schools—of giving the popular Protestant idea of the Catholic Church and its history, and of rejecting any questioning or correcting on the part of a Catholic pupil.

Father Hennepin's Connection with Minneapolis.

An article in the New England Magazine on the City of Minneapolis recalls how Father Hennepin, the Franciscan missionary and explorer, laid his impress on the region in which Minneapolis is situated. Father Hennepin used to be credited with being the first white man to enter the land now called Minnesota, but fresh historical matter discovered of recent years goes to show that Radison and Grosellers, traveled through this and other portions of the Indian country from 1652 to 1684. Da Luth, too, predated Father Hennepin by a year, coming in 1679. But Father Hennepin with his band performed good work among the Indians, and while he himself may be forgotten, or assigned to a minor place in Minnesota's early history, as time brings forth fresh facts, yet the Falls of St. Anthony in the Mississippi, the well-utilized water power of Minneapolis, bear the name which Father Hennepin bestowed upon them in honor of his patron, St. Anthony of Padua. So long as this stupendous work of nature bears this title Father Hennepin's connection with Minnesota's discovery can not be entirely lost sight of. More than this, the State has perpetuated his memory by giving the county in which Minneapolis is situated his name, and the city in turn has called one of its principal business streets and boulevards, Hennepin avenue. Minneapolis today has a population of two hundred and sixty thousand inhabitants, and is one of the most beautiful cities in the United States, yet fifty-five years ago, the land occupied by the city was the home of the Indian, the Buffalo, and every other wild thing; and it is interesting to read in an old gazetteer this description of what is at present such a mighty city: "Minneapolis, a post-village, capital of Hennepin Co., Minnesota, beautifully situated on the right bank of the Mississippi opposite the city of St. Anthony. It contains ten churches, two national banks, a United States land office, three flouring mills and six saw-mills. Population in 1860, 2,864." The city of St. Anthony mentioned in this description has long ago been merged in Minneapolis. (Sacred Heart Review.)

Items of Interest.

Canon Mibel, of Ottawa, Canada, has presented a dwelling, valued at upwards of $5,000, to St. Mary's parish, to be used as a home for the Sisters of St. Mary Hospital.

It is announced that Professor J. S. Phillimore, professor of Greek at Glasgow University, has been received into the Catholic Church at Farm street, London.

A wealthy and distinguished American lady, Mrs. Isabel Mary Morrow, was the other day baptized and confirmed a Catholic in Mexico by Mgr. Ridolf, Apostolic Delegate of that country. Previously she was an Episcopalian.

The Irish Catholic Church Property Insurance Company, which was incorporated in 1903, has, thanks to the genius of Mr. Thomas Saxton, proved a great success. Its object is to insure at ordinary rates all institutions and buildings used for Catholic purposes in Ireland, including churches, chapels, schools, convents and residences. Although it has been in existence only a little more than three years, its business now covers every diocese in Ireland, and there can be no doubt that in a short time all the Catholic church property in Ireland will be covered by it. Last year the income increased by sixteen per cent., the new insurance as upwards of half a million and the surplus revenue was more than five times the dividend payable on the capital. The capital subscribed is £100,000, and paid-up £10,000.

Speaking the other day at the opening of a bazaar held in connection with the renovation of the church at Dromlin, Limerick, the Bishop of Limerick referred to the charge of extravagance in church building so commonly made against the Catholics of Ireland. He said: "There are a number of people here, non-Catholics, who join this chorus of criticism, but I assure you it irritates me personally beyond any power of words to explain to listen to them. When I am coming from my residence at Corbally to Limerick, every day I pass our own old beautiful Cathedral of St. Mary, built by Donogh O'Brien in the twelfth century to the glory of God and the honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and dedicated to the Mother of God under the invocation of her Assumption. I can't tell you how my heart sinks when I see hoisted over the tower of that old Catholic building, not the symbol of man's redemption that you see over our churches, but the Union Jack of England. And when these gentlemen talk about our building churches, let them think that they are in possession of our own old church and of similar churches all over Ireland. It is a good sign, it is a healthy sign, and it is a noble and hopeful sign of the Irish people that they have the generosity and the courage and the spirit of religion to rebuild their churches once again."

Rev. Father Murray, O. P., St. Saviour's, Dominick street, Dublin, has invented a system of wireless telegraphy that promises to revolutionize existing methods. Father Murray is a native of Dublin. When he joined the Dominican order, about twenty years ago, he went abroad on the foreign mission and spent several years in America. He has been for a considerable time in the house of the order in Trinidad, where he perfected his system of wireless telegraphy. He returned to Dublin recently, and is now stationed in St. Saviour's. Father Murray has shown remarkable talent for scientific invention, and no fewer than a dozen patents have been granted to him.

The International Congress of Free-thinkers in Paris has drawn to a close without reaching any practical conclusions. A sensational feature of the proceedings was the installation of a plaster statue of Chevalier de la Barre, who was executed for insulting a religious procession in 1766. The statue, placed on the summit of Montmartre, exactly opposite the entrance of the Sacre Coeur Basilica, has aroused the indignation of large numbers of Catholics. Great excitement ensued when M. Le Grandais, Municipal Councillor of Montmartre, made a stirring speech on the spot to the members of the congress, predicting the day would soon come when the basilica of Sacre Coeur would be transformed into a theatre for the people, where the tragedy of "Torquemada" would be given by the best actors and actresses of Paris. The Free-thinkers also passed resolutions thanking M. Le Grandais for his "useful suggestion."

Stephen Sanford, a wealthy manufacturer of Amsterdam, N. Y., has presented a dwelling, valued at upwards of $5,000, to St. Mary's parish, to be used as a home for the Sisters of St. Mary Hospital. Mr. Sanford is a non-Catholic, which makes his gift somewhat remarkable. This is not the first gift Mr. Sanford has given to St. Mary's. The magnificent onyx altar and the fountain in front of the church were received through his generosity.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

The woman who buys Dress Goods now-a-days; has yet to buy right, but buying right does not mean a matter of "How Cheap." A-how cheap dress that is old fashioned and that will not stand the wear and tear is not the one wide awake people buy. They want a dress right up-to-date in every particular. Quality, style, we have, and good wear resisting qualities. This is the kind we sell. Send for samples.—Stanley Bros.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Two little fellows were bragging of their respective possessions. At last one said:—

"Our hen laid the biggest egg you ever saw."

"That's nothing," said the other lad. "My grandpa laid a foundation-stone on Monday!"

Castor Oil or other Cathartic is not needed after giving Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup. This remedy contains its own purgative and not only destroys but carries off the worms. Price 25c.

"I manage to keep my boarders longer than you do," said the first landlady.

"Oh, I don't know," rejoined the other. "You keep them so thin that they look longer than they really are."

Grippe Headache.

Mrs. C. Appleton, Waitwood, N. W. T., writes: "Milburns Sterling Headache Powders have given me great relief from the terrible pains of La Grippe in my head and through my back." Price 25c and 50c. All dealers.

"Have you much room in your new flat?"

"Room! Mercy me, I should think not. Why, our kitchen and dining room are so small that we have to use condensed milk."

"I'm takin' something fer me ap petite—three times a day."

"Wot?"

"Breakfast, dinner an' supper!"

Minard's Liniment cures Colds etc.

At this time of the year when sore throat, pain in the chest, rheumatic pains and aches are so prevalent, it would be wise to keep on hand a bottle of Haggards Yellow Oil. It is a perfect medicine chest. Price 25c.

Briggs.—Well, old man, I can at last look the world in the face; all my debts are paid.

Briggs.—How did you do it?

Briggs.—Oh, I succeeded in borrowing the money.

Mrs. Brown.—Ah, if I was only a man!

Mr. Brown.—You'd be as foolish as men are—go and marry some idiotic woman, I'll bet a fever.

Minard's Liniment cures Burns, etc.

"Popular" books are not always "good books."

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

We are extremely obliged to those of our subscribers who called to see us during exhibition week. No doubt very many more would have come in and paid their subscriptions had the weather conditions been more favorable.

The Exhibition and Races.

The Provincial Exhibition of 1905 came to a close on Friday afternoon. The weather conditions were not very favorable, and in consequence the attendance was no doubt very much smaller than would have been the case with such nice bright days as we have this week.

THE RACES.

The trotting on Wednesday embraced three classes the 2.40, 2.19 and 2.30. The 2.40 race was won by Krennut, June Morning 2nd, Fleet 3rd, Rebecca 4th, as shown in the following summary:

Table with columns for race details, including horse names (Ada Mac, Parkside, W B Bowness, S'side, etc.), times, and other race information.

Slow News.

In those times, when the details of a fight in the Sea of Japan are published here the same day or the one following, it is hard to realize that residents of these provinces did not hear of the battle of Trafalgar until nearly two months after the occurrence.

The battle had taken place on the 21st of October, nine weeks before the first hint of the occurrence reached Liverpool, which was then perhaps next to Halifax in importance among Nova Scotia towns.—St. John Sun.

A short time ago, we were informed through the Government organ that a meeting of Provincial Premiers was to be held in this City this autumn to arrange for concerted action in demanding increased subsidies from the Federal Government.

The Prize List.

Advices of the 27th ult, from Alexandria say: Intense excitement prevails at Port Said consequent on the preparations to blow up the steamship Oatham. That the town will be damaged to any extent is considered unlikely, the vessel being nearly twelve miles distant.

Gaynor and Green Sent Home.

A Montreal despatch of Friday last says: George F. White, U. S. marshal for the Southern district of Georgia, and Joseph F. Doyle, district attorney, arrived in the city today to take Col. Gaynor and Capt. Greene back to Savannah for trial on various charges of defrauding the United States government.

Address to Teacher.

To Miss M. E. Nantes, Teacher at Farmington.
Dear Miss Nantes:—With feelings of deep regret we learn of your resignation as teacher of our school which you have conducted during the past two and a half years, with honor and credit to yourself, profit to the pupils and satisfaction to the parents and ratepayers.

The World Grows Lonely.

BY BESSIE BLAND.

The world grows lonely, year by year, Though new friends come, the old depart, The hand of time repairs not Those early memories of the heart. Though strong or slight the bond may prove, Its place is sacred in our love. We think of little kindnesses, And friendly words of hope and cheer; In times of joy, the handclasp warm, In grief, the sympathetic tear, O, let us dream the sweet words o'er, How grows in Paradise our store. And at the altar of our God Their memories before us rise, We breathe a prayer for their repose, We think of them in fairer guise. While in our hope of God's dear grace We crave, with them, a blessed place. 'Tis well to cherish all we may In love and friendship's lengthening chain, And dream of that approaching time When we shall greet our own again. O happy time! O blessed hour! Where Life shall reign forevermore. —Sacred Heart Review.

Young Mr. Bretherton.

BY ANNA T. SADDLER.

(From the Ave Maria.)

VI.—THE MANAGER OF THE MILL. "Mother Moulton, I will give you a conundrum. What is the difference between a mill-flapper and the tongue of a woman?" "Mother Moulton making no reply, Eben Knox replied the answer: "The noise of the clapper produces good results, whereas a woman's tongue produces nothing."

With that he arose and left the room, giving his housekeeper no time for a rejoinder. He heard her spiteful laugh, however, as he strode along to the mill, which was in the same hollow as the house and but a few yards distant. He was invariably first to arrive in the morning, marking relentlessly upon his soles the names of late-comers. At eight o'clock precisely he always returned home for a substantial breakfast, upon which it was his habit to sustain till evening. When the evening bell had rung, he waited to consign the great building to darkness and silence, after which he took his final repast and retired. Such was his life, except at those seasons of the year when some extra demand of work caused him to return to the mill after hours. He appeared then, a gaunt figure in the silence and loneliness, moving from room to room, from vat to vat, from loom to loom, feverishly, expectantly, as though he were calculating in advance just what work might be done and what profits might be reaped.

This singular existence had practically disqualified Eben Knox for the society of his kind. He had suffered himself to degenerate into a morose, giving little heed to what was passing in the various parts of the universe, and never a thought at all to that great life of the future which he should have to live, for good or for evil, when this earthly life was done. He never prayed, he never entered a church; the name of God was never uttered within the four walls of his house; and if he believed at all that there was a principal of vitality which outlasted death, he certainly never allowed such a conviction to influence his conduct. His standard of morality for himself and for his operatives was how much could be got out of the looms. Their ceaseless activity when in full motion was his highest idea of good, and their hum and whir sweeter in his ears than all the harmonies of earth and heaven.

And yet this materialist who had eliminated from his own nature and from his surroundings all that was spiritual and ideal, would fain have united himself with a girl young, beautiful, and richly endowed with the intellectual and moral gifts which he despised. Leonora Chandler, a devout Catholic by training, was eminently religious in temperament, and looked upon all things from a more or less supernatural point of view. Without any pharisaic Paritanism, she had a perfectly clear conception of the difference between what was right and wrong, and all important concerns was prepared to act accordingly.

The manager hoped, notwithstanding the incongruity of their natures, that Miss Tabitha's niece would look favorably upon his suit. Of course he meant, in that case, to discard Mother Moulton and the drowsy loom near the mill, and to rent or purchase a villa upon the Thimbley farm, or wherever else the lady of his choice might elect. He intended to give up, at the same time, his frugal and solitary manner of life, and to permit Leonora to lavish his wealth in such

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula— as ugly as ever since time immemorial. It causes buncbes in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"Two of my children had scrofula sores which kept growing deeper and kept them from going to school for three months. Ointments and medicines did no good until I began giving them Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine caused the sores to heal, and the children have shown no signs of scrofula since." J. W. Moore, Woodstock, Ont.

manner as should best display her beauty and her accomplishments. As he hoped, indeed, to surround his future wife with an ease and luxury to which Miss Chandler had undoubtedly been a stranger. It was, perhaps, a redeeming feature in Eben Knox's character that he had worshipped money not so much for itself as for that one prize he had believed it would secure. As for Leonora, she had heard the mill bell ring out at regular intervals since her childhood, and had listened to weird tales of Eben Knox and his uncanny housekeeper without even for an instant imagining that she had had any connection with the matter or had been the inspiring cause of the manager's phenomenal parsimony. So is woven the web of existence, the interweaving threads being frequently unconscious of each other's proximity.

VII.—MISS TABITHA IS SHOCKED.

Next morning Miss Tabitha made a careful toilet, having arranged to accompany her niece upon a shopping excursion. She was ready first, and stood in the porch, drawing on her lace-thread gloves with careful precision. There was, perhaps, a slight access of staleness in her department, a dignity which was due to her cordial relations with young Mr. Bretherton and the visit which she had received from a live lord. She could not, for the life of her, help feeling elated at these circumstances, which elevated her so considerably above the common herd.

Suddenly the lady was hailed by her loquacious neighbor, Jesse Craft. "Good mornin' to you, Miss Brown!" "Good morning, Mr. Craft!" "I see the bus comin' to your door yesterday evening," Jesse Craft went on, with cheerful friendliness. "Yes, it came," Miss Tabitha replied, smoothing the tumb of her glove.

"Brought your niece home again to you. When I seen the young man helpin' her out of the bus, says I to myself, 'Jesse Craft, the young girl next door has gone and got married unbeknownst to her aunt.'"

"You are altogether mistaken!" Miss Tabitha cried hastily, disconcerting the work upon her glove, and opening her parasol with a snap as if it were a weapon of aggression.

"So I calculated, by usin' my ears for a spell," Jesse replied. "I caught on, as the sayin' is. The young man was a lord spoonin' round, I take it, after your niece—seein' to the luggage and all that. I know the game. Yes, ma'am; and Jesse Craft, old bulk as you see me now, has had a hand in it, too. Well, as I was sayin', Miss Brown, he was castin' sheep's eyes at the girl, and he was powerful scared of you. He seems to be a good feller, though I don't hold much to lords and such like. Let them stay in their own country and in the balls of Parliament, where they belong. There the other young man, he chips in; he's kinder cute, 'o' ye see, bein' the son of a bright man like the Governor, and—"

Jesse might have gone on indefinitely, undisturbed by the glare in Miss Tabitha's eye by which she sought to transfix him, had not Leonora appeared and forested a diversion. "Good mornin' Miss!" cried Jesse. "There you be, fresh as a poppy—a real bloomin' rose. Jesse Craft knows one when he sees it, battered old bulk though he be! I was just talkin' to your aunt about your beans, Miss Tabitha don't." (And the profane wretch gave a wink at Leonora, while he pursued the current of conversation.) "I guess she's forgotten what they're like, Miss Tabitha has. But anyway, as I was sayin', that English Johnny you've got hold of seems to be a good sort of chap, though he wears a suit of clothes that I don't specially admire. As for the Governor's son, he's the kind of feller that suits me."

Here Leonora broke into one of her ringing, unrestrained laughs, the humor of the situation appealed to her so forcibly, and she whipered to Miss Tabitha:

"O aunt, the awful majesty of your look and the awful unconsciousness of the said Jesse Craft!"

"You've got a real good laugh, slob as I like to hear," went on the neighbor. "But I was referin' to young Mr. Bretherton. I heard him tellin' your aunt how you and he scrappered over a sunflower, and how he gave you the seeds to make up peace. I just sat and laughed to myself on my doorstep. He's real entertainin', he is."

Ever so faint a tinge of color came into Leonora's face as she listened. That picture, which it appeared Jim Bretherton had been conjuring up, was present to her mind distinctly. She could recall the fragrance of the flowers growing around the two children upon the far-off day, and see before her the brown and yellow disk in the boy's hand; and the gap in the careful row of sunflowers, which had ever since remained, and through which the talkative neighbor was just then thrusting his head.

"But," said Jesse Craft, taking his clay pipe from his mouth and warning it toward the girl, in warning, don't you be settin' your heart on any of them 'big bugs.' When you think of marryin'—and you've got time enough to consider—just come to Jesse Craft and he'll point out the sort of young feller that will make you happy. 'Tain't any use, my dear, lookin' up too high. A violon can't live the life of a hollyhock. Lowly it was born and lowly it flourishes."

Now, this concluding oration of the philosopher filled Miss Tabitha with greater indignation than anything that had come before, because it voiced her own misgivings. Moreover, it had the effect of momentarily banishing the smile from Leonora's fair face and leaving a hint of sadness there instead. The girl held up her head very high, however, and spoke in that voice of hers, so silvery sweet that it might have been learned from a bird in the treetops.

"Thank you ever so much for your warning!" she said. "It will probably be long before I think of marryin'; but when that time comes I will do very well to take your advice. You are as wise, I am sure, as those old oak trees in which the wind is murmuring. Only I shall do, after all, precisely what I am destined to do."

This speech, spoken so softly and prettily, very much gratified the old man, though it puzzled him, too. He withdrew from the gap in the sunflowers, and watched the aunt and niece go down the little path and out at the gate. Having scratched his head in a doubting way he bobbed back to his doorstep.

Scarcely had Miss Tabitha got clear of the gate when she began: "Intolerable old vulgarian! It is dreadful to have him so near us."

"Poor Jesse Craft!" said Leonora Chandler, with a sigh. "He only puts into words what the trees and the grasses and the birds—the unspoken wisdom of Nature—is teaching us, and we don't get angry with them."

Miss Tabitha, who did not always understand her niece, and thought her facetious at times, answered with some severity:

"I don't see how you keep your patience with such a creature. He's always intruding; he admits himself, that he listens to what goes on in our premises. To think of his intolerable presumption in venturing to address you as he did, merely because young Mr. Bretherton pays us an afternoon visit, and a gentleman happens to escort you upon a railway journey!" Miss Tabitha, pausing an instant to get her breath, resumed with increased severity: "You must really be very reserved with him, Leonora, and merely say 'Good-evening' or 'Good-morning.' He will get worse and worse if you encourage him."

"Poor Jesse Craft!" repeated the girl, stroking with her delicate fingers, as if it were something human, a flower which she had plucked.

"Only that it has always been my axiom to be on good terms with all neighbors," said the irate aunt, "I should take some means of offending him—I positively should."

"It would be difficult enough to offend Jesse Craft," laughed the niece.

"Well, I would find some way to make him discontinue his impertinent intrusion," persisted Miss Tabitha.

"Does it matter so very much?" inquired Leonora. "This is a glorious world, and why should we keep watching the gnats and flies instead of the sun and stars?"

"You are a strange girl," answered Miss Tabitha, plucking half resentfully at her niece. "But here we are jokin' on 'store, and I want to order some groceries."

"Have you got enough money, aunt?" asked the niece, opening her pocket-book. "You know I am quite wealthy now."

"I have all I want for the moment," responded Miss Tabitha. "Thank you very much, my dear!"

They arrived, just then, at the door of the shop, and perceived young Mr. Bretherton swinging upon a high office stool and talking animatedly to half a dozen rustic youths. Prominent among them were Reuben Jackson and Tommy Briggs, the latter having been sent thither on an errand from Stubbs & Co., and lingering, nothing loath, after his errand had been accomplished. Smith Jackson himself leaned over the counter, his rubicund face aglow with interest.

Miss Tabitha, recognizing the young friend whose exclusive acquaintance she had for a time enjoyed, was conscious of a shock at seeing his father's son and his uncle's nephew and his grandmother's grandson thus on familiar terms with what she indignantly designated the riffraff of the town. Times, indeed, had changed, and manners, with them. In Miss Tabitha's opinion, there was not a Bretherton among them who would not have arisen from the grave, were such resurrection possible, to protest against the indignity. It would have appalled Madam Bretherton of aristocratic memory, and have convinced her that some such catastrophe as the French Revolution was imminent in Millbrook.

The question under discussion was one of sport, and, as such, altogether unobjectionable to the mistress of Rose Cottage, who could make nothing of pitchers and catches, clean balls and home runs, hits and throws, balks and wild pitches, even when this strange jargon was uttered in the clear-cut, gentlemanly tones of young Mr. Bretherton himself. For a base ball match was approaching, in which the Governor's son declared his willingness to take part; admitting, however, his greater proficiency in football or cricket. For the two latter games he also professed the services of a friend of his who was in town just then.

Miss Tabitha's horror reached a climax at the idea of Lord Aylward engaging in a contest with Tommy Briggs. The good lady could bear no more, and advanced majestically into the store, trailing her silken petticoats with an air.

Leonora preferred to wait outside. She walked up and down in familiar conversation with the Jackson's dog a brown and white spaniel. He wagged his tail at her, and raised his ears, and fixed his eyes upon her face, in evident appreciation of her desire to communicate with him, and a corresponding anxiety on his part to reciprocate.

Young Mr. Bretherton promptly jumped down from the stool and took off his hat to Miss Tabitha, greeting her with cordiality and offering her his place at the counter. The eager sportsman of a moment before, most of whom were known to the eldest lady, gave various sheepish marks of recognition, and retiring to the back of the store, continued their conversation in a subdued tone.

Reuben Jackson and Tommy Briggs, having discovered the presence of Miss Chandler without, communicated the fact to each other by inarticulate signs, watching discreetly from the window.

Young Mr. Bretherton, having become cognizant of the same fact through the same medium, the shop window, left Miss Tabitha absorbed in her grocery list—which Smith Jackson, with cheerful alacrity, noted down in his order book,—and sauntered forth to the sidewalk. There he found Leonora still engaged with her shaggy, fourfooted acquaintance.

"Good-morning, Miss Chandler!" the young man said, pleasantly. "Good morning, Mr. Bretherton!" responded the girl, giving him a single glance of greeting and again directing her attention to the spaniel, who was playing with the tassel of her parasol. "Have you settled all about your baseball match?"

"Oh, no! It will take half a dozen meetings for that. I want to get up a football team as well. Aylward plays a splendid game. He's a capital sport."

"I wonder what we poor women have in compensation for sport?" Leonora asked, making the spaniel jump still higher, only to fall to earth with a howl of disappointment, and to make a new and fiercer onslaught upon the parasol.

"Many things, I should say," replied Jim Bretherton. "But your games are fought out on other fields, and I'm afraid your playthings are very often what old rhymers call 'the hearts of men.'"

"Hearts would be so unsatisfactory, so intangible," argued Leonora; "there wouldn't be half so much excitement as in a game where one could see all the moves."

"Would there not?" inquired Jim. "No. And, then, you have other things besides athletics. You have fox hunting and deer-stalking—not to speak of the big game far off in the wilds."

"Well, you have forever the same substitute—men, men, always men." "Sameness is monotonous." "For some of your sex, I should fancy there might be infinite variety."
