The clash of sabres overhead had become so steady and caseless, and its sound so commingled with the jangle of calvary accourtements proceeding from thousands of horsemen, that upon the whole it was but little expressive of the numberless separate conconflicts in which each man was holding to life on the strength of their right arm. In regard to the use men made of their volces, there was a marked difference between our people and Russian horsemen. The Islanders hurled out, while they fought, those blasts of malediction by which many of our people in the act of hard striving are accustomed to svoke their right arms of hard striving are accustomed to the seasons in general foughtwithout using articulate words. Nor instead did they utter any truculent, theological yells of the kind which some days later were destined to be heard on the battle field.

But although abstaining from articulate apsech, and from ferce yells, the greymantled horsemen in general was not, therefore, mute. He sometimes evolved, whilist he fought, a deep, gurgling, long-drawn sound, close akin to an inchoate.

The real question is, what is the status and condition of our common schools compared with those in other places? Our unhesitating answer to this is, that our schools, in point of attendance, in the progress and proficiency of the pupils, and in the talent, experience and devotedness of the teachers, will compare very favorably with the schools of any city, town or village in the Dominion. That we readily admit; that great improvements might be made in centralizing them and in grading the pupils, no one who knows anything at all about them will deay. But admitting that such exist, does this prove that the Trustees are either careless or indifferent that of the two Provinces of Ontario or remiss in the discharge of their data ties? By no means. The present Board have to deal with facts, not with such vague theories as fill the head of upon the people of Nova Scotia upon the people of Nova Scotia Red Sanders Wood, Cochingal, Quercetion, or remiss in the discharge of their duhave to deal with a number of schools and that nothing but Imperial coer scattered through the town, nearly all cion can force them to be bound by number of scholars, to say nothing of the sympathy and support of the peothe certain increase which will by and ple of the adjacent Colonies and the by e take place in the attendance—While they deplore this fact, and have done the best they could to temporarily remedy the evil, they know that no radical cure can be effected till a Central School is provided. But here again another difficulty meets them. The taxation is already as high as the ratepayers can well stand, and in the council forwarded to the Imperial Government, similar to the resolutions were ordered to be pressed before any discussion.

Attorney-General Wilkins also submitted a minute of the Executive Council forwarded to the Imperial Government, similar to the resolutions were concerned would be pressed before any discussion.

most every case promptly attended to and if practicable acquiesced in and carried out.

The writer complains that the attendance at the Grammar School is not as large as it ought to be, considering the size of the town, the number of common schools, and the expenditure necessary to keep it up. We are sorry to say that this is quite true, but whose fault is it? Granted that the trustees ought to put in force some system for promoting pupils, would that remedy the evil? We scarcely think so under present circumstances. Can they compel pupils to go there against their will, or the will of their parents? Can they compel them to remain there after they are admitted? That is entirely beyond their province. Some other cause must be found for the marked decrease in the attendance than this silly excuse for a reason, and we leave it for the writer in the Advertiser to find out. The Trustees have engaged a Head master at a large salary, and when he complained that he was not able to manage the school alone, they procured an assistant teacher for him. Yet the attendance to-day at the Grammar School, the attendance to-day at the Grammar School, the attendance to-day at the Grammar School does not exceed twenty, while at a private institution in this town, taught by a gentleman formerly connected with the Grammar School, the attendance is more than double that number. Now we ask the writer in the Advertiser, we ask every sensible man, how does this come about, and the only logical answer they can give is that on the teachers rests the responsibility, and mot on the Trustees. The writer informs us with much modesty that the honers recently conferred on its Head master have won for the school a mame. A name for what? For the proficiency of friday to a very windy article, in which, after some vague assertions in mo way way complimentary to the status and condition of our public schools, a violent attack is made on the School Trustees for their alleged apathy and indifference in the discharge of their duties. Had these statements been backed by anything even bearing the color of evidence or proof, they might have had some weight on the minds of the people of this town, the majority of whom, from the fact that they are either ratepayers or parents sending their children to school, are specially and directly interested in these institutions and in all that is said for and against them. But no such evidence is adduced, not a tittle of proof is brought forward, but in place of these we have a profusion of cheap sentiment, stale truisms, and frothy declamation. It answers exactly to the old Latin proverb, "a voice and nothing else." The writer, from the adoption of the resolutions prepared In the Local Legislature on Friday, tone and matter of the article, is either profoundly ignorant of the condition first deny the assertions made by the Passing by the solemn lecture the Duke of Buckingham that Nova Scoeducational interests, we proceed to notice one or two points in his article. scheme was proposed and approved of are not what they ought to be, nor are the reduction of the taxation, to such the schools in any township, village, regulation of the trade and fisheries as town or city in Canada, or in any other country under the sun. The Braes of Yarrow An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century,

On entering the closet of the secret chamber, the fugitives had found a light ladder which was stways there to be ready for such emergency as this. Having ascended to the passage above Sir Walter had drawn up the ladder and replaced the short planks on the floor. Then carrying the ladder and leading his wife by the hand, he had moved quickly along the passage till they had reached the chawn at the angle of the building. Then he had hesitated. He knew that by descending he could readily obtain egress from the Hespice; but he did not doubt that the place was surrounded, and so he would only feescape from foes behind to fall into the hands of those in front. Aided by his knowledge of the place his decision was promply made.—By means of the ladder he conducted his lady across the opening. Then he let the ladder down to the floor beneath, giving it a shove over to the side they had just quitted. By this means he hoped to lead their pursuers into the belief that they had escaped to the lower part of the building-withintent to escape thence. Lest the wolves should not be caught by that trick, he loosened the both of the spring trap, and felt convinced that if the ruse was uninuccessful the trap would save him faither trouble.

At has been seen the ruse and the trap were both avoided—the one by accident, the other by cunning essation.

"The fugitives then hurried on to the tower, and, as another bait to catch their foes tripping, Spens left the door to the roof unfastened. For should the pursuers pass out upon the roof, he would be able to double upon them, and, as a last resouce venture a descent.

In all these anticipations he was disappointed, and husband and wife now stood prisoners within the tower, with men outside threating for his life in which here was bound, and the analysis in the here was bound, and the analysis in the property of the control o some one sprung over him and disappeared in the cloud of smoke which filled the passage.

Tushielaw sprung to his feet with a shout of rage. Barras and the men mistaking the import of the shout, rushed ainto the tower. Tushielaw darted along the passage; only a few yards, however, and he fell 'theavily over something—the dwarf. But before Scott could discover the cause of the tumble Hornie was up and away.

Spens had taken the desperate resolve to peril all on one last venture for life. Se gripping his wife stoutly with one arm, and bidding her cling to him with all her might, sword in hand he burst out upon his foes.—Fortune tavoured him; and having passed Tushielaw, he passed onward to the opening in the floor. He avoided the trap; then bending down, alipped over the side of the chasm, and droppes to the floor beneath—Mistress Spens clinging to his neck the while, and leaving both his arms free.

She was now able to relieve him of her weight entirely, and, she following him closely, they descended a narrow, winding staircase into another passage. Here they paused an instant to listen.

There was a soft pattering sound, as of some one with shoeless feet close behind them. Further back a tramp af heavy feet, and a murmur of angry voices.

Berwick, late head-master of the Senior Common School of Orangeville, was presented by the trustees and pupils of the school with a beautiful rosewied writing case and gold pea, as a mark of their appreciation of hisservices as teacher and a token of their esteem and regard for him as a citizen. A flattering address accompanied the presentation, which was acknowledged in very appropriate terms by Mr. Berwick. The emigration of Mormons to Utah

The engigration of Mormons to Utah has been musually great within the last few weeks. Aweek or two ago, one thousand of these people landed at Castle Garden, New York, en route for Salt Lake, and on Tuesday last another ship arrived at the same port with about nine hundred more, all bound for the same destination.

Eventrul Carrer of a Clergyman.—

A man named Powell was recently convicted of fraud at the Middlesex Sessions, London, and, before sentence was fassed, his counsel handed in a written statement of his career, which revealed a singular history. It attributed his fall entirely to the "unconquerable love for drink." He had been engaged, he said to a wealthy widow, and everything was prepared for the ceremony, when yielding to temptation, he became intoxicated, and "falled to be there as appointed." The match was consequently broken off, and from that hour "he rushed headlong into drink and gay company until he was quite mad." He had been in prison on charges of stealing, toddy-ladles, and of disappearing with his landlord's cost and watch; then he was mune months in Beth-lehem; next, curate of a parish in Surrey, afterwards he underwent eighteen months' imprisonment for forgery, and then became Secretary to the Male Lock Hospital, Dean street, Soho. For the offence with which he was now charged, he has been sentenced to five years' penal servitude.

Dran's room Disappointment in Love.—
The Boston Journal tells the following: A sad but interesting case of the death of a young lady named Susan King, is a general topic of conversation at Woburn at the present time. The deceased had been affianced to a young man, to whom it appears, she was deeply attached, Some week since she happened to observe him in company with another young woman under such circumstances as to give rise to feelings of jealousy on her part. She upbraided him for his conduct, and he replied to her remonstrances in a spirited manner, which further provoked her to dismiss him. It seems, however, that she still cherished in secret the old affection, and the disappointment so weighed upon her mind as to cause a severe nervous attack, resulting, about ten days since, in utter prostration. She remained in this condition until her death, which occurred on Saturday last. The circumstances have been so peculiar, and the malady having baffled the skill of the physicians, it was deemed proper an autopsy should be performed, which was done on Monday by Drs. Cutter and Abbot. No trace of disease, or obvious cause of death was discovered, but the system was apparently in an entirely healthy and normal condition. The deceased was a person of excellent character and fine personal appearance, and was much esteemed and beloved.

The Organ Question.—At a meeting of the Presbytery of Montreal of the P. C.
Church, held on Wednesday last, the Rev. Mr. Gordon brought up the question of instrumental music, and complained of its use in Knox's. Church, characterising it as a violation of the laws of the church. On motion of Mr. D. Mackey, it was decided by a majority to leave the question where the Synod left it, viz., on the table.
